PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

COMMUNICATED TO CONGRESS DECEMBER 3, 1822, WITH ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Comptroller's Office, November 26, 1822.

SIR: I had heretofore the honor to inform you that your letter, dated the 20th of September last, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, had been referred to me.

In your letter you request "that the proper officers might be directed to prepare and furnish a statement of the accounts unsettled on the 4th of March, 1817; the amount since settled, and the amount then remaining unsettled; distinguishing the several departments, civil, military, and naval, &c., from each other, with the proper classification in reference to the several appropriations."

In order to carry into effect the object contemplated in your letter, I addressed letters to the Register of the Treasury, and to the Second, Third, and Fourth Auditors, being the officers from whom the information you requested was to be obtained, and have recently received reports from each of them, which I herewith transmit, together with a general or consolidated statement of the whole of the accounts contained in the several reports, which you will perceive comprehends not only the accounts unsettled on the 4th of March, 1817, the amount since settled, and the amount now remaining unsettled, but also the amount of moneys drawn from the Treasury between the 4th of March, 1817, and the 30th of September, 1822; the amount of those moneys settled for between those days, and the amount remaining unsettled on the last mentioned day; and I have annexed to the general report explanatory remarks.

I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, your most obedient servant,

JOS. ANDERSON, Comptroller.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

Explanatory Remarks respecting the situation of the accounts unsettled on the 30th of September, 1822; of the balance which remained unsettled on the 3d of March, 1817.

(1.) Register of the Treasury, $836,917 80. This consists of nearly three hundred personal accounts, which have been accumulating since the commencement of the government; partly of advances, in relation to which no accounts and vouchers have been rendered; and partly of balances, found due on settlements; authenticated transcripts of which advances and balances have, in nearly all those cases, been furnished, and suits instituted. The particular situation of each of those accounts, composing the above sum, will appear in the list which is in a state of preparation for the purpose of being laid before Congress at the approaching session, conformably to law; except in those cases where the parties have been heretofore reported as insolvent, so as no longer to be required to be reported in those lists.

(2.) Second Auditor, $321,598 74. This arises from advances made to officers and contractors, between the 8th May, 1816, and 3d March, 1817, nearly all whose accounts have been reported to the Agent of the Treasury for suit. The particular state of each case will appear in the list required by law to be laid before Congress annually, which list is in a state of preparation.

(3.) Third Auditor, $4,367,694 21. This sum is composed of more than two thousand personal accounts, and includes charges on the books of the late Accountant of the War Department, from the time of its establishment in 1792. The principal part of it, however, consists of advances made during, and shortly antecedent to, the late war, which are generally of the following description, viz:

1st. Of accounts settled, on which balances appear to be due to the United States.

2d. Of debits for money advanced, for which no accounts or vouchers have been rendered.

3d. Of debits for moneys advanced, for which irregular accounts, or accounts only in part, have been exhibited; in some cases requiring legislative interference, and in others additional vouchers and explanations.

As to the two first mentioned cases, it is to be stated that suits generally have been instituted; and as to the last, that every exertion has been made, and is making, to effect settlements. The list of accounts unsettled more than three years, required by law to be laid before Congress annually, and which is in a state of preparation, will show the particulars in each individual case.

(4.) Fourth Auditor, $4,367,694 21. This consists of balances which have been accumulating since the first establishment of the Navy Department, in 1798, and which are due from persons not now in service, and of whose place of residence, or of whose solvency or insolvency, nothing is known. In some cases, confused and informal accounts have been rendered by persons indebted to a very large amount; in others, the parties have been either lost at sea, or killed in action, and no accounts whatever rendered. A considerable part, also, consists of sums advanced to prize agents, who have rendered no accounts for settlement. Transcripts to a large amount have been made out, and placed in the hands of the Agent of the Treasury, for the purpose of instituting suits; and further transcripts, in those cases requiring suits to be instituted, will be made out as early as practicable, and continued until the whole be completed.

Explanatory Remarks respecting the situation of the accounts remaining unsettled on the 30th of September, 1822; of the moneys drawn from the Treasury between the 4th of March, 1817, and the said 30th of September, 1822.

(5.) Register of the Treasury, $8,809,186 76. This is composed of advances on account of appropriations drawn out of the Treasury, under requisitions of the Department of State; and of advances to the several officers and agents of the government, whose accounts, generally, are settled quarter yearly, and includes the advances to the presidents of banks, acting as Commissioners of Loans, on account of the principal and interest of the public debt; which advances, alone, constitute about $6,100,000 of the above sum.

Of this sum of $6,100,000, it has been ascertained that payments were actually made on account of the public debt (exclusive of the payments made at the Branch Bank of the United States at Washington) anterior to the 30th of September, 1822, on the dividends for the quarters ending the 31st December, 1821; 31st March, and 30th June, 1822, to the amount of the following sum: credits for which could not, according to the regular course of settlements, be given until after the 30th September, 1822..... $4,441,499 35

That it includes advances to the Branch Bank of the United States at Washington, for paying Treasury dividends; and the dividends returned to the Treasury as unclaimed, by the several Loan Offices, to the amount of..... 120,789 13

That it includes advances to the several loan officers, in the month of September, to meet the dividends for the quarter ending on that day; the payments on which commenced on the 1st of October, and will continue at the Loan Offices until the 30th of June, 1823, to the amount of..... 1,389,220 19

And that the balance consists of moneys in the hands of the different loan officers to meet the dividends for the quarters ending the 31st March and 30th of June, 1822, remaining unpaid, and still demandable at their offices..... 148,491 33

(6.) Second Auditor, $2,169,877 69. The greater part of this consists of accounts in regular course of settlement, and of advances made to paymasters, and others of the Army. The residue consists of balances found due on settlements, for the recovery of which suits have been ordered, and other measures taken.

(7.) Third Auditor, $4,120,232 91. The greater part of this is composed of accounts in regular course of settlement, and which may be classed under the following heads:

1st. Accounts for advances to regular disbursing officers of the War Department (including those to the agents for paying pensions, which alone constitute more than two millions of this balance) whose vouchers are rendered quarter yearly.

2d. Accounts for advances to States on account of disbursements during the late war, the vouchers for which have generally been rendered and examined; but the final settlements have been delayed for the production of further documents and explanations.

3d. Balances ascertained on actual settlements, and advances for which no accounts have been rendered; for the recovery of which balances and advances suits have generally been instituted, or measures taken.

(8.) Fourth Auditor, $4,598,632 48. For the greater part of this, accounts and vouchers have been rendered, and are in a train of settlement. A part of it consists of advances on account of contracts for supplies, which contracts are not yet completed; and of advances to pursers and other officers, who are now, and have been, at sea for several years, and, consequently, have not rendered their accounts for settlement.

Statement exhibiting the amount of accounts in the several departments, say Treasury, War, and Navy, arising out of appropriations made by acts of Congress, unsettled on the 3d of March, 1817; the amount of those accounts settled between the 4th of March, 1817, and the 30th September, 1822; the amount of the unsettled accounts on the 3d March, 1817, remaining unsettled on the 30th September, 1822; the amount of moneys drawn from the Treasury between the 4th March, 1817, and the 30th September, 1822; the amount of those moneys accounted for or settled between those days; the amount of those moneys remaining unaccounted for or unsettled on the 30th September, 1822; the total amount of accounts unsettled on the last mentioned day.

On what books.	Amount of accounts unsettled on the 3d March, 1817.	Amount of unsettled accounts on the 3d March, 1817; settled between that day and the 30th of September, 1822.	Amount of unsettled accounts on the 3d March, 1817; remaining unsettled on the 30th September, 1822.	Amount of moneys drawn from the Treasury between the 4th of March, 1817, and the 30th September, 1822.	Amount of moneys drawn from the Treasury between the 4th of March, 1817, and the 30th September, 1822; accounted for or settled between those days. (a) This includes the sum of $197,283, transferred from the books of the Register of the Treasury.
 (b) This includes the sum of $411,129 69, transferred from the books of the Register of the Treasury.
 (c) This includes nearly $200,000, transferred from the books of the Register of the Treasury.

NOTE.—These balances were originally brought on the books of the Register of the Treasury, from the books of the War and Navy Departments, for the purpose of instituting suit, at a time when, by law, only the certificate of the Register, verified by the Secretary of the Treasury, could be received in court as evidence of the debt; but as the act of 3d of March, 1817, for the prompt settlement of public accounts, made the certificate of the several Auditors of the same validity with those of the Register, it was concluded to retransfer those balances to the departments, respectively, from which they were originally transferred, more particularly as some of the parties were still in service, and had further accounts to settle in those departments.

No. 653.

[2D SESSION.]

REVISION OF THE REVENUE LAWS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1822.

To the honorable the Senate and the honorable the House of Representatives:

The memorial of the merchants and others interested in the commerce of Boston, in the county of Suffolk and State of Massachusetts, respectfully sheweth:

That your memorialists are all either practically engaged in the foreign and coasting trade of this country, or otherwise highly interested in its commercial resources and revenues; that they have all either personally felt or witnessed the great evils and inconveniences resulting, both to government and to individuals, from the oppressive operation of certain parts of the present system of the collection and revenue laws of the United States. Your memorialists are well convinced that these injurious effects are such as could not have been contemplated or foreseen by the wise legislators who have given them a code so admirably adapted, in a general view, to secure the rights of individuals and the prosperity of the nation. They therefore feel it incumbent upon them, as citizens able to estimate and worthy to enjoy the manifold blessings of a free government wisely administered, to lay before their representatives in Congress assembled a brief outline of these partial evils, for which their accustomed wisdom and discretion will doubtless find a speedy and appropriate remedy.

That they may not fatigue your honorable body with a minute enumeration of the inconveniences or defects which have been perceived in the present state of the laws relating to trade, which would oblige them to go somewhat at length into the details of the custom-house, your memorialists beg leave to present a classification of the supposed subjects of reform, and to give, under each head, a concise illustration of the causes of complaint.

The topics to which they would call the attention of this honorable body are—

1. The unnecessary multiplication of oaths in the proceedings of the custom-house.
2. The requiring of bonds in cases where no additional security is thereby afforded to the United States.
3. The exacting a compliance with certain formalities in impossible cases, and punishing the non-compliance as a projected fraud upon the revenues.
4. The delays, losses, and vexations occasioned by the unnecessary detention of goods in the public warehouses of the United States.
5. The oppressive operation of the existing appraisement system.

Upon the first of these topics your memorialists would only remark, that the solemnity of an oath is greatly diminished, and the danger of perjury proportionally enhanced, by the frequency of repetition upon trivial occasions. Every oath unnecessarily administered is so much detracted from the security which the United States derives from that sanction, and contributes so much to the destruction of that good faith which is the strong bond of civil society. For these reasons, an oath ought never to be exacted, in the opinion of your memorialists, where it is not relied upon as the best evidence of the fact which it is intended to establish. Among other instances in which this is not the case, your memorialists would mention, as a striking illustration, the provisions of the seventh section of the act of April 20, 1818, supplementary to an act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," passed March 2, 1799, by which it is enacted that where imported goods, subject to ad valorem duties, are unshipped and transported coastwise in the original packages, a copy of the invoice, verified by the oath of the importer and certified by the collector, shall be produced at the final port of arrival, and then, that the same inspection shall take place as of a first importation. In this case the original invoice must already have been authenticated by the oath of the party, by the provisions of the fifth section of the same act and other acts yet continuing in force. The oath, therefore, required at the custom-house on such reshipment for coastwise transportation, is merely to support the fact that the invoice there produced is a true copy of the original invoice, which fact is also to be certified by the collector, who for that purpose always requires the original invoice to be produced, that he may personally compare it with the copy. It is manifest, therefore, that the required oath is merely nugatory, the certificate of the collector being ample evidence of the fact. Besides all which, the goods, having already undergone one inspection, are to undergo, at the port of arrival, another inspection, which is to be conducted as if there had been neither oath nor certificate in the case, or, in other words, as if the goods were then for the first time imported into the United States. Upon this section it may further be remarked that the utmost facility is afforded to evasions by slight alterations in the form of package, since its provisions are applicable only to the case of reshipment of goods packed as imported, and it is only necessary to take a single piece of goods from a box to evade the requisition.

Under the second head, it would little become your memorialists to urge the hardship and oppression of exacting bonds where no additional security is afforded thereby to the United States; and they will only mention, as an exemplification of the fact, the bonds required on re-exportation of goods, by the 32d section of the above mentioned act of March 2, 1799, and the 2d section of an act supplementary thereto, passed February 22, 1805, conditioned to produce, within a limited term, certain certificates that such goods were landed without the limits of the United States, or that they should not be landed within such limits, unless on due entry and payment, or security of the duties accruing thereon. Now, the other numerous provisions of the law are, as your memorialists conceive, perfectly sufficient to secure the United States against the landing of said goods, without due entry, within her jurisdiction; and they cannot be so entered unless the duties are first paid or secured. There can be no necessity, therefore, for any certificate that such goods were landed without the United States, and, consequently, none for the bond requiring such certificate, or the payment of duties, which cannot but be paid whether such bond be given or not.

With regard to the exacting a compliance with formalities in impossible cases, and punishing the non-compliance as a fraud, your memorialists will not affront this honorable body by arguing that such an operation of their laws could not have been intended by the wise framers thereof, but proceed to an exposition of facts on which this part of the complaint is founded. The 8th section of the act of April 20, 1818, above mentioned, provides that the invoice of goods imported by persons residing, and, at the time of such importation, being, out of the United States, shall not only be verified in the manner required by the 5th section of said act, before the United States consul in the port or country of shipment, but shall likewise be authenticated by the certificate of said consul, or other magistrate there duly qualified to administer oaths, that the owner or owners did, before him, make oath] that he or they are not concerned in the manufacture of the goods so shipped; and the 13th section provides that the want of such verification shall subject the owner to the penalties provided by the 11th section in the case of fraudulent invoices. This oath, it will be perceived, is required to be made by the owner himself, and at the port or country of shipment; consequently, in all cases where the owner does not reside in the port or country whence a shipment, by his order, is made, a compliance with the law is either physically impossible or so difficult and expensive as to render it practically unattainable; and yet, by non-compliance, he brings himself within the penalties of the act. Now, it not unfrequently happens that persons associated together in trade, with the view of securing to themselves earlier and better information and conducting their business in a manner more profitable to themselves, and, of course, more advantageous to their country, than they otherwise could do, agree that one of their number shall reside in Europe, vibrating from Italy to Ireland, for instance, and ordering shipments to the United States on account of his house in Boston, from Leghorn when he is himself in Dublin, and from Bordeaux when he is in London, as the exigencies of the times and opportunity of markets may require. It is impossible for this foreign resident to authenticate the invoices of such shipments in the manner required, without passing over such distances of land and sea as, from the necessary delay and expense of these movements, would completely frustrate the design of his importation; and yet, if any one of several joint owners be resident abroad, the custom-house officers insist that the penalty of the act has accrued. Cases yet stronger have come to the knowledge of your memorialists, where orders, for example, were given by American citizens residing in China to their correspondents in different parts of Europe to purchase and ship to them merchandise to a large amount, on account of themselves and their partners residing within the United States; but for want of a direct opportunity, the merchandise is brought to the United States in transitu merely, and to be thence re-exported to China. The consignees, who are also part owners, finding a favorable home market for the merchandise, wish to dispose of the whole or a part in their own country, (by which they would enrich the revenue and augment the commercial resources of the nation, as well as consult their own private benefit,) instead of forwarding them according to their original destination; but they are denied permission to enter such goods for sale, unless the forfeiture of the 11th and 13th sections of the act is secured to be paid. This they consider tantamount to a prohibition; and thus, in the particular case which your memorialists have in their mind, upwards of eighteen thousand dollars of duties have been lost to the government, (besides the loss and inconvenience to the owner and the country at large,) because a merchant in Canton did not, at the time he was in Canton, make oath, in London and Amsterdam, that he is not a manufacturer. Many other instances might be enumerated of the unjust operation of this law, where goods have been imported in American vessels, and are in part owned by American citizens residing within the United States, because other owners, residing neither within the United States nor in the country whence the shipment is made, have not made attestations in places where they have never been, notwithstanding the partners here are able to furnish the fullest evidence of the fact that no one of the owners abroad is a manufacturer. Your memorialists will only add that the provisions of this section are an absolute prohibition of the introduction of all foreign capital into the country, (greatly as it tends to the increase of the revenues and manifest advantage of the nation,) in all cases except only where the foreign merchant is also himself the shipper. Another illustration under this head is afforded by the 5th section of the same act, providing that the owner, in addition to the other verifications required by law, shall make oath that the invoice by him produced exhibits the true value of the goods at the place whence imported.

But it often happens that goods bought at a favorable moment, by a judicious agent, do actually cost less than the current market value at the time of shipment. In this case the importer must, by the operation of the 1st section, produce the original invoice, exhibiting the actual cost; and must, by the operation of the 5th section, swear that this invoice exhibits the true value. But when, perceiving the fact to be otherwise, he declines taking such oath, he brings himself within the mischief of fraudulent invoices, according to the 11th section, if the appraisers shall find the said goods to have been invoiced more than twenty-five per cent. below their true value. He is thus not only subjected to the payment of excessive duty, but stands without all power of defence, under the imputation of attempting a fraud upon the revenues; and he so stands because he could not conscientiously take an oath which he knew to be false. This is a case, therefore, somewhat stronger than those before noticed under the first head, since the oath required in this case is not merely unnecessary, but plainly repugnant, and the direct operation of the law is to hold out a reward to perjury in cases where detection would frequently be difficult and sometimes impossible. And in this connexion it should be remarked that the very same difficulty occurs in cases where the true value, at the time of shipment, was less than the actual cost. The necessary effect of the provision is, that a judicious merchant, who, at a great expense of time and money, has established an agency abroad, which enables him, at certain seasons and under circumstances which his experience has taught him to foresee and provide for, to purchase at favorable prices, loses all the advantages which he has thus lawfully acquired, and is placed in a far worse situation than if he had not taken these very measures, on the successful conduct of which his prosperity mainly depends.

The delays and vexations occasioned by the provisions concerning detention of goods in the public warehouses is strongly illustrated by the case contemplated in the 1st section of the very same act, where the original invoice is, by any accident, missing. The act then authorizes detention of the goods imported, at the expense and risk of the owner, until such invoice be produced; while the 2d section provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may, at his discretion, authorize the collector to enter such goods, after appraisement thereof, on bond being given for such invoice within a certain time, and the payment of all duties which shall be found due thereon. Your memorialists are most happy to state that the evils naturally attending this and similar provisions have been greatly alleviated by the manner in which the Secretary of the Treasury has exercised the discretion thus reposed in him by the law; but still, much delay, and consequent loss, is unavoidable, from the very necessity of bringing the case before the Secretary at Washington, and waiting for the return of his decision thereon, protracted, as it must sometimes be, from the pressure of public business. It not unfrequently happens that the articles themselves are of a perishable nature and require an immediate sale; yet, before one can possibly be effected under this law, they must either wholly be lost, or become greatly deteriorated in value. And, after all, when leave of entry has been at length obtained, a bond is required, which, if required in the first instance, would have afforded perfect security to the United States, and avoided all delay and difficulty in the case. Besides, by way of hypothesis, at least, it may be considered how it would be if the Secretary of the Treasury should, from any motive, refuse permission to enter such goods, notwithstanding the failure to produce the invoice was, clearly, not the effect of fraudulent design, (which, under the present administration, indeed, never has, and, we are confident, never will occur.) It is manifest that the fair merchant would thereby be exposed to such enormous losses and embarrassments in his operations as might terminate in irretrievable ruin.

The oppressive operation of the existing appraisement system will easily be perceived by adverting to the several provisions above mentioned, taken in connexion with the 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th sections of the said act. These sections provide, substantially, that whenever the collector shall suspect goods subject to ad valorem duty to be invoiced below the true value, he shall order an appraisement, and if the appraised value exceed by 25 per cent. the invoice price, then the duties are to be laid on the aggregate sum found by adding 50 per cent., besides the ordinary 10 or 20 per cent., to the appraised value; but if the appraised value shall exceed the invoice price by less than 25 per cent., then the duties shall be estimated on such appraised value, with the addition of 10 or 20 per cent. only; and where it falls short of the invoice price, the duties are still to be estimated according to the invoice. The want of the certificate required by the 8th section subjects the importation to a similar appraisement and similar penalties, as in the case of fraudulent invoices. One-half the penalty exacted in all cases is divided among the custom-house officers, and the expenses of appraisement are, in all cases, to be borne by the owner, except when the invoice exceeds the appraised value. This whole system your memorialists cannot but consider injurious and oppressive in the extreme, since it subjects the most fair and honorable merchant to all the delay, expense, and vexation, and in some cases, as already intimated, to the very penalties provided for the fraudulent. A mere suspicion, on the part of the collector, that the invoice (although he may have no doubt that it accords with the actual cost and that no fraud is intended) does not exhibit the true value, imperatively requires of him to cause an appraisement. This suspicion must necessarily be excited, and of course the appraisement must necessarily take place, in every case where the invoice price is, in fact, either below or above the current market value, from the refusal of the importer to take the oath that such invoice does exhibit that which it never was intended to exhibit, namely, the ordinary rates of cost, instead of the cost in the particular instance. In the same way the appraisement must necessarily take place whenever any one owner resides without the United States, and the invoice is not authenticated by the certificate required in the 8th section, although it were impossible for him, from any one of many reasons, to furnish such authentication. When the appraisement takes place it is necessarily productive of great delay and considerable expense, always falling upon the party who, without fault, has been put, by mere operation of law and the integrity of his own conscience, in this embarrassing situation. The appraisers are bound by their oaths to find a fact which is often extremely difficult for them to arrive at, with any tolerable accuracy, namely, the true value of goods, not as they have them before their eyes, at the time and place of appraisement, but that value which they had in a foreign country and at a distant time, namely, the moment of shipment. Now, a very slight error in judgment in the estimate of their officers brings the importer most unjustly within the penalty of the statute, and holds him up to the world as a defrauder of the revenues, and, to add to the aggravation of his doom, he stands in this light without hope of redress; since it has been very recently decided by the circuit court of the United States, sitting in this district, that the judgment of the appraisers on the matter before them is final and conclusive. The arbitrary discretion thus vested in subordinate officers of the revenue is, in the opinion of your memorialists, of a most alarming tendency; erecting a petty tyranny over the property and good fame of men, which is wholly adverse to the general spirit of our laws and institutions, and which may be productive of most serious consequences to some of the dearest rights of native Americans.

Your memorialists are, indeed, proud of the opportunity to bear public testimony, in the most unequivocal terms, to the uniformly upright and honorable deportment of the collector of this district, and the good conduct of the inferior officers of the customs in general. It is to this fortunate circumstance, rather than the construction of the laws in relation to this subject, that your memorialists feel themselves bound to attribute much of their exemption from the oppression to which they might be otherwise subjected. This testimony is the more honorable to these men because of the great inducements which the facility of the laws holds out to a profitable collusion between the government appraisers and the other officers of this department; a species of collusion which it would be almost impossible to punish, because almost impossible to establish by legal proof. It is the collector, let it be remembered, whose suspicion authorizes an appraisement. It is the subordinate officers whose information may afford at least a plausible pretext for suspicions. It is the regular appraisers on the part of the Government who, being two out of three, of course, govern the appraisement. It is in the power of the appraisers on the part of the Government to affix their own value to every article which has thus been brought before them. It is a power unlimited, and they are a tribunal without appeal! Finally, that motive may not be wanting to the abuse of this despotic sway, it is among the officers of the customs that one-half of every penalty accruing under the statute is distributed by law; and surely it would not be very surprising (should those offices be filled by men of a different stamp from those who now fill them) if some portion of this bounty for corruption should find its way into the pockets of the appraisers themselves.

Your memorialists have already extended their illustration beyond their proposed limits; they will not trespass further on the indulgence of this honorable body, but conclude by expressing their earnest desire that such measures may be taken for the amendment of the revenue laws, in the above mentioned and other obvious particulars, as the supreme councils of the nation shall in their wisdom direct. As in duty bound will ever pray.

STATE OF THE FINANCES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 24, 1822.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 23, 1822.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a report prepared in obedience to the "Act supplementary to the act to establish the Treasury Department."

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

The Honorable the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

REPORT.

In obedience to the directions of the "Act supplementary to the act to establish the Treasury Department," the Secretary of the Treasury respectfully submits the following report:

1. OF THE PUBLIC REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE OF THE YEARS 1821 AND 1822.

Making the total estimated expenditure of the year 1822.....			18,278,653 32
And leaving in the Treasury, on the 1st of January, 1823, an estimated balance of...			3,148,347 67

After deducting from this sum certain balances of appropriations, amounting to $1,232,212 11, which are necessary to effect the objects for which they were severally made, or have been deducted from the estimates for the service of the ensuing year, a balance of $1,916,135 56 remains; which, with the receipts into the Treasury during the year 1823, constitutes the means for defraying the current service of that year.

2. OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The funded debt which was contracted before the year 1812, and which was unredeemed on the 1st day of October, 1821, amounted (see statement No. 1) to.....		$17,833,746 84
And that which was contracted subsequently to the 1st of January, 1812, and was unredeemed on the 1st of October, 1821, amounted (see statement No. 1) to.....		75,852,458 18
Making the total amount of funded debt unredeemed on the 1st of October, 1821....		93,686,205 02
In the fourth quarter of that year there was issued Treasury note six per cent. stock to the amount of.....		390 40
Making an aggregate of.....		93,686,595 42
In the same quarter there was paid the sum of.....		262,738 75
Viz:
Reimbursement of six per cent. deferred stock.....	$257,180 60
Redemption of Louisiana stock.....	5,558 15
Reducing the funded debt, on the 1st January, 1822, (see statement No. 2,) to.....		93,423,856 67
From that day to the 1st of October last there was issued three per cent. stock to the amount of.....		143 02
Making an aggregate of.....		93,423,999 69
During the same period there was paid the sum of.....		380,930 02
Viz:
Reimbursement of six per cent. deferred stock.....	$300,930 02
Redemption of the six per cent. stock of 1796.....	80,000 00
Reducing the funded debt, on the 1st of October, 1822, (see estimate No. 3,) to.....		93,043,019 67
It is estimated that in the fourth quarter of the present year there will be paid.....		2,265,588 07
Viz:
Reimbursement of six per cent. deferred stock.....	$265,588 07
Redemption of the six per cent. stock of 1820.....	2,000,000 00
Which will reduce the funded debt unredeemed on the 1st of January, 1823, to.....		90,777,431 60
The amount of Treasury notes outstanding on the 1st of October, 1822, is estimated (see No. 4) at.....		27,437 00
And the amount of Mississippi stock unredeemed on that day (see No. 5) at.....		26,735 94

3. OF THE ESTIMATE OF THE PUBLIC REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE FOR THE YEAR 1823.

The gross amount of duties on imports and tonnage which accrued from the 1st of January to the 30th of September last, both days included, is estimated at $19,500,000, and that of the whole year at $23,000,000.

It is estimated that the amount of debentures issued during the same period exceeds the amount issued during the corresponding period of the year 1821 by $86,000; and that the amount of debentures outstanding on the 30th of September last, chargeable upon the revenue of 1823, is $234,000 more than was, on the same day in 1821, chargeable upon the revenue of 1822.

It is estimated that the value of domestic articles exported from the United States in the year ending on the 30th of September last has amounted to $49,874,079; and that foreign articles exported during the same period have amounted to $22,286,202.

As the receipts from the customs in the year 1823 depend, 1st, upon the amount of duty bonds which become due within that year, after deducting the expenses of collection and the amount of debentures chargeable upon them, and 2d, upon such portion of the duties secured in the first and second quarters of that year as are payable within the year, it is manifest that an increase in the amount of debentures chargeable upon the revenue of the year 1823, or a diminution of the importations of foreign merchandise during the first two quarters of that year, must necessarily diminish the receipts into the Treasury. As debentures can be issued at any time within twelve months after importation, chargeable upon bonds given for the duties upon such importation, it is impossible to foresee the amount which may be chargeable upon the bonds that are payable during the year 1823. The facts, however, which have been stated, justify the conclusion that the amount of debentures which will be issued and charged upon the revenue of 1823 will considerably exceed the amount which was chargeable upon that of 1822. From the same facts, it is also presumed that the importations of the first two quarters of the year 1823 will be less than the corresponding quarters of the present year.

Giving due weight to all the facts connected with the subject, the receipts for the year 1823 may be estimated at..... $21,100,000 00

Viz:

Customs .....	$19,000,000 00
Public lands .....	1,600,000 00
Bank dividends .....	350,000 00
Arrears of internal duties and direct tax, and incidental receipts ..	150,000 00

To which is to be added the sum of..... 1,916,135 56

Remaining in the Treasury, after satisfying the balances of appropriations chargeable upon the revenue of 1822, which makes the entire means of the year 1823 amount to 23,016,135 56
The expenditure of the year 1823 is estimated at $15,059,597 22.

Viz:

Civil, diplomatic, and miscellaneous .....	$1,599,317 35
Military service, including fortifications, ordnance, Indian Department, revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrearages prior to the 1st January, 1817 .....	5,134,292 75
Naval service, including the gradual increase of the Navy .....	2,723,987 12
Public debt.....	5,602,000 00

Which, being deducted from the above sum, will leave in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1824, after satisfying the current demands of the year 1823, a sum estimated at..... 7,956,538 34

Although the facts already disclosed justify the conclusion that the importations of the present year exceed the value of domestic articles exported during the year, yet there is no means of ascertaining the extent of that excess. If the custom-house documents were to be considered conclusive evidence upon this subject, it would be apparent that the nation has, through the whole period of its existence, imported more in value than it has exported. But the fact is incontestable, that the United States have enjoyed a more uninterrupted prosperity, and have increased their capital to a greater relative extent, than any of the nations with whom they have maintained commercial intercourse. To show that the custom-house documents cannot be considered conclusive evidence in this case, it is proper to observe, first, that the value of articles paying duties ad valorem, imported into the United States, is ascertained by adding to the invoice value twenty per cent. if from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and ten per cent. from all other places; whilst the value of domestic articles exported is ascertained at the port of shipment without any such addition. Second, the greatest portion of the importations and exportations are made in vessels of the United States. Third, the capital employed in the trade of the Northwest Coast, and of the Pacific Ocean, consists, almost exclusively, of the labor and enterprise of those engaged in it; foreign articles, the proceeds of those enterprises, imported into the United States, are, therefore, only equivalent to the labor and enterprise by which they were procured. Fourth, the value of domestic articles exported is more imperfectly ascertained than of foreign articles imported, because it has not been considered necessary to resort to the same sanctions to enforce a compliance with the regulations which have been prescribed for that purpose. To ascertain the relative value of imports and exports, it is necessary, first, that the same additions should be made to the invoice value of the latter as are required by law to be made to the former. Second, the freight of domestic articles exported in American vessels should be added to their value, after deducting from it the freight of foreign articles imported in foreign vessels. Third, the value of foreign articles imported in vessels engaged in the trade of the Northwest Coast and Pacific Ocean, the proceeds of the labor and enterprise of those by whom they are navigated, should be added to the domestic exports. Fourth, it is impossible to ascertain what addition should be made to the value of the domestic exports, on account of the omission of the exporters to state correctly the quantity or value of articles exported by them; but, after making a liberal allowance for foreign articles illicitly introduced or inaccurately invoiced, it is believed that a considerable addition should be made.

If, then, to the amount of domestic articles exported during the year ending on the 30th September last, already estimated at $49,874,079, the additions should be made which the preceding facts and considerations appear to authorize, the value of our domestic exports during that period may be estimated at nearly $60,000,000.

Although no calculation has been completed showing the average rate of duty upon the value of foreign articles imported into the United States, it is presumed that an importation of $60,000,000 of foreign merchandise will not produce a less revenue than $17,000,000. As the receipts from the customs during the year 1823 have been estimated at $19,000,000, it is probable that the receipts from the same source in 1824, which will depend upon the importations of 1823, will not exceed $15,000,000. Under the most-unfavorable circumstances, it is believed that the receipts of that year will be sufficient to discharge all demands upon the Treasury which may be authorized by law.

If the current appropriations for the year 1825 shall be equal to those required by the estimates of the ensuing year, the expenditure of that year may be estimated at..... $28,253,597 22

Viz:

Current appropriations .....	8,578,722 22
Permanent appropriation for arming the militia, and Indian annuities.....	378,875 00
Gradual increase of the Navy.....	500,000 00
Public debt, including balances unapplied in 1823 and 1824, amounting to $8,796,000.	18,796,000 00

The means of the Treasury to meet this extraordinary expenditure consist:

Ist. Of the balance which may be in the Treasury on the 1st of January of that year, estimated at.....	$8,000,000 00
And, 2d, of the receipts of that year, estimated at.....	19,000,000 00
Viz:
Customs.....	$17,000,000
Public lands.....	1,600,000
Bank dividends.....	350,000
Incidental receipts.....	50,000
Making together an aggregate of.....	27,000,000 00
And leaving a deficit of about.....	1,250,000 00

In this estimate the receipts and expenditures of the year 1824 are estimated to be nearly equal. It is probable, however, that the receipts may exceed, to a small extent, the expenditures; but there is at least an equal probability that the receipts for the year 1825 are estimated too high. In the year 1826, the expenditure, assuming the current appropriations to be the same as in the year 1823, may be estimated at $19,457,000, and the receipts at $19,000,000. As the appropriation of $500,000 for the gradual increase of the Navy expires in that year, the annual expenditure may, for subsequent years, be estimated at $19,000,000, unless it shall be considered expedient to make further provision for the increase of that essential means of national defence.

It is probable that the annual revenue will be equal to that sum. To provide for the estimated deficit of the years 1825 and 1826, as well as to meet any extraordinary demands upon the Treasury which unforeseen exigencies may require, it is believed to be expedient that the revenue should be increased. This may be conveniently effected by a judicious revision of the tariff, which, while it will not prove onerous to the consumer, will simplify the labors of the officers of the revenue. At present, articles composed of wool, cotton, flax, and hemp, pay different rates of duty. Difficulties frequently occur in determining the duties to which such articles are subject. The provision in the tariff, that the duty upon articles composed of various material shall be regulated by the material of chief value of which it is composed, is productive of frequent embarrassment and much inconvenience. It is, therefore, respectfully submitted, that all articles composed of wool, cotton, flax, hemp, or silk, or of which any one of these materials is a component part, be subject to a duty of twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. The duties upon glass and paper, upon iron and lead, and upon all articles composed of the two latter materials, may also be increased with a view to the augmentation of the revenue. In all these cases, except articles composed of silk, it is probable that the effect of the proposed augmentation of duties will gradually lead to an ample supply of those articles from our domestic manufactories. It is, however, presumed that the revenue will continue to be augmented by the proposed alterations in the tariff, until the public debt shall have been redeemed; after which the public expenditure in time of peace will be diminished to the extent of the Sinking Fund, which is at present $10,000,000. But if, contrary to present anticipations, the proposed augmentation of duties should, before the public debt be redeemed, produce a diminution of the revenue arising from the importation of those articles, a corresponding, if not a greater, augmentation may be confidently expected upon other articles imported into the United States. This supposition rests upon the two-fold conviction that foreign articles nearly equal to the value of the domestic exports will be imported and consumed, and that the substitution of particular classes of domestic articles for those of foreign nations not only does not necessarily diminish the value of domestic exports, but usually tends to increase that value.

The duties upon various other articles, not in any degree connected with our domestic industry, may, likewise, be increased with a view to the augmentation of the public revenue. If the existing tariff shall, during the present session of Congress, be judiciously revised for the purpose of augmenting the revenue, it is confidently believed that it will not only be amply sufficient to defray all the demands upon the Treasury at present authorized by law, but that there will remain an annual surplus, subject to such disposition for the promotion of the public welfare as the wisdom of Congress may direct.

Under the act of the 20th of April last, authorizing the exchange of certain portions of the public debt for five per cent. stock, $56,704 77 only have been exchanged. The increased demand for capital for the prosecution of commercial enterprises during the present year, and the rise in the rate of interest consequent upon that demand, which were not anticipated at the time that the measure was proposed, have prevented its execution. Existing circumstances do not authorize the conclusion that a measure of this nature will be more successful during the next year. If the price of the public debt in 1825 should be as high as it is at present, any portion of it, redeemable at the pleasure of the government, which should be unredeemed in that and subsequent years, after the application of the Sinking Fund to that object, may be advantageously exchanged for stock redeemable at such periods as to give full operation to the Sinking Fund. This may be effected, either directly by an exchange of stock, or indirectly by authorizing a loan to the amount of the stock annually redeemable beyond the amount of the Sinking Fund applicable to that object.

All which is respectfully submitted.

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

MINT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 24, 1822.

*Report of the Secretary of the Treasury in obedience to an act of Congress, with the result of assays of foreign gold coins.*TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 23, 1822.

SIR: In pursuance of the act entitled "An act regulating the currency within the United States of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Spain, and Portugal, and the crowns of France, and five franc pieces," passed the 29th day of April, 1816, I have the honor to transmit herewith a report of the Director of the Mint, giving the result of sundry assays made in pursuance of instructions from this Department.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

The Honorable the PRESIDENT of the Senate of the United States.

UNITED STATES MINT, December 18, 1822.

SIR: Agreeably to your general instructions, I have caused assays to be made of the several species of foreign coins still current, by law, in the United States.

The assayer's report is as follows:

	oz.	dwt.	gr.
No. 1, made of equal parts of 5 crowns of France.....	10	18	6	fine in 12 ounces.
No. 2.....do.....of 5 five franc pieces.....	10	16	6	.....do.....
No. 3.....do.....of 5 Spanish dollars.....	10	16	0	.....do.....

The above assays were made from coins of the latest dates that could be procured, and corresponding so nearly in quality with those assayed on former occasions, it may be safely presumed that no alterations have taken place in the quality of these coins. From the above assay, their value, per ounce, in money of the United States, will be as follows:

French crowns .....	117.57 cents.
Five franc pieces .....	116.49 "
Spanish dollars.....	116.36 "

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

R. PATTERSON.

DRAWBACK.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 27, 1822.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred a bill from the Senate entitled "An act for the relief of Samuel H. Walley and Henry G. Foster," reported:

That the act authorizes the issuing of debentures for the amount of drawbacks on pepper, shipped by Walley & Foster, of Boston, on board the brig Garland and ship Tartar, which were refused them, in consequence of their not having taken the oath prescribed by law, within ten days after the clearance of the vessels, which is one of the requisites necessary to entitle the exporter to the benefit of drawback.

It appears by the documents submitted to the committee that Messrs. Walley & Foster are merchants of fair character in Boston; that they shipped on board the Garland, bound to St. Petersburg, 300 bags of pepper, and on board the Tartar, 400 bags of pepper, for Havre de Grace; which two parcels of pepper were regularly cleared for drawback, and all the requisites of the law complied with except that the oath required was not taken within the period of ten days, prescribed by the act of Congress.

In consequence of this neglect, the collector was not authorized to issue the debentures, and, upon application to him made, did refuse to issue them as it was his duty to do.

It also appears by the petition that Mr. Foster, the junior partner, had always transacted the business of the concern at the custom-house; that, having been taken sick before either of the parcels of pepper had been shipped, this duty, in this instance, devolved upon Mr. Walley, who, being little conversant with the proceedings in the custom-house, and greatly pressed, in consequence of the accumulated business of the copartnership, and entertaining an impression that it would be sufficient to take the oath within ten days from the sailing and not the clearance of the vessels, neglected to take the oath within the ten days from the latter period; and that no oath has been since taken.

The committee are persuaded that the conduct of the petitioners was perfectly fair, and that the grounds set forth in their petition are the real causes of the neglect to take the oath within the time required by law. But, upon an examination of the journals of the House, and the reports of its several committees, to whom cases of this nature have been usually referred, the committee discover that the law allowing a drawback of duties on goods exported from the United States has been always rigidly enforced, as essential to the general system of import of which it is an important part.

The policy of the law, and of the practice under it, appears to have been, not so much to inquire into the fraud of any particular case as to establish a general rule by which evasions of the revenue should be prevented in all cases; and as, in the law itself, no provision has been made for ignorance of its terms or the inattention of those acting under them, it would seem to be improper for Congress to legislate in every particular instance of supposed hardship arising from those causes.

The instances in which relief has been sought, in cases similar to the present, have been numerous, and the rule invariably adopted by the committees and sanctioned by the House has been to grant relief in those cases only where the omission to comply with the usual formalities was attributable to sickness or other unavoidable necessity; it has never been granted on the ground of misapprehension of the law or inattention of the party.

Among the more recent instances of this character was the case of Jacob Ritter, of Philadelphia, whose petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, at the first session of the Fifteenth Congress. In that case the petitioner tendered himself ready to take the oath on the twelfth day, and excused the delay on the ground of a long absence from the country, which had rendered him unacquainted with the practice of the custom-house, and his impression that he was within the time; his conduct, in all respects, was admitted to be fair, and every other formality had been complied with. The committee, however, adhering to the rule which had been established in previous cases, rejected the petition, and the House concurred in the report.

However disposed the committee might be to relax the general principles and policy of the law, in behalf of a case presenting no suspicion of fraud, if the subject were now for the first time to be considered, they do not feel authorized to change the rule by which the practice and decisions of the House have been so long governed, and thus encourage the renewal of the multitude of other claims, which have been either rejected or not brought forward, under the impression that the rule has been unalterably established.

They therefore recommend that the bill be rejected.

REMISSION OF DUTIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 6, 1823.

Mr. McLANE, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of P. A. Guestier, of the city of Baltimore, acting on behalf of the former owners of the French ship Blaireau and her cargo, reported:

That the petitioner states that the French ship "Blaireau" was owned by the house of Peltetreau, Bellamy & Co., of Bordeaux, and sailed in March, 1803, from St. Pierre, in the Island of Martinique, on a voyage to Bordeaux, with a cargo consisting principally of coffee and sugar; that on the voyage she was run foul of in the night by a large Spanish ship-of-war, by which she was supposed to be irreparably injured, and after a consultation she was abandoned by the captain and all the crew, excepting one man who was left in her by accident, who went on board the Spanish ship-of-war and were landed in Spain; that the day following the Blaireau was discovered by an English ship called the Firm, commanded by William Mason, who repaired to the Blaireau and conducted her in safety to Baltimore, whither the English ship was bound; that she arrived in Baltimore in the month of May, where she was libelled by the salvors and the sum of $21,400 decreed for salvage.

That the said ship Blaireau and cargo were sold by the marshal of the district for the sum of $62,816 43, under an order of court, for the payment of the salvage money and charges, out of which he paid to the collector of Baltimore, for duties and tonnage claimed by him in behalf of the United States, the sum of twelve thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and fifty-eight cents; that of this sum a drawback of $5,058 53 was allowed on the exportation of a part of the said cargo, and the balance of $7,054 05 was paid into the Treasury of the United States.

That in a suit subsequently instituted on behalf of the United States against the captain of the said ship Firm, for not reporting to the custom-house certain merchandise taken from the Blaireau, on board the Firm, it was decided by the court that goods taken from a ship at sea and brought into the United States under such circumstances were not subject to the revenue laws and not liable to duties; that thereupon application was made to the Comptroller of the Treasury, to have the amount of duties which had been paid refunded, who declined interfering, on the ground that he had no authority to direct any expenditure of money which had been paid into the Treasury.

Upon this case the petitioner prays to have refunded the said sum of seven thousand and fifty-four dollars and five cents, being the amount of duties actually paid into the Treasury.

The petitioner's claim to relief depends entirely upon the assumption that the cargo of the Blaireau was not liable to duties. If this principle be wrong, there is an end of the case.

In the opinion of the committee the assumption is erroneous and inconsistent with the practice in all the districts in the United States.

They believe the general principle to be to charge duties on all foreign merchandise, the importation whereof is not expressly prohibited, brought into the United States and consumed in the country, without regard to the manner of the importation.

They are aware that wrecked goods have been exempted from many of the formalities of the impost system, but this was from the necessity of the case, where their observance was impracticable, and the duties could be otherwise paid.

It is true that, in a suit growing out of the case of the Blaireau, his honor Judge Winchester decided that wrecked goods were not liable to duties; but it was a decision in no degree involved in the case before him, and, in the opinion of the committee, not entitled to much weight.

That was a suit against the captain of the English ship, for the penalty under the act of Congress, for not reporting a few articles of merchandise taken out of the Blaireau at sea and put on board the Firm. The court decided that the captain, under such circumstances, was not liable to the penalty.

The petitioner also refers, in the documents accompanying his petition, to the case of "Piesh and others vs. Ware and others, and The United States vs. The cargo of the ship Favorite," contained in the 4th volume of Cranch's Reports, page 347. But if that case prove anything, it is that wrecked goods are liable to duties.

In that case the ship had been taken up adrift in the Delaware bay. She was boarded by the salvors, who landed the goods without permit, and afterwards removed them before they paid the duties, and without the certificates usual in cases of regular importation. They tendered the duties, however, which the collector of the district would not receive, but which were finally received and paid.

Afterwards, in a libel by the United States for a forfeiture of the goods, the court decided merely that a forfeiture was not incurred by landing the goods without permit or removing them to a place of safety; predicating their decision upon the necessity of the case and the fact that there could have been no intention to defraud the revenue, the duties having been tendered and subsequently paid.

The committee can see no good reason why goods thus brought in and consumed in the country should not pay duties; and they believe, as far as the liability of goods involuntarily brought into the United States to duty can affect the case, the principle has been subsequently recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States in subjecting prize goods to duties. Upon the whole case, the committee, believing the right to charge duties upon such merchandise to be clear, deem it only safe and expedient to adhere to the uniform practice of the Government, at least until it be overruled by some express judicial determination. They therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

REMISSION OF DUTY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 22, 1823.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Stephen T. Northam and others, of Newport, Rhode Island, reported:

The petitioners state that, on the 19th day of June, 1815, they took out a license for a distillery in said Newport, for the distilling from molasses, for one year, which distillery they worked until the 23d September, in the same year, when, in the violent gale of wind and flood of tide of that day, the said distillery was inundated, the cisterns filled with salt water, and the liquor expelled or greatly injured; that at the time of the calamity the quantity of liquor under the floor of the distillery was eight thousand gallons of molasses, of their own importing, to which the injury was at least 80 per cent. of its value; that, owing to the injury, the operation of the distillery was necessarily suspended for six months, and the amount paid for the license for the year was $2,659 50.

The facts stated in the petition are supported, in the opinion of the committee, by satisfactory evidence, and the petitioners pray that so much of the price paid for the license as appertains to the time the operation of the distillery was suspended be returned to them.

The committee would observe that, although the case is one of extreme hardship, yet to grant the relief prayed for would introduce a new principle and be going further than Congress have gone at any time heretofore. The committee believe it would be injurious to the public interest to extend this principle, and therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

No. 661.

DUTIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES BY MR. CAMBRELLING, JANUARY 29, 1823.

An estimate of duties on certain articles, as proposed in the bill reported by the Committee of Manufactures, and a comparison with existing duties.

Manufactures of wool 30 per cent.—minimum valuation of 80 cents per square yard. This would operate heavily on plains and other coarse woollens, of about 24 inches in width, and which cost 8 d. to 18 d. sterling per running yard. Take, for example, the most inferior, cost 8 d. , equal to 12 d. per square yard, or cents.....	22 22-100
Custom-house addition of 10 per cent.....	23 33-100
	2 33-100
	25 66-100
It is proposed to estimate this square yard at 80 cents, and to charge a duty of 30 per cent. on that valuation; making 24 cents on 25 $\frac{3}{4}$ , or, per cent.....	93 53-00
The existing duty is 25 per cent. on 25 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents; making 6 41-100 cents, instead of 24 cents, as proposed.
The proposed duty on plains, of the best quality, which cost 18 d. per running yard, would be, according to the same calculation, per cent.....	41 56-100
While fine cloths, &c., would pay but, per cent.....	30
Colored printed calicoes cost from 15 s. to 20 s. sterling per piece of 28 running yards. Take the inferior, cost 15 s. ; off drawback of excise, 4 s. 10 d. ; leaves 10 s. 2 d. for 28 yards, or 4 s. 3 d. per running yard; being 7 22-100 d. per square yard, or, cents.....	13 37-100
	14
Custom-house, 10 per cent.....	1 40
	15 40-100
It is proposed to estimate this square yard at 35 cents, and to charge a duty of 25 per cent.; making 8 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents, or, per cent.....	56 82-100
The existing duty is 25 per cent. on a valuation of 25 cents, making 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ cents, or, per cent.	40 53-100
Calicoes which cost 20 s. sterling, now pay, per cent.....	27 6-100
The same, at the proposed valuation of 35 cents the square yard, would pay, per cent.....	37 89-100
Fine cotton goods would pay but 25 per cent. The existing minimum valuation of 25 cents the square yard on cotton goods makes the duty on inferior white goods prohibitory.
On silks various bounties are allowed in England, which it is now proposed to add to the duty of 25 per cent.
On manufactures of flax and hemp: Osnaburgs, of inferior quality, cost, per running yard of 25 to 26 inches width.....	6 d.
Deduct bounty.....	1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.
	4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.
Equal to 6 d. 35-100 per square yard, or, cents.....	11 75-100
Charges.....	60
	12 35-100
Custom-house, 10 per cent.....	1 25-100
	13 60-100
It is proposed to value this square yard at 25 cents, and to charge a duty thereon of 25 per cent., making, cents.....	6 25-100
It is also proposed to add the amount of the bounty, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling, the running yard, or 2 d. 12-100 per square yard.....	3 93-100
	10 18-100
Making 10 18-100 cents duty on 13 60-100 cents, or ad valorem.....	74 85-100
Should the section adding the bounty to the duty be stricken out of the bill, the ad valorem duty proposed would still be.....	45 96-100
This article now pays 15 per centum ad valorem, or about two cents per square yard, instead of 10 18-100 cents, as is proposed.
Brown linens, or Hollands, bed tickings, twilled sackings, Silesian linens, &c., without adding the bounty, would pay 35 to 42 per cent.
Fine linens would pay but 25 per centum.
Linseed oil pays a duty of 15 per centum ad valorem, equal to 10 cents per gallon. It is proposed to increase the duty to 25 cents the gallon.
Glassware, plain, now pays 20 per centum ad valorem; 4 common tumblers, weighing one pound, cost, after deducting drawback, bounty, and discount, 8 88-100 cents, including charges, and 10 per cent. custom-house addition.

It is proposed to charge 20 per centum ad valorem on this 8 88-100 cents, making .....	1 78
And a specific duty of .....	6
	7 78-100
Making 7 78-100 cents on 8 88-100, or ad valorem.....	*87 61-100
Inferior cut tumblers, weighing 37 pounds to the hundred, cost, after deducting drawback of excise, &c., and adding charges, and 10 per centum custom-house addition, per 100.	$6 44
	1 29
It is proposed to charge an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent.....	2 22
And a specific duty of 6 cents per pound on 37 pounds.....
Making $3 51 duty on $6 44, or 54½ per cent.
Cut glass now pays 30 per centum ad valorem. 100 elegant cut glass tumblers, weighing 50 pounds, deducting drawback of excise, &c., and adding charges and custom-house 10 per centum, cost .....	42 93
Proposed duty of 20 per centum.....	8 59
Proposed specific, 6 cents per pound on 50 pounds.....	3 00

DIGEST OF MANUFACTURES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 30, 1823.

[See No. 675 for supplementary return.]

The President communicated a letter from the Secretary of State, informing the Senate that in pursuance of the joint resolution of the 30th March, 1822, a Digest of manufacturing establishments in the United States, and of their manufactures, collected in obedience to the act to provide for taking the Fourth Census, has been made and printed, under the direction of that Department, and that fifteen hundred copies of it, conformably with that resolution, are at the disposal of Congress. The letter was read and, on motion, ordered that it lie on the table.

RESOLUTION

Directing the classification and printing of the accounts of the several manufacturing establishments, and their manufactures, collected in obedience to the tenth section of the act to provide for taking the Fourth Census.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of State be directed to cause to be classified, and reduced to such form as he may deem most conducive to the diffusion of information, the accounts of the several manufacturing establishments, and their manufactures, taken in pursuance of the tenth section of the act entitled "An act to provide for taking the Fourth Census, or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, and for other purposes," approved the fourteenth of March, one thousand eight hundred and twenty; and that he cause fifteen hundred copies of the Digest, so to be made, to be printed, subject to the disposition of Congress.

Approved March 30, 1822.

<sup>2</sup> Should the bounty, as proposed, be added to the duty, the bounty being about five cents per pound, the duty on plain tumblers per pound would be 12 78-100 cents on 8 88-100, or 143 92-100 per centum.

The information as to this manufacture is very imperfect. This statement includes 16 establishments, the whole of which produce cotton yarn, with the exception of one, that manufactures yarn from wool and cotton. There is one additional establishment, with 800 spindles, of which no other particulars are specified, and three others, not in operation, one of them having an invested capital of $10,000 and 288 spindles; another a capital of $9,000 and 456 spindles; and the third a capital of $7,700 and 432 spindles. There is one establishment, also, with an invested capital of $10,000 and 384 spindles, which is out of repair, and another, having 480 spindles and a capital of $6,000, out of repair and worth but little. The establishments, generally, do not, from the information furnished, appear to be in a flourishing condition. An interest in one of them, which is represented to have cost $7,000, had been sold at auction for $750.

There are, besides what has been stated, a woollen manufactory in the county of Providence, with an invested capital of $80,000, but it was not in operation in 1820; two paper staining manufactories, the business in one of which is dull, from the markets being overstocked with French papers, and the other, from the same cause, is not in operation; a jewelry establishment, which in 1816, 1817, and 1818, manufactured annually about $35,000 worth of articles, but is at present doing nothing; a hat manufactory, with a capital of $7,000, which employed 7 men, 3 women, and 2 boys, but whether in constant operation or not is not stated; a dyeing and weaving establishment, that consumed 700 pounds of wool and 200 pounds of cotton annually, at a cost of $750, had 2 women and 2 men employed, and whose machinery was 2 looms and 2 dye kettles. There are likewise in this county a paper and an oil mill, 2 bleaching establishments, 2 tanneries, an iron foundry, and 5 manufactories of jewelry, concerning which no particular information was obtained, but the whole of them are represented to be doing little or nothing. To which may be added a manufactory of paper, of brushes, of blank books, of patent hats, 3 coppersmith establishments, 1 wind-or chair manufactory, 3 manufactories of hats, and 2 of paper, all of which are stated as not in operation, excepting the paper manufactories, with respect to which, however, no particular information could be obtained.

* There are 42,000 hides and skins manufactured into leather of different descriptions, estimated, raw, at $6,089, and when manufactured at $12,240; the establishments estimated at $3,550; wages annually paid could not be ascertained with any certainty. There are also in this county about 16,000 bushels of ashes, manufactured mostly into pearl ashes, which are estimated at $1,705; 30 tons of pot and pearl, estimated to be worth $2,500; invested stock, at $1,850; wages paid annually, $320. There are, besides, 12,700 bushels of rye annually distilled, which are estimated to be worth $5,245; the production in whiskey is 34,410 gallons, estimated at $12,204; wages annually paid, $1,240; contingent expenses not estimated. There is also, in Waterville, in this county, a woolen manufactory, but, owing to the pecuniary circumstances of the company, it has never been put fully into operation; there are, however, 130 spindles in use. Proprietors were reluctant in giving information. It has cost about $6,000. The accounts of the manufactures in this county, as rendered, must be considered as much less than the truth warrants. From the absence or reluctance of the owners of some of these establishments, it was impossible to obtain any information on the subject.

Y.; but in consequence of the proprietors all residing in New York county, the return was made to the marshal's assistant in that county. It was commenced in 1811; the stock subscribed and paid was $92,000. During the war 3,000 spindles were kept in operation, and the profits invested in extending its machinery. In 1817 it failed, was sold under execution, and could not meet its debts by $17,000. It has been since put in operation, but is stated to be not in a flourishing condition, though the machinery employed is second to none in the United States.

FAIRFAX.—The only information obtained from this county is, that there are a manufactory of wool and a merchant mill, without any particulars.

FAUQUIER.—The return reports 20 mills, which manufacture 33,750 barrels of flour, but gives no other information.

HAMPSHIRE.—This county contains 13 flour mills, 2 fulling mills, 1 brewery, 3 rifle factories, and many other minor establishments; but the returns are so imperfect as to render it impossible to give any satisfactory account of them.

All in the city of Richmond. An extensive manufactory of muskets, rifles, swords, and pistols is carried on in the public armory, where 80 men and complete water machinery are employed; and in the penitentiary about 200 convicts are generally engaged in almost every description of mechanical labor; but no specific returns have been made from these establishments.

* This establishment was intended for manufacturing the finest kind of broadcloths; and machinery, adapted to such manufactures, was obtained, believed to be of the best kind, and, with the exception of 2 or 3 articles, as complete as possessed by any similar establishment. Machinery has been added for manufacturing coarse cloths, and both are now in full operation; workmen employed mostly Europeans; was commenced in 1814, with a good prospect, but the war ceased, and with it the circumstances of the country changed. The market was filled with foreign woollens, and the merchants universally gave them a decided preference in their purchases, and discouraged, by every means, the purchase or use of our own productions. By hostile and foreign rivalry, the establishment has not been destroyed, but has been continued in operation at a loss of more than $40,000. When the hope of protection from Government ceased, the establishment went into the hands of new proprietors, since which time a favorable change has taken place. The people of the country are determined to use our fabrics in preference to foreign. On trial, they were found more durable, and in all respects equal to foreign articles, yet the demand is limited, and sales effected with difficulty.

REMISSION OF DUTIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 3, 1823.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Elijah Vansyckle, of the city of Philadelphia, made the following report:

The petitioner imported into the district and port of Philadelphia, on board the brig Susan, from Havana, on the 13th October, 1822, four hundred and seventy-two cases of brown sugars, on which the duties, according to law, were secured at the custom-house, amounting to $5,665 97. On the 15th December, 1822, a fire (supposed to be the work of an incendiary) destroyed three hundred and fifty-two cases of said sugars in the store in which they were deposited. The proportion of the duties thereon payable would be $4,217, from the payment of which the petitioner prays to be released.

The facts stated in the petition are supported by the oath of petitioner, the certificate of the Collector as to the amount of the duties, and the certificate of three citizens of Philadelphia as to the destruction of the sugar by the fire.

The committee would remark that many similar cases have been presented to the attention of Congress, and they are not aware that any have been granted. The utmost relief that Congress has given has been to extend the time of payment, as in the case of the sufferers by fire in Savannah. Even this relief has been withheld in many cases. In the present application an entire remission of the duties is asked, which, in the opinion of the committee, it would be unwise to grant.

They therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

MINT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 4, 1823.

Mr. ROCHESTER, from the Committee appointed on the 13th ultimo, who were, by a resolution adopted on the 23d ultimo, instructed to inquire into the expediency of prolonging the continuance of the Mint at Philadelphia; and whether any amendments in the laws regulating the coins of the United States be necessary; and, also, whether it would be expedient to make certain foreign gold coins receivable in payment of debts due to the United States, reported, in part:

That on the 16th day of October, 1786, Congress passed an ordinance for the establishment of a Mint, agreeably to the resolutions of the 8th August preceding, founded on a report from the then Board of Treasury.

That on the 2d of April, 1792, the first act passed regulating the coins of the United States and establishing a Mint, to be situate and carried on at the seat of Government for the time being. This act defined the national standard, and designated the description and denominations of the various American gold, silver, and copper coins.

