LAND IN THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS, CALLED THE "BATTURE."

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JUNE 12, 1809.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, to whom were referred the petitions of Edward Livingston, Esquire, and of the inhabitants of the territory of Orleans, by the resolutions of the House of Representatives of the 6th of December, 1808, and 13th January, 1809, respectfully reports:

THAT he has examined and maturely considered the several petitions and documents accompanying them, in obedience to the resolves of the House.

It appears that the facts from which alone the law can arise are much controverted. These must be correctly ascertained before a satisfactory opinion can be formed.

The representation and statements of the parties vary on material and important points. Some of the documents and depositions in support of their respective allegations may be obtained in a more perfect shape, and in a manner more conformable to the rules of evidence.

It would require ample powers to obtain testimony, to the competency of which no objection could be made, in order to arrive at an accurate solution of the difficulties which present themselves on this subject. The contending parties should have a fair opportunity of producing all the evidence in their power, and of cross-examining their respective witnesses. The sole object must be to have a full investigation of the facts, and an impartial decision on the law which ought to govern the case.

This may be done by a tribunal to which Congress may, if they think proper, delegate competent powers and authority. It may be accomplished in various ways. An appeal may be given from the Territorial Court to the Supreme Court of the United States. If the judges of the Supreme Court would act, in the first instance, in the capacity of commissioners, they would be peculiarly well qualified to decide the case: or Congress may appoint other commissioners, or authorize the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint them. Whether it would be proper to give an appeal in a single case, or whether the judges of the Supreme Court would act as commissioners, are questions of delicacy. The usual course, where the rights of the United States are concerned, has been, I believe, to appoint a board of commissioners. Perhaps the case could be heard more fully by them, without being restricted to technical forms, than in any other manner. The whole subject may be brought before them, and they may embrace every proper method of examining into the facts and forming a correct judgment on the law. It is the interest of the Government that every private citizen should have a fair trial of the merits of his case, and a decision which should bind all parties interested or concerned. The subject in dispute is of great value and importance to the claimant; it is also of high concern to the public. All are interested in the adoption of some mode for obtaining an early decision of the case.

When the papers were delivered to me, my first impression was, that the House of Representatives might expect a detailed opinion on the subject, including the facts and the law. Had the former been established, the latter would have been a task less difficult. All the light afforded by the statements and papers on each side was not deemed sufficient to ascertain with precision the facts. The law itself, which should furnish the rule of determination, was also a matter of controversy. Perhaps it might be considered, not improperly, as foreign law, and in some degree, at least, the subject of proof.

I waited for the publication of various papers and opinions, which have now become very voluminous, calculated to throw additional light on the difficult questions which naturally arise in the case. Reflecting, however, on the embarrassment to which I was subjected from a want of power to ascertain with correctness the facts, and feeling a delicacy from having expressed an opinion (to which, on re-consideration, and I trust with a disposition to correct any error of judgment, I still adhere) on a statement officially furnished me, concurring with the judgment of the counsel who drew it up, I was led to view the resolutions of the House of Representatives in a different light. Taking into consideration the petitions presented at the last session, and the proceedings had at the previous one, I was induced to believe that the object contemplated, by a reference to me, was, that I should give an opinion as to the mode, or report some method of settling this important controversy, for the consideration of Congress. Under these circumstances, I respectfully submit to the House of Representatives the various methods of determination which I have presented to their view.

C. A. RODNEY.

To the honorable the Congress of the United States, in Senate and House of Representatives convened. The petition of Edward Livingston, of the city of New Orleans, Counsellor at Law, humbly sheweth:

That on the 25th day of January last, and long before, your petitioner was in peaceable possession of all that parcel of land, lying between the limits of the city of New Orleans and Julia street, in the suburb St. Mary, and bounded on one side by the highway, and on the other by the river Mississippi; that the said parcel of land had, from its first formation, been part of a tract of which the person under whom your petitioner claims, had been peaceably possessed upwards of eight years.

That on the day last above mentioned, the marshal of the district showed to your petitioner a letter, of which a copy is annexed, signed by the Secretary of State, ordering the said marshal, in the President's name, to remove all persons from the said lands, as by the said letter, to which your petitioner refers, may appear. And your petitioner shows, that, conceiving the said warrant to have been illegal and unadvisedly issued, he applied to the Superior Court of the territory of Orleans by petition, (which is also hereunto annexed,) and to which he refers, praying an injunction against the execution of the said warrant, which prayer was granted, and the said injunction was served on the marshal, who ordering, by beat of drum, the first, second, and third regiments of militia to come to his aid, did, on the said 25th day of January, proceed by force of arms to dispossess your petitioner of his said property.

And your petitioner shows, that the title of the person under whom your petitioner holds the said estate is a clear and indefeasible one, and that it was lately declared so to be, by the judgment of the Superior Court of the said territory, by which a perpetual injunction was granted against the claims of the town, and the plaintiff in the said suit, under whom your petitioner holds, was quieted in his possession, as appears by the printed documents hereunto annexed, the originals whereof, and of the deeds and other papers therein referred to, are in your petitioner's possession, ready to be produced to your honorable body, or to such committee as may be named to consider thereof.

And your petitioner shows, that he did not apply to the Superior Court to enforce the performance of its decree, or to punish the breach of its injunction, because the inhabitants of the city having in the suit aforesaid contended that they had a right to the property, and it having been given out to them that the United States only took possession in order to cede the same to them, a very large majority of the inhabitants were hostile to your petitioner's cause: your petitioner therefore verily believes, and was informed at the time, that the said inhabitants, supposing themselves supported by the President's authority, would have opposed the orders of the Superior Court, if any had been given, to restore your petitioner's possession, or to punish the marshal for a breach of the injunction. Therefore, to preserve the peace of the territory, and to avoid the conflict between the executive and judicial officers, disagreeable every where, but dreadful in a country where the distinction between the two powers is but lately known and very imperfectly understood, your petitioner avoided any further application to the court.

Your petitioner further shows, that in consequence of the late illegal seizure of his property, he hath suffered great damages, and hath been deprived of a very large income which he would have received from his said estate; that the same hath also been greatly deteriorated, and that he hath been obliged to make a voyage to the city of Washington, to the neglect of his professional business, by which alone he supports his family, and to the great detriment of his affairs.

That while in the United States he could never discover with precision what was the statement of facts laid before the Attorney General, or procure a copy of the opinion which he gave thereon; which opinion was made the groundwork of the said proceedings against your petitioner; that some material parts of the said statement, which were disclosed to him, were utterly unfounded in fact, and that, as far as he could judge of the Attorney General's opinion from the verbal communications made to him, the same consisted in one point of a true deduction from the said false statement, and in the other of a misconception of the laws of a foreign country, by which it was supposed your petitioner's title was to be decided.

That your petitioner offered to demonstrate to the President of the United States, and to the Attorney General, or to any other person the President should direct, that the said statement was false, and that the opinions of the said law were erroneous, and also in the manner most satisfactory to him to make out your petitioner's title to the said lands, provided, if he succeeded, as he had no doubt he would, in convincing them that the United States had not the slightest claim to the lands, then, and in no other case, the President of the United States would direct the marshal to restore his said property; your petitioner offering, in that case, to abandon all claim for the damages he had sustained. But to your petitioner's astonishment, this offer, as well as another he made to submit the cause to any tribunal or to any persons the President should name, were both rejected, and your petitioner was obliged to return to his family so much impoverished by the consequences of these proceedings, by the expenses of his journey, and the loss of his professional business, that he is at present without the pecuniary means of personally attending the session of your honorable body, to solicit that relief to which he is entitled.

And your petitioner further shows, that the Attorney of the United States for this district, styling himself the immediate representative of the legal interests of the United States in this district, has given his permission to the inhabitants of the city (whose claims were before decided on, and who were restrained by the perpetual injunction above set forth) to dig and carry away the soil from your petitioner's said property; and that the inhabitants, ignorant of the powers vested in the officers of the United States, are using this permission in a manner that will produce a most serious injury to the said property, by digging pits in the soil and carrying off the earth for the purpose of filling up the streets and lots of the city.

That your petitioner cannot attempt to obtain relief by an application to the courts of justice without producing a contest between the ministers of the executive and judicial authority, in which, for the reasons above stated, it is almost certain that the former would prevail; a conflict which he has the greater reason to dread, because having seen the disregard paid by the marshal to the injunction of the court, he showed the proof of that circumstance to the President, and respectfully asked, without being favored with any answer, whether this conduct of the marshal was approved of, and whether it was the intention of the President it should be persevered in for the future; from which circumstance your petitioner has reason to believe, and does believe, that he cannot pursue his remedy at law against those who have executed the President's warrant, without exciting a civil commotion in the country, and that this state of things will continue so long as the people believe, as they do now, that the former claims of the city to these lands are supported by the President against the decision of the judiciary.

For these reasons your petitioner believes that he is without remedy, unless the Congress of the United States shall interfere for his relief.

And your petitioner further shows, that as far as he hath been able to understand the claims of the United States, they are founded on an idea, that all the alluvions on the Mississippi belonged to the crowns of France and Spain successively, and from them passed to the United States; that this doctrine is fully refuted in the papers hereunto annexed; but that if it be enforced it will cause the utmost confusion, discontent, and distress in the territory, and that the popularity of the measures pursued in this case has proceeded from an idea highly derogatory to the dignity and justice of the United States, that the property of your petitioner alone is to be seized for the purpose of giving it to the town, while all the other alluvion proprietors are to be confirmed in their possession; an idea encouraged by unprincipled men to support their own popularity, but the more improbable and unjust as a very valuable tract of that description is held by a number of individuals under the same title with that of your petitioner; and it never can be believed that the United States would single out the one for seizure, while the other, held under the same deed, and separated only by an ideal line, should be confirmed.

Therefore, inasmuch as the act by which he hath been deprived of his estate, though done by the President of the United States, under color of a law, is a manifest breach of the constitution, which secures the trial by jury, assigns to the judiciary the decision of titles, and by its whole tenor and spirit protects private property from encroachment; inasmuch as the said act was done in a territory, of which the inhabitants have, besides the constitutional provisions, the guarantee of a solemn treaty for the protection of their property; and as an impartial trial cannot be had in this territory, where the inhabitants have been taught, by hopes of a future grant of the object in dispute, to feel themselves interested in the question, and as it would be cruel and unjust to harass an individual with a suit when there is no color of claim.

Your petitioner humbly prays that the members of your honorable body will take the trouble of examining the documents he will submit, and if (as he has no doubt will be case) the result should be a perfect conviction that the United States have no claim whatever to the land in question, that then a law may be passed relinquishing the possession so illegally taken from him, and providing some means for ascertaining and paying the great damages he has sustained.

But that if your honorable body shall suppose that there are such grounds as will justify the prosecution of a suit, then your petitioner may be restored to the possession which he lost by the said illegal warrant, in order that he may have all the legal advantage which such possession would give, and of which he ought never to have been before a trial deprived: and that provision may be made for trying such cause by a disinterested jury, before the Supreme Court, at its next session, or in some other speedy way that may enable your petitioner to pay a large debt he owes to the United States, and relieve him from his present embarrassments.

And your petitioner, &c.

EDWARD LIVINGSTON.

CLAIM OF THE CORPORATION AND INHABITANTS OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS TO THE LAND CALLED THE "BATTURE."

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 7, 1809.

The Mayor, Alderman, and citizens of New Orleans, to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled.

GENTLEMEN: Amidst the great political interests the discussion of which at present engrosses all your attention, and the decision of which must have so powerful an influence on the state of the nation, we are sensible how unreasonable and importunate it would be, to trespass on your time by laying before you all the details of an affair which appears at first view to be of importance to the city of New Orleans alone, but which really affects the commercial relations of the Western States with this country. We have seen, with sentiments of the most lively gratitude, that towards the close of your last session you were pleased to take into consideration the claim to the Batture; and the perusal of the debates on that subject in the House of Representatives having convinced us that some of the members viewed certain circumstances of the case, under relations not conformable to the local state of things, we have thought that you would favorably receive a few observations leading to a more correct knowledge of that affair. It is not our intention to discuss any of the points of law which this question may embrace; they have been sufficiently developed in the different memoirs published on this subject; our sole view is to enable you to make a just application of such principles as may have been urged on either side.

Mr. John Gravier, now represented by Mr. Livingston, had not what the latter contends he had, a plantation such as is considered riparious and contiguous to the river. It is the faubourg St. Mary that is really riparious, and the plantation still possessed by Mr. John Gravier lies behind that faubourg.

The river in front of this augmentation of the city alternately occupies and leaves uncovered a strand, or Batture, bounded by a levee, which a public road of about one hundred feet in breadth separates from the first row of houses in the faubourg, which conforms to a part of the curve formed by the port, instead of running along the line of the parallelogram represented by the plan of the city; that Batture, which it is now contended should be considered as private property, and which, as appears, is but a part of the port where all the flat-bottomed boats come to land, was designated under the denomination of Ploja in the plan of the faubourg which Bertram Gravier deposited in the archives of the Spanish Government. At his death it was not comprised in the inventory and estimation of his estate, and consequently the right of property to it was not transmitted to John Gravier, who possesses the plantation in the rear of the suburb St. Mary only by purchase.

The Spanish Government drove from it all the persons who attempted to erect huts on it at low water, and since the establishment of the faubourg St. Mary, the levee and high road by which it is bounded, have constantly been kept up and repaired at the expense of the city. These two facts are established by the affidavits collected by the late Colonel McCarty. Mr. Livingston urged, in support of his pretensions, the sale made by John Gravier to Mr. Claude, for Girod, of a portion of Batture, thence inferring that it was private property; but the latter was so well convinced of the nullity of that sale, that he afterwards requested of the Cabildo, by his petition of the 23th May, 1801, permission to erect a mill on that Batture, on his paying rent for the ground; and the Cabildo were so fully convinced that the Batture was public property, which could not admit of any obstruction, that they refused to grant to Mr. Girod the permission he requested, although that gentleman was willing to pay ground-rent for the portion of Batture on which he wished to build. Finally, Messrs. Bertram and John Gravier so evidently intended to divest themselves of all eventual right as riparious landholders, that in selling the lots on the quay of the faubourg, they acknowledged, in the deeds of sale, that those lots were fronting the Mississippi.

Whoever considers, with any degree of attention, the nature of the ground in dispute, will be convinced that it cannot be considered as an alluvion. We refer on this head to the authorities and to the luminous expositions contained in pages 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, of the memoir entitled, "Examination of the claim of the United States, and of the pretensions of Edward Livingston, Esq. to the Batture in front of the faubourg St. Mary."

We assure you, gentlemen, that we are far from entertaining a thought of inducing you to make law and equity bend under any considerations, however weighty. After having laid before you a correct statement of the circumstances which combine to prove the justice of the claim of the United States to that property, which the inhabitants of that country have ever considered as being public, we beg leave to lay before you some reflections which will convince you both of the danger that would attend its being adjudged to an individual, and how indispensable it is to the public.

According to the civil law, the soil of river banks belongs to the owners of the bordering lands, but the undisturbed use thereof belongs to the public. The law permits, indeed, the erecting of buildings on the sea shore, [3d partida, law 5, tit. 28,] but it expressly prohibits building on the banks of the river, [3d partida, law 8.] A law enacted by our Legislature has corroborated this principle, and Mr. Duponceau, counsel for Mr. Livingston, has exclaimed against this law, as being immoral, and has contended that the banks of rivers being the property of the borderers, it was consummate injustice to restrain them in the use of their property, by inhibiting them from constructing moles and houses, or sinking basins or docks on the banks, in order to hinder them from collecting a toll under the name of wharfage.

But either the Batture is a part of the port of New Orleans, or it must be considered, contrary to the fullest evidence, as a dependency of a riparious estate. On the former supposition, Mr. Livingston is excluded from all manner of right to it, both by the common law and by the civil; for, according to the public law of all nations, ports are considered as being of the number of public things. On the latter supposition, Mr. Livingston cannot claim a right to sink docks, build houses, or construct moles there, in order to lay a toll for his private benefit as wharfage, unless it be acknowledged at the same time that all riparious landholders have equally a right to do the same on their respective lands. Now, from such an extension of the right of riparious property, it would result that all vessels which in coming down the river might have occasion to put ashore at the landing place of any plantation, would be liable to be laid under contribution by the owner of the estate, and we should thus be plunged into a state of oppression even more intolerable than that of the times of feudal barbarity, when the lords built turrets on the high roads to harass and lay under contribution the traders going from one town to another; for those feudal lords pleaded only the right of the stronger, whereas the no less odious extortions in this case would be perpetrated under the sacred sanction of the laws.

Surely it is not necessary to enlarge on the vexatious consequences of such an abuse equally repugnant to justice and to good sense.

When to motives of equity so imperious are added considerations of public utility, it must surely be acknowledged that there exists in favor of Mr. Livingston no ground of hope that a body whose duty it is to defend the interests of the people will make any sacrifice of them to the sentiments of benevolence with which they might be inspired towards Mr. Livingston.

It is at the port of the Batture that all the flat-bottomed boats from Upper Louisiana and the United States come to land, when the waters are high. A great number of those boats are laden with live stock, salt provisions, or other produce that easily spoil. Instead of that spacious strand where these boats find a secure and commodious mooring ground, and a convenient landing, let them be supposed to be crowded in narrow docks, surrounded with two story houses, of which the filth is deposited in those docks. Can any one, without feeling the most alarming apprehensions, reflect on the mass of putrid miasms which would lie accumulated in those docks, when the decrease of the river would leave behind all the germs of putridity and mortality proceeding from those boats?

Are there not already in this country too many physical causes of insalubrity, which baffle all the care and precautions of the police, without increasing their deleterious influence by the construction of docks, to serve as common sewers to the surrounding houses.

But besides these considerations, the inhabitants of this city would suffer irreparable detriment by the loss of this public property. The bank of the river is really the most elevated part of the land on which the city is built. The soil receding from the levee inclines towards the lake in a degree perceptible to the eye, and is continually washed away by heavy rains, insomuch that every year the streets and the levees require to be raised with an immense quantity of earth. For these repairs, the corporation has ever had recourse to the mud which the river annually deposits on the Batture; and the householders have ever been accustomed to take from thence the necessary earth for building and for raising the soil of their court-yards. Their constant and undisturbed enjoyment of that Batture, until Mr. Livingston thought proper to oppose it, is established in the most authentic manner, by the collection of affidavits already mentioned, which we entreat you, gentlemen, to consult.

These are the only observations which we respectfully request you to take into consideration. We trust they will be sufficient to lead you to a full knowledge of the nature of the affair submitted to your examination.

It now remains, gentlemen, for us to wait, with entire resignation, and with full confidence in your discernment and equity, the decision of an affair which interests not only the trade and the inhabitants of this city, but also the entire population of Louisiana and of the United States.

Please to accept the sentiments of respect and attachment with which we have the honor to be, gentlemen, your faithful and affectionate fellow citizens.

CHARLES TRUDEAU.
JAMES MATHER, Mayor.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. The memorial of the undersigned humbly sheweth:

That your memorialists reside in the faubourg St. Mary, of New Orleans, are proprietors of lots fronting on the Mississippi, and that they purchased the same under a firm conviction that the space between the levee and the river at low water, commonly called the Batture, would remain open and unbuilt upon for ever. Many of your memorialists know, that the Spanish Government declared the Batture to be a public common, and would permit no individual to settle thereon; that when the faubourg St. Mary was laid out, the Batture was not of the extent it now is, and it can be satisfactorily proven that, at that period, at low water, the Mississippi was in several places bounded by the levee, and further, that from the establishment of the faubourg St. Mary to the present day the levee and road have been kept in constant repair, to wit, by the front proprietors immediately after their purchase, and at the expense of the city of New Orleans from the time the faubourg began to grow more settled up to the present date. Your memorialists also state that the Batture is covered with water from five to six months in each year, and during that time is, and has been considered as a part of the bed of the Mississippi.

With a knowledge of these facts, your memorialists heard with regret and surprise that Mr. Edward Livingston of New York, by virtue of a conditional purchase, made of a certain John Gravier, had claimed a right of ownership over the Batture, and that his claim had been approved by a decision of the Superior Court of this territory. Your memorialists heard of this decision with the more surprise, because it was generally understood that if the Batture did not, as a public common, appertain to the city, that it ought to be considered as a part of the domain belonging to the United States, and your memorialists were taught to believe, that in questions where the rights of the United States were involved, the territorial courts had no jurisdiction.

The subject which we have taken the liberty to introduce to the notice of your honorable body is highly interesting to the inhabitants of New Orleans, and to every citizen who wishes its welfare; but to your memorialists it is particularly so, because the value of their property materially depends upon the dispositions which shall be made of the Batture. Your memorialists, therefore, may be permitted sincerely to regret that Mr. Livingston's claim had not been submitted to a decision by jury; a mode of trial held in such high estimation, and so justly, too, under the Government of the United States.

Whether the honorable judges who approved Mr. Livingston's pretensions, sat as a court of law, or of chancery, your memorialists are not advised; they, however, are informed that the honorable court directed on the occasion chancery process; but how far they had competent power to do so, is a question on which your memorialists will not presume to give an opinion.

Your memorialists are advised and believe that an agent of Mr. Livingston did file his claim for the Batture before the Board of Land Commissioners for this district—a tribunal specially established by Congress to decide on the validity of all private claims for lands within this part of the ceded territory. A tribunal to which the good inhabitants of this territory have resorted, and to whose decision they cheerfully submit; and your memorialists, with the greatest deference and respect for your honorable body, really cannot see any just reason why an exception should be made in favor of Mr. Edward Livingston, of New York.

In the fall of 1807, Mr. Edward Livingston began to reclaim the Batture, and commenced projects of improvement which, if he had completed, would, in the opinion of your memorialists, have proved ruinous to the city of New Orleans, and destructive to the health of its inhabitants. Your memorialists verily believe, that the reclaiming of the Batture will tend to change the current of the Mississippi in front of New Orleans, and to hasten the formation of a Batture along the whole front of the city. Your memorialists further believe that if canals and docks be made on the Batture, and warehouses or other buildings erected in their vicinity, that New Orleans will become the seat of disease, for the various matter for putrefaction which these docks and canals will contain, cannot fail, under the influence of the hot sun of Louisiana, to generate malignant fevers.

Under all these circumstances, your memorialists humbly and respectfully entreat your honorable body to retain in the United States the title to the Batture, and that you would ordain that it remain open and unbuilt upon for ever, and be used as a common, as well for all the inhabitants of New Orleans as for our western fellow citizens and others, who may trade to this port; or that you would cede the Batture to the city of New Orleans upon the above conditions. But if unfortunately your honorable body should deem it proper to place Mr. Livingston in possession of the Batture, your memorialists in that event respectfully solicit that nothing in this memorial may be construed to invalidate the equitable claim of the proprietors of the front lots to the Batture. For your memorialists are persuaded that if the Batture be not the property of the United States, that it must, upon every principle of justice, belong to the front proprietors.

ERROR IN ENTERING LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 3, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Frederick Pontius, made the following report :

The petitioner states that, on the 7th day of September, 1807, he entered at the Land Office in Chilicothe the south half of section No. 24, in the third township of the twenty-second range; that the said half section was not the lot he intended to purchase, and that the mistake in his entry originated from his speaking bad English, being a German, and the clerk not understanding the German language; he admits the mistake to have been made by himself, and not by the clerk. He prays that he may be permitted to withdraw his entry from the said half section, on condition of his applying the first instalment of the purchase money (which he has already paid) to the purchase of some other half section of land in the same district.

The committee are of opinion that it would be improper to authorize the petitioner to withdraw his entry. The proceedings of Government ought to be uniform; if he be entitled to relief against his own mistake, so would every other purchaser making the same allegation; to admit claims grounded on the intention of the purchaser being different from his act, which in its nature must be difficult, if at all susceptible of proof, and against which there can exist no check, would be to adopt a principle too vague for a rule of proceeding in the Land Office; therefore the committee recommend the following resolution :

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

GRANT TO DANIEL BOONE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 12, 1810.

Mr. MEIGS, from the committee to whom was referred the petition of Daniel Boone, together with the bill for his relief, made the following report:

That, at a period antecedent to the revolutionary war, Daniel Boone, the petitioner, possessing an ardent desire for the exploration of the (then) Western wilderness of the United States, after traversing a length of mountainous and uninhabited country, discovered and, with a few bold and enterprising fellows, established, with a perilous hardihood, the first settlement of civilized population in the (now) State of Kentucky. That, in maintaining the possession of that country, until the peace of 1783, he experienced all the vicissitudes of a war with enemies the most daring, insidious, and cruel, and which were aided by Canadians from the British provinces of Upper Canada; and that during that long contest he lost several children by the hands of the savages.

That it appears to the committee, that although the petitioner was not officially employed by the Government of the United States, yet that he was actually engaged against their enemies, through the whole of the war of the Revolution.

That in the exploring, settling, and defending that country, he eminently contributed to the early march of the American Western population, and which has redounded to the benefit of the United States. That your petitioner is old, infirm, and, though dependent on agriculture, by adverse and unpropitious circumstances, possesses not one acre of that immeasurable territory which he so well defended, after having been the pioneer of its settlement. The petitioner disclaiming all idea of a demand upon the justice of his country, yet requests, as a grateful benevolence, that Congress would grant him some reasonable portion of land in the territory of Louisiana. The committee, upon the whole circumstances of the merit and situation of the petitioner, beg leave to report the bill without amendment.

sonal exertions, been greatly instrumental in opening the road to civilization in the immense territories now attached to the United States, and, in some instances, matured into independent States.

An ardent thirst for discovery, united with a desire to benefit a rising family, has impelled him to encounter the numerous hardships, privations, difficulties, and dangers to which he has unavoidably been exposed. How far his desire for discovery has been extended, and what consequences have resulted from his labors, are, at this time, unnecessary to detail.

But, while your petitioner has thus opened the way to thousands, to countries possessed of every natural advantage, and although he may have gratified to excess his thirst for discovery, he has to lament that he has not derived those personal advantages which his exertions would seem to have merited. He has secured but a scanty portion of that immeasurable territory over which his discoveries have extended, and his family have reason to regret that their interest had not been more the great object of his discoveries.

Your petitioner has nothing to demand from the justice of his country, but he respectfully suggests, that it might be deemed an act of grateful benevolence, if his country, amidst their bounties, would so far gratify his last wish, as to grant him some reasonable portion of land within the territory of Louisiana.

He is the more induced to this request, as the favorite pittance of soil to which he conceived he had acquired a title, under the Spanish Government, has been wrested from him by a construction of the existing laws not in his contemplation, and beyond his foresight. Your petitioner is not disposed to murmur or complain; but conscious of the value and extent of his services, he solicits some evidence of their liberality.

He approaches the august assemblage of his fellow-citizens with a confidence inspired by that spirit which has led him so often to the deep recesses of the wilds of America; and he flatters himself that he with his family will be induced to acknowledge that the United States knows how to appreciate and encourage the efforts of her citizens, in enterprises of magnitude, from which proportionate public good may be derived.

MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS FRAUDULENTLY OBTAINED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 16, 1810.

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 13, 1810.

The SECRETARY OF WAR, in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States of the 5th instant, referring the petition of Mary Piercy, has the honor to report:

That it appears that the petitioner is the widow and sole representative of Henry Piercy, a lieutenant in the late revolutionary army, who served as such to the close of the war; by which service he became legally entitled to two hundred acres of land. It further appears that, in the year 1794, a warrant was made out at the War

Office of the United States for said two hundred acres of land, and that the same was surreptitiously taken therefrom, and has since been located, and that the said Henry Piercy did not, during his lifetime, nor his representatives since his disease, ever obtain possession of the said warrant, or of the land to which it gave a title.

Under the circumstances above stated, it appears to be just and reasonable, as the legal proprietor was never put in possession of the property by the Government, that the prayer of the petition should be granted.

Respectfully submitted.

APPLICATION FOR A DONATION OF LAND TO A SEMINARY OF LEARNING IN VIRGINIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 19, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the trustees for the academy of Stephensburgh, in the State of Virginia, made the following report:

The object of the petition is to obtain from the United States a reasonable donation in money or Western lands, to enable the trustees for the said academy to complete the buildings which have been commenced, the trustees being apprehensive that a sufficient sum cannot be raised by private subscription to defray the expenses that may be incurred.

The committee, whilst they highly appreciate the advantages to society of literary institutions, and view the policy of making liberal provisions for such establishments as wise and honorable, are impressed with the opinion that such aid can more properly be afforded by the individual States than by the General Government. It does not occur to the committee that any donation has been made by Congress similar to that asked for by the petitioners.

The appropriation of lands for the endowment of seminaries of learning, and for the support of schools in the several territories, were made prior to the sales of the surrounding public lands; and were supposed to confer an additional value on them; hence the Government, in the sale of those lands, have received a valuable consideration for that which in the first instance was gratuitously granted. By complying with the prayer of the petitioners, a precedent would be founded for similar grants, and there can be no doubt but that the applications would be numerous. If the present exigencies of the Government did not forbid the application of the national funds to new objects of expenditure not of immediate necessity, it might be worthy of consideration whether such objects be within the range of the powers conferred, and the duties enjoined, by the constitution on the General Government; but waiving that consideration, the committee hesitate not to recommend to the House the following resolution:

Resolved. That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

APPLICATION TO CONFIRM AN INDIAN GRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 20, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the chiefs and head men of the Chippawa, Ottawa, Wyandot, and Pottawatamie nations of Indians, made the following report:

The petitioners state that, at the treaty of Detroit, concluded on the 17th day of November, 1807, they made a reservation of a tract of land of three miles square on the Miami of Lake Erie, with the design of presenting it to their friend Doctor William Brown, of Detroit, who had for ten years past rendered them his professional services in administering medicine to them, their women, and children; they make this present to him, as they conceive, in discharge of a debt of justice; and also to enable him to continue his services to them hereafter. They are apprised that, by the laws of the United States, an individual cannot obtain from them a title to lands; to obviate the difficulty which these laws oppose to their intentions, they, in the petition, make a formal cession and relinquishment of all their right to the said reservation of three miles square unto the United States, in trust, to be conveyed to the said Doctor Brown, and they pray that the title may be vested in him by law.

It appears, by a certificate signed by William Hull, commissioner, that at the treaty, when the Indians made the reservation, they stated their design of giving it to Doctor Brown, and for the reasons expressed in their petition.

It is almost unnecessary for the committee to state to the House, that many applications have been made to Congress for the confirmation of titles to lands purchased by individuals from the Indian tribes, and that such applications have been invariably rejected. The laws of the United States prohibit individuals from making such purchases, and the treaties with the Indian tribes enjoin it on them to dispose of their lands only by treaty with the authorized agents of the Government. It appears to be a principle assumed by the laws in relation to the vacant territory, both under the colonial and present Government of our country, that the right which the Indian derives from nature must, from his vagrant hunting state, be confined to the temporary use of the land, while the sovereignty and property rests in the Government. It would be useless to depict the evil consequences that would result, both to the Indian tribes and to the community at large, from the recognition of title in the purchases of Indian lands. That the practice of direct purchase from the Indians would be extensive, when encouraged by sanctions, may be safely calculated from the number of attempts now made in opposition to treaties, law, and usage. In the present case no direct sale or transfer is pretended; but the committee can discover, neither in the manner nor the object, any thing to materially distinguish it from former applications, or that would induce a relaxation of a general rule. Therefore,

Resolved, that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

LAND IN THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS, CALLED THE "BATTURE."

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 1, 1810.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, February 23, 1810.

SIR: In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 27th instant, I have the honor of herewith transmitting to you, to be laid before them, a copy of the opinion of the Attorney General on the right of the United States to the Batture at New Orleans claimed by Edward Livingston.

With great respect, &amp;c.

R. SMITH.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

OCTOBER 21, 1807.

SIR: Previous to my receiving your note of the 22d instant, Mr. Madison had sent me a lengthy statement of facts relative to the Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary, New Orleans, or alluvial lands to which you refer. On this statement Messrs. Derbigny and Lisle, French lawyers of reputation, and Mr. Gurley, Attorney General of the New Orleans Territory, have, I understand, given decided opinions in favor of the title of the United States to the Batture. Upon reflection, I concur with them. The statement I must presume to be correct, as it has been officially furnished.

Under the first section of the act of the 3d of March A. D. 1807, I am of opinion that military force may be employed by the President to remove from these lands any person who may have taken possession of them since the passage of the law. This, I think, appears to have been the fact in the present case, from the letter of Mr. Van Pradellers, of the 11th ultimo, which I return you. At first I entertained doubts on this point, but further inquiry removed them. These observations contain the requisite answers to the two questions proposed, viz. 1. Have not the United States a claim to these lands? 2. If they have, may not military possession be taken?

Yours, very respectfully and sincerely,

C. A. RODNEY.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

[An exposition of the claim of Edward Livingston to the land referred to in the preceding report, published by him in 1808, was found among the archives of the Senate, and although not referred to in the journals of either House of Congress, is supposed to have been presented to the Senate by the author. In like manner was found a defence of the course pursued by the Executive of the United States in contesting that claim, published by Thomas Jefferson, late President of the United States, in 1812. As these papers appear to have been prepared with great care, ability, and research, the compilers have authorized their insertion in this work as illustrative of the points then at issue.]

Address to the People of the United States on the measures pursued by the Executive with respect to the Batture at New Orleans.

Private injuries, when offered in violation of constitutional principles, become proper objects of public attention. If persevered in under pretence of a lawful exercise of power, they become doubly alarming, and assume a character of extreme importance when they proceed from persons high in office, whose influence may seduce, or whose power may overawe opposition.

The selection of a remote scene for the exercise of arbitrary power, and of an unfriended or unpopular individual for its object, render the case more dangerous from the apathy with which we regard distant events, and the ready indulgence we accord to illegal measures when they affect those only whom we dislike.

The concurrence of all these circumstances in the case I now submit to the public, might justify me in offering it without preface or apology: but I have other motives, without which I must acknowledge that those of general utility would have been too weak to overcome the reluctance I feel to intrude myself on the public notice; motives too powerful to be resisted, too natural and just to be censured by an enlightened people—honest creditors who see the fund accumulated during four years of indulgent delay suddenly placed beyond their reach; a widow and two infant orphans claiming my professional exertions to resist that illegal violence which has seized their only means of support; and a large family for whom I am bound as well by duty as affection to provide. These are claims on which I rely to justify the measures I am forced to pursue. With some they may create an interest I do not wish to excite. I demand strict justice, and do not sue for favor or commiseration, either for myself or those whom I represent. This justice can only be obtained from the representatives of the people—the people, therefore, have a right to be informed fully and minutely of all the circumstances attending this extraordinary transaction; they will hear with incredulity or astonishment, that in a country governed by the wise constitution they had framed, neither its provisions nor the solemn stipulations of treaty could protect an individual in the enjoyment of his property, that the decrees of the Judiciary have been reversed by the Executive without hearing, without notice to the party, without any of the forms prescribed by law, and that by a refinement in oppression, the claims of the public were suffered to lie dormant until the party confiding in his title had expended his whole personal estate in improving lands of which he was then forcibly deprived.

Yet with all these arguments, which should ensure success, I dare not feel that confidence which my cause is calculated to inspire; for though I address no political party, yet being forced to arraign the conduct of the first magistrate of the Union, I shall alarm that blind spirit of attachment which, adopting the maxim of English prerogative, will not for a moment admit that a popular leader can be guilty of wrong—and accords impunity to a President of the United States for acts that would shake the throne of an hereditary monarch.

This hostile spirit I must encounter with no other arguments than those which will be suggested by a perusal of my case. The pecuniary difficulties into which I have been plunged by these oppressive measures will probably prevent a personal attendance at the seat of Government; and I have too much confidence in the rectitude of my claims to prop them by any appeal to the prejudices of party. Indeed, if I were inclined to enlist them on my side, it would be utterly impossible to do it with effect.

Secluded in a remote part of the country, occupied with the business of a laborious profession, the rapid changes of general politics, its ancient divisions and new combinations, have for five years past unheeded or unknown. Never an adept in the arcana of party intrigue, the little knowledge I once had of its myterics has been long forgotten; but I still retain a strong remembrance of those great principles of civil liberty which are asserted in the constitution of my country, and a keen regret that in this territory at least I can appeal to my memory only for a proof of their existence.

After the scenes I have formerly been forced to detail to the public, the facts I have now to offer ought not to excite surprise. Where the destruction of personal liberty is permitted with impunity, the invasion of private property must be a venial crime; yet I confess that I was astonished not only at the measure, but the source from whence it came. I had not yet become so acquainted with the progress of oppression as to be familiarized with its effects, and could not believe that the civil power, which ought to have protected us against the violence of the military, would so soon have furnished a parallel to its encroachments.

In detailing my facts, I shall rely on none but such as are proved by the strongest evidence. My deductions from them shall be drawn with the candor necessary to the investigation of truth, but with the energy becoming a free citizen conversant of his rights; and if sometimes an expression of indignant warmth should escape me, it will never prove offensive to those who reverence the constitution of their country, respect its laws, and feel their own rights invaded when those of a fellow-citizen are attacked. To these alone I address myself, it is their suffrage I solicit, and ask their patient attention to the following facts.

On the 30th of April, 1803, a treaty was made between the United States and France, by which the sovereignty of the province of Louisiana was ceded to the former; but by one of the articles the inhabitants are secured in the undisturbed enjoyment of their property. On the 20th of December, in the same year, the treaty was carried into effect, by transferring possession of the ceded country to the United States. At both these periods, and long before, John Gravier was an inhabitant of the province, and was the proprietor and possessor of a farm or plantation adjoining the city of New Orleans, which had been held by him, and those under whom he claimed, by virtue of a legal grant, nearly eighty years. About fifteen years prior to the cession, the then proprietor had laid out a part of his farm into lots, and it now forms a quarter of the city known by the name of the suburb St. Mary. In front of this farm an increase of land has been gradually forming for the last thirty or forty years, by the alluvion or deposits of the river. Too inconsiderable in extent to be enclosed, or in value to excite attention, this alluvial land was long suffered to lie unimproved, subject to the overflow of the waters during the period of the annual inundation; the rest of the year abandoned to the depredations of the inhabitants of the city, who were suffered to take from it the sand they wanted for building, and earth for filling their streets. About ten years, however, prior to the cession, the future value of this property began to be foreseen, and some of the most intelligent inhabitants of the suburb, in order to secure to themselves the benefit of the increase, made purchases of parts of the alluvion from Gravier, the deeds for which were made before the notary of the Government, whose duty it was to pass no sales where the vendor did not show a title. On my arrival in this country, (February, 1804,) this property had already become an object of consequence, and promised, as well by its yearly augmentation in extent as from the increase of the city in its neighborhood, to be extremely valuable. The proprietor was then enclosing* a large portion of it with a dike, to restrain the waters of the river, and he was at the same time opposing the pretensions of the city corporation, who claimed for the inhabitants a right to use it as they had formerly done. These claims produced a suit on the part of Gravier against the city: it was pending for nearly two years; the cause was three times heard, and was then unanimously decided by the judges in favor of Gravier, the plaintiff, by the following judgment:

JOHN GRAVIER
The Mayor, Aldermen,
and inhabitants of the City of New Orleans,

On a suit to quiet the plaintiff in the possession of the alluvial land, or Batture, fronting the suburb St. Mary.

Judgment of the Superior Court of the territory of Orleans.

1st. The title of Bertrand Gravier, the ancestor of the plaintiff, to the tract of land on which the faubourg St.

Mary is situated has not been disputed; but it has been contended that this tract was bounded by the highway; the court however, are of opinion that, according to the evidence exhibited, and the general usage of the country, this tract of land was bounded by the river Mississippi.

2d. From the examination of the authorities, the court are of opinion that, according to the civil and Spanish laws, the right of alluvion is incident to land which is bounded by a navigable river, and that these laws must form the rule of decision in the present case.

3d. If Bertrand Gravier, therefore, had continued proprietor of the whole tract on which the faubourg has been established, there would be no difficulty in determining his title to the alluvion; but Bertrand Gravier had divested himself of all title to that part of his tract on which the faubourg is established by selling the lots fronting and adjoining the highway. It is therefore important to inquire what was the situation of the Batture or alluvion in question at the time the faubourg was established, or at least when the front lots were sold, for if no alluvion existed at that time, when Bertrand Gravier ceased to be the owner of the land adjoining the high road, then it is the opinion of the court that an alluvion subsequently formed would not become the property of Bertrand Gravier. The reason of this opinion is, that if Bertrand could be considered as proprietor of the road after selling the adjacent land, or of the levee lying between this road and the public river, he would nevertheless not possess that title of property which gives the right of alluvion, for the destruction of this property, by the encroachment of the river, would be a public and not a private loss, since it could not be appropriated to the use of any individual, and the said road and levee would have become necessarily liable to be kept in repair at the public expense.

It is, however, the opinion of the court, from the evidence adduced in this cause, that, antecedent to the time when Bertrand Gravier ceased to be the proprietor of the land adjacent to the high road, a Batture or alluvion had been formed adjoining the levee, in front of the faubourg, upon the river; and that this alluvion was then of sufficient height to be considered as private property, and had consequently become annexed to, and incorporated with, the inheritance of Bertrand Gravier.

4th. Bertrand Gravier having then acquired, by alluvion, the property now in dispute, it is to be considered whether he has divested himself of his title to the same. The court are of opinion that he has not. The evidence of abandonment is merely conversation, which past a long time ago; it is not very explicit, and is much impaired by the circumstance of Bertrand Gravier having sold a part of his Batture to one of the front proprietors. It would be dangerous to divest a man of his property upon evidence of such declarations, without any proof of a cessation.

With respect to the claim of prescription, it is sufficient to observe that there has been no exclusive possession on the part of the defendants, and, consequently, they have no title on this ground. There are, indeed, other strong objections to a prescriptive title in this case, but the one we have stated is considered as sufficient.

5th. With respect to the title of John Gravier, as founded on the inventory, appraisement, and adjudication which have been adduced in evidence in this cause, it is the opinion of this court, that they are not bound to determine the validity or invalidity of this title. First, whether John Gravier has purchased the whole, or only inherited an undivided part, his claim to be quieted in the lawful enjoyment of the property in question, against the adverse pretensions of the city, to the property of the soil, or the right of carrying it away, is sufficiently strong to enable the court to form a decision of the present case.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, by the court, that the petitioner be quieted in his lawful enjoyment of the Batture or alluvion described in his petition, against the claims and pretensions of the defendants, and that the injunction heretofore granted in this case be made perpetual.

For the satisfaction of those who wish to be convinced of the justice and equity of this judgment, a full and circumstantial report of the trial will be found in the appendix.

Finding themselves unable to substantiate any title to this property, the counsel of the city moved for a new trial, on a suggestion that they could show the title to be vested in the United States, and, of course, that the judgment ought not to have been rendered for the plaintiff. This attempt was considered as a laudable device of ingenious counsel to prolong the existence of an expiring claim. They were patiently heard, during two days, in support of their new principles, but the counsel for the plaintiff not deeming any reply necessary, the court dismissed the rule for a new trial, and confirmed their former judgment. Execution was soon after issued thereon, and the plaintiff was placed in the quiet possession of the land.

Soon after this, I purchased from Mr. Gravier, from the heirs of Mr. Delabigarre, and from Mr. Girod, a portion of this land, for about eighty thousand dollars, and paid a considerable sum on the purchase. The remainder belongs to the widow and the infant children of Mr. Delabigarre.

Though no very great importance seemed to have been attached by the people to the cause during its discussion, no sooner was it decided than every engine that could excite popular resentment was set in motion. The party, his counsel, and the court itself, were represented in the most odious points of view. The papers teemed with libellous, if not seditious publications, and the people were taught to look to a foreign power for the justice which it was said was denied them by their country. The importance of the object was ridiculously exaggerated. An individual who had successfully demanded, according to the course of law, the quiet enjoyment of his property, was held up as the enemy of his country, and his professional advisers as the disturbers of the public repose. These efforts were not long without their desired effect. One of the proprietors, on attempting to make some improvements on the land, was opposed by a mob, who drove off his workmen, and assembled every evening, by beat of drum, to prevent any use being made of the property, in direct contempt of the injunction of the court. These excesses were encouraged by the presence of the commanders of the militia, and carried on under the eye of the mayor of the city, and the judge of the county court, who never made the smallest visible attempt to restore the order of the city.

While these scenes were preparing, the Governor was in town; when the tumult actually broke out, he was absent. Being applied to on his return, he addressed the crowd, and, by his influence with some of the leading men among them, persuaded them to retire. He closed his address, however, by expressing an opinion, in substance, that the judgment of the Superior Court was not conclusive, and stated that he had laid all the evidence he could collect on the subject of the conflicting claims before the President of the United States.

Certain that no appeal lay from the decrees of the Superior Court, and unable to discover for what purpose the evidence in this cause had been laid before the President, I neither felt any great uneasiness at the opinion expressed by the Governor, nor the remotest apprehension that the President would at all interfere with a judgment of the territorial judiciary. I therefore exerted myself to regain the time I had lost by these events, and to complete certain improvements I projected before the rising of the waters, which usually takes place about the beginning of February. So great was my confidence in the title I had acquired, so little did I foresee the events that were secretly preparing for my ruin, that I aided their effect, by expending all the money I could raise in these improvements. By the latter part of January, they had cost me about $13,000; and, the annual inundation being then daily expected, I had set one hundred and fifty men at work, and anticipated the completion of my plan, the period of my expenses, and the peaceable enjoyment of my property.

On the 25th of January, however, I was roused from these visions of fancied security by the intelligence that an order had been received from the President, directing the marshal of the district to take possession of my property. It was not until after repeated assurances of his having seen the letter, that I could believe the gentleman who gave me the information was in earnest. I knew that the malice of my enemies was active. I knew that the political existence of the most malevolent among them depended on his inspiring the President with a persuasion of his popularity; that he had connected that popularity with the cause of the Batture, and had always flattered the people with the hope that his influence, and the power of the President, would counteract the decision of the court, and give them a property which had been solemnly adjudged to another. I was aware of all this, but yet I found it difficult to believe that the First Magistrate of a great people would quit the care of a nation to participate in the petty disputes of a corporate town; or, to secure the popularity of a favorite, that he would have set at defiance the very forms of law, braved the authority of the courts, and broken through the most important barriers of that constitution he had sworn to defend. If he had only effected my ruin, I should not have been surprised: for I am no longer in a situation to serve him; but that the suffrage of a party in an inconsiderable town should be purchased at this prodigal expense of principle, I own astonished me; and I therefore could not but attribute the measure to some well-contrived misrepresentation of facts, which, though it could not justify, might palliate its most odious circumstances.

Determined, however, not to be wanting in any measure that might be necessary in this emergency, I made a representation to the court which was then sitting. They, without hesitation, granted an injunction, ordering the marshal to desist from executing the warrant. It was shown to him; he said he would take advice whether he should obey it; he went to the Government-house, and immediately after, the first, second, and third regiments of militia were ordered to parade in the suburb, in order to assist the marshal in the execution of the President's mandate. In obedience to this order some hundred persons attended; my laborers were driven from the unfinished works; their tools, implements, and materials were lost or destroyed. In a few weeks the waters of the river rose, and the dikes being unfinished, every thing that could be carried off was swept away by the violence of the current. The triumph of my opponents was complete; I was reduced to poverty; I had become indebted for a portion of my materials; near a fortnight's wages were due to one hundred and fifty men whom I had employed; and an estate which would have enabled me to discharge not only these but all my other obligations, was suddenly snatched from my possession. Fortunately, however, my courage did not forsake me; I felt that I was an American citizen; I was conscious that my rights were easily demonstrated; and that if I should finally be obliged to appeal in my defence to the public, these rights would be asserted by my countrymen. But I wished to prevent this extremity. Anxious to remain unnoticed in the obscurity of private life, I avoided any thing that might look like public complaint, and still flattered myself with the hope that a fair exposition of my title, a calm remonstrance against the illegal measures that had been pursued, and a detection of the falsehoods on which they were founded, would have secured me protection for the future, if not indemnity for the past. These considerations would have induced me immediately to depart for the seat of Government; but I was detained by the engagements I have mentioned. If my ruin was intended, never was measure better timed to produce its effects. Delayed until I had incurred the greatest possible expense—executed at the moment before my works would have been secured against destruction, and at the very period when it was known that I could not arrive in time to lay my complaints before the council of the nation. I hope this concurrence arose from accident. I should be loth to attribute to any one the malignity capable of a calculation that would produce it.

By unremitted attention, however, to my professional business, I was enabled to leave this place in the month of March. Ignorant that any communication had been made to Congress on the subject, my intention was to submit my case to the determination of the President himself, or to the Attorney General, if he should refer it to him.

Having studied my cause with the attention its importance-deserved, having submitted it to the consideration of men on whose candor I could rely, as well as on their judgment and professional ability, I was certain that no unprejudiced person could hesitate an instant in deciding it in my favor, and I went on with all the confidence of success which these circumstances were calculated to create.

Congress had adjourned a few days before my arrival at Philadelphia, and the President, it was said, was about to depart from Washington. I therefore rode post to that place, and arrived the evening before his intended departure, and immediately despatched a note requesting a short audience, and stating the urgency of my business. To this I received the next day an answer, referring me to the proper Department for the transaction of my business.

With some difficulty I discovered which was the proper Department, for though the Public Lands come properly under the Department of the Treasury, yet the Secretary of State had signed the President's warrant, and it was for some time doubtful to which of these officers I should address myself. Both of them informed me that as the warrant had been issued in consequence of a power vested in the President personally, it did not belong to either of their Departments, and that the measure had been taken by the advice of the Attorney General. It was, however, finally settled, that my propositions should be conveyed through the office of State. I accordingly the same day delivered to Mr. Madison the letter marked in the correspondence No. 3. I beg the serious attention of my fellow-citizens to this letter, and to the answer which I received about a month after at New York. Unless I am blinded by interest and prejudice, it is impossible to evince more moderation, candor, or confidence in the officers of the Government, than are contained in my offers, and I am greatly deceived if any parallel can be found to the injustice and unworthy subterfuge by which they are rejected.

I will not, however, interrupt my narrative with any remarks. It draws now to a close. In my interviews with Mr. Madison, he had informed me that the Attorney General of the United States had given an official opinion, upon which the President had acted; this opinion it was extremely important for me to see; but it was no where to be found at the seat of Government, and I unfortunately was deprived of the pleasure of an interview with the Attorney General both at Washington and Philadelphia. A gentleman, however, to whom he had promised a copy of this document, at my request wrote to remind him of his engagement; but receiving no answer, I determined on making another effort to obtain justice, and if that failed, at least to know under what pretence I had been robbed. With this view I again went to the city of Washington, where I fortunately found the President and the Attorney General. My first visit was to the latter of these gentlemen, with whom I had the conversation detailed in No. 8, and I left him, as will be seen, with the conviction that I could hope for no redress, even if I convinced him that his opinion was erroneous, and had not been given on a true statement of facts. Determined, however, to leave no proper attempt untried in an affair so essential to my interest and reputation, I waited on the President.

I offered to show him documents, authorities, and proofs, which would in half an hour convince him that the United States had no title; and I asked him explicitly, as I had before asked the Attorney General, whether he would in that case direct my property to be restored? His answer was the same as that transmitted through the Secretary of State, that the matter was submitted to Congress, and that he could do nothing until they should decide. The same answer was given to a proposition for submitting the question to a court, to arbitration, in short to any man of reputation the President should name. I observed, in vain, that Congress had refused to act on the message, and that they were incompetent to the trial of a title. This had as little effect as my appeal to the provisions of the constitution, and to the judgment of a competent tribunal to protect me in my property.

After these ineffectual attempts to obtain justice, I retired and wrote the letter No. 5 to the Secretary of State, and a note to the Attorney General, reminding him of his promise to furnish a copy of his opinion. To the first I received the answer No. 6, and to the latter the apology contained in No. 7. This drew from me the letter to which I have before referred, dated the 20th of July, which was sent to the Attorney General by express, and at the time indicated in the letter. I called on him at Wilmington, and found that he had not prepared any answer to it; he gave me hopes, however, that one would be ready by next morning. I sent for it from New Castle; but received only the note which closes the correspondence; and not having it in my power any longer to delay my departure, I immediately embarked for this place. As the remarks on my letter, which are promised to be forwarded by post, have never been received, I am justified in believing, as I do, that Mr. Rodney acquiesces in the fidelity of my statement. He mentioned, indeed, some circumstances that took place in our conversation at Washington, which I did not think important enough to be inserted in my account of it, but I promised him, if he should think they were, that I would notice them; he referred me, however, to the remarks he would make in writing, but as those have not been sent I should not be justified in making any addition to my former statement.

This ends the statement of the facts relative to this business in which I had a personal agency. It is necessary, however, to add that on the 7th day of March the President sent a message to Congress in the following words:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

In the city of New Orleans, and adjacent to it, are sundry parcels of ground, some of them with buildings and other improvements on them, which it is my duty to present to the attention of the Legislature. The title to these grounds appears to have been retained in the former sovereigns of the province of Louisiana as public fiduciaries, and for the purposes of the province. Some of them were used for the residence of the Governor, for public offices, hospitals, barracks, magazines, fortifications, levees, &c.; others for the town-house, schools, markets, landings, and other purposes of the city of New Orleans; some were held by religious corporations or persons; others seem to have been reserved for future disposition. To these must be added a parcel called the Batture, which requires more particular description. It is understood to have been a shoal or elevation of the bottom of the river, adjacent to the bank of the suburbs of St. Mary, produced by the successive depositions of mud during the annual inundations of the river, and covered with water only during these inundations. At all other seasons it has been used by the city immemorably to furnish earth for raising their streets and court-yards, for mortar and other necessary purposes, and as a landing or quay for unloading firewood, lumber, and other articles brought by water. This having been lately claimed by a private individual, the city opposed the claim on a supposed legal title in itself: but it has been adjudged that the legal title was not in the city. It is, however, alleged that that title, originally in the former sovereigns, was never parted with by them, but it was retained in them for the use of the city and province, and consequently has now passed over to the United States. Until this question can be decided under legislative authority, measures have been taken, according to law, to prevent any change in the state of things, and to keep the grounds clear of intruders. The settlement of this title; the appropriation of the grounds and improvements formerly occupied for provincial purposes to the same or such other objects as may be better suited to present circumstances; the confirmation of the uses in other parcels to such bodies corporate or private, as may of right, or on other reasonable considerations, expect them, are matters now submitted to the determination of the Legislature.

The papers and plans now transmitted will give them such information on the subject as I possess, and being mostly originals, I must request that they may be communicated from the one to the other house, to answer the purposes of both.

TH. JEFFERSON.

This message was committed in both Houses to special committees; in the Senate, if I am truly informed, the committee reported that no legislative provision was necessary. In the House of Representatives they introduced a bill, ceding all the right of the United States in those lands to the corporation of the city of New Orleans, and giving an appeal from any judgment that might be rendered in the case to the Superior Court of the United States. This bill was advocated by the particular adherents of the President in the House, and strenuous endeavors were made to force its passage before the adjournment of Congress; it was, however, postponed, from a conviction, I should hope, as well of the impolicy of the measure as of the illegal means by which the possession had been obtained.

That I might not interrupt the thread of my narration, I have omitted hitherto to mention that after the corporation of the city had seen the title of Gravier established, they sought to purchase the influence of the United States, by a relinquishment in their favor, and directed one of their council to state a case, and the other to give an opinion upon it. The case states that the ground for which they had been contending for three years, to the impoverishment of the city and the destruction of its peace, had always been notoriously the property of the nation; and closes with desiring the counsel to inform them whether this notorious title was not a good one, that is to say, whether they had not been endeavoring to obtain, in violation of evident right, a property that did not belong to them! This query was addressed to the person most capable of giving them an answer; to the same counsel who had managed their former claim. His opinion was such as they wished, and they thereupon passed a resolution requesting the Governor to take measures to prosecute the claim of the United States. This case and opinion form the groundwork of the Executive proceedings in this case, and I have therefore been at the expense of annexing them to this address. They appeared at New Orleans some time in September, and although I could not believe that the contradictory facts and erroneous reasonings these papers contained could at all injure my title, yet fearing that a personal influence, which I knew was almost irresistible with the President, was exerted against me, I thought it necessary to write to the Attorney General, to request that if the case was referred to him he would not advise a suit until he heard my statement. This I wrote and forwarded in two different parcels; the first only of these, containing about ten or twelve pages, as he has since informed me, came to hand. It is a reply to Mr. Derbigny's opinion, and will be found with a few inconsiderable additions annexed to this address, under the title of "an examination of the title of the United States to the land called the Batture," &c. My only object in writing this paper was to prevent the Government from vexing me with a useless suit; for my imagination never suggested the fear of any such summary proceeding as that which has been resorted to. I had written to the Secretary of State, and to the Secretary of the Treasury, on the same subject, but receiving no answer, I concluded that the attempt of the corporation to engage the United States to support their unjust claims was viewed in the light it deserved. But I did not truly appreciate the influence that was exerted against me. Without calling on me for the remainder of my reply, though it is acknowledged only half of it was received—without asking for the proofs which I asserted I could give of the falsity of the statement on which they acted—without waiting to look into the authorities which I offered, to show their legal principles unfounded—without giving me the slightest notice of the blow that was intended—an ex parte statement, and an ex parte opinion were made the groundwork of an illegal, unconstitutional, and oppressive warrant, prepared in secret, and never intended to be disclosed. For, as I shall show, the President industriously conceals the unconstitutional features of this transaction, in the tardy message which he sends to Congress on the 7th of March, although his mandate bears date the 30th of November; and if I had sunk disheartened, as was expected, under the blow, if I had not found resources in my industry to come on and prosecute my rights, neither Congress nor the country would have heard of the transaction. For, attend to the language of the report to Congress, and determine whether there is not a studious concealment of facts.

1st. In the description of the property it is called "a shoal or elevation of the bottom of the river adjacent to the bank of the suburb St. Mary;" this might have been described by one word, but the term alluvion was well understood, and would at once have conveyed the idea of private property, which it was convenient to keep out of view: this was "immemorably" used by the city. How a city, of which the first plan was drawn within a period less than ninety years, can be said to have an immemorial use, is not within my legal comprehension—but it was necessary to state in the strongest terms the claims of the city, that a proper odium might attach to the judiciary which had rejected them—while the title they solemnly declared to be good is scarcely mentioned, and that too in a way, if not inconsistent with truth, at least calculated to give false impressions. This (says the message) "having lately been claimed by a private individual, the city opposed the claim on a supposed title in itself; but it has been adjudged that the legal title is not in the city." Now the President must have read at least Mr. Derbigny's statement before he sent this message, and he must even there have seen that this was not a late claim; that the former proprietor had, twelve years before, by public recorded acts, sold several portions of this property; that the Governors of the province had asked his leave to use it, and that this private "individual," who appears in the message as a perfect stranger, asking for what had been immemorably in possession of the town, was the acknowledged legal proprietor (under a title as old as the first settlement of the country) of a plantation to which this alluvion is as much an appendage as any tree that grows on it. "But it was adjudged that the legal title was not in the city." And was it not, sir, respectfully let me ask, further adjudged, and adjudged too by men of your own selection, finally, irrevocably adjudged, that the title was in Gravier? and ought not this to have been communicated to the great council of the nation? and for what purpose was it suppressed? and how nearly allied is a suppression of truth to a charge which it would be indecorous to make against a President of the United States? After this declaration, that it was "adjudged not to belong to the city," immediately follows these expressions: "it is, however, alledged, that that title, originally in the former sovereigns, was never parted with by them, but was retained in them for the use of the city," &c. By whom this allegation is made the message does not say. It would not have added much to the weight of the suggestion, had the whole truth been declared, that it came from disappointed clients, and the ex parte statements of their counsel; and this circumstance is therefore, as usual, suppressed. The artful introduction of the word "however," connecting it with the foregoing branch of the sentence, would seem to make it a qualification of the judgment, and give the reader to understand that the allegation of the title of the United States came from the same persons who decided that this city had none.

These charges, though important, are slight, compared with those that I am forced to make on the remaining allegation in this document.

Until the question can be decided (the President tells Congress) he has "taken measures, according to law, to prevent any change in the state of things, and to keep the ground clear of intruders." Here is not only a most material concealment of the nature of those legal measures which had been taken, but a direct assertion of what I am forced (under a due impression of the serious nature of the charge) to declare was not the fact: the measures were not taken to prevent a change in the state of things, but to make a most material and afflicting change. It was not taken to keep the grounds clear of intruders, but to destroy a possession sanctioned by legal title, by the solemn decree of a court, and in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, for a valuable consideration—it was itself the most violent intrusion on private property that has been witnessed in our country, and, as I shall show, a most unprovoked, deliberate, and unnecessary act of oppression. What member of the honorable body, to which this communication was made, could have understood these measures, taken according to law, to mean a warrant granted without evidence, and merely on the suggestion of interested individuals! This mode of proceeding, if not illegal, was at least novel, and therefore when it is glossed over by the general expression that has been used, I am authorized to believe that it never was intended that Congress should be acquainted with the particulars of the transaction. Again—who would not have understood by the terms of this message, that the public were in the quiet possession of this property, and that the legal measures were taken to preserve that possession? Yet the exalted magistrate who gave the information well knew the contrary to be the fact; he well knew, that the individuals who had purchased under the sanction of a legal decree were then in quiet possession; that one of them was expending a fortune in its improvement, and though I cannot say that he knew the pittance of the widow and the orphan were involved in the question, yet I have no reason to believe that he would have thought this circumstance of sufficient moment to operate any "change in the state of things."

This is not the only concealment of which I have to complain. From the annexed correspondence it will appear that the President shelters himself under the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States. What will be said if I show that there is the strongest reason to believe that a material document in the President's possession was withheld from that officer, when he gave this opinion? By a reference to my letter No. 9, to the Attorney General, it will be seen what importance I attach to the judgment of the court; the surprise I express that it should be outweighed by the opinion of counsel, and the direct query with which I close in order to ascertain whether it was possible the Attorney General could have read this document when he gave the opinion. To this he answers, "My impression is, that the statement of Mr. Derbigny, with his opinion, and a letter from Governor Claiborne, mentioning that Messrs. Derbigny and Moreau Lislet concurred in that opinion, were the papers officially furnished me. I do not recollect, at present, that there was any other." Now if the Attorney General did not, after reading my express references to this judgment, recollect that it had been furnished him, it is almost conclusive proof that it never was. It was too material a document to have been forgotten, and I have so much respect for the opinion of that officer, as to believe that he could not have given the opinion attributed to him if that paper had been submitted to him.

Though it is natural to suppose that this judgment must then have been in the hands of the President, yet we are not left to conjecture; for, in the month of August,

I had furnished official copies, not only of this record, but of the execution, and its return, to Governor Claiborne, for the express purpose of forwarding them, and he has since declared they were accordingly sent.

There is a circumstance which takes away even the flimsy pretext of zeal for the public interest from this transaction. Gravier's plantation was formerly part of one belonging to the Jesuits. On the suppression of the order, it was divided into six lots, and sold at the same time to different persons. Gravier holds two of these lots, the other four are in the hands of different people. The alluvion, which is more considerable on the other lot, is peaceably possessed by the proprietors; yet they hold under exactly the same title that Gravier does, and are separated only by an ideal line. If public good was the motive, if the object was to add to the property of the United States, why were not these alluvions taken as well as Gravier's? If duty impelled the President to seize on one, it was neglect of duty to spare the others. If their title be good, it was an oppression to deprive me of mine.

Yet it will hardly be credited that such confidence was placed in this partial protection, that some of the proprietors of the adjoining alluvion were the most clamorous against my title, and that the very men, who were endeavoring to show that by the laws of the country alluvions belonged to the crown, advertise in the same papers large portions of that very kind of property for sale, as being secured to them by usage and law.* Why, then, I repeat, is the one taken and the other left? The circumstances of both are (I was going to say) the same, but they differ in a material point. In the one were interested men of wealth, influence, and, above all, the most meritorious and obsequious attachment to those in power—the other was divided between two helpless orphans, who could not sign an address, and a man supposed to be without influence, whom the vilest arts had been used to render unpopular, and who it was therefore imagined might be oppressed with impunity.

In this address, I enter into no discussion of the validity of my title—my own confidence in it is shown by my offer to the President; that of others is proved by the judgment of the court; by the respectable counselors whose opinions are annexed, and those of other, no less eminent, which will be given to the public; by the report of the case, and the examination annexed. From these will result—I cannot be so blinded as to deceive myself—from these will result a full conviction, that I had not only a peaceable possession, but an incontrovertible title to the land.

And yet I have been deprived of it without a suit; without hearing; without a judge or jury, or proof, or notice of any claim; on the secret denunciation of an enemy, and on the simple allegation that it belonged to the public; and yet I am an American citizen! I live in a country professedly under the Government of the United States, and which is entitled as well by justice as by law, and the sacred stipulations of treaty, to the protection of private property! It is to no purpose to say that the President thought the land belonged to the United States; the very supposition that he might be deceived proves the illegality of his proceeding. If my land really belongs to the United States, and he might dispossess me without trial or inquiry, what security have others who may have a better title? The President asserts that he had a right to seize all lands belonging to the United States; but as the President is the sole judge whether they do belong to them or not; as he may take allegation for proof, suspicion for evidence, and substitute the suggestions of malice for the records of title—as his evidence is taken in secret, as he may be justified by an invisible opinion, given on a garbled statement of facts—which of you, I ask, is safer? what can protect you? The antiquity of your title? Mine was coeval with the settlement of the country. An acknowledged right? Mine was ascertained and confirmed by the most solemn judicial decision. The absurdity of the arguments used against you? Those employed to assail me are below contempt.

If the power, then, exercised against me be legal, there is no security for any one; and we all hold our property by the precarious tenure of another's will. A mere allegation suggested by malice, repeated by folly, and whispered in secret to the presidential ear, may in a moment deprive us of our only means of existence. It is true, that an illusory hope is held out that this measure is not decisive of title; that when Congress shall provide for the means of ascertaining it, I may possibly be restored; but while I wait for this tardy justice, while I am engaged in soliciting it, who is to provide for my family? For my debts? Where shall I receive compensation for the anxiety I have suffered, the fatigues I have undergone, the expenses I have incurred? What recompense can be made for the humiliation of sinking again into the mire of dependence, at the very moment of anticipated delivery from the load of pecuniary obligation with which I have been oppressed? Or where shall a cure be found for the wounds of a spirit not yet broken by oppression, but struggling through exile, disappointments, and difficulty, to repose itself at last in the consciousness of having done justice to others by the exertion of its own powers?

And why am I made to suffer this? Could executive wisdom discover, or executive power create, no other mode of asserting the claims of the United States, than one so oppressive to an individual, so dangerous to the public? Why were not the courts resorted to? Was the President afraid of any judgment but his own? Or would the public interest suffer by delay? No. The property was every day acquiring new value in my hands; and if I had been suffered to complete my plans, I do not hesitate to say that the value would have at least been doubled by the operation. The necessities of the town have been sometimes resorted to as an argument to justify this measure, but notorious facts are completely contradictory of this suggestion. The use made by the citizens of this property, while it remained unreclaimed, was two-fold, first, as a landing-place, secondly, as a source from which to dig earth. The first of these uses would have been facilitated in an incalculable degree as to convenience, by the erection of wharves; as to safety, by the construction of basins; all of which are comprehended in my plan, and the extent which they would have had a right to have occupied outside the wharves would have been greatly increased by their projection. Though imperfectly executed, one of my basins served as a refuge for several vessels during the inundation, and saved a large amount of merchandise from destruction, during a storm that destroyed a great number of boats which were exposed in the usual situation. On this subject I have the testimony of professional and disinterested judges, to which I refer.†

As to the earth, if the city were in want, it would offer no justification for taking it without compensation; but the necessity does not exist; they possess an extent of alluvion ‡ between the suburb and the city more than sufficient for the supply of all their necessities; to say nothing of that in front of Marigny's suburb, which they took by conveyance from him, at the very time they were endeavoring to deprive me of mine by the suggestion that all alluvions belong to the nation. In order to demonstrate that this necessity was but a pretence, though, I could very ill spare any of the earth dug out of my canal, I advertised some for sale at twelve cents per load; this, as I expected, immediately produced a publication from the city council desiring the citizens to take it from the city grounds for nothing; and the fact is that for nearly two years, while some respect was shown to the injunction of the court, the whole city was supplied from the two sources I have mentioned, which are inexhaustible, as the annual deposit always replaces what has been taken the preceding year.

A circumstance has lately occurred (since my return from the United States) which points out in a striking manner the danger of suffering these encroachments of the Executive to pass unnoticed; it is not only the acts of the President, but those of his inferior officers we have to dread; the love of arbitrary power is infectious, and the contact of office spreads it with rapidity, and increases its malignant effects. If the Supreme Executive disregards the laws, every subordinate officer feels himself invested with the privilege in his contracted sphere. Thus the President having begun by directing his marshal to seize my property, that officer executed the order, although he was expressly forbidden by an injunction; and the attorney for the United States, improving on this example, not only assures the people that they have nothing to fear from the authority of the Superior Court, but disposes of the property with as little ceremony as the President took it.

After the marshal had executed his warrant, in the manner I have stated, the corporation and the inhabitants supposed, with reason, that this was a dispute between the United States and the purchaser under Gravier, which gave to them no rights, and they therefore respected the judgment of the court as a decision of their, claim, still relying, however, on the promises that had been given of a future appropriation to their use. Soon after my return I found several persons at work carrying off the soil. I immediately applied to the mayor, who disavowed having given any permission for that purpose.* I represented also to the marshal, that though I could not acknowledge him as in any manner the legal possessor, yet that I thought his duty required him to stay these depredations until some final settlement should take place. In consequence of these applications, it was resolved that a letter should be written to Mr. Grymes, the district attorney, requesting his advice, and asking, as it should seem from his answer, permission to use the property; for his letter contains the following extraordinary paragraph:

“As to the privilege of using it in future, I have only to say to the city council, that the right and title of the United States in and to the property in question remains in them at this day, unimpaired by any judicial decision, or by any possessory act of any individual claiming a right thereto; and that I am of opinion that the Federal Executive ought not, and will not abandon that right, or in any degree diminish the title of the United States to it, by any act of theirs, until Congress shall have acted upon the subject; or until some tribunal, competent to discuss the right of the United States, shall have decided it against them. And that I, the immediate representative of the legal interests of the United States within the limits of this territory, am willing that the citizens thereof shall continue to use the alluvion or Batture, fronting the suburb St. Mary, as they have hitherto done, until the President of the United States shall forbid them. But it is to be expressly understood by the city council, that this permission is given, alone, upon the condition that the exercise of the privilege which it grants shall not hereafter be made the ground of any claim in opposition to the title of the United States.”

This permission was immediately published by the city council, and in consequence of it the inhabitants of the town and its suburbs are vying with each other which shall commit the greatest depredations on this devoted property; and it will be no extravagant calculation to estimate that $40,000 will not repair the damage that will be done in consequence of this permission. If this is really a demesne of the United States, what can justify the deterioration of it to that amount? Not the President's intention of bestowing it on the city, for that yet wants the sanction of Congress; nor can I think that they will give away $500,000 to provide the city of New Orleans with mud, while they with difficulty appropriate a quarter of the sum to the defence of their most important ports. But if my property should be finally acknowledged, this will add no small item to my claim for compensation.

But why, it may be asked, do I not apply to the laws for redress? It would be without effect; the people have been taught contempt for the courts both by the civil and military power. A general who treated them and their process with mockery and insult, is rewarded with Executive favor; the promoters of riotous opposition to their decrees are the objects of favor* both with the Territorial and General Government; and the little regard paid to their solemn injunctions, both by the President and his officers, have so emboldened opposition that any attempt to obtain justice in the ordinary way would be both nugatory and dangerous; besides, the public agents are not rich enough to reimburse me, and against the Government itself there is no legal remedy.

My only recourse, then, is to the justice of my country. I shall address myself to the Legislature of the Union, who I trust will direct the proper measures for my relief.

In the mean time I am aware of the consequences to which I expose myself by this address. I know the popularity of the man whose conduct I am forced to arraign. I respect his age, his station, and the services he has rendered his country. I have shown that respect

* The day after this application was made to the mayor, he wrote a letter to the city council—coupling my complaint with the enlargement by habeas corpus of four persons whom he had illegally committed, and the audacity of a comedian who refused to submit to his taste in the selection of a dramatic piece, as proofs of a combination against the good order of the city; and the council immediately made this letter the groundwork of corporate legislation. From this anecdote a good idea may be formed of the corporation, which is so much favored by the President as to induce the sacrifice of constitution, treaty, and law, for their emolument.

by the long silence I have observed, by the repeated attempts I have made to obtain even partial justice. But having drained the cup of humility and moderation to the very dregs, it is time that I should speak. Silence now would be cruelty to my children, injustice to my creditors, treachery to my fame. The consciousness of a serious imprudence, which created the debt I owe to the public, I confess it with humility and regret, has rendered me perhaps too desirous of avoiding public observation—an imprudence which, if nothing can excuse, may at least be accounted for by the confidence I placed in an agent who received and appropriated a very large proportion of the sum, and the moral certainty I had of being able to answer any call for the residue whenever it should be made. Perhaps, too, it may be atoned for, in some degree, by the mortification of exile, by my constant and laborious exertions to satisfy the claims of justice, by the keen disappointment attending this deadly blow to the hopes I had encouraged of pouring into the public treasury the fruits of my labor; and above all, by the humiliation of this public avowal.

The first wish of my heart is to do justice to the public and my private creditors. To enjoy their good opinion, though a great is but a secondary object, for the consciousness of having done right will always support me under their displeasure; but no popular favors can smooth the pillow of the debtor, or take off that weight of obligation which “hangs about the heart.” With these sentiments I arrived, nor have they quitted me during my stay; they have encouraged me in difficulties, and animated me in success. The happy moment of freedom from pecuniary obligation was the subject of my daily conversation, and my nightly dream. This happy moment at length approached, and I exulted in the success which I thought was about to crown my exertions, when the iron hand of oppression fell heavy on my hopes, and threw back to an uncertain period the accomplishment of my wishes. Yet I am not discouraged. Truth will at length prevail, and justice rarely deserts her. I know my own right, and am certain it can be demonstrated to the public. I have the happiness to address enlightened men, who instead of sophistical arguments of fine-spun constructions of statutes, will consult the plain language of their constitutional compact; the unequivocal expression of their legislative acts; and, above all, those eternal principles of justice, and hatred of oppression, ever inherent in their breasts. These will dictate their sentence when, in a voice which will be heard and must be respected, they declare—

That the rights of private property have been infringed; constitutional privileges broken; the judiciary degraded, and the sacred trial by jury violated without necessity and without excuse—should the angel of mercy, in consideration of age and important services, drop a tear on the remainder of the sentence, I shall not be sorry for the blot.

[TRANSLATION.]

Deposition of John Lewis Laurent, inhabitant of the City of New Orleans, made the 17th March, 1808, before me, the undersigned Justice of the Peace.

The said deponent being duly sworn according to law, doth depose and declare, that about the end of the year one thousand eight hundred and three, or the beginning of the year one thousand eight hundred and four, he was requested by Mr. John Gravier to measure off a space of about four hundred feet fronting the square, between the streets Julie and St. Joseph, and extending five or six hundred feet towards the river, and that immediately afterwards Mr. Gravier set his negroes to work to make a levee quite round the said space which he had thus measured, and that the said levee was finished in the course of the winter of one thousand eight hundred and four, and that the said levee exists still so as to be traced in its whole extent.

Of this assertion take the following proof, extracted from the Telegraphe of October 1, 1808:

"Should there be no other remedy, if it can be proved that the Batture belonged to the city previously to the cession, I have no doubt but that the minister of His Imperial and Royal Majesty will think it his duty to lay the affair before the Emperor, if his general instructions do not authorize the minister's immediate application to the American Government in behalf of the Louisianians.

It is well known that the Emperor Napoleon will think himself bound in justice and honor to see that the treaty of cession be not violated. The Emperor of the French did not cede his subjects to be devoured by the harpies of chicane. That Alexander knows how to cut the Gordian knot of iniquity," &c.

The property described in the following advertisement is situated on the third division of the Jesuit's farm; is part of an alluvion formed since the year 1763, and was the property of Colonel Bellechasse, the commandant of the militia, who took a leading part in the opposition to my title. He has since sold it for five thousand dollars, and guaranteed the title.

By JAMES PIROR & Co.—The partnership of Messrs. Bellechasse and Mercier in the brick and tile kiln, established opposite the plantation of Mr. Solet, about a mile above the city, having expired, will be sold by the above-mentioned auctioneers, on the premises, on Saturday, 30th January instant, the following property: four lots, facing the public road running with the river, with the enjoyment of the Batture, first by right of purchase, and in conformity with the usages of the country. Said four lots are bounded on one side by the lands of Mr. Thomas Soulet, and on the other by those of Mr. Alexander Milne, Jun. They are susceptible of being divided into eight lots: four to face the river, and four the public road of Chapatoulat; and each lot will then be about from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and sixty feet in depth, &c.

We, the subscribers, captains of vessels now lying in the port of New Orleans, do certify, that we have examined the canal constructed, and nearly completed, by Edward Livingston, Esq. on the Batture of the suburbs of St. Mary, and we are of opinion that the said canal, when completed, will be of the greatest use to commerce, by affording a convenient birth for ships and other vessels; and that similar canals constructed along the whole front of the said suburb, particularly when stores shall be erected on the sides, will greatly facilitate the lading and unloading of vessels without the expense of cartage. And we are further of opinion, from examining the current of the river at high water, that the said canals will not render the current more rapid, or the harbor more inconvenient, or less secure, but, on the contrary, will afford both convenience and safety for the shipping.

Ordinance of the City Council.—On the repeated complaints of many citizens, that they are obliged to buy the earth necessary for building and filling up their yards, and for constructing their banquettes, and that a great number of them have not the means adequate to this disbursement, the city council, considering that it is incumbent on them to bring some relief to the painful situation of the inhabitants of the city in this occurrence,

Resolve, That, notwithstanding the works already commenced by the corporation, and momentaneous detriment by which the interests of the city and part of the commerce shall be effected, the mayor is provisionally authorized to cause that the earth from the Batture opposite fort St. Louis be delivered gratis to all proprietors of lots and houses in town, and the faubourg St. Mary, who may be able to prove the indispensable necessity of this relief.

Je, soussigné, certifie que la portion de terre, en dehors de la levée, située entre le faubourg Ste Marie et le lieu ou se placent les batimens, la dite partie faisant face au fort St. Louis, communément appelée Batture, et possédée par la ville de la Nouvelle Orléans, contient deux mille toises superficielles, qui peuvent être creusées jusqu'à la profondeur de plus de quatre pieds, avant d'arriver au niveau des eaux basses; que la dite portion augmente tous les ans par l'alluvion du fleuve, et que la terre qu'on peut en enlever dans le courant d'une année est remplacé par les dépôts du fleuve l'année suivante.

Je suis aussi d'opinion que cette partie de Batture, avec celle de Bernard Marigny, aujourd'hui la propriété de la ville, ainsi que celle qui se trouve vis-à-vis le fort St. Charles, peuvent fournir une quantité de terre suffisante aux besoins présens de la ville.

[TRANSLATION.]

I, the subscriber, certify that the portion of land outside the levee, (commonly called the Batture,) situate between the suburb St. Mary and the place where the ships lie, and fronting the fort St. Louis, and possessed by the town of New Orleans, contains two thousand superficial toises; which may be dug to the depth of more than four feet before coming to the level of low water; that this portion increases every year by the alluvion of the river; and that the earth which may be taken out of it in course of one year is always replaced by the deposite of the river in the next.

I am also of opinion that this parcel of Batture, together with that of Bernard Marigny, now the property of the city, and that which lies opposite fort St. Charles, can furnish a sufficient quantity of earth for the present use of the city.

No. 7.

The following singular instrument is the production of a colonel of the militia, appointed by the Governor, and one of the five members of the Legislative Council named by the President.

By this public instrument of protest be it known:

That, on the third day of October, 1807, before me, John Lynd, notary public for the territory of Orleans, dwelling in the city of New Orleans, personally appeared John Baptist Macarty, Esquire, of the parish of Orleans, and territory aforesaid, and he, the said appearer, doth declare that, by virtue of his special delegation from the inhabitants of the city of New Orleans and of the suburb St. Mary, to represent to Congress their grievances with respect to the judgment of the Superior Court of this territory, which deprives them of the right which they had always enjoyed to the Batture of the said suburb, under the authority of the preceding Governments: And whereas, that Superior Court is not only incompetent to decide on an affair of that nature, which respects the rights of a people, secured to them by the treaty of cession of this country to the United States; but also the court refused to hear respectable and irreproachable witnesses, and to examine some documents essential to give an entire conviction of the right of the Government to the said Batture, and of the Government's intention to secure to the inhabitants of the city and suburb the enjoyment thereof; he, the said appearer, doth hereby, in the name of the said inhabitants, protest, in all the forms approved by law, against said judgment of the Superior Court; and claims the protection of the United States, that that affair may be examined anew by judges enlightened, and that the people may be allowed to produce all such proofs as may be thought conducive to the establishment of their rights to the enjoyment of the said Batture, resulting from the authority of the Government.

Thus done and protested at New Orleans aforesaid, the day and year above written. In faith whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, with the said appearer, Samuel Packwood, and Miles Folks, witnesses, and affixed my notarial seal.

JOHN BAPTIST MACARTY.

Signed in the presence of us,
SAMUEL PACKWOOD, MILES FOLKS.

JOHN LYND, Notary Public.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be conformable to the original on the records of my office.

JOHN LYND, Notary Public.

NEW ORLEANS, October 3, 1807.

By WILLIAM C. C. CLAIBORNE, Governor of the territory of Orleans.

These are to certify that John Lynd is a notary public, in and for the city of New Orleans, duly qualified and commissioned as such, and that full faith and credit is to be given to his acts in that capacity.

Given under my hand and seal of the territory, at New Orleans, this third day of October, 1807, and in the 32d year of the independence of the United States.

WILLIAM C. C. CLAIBORNE.

General Note.

It would have been improper to insert in the body of an address to the people of the United States any refutation of local calumnies which were only calculated for the meridian in which they were created. But as some of them may perhaps have found their way abroad, it may not be useless to insert the following extracts from a publication made in November last on this subject: these extracts tend to show the manner in which my interest in the property was acquired, and my conduct during the progress of the suit.

"My interest in the prosecution is next seized on as proof that I bargained for the possession of a doubtful title. Let facts answer this charge. On my arrival John Gravier was in possession; the property was offered for sale: several lots, as I have before shown, had been disposed of long before. And prior to my becoming interested, Mr. Daniel Clark, and Mr. Benjamin Morgan, the latter then a judge of the city court, now or late a member of the city council, had agreed for the purchase of the same quantity, which I afterwards bought, at the same price; Mr. Clark's leaving the city, and neglecting to give directions for the payment, was, as he has since informed me, the only reason why the bargain was not completed.

"The known judgment and prudence of these gentlemen, particularly Mr. Morgan, who lived in the suburb, and must have known the title of the city, if any existed, might also have had some influence on my desire to acquire this property; and some months after my arrival, I commissioned Mr. Delabigarre to purchase it on our joint account. He contracted for two-thirds, (excepting one square,) at the price of 10,000 dollars. The contract was made in Mr. Delabigarre's name; and I entered into an obligation to pay one-half of the purchase money as it became due; and this paper is now in the hands of his executors. After executing this agreement, the corporation persisted in asserting a right to dig the soil in question, and Mr. Gravier applied for an injunction to quiet him in his possession, and to enable him to complete his contracts for the sale. The result is known to the public: his title was declared to be good; he was quieted in his possession; and a perpetual injunction granted against the defendant's pretensions. After this judgment had been signed, executed, and acquiesced in for several months, relying on it as an incontrovertible title, I enlarged my purchases to the amount of $77,000; a very considerable proportion of which I have paid, without any recourse in case of eviction, as may be seen by reference to the conveyances made to me in the public offices.

"The interest I had, therefore, was fairly acquired from a person who was then exercising the most evident act of ownership, by enclosing his land, whose ancestor had, by four public recorded sales, disposed of parts of it, whose title was supposed so good by two of the most prudent men in the country, that they had treated and concluded on the terms of purchase, and against which the only claim then set up, was that of a servitude or commonage, a claim not inconsistent with a right in the proprietor to dispose of the soil. Which of those who now dare to reproach me for this transaction would not have done as much? Many of them have, as I can show, done more; and there are few who would not have gladly participated in my contract, if they could have foreseen the prodigious increase that has taken place in the value of this property. How far regret at having lost so fair an opportunity of increasing their fortunes may influence their present conduct, it is not material to consider.

"On the several arguments in this cause, the claim of the city was ably and zealously defended by counsel of the first talents in the territory. By a very happy combination, they had united in their service, the first law officer of the local government, a gentleman educated in, and familiar with, the principles of the common law; Mr. Moreau, whose long practice in one of the French colonies had made him perfectly master of the imperial jurisprudence; and Mr. Derbigny, who to a very respectable standing at the bar joined the advantage of a ready use of the Spanish language, in which the records were kept, and in which many of our authorities were to be sought; two other counsel, Mr. Alexander and Mr. Keene, had been engaged by the corporation; the first of these gentlemen assisted in preparing the defence, but was absent during all the arguments; the latter attended only the two first.

"With this weight of genius and acquirement, with the popular interest, and of course the popular opinion on their side, with the activity of hundreds quickened by interest in their researches for evidence, with the funds of a wealthy city at their command, a perfect knowledge of their opponent's title, and his arguments in its support, with the delay of two years to collect their witnesses, produce their papers, and arrange their authorities; and, above all, with the inestimable privilege of having their own declarations heard in evidence, and declared to be credible proof; with all these advantages on their side, this cause was argued at three different periods, was deliberately considered, and unanimously decided so much to the conviction of the defendants, that they have since deliberately resolved they never had a title. And yet men are found among them who complain that justice has not been rendered them in the conduct of the cause; they complain of the wiles of chicanery; they speak as if their learned counsel could have been over-reached, as if the bench had been deceived. I dare boldly appeal to the judges, to the whole bar, to all who heard the cause; none of them will deny that from the commencement to the end of the suit, it was conducted with a liberality that bordered on imprudence; that even before the Legislature had made the corporators witnesses, I offered, in open court, to permit the examination of all the defendants, from the mayor down to the scavenger, if they would proceed in the cause.

"That on the subsequent hearings, not only the inhabitants of the town, but members of the common council, and even the recorder of the city, were produced and sworn as witnesses in their own cause; that their own minutes were read, their own acts produced, and that the only instances of the rejection of evidence were the cases of Mr. Caisieurgue and Mr. Reano, who, though examined to other points, were not permitted to declare the reasons which induced the Cabildo to pass a particular act, on the obvious ground, that the act must speak for itself, and that, though they might declare the reasons for their own vote, it was impossible for them to know those which influenced others.

"I know that I should offend the delicacy of the respectable judges who have given this opinion, should I in this manner attempt to vindicate the motives of their decision; their characters are infinitely removed beyond the reach of those factious calumnies that have assailed them; yet they will, I hope, permit me one reflection which is important in the course of this address.

"The more importance that is attached to this cause, the more the public interest is alleged to be wounded by its decision, so much the more incontrovertible the title of the plaintiff must have appeared to the bench, for it cannot be supposed that, without a right so clear as to exclude all doubt, a most valuable property would be adjudged to an individual, in opposition to a public claim. And without imputing any unworthy influence of popular opinion, I can readily believe that the consequence which was falsely given to this cause produced a hesitation and delay which was not created by any difficulty in its decision. Popularity, with a probability of legislative and executive favor, every thing that could bias a man whose principles were not unshaken, were offered on one side; the other did not even present those personal attachments which have been made the basis of an impotent calumny, nay, by a very singular concurrence of circumstances, Gravier, the plaintiff in the cause, was, during its pendency, indicted for a contempt of the court, Delabigarre was known to be the author of a libel on the administration of justice, for which the printer had been presented, and I myself, in the publication to which I before alluded, had spoken of the conduct of a majority of the bench in a manner certainly not calculated to conciliate their friendship. I had written with a warmth which I thought, and still think, the occasion justified; but the fear of a false construction of my motives shall not prevent my acknowledging that subsequent explanations have convinced me of the perfect purity of their intentions.

"Thus, if personal resentment could have existed on the bench, it would have been gratified in giving a decision contrary to Gravier's claim.

"But the cause, says the voice of public clamor, the cause was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury. None but the grossly ignorant, or the perversely wicked, can make this a ground of accusation against the plaintiffs. The trial by jury, in civil cases, is a privilege which, by the laws of the territory, either party may claim at their pleasure. When neither demand it, the privilege is of course waived. Here the defendants have not even inadvertence to plead; the mode of trial was a matter of deliberation and choice, for I have seen the draught of an affidavit which Judge Moreau, the defendant's counsel, told me he was about to make, in which he gives a reason why they did not choose to ask one, and this reason, if I recollect aright, was, that they apprehended they would not be permitted to have a jury composed of inhabitants of the city (that is to say, of the parties to this cause.) What would have been said of the defendants, if they had testified even a desire to have persons interested in their purchase not only examined as witnesses, but sworn as jurors in the cause? Nothing, indeed, could have been added to the obloquy which has been cast upon them; but if such had been their conduct, I should candidly confess there is little of it they would not have deserved."—Orleans Gazette, November 16, 1807.

John Gravier vs. The Mayor, Aldermen, and inhabitants of the city of New Orleans.

On the 22d of October, 1805, John Gravier filed his petition in the Superior Court, stating, "That he is the lawful owner of a certain parcel of land called the Batture, in front of the suburb St. Mary.

"That the mayor, aldermen, and inhabitants of the city of New Orleans pretend to some right therein, and disturb the petitioner by publications tending to discredit his title, by trespasses in digging the earth, and lately by erecting a cabin thereon; by reason whereof persons who have contracted for the purchase of parts of this land refuse to pay, and the petitioner is endamaged to ten thousand dollars.

"Praying—That the mayor, &c. may set forth their title.

"That he may be quieted in his possession.

"And that he may receive such damages as the court may assess."

To this petition the defendants filed an answer in the following words:

The joint answer of the Mayor, Aldermen, and inhabitants of the city of New Orleans, to the petition of John Gravier.

"The defendants now and at all times, &c. they answer and say:

"That they cannot admit that the petitioner has been at any time the owner of the parcel of land alluded to in his petition, if he meant by that the parcel commonly called the Batture, which lies between the levee and the river Mississippi, in the whole extent of the suburb St. Mary; they expressly deny that at any time this petitioner had any manner of possession of the same.

"That the truth is, that some time before the death of Bertrand Gravier, the first owner of the plantation on the front of which the suburb St. Mary was established, he the said Bertrand Gravier had abandoned, and himself acknowledges, in an unequivocal manner, to have abandoned to the public all the above-mentioned parcel of land.

"That in consequence of such abandonment, the high-way and levee have been maintained and repaired then and afterwards till this moment, either by corvées publiques, or at the expense of the city.

"That since that time till now the inhabitants of this city never ceased to have a public and peaceful enjoyment of the said parcel, either to place different wood yards, or for unloading flat-bottomed boats and other rafts, which bring provisions to the city, with permission of the corporation.

"That under the Spanish Government some individuals having undertaken to establish some buildings on the said parcel of land, contrary to the said enjoyment, the said buildings were immediately destroyed and pulled down by order of the Government.

"That in consequence of the said enjoyment the city council has caused several months ago a cabin to be erected on the said tract of land, to lodge a guardian to take care of the same, and the earth thereof to be digged and carried away for the repair of the levee along the same.

"Therefore your petitioners pray to be hence dismissed with costs."

The cause being at issue on these pleadings, was brought to trial on the 18th December in the same year, before Jude Prevost, then the only judge on the bench.

After the plaintiff had shown his title, the defendants offered several corporators as witnesses. These were objected to by the plaintiff as interested, and the judge, in allowing the exception, said that he himself, being an inhabitant of the town, could not with delicacy continue the trial of the cause. The plaintiffs, however, against whom the interest, if any, must have operated, offered to waive all exception. But the judge persisting in his resolution, adjourned the trial to the 26th March, in the hope that other judges might by that time be appointed and take their seats on the bench, but in the mean time granted an injunction against taking away the earth, or committing any waste on the premises. On the 26th March the Legislature of the territory met, and on the same day an act passed, declaring corporators to be credible witnesses in all cases in which they had no other interest than that of members of the corporation.

No other judges having arrived, the cause was again adjourned, and on the 2d of June, 1806, came on to be tried before judges Sprigg and Matthews. It continued for twelve successive days, but as no judgment was given until the third hearing the report of that trial will comprehend all the proofs and arguments produced in the cause.

On the 2d of May, 1807, the bench being then full, and consisting of judges Sprigg, Matthews, and Lewis, the hearing commenced.

Counsel for the plaintiff, Messrs. James Brown, Livingston, Duncan, Kerr; for the defendants, Messrs. Gurley, (attorney general,) Moreau, Derbigny.

The plaintiff's counsel in opening stated that the land now in dispute was an alluvion formed in front of the plantation now belonging to the plaintiff, and which had formerly made a part of the Jesuit's plantation adjoining the city of New Orleans. That he would show a title to, and actual possession of the farm, of which this alluvion formed a part, in the plaintiff and those under whom he claimed, ever since the year 1726. That of the alluvion itself he would show a constructive legal possession from the time it was first formed, and an actual possession from the time it became of sufficient height, extent, and value to justify the expense of improving it.

To prove the title to the farm of which the alluvion was claimed as part, the plaintiff produced.

1. The process verbal, or a record of certain official proceedings, which began on the 14th July, 1763, and were had by virtue of orders from Mr. Dabaddie, ordonnateur (governor) of the province, by Oliver Devezin, surveyor general of the province, in order to proceed to ascertain, divide, and sell the real property belonging to the order of the Jesuits, which had been suppressed, and whose estate was annexed to the domain: these were—

1st. A certificate from the surveyor general, stating that "in pursuance of the Governor's orders, he had proceeded to the habitation of the ci-devant Jesuits, in order to examine the titles and papers relative to the possessions of the aforesaid persons," which he found "ought to contain thirty-two arpents of front on the river, [de face sur le fleuve St. Louis,] according to the said titles, papers, plans, and records of survey hereinafter mentioned, made by the late Mr. Broutin, the former engineer, then charged with the surveys of the colony, viz:

"Twenty arpents of front, measured on the perpendicular of fifty-four degrees from north to west, by fifty in depth, and which Mr. Bienville the former Commandant and Governor of the Province, sold on those conditions, and in allodium, [franc aleu] to the Jesuits, by an act passed on the 11th of April, 1726, before André Chavre, notary, at the Chatelet, Paris.

"Five arpents in front, measured on a straight and oblique line, running along the river and above, and bordering on the twenty arpents sold to them, with the same depth, with the same rights and privileges, by the late Mr. Noyau, lieutenant in the service of the King, attorney in fact for the said Mr. Bienville, by a private act, dated January 22, 1728.

"Seven arpents of front, measured as above, and adjoining the five preceding arpents, with the same depth, which the Jesuits had purchased from Mr. Breton, Comptroller of the Navy, and First Councillor of the Superior Council of this Province, by an act passed the 2d day of December, 1743, forming, together with the preceding purchases, a totality of thirty-two arpents of front, mentioned by the said Broutin, in his process verbal of the 30th December, 1728, 19th January, 1736, and 18th and 23d December, 1745."

The certificate also states, that the Jesuits possessed a small tract adjoining these in the form of an irregular triangle, which had been granted to them on condition that they should dig a canal to the Bayou St. Jean, which they had not done, and that therefore this portion had been reunited to His Majesty's domain, and was not to be considered as part of the property to be divided and sold.

The certificate then proceeds to detail the operations of surveying the lands, and states that they "began on the actual limits between the fortifications of the town and the said plantation, which they surveyed in the direction of an enclosure newly erected, and tending sixty-nine degrees from north to west by the engineers, at the distance of twenty-three toises from the ditch of the fortifications, and six toises five feet from the middle of the levee, which restrains the inundation of the river, where they fixed a stake, at the point marked A on the map;" and having found that there was, on actual mensuration, "thirty-three acres forty-one toises front, instead of thirty-two, on a right line drawn along the river, from the lower to the upper limits of these lands," the surveyor recommends the division of it into thirty-two equal parts, reserving the forty-one toises for future disposition; and the plantation shall be divided for sale, into parts of which the first shall contain seven, the others each five of these divisions or arpents in front.

The next part of the record contains a certificate from the same surveyor general, stating that on the 24th November, in the same year, he had, by orders of the Governor, gone with Mr. Pigeon, a deputy surveyor, to the lands late belonging to the Jesuits, on the requisition of Mr. La Freniere, the procureur general of the King, to divide and make partition of the thirty-two arpents of front, [de face] mentioned in the former certificate, of which sale had been made at the hotel of the recording office of this city, on the _____ day after _____ viz.:

"Seven arpents in front by fifty in depth, for the first lot, bordering on the glacis of the fortifications, adjudged on the day aforesaid to Mr. Pradelle, lieutenant in the navy, commanding the King's ship Solomon.

"Five arpents, No. 2, adjudged to Mr. Larrivée.

"Five arpents, No. 3, adjudged to Mr. Grenier.

"Five arpents, No. 4, to Mr. Bonrepos.

"Five arpents, No. 5, to Mr. Saullet.

"Five arpents, No. 6, to Messrs. Durand, brothers.

"All which purchasers being summoned to be present at the operations of the survey; partition, and delivery of the said portions of land, at which they were present in person, or by attorney, viz.:

Mr. Amelot, knight of St. Louis, the King's chief engineer, acting for the said Mr. Pradelle, the son, and purchaser of the second lot from Mr. Larrivée, after the adjudication, according to the act passed between them the _____

"As also Mr. Lamothe, acting for Mr. Grenier, absent."

The certificate then states the manner in which they proceeded.

1st. To show the direction of the lateral line next to the city, by placing there stakes at an arbitrary distance from each other, in the direction of the line.

2d. To lay off a line, on which the front might be measured, for which purpose he says, on the lateral line "at the point D, we replace our instrument at six toises below the point A, to find with precision the front of these lands on the river St. Louis, the distribution of which could not take place according to the first plan, which obliged us to make a new one, always, however, referring to those mentioned in our process verbal of the 22d of July last, by two right lines of direction [lignes de conduite] along the river.

The record then sets forth the geometrical operations for the dividing the six several lots, and closes thus:

"In testimony whereof we have agreed to and signed the present process verbal with the said Pigeon, and the said purchasers or their attorneys aforesaid in the former part of this record, to have the proper effect and serve as a field book [papier terrier] annexed to the plan of survey, and of the distribution of the said land into the six lots above mentioned.

"Done at New Orleans, the 22d of the month of December, in the year 1763.

Olivier Devezin,	Amelot,
Pigeon,	Villars,
Thomas Saulet,	A. Faures,
Le Chevalier de Bonrepos,	J. Lamothe,
	Durand Freres.

I require in the name of the King, that the present process verbal should be homologated; that it may have its full and entire effect; that the decree which may be pronounced may serve as letters of possession irrevocable and incontestable to the purchasers of the six lots of the land belonging to the former company of Jesuits.

LA FRENIERE."

NEW ORLEANS, April 24, 1764.

"The Superior Council of the Province of Louisiana having seen the process verbal of the division of the lands of the ci-devant company calling themselves Jesuits, made out by Mr. Olivier Devezin, and the conclusions of the procureur general of the King, the council hath ordered, and hereby doth order, that the said process verbal shall be executed according to its form and tenor, and shall remain homologated, as is above stated.

Faucault,

II. A deed from Alexandrina de la Chaise, widow o Jean Pradelle, for a habitation outside the walls of the city, adjoining the gate of the Chapitoulas, consisting of twelve acres of front, in depth to the Bayou St. Jean, as it was bought at the public auction of the Jesuits' property, at the time that that order was suppressed, and which were applied to the Royal Treasury, at the time of His Christian Majesty's domination in the Province, as appears from a reference to the proceedings.

This conveyance was made before Andres Almonester, the notary of the Government, the 11th June, 1773.

III. The will of André Renard, the grantee above mentioned, dated 29th May, 1782, by which he devises all his estate to Maria Josepha Deslonde, his wife, and the mortuary proceeding by which it appeared that he died on the 6th of August, 1785, and that the will was proved before the Governor, and by him directed to be carried into full effect.

IV. The will of Madame Renard, the wife of Bertrand Gravier, dated 18th November, 1792, devising all her property to her husband, and the mortuary proceedings, by which it appears that she died the same day, and that her will was proved, and ordered to be executed by the Governor, according to the usual legal forms.

V. Mortuary proceedings on the death of Bertrand Gravier. In the inventory is the following article, relating to the lands.

"INVENTORY: Item—Are placed in the inventory, the lands of this habitation, whose extent cannot be calculated immediately, on account of his having sold many lots. But Mr. Nicholas Gravier informs us that its bounds go to the forks of the bayou, according to the titles.

"APPRAISEMENT: Item—About thirteen acres of land of which the habitation is estimated, including the garden, of which the most useful part is taken off in the front, the residue consisting of the lowest part, which is enclosed in very bad fences, the side being sold to Don Joseph Navarro, one Percy and the negro Zamba, a portion of the best of which acres, with twelve negro cabins, the appraisers estimate at one hundred and ninety dollars, the front acre, with all the depth, which makes two thousand four hundred and seventy dollars.

“ADJUDICATION: folio 176—Having seen the proceedings, and in consideration of the consent of James Philip Guinault, defender of the absent heirs, the effects, real estate, moveables and slaves, which have been inventoried as belonging to the estate of his deceased brother Bertrand Gravier, who died intestate, are adjudged to John Gravier, at the price of the estimation, in which are comprehended the live stock, under the security which for that purpose the said John Gravier has proposed, and under the obligation of satisfying the creditors.”

The record further showed that in consequence of this adjudication, John Gravier was put into possession of the plantation and other effects, which in the said record are described as all the effects and property belonging to the succession of the said Bertrand Gravier, according to the inventory which was made of them, consisting of moveables, clothes of the deceased, slaves, animals, lands, lots of lands, the habitation with all the buildings thereon erected, houses, stores, and other articles contained in the said estimation.

VI. The plaintiff proved, by several witnesses, that possession of the plantation had always gone with these several conveyances—by the Jesuits, by Madame Pradelle, André Renard, Madame Renard, Bertrand Gravier, and finally John Gravier, the plaintiff.

VII. As to possession of the premises in question, the plaintiff relied—

1st. On the admission contained in the answer, that Bertrand Gravier was possessed of the land, since they make title under his abandonment.

2d. On the conveyances made by Bertrand Gravier, of several lots of this Batture, by public acts passed before the Secretary of the Cabildo, (Predesclaux.)

On the 12th April, 1794, to C. F. Girod.

On the same day to — Wiltz.

On the same day to John Scott.

On the 12th January, 1795, to Mr. Pierre Foucher.

3d. On oral testimony which proved that John Gravier, in the year 1803, had begun the enclosure of a parcel about five hundred feet square, which he completed in the following year.

4th. On a letter, dated the 10th March, 1794, from the Baron de Carondelet, directing Mr. B. Gravier to make the levee on this plantation, and on the oral testimony showing that the Baron de Carondelet had applied to Bertrand Gravier, and Governor Gayoso to John Gravier, for leave to lay up some royal masts on this Batture, which leave was given, and the masts placed there in consequence thereof, for a considerable time at each period.

5th. On the constructive possession arising from this alluvion being part of the original plantation, and for this purpose they cited the authorities which will be found in the subsequent part of the argument.

VIII. The plaintiff proved the disturbance by oral testimony of digging the soil by the defendants' orders; and by the admission of the defendants in their answer, that they had erected a cabin on the land.

Here the plaintiff rested his cause, and the defendants relied on the following points, which were not stated in the order they are here reported, but are collected from the arguments of the different counsel on the three several arguments. This method in stating them will be an advantage, that may in some measure compensate for the reporter's inability to do justice to the strength of manner and language with which the defence was conducted.

I. That Bertrand Gravier had never had a title to the Batture.

II. That John Gravier could not claim the Batture under the inventory, appraisement, and adjudication of Bertrand's property.

III. That the city had a title to the land—

1st. By the abandonment of Bertrand Gravier.

2d. By the operation of law when the suburb was laid out.

3d. By prescription as to the soil.

4th. That they had a prescriptive right, if not to the property of the soil, at least to a servitude or commonable right to use it for digging earth and storing lumber, &c.

1st. To show a want of title in Bertrand Gravier, they relied on the proceedings for the division and sale of the Jesuits' farm; and argued that the only expressions used to designate the front, being “face” and “face sur le fleuve,” front on the river, it could not be intended that the river was the boundary. That the surveyor by fixing the stakes at which he began the survey, five toises within the levee, showed that he intended to fix the boundary there. And they produced a plan of the operations of Mr. Devezin, protracted from said minutes of survey, on which the line was laid down far within the road and the levee, so as to leave not only the alluvion but a very considerable part of the suburb, between it and the river. If, therefore, this line was the boundary of the farm next the river, the whole Batture lying outside of it, Bertrand Gravier nor any of those under whom he claimed could have ever had any title to it.

2d. That John Gravier had no title even if Bertrand had, because—

The Batture is not mentioned either in the appraisement or inventory, and he only purchased what was contained in these instruments. That the words used in appraising the farm, viz., about thirteen arpents of land, of which the habitation is estimated, of which the most useful part is taken off in the front, must relate to the Batture; that the greater part of the lots being sold in front, the Batture could not be comprehended in the general terms “the rest of the habitation.” And that, therefore, if not comprehended in the adjudication to John Gravier, it would go to the heirs general of Bertrand, of whom John was only one; and finally, that by selling the lots in front, he had parted with his right of alluvion to the purchasers.

3d. That the city had a title—

1st. By the abandonment of Bertrand Gravier. To prove this they produced an ancient witness, (Mr. Livaudais,) who attested that some time during the administration of the Baron de Carondelet, (he could not fix the period) the roads of the suburb being out of order, he applied to the Baron to know how they were to be repaired, who sent him with a verbal order to B. Gravier, directing him to repair them. Witness communicated the order to Gravier, who answered that having sold the lots fronting the Batture, and abandoned the Batture itself to the town, neither the road nor the levee were longer at his charge. The witness reported this answer to the Baron, who said it was true, and ordered the road to be repaired by the public convicts. They also produced Mr. Rousseau, who declared that he also was sent another time by the Baron de Carondelet to B. Gravier, to order him to make the levee. But that Gravier said, as he had sold to different people, he thought the public ought to do it. That this answer being reported to the Baron, who said that as Gravier had abandoned to the domaine, the King ought to make the road. Mr. Laveau Trudeau, the former surveyor general under the Spanish Government, also declared to this point, that in frequent conversations with “Bertrand Gravier, after laying out the suburb, the latter always answered that by selling the front lots he considered himself as freed from the expense of the road and the levee, and that he had no right to sell the alluvion, but that the witness always thought differently.” That on one occasion he said that he had sold the Batture opposite to lot No. 7 to a Mr. Poyfarré, who had bought that lot.