No alteration has been since made by law in the standard, relative value, or weight of the respective coins, except in those of copper, which, by an act of January 14, 1793, underwent a small diminution of weight, and were, subsequently, by an act of December 27, 1795, on account of the increased price of copper, reduced to their present weight, viz: seven pennyweights for cents, and for half cents in proportion. On the removal of the seat of Government to Washington, by the act concerning the Mint, of 3d March, 1801, the Mint was continued at Philadelphia until 4th March, 1803, and has been continued there since, by several successive acts of Congress, the last of which, approved the 14th January, 1818, will expire on the 4th day of March next.

It is hardly necessary to urge the propriety of continuing the Mint. All well regulated commercial countries maintain establishments for the making of national coinage. Ours has the sanction of a resolution of Congress so long ago as the 21st of February, 1782, predicated upon a report of a committee of the States. It is, at present, in a highly improved state, and fully adequate to all its appropriate purposes.

The power to coin money and to regulate its value being vested by the Constitution in Congress exclusively, the States might reasonably complain were the exercise of a power so intimately connected with the regular operations of business and trade, and, in some degree, involving our national character, to be neglected.

At the commencement of the present year the silver coined at the Mint amounted to $12,611,199, and the gold coinage to $7,709,847. The committee cannot pretend to any precision in estimating the probable amount of gold and silver coins now in the United States; some of our statistical writers put it at sixteen millions, being one and a half million less than was supposed to be in the country in 1804, according to Blodget's Manual. It is thought, however, not to be underrating the present aggregate amount by stating it (including foreign gold and silver) at less than has been coined of those metals at our Mint.

With respect to the copper coinage, it may be satisfactory to state that, since the year 1795, copper, in the form of planchets ready for coinage, has been procured on contract from England; that the supply now on hand, uncoined, will probably give employment to the Mint for the remainder of the year 1823 on this description of coinage, and is estimated to be worth about $14,000; the total amount of copper coinage at this time is $446,409; it is the only branch of coinage which has afforded any profit to the Government; this profit has varied from time to time, according to the price of copper in England and the rate of exchange, but may fairly be set down at about 20 per cent. Should the mines in the region of Lake Superior, spoken of in the intelligent communication made to the Secretary of War by Mr. Schoolcraft, Indian Agent at the Sault of St. Marie, and submitted to Congress in December last, prove as valuable as the agent represents them, there is little doubt but that, in the event of the extinguishment of the Indian title thereto, and of the erection of a refining establishment on an efficient basis, taken in connexion with the increasing facilities for transportation, by water, from that region to the sea-board, they will furnish a superabundant supply of copper for all the purposes of the Mint, as well as for every other necessary one, at a much cheaper rate than that at which the same metal may be brought from England.

The committee are not aware of any circumstance growing out of the operations of the Mint, or of the manner in which it has been conducted, which denotes any abuse, or demands a suspension of its operations. Its location is, perhaps, on all accounts, as favorable as any other which might be designated, and for some reasons obviously more so, to wit: Economy in the public expense. The whole establishment, including buildings, lots, and machinery, has, altogether, cost about $36,000, and if exposed to sale would probably fall far short of the expense that would be necessary for the purchase of another suitable site, and for the erection and furnishing of a national Mint at the seat of Government.

Again, most of the deposits of gold and silver have been, and probably will continue to be, made by the Bank of the United States, and those that are not made by that bank are generally transferred to it in Mint certificates. This fact would seem to indicate the propriety, if not necessity, of keeping those two institutions near each other.

Under the laws regulating the operations of the Mint no seignorage can be charged on the coinage of gold or silver. On copper, which, as before mentioned, is coined on the account of Government, the profit, during the last five years, has exceeded $30,000.

For some time after the establishment of the Bank of the United States large deposits were made through it in European coins; and, of late years, the deposits of silver from Mexico and the Republics of South America have been very considerable, generally through the same medium. Whilst the Mints of those countries are in a great measure inoperative, there is no doubt but that the bullion from their mines may increase our deposits; yet, when their Mints renew their operations, (as doubtless they will ere long,) the importation of their coins and bullion must wholly depend upon the extent of our commerce with them. The importation of gold from thence, which has found its way to the Mint, has never been very considerable, that of their silver, during the last five years, amounts to $1,476,680, while that from all other places amounts to $2,869,024.

The committee ask leave to bring in a bill for the further continuance of the Mint at Philadelphia, to which bill they have added a section providing an amendment in the existing laws, which allow no deduction for the refining of silver, unless when below our standard, nor any compensation for the expense of alloy used in reducing to the legal standard such silver deposits as are of a quality superior to the standard.

The Director of the Mint, in a communication of the 30th ultimo, addressed to a member of the committee, states that, "it has been ascertained, from many years' experience, that the wastage on coining is about one grain per ounce—and this is the allowance made to the chief coiner. That on melting and refining would probably be as much; but a reduction is made from this of all the charges for refining gold and silver below our standard, which is accounted for to the Treasury of the United States. Nothing is retained, except for refining the gold and silver below our standard; and that, as above, is deducted from the allowance for wastage. This, during the last five years, amounted to $2,147."

COINS OF FRANCE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 5, 1823.

Mr. ROCHESTER, from the Committee appointed on the 13th ultimo, and instructed, by a resolution of the House of Representatives adopted on that day, to inquire into the expediency of continuing in force for a further term so much of the act entitled "An act regulating the currency within the United States of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, and the crowns of France and five franc pieces," passed on the 29th day of April, 1816, as relates to the crowns of France and five franc pieces, reported on that subject:

That by the act of the 29th of April, 1816, these coins were declared to be a tender for the term of three years; the crowns at the rate of 117 6-10 cents per ounce, and the francs at the rate of 116 cents per ounce. The former had been made a tender by two earlier acts, which had been allowed to expire. Foreign gold coins ceased to be a tender on the 1st November, 1819, and on the 3d of March, 1819, the act of the 29th April, 1816, was continued in force, so far as related to crowns and francs, until the 29th April, 1821. On the 3d March, 1821, it was further continued in force, to the same extent, until the 29th April next. From assays lately made at the Mint the value of these coins, per ounce, has been ascertained to be greater than that of Spanish milled dollars, and of American silver coins.

It is believed the acts above referred to were passed with little or no opposition, and that no complaints have been made respecting their practical effects; and when we take into view the increasing difficulty of fulfilling engagements by specie payments, which is the inevitable consequence of the acknowledged diminution of the aggregate amount of our metallic medium during the current year, the expediency of continuing crowns and five franc pieces a tender for a further term forces itself upon the minds of your committee more strongly than at any former period.

It is believed that the gold coins, both foreign and domestic, have been almost wholly exported. They have certainly been withdrawn from circulation to such an extent that some very intelligent writers have asserted, with every probability of being correct, that there is not now in the United States one gold coin for every thirty that were in the country five years ago. Without inquiring into the causes which have produced this extraordinary drain, it may be added that they have, likewise, operated to rid us of American and Spanish milled dollars to nearly the same extent, and have left in the country scarcely any of its usual metallic currency, except that which consists of the crowns of France, five franc pieces, and those silver coins which are of denominations less than a dollar.

In corroboration and illustration of the foregoing statement, your committee beg leave to subjoin a few well ascertained facts:

There is, and has been for many months, an uninterrupted and rising demand, in our seaport towns, for all descriptions of gold coins and dollars, for the purpose of remittances to foreign countries. It is well known that the former are never underrated in any country, whilst the Spanish milled dollars have a universality of circulation exceeding that of any other coin. The American dollar is received in the East Indies at from one and a half to two per cent. less than the dollar of Spain. There is very little foreign demand for five franc pieces, and none for crowns.

The balance of specie and bullion exported from the United States during the fiscal year ending on the 30th of September last, according to the custom-house entries, amounts to $7,434,634; but it is supposed that the law prohibiting the landing of specie, without a previous entry at the custom-house, particularly that which comes from countries where its exportation is forbidden, is sometimes evaded. Whether this surmise be true, and to what extent, the committee will not undertake to say, nor does anything beyond an allusion to it fall within the scope of the present inquiry. But when it is recollected that the amount of specie exportations may also be underrated, from a portion of it going out of the country without entry, it requires no great stretch of credulity to believe that the balance against the United States for the said year amounts to at least six millions of dollars.

There is no reasonable ground to suppose that the account current has assumed a more favorable aspect for the last four months; and there is less doubt that the said balance was made up principally, if not altogether, of gold coins and of dollars.

In consequence of the high rate of all foreign exchange, especially that of England, which has for a long time vibrated from 10 to 12 per cent., it has been confidently asserted that some of the banks in the largest commercial city in the Union, in conducting which great skill and foresight have generally been discovered, have at this time on hand a greater amount of crowns and five franc pieces than of all other descriptions of specie; and that none of them have much gold of any kind, and scarcely a single American or Spanish dollar.

Your committee have no reason to believe that a better state of things exists in either of our other cities, with the exception, perhaps, of Philadelphia, the proximity of whose moneyed institutions to the Mint affords them some little additional facilities in procuring coins in cases of emergency; and not including the Bank of the United States, which possesses a decided advantage over all the others, on account of the revenue deposits; yet, notwithstanding such an immense advantage, this bank, at one time, found it necessary to import quantities of foreign coin, specially with the view to meet any possible exigency which might press upon it.

As one among the many proofs that might be adduced to show the extent and rapidity with which specie has been banished from the United States, the committee submit a statement, which they think will not be contradicted, that the specie in the Boston banks, which, in January, 1821, appears to have amounted to nearly two and a half millions of dollars, was, in June last, reduced to $406,275. It is impossible to state, with any certainty, the comparative extent of the whole diminution in the United States; but many commercial men estimate that about one-third of all the specie in the country left it in the course of the last year.

Should the act of Congress making the crowns and francs a lawful tender be suffered to expire at this time, and any serious or large demand be suddenly made upon the banks, they might find it extremely difficult, not to say impossible, to meet it. Such an event would be highly injurious, and it might, therefore, be dangerous to degrade their present metallic capital. Even now, with what they have in their vaults, they are frequently subjected to unpleasant embarrassments in providing for the demands which are occasionally made from one commercial place on another; and it is believed that, for nearly a year past, their principal support and credit have been derived from mutual forbearance, superinduced by mutual wants and a community of interest.

To prove that these conjectures are not fallacious, the committee will not go beyond the banks in the District of Columbia, under the immediate eye of Congress. By a schedule of the situation of the eleven banks in this District, contained in a report submitted to Congress in April last, it appears that at that time, with capitals exceeding, collectively, $5,000,000, they had an aggregate of $955,712 in notes in circulation, and only $262,187 of specie in all their vaults.

Under the present state of the money market, should it long continue as it now is, a formidable reaction must ensue, by the depreciation of all property, the withdrawal from circulation of most of the safe paper medium, and the consequent bankruptcy of very many of our most enterprising merchants.

Whether banks have been productive of more good than evil it is not necessary to inquire; but it may be stated that they are now so completely fastened upon the community, and their credit is so intimately connected with the moneyed interests of the country, and any shock they might experience would be so severely felt, that it would seem to be the policy of the General Government to afford them support compatible with the discreet exercise of its exclusive power to regulate coins. Past experience and present exigences clearly demonstrate that we cannot yet dispense with the use of foreign coins, although it was confidently predicted, thirty years ago, by some of our statesmen, that their beneficial tendency would be superseded by the operations of the Mint within the space of three years.

The committee are aware of the inconvenience of using a variety of coins, unequal in their purity; but cannot resist the conviction that, as a temporary expedient, it would be wise in Congress to extend its fostering care to the banks, by assigning a determinate legal value to the almost only coins now remaining in their vaults.

There is another consideration which ought, perhaps, to be adverted to. If the act making crowns and francs a tender be suffered to expire, the banks, with the exception of those at Philadelphia, will be compelled to transport those coins to the Mint, at great expense and some risk, for the purpose of being converted into American coins; and when that shall be done, their new character would give them an immediate passport to Europe. The committee therefore conclude that, while it is admitted that the rate of exchange is heavily against us, the precious metals rapidly vanishing, stocks going abroad, property depreciating, and insolvencies multiplying, every inducement should be held out for the importation of specie and bullion, and for the retention of that which our capitalists now possess.

The committee have prepared a bill continuing crowns and five francs a lawful tender, as heretofore, until the 4th day of March, 1825, which they ask leave to report.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 30, 1823.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 15th instant, requesting my opinion of the expediency of prolonging the continuance of the Mint at Philadelphia, I have the honor to state that, in my opinion, a due regard to the public interest requires that that establishment should be continued for some time longer at Philadelphia.

The present state of the currency, also, justifies the conclusion that the act of the 3d of March, 1821, continuing in force for the term of two years so much of the act of the 29th of April, 1816, as makes crowns and five franc pieces of France a legal tender in the payment of debts, ought to be continued for a limited period.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

HON. WM. B. ROCHESTER, Chairman of the Select Committee, &c.

[2D SESSION.]

SINKING FUND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 6, 1823.

The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund respectfully report to Congress:

That the measures which have been authorized by the Board, subsequent to the last report, of the 7th of February, 1822, as far as the same have been completed, are fully detailed in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to this Board, dated the 6th day of the present month, and in the statements therein referred to, which are herewith transmitted and prayed to be received as a part of this report.

DANIEL D. TOMPKINS, Vice President of the United States.

J. MARSHALL, Chief Justice of the United States.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, Secretary of State.

WM. H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury.

WASHINGTON, February 6, 1823.

REPORT.

The Secretary of the Treasury respectfully reports to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund—

That the balance of moneys advanced on account of the public debt, remaining unexpended at the close of the year 1820, and applicable to payments falling due after that year, which balance, as appears by the statement B, annexed to the last annual report, amounted to .....	$1,880 89
With the sums disbursed from the Treasury during the year 1821, on account of the principal and interest of the public debt, amounting, as per the last annual report, to .....	8,367,093 62
And making, together, the sum of .....	8,368,974 51

Have been accounted for in the following manner, viz:

There was applied, during the year 1821, towards the payment of the principal and interest of the public debt, as ascertained by accounts rendered to this Department, as per the annexed statement A, the sum of $8,403,563 49.

[2D SESSION.]

FOREIGN GOLD COINS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1823.

Mr. ROCHESTER, from the Committee appointed on the 13th ultimo, having deliberated on the last point of inquiry embraced in the resolution of instructions to them, adopted by the House of Representatives on the 23d ultimo, namely, "the expediency of making the gold coins of Great Britain, Portugal, France, and Spain, receivable in payment of debts due the United States, at their intrinsic value," asked leave, on that subject, to report:

The gold coins of Great Britain and Portugal, of their present standards, correspond almost exactly with our own; those of France are not so fine, and those of Spain still less pure.

Although no regular report of the assays of these coins has been made by the Director of the Mint since 1819, during which year the last act of Congress, declaring them a lawful tender, expired, yet, from numerous assays made since on deposits, it has been abundantly ascertained that their intrinsic value is equal to that which was assigned to them, respectively, by the act of the 29th of April, 1816.

The committee assent, without hesitation, to the expediency of making them receivable in payment of debts to the United States on sales of public lands, but doubt the propriety of making them a tender on other debts, duties, taxes, or sums of money, which have or may become due to the Government.

Notwithstanding it was stated in a previous report of the committee that the gold coins of every description and denomination, whether American or foreign, have of late been almost entirely banished from our seaport towns, yet there is reason to believe that, owing to the constant emigrations to the western country from Europe and to the acknowledged want of confidence in many of their banking institutions, considerable sums of foreign gold have found their way into that country, and have been and are much relied on as part of the means of paying the debt there due for public lands.

The committee are assured that very many of the purchasers of those lands, being persuaded, from long habit, that gold would, on account of its metallic preciousness, continue to be the safest and most in demand as a circulating medium, have studiously and carefully preserved it for the purpose of making payments to the Receivers of Public Money on their land purchases.

The debt on account of sales of the public lands is so large that it is believed every facility and inducement compatible with the just rights of the General Government should be extended by Congress for its speedy reduction and final extinguishment by actual payment.

It will be seen, by reference to the annexed communication of the 3d of February instant, made in reply to a letter addressed to the Treasury Department by direction of the committee, that the Secretary of the Treasury has found it expedient to authorize the Receivers of Public Money to continue to receive the coins adverted to in this report "in payments on account of public lands," and that "they are, in fact, now received by them." The reasons assigned in said communication for giving such authority to the Receivers are perfectly satisfactory to the committee, and strongly indicate the propriety, not to say necessity, of giving to that authority the sanction of law.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 3, 1823.

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 31st ultimo, inquiring whether it would not be expedient to make the gold coins of Great Britain, Portugal, France, and Spain, receivable in payments to the United States, at their intrinsic value, and especially in payments on account of public lands, I have the honor to state that it is deemed proper that it should be made a lawful tender in all payments to the United States on account of public lands. Upon the expiration of the act of Congress which made them a legal tender in the payment of debts in the United States, the Receivers of Public Money were authorized to continue to receive them in all payments on account of public lands, and they are, in fact, now received by them. This authority was given, first, because no doubt was entertained that the creditors of the Government in the States and Territories where the land offices were established would receive such coin in preference to the notes of the State banks established in those States and Territories, and second, because the refusal of those coins and of the notes of the local banks would have placed it out of the power of the purchasers of the public lands to make payment, as the notes of the Bank of the United States and of its offices did not circulate among them, and the current coin of the Union did not circulate in sufficient quantity to meet even a small proportion of the payments due by them.

In terminating this letter, I feel it my duty to observe that the relative current value of gold and silver differs materially from that established by the laws of the United States. The consequence has been that the gold coin of the United States has always been exported whenever the rate of exchange between the United States and the commercial nations of Europe has been in favor of the latter. If the gold coins of the United States should be made equal in value to sixteen times the value of silver coins of the same quantity of pure silver, they would be exported only when the rate of exchange should be greatly against the United States.

This subject was presented more fully in a report made by this Department upon the state of the currency, in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st of March, 1819, to which I beg leave to refer the committee.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD.

DUTIES, DEBENTURE BONDS, REVENUE, SINKING FUND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 8, 1823.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 5, 1823.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 9th ultimo, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the House "a statement of the custom-house bonds outstanding on the 1st day of December, 1822, and falling due within the year 1823, with the amount of debentures chargeable upon the same, and the probable expense of collection;"

Also, "a statement of the amount of bonds outstanding on the 1st January, 1821, and at the commencement of each quarter during that year, with the debentures chargeable upon the same, at the respective periods;"

Also, "the amount of revenue from customs which will probably accrue in the year 1823, and the portion thereof which will probably be received in the course of that year, stating the average amount which has been received on the customs accrued within each year since 1816, inclusive;"

Also, "a statement of the whole amount of the unexpended balances of the Sinking Fund, distinguishing each year since 1817; and on what principle he distinguishes the balances that will accrue against that fund in 1823 and 1824 from those of preceding years, by which he proposes, in his annual report of 22d December, 1822, to charge the estimated unexpended balance of 1823 and 1824 upon the revenue of 1825;" I have the honor to submit the statements required by the resolution, as far as it has been practicable to form them from the records and files of the Department.

The statement showing the amount of bonds outstanding upon the 1st of December, 1822, is defective: 1st. The monthly schedules of bonds for the months of October and November have not been received from some of the collectors; 2d. Because the monthly schedules almost always, in the principal districts, contain bonds for duties which accrued several months before; and 3d. Because the duties upon merchandise deposited in the public stores are secured by duty bonds only when they are removed from them, and it is only then that they appear in the monthly schedules. When the deposit is made a bond is given without sureties, the merchandise being the substitute for them.

From these facts it is apparent that the amount of duties which accrued during the several quarters of each successive year, as exhibited in the quarterly accounts of the collectors, rendered to the Comptroller for settlement, always considerably exceeds the amount exhibited in the monthly schedules of bonds rendered to the Secretary of the Treasury.

It may be proper to observe that, to ascertain the amount of duties which accrued during the year 1822 that will be payable in 1823, the bonds taken in the month of December, and those in the months of October and November, which have not yet been reported to the Department, and those which may be hereafter liquidated for duties which accrued in the year 1822, and which will be payable in 1823, must be added to the amount represented in statement No. 1, as becoming due in the present year. When these sums shall be ascertained and added to that amount, it is presumed that it will be increased to at least $19,000,000. In order that statement No. 1 may be correctly understood, it is necessary to state that the amount of bonds outstanding on the 1st of October has been ascertained from the quarterly accounts of the collectors rendered to the Comptroller for settlement, and, consequently, contains the amount of duties on merchandise deposited in the public stores. The rest of the statement is formed from the schedules of bonds rendered to the Secretary of the Treasury. The difference between the amount of bonds estimated to be outstanding on the 1st December, 1822, and the amount estimated to become due in 1823, is accounted for as follows:

1. Bonds payable in December, 1822, amounting to.....	$2,339,055 00
2. Bonds in suit the 1st December, 1822, amounting to.....	2,818,427 00
3. Bonds falling due in 1823, amounting to.....	17,426,257 00
4. The amount of bonds falling due in 1824, estimated at.....	226,409 00
5. The amount of duties which have accrued upon merchandise deposited in the public stores, estimated at.....	1,319,048 00

Which several sums make the aggregate amount of..... 24,129,196 00 as stated in No. 1.

Of the last item it is probable that a considerable proportion will be payable during the year 1823, but it is impracticable to offer any other than a conjectural estimate of that proportion.

The quarterly accounts rendered by the collectors to the Comptroller for settlement present, in detail, the amount of duties secured during the quarter for which they are rendered. They distinguish between bonds which are not due and those which are in suit; but, as they are entered in the statements in the order in which they were liquidated, they do not show the amount which will become due within twelve months from the expiration of any given year, nor within any subdivision of that period. They, however, present the dates of the bonds, and the dates at which they become due. By a detailed dissection of these quarterly accounts it might now be ascertained what proportion of the duty bonds which were outstanding on the 31st day of December, 1820, were payable within the year 1821, and, consequently, what proportion of the duties which accrued in 1821 were paid within that year. After the dissection was completed, from the amount thus ascertained should be deducted: 1st. The amount of bonds thus becoming due which were not paid within the year; and, 2d. The amount received from bonds in suit previously to the year 1821. The difference between the amount thus obtained and the total receipts from duties, during the year, will be the sum received from duties which accrued within the year; and if to this difference should be added the amount of bonds taken for duties which accrued within the year, which becoming due within the year were not paid, the whole amount of duties which accrued within the year 1821 that were payable within that year will be ascertained. The same result may be obtained for the year 1822, as soon as the amount of the receipts during the year are ascertained. But when it is known that the average number of duty bonds annually liquidated is estimated at more than 50,000, the reason why no attempt has been made since the organization of the Government to obtain the results required by the resolution will be readily perceived. The benefit which would result from the possession of the information to be thus acquired has, it is presumed, been considered by my predecessors in office not sufficient to justify the labor and expense which would be necessary to obtain it.

If I have satisfactorily shown that this information can be acquired only for the years that are past, it will readily be perceived that it is wholly impracticable to show the amount of the duties which are yet to accrue in 1823 that will be payable within that year. The most that can be offered in obedience to that part of the resolution is a conjectural estimate of the amount. When there are no sudden or violent fluctuations in the amount of importations, and of re-exportations for benefit of drawback, it is considered safe to estimate the receipts of the year ensuing the date of each annual report equal to the amount of duty bonds outstanding and payable within the year. Such an estimate is founded upon the presumption that the receipts within the year, from duties accruing within the same period, will be equal to the amount of debentures and expenses of collection chargeable upon the revenue of the year. If the importations should fall considerably short of those of the preceding year, or if the amount of debenture issued and chargeable upon the receipts of the year should be considerably increased, the receipts would necessarily be less than the amount estimated; but if the reverse of this state of things should occur, the receipts would necessarily exceed the amount estimated. Such has been the case during the last year; the receipts have, consequently, considerably exceeded the estimates for that year. From the data in the possession of the Department, at the date of the last annual report, the receipts from the customs during the year 1823 were estimated. The facts since disclosed tend to confirm the correctness of that estimate.

Statement No. 4 exhibits the annual surplusses of the Sinking Fund, from the year 1817 to the year 1822, inclusive, and the estimated surplusses of the years 1823 and 1824.

In reply to so much of the resolution as requires me to state upon what principle the balances that will accrue in the years 1823 and 1824 are distinguished in the annual report of the 22d of December, 1822, from those of preceding years, I have the honor to submit the following facts and observations: By reference to the several acts of Congress, passed from the 4th of August, 1790, to the 3d of March, 1795, inclusive, providing for the redemption of the public debt and creating the Sinking Fund, it will be seen that no specific sum was appropriated to that object. The act of the 8th of May, 1792, and that of the 3d of March, 1795, after making reservations of the public revenue for the discharge of the current expenses, appropriate the proceeds of the duties upon imports and tonnage, and of other duties and taxes, of the sales of public lands, of the bank dividends, of the debts due the United States before the present organization of the Government, and, lastly, of all the "surplusses of the revenues of the United States which shall remain at the end of any calendar year beyond the amount of the appropriations charged upon the said revenues, and which, during the session of Congress next thereafter, shall not be otherwise specially appropriated or reserved by law." These two acts and the act of the 4th of August, 1790, form together what has generally been denominated the Funding System. In these acts provision was made for converting the public debt into a funded debt; and the funds set apart by them for the payment of the interest and redemption of the principal of the public debt in its new form were declared to be vested in the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, in trust, to be applied to the redemption of the said debt, including such loans as might be obtained by virtue of the said acts, until the same should be fully reimbursed and redeemed; and the faith of the United States was thereby "pledged that the moneys or funds aforesaid shall inviolably remain, and be appropriated and vested as aforesaid, to be applied to the said reimbursement and redemption in manner aforesaid, until the same shall be fully and completely effected." The pledge, thus solemnly given, acquired additional force from the circumstance of its being offered as an inducement to the public creditors to accept of the terms presented in those acts, which changed the nature and conditions of the then existing debt. The sixteenth section of the same act, of the 3d of March, 1795, creates the surplus fund and exempts from its operation all the funds appropriated to the Sinking Fund. This exclusion was the necessary consequence of the sacred character given by that very act to the funds constituting the Sinking Fund. This mode of reasoning, and of viewing the subject, was adhered to until the change of the administration of the Union in March, 1801. At the commencement of that administration several laws were in force which imposed taxes, the proceeds of which formed a part of the Sinking Fund, that were considered onerous, and, consequently, produced dissatisfaction in the nation. If the pledges made of their proceeds to the Sinking Fund placed them beyond the control of the legislative authority, it was clearly perceived that the most odious system of taxation might be perpetuated against the decided will of the nation. The question was maturely examined, and the result of that examination was presented to the nation in the provisions of the act of the 29th of April, 1802. The first section of this act appropriated so much of the duties on merchandise and tonnage, together with the moneys other than surplusses of revenue which then constituted the Sinking Fund, or should accrue to it by provisions previously made, as would amount to the annual sum of 7,300,000 dollars, and which was declared to be vested in the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, and that it should continue to be appropriated and applied by them until the principal of the public debt should be reimbursed and redeemed; with a proviso that "after the whole of the said debt, the old six per cent. stock, the deferred stock, the 1796 six per cent. stock, and the three per cent. stock excepted, shall have been reimbursed or redeemed, any balance of the sums annually appropriated by this act, which may remain unexpended at the end of six calendar months next succeeding the end of the calendar year to which such annual appropriation refers, shall be carried to the surplus fund, and cease to be vested, by the authority of this act, in the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund." By the provision here recited the appropriation to the Sinking Fund was, in a few years after its date, subjected to the operation of the principle of the sixteenth section of the act of the 3d of March, 1795, which created the surplus fund. The only difference between this and other appropriations, in relation to the surplus fund, was that it was subject to be carried to the account of it eighteen months sooner than other appropriations. The exception of the Sinking Fund, in the said section, from the operation of the principle established by it was rendered a nullity, and virtually repealed. The act of the 29th of April, 1802, remained in full force until the 3d of March, 1817, when an act was passed, the first section of which repealed "so much of any act or acts of Congress as make appropriations for the purchase or reimbursement of the principal, or for the payment of the interest, of the funded debt of the United States." It has been already stated that the first section of the act of the 29th of April appropriated 7,300,000 dollars, and that a proviso to the said section directed, after certain parts of the funded debt shall have been redeemed, any balance of that appropriation that might remain six months after the end of the year to which it shall refer to be carried to the amount of the surplus fund. The act of the 3d of March, 1817, either repeals this proviso or it does not. If it does not repeal it, the balance of the appropriation of ten millions for the year 1824, which may remain unexpended on the 31st of December of that year, will be the only sum demandable by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund in 1825, beyond the appropriation of 10,000,000 dollars for that year. If it does repeal the proviso, the question then recurs, what disposition do the existing laws make of the surplusses of that appropriation since the 3d of March, 1817? It has been inferred, in the annual report to which the resolution refers, that they are subject to be carried to the account of the surplus fund at the end of two calendar years from the expiration of the year to which such appropriations may severally refer. This inference is founded, 1st, upon the fact that the exception in the section creating the Sinking Fund having been rendered null and virtually repealed by the act of the 29th of April, 1802, is not revived by the repeal of the proviso to the first section of the act. It is admitted that when an act is passed simply to repeal another, it has been contended by jurists that an act simply repealing the latter act is a virtual re-enactment of the provisions of the first act; but to apply this rule to an act incidentally repealing some provision of another act with which its general enactments are but slightly, if at all, connected, cannot, it is believed, be seriously supported.

If, however, any doubt should exist upon this question, the consideration that the circumstances which led to the exclusion of the appropriations to the Sinking Fund from the operation of the principle upon which the surplus fund was established were entirely changed by the act of April 29, 1802, is entitled to great weight. Since that act the reason of the exclusion has ceased to exist, and the maxim of law, "cessante ratione, ipsa cessat lex," applies with full force. To consider the repeal of the proviso of the first section of that act as virtually reviving the exception contained in the sixteenth section of the act of March 3, 1795, would be in direct opposition to the principle of that law maxim.

The question, however, will be submitted to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund for their decision whenever it shall occur, unless legislative provision shall, in the interim, be interposed.

I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Register's Office, February 4, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit the following statements, formed in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States of January 9, 1823:

1. A statement of outstanding custom-house bonds for duties on merchandise, October 1, 1822, amounting to $24,054,599. Of which, it is estimated, there will fall due and be payable in the year 1823, $17,351,660.

2. A statement of the balances of outstanding bonds taken for duties on merchandise, and debentures issued for drawback on merchandise exported, commencing January 1, 1821, and ending September 30, 1822.

3. A statement exhibiting the net amount of revenue which accrued from duties on merchandise, tonnage, &c.; of payments made into the Treasury, and expenses of collection of the same, on December 31, of the years 1816, 1817, 1818, 1819, 1820, and 1821.

4. A statement of the whole amount of the unexpended balance of the Sinking Fund, distinguishing each year since 1817.

I am, with great respect, sir, your obedient humble servant,

JOSEPH NOURSE, Register.

Hon. WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury.

(a) It may be proper to observe, in respect to this item, that in some of the large ports it includes bonds given without sureties for duties on goods deposited in the public stores, for which duties bonds with sureties are given when the goods are removed, but the latter bonds only appear in the monthly schedules rendered to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) The returns being incomplete, the actual amount of bonds taken in the months of October and November, 1822, cannot be ascertained.

(c) The same remark applies as well to this item as to item (d).

This difference consists, in part, of the bonds given without sureties on a deposit of goods being improperly included, in some of the ports, in the quarter yearly returns of bonds taken and discharged; which deposit bonds, it will be seen, are included in the item of $23,911,732; which item has, therefore, been proportionally increased beyond what it ought to be; but the precise amount cannot be well ascertained, the bond accounts not being sufficiently explicit.

To account for the whole of the difference in a satisfactory manner is rendered impracticable from the deficiencies in the returns already alluded to. It may also be observed that the correctness of the monthly returns made cannot be relied on, as they are not used in any settlements, but merely serve as a kind of estimates.

REMISSION OF DUTIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 17, 1823.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the memorial of Lewis A. Petray and Just Viel, reported:

The memorialists state that they, on the 10th day of January, 1822, received on consignment, in the American brig Neptune's Barge, certain sugars and brandies, shipped at Augustine, then an American port, for the port of Charleston, where they accordingly arrived; that they received, on January 23, in the same year, in the American sloop Venus, another consignment of brown sugars, also shipped at Augustine for the port of Charleston, where they accordingly arrived.

The memorialists further state "that the said brandies and sugars were accompanied by certificates of the American collector at Augustine that the duties on them had been paid; that the memorialists were advised and believed that these articles arrived in Augustine while it was a Spanish port, and had there paid the original duty on being entered, as well as the subsequent duty on consumption imposed by the laws of Spain in the event of an imported article remaining three months in the place where it was entered."

On these facts the memorialists ask to have the duties refunded, amounting to $1,039 08.

This case being, in the opinion of the committee, one of much interest, they proceeded to examine it with the attention due to its importance. Unwilling, on the one hand, to establish any principle by which the fair trader would be embarrassed, they were not forgetful that the situation of Florida at that time presented a strong temptation to those whose intention it was to defraud the revenue.

It will be seen by the correspondence accompanying this report that the opportunity afforded to mercantile adventurers by the transfer of Florida to the United States of introducing foreign merchandise in greater quantities than the consumption of that part of the country required did not escape the attention of the Executive. Precautionary measures were adopted which, in the opinion of the committee, were indispensably necessary, and which the Executive could not have neglected without abandoning the interests of the country.

* This sum will be exhibited in statement F of the report of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the ensuing week.

Under these regulations, although wise as general rules, the committee are not prepared to say that no cases of hardship will arise, and that it will not become the duty of Congress to interpose. The case of the memorialists may be one of these; but of this the committee have not the means of being satisfied. In coming to a just conclusion all the facts and circumstances should be known. In the present application this is not the case. The knowledge of several very material circumstances is not in possession of the committee, nor in possession of the Treasury Department. Among others, the following may be enumerated: The actual time of the arrival at Augustine of the vessels having these goods on board; the time of the entry at the Spanish custom-house; the quantum of duties actually paid to the Spanish government; the state of the market as to the quantity and kind of merchandise then in that section of the country compared with former years. Of these circumstances, and others connected and arising out of them, the committee have no definite information; and they are not prepared to decide this important question in the absence of a knowledge of those circumstances, which may change the whole aspect of the business.

Without expressing any opinion on the principles laid down by the Attorney General, or expressing hypothetically their views of the justice of the claim of the memorialists, the committee submit the accompanying papers to the Senate, which will exhibit all the information in their possession.

With this view of the subject, the following resolution is submitted:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 25, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to return the petition of Lewis Petray and Just Viel, merchants of Charleston, in South Carolina.

From the facts communicated to the Department it was believed that the merchandise in question was imported into St. Augustine a short time before the transfer of that part of the Floridas to the United States with the intention of introducing it into the United States without paying duties.

The inclosed copies of the correspondence between this Department and the collectors of customs where the transactions connected with the subject occurred, together with the copies of three opinions given by the Attorney General upon the question embraced by the memorial of the petitioners, will enable the committee to decide upon the merits of their claim.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

Hon. WALTER LOWRIE, Committee on Finance.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 13, 1823.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries of the 12th instant I have the honor to state: First. That there is no evidence now in the possession of this Department which shows the precise date of the importation of the goods in question into the port of St. Augustine. In one of the letters herewith inclosed it is asserted that they were imported before the ratification of the treaty.

From papers which were in the possession of the Department, but which have been sent to the attorney of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, it was proven that two vessels had entered the port of St. Augustine some time before the transfer; one of them, however, so short a time that a part of the cargo was on board when the United States took possession of the place. A part of the cargo was transhipped from the said vessel to Philadelphia, where the legality of the duties is now in a train for adjudication. I do not know whether the goods consigned to the petitioners were a part of the cargo of this vessel or of the other one.

The parties in Philadelphia, in the papers transmitted to this office, asserted that the importation into St. Augustine was with a view to its subsequent introduction into the United States.

Second. It is presumed that the duties, if any were chargeable, were paid. The importation was from one Spanish port to another; the duties, if any, must, it is presumed, have been trifling.

Third. I have no particular information of the state of the market at the time. The impression produced upon my mind by all the papers and information which have been received was, that all the merchandise sent coastwise from St. Augustine to the different ports of the United States had been imported into that place with a view to its introduction into the United States after its delivery to them, in order to avoid the payment of the duties upon the goods so introduced. The letter of Petray and Viel, of the 18th of July, 1822, states that the goods were consigned to them by P. Menard, of St. Augustine, who is probably the owner.

I believe that Captain Hook, of the Army, was at St. Augustine at the time of the delivery of that place, and can probably give all the information that the committee desires. It is also probable that Mr. Hernandez, the delegate of the Territory, can give information that may be useful in the decision of the case.

If no decision should be made during the present session, all the facts can be established at the next session which the committee may deem necessary to form a correct judgment upon it.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

Hon. WALTER LOWRIE, Chairman of the Committee on Finance.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 7, 1821.

SIR: At the date of my letter of instructions to you it was expected that possession of the Floridas would have been delivered to the United States early in the month of May. Had that expectation been realized, it appeared improbable that any considerable quantity of foreign merchandise would be imported into the ports of the ceded Territory previous to the delivery with a view to its subsequent introduction into the United States.

It is now, however, ascertained that as late as the 22d of last month no order had been issued by the Governor of Cuba for transferring the Floridas to the United States, and it has also been ascertained that the commandants of Pensacola and St. Augustine will not deliver possession until such orders are received.

It is understood that, at the Havana and Pensacola, commercial enterprises are in train to throw into the latter place, previous to the transfer, a large amount of foreign merchandise, which it is intended afterwards to introduce into the United States, under the expectation that it may be done without paying the duties required upon the importation of foreign merchandise. Without compromising the Government by a premature decision of this question, it has been determined that, until the proper information has been obtained, no merchandise found in Pensacola, when possession of it shall be obtained, shall be re-exported to any place in the United States.

You are therefore requested to ascertain, as nearly as practicable, the value of foreign merchandise in that place at the time of its delivery, and the various kinds of which it consists. It will also be desirable to ascertain, as nearly as practicable, the amount which has usually, at the same season of the year, been on hand. You will communicate, without delay, the facts which may be collected by you, and, until further instructions, refuse your sanction to any re-exportation, by sea or land, of merchandise found in the place at the time of delivery.

If, at the receipt of this letter, possession should not have been obtained, you are requested to repair to Pensacola, where, by personal observation, without interfering in any manner with the Spanish authority, you will be able to determine whether merchandise is imported for the purpose of being subsequently introduced into the United States. Every fact and circumstance tending to show the motive of any importation of goods into that place, in anticipation of its delivery to the United States, will be important in making a decision upon the question which such importation may require.

Inclosed I send you a duplicate of my letter of instructions of the 10th April last.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

ADDIN LEWIS, Esq., Collector of Mobile.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 21, 1821.

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 10th instant, stating that inquiries had already been made whether, after the transfer of the Floridas, cotton and other domestic articles can, with propriety, be brought from thence to St. Mary's, I have the honor to state that there can be no impropriety in such a course, provided that the regulations which are in force, in the intercourse between the ports of adjoining States, are complied with.

If it is ascertained that there has been any considerable deposit of merchandise made in the Floridas, in anticipation of the transfer, it will not be proper to admit of the introduction of such merchandise into the ports of the Union, for consumption, until the special direction of the President shall be had for that purpose.

You will, therefore, in case of such introduction into the district of St. Mary's, cause the merchandise to be stored, and report the circumstances to this Department, and await the decision which may be made in the case.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

The COLLECTOR of St. Mary's, Geo.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 18, 1821.

SIR: Your letter of the 15th instant has been received. Having requested the Comptroller to forward to you the general instructions which have been issued from his office, I presumed that you had repaired to your official station. Subsequent to that time an impression had been received at this place that the Spanish authorities might, with a view to favor commercial speculations, retain possession of the Floridas as long as the condition in the treaty would permit; and in consequence of it the inclosed letter was addressed to the collector of Mobile, who had been previously instructed to proceed to Pensacola and take upon him the discharge of the duties of collector until one should arrive. It was intended to address a similar letter to the collectors of St. Augustine and St. Mark's for the government of their conduct; but, as there was not the same degree of abuse to be apprehended, the execution of that intention has been delayed.

You will act in conformity with the instructions contained in that letter, which bears date the 7th ultimo.

I have again requested the Comptroller to forward his general instructions immediately.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

JOHN RODMAN, Esq., Collector of St. Augustine.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 3, 1821.

SIR: Your letter of the 27th ultimo to the Comptroller of the Treasury has been by him submitted to my consideration.

It was anticipated that frauds upon the revenue, of the nature of that described in your letter, would be attempted by mercantile adventurers, and the measures necessary to prevent them were taken in due season.

The collectors appointed for the ports of the Floridas were instructed to prevent the exportation, by land or water, to the United States, of any article found in those ports at the time of the transfer.

As no person but the President had authority to appoint a collector, any act done by any person usurping the power of the collector of St. Augustine is clearly void, and the importation under such act illegal. It is presumed that Captain Bell is mistaken when he asserts that he had authority from General Jackson to appoint a collector, as the General had no such authority himself, that authority having been expressly excepted in the grant of powers to him.

The importation is therefore not only illegal, but it is manifestly fraudulent. The articles were imported into St. Augustine for the purpose of being introduced into the United States without paying the duties imposed upon such importation. This subject has been considered by the administration, and the opinion of the Attorney General taken upon it. But as prevention was preferred to punishment, the measures adopted were intended to prevent forfeitures and to avoid all other inconvenience than that which is the inevitable result of the unbridled cupidity of adventurers. Even now the same disposition prevails. You will, therefore, upon the receipt of this letter, take into your possession the whole or such part of the cargo of the Olive Branch as may be within your reach, and retain it, together with the vessel, subject to such further instructions as may be given after the case shall be submitted to the President. If no part of the cargo shall be within your reach, you will take all measures preparatory to a prosecution for a breach of the revenue laws, without, however, proceeding further until otherwise instructed.

Should any other vessels arrive from St. Augustine under similar circumstances, you will retain possession of vessel and cargo, and report the circumstances to this office.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

JOHN STEELE, Esq., Collector of Philadelphia.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 24, 1821.

SIR: You are authorized to release the Olive Branch from any further detention or restraint.

The disposition of the vessel which has since arrived, and the legality of the claim to duties upon the cargo of the Olive Branch, are now under consideration by the Attorney General, upon the authority of whose opinion all the measures which have been taken in the cases from St. Augustine have been founded.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

JOHN STEELE, Esq., Collector of Philadelphia.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 27, 1821.

SIR: I have now the honor to inclose the opinion of the Attorney General in the cases from St. Augustine. As but one of those cases can be subjected to the direct operation of the opinion, you will proceed in relation to it in conformity with that opinion.

As there can, I think, be no reason to believe that the parties did not intend to violate the law, they have their option to contest the legality of the proceedings instituted against them, or to apply for a summary hearing before the District Court, with a view to obtain a remission of the penalty from the Secretary of the Treasury. It is, however, proper to state that the payment of duties will be made a condition precedent to the remission.

If the parties prefer contesting the legality of the opinion of the Attorney General, there can be no possible objection to it on the part of the Government. In that case you will deliver the opinion to the Attorney of the United States for the district, in order that he may avail himself of the views therein presented.

Should the validity of the duty bonds taken in the other case be contested, the same reasons may be urged as in the prosecution for forfeiture.

I remain, with respect, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

JOHN STEELE, Esq., Collector of Philadelphia.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 12, 1821.

SIR: If you shall be satisfied that the coffee and sugar mentioned in the inclosed letter of Mr. Sylvester Robinson, of New York, were imported into St. Augustine prior to its surrender to the American authorities, you are at liberty to permit the same to be exported to any port in the United States; observing, however, to certify in the clearance that the goods were imported as before stated, and that they are liable to the payment of the usual duties at the place of delivery.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

JOHN RODMAN, Esq., Collector of St. Augustine.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 24, 1821.

SIR: As the causes which gave rise to the instructions in my letter to the collector of St. Mary's of the 21st of June last (a copy whereof was transmitted to you on the 11th ultimo) have ceased to exist, you are hereby authorized to admit to entry, as in other cases, all articles of foreign merchandise which have been imported into your district from St. Augustine subsequent to the surrender of that place to the American authorities, upon the duties being first paid or secured.

I am, very respectfully,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

JAMES R. PRINGLE, Esq., Collector of Charleston.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, August 20, 1821.

SIR: I understand that possession of East Florida was not delivered to the United States until the 17th of last month, whereas the Olive Branch, as appears by her papers, cleared out from the port of St. Augustine on the 14th of the month. Now, according to the doctrine laid down in the case of the Numa, Butler master, and reported in 5 Robinson, 97, the jurisdiction and authority of the former sovereign continued in full force until possession of the ceded territory had actually passed. If I am right, then, as to the time of the delivery, the cargo of the Olive Branch was imported into Philadelphia from a foreign port or place, and the case falls completely within the control of the act of the United States to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage; subjecting the vessel, cargo, the master, and owners to all the penalties and forfeitures prescribed by that act for a breach of its several regulations.

With regard to the general question, and the cases anticipated as likely to arise from the importation of goods into these Territories in contemplation of their surrender under the treaty, there is much delicacy, difficulty, and danger, both to individuals and to the public revenue, in an attempt to prejudice them by general rules. It would be safer, perhaps, to decide each case on its own circumstances as it shall arise. Yet, to prevent inconvenience and injury, as far as it can be safely done, and to meet what I understand to be your wishes, I will express the opinions I have formed on some of the cases that may arise or may have arisen.

1st. From the principle already cited from the case of the Fama, it results that a bona fide importation of goods into the Floridas previous to the delivery of possession was an affair between the complainant and the Spanish Government, of which the Government of the United States had no right to complain; I mean a bona fide importation in the British sense: that is, an importation which looked to no ulterior destination; which terminated in the Floridas; or, in the language of Sir William Scott, "an importation into the common stock of the country." Goods thus imported, according to the laws of Spain, during the continuance of the Spanish authority, and found in the country after the delivery of possession, would certainly not be liable to American duties, although the owner may have made the importation in avowed reference to that delivery, and on the calculation of the increased demand resulting from the influx of American population which the cession would bring in. This I understand to be the case put by the Supreme Court, by way of illustration, in deciding the Castine case of the United States vs. Rice, 4 Wheaton, 255.

2d. On the other hand, I apprehend that goods carried into a port of Florida before the delivery, remaining in port, on shipboard, until after the delivery, and then brought into the United States in the same vessel, or by transhipment into others, having been never entered in the Spanish custom-house, nor landed, nor the duties thereon paid or secured, but having continued all the while water-borne, would be subject to our revenue laws, because the voyage ought, I think, to be considered as one entire voyage from the original foreign port or place of shipment into the United States, the mere stoppage in transitu at a port of Florida not being sufficient to break the continuity of the voyage.

There is another class of cases, novel in character in our courts, and so far as I am informed, in those of Great Britain, and in relation to which it is impossible to predict, with certainty, what the decision of the Supreme Court would be. Goods are carried from Havana into Florida before the delivery of possession; are regularly entered in the Spanish custom-house; the duties, which are understood to be very light, are paid; the goods are landed and stored; they are not blended with the common stock of the country, nor offered there for consumption, but remain separately stored until after the provinces are delivered to the United States, when they are cleared out, with our officers there, for a port of the United States. Are these goods within our duty laws?

Our laws impose duties only on goods imported in the United States from some foreign port or place. If, therefore, in the case put, the importation be, in contemplation of law, an importation from the Floridas, the case is not within our laws; because, at the time of the importation, the Floridas are not foreign ports or places. On the other hand, if the transactions at Florida were not sufficient to break the continuity of the voyage from the original port to the United States, then the importation is from a foreign port and the case is within our duty laws. The question, then, is, whether the facts supposed would be sufficient to break the continuity of the voyage at the Floridas and constitute the subsequent part of it a new and original voyage from the ports of those Territories to the United States?

So far as I am informed this question would be perfectly res integra in the Supreme Court of the United States; nor am I aware that it has been decided in Great Britain in regard to a revenue case. In prize cases, however, and particularly in the practical assertion of their belligerent claim to restrain neutrals from carrying on the colonial and coasting trade of an adversary, shut against them in time of peace, they have adopted a critereon as to identity and continuity of voyage, which, if correct in itself and applicable to a case of revenue, would decide the hypothetical circumstances in the case put to be insufficient to break the continuity of the voyage from the original place of shipment to the United States, and would, consequently, bring that case completely within the operation of our revenue laws. That critereon is the animus importandi. What is the ultimate terminus of the voyage for which the goods were destined? If this be manifest, the voyage is a continuous one to this port, whatever may have been done at an intermediate port to give it a colorable termination there. "The Americans," says Jacobson in his Sea Laws, (American translation, page 455,) "misled by the precedent in the case of the Polly, Larky master, (2 Robinson, 361,) had conceived that the discharge of the cargo and the payment of the duties broke the continuity of a colonial voyage. But when Great Britain perceived that by the drawback they regained almost the whole of the original duties, (for instance, if they had run into America with a Spanish colonial cargo and immediately transhipped it in the same, or in another vessel, to the mother country,) with the case of the Essex, Orme master, they commenced the condemnation of a number of vessels thus situated. Sir William Grant, Master of the Rolls, remarked that the English courts had always supposed the bona fides of the importation, (i. e., into the intermediate port,) and attempted to show it by a close analysis of the earlier decisions." The case in which Sir William Grant made this attempt (and in which I think he succeeded) is the case of the William, (5 Rob., 349, Amer. ed.) In this case the ship had taken a cargo of cocoa on board at Lagaira. The ship and cargo at the time of capture were proceeding to Spain, but the ship had touched at an American port, where the cargo was landed and entered at the custom-house, and a bond was given for duties to the amount of one thousand two hundred and thirty-nine dollars. The cargo was reshipped, and a debenture for one thousand two hundred and eleven dollars, by way of drawback, was obtained. On these facts the claimant contended that the voyage was to be considered as a voyage from America to Spain; the landing and payment of duties in America being, as he insisted, conclusive to establish the legal termination of the voyage from Laguaira at that point, and the inception of a new voyage thence to Spain. The Master of the Rolls having dwelt on the circumstances separately to refute the inference of a termination of the voyage in America, proceeds thus: "Again, let it be supposed that the party has a motive for desiring to make the voyage appear to begin at some other place than that of the original lading, and that he therefore lands the cargo purely and solely for the purpose of enabling himself to affirm that it was at such other place that the goods were taken on board; would this contrivance at all alter the truth of the fact? Would not the real voyage still be from the place of the original shipment, notwithstanding the attempt to give it the appearance of having begun from a different place? The truth may not always be discernable; but when it is discovered, it is according to the truth, and not according to the fiction, that we are to give to the transaction its character and denomination. If the voyage from the place of lading be not really ended, it matters not by what acts the party may have evinced his desire of making it appear to have ended. That those acts have been attended with trouble and expense cannot alter their quality or their effect. The trouble and expense may weigh as circumstances of evidence to show the purpose for which the acts were done; but if the evasive purpose be admitted or proved, we can never be bound to accept, as a substitute for the observance of the law, the means, however operose, which have been employed to cover a breach of it. Between the actual importation by which a voyage is really ended and the colorable importation which is to give it the appearance of being ended there must necessarily be a great resemblance. The acts to be done must be almost entirely the same; but there is this difference between them: the landing of the cargo, the entry at the custom-house, and the payment of such duties as the law of the place requires, are necessary ingredients in a genuine importation. The true purpose of the owner cannot be effected without them; but in a fictitious importation they are mere voluntary ceremonies, which have no natural connexion whatever with the purpose of sending on the cargo to another market, and which, therefore, would never be resorted to by a person entertaining that purpose, except with the view of giving to the voyage which he has resolved to continue the appearance of being broken by an importation which he has resolved not really to make." Again, he proceeds: "Why should a cargo, which there was to be no attempt to sell in America, have been entered at an American custom-house, and voluntarily subjected to the payment of any, even the most trifling duty? Not because importation was or, in such a case, could be intended, but because it was thought expedient that something should be done which, in a British prize court, might pass for importation. Indeed, the claimants seem to have conceived that the inquiry was not whether the importation ('into the intermediate port') was real or pretended, but whether the pretence had assumed a particular form, and was accompanied by certain circumstances which, by some positive rule, were in all cases to stand for importation, or to be conclusive evidence of it." He then proceeds to inquire whether the British Court of Admiralty had ever decided that proof of landing and payment of duties at the intermediate port would, in every case, be held absolutely decisive of the legality of the voyage; and proves, I think, very satisfactorily, that no such general rule had been established, but that each case had been decided on its own particular circumstances, but with reference to the same governing question, whether the animus importandi terminated at the intermediate or looked to an ulterior port, and whether the transactions at the intermediate port were attendants of a bona fide importation, ending there, or a mere contrivance to cover the original and true scheme of the voyage to an ulterior port, which, without such cover, would not have been tolerated.

I have quoted the reasoning of the British judge thus at length because I think it bears with great fairness and force on the particular question before us. It is true that, in the case of the William, it was used to enforce a belligerent claim of restraint on the commerce of neutrals, which we deny; yet, so far as the separate question of a mere continuity of voyage was concerned, there is a direction, a comprehensiveness, and cogency in the reasoning which, I think, it would be much easier to censure in general terms than to elude or resist by open and candid argument. My own opinion is that, on its application to the supposed class of cases under consideration, our Supreme Court would, because I think they ought to, yield to its force. To this class of cases, therefore, I am of the opinion that our act to regulate the collection of duties extends.

Without attempting to anticipate further the minute and varied circumstances which may diversify these questions, I beg leave to repeat the suggestion of the propriety of deciding each case as it may arise on its own particular circumstances.

I remain, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. WIRT.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, August 24, 1821.

SIR: I perceive by the documents which you have sent me that I have been misled by the newspapers in the belief that East Florida had not been surrendered prior to July 14, on which day the Olive Branch left St. Augustine, consequently this ground of condemnation is removed in this instance, and the case is free from censure, unless it falls within the second or third class of hypothetical cases, which I had the honor to consider in my opinion of the 20th.

I have reconsidered the principle borrowed from the British admiralty decisions in relation to the continuity of voyages, which I have applied to the third class of supposed cases in Florida, and have reviewed the whole controversy between the United States and Great Britain on the subject of their orders in council restrictive of neutral trade, in the enforcement of which this principle of the continuity of voyages was employed by the British Court of Admiralty; and I am of the opinion that if the belligerent claim to be enforced had been as manifestly right as we then thought, and still think it wrong, the decision of Sir William Grant, in the case of the William, would have been correct: that is to say, that what we have no right to do openly and directly we have no right to do covertly and insidiously; and that an act wrong in itself can never be made right by a fraud. If we violated the law of nations by carrying on the colonial trade of her enemies in time of war; if carrying on this trade was an act of aid and assistance to her enemy, of which Great Britain had a right to complain, surely the mode of carrying it on could not vary the case. If the carrying it on at all was the injury, could it make any difference, either in its aspect of aid to the enemy or injury to Great Britain, whether we carried it on by a longer or shorter route, by a direct or circuitous voyage, or whether, by turning out of our way, stopping at an intermediate port, and paying a mere transit duty there, we made the operation more or less burdensome and expensive to ourselves? If the main purpose was intrinsically wrong and vicious, and was manifestly one identical, continuous purpose from its commencement to its consummation, I am unable to comprehend how any intermediate ceremonials, indicating an innocent purpose, which is admitted to be all pretence, can have the effect of purging the act of its inherent vice. But the British claim itself was a usurpation on the rights of neutrals, and the British added perfidy to usurpation when, in 1801, their minister announced to Mr. King that the claim went no further than to the direct trade between the parent country and her colonies, and that landing the goods intermediately at a port of the United States, and paying the duties there, would be considered as breaking the continuity of the voyage, and stamping a new and neutral character on the goods, which would make them free to pass whithersoever we pleased. As her pretension was wholly unknown to the laws of nations, no light as to its character was to be derived from the authors who had written on these laws; being a new pretension, which had originated with Great Britain, she alone was able to explain the extent to which she asserted and meant to carry it; and, when she had done so, she was bound in honor and good faith to carry it no further. The claim had been by her own authority announced to our merchants with this limitation; they were thus completely entrapped, and we had good cause to complain of the treachery which she had added to her usurpation, when her Courts of Admiralty were left at large to follow out the claim through all the consequences to which its nature and spirit led. It is true that, in our diplomatic discussions, we did complain of everything—the claim, the breach of promise, and the principle of continuity. In my opinion we had a right to complain only of the two first; for if the claim be a solid one, we have, I think, no right to elude it by any artifices, however troublesome and expensive we may contrive to make them to ourselves. At the same time I admit that the principle of the continuity and identity of voyage would, as between different nations, be extremely inconvenient in practice; and hence it would become their interest to arrange, by convention, some standard by which the continuity of voyage should be easily and certainly tested, although the adoption of such standard should involve a sacrifice, reciprocally, of their own impressions of their rights. It was from this consideration that the eleventh article of the inchoate treaty of December 31, 1806, proceeded; it was declared upon its face to be a mere temporary compromise during the existing war, the parties expressly reserving their rights when the war should be at an end. Such an article is no admission of principle either way, though it is highly probable that, as the mutual sacrifice which it made was more tolerable than war in assertion of the whole extent of claim on either side, the same compromise might have been continued, at least until the United States were in a condition to enforce their neutral rights upon the ocean. This treaty, however, left the question of principle exactly where it found it; and, so far as the separate question of continuity of voyage is concerned, the criterion which the British assume, although most injuriously and vexatiously applied in practice, was, I think, in the abstract, correct, and would, I believe, have been generally thought so, had it shown itself, for the first time, in the enforcement of a great moral or national right, of high and undisputed obligation.

It was the offensive company in which it was seen for the first time, and the most offensive and oppressive use which was made of it, that rendered it so extremely obnoxious here. In its nature, and tried at the forum of impartial reason, the principle appears to me to be invulnerable; it is, indeed, the principle which pervades all laws, criminal and civil, human and divine; for it is no other than this, that where the original intention is guilty, and where it continues throughout until it is consummated by the guilty act which it has all along meditated, the offender shall be punished, notwithstanding any artifices he may have adopted, intermediately, to disguise the true intention and to insinuate a different and innocent intention at any stage of the transaction. Applying this standard to the third class of cases considered in my opinion, I cannot avoid the conclusion that each case would present the question of fact, fairly open to inquiry before the court, whether landing the goods and paying a nominal duty, or no duty, in Florida, was anything more than a mere stoppage, in transitu, in the main voyage, which did not destroy its unity, but, on the contrary, left the party exposed to all the consequences of a direct continuous voyage from the foreign port to the United States.

But as the question is new and undecided in our courts, and the principle which it involves has once been and may again be the subject of much political discussion among us, pregnant, too, with serious consequences to this nation, I submit it to you whether it would not be well to send the question to the President with a view to his final disposition of it. I cannot myself perceive that the application of this principle to the question of revenue between this government and its citizens would involve the admission that a foreign nation had a right to apply it to the commerce of this nation with a third power. There seems to be great dissimilarity in the cases. These are, however, considerations which lie beyond the sphere of the lawyer. When my opinion on a question of law is asked, my duty requires me to pronounce the opinion which, as a lawyer, I really entertain, whatever political inconveniences may be apprehended from its adoption.

I have the honor to remain, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM WIRT.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, August 27, 1821.

SIR: The case of the Olive Branch is, on the facts now stated, a proper case for the consideration of a court on the principles presented in my opinion of the 20th instant; and I have no doubt that it may be rendered still stronger for condemnation, by taking testimony in Florida on the point of the intention with which the goods were taken into that Territory: indeed, if the case proceed to adjudication, such testimony should be taken, and all the circumstances accumulated which go to prove that they were not taken into Florida with any intention of being mixed with the common stock of that country for consumption there, but with the intention merely of covering them against our claim for the American duties, by the pretence of an importation into Florida and of a termination of a voyage there. Among these circumstances, the quantum of duties actually paid to the Spanish government; the previous habits of trade at that port for the purpose of ascertaining whether this was a novel or an accustomed trade; the actual time of the arrival of the Olive Branch; the time of the entry of the goods at the Spanish custom-house; the quantity of the goods landed, and the quantity retained on board of the Olive Branch; with all the other circumstances and declarations attending the landing, the storing, and the relading of the goods, ought to be brought into view. And I have very little doubt that the purpose we suspect will become so manifest as to leave nothing for the consideration of the court but the truth of the principle on which my opinion is founded.

In the meantime the owners may, if they choose, have the vessel and cargo released on the usual admiralty stipulation, or, if they prefer it, may have the facts certified by the judge, with a view to petition you for the remission of the forfeiture. If they choose to do neither, and the President should not declare against the principle of my opinion, the case, I presume, must take the usual course.

I have the honor to remain, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. WIRT.

W. H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury United States.

17TH CONGRESS.]

No. 670.

[2D SESSION.]

PUBLIC DEPOSITS IN BANK OF VINCENNES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 24, 1823.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 21, 1823.

SIR: In obedience to three resolutions of the House of Representatives of the 31st of January last, in the words and figures following, viz:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury lay before this House a statement showing the description and character of the collateral security obtained in the year 1821, for $168,453, deposited in the Bank of Vincennes, at the time of its failure; and whether such collateral security consisted in liens on real property, or in public or personal securities; if in liens on real property, the value of such property at the time of its acquirement, and what sum of money it will probably yield to the Treasury if sold on a credit of one, two, and three years; the present situation of the title to such real property, and all communication to and from the said Secretary in relation to such liens; if in public securities, whether an assignment of the State debt of Indiana to the Bank of Vincennes was not taken without any correspondence with any officer or agent of the State government; and if so, whether such assignment has been cancelled; the time when, and by whom; and if not cancelled, whether the United States claim a right of property in any portion of the State debt aforesaid which may remain unliquidated; and communications to and from said Secretary in relation to such assignment.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury inform this House whether the Bank of Vincennes complied with its agreement with the Treasury Department to furnish, quarterly, a list of its debtors, and the amount owing by each; and if so, the amount owing to said bank by Charles Smith's Steam-Mill Company, upon each rendition of the quarterly lists aforesaid.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury inform this House whether or not any draft or drafts have been drawn upon said Bank of Vincennes, under the direction of the Treasury Department, since the date of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to said bank, dated the 7th of July, 1820; and if so, under what item of appropriation, in whose favor, the date of such draft or drafts, and the object for which the same were drawn"—

I have the honor to transmit such documentary evidence and statements relating to the several subjects embraced by those resolutions as the records and files of the Department afford.

The information called for by the first resolution will be found in those documents and statements. It may be proper, however, to state that the letter of the Governor of the State of Indiana to the Secretary of the Treasury was received a considerable time before the Department was officially informed of the transfer of the State debt to the United States by the Bank of Vincennes, and on that account was not then answered. When the transfer of the State debt was communicated to the Department, it was understood that the Governor had considered the transaction of sufficient importance to convene the Legislature of that State. Owing to this circumstance, and the motives in which the measure was understood to have originated, no notice was taken of his letter. It may be proper here to state that, upon the recommendation of the Governor of the State, who is now its representative in Congress, the Bank of Vincennes, in 1817, was made a Bank of Deposit by the Bank of the United States, which, by agreement with the Treasury, had then the right of selection; and in 1819, upon the same recommendation, it was made so by this Department.

The bank rendered only two quarterly lists of its debtors: the first on the 1st of June, and the second on the 1st of October, 1819, in neither of which does the name of Charles Smith's Steam-Mill Company appear; but in the first is an entry in the words and figures following, viz:

B. Parke, agent, &c. ....	$1,000
Smith & Parke, Com., &c. ....	24,148
Same .....	2,000
Same .....	2,000
Drafts discounted on Smith & Parke. ....	3,554
"    "    B. Parke. ....	2,000

And in the second there is an entry in the words and figures following, viz:

B. Parke, agent of Vincennes Steam-Mill Company. .... $36,757

The amount of debts due the bank by the first list was $160,370 22, and by the second $177,200 91. It may be proper to observe that B. Parke was then, and now is, the District Judge of the State of Indiana, and also Indian Agent; and that Nathaniel Ewing, the Receiver of Public Moneys, was the President of the Bank of Vincennes.

Statement marked E shows the number and amount of drafts drawn upon the Bank of Vincennes, by the Treasurer, and by him as agent of the War Department, since the date of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of the 7th July, 1820, and indicates the object for and the appropriations under which they were drawn, as far as they were connected with appropriations. It may be proper, however, to observe that only two of these drafts were drawn by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and they were drawn for the express purpose of transferring funds deposited in the Branch Bank of the United States at Louisville, and in this place by the Bank of Vincennes, for the purpose of complying with the requisitions of the Department, but which had been deposited in them to the credit of the Bank of Vincennes, and not to the credit of the Treasurer. After the failure of the bank an attempt was made by it to appropriate these funds to its own use. Information having been given to the Department of the deposits, and of the attempt to withdraw them, drafts were directed to be issued by the Treasurer, for the purpose of transferring them from the Bank of Vincennes to the Branch Banks of the United States in those places. These drafts were of course unconnected with any appropriation. The only drafts drawn by the Treasurer, under appropriations, subject to the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, after that date, are those in favor of N. Pope, for $250, and of A. Meek, for $50, which were returned unpaid. The remainder of the drafts drawn upon that bank subsequent to the date referred to in the third resolution were drawn by the Treasurer as agent of the War Department, chargeable upon moneys placed in his hands, upon the requisitions of that Department, and subject to the control of the War Department.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 11, 1822.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, requesting a copy of such correspondence as may have taken place between the person employed to perform the duty of examining certain Land Offices and "the President and Directors of the Bank of Vincennes, or such person as they may have authorized to act for them, in relation to the deposit of the public money made in that bank and the security which has been obtained for the payment of such deposit, together with a copy of the arrangement and agreement entered into to secure the payment thereof."

In reply, I have the honor to state that there has been, within the knowledge of this Department, no such correspondence. It is understood that the gentleman who procured the arrangement attended the meeting of the directors and communicated with them verbally.

I have the honor to inclose copies of a deed of trust, and of assignments of debts, made by the agents of the bank, in pursuance of a resolution of the Board of Directors, to secure the ultimate payment of the sum deposited in the bank.

The agent who transacted the business has informed the Department that real estate or other property to the amount of twenty-four thousand dollars was to have been transferred or assigned to the United States, or trustees for their use, on the first day of January last, but no information has been received of the execution of such trust or assignment.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

Hon. DANIEL P. COOK, House of Representatives.

CORYDON, October 3, 1821.

SIR: I have been lately informed that it is probable the Bank of Vincennes has transferred or is about to transfer to the United States the bonds executed in behalf of this State, on loans negotiated by the latter. If those bonds were due and unpaid the objections would be materially changed in character; but the conduct of that institution, discovered less to any of the State authorities than to the Treasury of the United States, at least prior to March last, evinces, to my mind, no propriety in countenancing such assignments; and this, too, without any notice to the State, when the State will shortly have their paper on hand sufficient to tender in full discharges of such of their bonds as will soon become due.

The bank has other resources; and I trust that so long as they remain the Treasury Department of the United States will not accept such a mode of liquidating its demands on the bank at the expense of the State.

It is true that I have confided in the integrity of the institution; but I am latterly informed that the Treasury Department has, for times past, been informed of its want of correctness. I hope, therefore, that you will not allow the State of Indiana to be wronged when resources are left to your Department commensurate with the stock of the institution as well as the debts owing to it of a personal character. Permit me to request a reply.

I am, &c.,

JONATHAN JENNINGS.

Substance of a communication made by John Badollet and J. C. S. Harrison to the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury, on or about the 20th of July, 1822.

SIR: On the 5th instant two judgments were obtained by individuals against the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, amounting to the sum of three thousand dollars. Execution has issued, and a part of the property conveyed by the Bank of Vincennes to the undersigned in trust for the benefit of the United States has been levied upon by the sheriff and advertised for sale as the property of the bank.

We have ascertained that the ground relied upon for success by the gentlemen who ordered the levy to be made is the insufficiency of the deed of trust, in consequence of the seal of the corporation not having been thereto affixed. We have consulted Major Dewey (district attorney) and Moses Tabbs, esq., upon this subject; but the information received from these gentlemen has been in nowise satisfactory; and, being at a loss as to the proper course to be pursued, we have deemed it necessary to request information (through you) of the Attorney General.

Mr. Dewey informed us that he was unprepared to give a decisive opinion on the subject, but thought the omission of the common seal destroyed the efficacy of the deed and rendered us unable to hold the property against the judgments now or which might hereafter be obtained against the bank. Mr. Tabbs informed us that if the deed had been given by the bank to an individual the omission of the seal would be fatal; but since this property had been conveyed to secure the payment of a debt owed by the bank to the United States he thought the case materially different, and that the deed executed to the undersigned by the President and Directors of the bank was amply sufficient to hold the property against these judgments.

The property seized upon by the sheriff to satisfy these judgments consists of about ten acres of ground, adjoining this borough on the northeast, upon which has been erected a brick and two frame buildings, out-houses, &c.

Should the opinion of the Attorney General coincide with that advanced by Major Dewey, would it not be advisable to pay the amount of these judgments, rather than let this valuable property be sacrificed? That this would be to the ultimate advantage of the United States we are decidedly of opinion.

To prevent a like occurrence in future we caused a new deed to be drawn and had the defect of the old one remedied.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servants,

JOHN BADOLLET.

VINCENNES, December 10, 1822.

SIR: On the 20th of last July Mr. John Badollet and myself had the honor of addressing you a letter, in which we informed you of the critical situation of a part of the property conveyed to us by the President and Directors of the Bank of Vincennes in trust for the benefit of the United States.

To this letter we have not as yet received an answer, and, fearing it may have been miscarried, I have thought proper to transmit you the substance of that communication.

The gentlemen in whose favor the judgments against the bank were obtained have, at my request, consented to wait until instructions could be received from you, which I hope will be forwarded as soon as convenient.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 29, 1822.

Sir: The Bank of Vincennes has transferred to the United States certain notes or engagements of the Governor of Indiana to pay the sum of $168,453.

It is, however, understood that the State has received, in discharge of taxes imposed by law, a considerable amount of the notes of the said bank, with a view to the liquidation of this debt. As it cannot be the interest of the United States or of the State of Indiana to have any legal controversy upon this subject, and as, in equity, the State ought to be secured against the demands of the United States under said transfer, as far as the notes of the bank have been received in discharge of taxes, in conformity with the laws of the State, you are authorized to liquidate this demand and to deliver to the officers of the State authorized to receive them so many of the notes or securities given by the Governor to the Bank of Vincennes as may be equal in amount to the notes of that bank received at the State Treasury as aforesaid.

It is understood that the evidence of the receipt of the notes of the bank by the State, whilst the notes were a legal tender in discharge of the State taxes, will be submitted to you, and that the delivery of the notes or securities will take place only as far as the evidence may be satisfactory.

If the Bank of Vincennes will give other collateral security to your satisfaction for the remainder of the notes of the State, you are authorized to return those securities to the directors, so as to restore the parties to their original relation in this transaction. If this proposition shall be declined by the bank you will deposit them with the Receiver of Public Moneys at Vincennes, where they will remain until the State shall have determined what provision ought to be made for their discharge. It is, however, confidently expected that no difficulty will arise in relation to the remainder, as it is presumed the State will be disposed to make such provision as will secure the prompt payment of them as they become due.

If you shall be able to aid the Receiver in obtaining other collateral security for the amount of the notes, which, in any event, will be delivered to the State, you will confer additional obligations upon the Government.

An early report of the result of your efforts in this case is requested.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

The following is an extract from the letter of Governor Jennings to James Noble, in answer to one from him covering a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to James Noble, the 29th April, 1822.

"CORYDON, June 8, 1822.

"Gen. JAMES NOBLE:

"DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 16th ultimo, covering a copy of the Secretary of the Treasury's letter to you, I received three days since, upon my return home.

"From the spirit and tenor of that letter I presume we shall have no difficulty in adjusting the subject. From an inclosure from Judge Lane, the Treasurer of the State, there was in his hands on the 31st day of January last . . . . . $25,769 96

"At the time of the assignment of the bonds there was deposited in the State bank to the credit of the State $60, a sum that was more than necessary to pay the last interest on the bonds that were paid. . . . . 60 00

"One hundred and twenty dollars in notes cut in twain for security in remittance by mail; one-half the notes reached the Treasurer before the first day of February last, and the other half would likewise have been received but for the delay of the mail, all which was in good faith received for the payment of taxes. . . . . 120 00

"The sum of $120 is in the care of Mr. Wilson, sheriff of Fayette county, who will hand you this. I think it is fairly in the scope of your instructions; for if this item be not adjusted the State ought to lose it and not Captain Wilson, and particularly because the circumstance has been produced by the unnecessary and unwarrantable delay of the United States mail. You will receive the documents from Judge Lane to prove the facts stated, and on this item I trust and believe no difficulty should take place.

"To the foregoing account, with the explanations, the books of the Treasury and bank, and other documents, will prove their correctness. I know the whole facts, and have no disposition, nor the power, to wrong the United States. It will be my wish, and it is my expectation, that the amount of $25,949 96 go in discharge of bonds due, and so on in rotation and precedence of date. I shall be glad to hear from you soon on the subject."

The documents to prove the facts stated in the foregoing extracts are two letters from W. Lane, dated 8th June, 1822, one to Governor Jennings and the other to James Noble.

To George L. Murdock, Joseph Brackenridge, James Backhouse, John Allen, sen'r, A. P. Andrews, and William H. Eads, Directors of the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana.

GENTLEMEN: I am authorized by Mr. Crawford, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to liquidate and settle, according to his instructions, dated the 29th of April, 1822, the debt transferred by the Bank of Vincennes to the United States, being certain notes or engagements of the Governor of Indiana, on the behalf of said State, to pay the sum of $30,800. I have therefore to request you and each of you to meet me on Saturday, the 24th instant, between the hours of 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, at the house of William H. Eads, in the town of Brookville, Franklin county, for the purpose of liquidating the said debt.

If it shall be deemed necessary by you, at our meeting on the 24th instant, to repair to Vincennes, where the bank is located, for the purpose of liquidating the said debt, I will accompany you without delay.

It is important to the United States that this debt should be immediately settled, and equally so to the State of Indiana, whose Legislature has once been convened before the constitutional period on account of the transfer of the said debt by the said Bank of Vincennes.

It will be recollected by a part of you that shortly after my return from Washington City, in the month of May last, I presented my instructions to liquidate the debt, from Mr. Crawford, of April last, and in the course of ten weeks past several of you and myself have met, for the purpose of adjusting the debt, at Mr. Eads', and once or twice the day was fixed for our meeting for the same purpose, but so few of you attended nothing has been done.

I flatter myself, however, that the debt will be adjusted satisfactorily to all concerned, from the assurances given by some of you; and I now propose, as I have done before, to receive property of the bank as a collateral security for the debt, in conformity to the instructions of Mr. Crawford.

I am now apprised, and have been, that this notice might have been addressed to the President and Directors of the aforesaid bank but for the fact that the bank is located in Vincennes and all of the directors, save two, from information, reside in or near Brookville, upwards of 150 miles from the place of its location, and also, for the report that there is no President of that bank, have thought it proper to address you in the present form and manner.

I reached home on the 12th of May, and on the 16th I wrote to Symmes Harrison, esq., of Vincennes, requesting him to apply to the bank and ascertain who were the directors, and, to prevent any misunderstanding in that particular hereafter, I give you the extracts from his letter, though the contents of the extracts I have long since made known to some of you.

"VINCENNES, June 11, 1822.

"SIR: In reply to your letter of the 16th ultimo I have to inform you that I have called upon the cashier of the Bank of Vincennes and requested him to furnish me with a list of the directors of that institution, which request he refused to comply with." "I believe (at least it is so reported) that there was no President appointed at their last election."

You will readily perceive my object in thus addressing you, and confidently hope you will appreciate and approve it.

It is to place the subject in such a train as to enable me to report to Mr. Crawford, at the final close of the concern, how and in what manner I have acted; and who has requested me to make an early report of my efforts to him, in relation to the liquidation of the said debt. Hitherto the private interviews as well as the meetings we have had on the subject, and the conversation with several of you, has been friendly, and I trust will continue.

Should it so terminate that you refuse to meet me after this notice and request, (as I do not know all the directors of the bank, but they are known to you,) it will be my duty, as you will readily concede, to conclude that you refuse to liquidate the said debt in pursuance of Mr. Crawford's instructions, and shall, from necessity, and the obligations I owe to the United States and the State of Indiana, report the same, without delay, to Mr. Crawford, and shall adopt such other measures within my instructions as may be considered by me prudent and correct.

I have made this address in the spirit of friendship and for the sole purpose of enabling all concerned to discharge their duty.

With great respect, your most obedient servant,

JAMES NOBLE.

BROOKVILLE, August 14, 1822.

I.

CORYDON, June 8, 1822.

DEAR SIR: The bearer hereof, Mr. Wilson, the sheriff of Fayette county, will present you with this. There is some difficulty in the adjustment with him of the revenue due from said county for the year 1821. The circumstances are these: On the 31st day of January, (the last day authorized by law to receive State paper in discharge of the revenue,) I received his letter, inclosing divided notes on the State bank and branches amounting to the balance due from him as the collector for the aforesaid year, with an assurance that the balance should be forwarded by the succeeding mail. This promise was performed by inclosing the residue in a letter, dated at Connersville, the 25th day of January, 1822, which, however, from the tardy operations of the mails, did not reach me until the 10th of February. I had scrupled the propriety of receipting to him for this money under these circumstances, but have, however, the notes in my possession; and should you be satisfied, under all the circumstances, that he should have a credit for them, be so good as to signify it by a line.

With sentiments of esteem, I am, yours, &c.,

D. C. LANE.

HON. JAMES NOBLE, Brookville, Indiana.

J.

CORYDON, June 8, 1822.

DEAR SIR: Agreeably to your requisition of yesterday I have to remark that the amount of paper of the State bank and branches in my hands on the 31st day of January last was $25,769 96.

Respectfully, yours, &c.

D. C. LANE, Treasurer of State.

HIS EXCELLENCY JONATHAN JENNINGS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 10, 1821.

"If suit should not have been brought against the Bank of Vincennes for the sum due to the United States before you arrive at that place, I will thank you to ascertain, as far as practicable, what can be done to secure the debt ultimately; and I authorize you to enter into any arrangement for that purpose which you may judge to be for the interest of the nation, which shall not stipulate for a less sum than what is actually due. Should suit have been brought, you are, nevertheless, authorized to enter into any arrangement with the bank, under the limitations herein defined, and to direct such stay or suspension of legal proceedings as may be necessary to give effect to such arrangement."

M.

CORYDON, September 7, 1822.

SIR: In answer to your letter of this date, informing me that it becomes necessary that there should be evidence of the receipt of the notes of the Bank of Vincennes by the State, while the notes were a legal tender, in discharge of the State taxes, I have to remark that the receipt, within that period, amounted to $26,362 28, including those divided notes and others which were retarded from reaching here by the delay of the United States mail. Of this sum $25,159 is ready to be paid on the bonds due from this State, for moneys loaned to said State by the Vincennes Bank. The residue of $1,143 28 is presumed to have been paid in at the Treasury, in Treasury notes, and in warrants drawn upon this Department. Should it, however, appear, upon the closing of these various accounts, that these several sums will not amount to the aforesaid sum of $1,143 28, it is expected, on my part, that the residue (if any) will be permitted by you to be credited upon those bonds upon my paying over such funds as I am now required to do. With respect to the tender made to the Bank of Vincennes, I have to remark that the sum of $21,200 was presented on the 29th day of December, 1821, to the cashier of said bank, in discharge of the bonds becoming due at or about that period from the State to that institution, as the impression then was.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

D. C. LANE, Treasurer of the State.

CORYDON, September 7, 1822.

Be it known that on this day I, William H. Eads, one of the directors of the Vincennes Bank, the State bank of Indiana, being authorized by the directors of the said bank, and having received from Daniel C. Lane, Treasurer of the State of Indiana, $25,159 in the notes upon the said bank and the branches of the said bank, in full for three certain notes or engagements given by the Governor of the State of Indiana on behalf of said State to the President, Directors and Company of the said bank, and in part of an obligation given by the said Governor to the said company, bearing date 2d January, 1818; now, should the Hon. Jesse B. Thomas, agent for the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, have heretofore given to the President, Directors and Company of the said bank any vouchers in relation to the notes, engagements, and obligations aforesaid, the said voucher is hereby declared void, so far as the sum of $25,159 dollars, as aforesaid, is embraced.

As witness my hand and seal.

WILLIAM H. EADS.

BROOKVILLE, November 2, 1822.

SIR: The notes or engagements of the Governor of Indiana, which were transferred to the United States by the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Vincennes, and which you placed in my hands to adjust, according to your instructions of the 29th of April last, have been attended to.

It has not been in my power to give you earlier information of the result of the adjustment, or the particulars that led to it.

If in the adjustment it should meet your approbation, but more especially the interest of the United States and the State to which I have the honor to belong, I shall be satisfied.

The foregoing sentence is drawn from me from the recollection that those notes or obligations were placed in my hands by my frequent solicitations; and as an inducement to you, I offered and agreed to perform the services without compensation.

Your zeal to promote the moneyed concerns of the United States, and also to prevent, under the unjust transfer of those notes, any collision between the Federal Government and the State Government of Indiana, has been duly appreciated by me.

In the origin of the transaction and liquidation of the State debt, so far as I have been concerned and solicited, and the causes which led me to it, proceeded from two considerations, that as the General Government had been imposed upon by the acts of the bank, could any steps be taken to prevent additional expenses and losses to the United States, and at the same time to secure any part of their claim against the bank, I was willing to aid.

The other consideration, that the State of Indiana has, at all periods, from the time that the notes of the bank were borrowed by the authority of the Legislature of the State, acted in full faith and for the purpose of meeting her engagements with the bank—with perfect knowledge of the directors of the bank, she did authorize by her laws that the State taxes should be received in the notes of the bank and its branches.

Near the time when it was known to the directors of the bank that the State, through the collections of her State and county ministerial officers, she was and would be prepared to meet her engagements with the bank, the bank, by its officers, suddenly transferred the claim to the United States, which produced a just excitement against the bank in the bosoms of the people of the State. As a representative from the State, however feeble, this act of transfer by the bank was a strong inducement to me to prevent, by every fair means, further impositions from the bank upon the State.

You have herewith letters, the statement of the debt entrusted to my care, deeds, and mortgages, which furnishes to you the history of the liquidation of the case marked A, B, C, and D.

From the inspection of the whole transaction, you will find that the debt due from the State of Indiana, including interest, to the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Vincennes, and which was heretofore transferred to the United States, amounted, on the 29th of December, 1821, to $32,570 17.

That on the 7th and 10th of September last the Treasurer of the State of Indiana paid in the notes of the said bank to its directors, which had been received in payment of taxes, in conformity to the laws of the State, the sum of $25,397 in part of said notes or engagements of the Governor of Indiana. Those notes or engagements were by me delivered up to the Treasurer of the said State, as far as they were paid; mortgages on real estate, by way of collateral security to the United States, having been previously taken of the bank, to secure the payment of near twenty-six thousand dollars, covering, as a necessary consequence, the sum last named.

The balance due upon those notes or engagements, transferred as aforesaid, amounts to the sum of $7,173 17.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

JAMES NOBLE.

Hon. WM. H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

In pursuance of a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, I do hereby assign, transfer, and set over to Thomas T. Tucker, esq., Treasurer of the United States for the time being, and his successors in office, all the right, title, interest, and claim which the President, Directors and Company of the said bank have in and to a certain bill of exchange, drawn by John H. Piatt in favor of J. B. Canby, for ten thousand dollars, which, together with the interest thereon, amounts to eleven thousand and one hundred dollars, and which bill of exchange is now in suit. The said suit having been commenced by Charles Davey, esq., as attorney for said bank, he is hereby instructed to recognize this instrument of writing as a full and complete assignment of the said bill of exchange, and as entitling the said Treasurer to the proceeds of the same. Bank of Vincennes, State bank of Indiana, September 24, 1821. For value received.

V. J. BRADLEY, Cashier.

In virtue of a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, I hereby assign, transfer, and set over to Thomas T. Tucker, esq., Treasurer of the United States for the time being, and his successors in office, all the right, title, interest, and claim which the said President, Directors and Company have in and to a judgment obtained in the Circuit Court within and for the county of Switzerland, in the State of Indiana, in the year eighteen hundred and twenty, against Stephen C. Stevens in favor of the President, Directors and Company of the said Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, for upwards of six thousand dollars, for value received, this 24th day of September, 1821.

V. J. BRADLEY, Cashier.

Know all men by these presents, that I, Jonathan Jennings, Governor of, and in behalf of, the State of Indiana, am held and firmly bound unto the President and Directors of the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, in the sum of eighteen hundred dollars, which sum of money is to be paid at the expiration of five years from the date hereof, and the legal interest arising thereon to be paid annually at the bank aforesaid. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, in pursuance of an act of the General Assembly, entitled "An act making appropriations for the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one," as Governor aforesaid, this sixth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one.

This indenture, made this twenty-ninth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two, between William W. Wade, trustee and agent for the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, of the county of Franklin and State of Indiana, of the one part, and Thomas Tudor Tucker, Treasurer of the United States for the time being, and his successors in office, of the other part, witnesseth: That the said William W. Wade, trustee and agent as aforesaid, by direction and order of the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, and by virtue of a deed duly made and executed to him on the twenty-third day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two, by John Test, attorney in fact for the aforesaid company and bank, duly appointed under the seal of the company and bank as aforesaid; and the said company being largely indebted to several persons in the said State of Indiana and elsewhere, and more especially to the United States, in large sums of money, for deposits made in the aforesaid bank heretofore by the former Receiver of Public Moneys at Vincennes, and among other sums of money the sum of near twenty-six thousand dollars, being part of the deposits aforesaid, and being a part of the large sums of money aforesaid: Now, the said William W. Wade, trustee and agent as aforesaid, for and in consideration of the premises aforesaid, but more especially by the order and direction of the said company and bank as aforesaid, and for the purpose of paying the said sum of near twenty-six thousand dollars as aforesaid to the United States, and by virtue of the deed made by the attorney, John Test, as aforesaid, hath granted, bargained, sold, conveyed, confirmed, aliened, enfeoffed, and released, and by these presents doth grant, bargain, sell, alien, enfeoff, release, convey, and confirm unto the said Thomas Tudor Tucker, Treasurer of the United States for the time being, and his successors in office, for the use and benefit of the United States and their assigns forever, all the following described tracts and parcels of land, lying and being in the county of Franklin and State of Indiana, to wit: Two lots, lying and being in the town of Fairfield, known and designated by their numbers, thirty-five and thirty-eight, as numbered on the plat of the town aforesaid; also, the following described in-lots of land, lying and being in the town of Brookville, the county and State aforesaid, viz: lots numbered one, twenty-one, twenty-two, seventy, one hundred and three, and one hundred and five, as numbered upon the plat of that part of the said town of Brookville laid off by John Allen, sen.; lots numbered thirty-seven, and forty-eight, and fifty-two, as numbered on the plat of that part of the said town of Brookville laid off by Amos Butler; lots numbered two, eight, and nine, as numbered on the plat of that part of the said town of Brookville laid off by William H. Eads; also, the following described parts of two certain in-lots of land in that part of the said town of Brookville laid off by Jesse B. Thomas and others, viz: Commencing at the southeast corner of the lot number fifty-seven, and running thence north with Main street forty feet; thence west ten poles, across lots number fifty-seven and fifty-eight; thence south forty feet to the southwest corner of lot number fifty-eight; thence east ten poles to the place of beginning. Also, that certain part of lot numbered thirty-eight, on that plat of the said town of Brookville laid off by Jesse B. Thomas and others, bounded as follows: Beginning sixty-five feet north of the southwest corner of said lot; thence north thirty feet to Hartman's corner; thence east five poles; thence south thirty feet to Coalscott's line; thence west to the place of beginning. And also part of out-lot numbered four, as laid out by Amos Butler, in the said town of Brookville, bounded as follows: Beginning ten perches north of the southwest corner of said out-lot and one perch east of the west line of said lot; thence north five and a half degrees, west seven perches and three-fourths, to a stake, and north eighty-four and a half degrees, east twenty-one perches, to a stake; thence south five and a half degrees, east seven perches and three-fourths, to a stake; and south eighty-four and a half degrees, west twenty-one perches, to the place of beginning; containing one acre. Also the south half of out-lot numbered five, as recorded on the plat of out-lots adjoining the town of Brookville, as laid off by Amos Butler, which south half of said out-lot contains two acres, be the same more or less; also the two last described parts of lot, be it known, is conveyed, sold, and confirmed, as above, as will more fully appear from a deed duly executed to the said William W. Wade, trustee and agent as aforesaid, by the said John Test, dated the twenty-fifth day of April, eighteen hundred and twenty-two; and also the following described tracts and parcels of land, lying and being in the town of Connersville, the county of Fayette and State of Indiana, viz: lot number three, as numbered on the plat of that part of the said town of Connersville laid off by John Conner; also part of an in-lot of land, described as follows: Beginning at the northeast corner of lot number thirty-seven, and running thence west sixty feet; thence south fifteen feet; thence east sixty feet to Main street; thence north with said street fifteen feet to the place of beginning. Also the following described part of another in-lot of land: Commencing at the southeast corner of lot number thirty-six, as numbered on the plat of that part of the town aforesaid laid off by John Conner, and running thence north thirty-five feet with Main street; thence west one hundred and sixty-five feet to an alley; thence south thirty-five feet to the southwest corner; thence east to the place of beginning. The three last described tracts of land will more fully appear from a deed executed to the said William W. Wade as aforesaid by the said John Test as aforesaid, and for the purposes aforesaid, and more especially to pay the debts owing by the said company and bank as aforesaid, and herein intended, with the property specified, to pay the United States the said sum of near twenty-six thousand dollars; the last named deed was executed on the seventeenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two; and all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand of the said William W. Wade, as trustee and agent as aforesaid, and all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand of the said company and bank, as far as the power is vested in him, of, in, and to the said premises hereby granted, and every part thereof, together with all and singular the rights, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining, and to seize, receive, and recover the rents, issues, and profits thereof, from and after this day, to have and to hold the said premises, hereby bargained and sold, or meant or intended so to be, with the appurtenances, to the said Thomas Tudor Tucker, Treasurer of the United States for the time being, and his successors in office, for the sole use and benefit of the United States, and his or their assigns, forever; and the said William W. Wade, trustee and agent as aforesaid, for himself and the said President, Directors and Company doth covenant, grant, and agree to and with the said Thomas Tudor Tucker, Treasurer of the United States for the time being, and his successors in office, that he hath lawful authority to sell and dispose of the premises hereby granted, and hath good right, full power and authority to sell and convey the same in manner and form aforesaid; and further, that he, the said William W. Wade, trustee and agent as aforesaid, for himself and the said President, Directors and Company, will warrant and forever defend the aforesaid premises, with their appurtenances, unto the said Thomas Tudor Tucker, Treasurer of the United States for the time being, and his successors in office, for the sole use and benefit of the United States, against all persons lawfully claiming by, from, or under him, the said William W. Wade, trustee and agent aforesaid, or the said President, Directors and Company: Provided, nevertheless, and it is hereby expressly declared to be the true intent and meaning of these presents, that if the said President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said Thomas Tudor Tucker, Treasurer of the United States for the time being, or to his successors in office, for the use and sole benefit of the United States, or to his or their certain attorney or assigns, the said sum of near twenty-six thousand dollars, being the sum above named, in six days after date, then, and in that case, the foregoing indenture, and every part thereof, to be void and of no effect; otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue.

In witness whereof, the said William W. Wade hath hereunto set his hand and seal the day and year first above written.

HENRY JENKINSON.

STATE OF INDIANA, Franklin county, ss.

Before me, the undersigned, one of the justices of the peace within and for said county, personally came Robert Brackenridge and Hannah, his wife, the within grantors, and, being separately examined, agreeably to the act in such case made and provided, acknowledged the above indenture to be their voluntary act and deed, for the uses and purposes therein contained. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this twenty-third day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two.

HENRY JENKINSON, J. P. [L. s.]

This indenture, made the seventh day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two, between James A. Piatt, of the county of Franklin and State of Indiana, of the one part, and the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Vincennes, the State bank of Indiana, of the other part, witnesseth: That the said James A. Piatt, for and in consideration of the sum of twenty-eight hundred and twenty dollars, lawful money of the United States, to him in hand well and truly paid by the said President, Directors and Company, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, has granted, bargained, sold, conveyed, and confirmed, and by these presents doth grant, bargain, sell, convey, and confirm, unto the said President, Directors and Company, and their assigns, forever, all that certain part of lot numbered thirty-eight, in that part of the town of Brookville, Franklin county, and State of Indiana, laid off by Jesse B. Thomas and others, bounded as follows: Beginning sixty-five feet north of the southwest corner of said lot; thence north thirty feet to Hartman's corner; thence east five poles; thence south thirty feet to Coalscott's line; thence west to the place of beginning; and all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand of the said James A. Piatt, of, in, and to the said premises hereby bargained and sold, and every part thereof, together with all and singular the rights, members, privileges, and appurtenances, to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining, and the rent, issues, and profits thereof, to have and to hold the premises aforesaid, hereby bargained and sold, or meant or intended so to be, with the appurtenances, to the only proper use and behoof of the said President, Directors and Company, their successors and assigns, forever. And the said James A. Piatt, for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, doth covenant, grant, and agree, to and with the said President, Directors and Company, their successors and assigns, that he is the true and lawful owner of the premises hereby granted, and has good right, full power, and lawful authority, to sell and convey the same in manner and form aforesaid. And further, that he, the said James A. Piatt and Jemima, his wife, their heirs, executors and administrators, will warrant and forever defend the aforesaid premises, with their appurtenances, and every part and parcel thereof; unto the said President, Directors and Company, their successors and assigns, against all persons claiming or to claim from or under him, them, or any of them, or by, from, or under any other person or persons whomsoever.

In witness whereof, the said James A. Piatt, together with Jemima, wife of the said James, who hereby relinquisheth her right of dower in the premises, have hereunto set their hand and affixed their seal, the day and year first above written.

Eads, for and in consideration of the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, lawful money of the United States, to him in hand well and truly paid by the said President, Directors and Company, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, hath granted, bargained, sold, conveyed, and confirmed, and by these presents doth grant, bargain, sell, convey, and confirm unto the said President, Directors and Company, and their assigns, forever, all the following described parts: two certain in-lots of land in that part of the town of Brookville laid off by Jesse B Thomas and others, and in the county of Franklin and State of Indiana, viz: Commencing at the southeast corner of lot No. 57, and running thence north with Main street forty feet; thence west ten poles across lots Nos. 57 and 58; thence south forty feet to the southwest corner of lot No. 58; thence east ten poles to the place of beginning; and all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand of the said William H. Eads of, in, and to the said premises, hereby bargained and sold, and every part thereof, together with all and singular the rights, members, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining, and all the rents, issues, and profits thereof; to have and to hold the premises aforesaid, hereby bargained and sold, or meant or intended so to be, with the appurtenances, to the only proper use and behoof of the said President, Directors and Company, and their assigns, forever. And the said William H. Eads, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, doth covenant, grant, and agree to and with the said President, Directors and Company, and their assigns, that he is the true and lawful owner of the premises hereby granted, and hath good right, full power, and lawful authority to sell and convey the same, in manner and form aforesaid. And further, that he, the said William H. Eads, his heirs, executors and administrators, will warrant and forever defend the aforesaid premises, with their appurtenances, and every part and parcel thereof, unto the said President, Directors and Company, and their assigns, against all persons claiming, or to claim, from or under him, them, or any of them, or by, from, or under any other person or persons whomsoever.

In witness whereof, the said William H. Eads and Jane Eads, his wife, who hereby relinquisheth her right of dower in the premises, with their appurtenances, have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals, the day and year first above written.

[2D SESSION.]

PUBLIC DEPOSITS IN WESTERN BANKS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 26, 1823.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 24, 1823.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 10th instant inclosing a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 6th of the same month, and requesting the communication of any information not already communicated as may be in the possession of the Department, I have the honor to observe that when the Bank of the United States went into operation an effort was made to simplify the operations of the Treasury through the instrumentality of that institution. To give to this effort the greatest efficiency, it was agreed that the bank should have the selection not only of the State banks in which the public money should be deposited in places where it had established no office, but of those whose notes should be received on account of the revenue, and that all money so deposited should be entered to the credit of the Bank of the United States in trust for the Treasurer of the United States. It was further agreed that the Treasurer might draw upon the bank at any place where the public money was deposited, whether there was any public money at such place or not, with the understanding, however, that reasonable notice should be given to the bank when it was intended to draw for any considerable amount beyond the sum on deposit at such place.

This project was generally carried into effect, in the course of 1817, after the State banks had resumed specie payments. The notes of all such banks, in the western States, were received by the land officers and deposited as specie in the offices of the Bank of the United States and in the State banks employed as offices of deposit.

This plan of simplifying the operations of the Treasury was, in the course of 1818, interrupted, on the one hand, by the complaints of the State banks employed as offices of deposit that the Bank of the United States acted oppressively and capriciously towards them, by subjecting them to all the inconveniences incident to the relation they held, and depriving them of most of the advantages which they had a right to expect from that relation; and on the other, by those of the Bank of the United States alleging that the State banks were desirous of appropriating to themselves all the advantages of their situation, without bearing any part of the burden imposed upon it by its charter or by the arrangement made with the Treasury, one of the most onerous of which was the implied obligation it had incurred of guarantying not only the solvency of those banks whilst they were employed as offices, but also of the other State banks whose notes were received on account of the revenue. This state of collision and irritation continued increasing until the autumn of 1818, when the bank notified the Department that it could no longer execute its arrangement without sacrificing the essential interests of the institution; at the same time it declared its determination to receive from the land officers nothing but its own notes and the current coin of the Union, except as special deposit. Shortly after this determination many of the western banks stopped payment.

The experience of the bank had, about this period, led to the conviction that it was impracticable to keep its notes in circulation in the western States, and orders were consequently issued, in the course of the autumn, or in the early part of 1819, forbidding its western offices to issue their notes, even on a deposit of specie. The determination which it had formed in relation to payments on account of the public lands was therefore practically a determination to receive nothing but current gold and silver coin, which was nearly as difficult to be obtained in the western States as the notes of the Bank of the United States. At this time there was due the United States nearly twenty millions of dollars by the purchasers of the public lands, a great part of which debt had been contracted during the suspension of specie payments, and in the years 1817 and 1818, when the notes of nearly all the western banks were receivable in payment. It was manifest, upon the slightest reflection, that this determination of the bank would greatly reduce the receipts into the Treasury from that important branch of the public revenue, but that consideration would not, alone, have been sufficient to have induced the Executive Department to have assumed the responsibility of the measure which was, with great deliberation, adopted upon the occasion.

To have permitted the distress and ruin in which the purchasers of the public lands would have been involved by the refusal to receive from them anything in payment but the current coin of the Union and the notes of the Bank of the United States under such circumstances, without an effort by the Executive Department to avert them, would have excited feelings in a large and meritorious body of citizens which no prudent government, even if despotic, could have seen with indifference. It is confidently believed that if no such effort had been made the Executive Department of the Government would have been charged with the most shameful imbecility, and that the Treasury Department would have been loaded with the public execration. If an effort was to be made to afford relief, the alternative presented was to continue to receive the notes of the few banks in the west which still continued to pay specie, and enter them to the credit of the Treasurer, in the offices of the bank, as special deposit, or to deposit them in State banks, upon conditions which would make it their interest to return them into circulation as soon as practicable, on account of the Government. In the first case they would have accumulated in those offices without the possibility of being put again into circulation on account of the Government, as those offices would have had no inducement to make exertions to convert them into specie or transfer the amount by the purchase of bills of exchange upon New Orleans or upon the Atlantic cities. To effect either of these operations it was manifest that the employment of the State banks was indispensable. The arrangements proposed were maturely considered and adopted with the approbation of the President, who was fully sensible of the importance of the crisis which had arrived.

The inducements which were offered to those banks to resume and continue specie payments, and to transfer the excess of the public revenue collected in the western States beyond the expenditure to places where it could be expended, were believed to be both justifiable and sufficient to insure success, and the result has proven that nothing was necessary to the most complete success but the want of integrity in those who had the direction of some of those institutions.* Against this contingency the Department availed itself of all the means within its reach, and confided in the representations of gentlemen who occupied high and responsible stations in the public councils, whose judgment and integrity were considered unquestionable, and whose means of information excluded almost the possibility of mistake. Notwithstanding the want of integrity which has been manifested by the directors of several of those banks which have failed, it is still confidently believed that, after making a liberal allowance for any loss which may possibly occur by the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Cincinnati, the Banks of Vincennes, Edwardsville, and Missouri, the benefits which have resulted from those arrangements will greatly preponderate over such loss.

It is impossible to state whether any loss will eventually be sustained by the Government from either of those banks. No apprehension is entertained of loss from any other. The Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Cincinnati is therefore the only one in which public money has been deposited, where the Bank of the United States had established an office, from which there is any danger of loss.

That bank, in a very short time after it resumed specie payments, in conformity with its agreement with the Treasury Department, stopped payment, and has never made any return or answered any of the demands which have been made upon it for information. The impression in relation to it has therefore been very unfavorable. A suit has been brought against it in the federal court for the amount of public money in its possession, which has not yet been decided.

The arrangements made with the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Cincinnati, the Bank of Chillicothe, and the branch of the Bank of Kentucky, at Louisville, where offices of the Bank of the United States had been established, by which the public money collected at the land offices in the vicinity of those banks were deposited in them, were not communicated to Congress at the next session after their date, from mere inadvertance to the provision of the charter to which the resolution refers. They were, however, matters of general notoriety not only in the western States, but in the other parts of the Union. Omissions of this nature have frequently occurred in the Departments, and, it is presumed, will occur hereafter, with officers the most attentive. The notoriety, however, which attended these arrangements with the banks, it is presumed, will satisfy the committee that there was neither a wish nor intention to withhold from Congress the fact of such deposits, and the reasons upon which the measure was founded.

The papers which are herewith transmitted support the views presented in this letter.

I remain, with respect, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

HON. JOHN W. CAMPBELL, Chairman of the Select Committee.

[PAPERS TO BE ANNEXED.]

Extract from a letter of September 14, 1819, to Langdon Cheves, esq., President of the United States Bank.

It has been my constant endeavor, for more than twelve months past, to prevent, as far as practicable, all collision between the Bank of the United States and the State banks, as far, at least, as that collision might be connected with the transactions of this Department. It is not my intention, therefore, to give drafts upon the State banks for public money without previously arranging with them the mode of payment.

Acting upon the same principle, I have endeavored, in the course of the present year, to make arrangements with State banks in the western States, by which they should become the depositories of the public money collected in that section of the Union. I considered the deposits there positively injurious to the banks, for the following reasons, viz:

1. That the offices had already extended their discounts in Ohio and Kentucky further than was consistent with the interests of the bank.
2. That every dollar deposited in them on the Government's account that could not be disbursed there would have to be employed in discounts or transferred to the bank in Philadelphia or its eastern offices.
3. That, owing to the state of exchange, transfers could only be made by the transportation of specie across the mountains.
4. That, owing to the geographical position of Kentucky and Ohio, the public expenditure would be extremely limited.
5. That the transportation of specie from the western to the eastern States by the bank invariably had produced and would continue to produce irritation in the public mind.

An additional reason for endeavoring to make State banks in that section of the Union the depositories of public money was to increase the receipts by enabling the public debtors to pay in the notes of specie-paying banks, which would not be received by the offices of the bank, and which could not be received by them without increasing that collision which it was my desire to diminish.

The foregoing reasons, which appeared to me so obvious as to need no elucidation, have, however, escaped the observation of one of the directors of the office at Louisville, who has remonstrated against the transfer of the deposits to the Branch Bank of the State of Kentucky. I have the honor to send you inclosed his letter. If the views presented in them correspond with those entertained by the Board of Directors it will afford me great pleasure to restore the deposits, not only there, but at Chillicothe.

The arrangement which was attempted at Cincinnati has entirely failed. At the time the arrangement was made with the Bank of Chillicothe I was not aware that anything was due from it to the United States Bank, and, of course, made no stipulation in relation to it. The failure of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Cincinnati to comply with its undertaking has terminated all connexion with it; the condition which was imposed upon it in favor of the United States Bank, as well as those in favor of the Treasury, has therefore produced no effect.

I shall at all times be obliged to you for the communication of your ideas upon every subject connected with the operations of the bank and of the currency. It is, I think, sufficiently manifest that the offices west of the mountains can never have any local circulation there as long as their notes are received by the Government in discharge of duty bonds at Philadelphia and the other commercial cities.

The refusal of the bank to receive the notes of its offices on deposit has not, in any considerable degree, relieved it from the burden of exchange between the different sections of the Union. When it is considered that the whole circulation of the bank is now less than four millions of dollars, it is probable that those who have remittances to make cannot at all times obtain the sums necessary, but generally exchange will be effected by them, as long as their currency is rendered universal through the Union, by the receipt of them on account of the Government in the principal commercial cities. If they should be made receivable only in the States where they are issued, and in States and Territories where offices have not been established, each office would have to be conducted upon commercial principles, and, of course, the expense of it be borne by the commercial class. This, however, is no evil to that class as a body of men, as the expense of exchange would be paid and received by them. To travellers, however, the locality of the currency of the notes of the bank would be a serious evil, unless measures should be adopted by the bank, through its offices, to receive them from the hands of the brokers. This being done, the objections to the change of the charter under consideration would be substantially removed.

I remain, &c.

Extract of a letter from the President of the United States Bank to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated October 5, 1819.

"The board entirely concurs with you in the views you take as to the Government collections and deposits in the western States, which they believe to be calculated to ease the moneyed pressure on that portion of the country, as well as to meet the interests of Government, and relieve the bank from embarrassing collisions with local banking institutions."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 1, 1820.

SIR: With a view to increase and equalize the facilities of making payment for public lands in the several land districts of the United States, I have determined to authorize the Receivers of Public Moneys to take, in addition to specie and the bills of the United States Bank and its branches, the notes of the following incorporated banks, viz: those in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and the Merchants' and Franklin Banks of Alexandria, and those specie-paying banks in the State in which the land office is situated.

This instruction supersedes those that have heretofore been given on the subject, except in so far as they prohibit the receipt of any paper of any bank which does not discharge its notes in specie on demand; and that prohibition must, in every case, be rigidly adhered to.

In order to facilitate the collection of the notes of the banks in your State which may be received by you, you will, on making a deposit, give notice to each of those banks of the amount of its notes contained in such deposit; and if you shall be informed by the cashier of the bank in which you make your deposits that the notes of any bank in your State, which may have been deposited by you, have not been paid on demand, you will discontinue to receive the notes of such bank. It may be proper for you to take the first occasion to intimate, in respectful terms, to each of those banks, the consequence that will result from a want of punctuality in paying its notes on presentation.

For the information of the purchasers of public lands, you will publish, in one of the newspapers of your district, a list of the kinds of money receivable at your office; and you will give notice, in like manner, of any change which may occasionally take place.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

[2D SESSION.

LOANS OF MONEY TO BANKS AND INDIVIDUALS FROM THE TREASURY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 25, 1823.

Sir: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury "to inform the Senate if any loans of money to any amount, and for what purpose, have been made from the Treasury, to any individuals or banking institutions, since the 3d day of March, 1789, and whether such loans, so made, have been repaid, or in any manner adequately secured, so that the Government will ultimately be satisfactorily reimbursed," I have the honor to submit copies of letters from the Secretary of the Treasury, from the 19th of March, 1792, to the 17th of July, 1819, inclusive, to the officers of the Bank of the United States, and of its branches, and to the officers of certain State banks, and to other officers and individuals, which contain the information required by the resolution, as far as it can be collected from the correspondence of the Department.

By reference to the papers numbered from 1 to 11, inclusive, it is apparent that loans in fact, though not in terms, were offered by the Treasury Department to the Bank of the United States, and to the State banks to which they were directed.

By the first of these letters, dated the 19th of March, 1792, the Secretary of the Treasury informed the President of the Bank of the United States that it had been represented to him that an unusually large sum of money had and would become due to the United States from importers in the district of Philadelphia, in the month of March, 1792, and reminded him that, in consequence of standing circular instructions, the collector of the district would receive from the merchants, as cash, the post notes of the Bank of the United States, if not issued for a longer period of payment than thirty days, and that he would judge how far it might be convenient to make operations payable in such notes, which might not be convenient if payable immediately in specie or cash notes. On the 29th of the same month, a letter was addressed, by the same officer, to the President of the Bank of Maryland, stating that it had been intimated to him that considerable sums of duties had become due, or were to fall due, in Baltimore, in the course of the month, and that it was at all times his wish to give to the merchants as much facility as the public business would admit; that he had, therefore, determined, if he should incline to make discounts for the importers to enable them to pay the duties due on or before the 15th of April thereafter, he would leave a sum of money, equal thereto, in his hands, for sixty days after the dates of the notes.

By his letters of the 10th of April, 1792, the Presidents of the Bank of the United States and of the Bank of Maryland were informed that circumstances within his knowledge induced him to state that the operation, suggested in his letter of the 29th of March, continued to be desirable in relation to those who have payments to make at the custom-house in the course of that month. By his letter of the 8th of December, 1792, the President of the Bank of the United States was informed that the Secretary had no objection that notes in which the Government was interested should be renewed for thirty days in all cases where it could be done with perfect safety to the public. By the letter of the Secretary, of the — of February, 1793, the Presidents of the offices of the Bank of the United States at New York and Baltimore were informed that an arrangement had been made with the Bank of the United States, for the accommodation of the merchants of Philadelphia, whose bonds for duties were to become payable between that date and the last day of the ensuing month, by which the bank would discount the notes of such merchants as were indebted to the custom-house for thirty days, for the respective sums that should become payable; the bank to receive those notes from the collector as cash, to be drawn for only by the collector. The President of the office was informed that if a similar arrangement appeared to him to be requisite to the accommodation of the merchants of New York, that he would not draw for the sums that had relation to the transaction until about the middle of May thereafter. On the 5th of March, 1793, a similar letter was addressed to the Presidents of the Offices of Discount and Deposit at Boston and Providence. His letters of the 5th of April, 1793, and the 16th of February, 1797, marked 10, 11, have the same object in view; that is to say, they offer, as inducements to the banks to discount the notes of persons indebted upon duty bonds, that the amount of such bonds shall not be drawn from the banks until the notes discounted were payable, or that post-notes shall be receivable by the collector in discharge of such bonds.

The latter of these letters relates to the case of an individual, in whose favor the Secretary of the Treasury submits the consideration of the bank whether an accommodation could not be granted to him, on condition that the sum discounted should be paid in a post-note, to be deposited with the collector of the customs. This representation was made in consequence of the individual's being unable to obtain a credit at the custom-house on a cargo of coffee, because he had duty bonds to a considerable amount then due. It appears, from the letter of the 23d of February, 1793, already referred to, that arrangements of that nature were made verbally with the bank, as the arrangement referred to in that letter is not of record in the office.

The correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the banks, generally, does not show upon what account the deposits in those banks were made. The letters of the Secretary to the Treasurer are still more general, simply directing the deposit.

The accounts of the Treasurer with the banks anterior to the last quarter of the year 1811 have not been preserved; no inference, therefore, can be drawn from the state of the accounts as to the object or purpose for which any deposit was made previously to that date. From the accounts with the banks from that period it appears that many deposits were made by transferring public money from one bank to another when the amount in the bank to which the transfer was made was much more than sufficient to meet the drafts drawn upon it. Although the inferences which may be drawn from the state of the accounts between the Treasurer and a bank in which deposits are made, apparently not required for the public expenditure, cannot be considered as conclusive evidence that such deposits were made to sustain the bank against a run or press upon it or to aid it in its operations, yet the presumption is sufficiently strong to make it proper to present a few of those cases. On the 6th of March, 1812, a draft was drawn for $50,000 in favor of the Mechanics' Bank of New York upon the State Bank at Charleston, and on the 7th of May for $80,000. On the 2d of March there was on deposit in the former bank $432,000, which was not reduced below $319,000 during the remainder of the month; and on the 4th of May the deposit was $133,000, which sum was not diminished during the month; and at the end of the quarter it had increased to $224,000. There were drawn and deposited in the Bank of Pennsylvania the following drafts, viz: March 12, 1812, upon the Union Bank of Boston, $50,000; July 6, upon the State Bank of Boston, $49,000; in October of the same year, upon the Bank of Baltimore, $200,000; and upon the Manhattan Company, $100,000. At the date of the first draft there was standing to the credit of the Treasurer on the books of the bank $133,000, which was not diminished during the month, and at its close amounted to $294,000. At the date of the second the deposit amounted to $164,000, which continued increasing, and amounted, on the 17th August, to $403,000, and at the end of the quarter to $636,000. On the 6th of October, the date of the first draft in that month, it amounted to $465,000, and at the close of the month to $593,000. The records of the office afford no explanation of the reasons which induced the Secretary of the Treasury to make these transfers; and many others of a similar nature were made from time to time. But on the 4th of March, 1814, the cashier of the Bank of Pennsylvania, by letter of that date, informed the Secretary of the Treasury that the great and unprecedented demand upon that institution for specie, principally from the eastward, induced him to request that, if consistent with the interests of the Government, he would give him drafts either on New York or Boston to an amount that would counteract those demands, stating that the amount of specie in the vaults but little exceeded $200,000, and that the demands of the bank upon those to the southward of Philadelphia, if called for, might put them to serious inconvenience. Upon this representation a draft was, on the 8th of the month, drawn by the Treasurer in favor of the bank for $150,000 upon the Bank of New York. Upon the 28th of February preceding this transaction there was in the bank a deposit of $755,000, and on the 31st of March $799,000. By reference to the letter of the President of the Bank of Columbia which accompanies this report, it appears that on the 29th of October, 1801, the Secretary of the Treasury made a deposit in that bank of $50,000 to enable it to sustain itself against a run which was then making upon it, and that other sums were subsequently deposited in that bank by the Department to aid it in its operations. In the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, of the 27th of May, 1813, to Stephen Girard, he is informed that "the arrangement made by Mr. Gallatin relative to the deposit of the public moneys drawn from your bank in favor of the public agents was to shield you against the attacks of the incorporated banks, to whom such money would otherwise have been transferred; and the magnitude of your contract might thus have been rendered highly prejudicial to your institution. It is the particular province, and it has been the practice, of the Department of the Treasury of the United States to direct the moneyed operations of the public to the preservation of credit by maintaining the equilibrium between the moneyed institutions of the country; and as it has protected your institution by the arrangement alluded to, so it will guard those institutions against any undue pressure which the public funds in your vaults may enable you to direct against them. I am informed that you have made some very heavy and unnecessary drafts of specie from several banks, particularly from the Pennsylvania and Farmers' and Mechanics' Banks, with indications of a disposition to persevere, which has excited considerable apprehension. I therefore deem it necessary to inform you that a continuance of that system will induce the prompt application of a specific remedy."

From my personal intercourse with Mr. Gallatin I know he entertained the sentiments communicated in this letter, and I presume they have been entertained by all of his predecessors and successors in office, and acted upon whenever cases occurred which rendered it necessary.

When I entered upon the duties of Secretary of the Treasury, on the 22d October, 1816, the banks in all the States, except those in Massachusetts, had suspended specie payments. My immediate predecessor in office had made an ineffectual attempt in the course of that year to induce them to commence specie payments by discharging in specie all notes not exceeding five dollars. By the charter of the Bank of the United States it was to go into operation on the 1st of January, 1817. It was, after mature deliberation, determined that another effort should be made by the Treasury Department to induce the State banks to aid the Bank of the United States in restoring the currency to a sound state. There was then in the Treasury more than eleven millions of dollars, deposited in the State banks, and the estimate of receipts for the year 1817 considerably exceeded that of the expenditure for the year. It was therefore proposed by the Department that no part of the sums then in the State banks should be drawn from them before the 1st of July, unless the receipts should not be equal to the expenditure, an event which there was no reason to apprehend, and that after that time it should be gradually drawn as the public service should require; but in no case were drafts to be drawn in favor of the Bank of the United States, unless it should become necessary to protect it against the State banks. This advantageous proposition was declined without hesitation. The banks in the principal Atlantic cities, however, entered into an arrangement with the Bank of the United States by which they engaged to resume specie payments, and in the course of the year 1817 the resumption, with but few exceptions, became general throughout the Union. Towards the close of the year 1818 some of the banks in the western States stopped payment. The sudden fall in the price of all domestic articles, which occurred about the same period, created a general pressure upon the banks. In the winter and spring of 1819 the Bank of the United States was, in the opinion of the enlightened officer who presided over its direction, in a great degree indebted for the preservation of its credit to the forbearance of its creditors, and to the support which it received from the Treasury Department. Such were my impressions of its critical state that I felt it my duty to accept propositions made by the Board of Directors which, under other circumstances, would have been declined.

During this general pressure the banks in this District which, upon the establishment of the Office of Discount and Deposit in the city, had not taken advantage of that event to reduce their circulations by contracting their discounts, were pressed by continual and increasing demands for specie from the eastward, and by the return of their notes upon them from the western parts of Virginia, where certain banks, chartered by that State, had commenced, or were preparing to commence business. Pressed thus, on both sides, their means of meeting the demands made upon them, and of preserving their credit, were believed to be insufficient. In this critical situation several of them applied, personally, by their directors, to the Department, to ascertain whether, in case of great emergency, they would receive any support. Considering the crisis as highly important to the nation, and believing that a failure of one or more of those banks would produce a general run upon all, of a different nature from that which was then pressing upon them, assurances were given that a reasonable support might be relied upon.

In consequence of this assurance deposits were, from time to time, made in the Union Bank of Alexandria, the Mechanics' Bank, and the Franklin Bank, of the same place; in the Union and Central Banks of Georgetown; in the Bank of Washington; and in the Patriotic Bank. All these sums have been repaid, except the sum of $48,000 dollars, deposited in the Franklin Bank of Alexandria. The whole of the funds of that bank have been assigned to the United States, and legal measures have been adopted by the Attorney of the United States for the recovery of the amount from the debtors of the bank. The letter of that officer, which is herewith communicated, shows that there is no danger of any loss to the United States. Copies of the letters to the Treasurer, directing the deposits to be made in that bank, to his credit, are also communicated. These deposits were made upon the representations of General Thompson Mason, then collector of the district of Alexandria, and of John T. Ricketts, esq., who were both men of great respectability and considerable stockholders in the bank. W. T. Swann, esq., a man of the fairest character and of considerable property, was then the President of the bank. No doubt was entertained of the integrity with which the bank was administered, and of its capacity, if aided for a short time, of preserving its credit and of meeting the drafts of the Treasurer for the amount deposited by him to his credit. This anticipation, it is believed, would have been realized had not the notes of the bank been so successfully counterfeited as to have imposed upon its officers to a considerable amount. The same misfortune befel the Central Bank of Georgetown. In the month of May, of the same year, when the cashier of the Bank of Columbia was about to set out on his journey through the interior of the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Ohio, for the purpose of demanding payment of the special deposit which had been transferred to that bank, he represented to the Department that he should be at very considerable expense, and that during his absence there might be a press made upon the bank; and, therefore, requested that a deposit of $45,000 might be made in the bank to the credit of the Treasurer. As no charge was to be made for the expense and risk which was incurred in carrying a large amount of bank notes through the country, the request was considered reasonable and the deposit was accordingly made. This bank has never ceased to pay its notes in specie on demand.