That on another, when applied to by the witness to sell another part to his mother-in-law, Bertrand declared that he would not sell it, as he had abandoned it to the proprietors of the front lots.

That on a third occasion, when applied to make a conveyance to Mr. P. Foucher, of another part of the Batture, he said that he would not sell as he had already abandoned it, but that he would permit Foucher to enjoy it.

That when Gravier said he had abandoned it, the impression of the witness was that it was to the suburb generally.”

In addition to this a number of other witnesses proved that the road had been from time to time repaired by the public convicts.

2d. That the city had a title by the mere operation of law, for that when the suburb was established it became a part of the city, and all cities have a right to the sand-bars in front of them, according to the following authorities:

3 Partidas 364, tit. 28, law 9.—“Exclusively are the common property of each city or town, the fountains and places where the fairs and markets are kept, the place where the council meets, the sand-banks which are on the shores of the rivers, the race courses for horses, the woods and pasturages, and all other such like places which are established and granted as for common property, to such city, town, or castle, or other place, for any man who dwells there may use all the aforesaid things, and they are common to all, as well to the poor as the rich.

3d and 4th. That the city had a title under a prescriptive right, either to the land itself, or at least to a servitude of digging sand upon it.

To support this title, they called on a great number of witnesses, all of whom proved that as long as they remembered, and some of them were aged men, the inhabitants of the town had used the Batture for supplying themselves with building sand, and earth for filling up the streets and lots; that this was done during about one half of the year, the other half it being covered with water; that the Governors Gayoso and Carondelet had at two several periods caused a number of sheds, or small houses erected thereon, to be demolished, which had been erected by the persons who lived in the suburb, (not by Gravier,) and that once, immediately after a conflagration, which destroyed a great part of the city, in the month of December, 1794, the Cabildo had paid the expense of making an enclosure, surrounded by a dike to keep out the water, and enable the inhabitants to get sand for building during the next spring, but it did not appear whether the said enclosure had been made with or without the consent of Gravier, or how long it subsisted.

And that several persons had requested leave of the Cabildo or city to erect buildings on the Batture, which had been refused. A witness (Mr. D'Armas) also declared, that the auditor of war, had given it as his opinion, that the said petitions ought to be rejected, because the public had a right to the use of all that lay between high and low water mark, for the purpose of navigation and fishery.

On this point, the title by prescription, they cited 3 Partidas, 170, "where there has been possession for thirty years and upwards, bona fides is not necessary."—2 Donat, 490, to the same point.

1. To the first point of defence, the plaintiff replied, that the expression, "face au fleuve," front on the river, or face alone, were, in the general understanding of the country, testified not only in common parlance, but universally in the acts of sale, equivalent to the most explicit terms of boundary on the river.

To establish this, they cross examined Mr. Laveau Trudeau, the recorder of the city, one of the defendants in this cause, who had been introduced by them as a witness, pursuant to a law of the territory for that purpose; he had performed the functions of surveyor general twenty-eight years, and produced Mr. Lafon, the deputy surveyor of the United States, who had performed the duties of surveyor, and resided in the territory long before the transfer. Both these gentlemen declared that the words "face au fleuve," or "face" alone, in a deed or grant of lands on the Mississippi, universally were understood to give the river as the boundary, unless the deed expressed some other fixed limit or line of boundary. A great number of the defendant's witnesses were also interrogated to this point, who all concurred in declaring that to be the expression universally used to convey an idea of boundary on the river, as well in conversation as in sales. Mr. Pedesclaux, who kept the records of mortgages and deeds for thirty years, testified that this was the expression invariably used. Indeed this point was not attempted to be disproved by the defendants.

As to the stake fixed within the levee, as the place of beginning, in the survey of the Jesuits' plantation, and the line drawn from thence in front of their lands, the same witnesses, Mr. Laveau and Mr. Lafon, being examined to this point, also declared that, in surveying lands on the river, it was the universal practice, and had been from the first settlement of the country, to place two or more stakes at an arbitrary distance from the river, in the side lines, to mark its direction into the country, but that these stakes, called in French bornes, or boundaries, were never intended to mark the extent, or termination of the lateral line towards the river.

That all the said concessions or sales express their breadth on the river by so many arpents front, (180 French feet), and that to ascertain this front, a right line is drawn either parallel to the course of the river, when it can be done, otherwise by a perpendicular to one of the side lines, on which the number of acres which the farm is to have in front is always measured; that this line is called in French line de conduite, or base for the admeasurement of the number of acres in front; that every plantation, without a single exception on the river, has its front measured on such a line, but that in no instance does it serve as a boundary between the farm and the river.

That where a grant is made of a farm of land on the river, the line of admeasurement [ligne de conduite] is drawn directly across the front, from one bay to the other, and of course leaves a considerable part of the land between the river and this line, but that such parcel so excluded is always considered a part of the farm.

The plaintiff argued too, that independent of this conclusive proof, it was evident that in the present instance this line was not intended to bound the divisions of the Jesuits' farm in front.

Because, first, it was shown that the original grant to the Jesuits was like all the others in the country,* bounded on the river; to prove this point, they referred to the testimony of Mr. Laveau Trudeau, who declared that he had seen the plan of the grant, and that like all the others it faced the river; and that being called on to measure one of Gravier's side lines, he began from the middle of the levee, which was his practice in all other cases. The plaintiff also showed a lease from the Jesuits to one Durand, for a part of this land, in which he binds himself to keep the levee and road in good order, a duty only incumbent on riparious proprietors; if, then, the original grant went to the river, the subdivisions, the plaintiff argued, must have had the same extent—

1. Because the decree is to sell the whole of the property of the Jesuits.

2. Because the adjudication of the several lots is "with all their circumstances and dependencies, without reserving any thing."

3. That if so important and unusual a change was intended as to cut them off from the front on the river, it would not have been left to implication; where any change or reservation is intended it is so expressed, as in the case of the irregular triangle next the city; the one acre in the adjudication of lot No. 6, and even in the trifling quantity of a few toises of surplus, which were reserved for future disposition.

4. That the front line could never be considered as boundary, because it was drawn in the two operations from different points of outset, and in different directions; in the first survey, from the point A, at the distance of five toises and five feet from the centre of the levee; in the second at the point D, six toises below the said point A. In the first he measures off six hundred toises at right angles to the said line, and then makes an offset towards the river; in the second he measures on a right line along the river, at one hundred and eleven degrees with the side line, and goes only five hundred and forty toises before he makes his first offset, these different operations they argued confirmed the testimony of the surveyor general and Mr. Lafon, and showed that the front line was drawn indifferently at right angles, to the side line, or along the general course of the river; but that in either case it never formed a front boundary.

5. That the defendants have admitted, in their pleadings, that Bertrand Gravier had once the charge of making the levee and the road; indeed that he was the owner of the alluvion, because they say, in their answer, that he abandoned the alluvion to them at the time he laid out the suburb, and from that time he was discharged from making the levee and roads. Now he never could abandon what he had never had; and if he was once under the charge of making the levee, he must have been the riparious proprietor. But that there was a period at which, without dispute, he was under this charge, appears not only from the pleadings, but from the testimony of the witnesses, Livaudais and Rousseau, who were sent with orders to him to make it, but also from a letter signed by Governor Carondelet to the same effect, which was produced.

6. That Gravier must have been the riparious proprietor, otherwise the notary of the Government would never have permitted him to pass any sales of the property in question.

On these reasons and proofs, the plaintiff submitted to the court whether he had not fully refuted the first objection; to wit, that Bertrand Gravier never had a title to the Batture, because his land was not bounded on the river.

II. On the second point, to wit, that the Batture had not passed to John Gravier by virtue of the adjudication, it was observed that, he being (as was admitted) one of the three general heirs of Bertrand Gravier, he was equally entitled to be quieted in his joint possession against the defendants, as if he had shown a right to the whole; that this objection could only be made by the other two heirs, but that it could not be made by them, because the public officers, who make inventories, are bound to inventory the whole of the estate; that this was their intention in this case, for after putting in the inventory all the lots, they include the rest of the plantation by general words—this is rather more particularized in the appraisement, but the adjudication refers expressly to the inventory for the description of the thing sold; to the appraisement only for the price—but the inventory says all the residue of the farm; whatever, therefore, remained unsold, belonged to John Gravier, by the express words of the adjudication, which is further explained by the delivery of possession, which includes, as well as the adjudication, words of the most extensive signification, all the estate real and personal of the deceased, and particularly the habitation. If, then, the alluvion formed part of the habitation, and the habitation belonged to Bertrand, it passed to John after his death.

In addition to this, one of the appraisers was called, who swore that he considered the Batture as entering into the value of the habitation, and that they had viewed it for that purpose.

It was also proved by Mr. Pedesclaux, in whose office most of the mortuary proceedings and inventories were filed, that the alluvion never formed a separate item in the appraisement or inventory of a farm.

III. On the third point, the title in the defendants—

1. By the relinquishment of B. Gravier—the plaintiff contended that the evidence was too vague and uncertain to create any title; that it had been spoken of by three witnesses, and that the three had given four different accounts of it; Mr. Lavaudais saying expressly that the relinquishment was to the town: Mr. Rousseau to the King; and Mr. Laveau Trudeau that it was in some instances to the front proprietors, in others to the suburb; but this last witness placed so little weight on these declarations, that he always thought Bertrand had a right to sell, and of course had never relinquished his right. That the whole appeared to be loose conversation, imperfectly recollected after a lapse of twelve or fourteen years. And even taking it as correctly stated, the declaration appears to have been made under a false impression, that by selling the front lots he had exonerated himself from the burden of making the road and levee, and that even a conveyance under these false impressions would have been void. 1. P. Will. 727, Powell on Confs. 2d vol. 196, 2 Poth. 181 Evans's Essay, page 11.

That the conveyance by which this property is said to have passed must operate, if at all, either as a SURRENDER, A SALE, A DONATION.

1. Surrender.—This cannot apply to the case at all, for it is not pretended that Gravier surrendered his grant. This was sometimes done when the land was not worth the expense of the levee which protected it. It was, however, never permitted but on petition and in writing, as was proved to be the practice by the surveyor general; and that the surrender was made of the lands within, and not without the levee—the possession of the Batture which lies outside the levee could never carry with it the obligation of making the bank, by which it was not protected at all.

2. Sale. It has no one requisite of this contract.

1st. Parties uncertain—"public"—does this mean the town, the colony, the King, or the front proprietors?

2d. No price. This must be determined to constitute a sale.

5 Partidas 35, law 1.—"A sale is an agreement which men use between each other, and it is done with the consent of parties, for a certain price on which they agree, the buyer and the seller."—1 Poth. 463.

5 Partidas, law 20, page 45.—"The buyer and seller ought to agree in the price, for if they disagree, the seller saying that the price was greater than the buyer allows, the sale is not valid, as if the seller should say that the thing was sold for one hundred maravedis, and the purchaser should say it was no more than fifty, and they cannot know the truth; but if the seller says that the price was less than is stated by the buyer, then the sale shall stand. And, moreover, we say that if they disagree in the thing sold, the sale shall not stand; as if the seller should say that he had sold a vineyard or a piece of land in such a place, and the buyer should say that he did not understand it in that place, but in another."—Ibid 469, § ii.

3 Donation.—If onerous, must contain the condition, and an obligation to perform it.

2 C. J. C. 369, 25.—"A donation, whether it be made direct or causa mortis, or promised to be made in any certain time, or whether it derives its denomination from the will of the donor or the donee, in the manner allowed by law, must be made with this restriction, that it contain the actions, conditions, and stipulations which are permitted by law—that these being fully known, may be received if agreeable to law, or rejected if they are injurious.

"In writing donations, the name of the donor, the right and the thing ought to be noted, and that not obscurely or in secret, but either on a tablet or other matter of that nature, which the opportunity presents.

1 Poth. 692, (612).—"The onerous donation is a donation made under certain charges which the donor imposes on the donee.

"If the charges are to be appreciated in money, and are of the value of the thing given, it is a sale.

"If they are of less value, it is a mixed contract.

"If they cannot be reduced to a certain price, it is a true donation.

5 Partidas 32, tit. 14, law 9.—"And moreover, we say that any man may make a donation in writing or without it, giving what he pleases to ransom captives, to rebuild a church or repair a temple, or for a dowry or donation made on account of matrimony; and we say that if any man wishes to make a donation to any church or religious institution, or hospital, that he may do it without writing; but if he wishes to give it to any other man, or to any other place, he may do it without writing to the value of five hundred maravedis of gold; but if he desires to give a larger donation than is aforesaid in this law, what he shall have given beyond this shall not be valid, unless he shall do it by writing, and with the knowledge of the first judge of the place in which he shall make the donation."

ib. law 10, page 33.—"Donation may be revoked for ingratitude."

But the plaintiff relied to show that no verbal conveyance, even if fully proved, will have any effect on a positive law, of which they produced the original, signed and proclaimed by Governor Unyega the 9th of November, 1770, which declares all kinds of alienations, whether of real estate, or slaves, or ships, to be absolutely void, unless made not only in writing but before a notary.

On the title set up for the corporation by the operation of law, the plaintiff contended—

1st. That there was no law giving the sand-bars or banks to the city by the mere act of its erection into a town; that the law cited for that purpose from the Partidas (see page 15) had not the most remote connexion with the subject, the law immediately preceding this describes what part of the property of a city it shall have in its corporate capacity, but in which the inhabitants shall not immediately participate. This law is to designate what species of property belonging to a city shall be common for the use of all its inhabitants. It enumerates as such, "the fountains, places for the fairs and markets, sand-bars on the shores of rivers, council-houses, race courses for horses, woods, and pasturages, and other such like places which are established and granted as for common property, to such city, town, &c." If this text wanted any explanation, it is given in a note on the word "established," by Greg. Lopez, in the same page with the authority—"Moreover, what is here said, 'which are established,' is not to be understood as what is established by law, because neither to a town nor a city is any thing that appertains thereto given by the mere operation of law, but only so much as shall have been given expressly by the law or by custom, or by the disposition of individuals."

It would be as absurd to say that the inhabitants were entitled to all the sand-banks on the shores which happened to be within the limits of a town, as to say that they should have all the other articles enumerated in the text, such as all fountains, horse-courses, pasturages, &c. whether they belonged to individuals or not.

But even if this consequence were to have followed the erection of Gravier's plantation into a town, yet it could not apply to the case, because it not only was not, but never could legally have been made a town except by the express permission of the council of the Indies, and that no Governor, or even viceroy, had the power as appeared from the laws of the Indies, lib. 4, tit. 8, law 8—"We order that for no cause whatever the viceroys, audiences, governors, nor any other officer whatever, shall give the title of city or town to any of the settlements or places, whether Spanish or Indian, nor take them from the jurisdiction of their chiefs. We order that they see this executed in their respective residences; for this favor and privilege is to be demanded of our council of the Indies, and we declare void all titles which shall be given in contravention of this law." Though Gravier, therefore, might divide his farm into as many lots as he thought fit, yet he could not make it a town, and of course the inhabitants could acquire no rights, even if any were attached to its existence as a city or a town.

The plantation of Gravier is not situated within the limits of the city, and was under the jurisdiction of the syndic of Chaptoulas, the district next adjoining the town.

As to the title set up in the inhabitants by prescription, the plaintiff contended that the defendants ought to determine whether they claimed under it the soil of the Batture, or only a servitude or right of commonage in it. To the first, that is to say a complete title by prescription, they can never pretend, because they want the most essential foundations on which this title is to be supported.

It is a maxim in the civil law that prescriptive titles must be strictly proved. "Præscriptiones sunt odiosæ et ideo strictè sunt interpretandæ. Præscriptio aut usa capio est introducta contra naturalem æquitatem, quia dicitur neminem cum alterius Jactura debere locupletari?"—Doctz. in Jus. Civ. verbo Præscriptio. And many more requisites are necessary to form a title by prescription under the civil law than are required by the common law; it must be civil, exclusive, uninterrupted, public, held in good faith under a just title.—4 Poth. 587. Code. lib. 7, tit. 34, (1.)

1st. By the term civil possession is understood, says Pothier, the possession of him who possesses animo domini. Now here the inhabitants of the city never possessed, supposing themselves the owners, or with the idea that they had a right to exclude all others; on the contrary, they declare themselves, and so the truth is, that it was in its then state public landing not only for the inhabitants of the city but for all the world.

2d. It must be exclusive and uninterrupted.

There is not the least evidence of any exclusive possession in the defendants—the species of property did not admit of any, while it lay on the outside of the levee no one could have an actual exclusive possession, the use belonged to the public—and a constructive possession is not sufficient to found a prescription on, even if it existed in the corporation; but here the title and constructive possession are both out of them. 4 Poth. 580.—"There can be no prescription of a thing of which the right is in the public, such as ways, squares," &c. Now, though Gravier had the property, the use was in the public as long as he chose to leave it unreclaimed by a levee, therefore there can be no prescription.

Again: "the possession to operate a good prescription must be uninterrupted."—4 Poth. 591, (38.)

Ferrari prompta bibliotheca, tit. præsc. 329, (11) (12)—"The interruption of a possession is two-fold, natural and civil; a prescription is naturally interrupted when any of those things begin to be wanting which were necessary to form a prescription: if the possession be lost, as for example if the field be covered by the inundation of the sea or a river." Doctz. Ind. Jur. Civil. in verbo præscriptio—"Præscriptio si fuerit interrupta per inundationem; cessante inundatione bonæ fidei possessor præscribens non restituitur." Now here it is allowed on all hands that this natural interruption happened six months in every year, and by the last authority it appears that such an interruption defeats the prescriptive title of even a bona fide possessor.

But it was also civilly interrupted—

Ferrari ubi sup.—"Civil possession is lost by an intrusion."

4 Poth. 591, (40.)—"Possession is interrupted not only when the possessor has lost it by negligence or by his fault; it is also lost when he is dispossessed even by violence; and it is of no importance here by whom the possessor has been dispossessed by the proprietor of a thing, or by any other person whatever." Now here the defendants themselves have proved that the Governor turned off, by violence, several persons who were settled on this spot; this, if any inference be drawn from it, shows that the possession of the town, if they had any, was interrupted.

A prescription, also, to be good, must be in good faith, and made under a title apparently legal. Inst. lib. 2, tit. 6.—Jure civile constitutum erat ut qui bona fide, &c.

3 Partid. tit. 23, law 18.—"Wherefore, we declare that, if any one shall receive from another any immovable in good faith, as by purchase, gift, exchange, or any other lawful cause, if he hold the same ten years, the true owner being in the country, or twenty years if he be abroad, he gains a title by this lapse of time; although he from whom it was received be not the true owner, and that notwithstanding he might say and prove that he was the true owner, and that he did not know that the other gained it by time."

4 Poth. 588, (28.)—"The good faith that ought to accompany a possession to complete a prescription may be defined the just opinion which the possessor has that he has acquired a property in the thing he possesses. Justa opinio quæsitæ domini: this opinion must be a just one; that is to say, it must be true according to the appearance of the title. If I buy from one in possession, who appears to be the owner, his deed is a good foundation for prescription; but an error in law is not: as if I buy a real estate from one who has only a power to collect debts, thinking that this power includes that of selling a real estate, this is not a just opinion, and therefore no foundation for the prescription."

Now, here the defendants claim under an abandonment of Gravier; but they have no just opinion that this act could convey the property, because the act itself was not clothed with the forms of law. But if another, pretending to be the owner, whom they believe to be such, and who was in possession, had made to them a title, according to the forms of law, and they had remained the requisite time in possession, this would have been a good foundation for their claim: nay, so far is this doctrine of good faith carried, that a title, though in itself sufficient to support a prescription, would be of no effect if the party thought it bad. Si quis id quod possidet, non putat sibi per leges licere usu capere dicendum est etiam si erret non procedere tamen usu capionem."—Dig. de Usu, cap. 32, 31. 4 Poth. 608.—"The title under which a prescription is claimed must not only be one which is in its nature capable of transferring the property, but that it must be,

"1st. A valid title.

"2d. It must not be suspended by any condition.

"3d. It must continue during all the time required for the accomplishment of the prescription.

It must be valid. For example, the institution of a person as heir, who is incapable of inheriting by law, is void; and if the person so instituted should take possession and keep it the requisite time, his title being invalid, he could acquire nothing by this prescription."

Now, this is a case in point. Supposing Gravier's donation clearly proved to have been made to the city, they cannot take by it. Not by donation, for it is not, as we have shown, legally made. Not by prescription under it, even if they had possessed, because it is not a valid title in law, being made to persons incapable of taking under it: for by the following authority, (1 Brown, Civil Law, 145), a corporation cannot purchase or receive lands without license. If, then, the corporation took by a title which they had no just opinion to believe good, the original vice always remains, though the fact make be unknown to their successors: for, supposing a corporation to be in possession for sixty years, yet, if they originally took without a title, this fact must have been known to the then members; the beginning, then, must have been mala fide, and no lapse of time will cure this defect, as we shall see by express authority, in the case of a corporation, though some have held that it might, if above thirty years, in the case of an individual. Voet. in lib. 41, tit. 3d, Pandect (8): Quod si collegium seu universitas hominum, rem alienam acquisiverit initio non bono dum membra ejus aut præpositi traditiones factæ tempore habitant scientiam alieni rei, ac deinceps his mortuis alii in eorum locum successerent in bona fide positi nec alieni rei conscientiam habentes, non potest eo tempore inchoare usu capio."

It is true that the L. unica C. de annat. exceptio, and L. si quis emporis, §1, 2, & 3, and C. de præscrip. 30, vel 40 anno, and the law 21. 3d Partidas, tit. 19, declare that neither title nor good faith are necessary to maintain a possession that has lasted thirty years, but that such a possession will not enable the mala fide possessor to recover, if he once lose the possession.

Now, here an actual pedis possessio has been proved to have been taken in 1803, and a constructive legal possession ever since the existence of the property.

The commentators on this law of the Partidas declare that the canonical rule, which requires good faith in all kinds of titles, even by prescription of any time, is enforced by the courts of law. "Videtur (says Greg. Lopez, in his notes on this law.) hæc lex permittere præscriptionem cum mala fide sed servanda sunt in hoc, jura canonica in utroque foro. Vide Alexand. Consil. 185. Ibi decentem nulla præscriptio neque teneret statum, præscriptio curreret cum mala fide."

The plaintiff, therefore, contended that there had been no possession at all shown in the defendants, at least none that could support the title of prescription to the land. It was not exclusive, nor was it technically a civil possession. It must have been originally taken under no color of title at all, or under such a one as could not give them a just opinion of their right; that it had been both civilly and naturally interrupted; that the thing itself being subject to public use, was not susceptible of prescription; and that the defendants were not legally capable of taking or holding by any title without license. They cannot, therefore, prescribe for a right to the soil.

The only occupation shown by the defendants has been a servitude, or, as we should term it in English law, a right of common:

1. To dig earth.
2. To unload boats, and for the other purposes of navigation.

But the first of these uses is inconsistent with the other, and the last the plaintiff is willing to allow not only to the city, but to all the world, on the bank of the river.

But inconsistent servitudes cannot be prescribed for, nor even granted.

1 Corp. Jur. Civ. 199, (14.)—"Through the ground which I have given as a way to one I cannot grant an aqueduct for another; or, if I have given an aqueduct to one, I cannot sell, or in any other manner grant, a way to another."

Now here the public had a right of way and of accommodation for their ships and boats, while it continued, as it hitherto has, a bank open to the river, that is, unenclosed by a levee. This was the first natural right which accrued at the moment of the grant, therefore the proprietor of the land could not even himself exercise the right to dig in this way; he could not of course have granted it to the defendants, and it would be absurd to suppose that they could acquire by the odious law of prescription what the owner was incapable to give by legal conveyance.

The right of digging in another's soil is a servitude by the civil law. 2 Inst. tit. 3, § 2—"Inter rusticorum prædiorum servitudes quidem computari recte putant, aquæ hauriunt, pecoris ad aquam adpulsum jus pascendi, calcis coquendæ, arenæ fodiendæ"—§ P. 8, dig. tit. 3, § 1.

8 Dig. tit. 3, law 6, § 1—"Item longe recedit ab usufructu jus calcis coquendæ, et lapidis exemendi, et arenæ fodiendæ."

It is, therefore, only a servitude that can be claimed, supposing a proof of the defendants' possession perfectly correct; but all the former law respecting prescription of the soil applies to that of a servitude, with some others of a still greater force.

Servitudes are divided into urban and rural, or predial—together with a variety of other distinctions of no use in this cause; but the leading one here is the division into continuous and discontinuous, of which the former may be gained by prescription, but the latter never can in less than one hundred years, or, as many of the most learned doctors hold, a much longer period; but that is sufficient for our purpose, as the first settlement of the country was made in the year 1718, and the land itself in dispute only formed since 1763.

Same good faith required in prescribing for a servitude as for other property.

The party prescribing must have used it as his own, not as that of the public, or by another.

1 Corp. Jur. Civ. 207. 8 Dig. 6, (26)—"He only shall be deemed to have gained a servitude by use, who hath thought that he enjoyed it in his own right; therefore, if any one has used it for a public way, or in the right of another, he shall not be entitled to action or interdict."

Division of servitudes into continuous and discontinuous; distinction of continuous and quasi continuous servitudes.

58 Repertoire Un. 251, 252.—"Continuous servitudes are those which have a cause continually operating, and the effects of which are not interrupted in the ordinary course of things, such as the servitudes of perfection, (of a roof,) of prospect, or of not raising a house beyond a certain height; those servitudes are called quasi continuous, of which the cause (or the work that has been done to establish them) subsists always, though the effect is often interrupted; such are the servitudes of a drip or drain, &c. The permanence of the cause of these servitudes, or of the work which has been made to establish them, causes them frequently to be likened to continuous servitudes, because, though they are not strictly such, yet as they always subsist by themselves, without the aid of any new act since their establishment, yet they ought not to be confounded with servitudes, the exercise of which takes place where he in whom they are invested shows their existence by some act which relates to them. These last are more properly discontinuous servitudes; they may be defined to be such as not only require no durable work which shows their existence at the time they are not used, but also such as demand the action of man, that they may take place: such are the servitudes of drawing water, of passage, and of watering cattle."

Ferrari tit. præc. 338, No. 27, 28.—"The merely real servitude, whether it be continuous or quasi continuous, with good faith, although without a title, the adverse party against whom the prescription is claimed, knowing and suffering it to be prescribed for in the space of ten years, and twenty when they are absent; and the reason is clear, because if the owner or party interested knows or permits his estate to be subservient to another, as for example, permitting the beam of another to rest on his wall, or an aqueduct to be made in his field, and things of this nature, he shall be deemed to have ceded it of his own accord, and therefore, provided there is good faith, there is no need of any other title on the part of the prosecuting. But if this servitude is discontinuous, as in the servitude of a way or passage, or driving a carriage across the field of another, and things of this nature, they cannot be prescribed for without a title, unless by time immemorial; and the reason of this difference is evident, because the discontinuous servitude pretended to by another, as its use is rare and much interrupted, cannot be so easily prescribed by the owner, so that he may hinder it; but in the continuous or quasi continuous servitudes, the use may be easily perceived, so that the owner may hinder them if he will, or if he do not, that he may be deemed to have granted them of his own accord."

3 Partidas 415, law 15.—"The service being of such a nature as to be of daily service to one, without costing any labor to him who receives it: as, for example, if it be an aqueduct from a spring rising in the field of another, if the neighbor uses that water, watering his fields with it for ten years, when the owner is present, and does not oppose it, or twenty during his absence, the same being done in good faith, and believing he had a right to do so, and not by any force, or in consequence of any request made to the owner of the spring, or of the field through which it passes, he shall by this period of enjoyment gain the servitude. The same thing would take place if one had a beam placed in the wall of his neighbor, or had opened a window in it, through which he might receive light in his house, or should oppose the raising of his house so as to prevent the taking away the light; or if he had the wings of his house so raised as to make the rain water fall on the roof of his neighbor, such servitudes, and others of the kind of which men may avail themselves without daily labor, may be acquired in the same space of time, and in the same manner as that of the aqueduct above mentioned. But the other servitudes which men may avail themselves of to improve and work their inheritances and their buildings, and which they do not use every day, but at times, as a path, road, or way, which they have in the lands of their neighbors, and such as water, which should come once a week, or once a month, or once a year, and not every day, such servitudes, and those of a like nature, cannot be gained in the time aforesaid; but we say that he who wishes to establish a servitude of this nature, or those under whom he claims, must have used it for such a space of time, that man cannot recollect when it began."

(11) Id. in notes—"What shall be the time of which the memory cannot recollect the beginning, the text in lege, &c. decides. But many doctors, and of high authority, have contended that one hundred years shall be the time beyond which the memory of man cannot go; but, on the contrary, that even one hundred years shall not be held to be an immemorial time, is held by Cardi, and followed by Feli; and Franciscus Balbus holds the same doctrine, in his treatise on prescription, where he gives the reason that even one hundred years being elapsed, there may be memory of the thing by tradition, by fame, or common report."

Having thus destroyed, as he supposed, all pretence of title in the defendants to the land or to a servitude on it, and answered the objection raised to his deductions of title, the plaintiff proceeded to show his title to it, considering it is as an alluvion formed on a farm of which he supposed he had shown himself the proprietor. For this purpose he stated the following points:

1st. That a bank of a river is not at the extent of its waters in the periodical line, but must be confined to the bounds of its summer channel.

2d. That the banks of a navigable river are the private property of the owner of the adjacent soil, to the water's edge, though the public are entitled to the use of it for the purposes of navigation.

3d. That when the land shall increase, and consequently the bank recede, either by alluvion or the retiring of the river, that the space gained became the property of the ancient proprietor, but that the public retain their use of the new bank, for the purposes of navigation.

4th. That the interposition of a public road does not form any impediment to the acquisition of this right, when the grant is bounded on the river.

5th. That although the ground thus acquired may have been the bed of a public river, it becomes private property by the alluvion or recess of the river.

6th. That when an alluvion is once formed, its future increase belongs to the proprietor of the first alluvion.

Domat book 1, § 2, No. 9.—"The same usefulness of navigation of rivers demands the free use of their banks, so that in the breadth and length necessary for the passage and track of horses which draw the boats, there be neither trees planted, nor any other obstacle in the way. But the right of soil remains always in the proprietor of the adjacent soil according to the following authority:

1 Corp. Jur. Civ. 788, dig. lib. 41, tit. 1, p. 30, § 1.—"Celsus the son says, that if a tree grows on the bank of a river which is opposite to my land, the tree is mine, because, though the soil itself is my private property, the use of it is understood to be in the public; and therefore, when the river is dried up, it shall belong to the adjoining proprietors, because the public has no longer the use of it."

1 Corp. Jur. Civ. 18, 2 Ins. tit. 1, § 11.—"The use of banks is public by the law of nations, as well as of the rivers themselves, and any one has a right to moor vessels to them, to tie them by the ropes to the trees growing there, and to lay the lading thereon, as well as to navigate the river; but the property belongs to those whose property they join, for which cause the trees growing thereon belong to them."

Gravier, then, had the only possession of which the nature of the case was susceptible.

The public had a right to use it for the purposes of navigation only, while he retained the right of property.

It becomes, then a necessary inquiry to know what is this bank to which the public have a common right, but of which the owner of the adjacent soil retains the property.

1 Corp. Jur. Civ. 831, lib. 43, tit. 12, § 5.—"A bank properly defined is that which contains the river, in the natural course of its waters, but it does not change its banks when it is at times swelled either by showers or by the sea, or any other cause, for no one has ever yet said that the Nile, which covers Egypt by its increase, has thereby changed or extended its banks, but when it is reduced to its usual height the banks of the channel may be enclosed. But if it shall have naturally risen, so as to obtain a permanent increase by the influence of another river, or by any other means, without doubt in that case we should say it had changed its banks, in like manner as if having changed its bed it should begin to run in another course."

Ib. § 2.—"If a river shall overflow, but not make to itself a new bed, then that is not public which is overflowed."

The bank thus defined being proved to be the property of the owners of the soil, let us examine what will be the consequence of a removal of that bank, either by the retiring of the river or the formation of a new soil by alluvion.

Shall a proprietor bounded by the river have the benefit of the land so formed, or is it vested in any other and whom?

Let us examine and follow the same course we have pursued in the other points, and examine first the text of the civil law.

2 Corp. Jur. Civ. 317, lib. 7, tit. 41.—"Although it be not lawful to change the course of the river, by manual labor, yet it is not prohibited to guard its banks against the force of a rapid river, and when the river shall have left its former bed and shall make another for itself, the land which it surrounds shall belong to the first proprietor; but if that takes place by little and little, and is thus applied to the other parts, that by the law of alluvion it shall belong to him whose lands are thus increased."

Ib. § 3. Ed. Theod. et Valent.—"By this law, which we sanction as perpetual, we order that whatever is acquired to the proprietors by alluvion (either in Egypt by the Nile, or in the other provinces by other rivers) shall neither be sold by the treasury, nor demanded by any other, nor separately estimated nor burdened with duties."

1 Corp. Jur. Civ. 785. Dig. lib. 41, tit. 7, § 1, et Inst. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 20.—"Whatever the rivers add to our land by alluvion is ours by natural law: that shall be considered as added by alluvion, which has increased by such slow degrees that we do not know how much, and at what particular time it was added. But if the force of a river shall detach a part of thy field, and add it to mine, it is plain that it shall remain thy property."

Ib. § 3.—"An island which rises in the sea, which rarely happens, shall belong to the first occupant, for it shall be presumed to belong to no one; but if it arise in the river, which frequently happens, if it occupy the middle of the river it shall belong in common to those whose lands are on the opposite sides, in proportion to their breadth on the river; but if it be nearer to one bank than the other, it belongs to the one who owns the soil on the nearest bank."

Ib. § 4.—"If a river breaks through its banks, and flows in another part by a new channel, which afterwards joins the old one, the land comprehended between the new channel, in the form of an island, shall be his to whom it belonged before."

Ib. § 5.—"But if leaving the whole of its ancient bed, the river shall flow in a new channel, the ancient bed is the property of those whose lands bordering thereon, in proportion to their respective fronts thereon; and the new bed becomes, in like manner with the river, the common property of the public, by the civil law."

1 Corp. Jur. Civ. 423 Ins. 24, § 24.—"If after the purchase (but before delivery) the land shall be increased by alluvion, it shall belong to the purchaser."

Ib. 789, lib. 41, tit. 1, § 23.—"Attius had a field on the public road; beyond the road was the river and the land of Lucius Titus: the river by little and little encroached and took away the land which lay between the road and the river, and afterwards the road itself; afterwards by degrees it receded by means of an alluvion, and again occupied its former bed; on this case he answers, when the river took away the land and the public way, the increase on the other side of the river belonged to him whose lands were there; afterwards, when by little and little it retired, and took away again from him whose lands had been increased, and added it to him whose lands were situated beyond the road, because his land was nearest the river, that however, which belonged to the public (the road) was not acquired by any one, nor was the road (he says) any impediment to prevent the land which was made beyond the road, from becoming the property of Attius, for the way was a part of his land."

Ib. 783. (30) § 3.—"Alluvion restores that land which the force of a river hath taken away, therefore, if the land, which was between the public road and the river be occupied by the river, (whether this happen by little and little or not) and it be restored at once by the retiring of the river, it belongs to the former proprietor; for rivers perform the part of public assessors, they adjudge private property to the public, and public property to private persons." Therefore, as this land, when it was the bed of the river, was public property, so now it must be deemed to be his property to whom it anciently belonged."

Ib. 791, (56) Inst. Dig. 41, 1, 56.—"An island arises in the river opposite to the front of my land, so that its length did not exceed the front of my property; afterwards, by degrees, it increased and extended itself opposite to the front of my upper and lower neighbors; I ask, whether the increase is mine, because it is added to mine, or whether it is right of him to whom it would have belonged if it had commenced at the extremity of its present length?" Proculus, answers, "the river in which you state the island to have arisen, in such a manner that it does not exceed the extent of your front, if it has the right of alluvion, and the island in the beginning was nearer your land than the other shore, then the whole is thine, and that which is added to the island by alluvion is also thine, although it has so happened that the island hath extended opposite to the front of your upper and lower neighbors, or even though it should extend so as to be nearer the land of him who possesses the opposite shore."

Having thus established by authority from the Roman, the plaintiff cited the following from the Spanish laws.

POINT I.

Partidas 363, lib. 6, tit. 28.—"The rivers and ports and public ways belong to all men in common, so that strangers may use them as well as he who dwells on the land in which they are; and, although the banks of rivers belong, as to the dominion, to those to whose inheritance they are joined, yet, notwithstanding this, every man may use them, tying their ships to the trees which grow thereon, mooring their ships and depositing their sails and merchandise thereon, and the fisherman may also place their fish there and sell them, and dry their nets, and use the shores for all such like things as belong to their trade, and are necessary for their livelihood.<sup>33</sup>

Ib. law 7.—"All the trees which are on the rivers belong to those who have the ground adjoining to the banks, and they may cut them or cause them to be cut, or do with them what they please; but if at the time any one was about to cut a tree that belongs to him by reason of his adjoining inheritance, a vessel was tied thereto, or was about to be tied there, he ought not to cut it, because, in that case, he would act contrary, to the common right which men have to use the shores of the rivers, as we have said."

Ib. law 8.—"No one ought to make either canal, or tower, or house, or cabin, or an other thing by which the navigation may be impeded, on navigable rivers or on their shores."

POINT II.

Ib. p. 374, lib. 32.—"The inheritances of some men are covered with water at times by the inundation of rivers, so that they remain under water a long time; and although in such case the owner loses the possession, yet his ownership always remains."

POINT III.

Ib. p. 372, law 26.—"Rivers<sup>3</sup> swell sometimes so that they take away and diminish the inheritances that are situated on their banks, and they give and increase others which are on the opposite side: therefore we say, that whatever is carried off by little and little, so that the quantity cannot be perceived, because it is not taken off in a body, this shall be gained by the owner of that inheritance to which it is added; but when it happens that the river shall take away the inheritance altogether, or a considerable part thereof, with its trees or without them, what is so carried off is not gained by the owner of the soil to which it is added."

POINTS IV. & V.

Ib. p. 374, law 31.—"Rivers sometimes change the places in which they used to run, making to themselves a new course, and leaving dry the place where they had formerly flowed: and whereas contestations may arise who ought to have the part then left dry, we say it belongs to those whose inheritances adjoin, each one taking a part equal to his front on the river, and those through whose lands it begins to run anew shall lose the ownership thereof, for the space which it covers, which from that time shall be of the same nature with the other place over which it used to run, and shall be changed into public property like the river."

The plaintiff also concluded that the defendants were estopped from questioning the title of Bertrand Gravier to the plantation; which was of such notoriety that they had expressly admitted it twice upon record; once in a bill which they pleaded to perpetuate testimony, and again in the answer in this cause, and in both instances make title under what they call his relinquishment of the premises in question to them. That they had failed in making out this relinquishment to be either certain in fact or good in law; that the title by the operation of law in the establishment of the town, was destroyed by reading their own authority, and that the one by prescription had not a single legal requisite to support it; that their possession was nothing more than that use which the public were entitled to while the property remained unimproved; and that the only circumstance that had the least color of exclusive possession, was the enclosure made by Mr. Delachaise in a case of extreme necessity, for a conflagration had destroyed nearly the whole city in the autumn or winter season, and the enclosure in question was made to enable the distressed inhabitants to get materials to build with during the ensuing spring and summer; it was probably made with the consent of Gravier, for it would have been inhuman in him to have opposed it; and this idea is strengthened by the enclosure being soon after suffered to fall to decay.

That, on the contrary, the title in the plaintiff was clearly deduced from Pradel (who had bought lot No. 1 at the sale of the Jesuits' property, and No. 2 from Mr. Larrivée, to whom it had been struck off, as appears from the process verbal above recited,) down to the present plaintiff; that this title had been repeatedly acknowledged upon record by the defendants themselves; and that the premises in question being according to all the authorities an appendage to, or rather an integral part of, the plantation, the title could not be separated; that the defendants had acknowledged the validity of the plaintiff's title to the very premises in question, by making title to them under the relinquishment of his ancestor; that he had always retained the only kind of possession of which the thing was susceptible; that he had been permitted to sell by the notary of the Government; that two Governors had, at considerable intervals of time, requested his permission to use it, that he himself had taken an exclusive possession as soon as the property was of sufficient value; and that, though alluvions were formed at every bend of the river, the right of the adjoining proprietor had never been questioned either by the French, Spanish, or American Governments.

NOTE.—The defendants cited in the course of the trial several authorities to show that the public had a right to the use of the banks, and that the proprietor could erect nothing here that could embarrass this use; but as this point was expressly admitted by the plaintiff, the authorities are not cited here.

After having these proofs and authorities, the court took time to consider, and on the 23d of May Judge Sprigg delivered the following judgment:

The Mayor, Aldermen,
and inhabitants of the City of New Orleans, } On a suit to quiet the plaintiff in the possession of the alluvial land, or Batture, fronting the suburb St. Mary.

Judgment of the Superior Court of the territory of Orleans.

1st. The title of Bertrand Gravier, the ancestor of the plaintiff, to the tract of land on which the faubourg St. Mary is situated, has not been disputed; but it has been contended that this tract was bounded by the highway; the court, however, are of opinion that, according to the evidence exhibited, and the general usage of the country, this tract of land was bounded by the river Mississippi.

2d. From the examination of the authorities, the court are of opinion that, according to the civil and Spanish laws, the right of alluvion is incident to land which is bounded by a navigable river, and that these laws must form the rule of decision in the present case.

3d. If Bertrand Gravier, therefore, had continued proprietor of the whole tract on which the faubourg has been established, there would be no difficulty in determining his title to the alluvion; but Bertrand Gravier had divested himself of all title to that part of his tract on which the faubourg is established, by selling the lots fronting and adjoining the highway. It is therefore important to inquire, what was the situation of the Batture or alluvion in question, at the time the faubourg was established; or at least when the front lots were sold: for, if no alluvion existed at that time, when Bertrand Gravier ceased to be the owner of the land adjoining the high road, then it is the opinion of the court that an alluvion subsequently formed would not become the property of Bertrand Gravier. The reason of this opinion is, that, if Bertrand could be considered as proprietor of the road, after selling the adjacent land, or of the levee lying between this road and a public river, he would nevertheless not possess that title of property which gives the right of alluvion: for the destruction of this property by the encroachment of the river, would be a public and not a private loss, since it could not be appropriated to the use of any individual; and the said road and levee would have become necessarily liable to be kept in repair at the public expense.

It is, however, the opinion of the court, from the evidence adduced in this cause, that, antecedent to the time when Bertrand Gravier ceased to be the proprietor of the land adjacent to the high road, a Batture or alluvion had been formed adjoining the levee, in front of the faubourg, upon the river; and that this alluvion was then of sufficient height to be considered as private property, and had consequently become annexed to, and incorporated with, the inheritance of Bertrand Gravier.

4th. Bertrand Gravier having then acquired, by alluvion, the property now in dispute, it is to be considered whether he has divested himself of his title to the same. The court are of opinion that he has not. The evidence of abandonment is merely conversation, which past a long time ago; it is not very explicit, and is much impaired by the circumstance of Bertrand Gravier having sold a part of his Batture to one of the front proprietors. It would be dangerous to divest a man of his property upon evidence of such declarations, without any proof of a consideration.

* In notes—"This is to be understood of public rivers."

With respect to the claim of prescription, it is sufficient to observe that there has been no exclusive possession on the part of the defendants, and consequently they have no title on this ground. There are, indeed, other strong objections to a prescriptive title in this case, but the one we have stated is considered as sufficient.

5th. With respect to the title of John Gravier, as founded on the inventory, appraisement, and adjudication, which has been adduced in evidence in this cause, it is the opinion of this court that they are not bound to determine the validity or invalidity of this title. First, whether John Gravier has purchased the whole, or only inherited an undivided part, his claim to be quieted in the lawful enjoyment of the property in question, against the adverse pretensions of the city to the property of the soil, or the right of carrying it away, is sufficiently strong to enable the court to form a decision of the present case.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court, that the petitioner be quieted in his lawful enjoyment of the Batture, or alluvion, described in his petition, against the claims and pretensions of the defendants, and that the injunction heretofore granted in this case be made perpetual.

The injunction referred to, and perpetuated by the judgment, is entered as follows :

1. On the 18th December, 1805.

It is ordered that the defendants be enjoined from digging and carrying away the earth, or committing any other waste on the premises in question, except so much as is necessary for the reparation of the levee in front of the same, until the further order of the court thereupon.

And afterwards—

At a session of the Superior Court of the territory of Orleans, holden at the City Hall of the City of New Orleans, on Wednesday, the ninth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six.

Present: Hon. J. B. PREVOST.

JOHN GRAVIER vs. The Mayor, Aldermen, and inhabitants of the City of New Orleans.

On motion of Mr. Livingston, ordered that the injunction issued in this cause be continued until the termination of this suit, and that it be strictly enjoined, upon pain of imprisonment, as well upon the defendants as all other persons whatever, during the pendency of this suit, not to dig or carry away any earth or soil whatever from the Batture or parcel of ground lying between the road in front of the suburb St. Mary and the river Mississippi.

Extract from the minutes :

J. W. SMITH, Clerk.

After the judgment the defendants moved for a new trial, on the ground that the title was in the United States. The whole of the argument on this subject, however, being contained, with considerable additions, in Mr. Derbigny's opinion herewith published, I refer to that as doing much greater justice to the defendants than the present reporter could do. The same observation may be made of some authorities cited by the defendant's counsel, to show that the French law gave alluvions to the crown; this subject is embraced by and forms the groundwork of Mr. Derbigny's opinion. The answers to these arguments will be found in the "Examination of the title of the United States," and in the opinions of the counsel herewith published.

During the pendency of this suit, several of the persons to whom Gravier had conveyed the front lots in the suburb filed their petitions, praying to be made parties to the suit which was granted. Some of them, however, prayed leave to discontinue when the cause came on for hearing the second time, and the residue retired on the third hearing. The defendants, however, on the arguments, set up the title of these front proprietors against the plaintiff, by endeavoring to show that as their deeds (and this was the case with some of them) described the lot as lying front to the river, they had the same right to the alluvion which the plaintiff himself claimed.

This objection was, however, answered by showing from the deeds that each of the lots had a clear front boundary, by reference to the plan, which in no instance crossed the road. "In agris limitatis jus alluvionis locum non habere constat."—Dig. lib. 41, law 16.

CORRESPONDENCE.

No. 1.

Note to Mr. Jefferson.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, May 5, 1808.

Mr. Livingston having, on his arrival this evening, been informed that the President of the United States intended very shortly to quit the seat of Government, begs leave most respectfully to request that he may be informed whether it will be convenient, and at what time, for the President of the United States to grant him a short audience, previous to his departure. It is on a subject extremely interesting to Mr. Livingston, and which formed the sole motive for his voyage from New Orleans.

A fear that the President might depart at an earlier period than it would be proper to pay his respects in person had induced Mr. Livingston to take the liberty which he hopes the occasion will excuse.

MAY 6, 1808.

Thomas Jefferson presents his compliments to Mr. Livingston, and being on his departure, and much pressed in finishing sundry articles of business, he finds it impossible to enter on any new subject at this time. It is, however, the less important, as whatever be the subject of Mr. Livingston's application, it goes of course in the first instance to the head of the Department to which it belongs, from whom it will be communicated to

TH: JEFFERSON

EDWARD LIVINGSTON, Esq.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, May 6, 1808.

SIR:

The departure of the President has prevented my making to him personally, as I intended an application relative to the steps taken by the United States with respect to my property at New Orleans. I therefore take the liberty of stating my ideas to you, with a request that they may be forwarded to Monticello as soon as possible; my absence being so extremely injurious to my affairs, that nothing but an object on which my fortune or ruin depends could have induced me to undertake the voyage.

I shall not, sir, enter into any reflections on the nature of the proceedings adopted with respect to me. Conscientious that I have done nothing to merit the peculiar displeasure of the Executive, I am persuaded that unless some gross misrepresentation had been made of my title to this property, I should not have for a moment been disquieted in its possession, and that unless my conduct and sentiments had been calumniated, some mode less injurious to both my feeling and fortune would have been pursued of ascertaining the rights of the public. It will not, however, be deemed improper to say, that having purchased from one whose possession had been confirmed by the final and unanimous decree of three judges appointed by the President, I was suffered during nine months to lay out my whole fortune in improvements, and was then forcibly and disgracefully driven off, without trial, without hearing, without a day's warning; and had the mortification to see works which had cost me the fruits of four years' exile and hard labor swept away by the annual inundation of the river, against which I should in a few days have secured them.

Instead of making loud complaints, or appealing to the public in a case which I could have easily shown regarded every individual in the community, I have been uniformly silent, persuaded that as soon as I should be heard, I could so demonstrate the justice of my cause as to procure future tranquillity in my possession; and prepared to renounce that indemnity for my losses, to which I was strictly entitled. In this hope I came to the seat of Government; this hope I still entertain, though I cannot but lament my ill fortune in arriving after a voyage of two thousand five hundred miles, at the moment when the President's affairs could not permit him to grant me half an hour's audience. Within that time I think I could have convinced him of the justice of my claim; if I had been permitted to support it by a verbal explanation of the different documents I brought with me. As it is, I confine myself to the following proposition, which I flatter myself cannot be rejected:

that the Attorney General be directed to examine the documents and authorities which I shall produce, and if he shall decide, as I feel confident he will, that the United States have no claim to the land, that then a counter order shall be dispatched to the marshal of the district, and that I shall be left in the undisturbed possession of my property. But if, contrary to my expectations, he should think the United States have a title, that then such measures may be taken either by the trial of a feigned issue in one of the districts of the United States, or by a foreign jury in the territory of Orleans, as will secure an impartial decision. I flatter myself that these propositions evince the confidence I have in the officers of the United States, as well as that I feel in the justice of my cause. As the question, however, if it may be called one, depends on the principles of the civil law, I should have no objection that the President should name, either at the public or my expense, some other person, conversant in that code, to join the Attorney General in his deliberation.

I have the honour to be, respectfully,
Your most obedient servant,

EDW. LIVINGSTON.

VIRGINIA, May 20, 1808.

SIR: Having transmitted to the President your letter of the 6th, I have just received as his decision thereon, that the case of the Batture being now referred to Congress, on the official opinion of the Attorney General that the right is in the United States, it is the duty of the President to keep the ground clear of any adversary possession until they shall have decided on it.

The delay in obtaining the result of your application has proceeded from a series of obstructions experienced on my journey, with some slight ones in my communication with the President, since I reached the end of it.

I remain, sir, respectfully,
Your most obedient servant,

JAMES MADISON.

WASHINGTON, July 13, 1808.

SIR: In the letter I had the honor to address to you on the 6th of May last, I offered propositions which, after making every allowance for the illusions of self-interest, I cannot but think highly evincive of the justice of my claim: they were also intended to show the confidence I then felt, that the President would seize the opportunity they offered, of reviewing a determination made on an ex parte statement, which I have offered, and am ready to prove false in fact and erroneous in law.

It having been deemed inconsistent with official duty to examine my proofs, or to listen to my argument, I must at present content myself with the consciousness of having done every thing that a sense of justice, and the extreme of moderation could require. The representatives of the people to whom I am referred must determine whether they are competent to the trial of a title, and whether they intended to invest the Executive with the power of reversing the decision of the court, of opposing the execution of its decrees, and depriving a citizen of his property, without even the form of a trial, or affording him the means of defence.

I must, however, sir, be permitted to draw your attention to another circumstance in this business, which is of the utmost consequence not only to me, but to the territory in which I reside. From the verbal communications which I had the honor to make to you at this place, supported by a copy of the record which I delivered for the President's perusal, it appeared that, when I first heard a warrant had been received by the marshal to divest me of my property, I applied by petition to the Superior Court, who, on hearing, granted me an injunction ordering the marshal to desist from the execution of the warrant, but that this officer, supposing the authority of the President paramount to that of the court, proceeded to execute his order. For this contempt, offered to the highest judicial authority in the country, I might have obtained an attachment and an order for restitution; but I was unwilling to exhibit to the inhabitants of the territory the degrading spectacle of a court unable to execute its decrees, or the afflicting one of a violent struggle, perhaps a bloody conflict, between the ministerial officers of judicial and Executive power. Persuaded that the warrant had been issued in consequence of some gross misrepresentations of facts, I desisted from any further prosecution of my appeal to the laws, and thought that propriety required me to suspend any to the public, until I should have endeavored to rectify the errors under which I supposed the President had acted. With this view I applied myself silently and assiduously to the removal of those pecuniary difficulties, which this unexpected change in my fortune had produced, and as soon as this was sufficiently effected, came on with a hope, bordering on conviction, that when heard (which I considered as a matter of course) I could demonstrate to any reasonable man, not only that I had been hardly dealt with in the mode of proceeding, but that there was not even a color of title in the United States to the land of which I have been deprived. As, however, it has not been deemed expedient to admit even a possibility of error or misrepresentation; as the appeal which I have made to the candor of the Executive has failed, it may become necessary for me to prosecute that which I have made to the justice of the courts. But this statement will show you, sir, how important it is for me to ask, which I now most respectfully do, whether it is the intention of the President that the marshal shall use the force placed at his disposal to oppose the decrees of the territorial judiciary? If, as I hope, and would wish to believe, the ordinary course of justice is not to be interrupted, I have only to request that orders conformable to such intentions may be sent to the marshal, whose conduct has shown that he is under a contrary impression; and it would be desirable to avoid that opposition to which his mistaken sense of duty might lead. But if the President's warrant is to be supported by force against the process of the court, I ought to be apprized of it, that I may then determine whether the obligation I owe to my family and my professional duty; to a widow and two orphans, whose rights are committed to my care, will permit me to sacrifice their interest, in order to preserve the peace of the territory; or whether I should assert my claims, and leave the responsibility where it ought to rest. If the United States have no title to the land, no reproach can attach to me for any event that may happen, and I am prepared to risk every thing on that question, whenever it shall again be decided by impartial and enlightened men. Being about to depart in a few days, and wishing to carry the President's determination on that point, I beg that, as soon as may be convenient, you will favor me with an answer, and at the same time return the copy of my petition for an injunction, which I had the honor to deliver you at Washington.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, &c.

WILMINGTON, July, 17, 1808.

SIR: I should have furnished you with a copy of my opinion on the subject of the Batture, but the original was not to be found in the office of the Secretary of State, having been sent with the other papers to Congress. As it merely expressed, according to my recollection a concurrence in sentiment with Messrs. Derbigny and Gurley, provided the statement of facts furnished and officially laid before me was correct, I kept no copy, having returned the statement itself. You have admitted that if this statement were true, you would submit to the opinion. I hope, therefore, you will sustain no injury from the want of a copy. My desire to make another search among my papers here has delayed an answer to your note, until my return home. I now embrace the earliest moment of reply.

Your obedient servant,

C. A. RODNEY.

PHILADELPHIA, July 20, 1803.

SIR:

I am just favored with yours of the 18th, and very much regret that the original opinion on which the President has thought proper to deprive me of my property, should have been lost. That, together with the official statement of facts on which it was founded, would have been extremely useful to me in the discussion which this business must undergo. Your letter, to which I now reply, would perhaps have answered my purpose, had it been accompanied by the statement of facts, and opinions to which it refers. Am I to understand that the judgment of the court made a part of that statement? If so, it is contradictory to that of Mr. Derbigny, in many most material points; and it is desirable that I should know to which the President has given the greatest credit, the solemn deliberate decision of three judges, appointed by himself, and sworn to do justice between the parties, or the ex parte statement of a lawyer feed to maintain a contrary opinion! If indeed either of them is to be called an official statement, it certainly must be the decree of the court, not the opinion of counsel. I ought to acknowledge, sir, that you spoke to me of the statement made by Governor Claiborne. I have seen one letter from him to the Secretary of State, which was communicated to Congress. In this, if I recollect aright, he does not vouch for the accuracy of Mr. Derbigny's statement, but says he "believes it may be relied on." This loose expression, I presume, cannot be the official document that has outweighed in the President's mind that contained in the unanimous opinion of three respectable judges; and if there is another statement of the Governor's, justice would seem to dictate that I should be furnished with it. You speak also of an opinion given by Mr. Gurley. My impression, I own, has always been, that neither he nor any other of the counsel employed by the corporation had ever concurred with Mr. Derbigny in the opinion that would vest the title in the United States; and this impression was strengthened by not finding any other than Mr. Derbigny's among the papers communicated to Congress. You say "I admitted that if the statement were true, I would submit to the opinion." This is perfectly correct, as applicable to a statement then verbally made to me; but I cannot admit it as referring to one which I have not yet seen. But to prevent the possibility of any misunderstanding on this point, I beg leave to repeat the substance of our conversation, to which you refer.

After stating that the object of my visit was to request a copy of your opinion, you informed me that you had not been able to find it, but that you would search among your papers for the draught. You said, however, that it was short, and referred chiefly to the documents which had been laid before you. At my request you were then polite enough to repeat the grounds on which your opinion had been formed: they were, you said, three.

1st. That Gravier's plantation was not bounded by the river, and of course that he could not be entitled to the alluvion.

2d. That by the French law the alluvion belonged to the crown.

3d. That Gravier's plantation was sold by metes and bounds in front, and did not call for the river as its boundary.

I observed to you, that the first and third points appeared to me to be the same; to which, I think, you assented; and I then admitted that if Gravier's lands were not bounded by the river, he could never claim the alluvion, and that your opinion assuming that fact, was perfectly correct; and added, that I was happy to find that these were the only grounds of your advice, because I fortunately had it in my power to convince you that the principal statement, as to the boundary, was not founded in fact, and that the French law neither applied to the subject, nor was it as to the effect you had imagined. I spoke to you of documents and authorities which I had with me at Washington, that I believed would remove every doubt from your mind on these points, and concluded with expressing a hope that if this were done, I should, without further delay, be restored to the possession of my property. Finding however, from the manner in which this proposition was received, that I had no hope of restoration, even if I succeeded in convincing you that the statement on which you had predicated your opinion was incorrect, I next touched on the propriety of advising the President to order a suit for the purpose of deciding the question of title. I spoke of the distress and ruin that would be brought on me by delay, and I offered to waive all forms, and release all errors of proceeding, and try the cause at any place, and in any manner the President should direct. This offer I afterwards repeated to the President in your presence; but the answer of both was the same, that the President had no right to submit the title of the United States to any tribunal without the authority of Congress, and that he had taken the property on an official statement of the Governor of the territory, that the land belonged to the United States. I then referred to the principles of the constitution; claimed my right as a citizen of the United States, not to be deprived of my property without a legal trial, and asked whether the statement of the Governor ought to countervail the decision of a court, acting with all the evidence and authorities before them? Your answer was, that in cases of controversy between the public and an individual, the latter could have no other redress than that which Congress chose to give; and that you thought the President was in all cases bound to give faith to the statement of the territorial Governor. I then began to speak of the propriety of proceeding to dispossess me by warrant, even if the title were actually in the United States. I adverted to the apparent fight at least, we had acquired by the decree of the court, which, as we were plaintiffs, could not have been obtained without showing a title, and said that I could not imagine the law of March, 1807, made for any other than the case of an intruder without the color of title. To this your answer was short; that you had fully considered the law before you advised the President to issue the warrant. I therefore said no more on that point, but renewed my request of a copy of your opinion, which you then thought you could find, and promised me, in that case, to send to me. Before I took my leave, I informed you that a gentleman of high respectability, whom I named, had told me you had given him to understand that the suit at New Orleans was a collusive one, in order to give the appearance of title. I said this was an imputation of a personal nature upon which I wished an explanation. You, however, immediately set me at ease upon that subject, by declaring that you entertained no such idea, and that my informant must have misunderstood you, or received the suggestion from some other source. I have thought it candid and proper to detail my recollection of the substance of our conversation on this subject, because, in the absence of a written document, I must use it as the evidence of your opinions on a subject so extremely interesting to me as the one now under discussion.

Believe me, sir, it is not my wish to ask any thing that may embarrass you (for whom I have a great personal respect) or any other officer of Government; still less to be considered as an applicant for favor. But I am sure I may safely rely on your good sense to see, and your candor to acknowledge, the right which I assert, of being furnished with all the statements and opinions upon the authority of which I have been deprived of my estate. The business is not only serious to me, but it involves points of the deepest interest to the people of the United States; it demands, and shall receive, a full and public discussion. In order to make it a fair one every possible light ought to be thrown on the subject by an exhibition of all the statements and opinions that have been given.

The responsibility of all these proceedings having been thrown upon your opinion, I cannot help repeating my regret that so important a document should have been lost, for it is not, as you suppose, among the papers communicated to Congress. I examined them immediately before I saw you at Washington, and I think then communicated the circumstance to you—nor is it in the office of the Secretary of State, as he sought for it in vain, on my first arrival at Washington—it cannot be in the hands of the President, or you would certainly have procured it for me. It being lost, however, I must supply it by your verbal communication, and by your reference to that of Mr. Derbigny. I am greatly embarrassed by your speaking of one given by Mr. Gurley, with which you say yours coincides. Never having seen or heard of its existence I know not what new arguments or authorities it may contain. Is it not possible, sir, that you may have supposed that Mr. Gurley had joined Mr. Derbigny in his opinion? but as his name is not affixed to the printed copies, I presume he never signed it. With respect to the statement of facts, it is all important that I should be accurately informed. It is my sincere wish, in asserting my own right, to do justice to your arguments and motives. I cannot do this without knowing, with the utmost precision, on what points your opinion was grounded. You cannot be accountable for any false statements that may have been presented to you; but those who have made, who have sanctioned, or too lightly acted upon them, have incurred a serious responsibility to me, for the losses I have sustained, and to their country, whose constitution has, in my poor opinion, been violated. I give you at the foot a list of the documents I have seen, trusting that if there are any others which you have made the basis of your advice, you will communicate them. I shall call for any answer you may think proper to make to this letter, on Monday morning, previous to my embarkation at New Castle. I have the honor to be, respectfully, &c.

EDWARD LIVINGSTON.

JULY 25, 1808.

SIR: My remarks on your letter of the 20th instant I will forward to you at New Orleans, by the mail. I have really been too much occupied since last evening to prepare them in time; they shall go on in a few days, and you will probably receive them on your arrival.

My impression is, that the statement of Mr. Derbigny, with his opinion, and a letter from Governor Claiborne, mentioning that Messrs. Gurley and Moreau Lislet concurred in that opinion, were the papers officially furnished me. I do not recollect at present that there was any other.

Your most obedient servant,

C. A. RODNEY.

EDWARD LIVINGSTON, Esq.

Case laid before counsel for their opinion on the claim to the Batture, situated in front of the suburb St. Mary.

The Superior Court of the territory of Orleans tried, a few months ago, a cause which, by the magnitude, importance, and singularity of the questions which it presented, and still more by the public interest attached to it, had excited, for upwards of three years, the talents of several advocates, the attention of the court, and general curiosity; I mean the suit brought by Mr. Jean Gravier against the corporation of New Orleans, relative to the possession and enjoyment of the Batture situate in front of the suburb St. Mary of that city.

When the first colonists from Europe arrived on the banks of the Mississippi, they had, in a manner, to conquer the solid earth from the inundations of that river; it was necessary to restrain the waters by dykes or levees, sufficient to protect the land against the rage of inundations, especially at the time of periodical swells. Thence the origin of what is called Battures in this territory, which are only certain portions of the bed of the river which the Mississippi leaves dry when its waters are low, and covers wholly, or in a great measure, in its annual swells.

There has existed, from time immemorial, a considerable Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary of New Orleans. That Batture begins at the entrance of the suburb on the side of the city, and runs widening as far as the plantation which formerly belonged to Madame Delor.

That Batture seems to have been fortunately placed there to favor the building of the city which has risen near it; it may even be said, that New Orleans would, perhaps, never have existed, or that it would have been built very slowly, but for the aid of that natural depositum of materials placed as it were at its door. In a country like Louisiana, where neither mountains nor hills are to be seen, where not a single stone exists that is not brought thither, where to dig the soil is to incur the danger not only of impairing the land, but of creating infectious and pestilential quagmires, it is easy to conceive how valuable must be a mass of sand and mud incessantly renewed by the bounty of the river, for the building of a large and commercial town, and to repair the losses of the soil which is perpetually falling away, owing to its natural slope, and its situation below the level of the river. Thus it may be said, with truth, that the whole town of New Orleans, with its levees and streets, has been built and always kept in repair by means of the earth drawn from the Batture of the suburb St. Mary; and that it is almost impossible to find earth elsewhere in sufficient quantity for those purposes, that Batture being the only one in proximity to the town.

It is a fact of public notoriety, that, before the claim of Jean Gravier was set up (and that claim was laid for the first time in 1804) the inhabitants of New Orleans had always enjoyed the liberty of gratuitously taking from the Batture of the suburb St. Mary all the earth they had need of for their buildings; that the Spanish Government and the Cabildo had also ever used this right, taking there earth for the public uses, such as raising the streets and repairing the levees of the city. It was further proved on the trial, that the Spanish Government, and the French Government that had preceded, had always evinced a settled determination to preserve to the inhabitants of N. Orleans the free use of the Batture, so useful and indispensable to them, not only for getting earth there, but to supply various other necessities not less urgent. In fact the Batture of the suburb St. Mary always served as a place where to lay up wood for fuel, and timber necessary for the consumption of a large city; nor does there exist at New Orleans any other convenient place where to store those materials.

It would, moreover, have been to devote the population of this city to ravaging epidemics, to permit any individual to appropriate to himself the soil of the Batture of the suburb St. Mary, to the prejudice of the public, for besides the disadvantages that would thence result to the navigation of the river and to commerce in general, the least building or work raised on that Batture would, by the accumulation of slime and filth conglomerated there during the freshes, have, every summer, formed a focus of pestilential disease. Accordingly, the Spanish Government and the Cabildo constantly opposed the forming of any establishment on the Batture; and they, at different times, caused to be demolished the houses and other buildings which divers persons had ventured to erect there, at different periods.

Such was the situation of affairs when Louisiana was ceded to the United States of America. The prodigious increase of the commerce of New Orleans, resulting from this change of dominion, rendered it still more necessary to leave the Batture free to the public, as it had till then been; for the levee bounding that Batture is the place where the numerous boats, called flats, which annually arrive at New Orleans, laden with flour and provisions of all kinds, come to land and discharge their cargoes.

But this very consideration exciting the cupidity of Mr. Jean Gravier, the former proprietor of the plantation on which the suburb St. Mary had been formed, suggested to him the idea of raising a claim which he had never thought of before, and prompted him to maintain that Batture being real alluvions, that of the suburb St. Mary belonged to him, as he had been the proprietor of the land which immediately bounds it.

The inhabitants of New Orleans, who had, from time immemorial, enjoyed that Batture, could not oppose to Jean Gravier a positive title of grant in their favor; but they opposed to him their long enjoyment, which was to supply the want of a grant by the effects of prescription; they opposed to him the acts of the Spanish Government, which had constantly maintained them in that enjoyment; they finally opposed to him his own acts and those of Bertrand Gravier from whom he derived his title, which acts seemed to amount to an acknowledgment of their right.

But the Superior Court did not think proper to yield to these reasons; it declared the corporation of New Orleans destitute of any title against Jean Gravier, and has maintained the latter in the possession and enjoyment of the Batture. This judgment is doubtless to be respected, because it was rendered by a court that judges in the last resort. To its execution, however distressing it be to the public, not the smallest opposition has ever been made, for Jean Gravier has been peacefully put into possession by the sheriff. It is true that the incalculable advantages of the Batture having been more sensibly felt, since the public has been deprived of them, the public mind has been heated to such a temper as to hinder, for some days, the workmen of Jean Gravier from working at a trench which he or Mr. Livingston, jointly interested, wished to cut on the Batture to drain off the water.

But happily this transient ferment was not followed with any reprehensible excess, and the people, brought back to reflection, were sensible that submission to the laws is the first duty of citizens, and that there exists more regular means of obtaining justice than those which a sudden effervescence had alone made them adopt. And in fact, whatever respect may be due to the decisions of the court, does there exist an absolute interdict against submitting its dispensations, in a particular case, to a superior authority? Does not the cause of the Batture interest not only the inhabitants of New Orleans, but also those of all Louisiana, and even those of the inner States of the Union, who, considering New Orleans as their common emporium, must feel interested in all that conduces to the facility and prosperity of its commencement? In a cause of this nature, would it be astonishing to see the Congress itself interpose its authority, and order the revision of a judgment which, though without appeal, should appear to Congress to clash with our usages, our privileges, and our laws! The peculiar situation of this territory, newly acquired to the United States, governed by the civil law, so different from that which rules the rest of the Union, so lately transferred from a Government which manifests the sovereign authority more frequently by ostensible acts than by writings, must surely, it should seem, be powerful motives to induce the General Government to bestow on the examination of this cause all the attention and consideration it deserves! Will not the General Government reflect that Louisiana, by the very nature of the provisional Government which rules it, is deprived of a part of the advantages enjoyed by the other citizens of the Union, in their judiciary contests, and that the fate of their fortunes and their lives is definitively submitted to one sole tribunal, composed of three judges, who decide at once in the first instance, and in the last resort, in a country whose language, manners, usages, and even sometimes whose laws are little familiar to them; and that the acknowledged integrity and information of those three judges are not always a solid security for the irrefragability of their judgment?

But, to take another view of the subject, the Superior Court has done no more than exclude the corporation from all kind of right to the Batture, in declaring that the city had no title against Jean Gravier. But it has not declared Jean Gravier to be the legitimate proprietor of the Batture; and had it even done so, it could not thereby have impaired the right of those who were not parties to the suit, and therefore the United States have a clear title, if it be proved that the demesne never relinquished its claim in favor of the ancestors of Jean Gravier, either to the property of the Batture, or alluvion, or to that of the contiguous land, that is, of the royal road which existed between the river and the plantation where the suburb of St. Mary is now built. It is, then, a question open to discussion, at least as respects the United States, whether Jean Gravier can be considered as the real riparian proprietor of the Batture; and hence it is proper to state such facts as may serve to establish the right of demesne.

The suburb St. Mary is built on the land of a plantation which formerly belonged to the Jesuits; their titles of property, which could, however, no way effect this cause, appear to have been lost in the fire which almost entirely destroyed this city, in the month of December, 1794.

In the year 1763, the Jesuits were suppressed and their property was confiscated to the crown. Hence the superior council of the colony made a decree for the public sale of the property which they had possessed in Louisiana.

As a preliminary to this sale, the engineer Olivier Devezin, who discharged the functions of surveyor in Louisiana, was directed to survey the land which the Jesuits had possessed near this city, on which land now stands the suburb St. Mary.

Olivier Devezin, in compliance with those directions, on the 22d of July, 1763, performed the first operation of the survey, in which he placed the front line of said plantation at thirty toises from the fortifications of the city, and at six toises five feet from the middle of the levee, thus leaving between the plantation and the river a pretty considerable space, where lay the royal or public road, which was then situate as it is at present; for the road fronting the suburb, as far as the plantation of Madam Delor, has never varied within the memory of man.

On the 24th of November, 1763, Olivier Devezin performed a second operation, in which, having taken up his lines to rectify an error which he had found in the length of his base, in his first operation,* he finally discovered that that base had thirty-two arpents in front, by fifty arpents in depth, as was declared in the process verbal of Broutin, by which he was working. Olivier Devezin then divided all the land of the Jesuits into six lots, to facilitate the sale; and of those lots, that which was nearest the fortifications of the city, and which was marked as having seven arpents in front by fifty in depth, was adjudged to Mr. Pradel, a lieutenant of the navy.

It is most important to observe that, at the period when the sale was made of the different lots of the Jesuits' land, Louisiana was under the dominion of France. The French laws must therefore direct our judgment as to the effect of those sales, and the extent of the right which they could transfer to Pradel and other purchasers of the Jesuits' property.

Another fact not less important is, that, at the period of those sales, and long before, there existed a Batture in front of the ground now occupied by the suburb St. Mary.† The question of property in that Batture must therefore be decided by the French laws which were in force at the time of the sale of the plantation lying nearest to it.

Since 1763, it appears that those different lots of the Jesuits' land passed successively through the hands of various purchasers, until at last about seventeen arpents of that land, on the side of the town, were united in the possession of a single proprietor, the late Bertrand Gravier, ancestor of Jean Gravier, and founder of the suburb St. Mary. How Bertrand Gravier, or rather those under whom he claimed, became proprietors of those seventeen arpents of land, is what has never been satisfactorily explained. It was indeed proved that Bertrand Gravier was heir to his wife, who had been the relict of one Renard; and that the said Renard had purchased of Madame Pradel. But how had Madame Pradel thirteen arpents to sell, when her husband had originally purchased but seven? And, even on the supposition that she was the proprietor of the thirteen arpents mentioned in the sale made to Bertrand, how did it happen that Bertrand Gravier, who had inherited no more than the rights of the widow Renard, gave to his suburb nearly seventeen arpents in front? Here surely is some chasm in the titles presented by Jean Gravier.

Be it as it may, in 1767, Louisiana passed from the dominion of France to that of Spain, and, in 1788, Bertrand Gravier conceived the idea of establishing a suburb, under the name of St. Mary, on that part of the Jesuits' plantation possessed by him. With this view he caused to be drawn a plot of the laying off of the ground in streets and building lots, by Mr. Laveau Trudeau, at that time Surveyor General of Louisiana.

In the year 1796, Bertrand Gravier enlarged his original design, by adding new streets and a public square to his suburb. He requested Mr. Laveau Trudeau to draw a new plot conformable to his new ideas, and his subsequent sales were all according to the latter plot.

No person acquainted with the principles of monarchical government, and especially with those of Spain, can be persuaded that Bertrand Gravier could ever have presumed to establish a suburb, without a superior approbation, and without submitting himself to certain conditions of general police, common to all Spanish cities, both of the old and the new world. What proves that Mr. Bertrand Gravier obtained that approbation and submitted himself to those conditions, is that he directed Mr. Laveau Trudeau to deposit a duplicate of the plot of 1796 in the archives of Government, and that the duplicate was there deposited conformably to his desire. Now, was it merely to ornament the archives of Government that Mr. Bertrand Gravier there deposited his plot, or was it for the purpose of making that plot serve as a kind of deed or public instrument that might ascertain the manner in which he had agreed with the Government to establish and divide his suburb? On this question, no impartial mind can entertain a doubt.

This point being established, if we examine the copy of the plot of 1796, which is recognised by Mr. Laveau Trudeau to be that by him deposited in the archives of the Spanish Government, we find that the Batture is there marked as a space which is to remain free, and not subject to be built on; for it is no way divided into lots, as is the land of the suburb. If, then, Bertrand Gravier ever had any right to the Batture, as riparian proprietor, did he not lose it by the tacit contract which he then made with the Spanish Government, in depositing the plot of his suburb?

That his act of depositing the plot was considered as a relinquishment of his right, is confirmed by the testimony of Mr. Laveau Trudeau; by all the subsequent

* In his first process verbal he found that that line was of thirty-three arpents and a third and one toise.

† Testimony of Messrs. Livaudais and Durey.

conduct of Bertrand Gravier; and finally, by the public acts of the Cabildo and the Spanish Government.

Mr. Laveau Trudeau deposed, that having asked Mr. Bertrand Gravier, when he was making the plot of 1796, whether he should divide the Batture into lots as well as the rest of the ground, the latter replied in the negative, observing that the Batture was public property.

Mr. Laveau Trudeau further deposed that Miss Trudeau and Mr. Poeyfaré, who had purchased of Bertrand Gravier some lots on the front of the suburb, on the side of the river, solicited him to sell them the portion of the Batture that lay opposite those lots, and that he refused to sell the same, alledging that he had not a right to dispose of it, though Mr. Laveau Trudeau declared himself of the contrary opinion.

Mr. Livaudais, the father, a respectable inhabitant of this territory, as also Mr. Rousseau, deposed that under the Government of the Baron de Carondelet, Bertrand refused to repair the road and the levee in front of the suburb St. Mary, under the pretext that he had converted his plantation into a suburb, and sold the front lots, the duty no longer concerned him as the Batture was public property; in consequence of which declaration the Government caused the roads to be repaired by the criminals at hard labor.

To these public acts of Bertrand Gravier are opposed solitary deeds of sale, hidden under the dust of a notary's office, whence they would never have been taken but for the present circumstances. But was it not proved on trial; in what manner those deeds of sale had been obtained from Bertrand Gravier? Did not witnesses prove, that in selling some portions of that Batture to some individuals, Bertrand Gravier had only yielded to their solicitations, and had declared that it could avail nothing, and that he had not a right to do what was required of him? But even were it otherwise, what could be inferred from clandestine deeds? Were those deeds ever brought forward during the Spanish Government? Did the purchasers who might have availed themselves of them ever venture to make the least use of them, so far were they from availing themselves of them, that we shall see that Mr. Claude Francois Girod, one of the purchasers who had required Bertrand Gravier to sell them the Batture in front of their lots in the suburb St. Mary, solicited the Cabildo for permission to erect a corn mill on that portion of the Batture which he had thus caused to be sold to him, and that that permission was refused him.

The same judgment may be formed of the evidence of which Jean Gravier attempts to avail himself, to prove that the Spanish Government acknowledged his right to the Batture; we mean to speak of the deposition of Mr. Sigur, who maintains that Mr. de Carondelet sent him one day to Mr. Bertrand Gravier, to request of him permission to lay masts belonging to Government on the Batture of the suburb.

To such evidence we can oppose, not conversations held by the Governors, in private, or in their own houses, but the public acts of those same Governors in their political capacity, with the assistance of the auditor of war, their indispensable council, whenever they decided contestable points.

We shall oppose the fact to which Mr. Pedesclaux testified, that, in 1794, Mr. de Carondelet caused it to be proclaimed, by beat of drum, that it was forbidden to erect any buildings on the Batture, and that all then standing thereon were ordered to be taken down.

We shall oppose the verbal decision given by Mr. Nicholas Vidal, auditor of war, who being consulted by the Baron de Carondelet, who wished to know what he could do for Mr. Christoval de Armas, who solicited permission to establish a brick kiln on the Batture of the suburb St. Mary, answered: that that permission could not be granted, by reason that all that part of the strand of the river which its waters cover in their greatest swells is public property."

These acts of Government, in favor of the public enjoyment of the Batture, are confirmed, and in a manner corroborated by the deliberations of the Cabildo, at which it is known that the Governor always presided.

It is, indeed, to be regretted that the records of the Cabildo were left in the utmost confusion, on the late change of Government that took place in Louisiana. But for that circumstance we might surely have found among them important documents relative to the Batture, and not only amongst those records, and also in the archives of Government, which were carried off to Pensacola, without its having ever occurred to any person to search amongst them for documents, that might interest so important a cause, of which it was impossible to foresee the existence.

Yet we read in the register of the Cabildo, a declaration dated the 29th of August, 1795, which authorizes to be defrayed out of the city funds the expense of a fence which Mr. de la Chaise, the regidor, had caused to be made on the Batture of the suburb St. Mary, in order to preserve earth there, for the use of the public, at the time of high water. That fence lasted several years, and traces of it were to be seen not long ago.

In fine, in the year 1801, Mr. Claude Francois Girod, who, as has been seen, had secretly bought of Bertrand Gravier, that portion of Batture which was in front of his property in the suburb, applied to the Cabildo for permission to establish a brick kiln on that same part of the Batture; but the Cabildo, by its deliberation of the 5th of June of the same year, thought proper to refuse him that permission.

It is particularly to be observed that, at the time of that deliberation, the President of the Cabildo was the same Nicholas Vidal, whose knowledge of jurisprudence is so well attested in this territory, and who then discharged the functions of Governor pro tempore.

During the same deliberation, it was observed that the Government had already, by proclamation, forbidden to build on the Batture; but that, notwithstanding that prohibition, several persons had there erected buildings. On this it was ordered that those persons should be cited to appear, that whatever claims they might have might be examined and decided.

Mr. Caisergues, who was the procureur syndic, and was present at that deliberation, asserts that Mr. Nicholas Vidal delivered, on that occasion, a written opinion, the result of which was, that no person had a right to build on the Batture, and that it was public property.

And accordingly we read on the register, a memorandum, subjoined to the deliberation, purporting "that orders were subsequently given for the demolition of all buildings which had been erected on the Batture," and several witnesses attest that those orders were executed, and that Miss Trudeau, among others, who had a small house on the Batture, was obliged to throw it down.

Bertrand Gravier died in 1797, leaving several brothers and sisters his heirs; but as Jean Gravier, one of his heirs, was the only one present in Louisiana at the time of Bertrand's death, Jean contrived to have all the estate of the succession adjudged to himself, at the rate of the estimate to be made thereof. That estimate was made in the month of July, 1797; in it were described and separately appraised, the lots and grounds unsold in the suburb St. Mary; no mention was made of the Batture, and it would, indeed, have been very difficult to appraise it, for it was then entirely covered with water. Yet it is by virtue of that sale or adjudication, that Jean Gravier pretends to be the proprietor of the Batture, and has succeeded in causing himself to be maintained in it.

In the course of his law suit with the city, Jean Gravier required Mr. Mansuy, the engineer, to ascertain whether his land had the fifty acres in depth which, as has been seen, are guaranteed by the original sales made to Pradel and others, of the Jesuits' land. Mr. Mansuy attested that he had found by survey that the land of Jean Gravier, beginning at the angle of the suburb on the city side, had not only fifty acres in depth, but that he measured as far as fifty-six acres, at which spot he found marked trees which he was told was the boundary line of Mr. J. B. Macarty.

The question now to be resolved is, whether, according to the French laws, which were in force at the time of the sale of the Jesuits' property, and which ordain that the soil formed by alluvions, or atterissements, on navigable rivers, belong to the King, if he has not renounced his claim to them by a formal and express grant;

Whether, on full proof of the existence of a space of earth which the King had reserved to himself between the river and the Jesuits' plantation, on which reserved space are the royal highway and the levee, the reservation of which space is proved by its not being comprised in the surveys and sales ordered by the King;

Whether the firm resolution which the Spanish Government always evinced of keeping the Batture, which is behind that levee, for public uses, by permitting no person to settle on it, and refusing any grant inconsistent with that resolution;

Whether all these considerations do not prove that the sovereign's right to that Batture, as well as to the adjoining levee and highway, was never alienated and made over to Jean Gravier or any other person; and whether the United States have not consequently a well founded and clear title to the property, as being part of the public demesne?

OPINION.

Having considered the above statement of the case, together with the documents relative to the Batture, or alluvion, there referred to, and the testimony heard in the suit between Jean Gravier and the corporation of New Orleans,

The undersigned counsel is of opinion that the said Batture, or alluvion, is a property formerly royal, which passed from the Crown of France to that of Spain, and belongs at present to the United States.

This opinion is founded on the following reasons :

1st. Alluvions on navigable rivers belonged to the King of France.

2dly. The plantation bordering on the limits of New Orleans was sold by the King of France in 1763, when the alluvion situate in front of that land was already in being.

3dly. Between the alluvion and the land sold, lay a royal road (the same that still exists) and a levee, both which were then, and have still remained public property.

4thly. The alluvion in question has never ceased to be a royal property, the enjoyment of which the French and Spanish Governments at all times left to the public, and on which they constantly hindered private individuals from encroaching.

5thly. Neither Jean Gravier, nor those from whom he derives his title, ever were in possession of the alluvion; and Betrand Gravier himself, at the time of his settling a suburb in front of his plantation, declared he had no claim to the alluvion.

Let us examine each of these points separately, with the attention due to the importance of the subject.

POINT I.

The alluvions, or accretions on navigable rivers, belonged to the King of France.

On this question of right it is sufficient to recur to the edicts of the Kings of France, made at different times, on this subject, and particularly to those of April, 1683, December, 1693, and February, 1710, which are formally explicit on this point.

The power of royal edicts is universally known. "They are," says the learned lawyer, editor of those decrees, "emanations of the sovereign authority, which form the most certain part of French jurisprudence, as well as the part most generally received. The splendor of their immediate source secures to them a pre-eminence over all other laws. The will of the Prince is equal to his power, and extends as far as the boundary of his empire. The ordinances are therefore the general laws of the kingdom, which of consequence must supersede not only the Roman law, which is in force only in countries of written law, but also in the laws established by our customs, which are only particular laws of the countries which have adopted them."

In consulting the authors who have written on the French laws, we find the principle laid down in the above cited edicts acknowledged and confirmed in their works. Pothier, one of the most respectable of those authors, in his treatise on the law of demesne and property, part I, chap. 2, sec. 3, art. no. 159, expressed himself in these terms:

"By our French law, the alluvions formed on the borders of navigable streams and rivers belong to the King. The proprietors of riparious heritages can have no claim to them, unless they have titles of the grant made to them by the King, of the right of alluvion along their heritages."

This opinion seems, indeed, to be contradicted by that of Denizart, in his collection of decisions, at the article of alluvion where he contends that the alluvions on the shores of the sea, streams, and rivers belong to the proprietor of the riparious heritage, and that what belongs to the King in the sea or in navigable streams are the atterissemens formed suddenly.

This same author defines an atterissement to be "a heap of sand and slime that the sea or the rivers transport from one place to another, which changes their bed and shores."

Without examining whether the distinction laid down by Denizart between alluvion and atterissement be strictly correct, whoever is acquainted with the river on whose shore the contested Batture is formed, will agree that the term atterissement, as defined by Denizart, is still more applicable to it than that of alluvion. The Mississippi carries down sand and slime in great quantity and forms battures, not indeed in an imperceptible manner, as the term alluvion implies, but very visibly, and so quickly that a single swell of its waters deposits usually, nearly a foot of slime on the whole surface of a Batture, inasmuch that the course of the river is continually changing.

But Denizart is in a glaring error in applying the spirit of the royal edicts, already cited, merely to atterissemens. We see in all the edicts enacted on this subject that the sovereign claims as his property not only the atterissemens, but also the accretions formed on the borders of navigable rivers. Now, what is here meant by accretion, (accroissement,) according to the learned compiler of the department of jurisprudence in the Encyclopædia? "Accretion," says he, "is formed in various ways: the accession, of which we have spoken above, is a real accretion; alluvion and atterissement are also species of the same.

The word accroissement used in the royal edicts, is therefore a generic term comprehending that of alluvion. Nay, it is used there rather as synonymous with alluvion, for accroissements and atterissemens are there spoken of as things separate and distinct.

Finally, in order to refute still more completely the opinion of Denizart, and others who may have erred as he did, we find in the edict of the 15th of December, 1693, the word alluvion itself expressly mentioned.

"Lewis, &c. greeting: The right of property which we have on all the navigable rivers of our kingdom being incontestably established by the laws of the State, as a consequence and necessary appendage of our sovereignty, the Kings, our predecessors, and ourselves, have, from time to time, ordered researches to be made of the isles and accretions which formed themselves thereon, &c.

"For these reasons, by the advice of our council, and with our certain knowledge, full power, and royal authority, we have by these presents, signed with our hand, said, decreed, and ordered, and do say, decree, and order, as our will and pleasure, that all detainers, proprietors, or possessors of isles, islands, atterissemens, accretions, alluvions, rights of fishery, tolls, ferries, bridges, mills, ferry boats, packet boats, buildings, and rights on the navigable rivers throughout our kingdom, who shall produce titles of property or of possession anterior to the 1st of April, 1566, shall be therein maintained, &c."

But be it as it may as to the error of Denizart, and the opposition of his opinion to that of Pothier, whose authority is in every respect superior to his, we find both their opinions reconciled with regard to the point in question, by the explanation given by Larasle, the compiler of the department of jurisprudence in the Encyclopædia, at the word alluvion.

"It is to be observed," says he, "that to acquire by right of alluvion, two conditions are requisite: 1st, that the accretion be formed slowly and imperceptibly so that one cannot discern the time when each portion of the alluvion was joined and consolidated with the heritage. 2dly, that the heritages, by virtue of which a claim is laid to alluvion, be contiguous to the river, so that the bed on which it rolls appears, in a manner, to form part of the said heritages: for, if they are not immediately bordered by the river, but have for their boundary an intervening causeway or road, that part which the river leaves uncovered between its bed and the road cannot belong to the owners of the heritages situate on the other side of the road; those lands belong to the King along navigable rivers, and to the lord of the manor, respectively, along such as are not navigable. Numerous edicts, ordinances, and letters patent, have declared that all isles, islets, atterissemens, and accretions, belong to the King, excepting such as were possessed by the riparious proprietors in virtue of titles anterior to the year 1566. See the edicts of 1663, 1668, 1670, 1693, and 1710."

Thus, though the authority of Denizart cannot be set in opposition to the formal expression of the law, which ordains that all manner of accretion, and namely alluvions, on navigable rivers belong to the King, the case of the existence of a causeway, or a public road, on the border of the river, forms an exception in favor of which all opinions may be reconciled.

POINT II.

The plantation bordering on the limits of the city of New Orleans was sold by the King to divers persons in 1763, when the Batture lying in front of that land already existed.

On this point of fact the testimonial proofs are such as to leave no doubt. Old and respectable inhabitants of New Orleans have solemnly attested it. Therefore, considering that Batture as an alluvion formed on a navigable river, without reference to any other circumstance, we may apply to it the expressions of the royal edicts above cited, and the authority of Pothier, to establish that that alluvion, or accretion, belonged to the King of France.

POINT III.

Between the Batture and the land sold, lay a royal road and a levee, which were then, and have still remained, public property.

This fact is established not only on the most respectable testimonial proof, but on the most authentic documents, to wit, on the official and judicial acts done at the time when the King sold the land lying contiguous to the limits of New Orleans.

That land belonged to the Jesuits during about thirty-seven years, when in 1763 their property was seized and confiscated to the use of the crown of France. The Jesuits' title being extinct under that confiscation under which their lands returned to the demesne, it is needless to take any notice of it. It no way effects the title arising out of the subsequent sale which they thought proper to make of that land.

The primitive title of Jean Gravier, and of those from whom he derives, is, then, the sale made by the King in 1763, of the land contiguous to the limits of the city of New Orleans.

With a view to that sale, the land of the formerly Jesuits was surveyed by order of the King, and a process verbal of the survey was drawn up, conformably to which the purchases were declared. In that process verbal, and in the one afterwards drawn up for the purpose of dividing the lands into lots, and giving to each purchaser the portion assigned to him, it is stated that the boundary marks of the land sold were fixed at six toises five feet from the middle of the levee that restrains the overflowing of the river, that is, on this side of the royal road which had already existed during a number of years in front of the gate of the city; so that the royal road (the same that exists at present) separated the purchased land from the river. This fact which is clearly established in those process verbals, is further confirmed by the deposition of the engineer Mansuy, who drew a plot conformably to those process verbals, to supply the loss, as it appears, of the plan drawn at the time by the engineer, Olivier Devezin.

This circumstance is the more strongly established as herein reason accords with the fact. It could not be the King's intention to sell the road extending to the city, whose streets were not more frequented than that road had been for several years. That high road was public property, and as such could not come into the possession of an individual, without giving that individual a right to dispose of the soil for any private purpose, which, in this case, is repugnant to the principles of public right.

It appears that it was attempted to be proved on behalf of Gravier, that the custom of the colony of Louisiana was that the proprietors of plantations should leave a high road on the border of the river; that, consequently, the purchasers of the Jesuits' land lay under this obligation equally with others; and that the road already existing in front of the land by them purchased was to be considered as supplying the place of the one which they would have been obliged to make if it had not existed.

This a false application of a general usage to a very peculiar case. The titles of land in Louisiana derive almost universally from primitive grants made by the sovereign. Those grants expressed that the grantee was to fulfil certain conditions, and amongst others that of making a public road on his land. But here a grant is out of the question; the subject matter is a sale, and wide is the difference between a grant and a sale, both in principle and effect. The lands which were granted in this colony were uncleared lands in a state of nature. No road or other accommodation existed on them. The King, therefore, in granting them, stipulated that the grantee should supply the public with a road: the grantee made this road at a reasonable distance from the river, nearer or further off, as he thought proper, and sometimes stopped up the old road and opened a new one; for provided there were a road convenient to the river, he fulfilled his conditions. The case here is entirely different: it is not a grant of uncleared land as far as the river; it is the sale of land already made valuable by industry, in front of which runs the high road. That road makes no part of the land sold: the purchaser of that land has no right to encroach on it: it is public property.

It is here an utter absurdity to suppose that the high road in front of the purchased land was implicitly sold with that land. For it would follow that the purchaser might convert the road to his private use, without being under any obligation to supply any other road; since his deed of sale does not contain the condition found in grants, that he shall make and keep up a high road.

It appears that a construction favorable to the claim of Jean Gravier was attempted to be given to the expressions of the process verbal above referred to, wherein it is said that the land purchased by those from whom Jean Gravier derives, has so many acres in front on the river; and that it was contended that this expression meant that the land was bounded by the water. But those words, it is evident, have no other meaning than to designate the situation of the land. A house said to be situated on the sea need not, to make the expression correct, have its walls washed by the waves. A plantation may with propriety be said to be situated on a river, though it be separated from it by a high road. The King of France, as we have seen, was, before the confiscation of the Jesuits' property proprietor of the alluvion which began to be formed in front of their land, yet it is probable that the plantation of the Jesuits was said to have its front on the river. Those expressions must in all cases be understood in a sense that agrees with the fact. Now, the fact is that there existed a royal road and a levee along the river in front of the land in question; that consequently that land did not extend as far as the water, and that in reality the boundary marks of the front of the lots sold by the King were laid at forty-one feet from the centre of the levee. The lots sold were to have fifty acres in depth, beginning from that boundary: all encroachments on this side or on that side of those fifty acres is an usurpation.

Thus then, at the period of the sale of the land at present possessed by Jean Gravier, the King of France was proprietor not only of the Batture, alluvion, or accretion already formed in front of that land, but also of the royal road which ran along the border of the river. He had acquired the property of said Batture by the mere circumstance of its being formed on a navigable river, according to the expression of the royal edicts already cited; and even though that law had never existed, yet he would have acquired the same property as proprietor of the royal road and of the levee, which was really the ground bordered by the water, or riparian. Finally, that property incontestably accrued to him by the concurrence of those two circumstances, according to one of the authorities referred to above.

POINT IV.

The alluvion situate in front of the suburb St. Mary has never ceased to be part of the Sovereign's demesne.

It is evident that when France ceded Louisiana to Spain, the right of the King of France to the property of all the alluvions then formed on the Mississippi was conveyed to the King of Spain, and that if the King of Spain had thought proper to avail himself of that title, he might have remained proprietor of all those new grounds.

The King of Spain, through liberality towards his subjects, left to the inhabitants of the borders of the river in general the quiet enjoyment of those new grounds; and for the encouragement of agriculture in this colony, which was as yet in its infancy, he constantly permitted them to be converted into cultivated fields, not even at any time hindering the proprietors of plantations, in front of which they are formed, from altering the site of the high road, in order to take possession of them. Hence it follows that the Battures already formed at the period of the cession of this colony to Spain are now become the property of the riparian inhabitants, by right of long possession, as securely as those formed since are their property by the Spanish laws. But has this general dispensation of the King of Spain's beneficence admitted no exception? Is there no example of his having reserved to himself the rights he had to the alluvions, the property of which was transferred to him by the crown of France? Surely there is at least one instance of this in the case of the Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary. The conduct of the King of Spain with regard to that Batture evinces his intention to retain his right to it; and his motive is very obvious. That Batture had for several years supplied the wants of the public, and particularly those of the inhabitants of the city of New Orleans.

It was there they got earth for building and for raising their grounds; there they stored wood for fuel, fences, plank, timber for building, &c.; it was a ground of general utility. It was indispensably necessary to Government itself for raising the streets of the city, for the levees, the fortifications, and for other public uses. The King of Spain, therefore, retained his right to that alluvion, as its situation rendered it invaluable to his subjects and to himself. It was his will that it should remain public ground, and he constantly opposed all encroachments attempted by individuals. He caused ordinances to be proclaimed to that effect, and even caused to be demolished the buildings which several individuals had ventured to construct on it. In short, to the time of the retrocession of the colony, he never ceased to act with regard to that Batture as its proprietor. All these facts are established on the most authentic evidence, both written and oral.

It is, then, incontestable that the Batture situate in front of the suburb St. Mary was a part of the demesne of the crown of Spain at the period when that crown ceded back that colony.

POINT V.

Neither Jean Gravier, nor those from whom he derives his title, ever possessed the Batture in question; and Bertrand Gravier himself, at the time of his laying out a suburb on the front of his plantation, declared that he had no claim to the alluvion.

It is a fact incontestably proved that neither Jean nor Bertrand Gravier, nor any of those through whom this claim is derived, ever possessed a single inch of the Batture in question. It is further remarkable that they never set up any title to that effect, and that not one of the encroachments attempted on that Batture was made by them until the year 1801, at which period Jean Gravier resolved for the first time to claim it. But a circumstance of still more weight is that Bertrand Gravier himself, when he converted the front of his plantation into a suburb, declared that he considered himself discharged from the duty of repairing the public road and the levee, because the front of his land was become public property; so that since that period the Government and the city had been at the expense of keeping the road and the levee in repair. It is also to be remarked, that, at the time of Bertrand Gravier's death in 1797, it was so well understood that he could have no pretension to the Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary, that not only no mention is made of it in the inventory of his property, but that it is excluded from his property by the very expressions of that inventory, and especially by those of the valuation of his plantation, of which here follows the literal translation:

"About thirteen acres of land, of which the plantation is estimated to consist, including the garden ground; from which land the most useful portion has been re-trenched on the front, so that what remains of it are the lowest lands which close towards the depth, and are surrounded with bad fences; a part of the best land on the side having been sold to Mr. Navarro, to Mr. Percy, and to the negro Samba; which thirteen arpents, with twelve negro cabins, have been estimated by the appraisers at the rate of one hundred and ninety dollars per acre in front by the existing depth, amounting in all to two thousand four hundred and seventy dollars."

All these facts would not give a title to the sovereign, if he had it not already, neither do they add any thing to the title he has; but they evince that the opinion of Bertrand Gravier and the opinion of the public perfectly accorded with the truth, and that the pretensions of his successor are as extraordinary as they are ill founded.

The undersigned counsel concludes, from the above discussion, that the United States are now the real proprietors of the Batture, accretion, or alluvion, situate in front of the suburb St. Mary, and that if they claim it, the courts of justice cannot but acknowledge and confirm their title.

Deliberated at New Orleans, on the 21st of August, 1807.

P. DERBIGNY.

Examination of the title of the United States to the land called the Batture.

This title is supported,

1. By an incorrect and imperfect statement of facts.
2. By an assumption, that the question is to be decided according to the principles of the French, not those of the Imperial or Spanish law.
3. By an erroneous statement of that law.

The whole fabric of this imaginary title is founded upon the statement which supposes that, in the year 1763, the sales of the Jesuits' property were made only to the road, and that they were bounded by a front line running on the inside of the levee and road. It will be clearly demonstrated that this position is totally unsupported; but that the contrary, to wit, that the sale of the Jesuits' property, under which we claim, were bounded in the river

In order to understand fully this point, it is necessary to remark, that all the grants made by the French or Spanish Governments, without, as it is believed, any exception, were bounded by the river, but all expressed under the general term face au fleuve, or face sur le fleuve, or sometimes under the more general terms face alone, which, according to the testimony of all the surveyors, related to the place on which the lands were laid out, as the river, bayou, &c. So that if the lands lay on a river or bayou, the word face alone would, according to the general construction of the country, give a front on a river or bayou, unless there were some restrictive words which expressed the intention of the parties to be different.

It appears, as well by testimony as by the express admission of the parties in this cause, that the soil of this road was not reserved to the king, but merely the use of it vested in the public, since the proprietor made and changed it at his pleasure, as the encroachment or alluvion of the river, or as his own convenience required. There is every reason to believe that the grant to the Jesuits was in the usual form, and was bounded by the river, but we are not left to presumption only on this point. Though the original grants to the Jesuits be lost, yet in the proceedings which took place in the year 1763, preparatory to their division and sale, we find a certificate of the proper officers to the following effect:

"In the year 1763, on the 14th day of July, we, the undersigned, counsellor of the King, inspector of the roads, and surveyor general of the province of Louisiana, certify that by virtue of the orders of Mr. Dobadie, commissary general of the navy, &c. dated this 13th instant, by which we were directed to transport ourselves to the habitations of the persons calling themselves Jesuits, &c., there to examine the titles and papers relative to the possessions of the aforesaid persons, which we found ought to contain thirty-two arpents of front on the river St. Louis." And in the same proceedings is a lease made by the Jesuits of a part of their lands, in which the lessee binds himself to make the levee and the road.

The original grant, then, was like all others bounded by the river, and the defendants in their case have taken pains to state that the Batture, or alluvion, then existed. This, perhaps, was the fact, † but to a very inconsiderable extent. But this will make no difference in this case; for if there was an alluvion in the year 1763, whether it had prior to that belonged to the King or to the Jesuits, at that period the whole plantation, with its Batture, became the property of the crown by the forfeiture of the Jesuits' estate, and the King at that time ordered the estate to be divided and sold. Did he grant the whole? or did he reserve the Batture and the road?

Let us examine this point:

By the proceedings before referred to, it appears to have been the intention to divide and sell "all the said lands." ‡

By the adjudication, it is granted with "all † its members and appurtenances, without reserving any thing:" by the adjudication of the sixth lot (the furthest extremity of the land and not now in dispute) one † acre was reserved to the King, so that it appears, whenever the King wished to retain any part, his officers took care to insert the reservation in the deed.

Besides this, it is stated in the case, and proved on the trial, that Governor Carondelet had, at the three several times, directed Gravier to make the road and the levee, once by a letter which not only ordered him to repair the levee, but carries some evidence of his having done it before, because he speaks of his "known exactitude." § Now if the road and levee were reserved to the King, what had Gravier to do with working it? or if the road and levee were not comprehended in the sale of the Jesuits' property, and, as they allege in this case, had been constantly considered as part of the demesne, how is it that Baron de Carondelet was ignorant of this circumstance?

* Vide Derbigny's opinion, 3d point, page 42. "The grantee made this road at a reasonable distance from the river, nearer or further off, as he thought proper, and sometimes stopped up the old road and opened a new one, for provided there were a road convenient to the river, he fulfilled his promise."

† Recent discoveries have made it probable that a great part of the land lying outside the levee, which was called alluvion by the witnesses, was really as much original soil as any other part of the country, since in digging a canal since the judgment, the stumps of a grove of cotton trees have been discovered in their natural position, about three feet under ground, and measuring two feet in diameter.

‡ See Note A.

§ See Note B.

It was, therefore, clearly the intention of the King not to reserve any thing, but, on the contrary, to sell the whole plantation, of which the alluvion formed a part? What motive could he have had for such reservation? the defendants and their counsel say, for the use of the city; * but a reservation to the crown would have been of no use to the city, and if this had been the intent, the reservation would have been accompanied by a grant to their use. Let it also be remembered that the Jesuits' plantation consisted of thirty-two arpents in front, of which Gravier possessed only thirteen; the residue was sold to different persons at the same time, under the same circumstances, and by the same words with those employed with respect to Gravier's part; yet the Batture on the nineteen remaining acres, infinitely more extensive than that now in question, has been uninterruptedly held by the proprietors of the original soil; the public have never, that I have heard, pretended to it; nay, the very persons most clamorous against my title, now hold property to a very large amount on those very Battures. If, therefore, my title be defective and theirs good, we must look for the difference in something subsequent to the sale of the Jesuits' property under which we all hold.

The error—and when made by persons who so well know the customs of the country as the defendants, it deserves a harsher name—the error lies in representing the line always drawn in front, generally within the levee, as a front boundary; when they know, and their own witness (one of the defendants, the surveyor general of the province,) stated that such front line was drawn not to mark a boundary between the plantation and the river, but to measure the extent of its front; which was always done on a direct line, and never followed the windings of the river; and that the stakes placed on the side lines were not intended to mark their extent towards the river, but to show the direction of those lines, whether they opened, closed, or were perpendicular to the river.

The certificates in note D show this to have been the universal practice in all the surveys under the French, Spanish, and American Governments.

But even if this line, contrary to the universal and uninterrupted usages of the country, to the whole course of evidence in the case, and finally to the dictates of common sense; if, contrary to all these, the line of admeasurement is to be turned into a line of boundary; yet it will avail them nothing, for it so happens that in this case the line of admeasurement crosses the levee a few toises from its commencement and continues on the Batture outside of the levee during the whole of its course through the part now constituting the suburb St. Mary.† So that even if this notable discovery made by the corporation and their counsel be true, they will not derive from it the pleasure of disturbing Gravier's possession by a claim from the United States; for their great argument of an intervening road and levee totally fails them in this instance. But they will have the gratification of disturbing almost all the other titles in the country; for most of those lines of admeasurement are, in other instances, drawn within the levee and road; so that if this principle be admitted, scarcely a single plantation will be bounded by the river; and Congress may make it inaccessible whenever they please to most of the inhabitants, for not one in a hundred have any exclusive possession between the road and the river.

A conclusive proof, however, that the river was the front boundary of the Jesuits' plantation, as well since as before the division and sale of 1763, has been discovered since the trial.

Under the French Government a general plan was kept by the surveyor general, on which the lines of each concession was distinctly and accurately laid down. This was called the Plan Terrier, and the original, or a copy, was delivered to the Spanish surveyor general on the transfer of possession. He delivered copies of this plan to his deputies, and it was always considered by the Spanish Government as an authentic record. On an extract of this map, which was thus delivered in 1795,

* The Jesuits possessed a tract of land of one league and half above the town on the other side of the river. Unfortunately for this argument, it happens that this land is also sold precisely in the same terms with those used with respect to the plantation near the city. (See Note C.) Did the King reserve this also for the use of the city?

† This appears from a map which has been carefully protracted by Mr. Lafon from the process verbal of the Jesuits' survey; a copy of the map and process verbal are filed for the inspection of those who may desire it, in the office of Mr. Pedeclaux.

the plantations above the town, for the distance of about four leagues, are all delineated; in all of them the side lines extend to the river, which is laid down in every instance as the front boundary.

Among these plantations is that of the Jesuits. On the plan are marked the names of the persons who then held under the sales of 1763.

But no such front line as Mr. Derbigny has imagined is found on this plan; no road as the boundary; nothing to distinguish it in this respect from the neighboring plantations, which, as I have said, are all bounded on the river.

Yet this plan was given in 1795, at a time when the alluvion was considerable in extent, seven years after the suburb was laid out, and long after the time at which, as is now pretended, Gravier had abandoned his right.