These are all the transactions with banks which are believed to be within the intent or terms of the resolution, except certain transactions with the banks in this District in the early part of the year 1817, which were specifically reported to the two houses of Congress on the 10th of December, 1817, and printed among the public documents of that session. In that report it is stated that a deposit of $75,000 had been made in the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown, to sustain it in its operations, immediately after resuming specie payments. The principle and practice of the Treasury in sustaining the credit of banks disposed to act correctly was, in this communication, frankly disclosed to Congress, when not the slightest symptom of dissatisfaction was manifested, or the right or propriety of the practice called directly or indirectly in question.

It is presumed that it has not been the practice of the Department to lend the public money to individuals. By reference to letters, numbered from 12 to 16, inclusive, it will be found that public money has been advanced to individuals which, however, have that appearance; but it is possible that those transactions may admit of explanations which may take from them that character. From Nos. 14 and 15 it appears that considerable sums were, in 1798, advanced to Lane & Salter, and others, to enable them to erect the necessary machinery for making cannon, when no contract for that object had been made. The only case which has occurred since I took charge of the Treasury Department, which can have given rise to that part of the resolution, is one connected with the public money deposited by the Receiver at Cincinnati in the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of that place.

That bank, a short time after the date of its agreement with the Department, in 1819, stopped payment, and has not, when called upon, offered any explanations or given any reply to the several letters addressed to it by the Department. When, in the course of that year, Mr. Whann visited Cincinnati as the agent of the Treasury, to convert the special deposit into current notes or specie, or to obtain acknowledgments that should bear interest, he reported that all the banks upon which he called, with the exception of the Farmers' and Mechanics', had shown a disposition to act fairly; had exposed to him the state of their affairs, and given him such explanations as were satisfactory; but that the officers of that bank had refused to expose the state of its affairs, or give explanations of any kind. It also refused to give any receipt or acknowledgment of the amount which had been deposited in it. No return has yet been made to the Treasurer or to this office, stating the amount in its possession. These circumstances had produced a most unfavorable impression not only as to the integrity with which the bank was directed, but also as to its solvency. In the spring of 1820, Colonel Johnson, of the Senate, as the agent of his brother, applied to the Department to ascertain whether, upon his transferring notes to the United States upon persons in good credit in this place, a credit would be given to his brother for the amount with the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank. Believing, as I did, from the circumstances which have been stated, that the debt due by the bank was not safe, and that notes upon solvent persons in this place afforded a more certain prospect of receiving payment than from the bank, the offer was accepted, and notes to the amount of $30,583 24, a considerable proportion of which were secured by mortgage, were deposited in the branch of the United States Bank in this place, and a credit for the amount given to Colonel Johnson with the Bank at Cincinnati. The transaction, however, was never considered as a loan of money. It was, in fact, changing one debt for another, and receiving, as it was then and still is believed, a better security for it than what was given in exchange. Subsequent reflection, however, upon the subject excited doubts whether the responsibility of changing the nature of any debt due to the United States, except by taking collateral or additional security, ought to be incurred by the Department. An application of a similar kind, made subsequently, by the same gentleman, was accordingly declined.

I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

W. H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 19, 1792.

GENTLEMEN: It has been represented to me that a sum of money, unusually large, has and will become due to the United States, from the importers into the district of Philadelphia, in the course of the current month. On this occasion I think it proper to remind you that the collector, of that district, in consequence of standing circular instructions to the custom-houses, will receive from the merchants, upon equal terms with cash, the post-notes of the Bank of the United States, if not issued for a longer term of payment than thirty days after date. You will judge how far it may be convenient to you to make operations payable in such notes, which might not be convenient if payable immediately in specie or in cash notes.

It has occurred that such an operation may have special reference to those who have the payments to make, and it is particularly desirable, at the present crisis, that every reasonable accommodation should be afforded.

I am, gentlemen, &c.,

A. HAMILTON, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT AND DIRECTORS of the Bank of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: It has been intimated to me that considerable sums of duties have become due, or are to fall due, in Baltimore, in the course of the present month. It is, at all times, my wish to give to the merchants as much facility as the public business will admit of. I have therefore determined to inform you that, if you should incline to make discounts for the importers, to enable them to pay the duties which have become due or which shall fall due on or before the 15th of April, I will leave a sum of money equal thereto in your hands, for sixty days after the dates of the notes.

If you should intend to give the trade this accommodation, the collector of Baltimore, on application to him, will furnish you with names of the obligors and the sums they are, respectively, to pay on or before the said 15th April.

GENTLEMEN: I understand there is at present an unusual press for money, proceeding from certain mercantile speculations.

As an accommodation in regard to notes in which the Government is interested may, in this state of things, be of peculiar convenience to the persons concerned, I shall have no objection if the bank will renew such notes for thirty days in all cases where it can be done with perfect safety to the public.

I have the honor, &c.,

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 23, 1793.

GENTLEMEN: I have made the following arrangement with the Bank of the United States for the accommodation of the merchants of Philadelphia, whose bonds for duties shall become payable between this date and the last day of the ensuing month, March.

The bank will discount, during the period mentioned, the notes of such merchants as are indebted to the custom-house for thirty days, for the respective sums that shall become payable. The bank will receive those notes from the collector as cash; they must therefore be drawn in favor of the collector only.

If a similar arrangement should appear to you, from any existing circumstances, requisite to the accommodation of the merchants of New York, I think it proper to mention to you, as a facilitation of it, that I will not draw for the sums that have relation to this transaction until about the middle of May next.

I inclose you a letter to the collector, desiring him to furnish you with an abstract of the bonds which will fall due within the time the arrangement is to continue, specifying names, sums, and times when due. This letter may be delivered to the collector if it should be thought proper to adopt the arrangement proposed; if otherwise, it may be suspended.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 2, 1793.

GENTLEMEN: I find that my letter of the 23d ultimo, (which was written in haste,) proposing an arrangement for the accommodation of merchants who are indebted to the custom-house, does not correctly express the idea which was contemplated.

I therefore request that the following mode may be pursued: The directors are to judge of the safety of the notes which may be presented for discount for the respective sums due to the custom-house, and to take the risk of non-payment upon themselves. When the notes are accepted, the proceeds are subject to checks in favor of the collector only, which checks the bank receives for the collector as cash.

If the arrangement should be found necessary, it will be proper that this explanation be communicated to the collector.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 5, 1793.

SIR: Your letter of the 28th of March came to hand yesterday. I regret much every embarrassment which is experienced by the mercantile body, whether arising from the public operations, from accidental and unavoidable causes, or from a spirit of enterprise beyond the capital which is to support it. That valuable class of citizens forms too important an organ of the general weal not to claim every practicable and reasonable exemption and indulgence.

I do not perceive, however, that I can, at the present moment, contribute to this end otherwise than by encouraging the bank to continue its aids, as liberally as shall be consistent with its safety, under an assurance that I shall, for some time to come, forbear drafts upon them as much as shall be practicable. The deposits of the Government will, during this period, be proportionably considerable.

In making this declaration, I confide in the prudence of the directors not to overstrain the faculties of the bank, by which the institution and the public interest might both suffer.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

GENTLEMEN: Mr. John Wilcocks, merchant of this city, has a considerable sum of bonds, for duties which have fallen due, the liquidation of which is indispensable before he can be allowed credit on a cargo of coffee which has just arrived. Under the special circumstances of this case, which have been communicated to me, I deem it proper to submit to your consideration whether an accommodation cannot be given at the bank, on the presentation of indisputable paper, to be judged of by you, and on condition that the sum discounted by the bank be paid in a post-note, to be deposited with the Collector of the Customs.

GENTLEMEN: Being disappointed in my expectations that the notes given to your institution by William Shannon, and endorsed by William Blount and E. B. Hopkins, for Treasury drafts on North Carolina, would have been taken up before this day, I am compelled, although with reluctance, to resort to the only remaining means of enforcing the payment thereof.

I have therefore to request that you will be pleased to cause process to issue against all the parties concerned; observing, however, that, as Mr. Blount, in his quality of Senator, is privileged from arrest during the session of Congress, the process cannot be served upon him before the fourth of March. I shall just add, that the expense attending this business will be borne by the United States.

As the advances which you may make to Mr. Bowen, in pursuance of this letter, are to be refunded by him in the course of a short time, it is not my wish that the sum advanced should be charged to the United States, unless, indeed, it should become necessary hereafter so to do, in consequence of a failure on the part of Mr. Bowen to repay it.

No. 14.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, TRENTON, September 8, 1798.

SIR: I am persuaded that your letter of this date, in answer to my reference of the letter of Lane & Salter, was written without a knowledge of all the circumstances attending the subject.

Before your Department was established, and while the responsibility for procuring military supplies rested with the Treasury, I was repeatedly called upon to take measures for securing a great number of cannon, both for the land and naval service. However easy it may now appear to procure the cannon which are wanted, the case was viewed very differently at no distant period. A supply, to the extent of about fifty thousand dollars, has been ordered to be imported, and remittances have been actually made, and, besides the casual supplies which may be obtained, Messrs. Foxall, Lane & Salter, and the proprietors of Salisbury Furnaces, have received absolute promises of being employed, which cannot now be rescinded without a violation of good faith.

In respect to Messrs. Foxall and Lane & Salter, I must remark that formal contracts would have long since been made if the models could have been furnished. It was not in my power, nor was it my duty, to prepare these models; the advances of money were made in consequence of my letters of credit, addressed to the Bank of the United States, and not by Treasury warrants; they were made to prevent delay by enabling the parties to complete their preparations; the measure was well known to be necessary and useful, and I cannot consent that it be disavowed. It is indifferent to me whether the promises which I have made to Lane & Salter are performed by the Navy or War Department. I however believe that the arrangements have been made principally with a view to casting cannon for the Navy.

On this occasion I think it proper to add that Mr. Hughes, proprietor of the Cœcil Furnace, has received large advances, which his convenience and public economy require should be liquidated by the delivery of cannon, provided he can satisfy the proper Departments of his ability to cast those of good quality.

I have the honor, &c.,

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

No. 15.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 8, 1798.

SIR: I have the honor to reply to your letter of November 30, 1798.

I consider the public as bound, in good faith, to fulfil certain engagements which I entered into with Messrs. Lane & Salter, upon condition that they would erect and maintain works capable of producing cannon of a quality suitable for the public service.

The inclosed proposals, dated June 16, of which I inclose a copy, are the latest, and were substantially agreed to by me; instead, however, of engaging to receive a certain number of cannon of particular descriptions, my understanding was that the public were to receive such cannon as should be required to the amount of forty thousand dollars value in the whole, the prices to be one hundred and fifty dollars per ton, for twelve-pounders, or a lesser size; and if cannon above twelve-pounders were required, the price to be fifty pounds, Pennsylvania currency, per ton. It was expected, however, that Messrs. Lane & Salter would most probably be employed in casting cannon of the smaller sizes, the works of Salisbury being prepared for those of a larger calibre.

I consider myself equally engaged to Mr. Foxall and the other proprietors of Eagle Furnace as to Messrs. Lane & Salter. Mr. Watson, Naval Agent at New York, has, on my behalf, had communications with the owners of Salisbury Furnace, and will be able to inform you precisely of the expectations which have been encouraged in that quarter.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 4, 1807.

SIR: Agreeably to the conversation which I had with you respecting bills on certain collectors in Virginia, I propose that hereafter those bills shall be drawn by the Treasurer in favor of the cashier of the Bank of Columbia and deposited there to the Treasurer's credit. These bills have been heretofore deposited in the branch bank at Norfolk and sold to individuals at a credit of from thirty to sixty days, and an equivalent accommodation will be allowed to the Bank of Columbia, although it is to be understood that an immediate credit is to be given to the Treasurer on the bills being deposited by him.

This arrangement is proposed to be extended to the collectors of Tappahannock, Richmond, and Petersburg; and it is proper to mention that, those collectors being directed to receive the notes of the Bank of the United States and its branches in payment of duties, a certain portion of the sums for which the bills upon them will be drawn will be payable in bank notes of that description. The proportion thus received by the collectors in notes of the Bank of the United States cannot be precisely stated; but, judging from the late returns, it will not, probably, amount to one-fifth part of the whole sum to be drawn for. It is expected that the Bank of Columbia, when it may be necessary, will consent to receive payment in this way, the bills payable in bank notes being separately drawn and expressed to be thus payable.

There is at this time standing to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States in the Bank of Virginia, at Richmond, a sum of eight thousand three hundred and fifty-nine dollars, for which a draft will be immediately furnished to the Bank of Columbia.

I am, &c.,

JOHN MASON, Esq., President of the Bank of Columbia.

A. G.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 16, 1807.

SIR: Having concluded to draw, for the present, the surplus revenue of Connecticut and Rhode Island to New York, through the medium of the Manhattan Company, the Treasurer of the United States will, from time to time, transmit bills in favor of the cashier of that institution on the several collectors and banks in the two first mentioned States. For these drafts the company must give credit to the Treasurer as soon as they come into the hands of the cashier; but the drafts of this Department on the cashier will never exceed the sums actually received.

It has been usual to sell the Treasurer's drafts on the collectors and banks on approved notes at sixty days' credit, which, if necessary, the company is also authorized to do. But I have been informed that an arrangement had been made with the banks of New Haven, New London, Newport, and Roger Williams, of Providence, by which they became purchasers of those drafts and paid the amount themselves within sixty days at New York. It would, I think, be proper to continue the arrangement. Indeed, I know that at this moment the Newport and Roger Williams Bank have considerable deposits in the branch bank for the purpose of meeting the Treasury drafts.

It will be necessary that the cashier should transmit to the Treasurer of the United States a weekly statement of his account with the company and a duplicate to this office. I also expect that you will furnish the Secretary of the Treasury with a monthly concise statement of the general situation of the company. This last document should be endorsed "private," and sent under double cover to this office.

DANIEL LUDLOW, Esq., President Manhattan Company, New York.

SIR: I have received your favor of the 2d instant, inclosing a copy of the act for incorporating the Bank of Marietta, and proposing, in behalf of the directors of that institution, to receive deposits of public moneys there. I am willing to direct the Receivers at Marietta and Zanesville to place the public moneys collected by them in the Bank of Marietta, on the following conditions: 1st. That bills drawn on the bank by the Treasurer, for the current service of the Treasury, shall be paid at sight, in specie, whenever the holder shall require it. 2d. That the amount of bills drawn on the bank by the Treasurer, in favor of any of the banks in the District of Columbia, shall be placed in such bank by the Bank of Marietta within ninety days after sight. 3d. The cashier of the bank shall transmit, quarterly, viz: on the last days of March, June, September, and December, in each year, to the Treasurer of the United States, a statement of his account with the bank, showing the sums paid to his credit and by whom, and the sums paid on bills during the quarter; and shall, at the same time, transmit a duplicate of such statement to the Secretary of the Treasury. 4th. The cashier shall also transmit, quarterly, to the Secretary of the Treasury a statement of the situation of the bank, made out upon the principles of the form subjoined to this letter. This statement may be inclosed in a double cover, of which the inner one may be marked "private," and will be considered confidential.

You will be pleased to submit the consideration of these terms to the Board of Directors, and upon their assenting to them I will give the necessary instructions to the Receivers of Marietta and Zanesville.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 20, 1808.

SIR: I received some time since your letter dated December 7, 1807, inclosing a copy of the act establishing a State bank in Kentucky, advising of the organization of the bank, and proposing it as a place of deposit for the public moneys.

The conditions upon which similar institutions have been made places of deposit for the public moneys are the following: 1. An engagement on the part of the directors that the drafts of the Treasurer, drawn for the current service of the Treasury, shall be paid at sight, in specie, if desired by the holders. 2. That the amount of drafts of the Treasurer drawn in favor of the bank at Pittsburg, or of any of the banks in the District of Columbia, Baltimore, or Philadelphia, shall be placed by the Bank of Kentucky in such banks within ninety days after sight, and free of expense to the bank holding the drafts.

The only mode by which the greatest part of the moneys, after being placed in the Bank of Kentucky, can be brought within the use of the Treasury is by drawing it into other banks; and the payment of the drafts drawn in favor of those banks must be undertaken to be made by the Bank of Kentucky within the time specified, and at the banks in whose favor the drafts are drawn. The choice of the banks above named is given to the Bank of Kentucky to enable them to make their arrangements with such as shall best suit their convenience. It will be immaterial to the Treasury which of them are selected, except that, in Baltimore, the Office of Discount and Deposit, and in Philadelphia, the Bank of the United States and the Bank of Pennsylvania, are those only with which accounts are kept at the Treasury. 3. The cashier of the Bank of Kentucky shall transmit quarterly, viz: on the last days of March, June, September, and December, in each year, to the Treasurer of the United States, a statement of his account with the bank, showing the sums paid to his credit and by whom, and the sums paid on his draft during the quarter; and shall, at the same time, transmit a duplicate of such statement to the Secretary of the Treasury. 4. The cashier shall also transmit, quarterly, to the Secretary of the Treasury a statement of the situation of the bank, made out upon the principles of the form subjoined to this letter. This statement may be inclosed in a double cover, of which the inner one may be marked "private," and will be considered confidential.

You will be pleased to submit these terms to the consideration of the directors, and upon their assenting to them I will direct, from time to time, the depositing in the Bank of Kentucky of such sums as the convenience of the officers and the safety of the public moneys may require.

I am, &c.,

ROBERT ALEXANDER, Esq., President of the Bank of Kentucky, Frankfort.

SIR: I have directed the Treasurer, among other bills, to draw and place to his credit in the Office of Discount and Deposit at Washington a bill on the Manhattan Company at New York for one hundred thousand dollars. It is my wish that this sum may be received and disposed of in the same manner as the sums you have heretofore received on the bills of the Treasurer drawn upon the Bank of Pennsylvania; that is to say, that it should only be drawn for by you, from time to time, in favor of individuals, and not in favor either of the branch bank at New York or of the Bank of the United States.

I am, &c.,

JAMES DAVIDSON, Esq., Cashier Branch Bank, Washington.

A. G.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 16, 1810.

SIR: Having understood that the directors of the Bank of the United States have expressed an apprehension that the institution might be possibly exposed to loss in consequence of the limited manner in which you have been requested by this Department to draw for the amount of bills which have been furnished you by the Treasury on the Bank of Pennsylvania and on the Manhattan Company, I have no hesitation in giving the assurance in writing which they seem to desire, viz: that the Treasury will guarantee the eventual payment by the above named banks of the debts arising from such bills as shall be furnished from the Treasury to you, under a limitation that you are not to draw for the amount, or any part of it, in favor of the Bank of the United States or of the branch bank at New York.

As this limitation deprives the Bank of the United States of the means of securing at once the payment of the debt by demanding, as they otherwise might, the immediate payment in specie of the amount of the Treasurer's bills furnished to you, it is deemed reasonable on the part of the bank to demand this guaranty, which is therefore given in the extent above stated; but it will be considered as ceasing whenever the limitation as to the mode in which you are to draw for the amount of those bills is withdrawn, of which due notice in writing will be given to you. The only engagement of the Treasury after that notice will be, as in all other cases, that the Treasurer's bills shall be duly honored, leaving to the Bank of the United States their own means of obtaining payment.

I am, &c.,

JAMES DAVIDSON, Esq., Cashier Branch Bank, Washington.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 25, 1811.

GENTLEMEN: As it has been decided not to renew the charter of the Bank of the United States, it has become necessary to discontinue the agency of that institution and its branches in the transaction of the Treasury business. Desirous of making use of the Bank of Louisiana as the receptacle of the public moneys collected at New Orleans, I have directed the collector of that port to place the custom-house bonds in that bank for collection, and to pay over the moneys collected to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States on the two following conditions: 1st. That in making their discounts the bank shall agree to consider it as a rule, when good paper is offered, always to give a preference to such as is offered by merchants having revenue bonds to pay. 2d. That if, at any time, the necessary expenditures of the government at New Orleans should exceed the receipts thereof, the Bank of Louisiana will furnish any reasonable sum within the compass of their ability, and receive their reimbursement by drafts on any of the large Atlantic ports they may themselves choose.

The directors will observe the object of these conditions to be that, in consideration of the advantage which the bank will receive from the public deposits, (hitherto always considerable,) they are only required to afford their first facilities to such individuals offering sufficient security in their paper as have money to pay to the Government, and which, when paid, will go to increase the amount of the Government deposit in the bank; and that in a possible event that the expenditures at New Orleans exceed the receipts, (an event which has never yet occurred,) they will, in effect, purchase Treasury bills, payable at sight, on such of the Atlantic ports as may best suit their own convenience, for a sum which will always be regulated in such a way as not to produce a pressure on the bank.

If the Bank of Louisiana shall entertain a disposition to facilitate the operations of the Treasury, and shall consider these conditions as not being incompatible with their interest, after the account of the Treasurer shall have been opened with that institution, the following measures on their part will be deemed necessary by the Treasury: 1. As no bank book can be kept by the Treasurer, that the cashier, immediately after the expiration of each calendar month, should transmit to the Treasurer a statement of his account for that month, together with the drafts that may have been paid during the same cancelled, and a duplicate of the account by the next succeeding mail. 2. That a copy of this account (and a duplicate of the copy in the same manner) be at the same time sent to the Secretary of the Treasury. 3. That a statement of the situation of the bank at the end of each month, prepared on the principles of the form at foot, be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury. This may be included in a double cover, the inner one marked private, and will be considered confidential.

A sample of the signature of the Treasurer of the United States is annexed for your government in the payment of his drafts which may be drawn on your institution.

I have, &c.,
The PRESIDENT AND DIRECTORS of the Bank of Louisiana, New Orleans.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 26, 1811.

GENTLEMEN: In consequence of the non-renewal of the charter of the Bank of the United States, it has become necessary that the public moneys should be deposited in the State banks, and I have directed, for the present, that the collectors of the out-ports in Massachusetts should make their payments into the Union Bank in Boston. The collector of the port of Boston has been directed to make a selection himself of the bank in which the moneys collected by him are to be temporarily deposited.

This arrangement not being permanent, I have now only to request that an account may be opened with the Treasurer of the United States in the books of your institution, that any moneys which may be paid there for his account may be received, and duplicate receipts granted to the persons making the payments.

Your payments will be made on drafts of the Treasurer, a specimen of whose signature is annexed to the foot of this letter.

A weekly statement of his account is to be made out and transmitted to him, and at the same time a duplicate thereof is to be sent to my office. The paid drafts are to be cancelled and returned, either weekly or monthly, to the Treasurer.

I am, &c.,
The PRESIDENT AND DIRECTORS of the Union Bank, Boston.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 5, 1811.

SIR: The Treasurer has been this day directed to draw bills in your favor on

The Bank of Kentucky for .....	$35,000
The Bank of Marietta.....	15,000
	50,000

The amount of these bills is to be passed to the credit of the Treasurer as soon as they are received, and, by agreement of those banks, will be paid to you here, within ninety days from the time when the bills are presented for payment. Care will be taken that during this period the drafts of the Treasurer on your institution shall be so regulated that no actual advance of funds will be required of it in consequence of this arrangement.

I am, &c.,
WM. WHANN, Esq., Cashier of the Bank of Columbia.

A. G.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 5, 1811.

SIR: The Treasurer has been this day directed to draw bills in favor of your institution as follows, viz:

On the collector of New Haven for .....	$50,000
On the collector of New London.....	6,000
On the collector of Fairfield.....	4,000
On the collector of Bristol, R. I.....	35,000
On Roger Williams' Bank, at Providence, for.....	45,000
On Newport Bank .....	30,000
	170,000

By an arrangement with the above mentioned banks they are to place the amount of the bills drawn on them in your hands within sixty days after the bills are presented.

The banks in New Haven and New London make remittances for the collectors in the same way, viz: in sixty days.

Drafts on the collector of Bristol have been usually negotiated through the banks in Providence, and it is desirable that the present bill should take the same course, as a draft of specie might produce pressure and inconvenience.

As it is some time since similar drafts were furnished to your institution, I have thought it necessary to remind you of the mode in which their payment will be effected.

I am, &c.,

HENRY REMSEN, Esq., President Manhattan Company, New York.

A. G.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 5, 1811.

SIR: The Treasurer of the United States has been this day directed to draw bills in your favor on

The Maine Bank for.....	$50,000
The Saco Bank.....	25,000
	75,000

By an arrangement with the banks they are bound to place the amount of bills drawn as above in Boston, within sixty days from the time when they are presented for payment.

You are therefore requested to accept a compliance with those terms as good payment of these bills, or of any similar bills which may hereafter be placed in your institution. But in the meantime it is necessary that the amount should appear in your account with the Treasurer to his credit, from the time when you receive the bills from him. Care will always be taken that his drafts shall be so regulated that no actual advance of funds by the Union Bank shall take place.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE BURROUGHS, Esq., Cashier Union Bank, Boston.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 28, 1811.

SIR: I have thought it proper to state the following as the principles on which it is expected that the Treasury business will be conducted by the Bank of Columbia, and to request that the same may be submitted to the directors for their approbation, which, when given, you will please to communicate to me.

1. The bank to continue to receive, as heretofore, such sums as may be offered to individuals who have payments to make into the Treasury, and to pass the same to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States.

2. The bank to receive bills drawn by the Treasurer on Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, or Boston, (regulated by the state of the funds at the command of the Treasury at each of those places, but accommodated, also, as far as practicable, to the convenience of the bank,) for such sums as may be necessary to supply the bank with the means of meeting the payments of the Treasury. Occasional drafts for the collecting in of the revenue in Virginia will be furnished as heretofore.

3. The payments of Treasury, War, or Navy warrants directed by the Treasurer to the Bank of Columbia, and of drafts drawn by him on the bank, are to be made in specie whenever the holder shall require.

4. On Monday of each week a copy of the Treasurer's account for the preceding week is to be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury.

5. At the end of every month a statement of the situation of the bank, made out agreeably to the annexed form, is to be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury. It may be inclosed in a double cover, the inner one marked private, and will be considered as confidential.

6. The dividends on the public debt, payable at the Treasury, will be paid through the medium of the Bank of Columbia. The Register of the Treasury has been directed to place the abstracts for the quarter ending on the 31st instant in the Bank of Columbia; and the cashier of the late Office of Discount and Deposit at this place will be directed to pay to the cashier of the Bank of Columbia twenty thousand dollars, to enable him to make those payments. The abstracts of dividends, as well those returned unclaimed from the Loan Offices as those for stock standing on the Treasury books for past periods, which have heretofore lain in the Office of Discount and Deposit for payment, will be placed in the Bank of Columbia as soon as the accounts of the cashier of the Office of Discount and Deposit can be made out and settled at the Treasury. For all sums furnished to the cashier of the Bank of Columbia for the payment of dividends he will be charged on the books of the Treasury, and will render his accounts for the payment at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller of the Treasury shall prescribe. The dividends being payable either to the stockholders, in person, or to their attorneys, and many standing powers for this purpose being now lodged in the late Office of Discount and Deposit, they have been directed to be delivered up for the purpose of being deposited in the Bank of Columbia. But as it may happen that they will not be ready for delivery by the first day of the ensuing month, you will direct your cashier, until the powers themselves are received, to receive a certificate of the existence and extent of such powers from the late Office of Discount and Deposit as sufficient authority on which to make the payments. It is proper to mention here that powers given to the President and Directors of the Bank of the United States, or their cashiers, or any of their officers, in their official characters, are considered as being no longer of any validity. If any future question shall arise as to the validity of powers, the Comptroller of the Treasury is to be applied to for a decision.

To avoid any confusion in the accounts between the Treasury and the Bank of Columbia which might arise from the establishment by the bank of an Office of Pay and Deposit in the city of Washington, it is to be understood that the whole of the Treasury transactions with the bank will be conducted through the medium of this establishment at Washington, and that no account with the Treasurer is to be kept at the bank in Georgetown. Bills drawn by the Treasurer in favor of the bank will be in the name of their cashier, for which credit is to be given to him in Washington; and the warrants and drafts of the Treasurer will be all directed to and payable only in Washington. It will follow that the balance now to the credit of the Treasurer in the Bank of Columbia is to stand, on the first of April, to his credit in Washington, his account in the bank at Georgetown being closed from that time.

I am, &c.,

JOHN MASON, Esq., President of the Bank of Columbia.

A. G.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 28, 1811.

SIR: It having been determined that a portion of the Treasury payments should be made through the medium of the Bank of Washington, I have now to state the principles on which it is expected that this business will be transacted by the bank.

1. The bank to receive such sums as may be offered by individuals who have payments to make into the Treasury, and to pass the same to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States.

2. As the payments thus made into the bank will fall far short of the payments that will be required to be made by the bank on account of the Treasury, the sums that may be necessary to meet these last payments will be supplied to the bank by bills on Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston; which bills will be regulated, as far as practicable, by the mutual convenience of the Treasury in furnishing funds and the bank in receiving them at each of those places.

3. The payments by the bank will be made on Treasury, War, or Navy warrants, directed to the bank by the Treasurer, or on drafts drawn by him. The payment is, of course, always to be made in specie if required by the holder of the warrant or draft.

4. On Monday of each week a copy of the Treasurer's account with the bank for the preceding week is to be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury; and if the Treasurer shall find it more convenient to receive a statement of his account in that way than to keep a bank book, the bank will also furnish him with a similar copy.

5. At the end of every month a statement of the situation of the bank, made out agreeably to the annexed form, is to be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury.

It may be inclosed in a double cover, the inner one marked "private," and will be considered as confidential.

The above are the most material principles which regulated the connexion between the Treasury and the late Offices of Discount and Deposit at the seat of Government, and which it is desirable should continue to be maintained with the banks transacting the public business here. The assent of your direction to them will be necessary, and ought to be communicated to me as early as practicable. I shall, in the mean time, presuming from the resolution of the board already passed upon the subject that their assent will be given, direct the Treasurer, on the first day of the ensuing month, to place in your bank bills on Baltimore and Philadelphia for twenty thousand dollars, to form the first deposit on which the Treasury payments will commence.

I am, &c.,

DANIEL CARROLL, Esq., President of the Bank of Washington.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 4, 1811.

SIR: The Treasurer has been directed to draw bills in your favor on the Union Bank of Boston for five thousand dollars, and on the late Office of Discount and Deposit of the Bank of the United States at Norfolk for a similar sum.

These sums are intended to afford you a credit in those two places by which you may be enabled to accommodate such public officers who reside at Philadelphia as may want to make remittances to those places. It is supposed that your correspondence with New York and Baltimore already enables you to afford the facilities mentioned for those places.

SIR: I have to request that you will pay to the Bank of Washington, to be there placed to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, ten thousand dollars, on account of the balance remaining in your hands of moneys heretofore advanced to you for the payment of dividends on the funded debt of the United States standing on the books of the Treasury.

It will accommodate the Bank of Washington to receive this payment in a draft on Baltimore.

SIR: I have to request that you will pay to the Bank of Columbia, to be there placed to the credit of the United States, thirty thousand dollars, on account of the balance remaining in your hands of moneys heretofore advanced to you for the payment of dividends transferred from the Loan Offices to the Treasury. The Bank of Columbia is desirous to receive this payment in a draft on Baltimore.

SIR: I have to request that you will pay into the Bank of Columbia, to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, the further sum of ten thousand dollars, on account of the moneys remaining in your hands, heretofore advanced to you for the payment of unclaimed dividends.

As this sum is intended to be shipped to Holland, it will be desirable, if it is convenient to your institution, that the payment should be made in foreign gold coins, those of Great Britain and Portugal being preferred to any other.

I am, &c.,

JAMES DAVIDSON, Esq., Cashier of the late Branch Bank, Washington.

A. G.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 5, 1811.

SIR: The Treasurer has been directed to draw a bill on your institution in favor of William Whann, cashier of the Bank of Columbia, for five thousand dollars, which, being intended to form a part of a shipment of specie to Holland, is to be paid by you in specie if he shall require it.

I am, &c.,

I am, &c.,

SIR: For the sum of $65,200 paid into the Bank of Kentucky by the Receiver at Cincinnati, on the 28th December last, I had intended not to direct the Treasurer to draw in favor of the Bank of Pennsylvania until the 28th June, conformably to the intimation I had given you that six months would be allowed the Bank of Kentucky in which to make that remittance. But, the Bank of Pennsylvania having already (it is presumed in consequence of your orders) given credit to the Treasurer for that sum, as received from the Bank of Kentucky, I have directed the Treasurer, for the purpose of keeping the accounts in due order, to draw a bill on the Bank of Kentucky in favor of the Bank of Pennsylvania for the amount.

I have been able to apply a considerable portion of the public money in the Bank of Kentucky to the public service there, as you will perceive by the drafts which will have been presented. It is not expected that the Receiver's payment made in February should be placed in the Bank of Pennsylvania before August.

But in the meantime it is necessary that the amount should appear in your account with the Treasurer, to his credit, from the time when you receive the bills from him. SIR: The President and Directors of the Bank of Bristol have represented to me the inconvenience they sustain by the manner in which the drafts of the Treasurer on that institution and on the collectors of Bristol are now obliged to be paid. If no special reason exists to the contrary, which in that case you will be pleased to communicate to me, I request that you will receive payment of those drafts by the Bank of Bristol in the same manner as the others drawn in Connecticut and Rhode Island are now paid to the Manhattan Company, viz: by payment of the amount in New York within sixty days from the time of presentation at Bristol.

I have, &c.,
HENRY REMSEN, Esq., President of the Manhattan Company, New York.

A. G.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 27, 1813.

SIR: The arrangement made by Mr. Gallatin, relative to the deposit of the public moneys drawn from your bank in favor of the public agents, was intended to shield you against the attacks of the incorporated banks, to whom such moneys would otherwise have been transferred, and the magnitude of your contract for the loan might thus have been rendered highly prejudicial to your institution.

It is the particular province and it has been the practice of the Department of the Treasury of the United States to direct the moneyed operations of the public to the preservation of credit, by maintaining the equilibrium between the moneyed institutions of the country; and it has protected your institution by the arrangement alluded to; so it will guard those institutions against any undue pressure which the public funds in your vaults may enable you to direct against them.

I am informed that you have made some very heavy and unnecessary drafts of specie from several banks, particularly from the Pennsylvania and Farmers' and Mechanics' Banks, with indications of a disposition to persevere, which has excited considerable apprehension.

I therefore deem it necessary to inform you that a continuance of that system will induce the prompt application of a specific remedy.

I am, &c.,
STEPHEN GIRARD, Esq., Banker, Philadelphia.

WILLIAM JONES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 29, 1813.

SIR: The balance standing to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States in the State Bank, Charleston, has been reserved to meet the payments on account of the public debt becoming due at the close of the present and ensuing quarters. It is for this reason that the repeated applications of the cashier of the Bank of Columbia for drafts sufficient to cover the balance due by that institution to yours have not been complied with. If he had been furnished with drafts as he desired and is understood, in conformity with your request, there would not have been left money enough to meet the payments through the Commissioner of Loans, and to the State Bank itself, at the end of the present quarter; and this deficiency (as the public moneys collected in Charleston fall short of the public expenditures there) must have been supplied by a draft or drafts on some northern bank. The whole operation, therefore, it was supposed, would not have produced to you any advantage. If, however, there are any of the banks in New York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore, on which you wish to receive drafts sufficient to liquidate the balance due to the State Bank from the Bank of Columbia, or for any larger sum, they will be furnished as soon as your wish in this respect shall be communicated.

I am, &c.,
JOHN DAWSON, Esq., Cashier of the State Bank, Charleston.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 7, 1813.

SIR: Your letter of the 25th June has been received, and the Treasurer has accordingly been directed to draw and transmit to you a bill on S. Girard's bank for $50,000, and also to draw and deliver to the cashier of the Bank of Columbia a bill upon you for $48,673 07.

The balance to the credit of the Treasurer in your institution will remain for the payment of the interest on the public debt payable at Charleston. The sum which may be wanting to complete this payment on the 30th of September next will be furnished in drafts on Baltimore, Philadelphia, or New York, at your option.

I am, &c.,
JOHN DAWSON, Esq., Cashier of the State Bank, Charleston.

W. J.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 6, 1813.

SIR: I observe by your statement that a large sum is due from the Bank of Pennsylvania to your institution. It is not customary to draw moneys from one bank to put them into another, in the same place; but as the expenditures, which will unavoidably go through the Bank of Pennsylvania in the two or three ensuing months, will be large, it will be a convenience to the Treasury to strengthen our funds in that bank, by giving them a draft on yours sufficient to pay the balance they owe, or such part of it as you shall choose.

You will be pleased to inform me if this will interfere with your arrangements, or be inconvenient, in any respect, to your institution.

I am, &c.,

W. J.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 31, 1813.

SIR: From the large payments to be made on the first day of the ensuing month at the Manhattan Company, on account of the Funded Debt and Treasury notes, (exceeding thirteen hundred thousand dollars,) it has been found impracticable to supply the fund in any other way than by giving a draft on the Mechanics' Bank for two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, in part, of this sum. This draft will merely serve for the regulation of the accounts between the two banks, the cashier of the Manhattan Company having been informed that specie is not to be drawn for any part of it.

I am, &c.,

W. J.

BANK OF PENNSYLVANIA, March 4, 1814.

SIR: The great and unprecedented demands on this institution, for specie principally, from the eastward, induces me to request that, if consistent with the interests of the Government, you would give me drafts, either on New York or Boston, to an amount that would in some measure counteract the present demands on us.

The amount now in our vaults but little exceeds two hundred thousand dollars; our demands on the banks of the southward of Philadelphia, if called for, may put them to serious inconvenience.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

JONATHAN SMITH, Cashier.

HON. G. W. CAMPBELL, Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 8, 1814.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 4th instant. The Treasurer has been directed to forward you a draft on the Mechanics' Bank, New York, for $150,000. The funds at the disposal of the Treasury at that place, compared with the very considerable demands to be met there, do not admit of any larger sum being furnished to you at this time.

I am, &c.,

JONATHAN SMITH, Esq., Cashier of the Bank of Pennsylvania.

G. W. CAMPBELL.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 21, 1815.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 14th instant, and answer the questions which it proposes with the frankness that is due to your prompt adoption of the plan for connecting certain State banks with the Treasury.

1. You will never be required to credit the "cash account" with the Treasury drafts on northern banks to an inconvenient amount, nor at a time nor in a manner that will operate oppressively or injuriously. The object of the arrangement is to secure occasional facilities to the Treasury in transferring its funds from place to place. Proper notice will be given; the amount of the drafts will be charged on such bank as may be most able to bear it; and if the account should ever be great, it will be divided among the banks so as to make the pressure equal and light.

2. If you should ever be required to credit "special deposit" or "Treasury note accounts" with drafts on any of their banks, a reasonable time will certainly be given to enable you to provide for the disbursement.

3. When Treasury notes are drawn from "special deposit account" it will be subject to a general regulation with respect to the interest.

I am, &c.,

ALEXANDER J. DALLAS.

J. BLACKWOOD, Esq., President of the Planters' and Mechanics' Bank, Charleston.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 15, 1815.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 9th instant. It will be convenient to the Treasury to transfer from Savannah and North Carolina the sums mentioned below, and I will direct the drafts to be forwarded to Mr. Simpson, for which the Treasurer of the United States is to be credited at your bank.

I am, &c.,

A. J. DALLAS.

STEPHEN GIRARD, Esq., Banker, Philadelphia.

A draft on the State Bank of North Carolina for .....	$30,000
Drafts on Savannah for .....	10,000
	40,000

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 30, 1815.

SIR: Your letter of the 26th instant has been received. The notes sent to Savannah for the payment of the Treasury notes held by the Planters' Bank were of the denomination of small Treasury notes not bearing interest, but fundable for stock bearing seven per cent. interest, at the pleasure of the holder. The refusal of the bank to accept so advantageous a mode of payment surprised me; but as a payment in Treasury notes bearing 5 2-5 per cent. interest was preferred, I have willingly adopted it, both as to the Planters' Bank and the Bank of Augusta. The transaction is, therefore, now closed.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

JOHN BOLTON, Esq., President Planters' Bank, Savannah.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 15, 1815.

SIR: Your letter of the 5th instant has been received. It will give me pleasure to accommodate the Planters' and Mechanics' Bank by abstaining to draw for the balance of the Treasurer's account, unless it is to pay the dividendo on the public debt and other urgent demands upon the Treasury to the south. Indeed, I have already, with a view to that accommodation, refused repeatedly to draw upon the bank. It will not, however, correspond with the arrangements of the Treasury to make a transfer of the balance to Philadelphia in the way which you propose.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

J. BLACKWOOD, Esq., President of the Planters' and Mechanics' Bank, Charleston.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 15, 1815.

SIR: You are authorized to apply, out of the small Treasury notes in your hands belonging to the Treasurer of the United States, the sum of $500,000, upon crediting that amount to the Treasurer in his cash account with your institution, in conformity with and upon the terms stated in the agreement which is this day sent to the President of the Manhattan Company for his acceptance and execution. The Treasurer will this day transmit to you $300,000 in small Treasury notes, to be placed to his credit in the Manhattan Bank in aid of the sums already deposited, and which may be hereafter deposited in that species of Treasury notes.

For greater security of transmission, the bundles containing the notes will be put under cover to Mr. Golston, the collector of the customs, from whom you will receive them.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

SAMUEL FLEWELLING, Esq., Cashier Manhattan Company, New York.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 23, 1816.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 20th instant, and am willing to place $300,000 in small Treasury notes at the disposal of the Mechanics' Bank, on the same terms as have been agreed upon with the Manhattan Company on a similar occasion. I inclose two copies of a minute of the agreement, one of which, after being executed on the part of the bank, you will please to return to my office. I also inclose a letter to the cashier of the Manhattan Company, directing him to deliver to you $300,000 in small Treasury notes on your presenting to him a certificate of that sum having been placed in the Mechanics' Bank as cash to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

W. FISH, Esq., Cashier Mechanics' Bank, New York.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 2, 1816.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th ultimo was delivered to me by Mr. Irving, and I have agreed to extend to the City Bank the same assistance in the shape of small Treasury notes as has been given to the Mechanics' Bank. I inclose two copies of the minute of the agreement, one of which, after being executed on the part of the bank, you will be pleased to return to my office.

I also inclose a letter to the cashier of the Manhattan Company, directing him to deliver to your cashier $300,000 in small Treasury notes on receiving from him a certificate of that sum having been placed in the City Bank in cash to the credit of the Treasurer.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

WM. FEW, Esq., President City Bank, New York.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 9, 1816.

SIR: Your letter of the 2d instant has been received. It is understood that there has not been a dividend at the State Bank since the 1st of December last. I have no objection, therefore, to consider the commutation for the stamp duty as in force, notwithstanding the non-renewal of the formal agreement upon the subject, provided the bank pays the commutation money for the whole period.

An agreement to that effect is now inclosed, and you will signify the assent of the bank.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

SAMUEL FROTHINGHAM, Esq., Cashier State Bank, Boston.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 22, 1816.

SIR: Under the circumstances of the case stated in your letter of the 14th instant, it is not considered to be necessary to enforce the penalty against the New Hampshire Union Bank for issuing notes without a stamp, after the time had expired for which they had agreed to pay the composition. A certificate of the agreement for the present year is inclosed. It is much more convenient and prevents unintentional infractions of the law, similar to that above mentioned, to make the agreement a permanent one.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

JOHN RICE, Cashier New Hampshire Union Bank, Portsmouth, N. H.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 15, 1816.

SIR: Your letter of the 6th instant has been received. The receipt of the revenue at Savannah is slow, and the other means of the Treasury to the south have not enabled me to provide for the loan made by the Planters' Bank to Governor Pinckney as soon as I wished after the appropriations for the arrearages in the War Department had passed. You will observe, however, that the Treasury has abstained from drawing out of the bank its funds except upon pressing occasions, and as early an arrangement will be made as it is possible for discharging the loan.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

J. MARSHALL, Cashier of the Planters' Bank, Savannah.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 24, 1816.

SIR: Being informed by the Commissioner of Loans that you have refused to pay in the currency of the place the Treasurer's draft on you in his favor for nine thousand four hundred dollars, I hereby authorize you to discharge the same in small Treasury notes.

I am, &c.,

A. J. D.

The CASHIER of the New Hampshire Union Bank.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 24, 1816.

SIR: Your letter of the 17th instant has been received. The proposition which you make for the payment of the balance due from the Bank of Somerset to the Treasurer of the United States cannot be allowed. The sum now due ought at once to be satisfied, but I am willing to accept the payment, at the Bank of Columbia, to the credit of the Treasurer as cash, in three equal monthly instalments. You will state your decision on this counter-proposition as soon as you conveniently can.

Candor induces me to add that drafts on your bank are uniformly refused at the Treasury, and that the draft held by the Bank of Columbia was only conditionally taken.

I am, &c.,

A. J. DALLAS.

L. D. TEAKLE, Esq., President of the Bank of Somerset.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 20, 1816.

To all the banks which are the depositories of the public revenue:

Sir: I have received notice from the President and Directors of the Bank of the United States that the bank will commence its operations in Philadelphia on the first day of the next year, and that they will be ready on that day to receive the public moneys deposited in the State banks, and hold them subject to the orders of the Treasury. Like notices are expected upon the establishment of branch banks in the principal commercial cities. Before any definitive decision is made upon this proposition, it is deemed expedient to ascertain the course which the State banks will pursue in relation to the resumption of specie payments. If the determination of the banks to resume specie payments on the 1st of July, 1817, which has been communicated to this Department, is persevered in, there will be no hesitation in ordering the transfer to be made with as little delay as the interest of the community will admit. As an inducement to change that determination, it is proposed on the part of the Treasury that, if the State banks will resume their specie payments on the 20th day of February next, the public money now in their vaults shall not be transferred to those of the Bank of the United States, and that, between that day and the first of July next, as small a portion of that sum shall be drawn as the demands upon the Treasury will admit. As the receipts into the Treasury during the year will probably exceed the current demands upon the Treasury, it is proposed to discharge those demands principally from the current receipts until after the 1st of July, 1817. Subsequent to that day the money will be drawn for as the demands upon the Treasury shall require; but in no case shall it be drawn for the purpose of being deposited in the Bank of the United States, except to sustain it against any pressure which may be attempted to be made upon it or its branches.

The means of the Treasury to aid the operations of the banks in effecting a revolution in the state of the currency, so imperiously necessary to the public interest, are considered ample; and the strongest disposition exists to apply them so as to produce the most beneficial results. The power of transferring such portion of the deposits with a view to equalize the benefits resulting from them among the banking community, as the situation of the several banks may require, is expressly reserved.

In making this proposition to the State banks, the strongest reliance is placed in their disposition to join in the effort necessary to relieve the community from the evils to which it has been subjected by the disordered state of the circulating currency. It is confidently believed that the interests of the banks and of the community are not in opposition to each other, and that any sacrifice which the effort may cost them will be compensated by the advantages and facilities which it is in the power of the Treasury to afford them. In deciding upon the question submitted to their consideration the friendly character and disposition of the Bank of the United States towards them ought not to be overlooked.

The deep interest which the Treasury has in the support of bank credit, and the connexion which it has with the Bank of the United States would, independently of the known disposition of that institution to conciliate the State banks, be sufficient to protect them against an illiberal policy on its part.

In closing this communication, candor compels me to state there exists no reason to expect that the resolution of the last session of Congress, relative to the collection of the revenue after the 20th of February next, will be rescinded.

An early communication of the decision of the institution over which you preside is respectfully requested.

I have, &amp;c.,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 28, 1817.

To all the banks in the States of Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland, in which the public moneys are deposited:

Sir: The Treasurer of the United States has been instructed to authorize the Bank of the United States to receive the public money deposited in your institution, and to inform you of the fact as early as possible.

In giving this order it is confidently expected that the Bank of the United States will effect the transfer in a mode the least onerous to the institution and the most convenient to the community. The deep interest which that institution must feel for the paper system, and its intimate connexion with the Government, are considered sufficient guarantees for the intelligent and disinterested manner in which this operation will be effected, independent of the power of the Treasury Department to control its proceedings at any moment, by changing the deposits to the State banks.

Under this view of the subject it has been determined to submit the manner in which the transfer is to be made to the Bank of the United States, requesting it to keep this Department constantly advised of the measures which it may adopt for that purpose.

The Bank of the United States has been informed of the fidelity with which your institution has fulfilled its engagements to the Government, and has been requested to favor its interests where it can be done consistently with that of the community, especially in continuing to it the deposit of public money when that deposit cannot, with convenience, be made in its own vaults or that of its branches.

BANK OF COLUMBIA, February 7, 1823.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 15th instant requesting to know, of the deposits made in this bank by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1801, 1803, 1804, 1805, and 1806, as shown in the statements furnished to the Treasury Department, what amount was deposited to sustain the bank against a run upon it or to aid it in its operations, I have the honor to state that in October, 1801, and soon after the location of a branch of the Bank of the United States in Washington, owing to some dissensions which occurred in the administration of this bank, an alarm was excited and a run upon it took place, which threatened to drain it in a few days of all its specie; that in this state of things Mr. Gallatin, then Secretary of the Treasury, on application, caused to be deposited in it, by a check on the Branch Bank of the United States at Baltimore, fifty thousand dollars, which, with other sums from time to time deposited, were, as occasion required, drawn out, and a current account with the Treasurer, which had been kept for a year or two, was closed in March, 1802.

In March, 1803, this account was reopened by occasional deposits from the Treasury Department, and was kept running. The balances on it in favor of the Treasury were from twenty to fifty thousand dollars during the years 1803, 1804, 1805, and 1806. That the deposits in this account occasionally aided the bank in its operations and that it was so intended by the Secretary from a recollection of the transactions I can safely assert.

Very respectfully, I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

J. MASON, President.

Hon. WM. H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury.

ALEXANDRIA, February 13, 1823.

SIR: I took the liberty of stating to you, in a letter which I addressed to you a few days ago, that, as I had for a short period acted as the president of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, and, as attorney for the United States, had been directed to collect the debt due from the Franklin Bank to the Government, that my knowledge of the affairs of those institutions might possibly be serviceable to the committee of the Senate, and, if so, that I should be ready to attend them whenever they might deem it necessary. Not having been called upon, I presume that my personal attendance will not be necessary, nor can I suppose that it is necessary for me to say anything about the deposit made in the Mechanics' Bank, as that debt has been settled and the bank itself is before the Senate for a charter.

As to the Franklin Bank, I can state that the debts and effects of that bank have been transferred to the Government to secure the payment of the Government debt, and that the books and papers, with the notes and other evidences of debt, have been placed by the bank under my direction, and that I am in a course of collection of these debts for the benefit of the Government. In the list of debts due to the bank there will be a considerable loss arising from the insolvency of its debtors; and I fear that a portion of the debt due to the Government will fall upon the notes given by the stockholders in payment for their stock, commonly called stock debts.

I have no difficulty in giving it as my opinion that the debt due to the Government is ultimately secure. I never had a doubt upon this subject, and my anxiety and wish has always been, and still is, that the collections should be so made as to avoid a resort to the stock debts.

I am, with very great respect, your obedient servant,

THO. SWANN.

17TH CONGRESS.]

No. 673.

[2D SESSION.]

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 27, 1823.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Select Committee, to whom were referred the memorial from several banking institutions and insurance companies in the State of South Carolina, and the memorial from the President and Directors of the Bank of the United States, praying for certain laws to be passed in relation to the bank, and for certain alterations to be made in the charter, reported:

That the memorials claim the interposition of Congress in four particulars:

1. To change that part of the charter which provides that no director except the president shall be eligible for more than three years in four.
2. To provide by law for the punishment of persons who may be convicted of practicing fraud on the bank.
3. To authorize the board to appoint one or more persons to sign notes of the smaller denominations at the parent bank.
4. To pass a law by which the notes of the bank shall only be receivable, in payments to the United States, at the bank or branch where they are made payable.

As to the first, there are many inconveniences which arise from the short duration which is allowed to a directorship; but the committee are not inclined at present to make the change prayed for.

As to the second, the committee report in favor of it to the fullest extent prayed for, and think that salutary penal laws ought immediately to be passed on the subject.

As to the third, the committee think it is reasonable, and that it ought to be granted. The almost constant manual labor of signing notes must too much exhaust the two principal officers of the bank, and, in a greater or less degree, disqualify them from a due application of their minds to the extensive, critical, and important concerns of the bank.

As to the fourth, the committee are obliged to go into some detail upon it. If the arrangement prayed for would be beneficial to the bank, and not injurious to the government nor to local banks nor to the community at large, it ought to be granted; but more especially ought it to be granted if it will not only be beneficial to the bank, but productive of public good.

Under the 14th section of the act incorporating the bank, the bills or notes of the bank originally made payable or which shall have become payable on demand are made receivable in all payments to the United States, unless otherwise directed by act of Congress.

It will be observed in the first instance that no alteration of the charter in relation to this provision is prayed for. It will also be observed that the act incorporating the bank did not consider this arrangement as unalterable; it was to undergo the test of time and experience. On the one hand,

Congress reserved the power to change this provision whenever the public good should require it; and on the other, the stockholders had every reason to expect that if this provision should distress the bank Congress would remove it if by doing so no disadvantage would accrue to the Government. The question now, after a fair and full experiment on the subject, is, whether this provision is judicious or otherwise; and we can only arrive at the truth of this inquiry by comparing the consequences of this provision with that state of things which will most probably exist if it should be removed.

The bank is to place the funds of the Government at any given point, and it is the duty of the bank, as far as possible, to preserve a sound currency in the country; the bank is not bound to pay its notes presented by the Government except where the notes are payable; but, as it is bound to transfer the funds, little time only could be gained by refusing to pay them wherever received, and that refusal, perhaps, would be attended with inconvenience to the Government, and accordingly the bank pays the notes wherever received, without reference to the places where they are payable; the result is at times embarrassing to the bank. The practical effect of the provision under consideration will be more clearly perceived by attending to the usual course of business and to the state of exchange. The exchanges between the west and Atlantic have always been against the former. The exchanges between the north and the south are, for one portion of the year, against the latter, and for another in its favor. When the exchanges are unfavorable to the south and west the notes of the southern and western branches are taken to the north to pay the balance of debt; they are equal to cash, without the expense of transfer, as they are receivable in payment of duties to the Government. To give the best view of this part of the subject, the committee will incorporate a part of the report of the committee of the bank, presented to Congress in the session of 1820.

Speaking of the branch notes, it says: "They are equal to cash, or very nearly so, in all the principal cities north of the Potomac. They are so because they are receivable in payment of duties to the Government, the portion of which payable to the north of the Potomac, in any quarter of the fiscal year of 1819, was, taking that year as an example, nearly as much as the whole circulation of the Bank of the United States at the same time, and of course kept up a steady demand for the notes of the southern and western branches. The union of this demand with the course of exchanges draws the whole of the notes of the western offices to the Atlantic, and at particular seasons of the year the greater part of the notes of the southern offices to the north. The revenue collected to the south being comparatively small, there can never be any material reflux of their notes, because they will be absorbed by the northern demand before the exchanges turn, and the balance of payments being always against the west, there is never any towards that quarter. We will now proceed to enumerate some of the evils resulting from the receipt of the notes of the bank and its branches in this manner and under these circumstances.

"1st. It greatly deranges and distresses the money market, both of the places where the notes are received and where they are payable. The bank at Philadelphia and the offices at New York and Boston did not receive less than between five and six millions of the notes of the offices south and west of them in the short period of fourteen months, exclusive of the notes of the office at Washington. These points were obliged to pay the Government the amount of these notes, and in vain sought for speedy reimbursement from the offices where they were payable. The state of the exchanges which caused this flux of their notes created an inability to reimburse the offices which had received them until the exchanges turned. The offices receiving them were of necessity obliged to curtail their business suddenly to provide the means of paying them. Accordingly, the curtailments at Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, within the same period, amounted to upwards of four and a half millions of dollars, and exhausted almost the whole of the capital placed at these points. The capital of New York and Boston, united, was at some periods less than nothing. What distress and embarrassment must have been caused by these circumstances will easily be conceived by those who have reflected on the nature and effects of the sudden withdrawal of a large portion of the active capital of a trading community.

"The evil suffered in the community where the notes were thus received and paid was not all. The offices whose notes were thus received and paid were necessarily called upon to provide the means of reimbursement, and curtailments to a corresponding amount were ordered in them, and like distress and embarrassment produced in the communities where they were located. Double the amount of the notes thus circulated was in this way withdrawn from use to provide for their payment. The aggregate curtailments in the fourteen months before alluded to (from 1st September, 1818, to 1st November, 1819) were upwards of ten and a half millions of dollars, and it is confidently believed it would not have been necessary to have reduced the discounts of the bank a single cent but for this cause. When these reductions commenced the discounts were very moderate for the capital of the bank. They did not amount to $42,000,000.

"Nor is the extent of the distress and embarrassment measured by the immediate effects of the reduction of the discounts of the bank and its branches. These reductions in their operation throw back upon the State banks a portion of their circulation and reduce their deposits, and they also are obliged to curtail their business and add to the general mass of distress.

"The uncertain liability of the bank and its branches, as each is in a certain degree liable to pay the notes of all the rest, and the perpetual alteration of the capital of each, by paying the notes of the others and having its notes paid by them, put it beyond the power of calculation to determine the extent of business which can be safely done, and leaves the bank to vascillate between the hazards of rashness and the fruitless results of a torpid prudence. To-day a branch shall have a million of capital, and in three months it may be without a cent.

"2d. It diminishes and deranges the currency of the whole country. The bank was under the necessity, to protect itself from danger and to avoid charging itself to an unlimited amount with the cost of adverse exchanges, to forbid the offices with which the exchanges were unfavorable to issue their notes. It however issued its own notes, and the offices against which the exchanges did not run issued their notes without any limit but that of the demand, yet the circulation of the bank was by this cause greatly decreased. Thus, for example, in the short space of five months, from the 1st April, 1819, to the 30th August, 1819, it was reduced from $6,045,428 to $3,838,386.

"This, however, does not show the entire extent of the abstraction from the currency which this cause produces. Let it be supposed that the circulation of the bank is four millions of dollars, and that one-half of it has been issued by offices to the south and west, and it is in use for the purposes of being remitted to the north and east. It is thereby as much taken out of the currency as if it were destroyed; and it leaves only two millions of currency furnished by the bank. But the bank will probably have four millions of specie in its vaults, and it cannot safely have less under these peculiar circumstances; this sum also is withdrawn from circulation. Thus the bank, not by its fault, but by the necessity which is imposed upon it, has withdrawn four millions of specie from the currency and has given a substitute in its notes only to the amount of two millions. In this view the currency has been diminished two millions. But even this is not the worst view of it. Let us suppose that the notes of the bank and its branches could not be converted into bills of exchange, and there is no doubt, it is presumed, that with its high credit it could easily do what many local banks have accomplished. It could circulate two dollars of its bills for every dollar it should have in its vaults. Then it is supposed to have four millions of dollars in its vaults, and could circulate eight millions of its notes, which would be equal to gold and silver. It then would have added four millions to the currency, while at present it diminishes it to the amount of two millions, making a practical difference of no less than six millions in the sound currency of the country. The view may even be extended, because the Bank of the United States could, had its capital not been deranged by this very cause, have given a greater addition to the currency with the greatest ease and safety, if a demand had existed for it, by increasing its specie. No evil can be greater than a decreasing currency. In the words of a great man, 'poverty and beggary and sloth' follow in its train.