This plan, too, completely disproves the idea of a reservation of the front part by the sales of 1763. For it delineates, with great care and precision, the reservation of a small part near the town; designating, minutely, the difference between the old limits of the Jesuits' plantation on the side next the town from those established in the sale of 1763. If, then, any reservation had been made by the King of the alluvion, or land in front, would it not have been noticed with the same care as has been shown as to the lateral lines?

This document is alone so convincing, that if an engraving can be prepared in time, it shall be annexed to this work.

It is then, I think, proved—

First. that the ancient habitation of the Jesuits bordered on the river. And this fact is further proved by their having repeatedly changed the levee beyond Madame Delor's in order to take in the alluvion.‡

Second. That the sale of their property was made without any reservation.

Third. That, by the sale of 1763, no new boundary was fixed between the front of the habitation and the river; in other words, that the several subdivisions as well as the original grant extended to the river.

It is, therefore, of no consequence whether there were or were not alluvion formed at the time of the sale of the Jesuits' property. On either supposition, the grant going to the river gives us all within its lines, whether alluvion or original soil.

Second error in fact:

In the defendant's case, page 6, it is stated, that the Batture called "the Jesuits," after the transfer of possession in 1767, continued to be considered as a part of the "royal demesne;" and as such was of public utility in supplying earth without any claim being made to it by the proprietors or purchasers of the Jesuits' plantation, either before or after the cession. And in the counsel's opinion, he says that it "never ceased to be a part of the sovereign's demesne," and strangely asserts that "it is a fact incontestably proved, that neither Jean nor Bertrand Gravier, nor any of those through whom this claim is derived, ever possessed a single inch of the Batture in question. It is further remarkable, that they never set up any title to that effect."

It is somewhat extraordinary that this statement should be made by that very corporation, which for three years had been contending in a court of justice that the premises belonged to the city of New Orleans; and that the same counsel who, during the whole of that period, asserted, in three several arguments, the unequivocal right of the corporation, should now as boldly pronounce that they never had any title, but that it always belonged to the United States.

Did the learned counsel give his true opinion to the corporation, when he was first called on to defend their cause?

If he did, how can the corporation justify the thousands of dollars they have expended in defence of a claim which their counsel must have told them was unjust?

Did the learned counsel suppress his true opinion, and flatter the city with the hope of gaining what he knew did not belong to them, but to the United States? A case not to be supposed.

Or has the learned counsel, after three years' study of the cause, changed his opinion of its merits?

A revolution, then, of three other years may perhaps prove that his second opinion was as erroneous as his first, and if the United States have the same confidence as the corporation in the advice which is so kindly offered them, they may be induced to spend as many thousands as the city has done, and with equal success.

The error of this statement of facts appears—

First. By the allegation of the persons themselves who make the statement, and those allegations, too, on record.

On the 16th of March, 1805, the mayor, in behalf of the city, filed a bill to perpetuate testimony in this case, in which they state "that Bertrand Gravier was the owner of the plantation; that he had laid out the front part into lots in 1788; that after the said lots had been sold, he considered himself as no longer bound to preserve the levee; that, on being called on by the Governor to repair the road, he declared that having converted his plantation into a faubourg, and sold the line of lots on the side of the river, whatever intervened between those lots and the river belonged to the public, and was no longer his concern; that in consequence of this formal relinquishment, the Spanish Government immediately caused the necessary repairs to be made, and the inhabitants of New Orleans have ever since, without hindrance, &c. possessed and enjoyed the same premises, &c."

In their answer to the petition of Jean Gravier, the mayor, aldermen, and inhabitants repeat the same idea. After denying the right of Jean Gravier, they say "that the truth is, that sometime before the death of Bertrand Gravier, the first owner of the plantation, on the front of which the suburb St. Mary was established, he, the said Bertrand Gravier, had abandoned, and himself acknowledged, in an unequivocal manner, to have abandoned, all the above-mentioned parcel of land; that, in consequence of such abandonment, the highway and levee have been maintained and repaired, then and afterwards, to this moment, either by the corvées publiques, or at the expense of the city; that since that time, till now, the inhabitants of this city never ceased to have a peaceful enjoyment of the said parcel, either to place different wood yards, or for unloading flat-bottomed boats and other rafts, with permission of the corporation." And their answer concludes by avowing, that "the city council had erected a cabin on the land to lodge a guardian, and that they had caused the earth to be digged and carried away to repair the levee."

Yet with these allegations on record, in which they derive a title under Bertrand Gravier by virtue of an abandonment in 1788, in which they say the land belongs to and is possessed by the city, the corporation, in their statement, do not blush to assert, that the same land had continued ever since the year 1767 to be considered as part of the royal demesne, and that too, as they say, under the name of the "Jesuits' Batture."

If it was royal demesne, how could the inhabitants of the city have enjoyed it? Was it not as strictly forbidden under the Spanish as under the American Government to intrude on the public property? If it was royal demesne, how did it acquire the name of "Jesuits' Batture?" If it was royal demesne, how could the corporation have the right to give permission to the rafts and boats to unload, or for the dealers in lumber to deposit their wood there? Thus we see the allegation contained in the case is not only at war with the truth, but is also expressly contradicted by the declarations of the defendants themselves upon record. Let us now examine the residue of this sentence, viz: "that no claim was made to the premises by the proprietors or purchasers of the Jesuits' property, either before or after the cession;" and the still stronger assertion of the counsel in his opinion, that it was "a fact incontestably proved, that neither Jean nor Bertrand Gravier, nor any of those under whom this claim is derived, ever possessed a single inch of the Batture in question. It is further remarkable, that they never set up any title to that effect." I cannot comment upon the subject of this statement as it deserves, without departing from that rule of moderation which I have imposed upon myself in pursuing this inquiry; I will, therefore, simply state the proofs by which the reader may be enabled to appreciate the value of these allegations—allegations which ought to have been maturely weighed before they were hazarded by the corporation, or re-echoed by their counsel. They should have considered, not only from the regard always due to truth, but from the reflection that this case was to become the groundwork of an application to the United States, to prosecute their claim at a great expense to them, and with great inconvenience to the individuals concerned; that the doctrines contained in it give rise to a most important and serious question, which, if resolved in the manner they seem to desire, will not only for ever deprive the town of this species of property in the very city itself, but also ravish from the inhabitants all the alluvions that have been formed since the establishment of the country. It ought, also, perhaps to have occurred to the counsel, if not to his clients, that after the Superior Court had given a unanimous opinion in this important cause, it was hardly treating the judges with proper candor not to state with more care the evidence upon which they pronounced. The corporation say, that the purchasers of the Jesuits' plantation never claimed the Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary; and their counsel asseverates the same thing, as having been incontestably proved. Why, then, in the passages I have quoted, did the corporation claim under Gravier, by virtue of his abandonment? Abandonment supposes right, possession, or, at least, claim of right. If Gravier never claimed, then Gravier never could abandon. Are the allegations of the corporation in their pleadings, or in their case, to be believed? Gravier "never claimed," say the defendants and their counsel; yet he sold a lot on the Batture on the 12th of April, 1794, to C. F. Girod, on the same day another to Wiltz, on the same day a third to John Scott, on the 12th day of January, 1795, two others to Mr. Pierre Foucher; reserving in the three first the right to dig earth for his brick-kiln. These deeds were all on record, were all produced on the trial, and could not have been forgotten. "The Batture was royal demesne, and Gravier never set up any claim to it." Yet Governor Carondelet, in a letter dated the 10th of March, 1794,* commands him to make the levee, and compliments him on his former punctuality. He repeats this order at two different times, once by Mr. Livaudais and once by Mr. Mentzinger; and, according to the uncontradicted testimony of Mr. Segur and Mr. Laroche,† he thought it necessary to ask Mr. Bertrand Gravier's permission, and, after his death, that of Jean Gravier, to lay the rafts of royal masts on the Batture.

What, then, becomes of this "fact so incontestably proved?" But I might have contented myself with the consultation itself, to show the error of its statements on this point. At page 17 of the opinion, the third position of the counsel is, that between the alluvion and the land sold (viz. the sale in 1763) "lay a royal road, the same that still exists, and a levee, both which were then, and have still remained, public property."‡

Here we find a broad assertion that the levee and the road were then, viz. 1763, and still are, public property; yet at page 28 of the same opinion, we find the old ground of Gravier's abandonment resorted to, and the date of the public title fixed to the laying out the faubourg, 1788.

But a circumstance of "still more weight" (says the counsel) "is, that Bertrand Gravier himself, when he converted the front of his plantation into a suburb, declared that he considered himself discharged from the duty of repairing the roads and the levee." [what duty, if the road and levee had ever since 1763 been public property? or how could he be discharged from a duty which, according to the counsel's third position, must have been always that of the public?] "because the front of the land was now become public property: so that since that period the Government and the city have been at the expense of keeping the road and the levee."

How difficult is the support of error, since even the acknowledged abilities of the learned counsel have not enabled him to write ten pages without contradicting the witnesses, contradicting the records, and contradicting himself.

Third error in fact:

In the case stated, page 5, the defendants allege "that when the sales were made" (24th November, 1763,) "Louisiana still belonged to France, and was under the dominion of the French laws." On the 3d day of November, however, in the preceding year, Louisiana had been ceded by France to Spain;§ and although posses-

† See note G.

‡ Yet Mr. Laveau Trudeau declared on oath, that he thought Gravier had a right to sell the Batture; and that when called on to ascertain his upper limits, he had begun the survey from the middle of the levee, and not from the inside of the road as he would have done if the road had been public property or the boundary of the land. Did the counsel forget this testimony, or was the surveyor general as well as the Governor ignorant of this notorious fact? See his examination, note E.

§ If it should be objected that this argument injures the title of Gravier by showing that the King of France had no right to sell to those under whom he claims, there are four answers, all of them conclusive.

1st. That the King of France may be considered, during the interval between the cession and the delivery of possession sion was not immediately taken, yet it will not be pretended that the King of Spain could acquire any rights by virtue of the French laws, supposing them to be as are stated by the defendants.

The whole, then, of the title in the United States so lately discovered, so contradictory to that which the parties, who now support it, have alleged, must fall with the discovery that, at the time our title commenced, the King of France had abandoned the sovereignty, and of course could, by virtue of this pretended prerogative, claim no right to seize the alluvion, and shut out his subjects from the river on which he had bounded their grants.

Having pointed out some of the errors in fact in the defendant's statement, and shown that this cause is to be determined according to the Spanish laws, I ought, perhaps, from an examination of those laws to prove that they give the alluvion in all cases to the proprietor of the adjacent soil; but that point seems to be conceded not only by implication, in attempting to substitute the French for the Spanish laws, but expressly in page 26 of the opinion, where it is said that the alluvions formed since the cession are the property of the frontproprietors, by the Spanish laws; but to remove all doubt upon this point, I refer to the authorities cited in note F.

But although I have clearly shown that this question is not to be decided by the French but the Spanish law, I can with ease deprive my opponents of even the semblance of an argument by showing, thirdly, that both by the general laws of France, and by special grants, the alluvions of the Mississippi belong to the proprietors of the adjacent soil, and not to the King.

The right of the adjacent proprietor is so consonant to the principles of natural law that it would require strong arguments to prove that any laws could permit a sovereign, after having bounded his grantee on the river, to cut him off from its use by seizing on the alluvion which might be formed on its banks. Let us examine carefully before we pronounce that the French jurisprudence is liable to this reproach.

The laws relied on by the defendants are the edicts of 1683, 1693, and 1710, and the opinion of Pothier. Of the edicts, the counsel has selected that of 1693 as the most favorable to his position. Let us examine this edict, without, however, subscribing to the doctrine, that any of the King's edicts could, without further formality, change the general civil law of the kingdom, and with the observation that many of the provinces had their particular privileges, which they always preserved, and which were enforced by the tribunals. In the very instance now before us, long after this edict, it is held by Denizart, by the authors of the jurisprudence of the Encyclopædia, and other authorities I shall cite, that the law of the land is the reverse of that said to be enacted by the edict.

The ideas I had formed on this subject are confirmed and strongly expressed by Portalis, in his preliminary discourse to the civil code.

“Sous l'ancien régime la loi étoit une volonté du prince; cette volonté étoit adressée aux cours souveraines, qui étoient chargées de la vérification et du dépôt des lois. La loi n'étoit point exécutoire sans un rapport avant d'y avoir été vérifiée et enregistrée. La vérification étoit un examen, une discussion de la loi nouvelle; elle représentoit la délibération qui est l'essence de toutes les lois. L'enregistrement étoit la transcription sur le registre de la loi vérifiée. Les cours pouvoient suspendre l'enregistrement d'une loi, ou même la refuser; elles pouvoient modifier la loi en l'enregistrant, et dès-lors ces modifications faisoient partie de la loi même. Une loi pouvoit être refusée par une cour souveraine et acceptée par une autre; elle pouvoit être diversement modifiée par les diverses cours.”

“Under the former Government the law was the will of the prince; the expression of this will was addressed to the Superior Courts, which were changed with the verification and deposit of the laws. No law could be executed in any jurisdiction until it had been verified and registered therein. The verification was an examination or discussion of the new law; it represented that deliberation which is essential to all laws. The registry was the act of transcribing the law thus verified on the records. The courts might suspend the registry or even refuse it; they might modify the law when they re-registered it, and from that moment those modifications became part of the law itself. A law might be refused by one Superior Court and received by another, and it might be differently modified by different courts.”

of the country, as only the trustee for the King of Spain; and that, therefore, all his acts permitted and not revoked by the latter power on taking possession are valid.

2d. That though not de jure yet de facto France was sovereign of the country; therefore, all sales made by the actual possessor to a bona fide purchaser are valid.

3d. That we are now in possession, and that the United States cannot prevail by the weakness of our title, but must show a conclusive one in themselves.

4th. That by the fundamental laws of Spain the King could not acquire this species of property.

tion or discussion of the new law; it represented that deliberation which is essential to all laws. The registry was the act of transcribing the law thus verified on the records. The courts might suspend the registry or even refuse it; they might modify the law when they re-registered it, and from that moment those modifications became part of the law itself. A law might be refused by one Superior Court and received by another, and it might be differently modified by different courts.”

The edict declares that the King has an incontestable right upon (sur) all the navigable rivers, and that he and his predecessors have caused researches to be made of isles and accretions (créments qui s'y sont fait) which had been made therein, and not thereon, as is translated in the opinion; and he confirms the ancient possessors of all islands, atterrissements, alluvions, &c. in their possession, on paying certain dues to the crown. Now, in this edict I can find no declaration of any thing but that the King had an incontestable right upon the navigable rivers of his kingdom,* and that he and his predecessors had claimed the islands and accretions, or banks, found therein, that is, in their channels or beds; but because the word alluvion is introduced in the list of property that is confirmed to the proprietors, I do not perceive that the King arrogates to himself a right to the alluvions which shall be formed upon the land which bounded on the river, and I can account for the word being introduced into this part of the edict, by supposing that it was the intent of the King to confirm to possessors of the islands not only the original soil of these islands, but also the increase which they had gained, or might afterwards gain, by alluvion. This is a very natural construction, not only from the omission of this word in the declaratory part of the edict, but also because islands more frequently are increased by alluvions than even the banks of the rivers themselves. And thus the words of the edict will be satisfied without making it at war with the fundamental laws of the kingdom.

The only remaining authority is that of Pothier. I confess that the part cited would lead the reader to suppose, that this writer meant to decide the question in all cases of navigable rivers; but a closer attention will perhaps discover an inaccuracy of expression, or an error unavoidable, in some instances, even by the most correct writer, whose attention is turned to so many points as are embraced by the valuable work of Pothier.

I apprehend that what is laid down here as a general proposition, applicable to all navigable rivers in France, is true as to those only (and this may be the case, perhaps, with the greater number) where the grants have not been bounded by the river, but by a fixed front boundary. I believe so, because if the doctrine of Pothier were understood in the unqualified sense in which it is quoted, the other writers whom I shall cite, and who all, without exception, give a contrary opinion, would at least notice that of so celebrated a writer, if they supposed it differed from theirs on so important a point.

I am also inclined to this solution from the passage which follows in the 160th article, where he gives the reason why, by the Roman law, the alluvion belonged to the adjoining proprietor.

“It was (says he) by a kind of right of accession, that, according to the Roman law, the riparian proprietors had each one, in his own right, the property of the islands which were formed in the river, and even in its bed when the river abandoned it to take another course.

“The inheritances of these proprietors having towards the river an unlimited extent, and having no other bounds but the river, and which comprehended even the shores and all which was not occupied by the river, the bed which had been covered, when it ceased to occupy it, was deemed to have made a part of those inheritances, and to be an accession to them. It was the same thing with respect to the islands which were formed in the river; these islands being nothing else but a part of the bed of the river which it had ceased to occupy.

“By the French laws the navigable rivers belong to the King; the islands which are formed within, as well as the bed when it is abandoned to take a new course, belong to the King; the proprietors of inheritances on the bank cannot at all pretend to it, unless they show titles of concession from the King.”

From these citations I think it appears that Pothier makes the right of alluvion to depend on the fact of the concession or grant being bounded by the river, since he gives the existence of such boundary as a reason why, under the Roman law, the proprietor was entitled to the alluvion, and declares, unless he has a similar concession, he is not entitled to it by the French law. I have endeavored, I know not with what success, to reconcile Pothier with the other French writers, some prior, and others subsequent to his work; every one of which, at least all that I have been able to consult, agree in the doctrine that the proprietors of land bounded by a river, whether navigable or not, are entitled to all the increase that may be produced by alluvion, but that atterissement, a word peculiar to the French jurisprudence, belongs, in navigable rivers, to the King.

*Probably because the grants on those rivers were not bounded by the river, as we have shown ours, in common with all the others in the country, to have been.

Alluvion is defined in the French, precisely as it is in the Roman and Spanish laws, to be an "increase of land, which is made by degrees (peu à peu) on the shores of the sea, of navigable and other rivers, by the earth which the water brings there." This definition is taken from Guyot's Repertoire Universelle, a work of great merit, compiled by upwards of forty counsellors from different parts of the kingdom, and published in 1784. The whole article is transcribed in the margin,<sup>3</sup> and I deduce from it these important consequences:

First. That the doctrine of Pothier is here shown not to be the general law of France, but an exception to that law in the particular provinces, which are enumerated.

Second. From the part of these articles, which states the custom of Normandy to be, that the proprietors of the adjacent land shall have the alluvion, "à la charge de les bailler par aveu au seigneur du fief, et d'en payer les droits seigneuriaux." &c. that is, on condition that he shall make an acknowledgment (which is in the nature of homage in the English law) to the feudal lord, and pay his seignorial dues, &c. "The customs of Sens, Auxerre, and Metz, have similar dispositions, and are admitted to serve as a rule in the French jurisprudence."

Here, then, I think we may plainly discover, that if the King of France has any right to alluvions, he has them as feudal lord,† that even in lands held under this tenure, the proprietor would have a right to the property, paying the usual rents, and rendering the accustomed homage, but that in land not held under a feudal tenure, the King could have no pretensions to this accession of property, which would belong to the proprietor by the law of nature, to which this right is expressly referred by the Justinian code.

Should this reasoning be founded, the dispute is at an end with respect to this property, which is expressly granted in franc alleu† or allodial tenure, as we should express it in the language of English jurisprudence. "Franc alleu," as appears from the following definition taken * "Alluvion. Accroissement de terrain qui se fait peu à peu sur les bords de la mer, des fleuves, et des rivières par les terres que l'eau y apporte.

"Le droit Romain met l'alluvion au nombre des moyens d'acquérir par le droit des gens, comme étant une espèce d'accession; en sorte que l'accroissement fait imperceptiblement demeure à l'héritage auquel il se trouve réuni. Cela est fondé sur la maxime qui veut que le profit appartienne à celui qui est exposé à souffrir le dommage

"Cette disposition du droit Romain est suivie dans le royaume, excepté, néanmoins, en Franche Comté, où l'on tient pour maxime que la rivière de Doux, qui arrose cette province, n'étoit ni ne baille; c'est-à-dire, que celui d'nt cette rivière diminue l'héritage en l'inondant peut prendre son indemnité dans le terrain qu'elle laisse à découvert.

"Il faut aussi excepter les héritages voisins de la rivière de la Fère qui, suivant une coutume locale d'Auvergne, n'étoit ni ne baille.

"L'article 195 de la coutume de Normandie porte que les terres d'alluvion accroissent aux propriétaires des héritages contigus à la charge de les bailler par aveu au seigneur du fief, et d'en payer les droits seigneuriaux comme des autres héritages adjacens.

"Les coutumes de Sens, d'Auxerre, et de Metz ont des dispositions semblables, et sont admises pour de règle dans le droit François.

"L'accroissement fait par alluvion prend les qualités de fief, de roture, de propre, ou d'acquêt que peut avoir l'héritage accreue, et il est sujet aux mêmes charges.

"Il n'en seroit pas de même d'une augmentation arrivée subitement à un héritage par un débordement ou par quelque autres cas fortuit. Cette augmentation appartient au Roi dans les rivières navigables, et aux seigneurs haut justiciers dans les rivières non navigables." Guyot's Repertoire Universel, page 113.

† Since the first publication of this work I have found my reasoning on this subject confirmed by the highest authority. Portalis, in his preliminary discourse to the second book of the French code, expressly refers this claim of the crown to a feudal origin; and, moreover, positively declares the whole law of the alluvion to have been settled in favor of the adjacent proprietors long before the revolution.

‡ See note A.

from the "Coutume de Paris," page 144, "is an inheritance which is subject to no seignorial rights or duties, either honorary, as fealty and homage, or pecuniary, as rent, fifth relief, or others that may be due as acknowledgments of the tenure from the superior lord; it is therefore that it is thus called quasi liberum et solutum ab omnibus juribus."

The authority of the Encyclopædia is also cited to show a difference between the Spanish and French laws on this point. A very cursory examination of the article will show its misapplication to the defendant's case. The whole text (for the defendants have only quoted as much as they think suits their purpose) reads thus:

"Alluvion is an increase of the ground which takes place, by slow degrees, on the shores of the sea, on the borders of fleuves and rivers, occasioned by the earth which the water conveys to it, and which becomes so consolidated with the contiguous land that it forms a whole with it—an identity. The name of alluvion is also given to those lands which are slowly and imperceptibly left uncovered by the water.

"The Roman law places alluvions in the number of the means of acquiring according to the laws of nations, as being a kind of accession; that augmentation, being operated in a slow and imperceptible manner, remains to the inheritance to which it is found united.

"The portion which is thus added insensibly is not considered as a new land, it is a part of the old which becomes possessed of the same qualities, and it belongs to the same master, in the same manner as the growth of a tree form parts of the tree, and is the property of the proprietor of the tree. That right of increase by alluvion is grounded in the maxim of right, which bestows the profits and the advantages of a thing to him who is exposed to suffer its damages and its losses.

"The regulations of the Roman law on alluvion are generally followed in France; the usages of Metz, of Sens, and of Auxerre, have on that subject precise regulations, which form their common law.

"But the province of Franche Comté must be excepted, when it is established as a maxim that the river de Doux neither gives nor takes away; that is to say, that the person whose inheritance is diminished by the inundation of the river may indemnify himself by possessing himself of the land which it has abandoned.

"The same thing takes place on the inheritances bordering on the river de la Fère in Auvergne, where the local coutume establishes the same right.

"The alluvions which the sea produces on the lands which it bathes also belong, as a right of increase, to the proprietor of those inheritances, who may also make levees or dikes to secure them.

"We must observe, however, that to acquire by right of alluvion, two conditions are necessary—

"1st. That the increase should be made slowly and imperceptibly, in such a manner that it cannot be discovered in what time each part of the alluvion has been formed to and consolidated with the inheritance.

"2d. That the inheritance, by virtue of which the right of acquiring by alluvion is claimed, be contiguous to the river, in such a manner that the bed on which it flows seems, as it were, to be a part of the same inheritance; for in case it did not bound exactly to the river, and that it was bounded by a causeway or by a road, the parts left uncovered by the river, between its bed and the road, cannot belong to the proprietor of the inheritance situated on the other side of the road. Those lands belong to the King in navigable rivers, and to the feudal lords in those that are not so."

Here we find the Roman law expressly recognised as being generally followed in France, with the exception of the districts enumerated in the former authority, and then follow the passages selected by the defendants, which in no sort whatever weaken the effect of the prior passages of this authority.

They are—

First, that the alluvion must be formed slowly and imperceptibly, so that the time of the incorporation of each part with the original soil cannot be discovered. When the ingenious counsel can analyze the different deposits, separate the sands of the Red river, the rich mould of the Missouri from the clay and other various soils which the Mississippi receives from a thousand tributary streams; when he can dive into its turbid eddies, watch the moment of the precious deposit, and date the existence of each stratum of its increase, then this first branch of the authority he has cited may be applicable to his cause.

The second point, viz: that no proprietor can claim any alluvion, unless his lands are bounded on the river, is true, not only in the French but in the Roman and Spanish jurisprudence; and therefore it ought certainly not to have been cited in an argument to prove that they differed. As my adversary, however, can make no use of this part of his authority, it is a pity that it should be cited for nothing: I will, therefore, use it as a strong corroborative proof of the argument I used to show the reason why on certain navigable rivers in France the alluvion belonged to the King, to wit: that the grants there were bounded by the road, not by the river. The concluding lines may also serve to strengthen my reasoning, and to prove the feudal origin of the local variations which the French have made from the imperial law.

The opinion on this point concludes, "that the existence of a public road or causeway forms an exception in favor of which all opinions may be reconciled;" but the authority says no such thing: the authority says, that the exception is formed by the road or causeway being the boundary, not by its existence: a hundred roads and as many causeways might exist, yet, if they were not the boundaries of the land, the alluvion would belong to the owner of the original soil.

Yet this is a fair specimen of the reasoning by which the Government of the United States is gratuitously invited to harass individuals with suits, and snatch their only support from the widow and the orphan.*

I might, perhaps, be excused from producing further authorities to show how untenable the ground is on which the defendants have sheltered themselves under the French laws, even supposing them the guide of our decision. Take, however, in addition, the following respectable authorities:

Denizart, title Alluvion, vol. 1, page 71.—"1. L'alluvion est une accroissement qui se fait insensiblement, et peu à peu, sur les rivages de la mer, des fleuves, et des rivières par les terres que l'eau y apporte.

2. Lorsque par alluvion, un héritage se trouve insensiblement accru, et plus étendu qu'il ne l'étoit, l'accroissement appartient au propriétaire, et celui dont l'héritage est diminué par cette voie, ne peut pas revendiquer ce qui s'en manque.

"Cette maxime, qui est puisée dans le droit Romain, a lieu dans toute la France, excepté en Franche Comté. On y dit communément, au contraire, que la rivière du Doux n'ôte ni ne baille. Ainsi l'alluvion n'est point dans le cours de cette rivière un moyen d'acquérir. Voyez la remarque de Dumoulin.

"Il faut encore excepter la rivière de Fère, qui, suivant une coutume locale d'Auvergne, n'ôte ni ne baille, e'est-à-dire, que lorsque'elle prend d'anciennes possessions par inondations ou autrement, petit à petit, deçà au delà l'eau, il est permis à celui qui perd de suivre sa possession et de la revendiquer.

"3. L'augmentation qui arrive dans un héritage par alluvion, est une seule et même chose avec l'héritage accrue: (fundus fundo accrescit, sicut portio portioni;) il en prend toutes les qualités accidentelles de fief et de roture, de propre et d'acquêt; il est sujet aux mêmes charges, fissentelles d'usufruit et de substitution.

"4. Il n'en est pas de même d'un accroissement subit, occasionné par un débordement, ou par quelque autre ces fortuit: la portion de ce terrain pourroit en ce cas être réclamée par le propriétaire. Voyez la coutume de Bar.

"5. La maxime est d'ailleurs affirmée par l'arrêt rendu au rapport de M. l'abbé de Vienne, en la quatrième chambre des enquêtes, le 15 Avril, 1744, entre le Marquis de Bouzols et M. de Chamflour, conseiller en la cour des aides de Clemont, rapporté par Guyot, Traité des Fiefs, tome 6, chapitre des Rivières, page 673, n. 10; [et par arrêt du Mercredi 22 Février, 1769, rendu en la grande-chambre, conformément aux conclusions de M. Seguir, avocat général, la même chose a été jugée. La sentence qui avoit ordonné une visite des lieux a été infirmée; et il été ordonné que par enquête respective, il seroit vérifié si le changement du cours de l'eau, sur le rivage de la mer, avoit été subit ou insensible. Me. Lochard pladoit pour le chapitre de Luçon, et Me. Caillon pour le sieur de Champagné.]

"6. Bourjon prétend que ce qui accroît par alluvion appartient au seigneur haut justicier; mais ni son opinion ni l'avis des auteurs qu'il cite ne sont suivis dans l'usage. Voyez la coutume de Normandie, art. 195, l'article 268 de celle d'Auvergne. l'article 154 de Sens, et celle de Metz, tit. 12, art. 28.

* A large proportion of the Batture was purchased by Mr. Delabarre, and is now the property of his widow and infant children.

"7. Les attérissements formés subitement dans la mer ou dans les fleuves et rivières navigables, appartiennent au roi par le seul droit de sa souveraineté. Voyez la déclaration du roi d'Avril, 1683, et M. le Bret, de la souveraineté, liv. 2, chapitre 16; et les édits des mois de Décembre, 1693, et Février, 1710, concernant les attérissements, isles et islots. On trouve ce deux édits dans le Recueil de Néron, tome 2."

"Renusson Traité des Propres, p. 39.—It often happens that an inheritance which is bounded by a stream or navigable river is augmented or diminished by the stream which forsakes its ancient bed, and makes for itself another. This augmentation, or diminution, is a profit or loss to him who has the adjoining inheritance. The increase is an accessory, which belongs of common right to the proprietors of the soil which is contiguous to it." Ins. lib. 2, de Rerum Div. &c.

"This increase can have no quality different from that of the principal inheritance, according to Argentée on the custom of Bretagne, and Dumoulin on the ancient custom of Paris, who says the increase of alluvion is acquired to us in the same right by which the original soil belonged to us; nor is this increase considered as a new field but as a part of the first.

"But what shall we say of an island formed in a river, opposite to our soil, which is separate property. It would seem that an island being a thing separate from the inheritance which borders on the river, there would be no right of accession, and that the island ought not to be considered as of the same quality: nevertheless, we may pronounce that it is of the same nature with the inheritance, quia eodem jure alluviones accedit. Common right requires that an island which arises in a river should belong to the proprietor of the adjacent soil; or if it arises in the midst of the river, that it should belong in common to those who own the soil on the opposite side, &c." 1 Domat. 268.

"The proprietor of an estate acquires the possession of whatever may be added to it by nature which augments the land, and becomes as it were an accession thereto. Thus the insensible increase which may be gained by an estate joining to a river, by the operation of the water, is an acquisition gained by the proprietor of the estate.

"But if an inundation, or the sudden change of the bed of the river, divides an inheritance, and joins it to another, the property of this part remains in its ancient owner."

TEXT.

§ 20. De Alluvione.—"Moreover, whatever a navigable river (fleuve) adds by alluvion to our estate, is by the law of nature our own. By alluvion we mean an increase so imperceptible, that it is impossible to know how great an augmentation has been received at each instant of time."

FRENCH LAW.

"The disposition of this section is observed amongst us."

TEXT.

§ 21. "But if, by the impetuosity of its current, a river has carried off a part of your land, and joined it to that of your neighbor, this part does not cease to belong to you; however, if it has remained a long time joined to the inheritance of your neighbor, and the trees which it has carried with it have taken root, the soil shall belong to him."

FRENCH LAW.

"The provisions of this section take place in France, with this difference, nevertheless, that when the accessions which are thus suddenly made are very considerable, and that they have remained joined to an inheritance for a long period of time without being claimed, it is said they ought to belong to the Kings, or to the superior lords, as a kind of vacant possession, or a derelict, which appears conformable to the royal ordinances by which the islands and atterissemens which are formed in great rivers belong to the King."

A most persuasive, if not a conclusive argument that the law of France is as I have stated, may be drawn from the following circumstances and opinions. When the First Consul undertook the great task of giving a general system of jurisprudence to France, he caused his digest, or projet de code, to be prepared by the first lawyers in the country; this was printed, and a copy sent to every superior tribunal in the republic for their consideration; and after a proper period it was returned with such remarks and amendments as had occurred to the different judges, that the Legislature might, prior to its final adoption, have the benefit of the best legal advice on its different provisions.

The articles in this projet relating to the subject under discussion are contained in the 2d sect. 2d title of the 2d book, and are as follows:

"15.* The collection of earth, atterrissements, and accessions which are annexed successively and imperceptibly to the land bordering on a river or navigable stream, are called alluvion. Alluvion belongs to the riparian proprietor, when it takes place on a river, whether it be navigable, or capable of carrying rafts or not; under the condition, in the first case, of leaving the path prescribed by the regulations.

"16. The rule is the same with respect to the running water which retires insensibly from one of its banks, and encroaches on the other; the proprietor of the shore which is left dry shall benefit by the alluvion, and the proprietor of the opposite shore shall not be permitted to reclaim the land which he has lost."

If this part of the project had made any change in the ancient laws of the country, some of the learned men to whom it was submitted would have taken notice of the novelty, with marks either of censure or approbation; but we find them all either passing over the articles as merely declaratory of the old law, or else expressly acknowledging them as such, and stigmatising the doctrine now contended for by Mr. Derbigny as an oppressive and ineffectual attempt to pervert the laws of the kingdom.

To begin with the tribunal of Paris, they set out with this general observation on the part of the code containing the provisions. "The rules proposed" (they say) "on the subject, are in general conformable to what has always been practised, and gives occasion to but very few observations," and among those few are none on the subject of alluvion.

The tribunals of Nanci, Nimes, Orleans, Rions, Liege, Metz, Montpellier, Agen, Aix, Grenoble, Poitiers, Rennes, and others, pass over these provisions as matters of course, or recommend a slight alteration, to prevent disputes between the proprietors of lakes and the adjoining land.

The tribunal of Rouen has these strong expressions: speaking of the 19th article in the "project of code," which declares islands in the middle of navigable rivers to belong to the nation, they say:

"The Roman law gave to the adjoining proprietors the islands which were formed in navigable rivers; a disposition which appears more equitable than this article of the code, and more worthy of a great nation, whose true interest is not to acquire property to the injury of individuals.

"The edicts and declarations of the former Kings, which claimed for the domain the islands of navigable rivers and fleuves, (primary rivers,) were only exchequer laws; these laws were founded on the false pretext that the islands were an appendage of the river, which they considered as belonging to the King. But,

"1. The river itself is not a national domain, but a thing of which the public have the use; it belongs to the nation, not in full property, but as an appendage of its sovereignty.

"2. The islands are not appendages to the waters of the river, but to the bed of the river; the right of individuals to which is acknowledged when the river abandons it.

"3. An island cannot be formed without increasing the width of the river at the expense of the adjoining land; and the damages to which the proprietors of these lands are exposed should entitle them to the islands, as an indemnity for the risks and losses they incur.

"The principle which we propose would not at all invade the public right to the islands which the nation possesses, or for which they have positive titles; but it would tranquilize those individuals, who for ages have possessed islands in the rivers, as the true owners; and whom the agents of the domain have always vexed without having ever succeeded in despoiling them of their estates."

"16. Il en est de même des relais qui forme l'eau courante qui se retire insensiblement de l'une de ses rives en se portant sur l'autre; le propriétaire de la rive découverte profite de l'alluvion, sans que le riverain du coté opposé y puisse venir réclamer le terrain qu'il a perdu."

Ce droit n'a pas lieu à l'égard des relais de la mer.

Here we have the positive declaration of a learned tribunal speaking to the collective legal wisdom of the nation, and, in the performance of a solemn and disinterested office, deciding that the edicts did not extend to alluvions, but only to islands in navigable rivers.

That, even in that strong case, the edicts were considered as exchequer laws, (lois bursales), founded on false pretexts, which were never executed, served only for the purposes of vexation; and that the proprietors have, in spite of them, kept possession of their islands for ages.

The tribunal of Toulouse recommends the same provisions in favor of isles and islands; and that of Lyons expressly declares that the claims of the crown to the "islands in navigable rivers," never considering the edicts as even claiming alluvions, was founded on no other law than that of force, (le droit du plus fort.)

Portalis, in his preliminary discourse to this part of the code, repeats the same ideas; asserts that the language of the code on the subject of alluvion is that of the ancient law, as settled long prior to the revolution; refers the claims of the crown to obsolete feudal principles; and finally declares that the edicts were only fiscal attempts to oppress the subject.

I should not have multiplied these authorities, had it not have been for the respect I bear to that of Pothier. None of those I have cited at all accord with the doctrine the defendants suppose him to maintain. Many of them are posterior to his work, and of those, none mention his opinion as differing from their own. This notice his acknowledged respectability would have required, had they thought this difference existed. I think, therefore, I may fairly infer from their silence that they have construed the passage cited in the way that I have done; of course, that there is a perfect coincidence between these eminent writers on this point; and that the law of France, except in the particular enumerated districts, is conformable to the Roman and Spanish codes.

But, as I am determined not to leave my adversaries a single recess in which they can hide a doubt, or from which they can bring out an argument, I will suppose that I have wholly failed in this division of my own cause; that the laws of France are to govern, and that they are as laid down by the defendants; yet the alluvions of the Mississippi have not, since the first settlement, belonged to the crown of France.

First. Because, as I have shown, we hold the lands in franc aleu, or allodial tenure.

Second. Because, if the King of France had this right, he has expressly renounced it, and the authority in Pothier, as well as the edicts, admit that a grant of alluvion shall be good against the crown.

In September, 1712, Louisiana was first granted by the crown to Mr. Crozat. I have never seen a copy of his grant, but there is reason to believe, from a subse-

Les édits et déclarations des ci-devant Rois qu'attribuaient au domaine les îles des fleuves et rivières navigables, n'étoient que des loix bursales. Ces loix se fondaient sur le faux prétexte que ces îles étoient un accessoire du fleuve qu'on regardoit comme appartenant au Roi.

1. Le fleuve lui-même n'est point un domaine national, mais une chose publique; il appartient à la nation, non à titre de propriété mais à titre de souveraineté.

2. L'île n'est pas un accession des eaux du fleuve, mais bien du lit du fleuve, sur lequel les droits des particuliers ne sont pas méconnus lorsque le fleuve l'abandonne.

3. Il ne peut guère se former une île sans que le fleuve s'élargisse aux dépens des terrains voisins; et le ravage auxquels sont exposés les propriétaires de ces terrains, doivent leur faire obtenir les îles qui se forment dans le fleuve, comme une juste indemnité des risques qu'ils courent et des pertes qu'ils éprouvent.

Le principe que nous proposons ne porteroit aucune atteinte à la propriété domaniale des îles que la nation possède, ou sur lesquelles elle a des titres d'engagement; mais il serviroit à tranquilliser les particuliers qui depuis des siècles possèdent des îles dans les fleuves comme véritables propriétaires, et que les agents du domaine ont toujours vexés, sans pourtant parvenir à les dépouiller de leur fonds. Observations du Tribunal d'Appel de Rouen, p. 15.

quent recital, that it was extremely liberal. This, however, is immaterial: for, having surrendered his grant, the same country was conceded to the West India Company by letters patent, dated in August, 1717, the fifth article whereof is in the following words: "In order to provide the said West India Company with the means of making a permanent establishment, and to execute all the plans they may form, we have given, granted, and conceded, and by these presents, do give, grant, and concede to them, for ever, all the lands, coasts, ports, havens, and islands which form our province of Louisiana, as well, and with the same extent, as we had granted it to Mr. Crozat, by our letters patent, dated 14th September, 1712, to enjoy the same in full property, lordship, and justice, reserving to ourselves but only fealty and homage, which the said company shall render to us, and the Kings, our successors, with a crown of gold, of the weight of twenty marks."

By the eighth article, the company are expressly authorized to grant lands in franc aleu, or allodial tenure.

Under this ample grant, all the titles of the Jesuits were derived,† and, after reading it, I fancy nothing more will be said of the royal right to the alluvions of the Mississippi, under the West India Company.

Again, by the fifteenth article of the charter, the custom of Paris is expressly introduced and established unchangeably as the fundamental law of the territory. Whatever, then, may the laws of the other parts of the French dominions be, unless alluvions can be shown to be the property of the crown by the custom of Paris, the argument with respect to this property is at an end. This has not been attempted: for it was known that it could not have been done with success. As, however, I have not the same reasons to shrink from this research, I will refer to Ferrier's folio edition of the Custom of Paris, and its Commentary, vol. 4, p. 917, nos. 37, 38, 39: "Alluvion is an imperceptible increase to an inheritance produced, insensibly diminishing the neighboring lands: for the augmentation cannot otherwise take place. This increase is so intimately united to the inheritance, that it assumes all its qualities, and consequently becomes separate property, if the inheritance were so. According to Dumoulin, on the first article of this custom, gloss 5, nos. 115, 116, where he says incrementum alluvionis nobis adquiritur, eo jure quo ager augmentatus primum ad nos pertinerebat, nec illud incrementum sensitur novus ager sed pars primi."

"It would not be the same case, if the river should add to the inheritance of an individual an island or an entire parcel of soil, although it should be united to the inheritance; this would be considered as a part of this inheritance, but not with the quality of separate property." See also the same work, vol. 1, p. 886.

These authorities prove much more than is necessary for my purpose, not only that alluvions, strictly so called, which are made imperceptibly, belong to the proprietor of the soil to which it is attached, but that the custom of Paris, in conformity with the Roman and the Spanish laws, give to him the islands and portions of land formed in a river, or on its banks, by a change of its course, or other sudden accident.

But the custom of Paris, as I have shown, was declared by the charter, and I might have added by an express edict of Louis XIV, to be the law of this colony.

So that I think I have fully demonstrated that, even if the general law of France would have given this kind of property to the King, yet, on the Mississippi, it belonged to the adjoining proprietor as well by the laws of the province as by the actual grant of the King.

Before I conclude, I ought, perhaps, to make some observations on the relinquishment alleged to have been made by Mr. Gravier of his title, and the notorious acts of ownership which are stated to have been done by the Spanish Government. Let it be remembered that a proof of these very acts was produced by the corporation of the city as evidence of their title, and that it has not been until after they despair of making any title in themselves, that they now appropriate the same evidence to make out one for the United States. What reliance can the United States have on such accommodating proof, that will fit any claim, and serve any occasion? That first used to establish the interests of the corporation is now set to work as the engine of their malice and resentment. But it is not from its general character that I would stigmatize it. Let us do justice and examine it fairly. What are these proofs?

1. Gravier abandoned his right to the public.

† The title to the Jesuits is dated in 1726, nearly six years before the patent to the company was resumed by the crown.

2. Governor Carondelet ordered the sheds on the Batture to be pulled down.

3. The Cabildo refused permission to erect any buildings thereon.

4. The inhabitants of the town dug earth there, and the public used the Batture as a landing.

5. The auditor gave it as his opinion, that the ground between high and low water mark belonged to the public.

1. Gravier abandoned the Batture to the public.

A point materially relied on, both in the case and in Mr. Derbigny's opinion, to show this relinquishment of Gravier is, that by depositing a plan in which this part of his farm was not laid out into lots, he had virtually declared that it was a common for the public; the case, indeed, goes further, and says that in this plan "the Batture was marked as a space which is to remain free and not subject to be built on:" vide Derbigny's opinion, page 40. This, in the literal acceptance of the terms, is untrue, for there is no such mark on the plan, and therefore I presume Mr. Moreau, who drew the case, meant that it should be understood with the qualification that follows, that it was marked as free only because it was not divided into lots, that is to say, because it was not marked at all. The same wise reasoning would vest all the rear as well as the front part of Gravier's farm in the public, because the line of lots occupied but a small part of the farm fronting on the road. But it is said Mr. Gravier declared that he had abandoned his right to the public. If the evidence of these declarations had been as full, as certain, and circumstantial as it is contradictory, vague, and frivolous, yet without writing and recording it would give no title to the United States, according to the laws of the country at the time it was said to have been made [see the discussion of this point in the report of the case]. But the proof itself is wholly uncertain; one witness says it was to the public, another to the inhabitants of the town, and a third to those of the suburb; none of them pretend to relate with precision the time, conditions, or consideration of the supposed abandonment. But can it possibly escape the attention of the most superficial reasoner, that this branch of the argument is directly at war with all the others, and that the very allegation of it is an express admission of our title? The same may be said of the Baron de Carondelet's and Governor Gayosa's orders to repair the roads by the public convicts; for it was in both instances said to be founded on this supposed abandonment, of which both the Governors know so little that they always considered Gravier as the owner of the land, and sent the order for repairs in the first place to him. These very facts, too, stated and relied on by those who advocate the title of the United States, completely contradict the unblushing assertion that "the Batture never ceased to be part of the sovereign's domain." If this was the case why did Carondelet and Gayosa both send to Gravier to repair the roads, and why, according to Mr. Derbigny's showing, did they undertake the task only when informed that Gravier had abandoned his right?

2, 3, 4, and 5. Governor Carondelet ordered the sheds built on the Batture to be pulled down. The Cabildo refused permission to build others; the auditor gave it as his opinion that the public had a right to the land, and they actually used it for a public landing.

There is proof that the demolition of the buildings arose from their being in the range of the fort guns. (See the deposition of Mr. Pedeschoux.) But admitting these facts to be proved in the fullest manner, no other inference can be drawn from them than one incident to the nature of the property. By the civil law the public have a right to the use of the banks of the navigable rivers, though the property remains in the owner of the adjacent soil; on the Mississippi, by usage, and the nature of the ground, the bank comprehended the levee and all the space between it and the river. When the river encroaches the levee is brought nearer in; when it retires, or forms an alluvion, the proprietor extends his levee, encloses the new made ground, and leaves the public the enjoyment of the new bank, and that part lying outside of it, for the purposes of navigation. On this space it is unlawful for the proprietor to erect any thing that may interfere with the use secured to the public. The Governor, therefore, would have had a right to order the sheds to be demolished, because they must have interfered with the public use. The Cabildo, who were the Governor's council, were right in refusing permission to erect any buildings; the auditor was perfectly correct in the opinion he is said to have given, and the public had a right to the free use of the property for the purposes of navigation. They were all right, then, because Gravier had not enclosed the alluvion land, and by making a new levee and tow-path on the bank of the new made ground, given the public the accommodation the law required. But they would have been perfectly wrong if Gravier had at that time offered, as the proprietors do now, to reclaim the land from the inundation of the river, and by erecting a tow-path, a levee, and commodious wharves, give the public tenfold the convenience to which they were entitled by law. Thus we see, that all the material facts proved by the advocates for the title of the United States confirm and strengthen that which I assert to be in Gravier and those who claim under him, and I may, without flattering myself, believe that I have fully established the following points:

I. That the Jesuits' plantation was, like all the others on the river, bounded in front by the river itself.

II. That no alteration took place in the front boundary of any of the subdivisions of that plantation by the sales of 1763.

III. That the alluvion formed in front of that plantation belongs to the proprietors of the several subdivisions.

1. By the general law of France.

2. By that of Spain.

3. By the particular laws of this province while under the French Government.

4. By virtue of the allodial tenure by which they were held.

IV. That the alleged relinquishment by Gravier is too uncertain to give title; and, if proved, only serves to destroy the other arguments used by the advocates of the United States.

V. That the acts relied on as possessory by the Government are perfectly consistent with my title, and rather serve to strengthen than destroy it.

The view I proposed to take of the arguments urged in favor of the claim of the United States to this property is now finished. Let it be read with attention. Let those whose duty or inclination calls them to decide on these pretensions examine carefully the principles and study the authorities cited to show that this was never of right a part of the sovereign's demesne. Let this be done without prejudice or partiality, and, though all my prospects of fortune are involved in the decision, I shall await it without anxiety. I have hesitated long before I resolved on its publication; but the unwearied pains which are daily taken to slander my title, and render my property useless, require that I should take some steps to counteract them.

This must be my apology for discussing a legal question before the public.

[TRANSLATION.]

In the year 1763, the — day of the month of July, at eight in the morning, by virtue of a decree of the Superior Council of the province of Louisiana, dated the 9th of the present month, pronounced at the instance of Mr. la Freniere, procureur general of the King, declaring and ordering that all the estate, real and personal, of the persons heretofore styling themselves Jesuits, should be judicially sold before Mr. Foucault, comptroller of the marine and second judge of the Superior Council of this province, commissioner named in this respect, and also in the presence of the said procureur general, in order that the proceeds may be placed at the disposition of the King. In consequence whereof, we, Denis Nicholas Foucault, comptroller, &c. in the presence of, &c. and accompanied by, &c. went to the bar of the court for the purpose of proceeding, for the first time, to the sale at auction of a parcel of land and plantation, situated near the city, heretofore belonging to the said persons, calling themselves Jesuits; where being arrived, and having seen the advertisements, &c. we caused to be published and proclaimed, with a loud and intelligible voice, by the crier, that we were about to proceed, for the first time, to receive the bids and offers, in order to make sale, to the highest bidders, of a tract of land and plantation, No. 1, having seven acres in front, adjoining the fortifications of this city, running sixty-nine degrees from the north to west, the upper line running north sixty-four degrees forty-eight minutes, and thirty-nine seconds, west, by fifty acres in depth, together with all the buildings which are thereon, consisting of two principal houses, a kitchen, store, pigeon-house, brick-kiln, indigo works, negro huts, and enclosures, with all its circumstances and dependancies, without reserving or retaining any part thereof of whatever parts the whole may be composed, and as it now is, [tel que le tout se consiste et comporte] bounded on one side by the city, and on the other by the lot No. 2, being a part of the estate belonging to the persons calling themselves Jesuits, &c.

Proceeding of sale of the Jesuits.

In the year 1763, on the 14th day of July, in the same year, we, the undersigned, councillor of the King, inspector of the roads, and surveyor general of the province of Louisiana, do declare to all whom it may concern, that, by virtue of the orders of Mr. D'Abbadie, commissary general of the navy, ordonnateur of the said province, rendered the 13th of the present month, by which we were directed to transport ourselves on the habitation of the persons entitling themselves Jesuits, situated above and bordering on the glacis of the fortifications of the city of New Orleans, there to examine the titles and papers relative to the possessions of the aforesaid persons, and to survey the lands, which we found ought to contain thirty-two arpents of front on the river, "de face sur le fleuve St. Louis," according to the said titles, papers, plans, and minutes, "procès verbeaux" of survey, hereinafter mentioned, made by the late Mr. Broutin, the former engineer, then charged with the surveys of the colony: to wit, twenty arpents of front, measured on the perpendicular of fifty four degrees from north to west, running to the depth of fifty arpents, which shall, however, be reduced to forty arpents, in case it should anticipate on the lands not yet conceded, or to be conceded; which lands M. de Bienville, the former Commandant and Governor of the said province, has sold on those conditions, and in alodium, [franc aleu.] to the persons calling themselves Jesuits, by an act passed on the 11th April, 1736, in the presence of André Chavre, notary, au Chatelet de Paris.

Also, five arpents in front, [en face.] measured on a straight and oblique line, running along the said river, and above and bordering on the twenty mentioned above, sold to them with the same depth, with the same rights and privileges as the preceding, by the late M. de Noyau, lieutenant in the service of the King, attorney in fact for the said Mr. de Bienville, by a private act, dated January the 22d, 1729.

Also, seven arpents of front, seven arpents measured, as adjoining, and above the five preceding arpents, and with the same depth, which the said Jesuits had purchased from Mr. Breton, comptroller of the navy, and first councillor of the Superior Council of this province, by an act passed on the — of December, 1743; forming, together with the preceding acquisition, the totality of thirty-two arpents of front, mentioned by the said Broutin, in the process verbal of the 30th December, 1728, of the 19th January, 1736, and of the 18th and 23d December, 1745.

Conformably to the different operations delineated on the plan made by him on the 19th June, 1736, and the 23d December, 1745, &c.

Page 148.—"In the year 1763, the 24th November last, we, councillor of the King, inspector of roads, and surveyor of the province of Louisiana, do declare, that, in virtue of orders given by the commander general of the said province, we went with Mr. Pijon, L. L. on the lands which had belonged to the Jesuits, situated above and bordering on the fortifications, for the purpose, at the request of Mr. la Tussiere, to divide the thirty-two arpents of land mentioned in our process verbal of the 22d of July last, the judicial sale of which took place on the — following, at the greffe of this city, to wit:

"Seven arpents of front, on fifty of depth, for the first lot, bordering on the glacis of the said fortification; adjudged the aforesaid day to Mr. Pradel, lieutenant in the navy, commanding the King's ship Le Solomon, then in this harbor.

2. "Five arpents of front, with the same depth, for the second lot, situated above the first, and bordering on the same, adjudged the same day to Mr. Larrivée, merchant.

"Five arpents of front, with the same depth, for the third lot above, and bordering the second, adjudged the same day to Mr. Grenier, merchant.

"Five arpents in front, by the same in depth, for the fourth lot, adjoining to and above the third, adjudged the same day to Mr. Bonrepos, an ancient officer of infantry.

"Five arpents in front, on the same depth, for the fifth lot, adjoining to and above the fourth, adjudged to Mr. Sollet, citizen of this town.

"Five arpents in front, by the same in depth, for the sixth and last lot, adjoining to and above the fifth, adjudged to Messrs. Durand, brothers, merchants. All purchasers summoned to be present at the operation of surveying, distribution, and delivery of the said parcels of land; at which they were all present, either in person or by their attorneys, viz: Mr. Amelet, knight of St. Louis, engineer-in-chief of the King, acting for Mr. Pradel the son, purchaser of the second lot, late belonging to Mr. Larrivée, after the said adjudication, as appears by the act passed between them, dated the —, Mr. Lamotte acting for Mr. Grenier, absent."

[Then follows the process verbal of the placing of the posts to show the direction of the lateral line next the city, and the record then proceeds.]

"On which line, and at the point D, we have, on the 28th of the present month, replaced our instrument six toises above the said point A, to ascertain with precision the extent of front of those lands on the river St. Louis; the distribution of which, at right angles, could not take place, according to the dispositions of the first plan; which circumstance compelled us to make new ones, still relative, however, to those mentioned in our process verbal of the 22d July last, by two straight lines running along the river; the first of which, D E, formed an angle of one hundred and eleven degrees, with that of the said boundary of sixty degrees."

The record then sets forth the geometrical operations for dividing the six several lots. and that after having measured off the first and second lots, which then both belonged to Mr. Pradel, "they opened an angle of one hundred and seventeen degrees thirty minutes with the said line of conduct, [ligne de conduite.] to direct the limits between this habitation (now that of Gravier) and No. 3."

After describing minutely this operation of division, it concludes thus: "And as there remains on the upper end of the land late belonging to the Jesuits, according to the plan of our operations, a tongue of land forming the figure of an isosceles triangle, comprehended between the line of boundary G I L and the dotted line G K, it shall remain between these limits to be used as need may require hereafter.

"In testimony whereof, we have agreed to and signed the present process verbal with the said sieur Pijon, and the said purchasers, or their attorneys aforesaid in the former part of this record, to have the proper effect, and serve as a field-book [papier terrier] annexed to the plan of survey, and of the distribution of the said land into the six lots above mentioned.

"Done at New Orleans, the 22d of the month of December, in the year 1763.

---	--

"I require, in the name of the King, that the present process verbal should be homologated; that it may have its full and entire effect; that the decree which may be pronounced may serve as letters of possession irrevocable and incontestable to the purchasers of the six lots of the land belonging to the former company of Jesuits.

"LA FRENIERE."

NEW ORLEANS, April 24, 1764.

"The Superior Council of the province of Louisiana having seen the process verbal of the division of the lands of the ci-devant company calling themselves Jesuits, made out by Mr. Olivier Devezin, and the conclusions of the procureur general of the King, the council hath ordered, and hereby doth order, that the said process verbal shall be executed according to its form and tenor, and shall remain homologated, as is above stated.

D'Abbadie, Zukel, De Kernion Aubry,	Faucault, Marrenel, Murhuise, and De Amney.

NOTE B.

NOUVELLE ORLEANS, Mars 10, 1794.

MONSIEUR: Etant de la dernière conséquence que la levée de vos terres soit dans le meilleur état, vous prendriez des mesures avec Monsieur de la Barree, régidior perpétuelle, alguazil mayor, pour raccommoder la dite levée, à commencer de l'endroit où mon dit sieur de la Barree vous indiquera.

Votre exactitude reconnue ne me laisse pas la moindre doute du zèle avec lequel vous remplirez cette ordre.

Je suis, monsieur, votre serviteur,

LE BARON DE CARONDELET.

A Monsieur GRAVIER.

[TRANSLATION.]

NEW ORLEANS, March 10, 1794.

SIR: It being of the greatest consequence that the levee of your land should be in the best condition, you will please to take measures with M. de la Barree, perpetual register and alguazil mayor, to repair the said levee, beginning at the place which the said M. de la Barre will point out to you.

Your known punctuality leaves me no doubt of the zeal with which you will obey this order.

I am, sir, your servant,

THE BARON DE CARONDELET.

To Mr. GRAVIER.

NOTE C.

L'an mil sept cent soixante-trois, le quatrième jour du mois d'Avril, dix heures du matin, en vertu de l'arrêt du conseil supérieur de la province de la Louisiane, en date de neuf Juillet dernier, rendu sur la requête de M. la Frenière, procureur général du Roi, portant et ordonnant que tous les biens, meubles et immeubles, appartenans aux ci-devant soi-disant Jésuites, seront judiciairement vendus par-devant Monsieur Foucault, contrôleur de la marine, et second juge au conseil supérieur de cette province, commissaire nommé en cette partie, et en présence de mon dit sieur le procureur général du Roi, pour les deniers en provenant être mis sous la main du Roi; en conséquence de quoi, nous, Denis Nicholas Foucault, contrôleur de la marine et second juge au conseil supérieur de la province de la Louisiane, commissaire nommé en cette partie, en présence de M. le procureur général du roi, et avec le greffier et l'huissier du dit conseil, nous sommes transportés à la barre de la cour, à l'effet de procéder pour la première fois à recevoir les criées et enchères pour parvenir à la vente et adjudication au plus offrant et dernier enchérisseur, d'une terre située de l'autre bord du fleuve, en remontant, distant de cette ville d'une lieue et demie, appartenante aux dits ci-devant soi-disant Jésuites, ou étant, vu le procès-verbal des publications et affiches publiées et apposées, en conséquence, dans tous les lieux et endroits ordinaires et accoutumés de cette ville de la Nouvelle Orléans, par Marin Lenormand, huissier, en date du vingt-quatre, Juillet dernier, et s'y étant trouvé nombre d'enchérisseurs, nous avons fait publier et proclamer à haute et intelligible voix, par l'huissier crieur, que l'on allait tout présentement procéder pour la première fois à recevoir les criées et enchères pour parvenir à la vente et adjudication au plus offrant et dernier enchérisseur, d'une terre ayant six arpents de terre de face sur la profondeur ordinaire de quarante arpents, la limite courant au nord et sud pliens, située à une lieue et demie de cette ville, de l'autre bord du fleuve, en remontant, circonstances et dépendances, sans en rien réserver ni retenir de fond en comble, tel et ainsi que toute se poursuite et comporte, attendant d'un côté à l'habitation de la dame veuve Dauphin, et de l'autre côté attenante à une pareille terre appartenante aux dits ci-devant Jésuites, où tout personnes seront reçues à y enchérir aux clauses et conditions par l'adjudicataire, de payer le prix de son adjudication dans huit mois du jour d'icelle, en donnant bonne et suffisante caution, et de payer comptant tous les frais faits pour parvenir à la dite adjudication entre les mains du greffier, avant d'être mis en possession. Et après avoir attendu jusqu'à midi sonné, sans que personne se soit présenté pour faire leur dite enchère, nous, commissaire soussigné et soussigné, du consentement de mon dit sieur le procureur général du Roi, avons ordonné et ordonnons que nouvelles affiches seront publiées et apposées dans tous les lieux ordinaires et accoutumés de cette ville, le Dimanche, quatorzième du présent mois d'Avril, pour en venir au Vendredi, dix-neuf du dit mois, à dix heures du matin, auquel jour il sera procédé à la deuxième criée et enchère, et où toutes personnes seront reçues à y faire leurs dites enchères aux susdites clauses et conditions; et ont signé le jour, mois, et an que dessus.

NOTE D.

NOUVELLE ORLEANS, le 10 Decembre, 1807.

Je, soussigné, arpenteur député pour le compté d'Orléans, certifie n'avoir jamais vu aucune concession depuis plusieurs années que j'exerce dans le compté, aucune concession dis-je, soit Française ou Espagnole, située sur le fleuve, qui ne fut bornée par le fleuve, et que toutes ces concessions disent pour exprimer leur étendue "tant d'arpens de face," ou "tant d'arpens de face au fleuve, et tant de profondeur," que la manière de mesurer cette étendue se fait en tirant une parallèle au fleuve, (autant qu'il est possible,) ou par une perpendiculaire à l'un des cotés, mais que cette ligne ne désigne jamais la limite de la face des habitations; que les bornes que l'on a planté ne sont jamais au commencement de la ligne de côté que pour désigner la direction que doit avoir cette ligne, ou l'air de vent qu'elle doit courir, et que jamais on n'a planté des bornes pour marquer la ligne de face. En foi de quoi, j'ai delivré le présent certificat.

NEW ORLEANS, December 12, 1807.

I, the subscriber, deputy surveyor of the United States for the county of Orleans, certify that during many years that I have pursued my profession in this country, I have never seen any concession or grant, either French or Spanish, of any lands on the Mississippi, which was not bounded by the river itself; and that all those concessions or grants, to designate such boundary, use these expressions: "so many acres in front," [de face] or "so many acres of front to the river," [face au fleuve] by so many in depth; that the manner of measuring this extent is done, by drawing a parallel as nearly as possible to the river, or by a perpendicular one of the sides; but that this line never designates the front limit of the plantation; that the landmarks, which are placed in the beginnings of the said lines, are intended only to show the directions which those lines ought to have; but that boundaries are never placed to mark the extent of the land towards the river. In witness whereof, I have given this certificate.

LAFON, Dep. Sur.

Nous, soussigné, ci-devant capitaine de grade des armées, arpenteur royal et particulier de la province de la Louisiane pour S. M. Cath., certifions et déclarons, que pendant vingt-huit années que nous avons exercés l'emploi d'arpenteur général de cette province, qu'il a toujours été en notre connaissance que les concessions des terres sur les rives du Mississippi prennent leurs faces sur le bord du fleuve même, et où viennent au Batture les eaux lorsqu'elles sont dans leur plus grande croissance. Quant aux bornes fixées pour limiter les terrains, n'étant uniquement destinées qu'à marquer la direction des limites ou airs de vent, elles ont toujours été plantées à une distance arbitraire, pourvu, néanmoins, que la voie publique qui doit regner sur les rives du Mississippi ne fût point obstruée.

En foi de quoi, j'ai delivré la présente, à la Nouvelle Orléans, le 17 Mars, 1808.

CHARLES TRUDEAU.

[TRANSLATION.]

I, the subscriber, heretofore captain by brevet in the royal army, royal surveyor for the province of Louisiana for His Catholic Majesty, do certify and declare, that during twenty-eight years that I have performed the functions of surveyor general of this province, it has always been in my knowledge that the concessions of lands on the borders of the Mississippi have their fronts on the edge of the river itself, and when its waters are at their greatest height. As to the boundaries placed to limit the lots, being only destined to mark the direction of the limits, or the point of the compass, they have always been placed at an arbitrary distance; taking care that the public road, which ought to go along the bank of the Mississippi, should not be obstructed thereby.

In testimony whereof, I have delivered these presents at New Orleans, 17th March, 1808.

CHARLES TRUDEAU.

NOTE E.

Testimony of Laveau Trudeau, Recorder of the City of New Orleans, and formerly Surveyor General of the Province.

That Governor Bienville ceded to the Jesuits the property now in controversy, upon a perpetual rent; that after the confiscation of the property of the Jesuits by the King, the lands were divided into smaller divisions, and two lots were sold by the officers of Government to Madame Pradel, two to Mr. Duplessis, and the sixth to Mr. Durand; has seen the plan of the ground, with the divisions, made by Mr. Olivier, surveyor general at that time, which were delivered to him at the time of the conquest of the Spaniards; that he believes all the surveys and plans were destroyed by the fire which took place in 1788; has never seen the concessions to the Jesuits, but has seen the original plan of the grant. That, since his earliest recollection, the road ran as it now does, as far as Madame Delor's; is now seventy-three years of age, and is a native of this country; that the concessions or grants at that time were always face au fleuve; that, since the purchase of Madame Pradel and of Bertrand Gravier, he stated to him that he had fifty acres in depth; that he remembers that at the time of the sale of the Jesuits' property, vessels came to the levee opposite to Madame Delor's; that there was then no Batture from thence to the city; speaks of some time in 1762 or 1763; that the concession to the Jesuits he believes was like all the others, that is, from the river at its greatest height, according to the instructions given to the surveyors. Knows the plan produced signed by him the 1st April, 1788; the first sketch or draught which he made at the request of Bertrand Gravier; the faubourg has since been extended by Bertrand Gravier in depth; that the lots in front, marked as sold, and the square since added are in the hand-writing of Bertrand Gravier; that a Batture then existed, and was considerable in the upper part of the faubourg; that he measured it at that time at the upper end, and laid it down accordingly; but that towards town he laid it down according to his judgment; that at the extremity of the line marked on the map he came to the water; the descent was towards the river, and gradual; the Batture was formed as all others are, by the natural deposit of the river; in high waters it was covered to the levee; that surveys were always regulated according to his instructions, by which he understood the royal road or public highway; the Batture he always considered as an alluvion; and, although it did not form any part of the depth, yet he always considered it as much the property of the proprietor as the rest; that he knows also the plan produced, being the second one, which he made immediately after the other, which was merely a sketch, with the additions made by Bertrand Gravier; that he made it by order of Bertrand Gravier; has frequently spoken to Bertrand Gravier on the subject of the alluvion, and particularly at the time of making the last plan; always answered that by selling the front lots he considered himself as freed from the expense of the road and levee, and that he had no right to sell the alluvion; that he, the witness, always thought differently. That there were many disputes about the reparations of the levee in the time of the Baron de Carondelet; that he recollects three facts; that Mr. Poeyfarré was put in possession of a lot marked No. 7, on the last plan, marked No. 2, with initials; that he discovered that he had advanced twenty-eight feet, nearly up to the road, when he told Poeyfarré that Gravier would take as much in the rear; that Poeyfarré told him that Gravier had abandoned the Batture [devanture] to him, and afterward seeing Gravier, he said it was true, and if he wished it he would go to the office; that the witness understood by devanture, not only the space between the lot and the road, but the whole extension of the Batture in front; that his mother-in-law had purchased the lots numbered twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty, at the corner of the street now called Girod; that a small angle being left between her lots and the street Girod, the witness applied to Mr. Gravier for its purchase, and at the same time requested that he would sell Madame Trudeau the devanture opposite those lots, to which Bertrand replied that he would not sell it, as he had abandoned it to the proprietors of the lots fronting the river. Being called upon to establish the lines of the lots No. 66 and 69, on the borders of Mr. Faucher's land, Mr. P. Faucher also solicited B. Gravier to sell the Batture in front, when Gravier answered, that he would not sell, as he had abandoned it, but he would permit Faucher to enjoy it. Witness told Gravier that he thought he had a right to sell that property; to which he answered that he would have nothing to do with it, that he, however, might measure it off for Mr. Faucher; that when Mr. Gravier answered that he had abandoned it, his impression was that it was to the faubourg generally. That the latter circumstance took place in 1792, 1793, or 1794; does not particularly recollect.

NOTE F.

In Spain the Justinian code is declared to be the common law of the kingdom, which is to decide in all cases where the edicts are silent. This appears not only from the practice of citing from that code, but among a number of other authorities, by the following:

Gom. in leges Tauri page 4, No. 1.—"In this kingdom, in the decision of cases, first and above all we are ruled by the laws of Toro; afterwards, in their order by the ordinances and edicts of this kingdom, and the laws of the Partidas; although usages and customs are not prohibited, but afterwards, where these are deficient, we must determine according to the common law of the Roman juriconsults and the Emperors."

By referring, therefore, to these sources, we discover the law of Spain on the subject of alluvion, and, I believe, without the slightest ambiguity, establish the following positions:

1st. That the bank of a navigable river is, to the water's edge, the private property of the owner of the adjacent soil, though the public are entitled to its use for the purposes of navigation.

2d. That the bank comprehends all the land down to the usual summer channel of a river, but is not affected by a periodical or accidental swell of the river.

3d. That, when the land shall increase, either by alluvion or the retiring of the water, the space thus gained becomes the property of the proprietor of the original soil, but that the public retain their use of the new bank for the purposes of navigation.

4th. That the interposition of a public road does not form any impediment to the acquisition of this right.

5th. That when an alluvion is once formed, its future increase belongs to the proprietor of the first alluvion.

ROMAN LAW—POINT I.

Dig. lib. 41, tit. 1, 30. § 1.—"Celsus the son says, "If a tree grows on the bank of a river which is opposite to my land, the tree is mine, because the soil itself is my private property, though the use of it is understood to be in the public; and, therefore, when the river is dried up, it shall belong to the adjoining proprietors, because the public has no longer the use of it."

2 Ins. tit. 1, § 5.—"The use of banks as well as of rivers, by the law of nations, is public, and any one has a right to moor vessels to them, by ropes to the trees growing thereon; to deposit their lading there, as well as to navigate the river; but the property thereof belongs to those to whose land they join; for which cause the trees growing thereon belong to them."

SPANISH LAW—POINT I.

3 Partidas, law 6, tit. 28.—"The rivers, and ports, and public ways belong to all men in common, so that strangers may use them as well as inhabitants. And although the banks of rivers belong, as to the dominion, to those to whose estates they are joined, yet notwithstanding this, every man may use them, tying their vessels to the trees which grow thereon, mooring their ships and depositing their sails and merchandise thereon, and the fishermen may also place their fish there, and sell them, and dry their nets, and use the shores for all such things as belong to their trade."

Ib. law 7.—"All the trees which are on the banks of the rivers belong to those who have the ground adjoining to the banks, and they may cut them, or cause them to be cut, or do with them what they please."

POINT II.

Dig. lib. 43, tit. 12, § 5.—"A bank, properly defined, is that which contains the river in the natural course of its waters; but it does not change its banks when it is at times swelled, either by showers or by the sea, or by any other cause, for no one has ever yet said that the Nile, which covers Egypt by its increase, has thereby changed its banks, but when it is reduced to its usual height the banks of its channel may be diked in. But if it shall have naturally risen as to obtain a permanent increase by the confluence of another river, or by any other means, without doubt, in that case, we should say it had changed its banks, in like manner as if, having changed its bed, it should begin to run in another course."

Ib.—"If a river shall overflow, but not make to itself a new bed, then that is not public which is thus overflowed."

POINT III.

C. lib. 7. tit. 41.—"Although it may not be lawful to change the course of the river by making another, by manual labor, yet it is not prohibited to guard its banks against the force of a rapid river; and when having left its former bed, it shall make another for itself, the land which it surrounds shall belong to the first proprietor; but if this take place by degrees, and is thus applied to the other part, that, by the law of alluvion, shall belong to him whose land is thus increased."

Ib. § 3, Ed. Theod. & Valent.—"By this law, which we sanction as perpetual, we order that whatever is acquired to the proprietor by alluvion (either in Egypt by the Nile, or in the other provinces by other rivers) shall neither be sold by the Treasury, nor demanded by any other, nor separately estimated, nor burthened with duties."

Dig. lib. 41, tit. 1, 7, § 1 et Inst. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 20.—"Whatever the river adds to our land is ours by natural law; that shall be considered as added by alluvion, which has increased by such slow degrees that we do not know how much, and what particular time it was added; but if the force of the river shall detach a part of thy field, and add it to mine, it shall remain thy property."

POINT III.—Spanish Authorities.

3 Partidas, law 26.—"Rivers* swell sometimes so that they take away and diminish the inheritances that are situate on their banks, and they give to and increase others that are on the opposite side. Therefore, we say, that whatever is carried off by the river by little and little, so that the quantity cannot be perceived because it is not taken off in a body, this shall be gained by the owner of that inheritance to which it is added."

Ib. law 31.—"Rivers sometimes change the places in which they used to run, making to themselves a new course, and leaving dry the places where they formerly flowed; and whereas contestations may arise who ought to have the part that is thus left dry, we say it belongs to those whose inheritances adjoin, each one taking a part according to his front on the river; and those through whose land it begins to run anew shall lose the ownership thereof, for the space which it covers, which from that time shall be of the same nature with the other place over which it used to flow, and shall be changed into public property like the river."

POINT IV.

Dig. lib. 41, tit. 1, § 38.—"Attius had a field on the public road; beyond the road was the river and the land of Lucius Titus; the river, by little and little, encroached and took away the land which lay between the road and the river, and afterwards the road itself; afterwards, by degrees, it receded, and by means of alluvion again occupied its former bed. On this case he answers—when the river took away the land and the public way, the increase on the other side the river belonged to him whose lands were there; afterwards when by little and little it retired, it took it away again from him whose lands had been increased, and added to him whose lands were beyond the road, because his land was nearest the river; that, however, which belongs to the public [the road] was not acquired by any one. Nor was the road (he says) any impediment to prevent the land which was made beyond the road from becoming the property of Attius."

Ib. 30, § 3.—"Alluvion restores that land which the force of the river hath taken away; therefore, if the land which was between the public way and the river be occupied by the river, (whether this happen by little and little or not) and it be restored at once by the retiring of the river, it belongs to the former proprietor. For rivers perform the office of public assessors; they adjudge private property to the public, and public property to private persons."

POINT V.

Dig. 41, 1, 56.—"An island arose in the river opposite the front of my land, so that its length did not exceed the front of my property; afterwards, by degrees, it increased and extended itself opposite the front of my upper and lower neighbors; I ask whether the increase is mine, because it is added to my property, or whether it is the right of him to whom it would have belonged if it had first arisen at the extremity of its present length?"

"Proculus answers: The river, in which you state the island to have risen in such manner that it does not exceed the extent of your front, if it has the right of alluvion, and the island in the beginning was nearer your land than the other shore, the whole is yours; although it hath so happened that the island hath extended opposite the part of your upper and lower neighbors, or even though it should extend so as to be nearer the land of him who possesses the opposite shore."

NOTE G.

AFFIDAVITS OF LA ROCHE AND SEGUR.

La Roche, being duly sworn, doth depose and say, that, in the year seventeen hundred and ninety-five, and for some time previous thereto, Laurent Segur, the father-in-law of this deponent, had a contract for supplying the royal navy of Spain with masts; that in the spring of the said year, a very large raft of masts having come down the river, and that part of the shore below the city where they had been usually placed being very much encumbered, the said Segur desired the deponent to go to the Governor (then the Baron de Carondelet) to get his directions where he should deposit the said masts.

That the deponent accordingly went to the Baron de Carondelet with Mr. Lovio, the minister of marine, who after hearing the statement of the case, directed the deponent to go to Bertrand Gravier, and request him in his (the Governor's) name, to give permission to lay said masts on the Batture in front of the faubourg; adding that, if Gravier refused, he would endeavor to find some means of making him consent.

That the deponent accordingly went to Gravier with the Governor's message, who readily consented, and the masts were accordingly placed on the Batture, where they remained for a long time, at least eighteen months.

And this deponent further saith, that some time after the period above spoken of, and as he thinks in the year seventeen hundred and ninety-eight, Bertrand Gravier being then dead, he was again sent on a similar message to Governor Gayosa, then Governor of the Province, who directed the deponent to go to John Gravier, the present proprietor, and ask his permission to lay up the masts on his Batture, which the deponent did. Gravier consented, and the masts were accordingly placed on the Batture opposite to Mr. Eva's, the captain of the port, and from thence upwards.

And the deponent further saith, that Bertrand Gravier had for a number of years a very large brick-kiln, and that he always took the earth for the same from the said Batture, and from no other place.

Laurent Segur, being duly sworn, deposeth and saith, that he sent the above deponent La Roche to the Governors Gayosa and Carondelet, at the several periods and for the purposes mentioned in the preceding deposition, and that the answers then reported to him by the said La Roche, as coming from the Baron de Carondelet, Governor Gayosa, Bertrand Gravier, and John Gravier, perfectly accord with the statement in the above deposition.

Opinion on the case of the alluvion land, or Batture, near New Orleans.

I have read and considered, with great attention, the opinion of Mr. P. Derbigny on the subject of the claim of the United States to the alluvion land near New Orleans, known under the denomination of the Jesuits' Batture. I have also read a printed pamphlet on the same side, entitled "Examination of the judgment rendered in the cause between Jean Gravier and the city of New Orleans."

On the other side, I have read a printed pamphlet, by Edward Livingston, Esquire, entitled "Examination of the title of the United States to the land called the Batture." I have read, also, a variety of deeds, official papers, and other authentic documents relating to the subject, but not necessary to be here enumerated.

I have considered the whole, and investigated the subject with all the attention, care, and industry that I am capable of, and am now proceeding to state the opinion which my researches have led me to form.

In order to come to a right understanding of this case, it must be premised that Jean Gravier, of the city of New Orleans, is possessed of a decree of the Superior Court of the Orleans Territory, which is a court of dernier resort, and whose decisions are not subject either to appeal or revision, by which he is declared to be in lawful possession of the Batture or alluvion in question,* and quieted therein against the claims of the corporation of New Orleans, who alone at that time had or claimed an adverse possession.

The said decree not only recognises his right of possession, but also his title to the alluvion in controversy, as incident to an adjacent estate, title to which was not even disputed by the corporation who contended against him.†

It must be premised, also, as it has been stated to me, that the said decree was carried into full execution, and the party put into actual and full possession of the said Batture by the proper officers of the said court, and continued in the said possession for several months, until he was disturbed by the effect of the measures which the Executive thought proper to take, and which were announced by the President in his message to Congress of the 7th of March last.

Those measures were taken, as the President states, to prevent, until a decision should take place, any change in the state of things; which, I think, must be understood to mean in the state of the property, not in the relative state of the parties, already fixed by a competent authority, and which could not be changed but by a superior judicial decree.

Under these circumstances, I conceive that the party claiming under Jean Gravier is still to be considered as the lawful possessor of the land in controversy, and that his title to the property, sanctioned as it is by the judgment of a Supreme Court of judicature, is to stand good against all the world, until a better is shown.

If I am correct in this position, the question now to be decided will be considerably narrowed; for there will remain only to be considered whether the United States have a better title to the contested alluvion than that which has been solemnly adjudged to be in Jean Gravier.

I have thought it necessary to make these preliminary observations, because Mr. Derbigny, in his opinion, has not appeared to view the subject in the same light, but has argued as much from what he conceives to be the weakness of Mr. Gravier's title, as from the strength of that which he endeavors to support, which I conceive to be contrary to all the rules which the law has wisely established for similar cases.

Then, as the claim of the United States appears only to rest on the prerogative which it is alleged they derive from the French kings to claim and have all alluvion lands, it seems that it will be sufficient for me to inquire into the grounds of that supposed prerogative, to examine whether it ever existed, and, if it did exist, whether it has become a prerogative of the United States; nevertheless, I will not confine myself to this single point, but I shall take and consider successively all the several grounds on which Mr. Derbigny has established his opinion in favor of the national claim.

Those grounds are five, and are stated by Mr. Derbigny himself in the following words:

1st. Alluvion on navigable rivers belonged to the King of France.

2d. The plantation bordering on the limits of the city of New Orleans was sold by the King of France in 1763, when the alluvion situated in front of the land was already in being.

3d. Between the alluvion and the land sold lay a royal road, the same that still exists, and a levee, both which were then, and have still remained, public property.

4th. The alluvion in question has never ceased to be a royal property, the enjoyment of which the French and Spanish Governments at all times left to the public, and on which they constantly hindered private individuals from encroaching.

5th. Neither Jean Gravier, nor those from whom he derived his title, ever were in possession of the alluvion; and Bertrand Gravier himself, at the time of his settling

* "It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the petitioner be quieted in his lawful enjoyment of the Batture or alluvion described in his petition, against the claims and pretensions of the defendants."

† "The title of Bertrand Gravier, the ancestor of the plaintiff, to the tract of land on which the faubourg St. Mary is situated, has not been disputed; but it has been contended that this tract was bounded by the highway. The court, however, are of opinion that, according to the evidence exhibited, and the general usage of the country, this tract of land was bounded by the river Mississippi. From an examination of the authorities, the court are of opinion that, according to the civil and Spanish laws, the right of alluvion is incident to land which is bounded by a navigable river, and that these laws must form the rule of decision in the present case."

a suburb in front of his plantation, declared that he had no claim to the alluvion.

I shall consider each of these positions separately.

FIRST POSITION OF MR. DERBIGNY.

"Alluvions on navigable rivers belonged to the King."

Before we enter upon this subject we must take a cursory view of the different laws by which France was governed before the late revolution.

In the first place, there were a great variety of customs, which, like the common law of England, were founded on and grew out of the feudal system. There were the customs of provinces, of lesser districts, and even of single towns, all or most of which, in ancient times, had been feudal sovereignties. I have counted seventy-five of those customs, and I believe there were several more. Like the common law, they remained an oral and unwritten tradition until the year 1453, when Charles VII., by an edict which was carried into execution, ordered that they should all be committed to writing and reduced to a text. It is remarkable, that this was done about the same time when Littleton wrote his celebrated book of Tenures, which from its intrinsic merit, has by universal consent become as it were the text of the English customary law.

There were, however, some parts of France, particularly in the south, where lay the most ancient and most flourishing provinces of the Roman empire, in which there existed no such customs, except here and there in particular districts. Those provinces were governed by the Roman civil or imperial law, and were called on that account Pays de droit écrit, or countries governed by the written law, as the civil law was called in contradistinction to the customs, which, as has been observed, had been for a long while traditional.

In the pays coutumiers, or provinces where the customs prevailed, the lands were held by feudal tenure, and there the maxim prevailed, "nulle terre sans seigneur," no land without a feudal lord. In the other parts they continued to be held allodially, as they were under the Roman Emperors, that is, in full and absolute property, and without any kind of feudal subjection. This species of tenure was called in French by the expressive name of franc aleu, that is to say, free alluvion, or free tenure.

Paramount to these several codes were the edicts and ordinances of the successive sovereigns, duly registered in the courts of parliament, and whose authority extended all over the kingdom. These controlled the customs and the imperial law, as the acts of parliament in England control the decisions of the common law, which, with respect to them, is considered as lex sub graviore lege.

But in the same manner that the common law of England, notwithstanding this theoretical arrangement, has often controlled the parliamentary statutes while pretending only to expound them, so the civil law in France, in many instances, controlled as well the provincial customs as the edicts of the sovereigns. As it was taught in all the universities of the kingdom, while the knowledge of the edicts and customs could only be acquired by private reading or professional practice, all the lawyers throughout France necessarily became civilians, and the imperial code came to be considered as a supplementary law, which, from the acknowledged equity of its principle, was obligatory in all cases for which the customs and royal edicts had not expressly provided, and as the medium through which those customs and edicts in all doubtful cases were expounded and explained. The civil law, in short, was the common law of the land, and is frequently called le droit commun in the works of the most eminent writers.

Such were the laws by which the kingdom of France was governed, and the manner in which they operated. I shall speak in another place of the legislative system of the colonies. And now considering the subject merely as it is related to France proper, I shall examine how the law stood there with respect to the point in controversy.

On the subject of alluvions and other accessions of land by the receding of waters, the Roman law is very full, systematic, and clear. It is to be found in the 20th, 21st, 22d, and 23d sections of the second book of the first title of the Institutes.

1. The 20th section, De Alluvione, defines alluvion land to be that which is produced by the imperceptible decrease of waters. It declares it to be, by the law of nations, jure gentium, the property of the owner of the adjacent ground.

2. The 21st § De Vi Fluminis, relates to land which, by the sudden violence or impetuosity of the waters of a river, is detached from one estate and joined to another. That is declared still to belong to the owner of the estate from which it was severed.

3. The 22d § De Insulis, relates to islands rising in the sea or in a river, and is not properly connected with our present purpose.

4. The 23d § De Alveo, relates to land which is formed by a river abandoning its bed entirely, and running into a new channel. Such land is declared to belong to the owners of the adjacent estates.

We subjoin the text of the two first and of the last of the above four sections, taken from Harris's Translation of the Institutes, page 7.*

These principles, previous to the making of the edicts which will be presently mentioned, were considered as the law throughout France, except in those places where the customs had expressly directed it otherwise.

On this, as on many other points, the customs were various. Some gave alluvions to the King; others to the feudal lords; some, as for instance the custom of Normandy, adopted the rules of the civil law; while others were entirely silent on the subject, and among these was the custom of Paris, which, as we shall see by and by, was the law of the colonies. The chasm was therefore supplied by the civil law, and hence we find that all the commentators on the custom (at least all that I have been able to see) lay down its principles on the subject of alluvions, as being law under the custom. Among those we distinguish Monsieur Dumoulin, whose name in France is equal in veneration to that of Lord Coke in England, and who, in 1539, published an excellent commentary on the feudal matters of the custom of Paris, and Monsieur Claude de Ferriere, professor of law in the university of Paris, who, more than a century afterwards, wrote another much esteemed commentary on the said custom. See the quotations in Mr. Livingston's "Address," page 31.

Such was the law understood to be in France, until Louis XIV. issued those three edicts of 1683, 1693, and 1710, which Mr. Derbigny has referred to in his opinion. Indeed he issued four, all nearly of the same tenor; the first of them, which Mr. Derbigny takes no notice of, was made in 1668, and is mentioned in 4th Denizart, 295, No. 8, under the word rivière. Four successive laws to the same effect, in the short period of forty-two years, show how unpopular those edicts were, and how difficult it was to carry them into execution, even in the reign of the all-powerful Louis. Denizart informs us, vol. 4, p. 295, No. 9, that they were modified with regard to Brittany and Languedoc, on the remonstrances of the states of those provinces, the only ones in France who enjoyed a popular representation. They were, in fact, merely fiscal edicts, the object of which was to provide pecuniary resources for the most arbitrary and the most extravagant King that France ever had, and no such edict can be found at any period antecedent or subsequent to the time when those were made. Mr. Derbigny has stated very correctly the preamble and a part of the enacting clause of the edict of 1693, on which he relies as being worded the most strongly in his favor; but he has omitted the concluding part, which shows, in the clearest manner, the intent and object for which the law was made. I shall state the whole in a few words.

The King, after declaring himself to be by the law of the realm (a law which had never been heard of before) the lawful owner of the bed of navigable rivers, and * § 20. And further: that ground which a river hath added to your estate by alluvion (i. e. by an imperceptible increase) is properly acquired by you according to the law of nations. And that is said to be added by alluvion which is added in a manner which renders it impossible to judge how much ground is added in the space of each moment of time.

§ 21. But if the impetuosity of a river should sever any part of your estate, and adjoin it to that of your neighbor, it is certain that such part would still continue yours; but, if it should remain for a long time joined to the estate of your neighbor, and the trees which accompanied it shall have taken root in his ground, such trees seem, from the time of their taking root, to be gained and acquired to his estate.

§ 23. If a river, entirely forsaking its natural channel, hath begun to flow elsewhere, the first channel appertains to those who possess the land close to the banks of it, in proportion to the breadth of each man's estate next to such banks: and the new channel partakes of the nature of the river, and becomes public. And if, after some time, the river shall return to its former channel, the new channel commences to be the property of those who possess the lands contiguous to the banks of it.

consequently of all islands, mills, ferries, &c. atterissemens and accroissemens formed by the said rivers, declares that all the holders of atterissemens, accroissemens, alluvions, and islands, shall be quieted in their possessions, that is to say, those whose title is anterior to 1566, on paying into the treasury one year, and all others two years, of their income.*

It is plain, then, that the object of these edicts was not so much to settle or declare the law, as to supply the necessities of an extravagant King, by extorting a composition from the bona fide holders of property, which the existing law (notwithstanding what is said in the preambles of the edicts) clearly warranted to them. Hence they did not receive the willing assent of the nation; but were, as I shall presently show, the object of a constant struggle between the sovereign, or rather between the fiscus, or treasury, and the people.

In other respects, also, those edicts were most oppressive and arbitrary, and such as any other sovereign than Louis XIV. would hardly have ventured upon. For they were a direct violation of a well settled principle in the French law, to wit, that a possession of thirty years amounts to a prescription, and is a good bar against those claims of the crown, which are called casual rights, that is to say, those rights which accrue to the King by accident or chance, such as escheats and the like, unless before the expiration of the thirty years they have been annexed to the domain with the usual formalities. "Among us" (says Ferriere, the son of the one before mentioned, and who like him was professor of law in the university of Paris) "the estates of the domain which are incorporated with the crown are not subject to prescription. But those which are not so incorporated may be prescribed for by thirty years' possession. It is the same with casual rights or profits." † But the King, in that edict of 1693, on which Mr. Derbigny relies, does not appear to have respected any possession, however ancient, nor any title, however solemn, for even those who could show a title or a possession anterior to 1566, more than one hundred years before the publication of the first edict, no matter how far back such title or possession went, were obliged to compound with one year of their income.

Such are the principal features of these royal acts, on which the United States are called upon to found a claim to an estate which has been solemnly adjudged to a citizen by a decree of a competent court—acts, indeed, of the most tyrannical kind, and from which the mind of a free American shrinks with disgust.

The lawyers of France saw them in their proper light, and although they could not get rid of them altogether, as the King's edicts had undoubtedly in France the force and effect of laws, yet they gave them as strict a construction as they could possibly admit of.

It is to be observed that the word alluvion is not to be found in any of those edicts, except in that of 1693, nor even in that is it used in that part of the act in which the King states what is the law of the realm. The only words used are crément or accroissement, and atterissement, which being of a vague and uncertain meaning afford sufficient room for legal construction. Those were defined to mean, not alluvions properly so called, but those other species of accessions which are the subject of the 21st and 23d sections of Justinian's Institutes above mentioned. Accroissement, in the sense of the edicts, was defined to be land which is suddenly transported from one place to another by the violence of the waters of a river, and atterissement the land which is left uncovered when a river suddenly changes its bed altogether, and opens to itself an entire new channel.

"There is, then," says the younger Ferriere, in his commentaries on the 21st section of the Institutes, De Vi Fluminis, "a difference between an alluvion and an accroissement, made by the violence of the waters." After explaining that difference, and the reason thereof, he proceeds thus: "By our French law, when those accroissemens which have been made suddenly are considerable, it is pretended that they must belong to the King, as a kind of waif or derelict, which appears conformable to the royal ordinances by which the islands and atterisements which are found in navigable rivers belong to the King."<sup>24</sup>

† Parmi nous, les biens du domaine incorporés à la couronne sont imprescriptibles. Mais ceux qui n'y sont pas incorporés se prescrivent par trente ans. Item, les droits et profits casuels. 2 Ferriere on the Institutes, 184.

How unpalatable these edicts were to the French jurists appears sufficiently from the language of this writer, who states the King's claim to accroissements, in their narrow legal sense, as a mere pretension of the Government, which he, however, reluctantly acknowledges to be conformable to the royal ordinances.

Commenting on the 23d sect. of the Institutes, De Alveo Fluminis, this author proceeds to define the word atterissement.

"We call, in our French law, atterissement the channel and bed which a river has quitted. These belong to the King," &c.† In his Dictionary of Jurisprudence, verbo Atterissement, he says, [the channel and bed which a river has suddenly quitted—[tout d'un coup abandonné]. And it must be observed that he refers to, and is commenting on, a text of the Roman law, which relates only to the case of a river changing its bed altogether. Therefore there can be no doubt about his meaning.

But when he comes to speak of alluvions properly so called, when commenting on the 20th sect. of the Institutes, by which it will be remembered they are declared to belong to the owners of the adjacent soil, his language is as clear and full as it is short, and he states the French law, that is to say, the general practical law of the land, the Jus Gallicum, as contradistinguished from the Roman law on which he is commenting, and from particular customs, in these few words: "French law—the disposition of this section is observed among us."†

The expression of this professor is peculiarly remarkable, because he not only states his opinion of what the law ought to be, but his knowledge of what it is in practice. "The disposition of this article is observed among us."

Such, then, if we are to credit this eminent professor, was not only the opinion of the learned in France, at the time when he wrote these excellent Commentaries, which he published in the year 1768, just before the possession of Louisiana was delivered to the King of Spain, but the doctrine admitted and recognized by courts of justice. Atterissement and accroissement were given to the King, to satisfy the words of the edicts, but alluvion, properly so called, was held to belong to the subject.

On this point, that alluvions proper are not included within the legal meaning of the edict, as accessions belonging to the sovereign, but remain as they were at the civil law, except in districts where the customs had expressly provided otherwise, all the French authors of respectability, whose works I have had an opportunity to peruse, (one only excepted, Mr. Pothier, of whom I shall speak presently) fully and most unequivocally agree. Were I disposed to swell this opinion with names and quotations it might easily be done, but besides Ferriere, already quoted, I need only mention Denizart, Renousson, Guyot, Henrys, Argentré, and others, whose works are quoted or referred to in Mr. Livingston's Address, and to whose respectable names many others might be added of equal authority; the same doctrine is laid down in all the abridgments and dictionaries of the French law in that immense work, the Repertory, in Denizart's Collections, in Ferriere's Dictionary, and even in the Encyclopædia, which has been brought forward as an authority by Mr. Derbigny himself.

Let us now test this construction of the French jurists by the edicts themselves. None of them except one, that of 1693, make use any where of the word alluvion, a technical term of the common law of the land, which for ages had been known and used, and would have most obviously occurred to the framers of the edicts, had it been their intention to include it within them. There was no legal necessity, therefore, to force it by construction into statutes, which, from their nature and objects, were not such as to require to be liberally construed.

But it is said the word alluvion is expressly mentioned in the edict of 1693, and Mr. Derbigny has chosen it out of the four to support his argument. It would have been more fair, and perhaps more correct, to have chosen the last of all, that of 1710, as the best and surest test of the intention of the Legislature. But we are willing to take the edict of 1693 as if it stood alone, and to examine in what manner the word alluvion is introduced into it.

† Droit Français.—Nous appellons atterissement le canal et le lit que la rivière a d'un coup quitté. 2 Ferriere on the Institutes, 52.

It will be recollected that there are two distinct parts in this edict, the one by which it declares what things or rights the King is entitled to by the law of the land, in which the word alluvion is not contained, the other by which he calls on the holders of certain descriptions of property to come forward and compound with his treasury. Then reducing this edict to the most simple terms, it will in few words read thus: "I, (the King) am the lawful owner of all accroissements and atterissements. I am willing to quiet in their possessions such holders of accroissements atterissements, and alluvions, who shall come forward and compound with me."

Now, would it not be a forced construction to insert the words alluvions in the first member of this sentence; and making the King say "I am the lawful owner of all alluvions," when it appears most clearly that he has avoided saying it?

Nor is it necessary to do it, in order to give effect to the last member of the sentence, for the King might very justly and very legally compound with the holders of certain alluvions without claiming to be the lawful owner of all. For instance, in those provinces where the customs declared alluvions to be the property of the sovereign. There can be no doubt but that the word alluvion was inserted in the second branch of the edict to meet similar cases, and that it was left out of the first that it might not be applied to all cases of alluvion indiscriminately.

But when we consider that the framers of those edicts did not venture to make use of the word alluvion in the two first of those ordinances, that in the third they threw it in this loose manner, and in the fourth again left it out, we must conclude that the sense of the nation on this subject was well understood, and that great and powerful as he was, Louis XIV. thought he had gone far enough in asserting his right to accroissements and atterissements, and was content to leave his subjects in the enjoyment of their favorite right to alluvions.

I do not mean to say that in process of time the officers of the treasury did not endeavor, by a construction of the edicts similar to the one now attempted, to assert and enforce a claim in the sovereign to alluvions. The contrary fact is too well known. From time to time claims of that description were asserted, in some instances were submitted to, and in others resisted with various success. This struggle continued till some years before the revolution, when a celebrated case brought the point before a court of supreme judicature, by whom the controversy was solemnly decided in favor of the subject. When the Napoleon code, which on this subject has explicitly adopted the rules of the Roman law, was laid before the legislative body of France, M. Portalis, counsellor of state, addressed them in a speech in which he took a review of what had taken place in that country concerning the question of alluvions. An extract from his speech will throw considerable light upon the subject.

"This law;" the second title of the second book of the civil code, "puts an end to the great question of alluvions. It decides according to the principles of the Roman law. The principles of feudality had involved this matter in obscurity; it had been pretended that alluvions formed by navigable rivers belonged to the sovereign, and those formed by rivers not navigable to the feudal lords. The owners of adjacent estates were put aside by most of the customs.

"In the provinces governed by the Roman law, those owners had, however, maintained their rights, but it was attempted to despoil them thereof a few years before the revolution; the solemn reclamations of the late parliament of Bourdeaux on this subject are well known; that body repelled, with as much courage as learning, the attempts of the treasury, and the ambitious intrigues of some courtiers, to whom the treasury lent its name.

"It was settled at that period, that alluvions must belong to the riparian owner, according to this natural maxim, that the profit belongs to him who is exposed to suffer the damage, with which riparian propriety is threatened, more than any other.

"The feudal system has disappeared; it can, therefore, no longer present an obstacle to the rights of the riparian owners."<sup>**</sup>

* "Le projet de la loi termine la grande question des alluvions, et décide conformément au droit Romain que l'alluvion, &c.

** "Les principes de la féodalité avaient obscurci cette matière ;

If this statement be correct, what can now signify the opinion of Mr. Pothier, on which Mr. Derbigny so much relies. Mr. Pothier is certainly a writer of great eminence, his opinions are entitled to considerable weight, and he lays it down in the most unqualified manner, that alluvions in France belonged to the King; but amidst such a struggle between the crown and the subject as has been shown to have existed, is it not naturally to be expected that some writer will be found to support the claim of royal prerogative? And if that writer should stand alone amidst a host of learned jurists, on what principle is his single opinion to prevail?

It may be, moreover, observed, that Mr. Pothier resided at Orleans, a district governed by a particular custom, which I have not now before me, but which possibly was one of that greatest number, which entirely excluded the riparious proprietor. If, by the custom of Orleans, alluvions were vested in the sovereign, a natural prejudice in favor of his own local law may have induced Mr. Pothier to extend its principles on the subject of alluvions to the whole kingdom. Thus a Mr. Bourjon, quoted by Denizart, maintained the opinion that the alluvions belonged to the lords of manors, and so, probably, it was by the custom of the country in which he lived. But, says Denizart, neither Mr. Bourjon's opinion, nor that of the authors which he quotes, are followed in practice. [See Mr. Livingston's address, page 49.]

But there must be an end to every discussion on this subject, since the law of France has been settled in this particular by the solemn decision of the parliament of Bordeaux, which Mr. Portalis mentions, and, as I am informed, by the parliament of Paris, to whom the case was referred for revision. And, although France at that time was no longer in possession of Louisiana, yet on the subject of a construction of a French law, the solemn opinion of a supreme bench of French judges is the best evidence that can be obtained; and the United States would hardly claim rights under a French edict which the French courts, construing the same edict, denied their own sovereign to possess.

I now proceed to Mr. Derbigny's second position.

SECOND POSITION OF MR. DERBIGNY.

"The plantation bordering on the limits of the City of New Orleans, was sold by the King of France in 1763, when the alluvion, situate in front of the land, was already in being."

The testimonial proofs of this fact, says Mr. Derbigny, are such as to leave no doubt. I have not seen nor heard the proofs on which Mr. Derbigny relies, but, however respectable his witnesses may be, and however pointedly they may speak, they are at least contradicted by the testimony of Mr. Laveau Trudeau, who, I understand, was surveyor general of the province of Louisiana, under the King of Spain, and is now recorder of the city of New Orleans. He says (see Mr. Livingston's Address, page 56,) "that he recollects that at the time of the sale of the Jesuits' property, (which was in that very year 1763,) vessels came to the levee opposite Madame Delor's, and that there was then no Batture from thence to the city."

On this point, then, taking together Mr. Livingston's and Mr. Derbigny's statements, it appears, not that the proof is perfectly clear on either side, but that there is contradictory testimony, which it is not my province to reconcile.

on avait été jusqu'à prétendre que les alluvions formées par les fleuves et les rivières appartenaient au Prince, lorsqu'il s'agissait d'une rivière ou d'un fleuve navigable; ou au seigneur haut justicier, lorsqu'il s'agissait d'une rivière ou d'un fleuve non navigable. Les propriétaires riverains étaient entièrement écartés par la plus part des coutumes.

"Dans les pays du droit écrit, ces propriétaires s'étaient pourtant maintenus dans leurs droits, mais on voulut les en dépouiller peu d'années avant la révolution; et l'on connait à cet égard des réclamations solennelles de l'ancien parlement de Bourdeaux, qui repoussa avec autant de lumières que de courage les entreprises du fisc et les intrigues ambitieuses de quelques courtisans, donc le fisc n'était que le prête nom.

"Il fut établi à cette époque, que les alluvions devaient appartenir au propriétaire riverain, par cette maxime naturelle, que le profit appartient à celui qui est exposé à souffrir le dommage, dont les propriétés riveraines sont menacées plus qu'aucune autre.

"Le système féodal a disparu; conséquemment, il ne peut plus faire obstacle au droit des riverains."—3me Code Civil, avec les Discours, &c. 49.

But I am willing, for the sake of argument, to take the fact for granted, that there existed a Batture or alluvion in the year 1763. The question then only is, what inference is to be drawn from it?

I take Mr. Derbigny's inference to be, though rather obscurely expressed, that if that Batture or alluvion existed in the year 1763, while the King of France was in possession of Louisiana, his title in it became vested under the edicts above mentioned.*

There can be no doubt that if there existed an alluvion near New Orleans in the year 1763, and if the King of France was entitled by law to all alluvions there, that his title was vested from the moment that an alluvion came to exist, liable, however, to be defeated, as we have already shown, by an adverse possession of thirty years, unless within that time the property should be annexed to the domains of the crown by a judicial proceeding in nature of our inquest of office.

But Mr. Derbigny takes it here for granted, that his first proposition is incontestable, the contrary of which I hope I have sufficiently shown. And were it even otherwise, I think it was not sufficient for Mr. Derbigny to have shown that the King was entitled to the alluvions of navigable rivers in France; he ought to have proved also that he had a right to them in Louisiana. For, because a certain law may exist in the mother country, it does not necessarily follow that it is in force in the colonies or in a particular colony. Many of the statutes of Great Britain have never been considered as in force here, merely because they were not suited to our colonial situation. "It has been held," says Blackstone, "that if an uninhabited country be discovered and planted by English subjects, all the English laws then in being, which are the birth-right of every subject, are immediately there in force. But this must be understood with many and very great restrictions. Such colonists carry with them only so much of English law as is applicable to their own situation, and the condition of an infant colony; such, for instance, as the general rules of inheritance and of protection from personal injuries."—1 Blackst. Com. 107.

This principle is very reasonable; it is founded on the plain dictates of common sense and natural justice. And as Mr. Derbigny will not deny that the French are a sensible and intelligent nation, he must also presume that they have not excluded common sense from their colonial legislation.

The custom of Paris, it is well known, is the general law of the French colonies. But it does not follow that every part of that custom is actually in force there; those parts which are inapplicable to the situation of each colony necessarily lose their power. Mr. Moreau de St. Mery tells us so expressly. He collected before the late revolution all the law of St. Domingo in six quarto volumes, and when he comes to the custom of Paris, he tells his readers that as it is easy to be procured with excellent commentaries, he thinks it needless to insert it at large; but, continues he, I shall speak elsewhere of the dispositions of that custom, which are inapplicable to the colonies.†

So the general laws and ordinances of the kingdom of France are also the law of the French colonies, but this is, as Blackstone says, to be understood "with many and very great restrictions." The same reason which applies this principle to the custom of Paris will apply it likewise to the ordinances of the Kings; this is too clear to need illustration.

But it will, perhaps, be expected that we should prove the negative proposition that the edicts in question were not in force in the French colonies. It is always a difficult task to prove a negative; we shall, however, attempt it.

1st. It is a well known fact, that the feudal system was not known nor exercised in any of the French colonies except Canada. Those parts of the custom of Paris which Mr. de St. Mery tells us were inapplicable to the situation of the West India colonies, were undoubtedly those parts which were connected with feudality, though as that gentleman never completed the original plan of his work, he has not explained himself in this particular. In Louisiana every body knows that feudality never was established. "There are," says the author of the com-

* Mr. Derbigny's words are: "Therefore, considering that Batture as an alluvion formed on a navigable river, without reference to any other circumstance, we may apply to it the expressions of the royal edicts above cited, and the authority of Pothier, to establish that alluvion, or accretion, belonged to the King of France."

† "Nous parlerons ailleurs des dispositions de cette coutume, qui sont inapplicables aux colonies." 1 St. Mery, 11.

munications which the President laid before Congress with his message of the 21st October, 1803, "there are (in Louisiana) no feudal rights nor noblesse."

Now if, as Mr. Portalis tells us, the pretensions of Louis XIV. to alluvions were feudal claims or rights, and if no feudal rights ever existed in Louisiana, it follows, in my opinion, that claims or rights of that description were excluded.

"By the law of my kingdom," says Louis XIV. "I am entitled to such rights;" that is, as Mr. Portalis explains it, by the feudal law, which is the law of my kingdom: but if the feudal law was not the law of Louisiana, the King could claim no such rights there.

2d. Mr. Moreau de St. Mery has inserted in his collection, which I have already mentioned, not only the laws and ordinances peculiarly relating to the colony of St. Domingo, but the edicts and general ordinances of France, which, at the time when he wrote, (after Canada had ceased to belong to that kingdom,) were considered as being in force in the French colonies, generally beginning with the year 1550, (long before Louisiana or St. Domingo began to be settled by the French,) down to the year 1785. But in that extensive collection no mention is made, and no trace whatever is found of any of the edicts in question: they would undoubtedly have been inserted in the work, had they been considered as a part of the law of the colonies.

3d. When Louis XV., or rather the regent in his name, in 1717, granted Louisiana to the Compagnie d'Occident, he gave it to them (art. 5) in full property and dominion (en toute propriété, seigneurie, et justice,) not reserving to himself any rights or duties, (aucuns droits ni devoirs;) except fidelity and liege homage, which are the duties which every subject owes to his sovereign. The company kept it until 1731, when they gave it back to the King; 1 Valin, 408. During that period, at least, he enjoyed no feudal rights whatever in that colony, and the edicts in question could not be in force there.

4th. By the 8th article of the same charter, Louis XV. authorized the West India Company to grant the lands in Louisiana in such manner as they should think proper, even to be held in franc alev, or allodium,* that is, as Blackstone defines it, "by a tenure wholly independent, and held of no superior at all." 2 Blackst. Com. 47. "A kind of tenure," says the same author, "which is property in the highest degree, and of which the owner is said to be seized absolutely in his own demesne." Ibid. 105. "A tenure which existed in the roman provinces before the feudal system was introduced there." Ibid. 47. And lastly, "a tenure not known in England, because all lands there are held mediately or immediately of the King."† Ibid. 60, 105. The Company held the province under this charter from 1717 to 1731, a period of fourteen years, and I believe it was held before that on the same terms by former grantees. During that time they must have granted a great proportion of the lands of the province, particularly on the banks of the Mississippi, where the settlements were first made, and it does not appear that any of the lands which they sold, or gave away, were granted otherwise than allodially, as those which they granted in one thousand seven hundred and twenty-six to the Jesuits, under which title we are seized, confessedly were.‡ If so, the very terms of all the ancient grants, under which the inhabitants hold, excluded feudal rights of every kind, and consequently excluded the feudal right of alluvion, if such existed. It will be recollected that Mr. Portalis expressly states that the inhabitants of those parts of France which were governed by the Roman law, and where lands of course were held in allodium or franc alev, maintained their rights to alluvions against the attempts of the officers of the treasury to enforce the King's pretensions among them. Because, undoubtedly, it was considered that it is the very nature and essence of allodium, not to be subject to any feudal rights or claims of any description.

5th. It does not appear, that the edicts in question, or any of them, were ever enforced, or attempted to be enforced in Louisiana, or that either the French or Spanish Governments ever claimed a right to have the alluvions of the Mississippi. I leave the case of this Batture out of the question, because I shall speak of it in its proper place. But it does not appear that any other person except John Gravier, or those claiming under him, were ever molested or disturbed in the enjoyment of an alluvion.

6th. No reservation of a right of alluvion appears to have been made in any of the French grants, although it is well known that they are very particular in all their writings, and particularly in the grants of their Government, in expressing whatever they wish to be reserved. The St. Domingo grants that I have seen are full of conditions and reservations. Mr. Derbigny himself states, under his third head, page 42, that the royal grants of land in Louisiana were drawn up in the same careful manner; "those grants," says he, "expressed that the grantee was to fulfil certain conditions, and amongst others, that of making a public road on his land." It is probable that the alluvion right would have been expressly reserved had it existed.

If I have sufficiently proved, that the edicts in question were no part of the law of Louisiana, it is of no consequence whatever whether there was or not an alluvion in the year 1763. But the fact does not appear proved, or, if proved, is contradicted by other testimony.

Unless, however, it is clearly proved that there existed a Batture, or alluvion, at that period, or, at least, at the time when Spain took possession of the country and promulgated the Spanish laws, which was in the year 1769, all the arguments drawn from the French law must fall to the ground, and the Spanish alone becomes the rule of decision; and as it is admitted that, by the Spanish law, there is no such right of alluvion in the sovereign as is now claimed, there is an end to the whole controversy.

But I shall proceed to consider the case on the supposition that a Batture existed and that the law of Louisiana, as it was previous to 1769, is to be the rule of decision.

THIRD POSITION OF MR. DERBIGNY.

"That between the alluvion and the land lay a royal road, the same that still exists, and a levee, both of which were then, and have still remained, public property."

Before I proceed to observe on this third position, I must take notice of an authority which Mr. Derbigny has referred to under the first head of his argument, the examination of which will, I think, properly introduce the discussion of the point now before us.

Mr. Derbigny, presuming that Mr. Denizart was the only French author whose opinion was contrary to that of Mr. Pothier, on the subject of the right to alluvions, and not attending to the host of respectable writers who all have maintained the same ground with Mr. Denizart, while Mr. Pothier appears to have stood alone on his side of the question, thought that he could reconcile the opposite opinions of these two writers by a loose dictum of Mr. Lerasle, one of the compilers of the French Encyclopædia.

This Mr. Lerasle, of whom nothing is known but that he was hired by the booksellers to compile the legal section of the new Encyclopædia, and who, of course, is a very unfit person to reconcile two such men as Mr. Ferriere and Mr. Pothier, merely says: "That alluvions by the law of France belong to the owners of the adjacent estates, when such estates are immediately bounded by the river, but if they have for their boundary an intervening causeway or road, then the alluvions belong to the King."

In the first place it cannot be denied that if an estate be not immediately bounded by the river, but by something else lying between the estate and the river, whether that something be a causeway, a road, or any other modification of real property, the alluvions cannot belong to the owner of the estate, because it is not adjacent to the river, and he is not then what the law calls a riparious proprietor.

Secondly. If the intervening causeway or road is public property and belongs to the sovereign, it is clear also that the sovereign is alone entitled to the alluvions, not by virtue of any edict or prerogative, but simply because his property, the causeway or road, lies contiguous to river, and therefore he is, in fact, the riparious owner. Thus, on the banks of the Loire, in France, there is a royal levee or embankment, which serves also as a public road. The soil on which the levee is made belongs to the sovereign, it was raised and is kept in repair at the public expense. Those, therefore, whose estates lie contiguous to it have no right to claim the alluvions of the river, from which their property is separated by that fine monument of human industry. But if, on the contrary, a man possesses property lying on the banks of a river, under the obligation of keeping a public road open as near as possible to the water side, such obligation does not take away from him his right of property in the soil through which the road is made to pass; it is only a charge or servitude upon his estate, and however the public may have a right to the use of the road, the property can never be said to be out of him. Thus, by the French ordinance of 1669, the owners of lands bordering on navigable rivers are obliged to leave open, along the banks, the width of twenty-four feet at least for a royal road and draught of horses, and they are forbidden to plant trees or fence in their property nearer to the bank than thirty feet on the side on which the boats are hauled or drawn, and ten feet on the other side, under the penalty of a fine of five thousand livres, and confiscation of the trees or enclosures.*

†This allodial property no subject in England has, it being a received and now undeniable principle in the law, that all the lands in England are held mediately or immediately of the King.

‡See the proceedings on the sales of the Jesuits' land, in Mr. Livingston's Address, page 53.

It is clear that this law considers the property of the soil of the road to be in the owner of the riparious estate; otherwise, it would not have directed, in case of contravention, the confiscation of the trees which should be planted on the said road; trees, while in the ground, being considered in France, as well as in England and America, as immovable or real property, and as a part of the soil in which they grow. And, again, if the obligation to make such a road had been considered as vesting the soil of it in the King or Government, there would have been an end in France to the question concerning alluvions, because, as there must be such a road all along the banks on each side of every navigable river, the property of the soil of those roads being in the King the alluvions would have followed of course, as there would not have been in France any riparious owner but the monarch himself.

Mr. Derbigny has been well aware of this distinction; for he does not rest his argument on the mere fact of there being a royal road and levee, but he adds that the said road and levee were, and continued to be, public property. Neither does he pretend that this property was vested in the sovereign by virtue of a general law, applying to every estate bordering on the Mississippi, nor by virtue of a general clause inserted in all the patents for similar estates; but by virtue of what he conceives to be an implied reservation in the deed which was made of the Jesuits' land to the person or persons through whom the Gravers became seized of the property. This is what we are going to consider.

In the first place, it is admitted by Mr. Derbigny that there was in Louisiana, probably from the first settlement of the colony, either a law or a usage, similar in substance or in effect to the French edict of 1669, above mentioned, by which the proprietors on the river side were obliged to open a public road near the river, and that that obligation was expressed as a condition in all the grants of land bordering on the Mississippi. In addition to that, each landholder was bound to raise an embankment or levee to prevent inundations, and to keep both the levee and the road in repair. Whether these obligations were imposed by custom, or by a positive written law, is indifferent, because such a general and ancient custom must have been equally binding on the inhabitants as a statute or ordinance would have been.

It is probable that the idea was taken from the French ordinance, or, perhaps, that the ordinance itself was extended in practice to the colony of Louisiana, with such modifications as were considered to be suited to the localities.

However this may be, nothing can be clearer than that the King of France did not reserve to himself the soil of the road, which the proprietors of land on the Mississippi were obliged to open and keep in repair on their estates. The very circumstances of their being obliged to repair the road as well as the levee or bank, is a proof that the soil was considered as their property; and it is in proof, from Mr. Derbigny's own acknowledgment, (see his printed opinion, page 42,) that the holders of land would sometimes stop up the old road and open a new one, "for," says he, "provided there were a road convenient to the river, the grantee fulfilled his promise."

* "Les propriétaires des héritages aboutissants aux rivières navigables doivent de long des bords vingt-quatre pieds de place au moins en largeur, pour chemin royal et trait de chevaux; sans qu'ils puissent planter arbres, ni clôture ou haye plus près que trente pieds du côté ou les bateaux se tirent, et dix pieds de l'autre bord, à peine de cinq mille livres d'amende, confiscation des arbres, &c. C'est la disposition de l'article 7, du titre 23 de l'ordonnance de 1669." 4 Deniz. 296, No 13 verbo Rivière.

The original grants, therefore, contained only a promise or covenant on the part of the grantees, that a road should be kept open near the water on the premises, not a reservation by the King of any part of the soil for that purpose.

If the King, or the West India Company, who were his grantees of the whole province, made no such reservations in their concessions or grants, it follows that the estates of the original proprietors of land on the Mississippi were bounded by the river and extended quite to its banks. This is not denied by Mr. Derbigny, neither does he deny that the property now covered by the suburb St. Mary, while held by the Jesuits, under the grant made to them by the West India Company, had the same boundary with other estates held under similar grants, that is to say, that it was bounded by the river.

But, in the year 1763; the order of Jesuits having been abolished in France, a judicial proceeding was instituted at New Orleans, in the Supreme Court of the province, for the purpose of condemning their estates as confiscated to the crown. It appears, by the authentic documents which are inserted in Mr. Livingston's Address, appendix, Nos. 1 and 3, that this proceeding was instituted on the petition of the King's attorney, [sur la réquête du procureur général du roi,] and that on the 9th of July 1763, the court pronounced an arrêt, or decree, by which they ordered all the estate and property, real and personal, [tous les biens, meubles et immubles,] which belonged to the Jesuits, to be judicially sold [judiciairement vendus.] The sale was not, as with us, made out of court by a ministerial officer, but at the bar of the said court, in the presence of one of the judges thereof, and of the King's attorney, before whom the property was put up for sale by the court crier, the bids received and recorded, and the adjudication decreed to the highest bidder; and this decree of adjudication became the purchaser's title, without any other deed or conveyance being required.

The decree, therefore, which declared the Jesuits' property to be confiscated, and ordered the sale thereof, made no kind of exception or reservation, but all their property and estate, real and personal, was directed to be sold to the highest bidder.

This circumstance is particularly mentioned, because it is well known to all those who are conversant in the French system of law, that the attorney general, who was the mover of these proceedings, and who was present throughout the whole transaction, is officially bound, in all cases, to take notice of, and to preserve the rights of the sovereign, wherever they may be concerned. It is more than presumable, that if it had been the intention of the government to have reserved to itself the soil of the road in question, he would have taken care to have had that reservation expressly inserted in the decree. For that soil, it must be again observed, was part of the property of the Jesuits, and unless specially excepted, must be taken to have been ordered to be sold with the remainder of their estate.

Let us now see how this decree was carried into execution.

After the said decree, directing the sale of the Jesuits' property, had been given, the surveyor general was ordered to inspect all the titles, deeds, and papers of that order, and to survey their lands, and, in the report or return which the said surveyor made of his proceedings under the said order, he stated, "that, according to the said title, deeds, papers, plan and official surveys, he had found that the said land ought to contain thirty-two arpents of front on the river St. Louis." [trente-deux arpents de face sur le fleuve St. Louis.] See the official copy of the said report now before me; and see Mr. Livingston's Address, page 44.

This survey was made on the 14th and returned on the 22d July, 1763, after which the court proceeded to the sale of the property in six different lots: and in the decree of adjudication of each lot, the property sold was described as follows:

"A piece of land having — arpents in front, on the usual depth of forty arpents, situate on the other side of the river, with its circumstances* and dependencies, without retaining or reserving any thing from top to bottom, such as the whole now is and exists."†

* This word is very material; it means, says Ferriere, Dictionnaire de Droit, hoc verbo, all that is adjacent or accessory to a house or a piece of land, tout ce qui est adjacent ou accessoire à une maison, à une terre, ou à une seigneurie. The word adjacent is synonymous to contiguous, and the word accessory, from the Latin accedere, to approach, means the same thing.

† "Une terre ayant — arpents de face sur la profondeur ordinaire de 40 arpents, située de l'autre bord du fleuve, cir-

This decree recited that the sale was made in pursuance of the prior decree of the same court, directing the sale of all the real and personal property of the Jesuits.

Mr. Derbigny now pretends, that, under these proceedings the whole of the front of the Jesuits' property was not sold, but that there was an implied reservation of the road and levee, and the following are his arguments:

First. That the reservation must be understood, because, in the report of survey above mentioned, and in the decree of adjudication, the river is not expressly called for as the boundary of the land.

Our answer is, that the front boundary of this estate is described precisely in the same manner as the front boundary of all other lands, bounded by the river, used to be in the colony of Louisiana.

We have the testimony of Mr. Lafon, now deputy surveyor of the United States for the county of Orleans, and of the two Messrs. Trudeau, that they have never seen any concession or grant, either under the French or Spanish Governments, which was not bounded by the river itself, and that all those concessions or grants, in order to designate such boundary, use these expressions: so many acres in front, [de face,] or so many acres of front to the river," [face au fleuve.]

Now it happens precisely that this decree of adjudication uses the very words, "so many acres in front," [de face,] while the report of survey on which it is founded makes use of the still more pointed expression of "front on the river;" [face au fleuve] and the prior decree, which is the foundation of the whole, designates all the property of the Jesuits as the object of the sale.

It is true, that none of these expressions convey, in common parlance, the precise idea that the land is immediately bounded by the water's edge, but it is true that they do not negative that idea, and as they appear to be technical expressions which have been used in all grants, and the effect of which have ever been to convey the property in the land quite to the margin of the river, I do not see any reason why they should be denied here the legal meaning and effect which they have received and are to receive in all other cases.

Mr. Derbigny criticises on the verbal meaning of these words, and takes great pains to prove that because a plantation is said to have its front on the river, it does not necessarily follow that it has the river for its actual boundary. I am not prepared to enter into this discussion, but as this is not a question of grammatical criticism, the words which are commonly used in legal proceedings must be taken to have a fixed technical meaning, even though they should, in common parlance, negative the very idea of the effect which the law gives them. The only question to be asked is, what effect does the law give to these words in all other cases? and the answer must apply to the case before us, unless there should be something peculiar in it to distinguish it from all others.

Mr. Derbigny, however, thinks that he has found such a distinguishing peculiarity in this case. He tells us that there is a great difference between a free grant or concession and a sale. That when this property was originally granted by the Government of France, it was wild and uncultivated land, but that at the time of the sale under the decree, it had become valuable by the industry of man, and that there was then on it both a road and a levee. This is certainly true, but what does it prove? why, that when this land was wild and uncultivated, the King gave it away, and that now that it has become of value, he no longer gives it, but sells it for a valuable consideration. But it has absolutely nothing to do with the construction of a technical expression in the deed of sale.

Mr. Derbigny does not pretend to say that there existed at that time a valuable alluvion, and that as it is not expressly mentioned in the deed, it must be presumed to have been reserved. Were it even so, this consequence would by no means follow, but far from there being then a valuable alluvion, it is left in doubt at least whether there was any alluvion at all. And as to the value of such property, it is a well known fact that these alluvion lands were absolutely worth nothing until after the cession. American industry and American enterprise set a value upon them, without which this controversy never would have taken place.

Secondly. Mr. Derbigny observes that there is no condition expressed in this deed of sale imposing on the purchaser the duty of keeping the road in repair, that, constances et dependances, sans en rien reserver ni retenir, de fond en comble; tel et ainsi que le tout se poursuit et comporte."

therefore, the soil of it must be presumed to have been reserved, for, says he, it would otherwise follow, that the purchaser might convert that road to his private use, without being obliged to supply another in the place of it.

I answer, that this consequence would by no means follow, for, although the deed does not expressly impose such a condition on the purchaser, yet the law clearly does, and as he took the Jesuits' property as the Jesuits had it, and with an express reference to their title contained and specified in the return of survey, he, therefore, undoubtedly took it charged with all the burdens which had been imposed upon them. That it was so understood in Louisiana, under the Spanish Government clearly appears from the Baron de Carondelet's letter to Mr. Gravier, of the 10th of March, 1794, in which he gives him orders to repair the levee, and commends his former punctuality.

The last argument of Mr. Derbigny, which I shall take notice of under this head, is a criticism on some expressions contained in the return of warrant of survey, above mentioned, from which he would infer an intended reservation of the soil of the road and levee.

It will be recollected that the surveyor general expressly says, that having examined the evidence of the title of the Jesuits, he found that they ought to have thirty-two arpents of front on the Mississippi; after stating thus much, instead, as is usual with us, of giving in a short description of the premises, the result of his survey, he proceeds, according to the French custom, to give an exact account of the mechanical operations by means of which he performed the survey which he was directed to make, and, in the course of his relation, he says: that, having examined the title deeds, &c., he began his operations, and drove in a stake at the distance of six toises five feet from the middle of the levee, from whence he took and measured the different courses. Mr. Derbigny pretends that this was done for the purpose of designating the front boundary of the estate, and therefore, that it did not extend further towards the river than the place where the stake was driven in.

But Mr. Lafon and Mr. Charles Trudeau both inform us that this mode of operating never was intended to designate the boundary of the plantation on the side of the river; and that the usual manner of measuring such plantations, is by drawing a parallel line, as near as possible to the river, or by a perpendicular one on the sides, but that this line never designates the front limits of the plantation. And that the landmarks which are placed in the beginnings of the said lines are intended only to show the directions which those lines ought to have. See Mr. Livingston's Address, page 56.

This matter being thus explained, every argument drawn from it in favor of the United States' claim must fall to the ground.

FOURTH POSITION OF MR. DERBIGNY.

"The alluvion in question has never ceased to be a royal property, the enjoyment of which the French and Spanish Governments at all times left to the public, and on which they constantly hindered private persons from encroaching."

This proposition is afterwards stated by Mr. Derbigny in other terms, to wit:

"That the Batture never ceased to be considered as a part of the royal demesne, and that, to the time of the retrocession, the King of Spain never ceased to act as its proprietor."

I shall proceed to consider the allegations, and test them by the facts that are in proof before me.

If the Batture has never ceased to be a part of the royal demesne, there must exist some decree of a court of justice, or at least some edict, or other public act, annexing it to the property of the crown. We have already shown that, by the French law, if there be no such formal annexation, the right of the King to such casual accessions of property are barred by an adverse possession of thirty years. If, then, it had been the intention of the Government that the alluvions of the Mississippi should be considered as public property, some such act would, it seems, have been necessary, if not to comply with the law, at least to give notice to the inhabitants. We do not, however, merely rely as to this point on the general law of France, but on an edict made expressly for the colonies which is much more pointed, and which appears to leave no kind of doubt on the subject. We refer to an ordinance of Louis XV. made on the 17th of July, 1743, while Louisiana was fully in the possession and under the dominion of France. This ordinance is entitled "A declaration of the King concerning grants of land in the French colonies," and is to be found at large in Mr. St. Mery's collection, vol. 3, page 745. By the 5th article of this ordinance, it is expressly provided that all annexations of property to the domain of the crown, which shall not be judicially decreed, shall be null and void, and of no effect.*

This ordinance appears to have been made for the purpose of protecting the subject in colonies so distant from the seat of Government, and to prevent their being deprived of their property by acts of arbitrary power. I may, therefore, with propriety ask of those who support the claims of the United States, to produce the judicial act or decree by which these alluvions, or any part thereof, have been declared to be annexed to the demesnes of the crown.

Those who are not intimately acquainted with the details of the organization of the Government of France and its colonies previous to the late revolution, may perhaps imagine that those edicts were a mere dead letter, and that arbitrary acts supplied the place of law in almost every case. But let it be recollected that although the order of Jesuits had been abolished in France, and their property declared to be confiscated, yet the Government of Louisiana did not venture to proceed to the sales of their estates in that province, without having previously instituted a regular suit, and obtained a formal decree from the highest judicial tribunal in the colony.

The only governmental acts which are adduced in support of the allegation that the Batture never ceased to be considered as a part of the demesne of the crown, are a proclamation of the Governor of Louisiana, issued in, or subsequent to, 1794, by which he ordered certain buildings to be pulled down which strangers had erected on that spot, and the repairs which about that time he caused to be made to the levee after Mr. Gravier had refused to repair it himself. But these facts, even admitting them to be true in their greatest extent, and without any possible qualification, are very far from proving Mr. Derbigny's broad proposition, that the Batture never ceased to be considered as royal property, for at any rate a single act of power can never be considered as an evidence of title, but the very circumstance under which this was done proves the contrary; for if the Batture had always been considered as public property, there was no necessity for the Governor's applying to Mr. Gravier to repair the levee in the first instance, which was an acknowledgment of his right of property. But it is not all; we have it in proof from the testimony of Messrs. Larocche and Segur (see Mr. Livingston's Address, page 58) that Segur having contracted with the Baron de Carondelet, the same Governor who issued the proclamation, for the supply of masts for the royal navy, and having requested him to point out a place where he could deposit the said masts, the Baron directed him to ask Gravier's permission to lay them on his Batture.

Let these facts, then, which appear to have all happened about the same time, be taken together, as they ought to be, and let any one say whether they support the proposition which Mr. Derbigny lays down in so broad and so unqualified a manner. Nay, the Governor's acknowledgment of Mr. Gravier's right to the Batture, which is in direct proof by his written order to him to repair the levee, leads us necessarily to the conclusion that the proclamation ordering the buildings to be thrown down (the text of which we are not in possession of) was dictated from some considerations of local police, and was not at all meant as an assertion of the title of the Government to the property in question.

I shall say nothing of the answer of the auditor Vidal to the person who applied to him to establish a brick-kiln on the Batture, "go tell the Governor that it is impossible, for this Batture is by law public property," or words to that effect; such a loose expression, perhaps not accurately recollected, and at any rate a mere extra-judicial dictum of an auditor, cannot be considered as legal evidence of title in the Spanish Government; this effect could at most be produced by his judicial opinion, reported in due form to the Governor, and confirmed by him in his supreme judicial capacity. But this would be precisely such a document as we call for; and which has not yet been, and I verily believe will never be, exhibited.

How comes it, if the Batture in question never ceased to be considered as part of the royal demesne, and if the King of Spain, in the language of Mr. Derbigny, never ceased to exercise acts of ownership over it, that this long established and long exercised right of the Spanish Government was until very lately unknown to every person in the province, and even to the corporation of New Orleans itself? For when that body was contending with Mr. Gravier before the Supreme Court of the territory for the possession of that property, they did not claim as bailiffs of the United States, or as their tenants at will or at sufferance, but they claimed in their own corporate right, and as far as I can judge from the formal pleadings and notes of the arguments, which I have had before me, the claim of the United States was not once mentioned while that cause was pending.

It is true that, after the court had delivered their final judgment against the corporation of New Orleans, a motion was made for a new trial, on the ground that the United States were entitled to the property; which motion, I am informed, the court refused to grant. But this appears clearly to have been an after thought, suggested by the ingenuity of the learned counsel; for it is evident, that if, as Mr. Derbigny asserts, the Batture had never ceased to be a part of the King of Spain's domain, and if the King had never ceased to act as its proprietor, the notoriety of that fact would have been such at New Orleans that the Governor, the court, or the district attorney, at least, would have heard of it, and the corporation would not have been suffered to prefer their claim in their own name, without any notice being taken of so notorious a right in the General Government.

The officers of the Government of Spain appear to have been equally ignorant of it: for it is in proof, from authentic documents which I have perused, that, in the year 1794, Mr. Gravier sold various parcels of the Batture in question by several notarial acts passed before Mr. Pedesclaux, notary public, who, I am told, was also at that time secretary to the Government.

Those who are acquainted with the nature and duty of the office of a notary at the civil law and of the law of France and Spain on the subject, know very well that those officers not only attest the deeds which are executed before them, but that they draw them up entirely, according to the instructions of the parties, and that they are personally responsible, under severe penalties, that the instruments which they so draw up and attest do not contain any thing contrary to law, to religion, to morality, or to the interest of the sovereign. Code 1, 2, 14, 3, 1st Ferricre's Parfait Notaire, 56.

Now, in this state of things, would a notary—would a Secretary to the Government, have lent his assistance to the sale, by one man to another, of property which not only did not belong to the vendor, but which notoriously belonged to the King himself, who, according to Mr. Derbigny, never ceased to be exercising acts of ownership over it; acts to which the notary, in his capacity of secretary, must necessarily have been privy, and the evidences of the King's right must have been lodged in his office, if any where?

With these observations, I shall take leave of this fourth point.

FIFTH POSITION OF MR. DERBIGNY.

"Neither Jean Gravier, nor those from whom he derived his title, ever were in possession of the alluvion; and Bertrand Gravier himself, at the time of settling a suburb in front of his plantation, declared that he had no claim to the alluvion."

This allegation divides itself into two distinct propositions: the first, that Mr. Gravier never had possession of the Batture; the second, that, if he had, he afterwards abandoned or gave up his right.

As to the first point we say, that even if nothing more appeared, Mr. Gravier must be considered to have had precisely the same possession of his Batture that the other owners of land on the Mississippi had of theirs; if in point of law it was to be considered as a part of his estate, it was not necessary that he should build a house, or erect improvements on every spot of his land, in order to be considered in the actual possession of it.

But we do not rely merely on constructive possession, because it is in proof that Mr. Gravier was ordered by the Governor to repair the levee, that the same Governor directed his permission to be asked for laying masts on that identical spot, and that, in the year 1794, he sold several parcels of that same alluvion land, and reserved a right out of others to dig earth and sand, all which acts are incompatible with the idea of his being out of possession.

* "Art. 5. Déclarons nulles et de nul effet toutes concessions qui ne seront pas faites conjointement par le Gouverneur et l'Intendant, comme aussi toutes réunions qui ne seront pas prononcées."

And lastly, we consider this point as finally decided by the sentence of the Superior Court in the case of 'Gravier vs. the Corporation,' the court having decreed that he should be quieted in his lawful possession of the Batture: if this judgment is not conclusive against all the world, as to the fact of possession by Gravier, it is at least the strongest evidence of it that can possibly be adduced. I proceed to the second point.

It is pretended that Mr. Gravier has abandoned his claim to the Batture: now, if he had no lawful claim to it, his abandonment is not necessary to make out the title of the United States, or of any other person who had a real right to that property; but if he had, I should think, that it would require something more than evidence of some hasty words or of a loose conversation to divest his property out of him.

The facts appear to be these: Mr. Gravier having laid out the front of his plantation into a suburb, and the lots being all or mostly sold and built upon, was directed or asked to repair the levee, being considered as being still the owner of the alluvion, as in fact he was, not having legally parted with it. At that time the Batture was considered as of little or no value, and Mr. Gravier permitted the inhabitants of New Orleans to make use of it for various purposes. To that order or request he is said to have replied, that as he had sold the faubourg he had nothing to do with the Batture, and that he would not repair the levee, or words to that effect: the expressions stated by Mr. Derbigny are, that having sold the faubourg he considered himself as discharged from the duty of repairing.

I can see nothing in these words that amount to an abandonment of Mr. Gravier's right of property in the Batture. If the corporation, by his permission or sufferance, made use of it, and exclusively derived all the benefit from it, it was natural for Mr. Gravier to expect, that while they continued to enjoy that benefit they should be at the trouble and expense of the repairs. For, qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus. This appears to me to be the most natural, and I think the only probable, interpretation of the words which are said to have been spoken by Mr. Gravier, if there is no misconception or misrecollection in the testimony of the witnesses.

To whom did Mr. Gravier abandon his right to the Batture? Was it to the King, to the corporation, to the purchasers of the suburb lots, or to the first occupant? On this subject every one is at liberty to draw what inference he pleases. While the suit was pending between Mr. Gravier and the corporation, the abandonment was said to be made to the citizens of New Orleans, and after the judgment of a competent court has negated the assertion, it is pretended that it was made to the Royal Majesty itself. The fact is that it does not appear that Mr. Gravier made mention of either, and he does not seem to have thought of any thing but discharging himself from the duty of repairing the levee, while others were enjoying the use and benefit of his property.

But even had this pretended abandonment been expressed in the strongest words that could be devised, with a designation of the party in whose favor it was made, I ask whether the law of Spain permits a citizen to divest himself of his real property by mere word of mouth, and without committing the act in some manner to writing? If it does, I can only say that it differs from the law of every civilized country, where a due regard is paid to the regular transmission of real estates, and, on that account, that the existence of such a law ought to be clearly proved, whereas it is not even alleged.

And after all, if even Mr. Gravier, under a mistaken idea of his rights or of the rights of others, had made the most formal abandonment of the property in question, such an act would be relieved against in a court of equity. This relief was granted in England to the executor of a mortgagee who had assigned the mortgage to the heir, under the mistaken idea that the latter was entitled to it. Turner vs. Turner, 2 Chanc. Rep. 81. Thus, again, if there is an agreement for the sale of an estate, and the purchase money has been paid, if it turns out that the estate was the vendee's, and that the sale was made under a mistake, the court will order the money to be refunded. Bingham vs. Bingham, 1 Vesey. 126. And there are a variety of other cases which might be cited to the same effect.

Now it must be plain that the United States could not, even in that case, conscientiously take and retain property in consequence of an unguarded act, against which their own courts of equity would think themselves bound to grant relief.

On the whole of this case, therefore, I am of opinion: 1. That by the law of France, as it stood to the time of the late revolution, the alluvions of navigable rivers did not of right belong to the King, but to the owners of adjacent estates.

2. That, however the law might be in France on that subject, there was no such prerogative in the French colonies, and particularly in the colony of Louisiana, where there was no feudality nor noblesse, and where lands, as far as we have seen, appear to be held by an allodial tenure, which excludes feudal rights.

3. That, even if it were otherwise, unless it should be clearly proved that there existed an alluvion or Batture in front of the land where now stands the suburb St. Mary, at the time when Spain took possession and proclaimed the Spanish laws in 1769, the law of France cannot operate, but the case must be governed by the Spanish law, which is admitted not to vest any alluvion rights in the sovereign.

4. That even admitting the right claimed on behalf of the King of France to its fullest extent, and admitting that the Batture or alluvion in question existed in 1769, yet as that alluvion never was by judicial decree declared to have been annexed to the demesne of the crown, it cannot now be considered as a part of it, it being clearly within the description of those casual rights or accessions, of which the sovereign, by the law of France, cannot be legally seized without a regular judgment of annexation to the crown.

5. I am further of opinion that the right of soil in the road and levee in front of the suburb St. Mary, has not been either expressly or impliedly reserved by the Government of France out of the sale which was made of the Jesuits' estate.

6. That neither the said road nor levee, nor the said Batture or alluvion, have at any time been considered, in law or in fact, by the Government of France, or Spain in Louisiana, as a part of the sovereign's demesne; but that Jean Gravier, and those under whom he claimed, have always considered themselves and been considered by the said Governments, as the lawful owners thereof.

7. And therefore that the claim now set up on the part of the Government of the United States to the said alluvion, as a branch of the royal prerogative or otherwise, is not founded, as far as I have seen, in either law or fact, and cannot be supported.

PETER S. DUPONCEAU.

PHILADELPHIA, July 26, 1808.

Case for the consideration of Counsel.

In the month of August, 1717, the King of France made a grant to the West India Company, the fifth article of which is in the following words: "In order to provide the said West India Company with the means of making a permanent establishment, and to execute all the plans they may form, we give, grant, and concede to them, for ever, all the lands, coasts, ports, havens, and islands, which form our province of Louisiana, as well and with the same extent as we had granted it to Mr. Crozat, by our letters patent, dated 14th of September, 1712, to enjoy the same in full property, lordship, and justice, reserving to ourselves no other rights but fealty and liege homage, which the said company shall render to us, and the Kings our successors, with a crown of gold of the weight of twenty marks."

By the 8th article they are empowered to grant lands in franc aleu, or allodium.

In the year 1726, Mr. De Bienville, Governor of the province of Louisiana under this charter, grants to the company of the Jesuits twenty arpents in front, on the river Mississippi, by fifty in depth, to be held in "franc aleu."

The order of the Jesuits being suppressed, and their property annexed to the crown, the plantation was divided into six lots, each fronting the river, and in the year 1763, sold to different persons; two of these lots, by sundry descents and mesne conveyances, were vested in John Gravier, the present party.

By the 15th article of the charter to the West India Company, the custom of Paris is established as the law of the province.

In the year 1762, before the sale of the Jesuits' property, the province of Louisiana was ceded by France to Spain, but possession was not taken until 1769.

The purchasers, under the sale of 1763, have never been disquieted in their possession by the Spanish Government after the transfer of possession.

Along the whole course of the Mississippi, a dike or levee is thrown up, in order to restrain the water at the time of the annual inundation, which usually continues six months in the year, and by which the whole country would otherwise be covered, as the land on each side is lower as it recedes from the river until it reaches the sea.

Within the dike is a highway, which, as well as the dike or levee, is made and repaired by each inhabitant, as far as it extends along his land. The public have always used the land between the dike and the river for tracking boats, and other purposes of navigation. But as alluvions are frequent in that country, the inhabitants have always exercised the right of enclosing such alluvion lands by a new levee nearer the river, whenever the alluvion was of sufficient importance to bear the expense, giving to the public a new road, and always leaving them the same right of using the ground between the new dike or levee and the river which they had before.

Between the dike and the river, opposite the twenty acres sold by Governor Bienville to the Jesuits, a considerable alluvion has been formed at different periods, since the year 1763, and possibly in some slight degree prior to that time.

The alluvion was not of sufficient value until the year 1803, to indemnify the proprietor for making a new levee, and of course the public enjoyed it in common with the other lands between the dike and the river, for tracking their boats, and other purposes of navigation, during the season in which it was not covered with water, that is to say, about six months in the year.

In the year 1788, the proprietor of this land laid out that part which lies within the road into lots, and formed a suburb: at that time a considerable alluvion had been formed. In selling the line of lots which fronts the road, he sells them by certain fixed boundaries, and according to a map on which the lots were delineated, but none of them are bounded on the river or go beyond the road.

In two or three instances he conveys, besides the lots, the alluvion land in front thereof, reserving a servitude of digging earth on the alluvion.

There is evidence that at the time this suburb was laid out, the proprietor being called on to make the road and levee, verbally declared that he conceived himself discharged from this duty, and that as he had sold the front lots he had abandoned the alluvion; but there is an uncertainty as to the nature of this abandonment: one witness declared it was to the city; another to the inhabitants of the suburb; and a third that it was to the public. Since that time, to wit, from 1793 to 1803, the roads have been kept in repair once or twice by the public criminals, the rest of the time by the inhabitants whose lots fronted the road. It is also in evidence that some short time after the establishment of the suburb, the Governor directed all the buildings which had been erected (a few temporary sheds) to be demolished; but this is accounted for in two ways without considering it as an act of ownership. 1st. Because the public had a right to use the land between the dike and the river, for the purposes of navigation, although the property remained in the proprietor of the adjacent soil; the Governor, therefore, (who was also Judge) had a right to remove all buildings which obstructed this use, until the proprietor should, by erecting a new levee, and making a new road nearer the river, give the public the same facility of navigation which they had before. 2d. It was proved by the clerk of the Cabildo, or Governor's Council, that he had officially made the proclamation for demolishing the buildings, and that it was because they stood in the range of the fort guns.

All the proprietors of land on the Mississippi, without any exception, (unless the present case may be considered as one) have uniformly occupied and enjoyed the alluvion formed in front of their respective farms, without any claim being set up, either by the French, Spanish, or American Governments; and it is also to be remarked, that the proprietors of the other divisions of the Jesuits' farm have always, without interruption, enjoyed their alluvion, although they hold under grants made at the same time, and in the same words, with those in question. By treaty, dated 30th April, 1803, the province of Louisiana was ceded to the United States, and by the third article the inhabitants are to be secured in the possession of their property.

In the year 1804, John Gravier, the proprietor of the land, finding the alluvion of sufficient value and extent to justify the expense, threw up a dike, enclosing a portion of about five hundred feet square.

The inhabitants of the city of New Orleans had, prior to this period, 1804, as far back as the oldest witnesses could remember, been in the practice of digging sand from this alluvion, for making mortar, and filling the streets. This seems to have been permitted on account of the trifling value of the land, but about the time last mentioned Gravier opposed this practice; the corporation then claimed it as a right, and Gravier filed a petition to the Superior Court of the territory, stating his right to the alluvion, and that the inhabitants of this city disturbed him in the enjoyment of it, by digging the soil, and by publications tending to discredit his title, and praying that the corporation might set forth under what title they claim, and that he might be quieted in his possession, and they be perpetually enjoined from troubling him therein.

To this petition the mayor, aldermen, and inhabitants, answer by first denying that Gravier is the owner.

2. By stating that B. Gravier, the ancestor of the plaintiff, had abandoned the alluvion to the public, since which the levees have been repaired by the public or by the city; that since that abandonment the inhabitants had never ceased to enjoy the use of the alluvion, for piling wood, unloading boats, &c. That some individuals under the Spanish Government had built houses thereon, which, by order of Government, were destroyed.

The case being at issue on these pleadings, was heard at three several periods, and at length decided on the 23d May, 1807, by the decree, a copy whereof is annexed, in which the bench was unanimous.

After this decree a motion was made for a new trial: the ground relied on was that the alluvion belonged to the United States, and therefore the plaintiff could not recover. The court, however, rejected the motion, declaring that there was no color of title in the United States. The judgment was confirmed, and in the month of June following carried into execution by the sheriff, who served the injunction on the defendants, and put the plaintiff in possession of that part of which he had been deprived.

Gravier having sold to Edward Livingston and Peter Delabarre the greater part of this alluvion, after the decree, they took possession, and having made a partition, Mr. Livingston began to make improvements on his portion, and upon the 25th January, 1808, had expended about 13,000 dollars thereon. On that day a letter was received by the marshal of the district, from the Secretary of State, telling him that it was the direction of the President that he should "go to the place called the Batture, in front of the suburb St. Mary, and drive off all persons whom he may find thereon, who have taken possession since the 3d March, 1807." But neither Mr. Livingston, nor any other person under whom they claimed, had received any intimation or notice whatever, that any such proceedings were intended, or any citation to show or defend their title. On the 25th of January, Mr. Livingston presented a petition, a copy of which is annexed, praying an injunction against executing the President's order. This injunction was granted and served, but disregarded by the marshal, who called out three regiments of militia, and drove off Mr. Livingston's workmen. These proceedings are understood to have been had under color of the law of the 3d March, 1807, entitled "An act to prevent settlements being made on land ceded to the United States, until authorized by law." — 8 Laws of the United States, page 317.

And it is stated by the President, that he acted under an official opinion of the Attorney General, that the land belonged to the United States.

Mr. Livingston can prove actual damage, in consequence of these proceedings, exclusive of the value of the property, to more than 40,000 dollars, for this year alone.

The Superior Court of the territory of Orleans is a court in the last resort, from whose decrees there is no appeal.

On these facts the answer of counsel is required to the following questions:

1st. By what law is the claim of the proprietor of the twenty arpents front of the alluvion land, to be determined? By the law of Spain, to whom the country was conveyed prior to the sale in 1763? Or by the laws of France, who actually held the country until 1769? If by the law of France is it not incumbent on the party contending for that law as the rule of decision, to show that there was an alluvion formed between the year 1763 and the year 1769?

2d. There being no dispute as to the Spanish law, in case that is resorted to, it is required to know what is the law of the late kingdom of France on the subject of alluvion on navigable rivers; does it belong to the King or the proprietor of the adjoining soil?

3d. What is the law on this subject, by the custom of Paris?

4th. What is on this subject the law of the French colonies generally, and of Louisiana in particular, as it stood before the Spanish laws were introduced there?

5th. Did not the royal right of alluvions in those provinces of France, where it formerly prevailed, depend on the principles of feudal tenure; and will the King have it when it is granted in franc-aleu?

6th. Does, under the law of the late Kingdom of France, or of Louisiana as one of its colonies, or under the custom of Paris, the right of the public to use a road along a navigable river debar the proprietor, whose lands are bounded on the river, of the right of alluvion?

7th. Will the verbal declaration of the proprietor that he had abandoned, deprive him of his property, without any evidence in writing, or any proof of the precise terms, time, and conditions of abandonment, or will it operate when the evidence is of the uncertain nature stated in the facts?

8th. Have the United States, under the circumstances of the case now stated, any title to the land called the Batture, in front of the suburb St. Mary?

9th. Was the order to dispossess the occupants of the Batture a legal exercise of the power vested in the President by the law of the 3d March, 1807?

10th. Was not the judgment of the court such a prima facie evidence of title, as should have entitled Gravier and those claiming under him, to the right of a trial before they could be dispossessed?

11th. If the law of the 3d March, 1807, should, in terms, authorize the proceedings that have taken place, is not the law itself unconstitutional and void?

12th. Was it lawful in the President to issue his warrant before the commissioners had reported according to the proviso in the latter clause of the first section of the law?

13th. Has Mr. Livingston any action, and against whom, for his damages?

No. 1.

JOHN GRAVIER,
vs.
The Mayor, Aldermen,
and inhabitants of the City of New Orleans, } *On a suit to quiet the plaintiff in the possession of the alluvion land, or Batture, fronting the suburb St.
Mary.*

Judgment of the Superior Court of the territory of Orleans.

1st. The title of Bertrand Gravier, the ancestor of the plaintiff, to the tract of land on which the faubourg St. Mary is situated, has not been disputed, but it has been contended that this tract was bounded by the highway; the court, however, are of opinion, that, according to the evidence exhibited, and the general usage of the country, this tract of land was bounded by the river Mississippi.

2d. From the examination of the authorities, the court are of opinion, that, according to the civil and Spanish laws, the right of alluvion is incident to land which is bounded by a navigable river, and that these laws must form the rule of decision in the present case.

3d. If Bertrand Gravier, therefore, had continued proprietor of the whole tract on which the faubourg has been established, there would be no difficulty in determining his title to the alluvion: but Bertrand Gravier had divested himself of all title to that part of his tract on which the faubourg is established, by selling the lots fronting and adjoining the highway. It is, therefore, important to inquire what was the situation of the Batture, or alluvion, in question, at the time the faubourg was established; or at least when the front lots were sold: for if no alluvion existed at that time when Bertrand Gravier ceased to be the owner of the land adjoining the high-road, then it is the opinion of the court, that an alluvion subsequently formed, would not become the property of Bertrand Gravier. The reason of this opinion is, that, if Bertrand could be considered as proprietor of the road, after selling the adjacent land, or of the levee lying between this road and a public river, he would, nevertheless, not possess that title of property which gives the right of alluvion, for the destruction of this property, by the encroachment of the river, would be a public and not a private loss, since it could not be appropriated to the use of any individual, and the said road and levee would have become necessarily liable to be kept in repair at the public expense.

It is, however, the opinion of the court, from the evidence adduced in this cause, that, antecedent to the time when Bertrand Gravier ceased to be the proprietor of the land adjacent to the high-road, a Batture, or alluvion, had been formed adjoining to the levee, in front of the faubourg, upon the river, and that this alluvion was then of sufficient height to be considered as private property, and had, consequently, become annexed to, and incorporated with the inheritance of Bertrand Gravier.

4th. Bertrand Gravier having then acquired, by alluvion, the property now in dispute, it is to be considered whether he has divested himself of his title to the same. The court are of opinion that he has not. The evidence of abandonment is merely conversation, which past a long time ago; it is not very explicit, and is much impaired by the circumstance of Bertrand Gravier having sold a part of his Batture to one of the front proprietors. It would be dangerous to divest a man of his property upon evidence of such declarations, without any proof of a consideration.

With respect to the claim of prescription, it is sufficient to observe, that there has been no exclusive possession on the part of the defendants, and, consequently, they have no title on this ground. There are, indeed, other strong objections to a prescriptive title in this case, but the one we have stated is considered as sufficient.

5th. With respect to the title of John Gravier, as founded on the inventory, appraisement and adjudication, which have been adduced in evidence in this cause, it is the opinion of this court, that they are not bound to determine the validity or invalidity of this title. First, whether John Gravier has purchased the whole, or only inherited an undivided part, his claim to be quieted in the lawful enjoyment of the property in question, against the adverse pretensions of the city, to the property of the soil, or the right of carrying it away, is sufficiently strong to enable the court to form a decision of the present case.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court, that the petitioner be quieted in his lawful enjoyment of the Batture, or alluvion, described in his petition, against the claims and pretensions of the defendants, and that the injunction heretofore granted in this case be made perpetual.

No. 2.

To the Honorable the Superior Court of the First District of the Territory of Orleans, the petition of Edward Livingston, of the city of New Orleans, counsellor at law, humbly sheweth:

That John Gravier, by virtue of sundry grants from the Crown of France, and divers mesne conveyances under them, in the month of November, in the year of our Lord 1805, was possessed of and entitled to a certain farm, or parcel of land, part of which had been previously laid out into streets and lots, and was and is known by the name of the suburb St. Mary; that the said farm had, for sundry years past, increased by an alluvion formed by the river Mississippi, which is the front boundary of the said plantation, and which, by the laws of the land, became (in proportion as the same was formed) the property of the said John Gravier, and of the several proprietors of the said plantation under which he held, and was incorporated into the body of the said plantation, and by the laws aforesaid was so held as part of the same. But the said John Gravier, and those under whom he claims, have uninterruptedly held the said plantation, of which the said alluvion so formed a part, for upwards of eighty years, until some short time previous to the month of November, 1805, when the mayor, aldermen, and inhabitants of the city of New Orleans, having disturbed him in the enjoyment of the said alluvion, he presented his petition to the Superior Court to be quieted in his possession, and relieved against the said disturbance; and that such proceedings were thereupon had; that the said Superior Court, on the 23d day of May, 1807, pronounced the decree, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed; in pursuance of which decree, the said John Gravier was put in peaceable possession of the said alluvion, and the said mayor, aldermen, and inhabitants were perpetually enjoined from disturbing him therein, and your petitioner shows that, since rendering the said judgment, he hath purchased from Nicholas Girod, and the trustees of Peter Delabigarre, under the title of the said John Gravier, and from the said John Gravier himself, in all, for the sum of eighty thousand dollars and upwards, all that part of the said plantation and alluvion which is bounded on one side by the road, and on the other by the Mississippi river, and extends from the limits of the city to the street called rue Julié, of which your petitioner was put in possession, and on which he has expended very large sums in improvements, and particularly in making a canal and levee, which are nearly complete; that your petitioner is informed, and verily believes, that the President of the United States, being ignorant of the true circumstances of your petitioner's title, but instigated, as he believes, by some malicious misrepresentations of your petitioner's enemies, has given directions to F. L. B. Dorgenoy, the marshal of the district, to remove your petitioner by force from the said piece of land, so purchased by him as aforesaid; and that, under color of an act entitled "An act to prevent settlements being made on lands ceded to the United States, until authorized by law," which law, as your petitioner is advised and believes, cannot apply to your petitioner's case, as by a reference to the said law will more fully and at large appear.

That, if your petitioner is dispossessed at this season of the year, the greatest injury will result to him, not only by the destruction of the unfinished works, by the annual inundation which may now in a few weeks be expected, but also by the failure of many contracts he has formed, and by the loss of the revenue arising from his canal and basin, for the next year.

And your petitioner shows, that the navigation of the river will be greatly impeded by the half finished works, and that the greatest danger is to be dreaded to the health of the city from the existence of a temporary dike which it was your petitioner's intention to have removed prior to the raising of the waters. Wherefore and inasmuch as the said order must have unadvisedly issued, as the same is contrary to the treaty by which this country is ceded to the United States, to the laws thereof, and to the constitution, and particularly to that article which declares that no private property shall be taken for public use without just compensation; and also in direct violation of that part of the ordinance for the government of this territory, which directs that no man shall be deprived of his liberty or property but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

May it please your honors to enjoin the said F. L. B. Dorgenoy, marshal, from executing the said order, and to grant to your petitioner such other relief as the nature of his case may require.

EDW. LIVINGSTON.

Signed and sworn to in open court, January 25th, 1808.

J. W. SMITH, Clerk.

Let an injunction issue agreeable to the prayer of the petition. 25th January, 1808.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original petition and order on file in this office.

J. W. SMITH, Clerk S. C.

MARCH 23, 1818.

Answers to Mr. Livingston's thirteen queries.

1st. The law of that Kingdom to which the country belonged when the title of the individual commenced, whether the present proprietor, or those under whom he claims, must govern. Whatever was expressed in the contract at the time of the first grant or conveyance from the Crown or sovereign proprietor, is of course binding; and whatever, from the then existing law of the country, was implied, in relation to the subject of the contract, is equally binding. Whether the alluvion then existed or not is consequently immaterial. It is a part of the contract, that if, at a future day, it shall be formed, it shall go to the grantor or grantee, as the case may be.

The 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th questions turn on this general and important point. The law of France on the subject of titles to land has not been a part of our regular studies. To hazard an opinion from an occasional view of it in the present instance, cannot be expected from us. We deem ourselves at liberty only to go so far as to say that, having attentively perused the opinions given by Mr. Derbigny, of New Orleans, on the one side, and Mr. Du Ponceau on the other, the weight of argument and authority appears to us clearly and amply in favor of the latter.

7. This question is in a degree connected with the five preceding ones. It must depend on the laws of a foreign country, with which we are not conversant. As the facts are stated to have taken place while the country belonged to the Spanish Crown, the question must be determined by the laws of Spain. We can only say, that if, by the laws of that country, the consequences supposed by Mr. Derbigny would flow from what is stated to have taken place on the part of Mr. Gravier, it must be a very singular and a very dangerous code, and that such consequences would not ensue by the laws of the United States.

8. If John Gravier, at the time of the cession of Louisiana to the United States, possessed a right to the alluvion in question, we are perfectly satisfied that the cession did not deprive him of it. The third article of the treaty of April 30th, 1803, expressly guarantees to the inhabitants of the ceded territory their property as well as their liberty and religion.

The second article, indeed, professes to transfer only the public property; and it would be injustice to suppose that any thing less was intended.

If, at the time of the transfer, 1803, the alluvion did not exist, and if, by the laws of the United States, alluvions were public property, a question might be raised which, even under these circumstances, we should have little difficulty in deciding in favor of Mr. Gravier; but neither the fact nor the law occasion any doubt in this case; not the fact, because the alluvion was then very considerable; nor the law, because with us it is perfectly settled, that, as to lands gained from the sea, either by alluvion, by the washing up of sand and earth, so as in time to make terra firma, or by dereliction, as when the sea shrinks back below the usual water marks, if the gain be by little and little, it shall go to the owner of the land adjoining; but if sudden and considerable, it goes to the State.

The 9th, 10th, and 12th, may be considered together. It appears to us impossible to consider the proceedings of the Executive, as authorized by any existing acts of Congress. The fourth section of the act of March 3d, 1807, authorises the marshal, under the instructions of the President, to remove from the "lands aforesaid" every person who shall be found on the same, and who shall not have obtained permission to remain thereon as aforesaid.

To ascertain what is meant by the "lands aforesaid," we recur to the first and second sections, where it appears to refer to lands ceded or secured to the United States, by a treaty with a foreign nation, or a cession of any particular state, which shall be taken possession of after the passing the act, and which lands have not been previously sold, ceded, or leased by the United States, or the claim to which lands by such person has not been previously recognised and confirmed by the United States. The provisions extend to all the lands of the United States. In respect to the territory of Orleans, there is a special proviso, that nothing therein contained shall be construed to affect the right, title, or claim of any person to lands, before the Board of Commissioners shall have made their reports, and the decision of Congress be had thereon.

Three commissioners were appointed by virtue of two acts of Congress, (see dates and titles, vol. 7, 288 and vol. 8, 113,) and the first of these laws sets out with a full and express confirmation of French and Spanish titles, if accompanied with actual possession, as there-in mentioned.

The nature of the several rights or claims to lands, the mode of proceeding and reporting to the Executive, in order that the matter may be laid before Congress, are described at large.

According to the case laid before us, Mr. Gravier, or those under whom he claims, were in possession of the Batture, or alluvion, at the time the act of March 2d, 1805, was passed; the possession, as a matter of fact, is established by the judgment of the Superior Court.

This possession, as a matter of right against the mayor, alderman, and inhabitants, is established by the same judgment. This document, then, of itself, shows that he is not one of those lawless intruders against whom alone the President is authorized to direct the summary and resistless powers given to him by the law.

We confess ourselves at a loss to discover by what chain of reasoning the Executive administration of the United States have been able to bring such a case within the purview of these acts.

11. In answer to the 11th question we can only say, that an act of Congress intended to authorize such proceedings as have been adopted in the present instance, forcibly and without a judicial hearing to dispossess those who for so many years have held a possession sanctioned by the laws of the foreign Government under which title was originally acquired; solemnly promised by treaty to be secured to the individuals; recognised and confirmed to the full extent of the whole controversy before the court, by that portion of the powers of Government which the constitution and laws of our country had invested in the highest judicial tribunal existing in the country; that such a law would not only be unconstitutional and void, but meet the severe repro-bation of every thoughtful man, of every lover of his country, of every citizen of the United States.

13. Mr. Livingston can maintain an action against the marshal and all who assisted him for his damages.

JARED INGERSOLL.
W. RAWLE.

AUGUST 3, 1808.

The case stated by Mr. Livingston for the opinion of counsel, respecting his right to a part of the Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary, at New Orleans, seems to rest on grounds, and depend on principles, on which a satisfactory opinion may be given, so far as is necessary, without taking particular notice of the several questions proposed.

It is stated that the order of the Jesuits (to whom twenty arpents in front on the river Mississippi, by fifty in depth, had been granted, in alodium, in 1726,) being suppressed, their property was annexed to the Crown of France; that this plantation was divided into six lots, each fronting the river, and sold in 1763, to different people, under some of whom Mr. Gravier, or rather Mr. Livingston, derives title. It is therefore unnecessary to inquire, what the law of France, respecting alluvions, was before or at this period, or whether any alluvion had then taken place, and equally so to consider, whether alluvion can in any case belong to the Crown or State in the case of allodial land; or where a whole province, with all the lands, coasts, ports, havens, and islands, within which the alluvion takes place, is granted to one or more subjects, since the grant by the Crown in 1763, to the person under whom Mr. Livingston claims, is stated to be fronting the river Mississippi; and it is therefore immaterial whether the Crown held the alluvion, if any there was, by one title or the other.

It is also stated that, in 1762, before the sale of the Jesuits' property, the province of Louisiana was ceded by France to Spain, although possession was not taken by the latter till 1769. We have not the treaty containing this act, nor can it (we believe) be easily procured, but it is reasonable to presume, that, when the cession was rendered complete, by a change of the possession, Spain became entitled to all the rights, and no more, which France had at the date of it, except so far as the same was prevented by intermediate grants from the Crown of France, while she continued to exercise acts of sovereignty therein; and hence it follows, that France had no right to any alluvion after 1762, the date of the cession, or, at most, after 1763, when she made grants of the Jesuits' tract, bounded on the river.

Nor could Spain have the right of alluvion after either of these periods; since it is admitted, that, by the laws of that nation, alluvion is incident to land which is bounded by a navigable river, and belongs not to the Crown, but to the owner of such land.

This being the case, we can see no room to doubt, but that all the increase by alluvion, from 1762 or 1763, to October 1, 1800, when Louisiana was retroceded by Spain to France, clearly belonged to the owner of the land which gained it; and, if it did, France acquired no right to it by the act of retrocession.

It is hardly necessary to consider on what law the right of alluvion, in the legal sense and meaning of the word, between the 1st of October, 1800, when Louisiana was ceded by Spain to France, and the 30th of April, 1803, when it was ceded by the latter to the United States, depends; since the accumulation or recovery of soil from the river, between these periods, could not have been of sufficient height, to be capable of separate appropriation, and the object of distinct property from that of the first land.

The account given of a supposed abandonment of the Batture, or alluvion, by Bertrand Gravier, is so vague and uncertain, and is in itself of such a nature, that it would not be regarded by our law, and it is strange, indeed, if it would be by any law; but as this depends on that of Spain, of which we have but very little knowledge, we shall leave it for the consideration of others. If he did not divest himself of it, the conclusion is, in our opinion, irresistible, that the United States have not the smallest color of right to it. But, unfounded as the title of the United States is, it seems to us, that the means used by them, or rather by the Executive authority, to possess themselves of it, are not built on a more substantial basis.

The act, entitled "An act to prevent settlements being made on lands ceded to the United States, until authorized by law," passed the 3d of March, 1807, under which the President is understood to have acted, provides, among other things—

1. That if any person shall, after the passing of it, take possession of, or make a settlement on any lands ceded or secured to the United States, by any treaty or cession, until thereunto duly authorized by law, he shall forfeit, &c., and moreover it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to direct the marshal, or other person acting as such, in the manner therein directed, and to take such other measures, and employ such military force as he might judge necessary, to remove from lands so ceded or secured to the United States, any person who should thereafter take possession of the same.

2. That it should be lawful for the marshal, after the 1st of January then next, under such aforesaid instructions as might be given by the President, to remove from the land aforesaid any persons who should be found on the same, provided three months' notice should be previously given to such persons as were settled on the same, prior to the passing of the act.

From the nature of alluvion, and especially of that gained from the Mississippi, there can, during its accretion be hardly any other possession of it than that which attaches to the possession of the land which gains it, or which remains in the proprietor thereof, after he may have parted with the land to which it had incorporated itself, and this we think a sufficient possession for all legal and reasonable purposes, so as to take the case out of the act. In addition to this, it is stated that the alluvion was not of sufficient value until the year 1803, to indemnify the proprietor for making a new levee, but that "in 1804, John Gravier, the proprietor, thinking it of sufficient value and extent to justify the expense, threw up a dike enclosing about five hundred feet square of the alluvion;" and if it belonged to him, and if there was no exclusive adverse possession, this undoubtedly gave him complete possession of the whole of it, as fully as the act could by any fair or reasonable construction require. But what seems to remove all doubts on this head is, that, about this time, Gravier opposed a practice which had occasionally prevailed, for the inhabitants of the city to take sand from the alluvion, for the purposes of making mortar and filling the streets, on which they claimed it as a right; and he thereupon presented a petition to the Superior Court of the territory, stating his right to the alluvion, complaining of the disturbance, and praying that the corporation might set forth under what title they claimed it: that he might be quieted in his possession, and that they should be perpetually enjoined from troubling him therein; and it was so proceeded that, after a full hearing, the court declared, on the 23d of May, 1807, that the alluvion belonged to Gravier, and ordered that he be quieted in his lawful enjoyment thereof, and that the injunction, which had been formerly granted, be made perpetual; and in June following, the decree was carried into execution, by the sheriff's serving the injunction on the defendants and putting the plaintiff into possession of that part of which he had been deprived. These proceedings, together with the previous statement, seem most incontestably to prove that John Gravier could, with no propriety, be considered as a person taking possession, after the passing of the said act, of lands ceded to the United States, and before he was thereunto authorized by law; and, if so, it necessarily follows, that this case is not within the provisions of the act, and that the President had no authority to dispossess him under it.

It is, however, stated, that Mr. Gravier having, after the decree, sold a considerable part of the alluvion to Mr. Delabigarre and Mr. Livingston, they took possession; made partition thereof between them; that the latter expended considerable sums of money in the improvement of his part; that on the 25th of January, 1808, the marshal of the district received a letter from the Secretary of State, telling him that it was the direction of the President that he should go to the place called the Batture, in front of the suburb St. Mary, and drive off all persons whom he might find thereon, who had taken possession since the 3d of March, 1807; and that, in violation of an injunction granted by the same court to prevent it, the marshal executed this order by taking three regiments of militia, and driving off Mr. Livingston's workmen. It is added, that it was stated by the President that he had acted under the official opinion of the Attorney General, that the land belonged to the United States; and it is also added, that neither Mr. Livingston nor any other proprietor or person under whom they claimed, had received any intimation or notice of any such proceeding being intended, nor were they called upon to show or defend their title.

The third article of the treaty of April 30th, 1803, by which France ceded Louisiana to the United States, expressly guaranties to the inhabitants of the ceded territory their property as well as their liberty and religion, and no act of Congress, if it were possible to suppose them capable of intending it, could constitutionally authorize the President to deprive them of either. That under which he is supposed to have acted does not direct the mode by which he shall ascertain whether the lands on which individuals may have settled are secured to them by treaty, or whether they belong to the United States, under the general words of the cession, nor whether they were taken possession of before or after the passing of the act; nor whether it was by intrusion or by regular process and judgment of the law; but it very probably leaves him to pursue the legal means of inquiry, and when this is done, to cause the removal of any lawless intruders.

A due regard for the rights of property, the security of individuals, and the laws and constitution of the country, therefore required, that, before force, and especially military force, was resorted to, a legal inquest of these several matters, which were all essential to the jurisdiction, should have taken place under a special writ of inquiry, framed according to the spirit of the act, and adapted to the case, or in a prosecution for the penalties incurred by intruders against it, or in some other legal manner, where the party might be heard, and have an opportunity of showing and vindicating his rights, whatever they might be; but, instead of this, the President appears to have referred an ex parte statement to the Attorney General, and on his ex parte opinion, to have determined in an ex parte manner, that the alluvion, or Batture, in front of the suburb St. Mary was not the property of individuals, guaranteed to them under the solemnity of the treaty; that the possession thereof was not "authorized by law," although the record of the highest legal tribunal in the territory showed that it was, and that Mr. Gravier, after having been disturbed, was not such an intruder as the law contemplates, but was legally put into possession by the sheriff, under the judgment and process of law; and, what is still more extraordinary, the President appears to have left it to the marshal, a mere ministerial officer, altogether unauthorized to judge in the case, to determine who had taken possession before or after the passing of the act, and without regarding whether it was by the judgment of a court or not; for the orders to him are stated to be "to go to the Batture and drive off all persons whom he might find thereon who had taken possession since the 3d March, 1780." This order is not only as general in its nature, but as illegal in its principles, if not as dangerous in its consequences, as any general warrant ever was; for it sets at nought a law of the United States; a solemn treaty, and the decision of a legal tribunal of the last resort; and we are therefore of opinion, that those who issued it, the marshal who obeyed it, and all who aided and assisted in its execution, are joint trespassers, and answerable in damages to Mr. Livingston for the wrong and injury which he has thereby sustained.

The proceedings of the Government of the United States in maintaining the public right to the beach of the Mississippi, adjacent to New Orleans, against the intrusion of Edward Livingston. Prepared for the use of counsel, by THOMAS JEFFERSON.

PREFACE.

Edward Livingston, of the territory of Orleans, having taken possession of the beach of the river Mississippi adjacent to the city of New Orleans, in defiance of the general right of the nation to the property and use of the beaches and beds of their rivers, it became my duty, as charged with the preservation of the public property, to remove the intrusion, and to maintain the citizens of the United States in their right to a common use of that beach. Instead of viewing this as a public act, and having recourse to those proceedings which are regularly provided for conflicting claims between the public and an individual, he chose to consider it as a private trespass committed on his freehold, by myself personally, and instituted against me, after my retirement from office, an action of trespass, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the district of Virginia.

Being requested by my counsel to furnish them with a statement of the facts of the case, as well as of my own ideas of the questions of right, I proceeded to make such a statement, fully as to facts, but briefly and generally as to the questions of right. In the progress of the work, however, I found myself drawn insensibly into details, and finally concluded to meet the questions generally which the case would present, and to expose the weakness of the plaintiff's pretensions, in addition to the strength of the public right. These questions were, of course, to arise under the laws of the territory of Orleans, composed of the Roman, the French, and the Spanish codes, and written in those languages. The books containing them are so rare in this country as scarcely to be found in the best furnished libraries. Having more time than my counsel, consistently with their duties to others, could bestow on researches so much out of the ordinary line, I thought myself bound to facilitate their labors, and to furnish them with such materials as I could collect. I did it by full extracts from the several authorities, and in the languages in which they were originally written, that they might judge for themselves whether I had misinterpreted them. These materials and topics, expressed in the technical style of the law, familiar to them, they were of course to use or not to use, according to the dictates of their own better judgment. If used, it would be with the benefit of being delivered in a form better suited to the public ear. I passed over the question of jurisdiction, because that was one of ordinary occurrence, and its limitations well ascertained. On this, in event, the case was dismissed; the court being of opinion they could not decide a question of title to lands not within their district. My wish had rather been for a full investigation of the merits at the bar, that the public might learn, in that way, that their servants had done nothing but what the laws had authorized and required them to do. Precluded now from this mode of justification, I adopt that of publishing what was meant originally for the private eye of counsel. The apology for its general complexion, more formal than popular, must be found as well in the character of the question, as in the views with which its discussion had been prepared. The necessity indeed of continuing the elaborate quotations is strengthened in the case of ordinary readers, who are supposed to have still less opportunity of turning to the authorities from which these are taken.

The questions arising, being many and independent of each other, admitted not a methodical and luminous arrangement. Proceeding, therefore, in a course of narrative, I have met and discussed the points of law in the order in which events presented them; thus securing, as we go along, the ground we pass over, and leaving nothing adversary or doubtful behind. Hence the mixture of fact and law which will be observed through the whole.

Vouchers for the facts are regularly referred to. These are principally, 1st, Affidavits taken and published on the part of the plaintiff, and of the city of New Orleans, very deeply interested in this question. 2d, Printed statements, by the counsel on each side, uncontradicted by the other, of facts under their joint observation and knowledge. 3d, Records. 4th, Notarial acts; and 5th, Letters and reports of public functionaries filed in the office of the Department of State.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES, &c.

Not long after the establishment of the city of New Orleans, and while the religious society of Jesuits retained their standing in France, they obtained from Louis XIV. a grant of lands adjacent to the city, bearing date the 11th of April, 1726. The original of this grant having been destroyed in the fire which consumed a great part of the city in 1794, and no copy of it as yet produced, the extent and character of the grant is known from no authentic document. Its other limits are unimportant; but that next the river and above the city is understood to have been of twenty arpents or acres, [of one hundred and eighty French feet, or sixty-four yards of our measure each.] 'face au fleuve,' the ambiguity of which expression is preserved by translating it, 'fronting the river.' Whether this authorized them to go to the water-line of the river, or only to the road and levee, is a question of some difficulty, and not of importance enough to arrest our present attention. To these they had added twelve arpents more by purchase from individuals; in 1763, the order of the Jesuits was suppressed in France, and their property confiscated. The thirty-two arpents before mentioned were divided into six parcels, described each as 'faisant face au fleuve,' and the one next to the city, of seven arpents in breadth and fifty in depth, was sold to Pradel; but how these seven arpents, like Falstaff's men in Buckram, became twelve in the sale of the widow Pradel to Renard, [report 7.] thirteen in Gravier's inventory, and nearly seventeen, as is said, [Derb. viii. ix.] in the extent of his faubourg, the plaintiff is called on to show, and to deduce titles from the Crown, regularly down to himself. In 1788, Gravier, in right of his wife, the widow of Renard, laid off the whole extent of his front on the river, whatever it was, into four ranges of lots, and, in 1796, he added three ranges more, establishing them as a faubourg or suburb to the city. That this could not be done without permission from the Government may be true; and no formal and written permission has been produced. Whether such a one was given and lost in the fire, or was only verbal, is not known. But that permission was given must be believed: 1st. From Gravier's declaration to Charles Trudeau, the surveyor, which must operate as an estoppel [report 45.] against all contrary pretensions in those claiming under him. 2d. From Carondelet's order to Trudeau, first to deposit a copy of the plan in the public archives; and afterwards, an order for a second one to be delivered to himself, which implied necessarily that he had consented to the establishment; but, more especially, when B. Gravier, relying on this establishment as freeing him from the repairs of the bank, the Governor declared "it was true, and that Gravier was right." 3d. From the records of the Cabildo, or Town Council, with whom the Governor sat in person, showing that, at their sessions on the 1st day of January annually, for regulating the police of the city, a commissary of police for the new quarter was regularly appointed from the year 1796 till the United States took possession. The actual settlement of the ranges next the river, and the addition of the new ranges, now probably rendered that necessary. 4th. From the conviction expressed by the surveyor, that, from his knowledge of the laws and customs of the Spanish colonies, no one would have dared to establish a city, bourg, village, or faubourg, without authorization, verbal at least, from the Governor. 5th. From the act of the local legislature incorporating the city of New Orleans, [Thiery 32.] that no formal written act of authorization can be produced is not singular, as that is known to be the condition of a great proportion of their titles from the Government; and the extraordinary negligence of these titles was what rendered it necessary for Congress to establish, in the several territories of Orleans, Mississippi, Louisiana, Indiana, and Michigan, boards of commissioners to ascertain and commit them to record. To this we may add, that the principle which shall take from the inhabitants of the suburb St. Mary the validity of their establishment, will annul a great portion of the land rights of those several territories. Finally, whatever act of the Government may be considered as amounting to evidence of its ratification of the establishment of the faubourg, is retrospective, and will amount to an original authorization under the maxim, "omnis rati habitio retrotrahitur, et mandato æquiparatur."

Bertrand Gravier proceeded to sell the lots of his new faubourg, and particularly he sold the whole range next the river. Such deeds for these lots as have been produced, describe them as 'haciendo frente al río,' 'fronting the river.' And it is affirmed, [Examen 13. Poydras 7 and 18. Thiery 39.] that almost all, if not all, the deeds used the same expression. [See notarial copies of the deeds of B. Gravier to Nicholas Gravier, and of Nicholas Gravier to Escot, Girod, Wiltz.] Bertrand Gravier himself, on all occasions, [Pièces Probantes 9. 21. 28. 30. Livingston 59. Monile's deposition, MS.] declared that he had sold his lots 'faisant face au fleuve,' and had passed to the purchasers his right to the devanture, meaning every thing in the front of his lots. Whatever extent, then, towards the river, passed to the Jesuits by the term 'face au fleuve,' or from the King to the purchasers of the Jesuits' property, under whom B. Gravier claimed, the same extent was, by the same expression, 'face au fleuve,' or 'frente al río,' passed by Bertrand Gravier to the purchasers of the front lots. If the words 'face au fleuve' gave him only to the road and levee, he, by the same words, gave them no further; if to the water edge, then he sold to the water edge also; and, having parted with all his right as riparian possessor, could transmit none to those claiming under him by subsequent title, as the plaintiff does. In a note added to the end of the printed report of this case, whether by the reporter or by the plaintiff does not appear, it is said, that this objection was answered by showing, from the deeds, that each lot had a clear front boundary, by referring to the "plan, which, in no instance, crossed the road." And that this brings it within the rule of law, which says, "in agris limitatis jus alluvionis locum non habere constat." [Dig. 41. 1. 16.] This process of deduction, if not clear, is compendious at least, and better placed in a note than in the text, where explanation would have been expected. Let us spread it open and examine it. What says the deed to Nicholas Gravier for fifty-eight lots?

'Yo, Don Beltran Gravier, vendo à Don Nicholas Gravier cinquenta y ocho terrenos situados en esta dictra ciudad, extramuros de la puerta de Chapitulas, à saver, trece haciendo frente al río Mississipi, y lindando por el lado de abaxo, que es de esta dictra ciudad, con terreno de Don R. Jones, y por el de arriba con otros de Don J. B. Sarpy, &c. Y los quarenta y cinco terrenos restantes completa a los cinquenta y ocho, que quedan indicados, commenzan sobre el limite de la primera calle formando una linea directa, à emperar por el torreno que se halla detras del de Don J. Poydras, todo conforme al plano que, delineado por Don C. L. Trudeau, he entregado al comprador para su inteligencia y riesgo: pero con la condicion de que me reservo el derecho di tomar la terra que necessitare para mi fabrica de la drillos, en la playa ó Battura, que hay en la extension de los nominados trece terrenos que hacen frente al dictro río.'

'I, Don Bertrand Gravier, sell to Don Nicholas Gravier fifty-eight lots situated in this said city, without the gate of Chapitulas, to wit, thirteen fronting the river Mississipi, and bordering on the lower side, which is that of this said city, with the lot of Don R. Jones, and on the upper side with others of Don J. B. Sarpy, &c. And the forty-five lots remaining, the complement of the fifty-eight before mentioned, commence above [or beyond] the limit of the first street, forming a right line, beginning at the lot which is behind that of Don J. Poydras, in conformity with the plan which, having been delineated by Don C. L. Trudeau, I have delivered to the purchaser for his information and ascertainment: nevertheless, with the condition that I reserve to myself the right to take the earth which I shall need for my manufacture of bricks on the beach or Batture, which is in the extension of the said thirteen lots which front the river.'

The first part of this description is of the thirteen lots, to wit, that they front the river. The second part relates wholly to the remaining forty-five lots, which begin beyond or above the first street, in a straight line from the lot behind Poydras's, and refers to the plan to show their position more particularly as back lots, behind the front range. It is to be noted that the public way in front of the faubourg is not a street: it is the same chemin royale, (royal road,) which has existed from early times, and has never been merged in the character of a street. Nothing can prove more clearly that this reference to the plan was not to give a front line to the thirteen lots, than that the same deed reserves the right of digging earth on the Batture beyond that line. Now, if nothing was meant to be conveyed beyond the front line marked in the plan, why reserve a right to dig earth on the Batture, which is beyond that line? And that Nicholas Gravier, Escot, Girod, and Wiltz, did not consider this line as the limit of their rights, appears from their deeds conveying the Batture expressly by that name, with the lots themselves. On the whole, we see here a curious specimen of tergiversation in reasoning. When urged that the grant to the Jesuits, and to Bertrand Gravier, though expressed to be 'face au fleuve,' must still have stopped at this line or edge of the royal road, it is answered that those terms convey to the water edge and make it an 'ager arcifinius,' to which the right of alluvion appertains. But when Bertrand Gravier conveys to his purchasers 'face au fleuve,' they turn about and say that the same identical words, 'face au fleuve,' convey now only to this same line or edge of the royal road, which they overleaped before, and make the grounds conveyed an 'ager limitatus,' to which the right of alluvion does not appertain. It is perfectly equal which of the meanings is ascribed to these words. Only give them the same in both instances, and say which. If these words make the road your boundary, you never had a right to the Batture beyond it. If they extend to the river what was conveyed to you, they extend to the river also what was conveyed from you. Will it be pretended that, after establishing his town, Bertrand Gravier could then have sold the streets to others? and yet he might, a fortiori, having not included them in any deed. But does not common sense and common honesty proclaim that the establishment of his town, and sale of the lots, implied a relinquishment to the inhabitants of the communications of streets and shore? a?jacent, as a common, which are the necessary and constant appendages of every town? The express conveyance, then, of his riparian rights, and the implication as to them and the streets, are believed to be conclusive to show that the plaintiff having had no right, can have sustained no wrong.

In 1797, Bertrand Gravier died intestate; and at this epoch we must introduce what constitutes the sole object of the existing contest. Opposite to the habitation or plantation of Bertrand Gravier, now the faubourg Ste. Marie, the beach of the river, called in that country Batture, of ordinary breadth within memory, has sensibly increased, by deposits of earth, during the annual floods of the river, [Derb. xix.] till, in the year 1806, it was found to extend in breadth, at low tide, from one hundred and twenty-two to two hundred and forty-seven yards of our measure, from the water edge into the river; and from about seven feet in height, where it abuts against the bank, declining to the water edge. [See Pelletier's plan annexed. Thiery xvii.] While uncovered, which is from August to January, inclusive, it has served as a quay for lading and unloading goods, stowing away lumber and firewood, and has furnished all the earth for building the city, and raising its streets and courts, essential in that oozy soil. [Derb. ii.] While covered, which is during the other six months of the year, from February to July, inclusive, [Liv. 58. Poydras 20. 21. 23.] it is the port for all the small craft of the river, and especially for the boats of the upper country, which, in the season of high water, can land or lie no where else in the neighborhood of the city. During this period, they anchor on its bottom, or moor to its bank. It is then, like every other beach, the bed of the river one-half the year, and a quay the other half, distinguished from those of tide-waters, by being subject to an annual, instead of a semi-diurnal ebb and flood. In this beach or shoal, with the bank to which it is adjacent, if Bertrand Gravier claimed any right as a riparian proprietor of the habitation, he had certainly meant to convey that right to the purchasers of the front lots, by the term 'frente al rio,' 'fronting the river,' reserving expressly, as we have seen, from one purchaser of fifty-eight lots, a right to take earth from the beach for his brick-kilns. As he died without children, the inheritance belonged to John Gravier, and other brothers and sisters whom he had left in France, or their representatives, as co-heirs.

By the civil law, if an heir accept the inheritance, he is considered, not merely as the representative, but as continuing the person of the ancestor himself, is answerable for all his debts, and out of all his property, as well his own as what he had newly acquired by the inheritance. Time, therefore, was allowed him to inform himself of the condition of the estate and debts, during which it was considered as an hereditas jacens, vested in nobody. If he declined taking the inheritance simply as heir, he was allowed to take it as purchaser, or, in their language, as heir with the benefit of inventory: whereupon an inventory and appraisement of it took place, and he had the pre-emption at the appraised value. He was then liable to no more debts than the amount of the appraisement; and if there were a surplus of the appraised value over and above the debts, it was his, if a single heir, or partitioned among the co-heirs, as parceners, if there were more than one. [Brown. civ. law, l. 218. 302. Kaim's law tracts, 389. Gibbon's c. 44. 153.] Bertrand Gravier is understood to have left France indebted and insolvent; and John Gravier, therefore, either knowing or ignorant of the amount of the debts, chose, on behalf, or perhaps, in fraud, of the co-heirs, to decline the inheritance, and to take the estate as a purchaser by inventory and appraisement. It was inventoried and appraised. In the inventory is placed a single article of lands, in these words: "are placed in the inventory the lands of this habitation, whose extent cannot be calculated immediately, on account of his having sold many lots; but Mr. N. Gravier informs us that its bounds go to the forks of the bayou, according to the titles." And in the appraisement also there is but this same single article of lands, thus described: "about thirteen arpents of land, of which the habitation is estimated, including the garden, of which the most useful part is taken off in the front, the residue consisting of the lowest part, [to wit, that descending back to the bayou,] the side being sold to Navarro, one Percy, and the negro Zamba, a portion of which, &c, estimated at $190 the front acre, with all the depth, which makes $2,470." Then follows the adjudication, which adjudges to John Gravier the effects, real estate, movables, and slaves which have been inventoried as belonging to the estate of his deceased brother, Bertrand Gravier, &c, [Report 9, 10.] We see, then that no lands were inventoried but the thirteen arpents in front, composing the inhabitation. And it is impossible that that term should be meant to include the beach of the river, cut off from it by the intervention of the whole faubourg of seven ranges of squares; or that they should not have used a more obvious expression, if the idea of the beach had been in their minds. Nobody could consider these two parcels, distant and disjointed as they were, as being one parcel only, one habitation. No man having two farms, or two tracts of land, separated by the lands of others, would expect that, by devising or conveying one, the other would pass also. In fact, at that time, neither John Gravier nor any one else considered the beach as any part of Bertrand Gravier's estate; and in the appraisement, they estimate the front arpents, (that is, fronting on the faubourg,) with all their depth to the bayou, at one hundred and ninety dollars the front arpent; contemplating clearly only what was between the faubourg and bayou. Accordingly Fernandez, acting for the Depositor General, the legal officer in those cases, swears that he took charge and possession of all the estate according to the inventory which had been made from the 28th of June, to the 4th of July, 1797, that, in that inventory, the Batture never was mentioned, or heard of, as property of Gravier, nor in charge of the Depositor; and that, on delivering the estate to John Gravier, the Batture never was spoken of. It is equally certain that, had there been an idea that they were smuggling the Batture away, through these proceedings, the citizens of New Orleans would not have been so silent, nor the Governor, the Cabildo, and other Spanish authorities, so passive, when so active on all former occasions respecting the Batture; and that, had the Batture been under the view of the appraisers, instead of estimating it at 2,470 dollars, conjointly with other thirteen arpents, a very different sum must have been named. The Batture alone is now estimated at half a million of dollars. But the truth is, that neither John Gravier nor any one else, at that day, considered it but as public property; and for six years ensuing, he never manifested one symptom of ownership, until Mr. Livingston's arrival there from New York, with the wharves and slips of that place fresh in his recollection. The flesh-pots of Egypt could not suddenly be forgotten, even in this new land of Canaan. Then John Gravier received his inspiration that the beach was his; and is tempted, by one kind of bargain after another, to try his fortune with it. It was only to lend his name, and receive a round sum if any thing could be made of it. To get over the palpable omission of it in the inventory and appraisement, they find a man whose recollection is exactly à propos; a Henry Parisien, a comedian by profession, and joiner by trade. He had been one of the appraisers ten years before, and recollected, and so swore, that he had "walked on the Batture before the closing of the appraisement, to ascertain its extent, and be the better able to judge of its value, and that it was through forgetfulness that it had not been taken into the estimate." [Pièces Prob. 33.] It happens that nature bears witness against him. From the 28th of June, to the 4th of July, is within the period of high waters; and it is proved that, at the very time of the appraisement, the river was still overflowing, and the Batture covered with water. The journals of the sawmills further attest that they did not cease to work till the 25th of August of that year; and when the waters of the river are sufficiently low to stop the mills, all the Battures are still covered with water. [P. Pr. 31.] However, even this Henry Parisien swears, "that the Batture was not in the estimate, and that it was through forgetfulness that it was not." [Examen 19. Rep. 21. P. Prob. 33.] No matter through what cause, it is enough that it was not in the inventory or estimate, and, of course, not sold to John Gravier. This corroborates the testimony of the depositor, that he neither had it in his charge, nor included it in the estate sold and delivered. John Gravier must, therefore, as to this part of his brother's estate, if his it were, recommence his work, by having a new inventory, appraisement, and adjudication. But to repel the present proceedings, it suffices that, having made his election to take, not as heir, but purchaser, this beach is not yet his; it is still an hereditas jacens; and before he can convey it to Mr. Livingston, he must get it by a new process, and make a third bargain.

We will proceed further to trace the history of this acquisition of the Batture by the plaintiff who writes a letter of lamentations to some member of the Government, on the 27th of June, 1809, that "Congress will probably adjourn without coming to any decision on the subject of my removal, by the late President of the United States, from my estate at New Orleans." A most ungrateful complaint; for, had he not been removed, he must, at the time of writing this letter, have been, as his estate was, some ten or twelve feet under water; the river being then at its greatest height. And when was this notable discovery made, that the beach of the river was the separate and exclusive property of J. Gravier, clear of all public right to its use? Let us hear the Governor, in answer to this question. In a letter to the Secretary of State, of October 13, 1807, he says, "Early after the arrival of Mr. Livingston in this territory, he became concerned in the purchase of a parcel of ground fronting the faubourg of this city, commonly called the Batture, a property which had been occupied as a common by the city for many years previous, and the title to which, in the opinion of the inhabitants, was unquestionable." The day* of the arrival of Mr. Livingston in New Orleans I do not know; but I recollect he was one of the earliest emigrants to that country, which was ceded to the United States on the 30th of October, 1803. We are told [Rep. 11. Thiery 5.] it was proved by some oral testimony, that J. Gravier began an enclosure of five hundred feet square in that year, and completed it in the next. The day of beginning is not stated; but we may safely presume it was not while the French Governor thought the country belonged to his master, and most probably not till after "the early arrival of Mr. Livingston." This enclosure was demolished by an order of the Cabildo, of February 22, 1804.† The next step was to make an ostensible deed to an ostensible purchaser,‡ a Peter de la Bigarre, a brother emigrant of Mr. Livingston's, from New York; some old acquaintance. This was dated March 27, 1804; is expressed to be in consideration of $10,000; and conveys two undivided thirds of all that part or parcel of land situate on the bank [sur la rive] of the river Mississippi, between the public road and the current of the said river, &c. with a warranty. I call the purchaser ostensible, because, notwithstanding his pretended purchase, J. Gravier, on the 20th of October, 1805, [Rep. 1.] commenced a suit against the city, as proprietor of the whole, and the court adjudged him proprietor of the whole; and, because the same J. Gravier, [Poydr. 3.] by a deed to the same P. de la Bigarre, in which no mention was made of the former, nor reference to it, conveys to him, on the 14th December, 1806, the Batture Ste. Marie, along the whole limits of his land, between the road and the river, on condition that he shall pay all expenses of the suit depending, with $50,000 in addition; that the property shall remain unsold and hypothecated for the purchase money till paid; and that, if the lawsuit fails, the sale is void, and Bigarre to pretend to no damages for non-execution. It is observable here that neither buyer nor seller risked any thing. It was a mere speculation on the chance of a law-suit, in which they were to divide the spoils, if successful, and to lose nothing if they failed. It was by our law a criminal purchase of a pretended title, [32 H. 8. 9.] and equally criminal by the law of that territory, where, I presume, the provision of the Roman law is in force, "qui improbe coeunt in alienam litem, ut quidquid ex condemnatione in remipisus redactum fuerit, inter eos communicaretur, lege Julia, de vi privata tenentur." [Dig. 47. 8. 6. 4. Blackst. 135.]—"Whosoever shall take part in the suit of another, so that whatever shall be recovered by the judgment is to be divided between them, shall be subject to the Julian law de vi privata." By which law, [ib. tit. 7. § 1.] they were to lose one-third of their goods, and be rendered infamous. The deed was not only criminal on its face, but was void by an express law of the territory, [a law of Governor Unyega—Poydras 6. Rep. 25.] and so pronounced to be on the floor of Congress by their representative, because not executed before either witnesses or notaries. It was kept secret from its date till the day before judgment was pronounced, when, the parties becoming apprised of the decision which was to be given, (for this was known at least on the 20th of May,) [Governor Claiborne's letter, May 20, 1807,] produced it, for the first time, to the notary to be recorded. And the day after its publication, the court, by the opinion of two members against one, [Examen 3.] adjudged the property wholly to the very man, who, if he had ever had any right, had conveyed away two thirds of it before he brought his action, and the whole while it was pending. The alarm which this adjudication produced was immediate and great. The fact was notorious that, from the earliest to the latest extensions of the beach, the public had a free use of it, as their quay in low water, and in high water their port; and never before had their right been doubted by themselves, or questioned by the riparian possessors. If any fact was ever proved by human testimony, this is. Turn to the Pièces Probantes, and out of twenty-nine affidavits of the oldest and most respectable persons in the territory—men who had, most of them, borne offices under their former Government—twenty-one of them uniformly declare that the public had ever been considered as having a right to the beach, as their port and quay; that, as such, the Governors and Cabildo had the constant care and control of it; had demolished buildings and enclosures erected on it; had, by public bann, prohibited all erections or obstructions to its use; had themselves erected a rampart, to enclose within it a chamber accessible for earth at high water, for rebuilding the city after the fire; and had exercised uninterruptedly every other act of authority derived from the public rights; and eleven of them prove, as far as a negative can be proved, that the Graviers, till the change of government, and new views by Edward Livingston, had never pretended to more than the right of common in it, and never had questioned that of the public, or the authority of the Governor and Cabildo over it. While they held the adjacent plantation, indeed, they maintained the road and bank, as all rural proprietors are obliged by law to do;* for here it is proper to observe, that, pursuing the spirit of the Roman law, which prescribed that every one should maintain the public roads along his own dwelling, "construat vias publicas unusquisque secundum proprium donum," [Dig. 43. 10. 3.] the lands in Louisiana were granted generally on a condition [called in those laws a servitude] of furnishing ground for a public road, and of opening and maintaining that road. From which condition, however, they were released as to any portion of the ground which should afterwards become a town; the expense of roads or streets of that portion devolving then on the town itself. Accordingly, Bertrand Gravier, after establishing the front of his plantation into a suburb, and thus cutting off the residue from the road and river,† being called on to repair the road by an order from Governor Carondelet, who seems at the moment not to have adverted to the change, Bertrand Gravier answered, that, having sold the lots, faisant face au fleuve, fronting the river, he had abandoned the Batture to the town, and that the road and levee could not be at his expense; the Governor, correcting himself at once, says, "Gravier is right; all this is true;" and immediately and ever after had the repairs made by the public. And the Graviers, from that time, stood discharged from these burdens on the same principle which had freed the original owners of the site of the city from maintaining the banks of the city. This is declared by a host of witnesses in the Pièces Probantes, and probably could have been declared by every ancient inhabitant of the place. We are told, indeed, by La Roche and Segur, in their affidavit, [Livingston 66.] of Carondelet and some other Governor asking leave of Gravier, in 1795 and 1798, to deposit masts on the beach. If this be true, which Mr. Thiery, (p. 42.) who knew the witnesses, treats as ridiculous and absurd, it shows that they were forgetful, or inconsistent, or over complaisant, but not that Gravier required, or expected to be asked; and much less could it divest a public right, acknowledged from the earliest times, and essential to the commerce and existence of the city. An accurate discrimination, indeed, between the measure of right in the riparian proprietor, while he held the adjacent farm, in the individuals of the nation as usufructuaries, and in the sovereign as their representative and trustee, as respectively apportioned to them by the law, seems not to have been attended to, either by the citizens at large or the adjacent proprietors. The riparian possessor appears to have been sensible he had some rights, without distinctly understanding what they were; but, whatever they were, he knew he had parted with them by the deeds establishing his faubourg. The citizens, in the daily habit of using, without control, the port and quay, imagine themselves exclusive proprietors of its soil, and came forward in that capacity, claiming sometimes under some vague title which they did not define, and sometimes under the abandonment of right by Bertrand Gravier; the sovereign, formerly their Kings, but now the United States, the legal holder of the public rights in the beds, beaches, and banks of all navigable waters, seems not to have been thought of at all in the contest. The United States were no party to the suit; nor could they be, having made themselves amenable to no tribunal. Their property can never be questioned in any court, but in special cases, in which, by some particular law, they delegate a special power, as to the boards of commissioners, and in some small fiscal cases. But a general jurisdiction over the national demesnes, being more than half the territory of the United States, has never been by them, and never ought to be, subjected to any tribunal. Not adverting to this circumstance, however, the consternation in New Orleans, on this decision, was like that of Boston, on the occlusion of their port by the Boston port bill. If we have not forgotten that feeling, we may judge what the citizens of New Orleans felt on this decree of the court.

The Governor instantly writes, [letter of May 20, 1807,] "I understand that this morning an important cause has been determined, in which Edward Livingston was the real plaintiff, and the city defendant, as to the right of property to some lands in front of the faubourg made by the river, and over which the city has heretofore exercised a right of ownership. My impression is, that the United States are the legal claimants to it." On the 21st of August, 1807, Mr. Derbigny's opinion was published, [Thiery 5.] and first brought into view the right of the United States, and that the sentence of the court must of course, as to them, be a mere nullity, "res inter alios acta, quæque aliis non potest præjudicium facere"—a thing passing between others, and which to no others can do prejudice. Codex 7. 60. And coming, with respect to the United States, under the provisions of the same code.

Tit. 56. "Si neque mandasti fratri tuo defensionem rei tuæ, neque quod gestum est ratum habuisti, præscriptio rei judicatæ tibi non obicit: et ideo non prohiberis causam tuam agere, sine præjudicio rerum judicatarum."

"If you have not committed to your brother the defence of your right, nor sanctioned what has been done, the plea rei judicatæ shall not bar you: and, therefore, you shall not be precluded from conducting your own cause, without exception from a former decision."

Certainly the city council did not appear, nor pretend to appear, under authorization from the Government of the United States, nor as the advocates of their rights. They were called there as defendants of their own claim. The court did not undertake to decide on the right of the United States, which was neither before them, nor within their competence; and the injunction they issued could only be addressed to the parties between whom they had adjudged, and not to suspend the rights of others whom they had never heard, much less the United States who could not be heard before them. See 2 Dallas, 408. 3 Dallas, 412, 414, 415.

Presuming, however, that the coast was now clear, and the question finally settled, the ostensible actors withdrew, and their principal comes forward, is put into possession by the sheriff, and begins his works. The Governor, in his letter of September 3, 1807, says, "A few days since, (August 24,) Mr. Livingston employed a number of negroes to commence digging a canal which he projected to make in a part of the land called the Batture. But the citizens assembled in considerable force and drove them off. On the day following he went in person, but was again opposed by the citizens. The minds of the people were much agitated. The opposition is so general, that I must resort to measures the most conciliatory, as the only means of avoiding still greater tumult, and perhaps much bloodshed. I have not issued a proclamation, because it might make an impression in the United States that the people are disposed for insurrection, which is not true. My opinion is, that the title is in the United States. If the Batture be reclaimed, it is feared the current of the Mississippi will in some measure change its course, which will not only prove injurious to the navigation, but may occasion degradation in the levees of the city, or those in its vicinity." To abridge our narration, by giving the substance of the communications, the people assembled the next day about the same hour, and for several days successively, by beat of drum. [Livingston's letter of September 15, 1807.] On Monday the 31st of August, Mr. Livingston recommenced his work, after having given notice that he should do so. He began about ten o'clock, A. M. and about four or five o'clock in the afternoon the people assembled again, and drove off his laborers. On the 14th of September he again attempted to work, getting two constables to attend his laborers. The people drove them off, and the constables having noted on a list some of those present, they seized them, took the list, and tore it to pieces. [Sheriff's letter.] On the next day he writes to the Governor that he shall set his laborers to work again that day at twelve o'clock, and "he shall not be surprised to see the people change the insolence of riot into the crime of murder." At noon he accordingly placed ten or twelve white laborers there. In the afternoon the people reassembled to the number of several hundreds. The Governor repaired there, and spoke to them. He was heard with respectful attention; and one of them speaking for the whole, expressed the serious uneasiness which the decision of the court had excited; the long and undisturbed possession of the Batture by the city, as well under the French as the Spanish Government; and the great injury which would result to the inhabitants if the land should be built upon and improved. And another declaring that they wished the decision of Congress, and in the mean time no work to be done on the Batture, there was a general exclamation from the crowd, "That is the general wish," followed by a request that they might nominate an agent to bear to the President of the United States a statement of their grievances, and that the Governor would recommend the agent to the Government. He said he would do so, and they nominated Colonel Macarty, by general and repeated acclamations. They then withdrew in peace to their respective homes; and on the 16th the Governor expresses his hope that this unpleasant affair is at an end, that every thing is then quiet, and the public mind much composed: that some of his hot-headed countrymen censured the mild course which was pursued, and would have been better pleased if the military had been called upon to disperse the assemblage. "But I feel (says he,) that the policy adopted was wise and humane; and that a contrary conduct would have increased the discontents, and occasioned the effusion of much innocent blood. The Louisianians, he adds, are an amiable virtuous people, but sensibly feel any wrongs which may be offered them. Mr. Livingston is alike feared and hated by most of the ancient inhabitants. They dread his talents as a lawyer, and hate his views of speculation, which, in the case of the Batture, are esteemed very generally by the Louisianians no less iniquitous than ruinous to the welfare of this city." The Governor says, in another letter of October 5, to the Secretary of State, that in a progress he made a few days afterwards through several parishes of the territory, he perceived but one sentiment with respect to the decision of the court. The long and uninterrupted use of the Batture by the city, the sanction given by the Spanish authorities to the public claim, and the heavy public expenditures in maintaining the levee which fronts it, seem to have given rise to a very general opinion that the court has been in error in deciding the Batture to be private property. On the 13th of November he again writes: "I should be wanting in duty did I not earnestly recommend the subject of the Batture to the attention of the Government. There is no doubt but the agents of Spain considered it as a public property, and did appropriate the same to the use of the city as a common. I should presume that, under the treaty, the United States may justly claim the Batture; and if any means can be devised to arrest the judgment of the territorial court, or to carry this case before another tribunal, the earlier they are resorted to the better; for Mr. Edward Livingston is now in possession of the property, and making improvements thereon." And the next day, (November 14,) a grand jury of the most respectable characters of the place gave in a presentment to the court, in which they say, "We present as a subject of the most serious complaint the present operations on the Batture by Edward Livingston and others connected with him; that this is from four to six months of every year a part of the bed of the river, and an important part of the port of New Orleans; that these operations of Edward Livingston are calculated to obstruct the free navigation of the river, to change the course of its waters, to deprive our western brethren, whose only market for the produce of their extensive territory is to be found in the city, of the deposit which has hitherto remained free to them, and not only of incalculable importance, but of absolute necessity. Whether it be private or public property is immaterial, so long as the laws do not permit such use of it as to injure and obstruct the navigation; and we present it as our opinion that all such measures should be taken as are consistent with law to arrest these operations, which are injurious for the present, and, in changing the course of the river, are hazardous in the extreme." We find Mr. Livingston, then, instead of awaiting the decision of Congress, the only constitutional tribunal, resuming his works boldly, and the people, whom he represented as likely "to change the insolence of riot into the crime of murder," appealing peaceably by presentment to the laws of their territory until the National Government should decide. In the latter end of the same year, [Surveyor's report to Mayor, December 28, 1803,] he opens a canal from the bank directly through the beach into the river *two hundred and seventy-six feet long, sixty-four feet wide, and four feet two inches deep at low water, and with the earth excavated he forms a bank or quay on each side, nineteen feet six inches wide, from four to six feet high above the level of the Batture, and faced with palisades. Within one year after this, what had been anticipated by the Governor, the grand jury and others, had already manifested itself. In December of the ensuing year, 1808, [see Surveyor's report, December 28, 1803,] a bar had already formed across the mouth of the canal, which was dry at low water, the course of the waters had been changed during the intervening flood, and the places where dry ground first showed itself on the decrease of the river were such as had the year before been navigable at low water. [Mayor's answer to Governor, November 18, 1808.] The port in front of the town had been impaired by a new Batture begun to be formed opposite the custom-house, which could not fail to increase by the change of the current. The beach or Batture of Ste. Mary had in that single tide extended from seventy-five to eighty feet further into the river, and risen from two to five feet ten inches generally, and more in places, as a saw scaffold, which, at the preceding low tide, was seven feet high, was now buried to its top; and Tanesse, the surveyor, [see his affidavit, MS.] in his affidavit says he does not doubt that these works have produced the last year's augmentation of the Batture, at the expense of the bed of the river; have occasioned the carrying away a great part of the platin or Batture of the lower suburbs, and breaking the levee of M. Blaque next below; and that the main port of the city being a cove, immediately below Livingston's works, would, if they were continued, be filled up in time; and it is the opinion of Pedesclaux also, [see his third affidavit, MS.] that they would produce changes in the banks of the river on both sides, prejudicial to the city and riparian proprietors, by directing the efforts of the river against parts not heretofore exposed to it. And Mr. Poydras tells us, [page 20 of one of his speeches,] that when the river is at its height, the boats which drift down it can only land in the eddies below the points, as they would be dashed to pieces in attempting to land in the strong current; that at the town they cannot land for want of room, there being always there two or three tiers of vessels in close contact; nor at the lower suburbs of Marigny, which, being at the lower part of the cove, are too much exposed both to winds and current. Indeed, no evidence is necessary to prove that in a river of only twelve hundred yards wide, having an annual tide of twelve to fourteen feet rise, which brings the water generally to within eight or ten inches, and sometimes two or three inches of the top of the levee, inasmuch that it splashes over with the wind, [see Peltier's and Tanesse's affidavits, MS. and also the maps,] where the channel narrowed two hundred and fifty yards, as Mr. Livingston intends, that is to say, a fourth or fifth of its whole breadth, the waters must rise higher in nearly the same proportion; that is to say, three feet at least, and would sweep away the whole levee, the city it now protects, and inundate all the lower country.

Thus urged by the continued calls of the Governor, who declared he could not be responsible for the peace or preservation of the place, by the tumult and confusion in which the city was held by the bold aggressions of the intruders on the public rights, by the daily progress of works which were to interrupt the commerce of the whole western country, threatened to sweep away a great city and its inhabitants, and lay the adjacent country under water, I listened to the calls of duty, imperious calls, which, had I shrunk from, I should have been justly responsible for the calamities which would have followed. On the 24th of October, 1807, the Attorney General had given his opinion, and on the 27th of November, 1807, I asked the attendance of the heads of Departments, to whom the papers received had been previously communicated for their consideration. We had the benefit of the presence of the Attorney General, and of the lights which it was his office to throw on the subject. We took of the whole case such views as the state of our information at that time presented. I shall now develop them in all the fulness of the facts then known, and of those which have since corroborated them.

* These are French measures; add a fifteenth to make them ours.

The first question occurring was, what system of law was to be applied to them? On this there could be but one opinion. The laws which had governed Louisiana from its first colonization, that is to say, the laws of France, with some local modifications, were still in force when this question was generated by the sale of the Jesuits' property to B. Gravier and others. France had, indeed, about the end of the preceding year, 1762, by a secret convention, ceded Louisiana to Spain, to be delivered whenever Spain should be in readiness to receive it. But this was not announced to the inhabitants till the 21st of April, 1764, nor did Spain receive possession till the 17th of August, 1769. [9 Raynal, 222, 235.] In the mean time the French Government and laws continued; the Jesuits' property was sold, and purchased on the faith of the existing laws; and according to these laws must the rights acquired by the purchaser or left in the crown be decided. Indeed, in no case are the laws of a nation changed, of natural right, by their passage from one to another domination. The soil, the inhabitants, their property, and the laws by which they are protected, go together. Their laws are subject to be changed only in the case and extent which their new Legislature shall will. The changes introduced by Spain, after 1769, were chiefly in the organization of their Government, and but little in the principles of their jurisprudence. The instrument which some have understood as suppressing the French and substituting the Spanish code, is the proclamation of O'Reilly of November 25, 1769, two months after the actual delivery of the colony. [See appendix to documents communicated to Congress by the President, with his message of October 17, 1803.] The transfer of the country, however, had been announced to the people five years before. Now, surely, during these five years, the French laws must have continued entire, and of course after them, so far as not altered. And that this proclamation made specific only, and not general alterations, a brief examination of its tenor will evince. It begins by charging the late council with a participation in the insurrection which had taken place, and by declaring it indispensable to abolish that, and to establish the form of politic government and administration of justice prescribed by the wise laws of Spain. But a form of Government may surely be changed, and the mass of the laws remain the same, as took place in our revolution. He proceeds then to establish that form of Government, dependence and subordination, which should accord with the good of the service and happiness of the colony. For this purpose he substitutes a Cabildo, in place of the ancient council, and instead of former analogous officers, he says there shall be Alferes, Alcades, Alguazils, Depositors, Regidores, a Scrivener, Procurator, Mayordome, &c.; adopting thus the Spanish, instead of the French organization of officers, for the administration of the laws. He changes the manner of proceedings in judicial trials, and of pronouncing judgments, according to a digest made by Unestia and Rey, by his order, until a general knowledge of the Spanish language and more extensive information on the statutes themselves might be acquired; prescribes rules for instituting actions by parties of different denominations, the names and substance of the pleadings, rules for appearances, answers, replications, rejoinders, depositions, witnesses, exceptions, trials, judgments, appeals, executions, testaments, probates, advancements, and distributions; not changing the great outlines of the law, or the ratio decidendi generally; but merely the organization of officers, and forms of their proceeding. He states also the criminal law, what it is in sundry cases of irreligion, treason, murder, theft, rape, adultery, and trespass, proclaiming mostly what was already law; lastly, he establishes the fees of officers, and with that closes the proclamation, without a word said about abolishing the French and substituting the Spanish code of laws generally. As far, then, as this instrument makes any special changes, its authority is acknowledged. But the very act of making special changes is a manifestation that a general one was not then intended. He did not mean by this instrument to change 'all and some.' One may need conjecture, from loose expressions in the instrument, that a more extensive change was in contemplation for some future time, when the inhabitants, as it says, should have acquired a general knowledge of the Spanish language. But until then expressly, and in the interim, the innovations it specifies are the only ones introduced. The great system of law which regulates property, which prescribes the rights of persons and things, and sanctions to every one the enjoyment of those rights, is left untouched, in full force and authority. If such a radical change were really meditated, it was never carried into execution;

nor seems at any aftertime to have occupied seriously the attention of Government. In the following year, 1770, O'Reilly issued an additional ordinance respecting grants of lands; and Carondelet, in 1795, (twenty-six years after possession of the colony, and eight years only before its transfer to us,) passed an ordinance of police, concerning bridges, roads, levees, slaves, coasters, travellers, arms, estrays, fishing, and hunting; and these three acts seem to constitute the whole of the changes made in the established system of laws during the Spanish occupation of the country. Probably the Spanish authorities found, in the progress of their administration, that the difference between the French and Spanish codes, taken both from the same Roman original, would not justify disturbing the public mind, by a formal suppression of the one, and substitution of the other. Probably the officers themselves, not adepts in either, and partly French, and partly Spanish individuals, confounded them in practice as they found convenient; and hence the ill-defined ideas of what their laws were. But certainly when we appeal, as in the present case, to exact right, the French code is the only one sanctioned by regular authority; and the special changes before mentioned, of organization and police, having no relation to the beds and increments of rivers, that code is to give us the law of the present case. That code, like all those of middle and southern Europe, was originally feudal, [Encyclop. Méthod. Jurisprudence, Coutume, 400.] with some variations in the different provinces, formerly independent, of which the kingdom of France had been made up. But as circumstances changed, and civilization and commerce advanced, abundance of new cases and questions arose, for which the simple and unwritten laws of feudalism had made no provision. At the same time, they had at hand the legal system of a nation highly civilized, a system carried to a degree of conformity with natural reason attained by no other. The study of this system too was become the favorite of the age, and, offering ready and reasonable solutions of all the new cases presenting themselves, was resorted to by a common consent and practice; not indeed as laws formally established by the Legislator of the country, but as a ratio scripta, the dictate, in all cases, of that sound reason which should constitute the law of every country.* Over both of these systems, however, the occasional edicts of the monarch are paramount, and amend and control their provisions wherever he deems amendment necessary; on the general principle that leges posteriores priores abrogant—subsequent laws abrogate those which were prior. This composition of the French code is affirmed by all their authorities. One only of them shall be particularly cited, to wit, Ferriere Dict. de Droit, Ordonnance.