"But this evil of a decreasing currency will not occur as a rare calamity once, perhaps, in a century, but will be renewed with every flux and reflux of the exchanges between the different portions of the country as long as the bills of the Bank of the United States are thus receivable by the Government.

"3d. It makes the necessary public burdens, in some instances, doubly oppressive. In all the States south of Virginia, and in nearly, if not all, the western States, the Government of the United States does not expend half the revenue it collects; the surplus must be remitted to other points, where it is necessarily to be expended. This draws so much of the capital of those States from them and adds it to the capital of another, New York, for example. This is not a subject of complaint, though it is certainly an evil. But when the revenue of New York is collected in the notes of the offices of the south and the west, perhaps to an equal amount, and drawn from the necessary currency of these portions of the country, the evil produced by the remittance of the surplus revenue becomes intolerable, because the means of making it have been taken away. The capital of these States is fettered by the necessary curtailments of their banks, their currency is diminished, and that state of things which is called a scarcity of money is produced, exchange rises, and when the revenue is to be remitted the means of doing it no longer exists."

As bank notes represent specie, such a relationship should be maintained between them as to enable a given amount of specie to sustain as large a paper circulation as could be instantly converted into specie; but this can never be accomplished while specie must be provided at so many different places for the payment of the same note; the uncertainty of the places where the notes will be presented for payment must at all times confound the most discreet calculation for the maintenance of a proper relation between the specie and paper circulation. To the Government it can be of no advantage, as debts must be paid to the Government where due, and its funds the bank is obliged to transfer from place to place, at the pleasure of Government.

In the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, in his report to the second session of the 16th Congress, the alteration would be beneficial to the community. It is as follows:

"Preliminary to a resort to internal taxation of any kind, the charter of the Bank of the United States ought to be amended so as to make the bills of all the offices of the bank except that at the seat of Government receivable only in the States where they are made payable and in the States and Territories where no office is established; the effect of this modification would be to make the notes of the offices of the Bank of the United States, except the office in this District, a local currency, which will enter and continue in the local circulation of the States in which they are issued. The notes thus issued will render the local circulation of the States sound and furnish to the citizens the means of discharging their contributions to the Government.

"This measure will also place the State institutions to the south and west of this city in a more eligible situation in relation to the offices of the Bank of the United States, by enabling them to adjust their accounts with these offices by the exchange of notes, instead of liquidating their balances by the payment of specie."

To the portions of the country where the balance of trade is generally unfavorable it must be injurious, as it deprives them of every benefit which the sound currency of the Bank of the United States is capable of affording to them; the bank, in such places, for its own defence, being obliged entirely to suspend the issuing of notes.

To the portions of the country where the exchange is at intervals unfavorable it is injurious, because it occasions an unprofitable and distressing fluctuation in the paper circulation of the place; for in proportion to the disappearance of branch notes must inevitably follow curtailments not only of the branch but of the local banks. The southern banks sensibly feel the effects of this vascillating and disordered state of things, and their memorial contains the following remarks on the subject: That "they are perfectly satisfied if the notes of each office of the Bank of the United States were made receivable only at such office, and thereby confined in their circulation to the State in which they were issued, and to those parts of the adjacent States more immediately connected with it in commerce, that very great benefits would result to the different banking institutions in particular and to the community in general.

"The offices would then issue their notes on precisely the same principles and in the same proportions as the State banks, and their business would be conducted, according to their several capitals, on terms of perfect reciprocity; the rates of exchange would then become more uniform and moderate by an increase of competitors in regular exchange operations. The different moneyed institutions and the community would be relieved from the exactions which they occasionally feel, and of which they are always apprehensive. Good will would exist towards an institution very capable of even now affording great advantages to the Government, and harmony would be restored between it and every part of the community."

The regulation, as it now exists, operates as a practical prohibition to issue any notes in the western States, and to a like prohibition to issue them to the south, during six months in the year; while the collection of the revenue and the convenience of the people in these quarters of the Union require them to be issued continually.

To simplify the case, let any given district be selected where there is no sound currency and where no notes of the Bank of the United States can at present be issued for the reasons already given.

If the notes when issued could only be receivable at the office issuing them, their circulation would be limited. The office, for its own benefit, must do business; the notes of solvent individuals would be discounted, and a sound paper would be put in circulation which could not leave the boundary which practice would prescribe for it. The holders of branch notes could demand silver whenever wanted for transportation, and the expense of this transfer, as in the ordinary cases of trade, would soon bring business to a safe and proper level, and some sound standard among the local banks would follow as a necessary consequence.

The same reasoning would, in part, apply to places where exchanges fluctuate. At present the branch notes are often unnaturally taken from the places at which they are wanted and carried to places where they are not wanted.

If the desired arrangement was effected the bank would be enabled to put into circulation a much larger quantity of sound paper than at present, by which the bank and the Government, being the owner of one-fifth of the stock, would be greatly benefited; and from its operation it is believed that the community at large would enjoy real advantages.

What substantial reason can be given for an adherence to this provision of the law?

In what manner does it produce any public good?

Its operation on exchange is ineffectual.

In reference to any two given places, when the balance of trade is against the one, gold and silver there will be of less value than at the other by the expense of transportation, and the exchange will always be about equal to this expense. The nature of trade will keep this balance alternating, and it may be generally against one place in a certain direction, while at the same time it is in its favor in another direction; but the design of making paper circulation for the purpose of exchange better than the specie it represents appears to be in a great degree fallacious. The bank can never equalize exchange; the expense of exchange must be borne by the debtors in the debtor part of the country, and every attempt to give a different direction to it will be baffled. It is alien to the inflexible laws of trade and cannot be realized.

Indeed, if the branch notes can be drawn directly from the office they will of course be free of the usual expense of exchange; but this rarely happens. The real debtor who uses them as exchange has generally to pay to the money dealers a premium higher than a just premium on exchange in its accustomed form.

The southern institutions and the most respectable citizens in Charleston, who are materially interested, and who have witnessed the effect produced in practice, have informed us in their memorial that the business of exchange will be improved and the exchange itself moderated.

There are exceptions which perhaps it will be proper to make.

The notes of the parent bank may be receivable at any of the branches.

The notes of the office at Washington might be receivable at the parent bank and the branches, and for the convenience of travellers the five dollar bills of the bank ought to be receivable everywhere, and all the notes of the bank and its branches may be received in the States and Territories where the bank has no establishment.

As it is no part of the charter, the law can be repealed at the pleasure of Congress, and, to guard it in the most effectual manner, let the law, for the sake of an experiment, be limited to two years; it will then require a re-enactment, which cannot be procured unless its utility shall have been proved by experience.

There are but few considerations that are more momentous than that which relates to the currency of the country; and it belongs to the Bank of the United States, as far as possible, to preserve its soundness. It is an institution that is entitled to a patient and calm hearing; its advantages to the country have been great, while its sufferings are but too well known. Errors, if any have been committed, it is hoped experience will correct; prejudices, if any existed, it is hoped have now subsided, and that reason alone will in the end prevail.

The following resolution is offered:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Bank of the United States be instructed to prepare and bring in a bill agreeable to the above report.

DIGEST OF MANUFACTURES.

(Supplementary return.—See No. 662 for return.)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 27, 1823.

Sir: I have the honor of transmitting herewith a supplementary return to the digest of the accounts of the manufacturing establishments, and their manufactures, which has been reported to Congress in pursuance of their joint resolution of 30th of March last. The imperfection of these returns has been owing to various causes, among which a principal one was the unwillingness of manufacturers themselves to give the information required for making the return. The inadequateness of the compensation allowed by the law for the performance of the service has also been a subject of complaint by many of the marshals and of their assistants.

The supplementary return now made is of omissions which occurred in making the digest under the direction of this Department, and which should have been included in the printed digest. A statement is added of the several counties and districts from which no returns have been received.

I am, with great respect, sir, your very humble and obedient servant,

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

JESSAMINE.—There are reported to be in this county 33 flour mills and 45 distilleries; the returns do not afford more particular information.

MADISON.—From the defective state of the returns for this county, no result could be had. There appear, however, to be no manufactures but those of the handcraft kind.

MONROE.—The very imperfect state of the returns for this county will not admit of any satisfactory report.

MAINE.

The counties of Penobscot and Somerset appear to be omitted in the returns.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

There do not appear to have been any returns from the county of Coos.

MASSACHUSETTS.

A digest from the returns in relation to the manufacturing establishments, &c., in the counties of Bristol and Franklin is now reported, in consequence of the entire omission of these counties in the digest of the manufacturing establishments, &c., in this State.

RHODE ISLAND AND CONNECTICUT.

All the counties of these States appear to be included in the digest as presented to Congress.

VERMONT.

The marshal, in his returns, appears to have omitted the counties of Essex, Orleans, and Grand Isle, in this State.

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauque, Franklin, Hamilton, and St. Lawrence counties are not included in the marshal's returns for this district.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

The fourth and eighth wards of the city of New York are not included in the marshal's returns.

NEW JERSEY.

No returns for the county of Cape May.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

No returns appear to have been received from the marshal for the counties of Potter, McKean, and Clarefield.

EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

In the digest for this district the manufactures for the county of Bucks (the entire capital employed being about $25,000) appear, from an error in preparing it at this office, to have been added up with those of the county of Berks.

Dauphin, Pike, Susquehanna, Bedford, Tioga, and Perry counties are altogether omitted in the marshal's returns.

MARYLAND.

No returns for the counties of Caroline, Calvert, Charles, Dorchester, Kent, Queen Ann, and Talbot.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

No returns for the county of Alexandria.

EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

A digest in relation to Mecklenburg county, omitted in the digest of the manufactures of this district, is now submitted to Congress.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

No returns from the counties of Brooke, Cabell, and Russell.

The counties of Mason and Scott are without manufactures, as the marshal reports.

NORTH CAROLINA.

No returns as to the counties of Anson, Bladen, Bertie, Camden, Currituck, Carteret, Columbus, Chatham, Craven, Cabarrus, Caswell, Duplin, Franklin, Granville, Gates, Green, Hyde, Ireland, Jones, Johnson, Lenoir, Mecklenburg, Martin, Moore, Montgomery, Northampton, Nash, Pitt, Perquimans, Rockingham, Richmond, Randolph, Roberson, Samson, Tyrrel, Wilkes, Wake, Wayne.

A digest made from the returns in relation to the counties of Haywood, Onslow, Wake, Orange, and Person, partially omitted in the general one of this district, is herewith reported.

GEORGIA.

No returns appear to have been received concerning the counties of Camden, Tatnall, Scriven, Bullock, Eppingham, Glynn, Wilkinson, Montgomery, Walton, Wayne, Habersham, McIntosh, Putnam, Appling, Irwin, Emanuel, Greene, Madison, Hancock, Savannah, Rabun.

ALABAMA.

Of the twenty-two counties of Alabama, returns have been received for those of Monroe, Shelby, and Lawrence only.

MISSISSIPPI.

No returns appear to have been received from this district.

EAST TENNESSEE.

No returns appear to have been received from the county of McMinn.

KENTUCKY.

No returns appear to have been made as to the counties of Bracken, Breckenridge, Caldwell, Campbell, Casey, Christian, Clarke, Cumberland, Floyd, Grant, Harlan, Hopkins, Knox, Mason, Mecklenburg, Nicholas, Owen, Pendleton, Pulaski, Rockcastle, Todd, Trig, Union, Warren, Washington, Whitley.

A digest is added of the manufactures of those which were not comprehended in the first.

OHIO.

No returns appear to have been received for the counties of Clinton, Fayette, and Shelby.

INDIANA.

Of the thirty-five counties of this district, returns have been received in relation to the twelve, only, in the digest.

ILLINOIS.

Of the nineteen counties of this district, returns appear only for those stated in the digest.

MISSOURI.

Of the fourteen counties of this district, no returns but for the eight stated in the digest.

ARKANSAS.

Returns for three counties only of seven.

LOUISIANA.

No returns but for those accounted for in the digest.

17TH CONGRESS.]

LUND WASHINGTON, Clerk.

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, February 26, 1823.

17TH CONGRESS.]

No. 677.

[2D SESSION.]

PUBLIC DEPOSITS IN BANKS AND TRANSFERS AND UNAVAILABLE FUNDS IN THE TREASURY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 1, 1823.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 27, 1823.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 8th of May, 1822, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and lay before the House, "as early in the next session as may be practicable, a statement showing the amount of money which appears to have stood to the credit of the United States, or its Treasurer, in every bank in which the public money has been deposited, at the end of each quarter, since the first day of January, 1817, distinguishing between special and general deposits; a particular and minute account of each transfer of the public money from one bank to another which has been made within the aforesaid period, and the reasons and motives for making the same; a detailed account of the special deposits that have been made in any of the banks; the time when made; the description of the notes so deposited and the reason for making the same; together with any contract or contracts under which those deposits were made; the precise amount and an exact description of the unavailable funds of the Treasury; what part thereof was unavailable at the time of deposit; how long any part thereof remained on deposit before it became unavailable, and why it became so; showing the respective accounts and relations of the United States with each bank, together with all correspondence in possession of the Department with each of these banks in relation to any of the foregoing subjects," I have the honor to submit statements, prepared in obedience to the resolution, numbered from one to nine, inclusive.

No. 1 embraces "the amount of money which appears to have stood to the credit of the United States, or its Treasurer, in every bank in which the public money has been deposited, at the end of each quarter, since the 1st day of January, 1817, distinguishing between special and general deposits."

No. 2 contains "a particular and minute account of each transfer of the public money from one bank to another which has been made within the aforesaid period."

No. 3 contains "a detailed account of the special deposits that have been made in any of the banks, and the time when made."

No. 4 contains the precise amount and as exact a description of the unavailable funds of the Treasury as it is practicable to furnish.

No. 5 contains a statement of all the money at any time in the possession of the Bank of the United States which was considered by the bank as special deposit.

No. 6 contains an account of the disposition made of the special deposit transferred from the Bank of the United States to the Bank of Columbia, and of its present situation.

From No. 1 it appears that on the 1st day of January, 1817, the special deposit in the Treasury amounted to $3,031,459 36; and from No. 5 it appears that the whole amount of special deposits which came into the possession of the Bank of the United States was $3,278,710 98; of which sum, $2,665,409 61 were assumed by the bank and accounted for in specie.

It is impracticable to furnish a description of the notes which then constituted the special deposit, as the credits entered upon the books of the bank only show the amount credited, and not the description of the notes deposited.

Transfers of the public money from one bank to another have generally been exclusively made with a view to facilitate the public expenditure. The only exceptions to this rule which have occurred are, 1st. The sum of $30,000, special deposit, transferred from the Bank of Muskingum to the Belmont Bank of St. Clairsville, upon conditions set forth in my letter of the 3d March, 1817. This transaction was founded upon the belief that the interest of the Treasury would be subserved, as in fact it was; the Belmont Bank having paid the amount to the Bank of the United States in the first quarter of 1818. 2d. A deposit of $75,000, in March, 1817, in the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown; the following deposits made in the 1st, 2d, and 3d quarters of 1819 in certain banks in the District of Columbia, viz: in the Union Bank of Alexandria, $30,000; in the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, $57,000; in the Franklin Bank of Alexandria, $48,000; in the Bank of Washington, $32,000; in the Patriotic Bank, $10,000; in the Central Bank of Georgetown and Washington, $40,000; in the Union Bank of Georgetown, $25,000; and in the Bank of Columbia, $45,000; all of which deposits appear in statements Nos. 1 and 2. These deposits were made as well with a view to transfer funds from places where they were not required to this District, where the expenditures always greatly exceed the revenue, as to aid the banks, which were then much pressed by demands upon them for specie from the eastward, and from the return of their notes from the western parts of Virginia, where banks chartered by that State had just gone into operation, or were collecting specie preparatory to that event. The reasons upon which these deposits, with the exception of the first, were made, are more fully explained in a report made to Congress on the 10th day of December, 1817, and in a report to the Senate of the United States on the 25th instant, copies of which are herewith communicated.

Deposits made in bank, other than those effected by transfers from one bank to another, are of the following descriptions: 1st. Those made by the revenue officers and Receivers of the Land Offices, in conformity with the general instructions of the Department. 2d. By disbursing officers having remittances to make to different places. In all such cases, upon making a deposit in bank to the credit of the Treasurer, a draft is furnished upon a bank of deposit in the place to which the remittance is to be made, or upon one most convenient to it. 3d. By officers or individuals indebted to the Government. 4th. By individuals who are desirous of remitting small sums of money to places where there is public money on deposit. In all cases of this kind the interest of the Treasury is consulted by giving drafts only upon places whence it is necessary to transfer a portion of the public funds.

No contracts have been made with banks except those which were communicated to the House of Representatives on the 14th day of February, 1822, and which have been printed among the public documents, unless the transaction with the Belmont Bank of St. Clairsville is considered a contract. Copies of the correspondence connected with it are transmitted.

Before I left the city in July last, for the benefit of my health, I addressed a letter to the President of the Bank of the United States, requesting a statement of the special deposit which had been in the possession of the bank, and, upon my departure, left directions that the statements should be prepared and the correspondence copied, in order that the report might be made as early as practicable; but the clerk to whom the directions were given having formed a mistaken idea of the extent of the call for the correspondence with the banks, copies were not prepared, and it has been found impracticable to prepare them so as to be communicated with this report. They are extremely voluminous, my letters to the banks alone filling between five and six hundred folio pages, and will require much time and labor; but they shall be prepared and transmitted to the House at the commencement of the next session of Congress. The statements which are submitted have been prepared with great labor, and, although every exertion has been made, they were not completed until the 19th instant.

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

W. H. CRAWFORD.

Hon. P. P. BARBOUR, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

No. 4.

Statement of the "special deposit" at the credit of the Treasurer of the United States.

Debtor banks.	Amount.	Remarks.
Elkton Bank of Maryland .....	$19,865 25	With the exceptions hereafter noted, it is believed that all these sums were received by the banks in which they were deposited, or by the public officers who made the deposits, before the general resumption of specie payments in 1817. The exceptions are $291 in the notes of the Bank of Muskingum, and $350 in notes of the Farmers, Mechanics, and Manufacturers' Bank of Chillicothe, which were received by the Bank of Missouri, after the resumption of specie payments in Ohio, in 1819. These sums, amounting together to $291,803 33, are all that remain to be collected of the $3,031,459 36 which (as appears by the Treasurer's statement, prepared under the resolution of the House of * §291 of this amount was received from the Bank of Missouri, in January, 1820, it having been received by that bank, on account of the Treasury, during the payment of specie by the Bank of Muskingum.

† $350 of this amount was received from the same bank, at the same time, under the same circumstances.

‡ $1,822 of this amount was included in the special deposit transferred from the Bank of the United States to the Bank of Columbia.

§ $200 of this amount was also included in the special deposit transferred from the Bank of the United States.

|| $64,613 58 of this amount was received by this bank as special deposit in December, 1817, and January, 1818, while it was employed by the Bank of the United States on behalf of the Treasury, and forms part of the special deposit which passed through the Bank of the United States. In September, 1819, it was transferred to the Bank of Missouri, and assumed as cash.

No. 5, (A.)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 22, 1822.

SIR: In order to facilitate the collection of information necessary to enable me to comply with a resolution of the House of Representatives, I will thank you to cause to be transmitted to me a statement of the special deposit which was at the credit of the Treasurer in the Bank of the United States and its offices, from the commencement of the special deposit account to the time when that deposit was transferred to the Bank of Columbia.

The words of that part of the resolution for which this information is wanted, are these: "A detailed account of the special deposits that have been made in any of the banks, the time when made, the description of notes so deposited, and the reason for making the same," and you will be pleased to direct that all the facts called for by the resolution may be stated, as far as they may be within the knowledge of the bank.

The statement should include not only those deposits that were special at the time they were made, but those that became unavailable subsequently, the resolution calling further for "the precise amount and an exact description of the unavailable funds of the Treasury, what part thereof was unavailable at the time of deposit, how long any part thereof remained on deposit before it became unavailable, and why it became so."

I remain, with respect, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

LANGDON CHEVES, Esq., President of the Bank United States.

No. 5, (B.)

SIR: Your letter of the 22d of June last, which I had the honor to acknowledge on the 1st of July last, has since been the subject of attentive consideration, and I have now the honor to inclose you a statement of "the special deposits received on account of the Treasurer of the United States at the Bank of the United States, a copy of which was furnished to the committee of Congress, December 28, 1818." This statement contains all the information within the knowledge of the bank.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

L. CHEVES, President.

HON. WM. H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury, Washington.

No. 6, (A.)

BANK OF COLUMBIA, February 19, 1823.

SIR: Agreeably to your request I now hand you a statement showing the state of the special deposit at the credit of the Treasurer in this bank, from the commencement of the account to the present time.

Statement A contains the whole of the sums deposited in this bank, amounting to $545,991 37; of which there has been assumed by this bank, as cash, $238,361 87; leaving a special balance of $176,763 99.

The particulars of this balance are stated in B and C, the former showing the several evidences of debt which have been transmitted to the Treasury for the purpose of bringing suit, amounting to $123,102 59, and the latter showing those which still remain with the bank for collection, amounting to $53,661 40.

Measures are in progress for making these collections, which will be reported to you hereafter. Of the several small sums part consists of the notes of solvent banks, but owing to the distance they have not been collected. They shall be called upon without further delay.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

D. KURTZ, *Cashier.*HON. WM. H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury, Washington.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 3, 1817.

SIR: The Treasurer of the United States has been directed to draw on the special deposit in the Bank of Muskingum for thirty thousand dollars, in favor of the President of the Belmont Bank of St. Clairsville, which you will pay upon his depositing with you, for the use of the United States, bank stock corresponding substantially with the annexed statement and amounting in the whole to thirty thousand dollars, accompanied with a power of attorney authorizing the sale of the same, for the use of the United States, upon failure to pay the said sum on the first day of July next, or whenever thereafter required by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, or other person duly authorized for that purpose, in gold or silver, or in the paper of banks which pay their bills on demand in specie.

I am, &c.,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

D. MARPLE, Esq.,
Cashier of the Bank of Muskingum.

No. 7, (B.)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 14, 1818.

SIR: Having instructed the Treasurer of the United States to transfer, by draft, to the Bank of the United States, at the expiration of sixty days, the sum of thirty thousand dollars due by the Belmont Bank of St. Clairsville, you are requested, on evidence being produced to you that the same has been paid, to deliver up to the President of the Belmont Bank the securities deposited with you by him for the payment of the said sum.

I am, &c.,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

D. MARPLE, Esq.,
Cashier of the Bank of Muskingum.

No. 7, (C.)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 14, 1818.

SIR: I have instructed the Treasurer of the United States to draw on the Belmont Bank of St. Clairsville, at the expiration of sixty days, in favor of the Bank of the United States, for the thirty thousand dollars due by the Belmont Bank to the United States; and I have requested the cashier of the Bank of Muskingum, on your producing to him evidence that the same is paid, to deliver up to you the securities which you deposited with him for the payment of that debt.

The length of time which I have suffered this money to remain in the Belmont Bank, while it presents evidence of my desire to afford all the accommodation consistent with my duty, will, I trust, be an inducement with the bank for the prompt and satisfactory discharge of the draft.

I am, &c.,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

J. CALDWELL, Esq.,
President of the Belmont Bank of St. Clairsville.

No. 8.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 10, 1817.

SIR: By the sixteenth section of the charter of the Bank of the United States, the deposits of the public money are required to be made in the bank and its offices, in the places where they may be established, unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall at any time otherwise order and direct; in which case, the reasons of such order and direction shall be laid before Congress, if in session, and if not in session, immediately after the commencement of the next session.

The bank itself and its offices established at Boston, New York, Baltimore, and this city, commenced their operations at different periods between the 1st day of January, 1817, and the 4th day of March ensuing.

If the provisions of the section already stated did not impose the obligation to transfer to the Bank of the United States, and to its offices, the public deposits which had previously been made in the State and local banks, no deposit, during this interval, was made which required the reasons upon which it was directed to be communicated to Congress.

Without inquiring in this place whether, under the charter, the Bank of the United States had a right to such a transfer, I feel it my duty to state that previous to the 1st day of January, 1817, a proposition had been submitted by this Department to the State and other local banks, for the purpose of inducing them to resume specie payments on the 20th day of February following. As the public money deposited in them was intimately connected with the proposition, it was deemed inexpedient to transfer those balances to the Bank of the United States until the result of the proposition was known.

Nearly contemporaneous with this event an arrangement was made between the Bank of the United States and the State banks in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Richmond, by which the deposits were to be transferred from the State banks embraced by the arrangement to the Bank of the United States, and to its offices, on the 20th day of February in that year. This arrangement was sanctioned by the Treasury Department, and was substantially executed by the parties.

As the conditions imposed by this arrangement upon the Bank of the United States were not extended to any other State or local banks than those which were parties to it, in order to induce the banks in this District to resume specie payments, simultaneously with the banks already enumerated, it became necessary for the Treasury Department to give them assurances of support during the first months succeeding such resumption.

In consequence of this assurance a considerable portion of the deposits in the banks of Washington and Georgetown were permitted to remain until the 1st day of July last. On the 15th day of March, of the same year, a deposit of $75,000 was made in the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown, which had not previously been one of the depositories of the public money; which sum was transferred to the Bank of the United States at the time that the deposits which had been previously made in the banks of Washington and Georgetown were transferred.

In the States south of this place the deposits were transferred from the State banks to the offices of the Bank of the United States at the several periods of their commencing their operations.

Shortly after the office at Boston went into operation, a considerable portion of the public money deposited in the State Bank was transferred and paid in specie by that bank. Upon the urgent representations of the State Bank, the remainder was assigned for the discharge of the Treasury notes which had been made payable at that place. Such portion of the sum set apart for that object as remained unexpended on the first day of July was directed to be paid to the office established at Boston.

Previous to the close of the year 1816 a considerable sum had been deposited in the Bank of Pennsylvania, to the credit of the Commissioner of Loans of the State of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of discharging the Treasury notes which had been made payable at Philadelphia. When the duties of Commissioner of Loans were transferred to the Bank of the United States, on the first day of July last, a considerable balance of that amount remained unexpended.

It was, however, represented by the Bank of Pennsylvania that Treasury notes were daily presented to it for payment, and that a transfer of the funds assigned to that object would be inconvenient to the holders. It was thereupon determined to continue to employ that bank as the agent of the Treasury for discharging the outstanding Treasury notes, demandable at Philadelphia, until the first day of October last, when the unexpended balance was directed to be transferred to the Bank of the United States.

By the regulations of the Bank of the United States, its offices were not permitted to receive bills of any State or local banks, except those established in the places where they were respectively tendered in payment. Under this regulation the bills presented for deposit by the Collector of the District of Columbia, and by several of those of the internal revenue of the States of Virginia and Maryland, to the office at this place, were refused.

The frequent repayments by officers of the late Army, in the final settlements of their accounts at the Treasury, presented a difficulty of the same nature. In order to avoid this inconvenience of special deposits in this city, an arrangement was made with the Bank of the Metropolis, which has received all sums refused by that office in obedience to those regulations, and credited the Treasurer of the United States with the amount in specie. The sums so paid remain still principally with the bank. Payments to some extent were, also, on the same principle, made into the Bank of Pennsylvania for some months after the Bank of the United States was in operation, but the sums so paid have been since transferred to the Bank of the United States.

No other cases have occurred during the recess of Congress which are necessary to be presented in this communication.

In declining to transfer the balances which remained in the banks of this District at the time that the office in this city commenced business, and in the cases stated to have occurred in Philadelphia and in Boston, I was influenced by a consideration of the pressure felt by the State and local banks during several months subsequent to the resumption of specie payments, and of the services rendered to the Government by those banks during the period they were used as places of public deposit by the Treasury. An immediate transfer of the public money deposited in them would probably have produced a pressure upon the debtors of those banks which might have inflicted upon them evils greatly beyond the benefit which would have resulted from the measure to the Bank of the United States.

In making the transfers from the State banks, the special deposits of which they were, in some instances, principally composed, presented considerable embarrassment. The Bank of the United States tendered its services for the purpose of exchanging for specie, or bills of the banks in the commercial cities, those deposits which were principally confined to the interior of the middle and western States. This offer was accepted, and, although great exertions were made by the bank to effect that object, much remains to be done. Indeed, the amount of special deposits is now nearly as large as when the agency of the bank was accepted. This has arisen from the immense number of local banks scattered over the interior of the States of Pennsylvania and Ohio, most of which, ostensibly, pay their bills in specie. The paper, however, of these banks is not received, in most cases, by each other as specie; and the experience which the Bank of the United States, in the execution of its agency, has acquired of the character and standing of many of them, has induced it generally to refuse the bills of those banks. In order to put an end to an evil which seems rather to increase than diminish, general instructions have been given to the collectors of the internal revenue to receive the bills of no bank which will not be credited as specie in the Bank of the United States, its offices, and State banks employed as places of deposit, where they are respectively required to make their deposits. As soon as the offices established at Louisville, Chillicothe, and Pittsburg, have gone into operation, and shall have thrown into circulation a reasonable amount of their bills, they will be made the sole depositories of the public moneys arising from the sales of lands in the States of Ohio and Indiana, and instructions similar to those already given to the Collectors will be given to the Receivers of public money in those States.

It is only after this arrangement shall be effected that the Bank of the United States will enjoy, in their just extent, the advantages intended to be secured to it by the charter. Under the limited enjoyment of those advantages which general circumstances seemed to impose, the conduct of the bank is entitled to high commendation. The Directors have, in no instance, urged their claim to an earlier transfer of the public money which remained in the possession of the State or local banks. There is much reason, also, to believe that in its intercourse with the State banks, and in the execution of the agency confided to it by this Department, a spirit of justice and liberality has been constantly manifested.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

W. H. CRAWFORD.

The Hon. the PRESIDENT of the Senate; and
The Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

No. 9.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 25, 1823.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury "to inform the Senate if any loans of money to any amount, and for what purpose, have been made from the Treasury to any individuals or banking institutions since the 3d day of March, 1789, and whether such loans so made have been repaid or in any manner adequately secured, so that the Government will ultimately be satisfactorily reimbursed," I have the honor to submit copies of letters from the Secretary of the Treasury, from the 19th of March, 1792, to the 17th of July, 1819, inclusive, to the officers of the Bank of the United States, and of its Branches, and to the officers of certain State banks, and to other officers and individuals, which contain the information required by the resolution, as far as it can be collected from the correspondence of the Department.

By reference to the papers numbered from one to eleven, inclusive, it is apparent that loans in fact, though not in terms, were offered by the Treasury Department to the Bank of the United States and to the State banks to which they were directed.

By the first of these letters, dated the 19th of March, 1792, the Secretary of the Treasury informed the President of the Bank of the United States that it had been represented to him that an unusually large sum of money had and would become due to the United States, from importers in the district of Philadelphia, in the month of March, 1792, and reminded him that, in consequence of standing circular instructions, the Collector of the district would receive from the merchants, as cash, the post notes of the Bank of the United States, if not issued for a longer period of payment than thirty days, and that he would judge how far it might be convenient to make operations payable in such notes, which might not be convenient if payable immediately in specie or cash notes. On the 29th of the same month a letter was addressed by the same officer to the President of the Bank of Maryland, stating that it had been intimated to him that considerable sums of duties had become due, or were to fall due, in Baltimore, in the course of the month, and that it was at all times his wish to give to the merchants as much facility as the public business would admit; that he had, therefore, determined, if he should incline to make discounts for the importers, to enable them to pay the duties due, on or before the 15th of April thereafter, he would leave a sum of money equal thereto in his hands for sixty days after the dates of the notes.

By his letters of the 10th of April, 1792, the Presidents of the Bank of the United States and of the Bank of Maryland were informed that circumstances within his knowledge induced him to state that the operation suggested in his letter of the 29th of March continued to be desirable in relation to those who have payments to make at the custom-house in the course of that month. By his letter of the 8th of December, 1792, the President of the Bank of the United States was informed that the Secretary had no objection that notes in which the Government was interested should be renewed for thirty days, in all cases where it could be done with perfect safety to the public. By the letter of the Secretary of the 5th of February, 1793, the President of the office of the Bank of the United States at New York was informed that an arrangement had been made with the Bank of the United States, for the accommodation of the merchants of Philadelphia whose bonds for duties were to become payable between that date and the last day of the ensuing month, by which the bank would discount the notes of such merchants as were indebted to the custom-house, for thirty days, for the respective sums that should become payable; the bank to receive those notes from the Collector as cash, to be drawn for only by the Collector. The President of the office was informed that, if a similar arrangement appeared to him to be requisite to the accommodation of the merchants of New York, that he would not draw for the sums that had relation to the transaction until about the middle of May thereafter. On the 5th of March, 1793, a similar letter was addressed to the Presidents of the Offices of Discount and Deposit at Boston and Providence. His letters of the 5th of April, 1793, and the 16th of February, 1797, marked 10, 11, have the same object in view: that is to say, they offer, as inducements to the banks to discount the notes of persons indebted upon duty bonds, that the amount of such bonds shall not be drawn from the banks until the notes discounted were payable, or that post notes shall be receivable by the Collector in discharge of such bonds.

The latter of these letters relates to the case of an individual in whose favor the Secretary of the Treasury submits to the consideration of the bank, whether an accommodation could not be granted to him, on condition that the sum discounted should be paid in a post note to be deposited with the Collector of the Customs. This representation was made in consequence of the individual's being unable to obtain a credit at the custom-house on a cargo of coffee, because he had duty bonds to a considerable amount then due. It appears, from the letter of the 23d of February, 1793, already referred to, that arrangements of that nature were made verbally with the bank, as the arrangement referred to in that letter is not of record in the office.

The correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the banks, generally, does not show upon what account the deposits in those banks were made. The letters of the Secretary to the Treasurer are still more general, simply directing the deposit.

The accounts of the Treasurer with the banks, anterior to the last quarter of the year 1811, have not been preserved; no inference, therefore, can be drawn from the state of the accounts as to the object or purpose for which any deposit was made previously to that date. From the accounts with the banks from that period it appears that many deposits were made by transferring public money from one bank to another, when the amount in the bank to which the transfer was made was much more than sufficient to meet the drafts drawn upon it. Although the inferences which may be drawn from the state of the accounts between the Treasurer and a bank in which deposits are made, apparently not required for the public expenditure, cannot be considered as conclusive evidence that such deposits were made to sustain the bank against a run or press upon it, or to aid it in its operations, yet the presumption is sufficiently strong to make it proper to present a few of those cases. On the 6th of March, 1812, a draft was drawn for $50,000, in favor of the Mechanics' Bank of New York, upon the State Bank at Charleston, and on the 7th of May for $80,000. On the 2d of March there was on deposit in the former bank $432,000, which was not reduced below $319,000 during the remainder of the month; and on the 4th of May the deposit was $133,000, which sum was not diminished during the month; and at the end of the quarter it had increased to $224,000. There were drawn and deposited in the Bank of Pennsylvania the following drafts, viz: 12th March, 1812, upon the Union Bank of Boston, $50,000; 6th July, upon the State Bank of Boston, $49,000; in October of the same year, upon the Bank of Baltimore, $200,000; and upon the Manhattan Company, $100,000. At the date of the first draft, there was standing to the credit of the Treasurer, on the books of the bank, $133,000, which was not diminished during the month; and at its close amounted to $294,000. At the date of the second, the deposit amounted to $164,000, which continued increasing; and amounted on the 17th August to $403,000; and at the end of the quarter to $636,000. On the 6th of October, the date of the first draft in that month, it amounted $465,000, and at the close of the month to $593,000. The records of the office afford no explanation of the reasons which induced the Secretary of the Treasury to make these transfers, and many others of a similar nature were made from time to time. But on the 4th of March, 1814, the Cashier of the Bank of Pennsylvania, by letter of that date, informed the Secretary of the Treasury that the great and unprecedented demands upon that institution for specie, principally from the eastward, induced him to request that, if consistent with the interests of the Government, he would give him drafts, either on New York or Boston, to an amount that would counteract those demands, stating that the amount of specie in the vaults but little exceeded $200,000, and that the demands of the bank upon those to the southward of Philadelphia, if called for, might put them to serious inconvenience. Upon this representation a draft was, on the 8th of the month, drawn by the Treasurer, in favor of the bank, for $150,000, upon the Bank of New York. Upon the 28th of February preceding this transaction, there was in the bank a deposit of $755,000, and on the 31st March $799,000. By reference to the letter of the President of the Bank of Columbia, which accompanies this report, marked No. 76, it appears that on the 29th of October, 1801, the Secretary of the Treasury made a deposit in that bank of $50,000, to enable it to sustain itself against a run which was then making upon it, and that other sums were subsequently deposited in that bank by the Department, to aid it in its operations. In the letter of the acting Secretary of the Treasury, of the 27th May, 1813, to Stephen Girard, he is informed that "the arrangement made by Mr. Gallatin, relative to the deposit of the public moneys drawn from your bank in favor of the public agents, was to shield you against the attacks of the incorporated banks, to whom such moneys would otherwise have been transferred; and the magnitude of your contract might thus have been rendered highly prejudicial to your institution. It is the particular province, and it has been the practice, of the Department of the Treasury of the United States to direct the moneyed operations of the public to the preservation of credit, by maintaining the equilibrium between the moneyed institutions of the country; and as it has protected your institution by the arrangement alluded to, so it will guard those institutions against any undue pressure which the public funds in your vaults may enable you to direct against them. I am informed that you have made some very heavy and unnecessary drafts of specie from several banks, particularly from the Pennsylvania and Farmers and Mechanics' Banks, with indications of a disposition to persevere, which has excited considerable apprehension. I therefore deem it necessary to inform you that a continuance of that system will induce the prompt application of a specific remedy."

From my personal intercourse with Mr. Gallatin, I know he entertained the sentiments communicated in this letter, and I presume they have been entertained by all his predecessors and successors in office, and acted upon whenever cases occurred which rendered it necessary.

When I entered upon the duties of Secretary of the Treasury, on the 22d October, 1816, the banks in all the States, except those in Massachusetts, had suspended specie payments. My immediate predecessor in office had made an ineffectual attempt in the course of that year to induce them to commence specie payments, by discharging in specie all notes not exceeding five dollars. By the charter of the Bank of the United States it was to go into operation on the 1st of January, 1817. It was, after mature deliberation, determined that another effort should be made by the Treasury Department to induce the State banks to aid the Bank of the United States in restoring the currency to a sound state. There was then in the Treasury more than eleven millions of dollars, deposited in the State banks, and the estimate of receipts for the year 1817 considerably exceeded that of the expenditure for the year. It was, therefore, proposed by the Department that no part of the sums then in the State banks should be drawn from them before the 1st of July, unless the receipts should not be equal to the expenditure, an event which there was no reason to apprehend, and that after that time it should be gradually drawn, as the public service should require; but in no case were drafts to be drawn in favor of the Bank of the United States, unless it should become necessary to protect it against the State banks. This advantageous proposition was declined without hesitation. The banks in the principal Atlantic cities, however, entered into an arrangement with the Bank of the United States, by which they engaged to resume specie payments, and in the course of the year 1817 the resumption, with but few exceptions, became general throughout the Union. Towards the close of the year 1818 some of the banks in the western States stopped payment. The sudden fall in the price of all domestic articles, which occurred about the same period, created a general pressure upon the banks. In the winter and spring of 1819 the Bank of the United States was, in the opinion of the enlightened officer who presided over its direction, in a great degree indebted for the preservation of its credit to the forbearance of its creditors, and to the support which it received from the Treasury Department. Such were my impressions of its critical state, that I felt it my duty to accept propositions made by the Board of Directors which, under other circumstances, would have been declined.

During this general pressure the banks in this District, which, upon the establishment of the Office of Discount and Deposit in the city, had not taken advantage of that event to reduce their circulations by contracting their discounts, were pressed by continual and increasing demands for specie from the eastward and by the return of their notes upon them from the western parts of Virginia, where certain banks chartered by that State had commenced, or were preparing to commence, business. Pressed thus on both sides, their means of meeting the demands made upon them and of preserving their credit were believed to be insufficient. In this critical situation several of them applied personally, by their Directors, to the Department to ascertain whether, in case of great emergency, they would receive any support. Considering the crisis as highly important to the nation, and believing that a failure of one or more of those banks would produce a general run upon all, of a different nature from that which was then pressing upon them, assurances were given that a reasonable support might be relied upon.

In consequence of this assurance deposits were, from time to time, made in the Union Bank of Alexandria, the Mechanics' Bank, and the Franklin Bank, of the same place; in the Union and Central Banks of Georgetown; in the Bank of Washington, and in the Patriotic Bank. All these sums have been repaid, except the sum of $48,000, deposited in the Franklin Bank of Alexandria. The whole of the funds of that bank have been assigned to the United States, and legal measures have been adopted by the Attorney of the United States for the recovery of the amount from the debtors of the bank. The letter of that officer, which is herewith communicated, shows that there is no danger of any loss to the United States. Copies of the letters to the Treasurer, directing the deposits to be made in that bank to his credit, are also communicated. These deposits were made upon the representations of General Thompson Mason, then Collector of the district of Alexandria, and of John T. Ricketts, esq., who were both men of great respectability and considerable stockholders in the bank. W. T. Swann, esq., a man of the fairest character and of considerable property, was then the President of the bank. No doubt was entertained of the integrity with which the bank was administered, and of its capacity, if aided for a short time, of preserving its credit and of meeting the drafts of the Treasurer for the amount deposited by him to his credit. This anticipation, it is believed, would have been realized, had not the notes of the bank been so successfully counterfeited as to have imposed upon its officers to a considerable amount. The same misfortune befell the Central Bank of Georgetown. In the month of May, of the same year, when the Cashier of the Bank of Columbia was about to set out on his journey through the interior of the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Ohio, for the purpose of demanding payment of the special deposit which had been transferred to that bank, he represented to the Department that he should be at very considerable expense, and that during his absence there might be a press made upon the bank, and therefore requested that a deposit of $45,000 might be made in the bank to the credit of the Treasurer. As no charge was to be made for the expense and risk which was incurred in carrying a large amount of bank notes through the country the request was considered reasonable, and the deposit was accordingly made. This bank has never ceased to pay its notes in specie, on demand.

These are all the transactions with banks which are believed to be within the intent or terms of the resolution, except certain transactions with the banks of this District, in the early part of the year 1817, which were specifically reported to the two Houses of Congress on the 10th of December, 1817, and printed among the public documents of that session. In that report it is stated that a deposit of $75,000 had been made in the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown to sustain it in its operations immediately after resuming specie payments. The principle and practice of the Treasury in sustaining the credit of banks disposed to act correctly was, in this communication, frankly disclosed to Congress, when not the slightest symptom of dissatisfaction was manifested, or the right or propriety of the practice called directly or indirectly in question.

It is presumed that it has not been the practice of the Department to lend the public money to individuals. By reference to letters, numbered from 12 to 16, inclusive, it will be found that public money has been advanced to individuals, which, however, have that appearance; but it is possible that those transactions may admit of explanations which may take from them that character. From Nos. 14 and 15 it appears that considerable sums were, in 1798, advanced to Lane & Salter, and others, to enable them to erect the necessary machinery for making cannon, when no contract for that object had been made. The only case which has occurred since I took charge of the Treasury Department which can have given rise to that part of the resolution, is one connected with the public money deposited by the Receiver at Cincinnati in the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank of that place.

That bank, a short time after the date of its agreement with the Department, in 1819, stopped payment, and has, when called upon, offered no explanations nor given any reply to the several letters addressed to it by the Department. When, in the course of that year, Mr. Whann visited Cincinnati, as the Agent of the Treasury, to convert the special deposit into current notes or specie, or to obtain acknowledgments that should bear interest, he reported that all the banks upon which he called, with the exception of the Farmers and Mechanics', had shown a disposition to act fairly—had exposed to him the state of their affairs, and given him such explanations as were satisfactory; but that the officers of that bank had refused to expose the state of its affairs or give explanations of any kind. It also refused to give any receipt or acknowledgment of the amount which had been deposited in it. No return has yet been made by the bank to the Treasurer, or to this office, stating the amount in its possession. These circumstances had produced a most unfavorable impression, not only as to the integrity with which the bank was directed, but also as to its solvency. In the spring of 1820, Colonel Johnson, of the Senate, as the agent of his brother, applied to the Department to ascertain whether, upon his transferring notes to the United States upon persons in good credit in this place, a credit would be given to his brother for the amount with the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank. Believing, as I did, from the circumstances which have been stated, that the debt due by the bank was not safe, and that notes upon solvent persons in this place afforded a more certain prospect of receiving payment than from the bank, the offer was accepted, and notes to the amount of $30,583 24, a considerable proportion of which were secured by mortgage, were deposited in the branch of the United States Bank in this place, and a credit for the amount given to Colonel James Johnson on the bank at Cincinnati. The transaction, however, was never considered as a loan of money. It was, in fact, changing one debt for another, and receiving, as it was then, and still is believed, a better security for it than what was given in exchange. Subsequent reflection, however, upon the subject, excited doubts whether the responsibility of changing the nature of any debt due to the United States, except by taking collateral or additional security, ought to be incurred by the Department. An application of a similar kind, made subsequently by the same gentleman, was accordingly declined.

I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

W. H. CRAWFORD.

[1ST SESSION.]

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

COMMUNICATED TO BOTH HOUSES OF CONGRESS, WITH THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE, DECEMBER 2, 1823.

Extract from the Message of the President of December 2, 1823.

"The actual state of the public accounts furnishes additional evidence of the efficiency of the present system of accountability in relation to the public expenditure. Of the moneys drawn from the Treasury since the fourth of March, one thousand eight hundred and seventeen, the sum remaining unaccounted for on the thirtieth of September last is more than a million and a half of dollars less than on the thirtieth of September preceding; and during the same period a reduction of nearly a million of dollars has been made in the amount of the unsettled accounts for moneys advanced previously to the fourth of March, 1817. It will be obvious that, in proportion as the mass of accounts of the latter description is diminished by settlement, the difficulty of settling the residue is increased, from the consideration that, in many instances, it can be obtained only by legal process. For more precise details on this subject, I refer to a report from the First Comptroller of the Treasury."

*Report of the First Comptroller.*TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Comptroller's Office, November 26, 1823.

SIR: In compliance with the letter to you from the President of the United States, under date of the 10th instant, which you referred to me, wherein he requests to be furnished with a statement of the settlements made between the 1st of October, 1822, and the 30th September, 1823, and with a statement of the amount remaining unsettled at the last mentioned date, distinguishing the several heads of civil, military, and naval from each other, I have the honor to transmit herewith a general statement comprising the information required, together with the particular statements received from the Register and the Second, Third, and Fourth Auditors of the Treasury, upon which the general statement has been predicated.

I beg leave to add that, agreeably to the request of the President, these statements have been made out upon the same principle with that which governed in making out the statements of a similar nature for the last year.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JOS. ANDERSON, *Comptroller.*HON. WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury.

Statement exhibiting the amount of unsettled accounts on the books of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury on the 30th day of September, 1822, the amount since settled, and the amount remaining unsettled on the 1st day of October, 1823, viz:

Amount of unsettled accounts on the 1st of October, 1822, of moneys advanced prior to 3d of March, 1817.....	$4,367,269 10

* The lists rendered to Congress at their last session, pursuant to the act of 3d March, 1809, entitled "An act further to amend the several acts for the establishment and regulation of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments," and the act of the 3d of March, 1817, entitled "An act to provide for the prompt settlement of public accounts," exhibit the particulars of which these several balances are composed, with the exception that the cases of insolvencies reported for three years successively are not, conformably to the last mentioned act, comprised in these lists.
 † The lists alluded to also exhibit the particulars composing these sums, with the exception before mentioned, and that they do not extend to the balances which accrued between the 30th of September, 1819, and the 30th of September, 1822. These balances relate chiefly to accounts in a regular course of settlement.
 ‡ In these balances, respectively, is included the sum of $6,319,389 05, advanced to the Bank of the United States and its branches on account of the public debt, the greater part of which sum has, no doubt, been disbursed; but for these disbursements credits could not, according to the regular course of settlement of such accounts, be given until after the 30th of September, 1823.

Statement of the amount of accounts unsettled in the Office of the Register of the Treasury on the 30th September, 1822, arising from moneys advanced prior and subsequently to the 4th March, 1817; the amount of accounts, under each of those heads, which were settled during the year ending on the 30th September, 1823; the advances in that year, and the balances to be accounted for on the 1st October, 1823.

Of accounts which accrued from moneys advanced prior to the 4th March, 1817.			Of accounts accruing from moneys advanced subsequently to the 4th March, 1817.					Total of balances to be accounted for on the 1st October, 1823, of moneys advanced prior and subsequently to the 4th March, 1817.
Amount which remained unsettled on the 30th September, 1822.	Amount settled between the 30th September, 1822, and the 30th September, 1823.	Balance to be accounted for on the 1st October, 1823. No. 679.

[1ST SESSION.]

INTEREST ON PUBLIC DEBT, BANK DIVIDENDS, DUTIES PAID, AND DIRECT TAXES STILL DUE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 5, 1823.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 3, 1823.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 1st of March last, directing "the Secretary of the Treasury to lay before the Senate, during the first week of its next session, the amount of interest received or receivable in each State on the public debt; the amount of dividends paid or payable in each State by the Bank of the United States—all in reference to the year 1823; and the amount of duties on tonnage and imports received during the year ending on the 30th September next; and the amount of direct taxes still due and unpaid in each State of the United States;" I have the honor to transmit the accompanying statements and letter (No. 1—7) from the Register and Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, and President of the Bank of the United States, which contain the information required.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

No. 2.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 2, 1823.

SIR: The Senate, by resolution of the 1st of March last, has directed the Secretary of the Treasury to lay before it, during the first week of its next session, the amount of dividends paid or payable in each State by the Bank of the United States during the year 1823.

I therefore request that you will cause the necessary statement to be prepared and transmitted, in order that it may be laid before that body in compliance with the said resolution.

I remain, with respect, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD,

N. BIDDLE, Esq.,
President of the Bank of the United States.

No. 3.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES, July 19, 1823.

SIR: In preparing the statement this day transmitted to you, of the amount of dividends payable in the several States, I have deemed it proper to comply strictly with the resolution of the Senate. If the object, however, be to ascertain the distribution of the stock of the bank, the resolution is not sufficiently comprehensive, since there are many stockholders resident in States where there are no offices, and there are others who, although inhabitants of States where there are offices, prefer receiving their dividends at the bank, or at a distant office, so that the amount of dividends paid in any one State will not accurately represent the quantity of stock held by its citizens. With the view of supplying that information, I have the honor to place at your disposal the inclosed statement.

Very respectfully, yours,

N. BIDDLE, President.

HON. WM. H. CRAWFORD,

DUTY ON IMPORTED TALLOW.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 9, 1823.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the citizens of New Bedford, (and its vicinity,) in the county of Bristol, and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, respectfully sheweth:

That among the privileges of a free and enlightened Government, your memorialists value none more highly than that which they enjoy, in common with every class of the community, of applying to the representatives of that Government for protection and relief, when encountering difficulties in the prosecution of a business at once useful to themselves and important to the country.

Convinced that the wisdom and intelligence necessary to watch over the interests and direct the affairs of a great nation are to be found in our councils, your memorialists beg leave, respectfully, to call your attention to that class of our citizens engaged in the whale fisheries.

While they have pursued this business with a perseverance unrivalled in any part of the world; while their voyages have been shortened by new discoveries, and their enterprises to the remotest ocean have been attended with success, still, amid all these advantages, their trade has become ruinous, and they are under the necessity of abandoning its pursuit, or of seeing their property sacrificed under the deceitful hope that the revolution of time may produce a return of their prosperity.

In order to show that this is not the picture of an imaginary calamity, involving the distresses of a few individuals, we have only to recur to authentic records to convince you that the subject is one of real importance to the nation, and, from the numerous branches of manufactories which are connected with it, has ceased to be one of mere local interest.

During the years 1820, 1821, and 1822, seventy-four vessels sailed from this port for the spermaceti whale fishery alone, navigated by 1,363 seamen, and employing a capital of $1,169,000; the quantity of oil imported in those years was 43,102 barrels.

The decline of our business will be apparent from the fact that since the year 1822 but one ship has sailed from this port for this fishery.

The foregoing, being a calculation for the district of New Bedford only, embraces but a small portion of this branch of commerce, which will be seen by the following general estimate:

The number of vessels employed in this fishery, from all the ports in New England and New York, at the close of the year 1822, was 142, valued at the time of their sailing at 3,931,000 dollars.

The quantity of oil received and expected this year will exceed 100,000 barrels; the calculation for 1824 amounts to 80,000 barrels; that for 1825 upwards of 40,000 barrels.

The quantity used in the country has not exceeded 35,000 barrels a year; at which rate, at the end of the year 1825, there will be a surplus on hand equal to three years' consumption of the whole United States.

But your memorialists do not appeal to the liberality of the General Government in their behalf; they only ask that protection which the importance of the subject requires, and which may be extended to them without infringing on the pursuits, or taxing the industry of any class of their fellow-citizens.

The importation of foreign tallow and tallow candles, under no greater restrictions than the low rate of duties at present imposed, your memorialists believe, has, in a great degree, caused the decline of the spermaceti whale fishery, by preventing the consumption of oil from increasing from 35,000 to 50,000 or 55,000 barrels a year; an increase which might reasonably be calculated on, if the importation of tallow was restricted by a heavier duty, which still might enable those heretofore engaged in that business to continue it with advantage.

Your memorialists subjoin a statement of the quantity of tallow imported during the years 1820, 1821, and the first three quarters of the year 1822, taken from the returns of the Secretary of the Treasury, together with some calculations which may serve to show the extent of the injury thereby produced, not only to the fisheries, but also to the agricultural interest.

There were imported in 1820, 1,186,722 pounds of tallow, equal to 62,890 boxes of candles of 30 pounds each, or to 235,840 gallons of oil, or equal to the products of 37,734 head of cattle, averaging 50 pounds of tallow each.

In 1821, 5,613,646 pounds, equal to 187,121 boxes of candles, or 701,705 gallons of oil, or to the products of 112,272 head of cattle.

In the first three quarters of 1822, 3,476,372 pounds, equal to 115,879 boxes of candles, or 434,546 gallons of oil, or to the products of 69,527 head of cattle.

During the same years there were also imported 321,321 pounds of tallow candles.

At the close of the year 1822, 3,100 seamen were employed from the United States in the spermaceti fishery alone. Of the vessels arrived at the port of New Bedford this year, not one has sailed again in that business, and but 8 or 10 ships from all the other ports; the officers and seamen, who have by long experience acquired the skill and dexterity necessary to a successful prosecution of the fishery, are thus thrown out of employment or driven to seek other business.

The fisheries are justly considered in Europe of great national importance as nurseries for seamen, and are encouraged by bounties and by heavy duties imposed on the importation of the products of foreign fisheries; their value to our own country in this respect is apparent from what has heretofore been stated, and your memorialists believe is of itself sufficient to entitle the subject of their petition to your serious consideration.

Your memorialists therefore solicit the interposition of Congress to protect the fisheries and the agricultural interests of our country, by imposing an additional duty on imported tallow and tallow candles. The importance of this subject in a national point of view, your memorialists believe, entitles it to the immediate attention of your honorable body.

DUTY ON IMPORTED TALLOW.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 10, 1823.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The petition of the undersigned inhabitants of the town of Nantucket respectfully represents:

That the depressed condition of one of the most important and interesting branches of national industry and national wealth, the pursuit of the whale fishery, has induced them, presuming that the legislature of the nation will rejoice to avail itself of correct intelligence in relation to so important a subject, to present you a brief statement of facts, developing, in some measure, the evils to which we ask your attention.

The whale fishery commenced in this country without the aid or encouragement of Government, had even before the war of the Revolution attained a stability and a permanence astonishing to the mother country. "Neither the perseverance of Holland, nor the activity of France, nor the dexterous and firm sagacity of English enterprise," with the strength of their Governments to give power, and their voices to give popularity to their efforts, equalled the successful exertions of the colonies. The contest for independence annihilated this extensive commerce, but the spirits of its founders were not subdued; when peace returned, under the genial smile of Government that now for a moment beamed upon the fishery, the canvas was once more unfurled, once more the distant coasts witnessed the hardy enterprise of New England. This fishery grew and expanded with the growth of the nation, and the late war found in remote quarters of the globe forty ships exposed to the most formidable marine in Europe. One-half of these valuable vessels were swept from the ocean by the enemy; but, unaided by legislative support, the fishery survived and triumphed over this terrible obstruction to its prosperity. It now droops and languishes under an unequalled and paralyzing depression, and the present aspect of its destiny is less propitious than when it felt the influence of war. Two millions of capital employed in this pursuit, from this single port, has rapidly fallen in value with the fall of oil; 27,000 tons of shipping of the most valuable class, collected with care and adapted to the service, are rapidly deserting the fishery; 2,000 seamen who navigated them are abandoning an employment where their most successful exertions insure nothing but ruin. Many of our merchants are casting their thoughts on other ports and more propitious pursuits, and the artificers, who have depended exclusively on the whale fishery for their support, are threatened by the most gloomy prospects.

It is natural for us to inquire what remedies can be applied to a state of things so terrible that they menace the very existence of the fishery?

One of the most important and obvious of these, to which we particularly ask your attention, for you only can interpose in this case with effect, is an increase of the present rate of duty on foreign tallow. A subjoined statement of the extensive and increasing importation of this article demonstrates at one view the deleterious consequences which it has exerted not only on the fishery but the agriculture of the nation.

There were imported in 1820, 1,886,722 pounds of tallow, which is equal to 62,890 boxes of candles of 30 pounds each, or to 235,840 gallons of oil, or to the product of 37,734 head of cattle, averaging 50 pounds of tallow each; in 1821, 5,613,646 pounds, equal to 187,121 boxes of candles, or 701,705 gallons of oil, or to the product of 112,272 head of cattle; in the first three quarters of 1822, 3,476,372 pounds, equal to 115,879 boxes of candles, or to 434,546 gallons of oil, or to the product of 69,527 head of cattle.

These importations have enriched a foreign country, while they have depressed an article important to agriculture, and prostrated another on which the fishery solely depends. The present rate of duty opposes no obstacle to the continued and increasing importation of the article; we ask, therefore, an increase of the duty which has already been imposed on it. We ask not that direct encouragement of the fisheries which other Governments have always extended to this trade; we ask no bounty on the voyage, no bounty on tonnage, no duty on merchandise, which shall benefit this pursuit exclusively, but the increase of a duty as important to the agriculture as to the commerce of the nation.

We will not dwell on the importance of this fishery—in one word, it manufactures ships, it manufactures the materials for the voyage, it rears a hardy race of seamen, it supports agriculture, it encourages manufactures, it is a source of wealth and power to the country, and places the domestic industry of the nation above a foreign supply of an article valuable, indispensable to its success. Other commercial nations have ever manifested the liveliest attachment to the fisheries. In Great Britain, the Government, from the earliest periods, has cherished them as an object of primary importance. The ingenuity of her wisest statesmen has been perseveringly directed to the promotion of their interests; bounties have been offered them, privileges have been conferred on them, and duties imposed for their protection. How much zealous, and persevering, and successive effort has it put forth for their success! When they have drooped, Government has assisted them; when they have been successful, Government has rejoiced. The energetic arm of the nation has shielded them from calamities, and extended succor in the hour of depression.