‘Les ordonnances sont les vrais loix du royaume. Elles font la partie la plus générale et la plus certaine de nôtre droit Francois, attendu qu’elles sont soutenues de l’autorité aussi bien que de la raison; au lieu que les loix Romaines ne subsistent que par leur

‘The ordinances are the true laws of the kingdom. They constitute the most general and certain part of our French law, inasmuch as they are supported by authority as well as reason; whereas the Roman laws stand on their equity alone, having of themselves no

* The following instances will give some idea of the steps by which the Roman gained on the feudal laws. A law of Burgundy provided that, ‘Si quis posthoc barbarus vel testari voluerit, vel donare, aut Romanam consuetudinem, aut barbaricam, esse servandam, sciat.’ ‘If any barbarian subject hereafter shall desire to dispose by legacy or donation, let him know that either the Roman or barbarian law is to be observed.’ And one of Lotharius II. of Germany, going still further, gives to every one an election of the system under which he chose to live. ‘Volumus ut cunctus populus Romanus interrogetur quali lege vult vivere, ut tali lege, quali professi sunt vivere vivant, illisque denuntiatur, ut hoc unusquisque, tam iudices, quam duces, vel reliquos populus sciat, quod si offensivum contra eandem legem fecerint, eidem legi, quâ possent vivere, subjaceant.’ ‘We will that all the Roman people shall be asked by what law they wish to live: that they may live under such law as they profess to live by: and that it be published, that every one, as well judges as generals, or the rest of the people, may know, that if they commit offence against the said law, they shall be subject to the same law by which they profess to live.’ [Enc. Mêt. Jurisprudence, Coutume, 399.] Presenting the uncommon spectacle of a jurisdiction attached to persons, instead of places. Thus favored, the Roman became an acknowledged supplement to the feudal or customary law; but still, not under any act of the Legislature, but as ‘raison écrite,’ written reason; and the cases to which it is applicable becoming much the most numerous, it constitutes, in fact, the mass of their law.

équité, elles n’ont pas elles-mêmes aucune autorité, qu’autant qu’elles sont considérées comme une raison écrite, du moins en pays coutumier; et à l’égard du pays de droit écrit, les loix Romaines n’y ont force de loi, que parceque nos Rois ont bien voulu y consentir.’

authority, but as they are considered as written reason, at least in the provinces of customary law. And as to those of written law, the Roman laws are in force only because our Kings have thought proper to consent to it.†

This system of law was transferred to Louisiana as is evidenced by the charter of Louis XIV. to Crozat, bearing date the 14th of September, 1712. The seventh article of that is in these words. “Our edicts, ordinances and customs, and the usages of the mayoralty and shreevalty of Paris, shall be observed for laws and customs in the said country of Louisiana.” The customary law of Paris seems to have been selected because considered as the best digest, and that to which it was proposed to reduce the customary law of all the provinces. [Enc. Méth. Jurispr. Coutume, 405.] This is the first charter we know of which established the boundaries and laws of Louisiana. It says nothing of the Roman law; but that, having become incorporated, by usage, with the customs of Paris, and constituting, as a supplement, one system with them, seems to have been considered as of their body, and transferred with them to Louisiana.‡ In 1717, Crozat transferred his rights to the Compagnie d’Occident, at the head of which was the famous Law, [8 Raynal, 166. ed. 1780,] which again in 1720, by union with others, became the Compagnie des Indes, who, in 1731, surrendered the colony back to the King. [1 Va lin, 20.] But these various transfers from company to company of the monopoly of their commerce, (for that was the sum of what was granted them) and their final surrender to the King, could not affect the rights of the people, nor change the laws by which they were governed. When they returned to the immediate Government of the King, their laws passed with them, and remained in full force until, and so far only as, subsequently altered by their Legislator. That this was the sense of their Government may be inferred from a clause in the edict creating the Compagnie des Indes Occidentales, art. 34.

‘Seront les juges établis en tous les dits lieux tenus de juger suivant les loix et ordonnances du royaume, et

‘The judges established in all the said places shall be held to adjudge according to the laws and ordi-

† The only copy of this charter I have ever met with is in Joutel’s Journal of La Sale’s last voyage. An application was made by the Government of the United States, through their minister at Paris, to the Government of France, for permission to have the original of this charter sought for in their archives, and an authentic copy obtained. The application was unsuccessful. We must resort, therefore, to this publication made in 1714, two years after the date of the patent, under the rule of law, which requires only the best evidence the nature of the case will admit. For although we may not appeal to books of history for documents of a nature merely private, yet we may for those of a public character, e. g. treaties, &c.; and especially when those documents are not under our control, as when they are in foreign countries, or even in our own country when they are not patent in their nature, nor demandable common right.

‡ If it be objected that the incorporation of the Roman law with the customs of Paris, and their joint transfer to Louisiana does not appear, I answer, 1. At the date of Crozat’s charter, the Roman law had for many centuries been amalgamated with the customary law of Paris, made one body with it, and its principal part. By the customs of Paris were doubtless meant the laws of Paris, of which the Roman then made an important part, and might well be understood to be transferred with them. It was hardly intended that the new colonists were to unravel this web, and to take out for their own use only the fibres of Parisian customs, the least applicable part of the system to their novel situation. 2. If the term, coutume de Paris, in the charter be rigorously restrained to its literal import, yet the judges of Louisiana would have the same authority for appealing to the Roman as a supplementary code, which the judges of Paris and of all France had had; and even greater, as being sanctioned by so general an example. 3. The practice of considering the Roman law as a part of the law of the land in Louisiana is evidence of a general opinion of those who composed that State that it was transferred, and of an opinion much better informed, and more authoritative than ours can be. Or it may be considered as an adoption, by universal though tacit consent, of those who had a right to adopt, either formally, or informally, as they pleased, as the laws of England were originally adopted in most of these States, and still stand on no other ground.

les officiers de suivre et se conformer à la coutume de la prévôté et vicomté de Paris, suivant laquelle les habitans pourrout contracter, sans que l'on y puisse introduire aucune autre coutume, pour éviter la diversité.' 1 Moreau de Ste. Marie, 100.

This, then, is the system of law by which the legal character of the facts of the case is now to be tested; and the plaintiff and his counsel having imagined that, in the Roman branch of it, they had found a niche in which they could place the Batture to great advantage, have availed themselves of it with no little dexterity, and, by calling it habitually an alluvion, have given a general currency to the idea, that it is really an alluvion: insomuch that even those who deny their inferences have still suffered themselves carelessly to speak of it under that term. Were we for a moment to indulge them in this misnomer, and to look at their claim as if really an alluvial one, the false would be found to avail them as little as the true name. The Roman law indeed says, "quod per alluvionem, agro tuo flumen adjecit, jure gentium, tibi adquiritur"—what the river adds to your field by alluvion, becomes yours by the law of nations. [Institute L. 1. tit. 1. § 20. Dig. L. 41. tit. 1. § 7.] The same law, in like manner, gave to the adjacent proprietors, the sand bars, shoals, islands rising in the river, and even the bed of the river itself, as far as it was contracted or deserted. [Inst. 2. 1. 22. and 2. 1. 23.] But the established laws of France differed in all these cases.

'Par notre droit Français, (dit Pothier,) les alluvions qui se font sur le bord des fleuves, et des rivières navigables, appartiennent au Roi. Les propriétaires riverains n'y peuvent rien prétendre, à moins qu'ils n'ayent des titres de la concession que le Roi leur aurait faite du droit d'alluvion.' 1 Pothier, Traité de la propriété, Part 1. c. 2. § 3. art. 2. No. 159.

And Guyot, in the Repertoire Universel de Jurisprudence, a work also of authority, and cited with approbation by the plaintiff and his counsel [Liv. 21. Du Ponceau, 14.] under the word "île," says:

'Nous n'admettons pas, comme les Romains, les alluvions et les accroissemens au profit des propriétaires riverains, soit par les changemens qui peuvent survenir dans le lit des rivières, soit relativement aux îles et îlots qui peuvent s'y former. Chez eux, le lit et les bord des fleuves et rivières étaient censés faire parties des héritages riverains; et par une suite de ces maximes, le terrain qu'un fluve adjoutait à ces héritages appartenait à ceux qui en étaient propriétaires. Ils réunissaient de même à leurs possessions le lit que le fleuve abandonnait; et lorsqu'il se formait une île dans le milieu de son lit, les riverains y avaient un droit égal, et en partageaient la propriété. Suivant nos principes, les rivières navigables, leur lit, rives, et tous les terrains qui peuvent s'y former, appartiennent au Roi, à raison de sa souveraineté. C'est la disposition précise de l'article 41. due tit. 37. de nances of the kingdom, and the officers to follow and conform themselves to the customs of the prévôté and vicomté of Paris, according to which the inhabitants may contract, without that any other custom may be introduced, to avoid diversity.' 1 Moreau de Ste. Marie, 100.

'By our French law, (says Pothier, one of their most respected authorities,) the alluvions formed on the borders of navigable streams and rivers belong to the King. The proprietors of riparian heritages can have no claim to them, unless they have evidences of the grant made to them by the King, of the right of alluvion along their heritages.' Pothier, Part 1. c. 2. § 3. art. 2. No. 159. Cited Derbigny, xviii.

'We do not admit, as the Romans, alluvions and accumulations to go to the riparian proprietors, either by changes which may happen in the bed of rivers, or relating to isles, and islets which may there be formed. With them, the bed and borders of rivers and streams were considered as making part of the riparian inheritances; and as a consequence of these maxims, the earth which a river added to these inheritances belonged to those who were the proprietors of them. They reunited, in like manner, to their possessions the bed which a river abandoned; and when an isle was formed in the middle of its bed, the riparians had an equal right to it, and divided the property. According to our principles, navigable streams, their bed, banks, and all the grounds which may be formed there, belong to the King, in right of his sovereignty. It is the precise provision of art. 41. tit. 37. of the ordonnance des eaux et forêts, which has dissipated all the doubts which they had endeavored to raise in several provinces on the grounds of the enunciations which were found in the ancient concessions.' Cited Derbigny 23.

Again, after laying down the Roman law of alluvion, and of islands formed in the beds of rivers, Le Rasle in the Law Dictionary, forming a part of the Encyclopedie Méthodique, Jurisprud. Accession, 94, says:

'Nous n'avons pas suivi dans notre droit Français les dispositions Romaines à cet égard: toutes les îles ou autres attérissemens qui se forment dans les rivières appartiennent au Roi, et font partie du domaine. Les terres ajoutées par alluvion aux héritages baignés par le fleuve et les rivières navigables n'appartiennent aux riverains, que lorsqu'ils ont un titre de concession qui leur permet de se les approprier.'

And Ferriere, quoted also

'Pour ce qui regarde l'augmentation arrivée à un héritage subitement, et tout d'un coup, la décision que les loix Romaines ont faites à cet égard n'est point observée dans le royaume. Cette augmentation appartient au Roi dans les rivières navigables.' And Denizart agrees, 'que les attérissemens formés subitement dans la mer, ou dans les fleuves ou rivières navigables, appartiennent au Roi, par le seul titre de sa souveraineté.'

And he refers to the edicts of 1683, 1693, and 1710.

And to put aside all further question as to the law of France on this subject, Louis XIV., by an edict of December 15, 1693, says:

'Louis, &c. salut. Le droit de propriété que nous avons sur tous les fleuves et rivières navigables de notre royaume, et conséquemment de toutes les îles, moulins, bacs, &c. attérissemens et accroissemens formés par les dits fleuves et rivières, étant incontestablement établi par les loix de l'état, comme une suite et une dépendance nécessaire de notre souveraineté, les Rois, nos prédécesseurs, et nous, avons de tems en tems ordonné des recherches des îles et crémens qui s'y sont formés, &c. A ces causes, de l'avis de notre conseil, et de notre certaine science, pleine puissance, et autorité royale, nous avons, par ces présentes, signées de notre main, dit, statué, et ordonné, disons, statuons, et ordonnons, voulons, et nous plait, que tous les détenteurs, propriétaires, ou possesseurs des îles, îlots, attérissemens, accroissemens, alluvions, droits de pêche, péages, ponts, moulins, bacs, coches, bateaux, ediffices, et droits, sur les rivières navigables de notre et forêts, which has dissipated all the doubts which they had endeavored to raise in several provinces on the grounds of the enunciations which were found in the ancient concessions.' Cited Derbigny 23.

'We have not in our French law followed the Roman provisions in this respect: all islands or other accumulations which are formed in rivers belong to the King, and constitute a part of the domain. Lands added by alluvion to inheritances washed by rivers and navigable streams, do not belong to the riparians but when they have a deed of concession, which permits them to appropriate them to themselves.'

by the plaintiff, says:

As to augmentations happening suddenly, and all at once, the decision of the Roman laws in this respect is not observed in the kingdom. These augmentations belong to the King in navigable rivers.' And Denizart agrees, 'that atterissemens formed suddenly in the sea, or the navigable rivers or streams, belong to the King in the sole right of his sovereignty.'

'Louis, &c. Greeting. The right of property which we have in all rivers and navigable streams of our kingdom, and, consequently, in all the isles, mills ferries, &c. accumulation and increments formed by the said rivers and navigable streams, being incontestably established by the laws of the state, as a necessary consequence and dependence of our sovereignty, the Kings, our predecessors, and ourselves, have, from time to time, ordered inquiries as to isles and increments therein formed, &c. For these causes, with the advice of our council, and of our certain knowledge, full power, and royal authority, we have by these presents signed with our hand, declared, enacted, and ordained, and we do declare, enact, and ordain, we will, and it is our pleasure, that all the holders, proprietors, or possessors, of isles, islets, accumulations, increments, alluvions, rights of fishery, tolls, bridges, mills, ferries, packets, batteaus, edifices, and imposts, on the navigable rivers of our kingdom which shall produce titles of property or of possession before the 1st of April, 1566, shall be therein maintained and secured in their possessions, on paying to the treasury one year's revenue, and those without title papers, or possession prior to the 1st of April, 1566, on payment of two years' revenue.'

Having no copy of this ordinance, I quote it from Mr. Derbigny, p. 20, Duponceau, p. 10, and l'Examen de la Sentence, p. 8, by putting together the parts they cite, for neither gives the whole of what I have cited. Other respectable authorities might be produced to the same effect, were it necessary to multiply them; and, it is also admitted that authorities of weight, and of a different aspect, exist; among these is Dumoulin, as respectable as Pothier, Guyot, or any other who has been cited. Were it absolutely incumbent on me, more than on those who rely on the contrary authorities, to assign reasons for a difference of opinion among lawyers on any point, it might be ascribed, in this case, to a difference of impression from views of the same subject, diversified as were the customs of the various provinces of France on this very point. Dumoulin wrote a century and a half before the ordinance of Louis XIV.; in that course of time, printing had become more diffused, books greatly multiplied, and a more correct collation of these customs could be made. So that had Dumoulin written in the days of Pothier and Guyot, and with their advantages, he would probably have concurred in the preceding observation, that, 'if there were any doubts, this ordinance has dissipated them.' Be this as it may, Louis XIV. and his council have decided between these two opinions, and if it were not law before, his decision made it so. By this edict, he declares the law of France 'incontestably' to be that 'alluvions belong to the King in all navigable rivers.' But with a spirit of indulgence, meriting more respect than he has found in the language of the adverse party, who dislike the truths he has declared, he confirmed all anterior usurpations, on payment of certain compositions and future rents, re-establishing by the example, the authority of the laws and rights of the crown against these usurpations. This ordinance was passed nineteen years before the charter to Louisiana, and, consequently, was comprehended among the edicts and ordinances originally established as the law of the province.

Mr. Livingston and his advocates have asserted that the right to the beds and increments of rivers is a gift of the feudal system to the sovereign, that is, to the nation, and is a peculiarity of that system; and, further, that that system was never introduced into Louisiana. That the latter assertion is palpably erroneous could be readily shown, were not the question altogether unnecessary. With respect to the former, surely it is putting the cart before the horse to say that the authority of the nation flows from the feudal system, instead of the feudal system flowing from the authority of the nation. That the lands within the limits assumed by a nation belong to the nation as a body, has probably been the law of every people on earth at some period of their history. A right of property in movable things is admitted before the establishment of Government; a separate property in lands not till after that establishment. The right to movables is acknowledged by all the hordes of Indians surrounding us; yet by no one of them has a separate property in lands been yielded to individuals. He who plants a field keeps possession till he has gathered the produce; after which, one has as good a right as another to occupy it. Government must be established, and laws provided, before lands can be separately appropriated, and their owner protected in his possession. Till then, the property is in the body of the nation, and they, or their chief, as their trustee, must grant them to individuals, and determine the conditions of the grant. In certain countries they have granted them on a system of conditions and principles which have acquired the appellation of feudal. Surely, then, it is the sovereign which has created the feudal principles, and not these principles which have created the rights of the sovereign. The Edinburgh reviewers, [No. 30. 339. Jan. 1810.] who, in the progress of their work, have deservedly attained a high standing in the public estimation, reviewing the condition of land tenures among the Hindoos, say, "the territory of the nation, belonging in common to the nation, belongs, in this general sense, to the King, as the head and representative of the nation. As far, accordingly, as we have sufficient documents respecting rude nations, we find their Kings, without, perhaps, a single exception, recognised as the sole proprietors of the soil." And they quote, as their authorities,

It seems, then, to be a principle of universal law, that the lands of a country belong to its sovereign as trustee for the nation. In granting appropriations, some sovereigns have given away the increments of rivers to a greater, some to a lesser extent, and some not at all. Rome, which was not feudal, and Spain and England which were, have granted them largely; France, a feudal country, has not granted them at all on navigable rivers, Louis XIV. therefore, was strictly correct when, in his edict of 1693, he declared, that the increments of rivers were incontestably his, as a necessary consequence of the sovereignty; that is to say, that, where no special grant of them to an individual could be produced, they remained in him, as a portion of the original lands of the nation, or as new created lands, never yet granted to any individual. They are, unquestionably, a regalian or national right, paramount and pre-existent to the establishment of the feudal system: that system has no fixed principle on the subject, as is evident from the opposite practices of different feudal nations. The position, therefore, is entirely unfounded, that the right to them is derived from the feudal law; and it is, consequently, unnecessary to go into the proofs of what the grants in that country exhibit palpably enough, that infeudations were partially at least, if not generally, introduced into Louisiana.

It ought here to be observed, however, that, so far as respects the beds and navigation of rivers, the right vested in the sovereign is a mere trust, not alienable. It is not like lands, imposts, taxes, an article of public property, constituting the revenues of the state, but like roads, canals, public buildings, reserved for the use of the individuals of the nation. See an explanation of this subject, Vattel 1. 235. 239.

I have now to advert, and I do it with extreme regret, to a passage in the very able Memoire of Mr. Thiery, a memoir conspicuous for its learning and sound reasoning, and to which I acknowledge myself peculiarly indebted for information on the points he has discussed. He says, page 30, "To the ancestors of John Gravier the right of alluvion belonged, not only by virtue of the coutumes de Paris, which, for two centuries back, acknowledged the principle of the Roman law, and against which, for that reason, the ordinances of the Kings of France could, with no manner of success, be pleaded; inasmuch, as a royal ordinance, specially made that coutume the civil law of this colony; but, also, by virtue of the Spanish laws, which, from 1769, have been constantly in force in Louisiana." 1st. That the Roman principle of alluvion was acknowledged by the coutumes de Paris has not been proved. The adverse council, [Dupon. p. 9.] has said, indeed, that those customs were silent on the subject; but I have considered Pothier, Guyot, and Le Rasle as better authority. 2d. Mr. Thiery supposes that a royal ordinance having specially made that coutume the civil law of Louisiana, the ordinances of the Kings of France were excluded from the system, and could not control what was coutume. He had not, I presume, seen the charter of 1712, which makes the edicts and ordinances, with the coutume de Paris, the law of that province; nor sufficiently considered, that had the coutumes been alone established by one ordinance, another might change them. 3d. He supposes the Spanish laws have given allusions to the riparian proprietor; but the laws of the province, established by their charter, were not annulled by the change of one King for another, as their legislator. The latter might change them: but has he done so? If he has, his edict must be produced, that we may weigh its words and judge of its effects for ourselves. And we must guard against admitting that the example of a Spanish Governor, if such example has occurred, occasionally and incorrectly acting on the laws of Spain, amounted to a repeal of the whole system then existing, and a formal establishment of a different one. No such intention on his part to make so momentous a change should be so slightly inferred; and no power of his could effect it, even if intended. Nothing less than an ordinance of the sovereign himself, signed with his own hand, and sanctioned by all the solemnities attending their enactment and promulgation, was competent to reverse, at once, the legal condition of a whole people, and the laws under which their lives and properties were held. Again: even such an ordinance could not change the law as to past rights; and those now in question were vested before the Spanish Government took place, and could not be annulled by a subsequent law. These gratuitous admissions, therefore, of Mr. Thiery, not at all necessary to his argument, and, therefore, probably, not well considered, and in opposition to the opinions and demonstrations of an able brother counsellor, must be disavowed, and the authority of the ordinance of 1693 insisted on with undiminished confidence. Mr. Thiery himself will, perhaps, the more readily abandon them, when he sees with what avidity his eagle-eyed adversary has pounced upon them in a letter to some member of the government, in which he considers them as giving up all grounds of opposition to his claims.

To that edict, then, I shall now recur, and to the cavils raised against it by the advocates of the claims it annihilates. It is idle for them to call it bursal, fiscal, and the act of a tyrant, &c. [Duponc. 10.] as if the authority of laws was to be graduated by the character of the existing legislator, and as if we were to be the judges for other nations of the character and obligation of their laws. It is vain to pretend that because the word "alluvion," inserted in the enacting clause of the edict is not in the preamble, therefore it has no force in the body of the law; as if the preface, giving the general reason and views of a law, was alone to be the law, and its actual enactments, a mere nullity. Although the preamble of a statute is considered as a key to open the mind of the makers as to the mischiefs in their view, yet, in general, it is no more than a recital of some inconveniences, which does not exclude any other for which the enacting clauses provide; nor must the general words of an enacting clause be restrained by the particular words of the preamble. [6. Bac. Abr. Statute 1. 2. and the authorities there cited.] So says our law; so says reason; and so must say the Roman law, if it be the ratio scripta. But it is further to be observed that the words "attérissements et accroissemens," accumulations and increments, used in this preamble, are generic terms, of which "alluvion" is a species, and therefore strictly comprehended by it. This is proved by the Roman definition, "Alluvio est incrementum latens," alluvion es un accroissement, ou crément imperceptible," by the Napoleon code cited by Mr. Livingston.

'Les attérissements et accroissemens qui se forment successivement et imperceptiblement aux fonds riverains d'un fleuve, ou d'une rivière, s'appellent alluvion.' Sect. 556.

'The accumulations and increments which form themselves successively and imperceptibly against the riparian lands of a river or stream, are called alluvion.' Sect. 556.

And by the edicts of 1686 and 1689, both of which have the expression "cremens qui s'y sont formés soit par alluvion, ou par industrie," &c. And here Portalis's rhetorical flourish, on presenting this law, is cited [Duponc. 17. Liv. 22.] with triumph, as declaring that this law terminates the great question of alluvion, and decides it conformably to the Roman law. It is very true, indeed, that it has terminated the question as to future cases, by changing the law, by transferring the right of alluvion from the sovereign to the riparian proprietor, by giving the abandoned bed of a river as an indemnification to him on whose lands it has opened a new passage, and making this the future law of all the provinces. And had Louisiana then been subject to France, the law would have been changed thenceforward for Louisiana also. I find no fault with Napoleon for this Roman predilection. I believe the change is for the better so far as concerns rural possessions. A decision, too, of the parliament of Bordeaux is quoted by Mr. Duponceau (19.) to prove that the law giving alluvion to the adjacent possessor has been acknowledged in France by the decision of the parliament of Bordeaux, confirmed, as he has heard, on appeal by the parliament of Paris. This proves only that the Roman law of alluvion was the law of generality of Bordeaux, not that it was then the law of all France. In the country called the Bordelais, customary laws prevail. But

'Lorsque la coutume de Bordeaux ne s'est pas appliquée sur certains points de droit, ce n'est ni à la coutume de Paris, ni à d'autres coutumes qu'on a recours pour les faire décider, mais au droit écrit.' Enc. Méth. Jurisp. Bordeaux.

'When the custom of Bordeaux has not sufficiently explained itself on certain points of law, it is neither to the customs of Paris nor to other customs that recourse is had for decision, but to the written law,' that is, the Roman law.

The inference then is, either that the coutume de Bordeaux was the same on this point as the Roman law or that being silent, the Roman law was resorted to.*

Surely, never was the urgency of squeezing argument out of every thing so apparent as in the emphasis with which the adverse party presses and comments [Liv. 32.] on the answers of the several tribunals, to which the Napoleon code was referred for consideration and amendment. A dozen tribunals are named, with an &c. for more, who are acknowledged to have said nothing about alluvion; and this is produced as proof that it had belonged before to the riparian proprietor. But it proves more probably that these tribunals were contented with the change proposed, and had no amendment of it to offer. But, in truth, it proves nothing either the one way or the other. The tribunal of Paris is then quoted, with an acknowledgment that they do not make a single observation on the subject. Then long extracts from that of Rouen, proposing that islands, rising in the rivers, shall be given to the riparian proprietors; and recommendations to the same effect from those of Toulouse and Lyons. Now it is remarkable that neither the word "alluvion," nor the idea of the thing, is either expressed or referred to in any one of these quotations. And yet Mr. Livingston says, "We find all these learned men either passing over these articles, as merely declaratory to the old law, or else expressly acknowledging them as such;" and again after the citation from Rouen, "Here we have the positive declaration of a learned tribunal, &c. deciding that the edicts did not extend to alluvions, but only to islands in navigable rivers." And yet I repeat that neither the word nor the idea is to be found in any one of the quotations; for it is of these only I can speak, not possessing the book, but I presume Mr. Livingston's quotations are of the strongest passages. It is impossible to characterize such reasoning respectfully. I shall, therefore, leave it to the reflection of others. And I think myself authorized to conclude, on the whole, that had the Batture been really an alluvion, its ownership was to be decided by the laws of France; and that Louis XIV, with the advice of his council, certainly knew when they declared what the law of their country "incontestably" was; and if we, with our scanty reading on that subject, at this day and distance, know better than they did, yet the enacting clause of the edicts made it the law henceforward; that it came over as law for Louisiana; made the Batture, if an alluvion, the property of the sovereign; and certainly the whole tenor of the conduct of the Spanish Government proved that they did not mean to relinquish it.

Before we quit this branch of the discussion, it is not amiss to observe that the eloquent declamations of these learned men of Rouen, so much eulogized by Mr. Livingston, were not at all heeded. The Napoleon code, § 560. retained the islands rising in the beds of navigable or floatable rivers, and (changing the French law only as to alluvions) declares (§ 538.) in opposition to the Roman law, that

* M. Moreau de Lislet assures us, that he was in Paris at the time of the decision of this appeal from Bordeaux; that the decision of Bordeaux was reversed by the King and council, then referred to the parliament of Paris, and the reversal confirmed by that body. See his Memoire, 50.

‘Les fluves et rivières navigables ou flottables, les rivages, lais, et relais de la mer, les ports, les havres, les rades, &c. sont considérés comme les dépendances du domaine public.’ So that, notwithstanding the [Liv. 31.] the French law, as it stands at this day, and stood before, would have given the Batture to the public, being unquestionably the rivage,* or shore of the river.†

* Rivage is most commonly used for the shore of the sea, but correctly, also, for the shore of a river.

“Chaque fleuve, chaque ruisseau A partout franchi son rivage.”

It is particularly so used in law. “Sous le nom de rivage est compris le chemin qui doit être entretenu le long des côtes et rivières navigables, pour le hallage des bateaux.” And again: “droit de rivage, qui est dû sur les marchandises qui abordent au rivage de la ville de Paris.” Dict. Trevoux, Rivage. “Sur la rivage de la Seine.” Dict. de l’Académie.

† Little versed in French jurisprudence, possessing few of the authors teaching it, and, of some of those quoted by the adverse party, so much only as they have thought to their advantage to quote, I had apprehended it possible (page 84,) that there might be among those authors, that conflict of opinions on the law of alluvions, which these quotations indicate. But I have lately had an opportunity of reading in MS. a memoir on the subject of the Batture, written by M. Moreau de Lislet, of New Orleans, a French lawyer of regular education in the profession, who has treated the subject, generally, with great learning and abilities, and especially that branch which relates to the laws of France in cases of alluvion. He has proved that the doctrines of these great authorities are not contradictory, and that a proper attention to the different questions under contemplation, in the passages quoted, will show that all are right, and all in perfect harmony. To elucidate this, he explains certain principles of French law, which, mingling themselves with this subject, have occasioned the misunderstanding with which we have been perplexed. 1st. The laws of France leave to the King a right to navigable rivers only, and their increments. On rivers not navigable, the rights of the riparian proprietor prevail as under the Roman law. [See Pothier, ante, page 83.] Very early, however, these rights were drawn into question by the feudal superiors, who looking to the example of the King in the case of navigable rivers in his kingdom, claimed similar rights on those not navigable within their seignories.

But repeated decisions have condemned their claims, and confirmed the rights of the riparian tenant. 2d. By the laws of France, as by those of England, lands received by inheritance descend, on the death of the tenant, to the heirs of that branch, paternal or maternal, from which they came to him. But those he acquires by purchase [acquêts] pass to that line of heirs of which himself is the root. When, therefore, to a maternal inheritance an acquisition happened to be made by means of alluvion, a question would arise, between heirs of different lines, to which of them the alluvion would descend; whether to the direct heirs of the decedent, as being an acquisition first vesting in him, or to the maternal heir, as an accessory to his inheritance. The decisions were, that it united with the inheritance, became a part of that, and passed with it. Incrementum alluvionis nobis acquiritur jure quo ager augmentatus primum ad nos pertinebat; nec istud incrementum censetur novus ager sed pars primi.” “The increment of alluvion is acquired to us in the right in which the field augmented first belonged to us; nor is the increment considered as a new field, but a part of the first.” [Renusson.] It follows, that questions of alluvion would often arise in cases wherein the King’s rights were not at all concerned; they would arise between lord and vassal, and between individual heirs of different lines. These explanations premised, M. Moreau takes a review of the passages quoted from Henrys, Bourjoun, Dumoulin, Ferriere, Pothier, Le Rasle, Renusson, Dorgente, Denizart, and Guyot, and shows that, in every instance where the question concerned a navigable river, there was no division of opinions as to the validity of the King’s right; and that, in every instance where the riparian right is asserted, the question has been between private individuals, or concerning rivers not navigable. Recurring, then, to the edicts and ordinances, placing this right of the King beyond cavil, he observes, that a practice had prevailed from early times among riparian proprietors, of usurping on the rights of the Crown to the increments adjacent to them, and a necessary reaction of the Crown, by reclamations and resumptions, to preserve its own. And he gives a detail of the edicts on this subject, proving that that of 1693, instead of being the singular act of a particular Prince, whom the adverse party delights to revile, was one only of a long series preceding and following it. 1554. An edict was issued requiring the proper officers to

I will now proceed further, and say, that had the Batture been an alluvion, and to be decided by the Roman instead of the French law, the conversion of the plantation of Gravier into a suburb made it public property. And here I rejoin with pleasure the standard of M. Thiery, and avail myself of his luminous discussion of this point. Were I fully to go into it, I could but repeat his matter. I shall, therefore, give but a summary view of it, and rest on his argument for its more detailed support.

The position laid down is, that the Roman law gave alluvion only to the rural proprietor of the bank; urban be vigilant in watching over the King’s rights in islands, “attérissements, et alluvions, comme ils l’ont accoutumés, faire d’ancieneté.” So that it was even then a law and practice d’ancieneté, and expressly including alluvions.

1664 An ordinance for making inquiries concerning islands, accroisements &c.

1668. April. An edict quieting possessions of these objects of one hundred years’ continuance, on paying a vingtième annually.

1669. The ordonnance des eaux et forêts, “qui accorde au Roi la propriété de toutes les rivières navigables, de leur lit, rives et de tous les terrains qui peuvent s’y former,” [Guyot, ante, page 83,] “granting to the King the property in all navigable rivers, their bed, banks, and the grounds forming there.”

1683. April. A declaration, reciting that as the rivers belong to the King, “tout ce qui se trouve renfermé dans leur lit, les isles, comme accroisements, et attérissements, lui appartient aussi,” confirms title anterior to 1556 without condition, possessions anterior to 1556 on conditions, and reunites all others to the crown.

1686. April. 2 Two edicts for Languedoc and Bretagne, 1689. August. 5 confirming possessors in the said islands, “ensemble des crémens qui s’y sont formés, et de ceux qui pourraient s’y former à l’avenir, soit par alluvion, ou par industrie.”

1693. An edict general for the kingdom, “le droit de propriété que nous avons sur tous les fleuves et rivières navigables étant incontestable, &c. ordonnons que les détenteurs des isles, islots, attérissements, accroisements, alluvions, &c. sur les rivières navigables, &c.,” as more at large, page 84.

1710. February. An edict confirming possessions of islands, &c. of the sea on specified terms, copied almost verbally from that of 1693; using the word alluvions as that does, and referring to the provisions of that edict.

1722. September. An arrêt resuming isles, attérissements, &c. formed since the edict of 1693; and those of anterior formation, where the possessor has not made the payments provided by the edict of 1693.

But this whole branch of the argument of M. Moreau must be read with attention; its matter cannot be abridged, nor otherwise expressed, but for the worse.

Having thus luminously reconciled the authorities which had been so ill understood, and victoriously established the public right to alluvions on navigable rivers, M. Moreau, with too much facility, gives back to his adversary one-half the ground he has conquered, by a gratuitous admission, which those interested in the event of the cause are not ready to confirm. Led away as it seems, by an expression in the edict of 1683, “tout ce qui se trouve renfermé dans leur lit nous appartient,” and which is to be found in no other, and yielding to a single decision of the parliament of Paris of 1765, found in a law dictionary, adjudged that the ordinances giving to the King the isles which are formed “dans le lit des fleuves et rivières navigables, ne lui donnent pas les attérissements et alluvions qui peuvent se former hors le lit de ces mêmes fleuves,” &c. he admits that, although alluvions within the bed of a river belong to the King, those without the bed do not belong to him. M. Moreau is too reasonable to consider as a compliment to himself the adoption of an opinion on his authority alone, by any one not convinced by his reasonings. Certainly I do not feel myself competent to enter the lists with him on any question of difficulty in the French law; yet, after maturely considering the authorities appealed to in this case, and which he has rendered so strong by reconciling and forming them into one mass, I cannot yield, as he does, so imposing a mass to a single decision of the single parliament of Paris. I still must consider all alluvions on navigable rivers as belonging to the nation; and will briefly assign my reasons.

1st. It is of the essence of alluvion that it be, not in the bed of the river, but out of it, that is, adjacent to the bank. So say, expressly, the Roman and French definitions: “alluvio est incrementum agro tuo flumine adjectum.” “L’alluvion est un accroissement de terrain qui se fait sur les bords des fleuves, par les terres que l’eau y apporte, et qui se consolident pour ne faire qu’un tout avec l’aterre vo sine.” [Ante, page 83.] Increments within the bed of a river, though sometimes carelessly spoken of under the term of alluvion, are never so in correct language, never in the well weighed diction of ordinances and statutes. They are termed accroisements, atterrissements, assablisements, îles, islots, javeaux, in French; and in possessions being considered as prædia limitata, limited possessions. The law which gives this right is expressed in the Institutes in these words, "quod per alluvionem agro tuo flumen adject, jure gentium tibi acquiritur." [Inst. 2. 1. 20.] "What the river has added agro tuo, becomes yours by the law of nations." And the Digest 41. 1. 7. 1. in almost the same words says, "quod per alluvionem agro nostro flumen adject, jure gentium nobis acquiritur." In both instances it is to the possessor agri only that it is given. It becomes material, therefore, to understand rigorously the import of the word ager in the Roman laws; and it happens that its definition is given critically by the same authority which uses it; "Locus sine ædificio, in urbe area, rure autem ager appellatur, idemque ager, cum ædificio, fundus dicitur." [Dig. 50. 16. 211.] "Quæstio est, fundus a possessione, vel agro, vel prædio, quid distet?" Ib. 115, in notis. "fundus est ipsum solum: eo si utimur prædium dicitur. Ager esse potest sine villa. "Grounds, without a building, in a city, is called area, but in the country ager! Pliny 1. 6. affirms that ager is derived from the Greek ἀγρός of the same import. And in the Greek Pragmatics of Attaliata, tit. 45. the law of alluvion uses "ἀγρός" for ager. "Τὸ ἀκτίναστον δὲ τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ποταμῶν προσέθεν τῶ ἀγρῶ μὲν, ἀγροῦ χάριτι ἐν βίῃ τῶν ἀκτίναστον, καὶ ἐκὼς ἕξωται." Quod insensibiliter τῶ ἀγρῶ μὲν per flumen adjectum est. Alluvionis est, et mihi competit. "What is insensibly added by the river agro meo is alluvion [adundatio, adaggeratio] and belongs to me." In the same title "ὡς ἐν τῶ ἀγρῶ οὐ στήριον ἐν βίῃ." What I sow ἀγρῶ σε, agro tuo, in your field, is yours." And Stephens, in his Thesaur. our language shoals, shallows, flats, bars, islands. Without the bed of the river, they add to the beach, or to the adjacent field, according to their elevation, and, in this last case only, constitute alluvion; within the bed of the river, they lose that name.

2d. "Les alluvions qui se forment dans le lit des fleuves" is not the language of the edicts cited by Moreau himself, not even of that single one on which this opinion is founded. That has, indeed, the expression "dans les lits," but applied not to alluvions, but to isles, accroisements, atterrissements, to which it is applicable with truth and correctness. These are the kinds of increments it enumerates, and describes as being "dans le lit." If they are enumerated exempli gratia only, as the word comme seems to imply, and alluvions, though not named, were within the purview, as they are within the reason of the law, then, if the thing itself is to be understood as if expressed in the text, its true description also is to be understood as if expressed, that is to say, its adjacency to the bank. The edicts of 1686 and 1689, mention "les isles des rivières navigables, ensemble les crémens qui s'y sont formés." That of 1693 says, in like manner, "le droit &c. sur tous les fleuves, et les isles et crémens qui s'y sont formés;" and again: "isles et alluvions sur les rivières navigables," not "dans leurs lits." That of 1710 says, "possession des isles et alluvions sur les dits rivières." Thus we see that, wherever the edicts mention alluvions, they describe them as "sur le fleuve," not "dans le lit du fleuve." When they speak of those increments, which are "dans le lit des fleuves," they name them as accroisements, atterrissements, &c. but not as alluvions.

3d. This distinction is founded on a single decision of a single parliament, and on the authority of a King's advocate, Bacquet, and the dictum of Salvaing, there cited; all, perhaps, influenced by the same and single expression in the edict of 1683. It is cited, too, from a dictionary by Prost de Royer, where it is, doubtless, stated in abridgment only, and possibly with the omission of circumstances, arguments, and expressions, which, were they before us, would change the aspect of the case, as M. Moreau himself has shown to be so possible, in his review of the mutilated authorities produced by the adversary. And are we, for this, to give up the doctrines of Pothier, Denizart, Ferriere, and a host of other great authorities, and all the definitions of the Roman and French laws, all of which, when speaking of alluvions, place them exclusively on the borders, and not in the beds of rivers. I cannot do it.

4th. This distinction is new in this cause, having never been claimed by the plaintiff or his counsel, or suggested by any other who has treated the question. This naturally begets a suspicion that it is peculiar, though, doubtless the adversary will adopt it with avidity. And is he entitled to this gratuitous aid? Is it the equity of his cause, or even its honesty, or its utility, which gives him this claim on our tenderness? I cannot consent to a concession which gives the Batture from the public in the contingency of its being considered as a real alluvion, consolidated with, and making part of, the adjacent field. On the contrary, I insist on the public right in this case also, under the laws of France, as hitherto understood, and as declared by her highest authorities.

5th. I adhere to this ground the more firmly, because I observe, from another part of this memoir, (page 99,) that M. Moreau himself seems not very decided in this new opinion. After stating the mischief of Mr. Livingston's works, he says, "it is to prevent a like abuse, that the Roman and Spanish laws of haute police, which I have cited, are opposed to every species

Ling. Gr. Voce, "ἄγρος" translates it "rus ager" "ἐν ἀγρῶ, in agro, ruri. Ἐξ ἀγρῶ, ex agro, rure. Ἐς ἀγρῶν, in agrum, rus. And he cites examples "Νηὸς δὲ μοι ἐστὶν ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ, νεαφί πόλιος." [Hom. Od. 1, 174.] My vessel is stationed in the country, apart from the city." "Διὰ τὸ μὴ μεγάλαις ἵνασι τῶν τὰς ΠΟΛΙΕΩΣ, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῶν ἈΓΡῶΝ ἰστέιν τὸν δῆμον ἀρχαῖον ὄναι." [Aristo. Polit. 5.] "Because, the cities not being then large, the people were occupied in the country," where ἀγρός is proved to be pointedly the contradistinction to πόλις, to wit, the country to the city. From these definitions it appears that the word ager, in the law, constantly means field, or farm, in the country, and that a city lot is termed area. In towns the whole bank and beach being necessary for public use, the private right of alluvion would be inadmissible; and the adverse counsel have been challenged [Thiery, 33.] to produce a single instance, under the Roman law, of a claim of alluvion allowed in a city. To this might be added a similar challenge as to the laws of England. These give alluvion on rivers, as the civil law does, to the riparian proprietor. [Bracton 1. 2 c. 2 § 1. Fleta 1. 3. c. 2.] Can they, from the volumes of English law, with which they are so much more familiar, produce one single instance of the private right of alluvion allowed in a city? In England, I mean, and not in America, where special circumstances have prevented attention to the law on this subject, or the breach of it. And this must be from the reason of the thing alone, because the common law never having been, like the civil law, reduced to text, no verbal criticisms on a text can have cooperated against the claim.* Repeating, therefore, my of works undertaken on the banks of rivers and navigable streams, the effect of which might be to extend the limits of riparian fields, compromising the public safety, and injuring the facility of navigation. It was with this view, and not to create fiscal resources for himself, that Louis XIV. renewed the ordinances, which ascribed to the sovereign the property in rivers and navigable streams, and of whatever is contained in their bed. For if it be advantageous to navigation that the King should be proprietor of the islands which form themselves in navigable rivers, the same interest requires still more that he should be proprietor of the alluvions and increments formed along the shore itself; since any ownership of these objects, except that of the sovereign, might oppose obstacles to the free landing on the shore, which every one ought to have, and to the use of it which the law gives to the public."

Considering this admission, then, as doubted by M. Moreau himself, on a second and sounder view of it, I conclude that the law is accurately laid down by Pothier, [ante, page 83,] "By our French law, alluvions formed on the borders of navigable streams and rivers belong to the King. The proprietors of riparian heritages can have no claim to them, unless they have documents of the grant made them by the King, of the right of alluvion along their heritages. With respect to alluvions formed along the borders of a river not navigable, the property of which belongs to the proprietors of the neighboring heritage, the dispositions of the Roman law are to be followed."

*Since this was written, I have seen the case of Smart vs. the magistrates, town council, and community of Dundee, reported in 8 Brown's Reports of Appeals in Parl. 119. This was an appeal from the court of session in Scotland to the House of Lords. The crown of Scotland had, in very ancient times, granted to the corporation of Dundee, on the river Tay, the borough, with all the lands and pertinents, the privileges, profits, customs, ports, and liberties of the river on both sides, as freely in all respects as is possessed by the borough of Edinburgh over that of Leith; and, in a word, as it seems, every right, power, and trust which the Crown could grant. Smart, the proprietor of a lot bounded on one side per fluxum maris, or the sea flood, admitting that the sovereign, as trustee for the public, has a right to prevent all such appropriation of the sea-shore, or the banks of navigable rivers, as would impede navigation, render it dangerous, or hurt the interests of commerce, either inland or foreign, and that all private persons or corporations, having a grant of a port and harbor, possess, to a certain extent, the same privileges as derived from the sovereign, within a defined space, still he insisted on the right of the adjacent proprietor to ground gained from the sea by its recess, or by his own industry in embanking, or by any other opus manufactum, not prejudicial to navigation or the established rights of others. On the other hand, the corporation claimed, by their grant, a right to the sea-shore adjacent to the town, in trust, for the benefit of the community, to make harbors, basins, and works for securing them, market places, wharves, wood yards, and other repositories for the accommodation of the trade, and, for these different works, to take sites from the water by embankment; in short, as standing in the place of the Crown, that they succeeded to all the cares and powers of the Crown in the territory and its waters, for the public good and, for that object, were now engaged in making an embankment adjacent to the appellant's lot, for the benefit of navigation and commerce. They admit the general doctrine of the riparian right to the soil which may be acquired from a sea or river, by its receding naturally, or by industry; but that this reference to the reasoning and authorities of M. Thiery on this point, and my own conviction of their soundness. I consider it as established, that, were this question to be decided by the Roman law, the conversion of the farm into a faubourg of the city passed to the public all the riparian rights attached to it while a rural possession, and, among these, the right of alluvion.

And, if the right of alluvion is not given to urban proprietors, much less would it to a mere holder of the bed of a road. But did any one ever hear of a man's holding the bed of a road, and nothing else? Is it possible to believe that Bertrand Gravier, in selling his lots "face au fleuve," really meant to retain the bed of the road and levee? that a man, having a road on the margin of his land, which is its boundary, should mean to sell his land to the road, and to retain that by itself? a thing of no possible use to him, because the use being in the public, he could never employ it in agriculture or otherwise. Were all this possible, yet this bed of a road, this "labrum annis," would be no ager, no field to which the right of alluvion could attach. That right is but an accessory, or, in the language of our law, an appendage or appurtenance, and an accessory, not to a mere line, but to something of which it can become a part. Had the law, therefore, ever given alluvion to any but the holder of an ager, of a field, yet the general doctrines of principal and accessory, would not have carried the benefit to Bertrand Gravier in this case. "Accessorium sequitur naturam sui principalis. Et in accessoriis, præstanda sunt quæ in principali. Accessorium non tenet sine principali, sublato principali, tollitur et accessorium." These are maxims of the civil law. [Calvini Lexicon Jurid.] "An accessory follows the nature of its principal. If the accession then be to a field, it becomes part of the field; if to a town, it would become part of the town; if to a road, the use of which belongs to the public, it would be to the road, and to the public. It must follow the nature of its principal, and become a part of that, subject to the same rights, uses, and servitudes with that; and Bertrand Gravier had no right of use in the principal, that is, of the road and levee.

The equity on which the right of alluvion is founded is, that as the owner of the field is exposed to the danger of loss, he ought, as an equivalent, to have the chance of gain. But what equitable reason could there be in the present case, for giving to Gravier the benefit of alluvion, when he could lose nothing by alluvion? If the levee and bank were washed away, they would not go to his plantation, back of the suburb, for a new one. The public would have to purchase a new bed for a road from the adjacent lot-holders. Then "qui sentit onus, sentire debet et commodum."

But I do deny to the Batture every characteristic of an alluvion.

The French and Roman law constituting that of the place, let us seek from them the definition of alluvion. The Institute, 2. 1. 20. gives it in these words; and the Digest. 41. 1. 7. § 1. in almost verbatim the same.

‘Quod per alluvionem agro tuo flumen adjecit, alluvion to your field be-jure gentium tibi acquiritur comes yours by the law of

does not apply to the site of a tenement within a burgh, where the corporation is entitled to all the soil not expressly granted away; that the words, "per fluxum maris," are but words of description, which were accurate too at the date of the grant, but have since become otherwise by a change of character, in the boundary, not in the area granted. They are a limitation of the subject of the grant in the same way as a road would be, which, if removed further off, would not carry the granted subject with it; or as the tenement of another would be; and make it an ager limitatus, not an ager arcifinius; the particular boundaries being named, not to limit the coterminous property, but the property granted. The Appeal was accordingly dismissed by the House of Lords. No arguments of counsel, other than the written pleadings, nor reasons of the Lords, are reported; but from this case, (crowded as it is with circumstances, many of which are irrelevant to the merits of the question, and of those relevant, not the words, but the condensed substance, is here given,) the book says, the general principle to be gathered is, that "where the sea flood is stated as the boundary of premises granted on the shore of a sea-port being an incorporated borough, this does not give the grantee a right to follow the sea, or to the land acquired from it, or left by it where it has receded, in prejudice of the corporation having, by their charter, a right vested in them to the whole territory of the burgh," and, consequently, in prejudice of the King, or public, where no such grant has substituted others in their place; and it authorizes a strong inference that the English, like the Roman law, restrains the right of alluvion to the prædium rusticum, not admitting it on the shores bordering a city.

tur. Est autem alluvio incrementum latens. Per alluviorem autem id videtur adjeci quod ita paulatim adjicitur, ut intelligi non possit quantum, quoque temporis momento adjiciatur.

And in the Greek version of Theophilus, the words 'alluvio est incrementum latens' are rendered, ἐλάσσειν ἐπὶ ἢ πρόσκλισις ἢ πρόσρχυσις, translated by Curtius 'alluvio est adundatio vel adaggeratio.' Retaining only the the words of this paragraph, which are definition, it will stand thus :

‘Alluvio est incrementum [adundatio, adaggeratio,] agro tuo flumine adjectum, ita latens et paulatim, ut intelligi non possit quantum quoque temporis momento adjiciatur.’

nature. Alluvion is a latent increase. That seems to be added by alluvion which is so added by degrees that you cannot conceive how much in each moment of time is added.’

‘Alluvion is an increment [an ad-undation or ad-aggeration] added by the river- to your field, so latent and gradual, that the quantity added in every moment of time cannot be known.’

This is the Roman definition.

In the law dictionary of the Encyclopédie Méthod, voce 'alluvion' by Le Rasle, the definition is, ‘Alluvion, un accroissement de terrein qui se fait peu-à-peu sur les bords de la mer, des fleuves, et des rivières, par les terres que l'eau y apporte, et qui se consolident pour ne faire qu'un tout avec la terre voisine.

‘Alluvion, an increment of ground which is made by little and little on the border of the sea, rivers or streams, by earth which the water brings, and which is consolidated so as to make but one whole with the neighboring ground.’

To reduce the essential members of the Roman and French definitions to a single one, according with our own common sense, (for certainly we all understand what alluvion is,) I should consider the following definition as comprehending the essential characteristics of both :

1. ‘Alluvion is an extension which the waters add insensibly.
2. ‘By apposition of particles of earth.
3. ‘Against the adjacent field.
4. ‘And consolidate with it so as to make a part of it.’

‘Incrementum flumine adjectum latens et paulatim.
ἡ πρόσρχυσις, addaggeratio.
ἡ πρόσκλισις, adundatio.
Ἄγρο.

Qui se consolide pour ne faire qu'un tout avec la terre voisine.’

I take this to be rigorously conformable with the French and Roman definitions, as cited from the authorities before mentioned, and that it contains not one word which is not within their unquestionable meaning. Now let us try the Batture by this test.

1. "Alluvion is an extension which the waters add insensibly." But the increment of the Batture has by no means been insensible. Every swell of six months is said [Derb. xix.] to deposit usually nearly a foot of mud on the whole surface of the Batture, so that when the waters retire, the increment is visible to every eye. And we have seen that, aided by Mr. Livingston's works, a single tide extended the Batture from seventy-five to eighty feet further into the river, and deposited on it from two to seven feet of mud, inasmuch that a saw scaffold, seven feet high when the waters rose on it, was, at their retiring, buried to its top. This increment is surely not insensible. (See the Mayor's answer to the Governor, Nov. 18, 1808. MS.)
2. "By apposition of particles of earth," or by their adhesion. But the addition to the Batture is by deposition of particles of earth on its face, not by their apposition, or adhesion to the bank. It is not pretended that the bank has extended, by apposition of particles to its side, one inch towards the river. It remains now the same as when the levee was erected on it. The deposition of earth on the bottom of a river can be no more said to be an apposition to its sides than the coating the floor of a room can be said to be plastering its walls.
3. "Against the adjacent field." "la terre voisine." Not a particle has been added to the adjacent field; that remains as it was, bounded by the identical line, crepido, or ora terræ, which has ever bounded it.
4. "And consolidated with the field so as to make part of it." "Un tout avec la terre voisine." Even supposing the continuity of the adjacent field not to be broken by the intervention of the levee and road, nothing is consolidated with it, not even with the margo riparium, or chemin de hallage, if there be any, between the levee and brim of the bank. No extension of its surface has taken place so as to form one with the former surface, so as to be a continuation of that surface, so as to be arrable like that. The highest part of the Batture, even where it abuts against the bank, is still materially below the level of the adjacent field. A terrace of some feet in height still separates the field from the deposition called the Batture. It is now as distinguishable from the adjacent field as it ever was, being covered with water periodically six months in the year while that is dry. Alluvion is identified with the farmer's field, because of identity of character, fitness for the same use; but the Batture is not fitted for ploughing or sowing. It is clear, then, that the Batture has not a single feature of alluvion; and, divesting it of this misnomer, the whole claim of the plaintiff falls to the ground: for he has not pretended that it could be his under any other title than that of alluvion.

We will now proceed to show what it is, which will further demonstrate what it is not.

In the channel, or hollow, containing a river, the Roman law has distinguished the alveus, or bed of the river, and the ripa, or bank, the river itself being aqua, water. 'Tribus constant flumina, alveo, aqua, et ripis.' [Dig. 43. 12. note 1.] All above high water mark they considered as ripa, bank; and all below as alveus, or bed. The same terms have the same extent in the language of our law likewise; but we distinguish by an additional name that band, or margin of the bed of the river, which lies between the high and the low water marks; we call it the beach: other modern nations distinguish it also. In Spanish it is playa; Italian, piaggia; in French plage; in the local terms of Orleans it is batture, and sometimes platin.* In Latin, I know of no term which applies exactly to the beach of a river. Litus is restrained to the shore of the sea, and there comprehends the beach, going to the water edge, whether at high or low tide. 'Litus est maris. ripa fluminis,' says Vinnius, in his Commentary on the Inst. 2. 1. 4. and he confirms this difference of extent towards the water, (ibid.) where he says,

'Neque vero idem est ripa in flumine, quod litus in mari. Ripa flumine non subjicitur, ut litora subjiciuntur mari, et quotidianis accessibus ab eo occupantur.'

'Nor is the bank of a river and the shore of the sea the same thing. The bank is not subject to the river as the shores are to the sea, which are occupied by it in its daily accesses.'

In our rivers, as far as the tide flows, the beach is the actual as well as the nominal bed of the river, during the half of every day. Above the flow of tide it is covered half the year at a time, instead of half of every day. The tide there being annual only, or one regular tide in a year. This, in the State where I am, begins about the 1st of November, is at its full tide during the months of January and February, and retires to its minimum by the end of April. In other States, from north to south, this progression may vary a little. Hence we call them the summer and winter tides, as the Romans did theirs, 'hibernus et æstivus.' The Mississippi resembles our fresh water rivers in having only one regular swell or tide a year. It differs from them in not being subject to occasional swells. The regions it waters are so vast, that accidental rains and droughts in one part are countervailed by contrary accidents in other parts, so as never to become sensible in the river. It is only when all the countries it occupies become subject to the general influence of summer or winter, that a regular and steady flood or ebb takes place. It differs, too, in the seasons of its tides, which are about three months later than in our rivers. Its swell begins with February, is at its greatest height in May, June, and July, and the waters retire by the end of August. Its high tide, therefore, is in summer, and the low water in winter. Being regular in its tides, it is regular also in the periods of its inundations; whereas, in ours, although the natural banks rarely escape being overflowed at some time of the season, yet the precise time varies with the accident of the fall of rains. But it is not the name of the season, but the fact of the rise and fall, which determines the law of the case.

Now the Batture Ste. Marie, is precisely within his band or margin between the high and low water-mark of the Mississippi called the beach. It extended from the bank into the river from one hundred and twenty-two to two hundred and forty-seven yards before Mr. Livingston began his works, and these have added in one year from seventy-five to eighty feet to its breadth. This river abounds with similar beaches, but this one alone, from its position and importance to the city, has called for a legal investigation of its character. Every country furnishes examples of this kind, great or small; but the most extensive are in northern climates. The beach of the Forth, for example, adjacent to Edinburg, is a mile wide, and is covered by every tide with twenty feet water. Abundance of examples of more extensive beaches might be produced; many doubtless from New Hampshire and Maine, where the tide rises forty feet. This, therefore, of Ste. Marie is not extraordinary but for the cupiditly which its importance to the city of New Orleans has inspired.

I shall proceed to state the authorities on which this division between the bank and bed of the river is established, and which makes the margin or beach a part of the bed of the river.

'Ripa est pars extrema alvei, quod naturaliter flumen excurrit.' Grotius de Jur. B. et P. 2. 8. 9.

'Ripa ea putatur esse quæ plenissimum flumen continet.' Dig. 43. 12. 3. And Vinnius's commentary on this passage is, 'ut significet, partem ripæ non esse, spatium illud, ripæ proximum, quod aliquando flumine caloribus minuto æstivo tempore, non occupatur.'

'Ripa autem ita recte definitur, id quod flumen continet, naturalem rigorem cursu sui tenens. Cæterum si quando vel imbribus, vel mari, vel quâ alia ratione, ad tempus excrevit, ripas non mutat. Nemo denique dixit Nilum, qui incremento suo Ægyptum operit, ripas suas mutare, vel ampliare. Nam cum ad perpetuam sui mensuram redierit ripæ alvei ejus muniendæ sunt.' Dig. 43. 12. 5.

'Alveus flumina tegitur.' Grot. S. B. P. 2. 8. 9.

'Alveus est spatium illud flumini subjectum per quod fluit.' Vinnii Paritiones Tur. Civil. 1. 17.

Litus, in the Roman law, being the beach or shore of the sea, "rivage," definitions of that will corroborate the division between the ripa and alveus, the bed and bank of a river. In both cases, what is covered by the highest tide belongs to the public; all above it is private property.

'Litus est quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. Idque Marcus Tullium aiunt, cum arbiter esset, primum constituisse.' Dig. 50. 16. 96.

† Rigor, a rectitudine dicitur, est curus aquæ rectum profluentis tenorem significans. Sic vigor stillicidii rectus ejus fluxus est. Calvini Lexicon juridicum, rigor. I have therefore translated it "direction."

* Etymologies often help us to the true meaning of words; and where they agree in several languages, they show the common sense of mankind as to the meaning of the word. In French, Batture is derived from battre, to beat, being the margin on which the surges beat. In English, beach is from the Anglo-Saxon verb Beotian, Beation, to beat, pronounced beachian—as christian, fustian, question, are pronounced chischan, fuschian, queschian, &c.

In Spanish, Playa,
In Italian, Piaggia,
In French, Plage, } are from  $\beta\alpha\lambda\lambda\alpha\ \pi\lambda\eta\gamma\eta\varsigma$ .

Platin, from  $\pi\lambda\alpha\tau\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon$ , percutere. Perhaps from plat, F. flat.

Greek,  $\alpha\rho\lambda\alpha\kappa\tau\iota\varsigma\ \acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\eta$ , from  $\acute{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\omega$ , agere.

Clav. Homer. A. 31.

$\delta\iota\upsilon\gamma\mu\iota\upsilon\iota\ \acute{\alpha}\ \delta\iota\gamma\iota\sigma\tau\alpha$ , frango, quia in litore fluctus frangitur.

Ib. v. 437.

'Est autem litus maris quatenus hibernus fluctus maximus excurrit.' Inst. 2. 1. 3. The paraphrase of Theophilus adds, 'unde et æstate, usque ad ea loca litus definimus,' and his Scholiast subjoins, 'non ut mediis caloribus solet, sed hibernus; quoniam hieme protissimum mare turbatur, mare est undabundum.'

'The shore of the sea is as far as the greatest winter wave reaches.' The paraphrase of Theophilus adds, 'wherefore, in summer also, we bound the shore by the same limits;' and his Scholiast subjoins, 'not the wave of midsummer, but of winter; because in winter the sea is most agitated and most swelled.'

ture, nor, collated with the other authorities, make a more consistent and rational provision. "The bank ends at that line on the levee to which the river rises at its full tide; and although the Batture or beach next below that line is uncovered by the river when reduced to its low tide, yet that Batture or beach does not therefore become a part of the bank, but remains a part of the bed of the river;" for, says Theophilus, "even in low water [et æstate] we bound the bank at the line of high water." [Inst. 2. 1. 3.] The bank being the extima alvei, the border of the bed, within which bed the river flows when in its fullest state naturally, that is to say, not when "imbribus, vel quâ aliâ ratione, ad tempus, excrevit," not when "temporarily overflowed by extraordinary rains," &c.—[Dig. 43. 12. 5.] but "quando mas crece, sin salir de su madre en qualquiera tiempo del ano," "when in its full height, without leaving its bed, to whatsoever season of the year the period of full height may belong." This is unquestionably the meaning of all the authorities taken together, and explaining one another.

"By shore, the Institutes mean up to the high-water-mark, or (where little or no tides, as in the Mediterranean,) as high as the highest winter wave washes." 1 Brown's Civil and Admiralty Law, b. 2. c. 1.

We must not, however, with Mr. Livingston, [page 61,] seize on the single word "hibernus" in the last quotation, and sacrifice to that both the fact and the reason of the law. The substance of the fact on which the law goes is, that there is a margin of the bed of the river covered at high water, uncovered at low. The season when this happens is a matter of circumstance only, and of immaterial circumstance. In the rivers familiar to the Romans, the maximus fluctus, or highest wave, was in winter; in the Mississippi, it is in summer. Circumstance must always yield to substance. The object of the law is to reserve that margin to the public. But to reduce, with Mr. Livingston, the public right to the summer water line would relinquish that object. The explanations quoted from Vinnius, from Theophilus and his Scholiast, prove, from the reason of the law, that the law of the winter tide for the Po and the Tiber must be that of the summer tide for the Mississippi. The Spanish law, therefore, is expressed in more correct terms; and we have the authority of Mr. Livingston [ibidem] for saying that the Justinian code is the common law of Spain.

'La ribera del rio se entiende todo lo que cubre el agua de el, quando mas crece, en qualquiera tiempo del ano, sin salir de su yema y madre.' Curia Philippica. 2. 3. 1. cited Derb. 46.

'The bank of a river is understood to be the whole of what contains its waters when most swelled, in whatsoever time of the year, without leaving its bed or channel.'

From these authorities, then, the conclusion is most rigorously exact, that all is river, or river's bed, which is contained between the two banks, and the high water line on them; and all is bank which embraces the waters in their ordinary full tide.

Agreeably to this has been the constant practice and extent of grants of lands on the Mississippi. Charles Trudeau swears [Liv. 57.] that "during twenty-eight years that he has performed the functions of Surveyor General of this province, it has always been in his knowledge, that the grants of land on the borders of the Mississippi have their fronts on the edge of the river itself, and when its waters are at their greatest height." And Laveau Trudeau [Liv. 58.] that "the concession to the Jesuits, he believes, was like all the others, that is, from the river at its greatest height."

Thus we see what the law is; that it has been perfectly understood in the territory, and has been constantly practised on, and consequently, that neither the grant to the Jesuits, nor to Bertrand Gravier, could have included the beach or Batture.

This is the law correctly for all rivers, leaving to every one its own season of flood or ebb.

To these authorities from the Roman and Spanish law, I will add that of the French ordinance of 1681, sect. 43. art. 1. on the same subject.

'Sera réputé bord et rivage de la mer, tout ce qu'elle couvre et découvre [precisely the beach or Batture] pendant les nouvelles et pleines lunes, et jusqu'ou le grand flot de mer cesse de s'y faire sentir. Il est facile de connoître jusqu'ou s'étend ordinairement le grand flot de Mars, par le gravier qui y est déposé; ainsi il ne faut pas confondre cette partie avec l'espace ou parvient quelquefois l'eau de la mer par les ouragans, et par les tempestes. Ainsi jugé à Aix, le 11 Mai, 1742.' Boucher, Institut. au Droit Maritime, 27. 13. Nouveau Commentaire sur l'Ordonnance de la Marine de 1681. tit. 7. art. 1.

'The border and shore of the sea shall be reputed to be the whole which it covers and uncovers [precisely the beach or Batture] during the new and full moons, and as far as to which the full tide of the sea ceases to be perceived. It is easy to know how far ordinarily the full tide of March extends, by the gravel which is deposited there; therefore, we must not confound that part with the space where the waters of the sea come sometimes, in hurricanes and storms.' So adjudged at Aix, May 11, 1742.

It will perhaps be objected that, establishing the commencement of the bank at the high-water-mark, leaves in fact no bank at all, as the high water regularly overflows the natural bank, or brim of the channel. And will it be a new phenomenon to see a river without natural banks sufficient to contain its waters at their full tide? The Mississippi is certainly a river of a character marked by strong features. It will be very practicable, by exaggerating these, to draw a line of separation between this and the mass of the rivers of our country, to consider it as sui generis, not subject to the laws which govern other rivers, but needing a system of law for itself; and until this system can be prepared, it may be abandoned to speculations of death and devastation like the present. But will this be the object of the sound Judge or legislator? It is certainly for the good of the whole nation to assimilate as much as possible all its parts, to strengthen their analogies, obliterate the traits of difference, and to deal law and justice to all by the same rule and same measure. The bayous of all that territory and of the country thence to Florida point are without banks to contain their full titles. The Mississippi is in the like state as far as Baton Rouge, where competent banks first rise out of the waters, and continue, with intervals of depression, to its upper parts. Many of the rivers of our maritime States are under circumstances resembling these. The channel which nature has hollowed for them is not yet deep enough, or the depositions of earth on the adjacent grounds not yet sufficiently accumulated, to raise them entirely clear of the flood tides. Extensive bodies of lands, still marshy, therefore, are covered by them at every tide. In some of these cases, the hand of man, regulated by laws which restrain obstructions to navigation and injury to others, has aided and expedited the operations of nature, by raising the bank which she had begun, and redeeming the lands from the dominion of the waters. The same thing has been done on the Mississippi. An artificial bank of three, four, or five feet has been raised on the natural one, has made that sufficient to contain its full waters, and to protect a fertile and extensive country from its ravages. These are become the real banks of the river, on which the laws operate as if the whole was natural. The Nile, like the Mississippi, has natural banks, not competent in every part to the conveyance of its waters. In these parts, artificial banks are, in like manner, raised, through which, and the natural bayous

Let us now embody those authorities by bringing together the separate members, making them paraphrase one another, and form a single description. The Digest 43. 12. 3. with Vinnius's comment, will stand thus: "The bank ends at the line to which the water rises at its full tide; and although the space next below it is sometimes uncovered by the river when reduced by heats in the summer season, yet that space is not a part of the bank." Now, substituting for "the heats of the summer season," which is circumstance, and immaterial, the term "low water," which is the substance of the case, nothing can more perfectly describe the beach or Bat-and artificial canals, the inundation, when at a given* height, is admitted; this being indispensable to fertilize the lands in a country where it never rains. And these banks of the Nile, natural and artificial, are recognised as such by the Roman law, as appears in a passage of the Digest before cited, declaring that its banks, though inundated periodically, are not thereby changed. Nor are those of our rivers when temporarily overflowed by rains, or other causes. Wherever, therefore, the banks of the Mississippi have no high water line, the objection is of no consequence, because the lands there are not as yet reclaimed or inhabited; and wherever they are reclaimed, the objection is not true; for there a high water line exists to separate the private from the public right. †

Having ascertained what the Batture is not, and what it is, and established the high-water-mark as the line of partition between the bed and bank of the river, we will proceed to examine to whom belongs the ground on either side of that line.

And 1. As to the bed of the river, there can be no question but that it belongs purely and simply to the sovereign, as the representative and trustee of the nation. If a navigable river, indeed, deserts its bed, the Roman law gave it to the adjacent proprietors; the for-

† This part of our subject merits fuller development. That the periodical overflows of some rivers do not differ from the accidental overflows of others, in any circumstance which should affect the law of the high-water line, in the one more than in the other, will be rendered more evident by taking a comparative view of them. To begin with ordinary rivers: 1. These have, along their greater part, and some of them through their whole course, natural banks adequate to the confinement of their waters, in the high-water season, except in cases of accidental inundation. Here, then, the Roman authorities tell us the inundation does not change the bank, nor the landmark on it. 2. Along other parts, where the natural bank was not high enough to contain the river in its season of steady high water, the hand of man has raised an artificial bank on the natural one, which effects this purpose, with the exception, as before, of accidental inundations, where such happen. This artificial bank performs all the functions of the natural, and is placed under the same law. 3. In other parts of them, the natural banks are still not high enough to contain the high tides, nor have they yet been made so by the hand of man. Here, then, the law cannot operate, because the local peculiarities, as yet, exclude the case from its provisions. The ground so covered by inundation has been, or may yet be, public property. But the legislator, instead of holding it as the bed of the river, grants it to individuals, as far as to the natural or incipient bank, that they, by completing the bank, may reclaim the land for their own and the public benefit; and, this done, the law comes into action on it. Much of this reclaimed and unreclaimed land exists in all these States.

I proceed next to rivers of particular character; of which, among those analogous to the Mississippi, the Nile is best known to us, and shall be described. That river, entering Upper Egypt at its cataracts, flows through a valley of twenty or thirty miles wide, and of four hundred and fifty miles in length, bounded on both sides by a continued ridge of mountains. Through most of this course, its natural banks are sufficient to contain its waters in time of flood, till they rise to that height at which, by their law, they are to be drawn off. In low parts, where the natural banks are not sufficient, they have been raised by hand to the necessary height. In addition also to the natural bayous, like those of the Mississippi, they have opened numerous canals, leading off at right angles from the river towards the mountains, and sufficient to draw off the greatest part of the current passing down the river. These, in ordinary times, are closed by artificial banks raised to the level of the natural ones. When the flood is at a height sufficient for irrigating and fertilizing the fields, which by the Nilometer is at sixteen cubits above the bed of the river, there artificial banks are cut, and the waters let in. The plain declining gently from the banks of the river, (which, like those of the Mississippi, are the highest ground,) towards the mountains, the waters are there stopped, as by a dam, and continue to rise, and diffuse themselves, till they reflow nearly to the bank of the river. If the rise ceases there, the waters remain stagnant, and deposit a fertilizing mud over the whole surface. But if uncommon rains above occasion a continuance of the rise till all the waters meet over the summits of the banks, then the motion of that in the river is communicated to the stagnant water on the plains, a general current takes place, and, instead of a deposit left, the former soil is swept away to the ocean, and famine ensues that year. This, the traveller Bruce informs us, had happened three times within the thirty years preceding his be-mer law of France to the sovereign; and the new code gives it as an indemnity to those through whose lands the new course is opened. But, while it is occupied by the river, all laws, I believe agree in giving it to the sovereign; not as his personal property, to become an object of revenue, or of alienation, but to be kept open for the free use of all the individuals of the nation.

‘Flumina omnia et portus publica sunt.’ Inst. 2. 1. 2.

‘All rivers and ports are public.’

‘Impossibile est ut alveus fluminis publici non sit publicus.’ Dig. 43. 12. 7.

‘It is impossible that the bed of a public river should not be public.’

‘Litus publicum est ætenuus qua maximus fluctus exæstuat.’ Dig. 50. 16. 96. 112.

‘The sea-shore is public as far as the greatest wave surges.’

And ‘litus’ we have seen is the beach or shore of the sea.

As to navigable streams and rivers, on which boats can ply, the property of them is in the King, as an incontestible right, naturally attached to the sovereignty; and since public things belonged to the people in the ing in that country. When the waters have withdrawn, and the river is returned into its natural bed, the banks are repaired in readiness to restrain the floods of the ensuing year. Such is the case in Upper Egypt. When the river enters Lower Egypt, it parts into two principal branches, the Pelusian and Canopic; which diverge and reach the Mediterranean at about two hundred miles apart, including between them the triangle called the Delta. Besides these, there are, within the Delta, three natural bayous, and two canals, dry at low water, which make up the famed seven mouths of the Nile. The mountains diverge as do the main branches of the river, the eastern going off to the isthmus of Suez, and the western to the sea near Alexandria. The waters, lessened by depletion, and spreading over a widening plain, are reduced, by the time they reach the base of the triangle at the sea, to one or two cubits depth. Banks therefore, of three or four feet high, are sufficient to protect the country, until here also they open the bayous and canals which intersect the triangle. Here, then, the case recurs of a river whose natural banks are partly competent to contain its high waters in common floods, and are partly made so by the hand of man, so as to furnish an ordinary high-water line. In extraordinary floods it overflows these banks, and in ordinary ones is let through them. Yet these inundations, as the Digest declares, do not change the banks. ‘Nemo dixit Nilum ripas suas mutare,’ &c. But when the river retires within its natural bed, the banks are again repaired: ‘cum ad perpetuum sui mensuram redieret, ripæ alvei ejus muniendæ sunt,’ ib. [See 2 Herodot. 6—19. Strabo 788. 1. Univ. Hist. 391—413. 1. Maillet, Description de l’Égypte 14—121. 1 De la Croix 338. Encyclop. Méth. Geographic. Nil. 1. Savary 3—14. 2 Savary 185—275. 1 Volney 34—48. 4 Bruce 364—407.

1. The Upper Mississippi, like the Upper Nile, has competent natural banks, through probably three fourths of its whole course. There, then, the Roman law is applicable in its very letter. 2. For about four hundred miles more, the natural banks have been aided by artificial ones, on both sides, so as to contain all the waters of the flumen plenissimum; and the inhabitants there have no occasion, as those of the Nile, to open their banks for the purpose either of fertilizing or irrigating the lands. Here, then, there is still less reason than in the case of the Nile to say that “the Mississippi has changed its bank.” 3. On the lower parts of the Mississippi, and some of its middle portion, especially on the western side, artificial banks have not yet been made, and the country is regularly inundated, as it is on those parts of our Atlantic rivers not yet embanked. But our increasing population will continue to extend these banks of our Atlantic rivers; and, for this purpose, our Governments grant the lands to individuals. And the same, we know, is done on the Mississippi. The Cyprieries, adjacent to New Orleans, for example, though covered with the reflux water from the lake, we know have been granted to individuals, and will, with the rest of the drowned lands, be reclaimed in time, as all Lower Egypt has been.

Thus, then, we find the laws of the Tiber and Nile transferred and applied to the Mississippi, with perfect accordance, and that all rivers may be governed by the same laws. Other rivers are subject to accidental floods, which are declared, however, not to disturb the law of the plenissimum flumen. The Nile and Mississippi not being subject to accidental floods, the flumen plenissimum with them is steady and undisturbed, and needs not the benefit of the exception. Nor will the reason of the law be changed, whether the cause of the inundation be the saturation of the earth and fountains, or rains, or melted snows, or the reflux of the ocean. The principle remains universally the same, that the landmark, when once established by a competent bank, is not changed by inundation or by any cause or circumstance of its high waters.

Roman republic, amongst us [in France] they must belong to our sovereigns." Julien, cited by Thiery 10. And Prevost de la Jannes, in his principles of French Jurisprudence, after having said that the property of public things belongs to the King, adds, "subject to the use thereof, that is due to the people." Thiery, ib.

In like manner, by the common law of England, the property, tam aquæ quam soli, of every river, having flux or reflux, or susceptible of any navigation, is in the King; who cannot grant it to a subject, because it is a highway, except for purposes which will increase the convenience of navigation. "The King has a right of propriety to the sea-shore, and the maritima incrementa. The shore is the land lying between high water and low water mark in ordinary tides, and this land belongeth to the King de jure communi, both in the shore of the sea, and the shore of the arms of the sea. And that is called an arm of the sea when the tide flows and reflows, and so far only as the tide flows and reflows." Hale De Jure Maris, c. 4. cited Bac. abr. Prærog. b. 3.

So that I presume no question is to be made but that the bed of the Mississippi belongs to the sovereign, that is, to the nation.

2. In the bank, from the high-water line inland, it is admitted that the property or ownership is in the riparian proprietor of the adjacent field or farm: but the use is in the public, for the purpose of navigation and other necessary uses.

* Riparum quoque uses publicus est jure gentium [i. e. gentis humanæ] sicut ipse fluminis: itaque naves ad eas appellere, funes arboribus ibi natis religare, onus aliquod in his reponere, cuilibet liberum est, sicut per ipsum flumen navigare. Sed proprietates earum, illorum est, quorum prædiis hærent: quæ de causa arbores quoque in eisdem natæ eorundem sunt. [Inst. 2. 1. 4.] And Vinnius adds, "non ut litora maris, ita ripas, conditionem fluminis sequi."

* Publica sunt flumina, portus, alveus fluminis quamdiu à flumine occupatus, ripæ. Hærent rerum omnium, proprietates nullius, si ripas exciperis, quarum proprietates eorum est qui prope ripam prædia possident. Vinnii Part. Jur. L. 1. c. 17.

"Rivers, streams, high roads, belong to all men in common; and although the soil of the banks of the rivers be an accession to the property of the owners of the contiguous land, yet all men may make use of them so far as to make fast their vessels to the trees which grow there, to repair them, and spread their sails on the banks; and they may there discharge their goods. Fishermen have also a right to dry their nets there, to expose their fish for sale on the banks, and, in general, to use them for every purpose of their art, or the occupation by which they live." 3 Part. 28. 6. cited Thiery 9.

"The same usefulness of the navigation of rivers demands the free use of their banks; so that in the breadth and length necessary for the passage and track of the horses which draw the boats there be neither tree planted nor any other obstacles in the way." [Dom. Pub. law, 1. 8. 2. 9.] To moor their vessels, spread their sails, unlade, sell their fish, &c. are here mentioned for example only, and not as a full enumeration of the variety of uses which, flowing from the public rights, may be exercised by them. In England it is said to have been decided that the public have no common law right to tow upon the banks of navigable rivers." 3 Term rep. 253. cited Bac. abr. highways A.

These authorities are so clear that they need no explanation. The text is as plain as any commentary can make it.

But there is an important limitation to these rights. Every individual is so to use them as not to obstruct others in their equal enjoyment. The space every one occupies on the bank or bed, as in a highway, a market, a theatre, is his for reasonable temporary purposes, but not to be held permanently. The adjacent landholder may repair or fortify his bank, to protect his land from inundation, but under the control of the magistrate, that his neighbors be not injured. He cannot divert the course of the stream, or even draw off water from it, to the injury of the navigation, nor erect any work which shall incommode the harbor or quay.

* Deterior statio, itemque iter navigio fieri videtur, si uses ejus corrumpatur, vel difficilior fiat, aut minor, vel rarior, aut si in totum auferatur. Proinde, sive derivatur aqua, ut exiguor facta minus sit navigabilis, vel si dilatetur, aut diffusa brevem aquam faciat; vel contra sic coangustetur, et rapidius flumen faciat: vel si quid aliud fiat quod navigationem incommodet, difficilior rem faciat, vel prosus impediatur, interdicto locus erit. Ca non seria cosa quisadaque el pro de todos los omes comualmente se estorbasse por la pro de algunos. Partidas 3. 28. 8. cited Derb. 48. Poydras 12.

The owner of lands on the bank of a river, may, however, make or repair a bank to protect them from the river.

* Quamvis fluminis naturalium cursum, opere manu facto alio, non liceat avertere, tamen ripam suam, adversus rapidi amnis impetum, munire prohibetur, non est. Codex L. 7. t. 41. § 1.

* You are not to do any thing in a public river, or on its banks, you are not to cast any thing into a public river, or its banks, which may render the station or course of a ship worse. It is called a station, from statuere, to place; that place is intended where ships may safely stay.

* The station and course of a ship seems to be rendered worse, if its use be destroyed, or made more difficult, or less, or scantier, or if it be wholly taken away. Moreover, if water be drawn off, so that, being scantier, it is less navigable, or if it be dilated, or spread out, so as to make the water shallow, or if, on the other hand, it be so narrowed as to make the river more rapid, or if any thing else be done which incommodes the navigation, makes it worse, or wholly impedes it, there is ground for interdict.

* Mill, nor canal, nor house, nor tower, nor cabin, nor other buildings whatsoever, may any man make newly in the rivers along which men go with their vessels, nor on their banks, by which their common use may be embarrassed. And if any one does it anew, or were it anciently done, so that injury is done to the common use, it ought to be destroyed; for it would not be meet that the benefit of all men in common should be disturbed for the benefit of some.

* Although it is not allowed to turn the natural course of a river by another made by hand, yet it is not prohibited to guard one's bank against the force of a rapid river.

* I forbid any thing to be done in a public river, or on its bank, or to be cast into the river or on its bank, by which the water may be made to flow otherwise than it flowed in the last season.

* When he says to flow otherwise, it relates, not to the quantity of water, but to the manner and direction of the course of the water. And if the neighbors experience any other evil from the act of him who is convened, there will be ground for interdict.

'Sunt qui putent excipiendum hoc interdicto quod ejus ripæ muniendæ causa non fiet,' scilicet ut si quid fiat quo aliter aqua fluat, si tamen muniendæ ripæ causâ fiat, interdicto locus non sit. Sed ne hoc quibus dam placeat; neque enim ripæ, cum incommodo accoleantur, muniendæ sunt.' Ib. § 6.

More particularly full and explicit as to the inhibitions of the law against obstructing the bed, beach, or bank of a sea or river is Noodt. Probabil. Juris Civilis, 4. 1. 1. After declaring that as to a house, or other such thing, built in a public river, the law is the same as obtains as to the sea and sea-shore, he proposes to state, 1. The law respecting the sea and its shore; and, 2. As it respects a river and its bank; and says,

'Ait Celsus maris communem usum esse, ut aëris: jactasque in id pilas fieri ejus qui jecit; sed id concedendum non esse, si deterior litoris marisque usus eo modo futurus sit. Adeo hoc quod in mari extructum est, facientis est. Ut tamen extruere liceat, et decreto opus est, ut innoxia edificatio sit. Porro ut usus maris, ita usus litoris, sive communis sive publicus est, jure gentium; et ideo licet unicuique in litore ædificare, litusque ædificatione suam facere. Si tamen, ut in mari, ita in litore, impetravit; præterea si non eo modo deterior futurus sit usus litoris; vel nisi usus publicus impediatur. Hoc in mari et litoribus jus est. Idem in fluminibus publicis, Ulpiano teste Dig. 39. 2. 24., cum sic ait, "fluminum publicorum communis est usus, sicut viarum publicarum et litorum. In his igitur publicè licet cuilibet ædificare, et destruere, dum tamen hoc sine incommodo cujusquam fiat." Vult tamen Ulpianus, ut ædificari possit, ædificari publicè et sine cujusquam incommodo; pariter ut in mari et litore definitum; publicè inquam, seu publicè auctoritate; id enim hoc verbum, publicè, indigitat. And § 2. citing Dig. 43. 12. 4. he says, "quesitum est, an is qui in utràque ripâ fluminis publici domus habeat pontem privati juris [vel privato jure] facere potest, respondit non posse." Et si facit, interdicto teniri. Causa responsi est quod, cum pontem facit, usum fluminis publici facit deteriorem.' So far Noodt.

'Some think liable to this interdict only "what is not done for the purpose of strengthening the bank," to wit, that if any thing be done by which the water may otherwise flow, if nevertheless it was to secure the bank, there is no ground for interdict. But this is not approved by others, for that banks are not to be secured to the inconvenience of the inhabitants.'

'Celsus says that the use of the sea is common, as is that of the air; and that stones laid in it were his who laid them; but that it was not to be admitted if the use of the shore or sea would be the worse. So what is constructed in the sea is his who constructs it. But to make it lawful to construct, a decree is necessary, and that the construction be innocent. Moreover, as the use of the sea, so that of the shore, is either common, or public, by the law of nations; and therefore it is lawful for any one to build on the shore, and to make the shore his by the building; if, however, as in the sea, so on the shore, he has obtained permission: and provided besides, the use of the shore will not thereby be rendered worse, nor the public use be impeded. This is the law as to the sea and its shore. It is the same as to public rivers, according to Ulpian. Dig. 39. 2. 24. where he says, "the use of public rivers is common, as of highways and shores. In these, therefore, any one may build up, or pull down, publicly, provided it be done without inconvenience to any one." That you may build, however, Ulpian requires that you build publicly, and without inconvenience to any one; in like manner as is prescribed as to the sea and its shore; publicly, I say, or by public authority; for that is what the word publicly indicates. And § 2. citing Dig. 43. 12. 4. he says it is asked whether he who has houses on both banks of a public river may build a bridge of his own private authority. He answers, he cannot; and if he does, he is bound by the interdict. The reason of the answer is, that, by building a bridge, he injures the use of a public river.' So far Noodt.

'Si quis à principe simpliciter impetraverit ut in publico loco ædificet, non est credendus sic ædificare ut cum incommodo alicujus id fiat.'

We see, then, that the Roman law not only forbade every species of construction or work on the bed, beach, or bank of a sea or river, without regular permission from the proper officer, but even annuls the permission after it is given, if, in event, the work proves injurious, not abandoning the lives and properties of its citizens to the ignorance, the facility, or the corruption of an officer. Indeed, without all this appeal to such learned authorities, does not common sense, the foundation of all authorities, of the laws themselves, and of their construction, declare it impossible that Mr. Livingston, a single individual, should have a lawful right to drown the city of New Orleans, or to injure, or change, of his own authority, the course or current of a river which is to give outlet to the productions of two-thirds of the whole area of the United States?

Such, then are the laws of Louisiana, declaratory of the public rights in navigable rivers, their beds and banks. For we must ever bear in mind that the Roman law, from which these extracts are made, so far as it is not controlled by the customs of Paris, the ordinances of France, or the Spanish regulations, is the law of Louisiana. Nor does this law deal in precept only, or trust the public rights to the dead letter of law merely; it provides also for enforcement. Digest, L. 43, tit. 15. De Ripâ Muniendâ, provides,

§ 4. 'Dabitur autem satis vicinis; sed et his qui trans flumen possidebunt.'

'Ne quid in loco publico facias, inve eum locum immittas, quæ ex re quid illi damni detur. [Dig. 43. 8. 2.] Ad ea loca hoc interdictum pertinet, quæ publico usui destinata sunt: ut si quid illic fiat, quod privato noceret, Prætor intercederet interdicto suo. § 5. Adversus eum qui molem in mare projecit, interdictum utile competit ei, cui forte hæc res nocitura sit: si autem nemo damnum sentit, tunc est is, qui in litore ædificat, vel molem in mare jacit. § 8. Damnum autem patitur, qui commodum amittit, quod ex publico consequatur, qualequale sit. § 11. Si tamen nullum opus factum fuerit, officio judicis continetur, ut caveatur, non fieri.' § 18.

'If any one obtains leave simply from the prince to build in a public place, it is not to be understood he is so to build as to incommode another.'

§ 1. 'To repair and strengthen the banks of public rivers is most useful, provided the navigation be not by that deteriorated; for those repairs alone are to be permitted which do not impede the navigation.'

§ 3. 'But he who would strengthen his bank, should give either an engagement, or security against future injury, according to the quality of the person. And this interdict establishes that the engagement, or security, against future injury, shall be for ten years, by the opinion of a good man.'

§ 4. 'Security shall be given to the neighbors, and also to possessors on the other side of the river.'

'You are to do nothing in any public place, nor to cast any thing into that place, from which any damage may follow. This interdict respects those places, which are destined to public use: and that if any thing be there done, which may injure an individual, the Prætor may interpose by his interdict. Against him who projects a mole into the sea, the interdictum utile lies for him to whom this may possibly do injury; but if nobody sustains damage, he is to be protected who builds on the seashore, or projects a mole into the sea. And he seems to suffer injury who loses any convenience, which he derived from the public, whatsoever it may be. But if no work is done, he should be constrained by the authority of the judge to engage that none shall be done.'

The same is the law as to highways and public places—Dig 43. 8. 2. 16.

"Seeing the use of rivers belongs to the public, nobody can make any change in them that may be of prejudice to the said use. Thus, one cannot do any thing to make the current of the water slower or more rapid, should this change be any way prejudicial to the public, or to particular persons. Thus, although one may divert the water of a brook, or of a river, to water his meadows, or other grounds, or for mills and other uses, yet every one ought to use this liberty so as not to do any prejudice either to the navigation of the river, whose waters he should turn aside, or the navigation of another river which the said water should render navigable by discharging itself into it, or to any other public use, or to neighbors who should have a like want and an equal right." Dom. Pub. Law, 1. 8. 2. 11.

The same laws make it peculiarly incumbent on the Government and its officers to watch over the public property and rights, and to see that they are not injured or intruded on by private individuals. "In order to preserve the navigation of rivers, it is proper for the Government to prohibit and punish all attempts which might hinder it, or render it inconvenient, whether it be by any buildings, fisheries, stakes, floodgates and other hindrances, or by diverting the water from the course of the rivers, or otherwise. And it is likewise forbidden to throw into the rivers any filth, dirt, and other things, which might be of prejudice to the navigation, or cause other inconveniences." Dom. Pub. Law, 1. 8. 2. 8.

‘Although the sea and its shores, according to the principles of natural law, are things public and common to all, with liberty to every one to use them according to their destination, nevertheless it ought not to be permitted to some to enjoy them to the prejudice of others. Therefore, to prevent the inconveniences which would result from the liberty of using the public property, it is necessary that that liberty be limited by the public authority, as explained by Domat, &c.’

“It is likewise agreeable to the law of nature, that this liberty, which is common to all, being a continual occasion of quarrels, and of many bad consequences, should be regulated in some manner or other; and there could be no regulation more equitable, or more natural, than leaving it to the sovereign to provide against the said inconveniences. For as he is charged with the care of the public peace and tranquillity, as it is to him the care of the order and government of the society belongs, and it is only in his person that the right to the things which may belong in common to the public, of which he is the head, can reside; he, therefore, as head of the commonwealth, ought to have the dispensation and exercise of this right, that he may render it useful to the public. And it is on this foundation that the ordinances in France have regulated the use of navigation, and of fishing in the sea and in rivers.” [Dom. P. L. 1. 8. 2. 1. note.] Observe, that the work of Domat was published in 1689, and he died in 1696.” [Dict. Hist. par une société, verbo Domat.] We know then from him the state of the laws of France at a period a little anterior only to the establishment of the colony of Louisiana, and the transfer of the laws of France to that colony by its charter of 1712.

To the provisions which have been thus made by the Roman and French laws and transferred to Louisiana, no particular additions, by either the French or Spanish Government, have been produced on the present occasion. We know the fact, and thence infer the law, that from a very early period, the governors of that province were attentive especially to whatever respected the harbor of New Orleans which included the grounds now in question.

We see them forbidding all kinds of enclosures, or buildings on them, pulling down those built, publishing bans against future erections, forbidding earth for buildings and streets to be taken from the shore adjacent to the city, and assigning the beach Ste. Marie for that purpose, protecting all individuals in the equal use of it as a Quai, in which cares and superintendence the Cabildo, or city council, participated; and on the change of Government we see that council pass an ordinance declaratory of the limits of the port of New Orleans, and come forward in defence of the public rights, in the first moment of J. Gravier’s intrusion, by pulling down his enclosure; and when that intrusion, under the enterprise of Mr. Livingston, assumed a more serious aspect, they, as municipal guardians of the interests of the city, made an immediate appeal to the judiciary, the executive and legislative authorities. In addition, too, to the French laws for the protection of the bed and banks of the river, the territorial legislature, on the 15th of February, 1808, passed an act, reciting that, inasmuch as “the common safety of the inhabitants of the shores of the river Mississippi depends not only on the good condition of the levees or embankments, which contain the waters of the said river, but also on the strict observance of the laws concerning the police of rivers and their banks, which are in force in this territory, and by which it is forbidden to make on the shores of the rivers any work tending to alter the course of the waters, or increase their rapidity; or to make their navigation less convenient, or the anchorage less sure, [almost in the words of the Roman law, ne quid in flumine publico,] they, therefore, enact that no levee shall be made in front of those which exist at present, but on an inquisition by twelve inhabitants, proprietors of plantations situate on the banks of the river, convoked for that purpose by the parish judge; that no such levee, which, at the time of passing this act shall happen to be commenced in front of others already existing, shall be continued or finished, without a like authorization; that those who act in contravention shall be fined one hundred dollars for every offence in contravention, and pay the expenses of removing the nuisance, and costs of suit, and prohibiting the receiving compensation for the use of the shores, under a penalty of five hundred dollars.” A law of wonderful, not to say imprudent and dangerous, tenderness to the riparian proprietors, who are thus made the sole judges in cases where their own personal interests may be in direct opposition to the interests, and even the safety of the city, to which it gives no participation or control over the power which may devote it to destruction.

This act is partly declaratory of the existing law, and partly additional. Application was to the prætor under the Roman law [Dig. 43. 13. 6.] for permission to fortify a bank for the protection of a farm. He might refuse permission if injurious; but if he thought it would not be injurious, the party was to give security to make good all damages which should accrue within ten years; and this security was for the protection, not only of immediate neighbors, but of those also on the opposite bank trans flumen possidentibus. The Governor and Cabildo seem to have held this prætorian power in Louisiana, as well as that of demolishing what was unlawfully erected. This act of the legislature, without taking the power from the Governor and the city council, gives a concurrent power to the parish judge and a jury of twelve riparians: and, without dispensing with the security required by the existing law, adds penalties against contraveners.

And surely it is the territorial legislature, which not only has the power, but is under the urgent duty, of providing regulations for the government of this river and its inhabitants, regulations adapted to their present political relations, as well as to the peculiar character and circumstances of the river, and the adjacent country. Their power is amply given in the act of Congress of 1804, c. 38. § 11. “The laws in force in the said territory, at the commencement of this act, and not inconsistent with the provisions thereof, shall continue in force, until altered, modified, or repealed by the legislature. § 4. The Governor, by and with advice and consent of the said legislative council, or of a majority of them, shall have power to alter, modify, and repeal the laws which may be in force at the commencement of this act. Their legislative powers shall extend to all the rightful subjects of legislation;” with special exceptions, none of which take away the authority to legislate for the police of the river. And if ever there was a rightful subject of legislation, it is that of restraining greedy individuals from destroying the country by inundation.

And here it must be noted that Mr. Livingston’s works were arrested by the marshal and posse comitatus, by an order from the Secretary of State on the 25th of January, 1808; and on the 15th of the ensuing month, the legislature took the business into the hands of their own Government, by passing this act. From this moment it was in Mr. Livingston’s power to resume his works, by obtaining permission from the legal authority. The suspension of his works, therefore, by the General Government was only during these twenty-one days.

That Mr. Livingston’s works were clearly within the interdict of the Roman, the French, and the Spanish laws, which forbid the extending a mole into the water, constructing in it mills, floodgates, canals, towers, houses, cabins, fisheries, stakes, or other things which may obstruct or embarrass the use, will result from a brief recapitulation of their character and effects, drawn from the statement before given. For it is not to establish a mill which, though an intrusion, would be but a partial one; it is not to erect a temporary cabin or fisherman's hut, which would be a minor obstacle; but it is to take from the city and the nation what is their port in high water and at low tide their quay; to leave them not a spot where the upper craft can land or lie in safety; to turn the current of the river on the lower suburbs and plantations; to embank the whole of this extensive beach; to take off a fourth from the breadth of the river, and add equivalently to the rise of its waters; to demolish thus the whole levee, and sweep away the town and country in undistinguished ruin. And this not as a matter of theory alone, but of experience: the fact being known, that, since the embankment of the river on both sides through a space of three or four hundred miles, the floods are two or three feet higher than before that embankment. In fine, should they have time to save themselves from inundation by doubling the height and breadth of their levee, it is that they may fall victims to the pestilential diseases, which, under their fervid sun, will be generated by the putrefying mass with which he is to raise up the foundation between the old and new embankments. But has he entitled himself to attain these humane achievements, by fulfilling the preliminary requisites of the law? Has he attained the prætorian or proprætorian license, that of the Governor and city council, to erect this embankment? Has he given security for all the damages which shall be occasioned by his works for ten years? Has he even carried his case before a jury of twelve brother riparians? Or does he fear to trust it even to those having similar interests with himself, lest the virtuous feelings of compunction for the fate of their fellow-citizens should scout his proposition with honest indignation? And yet until this permission, every spadeful of earth he moved was an outrage on the law, and on the public peace and safety, which called for immediate suppression. What was to be done with such an aggressor? Shall we answer in the words of the imperial edict, on a similar occasion, that of breaking the banks of the Nile? Cod. 9. 38. "Flammis eo loco consumatur, in quo vetustatis reverentiam et propemodum ipsius imperii appeterit securitatem; conscitis et consortibus ejus deportatione constringendis, sic ut nunquam supplicandi, eis, vel recipiendi civitatem vel dignitatem, vel substantiam, licentia tribuatur." "Let him be consumed by the flames in that spot in which he violated the reverence of antiquity and the safety of the empire; let his accessories and accomplices be cut off by deportation from the possibility of supplicating forgiveness, or of being restored to country, dignities or possessions." Our horror is not the less because our laws are more lenient.

Such, then, were the facts, and such the state of the law, on which we were called, and repeatedly and urgently called, to decide: not, indeed, in all the fulness in which they have since appeared, but sufficiently manifested to show that an atrocious enterprise was in a course of execution, which, if not promptly arrested, would end in a desolation for which we could never answer. The question before us was, what is to be done? What remedy can we apply, authorized by the laws, and prompt enough to arrest the mischief?

Were the case within the jurisdiction of our own laws, its character and remedy would be obvious enough. A navigable river is a highway, along which all are free to pass. And as the obstructing a highway on the land, by ditches or hedges, or logs across it, or erecting a gate across it, is a common nuisance, so to weaken injuriously the current of a river by drawing off a part of its water, to obstruct it by moles, dikes, viers, piles or otherwise, is a common nuisance; and all authorities agree, that every one is allowed to remove or destroy a common nuisance. [Hawkins, P. C. 1. 75. 12.] The marshal and posse, instead of pleading the order from the Secretary of State, have a right to say "we did this as citizens, and the law is our authority;" and it would really be singular if, what every man may, or may not do at his pleasure, the magistrate who is sworn to see the law executed, and is charged with the care of the public property and rights, is alone prohibited from doing; or if his order should vitiate an act, which without it would have been lawful, or which he might have executed in person. It would be equally singular, and equally absurd, that the law should punish the magistrate for hindering Mr. Livingston from doing what itself had forbidden and would punish, and reward him with damages for having been restrained from what they had forbidden him to do. The law makes it a duty in a bystander to lay hands on a man who is beating another in the street, and to take him off. And yet it is proposed that the same law shall punish him for taking off one who was engaged not in beating a single individual, but in drowning a whole city and country. This is not our law; it is not the law of reason; and I am persuaded it is no part of a system emphatically called ratio scripta. If it is, let the law be produced. Until it is, we hold every man authorized to stay a wrong-doer in the commission of a wrong, in which himself and all others are interested.

2. By nature's law, every man has a right to seize and retake by force, his own property, taken from him by another, by force or fraud. Nor is this natural right among the first which is taken into the hands of regular Government, after it is instituted. It was long retained by our ancestors. It was a part of their common law, laid down in their books, recognised by all the authorities, and regulated as to certain circumstances of practice. Lambard, in his Eirenarcha, b. 2. c. 4. says, "It seemeth that (before the troublesome reign of King Richard the Second,) the common law permitted any person (which had good right or title to enter into any land,) to win the possession by force, if otherwise he could not have obtained it. For a man may see, (in Britton fo. 115.) that a certain respite of time was given to the disseisee, (according to his distance and absence,) in which it was lawful for him to gather force, arms, and his friends, and to throw the disseisor out of his wrongful possession." Hawkins in his Pleas of the Crown, and all the abridgements and digests of the law say the same: but, not to take it at second hand, we will recur to the earliest authorities, written while it was yet the law of the land. Fleta, in the time of Edward I. writes—

"Si facta fuerit disseisina, primum et principale competit remedium quod ille qui ita disseisitus est, per se si possit, vel sumptus viribus, vel resumptis (dum tamen sine aliquo intervallo, flagrante disseisina et maleficio) rejiciat spoliantem. Quem si nullo modo expellere possit, ad superioris auxilium erit recurrendum. Si autem verus possessor absens fuerit, tunc locorum distantia distinguere oportebit, secundum quod fuerit propè vel longè, quo tempore, viz. scire potuit disseisina esse factam, ut sic, allocatis ei rationabilibus dilationibus, primo die cum venerit, statim suum dejiciat disseisitorem; qui, si primo die, non possit, in crastino, vel die tertio, vel ulterius; dum tamen sine fictitia, hoc facere poterit, vires sibi resumendo, arma colligendo, auxiliumque amicorum convocando." Fleta L. 4. c. 2. And Bracton l. 4. c. 6. in almost totidem verbis; and Britton, "le premier remède pour disseisine est al disseisi de recoiller amys et force, et sauns delay faire (après ceo que il le purra saver) engetter les disseisours." Britton c. 44.

"If a disseisin has been committed, a first and principal remedy lies, that he who has been so disseised, by himself, if he can, or taking force, and retaking, (provided it be without any interval, the disseisin and wrong being yet flagrant,) may eject the spoliator; whom, if he can by no means expel, resort is to be had to the assistance of a superior. But, if the rightful possessor were absent, then regard must be had to the distance of the places, according as it was near or far off, at what time, for instance, he could know that a disseisin had been committed, that so reasonable delays being allowed him, on the first day when he comes, he may immediately eject the disseisor, which, if he cannot do on the first day, he may on the morrow, or third day, or later; provided, however, he do it without false pretences, by taking to himself force, collecting arms, and calling in the aid of his friends." And Bracton l. 4. c. 6. almost in the same words, and Britton, says, "The first remedy for disseisin is for the disseisee to collect his friends and force, and without delay (after he may know of it,) to eject the disseisors."

This right, as to real property, was first restrained in England by a statute of the 5 R. 2. c. 7. which forbade entry into lands with strong hand; and another of the same reign, 15 R. 2. c. 2. authorized immediate restitution to the wrong-doer, put out by forcible entry. And even at this day, in an action of trespass, for an entry, vi et armis, if the defendant makes good title, he is maintained in his possession, and the plaintiff recovers no damages for the force. [Lambard 2. 4. Hawk. P. C. 1. 64. 3.] And in like manner, the natural right of recaption by force still exists as to personal goods, and the validity of their recaption. Hawk. 1. 64. 1. Kelway

92. is express. Blackstone, indeed, [3. 1. 2.] limits the right of recaption to a peaceable one, not amounting to a breach of the peace; meaning, I presume, that the recaptor by force may be punished for the breach of the peace. So may the defendant in trespass for an entry vi et armis. Yet in an action of detinue for the personal thing retaken by force, the first wrong-doer cannot recover it, nor damages for the recaption, any more than in the case of trespass for lands. So that to this day the law supports the right of recaption as between the parties, although it will punish the public offence of a breach of the peace.

When this natural right was first restrained among the Romans I am not versed enough in their laws to say. It was not by the laws of the twelve tables, which continued long their only laws. From the expression of the Institute "divalibus constitutionibus," I should infer it was first restrained by some of the Emperors, predecessors of Justinian. L. 4. t. 2. § 2.

'Divalibus constitutionibus prospectum est, ut nemini liceat vi rapere vel rem mobilem, vel se moventum licet suam eandem rem existinat. Quod non solum in mobilibus rebus, quæ rapi possunt, constitutiones obtinere censuerunt, sed etiam in invasionibus, quæ circa res soli fiunt.'

'By the imperial constitutions it is provided that no one shall take by force a thing either movable or moving, although he considers it as his own. Which the constitutions have ordained to take place, not only in movable things, which may be taken, but also in intrusions which are made into lands.'

But I believe that no nation has ever yet restrained itself in the exercise of this natural right of reseising its own possessions, or bound up its own hands in the manacles and carvils of litigation. It takes possession of its own at short hand, and gives to the private claimant a specified mode of preferring his claim. There are cases, of particular circumstance, where the sovereign, as by the English law, must institute a previous inquest: but in general cases, as the present, he enters at once on what belongs to his nation. This is the law of England. "Whenever the King's [i. e. the nation's] title appears of record, or a possession in law be cast upon him by descent, escheat, &c., he may enter without an office found: for if his title appear any way of record, it is as good as if it were found by office; and if any one enter on him, even before his entry made, he is an intruder; he cannot gain any freehold in the land, nor does he put the King to an assize or ejectment, or take away his right of entry: for he cannot be disseised but by record. Stamford. Prærogativa Regis, 56. 57. Com. Dig. Prærog. D. 71, the substance of the authorities cited.

What are the prescriptions of the Roman law in this case I do not know, nor are they material, but inasmuch as they may be the law of the case in Louisiana. A Spanish law before cited, (p. 94.) forbidding erections on the beds, or on the banks of rivers, says expressly, "si alguno lo ficesse deber ser deribido." "If any one does it, it is to be destroyed." And the constant practice of the Governors of demolishing such erections was the best evidence of the law we could obtain. Not skilled in their laws ourselves, we had certainly a right to consider the Governor and Cabildo as competent expositors of them, and as acting under their justification and prescription. We might reasonably think ourselves safe in their opinions of their own law. In fact, if the immediate entry was permitted by the English law and our own, we thought we might, a fortiori, conclude it permitted by those of the province. We had before us too the example of many of the States, and of the General Government itself, which have never hesitated to remove by force the squatters and intruders on the public lands. Indeed, if the nation were put to an action against every squatter for the recovery of their lands, we should only have lawsuits, not lands, for sale. While troops are on parade, should intruders take possession of their barracks, and shut the doors, are they to remain in the open air till an action, or even a writ of forcible entry, replace them in their quarters? If, in the interval of a daily adjournment, intruders take possession of the Capitol, may not Congress take their seats again till an inquisition and posse shall reintroduce them? Let him who can draw a line between these cases. The correct doctrine is, that so long as the nation holds lands in its own possession, so long they are under the jurisdiction of no court, but by special provision. The United States cannot be sued. The nation, by its immediate representatives, administers justice itself to all who have claims on its public property. Hence, the numerous petitions which occupy so much of every session of Congress in cases which have not been confided to the courts. But when once they have granted the lands to individuals, then the jurisdiction of the courts over them commences. They fall then into the common mass of matter justiciable before the courts. If the public has granted lands to B, which were the legal property of A, A may bring his action against B, and the courts are competent to do him justice. The moment B attempts to take possession of A's lands, the writ of forcible entry, the action of trespass or ejectment, and the chancery process, furnish him a choice of remedies. The holders of property, therefore, are safe against individuals, by the law; and they are safe against the nation, by its own justice: and all the alarm which some have endeavored to excite on this subject has been merely ad captandum populum. As if the people would not be safe in their own hands, or in those of their representatives; or safer in the hands of irresponsible judges, than of persons elected by themselves annually or biennially. The truth is, no injury can be done to any man by another acting either in his own or a public character, which may not be redressed by application to the proper organ to which that portion of the administration of justice has been assigned.