But it is not necessary for us to advert to the policy of other countries. The importance of the fisheries long since attracted the attention of the Legislature of these States. The cod fishery now flourishes on its bounty; and a large, a vigorous, and enterprising portion of our countrymen, under the wise and just policy of the national councils, are reaping the advantages of this source of wealth and competency. We ask only that the same spirit which produced the measures that are now the prop and support of the cod fishery may induce you to foster and cherish the not less interesting and important pursuit to which we request your attention.

REMISSION OF INTEREST OF DUTIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 17, 1823.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of Jacob Babbitt, reported:

That in the month of August, in the year 1815, the petitioner imported into Bristol, in the State of Rhode Island, a quantity of sugars, and duly executed bonds for the duties, amounting to the sum of nine thousand four hundred and ninety-one dollars and forty-seven cents; that these sugars, while in the storehouse of the petitioner, were entirely destroyed, together with his wharf and store, by the terrible gale and inundation with which the harbor and town of Bristol were visited in the month of September of the same year.

In consequence of this loss, the bonds for the duties remained unpaid until the 17th day of March, of the present year, when, under the directions of the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States, the petitioner paid the principal sum, amounting to $9,491 47, and gave his bond for the interest which had accrued in the interim, amounting to the sum of $3,775 73, payable in the month of March, A. D. 1824; and against this bond given for the interest he prays to be relieved.

The prayer of the petitioner amounts only to a request that he may be allowed a longer credit upon his bonds for the duties than the period ordinarily fixed by law, and this in a case of an extraordinary and unavoidable calamity.

The usual period of credit is adapted to ordinary cases; but instances may often occur in which the loss of the merchandise in the hands of the importer, and other circumstances of hardship, will appeal equally to the justice and policy of the Government to prolong the time.

Cases of this description have actually arisen, and have been liberally treated.

By the destructive fire which occurred at Savannah in the year 1820 a large quantity of merchandise in store was destroyed before the bonds, by which the duties had been secured, had become payable; and upon application of the importers, a law was passed prolonging the credit for the period of four years.

The committee consider the case of the petitioner as falling within the principle of the law in the instance of the Savannah importers; more especially as the loss by flood or inundation was not so likely to be insured against as the more ordinary destruction by fire. They therefore beg leave to report a bill.

DUTY ON STILLLS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 30, 1823.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Finsley, reported:

That in the year 1814 the petitioner was the owner of a still of the capacity of 106 gallons, and obtained a license for one year, from the 16th November of the same year, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress then existing, for which he had to pay $1 08 per gallon on the capacity of his still; that after obtaining his license he purchased a large quantity of grain, which was on hand in December, 1814, when, by the act of Congress then passed, an additional duty of 20 cents per gallon was imposed.

The petitioner alleges that, in consequence of this additional duty, he could not distill the grain on hand without great loss, and insists that the license first obtained was in the nature of a contract, which could not be changed during the year, and therefore prays relief.

In the opinion of the committee the case of the petitioner presents no ground for relief. There is certainly no pretext for the supposition that the license partook, in any degree, of the nature of a contract, in the sense in which it is alleged.

The duties imposed upon stills were a part of a general system of excise which the Government could augment or diminish, or altogether abolish, as the public exigencies might require; and it was the duty of the citizen to regulate his enterprise accordingly.

It would be subversive of the power of the Government to deny it the right to vary its system of taxation, without regard of individual convenience; and the case of the petitioner is not so strong as that of the merchant who projects a foreign voyage upon an existing tariff, which may be doubled before the completion of his enterprise.

The committee, therefore, recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

After deducting from this sum certain balances of appropriations, amounting to $2,897,086 47, which are necessary to effect the objects for which they were severally made, or have been deducted from the estimates for the service of the ensuing year, a balance of $6,466,969 30 remains; which, with the receipts into the Treasury during the year 1824, constitutes the means for defraying the current service of that year.

2. OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The funded debt which was contracted before the year 1812, and which was unredeemed on the 1st day of October, 1822, amounted (see statement No. 1) to.....	$17,189,852 60
And that which was contracted subsequently to the 1st of January, 1812, and was unredeemed on the 1st of October, 1822, amounted (statement No. 1) to.....	75,852,848 58
Making the total amount of funded debt unredeemed on the 1st of October, 1822....	93,042,701 18

	Brought forward.....	$93,042,701 18
In the fourth quarter of that year there was paid the sum of.....		2,265,673 32
Viz:
Reimbursement of six per cent. deferred stock.....	$265,673 32
Redemption of six per cent. stock of 1820.....	2,000,000 00
Reducing the funded debt on the 1st of January, 1823, (statement No. 2) to.....		90,777,027 86
From that day to the 1st of October last there was added to the debt—
In three per cent. stock.....	132 39
Treasury note six per cent. stock.....	1,561 87
Treasury note seven per cent. stock.....	135 00
		1,829 26
Making an aggregate of.....		90,778,857 12
During the same period there was paid in reimbursement of the deferred six per cent. stock.....		327,022 88
Reducing the funded debt on the 1st of October, 1823, (statement No. 3) to.....		90,451,834 24
Since that day there has been added in Treasury note six per cent. stock.....		716 75
Making an aggregate of.....		90,452,550 99
It is estimated that the reimbursement of deferred stock in the fourth quarter of the present year will amount to.....		274,588 85
Which will reduce the funded debt unredeemed on the 1st of January, 1824, to.....		90,177,962 14
The amount of Treasury notes outstanding on the 1st of October, 1823, is estimated (No. 4) at.....		26,122 00
And the amount of Mississippi stock unredeemed on that day (statement No. 5) at....		21,258 87

3. OF THE ESTIMATE OF THE PUBLIC REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE FOR THE YEAR 1824.

It will be perceived that the actual receipts of the year 1823 agree, substantially, with the estimate presented in the last annual report. The only deficiency is in the proceeds of the public lands; and that is understood to have been the consequence of an expectation, generally entertained, that the lands which were relinquished under the act of the 2d of March, 1821, and which are supposed to present the strongest inducements to purchasers, would be brought into market early in the ensuing year; with respect to the customs, however, the anticipations that had been formed, both as to the circumstances which were calculated to have an influence upon their productiveness, and as to the results, have been completely realized. It is believed, therefore, that data, founded upon the same principles as those which governed in forming the estimate for the year 1823, may be satisfactorily presented as the basis of an estimate for the year 1824. With this view the Secretary has the honor to state:

1. That the gross amount of duties on imports and tonnage, which accrued from the 1st of January to the 30th September last, inclusive, is estimated at $17,800,000, and that of the whole year at $21,000,000. Of this sum, that portion which accrued in the first half of the year is about $1,000,000 less than that of the same period in the preceding year, and that which accrued in the first three quarters of the year is estimated at $1,700,000 less than that of the corresponding quarters of the preceding year.

2. That the debentures issued during the first three quarters of the year 1823 amounted to $3,412,000, which exceeds the amount issued during the corresponding period of the year 1822 by $1,500,000; and the amount of debentures outstanding on the 30th of September last, and chargeable upon the revenue of 1824, was $1,405,000, which is $500,000 more than was on the same day in 1822 chargeable upon the revenue of 1823.

3. That the value of domestic articles exported from the United States in the year ending on the 30th of September last amounted to $47,155,711, being $2,718,368 less than those exported in the year preceding; and the value of foreign articles exported in the year ending on the 30th September last was $27,530,469, being $5,244,267 more than those exported in the preceding year.

4. That the aggregate value of the imports into the United States during the year ending on the 30th September last is estimated at $77,486,432, which is less by $5,755,109 than those imported in the preceding year.

5. That the amount of custom-house bonds in suit, which, on the 30th of September, 1820, was $3,130,000, was, on the same day, in the year 1822, $2,795,000, and in the year 1823, $2,817,000; whence it appears that, although a reduction of $313,000 had taken place during the whole period, yet the amount in suit on the 30th of September last was greater by $22,000 than on the same day of the year preceding.

Upon a consideration of all these facts, and the conclusions deducible from them, the receipts from the customs in the year 1824 may be estimated at $16,500,000.

A considerable portion of the lands relinquished under the act of the 2d of March, 1821, will be brought into market in the ensuing year; but, as it is yet uncertain to what extent this may be deemed advisable, and as the sale of these lands will probably absorb a great portion of the means of those who are prepared to make investments in the public lands, it is considered prudent not to estimate the receipts from this source of revenue at more than $1,600,000, although it is believed that they will exceed that sum.

Under these circumstances the receipts of the year 1824 may be estimated as follows:

Customs.....	$16,500,000 00
Public lands.....	1,600,000 00
Bank dividends.....	350,000 00
Incidental receipts, including arrears of internal duties and direct tax.....	50,000 00

To which is to be added the sum of.....		6,466,969 30
Remaining in the Treasury, after satisfying all the appropriations chargeable upon the means of 1823; which makes the entire means of the year 1824 amount to..		25,016,969 30
The expenditures of the year 1824 are estimated as follows:
Civil, diplomatic, and miscellaneous.....	$1,814,057 23
Military service, including fortifications, ordnance, Indian Department, revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrearages prior to 1st January, 1817.....	5,122,268 15
Naval service, including the gradual increase of the Navy.....	2,973,927 51
Public debt.....	5,814,000 00
Making an aggregate of.....		15,224,252 89
Which, being deducted from the estimated means of 1824, will leave in the Treasury, on the 1st January, 1825, after satisfying the current demands of the year 1824, a balance estimated at.....		9,792,716 41

Under the existing laws, there is no probability that any portion of the balance remaining in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1824, or of the surplus which may accrue during that year, can be applied to the discharge of the public debt until the 1st of January, 1825. Yet it is not deemed conducive to the general prosperity of the nation that so large an amount should be drawn from the hands of individuals and suffered to lie inactive in the vaults of the banks. On the other hand, the high rate of interest of the great amount of debt which becomes redeemable on the 1st of January, 1825, renders it inexpedient for the Government to apply to other objects any portion of the means which it may possess of making so advantageous a reimbursement. It is believed, however, that every inconvenience may be obviated if authority be given for the purchase of the seven per cent. stock, amounting to $8,610,000, during the year 1824, at such rates as may be consistent with the public interest. As it is now certain that the Government will possess ample means to redeem that stock on the 1st of January, 1825, it is presumed that the holders will be willing to dispose of it during the interval at a fair price; and as a gradual conversion of it into money at such times and in such portions as would be most favorable to its reinvestment would be most advantageous to the moneyed transactions of the community, it is presumed that it would be most acceptable to the holders.

It is, therefore, respectfully proposed that the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund be authorized to purchase the seven per cent. stock, during the ensuing year, at the following rates above the principal sum purchased:

1. For all stock purchased before the 1st of April next, at a rate not exceeding $1 25 on every $100, in addition to the interest due on such stock on that day.
2. For all stock purchased between the 1st of April and the 1st of July next, at a rate not exceeding 75 cents on every $100, in addition to the interest due on the last mentioned day.
3. For all stock purchased between the 1st of July and the 1st of October next, at a rate not exceeding on every $100, the amount of the interest which would have accrued on the last mentioned day.
4. For all stock purchased between the 1st of October, 1824, and the 1st of January, 1825, the principal and interest due on the day of purchase.

In proposing to the consideration of Congress this application of the surplus means of the years 1823 and 1824, the probable demands upon the Government in providing for the awards of the Commissioners under the treaty with Spain, of the 22d of February, 1819, have not been overlooked. It is believed, however, that funds may be advantageously supplied for the discharge of those claims by the issue and sale, at not less than par, of five per cent. stock, redeemable in 1832, and it is respectfully proposed that authority be given for that purpose.

Of the $10,331,000 of six per cent. stock, redeemable in 1825, about $5,000,000 will probably be redeemed in that year, and there will remain unredeemed, after the application of all the means at the disposal of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, about $5,331,000. This sum it is believed may be readily exchanged for five per cent. stock, redeemable in 1833; and it is respectfully suggested that provision be made by law for such an exchange of so much of the six per cent. stock as shall not be redeemed during the year 1825.

The views which are herein presented are founded upon the idea that no extraordinary expenditure is to be incurred. If, however, it be deemed advisable to give increased extension or activity to the Navy, or to aid in objects of internal improvement, it is believed that such additional means as may be required may be obtained by a judicious revision of the tariff. Such a measure was recommended in the last annual report with a view both to the increase of the revenue and the simplification of its collection; and further reflection and experience have tended to strengthen the opinion then entertained, that its operation, without being onerous to the community, would be advantageous to the revenue, salutary to commerce, and beneficial to the manufactures of the country.

All which is respectfully submitted.

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 31, 1823.

No. 685.

[1ST SESSION.]

AGAINST DUTY ON IMPORTED TALLOW AND FOR DRAWBACK ON CANDLES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 12, 1824.

To the honorable the members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

In this memorial we, the subscribers, tallow chandlers and soap boilers, in the city of Boston and vicinity, ask leave respectfully to represent, that, by certain resolves and a circular, issued at New Bedford, we learn that the oil merchants of that place and Nantucket have petitioned Congress to relieve them from the present "ruinous state of their business," by laying an additional duty on imported tallow and tallow candles.

We might follow the example of our Nantucket and New Bedford neighbors, and endeavor to excite your sympathy and compassion, by a representation of the present "depressed and ruinous state of our trade," which, no doubt, is quite as aggravated as theirs, and, like theirs, is entirely caused by the late excessive importations of oil. But the just and enlightened policy hitherto pursued by your honorable body is a sufficient guarantee that no branch of trade, however small, will be sacrificed to that of another, or the general interests of the community to that of any particular class or body whatever. Hence we shall not trouble you with the recital of any facts which do not go to prove that the increase of our revenue and public benefit are not to be promoted by granting the petition against which we now venture to remonstrate.

Before entering upon a statement of those facts, your memorialists would remark, that the petitioners, notwithstanding their efforts to convince Congress that all their embarrassments proceed from the importation of tallow, in their resolves to the public, say, "that the general stagnation of commerce has, of late, diverted a large amount of capital from other branches of trade to the whale fishery;" and they appear to have understood this to have been the cause of their difficulties; and also to have understood and applied the only true remedy, for they add, that, in 1822, twenty-six vessels sailed from New Bedford for this fishery, but this year they have fitted out but one. This large amount of diverted capital has procured more oil than is wanted for consumption, and it follows, of course, as in every other instance of overdone trade, that the surplus depresses the business, and the only method that will avail is to withdraw this surplus capital. Then, and not until then, will their business return to a sound and flourishing state.

If the tallow which they are desirous of prohibiting is now imported for exportation, its prohibition can have no effect upon the interests either of the oil merchants or agriculturists; and if it can as easily be manufactured into soap and candles in any other country, and be shipped as cheap to the places where it is now consumed, it will, in those places, come in competition with their oil and sperm candles as effectually and precisely to the same extent that it now does; for it is not supposable that this tallow must lie on the hands of the Russians and South Americans, merely because our Government prohibits its importation and manufacture in this country. Nor will it affect the price of tallow, either at home or abroad, as we shall presently show that, without foreign tallow, there will still be a surplusage, the produce of our own country, for exportation; and when sent to foreign markets, it can command no more than the price at which the manufacturers of other nations can afford it, and the price which this surplus nets will, of course, govern the price at home. In fact, it must be obvious, upon the slightest investigation, that the price of tallow must, throughout the commercial world, depend entirely upon the quantity of oil procured from the ocean, and that this quantity may be extended indefinitely; for it has, within the last three years, been increased to such an unparalleled degree, as to reduce the value of both tallow and oil, in all parts of the world, about fifty per cent., bringing loss upon all, and ruin upon many of those whose business has been in either of those articles.

In the growing of cattle, in all countries, tallow is but a secondary object; the beef and hide are the primary and sufficient objects in this branch of agriculture, so much so that, if the price of tallow was reduced even much lower than it now is, nearly the same quantity would annually be produced, and not much more were the price double what it now is.

On investigating this subject, we find that, during the six years preceding the present, there have been imported into the United States less than thirteen millions pounds of tallow, and that there were exported from Boston, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, and New Orleans, only twenty millions pounds of soap and five millions pounds of candles, and probably as much as six millions of soap and one million of candles from other ports in the United States. Now, as it requires thirteen millions of tallow to make twenty-six millions of soap, these facts clearly prove that prohibiting foreign tallow would reduce the exportation of soap and candles from five millions pounds annually to about one million and a half.

Among the advantages which this country derives from this branch of business, permit us to name the following: the importation of this tallow, together with the necessary quantity of palm oil and salt used in its manufacture, and the exportation of the soap and candles, has given annual employment to more than three thousand tons of American shipping, with the necessary complement of seamen and capital. It also employs more than three hundred thousand dollars of manufacturing capital, and a large number of manufacturers. It also makes an annual market for more than three thousand barrels of rosin, as many of lime, two hundred thousand boxes, and sixty thousand dollars worth of alkali, (which last article is worth little or nothing for any other purpose but soap making,) all of which, together with wood, labor, &c., amounting, when the soap is ready for market, to about one-half its value, no part of which, except the rosin, would ever reach a market in any other way. In addition to these advantages, this tallow, at the present duty, annually pays a revenue of twenty-two thousand dollars. The palm oil and salt necessary in its manufacture, the one about two thousand, the other about five thousand, making an annual revenue of nearly thirty thousand dollars, the whole of which is paid by foreign consumers.

Now, as a ton of tallow in England pays a duty of $14 10, while the same quantity in the United States pays $22 40, it is obvious that an additional duty will take this profitable employment from American manufacturers and merchants, and give it to those of Great Britain. Hence, the oil merchants are now, in effect, asking Congress to cut off nearly thirty thousand dollars of revenue, and more than two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of exports, and to put out of employ three thousand tons of shipping, two or three hundred seamen and manufacturers, and half a million of mercantile and manufacturing capital; and all this sacrifice, if made, we think we have clearly shown, will not benefit the petitioners themselves or any other part of the American community.

Here we should stop, were our object simply that of remonstrating against the petition of the Nantucket and New Bedford oil merchants; but believing, as we do, that an entire repeal of the existing duty on tallow would in nowise be detrimental to the whale fishery, agriculture, or the revenue, permit us to call the attention of your honorable body to the consideration of a few facts in addition to those which we have already stated, and which go to prove the propriety of such a measure.

Great Britain annually imports from Russia about sixty millions pounds of tallow, and probably twenty to thirty millions from South America, from one-half to two-thirds of which, it is believed, is for exportation, while only two millions are imported into this country.

Whence this immense disproportion? The following are all the reasons we can assign: First, the local situation of England enables her merchants to make two voyages to Russia in one season, whereas ours can make but one; second, that Government restricts their colonies to the use of English soap and candles only; and third, the difference of duty in favor of the British manufacturer, at the present value of tallow, is about six per cent.

While this state of things exists, we think the amount of soap manufactured in the United States for foreign consumption must, in future, be very small; while, if the present duty be taken off, it will, in this respect, give us an advantage over the British, which may be equivalent to that which the local situation of their country and its restrictive laws give to them; and thus the manufacturers of soap in the two countries will be placed upon something like an equal footing, as it regards supplying foreign markets with that article.

After taking the foregoing facts into consideration, we believe, nothing doubting, that had tallow, like most other raw materials, and like all other articles imported for exportation, been for the last ten years free from duty, that a very large quantity which has been consumed in the West Indies and elsewhere, and of which the English nation have had the advantage of being the carriers and manufacturers, would have given employment to American ships, seamen, and manufacturers; and while it furnished a market for lime, rosin, alkali, &c., &c., it would, by the duty on the returns for those articles, net a revenue to the United States vastly greater than that which has been realized on imported tallow. Indeed, we think there is good reason to believe that the removal of this duty will increase the manufacture of soap to such an extent as to swell the revenue on salt and palm oil alone to such an amount, above what it now is, as to be fully equivalent to the duty relinquished on tallow.

With regard to candles, we conceive the increase of duty would have no effect upon our trade, the oil merchants, or the revenue, as not one box in a thousand is consumed in the United States; and so long as a drawback is allowed on candles, and a duty imposed on tallow, it amounts, in its operation, precisely to a bounty to the Russian manufacturer, to the exclusion of the American; enabling the former to supply the West Indies, South America, &c., one cent per pound (which, at their present value, is nearly ten per cent.) cheaper than the latter; and this trade the Russian merchant cannot pursue directly from his own country, nor through any other, (foreign candles being prohibited in England,) with so much advantage to himself. It is perfectly obvious that this state of things must very soon prohibit the manufacture of this tallow in the United States; in fact, it has already prohibited it, for but one cargo has arrived in the United States this year, and that was immediately reshipped to England. If no drawback was allowed, our merchants would import tallow instead of candles, and export the candles made from it precisely to the same extent that they now do candles, and with the same profit to themselves.

For these reasons, and actuated, as we hope, not exclusively by interested motives, we respectfully ask, that the laws imposing a duty on imported tallow, and granting a drawback on the exportation of foreign candles, may be repealed. And, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Boston, December 26, 1823.

To the honorable the members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the subscribers, tallow chandlers and soap boilers, of the city of New York, would beg leave to represent:

That a "circular" is now issued, dated at "New Bedford," by which it is known that those engaged in the sperm whale fisheries, and in the manufacture of oil and sperm candles, have decided on petitioning Congress to lay an additional duty on imported tallow and tallow candles. It is immaterial to us whether the duty on imported tallow candles be raised or not, because, with the present duty, very few have ever been imported, and, with the character which they possess, it is rare that any of them are ever used in this country, and of course they are again exported. With respect to foreign imported tallow, our feelings and our interests are totally different, and we conceive the statements of the New Bedford memorialists extremely erroneous upon the subject. They state the whole quantity of tallow imported into the United States in the years 1820, 1821, and part of the year 1822, which was considerably large; and then they calculate the whole made into candles of small boxes, which, to be sure, would make a very great number of boxes of candles. This, however, is all ideal, and their error consists in this: that very little of imported tallow was ever made into candles in the United States, one instance only excepted, where a Boston merchant, not being able to dispose of a cargo of tallow to any advantage, procured a number of chandlers to make it up into candles on his own account. This speculation, we presume, was attended with no small loss. Now, imported tallow is not made into candles at all by any one who wishes to have his name known, or to support a reputation for his goods; and it is well known to be discreditable to those engaged in making up imported tallow into candles, as those candles are of an inferior quality, and will rarely, if ever, even stand the heat of our own climate. The foreign imported tallow was always principally used up in the making of soap; and now it is much more rare that any one thinks of ever using any of it in any other way.

Is there any raw material imported into the United States, for the use of the manufacturers, paying more duty than is levied on tallow? Tallow, on its importation, pays one cent per pound duty; and one pound of tallow made into soap, with the other component parts, bartered for coffee, will surely, either in the West Indies or in South America, purchase, on an average, one pound of coffee, which pound of coffee, consumed in the country, pays five cents per pound duty. If bartered for other produce, the result will be nearly similar. From this it is evident that imported tallow, by one quick and simple turn, pays into the Treasury of the United States six cents per pound, which is more than three-fourths its present value.

Can anything be said as favorable or as advantageous to the country of the whale fisheries and the manufacture of the oil and of sperm candles? The New Bedford memorialists appear to attribute all "the existing depression" in the whaling business, their branch of commerce, to the "introduction of foreign tallow," and appear to regard with indifference the tallow chandlers, a far more numerous class of citizens, and, we hope, as meritorious as themselves. We are willing to sympathize with them for the depression under which their branch of commerce labors, but are unwilling to be destroyed to build them up. They have selected a period in which much tallow was imported. Let them say what quantity has been imported during the present year, for we know not of a cask that has come from any part of the European continent, and little indeed from any other part of the world; and for a long time past all tallow introduced from foreign parts has been attended with heavy loss to the importer. The New Bedford and Nantucket whaling ships used to make very prosperous and profitable voyages; and their owners and others, elevated (say very laudably) with the hope and prospect of continuing equally successful, have pushed that business to an unusual extent—deluged the country with oil—half ruined themselves—totally destroyed and broke up many tallow chandlers—and all of them are very much reduced in their circumstances. The tallow chandling business has for a long time and does now labor under as great a state of depression as any mechanical branch that can be named; but, with respect to oil, no one can be ignorant of the fact that the importation of it has been immensely beyond the wants of the country, and by it candles nearly pushed out of use. It is probable there is not more than one-tenth part the candles used in our own country that there used to be; and we judge, from our own experience, that not one-twentieth part the quantity is exported. To what, then, is this owing? Evidently, in a great measure, to an excessive inundation of oil. The main consumption of tallow is, therefore, for soap; and were an additional duty laid on the importation of it, it is probable it would raise the price of it so much that the manufacturers here could not compete with foreign manufacturers of the same article, and that the exportation of it would be at an end.

We ardently hope such a result would not be considered desirable. The New Bedford memorialists think the great body of our "agriculturists" have a direct interest in laying an additional duty on imported tallow. If they are desirous of raising the price of American tallow, their object would be much more easily accomplished by using their influence to discourage such prodigious importations of oil. Your memorialists are not disposed to yield, in their sincerity and respect for the Government and the prosperity of the country generally, to any class of citizens; and although they have not been dissatisfied with the present duty on imported tallow, still, if any alterations are made, we do hope the duty may be wholly taken off, and the article be permitted to be imported by our merchants entirely free of duty, as most or all other raw materials are. And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

REFUNDING DUTIES PAID WHILE CASTINE WAS IN POSSESSION OF AN ENEMY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 15, 1824.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom were referred the several petitions of Joshua Aubin, Nathaniel W. Appleton and C. H. Appleton, John Tappan, William Whitehead, James Crawford, Daniel Johnston, Otis Little, David Howe, Thatcher Avery, Ebenezer Hodsdon, John Lee, Benjamin Hazletine, Samuel Adams, and James Graham, reported:

That the claim of these petitioners depends upon the facts and circumstances connected with what are commonly called the Castine cases, and, from the documents referred to the committee, are, substantially, as follows:

During the late war between the United States and Great Britain the town and harbor of Castine, in the collection district of Penobscot, were occupied by the forces of the enemy from September 1, 1814, until April 27, 1815, and were in the entire and exclusive control and under the jurisdiction of the said enemy.

On September 1, 1814, the Collector of the Customs for the district of Penobscot removed, with the papers of his office, to Hampton, on the western side of Penobscot river, and there continued to transact the business of the custom-house until after peace was restored between the United States and Great Britain. Immediately after the capture of Castine, the British Government there established a custom-house, or excise house, and appointed a Collector of the Customs, who, from that time until April 24, 1815, continued to receive entries of vessels and merchandise conformably to the laws and regulations in the province of Nova Scotia. During this period many merchants, residing at Castine, imported goods and entered them with said British Collector, paying duties thereon to the British Government; and a part of said goods, on the return of peace, remained in Castine. The United States Collector, after the peace, but before the actual evacuation of Castine, established his office upon or near the British lines, and required that all goods of foreign growth or manufacture which had been imported during the hostile occupation, and were still there, should be entered as if then originally imported into the United States in a foreign vessel, and threatened to seize and detain the goods unless the owners or consignees would immediately pay or secure to the United States duties thereon as aforesaid. To avoid the great loss and injury which would have been sustained by a seizure and detention of said goods, the owners or consignees thereof entered the same with said Collector, and gave bonds for the duties, including the additional duty for importation in a foreign vessel. At the time said bonds became due some of the persons who had given them paid the same, trusting to the Government of the United States for restitution, while others refused to pay, and suits were commenced against them in the District Courts of Massachusetts and Maine for the recovery of the same, which suits were discontinued, by order of the Secretary of the Treasury, in consequence of the unanimous opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the United States vs. Rice, that the act of the Collector exacting said bonds was illegal, the goods not being liable for the duties to the United States.

The petitioners are of the number of those who actually paid the duties to the Government before the suit against Rice, and before the decision of the Supreme Court pronouncing their illegality.

The committee further report, that this subject was brought before Congress in the year 1820, upon the application of Jonathan L. Stevens and others, situated similarly with the petitioners in many respects, and on the eleventh of April of that year an act was passed for their relief, and authorizing a refunditure of the duties, provided it should be proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that the persons named in the law were residents of Castine or Bucksport, or were purchasers from residents of the goods on which the duties have been imposed.

The committee do not perceive that the residence of the importer or owner of the goods can vary the law applicable to the cases. The decision of the Supreme Court is, that duties could not be legally exacted upon any part of these goods by the United States, and it is presumed that those persons who voluntarily submitted to the authority of the custom-house officers should not be placed in a worse situation than others who refused to comply with the requisitions of the Collector.

The committee do not pretend to ascertain the principle upon which a previous Congress has decided, but believing all the cases to be governed by the same rule of law, they submit to the House the papers and documents they have been able to collect, and, that the subject may be fairly considered, they report a bill.

REMISSION OF DUTIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 16, 1824.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of Francis G. Macey and others, reported:

That the petitioners, citizens of the United States, residing at Nantucket, in the State of Massachusetts, in the year 1820 fitted out the ship General Jackson, and despatched her to the Pacific Ocean on a whaling voyage; that they shipped as master one John Fisher, who they then believed to be a citizen of the United States; that the said John Fisher came to the United States from Great Britain when young, and has resided in this country ever since, pursuing the occupation of a mariner; that in the year 1814 he applied to the courts of Massachusetts to be naturalized, and obtained from the clerk a certificate of his application, which he treated as an act of naturalization, and actually served the United States in the late war with Great Britain.

Owing to these circumstances, the petitioners were led to suppose that the said John Fisher was a citizen of the United States, and did not discover the mistake until after the vessel had sailed on her voyage.

The petitioners further allege, that, in consequence of this mistake, they were compelled, on the arrival of the said ship General Jackson at the port of Nantucket, to give bonds to the United States for the duties on the cargo of spermaceti oil brought by the said vessel, amounting to the sum of $6,858 22, and for $76 93 for extra tonnage duty; against which they pray to be relieved.

The committee are satisfied that there was no intention on the part of the petitioners to commit any fraud on the revenue, or to violate the laws of the United States.

They acted under the impression that the person employed by them as master of their ship was a citizen of the United States; they could have no motive to violate the law in this respect; and there is no reason to believe that they are chargeable with any improper negligence.

The committee believe it would be unreasonable, under these circumstances, to deprive the petitioners of the fruits of their enterprise, and therefore report a bill.

DRAWBACK.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 16, 1824.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of Barnard Thooff, of the city of New York, reported:

That in May last the petitioner exported a quantity of coffee from New York to Amsterdam for the benefit of drawback. All the formalities of the law were complied with, excepting the execution of the bond for exportation, which was not executed within the twenty days required by law.

It appears to the committee that the petitioner called at the custom-house on three several days within the period for the purpose of executing bond, but at no time did he find the returns made by the inspectors, or the officers ready to complete the business; that the petitioner also called a fourth time at the custom-house, on the 13th June, within the period of twenty days, and was again prevented from executing the bond by the engagements of the custom-house officers, and that he was then taken sick and confined to his house until after the expiration of the legal period.

Under these circumstances, the committee are persuaded that the petitioner used ordinary diligence to comply with the law, and that the omission to execute the bond may be fairly attributed to accidents beyond his control, or otherwise excusable; and they therefore report a bill.

MINT.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 17, 1824.

In pursuance of the act entitled "An act regulating the currency within the United States of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Spain, and Portugal, and the crowns of France, and five franc pieces," passed the 29th day of April, 1816, the Secretary of the Treasury has the honor to transmit herewith a report of the Director of the Mint, giving the result of sundry assays made in pursuance of instructions from this Department.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES, January 5, 1824.

SIR: Agreeably to your general instructions, I have caused assays to be made of the several species of foreign silver coins still current by law in the United States, and of the foreign gold coins, (so far as specimens could be procured,) receivable in payment on account of public lands.

The Assayer's report is as follows:

SILVER COINS.

	oz.	dwt.	gr.
5 pieces of French crowns, dated 1793,	10	18	12	fine in 12 ounces.
5 pieces of five franc pieces, " 1823,	10	16	00	do. do.
5 pieces of Spanish dollars, " 1822,	10	16	00	do. do.

GOLD COINS.

5 pieces of British, dated 1822, 22 carats fine in 24 carats.
1 piece of Portuguese, dated 1822, 21 carats  $3\frac{7}{8}$  grains fine in 24 carats<sup>3</sup>

No specimens of French or Spanish gold coins, especially of late dates, could be procured.

The above assays agreeing, either exactly or very nearly, with former assays, it may be presumed that no alteration has taken place in the quality of foreign coins.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

RT. PATTERSON.

Hon. WM. H. CRAWFORD, Secretary of the Treasury.

LIST OF FACTORIES IN EACH STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 27, 1824.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 26, 1824.

SIR: A resolution of the Senate of the first of March last directed the Secretary of State to lay before the Senate, during the first week of the session then next, a list of the factories in each State employed in manufacturing for sale such articles as would be liable to duties if imported from foreign countries; the said list to be extracted from the Digest of Manufactures and such other sources of information as he possessed or could obtain, and to specify, as far as possible, the capital of each factory, and whether it is incorporated or not by State laws.

I have the honor of transmitting to the Senate a statement, prepared under the direction of this Department, in compliance with the resolution. It has been found impracticable to make this return at an earlier day.

It is now respectfully submitted.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

The PRESIDENT of the Senate of the United States.

MAINE.

Extract of a letter from the Secretary of State of New Hampshire, inclosing the returns, dated August 9, 1833.

"It may be proper to remark, that several of the establishments are merely nominal, having never gone into operation, and that few, if any, of them have, as yet, occupied capital to the extent allowed by their respective charters. A spirit of enterprise and activity, however, prevails at present, as may be inferred from the number and importance of the societies incorporated the present year. On the whole, there appears good reason to conjecture that New Hampshire will, at some future period, hold no mean rank as a manufacturing State."

Extract of a letter from the Secretary of State of Vermont, inclosing the preceding schedule, dated November 30, 1823.

"The companies marked thus (*) in the accompanying schedule, though not within the requisition of the Department, appear to be necessary, in order to convey accurate information of the situation of several of these incorporations; and it is believed that several establishments, to which, in the list, no references are affixed, are not, at this time, in operation. It may be proper to remark, that a list of incorporated factories will not furnish an accurate estimate of the manufactures of the State, as much of the capital employed in manufacturing is vested in private and unincorporated factories."

REMISSION OF FORFEITURE UNDER REVENUE LAWS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 28, 1824.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of William Dixon and James Dixon, reported:

That, in the year 1812, William Dixon was a subject of Great Britain, and resided in Liverpool, and James Dixon was a citizen of the United States, residing in Savannah, and, at that time, were copartners in trade, the former conducting the business in Liverpool, and the latter at Savannah.

That in the month of July, 1812, after the repeal of the British Orders in Council, the house of the petitioners in Liverpool shipped to their house in Savannah, by the ship Thomas Gibbons, on account of the said partnership, a quantity of British merchandise, appraised to the value of twenty-one thousand five hundred and forty-seven pounds seventeen shillings and seven pence sterling.

The petitioners also state that the said merchandise was the proceeds of United States produce, previously consigned to the petitioners' house in Liverpool by their house in Savannah, and was less than the share of James Dixon, the American partner, in the funds of the concern then in England, and was intended as a transfer of so much of the funds belonging to the said James Dixon from England to the United States.

It further appears that intelligence of the declaration of war by the United States against Great Britain was received at Liverpool before the departure of the said ship and merchandise; but the petitioners, relying upon the magnanimity of the American Government, and expecting the war to cease when the repeal of the British Orders in Council should be known in the United States, determined to despatch the said ship. That, for this purpose, a British license, to protect the ship from British capture, was procured, and she sailed from Liverpool for Savannah on the 16th of August, 1812. On the 12th of October, 1812, she was captured, off Tybee light-house, within a few miles of the land, by the American privateer Atlas.

Upon the arrival of the vessel in the harbor of Savannah, she, together with the cargo, was seized by the Collector of the port, and libelled for a violation of the non-importation act. Proceedings were also instituted in behalf of the captors.

It appears that, in the course of these proceedings, a moiety of the property was restored to James Dixon, the American partner, and the other moiety, the supposed share of the British partner, condemned for a violation of the non-importation law, and distributed pursuant to the provisions of the laws of the United States.

The libel in behalf of the captors was dismissed, the vessel and cargo decreed not to be prize of war, and the capture to be consequently illegal.

Upon this case the petitioners pray a refunditure of so much of the proceeds of the said cargo as was paid into the Treasury of the United States as the share of the Government, amounting to the sum of $28,885 95.

By an act of Congress, passed the 2d of January, 1813, it is provided that, in all cases where goods, wares, and merchandise, owned by a citizen of the United States, have been imported into the United States from Great Britain, and which were shipped on board vessels which departed therefrom between the 23d of June and the 15th of September, 1812, wherein it should be proved, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the said goods, at the time of the shipment, were, bona fide, owned by a citizen of the United States, and shipped and did depart from a British port between the 23d of June and the 15th of September, 1812, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to remit such forfeiture upon the payment of the duties to which the merchandise would have been liable if it had been legally imported; provided the goods were not purchased after the existence of the war was known.

It does not appear that any application was made to the Secretary of the Treasury in this case under the above law; and the committee presume that, as the share of the American partner was restored, the interest of the British subject in the other moiety was not embraced by its provisions, and the Secretary of the Treasury would have had no authority to grant any remission.

The committee suppose that this case depends upon the expediency of extending the system of remission to the forfeiture of British property shipped with a full knowledge of the existence of the war. They have no proof that this shipment was not made on the joint account of the partnership, and they apprehend that the American partner cannot be charged with the loss occasioned by the act of the British shipper.

The object of the remitting acts was merely to enable American citizens to bring to the United States their bona fide property, purchased in England before the knowledge of the war, but it never designed to extend similar privileges to British subjects; and there is no reason why a British subject, residing in England, should be entitled to greater advantages, in regard to his own interest, because he should happen to be connected in trade with an American citizen. Such a principle, it is believed, would violate the whole spirit and policy of the restrictive system. The committee are not aware that any such case has been relieved.

If there had been a settlement of the affairs of the concern, and it had fallen in debt to the American partner, for which the shipment in question had been made, the case of the petitioners would probably fall within the equity of the act before adverted to; but no such pretension has been proved in this case; and, so far as the committee can derive any information from the petition referred to them, the refunditure now claimed is for the mutual benefit and interest of both the American and British partner.

The committee, therefore, recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

18TH CONGRESS.]

No. 695.

[1ST SESSION.]

REMONSTRANCE AGAINST INCREASE OF DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 9, 1824.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The remonstrance of merchants, manufacturers, mechanics, and others, of Boston, against the passage of an act to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports.

The undersigned, merchants and manufacturers of Boston and its vicinity, impressed with a firm conviction that the system of impost duties contemplated in the bill to amend the tariff, if carried into effect, cannot but be productive of consequences equally important and injurious to all the various interests of the United States, and at no distant period to the manufacturing interest itself, would be wanting in duty to themselves, and in a proper regard to the interests of other classes of their fellow-citizens, like them depending on the immediate or indirect operations of foreign commerce for a support, were they to omit the renewed expressions of their decided disapprobation of the principles, as well as details, of the bill under consideration. Happily, at the present time, many intelligent individuals of the manufacturing class coincide with the undersigned in the opinion that excessive duties on foreign articles will be a heavy burden on the agricultural, commercial, and mechanic interests, and, indeed, on every class of consumers, without any equivalent benefit to manufacturers; and, as we believe, to the injury, and perhaps destruction, of those very branches of industry which it is the avowed design of the patrons of the bill to encourage and protect.

The undersigned will not occupy the time of Congress by endeavoring to support their opinion either on acknowledged principles of public economy, or by elaborate illustrations of probable effects. The former are no doubt familiar to those who compose the concentrated wisdom of our nation, and the latter have been ably and frequently presented to them and the public, but in no shape, as the undersigned believe, more ably or lucidly than in the memorial of merchants and others of this place, interested in commerce and agriculture, presented to your honorable body in the session of 1820 and 1821. This presents, in a candid and intelligent manner, the reasons which then, as well as now, induce the undersigned respectfully to remonstrate against "the passage of the bill to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports, the tariff of duty it proposes, and the principles on which it is avowedly founded, as having a tendency, however different may be the motives of those who recommend them, to diminish the industry, impede the prosperity, and corrupt the morals of the people."

[To be annexed to the remonstrance of sundry merchants, manufacturers, and others, of the city of Boston, &c., against the bill to amend the several acts imposing duties on imports and tonnage.]

Report of the Committee of Merchants and others, of Boston, on the Tariff.

At a meeting of merchants and others, interested in the prosperity of commerce and agriculture, at Boston, on the 17th day of August, to take into consideration a communication from the Chamber of Commerce at Philadelphia on the tariff recommended to Congress at its last session, the following persons were chosen a committee to adopt such measures in relation to the subject as they should deem expedient:

Messrs. William Gray,	Messrs. Lot Wheelwright,
James Perkins,	Caleb Loring,
John Dorr,	Samuel A. Welles,
Nathaniel Goddard,	George Bond,
Benjamin Rich,	George Hallet,
Israel Thorndike, jr.,	Samuel P. Gardner,
William Shimmin,	Josiah Knapp,
Thomas W. Ward,	Isaac Winslow,
William Harris,	Winslow Lewis,
Daniel Webster,	Thomas Wigglesworth,
Nathan Appleton,	John Cotton,
Abbott Lawrence,	John Parker,
Joseph Sewall,	William Sturgis.
Jonathan Phillips,

The meeting was then adjourned to the 2d day of October, at which time delegates from the principal seaports of Massachusetts, and farmers, manufacturers, and all others feeling an interest in the subject, were invited to attend.

The committee appointed seven of their number, Messrs. Perkins, Gardner, Webster, Welles, Shimmin, Sturgis, and Dorr, to prepare a report and resolutions, to be submitted at the adjourned meeting.

At the general meeting in Faneuil Hall, on the 2d of October, the following report, presented by Mr. Perkins, chairman of the committee last mentioned, was accepted, and the resolutions accompanying it adopted unanimously; and it was ordered that they be printed, and a copy sent to every member of Congress from this State.

WILLIAM GRAY, *Chairman.*WILLIAM FOSTER, Jr., Secretary.

REPORT.

Your committee beg leave to report that we have examined the proposed tariff, and submit to you some remarks relating to its probable operation on the community, and to the principles on which it is professedly founded. We shall not enter into a minute discussion of its details, as the imposts which ought to be laid depend, in every case, on a variety of considerations peculiar to itself, and as we do not consider it any part of the duty assigned to us to digest a code of revenue laws. Neither shall we invite your attention particularly to the effects of the measure on commerce, because we presume you wish to have it distinctly understood that the merchants in this vicinity neither expect nor desire any peculiar favors, nor any encouragement or protection whatsoever, which is not required by the interests of the public. They were not forward, therefore, to oppose the duties recently recommended, however pernicious to themselves as individuals; believing that it was their duty to acquiesce in them, if the public good required it, and that they would not be imposed if it did not. But the influence which has been obtained by the zeal of private interest admonishes us that those whose situation and experience enable them to judge of the operation of this new system should exert themselves to diffuse such information as may tend to make its consequences rightly and generally understood. Its avowed object is to direct and control the occupations of men, by granting special privileges to those engaged in particular pursuits. This can be done (waiving the important question whether it can be done at all without violating the spirit of the Constitution) only at the expense of the community; for it is evident that legislation does not create wealth, but simply transfers it from hand to hand, and can enrich one class only by impoverishing others. It would surely be surprising that a system of restriction so unequal, and so repugnant to all sound theory, should be adopted by a free and enlightened people, at a time when the greatest statesmen of Europe, after a long trial of it, are openly acknowledging its incorrectness, and whole nations suffering and lamenting the consequences of its adoption; and when our own unexampled success, under a more liberal policy, has given the sanction of experience to the deductions of reason.

This tariff would impose on certain foreign manufactures duties professedly and effectually prohibitory; and the question involved in its adoption is not whether the consumer of those goods shall pay a higher price for them, but whether he shall be prevented from purchasing them at all; not whether the duty now levied on the importation of them shall be a little increased or diminished, but whether they shall be totally excluded. In one case this is already done. From the most accurate information, founded chiefly on official documents, it appears that, from the year 1800 to the year 1812, both inclusive, the duties received on the importation of the coarse cottons of India amounted to more than three million nine hundred and thirty-six thousand dollars. But, in 1816, the duty was raised to six and a quarter cents on every square yard, (about eighty-three and a half per cent. on their average cost,) which, added to the necessary charges, equal to twenty-seven per cent. more, has utterly excluded them, and the whole revenue once derived from this source is lost. Since the organization of our Government, there have been paid into the Treasury of the United States, from the customs alone, nearly three hundred and fifty millions of dollars, while the whole amount of internal revenue and direct taxes has been little more than thirty-four millions.

To prevent the importation of manufactures would, of course, deprive the Treasury of the impost now levied on them, and an equal sum must therefore, in order to support the necessary expenses of Government, be raised by some other direct or indirect tax on the people.

The Committee on Manufactures, who prepared the tariff, did not overlook nor deny this consequence of its adoption, and, in order to remedy it, provided that an additional impost should be laid on all articles of general consumption or necessary use which are not raised in our own country—such as spices, coffee, and many others, forming a large part of our imports. A new impost on such articles, by increasing their price, would have some tendency to diminish their consumption, and thus prevent an increase of the revenue proportionate to the increase of duty; but, making no allowance for this diminution, the additional duty on them would not nearly supply the deficiency occasioned by the loss of the imposts on manufactures. The chairman of the committee just mentioned appeared to be well aware of this fact, and declared it to be another inevitable consequence of their system that an excise should be imposed on domestic manufactures; and this, if our manufacturers are to have a monopoly secured to them, as seems to be contemplated, will be a new tax on the consumer. The first consequence, then, of excluding foreign manufactures by high duties, is to create a necessity for some other tax, equal to the whole sum now levied on them, and which will necessarily be lost by their exclusion.

Another consequence, and the only one which can benefit the American manufacturer, is to enable him to raise the price of his productions in our market, by adding to it a sum equal to the difference between the present and the proposed prohibitory duty which addition must be paid entirely by domestic consumers. No duty could enable him to manufacture for exportation; for, if he cannot at home enter into competition with foreigners, without being protected by an impost, it is obvious that he cannot rival them abroad, where there is no such discrimination in his favor, and where he is burdened, as well as they, with the expense of transportation. Duties imposed for the mere purpose of revenue give an advantage equal to their whole amount to our manufactures; but, by increasing them till they become prohibitory, the people suffer a two-fold injury—the price of the goods prohibited is raised, and the revenue formerly collected from them is lost. With the sole motive, then, of empowering the manufacturer to raise his price, and thus tax the public in this way for his emolument, another tax, from which he can derive no advantage, is at once to be laid on all articles of general use which we cannot produce, and hereafter still a third, either on the consumption of domestic manufactures, or directly on property and labor. We should not object to any burden, equally apportioned, to raise the revenue necessary for administering the Government; but to impose one tax for no earthly purpose but to facilitate the imposition of another seems to us to be a policy as whimsical as it is alarming.

The burden occasioned by most of the particular duties recommended would fall on all the community, but chiefly on those least able to bear it. In this country the poor man, personally, consumes nearly as much tea, sugar, and coffee, as the rich; and though his clothing is not so fine, yet its cost constitutes a much greater proportion of his whole expenses. Besides, this new tariff is so nicely adjusted as to lay a far heavier impost on coarse cottons and linens than on those of finer texture. It is obvious that an additional duty can have no effect, except in so far as it increases the price or diminishes the quantity here of the foreign merchandise on which it is imposed, and, consequently, can be of no service to any manufacturers but those with whose productions this merchandise now actually comes into competition in our own market. All who have no foreign rivals here at present, who now carry on their business successfully, and supply the country with the fruits of their labor, can derive no advantage, direct or indirect, from a further duty on such articles as they manufacture, since they have already the exclusive possession of the market, and their prices are regulated, not by foreign, but by domestic competition. An additional impost on such articles as are made by these would be merely nominal, and have no effect, unless it were to blind them to their true interests, and induce them, by the offer of a protection at once needless and futile, to bear, together with the rest of the community, a great and real burden, for the sole benefit of those classes who now have foreign competitors. Some manufacturers, as those of chocolate and refined sugar, would be greatly injured; and those of cordage, and some of iron, and distillers of molasses, still more so, by the duties proposed to be laid on the raw materials of their manufactures, the price of which must thus be increased and their consumption lessened. The impost on iron is particularly injurious to industry. It is required for the machines of manufacturers themselves, for all the implements of agriculture, and all the tools of the mechanic arts; and nails, of which six thousand tons are annually made, and chiefly from foreign iron, are one of the very few of our manufactures now actually exported. A far greater number of men is employed in converting this material into articles of use than in extracting it from the ore; and surely the interests of the many ought not to be sacrificed to that of the few. The contemplated excise on domestic manufactures will not be confined to those to which alone this tariff affords a real and efficient protection, but extended to all. Let the manufacturers, then, who now carry on their business untaxed, and those who buy their productions, look to the end, and mark the double effect of such excise, in at once raising the cost and diminishing the consumption of them.

The manufacturers above mentioned must immediately suffer, together with farmers and all other citizens, the double burden of a new tax, to supply the deficiency of the revenue, and an increase in the price of clothing, and of those little, innocent, social luxuries which have hitherto been so generally enjoyed among us; and for whose emolument? Principally, in effect, for that of the manufacturers of cotton, woolen, iron ore, and glass—men whose business requires considerable capital. We have no means of determining, exactly, the number of workmen engaged in these pursuits, but those employed on cotton are far the most numerous; and the greatest establishment for working this material in America, that at Waltham—which has a capital of nearly half a million, and which makes its own machinery, and does not pay a man beyond its own walls, except the venders of its goods—requires only two hundred and sixty persons, men, women and children, to carry on its business. But, however the number thus employed be estimated, it is manifest that it must bear so small a proportion to our population that the rate of wages throughout the country would not be perceptibly increased, and therefore these workmen themselves would receive no more than the present price of labor. The gain, then, would accrue to the capitalists who own the factories, and to them alone.

Thus, according to this new scheme, a great, certain, and immediate burden falls on the public, most heavily on the poorer classes, and redounds to the exclusive emolument of a few, and those few the wealthy. Surely such a scheme can only be justified by showing, clearly, that some definite national benefit will ultimately result from it, fully equal to the present burden; and its advocates attempt to do this by urging, in the first place, that it is necessary for national independence. How is it necessary for national independence? In the elaborate defence of the system, by the chairman of the committee who invented it, we find it repeatedly asserted, that “we must command our own consumption.”<sup>c</sup> Happily for us, this phrase is interpreted in the same speech; and it means, as it seems, that we must have neither imposts nor importation—in plain English, that we must use nothing but our own productions.

In a certain sense we may be said to depend on foreign nations for whatever we receive from them. But they equally depend on us for the equivalent which we pay them for it, and this dependence is voluntary and mutual. Nor is it any derogation from national dignity. A sovereign who receives tribute from a foreign country depends on it for that tribute; yet he is not, therefore, its servant, but its master. If one country produces only labor, and exports only manufactures, and another, in return for these, provides it with the raw materials composing them, the former may, with most propriety, be called dependent; for, since every country has necessarily the capacity to labor in proportion to its population, that which produces the raw material may manufacture it whenever it chooses to do so; but the ability of the other to labor would be worthless if it could not procure the material to which that labor may be applied. The exchange of raw cotton, then, for manufactures makes Europe dependent on America, rather than America on Europe. Ask the planter of the south which of the two is the dependent, himself or the Manchester spinner!

The farmer is the most independent man, because he produces the means of subsistence and the materials for labor; and the nation which does this holds, like him, in its own hands, the means of commanding the exertions of others. The capacity of providing for our own support constitutes independence, and this is not diminished by exchanging our superfluous productions for those of other countries. If the goods we receive are comforts, or mere luxuries, we can subsist without them; but this is no reason for depriving ourselves of them unnecessarily. If they are manufactures of materials raised by us, and we might by prohibiting their importation make them ourselves, at a higher price than they actually cost us, is it not equally true that, if the hostility of the nation which supplies us, or any other cause, should prevent their importation hereafter, we may make them at the same additional expense then? If so, we are not dependent. And why should we assume a burden now because it may fall on us hereafter? Or how does it remedy a future and contingent evil to make it immediate and certain?

A wise nation, indeed, will not permit itself to be surprised by hostilities without the means of defence, and will, beforehand, therefore, accumulate those munitions which are little needed in peace but immediately requisite in war, or, at least, provide the means of obtaining them. Food and clothing are also necessary for subsistence, and, of course, for defence; but the demand for these being constant at all times, affords, of itself, a constant encouragement to their production without the special aid of Government. With regard to all the means of defence, however, it is enough for independence and security if we have the ability to produce or procure them when they are wanted. As to munitions of war, they should receive whatever encouragement is necessary; as to food, we are burdened with it; as to clothing, the very proposal to prohibit immediately the importation of foreign manufactures used for this purpose implies, of itself, a conviction that we are already competent to supply all our wants. The quantity of naval stores required in peace being even greater than in war, the stock on hand for commercial purposes would, on a sudden eruption of hostilities, afford the means of protection until we could raise them. In thus considering the subject as it affects our means of defence, we have taken the case assumed by manufacturers as most favorable to their pretensions—that of a war with all mankind. It is obvious that, if there were any neutrals, most of our wants would be supplied as certainly, though not as cheaply, as at present. We have found this to be true in our own wars, and all history confirms it.

But so far would the enormous tax proposed on hemp and iron be from contributing to national independence that it would strike a severe blow at our freedom and security. By the existing treaty American and British ships are placed on the same footing; and it is a subject of gratulation that our countrymen now sustain the competition. The imposition of new and heavy burdens on our own shipping would tend to give the British the monopoly of our trade and to make them our sole carriers. When this is accomplished there will be no lack of orders in council to regulate the trade of America, and the dependence which we shall suffer, unlike that of which we now complain, will be neither mutual, voluntary, nor terminable.

Another favorite phrase of the advocates of this system is, that it would promote national industry. What is national industry but the industry of individuals? And what encourages it like high wages? And what sustains the price of wages but the demand for labor? And what tends so much to increase and support this demand as the employment of our whole capital in those pursuits in which the most labor is required? The occupations, then, in which a given capital demands and maintains the greatest quantity of human labor are most promotive of industry; and this is eminently true in a country where everything else is more abundant than capital.

The price of manufactures involves the cost of the raw material, the sum paid the owner of the capital employed in working it, and the wages of the workmen. It is when the last are greatest in proportion to the whole price that industry is best paid and most encouraged. Machines for multiplying the effects of labor may, indeed, produce a great profit, but it accrues to the owners of them, not to those employed in managing them. Should any one construct a machine so perfect that it would enable a single hand, by merely turning a crank, to supply the country with broadcloth, the possessor of this curious piece of mechanism would certainly make a fortune; but the laborer who put it in motion would receive not a cent more than the regular wages for turning a crank. The occupations in which much money is laid out for complicated machinery, for lands, buildings, and fixtures, to accumulate the raw material, or the means of converting it to use, or to keep on hand a great quantity of the articles manufactured, so as to dispose of them most beneficially in the market, may afford a profitable investment for capital, but have no exclusive nor peculiar tendency to increase the price or the amount of labor. The factory at Waltham tends to raise wages no more than every other establishment, however small its capital, which employs the same number of hands; and it is difficult to conceive a case in which industry or its reward can be increased by turning any number of men from one pursuit to another. The machines and implements for the aid of labor, which can be profitably employed with a very small capital, such as the tools of the mechanic, are most useful to the poor; those which require a large capital, to the rich; the former tend to diffuse wealth, the latter to concentrate it. Which is most consonant to our institutions and character?

Those employments, such as household manufactures, which do not interfere with other business, but only occupy its intervals, do indeed increase the quantity of industry in a country. But these need the least encouragement. The labor devoted to them is an absolute gain to the individual as well as to the public, and may be deemed to cost him nothing; hence, he is in no danger from the competition of those who must derive the means of support, however small, from making similar articles. The same may be said of those which afford occupation to children, and to the other classes who now subsist with little or no occupation. The subsistence of these persons being already provided for, their wages in such new employment would be clear profit. They can really afford to work for nothing, and will be induced to do so for next to nothing.

It is incumbent on those who would give aid to one class of men to be satisfied, by clear proof, that they shall not materially injure another class who deserve, at least, protection. In the year 1810 the United States possessed 1,428,728 tons of shipping; and, as one seaman is required, on an average, for every twenty tons, more than 71,000 men must have been employed in that capacity. For every hundred tons, four tons of iron are consumed, the price of working which is four cents a pound; hence, the very labor of the blacksmith on the iron used in constructing those vessels, independently of subsequent repairs, was worth above four millions and a half of dollars. Among how many was this divided? The ship carpenters, valuing their labor at ten dollars a ton, one-third less than has sometimes been paid, received, for building these vessels, more than fourteen millions of dollars. It is a given rule that, for every ton of shipping, a ton of timber is necessary; and for this, at nine dollars a ton, the farmer must have received nearly thirteen millions.

The average duration of our vessels, including losses at sea, is estimated, by competent judges, to be seven years. But suppose it to be ten; then, in order to maintain the same quantity of shipping, these supplies must, every ten years, be repeated; and this in addition to the whole amount necessary for repairs. Estimate the number of men thus supported, and add to them the ship joiners, the boat builders, the mast-makers, the block and pump makers, the painters, glaziers, and plumbers, the anchor smiths, the coppersmiths, the carvers, sail-makers, riggers, rope-makers, the bakers of ship bread, the butchers and packers of provisions, the grocers, ship chandlers, tallow chandlers, the coopers, the lightermen, the truckmen, the stevedores and laborers, the gunsmiths, the mathematical instrument makers, the wharfingers, the owners of wharves and warehouses, and all others who derive a subsistence from navigation, and their wives and children, and all dependent on them, and see how wide a ruin would follow the attempt to do what we are pleased to call "commanding our own consumption."

The coasting trade, it may be said, will be left. But to what will this amount, after deducting all that portion of it which is employed in transmitting the goods received from other countries, or those destined to them, and in the vast traffic which ultimately results from foreign commerce?

It has been asserted that this new project will be beneficial to agriculture; that, though the farmer will pay a higher price for all he buys, and be taxed more than ever for the support of the Government, yet that he will be compensated for this by the creation of another or better market for the produce of the soil. Is this true? That produce consists of articles of food, or of the raw materials of manufactures. How is it possible that manufactures should extend the demand for food? Surely it will not be pretended, in spite of our own experience, and that of all mankind, that manufacturing countries increase most rapidly in population, or that they require greater means of subsistence than others. The farmer feeds all the inhabitants of the country now, and here he can do no more. Since, then, the demand for food cannot be increased, the price can be raised only by diminishing the supply. If many now engaged in cultivating the soil are forced to quit the pursuit, the quantity of food raised may become less, and the price, of course, greater. Thus, farmers are to be driven from their present employment, to seek subsistence in another, and fields now under culture and laden with plenty are to be abandoned to desolation; and all this for the extension and encouragement of agriculture. Yet, though the domestic market for food could not thus be increased, the foreign market might and would be diminished; for we cannot afford to export our productions to other countries, unless we will take what they can give us in return. Now, our farmer understands very well that a foreign demand for his produce benefits him, by advancing the price, not only of that which is actually exported, but of the whole quantity raised; he obtains more money for all that he sells, whether it is to be consumed at home or abroad.

The establishment of domestic manufactures would, indeed, create a demand at home for the materials of which they are composed, but, at the same time, would lessen the foreign demand to the same extent; because the nation which now supplies us would cease to want that quantity of the raw material which it converts into manufactures for our market. And, besides, to increase the price of such manufactures tends to diminish their consumption, and, consequently, the demand for them and for their materials. It is the direct interest of the farmer that the raw materials raised by him should be manufactured as cheaply as possible, in order to increase this consumption and demand. It is also his direct interest, for this reason: that the smaller the portion of the price paid by the consumer, which the manufacturer takes for his share, the larger the proportion which the cultivator receives for his. The extent to which his productions are manufactured and used is all that affects him, no matter by whom it is done or where. Some appear to imagine that our soil must always produce the same quantity, and that we have only to determine whether it shall be made use of at home or abroad. But this is not so. The productions of agriculture are created by the call for them. The existence of more grain and cotton than we actually use is only the consequence of the demand for exportation. Destroy the cause, as would be done by prohibiting importations, and what will become of the effect.

There is, however, an argument in favor of encouraging particular employments by bounties or taxes, which merits a different consideration. It has been justly urged that there may be occupations peculiarly adapted to our situation and character, and which, if once established, might be carried on here better than elsewhere, so as to afford their productions at a cheaper rate than is now paid for them; and yet habit and indolence, and the natural attachment of men to the pursuits in which they have been educated, and the immediate expense of commencing the business, and the want of that skill which only time and experience can give, and a doubt how soon or how certainly the profit will be realized, may deter individuals from engaging in these occupations, and induce them to persist in others less profitable to themselves and to the public; and that if these difficulties can be overcome by a present tax, which will be more than compensated by the reduction of prices hereafter, it is good policy and economy to impose it. On this principle encouragement has always been given by our Government to particular pursuits, and it should always be given to the full extent that this principle will warrant. By its adoption the whole subject is made a mere question of economy—of economy to consumers, who are all the people; and it becomes our duty to study not how to make manufactures dear, but how to make them, on the whole, cheap and abundant. The best and perhaps the only effectual mode of doing it is to promote competition at the lowest prices.

There is a difference in this respect between navigation and manufactures. Our ships, engaged in foreign trade, derive no advantage, even in our own market, from being near it; for all vessels must make two passages, in order to carry goods from one country to another and bring back the returns; and it makes no difference which country is the first starting place. Our ships, too, when in the ports of a foreign nation, are liable to have a tax imposed on them, which shall prevent their entering into fair competition with those of that nation in the trade between us. But our manufactures used at home (and these only are benefitted by an impost) have an advantage over all foreign goods, equal both to the expense of transporting the latter, estimated by Mr. Hamilton at between fifteen and thirty per cent., and to the duty imposed on their importation here for the purpose of revenue.

Besides, no other nation can tax our manufactures so as to prevent their entering into competition with its own in our market, or can give its own any advantage over ours, but by granting a bounty on their exportation from its dominions. This bounty is never, in fact, equal to the cost of transportation and the impost here; and should it in any instance be greater, an equality would be produced by laying an additional duty, equal to the difference on importations from the single country which granted the bounty. The policy of producing equality by such means of raising prices to produce competition at high rates, when competition is useful only as it lessens them, may well be doubted. But, on any ground, by what train of reasoning can it be shown that, because a bounty is granted on the exportation of linens from England, it would promote a free and general competition to prohibit or tax those brought from Germany? Yet this is the motive assigned for imposing a duty of six cents and a quarter on every yard of German linen costing ten cents.

According to the principle above laid down, the reason for a tax, increasing the price of goods for a time, being to lessen it afterwards, and the only motive for a present monopoly, to create future competition, it follows as an invariable rule that such tax or monopoly ought never to be perpetual; for this would be sacrificing the end to the means. As the burden thus imposed on the public is certain and immediate, it follows, also, that those who call for it must show that a full equivalent will ultimately be received in the reduction of prices; otherwise, the bargain is a bad one. Again, since every benefit ought to be purchased as cheaply as possible, it follows still further that they must prove the present tax to be the smallest which is competent to effect their professed object; for all beyond this is a useless sacrifice. It is, in our opinion, an insuperable objection to the proposed bill that its advocates make no attempt to show to what the advantage which they expect will amount, or what amount of taxes is requisite for its attainment.

As a general rule, the employments which need the smallest encouragement are best fitted to our actual condition, and most conducive to our prosperity; and those which can be supported only by great bounties or taxes are shown, by that very fact, to be least adapted to our character and circumstances, and least likely to occasion a reduction of prices hereafter by sustaining a free and general competition at the lowest rates. The enterprise and activity of our citizens leave little doubt that the pursuits most appropriate to our situation will ultimately be established without any extravagant aid from Government; so that the only effect of assisting them would be to hasten their establishment. Is this an advantage worth the price we are called on to pay for it? Those who assert the fact are bound to prove it clearly.

It is only in a very clear case that this principle should be put in practice, since, in the experience of nations, the failure of such attempts has been much more frequent than their success, and has always produced mischiefs not easily remedied. The encouragement of silk manufactures in England is a source of great distress among the people and great embarrassment to the Government.

The other question is equally important. Is the immense tax proposed to be laid in favor of particular manufactures necessary for their protection? Since true economy requires the expense of protecting those articles only which become cheaper hereafter in consequence of this protection, no manufactures should be encouraged from this motive but such as can be afforded by the maker at a lower price, after the difficulties of establishing them are surmounted; and these, of course, so long as they continue to maintain the price at which they can be sold at first, afford him a profit constantly increasing. Whenever, therefore, the encouragement granted to any manufacture is sufficient to occasion its establishment and existence, its extension and the further emolument of those engaged in it may safely be left, and ought to be left, to time, skill, and industry. Can, then, the manufacturers, for whose benefit the new tariff is chiefly designed, exist under our present system? Do they in fact exist? Their zeal, activity, and almost success, in the attempt to render their fellow-citizens tributary to their wealth, seem to leave no room for such a question. The necessity of supporting cotton factories is most strongly urged. Now, the price at which the manufacturers in our vicinity can go and take the cotton from the wharf and bring it back manufactured to the warehouse is little more than the mere impost on the cotton of India, the only goods which would otherwise come into competition with it.

Though the advocates of the bill under consideration assume the name and the authority of the manufacturers of the United States, the great majority of our manufacturers would be directly and severely injured by its enactment. In this part of the country, those most deeply interested in the very pursuits to which it gives the greatest aid desire, as we believe, no further encouragement, but understand their true interests, and are well aware that exorbitant taxes imposed for their profit could not be long in operation before their effect on other manufacturers and on the community would be known and felt; the natural consequence of which would be, to cause a reaction in public opinion, and induce the people, in their indignation, to withdraw the protection now afforded to our manufacturers, and to leave them to contend at once with foreigners in our market, without any other superiority than that derived from being near the consumer, and from duties laid for the sole purpose of revenue.

We rejoice to see manufactures flourish, and deem their spontaneous growth an evidence of wealth and prosperity; but to them, and to all pursuits, the best protection is that which is permanent. The great excellence of laws, and especially of such as affect the employments of men, is stability. By this only, individuals are enabled to regulate their conduct beforehand, and to calculate the chance of success in the occupations which they may select, without danger of having the bread of their industry snatched from their mouths by nice experiments and novelties in legislation.

We therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That we have regarded with pleasure the establishment and success of manufactures among us, and consider their growth, when natural and spontaneous, and not the effect of a system of bounties and protection, as an evidence of general wealth and prosperity.

Resolved, That, relying on the ingenuity, enterprise, and skill of our fellow-citizens, we believe that all manufactures adapted to our character and circumstances will be introduced and extended, as soon and as far as will promote the public interest, without any further protection than they now receive.

Resolved, That no objection ought ever to be made to any amount of taxes, equally apportioned, and imposed for the purpose of raising revenue necessary for the support of the Government; but that taxes imposed on the people for the sole benefit of any one class of men are equally inconsistent with the principles of our Constitution and with sound policy.

Resolved, That the supposition that, until the proposed tariff or some similar measure be adopted, we are and shall be dependent on foreigners for the means of subsistence and defence, is, in our opinion, altogether fallacious and fanciful, and derogatory to the character of the nation.

Resolved, That high bounties on such domestic manufactures as are principally benefitted by that tariff favor great capitalists rather than personal industry or the owners of small capitals, and, therefore, that we do not perceive its tendency to promote national industry.

Resolved, That we are equally incapable of discovering its beneficial effects on agriculture, since the obvious consequence of its adoption would be, that the farmer must give more than he now does for all he buys, and receive less for all he sells.

Resolved, That the imposition of duties which are enormous, and deemed by a large portion of the people to be unequal and unjust, is dangerous, as it encourages the practice of smuggling.

Resolved, That, in our opinion, the proposed tariff, and the principles on which it is avowedly founded, would, if adopted, have a tendency, however different may be the motives of those who recommend them, to diminish the industry, impede the prosperity, and corrupt the morals of the people.

REMONSTRANCE AGAINST INCREASE OF DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 9, 1824.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York respectfully represents:

That, in common with their fellow-citizens in various parts of the Union who have embarked their property in commerce and navigation, your memorialists have seen with alarm and surprise, in the bill "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," commonly called the tariff bill, and now before your honorable body, principles and details which, if sanctioned by Congress and embodied into a law, will deeply affect the rights and interests, not of your memorialists only, but of almost every other class of their fellow-citizens.

With the highest respect for your honorable body, but with the plainness and sincerity becoming freemen, we beg leave to lay before you some of the numerous evils which would result from the proposed bill, should it become a law.

During the late war with Great Britain much encouragement was given by the National Legislature to the manufactures of this country; and when the war terminated, it was deemed by Congress an act of justice, as well as a measure of policy, to establish a tariff of duties which, while it should not operate severely on the other great interests of the community, would be a protection to those who had been induced to invest capital in manufacturing establishments. The tariff of 1816, which was then formed, has, with some alterations, continued to this time; and it so far fostered domestic manufactures that they soon recovered from the embarrassments which followed the great influx of foreign goods in 1815, and have since, in most cases, when managed with skill and prudence, and aided by sufficient capital, been prosperous and profitable; and we do not hesitate to assert that money vested in such establishments has yielded better returns than money employed in commerce, navigation, or agriculture. Since that tariff has been in operation, the charges on importing foreign goods, including duties and premium on exchange, have varied from forty to fifty per cent. on the first cost of those which pay ad valorem duties, and a much higher rate on those charged with specific duties: the premium to our manufactures has, consequently, been from two-fifths to one-half of the first cost of all foreign articles which come in competition with our domestic products. Though this encouragement to the industry of one class of the community is liberal almost to excess, still the other classes, confiding in the equity of the Government, and knowing that further aid was required in its fiscal concerns, have patiently acquiesced, in the full belief, however, that heavier burdens would not be imposed, unless the necessities of the nation required them.

It was supposed that this ample protection would have satisfied the manufacturing interest; but the repeated demands which have since been made show how delusive has been this expectation, and that the object aimed at and constantly kept in view is a monopoly. We ought not, and will not, charge all of this class of our fellow-citizens with this engrossing disposition. Among the manufacturers of the United States we see numbers of our wisest, most patriotic, and most deserving citizens, who carry on this branch of industry with profit to themselves and benefit to their country. Such as these wish not further duties for their own protection; they believe that sufficient encouragement has been already extended to the manufacturing class, and that the hot-bed stimulus of the proposed bill is not wanted to cherish the well-managed manufactories which now exist, or to rear up others of a similar description. Nor would we be understood to charge the mechanics of the United States with a disposition to promote laws to foster their exclusive interests; on the contrary, this numerous and respectable class of our fellow-citizens have the strongest motives to raise their voice in opposition to most of the provisions of the proposed bill. The ship builder, the carpenter, the blacksmith, the rope-maker, the dyer, the hatter, the shoemaker, the saddler, the machinist, with every other class of mechanics, and all the laboring classes of the community, are identified with the merchant and the farmer; their interests cannot be promoted by an enormous duty on hemp, iron, and wool, or by laws which discourage commerce and navigation. They are the great consumers of the country; and it cannot be supposed that a statute which adds to the price of every article of their clothing, of every agricultural implement, every tool used in their various trades, should be acceptable to them, especially if intended to give still further benefits to a class of citizens which has already received its full share of the protection and patronage of Government.

Since the establishment of the tariff of 1816, and of the few changes subsequently made, the national revenue has gone on prosperously; and, notwithstanding the universal depression of commerce in Europe and America, it has, since that period, been sufficient to provide for all the engagements and expenses of the Government, and to keep up and extend the great national institutions, and to leave a surplus in the Treasury so large, as we are informed from high authority, as to enable the Treasury Department to anticipate, by nearly twelve months, the reimbursement of many millions of the public debt.

We may fairly infer, therefore, that the necessity of a greater revenue will not be among the motives to pass the bill in question.

Your memorialists have always believed that the true and legitimate object of taxation is revenue, and that the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, and imposts," which is given to Congress by the Constitution of the United States, was not granted with the intention, nor will it bear the construction, that it may be so exercised as to cherish and elevate one class at the expense of all the other classes of our citizens. The Constitution imposes on Congress the great duty of "promoting the general welfare." To lay taxes which will operate as prohibitions and restrictions on trade, which will promote exclusive interests at the national expense, which imposes heavy burdens on the many, and gives to the few the benefits of a monopoly, cannot be consistent with that sacred duty. Nor can we believe that the general welfare will be promoted by attempts to regulate the industry of individuals, by forcing them out of employments in which they have acquired skill and experience, into others of which they are ignorant; or by laws inevitably leading to illicit trade and infractions of the revenue.

Popular sentiment with regard to evasions of the revenue laws has hitherto been on the side of Government, and the moral feeling of the people has been a greater security to the collection of the revenue than all the oaths and regulations of the custom-houses; establish prohibitory or extravagant duties, and the sense of injury which would arise from the belief that the burden is laid to promote a particular interest, superadded to the desire to profit by illicit traffic, would enlist public opinion in favor of the contraband dealer, and he would enjoy from a large portion of the community a degree of countenance, sympathy, and even protection, which he would now look for in vain. Should this change of popular sentiment take place, where, it may be asked, is the security of the revenue? Would even a Navy along our immense line of seacoast be a sufficient protection? We may guard against smuggling in the immediate vicinity of our principal ports, but what is to prevent it on our northern frontier, and in our numerous bays and inlets from Maine to Florida? Besides the diminution of the revenue which would arise from smuggling, there would be a still greater reduction in consequence of the enormous duties contemplated by the proposed bill. All the lower-priced cotton goods, flannels, and other coarse woollens, hemp, iron, alum, copperas, guns, most of the enumerated articles of hardware, and many other articles which now pay to the Treasury large sums in duties, would either cease to be lawfully imported, or would be brought into the country in small quantities; and the Government would have to resort to some mode of taxation bearing upon every part of the community, in order to supply the deficiency occasioned by exclusive encouragement to a particular interest.

The revenue would also decrease from a general decrease of commerce and navigation. If we prohibit or extravagantly tax foreign productions they cannot be imported into our country; and if we do not buy from other nations what they have to sell and what we want, can it be expected that they will take from us our commodities? If we do not buy, we cannot sell: for, on the supply of mutual wants is founded all the intercourse and all the commerce of nations, and when they cease to be mutual they cease to exist. Restrictive systems first operate on commerce, then on navigation and agriculture; and when those great interests are prostrated, they necessarily bring down with them the revenues of the Government.

But, perhaps it will be said that the great increase of American manufactures will make up not only the deficiency of supply, but the deficiency of the revenue; that period may be within our prospect, although we have not yet seen its approach; whenever it does arrive, we will readily acknowledge that we have been mistaken in all the views which we have entertained, and will cheerfully yield to the manufacturing interest every encouragement which it demands.

A principle which runs through the proposed bill has particularly attracted the attention of your memorialists. That spirit of patriotism which proposes to tax the many for the benefit of a few, proposes, also, to lay the burden on the poor and to exempt the rich. Those articles which are consumed by the poorer and more laborious classes of our inhabitants are loaded with enormous duties, while those used almost exclusively by the rich are taxed at a comparatively low rate. A few instances will illustrate this position. The duties on low-priced cotton goods, on cheap flannels, and low-priced woollens, will, according to the proposed bill, be from 60 to 100 per cent.; and on low-priced guns, 140 per cent. on the first cost. These are almost exclusively used by the least wealthy part of our population; while the fine cottons which pay 25 per cent., fine broadcloths which pay 30 per cent., and elegant fowling pieces, which, by this unskilful project, will pay 6 per cent. only, are almost exclusively used by the rich.

Another feature of the bill before your honorable body is equally partial and impolitic. The Constitution of the United States was instituted, not only to "form a more perfect union," but to "establish justice" and "promote the general welfare." Hence, the burdens on the people should be as equally distributed as is possible, and laws which impose taxes having a sectional bearing ought to be carefully avoided. It is well known that in a number of the States of our Federal Union there are few or no manufactories, and that the inhabitants of those States are almost exclusively agriculturists. Is it just, is it politic; will it contribute to promote those feelings of common interest and mutual kindness on which this Union was founded, and which are its strongest cement, to lay onerous duties on the consumption of the inhabitants of those States, in order to establish great workshops in other parts of our country? If this is done, it may not be the sole evil or the least injury which the bill in question will inflict on the citizens of the south. It may lead to results which will jeopardize the value of cotton, the great staple of that section of the Union.

The bill proposes duties which are nearly, if not quite, prohibitory on most of the manufactured cotton goods which are derived from Great Britain. If this should lead to countervailing duties on the part of that nation, their bearing and consequences may be imagined from a few important facts. In 1823 there were imported into Great Britain more than 420,000 bales of cotton from the United States. During the year 1822 the manufactured cotton goods of every description imported into the United States from Great Britain, after adding 20 per cent. for wastage on manufacturing, was equal in weight to 36,444 bales of cotton, of 300 pounds each. In 1823 the quantity may amount to 40,000 bales. Great Britain is, therefore, our customer for 420,000 bales, and we are her customers for 40,000 bales. If we impose prohibitory or very heavy duties on her manufactured goods, may she not meet us by a countervailing duty on American cotton? The culture of cotton is extending in Spanish and Portuguese America, in India, and other parts of the world; and we may, by our own mistakes, raise up successful competition in the greatest staple our nation can boast of. A duty in Great Britain on American cotton, or a bounty on the cotton of her Asiatic dependencies, of two pence sterling per pound, would introduce annually into her manufactories many thousand bales of India cotton, to the exclusion of the cotton grown in the southern and western sections of the Republic.

It is painful to your memorialists to perceive that, while the nation just alluded to is beginning to see the advantages of a free commerce and the evils of restrictive laws, and her statesmen are about to form their systems of trade on the principles of true political economy, attempts are making in the United States to induce the National Government to adopt a narrow and retrograde policy, and to persuade our legislators that prohibitory regulations and laws, calculated to promote partial and exclusive interests, such as have disgraced Spain and China, are the most wise and politic. The old maxim, to sell dear and to buy cheap, is inverted; and it is now found that to pay high and to sell low is the true road to national wealth and prosperity. It was formerly believed that national industry consisted in the growing of cotton, rice, flour, tobacco, ashes, flax seed, sugar, raising of beef and pork, the building of ships, navigating them, and in the numerous trades inseparably connected with commerce; now, national industry is ingeniously construed to mean labor in manufacturing establishments.

Your memorialists readily admit that, on some articles of luxury, there may, without disadvantage, be an increase of duty, should the exigencies of the Government demand it, and that the existing tariff requires some modifications; but such modifications, to be useful, ought to be gradual, and to be founded on the wants and feelings of the various interests of the community. It is not to salutary changes that we object, but to a system of prohibition and exclusion; a system calculated to raise up one interest and to prostrate every other. We feel not the slightest hostility towards our fellow-citizens who are occupied in manufacturing; it gives us sincere pleasure to believe that they are now engaged in the most profitable branch of industry, and we hope they will continue to do well. These sentiments, while they are sincerely entertained, are at the same time perfectly consistent with the opinion that the manufacturer has no more right to the favor and protection of his Government than the farmer, the mechanic, the navigator, or the merchant.

Your memorialists fully believe that the bill now before your honorable body is unjust in its principles and injurious in its details; that it is calculated to produce unhappy effects on the interests of the great body of citizens, while it cherishes and elevates the interests of a particular part; that if it should, without material alterations, become a law, it will promote smuggling, impair the revenue, lessen confidence in Government, and prove injurious to commerce, navigation, and agriculture; and that it is contrary to the spirit of the Constitution under which we live. Sincerely impressed with the truth and importance of these opinions, we feel it to be our bounden duty to remonstrate against the said bill, and to pray your honorable body that it may not become a law of the land.

WM. BAYARD, President.

JOHN FINTARD, Secretary, New York, January 30, 1824.

NOTES.—The articles paying specific rates of duty are stated at estimated valuations.

The bill reported proposes a very considerable increase of duty on all the manufactures above enumerated; in most cases the rates are doubled; in many others they are tripled, quadrupled, and quintupled. The statement made by the Committee on Manufactures does not furnish the materials for ascertaining what rates, ad valorem, will be exacted under the proposed tariff; but, taking into view the rates specified, the minimum valuations, new specific rates, and the provision in the third section, the average rate of duties proposed on the aggregate of the above mentioned manufactures is, probably, not less than 50 or 60 per cent. ad valorem. In other words, the duties on manufactures now imported, amounting to near $26,000,000, will be doubled by the tariff proposed, should the importation be continued; and, if the duties operate as prohibitory, the revenue must be extinguished on such articles as are excluded. The statements are founded on Treasury documents.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES, January 10, 1824.

REMISSION OF DUTIES ON GOODS IMPORTED COASTWISE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 23, 1824.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Napier, Rapalye & Bennet, citizens and merchants of Charleston, South Carolina, reported:

That the petitioners state that they received a consignment of fifty boxes of sugar from St. Augustine in the month of January, 1822, then a port of the United States; that about the same time they had received another consignment from the same port of four boxes of muskets, one box of pistols, eight boxes of Havana sugar, a quantity of cigars, and other articles, on all which they had been compelled to pay duties, as if the importation had been from a foreign country; that the amount paid was $755 67, which they pray may be refunded.

It is proved by the documents accompanying the petition that the fifty boxes of sugar were imported into St. Augustine in July, 1821, by Ferdinando M. Arrendo, and consigned to Ignatio Arrendo, supercargo, with orders to deliver the sugar to Napier, Rapalye & Bennet, of Charleston. It is proved that the cigars were manufactured in St. Augustine; but there is no proof of the time when the eight boxes of sugar, four boxes of muskets, eight boxes of sulphur, and two boxes of almonds were imported, other than that the importation was prior to the delivery of St. Augustine to the United States.

It appears to your committee that the fifty boxes Havana sugar were imported between the period when St. Augustine ought to have been delivered and the day it was actually delivered, and that the importation was with a view of evading the duties payable on goods imported into the United States, and that the prayer of the petitioners, so far as relates to those fifty boxes, ought not to be granted.

The committee believe it probable that the other articles shipped by L. Rodesberg, of foreign origin, were a bona fide importation; that the cigars, being made in St. Augustine, were not liable to duty; and they report a bill for relief, so far as relates to four boxes of muskets, one box of pistols, eight boxes of sugar, three boxes cigars, eight boxes sulphur, and two boxes almonds, amounting to the sum of $219 13.

REMISSION OF DUTIES ON GOODS IMPORTED COASTWISE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 23, 1824.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Petray & Viel, merchants and citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, reported:

That the petitioners state that they received on consignment, from St. Augustine, certain sugars and brandies, on the 10th day of January, 1822, and on the 23d of January they received another consignment of sugars from the same port; that those articles had been imported into St. Augustine prior to the delivery of the Floridas by Spain to the United States, and had been reshipped to Charleston subsequent thereto; that St. Augustine being then a port of the United States, no duty could of right, they allege, or ought to have been charged on goods exported from one port of the United States and received into another; yet, that the Collector of Charleston had, by express order of the Treasury Department, compelled them to give bond for the amount of duties, as if the importation had been from a foreign country. That they had actually paid the duties, amounting to $1,039 08, rather than forfeit their credit at the custom-house; and they now pray that the same may be refunded to them.

It appears that St. Augustine was received by the proper authorities from the Spanish officer on July 10, 1821.

The documents submitted to the committee prove the following facts: That on December 18, 1821, there were shipped from St. Augustine 12 pipes of brandy, to the address of Petray & Viel, of Charleston, which brandy had been imported while St. Augustine was a Spanish port, to wit, in the month of January, 1721, being part of 65 pipes of brandy imported by A. Gray, from Bordeaux, in the French ship Edmund, the remaining 44 pipes having been sold by the said Gray, in St. Augustine, to Charles Robion, for account of the French consul in Charleston; and, by his direction, he did deliver 36 pipes thereof to P. Menard, who was the shipper of the 12 pipes in question to address of Petray & Viel. The 65 pipes arrived in St. Augustine seven months before its delivery.

The documents also prove that the same P. Menard shipped 15 barrels of sugar, at the same time, to the address of Petray & Viel, which had been imported in July into St. Augustine, whilst a Spanish port; also the property of the French consul at Charleston.

It is further proved that, on January 12, 1822, there were shipped by the same P. Menard from St. Augustine, to the address of Petray & Viel, 40 barrels of Havana sugar, which had been imported in the month of July, 1821.

It appears to your committee that the 15 barrels and 40 barrels of sugar were imported into St. Augustine between the time that port ought to have been delivered and the time it was actually delivered; that the importation had been made with a view of evading the duties imposed by the laws of the United States, and that no relief ought to be granted.

The brandy, having been imported many months prior to the delivery of St. Augustine, ought to be considered a bona fide importation; and they report a bill for the relief of Petray & Viel, so far as relates to that object.

REMONSTRANCE AGAINST INCREASE OF DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 26, 1824.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Philadelphia respectfully sheweth:

That your memorialists, on behalf of the commercial community which they represent, beg leave to interpose their respectful remonstrance against a bill now pending in the House of Representatives, entitled "A bill to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports."

The well known object of that bill—to stimulate the manufactures of the United States—and its necessary tendency, in the judgment of a large portion of this people, to depress the agriculture and commerce of the country, form the inducements of your memorialists for asking the attention of Congress.

In a free country like the United States all branches of lawful industry have a right to equal protection by the laws; there can be no inequality without favoritism, and no favoritism without injustice. The Constitution of the Government having placed all the people on the same plane, its principles cease to operate when the law elevates one portion or depresses another; and whether the equality of the citizens be disturbed by distinctions of person or of property is a matter of indifference.

That which might be a venial departure from those principles in a small community, where the whole would sympathize with the prosperity of any considerable part, becomes otherwise in a Confederation like this, whose members are large States, removed to a great distance from each other; destined, by nature, to different employments; incapable, under any legislation, of changing them; and subject, under a perverted legislation, to the extremity of distress in one State, while another is smiling in prosperity. In such a country, bounties to particular labor are bounties to particular States, which other States pay, without partaking of the benefit. The design of the Constitution, and the obligation of Congress, being to provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States, and the duty of uniformity in the laws of the Union being emphatically and repeatedly enjoined in that compact, your memorialists have no doubt that Congress will never lose sight of it, and as little that they will perceive the destruction of all practical uniformity, even by a general law, if it be made partial, by the situation, the character, and the employment of large portions of the country.

The universal opinion of well informed men has now established it as a general rule, that the greatest degree of national wealth is to be obtained by leaving every one to the unfettered use of his own labor, skill, and capital; for it is in this way that individuals, of whom nations are composed, attain to the greatest prosperity. Obvious, however, as this general truth now is, it has been long in coming to light; legislation has had its dark ages as well as letters; and certainly they have continued longer to envelop the principles of national wealth than they did to obscure the laws of science or the beauties of literature. It is to be hoped that the dawn which has tardily broken upon the world, in the department of trade, is not to be immediately overcast; and, particularly, that the clouds which are again to darken it are not to proceed from a quarter where everything else, in regard to Government, lies in the broadest light. If legislation acts upon the subject of trade, which, after all, is more safely left to the law of man's nature, by which he is incessantly stimulated to do the best for himself, and therefore for his country, it should act for the removal of impediments and restrictions, not for the creation of them. So much more unerring, however, is this law of man's nature than any political regulation, that it has been deemed the wisest course to abstain from public enactments altogether, and to leave the hive to the industry and instinct of its laborers, without attempting to direct which cell shall be first filled, or to narrow the passage to one, or to enlarge it to another, more than the wisdom of the laborers shall each for himself provide.

Whatever interference with the general freedom of trade is necessary for the purposes of revenue, and, still further, whatever provisions have justly for their object to sustain the Government itself, by enabling it to withstand the shock of war—and, with this view, to promote within its own bosom the necessary resources for such a trial—all communities of men must submit to, and will submit to cheerfully. Laws enacted for these purposes are necessary exceptions to the general rule—not exceptions to its truth, for it is true without exception—but exceptions to its application; they are the price which nations pay for their existence as such; they tend to diminish the production of wealth, but they do what, in every condition of the world, has been found as useful as to produce, namely, to secure the product. But, beyond this, the danger of legislative interference with trade becomes extreme. Be the wisdom, and impartiality, and foresight of the legislature what they may, they are at no time, and under no circumstances, perfectly adequate to the task. The subject is beyond the scope of human intelligence, except when it is individually and personally applied to that limited space within which the individual moves; and, in this particular, trade differs little from the thousand other interests of the great family which it is the ordinance of Heaven should be wrought out by the separate wisdom and exertions of its members, with scarcely a consciousness how the work is produced, and with an utter inability on their parts to contrive the result beforehand.

The practice of no foreign nation leads, as your memorialists submit, to a different conclusion. England has grown rich in spite of her restriction upon trade, and not by means of them; her wisest statesmen are desirous of removing them, and can trace, with unerring certainty, to their operation a large part of the oppression under which the fundamental interest of that nation languishes, and is doomed to languish. But the fetters have entered into her flesh, and they cannot be removed without tearing away the flesh with them. Does the history of England, with the light of the present day, furnish an argument to the United States for embarking in the same career of bounties, prohibitions, and excises? England is the great example of their mischief. She is emphatically the example of all that individual skill, enterprise, and intelligence can achieve for the production of wealth, and of all that perverted legislation can do to make it fruitless of national happiness. Her wisdom has perhaps been developed too late for her own good; it may possibly be not too late for us.

It is, therefore, the sentiment of your memorialists, which they beg leave respectfully to press upon Congress, that, beyond the limits of a fair resort to trade for the purposes of revenue, and the case of public necessity, or high public exigency, to prepare the country for the event of war, restrictive legislation upon trade, whether it be in the shape of prohibitions of one branch, or bounties to another, are eminently dangerous, and, to a community as extensive and diversified as this, severely unequal.

In submitting to Congress their remarks upon the bill in question, your memorialists will not touch upon the controversy—upon which more has been written than has been understood—concerning the comparative value of the application of capital in different ways. The wealth of a nation is the combined result of its application in every way in which private interest is promoted by applying it. They are sincere well-wishers to the manufactures of this country. They will always be happy to see them prosper under that due prosecution of them to which individual skill and capital, in the present state of the law, are perfectly competent. If they are not desirous of seeing them suddenly enlarged by the aid of the new tariff, it is, in part, because the benefit to the manufacturers themselves is by no means so necessary a consequence as is supposed; but it is principally, no doubt, because your memorialists are of opinion that such a tariff is not wanted for the purposes of revenue, nor for the existing manufactures of the country; and, above all, because its influence will be pernicious to the commerce and to the agriculture of the nation, both of which are entitled to the equal protection of Congress.

It is not wanted for the purposes of revenue. This is almost the only undisputed point among the various topics which are connected with the bill. It is frankly conceded by its friends that, if passed into a law, it must diminish the revenue derived from imposts, and that, from some other quarter, the Government must make up the loss. So far, therefore, its opponents go upon conceded ground; and almost the only ground on which legislation, in regard to trade, is safe, is thus given up. Your honorable bodies will then be pledged, by the enactment of this law, to resort to that mode of raising revenue to which this people have been uniformly opposed, and to which they may be more justly opposed hereafter than heretofore. If the extent of duty prescribed by the tariff be essential to protect the manufacturer, and an excise be laid upon the manufacture equal to the duty which is lost, it seems to follow, necessarily, that the consumer must hereafter pay both the duty and the excise, one of which will remain in the pocket of the manufacturer, and the other, after an infinity of deductions for collection, reach the public Treasury.

The tariff is not wanted for the existing manufactures of the country. Under laws which, from time to time, have been passed for their aid, all of them operating, nevertheless, as restrictions upon commerce and a tax upon the cultivator and consumer, they have prospered, and now prosper. How little they partake of the evils under which the commerce and agriculture of the country now suffer, need not be remarked. It is at present the most flourishing branch of American industry. If there are exceptions, they are the consequence of the bounty heretofore given by law, which has tempted into the business persons who have not the capital, nor the skill, nor the economy, to pursue the business with profit. Something more than public bounty is necessary to the gainful prosecution of trade of any kind. Habits of close attention to business; skill in the application of all the known processes; genius in the invention of newer ones less costly or more efficient; vigilance in detecting and providing for the wants and caprices of the consumer; and, above all, frugality in expenditure; these are indispensable to thrift in any trade; and how much they melt away under the sunshine of legislative favor, or, rather, how often this sunshine warms into temporary animation those to whom it cannot give vigor for the constant struggles of trade, let those say who have watched the operation of bounty laws in Europe. If the existing bounty be not sufficient to protect American manufactures, what amount will do it? They are already encouraged by a duty on cotton goods of 25 per cent., with a minimum estimate for the basis of the duty of 25 cents per square yard, which, on cotton goods, similar to those manufactured in this country, amounts from 35 to 70 per cent. on the cost; of 25 per cent. on cotton twist; of 20 per cent. on cutlery and hardware; of 30 per cent. on cut glass; 20 per cent. on plain glass; and upwards of 20 per cent. on window glass; of 15 dollars per ton on Russia and Swedish iron, in bars and bolts; of 30 dollars per ton on rolled bars and bolts; and of 50 dollars per ton on hoop, sheet, and rod iron; of 20 per cent. on spades and shovels; of 30 per cent. on paper and paper-hangings; of 25 per cent. on woolen goods; and of 30 per cent. on manufactures of leather; besides all the advantage arising from the charges on the foreign articles, from inland carriage, shipping expenses, freight, insurance, and exchange; amounting, in the articles of Swedish iron, to about 75 per cent. of its cost at the mines.

The perfectly well known prosperity of some of the manufacturing establishments of this country is, however, a better argument than any derived from the amount of duty and charges on the foreign fabric; for if, to refer to one case alone, a joint stock company in the vicinity of Boston is, and for some time past has been, able to make a dividend of annual profits exceeding twice or three times the ordinary interest of money, maintaining and improving its capital at the same time, where is the necessity for further aid? Do others want their skill? Then it is skill that is wanted and not public bounty. Are others deficient in their vigilance, their economy, their activity? Let these be acquired, and they will abundantly supply the place of a new tariff. Is capital wanting? How does this square with the allegation that capital is lying dead to an immense amount because it cannot be employed? What is done so regularly by one manufacturer may be done, with similar means, by more; and the means are not to be given by the law, but by the manufacturer.

The influence of the tariff will be pernicious to the commerce of the country. This branch of industry has confessedly suffered more than any other by the events of recent years; it has borne its disasters patiently; they have been the inevitable consequences of events which, although caused by man, man has neither by action nor legislation been able to prevent, and scarcely to mitigate. It is just now creeping again into life; and what is to be the effects of the new tariff? The effect is morally certain; so much so as almost to infer the intention in those who promote the cause. It is to paralyze and deaden by one blow that portion of the commercial capital of this country which is employed in the purchase, importation, and distribution of all that the new tariff shall exclude from the country; the ships which are built and navigated for its carriage; the numerous artisans who are employed in their equipment; the seamen who man them, and the fixed capital invested in wharves, warehouses, and other property, created as facilities to trade. Your honorable bodies will not look for a detail of these effects in a memorial. It has already been given to the public in various forms, and shown to be of immense magnitude. No cure, no alleviation is suggested for this. One arm of the nation will either be cut off, or maimed forever, under the vain expectation of promoting a better circulation in the other.

But, above all, will the influence of the new tariff be prejudicial to the interest of the agricultural States? This interest is one with which your memorialists may be thought to have no intimate concern, since their personal relations are exclusively with commerce; but the wealth, the harmony, the duration of this great Republic are interesting to all its citizens; and they who wish, as your memorialists do, that it may be perpetual, must wish to see it administered upon principles of impartial justice to all, by which alone its perpetuity can be secured. What will be the effect of a prohibition of foreign merchandise as extensive as that now to be effected but an immediate reduction in value of the labor and capital of the cultivator to the whole extent of the increased price that he must give for the American manufacture? The evil to him is without compensation. The value of his crops he loses precisely to the extent in which the manufacturer gains. He has no means of warding off or breaking the blow. His capital is inconvertible; it is fixed forever in the one employment of agriculture. He cannot participate in the golden harvest of manufactures, if it is to be a golden harvest. His habits, his situation, his working hands are all unfit for the loom and the spindle. He has heretofore sold for as much as he could, and bought for as little as he could, and at such markets as he pleased, in the enjoyment of that liberty which was the great end of the Constitution. He is hereafter to buy in one market only, at such prices as a market without foreign competition will charge; and he may sell as he can, when foreign nations shall act upon the principle of taking no more from us than we do from them.

Your memorialists have found themselves unable to assent to the reasoning by which the evils of the non-importation system are obviated. They cannot conceive that it is for the interest of this community to give more for an American fabric than for one that is made abroad; to pay a higher price for labor here than they can purchase it for elsewhere. They cannot believe that the effect of the tariff is to raise the price only for a short time, and then to bring it down forever below its former range. There is no experience to justify the assertion. The reduction of low-priced cotton since the last tariff is well explained by other circumstances—the fall of the raw material, the diminution of the price of labor, improvements in machinery, stagnation of trade. And are not the manufacturers asking, by this very bill, for an increase of duty on the cottons with which it is said they can compete with Great Britain in a foreign market? The history of our duty laws, since the adoption of the Constitution, shows that the aid of the tariff has been constantly asked by the manufacturers, and never given back. The duty on cotton goods, which, in 1790, was five per cent., in 1798 and 1800 became 12½; in 1804, by the Mediterranean duty, 15; in 1816 and 1818, after the war duties were at an end, 25 per cent., with a minimum valuation of 25 cents the square yard; and now the proposition is to impose a duty of 25 per cent., with a minimum valuation of 35 cents the square yard. Certainly this has not the appearance of a temporary arrangement to give American manufactures the opportunity for development. When have the manufacturers, here or in England, been contented or able to part with a bounty which the law has once given them?

Your memorialists are also unable to comprehend how the country is to be benefitted by enticing into manufactures that capital which it is said now lies unemployed. What difference is it to the country whether the capital lies unemployed, or its employment is paid for by an additional charge upon the consumer? If it is unemployed, the capitalist bears the loss; if it is employed in manufactures which are sold at an enhanced price, the consumer bears the loss. In the one case, the capitalist loses his interest; in the other, the consumer pays it, by paying just so much more than he would have paid if the capital had been unemployed, and he had purchased at a foreign market. The country is in no respect a gainer by the employment. It is not intended by your memorialists to say that there is not much unemployed capital in the country. Much of it, however, is of a kind that cannot be converted into manufactures, and that part which can, can only be converted by that slow and healthful absorption which is made from day to day in a system that is left to the care of nature.

But if manufactures are to attract to themselves the capital which now lies unemployed, your memorialists would ask what is to be the fate of that capital now employed in commerce, and which the tariff is to displace? It certainly is not within the contemplated effects of the tariff to increase the consumption of manufactures by increasing their price. The quantity will, at all events, be no greater than heretofore; and, if this shall be the case, what the new manufactures take up the present commerce must give out, with this disadvantage, that much of what it gives out must be lost, because it cannot be converted into anything else.

So plain are these consequences, in the apprehension of your memorialists, that they cannot but presume they are in the contemplation of those who espouse the new tariff, and that it is intended, by this portentous bill, to change the relations of the United States with the whole world; to compel her to manufacture all she consumes; to depend for nothing upon a foreign country which it is physically possible for her to make, and to withdraw her sanction from those mutual relations of dependence and exchange upon which the refinement and the happiness of the world have been heretofore supposed to depend. If this shall be the work of the nation, acting without the control or guidance of the law, it may then be inferred to be the best thing for the nation; but, under the control of the law, your memorialists confidently believe that this effect will never be produced.

They cannot believe that commerce and agriculture are to sink into insignificance, and that manufactures, like Aaron's rod, are to swallow them both up.

If this unsocial independence is to become the idol of the United States, it is worthy of consideration how far foreign powers, and particularly Great Britain, may think it expedient to practice upon the same principle. If we take nothing from her, she may take nothing from us. She will certainly take nothing from us if she can obtain the same thing from her own colonies, or from a friend that will, at the same time, become a customer. If the cottons of the United States average half a million of bags annually beyond the domestic consumption, bringing to the cultivator upwards of twenty millions of dollars at low prices; if not more than fifty thousand bales are returned upon us in manufactured goods from all the world; if our tobacco amounts to nearly one hundred thousand hogsheads beyond domestic consumption, producing to the grower eight or nine millions of dollars; if the returns for these values, now made in foreign fabrics, are not to come hereafter in that shape, the United States must prepare not to see them come at all. They must prepare to see the East Indies, the Brazils, the Black Sea, every quarter of the habitable globe, stimulated, by bounty to itself and by restriction upon us, to take our place in the markets of Europe, and to leave these commodities upon our hands; to leave in our docks, to perish, the two hundred thousand tons of shipping employed in their carriage; to lose the six or seven millions of dollars of freight which they earn; to turn over to beggary the ten thousand seamen employed in their navigation; and the ship-builders, boat-builders, blacksmiths, sail-makers, rope-makers, riggers, caulkers, joiners, and other artisans, employed in their construction. This day of downfall to the United States your memorialists do not anticipate; but it is because they do not anticipate the success of that policy which seems to lie at the foundation of the new tariff.

At the conclusion of these evils, your memorialists do not hesitate to mention the moral effect of the proposed tariff as not being among the least of its disastrous tendencies to this community. It is unquestionably true that so wisely, for the most part, have the Legislature of the Union proportioned the duties to the ability of fair trade, that in no nation upon earth is there less evasion of the law by smuggling. Yet a coast and country better adapted for it are not to be found; and effectually to prevent it would require the supervision of a line of frontier amounting to more than three thousand miles. Man is, unhappily, such as circumstances make him; and there is a bounty under which crimes will flourish as well as manufactures. Far less than the duties of the proposed tariff would, it is apprehended, give a munificent reward to the smuggler. Spain was and is a country of prohibitions, of restrictive duties, and monopolies. According to Bourgoanne, the Government lost, by smuggling, seventy per cent. of its imposts; and, notwithstanding the immense numbers employed to guard the revenue, a single neighboring nation carried on a contraband trade with that country to the enormous value of millions of piastres annually.

In the late war between the United States and Great Britain, short as it was, and with but little time for the preparations which unlawful trade requires, even more than lawful, the introduction of contraband goods from the Canada frontier was open, notorious, and daring, notwithstanding it united almost the guilt of treason with that of smuggling. Your honorable bodies cannot but know how dangerous it is to enlist even a prejudice, if it be a general one, in favor of a violation of law; and how vain it is to legislate against the habits, the interests, and particularly the passions, of a large body of people.

Your memorialists cannot conclude without submitting to Congress that some of the provisions of the bill referred to seem as if directly aimed at the existence of foreign commerce, by striking at its most important element—that of ship building—as it raises the duty on foreign hemp from thirty dollars per ton to two cents per pound; and, consequently, the increased price of cordage will fall on the builder of ships, without a collateral advantage to any one. These charges, with the duties on duck, iron, chain cables, and ship-chandlery, are estimated to enhance the cost of building a ship of 300 tons from the sum of six hundred to one thousand dollars. The real effect of many of the provisions of the bill is, moreover, different from the apparent one; many calculations have been made to show this. Duties on woolen and cotton goods, which are nominally thirty and twenty-five per cent., extend from those duties to upwards of one hundred per cent.; and the cheaper the article is abroad, the heavier is the duty. The operation of the law must, consequently, fall with most severity on the poorer classes, who will pay a duty of from thirty to one hundred per cent., and more, on their coarse cottons and woolens, while the rich will pay the uniform duty of twenty-five and thirty per cent. on their finest cotton fabrics and broadcloths.

To the principle of the law your memorialists are, however, more opposed than to its details. It seems to them to be a political theory, under the name of a duty bill; and that a theory which both argument and experience have exploded—the theory that Government knows better than an individual what is good for him, and can better employ his skill, his labor, and his capital; that it is wiser and more economical to buy dear of our own people than cheap of foreigners; and that it is competent, in these times, for a nation to grow wealthy and happy with her gates opening outwards to sell everything, but to buy nothing.

Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully pray that Congress will not pass the tariff bill into a law.
By order of the Chamber.

REMISSION OF FORFEITURE UNDER REVENUE LAWS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 13, 1824.

MR. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of David Beard, reported:

That the petitioner claims relief for a quantity of merchandise brought into the United States soon after the declaration of war in 1812, and seized by United States revenue officers, in the State of New York, under the non-importation laws, and which was subsequently condemned and sold. The facts in relation to this claim appear, from the testimony submitted to the committee, to be as follows:

David Beard and Joseph Farnwell, citizens of the United States, trading under the firm of David Beard & Co., were engaged in retailing merchandise in Detroit, and had also a store in Sandwich, in Upper Canada. Some time in the summer of 1812, previously to the declaration of war, Mr. Farnwell, one of the above named partners, purchased, in Montreal, for the firm, a quantity of merchandise intended for their usual retail business at their store in Sandwich; an agent was employed to attend the transportation of the goods up the St. Lawrence, who, when he arrived at Prescott, was informed of the declaration of war, and apprehending that they would be seized by the British authorities as American property, he applied to the custom-house officer at Ogdensburg to admit the goods to entry for safe keeping. The Deputy Collector refused to admit them, by reason of the non-importation law being still in existence; but expecting daily to hear of its repeal, suggested that it was not the policy of the Government to prevent its own citizens from bringing home their property under such circumstances; and if the goods were brought over and put into some place of safety until the news of the repeal of the non-importation law should arrive, they could then lawfully be admitted to entry. The goods were accordingly brought into the United States, (except a quantity of powder and ball detained by the enemy,) but soon after seized by the revenue officer of the United States; a part of them were bonded by Mr. Farnwell, and removed from the custom-house at Ogdensburg, but subsequently seized, condemned, and sold. Mr. Beard, the other partner, was engaged in contracts to supply General Hull's army, and taken prisoner at the surrender of Fort Detroit, in which situation he was detained until late in October, 1812; as soon after as his health and circumstances would permit, he repaired to Ogdensburg and collected such of the goods as had not been seized, and delivered them to the Collector of that place and Sackett's Harbor. It is also represented that the loss has been so heavy as to reduce the firm to poverty and insolvency.

From all the evidence which accompanies the petition, Messrs. Beard & Co. appear to have been engaged in a regular and fair business, and to have been merchants of high respectability, and there is no reason to believe that they had any intention in this transaction to violate the laws of the United States; the goods were brought over by their agent after consulting an officer of the United States who suggested the mode pursued by the agent. The case is undoubtedly one of great hardship, and presents a strong claim upon the Government for entire indemnity; but, inasmuch as those goods have been seized and sold by the officers of the United States in the lawful discharge of their duties, and that a portion of the proceeds of the sales has accrued to them for costs, and their share of the legal forfeitures; the claim, therefore, upon the strict justice of the Government does not extend beyond remuneration for that portion of the proceeds which has accrued to the United States; it was the misfortune of the petitioners to be placed in one of those situations which persons engaged in trade are liable to in such important changes in the affairs of their country. The rule of indemnity proposed by the committee is, therefore, founded in sound policy, and they report a bill accordingly.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF MANUFACTURES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 15, 1824.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Board of Managers of the Pennsylvania Society for the Encouragement of American Manufactures respectfully sheweth:

That they have read with attention a memorial presented to your honorable bodies by the Chamber of Commerce of this city, and feel themselves bound to point out sundry material errors in point of fact—sundry erroneous inferences—which it contains, tending, unless corrected, to injure not only their constituents, but the nation at large. They regret that the length of the document in question, and the great variety of its errors, will constrain them to be more prolix than they would wish. For this they hope the importance of the subject will be a sufficient apology.

“In a free country like the United States all branches of lawful industry have a right to equal protection by the laws. There can be no inequality without favoritism, and no favoritism without injustice.”

These maxims come with an ill grace from a class of citizens who, from the commencement of the Government to the present hour, have enjoyed every species of protection which could be devised, and who have been unceasing in their applications for what is now styled “favoritism” and “injustice.” The manufacturers of this country require but half the protection which has uniformly been extended to commerce. By such protection they would prosper, and shed prosperity on the nation at large.

“The universal opinion of well informed men has now established it as a general rule, that the greatest degree of national wealth is to be obtained by leaving every one to the unfettered use of his own labor, skill, and capital; for it is in this way that individuals, of whom nations are composed, attain the greatest prosperity.”

This specious but erroneous theory accords but ill with the practice of our Government and the requisitions of our merchants. Had they been left to “the unfettered use of their own labor, skill, and capital,” their tonnage would never have emerged from its insignificance. In the year 1789 it was only 201,562 tons. By an enormous extra tonnage duty on foreign vessels engaged in the foreign trade, 700 per cent. more than on American vessels; by subjecting foreign vessels engaged in the coasting trade to pay 50 cents per ton on every entry, whereas American vessels paid but six cents once a year; by duties on teas imported in foreign vessels, which averaged 27 cents per pound, while those on teas imported in American vessels averaged but 12, being an advance of 125 per cent. in favor of American tonnage; by these and other directions of “labor, skill, and capital,” enacted by the first Congress in 1789, the American tonnage rose in a few years to the second grade in the scale of nations, being in 1792 564,437 tons, and 898,328 in 1798.

But we respectfully ask, is the American manufacturer left to the “unfettered use of his own labor, skill, and industry,” when he is expelled from his own market by floods of rival articles introduced, to his destruction, by the American merchant or by foreign merchants or manufacturers? Let his “labor, skill, and industry” be what they may, he is constantly “fettered,” and too often ruined by foreign rivals. Your memorialists respectfully state that they cannot conceive why, “in a free country, where,” according to the Chamber of Commerce, “all branches of lawful industry have a right to equal protection by the laws,” the manufacturers and owners of ships should be protected from foreign rivalry in the coasting trade, and the manufacturer of woolens and cottons looks in vain to the Government for a similar protection when his prospects in life, and those of his children, are blighting and blasting by that rivalry. If this be “equal protection,” then we are unacquainted with our own language.

“If legislation acts upon the subject of trade which, after all, is more safely left to the law of man’s nature, by which he is incessantly stimulated to do the best for himself, and, therefore, for his country, it should act for the removal of impediments and restrictions, not for the creation of them.”

To be consistent with this doctrine, the Chamber of Commerce ought to have petitioned for a removal of all the “restrictions” in favor of commerce with which the statute books abound. Foreign vessels ought to be admitted to pursue the coasting trade; the discriminating duties on teas ought to be abrogated. In a word, all “impediments and restrictions,” enacted at their instance and for their benefit, ought to be removed.

“Beyond the limits of a fair resort to trade for the purpose of revenue, and the case of public necessity, or high public exigency, to prepare the country for the event of war, restrictive legislation upon trade, whether it be in the shape of prohibitions of one branch or bounties to another, are eminently dangerous, and, to a community as extensive and diversified as this, severely unequal.”

“It has been deemed the wisest course to abstain from public enactments altogether, and to leave the hive to the industry and instinct of its laborers, without attempting to direct which cell shall be first filled.”

“Revenue is almost the only ground on which legislation, in regard to trade, is safe.”

“The tariff bill is a political theory, that Government knows better than an individual what is good for him, and can better employ his skill, his labor, and his capital; that it is wiser and more economical to buy dear of our own people than cheap of foreigners; and that it is competent, in these times, for a nation to grow wealthy and happy with her gates opening outwards to sell everything, but to buy nothing.”

These are repetitions of a trite idea already advanced three or four times, and if correct, would be a pointed condemnation of the unceasing applications of the merchants for “legislation in regard to trade,” and of the whole course of the National Legislature on that subject. We respectfully ask, when, in 1789, prohibitory duties were imposed on manufactured tobacco and snuff, six cents per pound on the former, and ten cents per pound on the latter; and in 1816, ten cents on the one, and twelve cents on the other, to exclude foreign tobacco and snuff, for the benefit of the tobacco planters, were these duties imposed with a view to “revenue?” When foreigners were by law excluded from the coasting trade, under penalty of confiscation, was that for “the purpose of revenue!” Neither the Chamber of Commerce nor the tobacco planters can maintain this doctrine. The whole revenue from snuff and tobacco, since the Government was organized, would not pay the salary of a single Deputy Collector. How, then, can it be asserted that Congress has a right to impose prohibitory duties for the benefit of tobacco planters and merchants, and the right be denied with regard to another class at least as useful? Is it not wonderful that a respectable body of citizens should advance doctrines so utterly untenable—so contrary to the uniform practice of our Government, and so completely condemnatory of their own unceasing requisitions on Congress?

"What will be the effect of a prohibition of foreign merchandise as extensive as that now to be effected, but an immediate reduction in value of the labor and capital of the cultivator to the whole extent of the increased price that he must give for the American manufacture?"

"One arm of the nation will either be cut off, or maimed forever, under the vain expectation of promoting a better circulation in the other."

"If we take nothing from Great Britain, she may take nothing from us, if she can obtain the same thing from her own colonies, or from a friend that will, at the same time, become a customer."

The high character of the respectable body from whom the memorial emanates forbids the idea that they did not believe what is here asserted, but it required a high degree of excitement to entertain such apprehensions. That "an arm of the nation will be cut off," that we are "to take nothing from Great Britain," and that "a prohibition of foreign merchandise," are to be the results of imposing additional duties, which do not average ten per cent., except on one or two articles of worthless texture, is really so extravagant an idea as to excite astonishment how it could ever have been entertained. The highest duty proposed by the new tariff on all the leading articles is lower than the lowest of the duties in Great Britain. Yet no one has pretended that the British have ever "cut off one of their arms" or legs. As well might we assert that paring the excrescences of a man's nails was cutting off his leg or his arm, as that the imposition of even double the duties contemplated by the new bill would "cut off one arm of the nation."

"It is intended by this portentous bill to change the relations of the United States with the whole world; to compel her to manufacture all she consumes; to depend for nothing upon a foreign country which it is physically possible for her to make; and to withdraw her sanction from the mutual relations of dependence and exchange upon which the refinement and the happiness of the world have been heretofore supposed to depend."

It is impossible to express the astonishment and regret we feel at the terrific picture thus drawn of the consequences of a bill which, we beg leave to repeat, imposes additional duties of only 5, 6, 8, and, at most, 10 per cent., except on a few articles wholly unimportant in themselves. To those who have not seen the bill, it might seem to be an absolute prohibition of foreign commerce altogether.

It is to be lamented that the best measures ever devised have been frequently rendered unpopular and defeated by ascribing to them consequences to the last degree improbable. We appeal, on this point, to the sober sense of the respectable President of the Chamber of Commerce, and take the case of chintzes, silks, broadcloths, and Brussels carpets, in full disproof of the terrifying predictions thus hazarded. Will it be said that a lady will forego the use of fine chintz or silks for her gowns, because, by the new duties, she will have to pay ten, fifteen, or twenty cents per yard more for them? Will a gentleman renounce the use of superfine imported broadcloth, because a coat which requires two yards, at ten dollars per yard, will cost him a dollar and a half additional? Will he abandon the use of Brussels carpets to ornament his rooms, because, by the new duties, they will cost twenty or thirty cents more per yard? We might thus go through all the details of this "portentous bill!!!" as it is ludicrously styled, against which all the angry passions of the nation are unjustly and causelessly excited, and expose the weakness of the objections, and the transcendent error of descanting on "changing the relations of the United States with the whole world!!!" and "withdrawing our sanction from the mutual relations of dependence and exchange upon which the refinement and the happiness of the world have been heretofore supposed to depend!!!" but we forbear, trusting that the Chamber of Commerce, as soon as the present excitement has subsided, will deeply regret lending itself to such a hideous and unjust portrait of a salutary bill, calculated not merely to rescue their fellow-citizens, the manufacturers, from distress and suffering, but for the benefit of the whole nation.

"The tariff is not wanted for the existing manufactures of the country. Under laws which, from time to time, have been passed for their aid, all of them operating, nevertheless, as restrictions upon commerce and a tax upon the cultivator and consumer, they have prospered, and now prosper."

Here is an unqualified assertion decidedly contradicted by the fact. We will confine ourselves to the cotton and woolen manufactures, though we might enumerate twenty more which are languishing and require additional protection. The coarse cotton manufacture, being protected by a high duty, has attracted so large a portion of capital and industry which could not find other employment, in consequence of the want of adequate protection for so many others, that it now languishes extremely in this part of the country. Many of the establishments are either wholly or partially suspended. There are at this hour, in the city of Baltimore, immense stocks of cotton goods and 400,000 lbs of yarn, for which there is no demand, and many of the spinners and weavers are obliged to suspend their operations. Bankruptcy threatens the proprietors for want of a market for their productions. The woolen manufacture is in a still more drooping state. Many of the manufactories in this neighborhood are closed, the proprietors in depressed circumstances, and their work-people discharged. One-half of the woolen manufactories in Rhode Island are closed, and those that are still employed are continued in the hope of at length being adequately protected by the Government. The woolen manufactures of Massachusetts are likewise in a depressed state. And yet, in the face of these strong facts, the world is assured that the modification of "the tariff is not wanted for the existing manufactures!"

"The perfectly well known prosperity of some of the manufacturing establishments of this country is, however, a better argument than any derived from the amount of duty and charges on the foreign fabric; for if, to refer to one case alone, a joint stock company in the vicinity of Boston is, and for some time past has been, able to make a dividend of annual profits, exceeding twice or three times the ordinary interest of money, maintaining and improving its capital at the same time, where is the occasion for further aid? Do others want their skill? Then it is skill that is wanted, and not public bounty."

"What is done so regularly by one manufacturer may be done with similar means by more, and the means are not to be given by the law, but by the manufacturer."

We sincerely rejoice that an appeal is made to the case of the Waltham factory. It is an overwhelming one; and, if experience were allowed to prevail, ought to settle the question of high duties forever, without appeal. Nothing could be more unfortunate for the views, or more subversive of the theory, of the Chamber of Commerce. The duties on coarse cotton goods, which form the great mass of the manufactures of Waltham, were from 50 to 100 per cent., and were liable to the objection now strenuously urged against the minimum duty on coarse woollens. Those articles, used wholly or chiefly by the poor, were subject to the above high duties, averaging 75 per cent., (and the lower the price the higher the per centage of duty,) while the most splendid chintzes, calicoes, mull mulls, &c., were subject to only 25 per cent. We appeal to this entire nation whether experience, the only true test of theory, has not, most unequivocally, in this case, put down all the gloomy anticipations which were hazarded on the subject of "taxing the many for the benefit of the few" by high or prohibitory duties? Has not this duty conferred a solid benefit on "the many?" Has not the result been to furnish the poor with a strong, lasting article, as a substitute for a wretched, unserviceable one, and at about half the former price? And such has been the advantage of the powerful protection thus afforded—so completely is the manufacture established—so high is the reputation, and so reasonable the price of this species of goods, that the first East India merchant in this city, and one of the first in the United States, has recently declared that, if the duty were now repealed, the East India article could not be imported to compete with our own substantial manufactures. Such has been, and such ever will be, the effect of duties sufficiently high to protect manufactures in their nascent state.