3. Our third, and conclusive remedy, was that prescribed by the act of Congress of 1807, c. 91, to prevent settlements on lands ceded to the United States. The Executive had been indulgent, perhaps remiss, in not removing squatters from the public lands, under the general principles of law before explained and habitually acted on. This act, therefore, was a recent call on them to a more vigilant performance of their duty, in the special district of country lately ceded to them by France, with some modifications of its exercise on previous settlers. The act has two distinct classes of intruders in view. 1. Those who, before the passing of the act, had possessed themselves of the lands, and were actually resident on them at the time of passing it; and 2. Those who should take possession after the passage of the act. 1. With respect to the class of intruders before the passage of the act, the second section provides that, on renouncing all claim, they may obtain from the register or recorder permission to remain on the lands, extending their occupation to three hundred and twenty acres, [§ 3.] which permissions are to be recorded; but [§ 4.] those not obtaining permission are, on three months' notice, to be removed by the marshal. But Mr. Livingston was much too wise to qualify himself for the benefit of these sections by an actual residence on the Batture. His part of the act, therefore, is the first section which enacts that "if any person shall take possession of any lands ceded to the United States by treaty, he shall forfeit all right to them, if any he hath; and it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to direct the marshal, or the military, to remove him from the lands: providing, however, that this removal shall not affect his claim until the commissioners shall have made their reports, and Congress decided thereon." The tribunal to which the Legislature had specially delegated a power to take cognizance of the claims on the public lands in Orleans, and to inform them what lands were clear of claim, and free to be granted to our citizens, was a Board of Commissioners: and the plain words and scope of the law were, to keep all claims and prior possessions in statu quo, until they could be investigated by these commissioners, reported and decided on by Congress. And this act indulgently provides, that the right of a person removed by the Executive for irregularly taking possession of lands which he thought his own, should not be effected by this removal, but that he might still lay his claim before the commissioners, and Congress would decide on it. Mr. Livingston's claim was clearly within the purview of the law. It was of lands "ceded to the United States by treaty," and he had "taken possession of them after the passage of the act." For the decree of the court was not till May 23, 1807, and his possession was subsequent to that. If he should say, as his counsel seems to intimate, [opinion lxvii.] that this was a remitter to him of the ancient possession of Bertrand Gravier, I answer that it was no remitter against any one, because the case was coram non judice, as will be shown, and still less against the United States who were no parties to the suit: and if it had been a remitter, then I should have observed that the order has been executed on a person not comprehended in it; for it was expressly restrained to possessions taken after the 3d of March, 1807. In that case the marshal must justify himself, not under the order, but his personal right to remove a nuisance. But investigations, reports, and decisions of Congress were dangerous. It was safer to be his own judge, to seize boldly, and put the public on the defensive. He seizes the ground he claims, and refers his title to no competent tribunal. When ousted, according to the injunctions of the statute, and repossession taken on behalf of the United States he passes by the preparatory tribunal of the commissioners, and endeavors to obtain a decision on his case by Congress in the first instance: in this, too, he has been disappointed. Congress have maintained the ground taken under the statute; and Mr. Livingston now demands the value of the lands from the magistrate on whom devolved the duty of executing the statute.

Taking now a brief review of the whole ground we have gone over, we may judge of the correctness of the decision of the cabinet, as to their duty in this case. I trust it will appear to every candid and unbiassed mind, that they were not mistaken in believing—

That the customs of Paris, the ordinances of the French Government, the Roman law as a supplement to both, with the special acts of the Spanish and American Legislatures, composed that system of law which was to govern their proceedings.

That, were this a case of alluvion, the French law gives to the sovereign in all cases, and the Roman law to the private holder of rural possessions only.

That Bertrand Gravier had converted his plantation into a faubourg and appendage of the city of New Orleans, with the previous sanction of the Spanish Government, according to his own declarations; by which those claiming under him are as much bound, as if made by themselves; and certainly by its subsequent formal recognitions and confirmations, which acted retrospectively; and the character of the ground being thus changed from a rural to an urban possession, the Roman law of alluvion does not act on it.

That even had his ground retained its rural character, and admitting that the grant to him 'face au fleuve' conveyed the lands to the water's edge, his sales, 'face au fleuve' conveyed to his purchasers the same right which the same terms had brought to him, and they, and not the plaintiff, now hold the rights of Bertrand Gravier, whatever they were.

That John Gravier having elected to take the estate as a purchaser by inventory and appraisement, the Batture, if Bertrand's, was not in that inventory, nor consequently purchased by John Gravier.

That the deed from him to De la Bigarre was fraudulent and void, as well by the lex loci, as on the face of the transaction.

That the decision of the court in his favor could in no wise concern the United States, who were neither parties to the suit, nor amenable to the jurisdiction.

And consequently, that under all these views of the French law, the Roman law, the conveyances 'face au fleuve,' the purchase by inventory, and the fraudulency of the deed to Bigarre, the plaintiff's claim is totally unfounded. And, if void by any one of them, it is as good as if void by every one.

But it has appeared further that the Batture had not a single characteristic of alluvion.

That the bank of a river is only what is above the high-water-mark.

That all below that mark is bed, or alveus, of which the Batture is that portion between the high-water and low-water-mark, which we call the beach.

That it serves, as other beaches do, for a port while covered, and quay uncovered, and is the only port in the vicinity of the city which river craft can use.

That as a part of the bed of the river, it is purely public property.

That it is not lawful for an individual to erect, on either the bed or bank of a river, any works which may affect the convenience of navigation of the harbor or quay, or endanger adjacent proprietors on either side of the river.

That though it is permissible to guard our own grounds against the current of the river, yet, so only as to be consistent with the convenience and safety of others.

That of this the legal magistrates are to be judges in the first instance; but even their errors are to be guarded against by an indemnification for all damages which shall actually accrue to individuals within a given time.

That Mr. Livingston's works, in a single flood, had given alarming extent, both in breadth and height, to the Batture; had turned the efforts of the river against the lower suburbs and habitations not before exposed to them; that they would deprive the public of what was their quay in low water, and harbor in times of flood; that by narrowing the river one-fourth, it must raise it in equivalent proportion, to discharge its waters: that this would sweep away the levee, city, and country, or quadruple the bulk of the levee, and the increased danger to which that would expose it: and, even then, would infect the city, by the putridity of the new congestions, with pestilential diseases, to which its climate is already too much predisposed.

That Mr. Livingston was doing all this of his own authority, without asking permission from the public magistrate, or giving any security for the indemnity of injured citizens.

That under the pressure of these dangers, the Executive of the nation was called on to do his duty, and to extend the protection of the law to those against whose safety these outrages were directed.

And that the authorities given by the laws, 1st. for preventing obstructions in the beds or banks of rivers; 2d. For reseizing public property intruded on; and 3d. For removing intruders from it by force, were adequate to the object, if promptly interposed.

On duly weighing the information before us, which, though not as ample as has since been received, was abundantly sufficient to satisfy us of the facts, and has been confirmed by all subsequent testimony, we were all unanimously of opinion, that we were authorized, and in duty bound, without delay, to arrest the aggressions of Mr. Livingston on the public rights, and on the peace and safety of the city of New Orleans, and that orders should be immediately despatched for that purpose, restrained to intruders since the passage of the act of March 3. The Secretary of State accordingly wrote the letter of November 30 to the Governor, covering instructions for the marshal to remove immediately, by the civil power, any persons from the Batture Ste. Marie, who had taken possession of it since the 3d of March, and authorizing the Governor, if necessary, to use military force; for which purpose a letter of the same date was written by the Secretary at War to the commanding officer at New Orleans. This force, however, was not called on. The instructions to the marshal were delivered to him about 9 o'clock in the morning of the 25th of January, 1808. [D'Orgenoy's Let. to the Governor.] He immediately went to the beach, and ordered off Mr. Livingston's laborers. They obeyed; but soon after returned. On being ordered off a second time, the principal person told him that he was commanded by Mr. Livingston not to give up the Batture until an adequate armed force should compel him. And, in the mean time, Mr. Livingston had procured from a single judge of the Superior Court of the territory an order, purporting to be an injunction, forbidding the marshal to disturb Edward Livingston in his possession of the Batture, under pain of a contempt of court. The marshal, placed between contradictory orders, of the National Government as to the property of the nation, and a territorial judge without jurisdiction over it, obeyed the former, collected a posse comitatus, ordered off the laborers again, who peaceably retired; and no further attempts were afterwards made to recommence the work.

I have said that the marshal received an order purporting to be an injunction: an authoritative injunction it could not be, because that is a chancery process, and no chancery jurisdiction has been given by any law to the Superior Court of that territory. Its judges were first established by the act of Congress of 1804, c. 38, with commissions for four years, and certain specified powers, which it is unnecessary to state, because an act of March 2 of the next year, c. 83, established in that territory "a Government in all respects similar to that exercised in the Mississippi territory;" which Government had been established by an act of 1798, c. 5. "in all respects similar to that in the territory northwest of the Ohio." So that we are to find all their powers in the ordinance of 1787, for the Northwestern Territory, in which are the following words: "There shall be appointed a court, to consist of three judges, any two of whom to form a court, who shall have a common law jurisdiction; and their commissions shall continue in force during good behavior." And again: "The inhabitants of the said territory shall always be entitled to the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, and of the trial by jury." New commissions were accordingly given to the judges appointed under the first law; and, instead of their former powers, they were now to have a common law jurisdiction. By these words, certainly no chancery jurisdiction was given them; every one knows that common law jurisdiction is a technical term, used in contradistinction to a chancery jurisdiction, and exclusive of that, the common law ending where the chancery begins. The one authority is here given, and therefore they have it; the other is not given, and therefore they have it not; they have no authority but that which is given by the legislature. If they have not chancery powers, then, by this law, there remains but one other source from which they can legally derive it. The act of 1804, before mentioned, §11, says, "The laws in force in the said territory, at the commencement of this act, and not inconsistent with the provisions thereof, shall continue in force until altered, modified, or repealed by the legislature." We have seen that the laws in force were the French and Roman, with perhaps some occasional Spanish regulations. It being perfectly understood that these were not meant to be included in the change, it follows, that the term common law, when applied to this territory, must be equivalent to the common law of that land, or the law of the land. Was, then, the establishment of the French and Roman laws an establishment of the chancery system of law? Will it be said, that the Roman and chancery laws, for instance, are the same? That the civil law and the chancery are synonymous terms, both meaning the same system? Nobody will say that. The system of chancery law is partly concurrent, but chiefly supplementary and corrective of that of the common law. It sometimes corrects the harshness of the latter, where that includes what was not intended. It gives remedies in certain cases where that gave none, and more perfect remedies in other cases. It is adapted to the common law as one part of an indenture is to its counterpart. It is formed to tally with that in all its prominences and recesses, its asperities and defects, and with no other body of law on earth. It consists of a set of rules and maxims, modified by the English chancellors, through a course of several centuries, derived from no foreign model, but contrived to reduce specifically the principles of common law to those of justice. The Roman law has something similar in its jus prætorium, where the discretion of the prætor was permitted to mollify and correct the harshness of the leges scriptæ. But to apply the jus prætorium to our common law, or our chancery to the leges scriptæ of the Romans, would be to apply to one thing the tally of another, or to mismatch the parts of different machines, so as to render them inconsistent and impracticable. Our chancery system is as different from the civil as from the common law. All systems of law, indeed, profess to be founded on the principles of justice; but the superstructures erected are totally distinct. The chancery, then, being a system clearly distinct from that of the French and Roman laws, it cannot be said that the Legislature of the United States, by establishing the French and Roman laws in Orleans, established there the chancery system. It will not be pretended that the process of subpoena, used in the present case, and the sole and peculiar original process of chancery, is a civil law process. It is known to have been the invention of Waltham chancery of Richard II., founded on the statute of Westminster the 2d. c. 24, giving writs in consimili casu.

Might it be urged, (for I am really at a loss to conjecture on what grounds this power has been assumed,) that possessing, under the act of 1804, the powers of the chancery combined with those of the French and Roman laws, the subsequent act which gave them a common law jurisdiction, did not take away the others? In totidem verbis it did not, but in effect it did completely, by changing the Government into one in all respects similar to that in the Mississippi territory, where there was no chancery jurisdiction. Moreover, there is not a word in the act of 1804 which gives them chancery jurisdiction. It says, "they shall have jurisdiction in all criminal cases, and original and appellate jurisdiction in all civil cases of the value of one hundred dollars, and the laws in force at the commencement of this act shall continue in force." Here, then, is their jurisdiction, and the particular system of law according to which they are to exercise it; and the chancery made no part of that system. This argument, too, would suppose, that to the French, the Roman, the Spanish, and the chancery laws, the common law was also added. This would be an extraordinary spectacle indeed, and the imputation of such an intention would be an insult on the legislature. Their laws have always some rational object in view; and are so to be construed, as to produce order and justice. But, this construction, establishing so many systems, and these inconsistent and contradictory, would produce anarchy and chaos, and a dissolution of all law, of all rights of person or property. And what would be the consequences of carrying on a system of chancery concurrent with the French and Roman laws? A case is brought, for instance, into their court of chancery; I ask the honorable judges, is the law of chancery, in this case, the same as the civil law? If the same, what need of calling in the system of chancery? If different, will you decide against the law established by the Legislature? If you carry on two systems, the one of which, in any case, gives a right to A, and the other to B, the suitor who covets his neighbor's property needs only choose that court, the rules of which will give it to him. Thus all rights will be set afloat between two opposite systems. The wisdom of the legislature, therefore, has been as sound in not giving a chancery jurisdiction concurrently with the civil law, as the judges have been ill-advised in usurping it. And have they adverted to the national feelings, when they have ventured, on their own authority, to abolish the trial by jury, pledged by the ordinance to the inhabitants forever? Whoever wishes to take from his opponent the benefit of this trial, has only to bring his suit in the court of chancery. In this very case, on which the well-being of a great city is suspended, no jury was called in. The judges took upon themselves to decide both fact and law; aware, at the same time, that a jury could not have been found in Orleans, which would not have given a contrary decision. I shall not ascribe either favoritism or intentional wrong to them; but they ought not to be surprised if those whose interests and safety are so much jeopardised by this shuffle of the judges into the place of the jury. It is much regretted that these respectable judges have set such an example of acting against law. It will be more regretted, if they do not, by the spontaneous exertion of their own good sense and self-denial, tread back their steps, and perceive that there is more honor and magnanimity in correcting than persevering in an error. They had before them, too, the example of their neighbors of the Mississippi territory, whose Government was expressly made the model of theirs. Their judges, like themselves, entitled to common law jurisdiction only, and sensible it needed the mollifying hand of the chancery, did not think the assumption of it within their competence. The territorial legislature, therefore, invested them with the jurisdiction. The judiciary power of the Indiana territory, modelled by the same ordinance, was enlarged in like manner by the local legislature. And yet the Orleans territory least of all needed the aid of a chancery, as possessing already a corresponding corrective, well adapted to the body of their law, to which the system of chancery was entirely inapplicable.

Although I had before noted, (page 80,) that the decree of this court was a nullity as to the United States, 1st. Because they were not a party, nor amenable to their tribunal: 2d. Because, also, it was on a subject over which they had no jurisdiction; I have thought it useful to prove it a nullity: 3d. Because the result of a process, and of course of pleading and trial, belonged to a court whose powers they do not possess by law, in which course of action, the law considers them as mere private persons, entitled to the obedience of no one. I have done this, the rather, because it has been seized as a ground of censure on the executive, as violating the sanctuary of the judicial department, and of inculcating the marshal, who, placed between two conflicting authorities, had to decide which was legitimate, and decided correctly, as I trust appears, in obeying that which ordered him to remove the plaintiff from an usurped possession.

The territorial legislature, three weeks after, took up the subject, and passed an act prescribing in what manner riparian proprietors should proceed who wished to make new embankments in advance of those existing. This gave to Mr. Livingston an easy mode of applying for permission to resume his enterprise; and, had he obtained a regular permission, certainly it would have been duly respected by the national Executive. On the 1st of March, I received from Governor Claiborne a letter of January 29, informing me of the execution of our orders, and covering a vote of thanks from the Legislative Council and House of Representatives of Orleans, for our interposition; and, on the seventh of the same month, I laid the case before Congress by the following message:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the U. S.:

In the city of New Orleans, and adjacent to it, are sundry parcels of ground, some of them with buildings and other improvements on them, which it is my duty to present to the attention of the Legislature. The title to these grounds appears to have been retained in the former sovereigns of the province of Louisiana, as public fiduciaries, and for the purposes of the province. Some of them were used for the residence of the Governor, for public offices, hospitals, barracks, magazines, fortifications, levees, &c.; others for the town-house, schools, markets, landings, and other purposes of the city of New Orleans. Some were held by religious corporations or persons; others seem to have been reserved for future disposition.

To these must be added a parcel called the Batture, which requires more particular description. It is understood to have been a shoal, or elevation of the bottom of the river adjacent to the bank of the suburbs of Ste. Marie, produced by the successive depositions of mud during the annual inundations of the river, and covered with water only during those inundations. At all other seasons it has been used by the city immemorially to furnish earth for raising their streets and court-yards, for mortar, and other necessary purposes, and as a landing or quay, for unloading firewood, lumber, and other articles brought by water. This having lately been claimed by a private individual, the city opposed the claim on a supposed legal title in itself: but it has been adjudged that the legal title was not in the city. It is, however, alleged that that title, originally in the former sovereigns, was never parted with by them, but was retained by them for the uses of the city and province, and, consequently, has now passed over to the United States. Until this question can be decided under legislative authority, measures have been taken according to law to prevent any change in the state of things, and to keep the grounds clear of intruders. The settlement of title; the appropriation of the ground and improvements formerly occupied for provincial purposes to the same; or such other objects as may be better suited to present circumstances; the confirmation of the uses in other parcels to such bodies, corporate or private, as may of right, or on other reasonable considerations, expect them, are matters now submitted to the determination of the Legislature. The papers and plans now transmitted will give them such information on the subjects as I possess, and, being mostly originals, I must request that they may be communicated from the one to the other House, to answer the purposes of both.

TH: JEFFERSON.

MARCH 7, 1803.

This removal of the case before Congress closed the official duties of the Executive and his interference respecting these grounds, except that the Attorney of the United States for the district of Orleans having given written permission to the inhabitants to use the Batture as before; this, on the application of Mr. Livingston, was directed to be withdrawn by a letter from the Secretary of State, of October 5, 1803. This was correct. It placed the inhabitants exactly on their former footing, without either permission or prohibition on the part of the National Government.

The possession, the only charge of the Executive, was now cleared from intrusion, and restored to its former condition; and the question of title committed to the Legislature, the only authority competent to its decision. If they considered the ground taken by the Executive as incorrect, their vote or their reference of the case to commissioners would correct it: and as to damages, if any could justly be claimed, they were due, as in other cases, not from the judge who decides, but the party which, without right, receives the intermediate profits. If, on the other hand, Congress should deem the public right too palpable, (as to me it clearly appears,) and the claim of the plaintiff too frivolous to occupy their time, they would of course pass it by. And certainly they might as properly be urged to waste their time in questioning whether the beds of the Potomac, the Delaware, or the Hudson, were public or private property, as that of the Mississippi. Their refusing to act on this claim, therefore, for five successive sessions, though constantly solicited, and their holding so long the ground taken by the Executive, is an expression of their sense that the measure has been correct.

I have gone with some detail into the question of the plaintiff's right, because, however confident of indulgence in the case of an honest error, I believed it would be more satisfactory to show that, in the exercise of the discretionary power entrusted to me by Congress, a sound discretion had been used, no act of oppression had been exercised, no error committed, and, consequently, no wrong done to the plaintiff. I have no pretensions to exemption from error. In a long course of public duties I must have committed many. And I have reason to be thankful that, passing over these, an act of duty has been selected as a subject of complaint, which the delusions of self-interest alone could have classed among them, and in which, were there error, it has been hallowed by the benedictions of an entire province, an interesting member of our national family, threatened with destruction by the bold enterprise of one individual. If this has been defeated and they rescued, good will have been done, and with good intentions. Our constitution has wisely distributed the administration of the Government into three distinct and independent departments. To each of these it belongs to administer law within its separate jurisdiction. The Judiciary in cases of meum and tuum, and of public crimes; the Executive, as to laws executive in their nature; the Legislature, in various cases which belong to itself, and in the important function of amending and adding to the system. Perfection in wisdom, as well as in integrity, is neither required nor expected in these agents. It belongs not to man. Were the judge who, deluded by sophistry, takes the life of an innocent man, to repay it with his own; were he to replace with his own fortune that which his judgment has taken from another, under the beguilement of false deductions; were the Executive, in the vast mass of concerns of first magnitude which he must direct, to place his whole fortune on the hazard of every opinion; were the members of the Legislature to make good from their private substance every law productive of public or private injury; in short, were every man engaged in rendering service to the public bound in his body and goods to indemnification for all his errors, we must commit our public affairs to the paupers of the nation, to the sweepings of hospitals and poor-houses, who, having nothing to lose, would have nothing to risk. The wise know their weakness too well to assume infallibility: and he who knows most knows best how little he knows. The vine and the fig-tree must withdraw, and the brier and bramble assume their places. But this is not the spirit of our law. It expects not impossibilities. It has consecrated the principle that its servants are not answerable for honest error of judgment. [1. Ro. abr. 92; 2 Jones 13; 1 Salk. 397.] He who has done his duty honestly, and according to his best skill and judgment, stands acquitted before God and man. If, indeed, a judge goes against law so grossly, so palpably, as no imputable degree of folly can account for, and nothing but corruption, malice, or wilful wrong can explain, and especially if circumstances prove such motives, he may be punished for the corruption, the malice, the wilful wrong, but not for the error: nor is he liable to action by the party grieved. And our form of Government, constituting its respective functionaries judges of the law which is to guide their decisions, places all within the same reason, under the safeguard of the same rule. That in deciding and acting under the law in the present case, the plaintiff, who may think there was error, does not himself believe there was corruption or malice, I am confident. What! was it my malice or corruption which prompted the Governors and Cabildoes to keep these grounds clear of intrusion? Did my malice and corruption excite the people to rise and stay the parricide hand uplifted to destroy their city, or the grand jury to present this violator of their laws? Was it my malice and corruption which penned the opinion of the Attorney General, and drew from him a confirmation after two years of further consideration, and when I was retired from all public office? Was it my malice or corruption which dictated the unanimous advice of the heads of Departments when officially called on for consultation and advice? Was it my malice and corruption which procured the immediate thanks of the two Houses of the Legislature of the territory of Orleans, and a renewal of the same thanks for the same interference in their late vote of February last? Has it been my malice and corruption which has induced the National Legislature through five successive sessions to be deaf to the doleful Jeremiahs of the plaintiff on his removal from his estate at New Orleans? Have all these opinions, then, been honest, and mine alone malicious and corrupt? Or has there been a general combination of all the public functionaries, Spanish, French, and American, to oppress Mr. Livingston? No. They have done their duties, and his declaration is a libel on all these functionaries. His counsel, indeed, has discovered [Opinions lxxiv.] that we should have had legal inquests taken, writs of inquiry formed, prosecutions for penalties, with all the &c. of the law. That is, that we should be playing push-pin with judges and lawyers, while Mr. Livingston was working double tides to drown the city. If a functionary of the highest trust, acting under every sanction which the constitution has provided for his aid and guide, and with the approbation expressed or implied of its highest councils, still acts on his own peril, the honors and offices of his country would be but snares to ruin him. It is not for me to inquire into the motives of the plaintiff in this action. I know that his understanding is of an order much too high to let him believe that he is to recover the value of the Batture from me. To what indirect object he may squint with one eye, while the other looks at me, I do not pretend to say. But I do say, that if human reason is not mere illusion, and law a labyrinth without a clew, no error has been committed: and, recurring to the tenor of a long life of public service, against the charges of malice and corruption, I stand conscious and erect.

LAND IN THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS, CALLED THE BATTURE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 1, 1810.

Whereas the right of property to the Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary, of New Orleans, is about to be made a question before the honorable the Congress of the United States, and that, on a subject so interesting to the inhabitants of the Territory of Orleans, it is proper that the Legislative Council and House of Representatives should express their sentiments, and more especially that the same may serve as instructions to the delegate from this Territory to the Congress of the United States—

Therefore resolved by the Legislative Council and House of Representatives of the Territory of Orleans, That, in their opinion, "the Batture in front to the suburb St. Mary is a shoal or elevation of the bottom of the Mississippi, produced by the successive deposite of mud during the annual rise of the river."

Resolved, That the Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary, being covered with water, generally, from five to six months in each year, and, during that time, immemorially used as a great highway, can only be considered a part of the bed of the Mississippi.

Resolved, That the Batture in front of the suburb St. Mary, when not covered by the Mississippi, which is generally from five to six months in each year, having been used "by the city of New Orleans immemorially to furnish earth for raising their streets and court-yards, for mortar, and other necessary purposes, and as a landing or quay, for unloading fire-wood, lumber, and other articles brought by water," ought in justice to continue subject to the same uses.

Resolved, further, as the opinion of the Legislative Council and House of Representatives, That the embanking of the Batture, in front of the suburb St. Mary, would tend to change the channel of the Mississippi in front of New Orleans, and prove of lasting injury to that port, and that the possession of the said Batture by an individual would subject the citizens of New Orleans, and all the citizens of the United States trading to New Orleans, to the payment of tribute, for a use which the laws of nature, and immemorial custom, and the sanction of the former Spanish Government of Louisiana, secured to them.

Resolved, That these resolutions be signed by the President of the Legislative Council and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and be by them transmitted to Julian Poydras, Esquire, the delegate from the territory of Orleans to the Congress of the United States.

MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS FRAUDULENTLY OBTAINED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 13, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW made the following report :

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Piercy, widow of Henry Piercy, deceased, and a report of the Secretary of War thereon, have considered the subject, and submitted the following report:

That it appears that Henry Piercy, by his services as a lieutenant during the Revolutionary war, was entitled to a bounty of two hundred acres of land; that, in the year 1794, a warrant was issued therefor to the said Piercy, but the said warrant was taken from the War Office (as appears by the Secretary's report) in a felonious manner by some person whose name does not appear. It was again returned into the Register of the Treasury's office on the 11th of February, 1800, and located with other warrants upon section No. 3, township 8, range 13, in the name of Paul Bentalow. It appears from the documents accompanying the petition, that the said Piercy was never in possession of the warrant, or the land to which it gave title.

It is the opinion of the committee that no legislative interference is necessary to enable the petitioner to reclaim the property. The public records designate the section of land on which the warrant was located. The unauthorized and fraudulent act of taking from the public office a land-warrant cannot invest the felon with a title, or in any way impair or divest the legal proprietor of the right of property. It only remains for the petitioner to resort to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain possession of her property. To direct a warrant to be issued for other lands, and leave the illegal possessor in the enjoyment of the property, would be as contrary to the principles of justice as it is to the former decisions of the House in cases of a like nature. The committee respectfully submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw her petition.

APPLICATION TO LOCATE A LAND WARRANT ISSUED BY THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 15, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John Potter, of the State of North Carolina, made the following report :

That it appears by the petition and accompanying documents, that Robert Munford, in consequence of his services as a chaplain in the war of 1755, and agreeably to the proclamation of His Britannic Majesty of 1763, obtained a warrant from Lord Dunmore, Governor of the then colony of Virginia, for three thousand acres of land, which warrant Munford assigned to John Potter, the petitioner. The warrant was located in the year 1780, on land in the western part of Virginia, (now in the State of Kentucky,) but, by mistake or accident, the survey was not returned to the proper office, and the location was lost. In 1790, the petitioner caused a relocation of his warrant to be made, but afterwards discovered the land was covered by other claims; consequently, he failed to complete his title.

The subsequent formation of the state of Kentucky, and the restrictive acts of her Legislature, prevented the location of the warrant within the boundaries of that State; and the petitioner has been informed that there is no vacant land in the State of Virginia on which his warrant can be located. He alleges that there is a sufficiency of land in the tract reserved and set apart for satisfying military claims, northwest of the river Ohio, to satisfy his claim, and every other purpose intended by the reservation. He prays that his warrant may be renewed, and the location made in the said reservation, or other reasonable redress be afforded him. The committee, by referring to the act of cession of Virginia, ceding western lands to the United States, perceive that the military reservation is special in favor of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line and continental establishment; the claim of the petitioner not being of that description, cannot, with propriety, be admitted to location in that tract; and the fact cannot be ascertained whether there will be any surplus land in the tract reserved, until the claims of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line shall be satisfied; but in case a surplus of land should be found to exist in that tract, the committee are of opinion that the petitioner's warrant could not be admitted, as they are decidedly of opinion that he has presented no legal or just claim against the United States. The offer of lands by the proclamation under which the petitioner claims, appears to have been gratuitous and honorary; no lands were promised to the officers and soldiers when they engaged in the service, nor until after the army was disbanded; and to those who availed themselves of the proclamation the advantage was inconsiderable, as the terms differed little from that on which other crown lands were then offered. The equity of the petitioner's claim is much affected by his own neglect to apply in a reasonable time, and appears to be the sole cause of his failure to obtain his grant. But it is inconceivable to the committee how the United States should become liable to satisfy a claim originating in an offer or promise, whether gratuitous, honorary, or pecuniary, of the King of Great Britain, made long anterior to the commencement of its existence; especially as it is believed that no part of the land which, at any time, was liable to satisfy the claim, is now, or ever has been, the property of the United States. The committee respectfully submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

RESERVATION OF LAND TO THE BAPTIST SOCIETY OF SALEM, IN THE MISSISSIPPI TERRITORY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of a committee appointed by the Baptist church at Salem, in the Mississippi territory, made the following report:

The petitioners state that the society to which they belong have built a meeting-house, which has cost them eight hundred dollars, on lands belonging to the United States, the situation being more eligible and convenient than any other in the neighborhood; that there is no provision in the laws by which they can secure the land except by purchase at public sale, which might subject them to pay not only the value of the land, but also a considerable part of the value of the house erected for a public purpose, and that a much larger quantity of land might be offered together for sale than they would wish to purchase; the land is represented by them to be of inferior quality. They pray that Congress may provide, by law, for securing to them so much land, and on such terms as may appear reasonable and proper. It appears to the committee that the society are not a corporate body, and therefore cannot properly be vested with property; or, in case of a donation being made, is there any security that it would be applied by their trustees only to the object proposed; the committee, therefore, cannot recommend any grant of lands. But as it would be a serious hardship, should the society lose a property intended for a public purpose, or incur a heavy expense to secure the possession of it, the committee have thought proper to recommend a reservation from sale of a small lot of land, including the ground on which the meeting-house is built, for the use of the society; they therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That five acres of land, including the ground on which the Baptist meeting-house at Salem, in the Mississippi territory, is built, be reserved from sale for the use of the Baptist society at that place.

FORFEITURE RELINQUISHED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 17, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Wilson, made the following report:

The petitioner states that he filed his claim with the Board of Commissioners for adjusting claims to land east of Pearl river, and south of the State of Tennessee; that a decision was made in his favor of a pre-emption for four hundred and eighty acres on the Tombigbee river, and a certificate issued in his name agreeably to law; but being in a state of bad health, unable to attend to his own business, he appointed an agent to attend to his land business; and, from the confidence he had in his agent, did not make any inquiry of his conduct until after the period for recording his certificate, and for paying the first instalment, had expired. He prays that he may be permitted to have his certificate recorded, and to pay the first instalment, with interest thereon, agreeably to law. The committee can discover no reasonable objection against the granting of the prayer of the petitioner; by so doing, no injury can result to the public, and the petitioner may receive a benefit.

Therefore, resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted.

RECOGNITION OF A DONATION RIGHT IN THE DISTRICT EAST OF PEARL RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 20, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Richard Terwin, made the following report:

The petitioner states that, in the year 1794, he made application to the Spanish Government for a title to eight hundred acres of land, situate on the east bank of the Tombigbee river; that a warrant of survey for the land was issued in the year 1797. He presented his claim to the Board of Commissioners for adjusting claims to lands for confirmation, but was induced to withdraw his claim under the warrant of survey, it being dated subsequent to the 27th of October, 1795, and to claim the land as a donation. He, however, failed in his application, as he could not prove that the land was cultivated in the year 1797, and, not being apprised that he was entitled to a right of pre-emption, made no application for a certificate. In consequence of his not having a pre-emption certificate, he has been unable to avail himself of the provision of a subsequent law, which authorizes the Register and Receiver to grant donation in lieu of pre-emption certificates, when it shall appear that the cultivation and occupancy had taken place prior to the 30th day of March, 1798. He alleges that he can produce proof unequivocal that he did occupy the land prior to that period, and states that it is yet vacant. He prays for a grant of the land, or such other relief as may appear just.

There is no evidence before the committee of the fact that the petitioner did actually occupy and cultivate the land prior to the 30th of March, 1798; they cannot, therefore, recommend a confirmation of his claim; but if the petitioner has correctly stated the facts in his petition, he is justly entitled to a donation certificate. It occurs to the committee that the plan best calculated to secure the petitioner in his property, and the public against imposition, is to authorize the Register and Receiver of Public Moneys to issue a donation certificate to the petitioner, on his producing satisfactory evidence to them that his settlement and occupancy had been made and taken place according to the laws in that case made and provided.

Therefore, resolved, That the petitioner be permitted to substantiate his claim to a donation certificate, and that he produce the proof of his cultivation and settlement to the Register and Receiver of Public Moneys of the district east of Pearl river, in the Mississippi territory, who shall decide thereon.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHT GRANTED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 27, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Edwin Lewis, made the following report:

It appears that the petitioner presented his claim to the Board of Commissioners for adjusting claims to land east of Pearl river, to a pre-emption to six hundred and ninety-six acres of land, situate on the Tombigbee river; that the Board, in deciding on his claim, adjudged him to be entitled to a right of pre-emption to one hundred and sixty acres, and in making the location, includes, in the centre of the tract, a cantonment at that time occupied by the troops of the United States, for which, in the certificate of pre-emption, five acres are reserved to the United States for their future use and disposition. The petitioner considers himself aggrieved by the decision of the Board, inasmuch as they have reduced the quantity of land he claimed from six hundred and ninety-six to one hundred and sixty acres, and the location, he alleges, does not include his improvement; and the reserve of five acres for a military station in the centre of his tract he views as illegal, unnecessary, and injurious to his interest. It appears, by a plot produced by the petitioner, that there is no vacant land adjoining to the tract assigned him; had the six hundred and ninety-six acres been adjudged to him, it would have interfered with lands adjudged to his neighbors; and in case the location specified in the certificate does not include his improvement, the Register and Receiver of Public Moneys for the district are authorized by the existing law to give relief in such cases. As to the military cantonment in the centre of his tract, the committee have no information on the subject, that would enable them to decide the propriety of abandoning the station; but are of opinion that, so soon as the cantonment shall be finally abandoned, the petitioner should have a preference in becoming the purchaser. Therefore

Resolved, That the petitioner shall have a preference in becoming the purchaser of five acres of land situate in the centre of his farm whenever the said land shall be offered for sale.

LAND CLAIMS IN THE DISTRICT OF VINCENNES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 27, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Gabriel Bolon, Jun. and Amable Bolon, Jun. for themselves and others, heirs at law of Antoine Marie, and Margaret his wife, made the following report:

The petitioners state that their ancestors, in whose right they claim, had, in consideration of their services as Indian interpreters to the troops of Virginia, at and subsequent to the reduction of the post of Vincennes, received from the court a grant of land to each; which grants accompany the petition.

The said grants were presented to the officers authorized by Government to adjust and settle the claims to land in that country, but have not been confirmed, as no proof was produced, that the land had been actually improved and cultivated. The petitioners consider the services rendered, as a good and valuable consideration for the land they claim; and pray for a confirmation of their grants.

It appears to the committee, on referring to the resolutions of the Congress under the confederation, and the laws since passed in relation to the claims to land in that country, that the court grants have never been considered as possessing legal validity. It has been provided, where lands have been improved and cultivated under a supposed grant of the same, by a commandant, or court claiming authority to make such grant, that the person making the improvement should be confirmed in part or the whole of the tract, as might appear reasonable, not exceeding four hundred acres. As the lands claimed by the petitioners do not appear to have been improved on, or cultivated, the decision of the officers could not be otherwise than against the claim. As to the equitable claim of the petitioners to a confirmation of the grants, the committee would observe that no evidence has been produced that the services stated in the petition were actually rendered, except the presumptive evidence arising from the grants. The inhabitants of that country were confirmed in the tracts of land which they possessed; and four hundred acres donation was provided to be given to each of those persons who, in the year 1783, were heads of families; of which gratuity, the petitioners' ancestor most probably partook. To the ancient inhabitants of that country the Government have not only been just but liberal.

The committee respectfully submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

LAND CLAIMS IN THE DISTRICT EAST OF PEARL RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 27, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Mims of the Mississippi territory, made the following report:

That, prior to the year 1795, the petitioner inhabited and cultivated a tract of land in Washington county, in said territory, believing the same to be vacant, but afterwards, finding that it was covered by two British patents, granted to a certain William Clark, who was at that time deceased, the petitioner, in order to quiet himself in his possession, purchased of one Abraham Gindrat, the legal representative of said William Clark, deceased, for a valuable consideration, all his right and title to said lands, and has continued to inhabit and cultivate the same, without interruption, until this time; that the petitioner filed his claim with the Register of the Land Office east of Pearl river, in the territory aforesaid, for the quantity of five hundred and twenty-four acres of land, being the quantity covered by said British grants. It appears, also, to your committee, that the claim of the petitioner was rejected, in consequence of a supposed defect in the power of the said Abraham Gindrat to convey the right of said William Clark, deceased, who was the original patentee.

Your committee think it unnecessary to examine the question whether Abraham Gindrat was fully authorized to convey the land as the legal representative of William Clark, deceased, inasmuch as the defect, if any exists in the transfer, is properly a question between the heirs of William Clark, deceased, and the petitioner, to be investigated in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings; and it being manifest that the United States have no title to the said land, because the same was granted by the British Government, and has been inhabited and cultivated from prior to the year 1795 until this time, your committee respectfully submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That Samuel Mims be confirmed in his title to the quantity of five hundred and twenty-four acres of land purchased by him of the legal representative of William Clark, deceased, so as not to deprive the heirs of said Clark of any legal remedy which they may have for the recovery of said land from the said Samuel Mims, his heirs, or assigns.

APPLICATION OF THE RELIGIOUS ORDER OF LA TRAPPE FOR A CONFIRMATION OF ITS RIGHT TO A TRACT OF LAND, AND AN EXTENSION OF CREDIT ON THE PURCHASE OF OTHER LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 2, 1810.

Mr. BRENT, from the committee to whom was referred the petition of father Urban Guillet, in behalf of the religious order of La Trappe, reported:

That the order of La Trappe is represented to the committee to be of the Roman Catholic religion, and of very high antiquity. It consists of monks of severe habits and rigid discipline. That one great object of their order is the gratuitous instruction and education of children, either in literature, agriculture, or the mechanical arts. That every person, upon entering into the order, is subjected to religious vows, for the due observance of the customs, habits, and discipline of the order.

Amongst these vows are the following: To observe celibacy, to avoid riches, to employ their time in labor, and the gratuitous instruction and education of children, &c.

That this order was formerly established in France, not far distant from Paris; that, during the revolution there, upon the suppression of the monasteries, the petioner and his associates sought an asylum in the United States, and first settled themselves in the State of Kentucky, where they established their order, and persevered in the observance of all the rights, customs, &c. thereof; that they have since removed into the Illinois territory, about four miles from St. Louis, where they have again established themselves upon a tract of four hundred acres of land, a donation from N. Jarrot; that they have made considerable improvements upon this land, and have now thirty monks and thirty-five scholars in the establishment; the scholars are educated gratuitously, and principally supported by the cultivation bestowed by the order upon a portion of that tract of land; that, although the order of La Trappe is strictly Roman Catholic, male children of all descriptions and denominations are equally permitted to enjoy the benefits of their instruction; the only rule of exclusion being the incapacity of the child.

The petitioner has presented to the committee numerous testimonials of the innocence and good morals of the order, and its utility in affording an opportunity of instruction to the poor children in their neighborhood, and even to the aborigines of the country, several of whom they are now instructing in the agricultural and mechanical arts.

The petitioner has some apprehensions of the validity of the title of the four hundred acres of land upon which the establishment is made, and is desirous of having the same confirmed by the United States. He is also desirous of purchasing four thousand acres of the public lands on a credit of twelve years, for the purpose of enabling their order to extend their establishment. The committee are of opinion that the establishment is a useful one in that part of the country, in affording an opportunity for instruction to children, who would otherwise be destitute thereof, and therefore entitled to the patronage of Congress, at least to the limited extent prayed for by the petitioner.

The committee, therefore, recommend the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the United States relinquish to Urban Guillet, for the benefit of the religious order of La Trappe, their right to the four hundred acres of land mentioned in his petition.

Resolved, That provision be made, by law, for selling to Urban Guillet, for the benefit of the order of La Trappe, four thousand acres of land adjoining their present establishment in the Illinois territory, for two dollars per acre, upon a credit of twelve years, without interest.

APPLICATION TO CONFIRM AN ENTRY MADE AT THE LAND OFFICE AT MARIETTA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 12, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John McIntyre, of the State of Ohio, made the following report:

That the petitioner, on the first of January, 1803, entered with the Register of the Land Office at Marietta, the fourth section of the twelfth township in the thirteenth range, and also the east fractional section No. 5, same township and range, and also the east fractional section No. 1, in township No. 16, and range No. 14. The petitioner states that the last mentioned fraction formed the principal inducement to the purchase; that he bought the other tracts in compliance with the law requiring fractional sections (in the sale) to be attached to, and sold with the adjacent entire sections.

It appears, as well from the representation of the petitioner, as from the documents accompanying his petition, that the last mentioned fraction is situated on the east bank of the Muskingum river, and is claimed by Encrease Mathews and Levi Whipple; under a purchase made at the public sales of land in May, 1800, of section No. 12, and fraction No. 1, in township No. 16, and range 14, also fraction No. 6, in township No. 12, range No. 13, lying on the west side of the Muskingum river. The prayer of the petitioner is, that a law may pass confirming his title, alleging that the purchase of Mathews and Whipple of a fractional section on the west side of the Muskingum cannot be construed to embrace a fraction lying on the opposite side of that river; because by the law regulating the sales of public lands in that quarter, it is provided that fractional sections shall be annexed to and sold with the adjacent entire sections, the Muskingum being a navigable water, and so reserved as a public highway; land on the one side cannot be annexed to and sold with land on the other side of the river. The petitioner further states, that the adverse claimants are in possession of the land in dispute, and that he cannot prosecute his action of ejectment with effect for the possession, unless a law passes in confirmation of his title, or a grant issues by which his legal title will be perfected: your committee, after a due consideration of the case made out by the petitioner, and the laws applicable thereto, cannot discern the necessity, or even the propriety, of legislative interference, inasmuch as no distinction can be taken between this and every other question of property between adverse claimants, whose proper resort for redress is to a judicial tribunal, whose duty it is to adjust controversies of this kind upon application made in proper form. Under this view of the case, your committee forbear to express any opinion as to the party holding the title, or whether it is not yet in the United States, because, if either claimant is entitled, it is competent alone for a court of judicature to determine which it is, and if neither have acquired a property in the disputed fractional section, the land may be ordered to be sold for the benefit of the United States under the existing laws.

The committee respectfully recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and accompanying documents.

ILLINOIS AND WABASH LAND COMPANIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON THE 21ST OF DECEMBER, 1810.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, the United Illinois and Wabash Land Companies respectfully submit the following memorial.

In the year 1773, William Murray, in conjunction with various other persons, as whose agent he acted, as well as on his own account, formed a plan for the purchase of lands from the Illinois Indians; a nation consisting of various tribes, who claimed and possessed a very extensive tract of country on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Illinois rivers.

Murray had long been engaged in trade with these Indians, and resided in their country. In the month of June, 1773, he held several public conferences on the subject of the intended purchase with the several tribes of Illinois Indians at the village of Kaskaskias, which was in their country, and had been the principal residence of one of the tribes. It was then a British settlement and military station. At these conferences, which lasted nearly a month, the civil and military officers of the British Government, and all the inhabitants of the place, were invited to be present. Many persons of both descriptions did attend, and the Indians were carefully prevented from obtaining any spirituous liquors during the whole continuance of the negotiation.

On the 5th of July, 1773, the bargain was completed, by which these Indians, for a very large and valuable consideration, agreed to sell to Murray and his associates two tracts of land, which are thus bounded: the first begins on the east side of the Mississippi river, at the mouth of "Heron Creek," called by the French "the river of Mary," being about a league below the mouth of the Kaskaskias river. From thence the line runs a straight course northward of east about eight leagues, be it more or less, to the hilly plains; thence, the same course, in a direct line, to the Crab-tree plains, seventeen leagues, or thereabout, be it more or less; thence the same course, in a direct line to a remarkable place known by the name of the Buffalo Hoofs, seventeen leagues, or thereabout, be it more or less; thence the same course, in a direct line to the Salt Lick creek, about seven leagues, be it more or less; thence, crossing the creek, about one league below the ancient Shawnees town, in an easterly, or a little to the north of east course, in a direct line to the river Ohio, about four leagues, be it more or less; thence, down the Ohio by its several courses, until it empties into the Mississippi, about thirty-five leagues, be it more or less; and thence, up the Mississippi by its several courses, to the place of beginning, about thirty-three leagues, be it more or less.

The second of these tracts begins also at the Mississippi, on the east side, at a point directly opposite to the mouth of the Missouri. From thence the line runs up the Mississippi, by its several courses, to the mouth of the Illinois, about six leagues, be it more or less; thence, up the Illinois, by its several courses, to Chicago or Garlick creek, about ninety leagues, be it more or less; thence nearly a northerly course, in a direct line, to a certain place remarkable for being the ground on which a battle was fought about forty or fifty years before that time between the Pewariz and Renard Indians, about fifty leagues, be it more or less; thence, by the same course, in a direct line, to two remarkable hills close together in the middle of a large prairie, about fourteen leagues, be it more or less; thence, a north of east course, in a direct line, to a remarkable spring, known by the Indians by the name of the Foggy Spring, about fourteen leagues, be it more or less; thence, the same course, in a direct line, to a great mountain to the northward of the White Buffalo Plain, about fifteen leagues, be it more or less; and thence, nearly a southwest course, in a direct line to the place of beginning, about forty leagues, be it more or less.

The boundaries of the land being thus settled, and the contract fully concluded, Murray, in behalf of himself and his associates, paid the stipulated consideration; and the principal chiefs of the Illinois nation, in behalf of themselves and of their respective tribes, and with the knowledge and full assent of those tribes, by whose authority they acted, executed and delivered to him and his associates, as tenants in common, in fee simple, a deed for these two parcels of land, bearing date on the 5th of July, 1773, and attested by various persons, among whom were the commandant of the British military posts in the Illinois country, and the Indian interpreters for the British Government there. Those interpreters explained the deed to the Indians before it was executed; and it was then duly proved and recorded in the office of a notary public at Kaskaskias, which, according to the French laws, then permitted by the British Government to remain in force in that country, was a public office for the registration of deeds. A copy of the deed (marked No. 1) is hereto annexed by your memorialists, who are ready to produce the original whenever it may be deemed necessary. The purchasers under this deed were denominated "The Illinois Land Company."

In September, 1775, Murray commenced another negotiation with the Piankeshaw Indians, on behalf of himself and several other persons associated with him, for the purchase of lands on the Wabash river, then claimed and held by those Indians. In this purchase, in effecting which Louis Viviat, one of the associates, was employed as an agent, the same precautions were used as in the former. The chiefs of the various tribes of Piankeshaw Indians were convened in public conference at Post Saint Vincent's, or Vincennes, on the Wabash, then under the British Government, and a British military post. At these conferences, as at the former, the civil and military officers of the British Government, as well as the inhabitants of the place, were invited to attend. The Indians were prevented from obtaining spirituous liquors while the business was pending. Every thing was conducted openly and fairly. And at length, on the 18th of October, 1775, the contract was concluded, by which the Indians in question, for a large and valuable consideration, agreed to sell to Viviat, Murray, and his associates, as tenants in common, in fee simple, two tracts of land on the Wabash, which are bounded as follows:

The first begins on the Wabash, at the mouth of the rivulet called "Rivière du Chat," or "Cat River," being about fifty-two leagues above Post St. Vincent, and thence, down the Wabash by its several courses, to a place called "Point Coupée," about twelve leagues above Post St. Vincent, being forty leagues or thereabouts in length on the Wabash river, from the place of beginning, with forty leagues in width on the east side, and thirty on the west side of that river, to be continued from the place of beginning to Point Coupée aforesaid.

The second tract begins on the Wabash where it receives White river, about twelve miles below Post St. Vincent; and runs thence down the Wabash, by its several courses, till it empties into the Ohio, being about fifty-three leagues, be it more or less; with forty leagues in width on each side of the Wabash, to be continued from White river aforesaid to the Ohio.

For these two tracts the stipulated consideration was then paid, and a deed was executed and delivered by the Indians to the purchasers, bearing date on the 18th of October, 1775. This deed was publicly interpreted to the Indians before they signed it, by two sworn interpreters, and was attested by many persons present at the execution, and at the delivery of the consideration which it mentions. It was then recorded in the office of a notary public there, also a public office for the registration of deeds. The purchasers under it were denominated "the Wabash Land Company." A copy of it is hereto annexed, (marked No. 2,) and the original is in the possession of your memorialists, ready to be produced whenever required.

The war which soon afterwards broke out between Great Britain and the North American colonies, and ended in the American Revolution, prevented the purchasers under these two deeds from taking actual possession of their lands, or adopting any measures for making settlements on them. But, in the beginning of the year 1780, these purchasers, many of whom were grantees in both deeds, resolved to unite the two companies in one, under the name of "the United Illinois (or Wabash) Land Companies," and to hold the whole lands, conveyed by both deeds, as a joint stock or property, according to regulations then established. This resolution was carried into effect by an instrument of writing, bearing date on the 29th of April, 1780.

The rights thus acquired by fair purchases, for valuable consideration, from the original owners of the land, whom no law did or could forbid to sell their property, are now vested in your memorialists, constituting "the United Illinois and Wabash-Land Companies," some of whom claim as original purchasers, and the others by descent, devise, or conveyance from such as were so. These rights your memorialists, and those under whom they claim, have repeatedly brought before the Government of the United States. Their first application was made to Congress under the old confederation, and was reported on by a committee of that body in 1781. On this report no further proceedings were had, and the claim rested in that situation till the dissolution of the old Government.

In December, 1791, your memorialists renewed their application, by a memorial to both Houses of Congress, which was in each House referred to a committee. To these committees your memorialists made a full representation of their claim, with the proofs and facts to support it, and proposed terms of compromise, which the committee of the House of Representatives, by their report, advised Congress to accept. The committee of the Senate, on the 26th of March, 1792, reported differently; and, consequently, nothing was then done for the relief of your memorialists.

This relief they again sought in 1797, by a memorial to Congress, which was referred in each House to a committee. These committees resolved to adopt the report made by the committee of the Senate on the 26th of March, 1792.

Having thus again failed in obtaining relief, your memorialists took no further step in the affair till the year 1804, when a petition was again presented to the House of Representatives on their part, and was referred to a committee, whose report, unfavorable to the claim, was adopted by the House.

And, lastly, this claim has been brought before the commissioners appointed under an act of Congress to investigate claims to land within the district of Vincennes, and to report on them to Congress, through the Treasury Department. These commissioners reported unfavorably to the claim, but this part of their report has not yet been acted on by Congress.

The reasons on which these successive rejections were founded are various, and, in some instances, contradictory, but your memorialists believe that they are all reducible to the following points:

1st. That the Indian tribes, in whose names these sales were made, were not in fact the proprietors of the land sold, which is claimed by the Six Nations and their tributaries.

2d. That the grantors, or individual Indians who signed and delivered the deeds, do not appear to have been duly authorized by their respective nations, who, in their subsequent treaties with the United States, have never acknowledged these sales.

3d. That the purchases in question were made from the Indians by private individuals, without any public treaty, or other act of notoriety; without any public authority or previous liberty from the Government, or its subsequent confirmation; and, therefore, contrary to the common and known usage in such cases, and to the express prohibitions contained in the British King's proclamation of October 7, 1763.

4th. That one of the deeds contains merely a number of lines, without including any land whatsoever.

5th. That the purchase of 1775, on the Wabash, was made since the revolution, while Congress had an agent for Indian affairs residing at Fort Pitt, who received no notice of this purchase.

6th. That the lands comprehended in these deeds have been ceded by the Indian tribes to the United States, who have paid an adequate compensation for them.

And, lastly, that the proceeds of all sales of lands in the Western country, "belonging to the United States," are appropriated towards the discharge of the public debt.

These objections your memorialists now proceed to answer, and, as they confidently hope, to remove, in the order in which they are here stated.

FIRST OBJECTION.

That the Indian tribes, in whose names these sales were made, were not in fact the owners of the land sold, which was claimed by the Six Nations and their tributaries.

This objection is set up in the report made by the committee of the old Congress in 1781.

It might be a sufficient answer to it to say, that the United States have since acknowledged the title of these Indians, by purchasing from them, at two several times, large portions of the land in question.

The first of these purchases was made by a treaty concluded at Vincennes on the 13th of August, 1803, from the Kaskaskias Indians, stating themselves to be all that remained of the various tribes of Illinois Indians, united into one tribe, and long known by the name of Kaskaskias, and it includes the whole of the tract first described in the deed of July 5, 1773, from those Indians to your memorialists, with a large part of the second tract. This treaty is found in the seventh volume of the Acts of Congress, page 205. A comparison of it with the last mentioned deed to your memorialists will show that the tribes making the grants, and the land granted are the same.

The second purchase was made from the Piankeshay Indians, by a treaty concluded with them at Vincennes, on the 30th of December, 1805. This purchase includes a large part of the second tract, granted by the same Indians, (the Piankeshaws) to your memorialists, by the deed of October 18, 1775. The treaty is contained in the eighth volume of the Acts of Congress, page 339. It will appear, on a comparison of this treaty with the deed, that the lands granted are the same, and that the grants are made by the same tribe of Indians.

A still more solemn, though less direct, recognition of this right had previously been made by the United States in the treaty of Greenville, concluded with the Northwestern Indians on the 3d of August, 1795.

This treaty is found in the second volume of the Acts of Congress, page 449. The United States claimed the lands northwest of the Ohio, as having been ceded to the British Crown by the Six Nations, and by the British Crown to the United States by the treaty of peace. The Northwestern Indians resisted the claim, and from this dispute arose the bloody contest, which, after various turns of fortune, was terminated at the rapids of the Miami, and by the treaty of Greenville. By this treaty the United States relinquished forever their claim, with some small and particular exceptions, to all the lands north and west of the boundary line then established, which runs a little to the west of the Great Miami, and very far to the east of the lands claimed by your memorialists. The above mentioned exceptions, and all the lands to the south and east of that line, they purchased from the Indians, for a sum in hand of twenty thousand dollars, and a perpetual annuity of nine thousand five hundred dollars.

Among the Indians to whom this relinquishment was made, the Kaskaskias, including all the tribes of the ancient Illinois, and the Piankeshaws, are particularly named. They also received a proportionate part of the sum paid for the lands reserved, a part of which lay within their particular territories.

Your memorialists presume to expect that, after these solemn and repeated recognitions by the United States of the title of these Indians to the lands in question, the objection now under consideration will not be again repeated; but they do not rely on these recognitions alone. On the contrary, they are prepared to show, by the most undoubted and unequivocal testimony, whenever it shall be necessary, that no Indians, except those under whom they claim, ever possessed, or were supposed to be entitled to, the lands in question. As to the Six Nations, it will be clearly proved that neither they, nor their tributaries or allies, ever claimed any lands whatever to the westward of a line to be drawn "up the Ohio, from the mouth of the Cherokee or Tennessee river to the mouth of the Great Miami, and from thence, up the Great Miami, to its source." The lands claimed by your memorialists lie far to the west of this line.

But, although your memorialists do not deem it necessary now to enter at large into the proofs of this fact, which are to be found in the history of Indian transactions, from the first settlement of North America up to the American revolution, and in all the geographical accounts of the country, especially that published by Captain Hutchins, to explain his map; they will, nevertheless, present one document of a nature so conclusive, as to remove all doubt, could any exist. It is a deposition of Colonel George Croghan, for more than thirty years deputy superintendent of Indian Affairs, made in the year 1781, near the close of his life. This deposition is in these words:

"George Croghan, Esq. being duly sworn on the holy evangelists of Almighty God, doth depose and say, that, the Six Nations claim, by right of conquest, all the lands on the southeast side of the river Ohio, down to the Cherokee river, and on the west side of the Ohio down to the Big Miama river, (otherwise called Stony river); and, that the Six Nations never had a claim of any kind, or made any claim, to lands below the Big Miami, or Stony river, on the west side of the Ohio; but, that the lands on the west side of the Ohio, below Stony river, were always supposed to belong to the Indians of the Western confederacy. That the deponent has, for thirty years, been intimately acquainted with the above country, and the Indians, and their different claims to territory, and never heard the Six Nations claim, and knows that they never did claim, beyond the above description; nor did they ever dispute the claim of the western confederacy. And further, saith not."

To this, your memorialists will add the description given by the Six Nations themselves of their boundaries, at the treaty of Fort Stanwix, in November, 1768. It is contained in their final deed of cession to the King of Great Britain, dated November 5th, 1768, and is in these words:

"We begin on the Ohio, at the mouth of the Cherokee river, which is our just right; and from thence, we go up, on the south side of the Ohio, to Kittaning, above Fort Pitt; from thence, in a direct line, to the nearest fork of the Susquehannah; thence, (by various natural boundaries and courses described in the deed,) to the mouth of Canada creek, where it empties itself into Wood creek, at the end of the long carrying place beyond Fort Stanwix."

After this testimony of the best informed witness that ever lived of the Six Nations themselves; of the British Government, who were parties to the deed, and under whom the United States claim; and of the United States, in their recent purchases, already mentioned; your memorialists presume, that no more will be said of the claim of the Six Nations to these lands. They, therefore, proceed to the #### SECOND OBJECTION.

That the grantors, or individual Indians who signed and delivered these deeds, do not appear to have been duly authorized to make the sales by their respective nations, who, in their subsequent treaties with the United States, have never acknowledged these sales.

This objection is contained in the report of a committee of the House of Representatives in 1804. It divides itself into two branches, which will be separately considered.

1st. The want of previous authority.

2d. The want of subsequent acknowledgment.

As to the previous authority, it may be observed, in the first place, that there exists the same proof of it in this case as in all other cases of purchase from the Indians, under either the British or American Governments, by the public or individuals. The Indians who sign the deeds are declared in the instruments to act by the authority of their respective nations or tribes. This authority is further attested by the publicity of the act itself, and by the presence and acquiescence of many other individuals of the several tribes, who would undoubtedly oppose the act if not done by proper authority; in the same manner have all treaties and contracts with Indians been made. A few of the chief men act on the part of the tribe, claiming to be duly authorized; the transaction is public; and many other individuals of the tribe attend, who, by their assent attest the authority. Finally, when the purchase money is paid, each individual of the tribe then present receives his share, and the shares of those who are absent are afterwards delivered to them. Their future silence attests this delivery and their assent to the sale; for, otherwise, they would not fail speedily to complain.

This being the usual and, indeed, the sole manner of making purchases from the Indians, and of attesting the authority of the immediate sellers, or rather agents, your memorialists may safely challenge those who object to their title on this ground, to produce an instance in which all these formalities have been more strictly fulfilled, or all the requisites of a fair purchase more fully complied with. The conferences were held in the midst of the Indian country, and in the near neighborhood of their principal settlements; these conferences continued for a month. The utmost publicity attended the transaction; numbers of the Indians, besides those who signed the deeds, were present; all were prevented from the use of spirituous liquors. The price agreed on was very large, in comparison with what is usually, or perhaps ever, paid for Indian lands; it was paid on the spot, and distributed to the individuals of the several tribes, as far as they were present. And no complaint has since been heard that the sale was made without authority, or that any part of the purchase money remained unpaid.

It is to be remarked, in the second place, that, considering the state of society among these Indians, and the nature of their customs and institutions, it is impossible for an authority to do any act on behalf of a tribe, to be attested in any other manner. It will not, as your memorialists apprehend, be expected, that, in such a case, a formal power of attorney, or a written commission, shall be produced; and, short of these, it is not perceived how an authority can be better attested.

On the second branch of this objection, the want of subsequent acknowledgment of these sales, by the Indians who made them, in their negotiations since held with the United States, your memorialists will observe, in the first place, that, as they were not parties to those negotiations, and as their rights, though long before brought into the view of the United States, and fully understood by the Government, at the time of those negotiations were not represented or mentioned; they could not, upon any principles of law or justice, be prejudiced by the silence of the Indians, under such circumstances, or even by their express disavowal of the sales, had they made one in the most formal manner. Such silence can only be considered as presumptive evidence that no sales were made; and your honorable body need not be told, that such evidence cannot avail against the positive proof of the fact. This sale your memorialists humbly conceive, must be considered, in this respect at least, in the same manner with all other sales. And they are yet to learn, that the declarations of a seller, much less his silence, while he is selling the property a second time, can affect the rights of the first purchaser.

But they contend that a very strong, though not an express, acknowledgment by the Indians of these purchases, is to be found in the price at which they made the subsequent sales to the United States. These sales include about one-half of the lands sold to your memorialists, for which they paid, more than thirty years ago, when the country was a wilderness for many hundred miles around, the sum of fifty thousand dollars at least, on a fair valuation of the goods enumerated in the deeds, and actually delivered to the Indians. By recurring to the two treaties mentioned above (August 13th, 1803, 7 Laws, 205; and December 13th, 1805, 8 Laws, 339,) it will be found that for about one-half of the same quantity of land, in the present advanced state of that country, which has increased the value of lands at least tenfold beyond what it was in 1775, the United States have paid the following sums: To the Kaskaskias, an addition to their former annuity, so as to increase it to one thousand dollars; a house for the chief, and the enclosing of a field of one hundred acres, both of which might, perhaps, cost five hundred dollars; one hundred dollars a year for seven years, as a salary for a priest; three hundred dollars towards the erection of a church; and a gross sum of five hundred and eighty dollars. The former annuity being five hundred dollars, as settled by the treaty of Greenville, the increase of five hundred makes the capital of eight thousand three hundred dollars. The different sums to be paid amount to two thousand dollars more; making, in the whole, ten thousand three hundred dollars to the Kaskaskias, who made by far the largest cession. The payment to the Piankeshaws was an annuity of three hundred dollars, representing a capital of five thousand, and a sum in hand of one thousand one hundred. Thus, the whole purchase money accepted by those Indians from the United States, for more than one-half of the land formerly sold to your memorialists, amounted to sixteen thousand five hundred dollars; about in the proportion of one-half of what your memorialists paid thirty years ago for the same quantity of the same land.

And this price, compared with that which the United States have paid for other lands purchased from the Indians, under less favorable circumstances, appears still more inadequate.

The tract of land relinquished by the Northwestern Indians to the United States by the treaty of Greenville, in the year 1795, is not more extensive than those purchased from the Kaskaskias and Piankeshaws in 1803 and 1805.

For the latter, a value equal to sixteen thousand five hundred dollars was paid. A great part of the Greenville purchase was, at the time of making it, more remote from the white settlements than the lands purchased from the Piankeshaws and Kaskaskias were in 1803 and 1805. In point of contiguity to navigable water, there is no comparison. The lands purchased from the Kaskaskias, form a triangle, which is bounded on two sides by the Mississippi and Ohio. Those purchased from the Piankeshaws lie on the Wabash, not far above its mouth. Those, on the contrary, relinquished by the treaty of Greenville, though washed on one side by the Ohio, much higher up its stream, are by far the greater part very remote from that or any other navigable water.

And, lastly, the United States had a well founded claim to those last mentioned lands bottomed on the cessions made by the Six Nations to the British Government; and, in support of that claim, had maintained a war in which they had recently been completely victorious.

And yet for this relinquishment, under all these circumstances, unfavorable to the value of the lands and to the right of the Indians, the United States agreed, by the treaty of Greenville, in August, 1795, to pay twenty thousand dollars in hand, and a perpetual annuity of nine thousand five hundred dollars, which represents a capital of one hundred and fifty-eight thousand three hundred dollars. Add to this the twenty thousand dollars paid down, and it gives the sum of one hundred and seventy-eight thousand three hundred dollars, as the price of the Greenville purchase. In addition to which, the United States relinquished their claim to the lands beyond the boundary then established, with some inconsiderable exceptions.

And yet, eight or ten years afterwards, in 1803 and 1805, when the population of the country, and consequently the value of lands had very much increased, they obtain from the Piankeshaws and Kaskaskias, for the trivial sum of sixteen thousand five hundred dollars, a part of the land thus relinquished by them to those tribes, equal in extent, equal or superior in quality, and greatly superior in situation, to the Greenville cession; for which, under circumstances so much more favorable to the purchase, they had paid more than ten times as much!

The same observations apply to the purchase made at Detroit, on the 17th of November, 1807, (Acts of Congress, vol. 9, page 166;) the quantity of land purchased was less than one-half of that obtained from the Kaskaskias and Piankeshaws, as may be seen by tracing the lines of all the cessions on the map. For this Detroit purchase, so much more remote from settlements, and only half as large, the United States paid ten thousand dollars in hand, and an annuity of two thousand four hundred, which represents a capital of forty thousand dollars, making, in the whole, fifty thousand dollars; nearly four times as much as they paid to the Kaskas-kias and Piankeshaws for double the quantity of land, better situated, and in every respect more valuable. This great inadequacy of price, your memorialists contend, must be considered as evidence that the Indians who consented to it remembered the sales made to your memorialists, were conscious of their fairness and validity, and, consequently, regarded themselves as selling nothing more to the United States than a quit claim to lands before sold.

With these remarks your memorialists dismiss the second objection, and proceed to the third.

THIRD OBJECTION.

“That the purchases in question were made from the Indians by private individuals, without any public treaty, or other act of notoriety, without any public authority or previous license from the Government, or its subsequent confirmation; and, therefore, contrary to the common and known usage established in such cases, and to the express prohibition contained in the British King’s proclamation of October 7th, 1763.”

This objection was first brought into view, though very imperfectly, by the report of the committee of Congress in 1781. It remained unnoticed in all the subsequent reports on this subject, till it was brought forward in that of the Vincennes commissioners.

That these purchases were made from the Indians by private individuals, without any public authority or previous license from the Government, or its subsequent confirmation, is a fact which your memorialists admit, and the legal consequences of which will be presently considered. But it is not a fact that they were made without any public treaty, or other act of notoriety. On the contrary, no conferences with Indians were ever more public or more notorious. The conferences were held at British military posts, in the view and presence of the British military and civil officers. They lasted a month each time. All the Indians, as well as the white settlers, were invited to attend. Great numbers of each description did attend. And, finally, the treaties, after having been interpreted to the Indians by the sworn interpreters of the British Government, were attested by its civil and military officers.

Your memorialists do not perceive in what manner such transactions could have been rendered more public or notorious.

The objection to the legal validity of these purchases, on account of their having been made without the previous authority of the Government, and not having received its subsequent confirmation, rests on one of two grounds.

1. That the Indians in North America were divested of their right to sell their lands, by the acts of the British Government, in establishing colonies whose nominal limits included those lands; or,

2. That the British King had authority to restrain the Indians, by proclamation, from exercising the right of sale, in favor of British subjects.

Your memorialists confidently expect to show that both these grounds are utterly untenable.

The first question which they are to discuss is, whether the Indians in North America were divested of their right to sell their lands, by the acts of the British Crown, in establishing colonies whose nominal limits included those lands?

Your memorialists say “nominal limits,” because, as to lands actually occupied by British subjects, or included within the bounds of their actual settlements, the question, could it at this day arise, might depend on different principles. But the present question is, whether the British Government, by establishing a colony of a few thousand or a few hundred persons, on the Atlantic coast of North America, and describing its limits in a charter or a commission to its Governors, so as to extend from the Atlantic to the South Sea, and to include the territories and habitations of many independent States, over whom it neither could exercise or did claim any jurisdiction, right, or power whatever, did or could divest those States of their property in the soil, which they had held as sovereigns and proprietors from time immemorial, or of the right of alienation, which is one of the inherent and essential ingredients of property?

Surely to state so extravagant a proposition is to refute it; and yet it is for this proposition, in all its extent, that they who oppose the claim of your memorialists do and must contend.

But certain it is that the British Government never set up such a claim. It incorporated companies, indeed, for the settlement of colonies in America, and gave them charters, describing the limits within which they might make settlements. After settlements were made, it established Governments, and prescribed their limits, by its charters or commissions. But these acts were considered merely as conferring powers of Government over colonies composed of British subjects, and as defining the limits within which those powers might be exercised, when settlements should be made. It never entered into the head of any man in England, that the Indians included within the limits of those grants became British subjects, were deprived of their property in the soil, or in any manner restricted in its use or disposition. On the contrary, the British Government, and the Governments and people of the colonies thus established, always considered and treated these Indians as independent nations, and absolutely owners of the land; from whom individuals or colonies might purchase, and did purchase, as convenience or inclination happened to direct.

This appears from the whole history of the New England settlements, of which more authentic and particular accounts exist than of any others, and from which your memorialists will select two very noted and remarkable instances by way of illustration.

The first is the Indian deed in New Hampshire, to Whelewright and others.

James I. on the 3d of November, 1620, granted to the council of Plymouth all the country from the Atlantic to the South Sea, and from the fortieth to the forty-eighth degree of north latitude. This charter included all the country which now composes the New England States, and much more.

On the 10th of August, 1622, the council of Plymouth granted to Mason and Gorges all the country lying between the rivers Merrimack and Lagadahock, and extending back to the great lakes and the river of Canada. This grant included the greater part of New Hampshire and Vermont, besides a considerable portion of the district of Maine.

On the 17th of May, 1629, John Whelewright and others, without any permission from any person whatever, purchased from the Piscataqua Indians, by deed, the lands between the Merrimack and Piscataqua rivers, extending back to lines drawn in various directions, from Pantucket falls in the Merrimack, to Newishwanock falls in the Piscataqua. The whole of this land lay within the grant from the Plymouth Company to Mason and Gorges.

On the 7th of November, 1629, Mason alone obtained from the Plymouth Company a new grant of the country lying between the Merrimack and Piscataqua, and lines drawn west from the head of the Merrimack, and northwest from the head of Piscataqua, sixty miles. This grant included all the land purchased by Whelewright and others from the Indians.

Mason was a man of fortune and influence in England, as well as in the colony. He possessed great energy, enterprise, and activity of character; and he and his descendants and representatives were constantly engaged, from the year 1629, to the American Revolution in 1775, more than one hundred and fifty years, in efforts to recover those lands under his grant from the Plymouth Company. But all these efforts were unavailing. The lands continued to be held, and are at this day held, under the Indian deed, in opposition to the pre-emptive right or right of soil claimed under the Crown of Great Britain, through its charter to the council of Plymouth. Since the Revolution, a quit-claim, for the purpose of putting an end to a troublesome dispute, has been obtained for some trifling or nominal consideration, from the persons who had purchased the claim.*

The other case is that of Major Mason’s purchase, within the limits of Connecticut, from the Mohegan Indians.

The country which now composes the State of Connecticut was also included within the charter of James I. to the council of Plymouth.

On the 17th of March, 1631, it was granted by the company to Lord Say and Sele, Lord Brooke, and others; who, in their turn, made grants to persons inclined to undertake settlements.

But those persons never supposed themselves to have any right till they had purchased from the Indians. Such purchases were sometimes made by the colonies, to whom the patents had been granted, and very often by individuals on their own account, who had obtained no patents.

A large portion of the lands belonged to the Mohegan Indians, whose chief, Uncas, on the 1st of September, 1640, made a deed to the colony of all his lands situated within its limits, reserving parts for himself and his nation, among which was the land now composing the township of Norwich.

In June, 1659, Uncas and his two sons, sold and conveyed, by a formal deed, this township, a tract of country about nine miles square, to Thomas Leffingwell, Major Mason, and others; who do not appear to have asked or had any permission from any person whatever to make this purchase, under which the lands have ever since been held.

There can be no doubt that, in the history of the other New England States, and of New York and New Jersey, many similar instances might be found. But these suffice to show that the Indians were never considered as being restrained from the power of selling, or individuals from the power of buying from them, by the royal grants merely, unaccompanied by any treaty or compact with the Indians themselves, transferring their rights to the Government of Great Britain.

As to a very large part of New York, almost the whole of Pennsylvania, all the western part of Virginia, the whole of Kentucky, part of Tennessee and all the country northwest of the Ohio, as low down as the great Miami, the British Government claimed the right of pre-emption in the soil as well as of jurisdiction, under a cession made by the Six Nations, the acknowledged proprietors of all that country, at Albany, in the year 1679. Their deed of cession was made to Governor Dungan of New York, in trust for the Crown. They confirmed it four years afterwards, September 26th, 1683, at another treaty held in Albany, at which the agents of William Penn attended. Penn had obtained the grant of his province from the Crown on the 4th day of March, 1681, previous to this final cession by the Indians of the pre-emptive right to their lands. Part of those lands lay within his province. The pre-emptive right to that part he wished to obtain from the Indians; and for that purpose sent agents to the treaty held at Albany in September, 1683. But the Indians having considered his proposal, refused to accede it, alleging that they had before sold the right to the Crown. Penn, therefore, to secure this pre-emptive right, was compelled to obtain a deed of conveyance from Governor Dungan; which was executed at London, no doubt with the assent of the King, in January, 1696.

There cannot be a clearer proof that the Crown did not claim this pre-emptive right, independently of any cession by the Indians; otherwise, as the Crown had granted these lands to Penn before the final cession at Albany, in 1683, the right would have passed to him by the grant, and he need not afterwards have applied for it to the Indians, or to Governor Dungan.

On this cession by the Six Nations in 1683, is founded the right claimed by Virginia under the British Crown, and by the United States under Virginia, to the country northwest of the Ohio.

This claim was disputed by the Northwestern Indians, and gave rise to the war with them, which, after the bloody and decisive victory of August 20, 1794, near the rapids of the Miami of the lake, was terminated by the treaty of Greenville, in August, 1795.

But this claim never extended to the lands purchased by your memorialists from the Illinois and Piankeshaw Indians, who, until the year 1763, were so far from owing any allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain, or acknowledging any dependence on it, or connexion with it, that they were in a state of war against it and the Six Nations, its allies. They were the allies of France in the war of 1756, which arose out of disputes about boundaries in America, and was terminated by the treaty of Paris in 1763.

In the conferences and negotiations which preceded that war, it was acknowledged by both the contending Powers, France and Great Britain, "that there were intermediate nations between Canada and Louisiana, and between Virginia and Louisiana, [that is, between the territories claimed by the two Powers] who were independent of the sovereignty of both Crowns, and to be considered as a barrier between them."

These "intermediate nations" were the Northwestern Indians, of whom the Illinois and Piankeshaws made a part; and whose complete independence was thus formally acknowledged by both Crowns.

The treaty of Paris settled what should ever afterwards be the line of division between the two Powers; not for the purpose of appropriating to themselves and dividing between them the country of those independent nations, which they neither had nor pretended to have a right to do; but merely for that of designating the limits, within which each should in future be permitted by the other to form colonies, under its own laws and Government, with the consent of the Indians, whenever it could be obtained.

The treaty did not operate, and was not intended to operate, as a mutual cession of territory; but as a covenant, by which each party was restrained from attempting to acquire territory from the Indians, beyond certain limits. So far, and so far only, as territory had already been obtained beyond these limits, as in the cases of military posts and actual settlements, it operated as a mutual cession. This treaty, then left the Indians as it found them, independent nations, and absolute proprietors of the soil; with full and complete power of alienation.

Of this power of alienation they might divest themselves, as the Six Nations had done, by a treaty or a sale; but until they did so divest themselves, it remained in them, as an inherent and essential part of the right of property, and of the attributes of sovereignty.

That they were viewed in this light by the British Government, and had made no such cession or treaty; is proved by the proclamation of October 7, 1763, in which the British King declared that, although they "lived under his protection, their territory was their own; having never been ceded to or purchased by him."

How, indeed, your memorialist would ask, could it have ceased to be their own? Not by conquest; for Great Britain never did conquer them or their country; she gained, indeed, such general advantages in the war against France, whose allies these Indians were, as induced that Power to yield to the adjustment of limits in America which she had claimed; but she never overran this country in the course of the war, or obtained possession of any posts or settlements in it till the peace; not by the cession of France, for France was not, and did not pretend to be, the sovereign of this country. The Indians, to whom it belonged, were not her subjects, but her allies; and were acknowledged and treated by her as independent states. She held, by previous cessions from them, some military posts and trading stations in their country; these she could cede, and did cede, to Great Britain. But as to the country itself, she neither had nor claimed a right to cede it. She merely agreed to withdraw from it, as far as a certain line, established by the treaty; and not in future to attempt settlements or establishments in it beyond that line. But this withdrawal and agreement could not transfer a right which she did not possess. That she possessed no right to the country, and claimed none, further than related to her posts and stations, held under cessions from the Indians, is abundantly manifest from all her acts and declarations, and from the nature of her connexion with those Indians.

But if France had been the sovereign of this country, and had, as such, ceded it to Great Britain, this cession would have transferred merely the jurisdiction and powers of Government, and not the right of property in the soil. This right is a private right, and is never affected by the cession of a country from one sovereign to another. The Indians, if they were not sovereigns of the country, but subjects of France, were certainly proprietors of the soil; and, as such were invested with all the rights incident to property; of which the right to sell is one. This right and power to sell, therefore, as it existed under the French Government before the cession, was not, and could not be, affected by the cession; but still remained in the Indians, the original proprietors.

Whether, therefore, these Indians are considered as sovereign States in alliance with France, or as the subjects of that Power, their right of property in the soil, and their power of alienation, as an inseparable ingredient to that right, remained equally unaffected by the cession from France to Great Britain.

As little could this right be affected by conquest, admitting them to have been conquered by Great Britain. It is a well-known and undeniable principle, that the conquest of a country does not deprive the individual owners of the soil of their rights of property. It merely affects the sovereignty and powers of Government. The new sovereign may, if he please, confiscate the property of his new subjects; but this is an exercise of the powers of legislation and government which he has acquired by his conquest, not a direct or immediate effect of the conquest itself. If, therefore, these Indians be considered as having been conquered by Great Britain, either in the war of 1756, or at any former period, still they continued to be the owners and proprietors of the land. They became, by the conquest, the subjects of the British Crown, but did not lose their rights of private property. Nor could they be divested of these rights, except by an act of the supreme legislative authority. This authority, according to the British constitution, to the protection of which they were in that case entitled, resided not in the King, but in Parliament. No act of Parliament having passed on this subject, it follows undeniably, that the rights of private property, and, among them, the ownership of the land, and the right to sell it, which were vested in the Indians before the conquest, (admitting a conquest to have been made,) still continued in them.

If after the conquest their country was included within the limits of any colony, they might, by this inclusion, become members of the colony, or its subjects; but could not be deprived of their rights of private property.

Your memorialists, therefore, trust that on this first branch of the objection, viz: "that the Indians in North America were divested of their right to sell their lands, by the acts of the British Government, in establishing colonies whose nominal limits included those lands," no doubt can remain. It is manifest, as your memorialists conceive, that such limits can be regarded by no person, and never were regarded by the British Government, or by the people of the colonies, in any other light than as mere designations of the extent to which settlements might be made under each colony, when the land could be purchased from the Indians; and of the Government to which such settlements, when made, should belong; the Indians being in the mean time the sovereigns of the country, and the absolute proprietors of the soil.

This brings your memorialists to the second branch of the objection, which they now proceed to consider: viz. "that the British King had a right to restrain the Indians, by proclamation, from exercising the right of sale in favor of British subjects."

Or, in other words, that the British King, without the authority of Parliament, or any act of the Legislature, had the power, under the English constitution, of restraining British subjects, by proclamation, from purchasing from those who had a right to sell.

It might be expected, that they who contend for such a proposition would support it by some authority; but your memorialists will waive this advantage, and proceed to show that the proposition is wholly unfounded. It embraces two questions, which shall be separately considered.

1. Whether the King of England possessed such a power to restrain the Indians from selling?

2. Whether he possessed such a power to restrain British subjects from buying?

As to the first, it has already been shown, conclusively, that the Indians were not British subjects, but independent nations; and, consequently, that no acts of the British Government, however clearly within its constitutional powers, could affect them. But admit them to be British subjects: they were still the owners of the land, and had all the rights of British subjects. One of these rights was the right of sale, unless restrained, not by a proclamation, but by law. That the proclamations of the British King, in matters of property, cannot have the force of laws, is a proposition which none will deny or doubt; and however competent it might have been to the British Parliament, in the exercise of its supreme legislative powers, to enact that certain persons, subjects of the British Government, should be restrained from selling their lands, except on certain conditions, it is very clear that the King alone had no such power; and that any attempt to exercise such a power was absolutely void. What would be thought in England of a proclamation forbidding British landholders, or any class or description of them, to sell their estates? In what manner would such an act be viewed by the courts in Westminster Hall?

The same observations apply to the second question, relative to the power of restraining, by proclamation, British subjects from purchasing land.

As the territory within which these lands were situated was acknowledged by the British Government, through the King, its constitutional organ for making such acknowledgments, to be an independent territory, over which that Government neither exercised nor claimed any jurisdiction, it may well be doubted whether an act of Parliament could produce the effect contended for. It certainly is not easy to imagine how the legislative, or other acts of a Government, can operate in a foreign territory. But admitting that in this case an act of Parliament might produce such an effect, it is an effect to be produced by a law, and not by a proclamation, which was not a law in England or her colonies then more than it now is in the United States. To restrain British subjects from the exercise of so dear and natural a right as that of making purchases, is surely an effect to which,

by the British constitution, the power of Parliament is alone competent. What, let it again be asked, would be thought in England, or in Jamaica, of a proclamation forbidding all persons, or a particular class of persons, from making purchases of land?

That the proclamation of October 7th, 1763, did produce, and could produce, no such effect, is further manifest from an opinion given officially to the King, nine years after its date, by three of the greatest lawyers that England ever produced, Pratt, Yorke, and Dunning, who were then the Crown lawyers, and two of whom, Yorke and Pratt, (afterwards the famous Lord Camden,) became Chancellors of England. Being consulted by the King in council, in the year 1772, as to the legal effects of Indian grants and royal patents, they gave the following answer, on the 1st of August, 1772.

"In respect to such places as have been or shall be acquired by treaty or grant, from any of the Indian princes or Governments, your Majesty's letters patent are not necessary, the property of the soil vesting in the grantee by the Indian grants, subject only to your Majesty's right of sovereignty over the settlements as English settlements, and over the inhabitants as English subjects, who carry with them your Majesty's laws wherever they form colonies, and receive your Majesty's protection, by virtue of your royal charters."

This opinion not only supports the validity of Indian sales to individuals, made after the proclamation, but shows the true use and operation of the royal charters; which was not to transfer the right of soil, or even the pre-emptive right; but to establish Governments, and extend to the settlements the privileges of British subjects, and the protection of the British Crown. It clearly proves that the proclamation of October 7th, 1763, was not considered in England as restraining the power of the Indians to sell, or the right of British subjects to buy.

That it was viewed in the same light in America, both by private persons and by those holding the highest offices under the British Government, is perfectly manifest. Among the grantees in the deeds under which your memorialists claim, are found the names of some of the most eminent lawyers of that day, both in Pennsylvania and Maryland, of some of the best informed merchants in both places, and of the Earl of Dunmore, then Governor of Virginia. These men cannot be supposed to have been ignorant of what was the law and practice of the British Government, on a subject of so much importance, where they were about to expend such large sums of money. Still less can it be supposed that they would knowingly violate the rules prescribed on such a subject, by a Government whose displeasure would have produced effects so serious to some of them. And when they were sanctioned in their proceedings by such an opinion as your memorialists have cited, surely they cannot now be considered as having acted illegally.

Your memorialists, on these grounds, humbly trust that they have destroyed the second branch of the objection as well as the first, and have proved "that the British King had no authority to restrain the Indians by proclamation, from exercising the right of sale, in favor of British subjects." Hence it results that the third objection to the claim of your memorialists, founded on the proclamation of October 7th, 1763, must fall to the ground.

They further take the liberty to suggest, on this head, that it may well be doubted whether the British King intended, by this proclamation, to forbid purchases from the Indians by individuals. An intent so clearly repugnant to the first principles of the British constitution ought to be very clearly made out, before it is admitted. The parts of the proclamation which relate to this subject are in the following words:

1st. "And whereas it is just and reasonable, and essential to our interest, and the security of our colonies, that the several nations or tribes of Indians, with whom we are connected, and who live under our protection, should not be molested or disturbed in the possession of such parts of our dominions and territories as, not having been ceded to or purchased by us, are reserved to them or any of them as their hunting grounds; we do therefore, with the advice of our privy council, declare it to be our royal will and pleasure, that no Governor or Commander-in-chief in any of our colonies of Quebec, East Florida, or West Florida, do presume, upon any pretence whatever, to grant warrants of survey or patents for lands beyond the bounds of their respective Governments, as described by their commissions; as also that no Governor or Commander-in-chief of our other colonies or plantations in America do presume, for the present, and until our further pleasure shall be known, to grant warrants of survey, or pass patents, for any lands beyond the heads or sources of any of the rivers which fall into the Atlantic ocean from the west or northwest, or upon any lands whatever, which, not having been ceded to or purchased by us as aforesaid, are reserved to the said Indians, or any of them."

2d. "And we do further declare it to be our royal will and pleasure for the present, as aforesaid, to reserve under our sovereignty, protection, and dominion, for the use of the said Indians, all the lands and territories not included within the limits of our said three new Governments, nor within the limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, as also all the lands and territories lying to the westward of the sources of the rivers, which fall into the sea from the west and northwest as aforesaid; and we do hereby strictly forbid, on pain of our displeasure, all our loving subjects from making any purchases or settlements whatever, or taking possession of any of the lands above reserved, without our special leave and license for that purpose first obtained."

3d. "And we do further strictly enjoin and require all persons whatever, who have, either wilfully or inadvertently, seated themselves upon any lands within the territories above described, or upon any other lands, which, not having been ceded to or purchased by us, are still reserved to the said Indians, as aforesaid, forthwith to remove themselves from such settlements."

4th. "And whereas great frauds and abuses have been committed in the purchasing lands of the Indians, to the great prejudice of our interests, and to the great dissatisfaction of the said Indians; in order, therefore, to prevent such interruption for the future, and to the end that the Indians may be convinced of our justice, and determined resolution to remove all reasonable cause of discontent, we do, with the advice of our privy council, strictly enjoin and require that no private person do presume to make any purchase from the said Indians of any lands reserved to the said Indians within those parts of our colonies where we have thought proper to allow settlement; but that, if at any time any of the said Indians should be inclined to dispose of the said lands the same shall be purchased only for us, in our name, at some public meeting or assembly of the said Indians to be held for that purpose by the Governor or Commander-in-chief of our colony respectively within which they lie."* The prohibition in question is supposed to be contained in the second of the clauses here cited, and in this part of it: "and we do hereby strictly forbid, on pain of our displeasure, all our loving subjects from making any purchases or settlements whatever, or taking possession of any of the lands above reserved, without our special license for that purpose first obtained."

The words undoubtedly contain a prohibition to make purchases; but the question is, whether that prohibition extends to purchases from the Indians, or is confined to purchases from the King's Governors? He had in the next preceding clause forbidden his Governors "for the present" to grant warrants of survey, or pass patents for lands situated as these were. This he clearly had a right to do; because those Governors were his own officers, deriving their whole authority from him, which authority he might therefore limit at his pleasure. It may well be supposed that, in order to render the prohibition more complete and effectual, he went on in the next clause, and forbid all his subjects, under pain of his displeasure, to buy from those officers, not only by warrants of survey or patents, but in any manner whatever.

This construction would satisfy the words of the proclamation, and would reconcile it with the constitutional powers of the King. And it is very much strengthened by the fifth clause, the object of which was to regulate purchases from the Indians* are expressly mentioned. But that clause does not extend to the lands now in question, which lay "to the westward of the sources of the rivers falling into the Atlantic from the west and northwest," and not "within those parts of the colonies where settlements were allowed."

It being, therefore, at least doubtful whether this proclamation was intended to prohibit such purchases from the Indians as those made by your memorialists, and a plain and clear intent being necessary to establish a construction so contrary to the principles of the British constitution, your memorialists humbly insist that on this ground also the objection founded on this proclamation ought to be disregarded. They now proceed to the

FOURTH OBJECTION.

That one of the deeds from the Indians to them contains only a number of lines, without comprehending any land whatever. This objection is contained in the report of the committee of Congress, in the year 1781.

It applies to the second tract described in the deed of 1773, from the Illinois Indians, which begins at the mouth of the Illinois river. On this objection, your memorialists would observe, in the first place, that, whatever may be its validity, it cannot affect their right to the other tracts, which are in no manner connected with it, except that one of them is conveyed by the same deed. It relates, therefore, not to their right of recovery, but to the extent of the recovery, which is matter of distinct and subsequent consideration.

They observe, in the second place, that it is an invariable rule in surveying, and in granting of lands, that where lines are declared in the instrument to run a certain course and distance to natural and fixed boundaries, which are described and can be found, such lines shall terminate at those boundaries, although the course may be found to be different, and the distance greater or less; in other words, that the boundary or fixed object, or "the call," as it is sometimes denominated, shall control the course and distance.

This rule is founded on the most obvious principles of common sense, justice, and convenience; it being manifest that a fixed object in the country, such as a tree, a rock, a river, a spring, a mountain, or a battle ground, is a much more certain, obvious and permanent indication of boundary than a course depending on the compass, or on conjecture, or a distance to be ascertained by measurement. The rule, therefore, is believed to be universal in its application; and it is more completely and properly applicable to Indian grants than to any others. As they never sell by actual measurement, and the direction of the lines is never ascertained by the compass, it follows that their courses and distances must always be conjectural, and very often erroneous. But they are well acquainted with the natural objects in their country, and describe them with great accuracy. All their lines are terminated by such objects; to which they constantly appeal when any question about boundary arises.

Let this rule be applied to the case in question, and your memorialists apprehend that all difficulty will disappear. The natural objects described in this deed can, no doubt, be easily found. Let the line be drawn through them as directed by the deed; it includes no land, your memorialists admit that they will be entitled to none. But their title to whatever land it may be found to include rests, as they apprehend, on the most solid foundation. They proceed to the

FIFTH OBJECTION.

That the purchase of 1775 from the Piankeshaws, on the Wabash, was made since the revolution, while Congress had an agent for Indian affairs residing at Fort Pitt, who had no notice of this purchase.

This objection also is contained in the report of 1781. It is a sufficient answer to it to say, that the revolution had not taken place in October, 1775, when this purchase was made. The colonies, indeed, were in arms to resist oppression, but they had not separated themselves from the mother country, or declared a change of Government. The powers of the British Government, moreover, so far as they ever extended to the country where these lands lay, were in full vigor and operation at the time of this purchase, and long after; nor did they cease till the treaty of peace in 1783. Till then the British remained in the actual and legal possession of all their posts and establishments in that country, and those Indians were their allies in the war.

There is, therefore, no pretence for saying that the United States had any right or claim to this country in October, 1775, when the purchase in question was made, or that their agent at Fort Pitt, if, in fact, there was one, had any thing to do with the affair.

SIXTH OBJECTION.

That the lands comprehended in these deeds have been since ceded by the Indian tribes to the United States, who have paid an adequate compensation for them.

This objection is set up by the committee of 1804. It is true in part, as your memorialists have already explained in their answer to the second objection. The

* See the proclamation at large in Marshall's Life of Washington, vol. 5, appendix; and in Chalmers's Collection of State Papers respecting the Colonies.

United States have purchased a part of these lands; first, from the Kaskaskias, in 1803, and afterwards from the Piankeshaws, in 1805. The part thus purchased constitutes about one-half of the lands sold to your memorialists, whose rights to the remaining half remains, of course, unaffected by these purchases of the United States.

But upon what pretence can it be said, that their right to the part subsequently purchased by the United States is affected by those purchases? They were not parties to the contracts; they had no notice or knowledge of them till after they were made; they never in any manner assented to them; their claim had been repeatedly and fully brought into the view of the Government of the United States, before those purchases were made; and if the Government, with that notice, chose to go on, and purchase land from the Indians, which those Indians had before sold, can the rights of the prior purchasers be affected by such a transaction! This, your memorialists presume, will not be seriously contended for: they therefore dismiss this objection, and proceed to the

SEVENTH AND LAST.

That the proceeds of sales of land in the Western country "belonging to the United States" are appropriated towards the discharge of the public debt.

This objection is urged in the report made by a committee of the Senate, in 1792.

The fact stated in the objection, and which is its whole foundation, is true as relates to lands belonging to the United States. But the lands now claimed by your memorialists never did belong to the United States, having been sold by the legal owners, before the United States were in existence, as an independent or separate Government; while no law forbidding such sales existed; and while the powers of the British Government, under which the United States claim, through the State of Virginia, were in as full operation as they could be in that country. This objection, therefore, does not affect the case of your memorialists; who trust that they have now proved their claim to be fair, legal, and valid.

But although they feel a perfect confidence in the legal and equitable grounds of their claim, they are ready to admit, that the measures adopted by the Government for the defence and settlement of the neighboring country have greatly enhanced the value of this property; and that it may be inconvenient to the public for individuals to hold so large a body of land. They are, therefore, willing to compromise with the United States, on terms liberal and mutually advantageous.

With this view, they take the liberty of suggesting two modes of compromise, either of which they are ready to offer, and one or the other of which they pray that Congress may accept.

First, that Congress shall confirm to them all that part of the land described in, and conveyed to them by the deed of October the 18th, 1775, which lies east of the Wabash, and south of the tract of land called the Vincennes tract; with permission to make all necessary arrangements with the Indians for the settlement of the country, and to sell the lands according to the plan and on the terms which may be adopted by the United States, with respect to the lands west of the Wabash; in consideration of which confirmation, they will relinquish and transfer to the United States all their claim to the rest of the land described and conveyed by both deeds.

Or, secondly, that the United States shall issue to them certificates of debt, transferable, and bearing interest, to the amount of what the above mentioned body of land east of the Wabash would sell for, at the price of two dollars the acre; the interest of these certificates to be annually paid, and the principal ultimately extinguished, out of the funds to arise from such parts of the lands included in both deeds, as the United States shall first sell: in consideration of which, your memorialists will relinquish and transfer to the United States all their right and title under both deeds.

This body of land, east of the Wabash, and south of the Vincennes tract, is not included in any of the purchases made by the United States from the Indians. Should the first proposition suggested by your memorialists be accepted, they would take on themselves the risk of obtaining from the Indians a recognition of the sales on which their claim is founded. Should they fail in this object, they will neither gain, nor the United States lose, by the confirmation proposed; but every thing will remain in the present situation. If, on the other hand, the recognition should be made by the Indians, it will extend to the whole sales of 1773 and 1775, and will operate as an extinguishment of the Indian title, in a very extensive tract of country, not heretofore purchased by the United States. The title of the United States to those large tracts which they purchased from the Kaskaskias and Piankeshaws, in 1803 and 1805, would moreover be quieted and confirmed.

Should the second proposition be accepted, the United States will have their title in the same manner quieted and confirmed, in the lands purchased by them in 1803 and 1805; and will moreover, acquire the Indian title in very large tracts, which have not yet been ceded to the Government. This Indian title which they will thus acquire, will enable them to extinguish the Indian claim in all these lands, at a very slight additional expense, and probably without any; while they would have nothing to pay to your memorialists, till it should be received from the sale of the lands themselves.

Your memorialists therefore hope, that the compromise which they propose will be deemed advantageous to the United States, and pray that it may be accepted by your honorable body; or that they may receive such other relief in the premises, as, in the wisdom and justice of Congress, the merits and circumstances of their case may seem to require.

And they will ever pray, &c.

By authority and on behalf of the United Illinois and Wabash Land Companies.

INDIAN DEED.

No. 2.

To all people to whom these presents shall come:

Know ye, that we, Tabac or Tobacco, Montour, La Grand Couett, Ouauaijao Tabac, junior, La Mouche Noire or the Black Fly, Le Maringouin or Mosquito, Le Petit Castor or Little Beaver, Kiesquibichias, Grelot, senior, and Grelot, junior, chiefs and sachems of the several tribes of the Piankeshaw nation of Indians, send greeting. Whereas Louis Viviart, of the Illinois country, merchant, one of the grantees hereinafter named, as well for himself as on the parts and behalfs of the several other grantees herein also after named, did, at several conferences publicly held with us, the said chiefs and sachems, at the towns and villages Post Saint Vincent and Vermillion, treat and confer for the purchase of certain tracts of land belonging and appertaining unto us, and to the several tribes of our nation whom we represent; and whereas, we, the said chiefs and sachems, have deliberately and maturely considered for ourselves and our posterities, and consulted with the other natives of our several tribes, respecting the proposals made as aforesaid to us, the said chiefs and sachems, by the said

Louis Viviart, on behalf of himself and others; and whereas, we, the said chiefs and sachems, as well as all the other natives of the several tribes of our nation are fully satisfied and contented for the consideration hereinafter mentioned, to grant and confirm unto the said Louis Viviart, and to the other grantees hereinafter mentioned, the several quantities or tracts of land hereinafter bounded and described.

Now know ye therefore, that we, the said chiefs and sachems of the Piankeshaw nation aforesaid, in full and public council assembled, at the town or village of Post Saint Vincent aforesaid, for, and in consideration of the sum of five shillings to us in hand paid by the said Louis Viviart, and for and in consideration of the following goods and merchandise to us, the said Tabac or Tobacco, Montour, La Grand Couett, Ouauaijao, Tabac, junior, La Mouche Noire or the Black Fly, Le Maringouin or Mosquito, Le Petit Castor or Little Beaver, Kiesquibichias, Grelot, senior, and Grelot, junior, for the use of the several tribes of our nations, well and truly delivered in full council aforesaid, that is to say, four hundred blankets, twenty-two pieces of stroud, two hundred and fifty shirts, twelve gross of star gartering, one hundred and twenty pieces of ribbon, twenty-four pounds of vermilion, eighteen pairs velvet laced housings, one piece of malton, fifty-two fuses, thirty-five dozen large buckhorn-handle knives, forty dozen couteau knives, five hundred pounds of brass kettles, ten thousand gun flints, six hundred pounds gun powder, two thousand pounds of lead, four hundred pounds of tobacco, forty bushels of salt, three thousand pounds of flour, three horses; also, the following quantities of silver ware, viz.: eleven very large armbands, forty wristbands, six whole moons, six half-moons, nine earwheels, forty-six large crosses, twenty-nine hairpipes, sixty pairs of carbobs, twenty dozen small crosses, twenty dozen nose crosses, and one hundred and ten dozen brooches, the receipt whereof we do hereby acknowledge; having granted, bargained, sold, aliened, released, enfeoffed, ratified, and fully confirmed, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell, alien, release, enfeoff, ratify, and fully confirm unto the said Louis Viviart, the right honorable John Earl of Dunmore, Governor of the colony and dominion of Virginia, the honorable John Murray, son of the said Earl, Moses Franks and Jacob Franks, of the city of London, in the kingdom of Great Britain, Esquires; Thomas Johnson, Junior, Esquire, attorney at law, and John Davidson, merchant, both of the city of Annapolis, in the province of Maryland; William Russell, Esq., Matthew Ridley, Robert Christie, Sen., and Robert Christie, Jun., of Baltimore town, in the said province of Maryland, merchants; Peter Campbell, of Piscataway, in Maryland, merchant; William Geddes, of Newtown Chester, in Maryland, Esq., collector of His Majesty's customs; David Franks, merchant, and Moses Franks, attorney at law, both of the city of Philadelphia, in the province of Pennsylvania; William Murray, and Daniel Murray, of the Illinois country, merchants; Nicholas St. Martin, and Joseph Page, of the same place, gentlemen; Francis Perthuis, late of Quebec city, in Canada, but now of Post St. Vincent aforesaid, gentlemen; their heirs and assigns, equally to be divided, or to His Most Sacred Majesty George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. his heirs and successors, for the use, benefit, and behoof of all the said several above named grantees, their heirs and assigns, in severalty, as aforesaid, (by whichever of these tenures they may most legally hold the same. The two several tracts or parcels of land hereinafter bounded and described, viz: one tract or parcel of land situate, lying, and being on both sides of the Wabash river, beginning at the mouth of a rivulet called rivière du Chat, or Cat river, where it empties itself into the Wabash river aforesaid, being about fifty-two leagues distant from and above Post St. Vincent aforesaid; thence, down the Wabash, by the several courses thereof, to a place called Point Coupee, (about twelve leagues above Post St. Vincent,) being forty leagues, or thereabouts, in length on the said river Wabash from the place of beginning, with forty leagues in width or breadth on the east side, and thirty leagues in breadth or width on the west side of the Wabash river aforesaid, to be continued along from the place of beginning to Point Coupee aforesaid. And also one other tract or parcel of land situated, lying, and being, on both sides of the Wabash river aforesaid, beginning from the mouth of White river, where it empties itself into the Wabash river, (about twelve leagues below Post St. Vincent,) thence, down the Wabash river, by the several courses thereof, until it empties itself into the Ohio river, being from said White river to the Ohio fifty-three leagues in length, or thereabouts, be the same more or less, with forty leagues in width or breadth on the east side, and thirty leagues in width or breadth on the west side of the Wabash river aforesaid, to be continued along from White river aforesaid, to the Ohio river aforesaid, [the intermediate space of twenty-four leagues, or thereabouts, between Point Coupee and the mouth of the White river aforesaid, being reserved for the use of the inhabitants of Post St. Vincent aforesaid, with the same width or breadth on both sides of the Wabash river as is hereby granted in the two other several tracts of land above bounded and described.] The aforesaid two several tracts of land hereby bargained and sold, from the first place of beginning, to the Ohio river, consisting, together, of ninety-three leagues in length on the Wabash river, and on both sides thereof, inclusive, seventy leagues in width or breadth, and that during its whole course as aforementioned, exclusive of and besides the reservation of twenty-four leagues in length and seventy leagues in width or breadth, for the inhabitants of Post St. Vincent reserved as aforesaid. And the said chiefs and sachems, for themselves and for the several other natives of their nation whom they fully and effectually represent, and their and every of their posterities, do hereby guaranty, engage, promise, covenant, and agree to and with the several abovenamed grantees, their heirs and assigns, and every of them, that they, the said several abovenamed grantees, their heirs and assigns, and every of them, shall and may at all times forever hereafter have and enjoy the full, free, and undisturbed navigation of the said Wabash river, from its confluence with the Ohio to its source; as well as of all the other several rivers running through the lands hereby bargained and sold, any thing herein contained to the contrary, or supposed to be in anywise, notwithstanding. And also all minerals, ores, trees, woods, underwoods, waters, watercourses, profits, commodities, advantages, rights, privileges, hereditaments, and appurtenances whatsoever, to the said two several tracts of land belonging or in anywise appertaining; and also the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof, and of every part and parcel thereof; and all the estate, right, title, interest, use, property, possession, claim, and demand of them, the said Tabac or Tobacco, &c. chiefs and sachems aforesaid, and of all and every other person and persons whatsoever, of or belonging to the said Piankeshaw nation of Indians, of, into, and out of the premises, and every part and parcel thereof: to have and to hold the said two several tracts or parcels of land, and all and singular the said granted and bargained premises with the appurtenances, unto the said Louis Viviat, &c. their heirs and assigns, forever, in severalty, or unto His said Majesty, his heirs and successors, to and for the only use, benefit, and behoof of the said grantees, their heirs and assigns, forever, as aforesaid.

And the said Tabac or Tobacco, &c., for themselves, and for all the several tribes of their nation, and all and every other nation or nations, tributaries and dependants on the said Piankeshaw Indians, and their and every of their posterities, the said several tracts of land and premises, and every part and parcel thereof, against them, the said several abovenamed chiefs and sachems, and the said Piankeshaw Indians, and their tributaries and dependants, and all and every of their posterities, unto all the severally abovenamed grantees, their heirs and assigns in severalty, or unto His said Majesty, his heirs and successors, to and for the only use, benefit, and behoof of the said grantees, their heirs and assigns, in severalty, as aforesaid, shall and will warrant, and for ever defend, by these presents.

In witness whereof, we, the said chiefs and sachems, on behalf of ourselves respectively, and on behalf of all the other natives of the several tribes of the Piankeshaw nation of Indians as aforesaid, have hereunto set our hands and seals, in the presence of the persons subscribing as witnesses hereunto, at a public council held at Post St. Vincent aforesaid, this eighteenth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

LAND CLAIMANTS UNDER A PROCLAMATION OF THE KING OF GREAT BRITAIN OF 1763.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 24, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred several petitions claiming lands for military services performed in the war of 1755, between Great Britain and France, made the following report:

That, considering the subject matter of the said petitions highly important, on account of the interest it has recently excited, and the speculation it has given rise to in various parts of the United States, the committee have carefully examined the state papers and public documents of the period of the above war, to ascertain the original foundation of the supposed claim. In pursuing this investigation, the committee have not been able to discover that any engagement or contract whatever was made or entered into by the Government, or under the authority of Great Britain, with the officers and soldiers of the provincial troops serving in the war aforesaid, for a grant of lands, either as an encouragement to their entering into the service, or as a compensation for services. All that the committee have been able to find on the subject is in a proclamation of the King of Great Britain of the 7th of October, 1763, (after the close of the war, and disbanding of the troops,) and is in the following words:

"And whereas we are desirous, upon all occasions, to testify our royal sense and approbation of the conduct and bravery of the officers and soldiers of our armies, and to reward the same, we do hereby command and empower our Governors of our said three new colonies, and other our Governors of our several provinces on the continent of North America, to grant without fee or reward, to such reduced officers as have served in North America during the late war, and are actually residing there, and shall personally apply for the same, the following quantities of land, subject, at the expiration of ten years, to the same quit-rents as other lands are subject to in the province within which they are granted, as also subject to the same conditions of cultivation and improvement, viz.:

"To every person having the rank of a field officer, five thousand acres.

"To every captain, three thousand acres.

"To every subaltern, or staff officer, two thousand acres.

"To every non-commissioned officer, two hundred acres.

"To every private man, fifty acres.

"We do likewise authorize and require the Governors and Commanders-in-chief of all our said colonies upon the continent of North America, to grant the like quantities of land, and upon the same conditions, to such reduced officers of our navy of like rank, as served on board our ships of war in North America, at the times of the reduction of Louisburg and Quebec, in the late war, and who shall personally apply to our respective Governors for such grants."