On the subject of "the annual profits exceeding twice or three times the ordinary interest of money," we only observe, if this were correct, it would prove nothing to the purpose, any more than the successful commerce of Mr. A—, of Boston, Mr. B—, of New York, or Mr. G—, of Philadelphia—gentlemen possessed of enormous capitals, and of course enabled to carry on business to immense advantage—would prove that commerce in general is prosperous. The proprietors of the Waltham factory possess an immense capital, and enjoy all the advantages which such a capital insures its possessors. But the assertion is not warranted by the fact. A large proportion, probably one-half, of the profits of that establishment, we are assured, is derived from the manufacture of machinery. And it is much to be regretted that such very erroneous impressions on this subject have been allowed to prevail so long uncontradicted.

To the query, "where is the occasion for further aid?" we reply, that if the Waltham and other factories of that description prosper under duties averaging about 75 per cent., it affords no proof that the manufacturer of woollen goods, who has only a protection of 25 per cent., or the manufacturers of iron, steel, brass, copper, tin, or lead, who have only one of 20 per cent., do not "want further aid." Dives, with his tables groaning under the choicest viands that plenty, with her cornucopia, could lavish on him, might as well ask why Lazarus "had occasion for further aid," as any inference lie from the case of Waltham to bar the poor manufacturer of woollen blankets of any further protection than 15 per cent., the manufacturer of cotton stockings anything beyond 20, or the manufacturer of linen, whose rival comes into the market with a bounty from his Government as high, and in some cases higher than the duty here. The British bounty on the exportation of linens, at six pence per yard, is one penny half penny, or 25 per cent. Our duty is only 15!

"They cannot believe that the effect of the tariff is to raise the price only for a short time, and then to bring it down forever below its former range. There is no experience to justify the assertion."

It is deeply to be regretted that, in the discussion of subjects of such vital importance to the welfare and prosperity of the nation, facts are so very frequently overlooked, disregarded, or positively misstated. We are here informed, in the most unequivocal manner that "there is no experience to justify the assertion" that adequate protection of manufactures by high duties "brings down the price forever below its former range." It is wonderful that so respectable a body as the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce should stand committed for such a declaration, in the face of the case of coarse cottons, on which we have already dilated sufficiently, and which might be regarded as deciding this question finally. Nails, of which immoderate quantities were formerly imported at high rates, were in 1817 burdened with a duty of four cents per pound, which was about fifty per cent. of the price in Great Britain. They are now manufactured here in superabundance, of superior quality, and sold at six cents per pound, which is cheaper by thirty per cent. than formerly. This fairly disproves the assertion of the Chamber of Commerce. The observation may be extended to all kinds of chemicals, to manufactures of leather, to printing types, to books, and, in a word, to every article whatever, which, being fully protected, encourages the employment of adequate capital, and creates sufficient competition. On this all-important topic we beg leave to quote the sound and irrefutable maxim of Alexander Hamilton:

"When a domestic manufacture has attained to perfection, and has engaged in the prosecution of it a competent number of persons, it invariably becomes cheaper. * * * The internal competition which takes place soon does away everything like monopoly, and by degrees reduces the price of the article to the minimum of a reasonable profit on the capital employed. This accords with the reason of the thing and with experience."

"Above all, will the influence of the new tariff be prejudicial to the interest of the agricultural States?"

This assertion is not founded. Agriculture languishes for want of a market for its surplus produce. Breadstuffs, the staple on which at least three or four millions of our citizens, (nearly half the agricultural portion of our population) depend for support, are absolutely prohibited in almost every part of Europe. With our export of tobacco the growth in that quarter materially interferes. We export less in quantity and value of tobacco, flour, rice, and products of the forest, than we did in 1801, although our population has nearly doubled since that time. Our cotton has become so great a drug that there were on hand in Great Britain at the close of the last year 199,745 bales, being not far short of half the import of that year from the United States, which was 448,164 bales, and sixty per cent. of the consumption of our cotton for the same period, which was only 334,415. There is scarcely a market in the world in which our flour is received where it is not very frequently a drug; and as respects tobacco, Curwen & Hagerty, as intelligent merchants as any in Great Britain, under date of December 31, 1823, furnish the following melancholy statement for the planters of that article:

"Tobacco is very unsaleable, and lower than we have ever before known it. The exports from the United States have so overwhelmed every market in Europe that there is absolutely no outlet for exportation from this country, and no prospect of the stock on hand being consumed in it. We have upwards of 31,000 hogsheads in Britain and Ireland, whilst the consumption does not exceed 14,000 hogsheads! The stock on the continent is estimated at 44,000, making a total stock in Europe of 75,000 hogsheads, being 10,000 more than one year's consumption! Under such circumstances immediate improvement in this article would appear impossible."

Under these calamitous circumstances of our three great staples, can it be "pernicious to the interests" of agriculture," as the Chamber of Commerce asserts, to make a domestic market for that produce of the soil which the foreign world unkindly refuses in exchange for her manufactures, or which, if received by her, is shipped in such quantities as to glut all the foreign markets?

"We must prepare to see the East Indies, the Brazils, the Black-Sea, every quarter of the habitable globe, stimulated by bounty to itself and by restrictions upon us, to take our place in the markets of Europe, and to leave these commodities upon our hands."

As this threat, so degrading to the dignity of an independent nation, has been frequently held out and employed to terrify the southern States, it is proper to examine it at length. This commercial hostility, painted in such strong colors, is as much as could possibly take place in the event of a sanguinary warfare; indeed, more than did occur during our late war. We imported from Great Britain in the year 1822 to the amount of $34,806,287, and exported only $24,498,347, leaving a balance against us of $10,400,000, which absorbed the proceeds of our commerce with the rest of Europe, and a large portion of that with the rest of the world. We supplied her with the produce of the soil in its rudest state, whereon she supported about 1,500,000 of her subjects. We received manufactures from her highly elaborated, and increased in value three, four, five, and tenfold, which might have afforded employment to 1,000,000 of our citizens. Notwithstanding the immense disparity of advantages in this commerce—a commerce more advantageous than any one nation ever carried on with another—far more advantageous to Great Britain than her mines to Spain, she will not, unless when in danger or famine, allow a single barrel of our flour to be consumed by those millions of people who are employed to supply us with manufactures! And yet, while we patiently submit to the exclusion of one of our great staples, to the impoverishment and severe depression of the farming interest, we are threatened with her resentment if we dare attempt to increase our duties on her manufactures! with restrictions upon our cotton and our tobacco, if we exercise the right of an independent nation! Will any American, possessed of the spirit of independence, submit to the idea that Great Britain may and does exclude the grand staple of nearly one-half of the nation, and that the United States must not dare to increase the duties on the manufactures of Birmingham, Sheffield, Leeds, and Manchester, lest she should prohibit or restrict the use of our tobacco or our cotton? The free mind revolts at such a degrading idea. Of tobacco, she consumes, as we have shown, only 14,000 hogsheads per annum, and our cotton she can no more dispense with than she could dispense with receiving our grain and flour in the event of a famine. Without any such daring offence as imposing extra duties on her manufactures to protect our own, and to reduce our expenses within our income, she received in 1817, 1818, 1819, and 1820, from the East Indies, 613,935 bales of cotton, whereby the price of our staple was reduced fifty per cent., which spread distress and embarrassment among our planters and bankruptcy among the shippers. And should the crops in that quarter, in the Brazils, or Egypt, prove superabundant, her merchants will import the surplus into her markets in the way of trade, without intending us any evil, and regardless whether we lay on new duties or take off the old. These are considerations by which merchants are not affected. And it is a disparagement and outrage to the character and wisdom of the Government of Great Britain to suppose that it would descend to such a step in order to disable the best customer of the nation from being able to pay for her merchandise. Let it be observed, however, that, notwithstanding the immense benefits Great Britain enjoys from our trade, she favors the cotton of the negro empire of Hayti in preference to ours! Cotton from the dominions of Boyer is imported into Great Britain duty free, whereas that from the United States pays six per cent!!!

"If the cottons of the United States average half a million of bags annually beyond the domestic consumption, bringing to the cultivator upwards of $20,000,000, at low prices; if not more than fifty thousand bags are returned upon us in manufactured goods from all the world," &c.

This, we respectfully represent, is one of those wayward arguments which recoil on the authors with tenfold force.

We shipped of cotton, in 1822, to Great Britain .....	450,686 bales.
We shipped of cotton, in 1822, to Havre.....	73,328 bales.
To other ports of France, supposed.....	25,000 bales.

Total.....	549,014 bales.
------------	-----------------------

The proceeds were, according to the Treasury returns, $24,035,058. We imported in the same year about $10,000,000 of cotton goods, produced, not from 50,000 bales, as stated, but about 35,000, according to estimates made by mercantile men of sound judgments. Thus it appears, according to the Chamber of Commerce, that less than one-tenth, but in reality one-sixteenth part of our export of cotton paid us for two-fifths of the whole. And this is the gainful trade, for the preservation of which such an ardent struggle is made. Can anything prove more clearly the immense superiority of the European system over ours? Two-fifths of 549,014, or 219,000 bales, are paid for by 35,000, or at most by 50,000, leaving the balance to support the Governments, employ the capitals, enrich the capitalists, and feed the population of Europe, while many of our own are suffering intensely.

"If our tobacco amounts to nearly 100,000 hogsheads beyond domestic consumption, producing to the grower eight or nine millions of dollars—if the returns for their value, now made in foreign fabrics, are not to come hereafter in that shape, the United States must prepare not to see them come at all."

Where the means of information were so easily procured as in this case, this loose mode of argument ought to have been avoided. The export of tobacco is far from 100,000 hogsheads, and the amount far from eight or nine millions of dollars. The average of the four years, 1819 to 1822, inclusively, (we have not the returns for last year,) was only 73,000 hogsheads, and value 6,750,000 dollars. Great Britain and Ireland, in 1822, received from us only 28,000 hogsheads, amounting to $2,690,000, of which a considerable part was for exportation. Their consumption, we once more repeat, is only about 14,000 hogsheads.

"How little they partake of the evils under which the commerce and agriculture of the country now suffer, need not be remarked. It is at present the most flourishing branch of American industry."

"This branch of industry (commerce) has confessedly suffered more than any other by the events of recent years. It has borne its disasters patiently. They have been the inevitable consequences of events which, although caused by man, man has neither by action nor legislation been able to prevent, and scarcely to mitigate."

Nine years have elapsed since we closed our war, in a state of prosperity; every man, woman, and child in the country, able and willing to work, employed. We have advantages, natural, moral, and political, never exceeded, perhaps never equalled. Yet here is an open and precious confession that two of the great branches of industry, agriculture and commerce, are in a suffering state. The third branch, manufactures, with some few exceptions, is also suffering, as we have already stated. We trust it cannot be denied that such a state of things must be produced by an unsound policy; for nothing but such a policy could have entailed on this country the variety of suffering and distress experienced since the close of the war—which are still severely felt—and to which nothing but a radical change of that policy can apply a remedy. We respectfully represent that there is a wonderful discrepancy in the statements of the opposers of any modification of the tariff. At one time it is asserted, with all the confidence that truth ought to inspire, that the country is, and has at all times been, prosperous and flourishing, and that it would be unwise to change such a happy state for the sake of experiments which might mar our prosperity. At another, as in the present case, the calamitous situation of affairs which meets the eye in almost every quarter of the country is, with equal confidence, alleged as a reason for adhering to a policy which paralyzes the industry of a nation as intelligent, as enterprising, and energetic as any in the world—a nation which requires only a sound policy to rise to a level with the greatest nations of Europe, in point of “wealth, power, and resources.”

“England has grown rich in spite of her restrictions upon trade, and not by means of them. Her wisest statesmen are desirous of removing them, and can trace, with unerring certainty, to their operation a large part of the oppression under which the fundamental interest of that nation languishes, and is doomed to languish.”

This is an assertion contradicted by the whole tenor of history, and has been refuted times without number. It is scarcely possible to produce a greater error. Previously to the reigns of Edward III and Edward IV England was feeble and poor, and dependent for her clothing on her neighbors, who purchased her wool and sold it back again to her in a manufactured state, at three, four, five, and six-fold advance. Those wise princes laid the solid foundations of her prosperity and greatness by “restrictions” and bounties. To those “restrictions” of the interference of foreign rivalry; to the rigorous, undeviating, and unceasing protection of her domestic industry; to her collecting from all the nations of the earth raw materials to employ her people, and selling back those materials manufactured, as she does our cotton, at an advance of three, five, ten, and twenty-fold, she owes her prosperity. By those restrictions alone she has fostered her manufactures to their present flourishing state. We instance that of cotton goods, thus brought to such extent and perfection, that it affords employment to 500,000 families, averaging four persons each. Out of a raw material, of which she does not raise one pound, and which costs her but $22,500,000 per annum, she produces $180,000,000, and thereby lays the whole world under contribution. Whereas the United States, which raises more than two-thirds of the whole consumption of Europe and America, and exports nearly five-sixths of her crops, receives only about twenty, twenty-two, twenty-three, or twenty-four million dollars for that portion! She produces out of what she manufactures only about $25,000,000. We respectfully submit to your honorable Houses that the history of the world can scarcely produce a greater sacrifice of the means of national prosperity and happiness. It might as well be asserted that the earth brought forth its fruits in spite of the sun or rain, as that the magnificent manufactures of Great Britain, allowed by all the world to be the basis of her transcendent “wealth, power, and resources,” the birth of which was coeval with, and which owe their maturity to, restrictions, “flourish in spite of those restrictions.”

That “her wisest statesmen are desirous of removing those restrictions,” is not, we believe, by any means correct. If they had any such desire, they might easily accomplish their purpose. They have advantages beyond what any other nation ever possessed in point of capital, machinery and skill; and yet they dare not open their ports to foreign manufactures. Their tariff has been revised so lately as 1819, and published in 1820, and the old complicated duties consolidated; but no repeal or relaxation has taken place to admit the consumption in Great Britain of foreign manufactures. All non-enumerated articles, and nine-tenths of the enumerated manufactures, are subject to 50 per cent. duty; those of cotton and leather to 75 per cent.; glass to 80 per cent.; linen sails to 104 per cent.; and checked or printed linen to 172 per cent. Here is fact against assertion. It is true, some of their theorists, like our own, hold out the idea of a relaxation of duties and unrestrained intercourse, but until they act upon the system their sincerity on the subject may be well doubted. It would not be extraordinary if those plausible theories were urged with a view to affect the policy of other nations.

“She is emphatically the example of all that individual skill, enterprise, and intelligence can achieve for the production of wealth, and of all that perverted legislation can do to make it fruitless of national happiness.”

This is quite contrary to the facts of the case. Great Britain is “emphatically an example” of what a sound legislation “can achieve” by the protection of national industry, and what wild ambition and wasteful wars “can do to make it fruitless of national happiness.” Her resources have exceeded, and now exceed, those of any other nation, ancient or modern—all the result of the consummate skill of her statesmen. Amassing wealth in every quarter of the globe by her manufactures, she was enabled, with ease, to raise $4,630,000,000 by taxes, and to borrow $2,070,000,000 during the wars of the French revolution. She is now paying off her national debt; has diminished her taxes to the amount of $90,000,000 per annum; has had, notwithstanding this extraordinary reduction of taxes, a surplus of revenue beyond expenditure of $22,500,000 in 1822, and the same in 1823; her manufactures of every kind, as well as her imports and exports, are rapidly increasing; she abounds in wealth, so that her subjects are the general bankers of all the needy Emperors, Kings, and Commonwealths in the world; and has reduced the rate of interest to three per cent. What a heartrending contrast the United States exhibited when in a belligerent state! What a heartrending contrast she now exhibits! After a peace of thirty years, and enjoying a most extensive commerce for nearly twenty, during a great portion of which time our merchants were the carriers for half the commercial world, the United States was unable to raise more than $36,000,000 during a war of thirty months; had to eke out the residue of her expenses by exchequer bills and loans procured with great difficulty; found herself in two years with a bankrupt Treasury, and in a state of extreme peril; and at present there is a general complaint of distress and embarrassment from every quarter of the Union, with few exceptions. Agriculture is suffering by the depression of some of her chief staples; commerce languishing, and manufactures, with few exceptions, drooping; parents not knowing what employments to provide for their children; a large portion of the capital of the country, although vastly reduced by our present system, lying idle; as, in the employment of it, there is no security against the overwhelming influence of foreign rivals. The Chamber of Commerce itself confesses, as we have shown, that agriculture and commerce are both in a state of depression, yet the citizens of the United States possess as much "individual skill, enterprise, and intelligence" as the British, or any other people of ancient or modern times. Where, then, lies the immense, the incalculable difference between the state of the two nations? The answer is plain. On the one side, the ægis of Governmental protection is interposed to prevent the industry and the prosperity of the British manufactures from being crushed by foreign rivals, and to save the country from being drained for the purchase of what it can itself supply. When a man in that country invests any sum, large or small, in any branch of manufactures, he has rarely any other than domestic competition to dread. Our citizens, on the contrary, have to encounter the competition of all the manufacturing nations of Europe, and thousands and tens of thousands of them have fallen in the struggle, in which millions of national wealth have been sacrificed. This is the true secret of the unemployed capital, the existence of which the Chamber of Commerce admits. The merchants, who have at all times strenuously opposed the protection of manufactures, have partaken largely of the distress produced by the policy which they so uniformly and zealously support.

"Foreign nations shall act upon the principle of taking no more from us than we do from them."

Why should they? We do not act thus. We receive from Great Britain $10,000,000 per annum more than she "takes from us."

"When have the manufacturers, here or in England, been contented, or able to part with a bounty which the law has once given them?"

Just exactly at that point of time when the merchants part with their powerful protection.

"Far less than the duties of the proposed tariff would, it is apprehended, give a munificent reward to the smuggler. Spain was and is a country of prohibitions, of restrictive duties, and monopolies. According to Bourgoanne, the Government lost by smuggling 70 per cent. of its imposts."

We regret to find such an alarm sounded on the danger of smuggling, in consequence of a small addition to the existing duties, and are astonished that such an argument, so void of foundation and so often refuted, should be again brought forward. While the existing tariff abounds with exorbitant duties, two, three, and four-fold the highest proposed to be imposed by the new tariff, as, for instance, an average of above 110 per cent. on teas; 200 per cent. on spirits; 75 per cent. on wines; 50 per cent. on pimento; 100 per cent. on pepper; 180 per cent. on salt, we respectfully inquire of your honorable Houses and the nation at large, with what propriety or justice these appeals can be made to the public prejudices, and whether any danger of smuggling can be seriously apprehended from duties of 30 per cent. on woolens; 35 per cent. on cottons; or 25 per cent. on manufactures of iron, brass, copper, steel, tin, lead, &c. These are the principal articles proposed to be subjected to extra duties. We are sorry to say that the frequent presentation of the danger of smuggling may operate as an encouragement to persons destitute of principle to enter on the practice, when they find such a respectable body of citizens holding out this as a necessary consequence of a small increase of duties.

Reference to the case of Spain, the worst administered and most imbecile Government in Europe, is not calculated to aid the cause of the Chamber of Commerce. The same duty was there imposed on the transit of goods from one province to another as on their importation from foreign nations. When 14 per cent. duty was imposed for conveying merchandise over an imaginary boundary line; when, by the alcavala, a tax of 14 per cent. was levied upon raw materials and on manufactures every time they changed owners, and this regulated by the selling prices, and, therefore, constantly increasing; when saltpetre, gunpowder, tobacco, sulphur, wax, and quicksilver were all royal monopolies, it was not wonderful that there were hosts of smugglers to bid defiance to the public authorities. But can this wretched, this abominable system be for a moment compared with ours?

"Except whatever provisions are necessary for enabling the Government to stand the shock of war, the danger of legislative interference with trade becomes extreme. Be the wisdom, and impartiality, and foresight of the Legislature what they may, they are at no time and under no circumstances perfectly adequate to the task."

This is an assumption not warranted. We have superabundance of coal and iron lying untouched in the bosom of the earth, water power in abundance running to waste, and thousands of our people only partially employed. Plans perfectly practicable, whereby those dormant riches of nature might be called into use, and activity given to the industry of our population, might be devised by almost any individual possessed of a moderate share of "wisdom, impartiality, and foresight."

"Your memorialists are unable to comprehend how the country is to be benefitted by enticing into manufactures that capital which it is said now lies unemployed. What difference is it to the country whether the capital lies unemployed, or its employment is paid for by an additional charge upon the consumer? The country is in no respect a gainer by the employment. It is not intended by your memorialists to say that there is not much unemployed capital in the country."

There is no difficulty in comprehending the benefit of putting unemployed capital into circulation. It would give a spring to agriculture by providing a market for its raw materials, afford profitable employment to thousands who would otherwise be partially or wholly idle, and add to individual and national wealth.

"What is to be the fate of that capital now employed in commerce, and which the tariff is to displace?"

Supposing such a displacement to occur, there is an easy answer to this query. Commerce is admitted by the Chamber of Commerce to be in a state of depression, principally owing to there being too many engaged in it, as there have always been at every stage of our progress as a nation. If it were in the power of the Legislature of the Union to establish new manufactures, to extend the old, or to create any new employment for a third or even one-half of the merchants in the country, it would be a blessing to the whole. There would be enough remaining for all the profitable business we can carry on. In whatever proportion new employment is created, in that proportion will the merchants be benefitted. The small abridgment which the tariff would cause in the foreign trade would be amply compensated by an increase in the coasting and export trade.

"The operation of the law must consequently fall with more severity on the poorer classes."

This sympathy for the poor might be well spared. The coarse woolen fabrics which are proposed to be subjected to high duties, and which may be thereby excluded, are to the last degree worthless, like the East India coarse cottons, and their place would, as in the latter case, be supplied by strong and durable fabrics of domestic manufacture, and at lower rates. If we feel for the poor, they may be easily relieved and substantial benefit be conferred on them by lowering the duties on molasses, brown sugar, bohea tea, and salt, which are about 45, 100, 120, and 180 per cent., while watches, clocks, time-pieces, tartan plaids, bombazets, damask table-cloths, silks, satins, Canton crapes, Chambray gauzes, &c., &c., pay but 15 per cent.; girandoles, lustres, and porcelain, only 20 per cent.; and plated ware, broadcloths, Cashmere and Merino shawls, Brussels and other carpets, kerseymere, chintzes, and calicoes, only 25 per cent. We respectfully submit that this extraordinary discrepancy of taxation calls loudly for reform.

"The aid of the tariff has been constantly asked by the manufacturers, and never given back."

We state, in reply, that "the aid" of the Government "has been constantly asked" by commerce, and uniformly granted, "and never given back." For eight years have the manufacturers, in their utmost distress, respectfully "asked the aid of the Government," but hitherto in vain.

"To turn over to beggary the 10,000 seamen employed in their navigation, and the ship-builders, boat-builders, blacksmiths, sail-makers, rope-makers, riggers, caulkers, joiners, and other artisans, employed in their construction."

The deprecation of these calamitous scenes ought to be postponed until such a result be proved or rendered probable; and it is a result which cannot, will not, follow. It is the "day dream" of a heated imagination. The American tonnage employed in the transportation of the articles intended to be subjected to additional duties for the benefit of manufacturers is not much more than that employed in the trade of Hayti. And the whole of our tonnage employed in the commerce with England in 1822 was only 119,202 tons, whereas in the trade to Cuba we employed 118,405 tons. There is no consideration of, or sympathy for, the thousands of manufacturers whom our excessive importations have "consigned to beggary" since the war, nor of those who are daily consigned to the same calamitous state.

"They are sincere well-wishers to the manufactures of this country. They will always be happy to see them prosper, under that due prosecution of them, to which individual skill and capital, in the present state of the law, are perfectly competent."

It is painful to us to state that we look in vain for the evidence of "well-wishing" in the ardent, systematic, undeviating, and, unfortunately, successful opposition constantly made, since the first organization of the Government, by the merchants of the United States, to every attempt to protect manufactures—even in the years 1819-'20, when at least 30,000 work-people were divested of employment, many of them reduced to pauperism, or to break stones on turnpike roads, at 25, 30, and 37½ cents per day—and when hundreds of the proprietors were involved in destruction, most of whom might have been rescued but for this opposition.

"The practice of no foreign nation leads, as your memorialists submit, to a different conclusion."

A slight view of history will prove that this assertion cannot be maintained. Frederick of Prussia regenerated his country, exhausted by long and sanguinary wars and the destructive inroads of foreign armies, of which two were at once in possession of his capital, by a system of exclusion of foreign manufactures, and of bounties on those of his own country. France is regenerated after her long wars—her subjugation by, and subjection for three years to, hostile armies—and a military tribute of $100,000,000. Russia tried the system of low duties and abolition of prohibitions for the years 1820 and 1821. Ruin spread over the face of the land. In a Government circular, signed by Count Nesselrode, the following melancholy picture of the state of the country is drawn: "Agriculture without a market—industry without protection—languish and decline. Specie is exported—and the most solid commercial houses are shaken. The public prosperity would soon feel the wound inflicted on private fortunes, if new regulations did not promptly change the actual state of affairs. Events have proved that our AGRICULTURE and our COMMERCE, as well as our MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY, are not only paralyzed, but BROUGHT TO THE BRINK OF RUIN." Early in 1822, taught wisdom by her intense distress, she enacted a new tariff, containing three hundred and forty prohibitions, which are daily reviving her prosperity. Holland, which adopted a low tariff in 1816, has ever since writhed under its operation. Her manufactures are blasted, circulation is sluggish, her revenue has failed, her real estate has sunk in value one-third, and one-ninth part of her population is reduced to a state of pauperism. In one word, we respectfully state that there is scarcely an instance on record of a nation arriving at perfection in manufactures without the protection of Government; and that those nations which are principally devoted to agriculture are almost universally impoverished, witness Poland, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Ireland, notwithstanding their transcendent advantages; whereas those where manufactures are flourishing are generally wealthy, and abound in specie, witness France and England. So true is the maxim of Alexander Hamilton—

"The importation of manufactured supplies seems invariably to drain the merely agricultural people of their wealth. Let the situation of the manufacturing countries of Europe be compared, in this particular, with that of countries which only cultivate, and the disparity will be striking."

"The effect is morally certain. So much so as almost to infer the intention in those who promote the cause; it is to paralyze and deaden, by one blow, that portion of the commercial capital of this country which is employed in the purchase, importation, and distribution of all that the new tariff shall exclude from the country."

We regret and are astonished at the insinuation conveyed in these lines. It is not warranted—it is not generous. What! are we to be told that the manufacturers of the United States, depressed, and many of them in danger of bankruptcy, by the overwhelming influx of foreign rival articles, and seeking of their Government that paternal protection afforded to this class by all the Governments of the Old World, except Holland, and by all those of the New, have the barbarous "intention of paralyzing and deadening, by one blow, that portion of the commercial capital of the country which is employed in the purchase, importation, and distribution of all that the new tariff shall exclude from the country?" We refrain from the expression of the acute feelings this very harsh insinuation is calculated to excite, and trust that its authors cannot fail, on reflection, to regret its use, and to wish it were possible to have it expunged.

The premises being duly considered, we respectfully request your honorable Houses will digest such a system as will secure to your manufacturing fellow-citizens a portion of the efficient protection which, from the dawn of the Government, has been paternally and wisely extended to commerce and tobacco planting.

Signed by order:

MATHEW CAREY.

PROTECTION TO AGRICULTURE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 19, 1824.

Mr. VAN RENSSELAER made the following report:

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of Representatives, instructing them to inquire if an increase of the duty now established by law on any article of foreign growth or manufacture will be for the interest of the agriculturist, and, if there be any such article, to name the same, together with the additional amount of duty which they deem beneficial to the agricultural interest, respectfully submit the following report:

That, in the apprehension of your committee, whatever increases the consumption of its products, whether at home or abroad, necessarily advances the interest of agriculture. He who cultivates the soil looks beyond the supply of his own wants for the profits of his labor. He looks to a market for the surplus products of his industry. The home market, in the opinion of the committee, is at all times to be preferred to the foreign market, when the reward of agricultural pursuits is equal—the former is less precarious than the latter; it is also more permanent and certain, and above the reach of restraining and prohibitory duties of foreign hostility; and when the home market can be increased in its demands, without diminishing in a greater degree the foreign consumption, it would seem wise and prudent to promote its extension by every rational means within the sphere of legislation.

Your committee consider the increase of duties on many foreign articles now imported into the United States would promote the agricultural prosperity of the nation. A portion of population engaged in manufactures would necessarily depend on the farmer for subsistence, and create a more perfect and profitable division of labor than now exists. A new market would be opened, and a new demand created, for all the raw materials which new manufactures would consume. It cannot be denied that, if all the manufactured articles now consumed by the people of the United States were manufactured within the bounds of our country from the raw material furnished by ourselves, the value of our lands would be increased, and the profits of agricultural labor considerably augmented. Demand and consumption would be directly extended—a great extent of soil now devoted to the growing of products that afford no sufficient stimulus to cultivation. The soil and climate of the United States are capable of producing the various articles necessary for such manufacturing establishments as will most naturally flourish in this country, and of such as would inevitably be consumed, provided manufacturing labor should be extended. By a comprehensive and rigorous system of policy, calculated to unfold our agricultural resources, a spirit of emulation and industry would be diffused over the land; a vast and active system of internal exchange would rise up; the expense of transportation in heavy articles would be in a great measure saved; and, in fact, that which should be ardently wished for in every agricultural country, a home market, would appear; this, too, would prove a market at once various in point of demand, but sure, steady and unchanging. The policy, the caprice, the selfishness, and the hostility of other nations could not affect it. On this point, therefore, the committee cannot entertain any doubt. The extension of domestic manufactures depending on the production of such raw materials as can be found in this country must increase the demand and consumption of those materials, and, of course, secure a new and ready market.

As to the articles of foreign growth, to which an increase of duty should apply, in order to promote the prosperity of our agriculture, the committee need only remark that, if the principles which they advance be sound, the duty should embrace every raw material found or procured with ease and cheapness and in abundance in the United States. The committee have confined themselves to the home market in the brief view which they have presented. The question how far the increase of this home market, by an increase of duty on foreign articles, would affect the demand of our agricultural products abroad, leads to a new train of considerations. The first inquiry which naturally occurs on this point is, what are the inducements with foreign nations to purchase the productions of our soil? What their motives? What the moving causes of the market which they extend? Is their policy founded on favor, reciprocity, self-interest, or necessity? On this subject there is little ground for difference of opinion. Foreign nations act not for us, but for themselves. Favor, and even reciprocity, form no basis for their measures towards us beyond the compass of bare expediency. They will consume our raw materials when they cannot do better; when they can, they will not consume them. When the consumption of our agricultural products comes in contact with any principle of political economy applicable to their own condition, a hostile tariff meets us at their shores. Hence, the foreign market for the fruits of our soil depends but little on the sale which foreign manufactures find in this country; and whether we purchase more or less, foreign nations will graduate their policy towards us by a standard independent of any general system of duties which we may adopt; at least, so it appears to your committee.

How long would Great Britain purchase our cotton if her own colonies could supply her demands? How many nations would consume any article that is cultivated by the American agriculturist if they could find their demand supplied on better and more advantageous conditions by home industry? These questions are answered by their propositions; it is, therefore, the opinion of the committee that the foreign market for our agricultural products, and for the staple articles of our exports, in the shape of raw materials, will not be essentially affected by any increase of duty on those foreign manufactures which are composed of similar materials.

As to the amount of duty which should be imposed, it must always depend upon a variety of considerations which need not be detailed; it should be sufficient to secure the exclusive and constant demand of our raw materials, and to sustain the American manufacturer in his pursuits; it must be competent to build up and protect those manufacturing establishments at present in the country, and which, with a reasonable encouragement, will present a constant demand for those raw materials.

In fact, as to the articles of foreign growth or manufacture, which should be taxed in order to increase our agricultural prosperity, your committee would refer, generally, to the tariff now before the House. The committee do not perceive the necessity of selecting any articles or of imposing any duties beyond those embraced by that bill.

[1ST SESSION.]

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES AND BANK OF THE UNITED STATES AND OTHER BANKS RELATIVE TO THE PUBLIC DEPOSITS, &c.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 22, 1824.

In further compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of May 8, 1822, the Secretary of the Treasury has now the honor to transmit copies of all the official correspondence between the Secretary and the banks in which the public moneys were deposited from January 1, 1817, to May 8, 1822, that is considered as included, either directly or indirectly, in the terms of the resolution, and that has not been heretofore communicated to the House.

The Hon. Mr. Edwards, late a senator from Illinois, having stated, on his examination before a committee of the House, on February 13, 1823, that the late Receiver of Public Moneys at Edwardsville had, on his advice, and in his presence, written a letter to the Secretary, inclosing a copy of a publication which Mr. Edwards represents himself to have made some time in the year 1819, announcing his intention of retiring from the Directorship of the Bank of Edwardsville; and that he had advised the Receiver to withhold his deposits from the bank until he could receive further orders from the Secretary; and that the Receiver afterwards informed him that he had received a letter from the Secretary directing him to continue the deposits. The Secretary deems it proper to state that no such letter from the Receiver is to be found on the files of the Department; that the officers employed in it have no recollection of the receipt of such a letter; and that, on an examination of the records of the Department, it appears that no answer to any such letter, directing the Receiver to continue the deposits, was ever written to him by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

LETTERS TO BANKS IN THE FIRST QUARTER OF 1817.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 3, 1817.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose you sundry documents presented to this Department by persons representing the city of New Haven, in Connecticut.

The paper marked A will exhibit to the Board of Directors the preference which the Treasury feels for the establishment of a branch bank at New Haven to one at Middletown, if but one is to be established in Connecticut.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 6, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the 1st instant has been received. An order will issue to the Collectors of Baltimore and New York to transfer the bonds from the State banks in those places to the branch banks.

The extreme hesitation of the banks in answering the Treasury proposition of the 20th ultimo, and the unexpected taciturnity of the Directors of the Bank of the United States upon every subject which has been presented to them by this Department, cannot fail to produce some embarrassments in replying to the various suggestions contained in your letter. As the resolution of Congress does not prohibit the receipt of State paper before February 20, there is no disposition, on the part of the Treasury, to anticipate that event. The bank will, therefore, continue to receive the bills of the State banks in discharge of the revenue bonds deposited with it, if that course is deemed favorable to its future operations. The money thus collected may be employed in reducing the rate of exchange between the principal cities without subjecting the bank to the necessity of replacing those balances as they now exist. Should a majority of the State banks refuse to conform to the Treasury proposition, the money remaining in their vaults to the credit of the United States will be transferred to the Bank of the United States, and to its branches, in the manner already communicated to you, unless the Board of Directors shall suggest another which shall be deemed more eligible. After this explicit declaration, in answer to each of the suggestions presented in your letter of the 1st instant, I trust I shall not remain much longer without a disclosure of the views and intentions of the bank upon the various questions submitted by the Treasury to its consideration.

In receiving the State paper, and entering it to the credit of the United States as a special deposit, the bank must be sensible that the Government is not immediately benefitted. It may, indeed, be possibly, in some degree, injured by the operation. Whilst the public money was received by and deposited with the State bank, its own interest might stimulate it to make exertions, not only to sustain and extend its own credit, but to accommodate the Government in its fiscal operations. Stripped of that inducement, it is difficult to foresee the course which those institutions will adopt, especially if the Treasury proposition is rejected by them. The benefit the Government is to derive from the operations of the United States Bank with this paper will be remotely derived from the equalization of the rate of exchange between the different commercial cities. So far as this effect can be produced by the bank, its influence upon the resumption of specie payments may probably be beneficial. If, however, the State banks reject the Treasury proposition, I think there will be much reason to doubt their intention to resume specie payments on the 1st of July, or on any other day. Of the correctness of this opinion, the Board of Directors are more competent to determine than I am, and will, of course, adopt such precautionary measures as the probability of such an event may require.

I have the honor to be your most obedient and humble servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 7, 1817.

SIR: It appears by returns made to this Department by the Collector of the internal revenue that he has, at different times, deposited in your institution certain sums of money arising from taxes imposed by Congress; and in all such cases it is proper that the Treasurer should be regularly advised, at stated periods, of the payment so made, and by whom. I have, therefore, to request that, on the receipt of this letter, you will be pleased to cause duplicate accounts to be stated with Thomas T. Tucker, Treasurer of the United States, commencing with the first deposit, one of which is to be immediately forwarded to the said Treasurer, and the other to my office; observing to pursue the same course at the end of every subsequent week.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of Mississippi.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 16, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the — instant, proposing that the Directors of the Bank of the United States should be vested with a general authority to call upon the State banks for the deposits of public money now in their possession, and to conduct that operation in the mode which shall appear to them best, has been duly received.

The advantages which would probably result from the adoption of this course might possibly justify the experiment, if that power could, consistently with public duty, be transferred in this unqualified manner to other hands than those to whom the law has confided it.

Had the Bank of the United States, in making this proposition, engaged to receive the deposits as cash, and assumed the obligations of meeting the demands upon the Treasury in the local currency, whenever required, the inducement to accept of the proposition would have been very great. As no idea of this kind has been suggested by the bank in any communication to this Department, and as the State banks have had some reason to expect that this operation would be kept under the control of the Treasury, the proposition can be accepted only under certain modifications.

There can be no objection to the Board of Directors making propositions to the State banks which shall be subject to the revision of the President. Should they be accepted by those institutions, the Treasury will interfere no further than to carry them into effect. Should your efforts be unavailing, you will communicate to this Department the various propositions which you shall have made, which will be submitted to the President for his ultimate decision. It is proper to state that the City Bank and Mechanics' Bank of New York have resolved to resume specie payments on the twentieth day of February next. If the other banks of that place should ultimately refuse to come into the measure, it may be doubtful whether those two banks will not be induced to rescind their resolutions, and enter into measures with the Bank of the United States, under the authority given to the Directors in this letter.

It may be proper to observe that, in declining to transfer the unlimited power to the Board of Directors of directing the operation of changing the deposit of the public money, no distrust of the discretion of that body, or of the correct views with which it would be animated in the execution of that high and delicate trust, has had the slightest influence.

I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 16, 1817.

SIR: Under the 15th article of the 11th section of the act incorporating the subscribers to the Bank of the United States it is provided that the officer at the head of the Treasury Department of the United States shall be furnished, from time to time, as often as he may require, not exceeding once a week, with statements of the amount of the capital stock of the said corporation, and of the debts due to the same; of the moneys deposited therein; of the notes in circulation, and of the specie on hand.

As the bank has commenced its operations in Philadelphia, New York, and Baltimore, it has become my duty to require regular statements, in conformity with the foregoing regulation.

These statements, until otherwise directed, must be made every two weeks. According to the existing regulations, the Collectors of Customs are required to make weekly statements of the amount of revenue received by them and paid into the banks; weekly returns to this office and to the Treasurer of the United States will, therefore, be required from the Bank of the United States, and from the branch banks, of the amount of the public money paid to them, respectively, by the Collectors, showing the aggregate amount at the time of each successive statement. These statements are necessary as checks upon the returns of the Collectors, and to enable the officer charged with keeping the accounts of the Secretary of the Treasury to correct any errors which may result from irregularities in the returns of the Collectors.

The payments made to the bank should be distinguished under three heads, viz: customs, internal revenue, and direct tax.

Should money be paid into the bank for the use of the United States which cannot be classed under either of those heads, the source from whence it is derived must be designated in the entry upon the books of the bank. No discrimination, however, is required in stating the balance remaining to the credit of the Treasurer.

It is desirable that the first return should be made with as little delay as possible, and that the second should commence with the ensuing month.

I have the honor to be your most obedient humble servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 21, 1817.

SIR: A letter has this day been written from this Department to Dennis A. Smith, Cashier of the Mechanics' Bank of Baltimore, informing him that, upon his depositing $50,000 to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, a draft will issue on the Bank of Orleans for that sum, in favor of the Planters' Bank of Louisiana.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Planters' Bank of Louisiana.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 23, 1817.

SIR: On placing the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the credit of the United States in the Bank of Columbia, the Treasurer will be instructed to draw, and deposit in said bank, a bill on the Bank of Louisiana, in your favor, for the like sum.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

CASHIER of the Bank of Columbia.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 24, 1817.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated Bank of the United States, January, 1817.

In answer, I have the honor to state that in my communication with the bank I have endeavored to be explicit, and to avoid delay where it could produce inconvenience to the institution. In omitting to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, containing the decision of the Board upon the subject-matter of my letter to you of the 29th of November, 1816, I conceived that no answer was necessary. The decision of the Board, so far as it related to the collection of the revenue arising from the customs, was entirely satisfactory. Had it been made and communicated prior to the 20th of December last, my proposition to the State banks would have been of a different character, if, indeed, any had been made. The other part of the decision of the Board is conformable to the expectations which I had entertained, and is not materially different from my own impressions. Yet it is manifest that, without the State banks can be brought into an arrangement by which their paper can be received in payment of taxes, there will be no medium upon the 20th of February next in which those dues can be paid.

The bank, in crediting the debtors of the Government, will not be compelled to issue their paper, or expose themselves to danger, until after the 1st of July; previous to which time they will be able to guard against the effects of a run upon the institution.

Your reference to the 16th section of the charter, as explanatory of the effects of depositing the public money with the bank which is now in the State banks, presents that subject in a point of view wholly new to me, and I am inclined to think to the Board also. On the 6th of December last, when the Board notified the Treasury that it would be ready to receive the deposits of public money in Philadelphia on the 1st instant, and would hold the same specially as received to the order of the Government, it did not, I am persuaded, intend to contract the obligation to pay the drafts of the Government drawn upon those deposits in gold or silver, or in its own bills. If such was its intention, so important a feature in its undertaking ought not to have been left to inference, and that, too, of the most doubtful nature.

It is true that the 16th section prohibits the bank from suspending or refusing to pay specie on money deposited; but then the question recurs whether the deposits are money? The proposition of the bank to hold the deposits specifically subject to the order of the Government was distinctly understood to deny that they were money, although that term was used in the resolution. The construction put upon this act of the bank by the Treasury is believed to be that which was understood by all persons connected with the bank who have visited this place since the proposition was made. The reference, however, which you have made to the charter is entirely satisfactory to me, although you have not said that the bank has assumed the obligation to pay the draft of the Treasury in gold or silver, or in its own bills, to the amount of the public deposits which shall be transferred from the State banks. Under this view of the case, the Treasurer has been instructed to forward to the bank the necessary authority to receive the deposits in Philadelphia and Baltimore, and have directed those banks to transfer the amount in their hands upon your application. In giving this power, it is expected that the bank will keep the Treasury advised of the measures which it adopts, for the purpose of effecting the transfer in the most convenient form to the community, and without injury to the State banks.

Two of the State banks in New York having undertaken to pay specie on the 20th February, some embarrassments may be produced in that place.

Standing alone in the effort which they have undertaken to make, it is extremely doubtful whether they will not find it to their interest to rescind the resolution and enter into arrangements with the Bank of the United States.

This course will be acceptable to the Treasury. The Bank of the United States is authorized to arrange the subject with them if they are disposed to adopt this course.

In the State Bank of Boston the public money has accumulated during the last and present month to a sum exceeding three hundred thousand dollars. This sum they request may be drawn from them, so as to protract the transfer to the month of December next. A copy of their letter, and of my answer, is inclosed. It is alleged by some of the other State banks that they have pursued the same course, and that they have the same equity in their favor.

I am not in possession of any other facts alleged than what are contained in the letter alluded to.

In the case of the deposits at Boston, it is desirable that they should be applied, as soon as the convenience of all the parties will admit, to the extinguishment of the debt due to the Bank of the United States. The sums falling due in that city, together with the deposits, will amount to about a million and a half of dollars by the first of April, at which period I shall be solicitous to repay the bank the amount of the loan.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 25, 1817

SIR: In ordering the deposits to be transferred to the Bank of the United States from the State banks in Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, it is due to those banks to state that they have fulfilled their engagements with the Treasury with punctuality and fidelity, and are entitled to expect from it some regard to their interest and prosperity. The State banks in the interior are solicitous to be continued as the place of deposit for the money collected from the internal revenue, where it would be inconvenient to make the deposit in the Bank of the United States.

As the Bank of the United States is bound to transmit the public money at its own risk and expense whenever it shall be required, it is considered that the situation of the banks in the interior, where the deposits are to be made, should be referred to the Directors, to enable them to make arrangements for the transmission of the money so deposited in a mode the least inconvenient to itself. The application of the interior banks for this purpose will therefore be referred to the Board of Directors for their consideration. The Easton Bank has already made a direct application to be continued as the place of deposit of the public money collected in that part of the State, and has been referred to the Bank of the United States.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 27, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the 1st instant has been received. In reply, I can only state that the interest of the bank will be consulted as far as the public interest will permit. I presume, however, that it will not be possible to draw the money from the bank in the sums proposed, as the sum now deposited in the bank would not be withdrawn until the month of December next.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the State Bank, Boston.

CIRCULAR.

To all the banks in the States of Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, in which the public moneys are deposited:

SIR: The Treasurer of the United States has been instructed to authorize the Bank of the United States to receive the public money deposited in your institution, and to inform you of the fact as early as possible.

In giving this order, it is confidently expected that the Bank of the United States will effect the transfer in a mode the least onerous to your institution and the most convenient to the community. The deep interest which that institution must feel for the credit of the paper system, and its intimate connexion with the Government, are considered sufficient guarantees for the intelligent and disinterested manner in which this operation will be effected, independent of the power of the Treasury Department to control its proceeding, at any moment, by changing the deposits to the State banks.

Under this view of the subject, it has been determined to submit the manner in which the transfer is to be made to the Bank of the United States, requiring it to keep this Department constantly advised of the measures which it may adopt for that purpose.

The Bank of the United States has been informed of the fidelity with which your institution has fulfilled its engagements with the Government, and has been requested to favor its interests, where it can be done consistently with that of the community, especially in continuing to it the deposit of the public money, when that deposit cannot with convenience be made in its own vaults or in that of its branches.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 28, 1817.

CIRCULAR.

To all those banks holding deposits of Treasury notes :

SIR: I have to request that, immediately upon the receipt of this letter, you will cause all those notes denominated small Treasury notes, as also all Treasury notes bearing interest, which are now on deposit in your institution, to be transmitted to the Treasurer of the United States with the least possible delay; observing first to have them cancelled, by striking a punch through the signatures, and accompanied by a descriptive list of each kind.

I have also to request that you will furnish me with a statement of the different kinds of bank notes upon special deposit in your institution to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, specifying the banks by which they were respectively issued, and the amount issued by each bank.

An early compliance with the above requests will confer an obligation on the Department.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 7, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the first, with its inclosures, was received by due course of mail.

An immediate reply would have been forwarded but for the uncertainty which still rests upon the subject to which it refers.

If the recommendation of the convention of the State banks shall be accepted by the institutions represented in the convention, the assent of the Treasury will be most cheerfully given to the arrangement. The Manhattan Company and Mr. Girard have both notified the Treasury that they will pay specie on the 20th instant. As the first had refused, and only came into the measure after it was appraised of the measures which were under consideration at Philadelphia, and as the last assented unconditionally to the proposition only after the order to transfer had issued, no difficulty will arise from their subsequent acts. I am, however, informed that the President of the City Bank of New York protested in the convention against the third condition in the proposition submitted by the Bank of the United States; as that condition is the most important in the proposition, and the one, in fact, which must decide the fate of the measure, it is to be apprehended that that bank will not assent to the recommendation of the convention. It is stated here by a member of Congress, who is a Director of that bank, that in consequence of its engagement to pay specie, and of its belief that the other banks would not come into the arrangement, it had purchased a considerable amount of specie at a considerable premium, calculating that the interest which would be derived from the public deposits would indemnify it for the sacrifice.

So far as purchases have been made under this impression, beyond what would have been necessary upon a general resumption of specie payments by the State banks, there appears to be an equitable claim upon the deposits. If the other banks, however, come into this measure, I do not think that the opposition of the City Bank and the Mechanics' Bank of New York ought to be permitted to interfere with it. It is apparent on the face of the Treasury proposition, that unless a large proportion of the State banks come into the measure, there was no inducement, and also no intention, on the part of the Treasury, to persevere in the measure.

The resumption of specie payments by those institutions on the 20th instant is of so much importance to the community that I should be disposed to suggest to the Bank of the United States the propriety of postponing the period at which interest should begin to accrue on the deposits to the 1st of April, instead of the 20th instant, if that modification should be found to be more likely to remove objections on the part of those two banks. No intimation of this suggestion has been given to either of those banks. It is made with a view to take from the City Bank the shadow of any just cause of complaint. The interest of her deposits of public money from the 20th instant to the 1st of April will, I presume, greatly exceed any premium which she may have paid in the purchase of specie beyond what she would have been compelled to purchase independent of her engagement with the Treasury.

The modification suggested, I presume, will be universally acceptable to the other banks. The subject, however, is referred to the discretion of the Board of Directors, under an impression that they will not suffer the consideration of a small pecuniary interest to interfere with the execution of so important a measure. If the State banks can be brought, by a concession of this nature, to move harmoniously with each other and with the Bank of the United States, the beneficial consequences resulting from it will be cheaply attained by such concession.

I have the honor to be your most obedient and humble servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

SIR: By the returns of the Collector of the Customs at New York, and the bank receipts transmitted by him, it appears that the deposit made by him in the Mechanics' Bank of the city of New York, on the 29th of October, 1816, to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, was $35,774 76. In the bank return of the 4th November it is entered $35,774 70, being six cents less. You are requested to correct this error in your next return, and to be particular in designating the deposit to which the six cents then brought in belong.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

CASHIER of the Mechanics' Bank, New York.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 8, 1817.

SIR: In the returns of the Alleghany Bank of Pennsylvania, dated on the 29th November, 1816, and 3d January, 1817, you have omitted to state the name of the Collector by whom the deposits therein mentioned, on account of the direct taxes and internal duties, were made. As that information is necessary for this office, you are requested to transmit, as early as possible, amended returns in lieu of those above described, in which the name of the Collector shall be particularly stated for each deposit.

I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

CASHIER of the Alleghany Bank of Pennsylvania, Bedford, Pa.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 10, 1817.

SIR: The inclosed communications are transmitted to the Bank of the United States for its consideration and decision. The order to deposit at Hartford arose from an unwillingness to increase the number of banks of deposit at the moment when many of those banks would be called upon to deliver up the public money deposited with them. The amount, however, in the hands of the Collector was too great to be permitted to remain there. From the facts stated in the communications referred to, it appears that the money had been deposited in the banks of New London, to the credit of the Collector, upon some arrangement made between them and that officer which was unknown to the Treasury. It has already been stated to the Bank of the United States that the selection of banks for the deposit of public money, where it would be inconvenient to deposit it in the Bank of the United States, or its branches, would be referred to the President and Directors, according to the 14th rule of the charter. The bank is therefore requested to make arrangements with one or both of the banks in New London, as it may think proper, for the deposit of the public money collected at that place, unless some other arrangement may be thought more eligible.

The last report of the Treasurer, showing the amount of the public money now in the different State banks, distinguishing between cash and special deposits of bank notes, will be forwarded by this day's mail, if the dissection of the special deposit can be made in time. This dissection is necessary, as the report does not distinguish between Treasury notes bearing interest and bank notes received by the banks in specie.

A list of the Collectors of Internal Revenue, whose situation it is supposed will render it inconvenient to them to deposit in the Bank of the United States, or in its branches, will be forwarded, with a view to draw the attention of the Board to the situation of banks for that purpose. The Treasurer's report will show the banks with whom those Collectors now deposit.

I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 13, 1817.

SIR: The President of the Bank of the United States has officially informed me of the ratification by the banks of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Richmond, of the proposition made to them by the Bank of the United States for the resumption of specie payments on the 20th instant. I have, at the same time, been informed that the bank of which you are President has protested against the third condition in that proposition.

If the third condition is waived in favor of the receiving banks, it is manifest that they receive all the benefit of the engagements made by the Bank of the United States in favor of the State banks without giving anything in return. The Treasury proposition was made to the banks as a collective body. It was addressed as well to the banks which had no deposits as to those which had them. The right to transfer the deposits with a view to equalize the benefits resulting from them among the banking community, as the situation of the several banks might require, was expressly reserved. The object of the proposition was to draw so many of the banks into the resumption of specie payments on the 20th instant as to furnish to the people a currency in which they might discharge their taxes to the Government. The whole proposition shows that, unless the banks in the principal commercial cities should change the determination which they had previously formed, not to pay specie before the 20th instant, the deposits would be transferred to the Bank of the United States. If only one or two banks in each of those cities should agree to resume specie payments, there would arise no obligation on the part of the Treasury to consider their engagements as complying with its proposition. If such had been the result of the effort made by the Treasury, it might have been a subject of subsequent consideration whether the public interest would not have justified the Secretary in continuing the deposits in those banks. But the proposition has been accepted only by two banks in New York, and the proposition of the Bank of the United States has been accepted unconditionally by all the banks in the places before mentioned, except those two and another in the same city. Under these circumstances, the public interest requires that the proposition of the Bank of the United States should be carried into complete effect, so far as the Treasury is concerned. A rejection of the proposition by the three banks with which public money is deposited in New York would defeat the arrangement if the Treasury should support them in that rejection. The Bank of the United States would feel itself absolved from all obligation to comply with any one of the engagements which it has imposed upon itself in favor of the State banks if the third condition is rejected by the banks of New York in which the public money is now deposited. Believing, therefore, that those banks will, in common with the other banks of that city, and of the cities of Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Richmond, receive a fair equivalent for the transfer of the deposits, as proposed by the Bank of the United States, and being instructed to that effect by the President of the United States, I have directed the Treasurer of the United States to draw upon the banks of New York with which the public money is deposited, and generally through the United States, in favor of the Bank of the United States, for the amount of the public money deposited in those banks. You will therefore have the goodness to make the arrangements necessary to carry this arrangement into effect. The banks of Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Richmond, with which the public money is deposited, have made no objection to this arrangement. On the contrary, most of them have been the most forward in promoting it. It is therefore not expected that those of New York, which have been benefited in a higher degree by the deposits than those banks, should throw obstacles in the way of this important arrangement.

I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Mechanics' Bank of New York.

P. S. Your letter of the — to the Hon. Mr. Sanford has been submitted to my perusal. The view there presented has not produced any change in the determination communicated in this letter. The Secretary of the Treasury will always be disposed to support the credit of the State banks, and will invariably direct transfers from the deposits of the public money in aid of their legitimate exertions to maintain their credit. But, as the proposition of the Bank of the United States excludes the idea of pressure on its part, no measure of that nature appears to be necessary at this time.

W. H. C.

A letter, similar to the foregoing, (without the postscript,) was addressed on the same day to the President of the City Bank of New York.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 13, 1817.

Sir: Your letter of the — instant, inclosing the communication of Robert Waln, Esq., chairman of the late convention of the banks of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Richmond, was received yesterday by mail.

The modifications under which the banks of New York which are in possession of the public deposits have accepted the proposition of the Bank of the United States was foreseen.

This proposition, however, must be carried completely into effect, or be completely abandoned. The banks with which the public money is deposited in that city will receive an equal share of the benefits resulting to the State banks from the engagements of that of the United States; and it would be unreasonable for them to withdraw themselves from those conditions in that proposition, which were the leading inducements on the part of the Bank of the United States to make it. I am therefore instructed by the President to ratify the arrangement without modification. Mr. Girard, and the banks of New York which have acceded to the arrangement without any qualification, will be informed of this decision by this day's mail.

I transmit, for your information, the report of the Treasurer, showing the amount of money now in the Treasury, when deposited, and distinguishing between cash and special deposits. The Treasury notes will be transmitted by the State banks, to be cancelled, without passing through the hands of the Bank of the United States.

The banks of Newburg and the Cheshire Bank, in contemplation of the adoption of the proposition of the Bank of the United States by the State banks, have proposed to change the special deposit into cash; the latter, however, expressly stipulating that the deposit should remain with them until the first day of July next. From this circumstance I am inclined to believe that arrangements of that nature may be easily effected, and the special deposits made active, without loss, after that date. Both of these banks seem to have formed the idea that, as they have agreed to pay specie on the 20th of February, although their engagement was entirely dependent on that of the city banks, they are to retain the deposits of cash until the 1st of July. They will be immediately informed that they are not to be placed on a better footing than the banks whose determination has prescribed their line of conduct.

The balances will probably undergo some slight changes before they are delivered to the Bank of the United States.

I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT of the Bank of the United States.

Sir: No statement of the account of the Bank of Washington, Pennsylvania, with the Treasurer of the United States, has been received at this Department since that of December 1, 1816. You will be pleased to transmit those for the two months which have since elapsed without further delay. You will observe that it is necessary that a return be made by the bank every month, although no alteration may have taken place in the state of the account.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

SIR: No statement of the account of the Wilmington branch of the State Bank of North Carolina with the Treasurer of the United States has been received at this Department since that dated December 1, 1816. You will be pleased to forward the accounts for the two months which have since elapsed without further delay.

JOHN H. WARD, Esq., *Cashier Wilmington branch

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 14, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the 1st instant, accepting the terms offered by the Treasury in the circular of the 20th of December last to the State banks, has been received. As the proposition of the Bank of the United States has been unconditionally accepted by the banks of Virginia, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, with the exception of the institution over which you preside, and the other two banks in the latter city with which the public money has been deposited, an order has already issued directing the transfer of the public deposits from the State banks, in conformity with that proposition. As the measure, which has met with the concurrence of a great majority of the State banks in the principal commercial cities, secures your institution against any possible danger on the part of that of the United States, except the payment of interest on that part of the public money deposited with you which you are unable to liquidate by drafts on other banks, it is confidently expected that the measure will meet your approbation. It is a mere question of interest, for which you are amply compensated by the security you derive from the engagement of the Bank of the United States to aid with her powerful means the measure of the State banks whilst struggling with the embarrassments resulting from an earlier resumption of specie payments than was contemplated. The measure has received the approbation of the President, and will be carried strictly into effect.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

PRESIDENT Manhattan Company, New York.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 14, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the 28th ultimo has been received. In that of the 24th of December you made your acceptance of the Treasury proposition to depend upon the other two banks in Philadelphia with which the public money was deposited. As those two banks declined the Treasury proposition, the condition upon which your acceptance was made to depend having failed, it was considered void, and an order was issued on the 24th ultimo to the Treasurer, directing him to take the necessary measures to transfer the public deposits in the banks of Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, to the Bank of the United States, of which you were notified.

These circumstances are mentioned more for the purpose of accounting for any apparent neglect in answering that letter than to justify the course which the Treasury feels itself bound to adopt from a regard to the public interest; for, independent of the particular circumstances of your case, there is no difficulty on the part of this Department to carry into effect the proposition of the Bank of the United States to order the transfer of the deposits on the 20th instant. The benefits resulting from the general and unreserved execution of that measure are too important to the community to suffer the interest of any State bank in the deposits to interfere with it. Considering the advantage which the banks which heretofore had the public deposits have derived from them, there cannot be any reasonable doubt of their ready acquiescence in a measure to which the other State banks have acceded with alacrity. A contrary supposition would comport neither with the high character of those institutions nor with the nature of the connexion which has existed between them and the Treasury Department.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

STEPHEN GIRARD, Esq., Philadelphia.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 17, 1817.

SIR: Your letter of the 15th instant,* as well as that which preceded it on the same subject, has been received.

The Bank of the United States was informed on the — ultimo that the Banks of Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, were directed to transfer the public money deposited with them to the Bank of the United States. On the same day the Treasurer was directed to adopt the measure necessary to effect the transfer.