In this state paper the committee can perceive no foundation whatever for the present claim upon the United States. Instead of a contract with the officers and soldiers for land, the proclamation contains a mere instruction to the Provincial Governors: an instruction emanating from the munificence of the sovereign, and for conferring a gratuity, not issued for the satisfaction of any previous claim or demand upon Government. That the grant intended by the above proclamation was rather a testimony of respect and approbation than a donation of value, appears from the prescribed terms on which it was to be made, they being the same on which lands were granted to others in the provinces, with the exception that the military grants were to be made free of office fees, and exempt from payment of quit-rents for ten years. Had application been made to the Land Offices of the Provincial Governments, as was the duty of all claimants, there can be no doubt but that grants would have been readily made to the full extent of the bounty intended by the proclamation, subject, however, to the usual condition for settlement and improvement. Forty-seven years have now elapsed since the foregoing proclamation, during which period the above claims have lain dormant; and the committee do conceive that, upon fair and just principles, those claims would have been considered derelict and abandoned, had the Government under which they arose continued; but to admit them against the United States, placed as they now are under a Government founded on a Revolution which has intervened, is required by no principle of justice, and would, in the opinion of the committee, be an unauthorized disposition and sacrifice of the public property of the United States. On no principle of national law, or by any treaty or convention between the United States and Great Britain, are the United States bound to perform the engagements of the former Government of Great Britain, especially for mere bounties; nor would the purposes for which the several States have ceded land within their respective jurisdictions to the United States, warrant the appropriation of those lands for the satisfaction of the claims in question, were the same better founded than by the committee they are conceived to be. The committee, therefore, beg leave to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted. [NOTE.—See Report, No. 139.]

VIRGINIA MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 28, 1810.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, having been instructed to inquire what provision ought to be made respecting the location of Virginia military land warrants west of the boundary line designated by the act of 23d day of March, 1804, made the following report:

That it appears, that on the first day of March, 1784, the delegates in Congress from the State of Virginia did, in pursuance of an act of the Legislature of that State, convey and transfer unto the United States all the territory within the limits of the Virginia charter, lying to the northwest of the river Ohio, subject to certain terms and conditions; among which conditions is the following, viz.: "that, in case the quantity of good lands on the southeast side of the Ohio, upon the waters of Cumberland river, and between the Green river and Tennessee river, which have been reserved by law for the Virginia troops upon continental establishment, should, from the North Carolina line, bearing in further upon the Cumberland lands than was expected, prove insufficient for their legal bounties, the deficiency shall be made up to the said troops in good lands, to be laid off between the river Scioto, and Little Miami, on the northwest side of the river Ohio, in such proportions as have been engaged to them by the laws of Virginia. On the 17th day of July, 1788, Congress passed the following resolution: "Resolved, That the State of Virginia be informed that Congress consider all locations and surveys which shall be made by or on account of the said troops on the said land between the Scioto and Little Miami, before the deficiency, if any, on the southeast side of Ohio shall be ascertained and stated to Congress, invalid." It appears that, afterwards, the agents for the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line or continental establishment, communicated, through the Executive of Virginia, the information to Congress, that there was a deficiency of good land on the southeast side of the river Ohio, within the limits assigned by the laws of the State, to satisfy the said troops, for the bounty lands due to them, in conformity to law; whereupon, Congress, by their act of the 12th day of August, 1790, repealed the foregoing resolution, and authorized the said agents to locate, for the use of the said troops, between the rivers Scioto and Little Miami, good land, equal to the quantity of the deficiency on the southeast side of the river Ohio.

By an act passed on the 18th of May, 1796, it became the duty of the Surveyor General to cause to be surveyed and marked the unascertained outlines of the public lands lying northwest of the river Ohio. Under the authority of this act, the Surveyor General caused a line to be run from the source of the Little Miami towards the source of the Scioto river, which line was extended to the Indian boundary established by the treaty of Greenville, and is the boundary on the east, above the source of the Little Miami, of the lands of the United States which have been surveyed and offered for sale at Cincinnati.

This line was recognised and confirmed by an act passed on the 23d day of March, 1804, and was to be considered and held, together with its course, continued to the Scioto river, as the westerly boundary line of the Virginia military tract, Provided, the State of Virginia should, within two years after the passing of the act, recognise such line as the boundary of the tract. It does not, however, appear that the Legislature of Virginia have at all acted on the subject; but this boundary has been practically acquiesced in until within a very late period, by the holders and locators of Virginia military land warrants. It now appears, by unquestionable information, that surveys or warrants to a considerable amount have been made, in the present year, west of the aforesaid boundary line, on lands long since surveyed and offered for sale by the United States, and probably on lands already sold. These surveys and warrants have been sent on to the War Office for the purpose of obtaining patents, and there is no means within the War Office by which the locality of surveys within the Virginia military tract can be determined, or by which the locations made on the west side of the boundary line can be distinguished from those made on the east side. To prevent conflicting titles arising out of grants from the United States to different persons for the same land, a speedy remedy ought to be provided. The ground on which those who have made the locations claim the right of making them west of the boundary line is, that the existing boundary line is not correctly drawn from the head of the Little Miami in a direction towards the head of the Scioto river, and that all the lands embraced by a direct line extended between these two points are lands lying between the two rivers, and so liable to be located. The committee have not the means to ascertain the fact, whether the existing boundary line is correctly run between these two points or not, nor do they think it material that it should at present be known, for a decision on the case referred to them; as no statute of the United States has fixed these points for the boundary line of the Virginia military tract. The expressions "source of Little Miami," and "source of the Scioto rivers," are introduced in the act of the 23d of March, 1804, only as descriptive of a line then actually run. It is at least questionable whether any lands lying west of a line drawn with the general course of the Little Miami to the Scioto river can be considered, in the meaning of the above-mentioned condition of the deed of cession, to be lands lying between the Scioto and Little Miami rivers. If it should be decided that they are not, then the present boundary must be viewed as a concession, on the part of the United States, to a liberal construction of the above-mentioned condition; and that no justifiable claim can be set up for land beyond that boundary. But without relying on this position, the committee will remark, that all the land within the Virginia charter northwest of the river Ohio is vested by the deed of cession in the United States; that the above-mentioned condition operates as an obligation on them to convey a quantity (resting on a contingent event) of good lands between the Scioto and Little Miami rivers. It was then competent for the United States to have assigned and set off any section of the whole tract for that purpose, and, if that section should contain a sufficient quantity of good land, to satisfy the warrants that might be there lawfully laid, it would have been a good fulfilment of the condition on their part. Hence, the existing boundary line designated by the act of the 23d of March, 1804, must limit their surveys and locations, until it shall appear that there is a deficiency of good land within the tract to satisfy the warrants. On this view of the subject the committee respectfully submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That provision ought to be made, by law, to prevent the issuing of patents on surveys executed in virtue of Virginia military land warrants, west of the boundary line designated by the act of Congress of the 23d of March, 1804.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 24, 1810.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit the copy of a letter from the Receiver of Public Moneys at Cincinnati, respecting locations lately made by holders of Virginia military warrants, on lands lying west of the line designated by the first section of the act of March 23, 1804. Those lands make part of those surveyed and offered for sale by the United States; and it seems necessary that, at least until the line shall have been finally fixed by Congress, or by agreement with the State of Virginia, the issuing of patents on surveys, executed there by virtue of Virginia military warrants, should be suspended.

I have the honor to be, respectfully,

Sir, your obedient servant,

ALBERT GALLATIN.

HON. JEREMIAH MORROW,

Chairman of the Land Committee.

Copy of a letter from James Findlay, Esq. to the Treasury, dated

CINCINNATI, December 10, 1810.

SIR:

I have this moment received a letter from a particular friend of mine, giving me information that a Quaker whose name is Lad, and Duncan McArthur, have located with Virginia military warrants thirty-three thousand acres of land, lying west of a line run by Israel Ludlow, from the head waters of the Little Miami to the Scioto rivers, and south of the Indian boundary line; which land is surveyed in tracts containing from three to six thousand acres each; and the returns of the survey made in such a manner, that the officers of Government will not be able to discover that the land lies within the United States' district.

Lad went on to the seat of Government a few days since, in order to obtain patents for the land. They contend that Ludlow did not find the head waters of either of the rivers, and that all the land lying east, or north, of a line drawn from the head waters of both rivers is subject to entry by Virginia military warrants. I am not able to inform you whether the survey includes any land already sold by the United States, but think it probable it does.

My informant is a man of truth, and may be relied on; he does not wish his name mentioned in the business, or I would enclose you his letter. I have thought it prudent to apprise you of the circumstance, that you might prevent the patents from being issued, or delayed till more satisfactory information could be obtained.

I have the honor, &c.

2d SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS IN THE DISTRICT OF KASKASKIA-

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 2, 1811.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 31, 1810.

SIR:

I have the honor, in conformity with the acts of March 26, 1804, and March 3, 1805, to transmit a copy of the report of rejected claims, made by the commissioners appointed for the purpose of examining the claims of persons claiming lands in the district of Kaskaskia. This consists of a general report, sundry documents thereto annexed, and four alphabetical lists of the rejected claims, under the heads of ancient grants, improvement claims, donations to heads of families, and militia donations. It is provided by the act of March 3, 1805, that the lands, the claims to which, though rejected by the commissioners, were derived from actual possession, improvement, and settlement, shall not be otherwise disposed of until the decision of Congress thereupon shall have been made. It will be perceived by the report, documents, and lists, that either want of proof, or fraud, are the reasons assigned by the commissioners for the rejection of the greater part of that description of claims.

In addition to the transcripts of decisions made by the commissioners in favor of claimants, which were transmitted towards the close of the last session of Congress, the commissioners made several special reports in favor of persons claiming town-lots, out-lots, and a common right in the commons and common fields of the several villages of the district. These reports not being included in the general transcripts of favorable decisions, and having been annexed to the plats of survey of the tracts to which they refer, were not discovered till after the adjournment of Congress. They are now transmitted, together with a special report of the commissioners on the subject of P. Renault's claims, and with the copy of a letter written on the 14th May, 1810, to the commissioners, on the subject of their confirmations to lots and commons, which were not in every respect distinctly understood. In relation to Renault's claims, it is proper to state that they embrace, not only the tracts in the Kaskaskias district reported on by the commissioners, but also some valuable lead mines in Louisiana. The lots and out-lots of the former village of St. Philip, in the district of Kaskaskia, appear, by the report of the commissioners, to have been uniformly claimed by persons deriving their title from the said Renault; but the claim to other tracts, and particularly to the lead mines, had lain dormant for more than sixty years, from the year 1744, when he left America, till after the organization of the Boards of Kaskaskia and Louisiana.

The transcripts of favorable decisions, confirmed by the act of Congress of last session, and the reports of rejected claims, as above stated, do not embrace any claims which might have been previously confirmed by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana territories. On these the commissioners have made a separate report, to which are annexed lists of those confirmations, arranged under the same heads as the commissioners' decisions. The report, and the observations annexed to the lists of claims, raise doubts respecting the validity or propriety of several of those confirmations by the Governor. But the commissioners have not, as was done by those for the district of Vincennes, distinctly stated which of those, in their opinion, ought to be confirmed, and which appeared liable to objections. A letter was written to them on that subject on the 23d of May last, to which no answer has yet been received. Copies of the report, lists of confirmation, and letter aforesaid, are now transmitted.

The act of last session, confirming the favorable decisions of the commissioners, has not provided the manner in which the donation claims shall be located and surveyed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
Sir, your obedient servant,
ALBERT GALLATIN.

The Honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

GENERAL REPORT,

With the documents thereto annexed, Toitton's depositions and recantation, and the four books of rejections.

In this paper we shall exhibit to Government our construction of the laws under which we have acted; our rules and practice relating to the requisition and reception of evidence; and the complexion of a great part of that testimony which has been exhibited to us in support of claims which we have rejected.

There are four species of claims upon which, as commissioners for this district, we have had to act. 1st. Those founded on ancient grants, or allotments derived from former Governments or from the Indians. 2d. Those founded on the grant of a donation of four hundred acres to each of those who were heads of families in the country at or after the treaty with England in 1783. 3d. Those founded on the having actually improved and cultivated land in the country, under a supposed grant of the same by court or commandant. 4th. Those founded on the having been enrolled on the 1st of August, 1790, and done duty in the militia.

Relating to these claims, there have been passed by Congress the following laws, viz.: 1st. A law of the 20th June, 1778, ordaining, first, that measures be immediately taken for confirming in their possessions and titles, the French and Canadian inhabitants, and other settlers on those lands, who, on or before the year 1783, had professed themselves citizens of the United States, or any of them; and secondly, that a donation shall be given to each of the families now living at either of the villages of Kaskaskia, Prairie de Rocher, Cahokia, Fort Charters, or St. Philips. A law of the 3d of March, 1791, ordaining, thirdly, that where lands have been actually improved and cultivated, under a supposed grant of the same, by any commandant or court claiming authority to make such grant, the Governor of said territory be empowered to confirm to the person who made such improvements, their heirs or assigns, the land supposed to have been granted as aforesaid, or such parts as he may judge reasonable, not exceeding to any one person four hundred acres.

4th. That the Governor be authorized to make a grant of land, not exceeding one hundred acres, to each person who hath not obtained a donation of land from the United States, and who, on the 1st day of August, 1790, was enrolled in the militia, and has done militia duty.

In this law it is further ordained, that those persons who were entitled to lands under ancient grants, or as heads of families under the law of 1788, who had removed out of the country, should, notwithstanding, be entitled to such lands, provided that they, or their heirs, should return and occupy them within five years, viz. on or before the year 1796; and a law of March 15th, 1804, devolving upon the commissioners for the district of Kaskaskia the powers and duties of the Governor within said district.

I. OF ANCIENT GRANTS.

The commissioners are satisfied that no grants made during the continuance of the British Government in this country, either by its officers or by the Indian tribes, were either authorized or sanctioned by it.

The known regulations of the British Government, the proclamation of General Gage of 1773, and that of the King of Great Britain of the 7th of October, 1763, are, we think, decisive on this point.

With respect to the French grants, from the wanton outrage which has been committed on their records by the British officers, and others, it has been rendered impossible for the present claimants, generally, either to produce the concessions to the conceders under whom they claim, or a regular chain of conveyances from them. Of course in default of those proofs, we have been obliged to receive oral testimony, going to prove the existence of such grants or allotments, or long and quiet possession of the tracts claimed; otherwise we should have ruined the most quiet and inoffensive part of this community.

II. OF DONATIONS TO HEADS OF FAMILIES.

We have construed the law on this subject in such a manner, as to suppose it meant to provide for all those who had become heads of families in the country from the peace of 1783 to the passage of the law in 1788. We think the laws of June and August, 1788, and March, 1791, warrant this construction.

III. OF IMPROVEMENT RIGHTS.

From the proclamation of Colonel Todd, the first commandant under Virginia after the conquest, and from the many proofs we have had of verbal permission having been given by him and succeeding commandants to individuals to settle on the public lands, we have raised the presumption, that in all cases where we have found an actual improvement and cultivation upon vacant lands, it was made under what the law of 1791 terms a "supposed grant;" as we fully believe every individual settling upon such lands thought himself authorized to do so by the then existing authority of the country.

In our own construction of the term "actual improvement and cultivation," we have supposed it to mean, not a mere marking or deadening of trees; but the actual raising of a crop or crops, it being in our opinion a necessary proof of an intention to make a permanent establishment; and we have allowed but one improvement claim to the same man, in which we are clearly warranted by the 4th section of the law of 1791.

IV. OF MILITIA RIGHTS.

The law of 1791 seems to require, not only that the original claimants should have performed military service, but that he should have been actually enrolled on the 1st day of August. But two things are evident to this Board, first, that the militia rolls were at this period (if found at all) very imperfect and partial; and, secondly, that every man in the country during these troublesome times was liable to be, and when necessary was actually, called on to do military duty. Of course we have, in default of proof of enrolment, been satisfied with proof that the original claimant was at this period a resident in the country, and did militia duty.

We remark here, that we have given to no person a militia donation, who has received a donation, as head of a family. In this decision we have been warranted by the sixth section of the law of 1791. It was required by the second section of the said law of 1791, that those persons entitled to lands in virtue of ancient grant or as heads of families in virtue of the law of 1788, who had removed out of the country, should, in order to perfect those titles, return within five years from that date. On this point the following reflections have pressed on the mind of the commissioners with decisive force.

1st. Although provision was made for the present claimants under the acts of Congress as early as 1788 and 1791, yet these laws in their favor were industriously concealed from them by certain speculators for a considerable period; and many of them left the country, despairing of ever having their hopes realized.

The French inhabitants in particular, (being Roman Catholics,) seem to have been assured by these gentlemen, that, if they should reside within the limits of the United States, their slaves, of which they had a great number, would be liberated, and they would be obliged to abjure their religion.

2d. On the commencement of the business of this Board, the commissioners found most of the persons of the latter description residing in Louisiana, within the Government of the American nation; and that their lands had not been alienated.

Those of the former class had generally returned to those states to which they had emigrated, and almost all appeared anxious to re-occupy their lands, and become citizens of the country.

3d. The only agent authorized to confirm these titles, during this period, was the Governor of the Northwestern Territory, who was generally at the distance of four or five hundred miles, and frequently for a long period out of the territory. It is in evidence, that many of those people did return, and found no person to grant them liberty to re-occupy their lands.

The commissioners have, therefore, presumed that those who, under these circumstances, have come forward before them to support honest claims, have complied with the requisitions of the law.

They not only believe this presumption to be consonant to the principles of natural equity, but that the stern requisition of evidence to this point would have been highly injurious to the country.

Of our rules and practice relating to the requisition and reception of evidence.

Under this construction of the law, so favorable to the claimants, and finding ourselves placed between our country and individuals under an obligation to do justice, without regard to forms, we have felt ourselves obliged to require the most satisfactory proofs, not mechanical, but moral; and, whenever we have found a witness testifying that which he has known to be false, we have disregarded his testimony in any other case although he might not have been regularly convicted of perjury in a court of law.

We have, in order to accommodate the country, and in compliance with the precedent set, and uniformly followed, by our predecessors in this business, authorized certain persons, at a distance, to take in proofs in support of claims before us. We have been the more strongly urged to this step, as our right, by compulsory process, has been denied to procure the attendance of witnesses without the territory. The effect of this measure will be seen by what follows:

Of the testimony adduced in support of claims which we have rejected.

Almost all the claims which we have rejected on account of corrupt testimony, have been supported by persons having or assuming the following names, viz: Auguste Longlois, John Harris, Johnston Amberson, Daniel Thorn, Solomon Thorn, Joseph Pavé, John B. Montruelle, Simon Toiton, Nicholas Revelle, J. Cook, Thomas Comstock, John Hildebrand, Samuel Henly, John McMurey, and Ashur Bagley.

And as we have, for the sake of brevity, every where in these cases, referred to this document, which will be entered on our record, it becomes necessary here to exhibit some among the many proofs of this corruption.

We here premise that the testimony of these men has been taken in writing, and generally signed by them; that, when we had found it impossible to give general credence to their testimony, we called on those persons principally concerned, and requested them to bring their witnesses before the Board for a re-examination, stating our suspicions, and the grounds of them; and stating further, that, as those witnesses had sworn in support of such an infinite number of claims, as to render it impossible for them to remember what they had said in each case, they (the claimants) had now an opportunity, if the facts they had attempted to prove by these witnesses were true, to convince us of it beyond all contradiction, by such a re-examination.

That, in this examination, we were ready to make every allowance for unessential variations; that, if they had testified honestly, they must certainly recollect the facts they had stated, since they had then but recently given in their depositions; and lastly, that the character, both of the witnesses and claimants, was concerned in such an investigation. But not a man to our recollection, has been brought forward for examination by any of them, and most of the said witnesses were then living in the country. Finding that the claimants would not bring these men forward, and being unwilling to reject claims to a great amount with any uncertainty upon our minds, we summoned a train of the most ancient and respectable inhabitants of the country, and who were, of course, intimately acquainted with it, to testify respecting said claims. We also called forward all their most important witnesses within our reach: the result will be seen in the following details:

Of AUGUSTE LONGLOIS.—Who lately resided at St. Louis, and by the testimony of Jean Bte. St. Jeme Beauvais, (see General Testimony,) is now about thirty-four years of age; his testimony has generally been given at St. Louis; he has given a great number of depositions relative to improvements said to have been made in the years 1784-5, &c. (at which periods he must have been from eight to ten years old only,) and this, too, in support of claims laid in a very distant part of the country from that where he then lived; his testimony has been almost in all cases in favor of John Edgar. The following are among the cases in which the Board have pronounced his testimony perjured, viz.: claims No. 2046, 2559, 2024, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2084, 2218, 2222, '3, '4, and '5, 2234, '35, '36, '37, 2266, 2320, 2380, 2331.

Of JOHN HARRIS.—This fellow was, in early times, a kind of straggling blacksmith in this country, and generally known by the nick-name of Old Harry; his depositions, we believe, have generally been given in support of the claims of John Edgar, or Robert Reynolds, and commonly before one or the other as magistrates; he had left the country when we commenced our business; and we suspect many of the depositions signed in his name to have been forged. The following are among the cases in which we have pronounced them false, viz: claims No. 2031 and '2, 2035, 2037, 2020.

Of JOHNSTON AMBERSON.—This poor wandering wretch, equally destitute of morality or character, died some years ago in a drunken fit; he has, we believe, been willing to testify, on moderate terms, for any man who would pay him for it, and before any body who would take his testimony; his testimony, we think, generally goes to support the claims of John Edgar, Robert Morrison, Robert Reynolds, and William Kelly. The proofs of his perjury may be found in claims No. 1668, 2590, 1581, and '83, 887, 1911, '12, and '13; from 2179, to 2496, 2499, 2500, 2230, and '31, 2213, 2352, 1912.

Of DANIEL THORN.—This is a man of no education, property, or character; in the early sitting of this Board, not having heard much about him, we were in the habit of receiving his testimony as good, till we received written information from the Board at Vincennes that he had been guilty of perjury. We were then induced to scrutinize his testimony. Proofs of his falsehoods are to be found in our record, under claims No. 2388, and '9, 1913; from 2474 to 2480; from 2483 to 2494, 2503 and '4, 2530 and '31, 2351 and '52, 1581 and '83.

His testimony has generally gone to prove the claims of the persons mentioned under the preceding name.

Of SOLOMON THORN.—This man is a brother to Daniel Thorn, and alike in property and character, a gunsmith by trade, who has happened not to live long in a place; his testimony has been generally applied to the benefit of those who have employed his brother; he has not sworn largely. His character for veracity may be seen by reference to claims No. 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772.

Of JOSEPH PAGE.—This man is a Frenchman, and has been a great swearer; we have, perhaps, two hundred of his depositions, generally given in favor of the large land-jobbers; and of all which, we believe, he has kept copies. Being compelled to suspect his veracity, we summoned him before us for re-examination, notifying those most interested in his testimony to attend, and, as delicately as possible, informed him of the reasons of this measure; but he would not utter a word without his paper, except to abuse the Board; we dismissed him, and entered into a critical examination of his testimony. The following are among the many cases exhibiting proofs of his falsity, viz: claims No. 2396, '7, '8, and '9, 2422, and '3, 2017, '19, and '20, 866, 871, 1583, 2368, 2370, and '71, and 2372 and '3, '4, '5, '6, '8, '9; from 2400 to 2409, 2451, 2024, 2084, 2240, 2277, 2320, 2336, 2431 and '2, 2439, and '40.

Of JEAN B. MONTRIEULLE.—This is a Frenchman, ignorant, without property or standing in society. After having given in, perhaps, about fifty depositions in favor of the principal land speculators, as will appear by our record, he was called forward by the Board for re-examination, who, at the same time notified those chiefly concerned in his testimony; and he freely and voluntarily acknowledged himself, on oath, to have been guilty, in a very great number of cases, of perjury; he was probably induced to this, by being told that the commissioners would eventually entrap him, and that his only safe course was to come out with an honest acknowledgment. But a reference to the following claims will show, independent of his acknowledgment, that he has been perjured: Nos. 1656, 787, 2481, 2530 and 31, 2019, 2210, 2259, 2271, '2, '3, and '4.

Of SIMON TOITON.—This is a Frenchman, without property, fond of liquor, and who has been clerk of the Roman Catholic parish of Prairie du Roches; after having given perhaps two hundred depositions in favor of John Edgar, William and Robert Morrison, and some others, he was induced, either by compensation, by fear, or by the impossibility of obtaining absolution on any other terms, to come forward before the Board of Commissioners, and declare on his oath that the said depositions were false, and that, in giving them in, he had a regard to something beyond the truth. This acknowledgment, as well as that of Montrieuille, are in writing, subscribed by themselves, and on file. But the proofs, among others, that this man has indeed perjured himself, are found in claims No. 2396 and '7, 1668, 2590, 1583, 2368 and '9, 2373 and '4, 2378 and '9, 1918.

Of NICHOLAS REVELLE.—This man is supposed to be a Dutchman, without property, fond of strong drink, and without character. It appears, by general testimony, that he has not been long in this country; yet he has given a great number of depositions at St. Louis, and at St. Charles, in Upper Louisiana, before persons by us authorized in support of claims, (almost exclusively of large landholders,) commencing as early as 1783-4. Among other proofs of his perjury, we quote the following; under claims Nos. 2396 and '7, 2422 and '3, 2431 and '2, 1656, 2526 and '7, 2012, 2252, '3, '6, and '7, 2262, '65, and '66, 2308, '9, '10, '11, '12, 2317 and '18, 2324, 1911 and '12, 2514 and '15, 2451.

Of JOHN COOK.—This man is a Dutchman, living in the neighborhood of St. Charles; where he has given in (in support almost exclusively of the claims of Edgar, the Morrises, Reynolds, Kelly, and Lord, whose names are found on our abstract,) we think, about two hundred depositions. It is certain by the testimony (herewith transmitted) of his own son, and of John Doyle, and others, that he first came into this country in 1787; yet most of his depositions go to state facts pretended to have come under his own observation in the country in 1784-5-6. But independent of this circumstance, we offer the following proofs of his perjury, in having stated what is in fact false, viz: under claims No. 1918, 2013 and '14, 2017, 2422 and '3, 2439 and '40, 2514 and '15, 1909, 1913, '14, and '15, 2554.

We here remark, that we have, in a more especial manner, urged those concerned to bring this man before the Board for examination, and have summoned him ourselves, but he never came. We further remark, that many of these depositions have been written by John Edgar, and other claimants of Kaskaskia, and sent up to said Cook at St. Charles, where they have been signed and attested to by him, without the least alteration.

Of THOMAS COMSTOCK and JOHN HILTEBRAND.—These men (now living in Upper Louisiana) are ancient and respectable inhabitants of this country, and are universally acknowledged to be men of probity; finding several hundred depositions poured in upon us from St. Charles in their names, (by the persons mentioned under the preceding names,) we summoned them to appear before us for examination. They came, and on their oath, and with tears in their eyes, declared that they had never been at St. Charles in their lives; and that they had never known any other persons of their names in the country, except their own sons, who were too young to testify to the claims which they had been made to support. The names of these men have been assumed by persons to us as yet unknown.

We have thought it unnecessary to exhibit any proofs of the falsity of said depositions, as these persons have never deposed. Their testimony before the Board is on our files, signed by themselves.

Of SAMUEL HENLY.—This man was also an ancient inhabitant of this country; we have never seen him; a great number of depositions have been given at St. Charles in the name of this man, by a certain John Kidd, a disbanded soldier, who has been taken up thither from Kaskaskia for this purpose; we have on our files his written acknowledgment, on oath, to this fact, signed by himself. We further observe, that, from the best information we could obtain, said Henly has not been recently in this country; and, of course, could have given in no depositions at St. Louis or St. Charles.

Of JOHN MCMUTREY.—Of this man, whom we have never seen, we know nothing. His depositions have been given in either at St. Charles or at St. Louis, and we suspect by some person who had assumed his name. However this may be, we refer, for proof of the falsity of said depositions, to claims Nos. 1909, '10, '11, '12, and '13, 1765, 1769 to '72, 1913, 1920.

Of ASHUR BAGLEY.—It appears, by the testimony of Nancy Lunerford and Samuel Judy, that this man did not come into the country until 1798; yet he has testified to facts as having come under his observation in the country as early as the years 1784, and '5. For proof of his falsity, we refer to claims Nos. 2552 and '3, 2572 and '3.

Of FORGED DEEDS.—In a considerable proportion of the cases where claims have been supported by perjured testimony, we have been presented with forged deeds, conveying the claims thus supported. They amount to a very great number. We annex to this report some specimens of these also.

We close this melancholy picture of human depravity, by rendering our devout acknowledgments that, in the awful alternative in which we have been placed, of either admitting perjured testimony in support of the claims before us, or having it turned against our characters and lives, it has, as yet, pleased that Divine Providence which rules over the affairs of men, to preserve us both from legal murder and private assassination.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
February 21, 1810.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, October 1, 1809.

The undersigned, agent of the United States, before this Board enters his solemn protest against the affirmation of any claims to land in this district which are supported by the testimony of the persons hereinafter named, for this: that the depositions given by said persons before this Board, or elsewhere, are in general false, and the said deponents notoriously perjured; and that the interests of the United States will be, by the admission of their testimony, affected to a vast amount. The persons to whose testimony he more particularly objects are the following, viz.: Auguste Longlois, John Harris, Johnston Amberson, Daniel Thorn, Solomon Thorn, Joseph Pagé, Jean Bte. Montrieuille, Simon Toiton, Nicholas Revelle, John Cook, Thomas Comstock, John Hiltbrand, Samuel Henly, John McMutrey, and Asher Bagley.

The depositions of persons assuming these names were adduced to support the claims of Robert Morrison, John Edgar, Robert Reynolds, William Morrison, Richard Lord, and William Kelly, and others.

The cases in which he flatters himself he shall be able to prove, entirely to the satisfaction of this Board, that these men have perjured themselves, are the following, viz.: Nos. 2016, 2559, 2024, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2031, 2218, 2222, '3, '4, and '5, 2234, '35, '36, '37, 2266, 2320, 2380, 2331; Nos. 2031, '2, 2035, 2037, 2020; Nos. 1668, 2590, 1581 and '3, 887, 1911, '12, and 13, from 2179 to 2496, 2499, 2500, 2230, '1, 2213, 2353, and 1912; Nos. 2388 and '9, 1913, from 2474 to 2480, from 2183 to 2494, 2503 and '4, 2530, '1, 2351, '2, 1581, '83; Nos. 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772; Nos. 2396, '7, '8, '9, 2422 and '3, 2017, '19, and '20, 866, 871, 1583, 2368, 2370, '1, '2, '3, '4, '5, '6, '8, '9, from 2400 to 2409, 2451, 2024, 2084, 2210, 2277, 2320, 2336, 2431, '2, 2439, '40; Nos. 1656, 787, 2481, 2530, '31, 2019, 2210, 2259, 2271, '2, '3, and '4; Nos. 2396 and '7, 1668, 2590, 1583, 2368, and '9, 2373 and '4, 2378, '9, 1918; Nos. 2396, '7, 2422, '3, 2431, '2, 1656, 2526, '7, 2012, 2252, '3, '6, '7, 2262, '5, '6, 2308, '9, '10, '11, '12, 2317 and '18, 2324, 1911, '12, 2514, '15, and 2451; Nos. 1918, 2013, '14, 2017, 2422, '3, 2439, '40, 2514, '15, 1909, 1913, '14, '15, and 2554; Nos. 1909, '10, '11, '12, and '13, 1765, 1769 to 1772, 1913, and 1920; Nos. 2552, '3, 2572 and '73.

In support of these claims, these persons have sworn falsely; and the agent has no hesitation to declare that he is fully satisfied they had been suborned; and he prays this Board to take up and reconsider the said claims, (many of which have been heretofore confirmed on the above mentioned testimony,) and thereon to decide agreeably to law and justice.

A. ROBINSON, Agent U. S.

DOCUMENTS.

The following reports of cases rejected will serve to show the Government the grounds on which claims were rejected, as well as how laborious and impossible it is for the Board to transmit, at the present time, a full copy of the testimony in this class of claims.

No. 2044. JOHN EDGAR—Claims twelve arpents square, on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, opposite the town, bounded northwardly by lands of this claimant, southwardly by lands formerly held by the Jesuits; this being held as assignee of Francis, Michel, Joseph, Jean Baptist, Jerome, Philip, and Ursal, Derouse, St. Pierre, and Joseph Thibault, who were heirs of Joseph Turpin, deceased; which said lands were granted by a French commandant in the year 1742.

Remarks. The records in this case seem to be lost. The Board, however, find a record of concession to said Joseph Turpin by Messrs. De Bienville, Governor of Louisiana, and Salmon, Intendant of said province, on the 2d day of August, 1743, (see United States' Register, Book B, p. 178, of a piece of land adjoining this, on the hills eastwardly, in which the grant of an implacement at this place is mentioned as having been previously made to said Turpin.) This, under these circumstances, the Board take to be sufficient proofs of ancient allotments. But as this tract is also claimed by Pierre Menard, as assignee of Francis Turpin, said to be the son of said Joseph, (see No. 1939,) the Board being in doubt which of these two claimants has the legal right, do therefore affirm the same to the legal representatives or heirs of the said Joseph Turpin. [Revised on recent testimony.]

It is stated by this claimant, as well as by Pierre Menard, (see the claim 1939,) in their respective notices, that the tract here claimed was originally conceded by the French Government to Joseph Turpin, under whom they both claim; said Menard by deed, dated 29th July, 1801, in which this tract is conveyed to said Menard by Francis Turpin, styling himself the son of said Joseph; and John Edgar, by deed, dated 10th April, 1803, in which the same tract is conveyed by Michel, Francis, Joseph, J. Baptiste, Jerome, Philip, Ursal, Derouse, St. Pierre, and Joseph Francis, and Marie Thebault, styling themselves to be the children, and little children, and heirs of the late Marie Joseph Turpin, widow of St. Pierre Derouse, deceased, which Marie Joseph Turpin was (as is stated in said deed) niece and only heir of Joseph Turpin, late of Kaskaskia, deceased.

The question now arises, who was the legal heir of Joseph Turpin? the said Francis, or the said Marie Joseph Turpin?

To this point Edgar adduces the following testimony, to wit: that of Equin Deinville, (taken, by direction of this Board, before Moses Austin, Esq., of Louisiana,) stating that, four or five months after the death of the said Joseph Turpin, Madame Turpin went to the Ohio with a certain Lamarande; and, on their return to Kaskaskia, she proved with child, and, after some difficulties, they were married; that, after the marriage, Madame Lamarande had a son, whose birth must have been about sixteen months after the death of said Joseph Turpin. He adduces, also, the testimony of Marie Turgeon, taken before John Hay and Nicholas Jarrot, Esqrs. at Cahokia, stating that she never knew that Turpin Maran (supposed to mean Joseph Turpin) ever had but one daughter, (called Magdaline,) that married afterwards one Pierre Levigne; and after the death of said Turpin, the widow married one Lamarande, but does not know that they had any children. On the other hand, Pierre Menard adduces the testimony of Pierre Richard, an ancient inhabitant of the country, taken before this Board, stating that this deponent (being 64 years of age) was well acquainted with a certain Joseph Turpin, who died at Kaskaskia, when he, this deponent, was about ten years of age; that the said Joseph was married to a woman whose name he does not now recollect, but who was, after his death, married to a man by the name of Lamarande; that the said widow had a son by the first husband a few months after his death, who was called Francis Turpin, also Lamarande, in consequence of his mother having married Lamarande; that this deponent was well acquainted with the family of the said Francis, who was always considered as the son of the said Joseph Turpin, deceased. The deponent cannot say how many months after the death of the said Turpin the birth of the said Francis took place, but that it was said that the mother of the said Francis was pregnant with him at the death of the said Joseph Turpin. He further adduces the testimony of St. Jeme Beauvais and Vital St. Jeme Beauvais, (whose characters for information, respectability, and integrity, are, as this Board suppose, well known to the Government,) stating that the said Joseph Turpin was uncle of their father; that it is perfectly within their knowledge that he had two children by Hypolite, his wife, one of them called Magdaline Turpin, and the other Francis Turpin, surnamed Lamarande; both of whom were, to their knowledge, born within the marriage of the said Joseph with the said Hypolite; and that they have always been regarded by the deponents as the legitimate children of the said Joseph and Hypolite: and lastly, that the estate of the said Joseph had been equally divided between them. It appears further, by the testimony of Joseph and Jerome Derouse St. Pierre, two of the apparent grantors in the deed to Edgar, that the said Marie Joseph Turpin was the daughter of Louis Turpin, the brother of the said Joseph, who had another brother, by the name of Francis, who died without issue, as did also the issue of the said Louis, excepting the mother of these deponents.

Remarks. It has been stated in the testimony of the above Marie Turgeon, that said Joseph Turpin had a daughter named Magdaline, who married a certain Lavigne; but this Board are not informed by either claimant whether she is dead or has issue.

It is remarkable in this case, that said Edgar relies for his title to a tract bounding on the one here claimed, on a conveyance from this very Francis Turpin, styling himself son of the said Joseph, through whom the said property came, to John R. Jones, from whom the said Edgar purchased, and that on this conveyance said title has been actually confirmed, (see his claim, 2105.) It is further most remarkable that the said Joseph and Jerome St. Pierre, two of the apparent grantors in the said Edgar's deed, have, on their oaths, utterly denied ever having executed such an instrument, or knowing any thing of such a transaction; and also, that John Hague, an apparent witness, has, on his oath, denied ever having signed his name to the said deed, or known any thing of such a transaction. It is also to be remarked, that the said deed has been acknowledged before Robert Reynolds, whose character as forger and perjurer will be known to the administration from our report. Under these singular circumstances, this Board do not hesitate to declare their opinion that the said John Edgar has no title to the tract here claimed, and do reject this claim accordingly.

No. 2094. JOHN EDGAR—Claims as assignee of Catharine Laviolette, four hundred acres, in virtue of the said Catharine's having been head of a family in the year 1783.

Witnesses.—Barbeau and Decochi state that she was head of a family at Prairie du Rocher, in 1783, and before and after that date.

This claim was transferred to the claimant by deed, dated 10th April, 1793.

[Affirmed, and reversed on recent testimony.]

It appears, on a review of this claim, December 26th, 1809, that this woman was not a widow in the year 1783, as is stated, but that she was a married woman, and died long before her husband, who lately died in St. Genevieve, in Louisiana. It appears, also, that the before recited deposition, by which this claim has been supported, is a forged one, since the said Barbeau and Decochi have testified that they neither signed their names to said deposition, nor attested to the facts therein stated; and since it appears, from a comparison of their names, actually written by themselves, in the presence of this Board, on the back of said deposition, with their names written at the foot of said deposition, that the latter cannot be their hand writing, but the name of said Barbeau was written by the said John Edgar, of course the Board reject this claim.

No. 2068. JOHN EDGAR—Claims four hundred acres, as assignee of John Cochran, in virtue of an improvement made by said Cochran on the hills east of Prairie du Rocher, and conveyed to this claimant, by deed dated May 10, 1793.

This claim is confirmed by Governor St. Clair to John Edgar.

[Reviewed on recent testimony.]

Although this claim has been confirmed by Governor St. Clair, as is above stated, yet this Board cannot forbear to express their entire conviction that the said confirmation has been obtained through fraudulent means; as, first, they are convinced by the testimony of Barbeau, Lecompte, Belcour, and Bond, who were intimately acquainted with this man, and this part of the country, that no such improvement was here made; and, secondly, they are satisfied that the deed in this case adduced, dated 10th May, 1793, signed John Cochran, and witnessed by Henry Allin and Joseph Belcour, and acknowledged June 10th, 1795, before William Morrison, is a fraudulent one; since the said Belcour solemnly denies ever having signed his name to said instrument, and since all the before recited witnesses declare, that in their opinion, the name of John Cochran, was not written by himself. Of course, it is the opinion of this Board that the aforesaid recited confirmation ought to be considered as a void one.

No. 2046. JOHN EDGAR—Claims four hundred acres of land, as assignee of Louis Pellette Lasonde, April 26, 1793, who claimed in virtue of an improvement, situated on the hills opposite Prairie du Rocher.

Witnesses.—Auguste Longlois deposes, that this improvement was made in 1786; that a cabin was built, and two or three acres of land cultivated till 1792. Jean Baptiste Montrieulle deposes, that this improvement was made in 1784 or 1785; that a cabin was built; that the land was cultivated in corn and wheat; and that this place is situated on the hills, four or five miles from Prairie du Rocher.

The foregoing testimony cannot be credited in opposition to general testimony, yet it appears to be the testimony of his old neighbors, Barbeau, Lecompte, Belcour, and Decochi, that the man did, about this period, cultivate about two arpents under the hills at the Little Pass; but as the deed in this case adduced, dated the 26th of April, 1793, signed Louis Pellette Lasonde, and witnessed by Joseph Belcour and Gabriel Decochi, conveying the above claim to John Edgar, is flatly contradicted by the above witnesses, both of whom solemnly declare that they never signed their names to said instrument; and, as it appears from their signatures in the body of their deposition, that they could not have done so, and as it is stated from their certain knowledge by Belcour, Decochi, Lecompte, and Barbeau, that said Pellette could not write his name; the Board are satisfied that said deed is a forgery; and they cannot but remark that it is in the hand writing of John Edgar. The Board do, therefore, believing the right of said Pellette to be a good one, affirm to the said Pellette this improvement claim at the Little Pass, where his said improvement by the before written evidence is proved to have been made.

No. 1997. JOHN EDGAR—Claims four hundred acres of land, as assignee of Jean Flander, October 14, 1793, who claimed in right of improvement; situate about seven miles from Prairie du Rocher, on the hills.

Witnesses.—Jean Baptiste Montrieulle deposes, that, in 1784, said Flander built a cabin, cleared and enclosed, and planted in corn, two or three acres at this place. Lasoblanier and Degagnie depose substantially to the same facts. [This claim is affirmed. Revised on recent testimony.]

The Board, in this case, can have no confidence in the testimony of Montrieulle, (see General Report.) Lasoblanier and Degagnie are utterly unknown to this Board; besides, this deposition appears to have been taken before Robert Reynolds, Esquire, whose character is noted in our records; above all, in this case, the deed is undoubtedly a forgery, being dated October 14, 1793, and written on paper made at Redstone mill, which was not erected for many years after this date, as appears from the paper marked L. S. & Co.; besides, it appears from the testimony of Gabriel Decochi and Joseph Belcour, the apparent witnesses to said deed, that their said names were not written by themselves. It further appears by the testimony of said Decochi and Jean Baptiste Barbeau, that the name of said Flander was not written by himself. It further appears by the testimony of Barbeau, Decochi, Belcour, Pierre Lecompte, and Shadrach Bond, Senior, who were well acquainted with this part of the country, and most of them with the man himself, that this man had no improvement whatever, and that none had been made on the spot here described by any other person. [Rejected.]

No. 8. ROBERT REYNOLDS—Claims as assignee of John Harris, by deed dated November 2d, 1802, four hundred acres of land, in virtue of improvement made by said Harris, in the American bottom, near the mouth, and on the southwest side of Mile creek, in the county of Randolph.

Witnesses.—John Cook, Daniel Thorn, Clement Drury, Joseph Pagé.

Proof.—That about the year 1786, said Harris cultivated a farm of about ten or twelve acres at this place, and resided in the country until 1803; Pagé states that in 1780 or '81, Harris cultivated about two acres. The deeds appearing regular, and the cultivation of the land particularly proved by Cook and Pagé, the Board affirm this claim. [Revised on recent testimony and rejected.]

John Cook's deposition was taken at St. Charles, (see General Report.) The Board have no confidence in the deposition of Thorn; Drury's deposition is proved to be a forgery; the deposition of Pagé cannot be credited in opposition to that of Clement Drury and Larkin Rutherford, taken before the Board July 30, 1807, who depose that they lived within about a mile of this place, about 1782 and '83, and knew of no such improvement; and that Harris lived at St. Phillips a few months only. [Rejected.]

No. 10. ROBERT REYNOLDS—Claims, as assignee of Drusilla Turcotte, administratrix of the estate of Joseph Turcotte, deceased, four hundred acres, in virtue of an improvement made by said Turcotte, by deed dated 10th June, 1803, situated on the east side of the Mississippi, below the mouth of the river Marie, in the county of Randolph.

Witnesses.—James Kincade and Daniel Thorn.

Proof.—That the said Turcotte occupied this place, (being about two miles below the mouth of Cape Cinque, Homme's creek) from 1784 to 1794, principally for making sugar; that he built a cabin, cleared about two acres of land, and planted about half an acre in corn, &c. Pagé states that he began this improvement in 1790 or 1791, and occupied it as a sugar camp.

The apparent grantor in this case, Drusilla Turcotte, came forward, and utterly denied ever having executed the above recited conveyance (now on file,) and said that the deceased, her husband, never intended to set up any such claim. The Board having, in consequence, summoned James Cooper, one of the subscribing witnesses to said conveyance, he appeared, and on oath utterly denied having ever subscribed his name as a witness to said conveyance, or having any knowledge of such an instrument. Pierre Menard, one of the justices of the Court of Common Pleas, for the county of Randolph, before whom the execution of said conveyance appeared to be proved by the evidence of a certain Coneyxon, apparently a subscribing witness to the same, appeared, and on oath stated that he had never taken the evidence of the said Coneyxon, relative to the execution of the said instrument; and that his name subscribed to a certificate on the back of the said instrument, stating that such evidence had been taken before him, was not written by him; and that he never knew of any such transaction.

The Board do therefore reject this claim.

No. 38. ROBERT REYNOLDS, (improvement,) assignee of Antoine Provost, by deed, dated the 20th of February, 1803—Four hundred acres in virtue of improvement by said Provost made; situated on the river Doza, a few miles east of the Kaskaskia river.

Witness.—Daniel Thorn.

Proof.—That, in 1785, said Provost had an improvement at the forks of Doza river; had a cabin, and three or four acres of land under cultivation, on which he lived eight or nine years; and then moved to Kaskaskia, where he now lives, January 16, 1805.

Remarks.—Antoine Provost, (alias Provo,) the only person of that name known in Kaskaskia, appeared before the Board, and in the presence of said Reynolds declared, that he never had an improvement right, and that he never did execute the above deed. Reynolds acknowledged that the said Provo was not the grantor in the above recited deed, but a person of this name whom he would bring forward at a proper time, or abandon his claim; and having failed to do this, and there appearing on the very face of the said deed evident marks of fraud, the signature of James Wood, Samuel McCough, as well as the signature of N. Hull, before whom Samuel McCough is said to have proved the execution of said deed, are, in the opinion of the Board, in the hand-writing of Robert Reynolds.

The Board reject this claim.

No. 1361. RICHARD LORD—Claims four hundred acres, as assignee of James Murry, in virtue of improvement and cultivation made, on the north side of Muddy creek, and below the forks thereof, prior to the year 1783, adjoining lands of said Lord.

No. 1362. Richard Lord—Claims four hundred acres of land, as assignee of James Murry, in virtue of his having been head of a family in the Illinois, in the year 1783.

The commissioners find a deed signed by James Murry, witnessed by Peter Foster and William Dunn, acknowledged before Samuel Gibson, Esq., dated November 10th, 1794, conveying these two claims, No. 1361 and 1362, and in the hand-writing of Richard Lord; they find also the deposition of John Chambers, taken November 10th, 1798, before said Gibson, stating that in the year 1782, he, the said deponent, knew the said Murry to make an improvement on Muddy creek, below the forks, when he raised corn several years, built a cabin, where he lived with his family; had about fifteen acres cleared and fenced, and from which he was obliged to move on account of the Indians. But as the said deed, besides having other suspicious appearances on its face, is, although dated in 1794, written on paper made at Redstone Mill; which date was previous to the erection of said mill, and the deposition as well as deed is in the hand-writing of Lord.

John Cook and Thomas Comstock have deposed in support of these two claims, of whom see general report.

The Board do therefore reject these two claims, Nos. 1361 and 1362.

No. 2392. ROBERT MORRISON and THOMAS HARMON—Claim four hundred acres, the improvement right of the said Harmon, situate on the east side of the Mississippi, adjoining the improvement of Abraham Harmon, about thirty miles above the mouth of the Ohio.

Proof.—The deposition of Joseph Pagé (on file) states, that he knew Thomas Harmon, who had a cabin about ten leagues above the mouth of the Ohio, on the east side of the Mississippi, adjoining the improvement of Abraham Harmon, and in 1784 had two or three acres of land cleared and fenced, and was cultivating corn, and was head of a family in 1783 and 1788. The deposition of Simon Toiton (on file) states the same facts substantially; but only says he was head of a family in 1788.

No. 2393. ROBERT MORRISON and THOMAS HARMON—Claim four hundred acres, the donation of said Harmon as having been head of a family in the Illinois in 1783.

Remarks.—This and the preceding claim, No. 2392, are conveyed to Robert Morrison by said Thomas, as it appears by a deed dated the 20th day of October, 1805. But as this Board can have no confidence in the foregoing testimony adduced in support of these claims, and as the said deed is undoubtedly a forgery, in the opinion of the Board.

The names of Thomas Harmon (the grantor) in this case, and of Isaac Harmon, a subscribing witness, being in the same hand-writing, and as the deed is also acknowledged before Robert Reynolds, these two claims are rejected.

No. 2491. JOHN ROBERTS and WILLIAM MORRISON—Claim four hundred acres of land, by virtue of an improvement made in the year 1786, situate about three miles above the mouth of Plumb creek.

Proof.—The depositions of Johnston Amberson and Daniel Thorn (on file) state that, in the year 1786, they knew said Roberts to build a cabin, clear and cultivate about two acres of land, about three miles above the mouth of Plumb creek, on which he lived with his family one or two years; and that he lived with his family in the country four or five years afterwards.

The deposition of Joseph Pagé agrees with the above substantially, except this, that he knew the said Roberts to clear and fence for cultivation, but does not know positively that he raised any crop.

[Rejected for reasons as stated under the following claim, No. 2492.]

No. 2192. JOHN ROBERTS, by WILLIAM MORRISON—Four hundred acres of land, the donation right of said

Roberts, as having been head of a family in the Illinois in 1783. This claim is supported by depositions stated under No. 2491.

Remarks.—It is to be noticed in this case, that the deed conveying these two claims to Joseph Morrison, dated 14th June, 1705, signed "John Roberts," is in the hand-writing of Robert Morrison; and this Board truly believe it to be entirely a forgery. The names of William Dunn and James Blackburn are apparently written by the same person, as well as that of the grantor, John Roberts; and this Board having no confidence in the testimony adduced in support of these two claims, they do therefore reject these two claims.

No. 1656. WILLIAM SICKLAG by WILLIAM WHITESIDE—Claims four hundred acres of land by virtue of an improvement made by him on the waters of Kaskaskia, near the mouth of Silver creek, in the year 1779; who occupied the same until driven off by the Indians in 1780.

Proof.—John Lacey and Nicholas Revelle state, in the year 1784, said Sicklag built a cabin, fenced and cultivated in corn about one acre and a half of land, at the edge of the low grounds at the foot of the hills, at the gap made by Cahokia creek, at the third hollow below the gap, and by a run of water, where he lived with his family; and that he remained in the country until 1793, '4, or '5. The deposition of Jean B. Montreulle is to the same effect, except that his residence is said to have continued only until 1789; and that he cultivated two or three acres. Solomon Thorn deposes to the same effect.

Thomas Comstock deposes that Sicklag, in 1783, or '4, built a cabin, cleared a quarter of an acre on Wood river, not Cahokia creek, and from thence went to Kentucky. The witnesses in this case contradict each other. Allary and Pellette state there was no improvement in that quarter so early. [Rejected.]

No. 1657. JAMES MORRIS, by WILLIAM WHITESIDE—Claims four hundred acres of land, by virtue of an improvement by him made in the year 1779, on the waters of Kaskaskia creek, near the mouth of Silver creek; and occupied until driven off by the Indians in 1780.

Proof.—Solomon Thorn states, that, in the year 1789, he was at the improvement of said Morris, being at the foot of the bluff of hills about a quarter of a mile from the coal banks in St. Clair county, where he was living with his family in a cabin, and had in cultivation about two acres of land in corn: this deponent was informed by Morris that he had lived there about two years. Jean B. Montreulle states, that, in 1784, said Morris built a cabin, and cultivated about three acres in corn, where he lived two or three years, and was then driven off by the Indians; that he remained in the country with his family until 1788, or '9.

Shadrach Bond, Senior, deposes, that said Morris came to the country in 1793, and that he was beginning to raise a crop in Cahokia common field, in which year he left the country, and has not since returned to it; and, lastly, that said James Morris, as this deponent believes, never made an improvement at this place in this notice mentioned.

The Board have no confidence in the testimony of Thorn or Montreulle. Nicholas Revelle and John Lacey substantially prove the same facts as Solomon Thorn and J. B. Montreulle. But as the Board have no confidence in the depositions of Thorn and Lacey, and those of Revelle and Montreulle are perjuries, they reject this claim.

No. 887. WILLIAM KELLY—Claims four hundred acres of land, in virtue of an improvement made by him, situate at the bluff near Cape Cinque Homme, a few miles below lands of Colonel John Edgar.

Proof.—The depositions of Samuel Henly and Thomas Comstock, adduced in support of these claims, are perjuries (see General Report.) The depositions of Jean B. Barbeau and Simon Toiton, adduced also in support of this claim, are declared by themselves on oath to be false. The deposition of Michael Antya, apparently taken before Jean B. Barbeau, Esquire, must be false; since it is dated in 1782, and mentions Kelly having been here three or four years in the United States' service, which he could not have been for several years after this period; besides, said Barbeau was not a magistrate at this time. The deposition of a certain John McLain was taken before Robert Reynolds, and disagrees with the former depositions, particularly that of Antya. The deposition of Johnston Amberson disagrees likewise with that of Antya, and is worthy of no credit. [Rejected.]

No. 2624. WILLIAM BIGGS.—Four hundred acres of land, the improvement of said Biggs, about fifteen miles above the village of Kaskaskia, on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, confirmed by Governor St. Clair, and an order of survey has issued, which will appear in the Secretary's office on record. The order of survey lost. The certificate of said confirmation daily expected; improved in the year 1781, by this claimant. The above are the words of said Biggs's notice.

No. 230. WILLIAM BIGGS, assignee of STEPHEN JOHN FRANCIS—Claims four hundred acres of land, in virtue of an improvement made by said Francis in 1781, situate on the east side of Kaskaskia river, opposite the mouth of Horse creek.

The board find that this right was conveyed by said Francis to this claimant 3d of January, 1797; and by Governor St. Clair confirmed to this claimant.

[The two preceding claims, No. 2624 and 230, revised.]

In the decision formerly made by the Board, it was considered that the two entries above referred to in the Governor's record, under No. 230, related only to the claim No. 230. As, by the first, the claim appeared not to have been finally decided on, and as second entry was not accompanied by any mark of approbation or rejection, it was considered that the Governor had revised the claim, and become satisfied of its validity, and thought it unnecessary to do more than make a simple entry of it in this list of confirmed claims.

The Board now find that these two entries respect different claims; the first relating to William Biggs's own improvement, No. 2624, and the latter to that of Francis, No. 230; and as, in the first case, the Governor seems not to have been fully satisfied of the validity of the claim, and in the latter has added no mark of approbation to his said entry, so the Board cannot consider the claim as having been confirmed by him in either case, to wit, the claims 2624 and 230; and as it appears by the testimony of Henry Levins, recently exhibited, that no improvement was in fact made, either by Biggs on the tract claimed under No. 2624, or by Francis on the tract claimed under No. 230, the deponent having viewed the ground in person, and it having been acknowledged to him by Biggs that no cultivation had been ever made, the Board do therefore reject these two claims, Nos. 2624 and 230.

No. 2017. JOHN EDGAR—Claims four hundred acres of land, as assignee of James Shaw, September 20, 1798, who claimed in right of improvement made, in the county of St. Clair, near Bellefontain; bounded on one side by lands of the widow Moore, and on the other side by lands supposed to be vacant.

Witnesses.—Joseph Pagé deposes, that said Shaw made an improvement in the year 1782, on the hills near Bellefontain, and to the east thereof, about one mile and three quarters, that he built a cabin, cleared and fenced two or three acres of land, and planted the same in corn, and was head of a family in the year 1783; and after that date John Cook deposes, that, in the year 1786, said Shaw was living on this improvement with his family, where he had about six acres under cultivation in corn; and that he resided on it till about the year 1789, or '90. Thomas Comstock (not the spurious one) deposes, that he knew James Shaw in Cumberland; but does not recollect of ever having known a man of this name in the Illinois. The testimony of Pagé and Cook, in support of this claim, the Board think perjured. The claimant in this case adduces a deed, dated September 20, 1798, conveying the above claim to John Edgar, signed James Shaw, witnessed by John Grosvenor and William Morrison, and acknowledged before said Morrison, then an acting magistrate; but it appears from the deposition of William Shaw, the brother of said James, that the said James was not in the Illinois country at the date of said deed, (which was executed in Kaskaskia,) nor at any other time since the year 1780; and the said Grosvenor, who appears on the face of the deed to have been one of the subscribing witnesses to said deed, has declared on his oath, that he does not believe his name in said deed to have been written by himself; and that he has no recollection of such a transaction. And it appears further, by the testimony of Nathaniel Pagé that David Shaw, a son of said James, has recently acknowledged to this deponent, that at or about the time of execution of said deed, he came into the country, with a power of attorney from said James to manage his land claims, and did indeed sign a deed to John Edgar, but was unacquainted with the nature of the instrument; and suspected he had been imposed on, being then very young; further adding, that the said James, his father, left this country in the year 1779, or '80, and never returned to it afterwards.

On this singular transaction the Board cannot but remark, that, in their opinion, the said David Shaw, instead of affixing his father's name to said deed, had intended to have subscribed it with his own, as attorney in fact. They believe this, as the name of the said David has been written and erased, and the name of the said James put in its place.

Has the said David (being at the date of said deed very young) been persuaded to take this improper step if so, by whom? and for what purpose?

The Board cannot but further remark, that William Morrison, Esquire, who was a witness to this transaction, has, as a magistrate, in the same day, certified, on his official oath, that (not said David, then a boy, but) James Shaw acknowledged this instrument to be his act and deed, conveying a right, which, if it existed at all, must have commenced before the said David was born. [Rejected.]

No. 751. JESSE and ABIAH HUNT (bought of John Edgar)—Claim six hundred acres of land, as assignees of John Edgar, assignee of Jean Baptiste Aumier, Antoine Cotino, heir of Joseph Terrien, Charles Laform, Joseph Danie, Joseph Chevalier, Gabriel Obishon, militia-men in the Illinois country.

The claim of Joseph Terrien has been previously conveyed by John Edgar to William McRoberts, (see No. 566;) it is therefore here rejected by the Board. The other five claims have been confirmed by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. [Revised.]

The deed in this case to Edgar, of Terrien's militia right, is in the hand-writing of said Edgar, and apparently executed by Antoine Cotino, who undertakes to sell the right of Terrien, who was his father-in-law. The said Cotino has come before this Board, and solemnly sworn that he never executed the said conveyance. Joseph Belcour, who appears to have been one of the subscribing witnesses, and who is the only man of that name known to this Board in this country, has also solemnly deposed, in this office, that he never was a witness to said instrument, and that the name affixed thereto is not his hand-writing. It further appears, that the deed, though dated in 1792, was written on paper made at the mill of Johnston, Smith, and Craig, of Kentucky, as will appear by the paper mark, although this mill, as the Board are informed, was not then erected. Above all, it appears by a copy of the parish record of Prairie du Rocher, certified by D'Olivier, priest of said parish, that Terrien did not die until the 17th of April, 1792, nearly three months after the date of the said deed to said Edgar, which was dated the 6th of January, in the same year; of course Cotino could not, at this time, have been the heir of Terrien, he being then living. It is further worthy of remark, that this deed was acknowledged before William Morrison, Esq. on the 5th day of April, 1799, although it appears to the Board that both said Edgar and Morrison must have known that Terrien was not deceased at the execution of said deed; they both having lived many years within twelve or fifteen miles of him; and being also, as the Board have reason to believe, well acquainted with him.*

This claim must, therefore, be rejected on the ground of fraud.

The commissioners cannot, in justice to the present claimants, but remark, that their characters cannot possibly be implicated in this transaction, since they could not know whether the deed under which Edgar held this claim of Terrien was a good or a bad one.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
November 21, 1809.

The undersigned, agent of the United States, represents to this Board, that the claims of Samuel Stephenson, exhibited and claimed by Robert Morrison, No. 2410, improvement, and also No. 2411, the donation of said Samuel, are unfounded and fraudulent; and for this he refers the Board to the testimony of Pagé and Toiton, adduced in this case, as well as the face of the deed, conveying these claims to the said Robert Morrison. The agent has no hesitation in stating, that, from his long acquaintance with the hand of the said Robert Morrison, he is well assured, that not only the signature of the grantor, of William Dunn and of John Sides, witnesses, but also the signature of Robert Reynolds, * Edgar has lived in the country since 1784, and Morrison since 1790; both traders at Kaskaskia, and acquainted with almost every man in the country.

before whom the acknowledgment of the said deed was taken, (as it seems by the deed,) is in the hand-writing of the said Robert Morrison, and therefore is a forgery.

From the very face of the papers, the agent has no doubt that these claims ought to be rejected by the Board.

R. ROBINSON, A. U. S.

The Honorable COMMISSIONERS, Kaskaskia.

No. 2410. SAMUEL STEPHENSON, by ROBERT MORRISON.—Four hundred acres of land, in right of cultivation and improvement, made in the Illinois country, on Silver creek, about fifteen miles from its mouth, on the west side.

No. 2411.—Also, four hundred acres of land, the donation right of said Stephenson, as head of a family in 1783.

Proof.—The deposition of Joseph Pagé (on file) states, that the claimant had an improvement on Silver creek, on the northwest side, and about fourteen or fifteen miles from its mouth, in the year 1783; had a small cabin thereon, two or three acres of land cleared and fenced, and was planting corn; and also, that he was head of a family in 1783 and '88. The deposition of Simon Toiton is to the same effect, with this addition, that the claimant lived on this improvement in the years 1784 and '85; and was with his family in the Illinois in the year 1789 or '90.

Remarks.—The Board have no confidence in this testimony in support of these two claims; these two claims are therefore rejected.

[NOTE.—A deed in this case has been adduced, apparently executed by Samuel Stephenson, conveying the two preceding claims to Joseph Morrison, a brother of said Robert, which is in the hand-writing of said Robert Morrison; and the Board believe that every signature in said deed is in the same hand-writing, to wit, of Robert Morrison, as well as the signature of Robert Reynolds, before whom this appears to have been acknowledged. The Board are satisfied the whole of this transaction is a palpable forgery.]

The above is a true copy from the record.

Attest: J. FINNEY, Deputy Clerk.

Lest further proof should be thought necessary, than the testimony of so respectable a character as Haydon Wells, as well as that of Henry Cook and J. Doyley, to disprove the testimony of said Pagé and Cook, we observe that we have on our files a letter from William Shaw, the brother of James Shaw, who lived in the Illinois country with said James, and left it with him, dated 1809, enclosing said Wells's deposition, and acknowledging that his said brother left the country in 1779, and that he has not returned. This proof is the more striking, as the said William had purchased the improvement and donation claims of said James; was anxious to have them affirmed by the commissioners; and, in said letter, pleads that the meritorious services of his brother in the frontier wars ought to induce the commissioners to affirm his claims, although he had left the country in 1779.

Attest: J. FINNEY, Deputy Clerk.

Of the testimony of Auguste Longlois, Randolph county.

Be it remembered, that, on the 6th day of February, 1798, personally came before the subscriber, one of the Justices of the Peace for the county aforesaid, Auguste Longlois, who made oath, according to law, that he well knew James Reynolds, in and about the year 1784, to settle, cultivate, and improve a tract of land situated on the Kaskaskia creek, which he claimed by virtue of a concession from Mr. Dumont Bruin, commandant; and that he built a cabin, made fields, and planted corn and other grain, therein, and further, that he was obliged to abandon the said land, on account of the depredations of the Indians.

AUGUSTIN LONGLOIS.

Sworn before me, this day and year before written,

WILLIAM MORRISON.

In opposition to the above testimony J. Bte. St. Jeme Beauvais, an ancient and respectable inhabitant of this country, states on oath, that he was, at this period, perfectly acquainted in this tract of country, and every part of the same, and that there was absolutely no improvement made here by any one, nor higher up the Kaskaskia, near its bank, than that of James Wyley's, at a large spring; this deponent further adds, that Auguste Longlois (the above deponent) was, in this year 1784, a small boy of not more than eight years of age.

R. ROBINSON, Clerk.

INDIANA TERRITORY, Randolph county:

Be it remembered, that, on the 20th of February, 1803, personally appeared John Harris, before me, Robert Reynolds, Esq. one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, and a Justice of the Peace; who, being sworn on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, did depose, and say, that he knew George Snow settle, and improve, and cultivate a tract of four hundred acres of land situated on Horse creek, near Prairie Du Rocher, cleared and fenced about two acres, and built a cabin thereon, and lived on and cultivated the same place until the year 1789; at which time he was obliged to abandon it, and come to the village, on account of the depredations of the Indians; and here resided for several years after.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this day and date above written.

ROBERT REYNOLDS.

In opposition to the foregoing testimony, it appears certain, by the testimony of Louis Seguin, that no such improvement could have been here made. This man is an ancient and respectable inhabitant of the country; his testimony was taken before this Board, and is as follows:

Question by the agent of the United States. Was there any improvement and cultivation made on Horse creek before March, 1791, or in its neighborhood? and have you been in this part of the country?

Answer. At this place there was formerly a great number of wild horses, which we used to go and take; had there been any cultivation here, I must have known it, or heard of it; and I do not believe there was any cultivation made here before the establishment made by Mr. Henry Levings; and I have well known this country for more than thirty years.

Of the testimony of Daniel Thorn and Johnston Amberson.

ST. CLAIR COUNTY, Indiana Territory:

Personally came before me, William Biggs, authorized by the commissioners to take proofs of land claims in said county, Johnston Amberson and Daniel Thorn, who, being duly sworn, depose and say, that they knew Solomon Thorn to make an improvement on the bank of the Illinois river, about three or four miles above the Pesaw; and that the said Thorn built a cabin, and cleared about two or three acres of ground, and planted the same in corn, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-six. These deponents further state, that the said Thorn was head of a family in the same year, 1786.

DANIEL THORN, his x mark.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, this 1st day of June, 1805.

In opposition to the above testimony, personally appeared before the Board, Joseph Poupard and Baptiste Alary, ancient inhabitants, and well acquainted with this part of the country, who, on their oaths, declare that they do not believe that there ever was an improvement made at or near this place, during the above-mentioned period.

William Biggs, Esq., also on his oath, declares that, in the year 1788, he was acquainted with said Thorn at Vincennes, and that he was then but a lad.

Of the testimony of Jean Baptiste Montrieulle.

The said Jean Baptiste Montrieulle, on oath, says he also knew William Ziglag in the same year, 1784; made an improvement about twenty miles above Cahokia, near the Hills, or Bluffs; where he had two or three acres of land in corn, fenced in, and a log cabin thereon; where he was with his family some years, and was obliged to leave the same on account of the Indians being troublesome; and was with his family in the Illinois until some time in 1788 or 1789.

JEAN B. MONTRIEULLE, his x mark.

Taken and subscribed before me, November 19, 1806.

WILLIAM ARUNDAL.

In opposition to the foregoing testimony, personally appeared B. Alary, Louis Pellette, and Shadrach Bond, Esq. ancient and respectable inhabitants of the country, and well acquainted with this part of it, and on their oaths declared, that they never knew of any such improvement; that it could not have been made without their knowledge.

Bond adds, that said Ziglag was one of Clark's soldiers; that he left the country, as he believes, soon after he was disbanded, in the year 1780; and that no improvements were made at the time mentioned in the above deposition in the neighborhood.

Attest: R. ROBINSON, Clerk.

Of the testimony of Johnston Amberson.

This man's testimony is to be found under the entry of the testimony of Daniel Thorn.

Of the testimony of John McMutrey.

Who, being duly sworn, deposes and saith, that he knew Solomon Thorn in 1786 make a settlement east of the Mississippi river, about four miles above the Pesaw, when and where said Thorn built a small house and smith's shop; cleared and cultivated about four acres in corn; and that said Thorn yet lives in the Illinois country.

J. RANKIN.

Attest: R. ROBINSON, Clerk.

In opposition to the above testimony, see the report under the testimony of Daniel Thorn.

This Board cannot but further remark, that they are well acquainted with said Solomon; that he cannot be older, in their opinion, than thirty-five or thirty-six; and that it is well known in this country that, about the aforesaid year of 1786, he was an apprentice boy to Colonel Small, at Vincennes.

Of the testimony of Nicholas Revelle and Simon Toiton.

Personally appeared before me, duly authorized by the Board of Commissioners at Kaskaskia to take depositions in the district of St. Charles, Nicholas Revelle, who, being duly sworn, deposes and saith, that he knew John Jack in Illinois country in the year 1784; at that time he dwelt on an improvement made by him on the east side of the Kaskaskia creek, about twenty miles from the village, where he had a cabin built, and about five acres of land planted in corn; that he dwelt with his family on said improvement until the year 1788 or 1789.

COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
February 27, 1806.

The depositions of Simon Toiton, taken before the Board of Commissioners, &c.

This deponent on oath saith, that he well knew John Jack in the year 1786, and about that time, and that he saw him living on a small improvement on the little river of Tamarois, on the west side of the river Kaskaskia, where he had a small cabin built, and two or three acres of land planted in corn; and that he lived thereon with his family until about the year 1788 or 1789; and to the best of this deponent's recollection, he went down the Mississippi.

Question. Do you know that said Jack was head of a family in this country in 1789?

Answer. Yes.

SIMON TOITON.

Of the testimony of Solomon Thorn.

Solomon Thorn, being duly sworn, deposes and saith, that he knew John Powell in the year 1786 or '7, who was settled on a piece of land northwest of the river Kaskaskias, about four miles above the mouth of Silver creek, where the meadow puts into the river, and lived thereon two seasons; that he built a cabin, and cleared and cultivated at least three acres in one of the said years. This deponent further saith, that said John Powell was driven off by the Indians to Kaskaskia, and that he did militia duty, and was the head of a family.

SOLOMON THORN.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA, June 23, 1807.

Then personally appeared Ashur Bagley, of St. Clair county, and on his oath declared, that, about the year 1784 or '5, he assisted a certain Stephen Ray to make an improvement at a place at the foot of the bluff bounding the Mississippi bottom, about half a mile below the Canteen creek, consisting of a small cabin, and two or three acres of land fenced and partly planted in corn, where said Ray lived, to this deponent's knowledge, upwards of two years, (to wit, during all the time the deponent staid in the country,) and that, during this time, his family were living with him; he further saith not.

He further saith, that, about the year 1784 or '5, he knew a certain William McNaily to have been living with his family on an improvement by him made, at a place near a small prairie, between Indian and Cahokia creeks, about a mile east from the Mississippi bottom, consisting of a small cabin, and about two or three acres of land fenced, (as appeared by the corn-stalks remaining when the deponent saw it in autumn,) which had been planted where he lived during the time this deponent resided in the country, being about two and a half years; he further says not.

He further declared, that, about the year 1784 or '5 he knew a certain John Searcy to be living with his family on the eastern side of the Mississippi bottom, about two miles below the Canteen creek, where he had built a cabin, and had a field of thirty or forty acres cultivated in corn and tobacco; and that this deponent left him living in the country two and a half years afterwards; and further says not.

Then personally appeared before the Board, Nancy Luneford, who on oath answereth as follows, to wit:

Question by the agent of the United States. What age are you, and how long have you lived in the Illinois country?

Answer. I shall be thirty-seven years of age in the month of April next, and I believe it was sometime in June, (I am induced to think about the fifth day, 1788, that I came with my father to Kaskaskia. I lived nearly four years in Kaskaskia after the arrival of my father.

Question. Are you acquainted with Ashur Bagley, and, if so, state what time he came to the Illinois?

Answer. The first time I saw this man was some time in the month of April, 1798; I was informed by the said Bagley that he had just arrived in the country with a certain James Tait, merchant.

At the same time also, personally appeared Samuel Judy, and on oath declared, that, about eleven years ago, namely, in the year 1798, he was well acquainted with the said Bagley, and then understood that he had just come into the country with the aforesaid Tait; and that this deponent never knew nor heard of the said Bagley having been in the country previous to that time; the deponents further say not.

LOUISIANA TERRITORY, District of St. Charles:

Personally appeared before the subscriber, appointed by the Board of Commissioners at Kaskaskia to take depositions in the district of St. Charles, John Cook, who, being duly sworn, deposeth and saith, that he was well acquainted with James Shaw, in the Illinois country, in the year 1786; and at that time he dwelt on his improvement, situated on the hills near Bellefontain, where he had a cabin built, and about six acres of land under cultivation, and planted in corn; and that he dwelt with his family on this improvement which he made, within the year 1789 or '90, to the best of the deponent's recollection; he then went into Tennessee country. And further this deponent saith not.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
July 29, 1807.

Then personally appeared John Kidd, of the county of Randolph, Indiana territory, and on his oath declared and acknowledged, that he purchased from a certain John Harris the improvement and donation claims of a certain James Harris, which claim he, the said Kidd, entered with the Register of the United States at Kaskaskia; that this deponent made a contract and agreement with Robert Reynolds, Esquire; that, in consideration of said Reynolds drawing for this deponent the necessary writings, he, the said Reynolds, should be entitled to the one-half of whatever lands should be granted on said claims by the commissioners sitting at Kaskaskia aforesaid.

That some time in the month of April, in the year 1806, he was told by said Reynolds that there was necessity for additional proof in support of these claims, and was requested by said Reynolds to appear before Robert Spencer, Esq., of the district of St. Charles, and give in his, said Kidd's, testimony on oath, in the name of another person, to wit, of Samuel Henly.

That, in consequence of said request, he did in fact appear with said Reynolds before said Spencer, and testify in support of the said claims, in the assumed name of said Samuel Henly; and affixed the mark of said Samuel Henly at the foot of the depositions by said Spencer taken.

This deponent further adds, that said Reynolds was, in addition to drawing the aforesaid writings, to procure or be at the expense of procuring the necessary testimony.

And this deponent further saith, that he, at the time above mentioned, did also testify, at the request of said Reynolds, before said Spencer, in support of a number of land claims now pending before the said Board of Commissioners, in the assumed name of said Samuel Henly, and affix to the said depositions by said Spencer thus taken the said mark of said Henly; but what these claims were this deponent does not now recollect, nor what number of depositions he gave in, in the name of said Henly; but thinks about eight or nine.

And this deponent further saith not.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
August 5, 1807.

Then personally appeared before the Board of Commissioners for the district of Kaskaskia, Robert Spencer, Esq. of the district of St. Charles, in Upper Louisiana, who, after being sworn, deposeth and answereth, to wit:

Question by the Board. What is the description of a person who appeared before you, and gave depositions in the name of Thomas Comstock?

Answer by deponent, (the real Thomas Comstock being present.) I believe it was not this man who is now present, and who calls himself Thomas Comstock; the man who came before me was taller, darker complexioned, and I think without grey hairs, and of about forty or forty-five years old. And that man came before me to give testimony either with Robert Reynolds or William Kelly. I think the former.

Question. Do you know John Hiltbrand?

Answer. I have never seen him to know him except when he came before me to give depositions.

Question. What is the description of this person?

Answer. He appeared to me to be a tall well-set man, and not above forty years of age; and he came, I believe, with William Kelly before me, and stated that he lived on the Marameg.

[NOTE.—John Hiltbrand, who was not then present, is upwards of seventy years old.]

Question. Do you know Samuel Henly?

Answer. I never saw him except when he appeared before me to give depositions.

Question. What is the description of this person?

Answer. He is a low squat man, of dark complexion, and appeared to be a man of about forty years of age; and I think he appeared twice before me to give testimony, and he also came with Kelly or Reynolds.

Question. Do you know this man? (pointing to John Kidd, present,) and is this the man who assumed the name of Samuel Henly before you?

Answer. Yes.

Question. How often has this man (Kidd) appeared before you in the name of Samuel Henly to give depositions?

Answer. Twice, if not oftener.

Question. With whom has this man (Kidd) come when he was before you to testify?

Answer. It must have been with Kelly or Reynolds, one of the two, or both.

Question. Where did said Henly state to you he lived?

Answer. In the point between the Mississippi and Missouri, and about twenty miles from my dwelling.

Question. Have you not been in the point?

Answer. Sometimes, but not frequently.

Question. Have you ever understood that said Henly lived in the point except from himself?

Answer. I did not. Mr. Whorry observed to me, that if he lived in the point, he must have been brought there for certain purposes.

Question. Has more than one person deposed before you in the name of Samuel Henly?

Answer. I believe none but the one I have described.

Question. Are you acquainted with Nicholas Revelle?

Answer. I never saw him except when he came to testify before me, which was, I think, two or three times.

Question. What is the description of this person?

Answer. A tall slim man, neither dark nor fair, between forty and fifty years of age; I think a Dutchman; and he came with William Kelly, or Robert Reynolds, I believe, two or three times; he observed he was not a settled man.

Question. Why were not all the depositions taken before you signed by the deponents, agreeably to the original instructions of this Board and your former practice?

Answer. I was told by William Kelly that the Board would receive depositions without signing, and that it was not necessary.

Question. Were you, sir, at this time acquainted with the respective characters of Robert Reynolds and Wm. Kelly?

Answer. I was not.

Question. Have either of those persons above mentioned to have deposed appeared before you with any other persons than Reynolds or Kelly?

Answer. They have not.

Question. Did you receive from this Board authority to take depositions separately from Mr. Harvey?

Answer. No. (The deponent then produced a note from Mr. Harvey, who had been commissioned jointly with him, stating to the deponent that he was thus authorized; which said notice was written at the foot of a letter from Robert Morrison to Messrs. Spencer and Harvey, dated January 21, 1806, desiring them to enclose certain depositions to be taken before them to the said Morrison by William Kelly.)

Question. Who acted as agent for Robert Morrison in obtaining depositions generally?

Answer. As far as I know, William Kelly acted generally as well for Robert Morrison as others.

Question. Did you ever suspect the integrity of any of those persons who deposed before you?

Answer. I at last suspected John Cook, from the number of depositions which he gave.

Question. Do you know James Gray or Enos Wood?

Answer. I do not. They never deposed before me under these names, as I believe.

Question. Do you know James Kincade?

Answer. I have no recollection of him, nor that any person of that name ever gave any depositions before me.

Question. Do you know John McMutrey?

Answer. The same reply as in the preceding question.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
August 18, 1807.

Then personally came before the Board of Commissioners for the district of Kaskaskia. Simon Toiton, who, after being sworn, &c., answered, &c. The said deponent produced to the Board a deposition relative to land claims in the office, dated the 14th of February, 1807, which deposition he states was sworn to before George Fisher, Esq.; and, on being questioned by the Board, he declares the said deposition to be in his own hand-writing and the truth; and that, knowing he had done wrong, he gave this deposition of his own accord, without being threatened or solicited by any one; and that it was composed and entirely written by himself.

The deponent questioned by the Board. Has any undue influence been used, or property offered to you, to give the depositions which, from time to time, you have given in this office?

Answer. No one gave me money for swearing; my expenses, however, for going and coming were paid.

Question. Who took the depositions to which you refer in the before mentioned deposition of the 14th of February last?

Answer. The clerk of the commissioners.

Question. You have stated in the aforesaid deposition of the 14th of February, that, as soon as you arrived at Kaskaskia, you were made to begin the depositions; by whom were you made to begin the depositions?

Answer. I was sent for by William Morrison, and he asked me if I could give testimony in claims; and I answered I could, and immediately proceeded to do so.

Question. You state, in the said deposition, that, on the night of the last of November, 1806, you recollect to have given twenty or twenty-three depositions; and that you copied them from forms, and made them agree; in whose hand-writing were these forms?

Answer. I believe in the hand-writing of Mr. Arundel.

SIMON TOITON.

[TRANSLATION.]

I, Simon Toiton, being in my sober senses, having taken no drink, and after mature reflection, having been apprised that I had given a great number of depositions relative to land titles, as well those derived from donations as from improvements; that, by means of those depositions, great quantities of lands have been confirmed to different persons in whose favor I have given these depositions; I do consequently declare, as I have already declared to several persons, that I am ignorant of the number I may have given, since I was drunk when I gave them, a failing to which I am unfortunately addicted; and that, when I am in that state, any one, by complying with my demands, may do what they please with me. If this work had been proposed to me when in my senses—[Here appears to have been something omitted.] I declare that I recollect, that, on the last day of November, 1806, I was sent for; before setting out, I drank a quart of liquor; and that there might be no want of it, I took it again on my arrival; before beginning the certificates, I took another quart, and this continued until midnight nearly. I recollect at that time to have given twenty-two or twenty-three depositions; that is to say, I copied them from models, to which I made them conform; observing to those persons, that what I did could be of no validity. They told me not to mind that, that it would be of service to those for whom I gave them; and that I ought not to fear any thing, or make myself uneasy. I declare solemnly, that all these last depositions are false, as well as those I had given previously to that time, no matter in whose favor I may have given them; because, to my knowledge, I have never given any except when I was in liquor, and not in my sober senses. I furthermore declare, that I am not acquainted with any improvements in this country.

In witness whereof, and that these presents may be more authentic, I have sworn to the present on the Holy Evangelists, and before Mr. George Fisher, judge of the court of Kaskaskia, the 14th day of February, 1807.

SIMON TOITON.

A Statement of Claims, founded on ancient grants within the district of Kaskaskia, rejected by the Board, exclusive of those to common field and town lots.

	1778 Daniel Blouin, - -	H. Peltier, - -	Do.	A tract of land on the east side of Kaskaskia river, joining on one side the lands of Turpin, sold to John Edgar, being three arpents front by one in depth, and to him confirmed. (See claim No. 2069.)
	1024 Jean Baptiste Barrois, - -	Joseph Dugay Duplacé, Jun. - -	Do.	Ten arpents front on the east of Kaskaskia river, by sixty arpents in depth. This claim has been by the Governor confirmed to John Rice Jones.—See his claim, No. 1285, and Governor's record, page 41, being part of the grant of forty arpents by sixty to Barrois.
	805 Chas. Cadron, alias St. Pierre, - -	Rufus Easton, - -	Do.	About three thousand acres, lying within the Renault grant. This claim is founded on a mortgage from said Cadron to Daniel Blouin, whose heirs sold to this claimant. The mortgage is found to be cancelled.
	2591 Gabriel Cerré, - -	Hollingsworth and Penticost, - -	British,	A house and land, quantity unknown, near Cahokia Hills; granted by a British commandant, and without authority, and no proof of any other title.
	35 Charles Danie, - -	Robert Reynolds, - -	French,	Five arpents from the Mississippi to the Hills. Deed doubtful, and this claim again entered by Charles Danie, No. 1401.
	1589 Pierre Dechafour, Delavier and ux.	George Morgan, - -	-	Seven arpents in front, extending from the Mississippi to the Hills in the Grand Prairie. Patented to John Edgar. (See his claim, No. 2207.)
	1738 Paul Derousseau and C. Cadron,	John Rice Jones, - -	Indian,	A large tract near Fort Chartres; quantity unknown; grant unauthorized.
	459 Charles Delisle, - -	William Morrison, - -	French,	Fifteen arpents front in Prairie Tamarois, joining lands late of Alexander Leland and John Edgar, being part of a league square. Confirmed by Governor to John Edgar. No 2209.
	577 Dutisne, - -	Helen Pettier, heir of Daniel Blouin,	Do.	A large tract of land in the Grand Prairie; proof insufficient, and the whole of the tract confirmed to John Edgar. (See claim No. 2054.)
	1244 Derome, - -	Ant. Languerand, - -	Do.	One hundred and fifty French feet square, lying at the lower ferry, one mile from Cahokia, on the bank of the Mississippi. No proof.
	1035 Charles Danie, - -	Charles Danie, - -	Indian,	No grant adduced, and this claim unauthorized.
	1741 Joseph Gallaway, - -	Heirs of said Gallaway, - -	British,	Two thousand perches square, back of Cahokia, St. Clair county; granted without authority in 1769.
	1747 Joseph Hennett, - -	Joseph Hennett, - -	French,	Ten arpents in front in Prairie Apequois. Confirmed elsewhere to said Hennett. (See claim No. 1753.)
	2628-1 Indians, Illinois, - -	Illinois Wabash Land Comp's, by J. Shie and J. H. Bunting, - -	Indian,	A large tract of land, bounded by the Ohio, Mississippi, and by certain lines in the notice mentioned; sale illegal and unauthorized.
	2628-2 Same, - -	Same, - -	Do.	A large tract of land on the Illinois river; sale illegal and unauthorized.
	2629-1 Indians, Wabash, - -	Same, - -	Do.	A large tract of land lying on both sides the Wabash river, above Vincennes; sale illegal and unauthorized.

	1035 Indians, Kaskaskia, - -	Charles Danie, - -	Do.	NOTE.—The claims from No. 2630 to 2638, both inclusive, being claims for the share of part of the several members of the Illinois and Wabash Land Companies, the board think it unnecessary to enter them specifically, being emanations out of the above large tracts, which are already entered and acted on.
	1290 P. Longlois, - -	John R. Jones, - -	French,	Three thousand two hundred acres, five miles in length, from the mouth of Kaskaskia, and one mile in width. No proof of a purchase, or of a grant having been made by the Indians.
	978 Pierre Longlois, assignee of Chas. Chauvin Charlevette. - -	Heirs of P. Longlois, - -	Do.	Half of 12 arpents in front from the Mississippi to the Hills, in the Big Wood, above Kaskaskia. The whole of this has been entered by J. Edgar, and to him confirmed by the Governor. (See Edgar's claim, No. 2115.)
				Twelve arpents in front from the Hills and Kaskaskia to the Mississippi. This has been by the Governor confirmed to John Edgar, as assignee of the heirs of Pierre Longlois. (See his claim, No. 2115.)

STATEMENT—Continued.

No. of claim.	Original claimant.	Present claimant.	Kind of grant.	Quantity, description, and remarks.
1459	Jacque Leland, - - -	Jacque Leland, by John Edgar,	French,	Four arpents front, stated in the notice to lie in Fort Chartres prairie, adjoining Babarois and Basalle, running from the Hills to the Mississippi. This tract is situated in the common field of Kaskaskia. (See general report of Kaskaskia.)
2641	Jean Baptiste Leland, - - -	Robert Morrison and Robert Robinson.	Do.	One half league in front in the Grand Prairie, extending from the Mississippi to the Hills, at the little point of woods coming from the hill joining Minor Chabot one side. Twenty-one arpents of this patented by the Governor to John Edgar and John Murray St. Clair; (see their claim, No. 2207;) nine arpents front, confirmed by said Governor to John Edgar, under claim No. 2106; nine arpents confirmed by Governor to William Morrison, No. 458; and the residue patented to Edgar, under claim No. 2054.
1591	Alexis Leplant, - - -	G. Morgan, Baynton, and Wharton,	Unknown,	A tract of land extending from Kaskaskia to the Mississippi, adjoining the village of Kaskaskia. No proof.
1969	- - -	George Morgan, - - -	Do.	A tract of land, with a house and carpenter's shop, situate just below the town of Kaskaskia, extending from the Kaskaskia to the Mississippi, and extending down the two rivers to the junction. No proof.
1593	George Morgan, - - -	Same, - - -	British,	A large tract of land situate between the rigde of rocks and the Kaskaskia river, opposite the Grand Prairie; granted without authority by the British commandant, Lieutenant Colonel Wilkins, April 15, 1769.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA, 31st December, 1809.

MICHAEL JONES, }
E. BACKUS, } Commissioners.

Report on the claims to the commons, common fields, and town lots of the village of Kaskaskia.

First, of the common.

On the 14th August, 1743, Monsieur Vaudrieul, Governor, and Monsieur Salmon, Commissary Ordonnateur of the province of Louisiana, granted to the inhabitants of Kaskaskia a tract of land as a common for the use of the said inhabitants; which seems to have been bounded north by the southern limit of the village; east by the Kaskaskia river; and south and west by the Mississippi, and the limits of the commonfield, so called; which will be found laid down in the plat annexed, on certain conditions, unnecessary here to state, since they relate to the domestic police of said village; reserving, however, to the Government, a right to grant away to such individuals as had settled, or might settle, in said village, such portions of said common as it might think necessary. (See United States' Register Book of Translations, p. 38.)

Secondly, of the common field.

This tract, as will be seen by the plat, and the list of claims annexed, is composed of the various grants, in severality, to the inhabitants of the village, and, from the first, has been enclosed by one common fence, and subjected to certain village regulations, relating to fences, roads, &c. Those grants to individuals were made at different periods, and have passed down, by purchase, or descent, to the present claimants; but, from the loss of most of the ancient records, it has become generally impossible to trace up the chain of these titles. This Board, however, are satisfied that the whole land, within the limits of the annexed plat, has been granted to individuals by the French Government; and it seems probable that the persons whose names are entered as present claimants on said plat are the proper owners; but it is impossible for this Board to decide on this point satisfactorily to themselves, and they are unwilling to risk the doing an injury to any individual; they are, however, satisfied that the United States have no interest here.

Of the town lots.

These are similarly situated with the common field lands. Many of these lots have not, we suppose, been entered with the Register; but the exterior limits of the village, as well as we could ascertain them, are laid down on the annexed plat, and are satisfied that all the land within those limits is private property, although it is impossible for us, in many cases, to decide who are the rightful owners.

We do therefore affirm, in toto, the lands in this report described (see note below) to the legal representatives of the original concedees, and recommend the passage of a law to this effect, hereby declaring all the confirmations and rejections which we have heretofore made, and which have, from time to time, been entered in our records of particular claims to land, within the before described limits, to be null and void, saving to individuals concerned to settle their claims between themselves.

We further observe, that as the Governor of the territory has, in many instances, made of claims to lands within these limits special confirmations, and, in some cases, (at least, in the opinion of this Board,) improperly, it is highly desirable that a law be passed declaring such confirmations void, especially as he has issued no patents for the same; and as this measure can, in no case injure the rightful owner.

NOTE, And as laid down in a plat annexed, executed by David Robinson, under the direction of this Board, viz: bounded by the Kaskaskia, by the Mississippi, and by the upper line of the common field lands, as laid down in the plat herewith transmitted, executed by William and Elias Rector, being eleven and one-half arpents above the upper line of the Indian village, so called.

MICHAEL JONES, } Commissioners.

Report on claims falling within the Grand Prairie Tract, as designated by dotted lines in the margin of the annexed plat, to wit, between the lower lines of Buchet and E Longlois tracts.

The claims under the following numbers have been either patented or confirmed, to wit, Nos. 2054, 2207, 458, 2106, 845, 2052, 359, 244, 2134, 2115, 2051. (See these in the Commissioners' abstracts of ancient grants confirmed by the Governors and the Board, and the Commissioners' remarks on claims confirmed by the Governors.) Of claims falling within this tract for certain portions of the same, and which have been rejected by the Board, to wit, Nos. 1589, 1590, 577, 1595, 1749, 2641, 978, 1290. The two latter claims are for the same land with that confirmed by the Governor to John Edgar, under claim No. 2115. (See the annexed claims rejected by the Board.) All the preceding claims have emanated out of the ancient French grants noted in the margin of the annexed plat; and these claims must be confined within these limits, and be satisfied out of this tract. The commissioners are satisfied that the United States have no interest within these limits; and not possessing sufficient information to enable them to come to a decision between the patentees or confirtees and the adverse claimants, the Board leave them to decide their controversies before a competent tribunal, and recommend the passage of a law to this effect.

NOTE.—We have said that all the within mentioned claims have emanated out of ancient French grants: we explain. The claims Nos. 2054 and 2207 have expressly been grounded on Colonel Wilkins's grants, (see our report on Governor's confirmation,) Yet the land here claimed has certainly been conceded by the Indian company and the French Government, and is claimed by others.

MICHAEL JONES,
E. BACKUS.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
December 31, 1809.

Of the common field, village, and common of Prairie du Rocher.

From the few fragments of ancient French records which we have been able to find, it should appear that the tract containing the village and most of the present common field of Prairie de Rocher, was originally granted by the Royal India Company to Mr. Boisbriant, Lieutenant Governor of Louisiana, who transferred it to his nephew, Jean St. Therese Longlois, then officer of the French troops, some time before the year 1734, in the Illinois, who appears to have divided it out in allotments to actual settlers, reserving certain seigneurial rights, according to the custom of Paris. (See United States' Register's Record Book, pages 180, 181.)

The remainder, being the northern or upper part of the common field, is composed of thirteen French ar-pents in width, being part of the tract of seventeen arpents anciently granted to Chassin and Delisle.

It will appear by the entries in the margin of the plat annexed, that nearly the whole of this land was in early times surveyed out in allotments to actual settlers, from whom the title appears to have descended by inheritance or purchase to the present claimants.

On this tract, bounded by the Mississippi west, by a range of hills on the east, by a tract anciently granted to Dutisney on the south, and on the north by the remainder of the said tract granted to Chassin and Delisle, (which is included in our plat of Fort Chartres,) is built the village of Prairie du Rocher: its position may be seen on the plat.

Annexed is a list of all the claims which have been entered for lands within these limits, and within which they must be satisfied the ancient boundaries, both exterior and of the allotments, have been generally found; but some difficulty may arise between the claimants, which they must settle elsewhere.

The Board do therefore affirm the said above described tract of land to the present proprietors, declaring that the United States have no interest here, and recommend the passage of a law to this effect: in which law it shall be declared that the special confirmation which may have been made by the Governor within those limits shall be null and void, as we have reason to believe that some of them may have been made improperly.

Of the common.

This is a tract lying on the hills east of, and bounded by, the before described tract, and extending one league back. The land is of little value, except as it may afford wood and pasturage for the inhabitants of the village, to whom it was granted as a common on the 7th of May, 1743, by Delaloire Flancourt, commandant of the Illinois, and by whom it seems to have been quietly possessed since: its breadth seems to have been commensurate with that of Prairie du Rocher, which we believe extended at the time of this grant from the said line of Dutisney on the south, to the lower line of the said grant to Chassin and Delisle on the north, viz: to the lower line of the tract of four arpents, claimed by Pierre Lecompt, as laid down on the plat; the record number of said claim being 972; contains—arpents in front.

This Board, satisfied that the above described grant of this tract has been always respected, do affirm the title accordingly.

MICHAEL JONES,
E. BACKUS.

2197-2	36	1	Jean B. Degagne, - - -	John Edgar, - - -	From the hills to the Mississippi, joining Madame Ferrin on one side, and Blay on the other.
2642	-	-	Chassin and Delisle, - - -	Robert Robinson and Robert Morrison, - - -	Seventeen arpents in front from the hills to the Mississippi, in Prairie Chassin; granted the 25th of June, 1722, by Boisbriant Desursin to Chassin and Delisle; bounded on the upper side by Delesart, and on the other by Rosally. Thirteen arpents of this tract forms, at this time, the upper part of the Prairie Du Rocher common field, and the remaining four arpents compose the two lower tracts in the common field of Fort Chartres, as designated in the plats of these two common field tracts. (N. B.—See the general report on these tracts.)
2045	-	6	Joseph Buchet, - - -	John Edgar, - - -	This tract is entered by this claimant as being situated in Fort Chartres Prairie, extending from the Mississippi to the hills; joining one side lands late of Dutisme, and on the other François Dubries; granted in 1734 by St. Terrane Lanoisiers, but is supposed to be situated at the lower end of Prairie Du Rocher common field.

Report of the claims within the establishment of Fort Chartres, and of the tract of a mile square, reserved by an act of Congress, around the fort.

This tract, as will be seen by the plat annexed, is bounded by the upper line of Prairie du Rocher; common field on the south, (see our report in that case;) by the lower line of the grant to Philip Renault, out of which has emanated the village and establishment of St. Philip's, (see our plat and report, in that case;) on the north, by the Coulé de Nau and the base line, (so called,) established by the French Government as the boundary of the several allotments on the west; and by a line parallel with the said base line; by a line parallel with the said Coulé de Nau; and by the marais or ponds on the east.

Annexed is a list of all the claims entered to lands within these limits. They will be found to fill up the whole space between the limits of Prairie Du Rocher and St. Philip's, and more.

It will be observed that the claims are, in almost all cases, for lands extending from the hills on the east to the Mississippi on the west. Many of these claims have been confirmed (but not patented) by Governor St. Clair, with this extent; but these confirmations have certainly been made improperly. The tract of land laid down in the plat, bounded by the Coulé de Nau, the Mississippi, and the lower line of St. Philip's, was reserved for the Michigan Indians, (so called,) and was never conceded away, either by the French or English Governments; and the allotments below the fort never did extend further than the said base line, as laid down in the plat. We have found its very boundaries as placed by the French Government. Nor did these allotments, whether bounding on the base line, or the Coulé de Nau, originally extend further east than forty arpents. An additional extent was afterwards given to each of them on the east, which gives them an extent of fifty arpents, agreeably to the present plat, up to the upper dotted line of said plat; which bounds the concession anciently made to Naud, as will be seen by a note of entry in the margin of the said plat. The concessions between this line, and the lower line of St. Philip's extend from the Coule de Nau to the Marais, (traced on the plat,) at the foot of the hills. Two exceptions, however, must be made, respecting the allotments below said Naud's upper line, viz: of twelve arpents opposite and above the fort, which were granted to Mr. Boisbriant, who, at the time of said grant, was Governor of the said country, and which extended from the base line, a league back, eastwardly, and of four arpents bounding on the Prairie du Rocher common field; being part of a tract of seventeen arpents, which was granted (as will be seen by reference to our report of Prairie du Rocher,) to Chassin and Delisle, which extended from the river to the hills.

Of the village of Fort Chartres.

This was established at a small distance below Fort Chartres, and has been mostly, if not wholly, washed away by the river. Of the very few claims to lots here, none, as we think, have been definitely described, and respectably supported. This village has long since been entirely abandoned.

Of the commons of Fort Chartres.

The vacant spaces between the base line and the Mississippi, and the back lines and the hills, or ponds, appear to have been anciently used by the inhabitants as commons; but (as appears by the ancient records in the office of recorder of the county of Randolph, dated the 23d of January, 1745,) without any other right than a mere possession during the pleasure of the Government. We conceive, therefore, that the present proprietors of allotments in this quarter can have no claim on these lands. As they have never been severed from the domain, under former Governments, they of course belong to this.

Of the reserved tract around Fort Chartres.

No former Government has ever made any reservation of land east of Fort Chartres, further than the base line. When, on the receipt of this report, Congress shall take up this subject, they may, perhaps, be induced to consider how far it is just; and, indeed, how far the American Government has a right to infringe upon individual titles, which have been respected, both by the treaties of 1763 and 1783. As the claims within Fort Chartres allotments have been found to clash; as it has been found impossible for us to decide between individuals, and as all the land within the limits first described has been ceded away by the French Government, to individuals, (which will appear by the entries on the margin and body of the plat,) we do, therefore, declare that, in our opinion, the United States have no interest here, and do affirm the same to the legal proprietors, and recommend the passage of a law to this effect, which shall pronounce void the confirmations which have formerly been made by the Governors within this establishment; leaving the individuals concerned to settle their disputes before a proper tribunal; and we do hereby declare all the special confirmations, or rejections, which have been, from time to time, made by this Board, and entered on our record, to be null and of no effect.

1911.]

Report on the grant to Philip Renault, of a tract of land of one league in front, by five in depth, at Pimoteau, (so called) on the Illinois river; and of a tract of one league in front, by two in depth, at the "Grand Marais," (so called) including the establishment of St. Philip's, on the Mississippi, entered on our record, under claims Nos. 1315 and 1740.

The ancient French records in this country having been generally destroyed, this Board not having been furnished with any documents, either by the claimants or the Government, and a resort to books in this remote situation, being impossible, it cannot be expected that the commissioners can know, and of course say much on this subject.

The following questions in this case arise:

Firstly—Is there any proof that such grant was ever made, and what is it?

Secondly—Had the persons making this grant competent authority?

Thirdly—Was the title arising from the grant made to Renault at Fort Chartres in 1723, a complete, or an inchoate one; and, if incomplete, how was it to be perfected, and has it been so?

Fourthly—In what character did Renault receive this grant? As a private individual, or as agent of a company?

Fifthly—Has Renault receded this property to the company, or the Government, which granted it to him?

Sixthly—Has this property been abandoned by Renault, or escheated to any Government which has had possession of the country?

Firstly—This Board is in possession of a document belonging to the office of the recorder of the county of Randolph, purporting to be a record of ancient French grants made in the Illinois, between the years 1722 and about 1740; in which document, under the entry of each grant, is written the name of Boisbriant and Des Ursins, as grantors. A considerable number of ancient French concessions, dated during this period, have been adduced in support of claims before this Board, signed with these names as grantors. We now refer particularly to four concessions exhibited in support of claims set up under our record No. 232; their validity (being exhibited to us by French claimants, as documents descended down to them from their fathers,) we cannot question. In these concessions, dated in the year 1722, Mr. Boisbriant styles himself Pierre Duguet de Boisbriant, first lieutenant of the King in the province of Louisiana, and commandant for the Illinois; and Des Ursins styles himself "Marc Antoine Delalour des Ursins, principal pour la compagnie royale des Indes au comptoir des Illinois."

The hand-writing in these concessions, and in the document above referred to, is evidently the same; of course we cannot doubt the authenticity of said document as an ancient record.

An extract from this record, relating to the property in question, is annexed, (see No. 16.) It will be seen that Renault has received a grant in fee simple.

Secondly and Thirdly—The whole history of the Illinois goes to prove, that, at first, the officers of the India Company united with the officers of the French Crown; and after the dissolution of said company, the officers of the French Crown alone possessed a competent authority to issue concessions for land in it.

From the best information we can obtain here, this company was formed on or before the year 1717, and dissolved in 1731.

The title to the soil of Louisiana seems to have been granted in 1717, by letters patent to said company, and to have been receded to the Crown in 1731. During this interval, the grants were made to Renault; and as we cannot doubt the authenticity of the record above referred to, so we cannot doubt that the grantors were the proper officers of the Crown and the company: an union of whom, in these grants, seems to have been a matter of national policy.

We are induced to believe that, during this period, titles were usually commenced by a concession from these officers; that they were then considered as in an inchoate state, dependent for their consummation on the sanction of the Governor General of Louisiana, the council of the Indies, or the French Crown. On this point, however, destitute as we are of documents and of books, we do not pretend to decide.

But portions of this property granted to Renault, (viz: of the land at St. Philip's) were, from time to time, conveyed away by him to individuals. By various notarial and judicial acts, it appears that these conveyances from Renault were respected as good, both by the French and English Governments; of course, was not this title considered as a valid and a perfect one; that is, that it had passed through the customary forms?

In addition to this, we annex the document, No. 19, without making any remarks on it.

Fourthly—It will be seen, by a copy of the concession annexed, that the grant of the property in question was not made to Mr. Renault as agent of a company, or as "director of the mines," as is stated by the agent. It was made to him simply as Mr. Renault, to enable him to make his establishments at the mines. Was Renault, in fact, agent of the India Company? This does not appear either by the grant, or by any other document which has been exhibited to us. Besides, as the India Company was, at this time, in possession of this property, it would seem ridiculous in them to grant it away to Renault for their own use. But had this been the case, some mention of it, it should seem, would have been made in the entry of the grants.

Fifthly—No proof has been exhibited to us, that Renault ever receded this property to the India Company, or the Government, from which he received it. Of course, we have no right to presume he did so.

The property of the India Company, indeed, it appears probable, was re-conveyed to the French Crown in 1731; but the property in question did not, at that time, belong to this company, unless it had been re-conveyed by Renault: of this, as is said, we have no proof.

Thus far, does not this Board seem to have (considering the remoteness of the transaction, the political situation of the country, the ignorance of the people, and the destruction of the public records,) as strong grounds as perhaps could reasonably have been expected on which to rest their opinion? That the record of this grant is authentic; that it was made by officers of the company and the Crown, having competent authority; that the title, if not perfect on the execution of the grant in 1723, did, subsequently, by passing through the customary forms, become complete; that it was a fee simple title vested in Renault, as a private individual; and that it has not been re-conveyed by Renault to the India Company or the Crown of France. It remains to inquire whether it has been abandoned or escheated.

Here we state the following facts: Mr. Renault as it appears probable, left this country in the year 1744, on a visit to France, and died either on his passage, or soon after his arrival on the French coast. It is not in evidence, either that he intended to return, or that he did not; his heirs seem to have been in France at the time of his death. In 1754, it is known to all that the war with England commenced, which ended, in 1763, by a concession, on the part of France, of this country to the British nation. In 1775 commenced the American war, which ended in 1783, by a cession of this country to the United States. In 1790 commenced the Indian war, which ended in 1794. No proof has been adduced that, during this period, Renault's heirs were absent from the country, or present.

By the fifth article of the treaty of Paris of 1763, it was provided that the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty in the Illinois, who wished not to become subjects of the British King, should be allowed eighteen months to dispose of their property and leave the country.

Certain persons seem to have been subsequently designated by the British Government, in the Illinois, before whom the former subjects of France, who intended to reside in the country, were directed to take the oath of allegiance to said Government. Whether at this period any of Renault's heirs were in the country, and what was the result, we know not.

Between this period and 1775, Colonel Wilkins, and some others of the British commandants in the country, seem to have considered the property of French absentees as actually forfeited, and granted some of it away; but this transaction appears never to have received the sanction of the King. No particular judicial or other act, that we know of, took place to annex this property to the domains of the Crown of England. And although under the British laws an alien could not hold land, yet, in the case of a conquered country, was there, or was there not, a necessity, in order to complete the forfeiture of the lands of an absentee, of a process somewhat of the nature of an inquisition of escheat.

By the law of Congress of 1788, the Governor of the Northwestern Territory was authorized to confirm the possession and titles of the French and Canadian inhabitants, and other settlers, on those lands, (in the Illinois,) who, on or before the year 1783, had professed themselves citizens of the United States, or any of them. By the law of Congress of March 3d, 1791, it is provided, "that there shall be confirmed to such persons [as have removed without the limits of the territory] the several tracts of land they may have possessed, and which, before the year 1783, may have been allotted to them according to the laws and usages of the Government under which they had respectively settled: Provided, nevertheless, That if such persons, or their heirs, do not return and occupy the said lands within five years, such lands shall be considered as forfeited to the United States."

Whether the heirs of Philip Renault have appeared before the Governor of the Northwestern Territory to claim this property we know not: they have appeared, by their agent, before this Board.

We have given the ground on which an opinion can be formed on the original title to the land, which is the subject of this report, and refer it to our Government to decide this question; as also, whether it has become re-annexed to the domain.

Report on the grant to Philip Renault, including the village and establishments at St. Philip's.

First. On the 14th day of June, 1723, a grant was made to Philip Renault, in fee simple, (franc alev.) in order to enable him to support his establishment at the mines of Upper Louisiana, by Boisbriant and Des Ursins, the former styling himself the King's Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Louisiana; and the latter, principal Secretary of the Royal India Company, of a tract of land at a place called the Great Marsh: bounded on the south by lands of the Illinois Indians, established near Fort Chartres, of one league in front on the Mississippi, and extending back into the country two leagues.

Secondly. All that part of the above grant lying between the Mississippi and the hills (being about the one half of it,) has been, by Renault, conveyed away in small allotments to sundry individuals, as will be seen by a reference to the margin of the annexed plat; and these titles, by various notarial and judicial acts, under the French and British Governments, seem to have been respected as valid.

[NOTE.—It will appear, by the list of surveys in the said margin, that the grants emanating out of the above mentioned grant to Renault, have exceeded, by two and a half arpents in breadth, the extent of his grant, which is one league, or eighty-four arpents, but as our present surveyor has found the ancient north and south boundaries, including between them eighty-six and a half arpents, which boundaries were placed by officers acting under the French Government, this Board suppose it to have been agreed on between the said Renault and the said Government, that these should be the limits of his said grant.]

Thirdly. Out of this grant of Renault has arisen the village of St. Philip's, the lots of which were parts of the oblong tracts described in the plat, and were either occupied as building spots by those who owned the said tracts, or purchased by others from those who did own them.

As this village has been long abandoned, some of these lots, we suppose, have not been entered with the Register; to whom they belong we know not.

Fourthly. The annexed list contains all the claims entered with the Register, as situated within the Renault grant. They extend from the Mississippi to the hills only; but it will be seen that they amount to one hundred and eleven arpents, and, of course, exceed, by twenty-four and a half arpents, in breadth, the amount of the breadth of the grant to Renault, as settled by the surveys above mentioned, viz. eighty-six and a half arpents.

The Board, in its early session, proceeded to affirm or reject, specially, in each of these cases; and the several claims entered on the plot are those which have been thought worthy of affirmation; but, on a review, we are convinced that we may probably have done injustice between individuals; and, as we consider the grant to Renault, so far as it is laid down in the said plat, (viz. from the hills to the Mississippi,) to be a good one, the Board do therefore affirm the said tract to the legal representatives of the said Renault, leaving the several claimants to decide their claims between themselves before a proper tribunal; and declaring the several affirmations or rejections which have been made by this Board on these claims, and which have been entered on our records, to be null and void; and recommend the passage of a law to this effect: declaring all confirmations by the Governor, made within these limits, to be void also.

472	298	2	William Drury -	William Morrison -	Extending from the Mississippi to the hills, joining Louis Boisvert on one side, and William Drury on the other.
473	-	-	Nicholas Provost -	William Morrison -	A lot in the village.
474	295	2	Nicholas Provost, alias Blondine -	William Morrison -	Extending from the Mississippi to the hills; bounded on one side by Belcour, and on the other by Charles Cadron.
745	314	7	Pierre Butteau -	Jean F. Perry -	Extending from the Mississippi to the hills; bounded on one side by a certain rock, and on the other by Nicholas Noize.
1568	-	-	Charles Cadron -	William Murry -	A lot containing about twenty acres, with a water-mill thereon, fronting on a street or road, leading from Fort Chartes to the village, running 300 paces down to a stream of water, on which is a stone mill, bounded on the other side by the following described tract.
1569	318	7	Charles Cadron -	William Murry -	Extending from the Mississippi to the hills. The plat, in this case, appears erroneous, as not containing seven arpents.
1570	-	-	Charles Cadron -	William Murry -	A stone mill, with one acre eastward of said mill, one acre westward, one acre southward, with one half acre on each side of the stream, up to its source.
1566	-	-	William Morrison -	Clement Drury -	A lot in the village.
		3½	François Noize -	François Boutellier, assignee of Pierre Martin and wife, heirs of F. Noize -	Three and a half arpents in front in the village, adjoining on the south the lands of John Rice Jones. This tract has been confirmed, in toto, to John Rice Jones. This claimant can therefore have no right.—Rejected.

Report on the commons, and common field tract and town lots of the villages of Cahokia and Prairie Dupont.

“A tract of four leagues of land square,” as expressed in the grant, on the 23d day of June, 1722, was granted to the missionaries of Cahokia and Tamarois, who seem to have been under the control of the Bishop of Quebec, by Pierre Duguet de Boisbriant, first lieutenant of the King of France for the province of Louisiana, and commandant in the Illinois, and Marc Antoine de la Loire Des Ursins, principal commissary of the royal company of the Indies; (see United States’ Register Book of Translations, page 208,) bounded on the west by the Mississippi, including the adjacent islands, beginning “a quarter of a league above the little river of Cahokia,” and extending south and east for quantity.

This grant was in fee simple, and from it have emanated the titles to the lands which form the subject of this report.

On the Commons.

By the fifth section of the law of Congress of 1791, it is provided, that “a tract of land, including the villages of Cahokia and Prairie Dupont, and heretofore used by the inhabitants of the said villages as a common, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to the use of the inhabitants of the said villages respectively, as a common.”

As the limits of the said commons were left by the said law undefined, and could not be found described in the ancient records, it became a subject of compromise and agreement between the citizens of the said villages and the acting Governor of the territory, about the year 1797; and, by their consent, two tracts, containing, in the whole, five thousand four hundred acres, ordered to be laid off for this purpose, were surveyed accordingly by a surveyor appointed by Governor St. Clair.

But, on an examination into this business, the commissioners have discovered that the said surveys have been inaccurately and improperly made; that, for Cahokia, in particular, containing, (instead of about four thousand acres, as it ought to have contained,) about twenty thousand acres. This circumstance, and the situation of the said tracts, not accommodating the inhabitants, this Board have thought proper, at their request, to permit a new location to be made for each of the said villages, on lands more conveniently situated for them. The limits and position of that part which has been re-located will be found described in the annexed plats.

We have the more readily done this, as the land which the inhabitants abandon is of more value to the United States than that which they have taken.

On the Common Field.

This tract, as will be seen by the plat and list of claims annexed, is composed of the various grants or allotments made to the several inhabitants of these villages, and from the first has been enclosed by a common fence.

The original boundaries of this tract have been found by the present surveyor; and there seems to be no dispute between the individuals claiming here about their titles or their boundaries.

On Town Lots.

These are similarly situated with the common field lands. We do, therefore, declare that the United States have no interest in the lands here reported on, and affirm to the said several claimants in possession the said lands; leaving it to those who may be injured by any error which may, possibly, have been committed in the premises, to pursue their remedy in a court of law.

NOTE.—As special confirmations have heretofore been made, inconsistent with the descriptions in the annexed plat of Cahokia common field, we think it here necessary to remark, that none of the allotments in the said field extended towards the Mississippi, over the rigolet or river L’Abbé, (so called;) and that it ought to be declared by law, that any confirmations made, giving a greater extension to the said settlements towards the Mississippi, shall be null and void.

MICHAEL JONES,
E. BACKUS.

Report on claims to land within the district of Kaskaskia, which have been confirmed by the Governor of the Territory.

Two circumstances have prevented our taking up this subject more extensively than we shall be found to do in this report. First, in almost all the cases of Governor's confirmations, the conveyances and proofs on which said confirmations have been grounded have been withheld from us by the claimants; and, in the copy of the records which have been transmitted to us by said Governor, the grounds on which he acted are not stated. So far from this, many of the confirmations of claims made by Governor St. Clair seem (if we may judge from his entries) to have been made by bundles. We send you a specimen, (page 205,) by which you will see that we have been left to conjecture what claims were contained in the several bundles, but without the means.

And, secondly, the extremely arduous task in which we have been engaged to prepare for transmission to our Government our reports on those cases on which it has been our particular duty to decide; we mean those cases which have not been decided on by the Governor of the Territory. For the last five months, we have been employed on this business nine and ten hours a day. It is now the 20th of February, and this report is but begun.

That confirmations to a great amount of property have been improperly made cannot be doubted by those who read this document.

In what character the Governor is to be considered in the act of confirming titles to land, we will not pretend to decide. At any rate, if we have not at present an authority to revise and reverse his decrees, we at least conceive it to be a part of our duty to report our facts and our opinions.

It is to be regretted that the claimants under Governor's confirmations had not, in the law of 1804, establishing our Board, been required to bring forward before the commissioners the proofs on which the Governor decided; as also the conveyances (where the claims had been transferred) from the original claimant to the claimant before the said Governor; and also that the said Governor had not been required to send us those documents, if in his possession.

We desire it may here be felt that we are infinitely far from a disposition to impeach the character of any man; and if, in the course of the following details, which it has become our painful duty to give, it should appear that something has indeed been "rotten in Denmark," we cannot help it. We refer to the following cases, by the numbers under which they are entered on our records.

Claim No. 2068.—JOHN EDGAR claims 400 acres of land, in virtue of improvement and cultivation said to have been made by one John Cochran. The annexed documents (page 205,) will show that, in our opinion, no improvement has been made, and that the conveyance to Edgar of the claim is forged.

Claim No. 2056.—JOHN EDGAR claims four arpents in front by forty in depth, at Piassa, so called, in virtue of an improvement said to have been made by J. Baptiste Cardinal; and the claim appears to have been conveyed to John Edgar by deed, dated 17th September, 1795, witnessed by La Violette, and acknowledged before William Morrison, April 10th of the same year—five months before its execution. This Board is fully impressed with a belief that the name of this witness was written by John Edgar. It is further remarkable, that, although the said Cardinal affixes his mark to the deed, the claimant (Edgar) adduces, in proof of the fairness of this transaction, a letter from said Cardinal, dated the 29th of July, of the same year, offering him this land, which is signed by himself, in a very good hand.

It is further apparent, from the most respectable testimony, that no improvement in early times was here made.

Claims by JOHN EDGAR.—Nos. 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, are claims confirmed by Governor for 400 acres each, in virtue of improvements said to have been made by Philip Derouse St. Pierre, Michel Derouse St. Pierre, Mary Marshall, Ambrose Glind, Thomas Comstock, and Francis Rousseau, which will be found in our abstract of Governor's confirmations.

Now, this Board is fully satisfied, by the testimony of many ancient and respectable inhabitants of this country, called forward by the Board, that no such improvements were made. This will appear by our general testimony.

Besides, an improvement claim has been confirmed to Edgar, in right of Rousseau, elsewhere, (see claim of Rousseau, No. 2047); and more than one improvement cannot, we conceive, be granted in right of the same person.

Claims by JOHN EDGAR, Nos. 2082, 2083.—These claims are for ten arpents in breadth; by forty in depth, in right of improvement said to have been made by A. Gagne and L. Delisle. Now, it appears, by the above recited testimony on our records, that no such improvements were made.

Claim by JOHN EDGAR, No. 2009.—This is a claim in virtue of concession from Dumontbruin, acting as lieutenant of the Illinois, under Virginia, about the year 1783, and in right of the heirs, as stated in this notice of Pierre Longlois.

On this claim the Governor has patented to Edgar thirteen hundred and fifty-four acres and ten perches of land. This tract lies opposite the town of Kaskaskia, extending nearly a league back into the country.

It is to be here remarked, that if this tract had been conceded by Dumontbruin, the concession is void, and the claim can only be supported by proof of actual cultivation. But it appears, from the respectable testimony of J. B. St. Geme Beauvais, that no improvement was here made by Longlois; besides, if there had been, the Governor was not authorized to grant more than 400 acres; (see act of March 3, 1799;) but an improvement claim has actually been granted to Edgar, in right of said Longlois, and also of his two sons elsewhere. (See claim Nos. 2113 and 2114.) Could this have been an ancient grant? We cannot find that any such grant existed. Besides, this claim, both in the notice and the patent, is grounded on actual improvement.

Claims by JOHN EDGAR, Nos. 2047 and 2049.—In the first case, the Governor has patented 919 acres and 97 perches to John Edgar, on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, in the neighborhood of this town, in virtue of improvements said to have been made by Antoine Morin, Jun. and Francis Rousseau.

In the second case, the Governor has patented to said Edgar 1116 acres and 128 perches of land, in the same neighborhood, in right of a certain Madame Allary, who is stated to have had an ancient French grant.

The respectable testimony given in the documents annexed, (pages 205, 206,) will show whether these transactions have been correct or otherwise. It may here be added, that if there be a French gentleman in this country, respectable for genius, for information, and for integrity, that person is J. B. St. Geme Beauvais; that he was born in Kaskaskia within sight of this very land; that he has always lived in this neighborhood; that he is now more than sixty years of age; that he has a more intimate knowledge of the ancient French grants than any other person, having long been employed among their records.

But to put the question forever at rest whether Madame Allary had, or had not, an ancient French grant for this land, claimed under No. 2049, we annex to the report a translation of a petition (page 206,) from this very woman to a magistrate of Kaskaskia, on this subject, January 16, 1784; the original is on our files, and the translation is found in the United States' Register Book of Translations, page 114. You, sir, know what a "sugar camp" means, and that it does not mean a tract of land of 30 arpents front, by 50 in depth.

In justice to Governor St. Clair, who confirmed this claim, and who, in this solitary instance, has sent to us the evidence on which he decided, we must observe that the claim is strongly supported; we know the persons who have testified, but have not had time to examine them; but we repeat, that we do not believe there was here any ancient grant.

Claim No. 2051.—JOHN EDGAR claims here, under a Governor's patent, 1422 acres and 22 perches of land, on the Mississippi bottom, in right of Pierre Longlois, in virtue of an ancient French concession. The honesty of this claim will appear by a reference to documents annexed, (page 206.)

Claim No. 2052.—This claim is patented by Governor St. Clair to JOHN EDGAR; is for 60 arpents in front from the Mississippi to the hills, containing 2209 acres and 97 perches, in the Mississippi bottom, in right of an ancient concession to Etienne Longlois. We have seen, in an extract from the ancient records made by John R. Jones many years since, an account of the deed from Michel Antya and wife, who was the daughter of Daniel Bluin, under which Edgar has claimed this property before the Governor.

It is the conveyance of the right of only two of the heirs of Etienne Longlois to whom a tract of land at this place, of five quarters of a league, was conceded by the French Government in 1734. Now, said Longlois left eight heirs, two of whom sold to said Bluin, to wit, Madame Gossiaux, and Lasoudrais, mother to the wife of St. Geme Beauvais, who testifies to these points: Bluin left two heirs, a son named Daniel, now living, and Madame Antya, who sells to Edgar. We suppose he had no right to sell more than her moiety of Bluin's title here, viz: seven and a half arpents.

The deed conveys an indefinite quantity, but supposed (as is expressed in the deed) to contain fourteen or fifteen arpents. On this conveyance the Governor has confirmed sixty arpents in breadth, bounded on one side by Beauvais, and Lafatigue on the other, which in fact contains sixty-eight arpents front; this includes part of half a league granted in 1724 to Frankhomme, and part of the tract bounded by Frankhomme and the Indian village, granted to the said Etienne Longlois in the year 1734.

The annexed protest, (page 203,) will show that the other heirs of Longlois expect also to avail themselves of their part of the inheritance of their ancestor; although the Governor has conveyed the whole estate to Edgar.

Claim No. 2054.—This claim is set up by JOHN EDGAR, to 29 arpents in front from the Mississippi to the hills; containing 1422 acres and 28 perches, under a patent from Governor St. Clair; grounded (as is expressed in the patent) on a grant from Colonel Wilkins, as British commandant in the Illinois, to Chevalier and Winston.

It is remarkable, in this case, that, although the patent is for 28 arpents, the Governor's confirmation is only for 18 arpents. The claimant says the Governor committed an error. But had this commandant a right to grant any lands at all? If this claimant relies on ancient French grants for this claim, we have no evidence that he is entitled; besides, the patent expressly founds the claim on Wilkins's concession. (See pages 207, 208.)

Claim No. 2207.—This is a claim set up by JOHN EDGAR and JOHN MURRAY ST. CLAIR, (a son of Governor St. Clair,) of 21 arpents in front, from the hills to the Mississippi; containing, by survey, 1104 acres and 127 perches, in virtue of a concession from the aforesaid Colonel Wilkins.

This, too, is patented; it is to be observed, that, before the confirmation of this tract by St. Clair, Edgar had conveyed the one moiety of it to his son. (See pages 206, 207, 208.)

Claim No. 2209.—This is a claim of a league square, in the prairie Tamarois, (so called); it is patented by Governor St. Clair to JOHN EDGAR and ARTHUR ST. CLAIR, Jun., to whom, before confirmation, said Edgar had conveyed the one moiety of it in right of Alexander Leland, to whom an ancient French concession for this tract is said to have been made. Has such a concession been made? and, if so, is the said Edgar his legal representative?

Claim No. 1332.—This is a claim set up by JOHN EDGAR to a donation of 400 acres, in right of William Tait, as head of a family in 1783; it is confirmed by Governor St. Clair.

Now did the Governor, who, in the year 1790, lodged with Edgar, know that this young man, who was clerk to Edgar, had no family? And that he lived in Edgar's house? And at this date, the confirmation seems to have been made.

Claim No. 2208.—This is a claim of 13,986 acres of land, lying between the Kaskaskia and the Mississippi; it is patented by Governor St. Clair to JOHN EDGAR and his (the Governor's) son JOHN MURRAY ST. CLAIR, to whom said Edgar had, previous to confirmation, conveyed one moiety by deed. The confirmation is predicated on a concession from the aforesaid Colonel Wilkins. (See page 207.) Had he a right to make this concession? No.

Two things in this case are observable. First, That this, on the part of Colonel Wilkins, was a speculating concession, (see an entry of an agreement on the part of Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan,) to whom the said concession was made to re-convey to said Wilkins a portion of this land, if the title should be confirmed by the British Government, in documents annexed, (page 208.) And secondly, That this patent, although it calls only for 13,986 acres, does, in fact, (the land being described by certain natural boundaries,) cover near 30,000 acres. The truth seems to be, that Edgar, previous to the issuing the patent, (which has never been, as usual, countersigned by the secretary,) employed a certain Daniel McCann, (then surveyor under the Governor's appointment, and who, from his own letter on our files, we pronounce not to have been more honest than he ought to be,) to survey this tract.

Knowing, as it seems, the quantity of land meant here to be confirmed, he ran his lines to a certain distance and stopped; Edgar urged him to proceed further; he refused; Edgar then employed a certain Richard Lord whose name is notorious on our records, to complete the survey; and said McCann was, it seems, afterwards induced to certify it.

Claim No. 2055.—Under this one number JOHN EDGAR sets up a claim to ninety donation rights to heads of families, of 400 acres each, amounting to 36,000 acres of land. This claim has been confirmed by Governor St. Clair in bulk. We have had no opportunity of critically scrutinizing the deeds on which this confirmation was founded. They have not been exhibited to us; that of John Cochran and Jean Hander, conveying their improvement claims, (see claims No. 2068 and 1997) are both palpable forgeries. (See document annexed, and document annexed to our general report on testimony.) Are these so? We know not.

NOTE.—These men are two of the original claimants under this number.

To conclude: it may be imagined, from the foregoing report, that the commissioners have wished to bear particularly hard on the claims of John Edgar. It is not so; this man has been either weak or honest enough to give us a clearer view of the grounds on which the Governor has acted, by producing many of his documents, than others who have withheld them.

We observe, that the information which we have recently obtained, bears on an infinite number of claims by the Governor confirmed.

We wish this report to be considered, what it truly is, a mere specimen.

No. 2068.—JOHN EDGAR claims 400 acres of land on the hills to the east of the Prairie du Rocher, improvement right of John Cochran, and conveyed by him to the present claimant by deed, dated May 10th, 1793. This claim is confirmed by Governor St. Clair to John Edgar.

Although this claim has been confirmed by Governor St. Clair, as is above stated, yet this Board cannot forbear to express their entire conviction, that this said confirmation has been obtained through fraudulent means; as, first, they are convinced, by the testimony of Barbeau, Lecompte, Belcour, and Bond, who were intimately acquainted with this man and this part of the country, that no such improvement was here made; and, secondly, they are satisfied that the deed adduced in this case, dated the 10th of May, 1793, signed "John Cochran," and witnessed by Henry Allen and Joseph Belcour, and acknowledged June 10th, 1795, before William Morrison, is a fraudulent one; since the said Belcour solemnly denies ever having signed his name to said instrument; and since all the before-recited witnesses declare that, in their opinion, the name of John Cochran was not written by himself. Of course, it is the opinion of this Board that the before-recited confirmation ought to be considered as a void one.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
December 6, 1801.

The undersigned, J. Bte. St. Geme Beauvais, Esq. personally appeared before the Board, and on his oath declared as follows:

Question by the agent. Did Antoine Morin, and Antoine Morin, Jun., and Francis Rousseau, cultivate lands on the east side of Kaskaskia, and where, and when?

Answer. I know that Antoine Morin the father did cultivate lands at the sugar camp of M. Allary, on the east side of Kaskaskia, and that he cultivated ten or twelve acres in corn at this place about the year 1784. Antoine Morin, Jun. worked here with his father; he was a lad about twelve or thirteen years of age; but I do not believe that Rousseau did, or was capable to make improvements and cultivate lands.

Question. Do you know, or believe, that Madame Allary had a concession for lands at this place from the French, British, or American Governments? and, if any, to what extent? and did she, within your knowledge, cultivate?

Answer. I have always understood, and do believe, that Madame Allary had no concession for any lands at this place; nor did she, I am well assured, cultivate lands here, as I have often passed by and over this place; I am certain that she occupied it merely as a sugar camp, and that she was not, by information, the first person who had made sugar here.

Widow Allary petitions Mr. Aimé Compte, judge of the town and district of Kaskaskia, that she possesses, since the death of her mother, a sugar camp on the other side of the Kaskaskia river, which last had it in possession a long time, and which Mr. Timothy Dumont-bruin, late commandant, had granted, on the demand of Mr. Picard; the petitioner, in presence of Messrs. Longvall and Jerome, desired Mr. Picard to forbear working thereon, who, paying no regard to this warning, transferred it to Mr. Antoine Morin, who prohibited the petitioner to work thereon, seeing that she had no title papers, and that said sugar camp belonged to him; true it is, that the petitioner has no written title, but the possession, which she has had a long time, is equal to one.

The petitioner offers to furnish certificates by the old inhabitants of the country of her right to the said sugar camp a long time: this taken into consideration, you will be pleased, sir, to command Mr. Morin aforesaid to cease working thereon; and condemn him to pay all expense, interest, &c. Signed by Domeller Barlylon, at Kaskaskia, on the 16th of January, 1784.

Having seen the above petition, we declare to have no concession presented to us, it being the intention of the State that all persons may seek after their own happiness. The concession granted to Pierre Picard by the lieutenant of the county, in the name of the State, shall fulfil its full and entire effect.

No. 2051.—JOHN EDGAR claims 1422 acres and 28 perches, as assignee of Pierre Longlois, who held in virtue of an ancient French concession, situated in the county of Randolph, and patented by Governor St. Clair, February 14, 1799, and bounded as follows, to wit: beginning at the Mississippi, and thence, north, 34 degrees east, 697 perches, to a stone; north, 56 degrees west, 336 perches, to a honey-locust stump; south, 34 degrees west, 697 perches, to the Mississippi; and thence, south, 66 degrees east, 326 perches, to the place of beginning.

Remarks.—Confirmed and patented as above stated.

It is here to be remarked, that the very land here patented has again been patented to this claimant. (See claim No. 2054.) The truth, from a comparison of the two patents, seems to be, that the patent to this case applied by this claimant being executed on the 14th of February, 1799, was found by the claimant to be indefinite in its description; a second was of course obtained, dated the 19th April, 1799, in which this tract is more definitely described. It appears further, that the claimant, having possession of both patents, has inserted in his own hand-writing in the body of the patent to this case, applied the following words, to wit: "as assignee of Pierre Longlois;" by which it should appear that he derived his title through the said Peter, whereas, in the other and more definite patent, it appears to have been derived by grants from Lieutenant Colonel Wilkins, a British commandant in the Illinois, to Pierre Chevalier and Richard Winston, from whom this claimant by said patent appears to have purchased. Having made the above described addition to the before mentioned patent, this claimant comes forward before this Board, and enters his claim for two several tracts of 1422 acres and 28 perches each; whereas, it was evidently intended by the Governor to confirm but one of them to him; and that the patent which this claimant has applied to this case should have been considered as void, and returned. The Board do, therefore, on a consideration of this circumstance, reject this claim, as not having been confirmed by said Governor, and as not being supported by any evidence. Rejected.

To all people to whom these presents shall come:

John Wilkins, Esq. lieutenant colonel of His Majesty's eighteenth, or royal regiment of Ireland, Governor and commandant throughout the Illinois country, sends greeting:

Whereas, the cultivation of lands not yet appropriated is essentially necessary and useful towards the better peopling and settlement of the said country, as well as highly advantageous to His Majesty's service, in the raising, producing, and supplying provisions for his Majesty's troops now stationed, or hereafter to be stationed, in the said country of the Illinois:

And whereas, John Baynton, Samuel Wharton, and George Morgan, of the city of Philadelphia, in the province of Pennsylvania, merchants, trading to this country, have greatly contributed to His Majesty's service, by raising, furnishing, and supplying His Majesty's troops in this country with provisions; and being now in want of a tract of land, for range for cattle, and for tilling, for grain, as well as for other uses, and have, in order the more effectually to answer the salutary purposes aforesaid, undertaken and engaged immediately to settle and cultivate a certain quantity or portion of land in the said country: Now know ye, that the said John Wilkins, by virtue and power of the authority to him given by His Majesty's orders for the better settlement of the colony, and in consideration that the said John Baynton, Samuel Wharton, and George Morgan, their heirs or assigns, or either of them, or other persons to be by them appointed, shall immediately settle upon and cultivate the lands and premises, hereinafter bounded and described, or part or parcel thereof, as well as in consideration of the said John Baynton, Samuel Wharton, and George Morgan, their heirs or assigns, or either of them, paying to his present Majesty, his heirs and successors, such quit-rents for the same as shall hereafter be demanded by His Majesty, his heirs or successors, for the like quantity of lands that may be granted in the country aforesaid, whenever a civil Government shall be established therein:

Hath given and granted, and, by these presents, do give, and grant, and confirm, unto the said John Baynton, Samuel Wharton, and George Morgan, their heirs or assigns, in severalty, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, all that piece or parcel of land situate, lying, and being on the north side of the road between the villages of Prairie du Rocher and Kaskaskia, in the county aforesaid; beginning at the foot of a rock on the west side of a large run or gully, issuing from the hills, and on the west side of a wood, between Prairie du Rocher village and the Grand Prairie, which prairie is parcelled out to numbers of French inhabitants; running from the foot of the aforesaid rock, eastward, across the run at the foot of, and parallel to, a ridge of rocks and hills which divide the upper from the lower grounds, to a large run or gully which issues from the aforesaid hills, on the north side of the aforesaid Grand Prairie, and at about half the distance of the road through it from west to east; thence, up the said run or gully, north, thirty degrees east, to the main or principal branch of the Kaskaskia river; thence, up the several courses of the said river, until met by a right line drawn from the first mentioned foot of a rock at the place of beginning, running north, thirty degrees east, to the said river Kaskaskia; thence, south, thirty degrees west, to the aforesaid foot of a rock at the place of beginning: together with all and singular the premises, meadows, pastures, feedings, trees, woods, underwoods, ways, paths, passages, waters, watercourses, casements, profits, commodities, advantages, emoluments, hereditaments, and appurtenances whatsoever, to the said piece or parcel of land belonging, or in anywise appertaining.

To have and to hold the said piece of ground and premises unto the said John Baynton, Samuel Wharton, and George Morgan, their heirs and assigns forever. Subject and liable to the payment of the quit-rents that shall be demanded as aforesaid, on the part of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, forever.

In witness whereof, the said John Wilkins hath hereunto set his hand and seal at arms at Fort Chartres, this twelfth day of April, in the ninth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, &c. &c. and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and sixty-nine; not to interfere with any former grants. The foregoing to be void if disapproved of by His Majesty or the Commander-in-chief; the whole being done with a view to benefit His Majesty's service in this country as aforesaid.

TERRITORY OF THE UNITED STATES,

Arthur St. Clair, Governor of the territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio, to all persons who shall see this present, greeting:

Be it known, that in pursuance of the acts of Congress of the 20th June, the 28th August, in the year of our Lord 1788, and the instructions to the Governor of the said territory of the 29th August in the same year, to inquire into the titles and possessions of the French and Canadian inhabitants and other settlers in the Illinois country, and at Vincennes on the Wabash; the claims which have been presented have been duly examined, and John Edgar, Esquire, of the county of Randolph, and John Murry St. Clair, of Westmoreland county, in Pennsylvania, gentlemen, lay claim to two certain tracts or parcels of land now lying and being in the county of Randolph, and bounded in the manner following, to wit: beginning at a walnut tree on Kaskaskia creek, and running from thence south, thirty degrees west, two thousand nine hundred and sixty perches, to a stone; thence, south, sixty degrees east, eight hundred and eighty-eight perches, to a stone; thence, north, thirty degrees east, two thousand and eighty perches, to a hickory on the bank of the Kaskaskia; thence, northwest, and with the different meanders of the creek, to the place of beginning; having the ledge of rocks on the southeast, the Kaskaskia creek on the northwest, and joining Nicholas Jarrot on the southwest, and containing thirteen thousand nine hundred and eighty-six acres; to which, for any thing that appears to the contrary, they are rightfully entitled, having been granted by Lieutenant Colonel Wilkins, commandant for the British in the Illinois country, to Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan, and transferred by George Morgan, agent for Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan, on the 6th day of March, 1774, to Richard Winston, and sold at public sale as the property of him, the said Richard Winston, by order of the court of Kaskaskia, to satisfy a judgment against him in the said court, and purchased by the said John Edgar, and transferred to him as the highest bidder by the proper officer; and afterwards, to wit, on the eleventh day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, one equal and undivided half of the same was sold by the said John Edgar to John Murry St. Clair aforesaid, and conveyed to him, his heirs and assigns, by deed of bargain and sale: Now, to the end that the said John Edgar and John Murry St. Clair may be forever quieted in the possession of the same, I do, by virtue of the acts and instructions of Congress before mentioned, confirm unto the said John Edgar and John Murry St. Clair, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common, the above described tract or parcel of land, containing thirteen thousand nine hundred and eighty-six acres, together with all and singular the appurtenances whatsoever, the said described tract of land, with the appurtenances, to them, the said John Edgar and John Murry St. Clair, and to their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common, forever; saving, however, to all and every person or persons their rights to the same, or any part thereof, founded in law or equity, prior to those on which the claim of the said Edgar and St. Clair are founded.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the territory to be hereunto affixed, at Cincinnati, in the county of Hamilton, on the twelfth day of August, one thousand eight hundred, and in the twenty-fifth year of the independence of the United States.

And whereas, it is just and reasonable, and essential to our interest, and the security of our colonies, that the several nations or tribes of Indians with whom we are connected, and who live under our protection, should not be molested or disturbed in the possession of those parts of our dominions and territories, as, not having been ceded to, or purchased by us, are reserved to them, or any of them, as their hunting grounds: We do, therefore, with the advice of our privy council, declare it to be our royal will and pleasure that no Governor or Commander-in-chief of any of our colonies of Quebec, East Florida, or West Florida, do presume, upon any pretence whatever, to grant warrants of survey, or pass any patents for lands beyond the bounds of their respective Governments, as described in their commissions; as also that no Governor or Commander-in-chief of our other colonies or plantations in America do presume, for the present, and until our further pleasure be known, to grant warrant of survey, or pass patents for any lands beyond the heads or sources of any of the rivers which fall into the Atlantic ocean from the west or northwest, or upon any lands whatever, which, not having been ceded to, or purchased by us, as aforesaid, are reserved to the said Indians, or any of them.

And we do further declare it to be our royal will and pleasure for the present as aforesaid, to reserve under our sovereignty, protection, and dominion, for the use of the said Indians, all the lands and territories not included within the limits of our said three new Governments, or within the limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, as also all the land and territories lying to the westward of the sources of the rivers which fall into the sea from the west and northwest, as aforesaid; and we do hereby strictly forbid, on pain of our displeasure, all our loving subjects from making any purchases or settlements whatever, or taking possession of any of the lands above reserved, without our special leave and license for that purpose first obtained.

And we do further strictly enjoin and require all persons whatever, who have either wilfully or inadvertently seated themselves upon any land within the countries above described, or upon any other lands which not having been ceded to or purchased by us, are still reserved to the said Indians, as aforesaid, forthwith to remove themselves from such settlements.

And whereas great frauds and abuses have been committed in the purchasing lands of the Indians to the great prejudice of our interests, and to the great dissatisfaction of the said Indians: in order, therefore, to prevent such irregularities for the future, and to the end that the Indians may be convinced of our justice and determined resolution to remove all reasonable cause of discontent, we do, with the advice of our privy council, strictly enjoin and require that no private person do presume to make any purchase from the said Indians of any lands reserved to the said Indians within those parts of our colonies where we have thought proper to allow settlements; but that if, at any time, any of the said Indians should be inclined to dispose of the said lands, the same shall be purchased only for us, in our name, at some public meeting or assembly of the said Indians, to be held for that purpose by the Governor or Commander-in chief of our colony, respectively, within which they shall lie; and in case they shall lie within the limits of any proprietors, conformably to such directions and instructions as we or they shall think proper to give for that purpose.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, assignee of Elizabeth Longlois, (the wife of Antoine Gugotte, and signed by said Gugotte, acting for his wife,) André Longlois, Antoine Longlois, and Catharine Longlois, heirs of Pierre Longlois, late notary public for the district of Kaskaskia, having understood that claims are kept up by John Edgar and others to all the lands which the said Pierre Longlois was entitled by virtue of ancient grants, acts, and resolutions of Congress, within the district aforesaid; your memorialist being persuaded that this property never did pass legally to these claimants: convinced also that the several co-heirs never sold nor authorized any other person to convey the fee of the real estate of the said Pierre Longlois (deceased) to the said John Edgar, or any other person having pretension to the said real estate, or any part thereof, your memorialist being the legal assignee of the aforesaid Elizabeth Longlois, (wife of Gugotte, &c.,) André, Antoine, and Catharine Longlois, heirs of Pierre Longlois, is persuaded that he is the only legal representative of the aforesaid co-heirs of the said Pierre (by deed, bearing date —) of an undivided four-sixths of the real estate of the said Pierre: wherefore your memorialist doth hereby protest against your allowing, granting, or otherwise confirming unto the said Edgar, or any other person having pretensions to any part of said real estate of the said Pierre, but that your honorable Board will confirm said real estate, which may be found to be supported by satisfactory testimony or proof, to the legal representatives of the said Pierre Longlois, in order that an equitable distribution may be made, agreeably to the laws and regulations of the United States in such case made and provided.

And your memorialist, as in duty bound, &c. will ever pray.

Whereas Lieutenant Colonel John Wilkins hath made certain grants of land to Joseph Galloway, Esquire, John Baynton, Samuel Wharton, George Morgan, and James Rumsey, for the benefit of His Majesty's service in this country, as follows, viz.: See claims.

1741, One grant, 12th April, 1769,	to Joseph Galloway.
One do do	to James Rumsey.
One do do	to John Baynton.
2208, One do do	to Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan.
1593, One do., 5th do	to Geo. Morgan.
1971, One do do	to Samuel Wharton.

And whereas Lieutenant Colonel John Wilkins, the better to promote the said service, has agreed to be interested one-sixth part therein, we do hereby engage that each of the before mentioned persons shall assign over to the whole, and to Colonel Wilkins, five-sixths parts thereof; to have and to hold the same, each person one-sixth part thereof, agreeably to the tenor of the said grants, as joint tenants.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals, at Fort Chartres, this 25th day of June, 1769.

GEORGE MORGAN.
J. RUMSEY.

For form's sake I have registered the above; but the grants therein alluded to are null and void until confirmed by the General's approbation, as they were given on these conditions only, and can be of no effect until such approbation arrives; and was granted for the good purposes then represented to me.

No. 5.

By His Excellency Thomas Gage, Major General of the King's armies, Colonel of the 22d regiment, General commanding in chief all the forces of His Majesty in North America, &c.

Whereas, by the peace concluded at Paris the 10th of February, 1763, the country of the Illinois has been ceded to His Britannic Majesty, and the taking possession of the said country of the Illinois by the troops of His Majesty, though delayed, has been determined upon, we have found it good to make known to the inhabitants—

That his Majesty grants to the inhabitants of the Illinois the liberty of the Catholic religion, as it has already been granted to his subjects in Canada. He has consequently given the most precise and effective orders, to the end that his new Roman Catholic subjects of the Illinois may exercise the worship of their religion according to the rites of the Roman church, in the same manner as in Canada.

That His Majesty, moreover, agrees that the French inhabitants, or others who have been subjects of the Most Christian King, may retire in full safety and freedom wherever they please, even to New Orleans, or any other part of Louisiana, although it should happen that the Spaniards take possession of it in the name of His Catholic Majesty; and they may sell their estates, provided it be to subjects of His Majesty, and transport their effects, as well as their persons, without restraint, upon their emigration, under any pretence whatever, except in consequence of debts or of criminal process.

That those who choose to retain their lands and become subjects of His Majesty shall enjoy the same rights and privileges, the same security for their persons and effects, and the liberty of trade, as the old subjects of the King.

That they are commanded by these presents to take the oath of fidelity and obedience to His Majesty, in presence of the Sieur Sterling, captain of the Highland regiment, the bearer hereof, and furnished with our full powers for this purpose.

That we recommend forcibly to the inhabitants to conduct themselves like good and faithful subjects, avoiding, by a wise and prudent demeanor, all cause of complaint against them.

That they act in concert with His Majesty's officers, so that his troops may take peaceable possession of all the posts, and order be kept in the country. By this means alone they will spare His Majesty the necessity of recurring to force of arms, and will find themselves saved from the scourge of a bloody war, and of all the evils which the march of an army into their country would draw after it.

We direct that these presents be read, published, and posted up, in the usual places.

Done and given at head-quarters, New York. Signed with our hand, sealed with our seal at arms, and countersigned by our secretary, this 30th December, 1764.

Whereas, many persons, contrary to the positive orders of the King upon this subject, have undertaken to make settlements beyond the boundaries fixed by the treaties made with the Indian nations, which boundaries ought to serve as a barrier between the whites and the said nations; and a great number of persons have established themselves, particularly upon the river Wabash, where they lead a wandering life, without Government and without laws, interrupting the free course of trade, destroying the game, and causing infinite disturbances in the country, which occasions a considerable injury to the affairs of the King, as well as to those of the Indians:

His Majesty has been pleased to order, and, by these presents, orders are given, in the name of the King, to all those who have established themselves on the lands upon the Wabash, whether at St. Vincent or elsewhere, to quit those countries, instantly and without delay, and to retire, at their choice, into some one of the colonies of His Majesty, where they will be received and treated as the other subjects of His Majesty.

NEW YORK, April 2, 1773.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your letter of the 14th of September last, with the representations annexed, which I intend to cause, in a few days, to be transported to the feet of His Majesty.

As you claim your possessions by sacred titles, insinuating that your settlement is of seventy years standing, and that the lands have been granted by order and under the protection of His Most Christian Majesty, it is necessary that His Majesty should be informed very particularly upon these points; and it is important to you to give convincing proofs of all that you allege in this respect. To this end I have to demand, without delay, the name of every inhabitant at Vincennes and its neighborhood, and by what title each one claims; if it is by a concession, the year of the concession must be added, as well as the name of the officer who made it, and the name of the Governor General who approved and confirmed it, with [word unintelligible, and omitted, probably "the date," or "the page or number;"] also of the records where each concession shall have been registered.

That the report which I expect may be better understood, I annex hereto a form, which I beg you to follow exactly, and to put me as early as possible in a situation to push forward your business.

I am, gentlemen, your most humble and Most obedient servant.

THOMAS GAGE.

To M. DE ST. MARIL, and the other inhabitants settled at Post Vincennes.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA, January 4, 1813.

SIR:—The commissioners appointed in pursuance of the act of the 20th February, 1812, for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of claims which were derived from confirmations made, or pretended to be made, by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana territories respectively, with much trouble and difficulty have performed that arduous duty. But before we enter into a detail of the accompanying documents, beg leave to observe, that, on the 13th July last, we met at our office in the town of Kaskaskia, and consulted the law under which we have the honor to act; from a view of which, it was perceived that the office of agent to the Board was created, who, not appearing, our progress was for some time impeded, and anxiously waiting for his arrival; but believing this officer had not been appointed, we determined to proceed to the proposed investigation without his aid or assistance; whereupon, we came to the resolution to summon a number of the most ancient and respectable inhabitants of the several villages and settlements, and examine them touching the validity of the claims before us. From such a course it was perceived the Board would be enabled to approve the claims which would be supported by that respectable testimony; and such claims as were not thus supported should be considered as impeached. But in order that the claimants might have an opportunity to adduce further evidence in support of such impeached claims, we directed lists of such impeached claims to be made out, apprising the claimants, that the Board would receive any testimony that might be offered until the 25th of November last, and this time was afterwards prolonged; and, indeed, no testimony that was offered previous to the completion of our reports has been rejected.

Having premised thus far, the commissioners beg leave to report:

No. 1. Is a list of claims founded on ancient French grants, which, in the opinion of the commissioners, ought to be confirmed.

No. 2. Is a special statement of claims also founded on ancient grants, confirmed by Governor St. Clair, which are submitted to the consideration of Congress.

No. 3. Is a transcript of claims, likewise said to be founded on ancient grants, confirmed by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana territories, which, in the opinion of the Board, ought not to be confirmed.]

No. 4. Is a list of claims founded on improvements and cultivation, which were confirmed by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories, and which, in the opinion of the commissioners, ought to be confirmed.

No. 5. Is a special statement of claims, also founded on improvement and cultivation.

No. 6. Is the special confirmation of a claim founded on improvement and cultivation, which is derived from a confirmation of a larger quantity by Governor St. Clair.

No. 7. Is a transcript of claims likewise founded on improvement and cultivation, confirmed by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana territories, but which, in the opinion of the commissioners, ought not to be confirmed. Although, from a view of the testimony accompanying this species of claims, it will be perceived that some cases have some merit, yet as the Board confined themselves entirely to the spirit and meaning of the law governing such claims, have been consequently rejected by us, and submitted to Congress.

No. 8. Contains a list of donations confirmed to those who were heads of families in the Illinois country (in the year 1783 or 1788,) by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories, and which, in the opinion of the commissioners, ought to be confirmed.

No. 9. Also contains a list of donations confirmed to the heirs of those persons who were heads of families in the Illinois (before 1783, and subsequent to the conquest of the country in 1778,) by the Governors, and which in the opinion of a majority of the commissioners, ought also to be confirmed.

Nos. 10 & 11. Likewise contain a statement of donations to those persons who were heads of families in the Illinois country in 1783 or 1788; which were omitted by the late Board, under the impression that they were Governors, confirmations, which have been investigated by the present, and found to be supported, and which in the opinion of the Board, ought to be confirmed.

No. 12. Is a transcript of donations to the heads of families in the Illinois country, which were confirmed by the Governors, but which, in the opinion of the commissioners, ought not to be confirmed.

From a view of the testimony accompanying this class of claims, it will be perceived that some few cases have merit; but, as we before observed, the commissioners, in deciding, have confined themselves within the spirit and meaning of the laws governing such claims; therefore, have consequently rejected them; and submit the same to Congress.

No. 13. Contains a list of grants made to those who did militia duty in the Illinois country on the 1st of August, 1790, and which in the opinion of a majority of the Board, (for reasons therein assigned,) ought to be confirmed.

No. 14. A transcript of the same species of claims, which, in the opinion of the Board, ought not to be confirmed.

We beg leave, sir, to remark, that in our transcripts of improvement and militia donations, we have given no description of their situation and boundaries, which we presume could be of no use either to the Government or the claimants, since most of them have been re-surveyed by the direction of the surveyor-general; which re-surveys, in almost all cases, vary the boundaries established by former surveys under the authority of the Governors, which we find have generally been imperfectly made, and the land vaguely described. And as the latter surveys must ultimately govern, we could see no necessity of giving the imperfect description found on our record.

By a reference to the lists of rejected claims transmitted by the former Board, as well as from a view of our transcripts, it will be seen that in a number of cases there are adverse claimants; and in some instances, three or four persons are found to claim one and the same right. The conveyances, too, on which confirmations have been obtained from the Governors, have been protested against; but as the Board, for want of time, and the conveyances in many of these cases not being exhibited, the commissioners were not possessed of information that would enable them to decide between individuals, they have, therefore, thought it most advisable to report the claims in the name of the confirmees or their assignees as they found them, without strictly scrutinizing the validity of the chain of titles on which such confirmations have been grounded.

We deem it, however, advisable that a law should be passed reserving the legal or equitable right of adverse claimants. All which is respectfully submitted.

We have the honor to be, sir, with high consideration and respect, your most obedient and humble servants,

MICHAEL JONES,
JOHN CALDWELL,
THOMAS SLOO.

This claim is stated by Governor St. Clair, in his patent of confirmation to the said John Edgar and John Murry St. Clair, to have derived its origin from a grant made by Colonel Wilkins, commanding for the British in the Illinois country, to Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan. But in the course of the investigation of the validity of this confirmation, from the documents exhibited by the said Edgar and St. Clair, it is evident that the same was not a grant to the said Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan, from the said Wilkins, but acquired by purchase, and forms a part of a half league in front, extending from the Mississippi to the hills; which appears to have been granted to a certain Jean Baptiste Leland, in right of whom these claimants ought to have claimed, and not Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan, as stated by the Governor.

No. 2.

Ancient grants specially reported.

No. 2049. This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to John Edgar, assignee of Domitilde Alary, widow of François, who inherited the same by descent from her father, Pierre Baillarjon, for 1116 acres and 128 perches, or 30 by 44 arpents.

On examination of the papers filed by the claimant in support of this claim, it appears that the same is said to be claimed in virtue of an ancient French concession to the said Baillarjon, but which is said to be lost; the loss of such concession, as well as the immemorial possession of the land, seems to have been proven before the said Governor, as appears by the following testimony, to wit: Michel Danis, Charles Danis, Helen Beauvais, and Alexis Beauvais, "ancient inhabitants of Kaskaskia, who upon oath state, that they know that Domitilde Baillarjon (widow of Alary) was, in her life-time, and for thirty years past, to their knowledge, seised and possessed of a tract of land on the east side of Kaskaskia river, about a mile and a half above Kaskaskia village, containing in front, on the said river, thirty arpents, and extending of the same breadth, in depth to the ridge of hills dividing the high from the low lands, and from thence extending further backwards, or in depth of the same breadth, twenty arpents. They further certify, that they have always heard, and it was so understood in this country, that the ancestors of the said widow Alary held the same land for upwards of sixty years back by virtue of an ancient French concession; also that the said land was cultivated, improved, and settled on by the said widow Alary and her deceased father, whose sole heir she was, upwards of thirty years past; and the original grant or concession, if not now to be found, has in their belief been burnt many years since, at the time when the whole records of the country were burnt by accident. Sworn and subscribed before William Morrison, Esq. on the 10th January, 1799. From another deposition, filed in support of this claim, taken before the said William Morrison, Esq. on the 6th January, 1798, it appears that Bienvenue, fils, Barbeau, fils, Danis, and Decelle, deposed, in substance, as stated in the deposition taken on the 10th January, 1799; upon which testimony the Governor confirmed to the said John Edgar the quantity of 1116 acres and 128 perches, as appears by his patent of confirmation, dated on the 11th February, 1799; but the commissioners, in order to assist their inquiry into the validity of the foregoing confirmation, caused to come before them the said Charles Danis, Michel Danis, and Bienvenue, the only surviving witnesses who deposed to the before stated deposition, together with four other of the most ancient and respectable inhabitants of the village of Kaskaskia; who, being all duly sworn, state that they all knew Mrs. Alary, and that she had lands on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, which she used as a sugary, but neither of them knew the quantity she had except Mr. Pagé, who states that he knows Mrs. Alary's land extended from where Mr. Bilderback now lives to land late of John Duff; that deponent is now sixty-one years old, and oftentimes slept, when a boy, at Mrs. Alary's upper cabin, where she sometimes lived; that, at the same time, Mrs. Alary had a sugar camp cabin this side of the above mentioned, one which she called the little sugary; he does not know the distance between these cabins, perhaps twelve arpents, more or less, in breadth; the length or depth of the lands she claimed he does not know; that he never knew Mrs. Alary to cultivate this land in any other manner than as a sugary; and that she used to cut her fire-wood on this land, and take it to town; he always understood this land descended to Mrs. Alary from her father Baillarjon, to whom it descended from his father; that Mrs. Alary's father died before the deponent's recollection; is inclined to believe that there never had been a concession for this land; that it was held by right of long possession; deponent says the deceased Lardner Clark, when he was recorder of Randolph county, at Kaskaskia, told deponent, in conversation, he had found the papers mentioning Mrs. Alary's said land; from the first of deponent's recollection Mrs. Alary was in possession of this land; that she was in the habit of going from Kaskaskia after gathering her corn, and lived on the said land until the following spring, when she returned to town. Charles Danis states, this land was claimed by Mr. Baillarjon, whom he knew was in possession of it in his life-time, and made sugar there, but no other cultivation. Fortin and Seguin state that this land came to Mrs. Alary (as they were informed by their mother) by descent from her father, and that it had descended from father to son. All the deponents but Fortin and Seguin state, that Mr. Alary, in his life-time, used to cut timber to make cooper's ware off the said land; that said Alary gave some timber off this land to build Kaskaskia church. Neither of the witnesses know that Mr. Baillarjon had a concession for this land, nor have they ever heard so. Charles Danis and Mr. Pagé state, that neither Mr. Alary, his wife, nor Mr. Baillarjon, were ever troubled or disturbed in the possession of this land during the time of the French or English Governments of this country; the deponents all state that concession granted by Dumontbruin to Picard and Mieux, and by them transferred to Morin, were on Madame Alary's land; that they do not know the boundaries of Madame Alary's land, nor that she had any boundary to it. Charles Danis states, that Mrs. Alary prevented him from cutting timber on said land. Neither of the deponents heard Mrs. Alary say her papers were burnt in the notary's office. Seguin states that, in ancient times, the Government was held at Fort Chartres, and has heard from the ancients that the office papers of the country were burnt there. Charles Danis, and Michel Danis, having the deposition said to have been made by them, and Helen Beauvais, and Alexis Beauvais, on the 10th January, 1799, before William Morrison, Esq. read to them, Charles Danis says that he does not, at this distance of time, recollect having made such deposition; and Michel Danis denies having done so. Another deposition, bearing date 6th January, 1798, said to have been sworn before William Morrison, Esq. by Barbeau, fils, Danis, Decelle, and Bienvenue, fils, was read to Bienvenue, fils, who denied having made such a deposition, and that the words "Bienvenue, fils," subscribed thereto, is not of his hand-writing. In the further support of this claim, there has been filed by the said claimant a certified copy from a book in the Recorder's office, entitled "Répertoire Général du Greffe des Illinois, armée par armée," which book contains an inventory of the papers in the notary's office in Kaskaskia, from the year 1722 to the year 1771, inclusive; that under the year 1732, is found the following item, to wit: "Vente de terrain a quarante arpents de face de l'autre bord de la riviere des Cas, [a word not intelligible but supposed to be] Chernewax Vasseur à Pierre Baillarjon." But, (horrible to relate,) on examining the book from which the aforesaid extract was taken, it seems evident that the same is an interpolation, at a very recent period; for the hand-writing and ink are evidently different from the rest of the writing in said book; but to whom to attribute this black transaction the commissioners are unable to say. Which conclusion is corroborated by the same certificate, which further states, that the other papers belonging to the file of that year are in his office; but, after the most diligent search, the aforesaid sale from Vasseur to Baillarjon, as mentioned in the said index, is not to be found amongst the said records. From a paper filed by B. Richard, the assignee of Antoine Morin, who, by the foregoing testimony, appears to have obtained a concession which included part of the land which is here claimed, Mrs. Alary, on the 16th January, 1784, petitioned Aimé Compte, judge of the town and district of Kaskaskia, which, in substance, is as follows: that she possessed since the death of her mother a sugar camp on the other side of Kaskaskia river, which last had it in possession a long time, and which Mr. Dumontbruin had granted, on the demand of Mr. Picard; that the petitioner, in presence of Messrs. St. Loyal and Jerome, desired Mr. Picard to forbear working thereon, who, paying no regard to this warning, transferred it to Mr. Antoine Morin, who prohibited the petitioner to work thereon, seeing that she had no title papers, and that said sugar camp belonged to him. True it is the petitioner has no written title, but the possession which she has had a long time is equal to one. The petitioner offers to furnish certificates by the old inhabitants of the country of her right to the said sugar camp a long time.

The foregoing statement resolves itself into the following facts, to wit: certain witnesses are said to have deposed to the nature and extent of the preceding claim; but on examination of some of the same deponents before the present Board, touching such depositions, they deny ever having made them.

That statement of the witnesses, who deposed before the present commissioners, taken in its greatest extent, goes no further than to say Mrs. Alary laid claim and occupied land, to which her father had no title other than an usufructuary right, acquired, perhaps, by being the first occupier; which conclusion is corroborated by the petition of Mrs. Alary before recited, wherein she laid claim to no more than the right of making sugar.

Now, from a candid and impartial view of the whole facts, the commissioners are of opinion that the Governor was deceived and imposed upon, and that this confirmation has been fraudulently and surreptitiously obtained, the claimant being entitled to no more than a sugar camp right of fifty acres.

No. 2209.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR and ARTHUR ST. CLAIR, JUN., for 5968 acres and 137 perches, in right of an ancient French grant.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair, and in his book of confirmations is thus described: "a piece of land in the prairie Tamarois, containing a league square, bought of Alexander Laland, the son and only heir in the territory, of Laland the father, to whom it was granted while the country was held by the French, but the concession lost."

"N. B.—Proof made by ancient settlers, that it was well understood a grant was made to Laland, and that he possessed and cultivated a part of it many years ago, and is referred to in a concession to Longlois in 1734. To be confirmed to John Edgar and Arthur St. Clair, Jun. as tenants in common, one half of it having been conveyed by Edgar to St. Clair," on the 16th February, 1799, as appears by Governor St. Clair's patent of confirmation to the said John Edgar and Arthur St. Clair, Jun. for the above described tract of land, dated on the 13th of August, 1800. Although the patent appears to have issued to the said claimants after Governor St. Clair's powers had ceased over the Indiana Territory, in which this land is situated; yet it is believed that the confirmation and order of survey issued while the Indiana was attached to and formed a part of the Northwest Territory. But as no grant or other written evidence of title has been exhibited to this Board, although the claimants were notified to that effect, the commissioners proceeded to inquire into the validity of the aforesaid confirmation, by the examination of several of the most ancient, and respectable inhabitants of the village of Kaskaskia; two of whom state on oath that they have seen the remains of a house wherein Mr. Laland lived at this prairie, (Tamarois;) one of them states he lived there a long time; the other does not know how long; neither of them knows whether he had any concession for land there, nor how much he claimed, but one of them thinks he must have had a French concession; they both state Laland lived there in the French time, and long before the English got possession of the country; there were at that time but two or three families settled on plantations in this prairie; one of them states that Laland raised crops there as a farmer, as he has been informed. Witness saw marks of the lands having been ploughed; that Laland left five children, only one of whom is now living; the other children died without issue; that Alexander Laland, the son, died about the year 1793 or 1794.

In order that this claim may stand on its true merits before the Government, the commissioners cannot forbear to remark that Governor St. Clair must have been mistaken when he says that this grant is referred to in a concession to Longlois in 1734; for it does not appear from the ancient records that Longlois ever had a grant for land in this prairie, neither has any claim been laid before the late or present Board for lands in right of Longlois at this place; and, indeed, the only grant to Longlois in that year appears to be for lands in the Grand Prairie, where he joins one Laland, but which is at least fifteen miles distant from the Prairie Tamarois; therefore, that circumstance cannot add any validity to this claim, so that its whole merits must rest upon oral evidence; from which it would seem that Laland the elder had lands in the Prairie Tamarois, that he cultivated as a farmer, but what quantity is not stated, neither is it known whether the said Laland the elder had a concession for the same.

Now, as the commissioners do not feel themselves justified in approving of or recommending the confirmation of a claim of such magnitude upon such imperfect evidence, therefore, with this unvarnished statement of facts, they beg leave to submit the decision thereof to the honorable Congress.

No. 2107.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Joseph Decelle Duclos, and others, the heirs of Alexander Duclos, their father-in-law, father and grandfather, an island opposite Fort Chartres.

This claim does not appear to be confirmed by either the Governors of the Northwest or Indiana Territories, nor is any mention made thereof, except by Governor St. Clair, who, in treating of this claim observes: "Another piece of land, being the island of Fort Chartres, granted to Duclos, 1745, and sold by his children to Mr. Edgar." This tract [is] within the reserved tract around Fort Chartres, and can only be confirmed by Congress. The claimant, in the further support of this claim, has exhibited to the Board a certified extract from the ancient land book of the Illinois, wherein it appears that Alexander Duclos, on the 2d January, 1745, entered with a certain Barrois, notary, who was commissioned by the King to receive reclamations to lands in the Illinois, "an island situate before Fort Chartres in the river Mississippi, the contents of which he does not know, it never having been surveyed nor measured; belonging to him as having been conceded to him by the Chevalier De Bertel, commandant, and Delaloire Flancour, commissary; — day — year underneath his petition."

Although no grant has been produced in support of this claim, yet, as the foregoing entry is found in the ancient land book compiled by the said notary duly commissioned for the purpose of receiving reclamations to land in the Illinois, and the said Duclos never having been disturbed in the enjoyment of the same, together with the dilapidated state of the ancient records, the commissioners are induced to be of opinion that it has been granted, as stated by the said Duclos in his entry or declaration with the said notary. But as this claim falls within the reserve made by Congress around Fort Chartres, the Board decline giving any further opinion, but submit the same to the consideration of that honorable tribunal.

No. 3.

A list of claims said to be founded on ancient French grants, as confirmed by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories, within the district of Kaskaskia, and which said confirmations, in the opinion of the Commissioners, ought not to be sanctioned by Congress.

No. 2065.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Antoine Dominique and wife, for eleven by forty arpents in right of ancient French concession.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar, and in the confirmation is thus described: "A piece of land one arpent wide, along the Marais, and ten more beyond it, and in length towards the hills forty arpents, lying at the Petit Passe, above the Prairie Du Rocher, and joining Jean Baptiste Barbeau, bought by him of Antoine Dominique and Therese Picard his wife, having descended to them from the father of Picard's wife." The commissioners, in order to investigate the validity of this confirmation, notified the claimant to produce the original grant or other evidence upon which the foregoing confirmation had been predicated; but no evidence other than the Governor's confirmation being produced, the Board proceeded to inquire into the merits of the same by the examination of ancient witnesses, who, on oath, state "that they did not know of any French concession having been granted to Antoine Dominique, or wife; that they did not know her father."

No. 185.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who was assignee of Joseph Decell, nephew and heir of Alexander Decell, in right of an ancient French concession.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara, and thus described in his order of survey for the same:

"For James O'Hara, assignee of Pierre Menard, who was assignee of Joseph Decell, nephew and heir of Alexander Decell, a tract of land lying in Randolph county, beginning at the Grand Ravine, on the Little Pass, bounded in front on the edge of said hills, on one side by the lands of Antoine Riverre Baccam, and on the other side by lands of the widow of the late Antoine Duclos, to be surveyed according to the old boundaries." No other evidence of claim or title having been exhibited to the Board by the agent of said O'Hara, (although he was duly notified to that effect,) the commissioners proceeded to investigate the validity of the same by the examination of witnesses; and the deponents state, that they do not know that Alexander Decell had a concession for land at the Little Pass; that they knew said Decell; he lived about Fort Chartres, where they are but little acquainted.

No. 181.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who was assignee of Elizabeth Volsey, widow, daughter and heir of Monsieur St. Ange, for fifteen by sixty arpents, in right of an ancient French grant.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara, and is thus described in the order of survey, issued by the said Governor for the same: "For James O'Hara, assignee of Pierre Menard, who was assignee of Elizabeth Volsey, widow, daughter and heir of Monsieur St. Ange, fifteen arpents of land by sixty, on the hills nearly opposite to Fort Chartres." But no other evidence being produced in support of the foregoing confirmation, although the agent for said O'Hara was particularly notified for that purpose, the commissioners proceeded to inquire into the validity of the same by the examination of witnesses; who state, that they do not know Mr. St. Ange had a concession for land on the hills opposite Fort Chartres, neither do they know that Mrs. Volsey had any lands at that place.

No. 2051.—The claim of JOHN EDWARD, assignee of Pierre Longlois, for 1423 acres, and 23 perches, or 28 by 60 arpents, in right of an ancient French grant.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar, as appears by his patent of confirmation dated on the 14th February, 1799.

In this case the commissioners have to remark, that, in the course of their inquiries into the validity of this confirmation, it is evident, on comparing the locality, quantity, courses, and distances expressed in this patent, with the locality, quantity, courses, and distances stated in the patent of confirmation from the same Governor to the said John Edgar, assignee of Chevalier and Winston, dated on the 19th April, 1799, that both patents have been given for one and the same tract; neither has the claimant exhibited any evidence to the contrary, nor does it appear that the said Pierre Longlois ever claimed, or was entitled to the land described in this claim; therefore, as this claim has been already acted on by the commissioners, under No. 2054, it ought to be here rejected, and the patent annulled, as being issued without authority of law.

No. 2009.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of the heirs of Pierre Longlois, for 1354 acres and 10 perches.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar, as appears by his patent of confirmation dated on the 14th February, 1799; but on examination and inquiry into the validity of the same, it appears that this confirmation is predicated on a concession granted by Timothy Dumontbrun on the 20th May, 1783; wherein there is conceded to the said Pierre Longlois a piece of land on the other side (east) of Kaskaskia river; one side to Henry Smith's habitation, on the north, at a little run, Smith's boundary, and on the south, on the other side, to Daniel Blouin, and eighty arpents long from Kaskaskia river; which, on a survey thereof, as returned by the surveyor of public lands in the county of Randolph, bearing date the 24th February, 1797, the same contains 1354 acres and 10 perches, or twenty by eighty arpents. It is further stated in the said return: "This concession covers old deeds which also belonged to Longlois at the time;" but which declaration the present claimant has failed to verify by exhibiting to this Board the ancient deeds or grants which the aforesaid concession is said to cover; and as the said concession can vest no right unless followed by improvement and cultivation, and as the said John Edgar has already received four hundred acres in right of the said Pierre Longlois's improvement, (see claim No. 2113) in the list of improvement claims transmitted by the present Board, therefore the commissioners are of opinion that this claim ought not to be confirmed, and that the aforesaid patent has been issued without authority of law.

No. 1236.—The claim of JOHN RICE JONES, assignee of Joseph Creely, for 1445 acres and 38 perches.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Rice Jones, of tract of land, "on the east side of Kaskaskia river, bounding on one side, in front, by lands late belonging to Creely, father, on another side, northwardly, by lands of Mr. Rocheblave and Mr. Pagé, on another side, southwardly, partly by the run called Creely's run, and by lands then vacant, now belonging to John Edgar, and on another side, eastwardly, by the river Amoritia, in virtue of an old French concession, and described in a deed of conveyance from said Creely to John Rice Jones, dated 23d July, 1796." The survey of this claim, made by virtue of an order from the Governor to the surveyor of the county of Randolph, dated November 16, 1803, represents this tract to be four miles in depth and about three-quarters in breadth, containing one thousand four hundred and forty-five acres of land. The following is the substance of an instrument, certified by John Gibson, Secretary of the Indiana Territory, to be a true copy of the original on file in his office, purporting to be the depositions of Jean Baptiste Gendron and Antoine Bienvenue the elder, (now both deceased,) said to have been taken before Pierre Menard, one of the justices of the peace in and for Randolph county, the 16th June, 1801: "That Joseph Creely was possessed of lands," and bounded as above described, "which said tract of land the said Joseph Creely held under a concession from the French commandant about the year 1763." On this evidence the confirmation of the Governor is predicated, no other evidence of claim or title having been exhibited to the Board by the claimant, although he was duly notified to that effect. The commissioners proceeded to investigate the validity of this confirmation, by the examination of the most ancient citizens of Kaskaskia village, who were well acquainted with this part of the country, and with said Joseph Creely; seven of these ancients, on being questioned, "do you, or either of you, know, or did either of you understand, that Joseph Creely was proprietor of a tract of land of sixteen arpents in front, extending from John Edgar's mill tract to the Amoritia, (being about one hundred acres in depth,) and had he a French concession for the same to your knowledge?" They all answered that they have no knowledge thereof.

Question. Do you know that said Creely ever claimed the said land, or any land in this neighbourhood?

Answer. No.

The testimony of Bienvenue and Gendron, it will be seen, has not been corroborated by the witnesses who have deposed before this Board, some of whom are, perhaps, as ancient as those who deposed before the Governor, and as well acquainted with the land here claimed, which is situated not more than a mile from this village, in which they had lived from their infancy. The deposition of Gendron and Bienvenue, if credited, is not in itself sufficient evidence of title, since they do not state that the grant was made before the cession of 10th February, 1763. Besides, the land said to be granted is of such an unusual form, as to excite doubts of its ever having been made.

From all the testimony attending this case, the Board cannot approve of the confirmation made by the Governor.

No. 1051.—The claim of the heirs of BARTHOLOMEW TARDIVIEU for four by six arpents.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said Bartholomew Tardivieu, and in the confirmation is thus described: "A piece of land four arpents by six on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, bounded in front by the road which runs to the mill of Mr. Pagé's heirs, on the back on the hills, on the north by land formerly Germain's, now said to be Viviat's, and on the south by a rivulet, along which runs the road to Vincennes, and a neck of land, the quantity not determined, to build upon; sold said Tardivieu by Lachance." In the further support of this claim, it appears that François Ayet, (widow Creely,) by deed dated on the 2d March, 1774, conveyed unto Nicholas Caillet Lachance a tract of land of six arpents in front (the depth could not then be designated, the said vendor not having then with her the title of concession;) the whole bounding in front by a great road, leading to the mill of the heirs of Pagé in rear, and on the hills, by a run on which there had theretofore been built a mill by the deceased Prix Pagé, on the north by land belonging to one Germain, and then actually to one Viviat, as he said; on the south by a small run, along which the road to Post Vincennes passes; which said premises belonged to the vendor in right of the community with the deceased Jean Bte. Creely, her husband, as it appears by a partition made between her and her children by Mr. Labussiere, then notary. Now, as it is unknown to this Board what part of the estate of Jean Bte. Creely, deceased, (mentioned in John Edgar's claim No. 2080) is intended to be conveyed by the aforesaid conveyance, and as all the land that the said Jean Bte. Creely is entitled to has been confirmed to the legal representatives of the same Jean Bte. Creely, under John Edgar's claim No. 2080, this claim cannot be here sustained; leaving to the said Tardivieu's heirs to contest their right before a competent tribunal.

No. 2208.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR and JOHN MURRY St. CLAIR for 13,986 acres, in right of a British grant.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar and John Murry St. Clair; which confirmation is grounded on a concession made in the year 1769, by John Wilkins, styling himself lieutenant colonel of His Majesty's eighteenth royal Irish regiment, and commandant in the Illinois, to a company then trading in the country, under the firm of Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan, from whom it would seem it came by sundry transfers to John Edgar.

All the documents, together with a report relative to this claim, have been transmitted, by the former Board, to the government, to which we beg leave to refer. It is only necessary further to remark, that the patent was issued after the powers of Governor St. Clair had ceased to exist in the Indiana Territory. And from a view of all the facts, the commissioners are of opinion that the grant was a speculative one, the patent a nullity, and that this claim is founded neither in law nor equity, and, therefore, ought not to be confirmed.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA, Jan. 4, 1813.

No. 1285.—The claim of JOHN RICE JONES, assignee of the heirs of John Bte. Place, for forty by sixty arpents, in right of an ancient French grant.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Rice Jones, and in the confirmation is thus described: "John Rice Jones, assignee of Jean Bte. Placé, a tract of land forty arpents wide by sixty in depth, on the east side of the river Kaskaskia, in the neighbourhood of the village, in virtue of an ancient French grant." In support of this confirmation is added an official copy of a concession, dated 14th May, 1734, from D'Artuguiette, major at New Orleans, and commandant general for the King for the whole province of the Illinois, to Mr. Boisjollie and Jean Bte. Lebert, dit Barrois, twenty arpents each of land by sixty arpents in depth, on the east side of the river Kaskaskia, bounded to the line of the commons on the north, and on the other side by vacant lands, front by the Kaskaskia river, and on the other end on the other side of a prairie; also, a deed of conveyance from Joseph Bougou and Mary, his wife, Joseph Placé and Lewis Placé, children and heirs of Joseph Placé and Catharine, his wife, deceased, who (said Catharine) was daughter and heir of Jean Bte. Barrois, to Jean Bte. Placé, (co-heir with them, the said Mary, Joseph, and Lewis,) wherein there is conveyed to him all their right to a certain tract of land, containing about forty arpents in front and sixty in depth, situate on the east side of the river Kaskaskia.

From the foregoing documents, the commissioners were in the act of recommending the confirmation of this claim, without the production of the original grant; but, reflecting on the interpolation made in the ancient record with respect to Mrs. Alary's claim, the commissioners accordingly caused the original grant to be produced, which appears to be endorsed as follows: "Boisjollie, 14th May, 1734, Cotte cinq cent quatre-vingt, No. 1;" but, on inspection of the same, the words "14th May," and "No. 1," are written in a different hand from the other part of the endorsement, which other part is endorsed by the same hand that endorsed other office papers of that date, (1734;) this circumstance, when viewed in connexion with the apparent infant state of the writing in petition and grant to the said Boisjollie and Barrois, compared with other office papers of that date, (1734,) excited no small degree of surprise and astonishment in the breast of the commissioners; but, hoping to find their suspicions unfounded, the signature of Mr. D'Artuguiette to this instrument, of so much importance, was compared with his signature to other papers of little or no moment; but, instead of their suspicions being removed, they were more confirmed, for so far from finding a similitude of signatures, even the name of the commandant is improperly spelled to this grant; it is spelled thus, D'Artuguiette, and to all other instruments in the office signed by him it is thus spelled, D'Artuguiette. Yet, notwithstanding such strong presumptive evidence of fraud, the commissioners were unwilling to harbor the entire belief that the aforesaid grant was a forgery, but requested the keeper of those records to make diligent search whether some entry or memorandum respecting the same could be found; who accordingly certified to this Board, that, after the most diligent search, he could discover nothing other than the following: that, in an ancient record book containing entries of lands claimed by the citizens of Illinois, made in conformity with the requisition of Louis Auguste Delaloire Flancour, sub-delegate at the Illinois of Mr. De Salmon, among others, is found the claim of Jean Bte. Bertlos Barrois, for thirty toises square, at Kaskaskia, granted by Mr. D'Artuguiette to said Barrois on the 10th March, 1734; also, two arpents of land in front, extending from the Mississippi to the Kaskaskia, granted to said Barrois by the said Mr. D'Artuguiette, on the 10th of February, 1736; the entry of the aforesaid claims is dated 21st May, 1742. On the 14th June, 1743, in same book is the following entry: Jacques and Joseph Barrois say they are proprietors of two arpents in front, extending from the Kaskaskia river to the Mississippi, which is claimed in virtue of a grant from Mr. Debenoit de St. Clair and Delaloire Flancour, commandant and commissary in the Illinois, on the 17th April, 1742. It is furthermore certified, that having examined the books and different indexes, no mention is made of the concession by Mr. D'Artuguiette to Jean Bte. Barrois, of forty by sixty arpents, on the 14th May, 1734. As the commissioners have in this case stated all the documents in their possession which militates against the validity of this confirmation, they deem it no more than an act of justice to the claimant to annex such circumstances as have come within their view, which operates in its favor. From testimony before the Board, it would seem that it is the understanding of the ancients of the country that Barrois had land on the east side of the Kaskaskia river; what quantity is not stated; and the land of Barrois is referred to in a concession granted to Nicholas Janis and Vital Beauvais, by Dumontbruin, in 1784. Now, notwithstanding it is the general understanding of the ancients that Barrois had land at this place, yet the commissioners have no hesitation in giving it as their opinion, that the grant exhibited to them is an evident forgery; that Governor Harrison was imposed on by it; and thereby this confirmation was fraudulently obtained. Although the commissioners have been obliged to express themselves thus harshly with respect to the confirmation under investigation, yet it is probable that Barrois had land in this particular place, but what quantity is unknown; the usual length of lands at that particular place seems to be only from the river Kaskaskia to the hills, (say from five to twelve arpents in length;) and as the ancient grants appear to only occupy one side of a half sheet of paper, the whole sheet is filled entire, the remaining half serving as an envelope, upon which the endorsement is made, and this grant appears to be written on such outside half sheet. Query; might there not have been a real grant to Boisjollie and Barrois, for a small quantity of land in 1734, at this place, and endorsed as before stated, the half sheet whereon the true grant was made torn off, and a grant for any quantity written on the remaining half? which species of grant would receive some coloring from the venerable endorsement. Upon the whole, the commissioners are of opinion that this claim ought not to be confirmed.

TWO SPECIAL CASES.

No. 322.—The claim of SHADRACH BOND for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation.

In support of this claim, the claimant exhibited a patent from Governor St. Clair, dated 17th September, 1796, granting to him four hundred acres, situate in St. Clair county. Neither the patent nor the claimant's notice affords any information of the topographical situation, nor is it stated who was the original claimant. The notice represents that this was granted to him in right of a French concession, dated June, 1784, and which had been cultivated and improved according to law. The Board, in this case, are induced to suppose that this grant was made to claimant as assignee of some person, and not in his own right, since he has obtained a grant from the Governor, on the day above stated, for four hundred acres, in virtue of his own improvement right. (See claim, No. 321.) Now, as the original claimant's name is unknown in this case, as the claimant is dead, and as it seems the executor is unacquainted with the facts, the Board in this case were left without the means of inquiring into the validity of this confirmation.

No. 2066.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Amye Comte, who was assignee of Joseph Peltier, for four hundred acres of land, in right of improvement and cultivation.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar, and in his book of confirmations is thus described: "Four hundred acres at the Little Pass, above Fort Chartres, joining Barbeau and George Powers, proved to have been occupied in 1783 by Amye Comte, from whom it was bought by Mr. Edgar," which circumstance induced the commissioners to believe that the said Amye Comte was the original claimant; but, on examining the claimant's notice of the nature and extent, as well as the deed of transfer from said Comte to the said Edgar, it would seem that the Board ought to have inquired respecting the improvement made by the said Joseph Peltier, and not the said Amye Comte; but, unfortunately, this error was not discovered until the hour of making up our report; therefore no opportunity was allowed us to inquire into the validity of this confirmation in the name of Joseph Peltier, the proper original claimant; our examination having been confined entirely to Amye Comte, who was the intermediate assignee, and consequently have no evidence of the invalidity of confirmation.

A SPECIAL CONFIRMATION.

Improvement of Antoine Morin, Francis Rousseau, Antoine Morin, junior, and Louis Morin.

2047.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Bartholomew Richard, assignee of Antoine Morin, Antoine * Patent should issue to legal representatives.

† These two claims are granted in right of Robert Watts.

Morin, Jun., and Louis Morin, for nine hundred and nineteen acres seventy-nine perches, (or seventeen by sixty-four arpents.)

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar, assignee, as aforesaid. Upon the examination of the papers filed by the claimant in support of this claim, it appears, by a deed of bargain and sale, dated on the 20th August, 1796, that the said Bartholomew Richard conveyed to the said John Edgar the following court deeds, for land on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, to wit: two or three arpents each in front from the river Kaskaskia to the hills, by forty arpents on said hills, which he received from Antoine Morin by deed, dated April 4, 1789; one of which concessions said Morin purchased of François Rousseau; also another concession of three arpents in front from the Kaskaskia river to the hills, by forty arpents deep on the said hills, which the said Richard purchased of Antoine Morin, Jun. by deed dated on the 8th August, 1789; and also another concession of four arpents in front from the said river to the hills, and forty arpents deep on the hills, which was purchased by the said Richard of Louis Morin, by deed dated August 17, 1784; from which it would seem that the extent of these concessions is but fourteen arpents front, not seventeen as stated by the Governor. But as the before mentioned concessions convey no right unless followed by improvement and cultivation, the Board have inquired into the same by the examination of witnesses, who, on oath, state, that Antoine Morin, Sen., in the year 1785, made an improvement, built a cabin, and cultivated about twenty acres of land in grain in said year, (situate on the east side of the Kaskaskia river,) and lived thereon four years.

They all knew another man in the country by the name of Antoine Morin, but know of no improvement made by him, also another Antoine Morin, son of Antoine Morin, Sen., who, at the above date, was about seventeen years of age, and lived with his father.

The deponents also knew François Rousseau, but know of no improvement made by him. It is further proved that Antoine Morin, Jun. cultivated land with his father on the other (east) side of Kaskaskia river, before 1791; does not know of his cultivating in any other place; this was on the improvement made by his father. Antoine Morin, Jun. is now at least forty years old. The same witness further states, that Louis Morin is about two years younger than his brother Antoine, (thirty-eight years,) that said Louis cultivated with his father in the same manner as Antoine Morin, Jun. did, and on the same improvement of his father. From a view of the foregoing testimony, taken in connexion with the claim of Bartholomew Richard, who was assignee of the said Antoine Morin, we see the said Morin possessed of the concessions of Picard, Mieux, Rousseau, together with his own, making, in the whole, twelve arpents in front, on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, extending from the said river to the hills, by forty arpents deep on the said hills; but those concessions convey no right, unless followed by improvement and cultivation. From the foregoing testimony, it is proved that said Morin did improve and cultivate on the concession which he obtained from Picard, whereby the United States became bound to confirm unto him only four hundred acres of land, although his concessions called for a greater quantity; that, after he became so entitled, he sold the whole of his concessions, and generally all he possessed, to the said Richard; that the said Richard afterwards sold to the said John Edgar the concessions of the said Morin, Rousseau, Antoine Morin, Jun. and Louis Morin, making, in the whole, fourteen arpents in front. Upon which Governor St. Clair confirmed to the said Edgar nine hundred and nineteen acres and seventy-nine perches, and some years afterwards the said Richard obtained from Governor Harrison a confirmation of the remaining concessions of Picard and Mieux. From the testimony adduced in support thereof to Governor Harrison, it appears that the confirmation was not made in right of the said concessions, but in virtue of the improvement made by said Morin; and, from the same testimony, it further appears that Governor Harrison was induced to believe that the lands upon which the said improvement was made were neither [claimed] nor conceded; whereas, it appears by the testimony taken by this Board relative to this claim, that the said improvement was made on land claimed by Mrs. Alary as a sugar camp.

Now, as the commissioners conceive that they have no power to determine rights between individuals, they cannot pretend to say which of the claimants is entitled to the right of the said Morin, but give it as their opinion that there ought to be confirmed, in right of the said Antoine Morin, the quantity of four hundred acres where he improved, provided the same is not occupied by any former vested right; leaving the said Edgar and the said Richard to contest their respective rights before a competent tribunal; and to the said John Edgar, in right of Antoine Morin, Jun., three arpents in front by forty arpents continuation on the hills; and as Louis Morin sold his concession before he improved, therefore the improvement made by him afterwards cannot attach to his concession. Mr. Jones did not concur in the above opinion, so far as it relates to the confirmation to the said Edgar in right of Antoine Morin, Jun.

No. 7.

A transcript of claims which are derived from confirmations made by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories to those persons who had improved and cultivated lands in the Illinois country, in pursuance of the fourth section of the act of the 3d March, 1791; but which are unsupported before the Board of Commissioners appointed in pursuance of the act of the 20th February, 1812.

Improvement of Antoine Antya.

No. 325.—The claim of ANTOINE ANTYA for one hundred and sixty arpents, in virtue of a court deed and improvement. This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said Antoine Antya. It is proved that Antoine Antya, in the year 1785, made some rails at a place about six miles above the village of Kaskaskia, on the west side of the Kaskaskia river; which place said Antya claimed as his improvement. No other improvement or cultivation is stated by said deponent.

Improvement of Blaize Barutel, dit Toulouse.

No. 187.—The claim of WILLIAM McINTOSH, assignee of William St. Clair, who purchased, at sheriff's sale, the improvement; right of Blaize Barutel, dit Toulouse, for four hundred acres. This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to William St. Clair. The deponents state that they have heard of an improvement made by Barutel, but know not where it was done.

Improvement of John Brand.

No. 1040.—The claim of ROBERT MORRISON, assignee of George White, who was assignee of John Brand, for four hundred acres, in virtue of cultivation and improvement. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Brand. One witness states that he understood that John Brand came to the Illinois the same year that General Clark took possession of the country; that he was further informed said Brand had made two improvements in the country, one on Silver creek, and the other on Richland creek; neither improvement nor cultivation is stated to have been observed by witness at either place. Another witness states that he was present when Governor Harrison and Robert Morrison were conversing with respect to a certain land claim, when Mr. Morrison asked Governor Harrison if his (Morrison's) proof was sufficient? The Governor observed it was. But deponent does not recollect in whose right the land was claimed, neither does he remember to have heard the name of John Brand mentioned; nor was there any person who deposed in support of said right in his (deponent's) presence.

Improvement of Jean Bte. Barbeau, Jun.

No. 95.—The claim of NICHOLAS JARROT, assignee of Jean Bte. Barbeau, Jun., for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Jean Bte. Barbeau. The deponents know nothing of this improvement.

Improvement of — Beaugeneaux.

No. 178.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, assignee of Jacque La Sablinier and wife, who was heir of her father, — Beaugeneaux, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara. The deponents know nothing of this improvement or cultivation.

Improvement of John Cochran.

No. 2068.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of John Cochran, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is stated that John Cochran came to Illinois in the year 1784, but it is not known that he made an improvement.

Improvement of Thomas Comstock.

No. 2077.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Thomas Comstock, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement. This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Edgar. The deponents state that they knew Thomas Comstock, but neither knew nor have heard of any improvement made by him; that he left the country in 1784, and did not return until about twelve years ago. Other deponents state that they know nothing of this improvement.

Improvement of Jean Bte. Cardinal.

No. 2056.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Jean Bte. Cardinal, for one hundred and sixty arpents of land, in virtue of court deed and improvement. This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved that, about thirty years ago, Jean Bte. Cardinal lived at Paisa, five or six leagues above Cahokia; that he built a house, and resided there with his family; that he was taken prisoner by the Indians, when his family were obliged to abandon there, and retired to the village of Cahokia; that no cultivation is recollected to have been observed. Should the foregoing claim be confirmed by Congress, the commissioners would recommend that the confirmation be to the said Cardinal, or his legal representatives, as the title papers of the said John Edgar appear not to be regular.

Improvement of Peter Deshe.

No. 1.—The claim of ROBERT REYNOLDS, assignee of John Reynolds, assignee of Peter Deshe, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Reynolds. With respect to the foregoing claim, the commissioners have to remark that, in the examination of more than twenty witnesses, in the course of their proceedings, touching the validity of Governors' confirmations generally, it did not appear that Peter Deshe or his improvement was known to either of them; that Archibald Thompson, the real present claimant and assignee of said Robert Reynolds, procured from the Secretary of the Indiana Territory a certified copy of the testimony upon which this confirmation was predicated, from which it appeared that a certain Baptiste Fortin and Antoine Mark made oath, "that they knew Peter Deshe to live with his family, of which he was the head, upon a concession, where he had cleared and cultivated some upwards of twelve acres, east bank of Kaskaskia river, above the mouth of a creek now called Nine Mile; and further saith that the said tract of land was certainly given by the French, as was given to the other French people." And that a certain Nicholas Canada made oath that he knew Peter Deshe to live upon and occupy a piece of land east of Kaskaskia river, about one mile above the mouth of Nine Mile creek, where, he further saith, he knew the said Deshe to improve said place with a cabin, and clear ten or eleven acres—not less than ten; and that he saw wheat and corn growing on the land, and many years in possession of said Peter Deshe; that said improvement was made twenty years ago, (signed 1802.) And also that a certain Michael Antya made oath that he knew Peter Deshe to clear and cultivate ten acres of land, for the space of five or six years, east bank of Kaskaskia river, about six miles above the village of the same name; that said improvement was made by leave of the commander at Kaskaskia, about the time that General Clark invaded said village. Also, a certain John Marney states, on oath, that he well knew Peter Deshe to live on his place, on the east bank of Kaskaskia river, one mile above Nine Mile creek, at the Roaring Spring, as early as the year 1780, and continued to live thereon until 1791; that he had to fort some of the summers, but he every year made and gathered a crop thereon. The before named Baptiste Fortin, Nicholas Canada, and Michel Antya, being known inhabitants of Kaskaskia village, a summons was immediately issued by the Board of Commissioners requiring their appearance before them, who, in obedience to the same, appeared and deposed as follows, to wit: Michel Antya states that he knows nothing of Peter Deshe, nor of his improvement; he knows well the Roaring Spring, but does not know of any improvement being made there before the year 1790. The witness denies having made such deposition, as is said to have been made by him before Robert Reynolds, a Justice of the Peace of Randolph county, said to bear date the 1st of November, 1802, and which is now read to him. He further says that he never knew how to read or write. Baptiste Fortin states that he never knew a man by the name of Peter Deshe, nor of any improvement made by any such person. Witness never was, at any time, above the Nine Mile creek, nor never knew a spring called the Roaring Spring, nor never heard of any improvement having been made by any one at that place. Witness, hearing the deposition said to have been by him made, on the 4th December, 1802, before Robert McMahan, read to him, denies having ever made such deposition.

Nicholas Canada states that he never knew a man by the name of Robert Deshe, nor of any improvement made above the Nine Mile creek, other than the one made by a certain Hicks, having the said deposition made to him, which is said he had taken before Robert McMahan, on the 1st of October, 1802; he denies having ever made such deposition. The testimony of these deponents being so contradictory, the commissioners were induced to believe that the deposition upon which the Governor made this confirmation was a forgery, and therefore directed a summons to issue for Robert McMahan, Esq. to appear before this Board to give evidence concerning the same: whereupon the said McMahan, Esq. appeared and deposed as follows; that, in the fall of the year 1802 or 1803, he took the deposition of Baptiste Fortin, in support of a claim for Robert Reynolds to a tract of land called the Roaring Spring, about one mile above the mouth of Nine Mile creek; that he believes, but is not certain, that he also took the deposition of Nicholas Canada, in support of the same claim; that the said depositions were taken in the presence of William Wilson, who was authorized by Governor Harrison to be present at the taking of depositions in support of land claims in the county of Randolph; that he does not recollect of having taken any depositions in favor of any claim of Reynolds other than the above; does not remember taking the one said to be sworn before him by John Marney; does not recollect the original claimant's name, but well remembers that the said depositions by him taken were in support of the above described tract; that the said depositions so taken were written, and principally explained to the deponents by said Wilson, Mr. Edgar being present all the time, assisting him when called on; that Canada and Fortin spoke English enough to be understood: and if any use was made of an interpreter, Mr. Edgar acted as such; that he did not at that time understand the French language; that Fortin made his own statements in English; does not recollect what statement the witnesses made as to the extent of the improvement; that the depositions so taken were certified by Mr. Wilson as having been taken in his presence. The said Fortin and Canada being present, declare on oath that they never made any deposition before Mr. McMahan, or any other magistrate, at Mr. Edgar's house, or elsewhere, in support of Deshe's improvement, and do not recollect of ever having made a deposition in support of land claims in the presence of Mr. Wilson.

The commissioners in this case cannot forbear remarking, that, upon a view of the foregoing testimony, evident fraud and imposition has been practised by Reynolds on Governor Harrison; because, it would seem, from the deposition of the magistrate, before whom the said Fortin and Canada deposed, that they were taken at one and the same time, and that Mr. Wilson then wrote and certified the same to the Governor as his agent; but, on examining the deposition of Canada, it appears to bear date the 1st of October, 1802, and that of Fortin's the 4th December, 1802, and that of John Marney's the 11th of January, 1803; nor do the said depositions appear to have the approbation of said Wilson annexed to them, as only a copy of these depositions was forwarded; the said McMahan was unable to tell whether he affixed his signature as above stated: therefore, from a consideration of the whole circumstances, the Board are of opinion that Mr. McMahan has stated such facts in which it would seem he could not be mistaken; although the said Fortin and Canada deny these facts, yet we are inclined to believe that said Fortin and Canada have stated something relative to some claim at the time and manner mentioned by said McMahan. The circumstance of their bearing different dates induces us to be of opinion that those now presented are not the ones alluded to by said McMahan, but forgeries executed by said Reynolds, to impose upon the Governor; those which were properly taken not being considered by him sufficient to obtain the grant.

Improvement of William Davis.

No. 36.—The claim of ROBERT REYNOLDS, assignee of William Kelly, who was assignee of William Davis, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is likewise derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to said Robert Reynolds.

One deponent states that he knew a man by the name of Davis in Kaskaskia, in 1782, 1783, and 1784, but does not recollect his Christian name; that he died some years after at said place. All the other deponents state they know nothing of his improvement.

Improvement of Jacque DufRAIN.

No. 183.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, assignee of Philip Rocheblave and Joseph Pagé, heirs of Jacque DufRAIN, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara.

Three witnesses state that they knew Jacque DufRAIN: that they understood said DufRAIN made an improvement at or near the river Marie; another states that he heard talk of said DufRAIN; but that he died before deponent's recollection; know nothing of his improvement.

Improvement of Louis Delisle.

No. 2033.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Louis Delisle, for four hundred arpents, in right of court deed, improvement, and cultivation. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to said John Edgar.

One witness states that Louis Delisle had a sugary at the river Degagne; and three other witnesses state that they know of no cultivation made by said Delisle at that place, otherwise than as a sugary; another witness states that he knows nothing of this improvement; another witness states that, about twenty-two or twenty-three years ago, the said Delisle had a shed or camp at the Marais Apaquois, where claimant and a certain Degagne made sugar; that, in the spring, when said claimant and Degagne were about to retire from this place, said Delisle furnished a part of a hatfull of corn, which was planted by Degagne at that place.

Improvement of Philip Engle and Joseph Lambert.

No. 1800.—The claim of GEORGE LUNCEFORD, assignee of Nicholas Jarrot, assignee of Philip Engle, in his own right, and assignee of Joseph Lambert, for seven hundred and seventy-eight acres, in right of court deeds, and improvement, and cultivation.

This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said Nicholas Jarrot.

It is proved that said Engle and Lambert each took up a piece of land near the Sugar Loaf, about five miles from Cahokia, but do not know of any cultivation by either of them made.

Improvement of John Ellison.

No. 511.—The claim of the heirs of JOHN ELLISON, deceased, for four hundred acres, in virtue of improvement and cultivation.

This claim is likewise derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Ellison's heirs.

It is proved by one witness that John Ellison, in the year 1783, grubbed a few acres of land adjoining the P'Aigle creek; that said Ellison died in the country in said year; that said Ellison informed deponent that it was his intention to live on said improvement; another witness states that said Ellison lived at the Little village, (St. Philips,) and died there in 1782; that he had, when there, raised corn, had a wife, children, and negroes; another witness states that, in the winter of 1792, he went into the Mississippi bottom, with a view to purchase land; that he was shown a place said to be the improvement of John Ellison; that deponent was told by Nathaniel Hull, Josiah Ryan, Alexander Dennis, and Shadrach Bond, Sen. (all of whom are since dead,) and by every person with whom he conversed on the subject, that the said improvement was made by the said Ellison; that deponent believes he discovered signs of cultivation on said improvement, which appeared to have been made many years before; that he saw the foundation of a cabin, which appeared to be almost rotten; that deponent was further informed by the before-named gentleman that the said Ellison had raised corn, &c. on said improvement for one or two years; and another witness states that he understood, many years since, (1786,) from the old settlers in the country, that said Ellison had an improvement near the P'Aigle creek.

Improvement of John Fowler.

No. 314.—The claim of JAMES HUGHES, assignee of John Fowler, for two hundred acres, in right of cultivation and improvement.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to said Hughes.

The deponents state that they know nothing of this claimant's improvement.

Improvement of Stephen John Francis.

No. 230.—The claim of WILLIAM BIGGS, assignee of Stephen John Francis, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation by Governor _____.

One witness states that he knew said Francis in the Illinois country in the year 1783, but knows of no improvement by him made; another witness knows nothing of him. Another witness states that he knew said Francis before he came to the country, and after his return in 1783, or 1784; that, when deponent came to the country in 1786, he was informed by the old settlers that said Francis, while living here, had made an improvement near Kaskaskia river, some small distance from the village of Kaskaskia. Another witness states, that he knew said Francis; that he came to the country with deponent's father, in 1781; that, in said year, said Francis, with others, went up the Kaskaskia river for the purpose, as deponent understood, of making an improvement; that deponent afterwards understood said Francis had made an improvement on or near said river; that said Francis afterwards went to reside at Bellefontaine station, where, he understood, said Francis cleared land, but does not know it of his own knowledge. From testimony taken by the late Board, it would seem that no cultivation has been made by the said Francis on the Kaskaskia, and that the improvement only consisted in marking some trees.

Improvement of Ambrois Glenel.

No. 2076.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Ambroise Glenel, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Edgar.

The deponents state that they know nothing of this improvement.

Improvement of Philip Gallaghen.

No. 2079.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Philip Gallaghen, for four hundred acres, in right of cultivation and improvement.

This claim likewise derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to said Edgar.

The deponents state that they knew said Gallaghen, but know of no improvement made by him.

Improvement of Amable Gagné.

No. 2082.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Amable Gagné, for ten by forty arpents, in right of court deed and improvement.

This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to said Edgar.

It is proved that Amable Gagné made sugar at the Marais Apaquois, or river Gagné, for ten years, but know of no cultivation by him made at that place. Another witness states that he knows of no improvement made by said Gagné, other than by making sugar. Another witness states that, about twenty-three years ago, the said Gagné built a camp or shed at the Marais Apaquois, where he made sugar, in connexion with a certain Delisle; that, in the month of March, in said year, when said Gagné and said Delisle were about to retire from said place, the said Gagné and deponent cut away the logs and cleared off the weeds on about half an arpent of land, when said Gagné dug holes with a hoe, and deponent dropped corn in the holes, and covered it with his feet. In this case, the commissioners cannot forbear to remark, that, taking the testimony in its greatest extent, the improvement and cultivation here said to be made cannot be considered an improvement and cultivation within the spirit and meaning of the act of 1791.

Improvement of Jean Bte. Mercier.

No. 731.—The claim of JEAN F. PERRY, assignee of Jean Bte. Mercier, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Jean F. Perry.

The deponents all state that Jean Bte. Mercier had a sugar camp on the hills, near the river Platin, before their remembrance, but know of no cultivation, otherwise than as a sugar camp. Two other witnesses state that the said Jean Bte. Mercier had a cabin on the hills, opposite Prairie Dupont, in which he resided several years, before 1783, and until 1791, but know of no cultivation thereon.

Improvement of Mary Marchal.

No. 2075.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Mary Marchal, for ———, in right of improvement and cultivation.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Edgar.

The deponents state, that they knew Mary Marchal and her husband, Nicholas Marchal, but know of no improvement made either by the said Mary Marchal, or her husband, at or near the river Marie. Another witness states, that he knows of no improvement made by this claimant. Several other deponents state, that they know nothing of this improvement.

Improvement of Joseph Petre, alias Gascon.

No. 717.—The claim of JEAN F. PERRY, assignee of the heirs of Joseph Petre, alias Gascon, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation.

This claim is also derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to said Perry.

The deponents state that Joseph Petre had a sugar camp on the river Platin, near Cahokia, more than fifty years ago; that it was always cultivated as a sugar camp; that they know of no other cultivation. Another deponent states, that the said Joseph Petre had a cabin on the river Platin, but cannot say that any cultivation was made.

Improvement of Benjamin Rogers.

No. 676.—The claim of DAVIS WHITESIDES, assignee of Thomas Tolbot, assignee of Larkin Rutherford, who was assignee of Benjamin Rogers, for three hundred acres, by virtue of court deed, improvement and cultivation.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to P. Bryant and Davis Whitesides.

It is proved by one witness, that Benjamin Rogers, in the year 1786, grubbed and cleared four or five acres of land; part of it he had fenced, and had rails split to fence the balance: that he had laid the foundation of a cabin; that deponent saw no cultivation there, (it being winter,) but believes it was the intention of said Rogers to live on said improvement, but was prevented by Indian hostilities; that said Rogers afterwards removed to the New Design, and remained in the country until he died, some years afterwards. Two other witnesses state, that said Rogers moved to the New Design, in the fall or winter of 1790, and prepared to build a cabin there; that, in the spring of 1791, he cleared about ten acres, and planted it in corn, and built a cabin. No conveyance from Rogers has been exhibited to this Board; therefore, should this right be confirmed by Congress, the patent should issue to the legal representatives, who should still reside in the country.

Improvement of François Saucier.

No. 644.—The claim of JOSIAH BLAKELY, assignee of William Arundel, who was assignee of François Saucier, for four hundred acres, in right of improvement and cultivation.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said François Saucier.

The deponents knew that Saucier's mother had a sugar camp, which she was in possession of ever since their recollection, from whom it descended to her son, François Saucier. They never knew of any other cultivation than as a sugar camp.

Improvement of Jean Bte. St. Ange.

No. 1394.—The claim of PRATIER and SMILEY, assignees of John Edgar, assignee of John McElduff, who was assignee of Jean Bte. St. Ange, for 400 acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Edgar, assignee, as aforesaid.

One witness states, that, about the year 1786, Jean Bte. St. Ange lived with the deponent, and continued to live with him about two years; that he knows nothing of his improvement; but, while said St. Ange lived with deponent, he used to go out frequently to work, as he said, on his improvement; and which he then and now believes to be true. Another witness states, that he knows the place which St. Ange claims as his improvement; it is situated in the Little Prairie, about six miles east of Kaskaskia; he saw a cabin built on the land in 1787, but does not know who built it; he also saw turnips and wheat growing on the hill, near the spring, on the land, in said year 1787; the grain sowed was between a quarter and half an acre, and seemed to have been done with a hoe, but does not know who sowed the land; deponent understood that a certain McElduff and his negro built a cabin; but, for what deponent knows, he might have done so for St. Ange, who was his brother-in-law. Another witness states, that he never was on St. Ange's improvement; but, from report, understood that, in 1782 or 1783, said St. Ange made an improvement at the Little Prairie a few miles eastwardly of Kaskaskia, where he cultivated and reaped grain; that he resided there some time, and afterwards sold his improvement to his brother-in-law, John McElduff.

Improvement of Philip D. St. Pierre.

No. 2073.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Philip Derousse St. Pierre, for 400 acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Edgar.

The deponents state, that Philip Derousse St. Pierre had a sugary at the Marais Apaquois; had a cabin; but know of no cultivation by him made at this place; that he generally resided there from fall to spring for the purpose of making sugar, and has resided there in this way for twenty years past; that they have passed this place several times in sugar making, but saw no enclosures nor signs of cultivation. Another witness states, that said St. Pierre has claimed, and been in possession of land, below Marais Apaquois for twenty-eight or thirty years, where he first made sugary; but, about twenty-five years ago, he planted corn, and sowed pumpkin seed thereon almost every year since; that he had a cabin on the land; that his practice was to go there in the fall and stay till spring, when, after planting his corn, retired to the village of Kaskaskia, for fear of the Indians; that he had no field fenced, it being unnecessary, there being no settlements in the neighborhood, except his brother's; that, in the fall, he gathered his corn and pumpkins that he had planted in the preceding spring. Another witness (Louis Delisle) states, that he knew St. Pierre, but knows of no improvement nor cultivation made by him at the Marais Apaquois; that, if any improvement was made by him at that place, it must have been made since the summer of 1790. Two other witnesses state, that Louis Delisle left Kaskaskia in the year 1788, and has resided at or near St. Louis ever since; and that he has not lived on the east side of the Mississippi since their knowledge. Another deponent states, that he does not believe any one cultivated at or in this neighborhood, as he knew the persons who went there merely wintered at the camps, and returned to the village in the spring. From a view of the testimony in the preceding as well as succeeding case, it will be perceived, that the residence of the claimants at the places claimed by them as their improvement, was not permanent, but merely temporary, for the purpose of making sugar; therefore, cannot be entitled; for their cultivation, if any, does not come within the spirit and meaning of the act of 1791.

Improvement of Michel D. St. Pierre.

No. 2074.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Michel Derousse St. Pierre, for 400 acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Edgar.

The deponents state, that Michel Derousse St. Pierre had a sugary at the Marais Apaquois; but know of no cultivation by him made at that place; that deponents passed this place several times in sugar making, but saw no signs of cultivation nor enclosures. Another witness states, that said St. Pierre had a tract of land adjoining his brother Philip; had a cabin erected thereon; that he planted apple and peach trees; that it was his practice to reside at this place during the winter season, and, after planting his corn in the spring, retired to the village of Kaskaskia; and return again in the fall, and gathered the crop which he had planted the preceding spring; that the cabin and land of the deponent was some distance from said improvement. Another witness (Louis Delisle) states, that he knows of no improvement nor cultivation made by said St. Pierre at the Marais Apaquois; that, if any improvement was made by him at that place, it must have been made since the summer of 1790; that this deponent lived at said place from fall to spring in the years 1789 and 1790; that the only one of the said St. Pierres who lived at that place while deponent resided there, was Jean Bte. St. Pierre, who went there with a Mr. Gagné; that this deponent never knew or heard of any of the said St. Pierres having made an establishment at said place before this deponent went there to reside; that there was no cabin there but Gagné's, nor signs of cultivation when deponent went there to live. Two other witnesses state, that Louis Delisle (the last mentioned witness) left Kaskaskia in the spring of 1788, and went to reside at or near St. Louis; and that he has not, to their knowledge, lived on the east side of the Mississippi since.

Improvement of Gideon Thomas.

No. 2.—The claim of ROBERT REYNOLDS, assignee of Gideon Thomas, for 350 acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is confirmed by Governor Harrison to the said Robert Reynolds.

The deponents state that they knew a man by the name of Thomas, but do not recollect his Christian name; that they know of no improvements by him made prior to 1791. Other deponents state, that they know nothing of said Thomas, or of his improvement.

Improvement of James Watts.

No. 1361.—The claim of JOHN RICE JONES, assignee of James Watts, for 410 arpents, in right of court deed and improvement. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said John Rice Jones.

The deponents state that they knew James Watts in 1786 and 1787, at the block-house station, but do not know of his improvement. Another deponent states that he knew James Watts in the year 1787; knows he claimed an improvement on the hills, back of William Biggs's present residence; does not recollect any improvement in particular on the land, and, if he had made any, it could not have been seen in the following year, as the woods were usually burned yearly; saw no signs of cultivation; nor did he cultivate corn in any of the stations, to deponent's knowledge.

Improvement of Nicholas, François, Antoine, and Jean Baptiste Janis.

No. 2010.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Nicholas Janis, François Janis, Antoine Janis, and Jean Baptiste Janis, for 529 acres, 60 perches, or 12 by 52 arpents, in right of court deeds and improvements.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar, 14th February, 1799.

Improvement of the same persons and Vital Beauvais.

No. 444.—The claim of WILLIAM MORRISON, assignee of Nicholas Janis, François Janis, Antoine Janis, Jean Baptiste Janis, and Vital Beauvais, for 500 acres, in right of court deeds and improvement. This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said William Morrison.

As the circumstances attending these cases are somewhat peculiar, the commissioners deem it necessary to enter into a succinct statement of the same.

It appears that, in 1783, there was granted by the commandant at Kaskaskias to the said Nicholas, François, Antoine, and Jean Baptiste Janis, (on the east side of Kaskaskia river,) each three arpents in front from the said river to the hills, and forty arpents deep on the hills; that, on the 17th of August, 1795, the said Nicholas conveyed to the said François the three arpents in front which had been so conceded to him; that, on the 1st April, 1796, the said Antoine conveyed to a certain John Edgar the three arpents in front, which had been granted to him as aforesaid; that, on the 11th April, 1796, the said François conveyed to the said John Edgar six ar-pents in front which had been conceded and conveyed to him as above stated. How the said Edgar came to be possessed of the right of the said Jean Baptiste Janis does not appear: all of which rights have been patented to the said John Edgar. It further appears, that the said Nicholas Janis and a certain Vital Beauvais, as well on their own behalf as that of the said François, Antoine, and Jean Baptiste, petitioned the same commandant at Kaskaskia to grant them a certain tract of land on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, joining the heirs of Barrois, and running to a run which is below the river Kaskaskia, extending from the said river to the hills, by one league in depth on the said hills; that, on the 13th July, 1784, the same is granted agreeably to the request of the said petition, (which grant includes the twelve arpents in front granted in 1783 to the said Nicholas, François, Antoine, and Jean Baptiste Janis;) that, on the 6th January, 1788, the said Nicholas conveyed to the said François Janis the one-half of the concession of 1784, and on the same day the said Vital Beauvais conveyed to the said François the other half of the said concession of 1784; that, on the 2d May, 1793, the said François Janis, in his own name, and by virtue of a power of attorney in the name of the said Nicholas Janis, Antoine Janis, Jean Baptiste Janis, and Vital Beauvais, assigned the said concession of 1784, by endorsement thereon, to the said William Morrison; but this assignment ought not to avail the said Morrison any thing, because it is not attested by a witness or witnesses; that it has not been acknowledged before any proper officer; neither does the power of attorney by which this sale was made appear. And, indeed, a subsequent conveyance from the said François Janis warrants this conclusion: for, by deed of 13th November, 1795, the said François only conveys to the said Morrison the right of the said Nicholas Janis and Vital Beauvais to the concession of 1784, and which they conveyed to him in 1788; that, in virtue of this conveyance, Governor St. Clair confirmed to the said William Morrison five hundred acres. Now, from the foregoing statement of facts, the commissioners are of opinion that, although the grant in 1784 not only comprehended the lands granted in 1783, but increased the quantity of these several claimants; yet, as that advantage has not been claimed either by the said François, Antoine, and Jean Baptiste Janis, or their assignee Edgar, the concession of 1784, as it respects them, cannot be considered any more than a further confirmation of the grant of 1783; but as Nicholas Janis conveyed his interest in the grant of 1784 on the 6th January, 1788, it would seem that he intended to relinquish his grant in 1783, and take advantage of the enlarged one of 1784; therefore, his sale to François in 1795 of the grant in 1783 is a nullity, because he had previously divested himself, in 1788, of all his interest in both grants, and which share his assignee sold to the said William Morrison; therefore, the said John Edgar can only be entitled to the rights of François and Antoine, that of Jean Baptiste Janis not being assigned to him; and the said William Morrison to the rights of Nicholas Janis and Vital Beauvais. In support of the foregoing claims, the following testimony was taken before the Board:

Certain deponents state, that, in the year 1785, the said Nicholas, François, Antoine, and Jean Baptiste Janis built a cabin on a tract of land, not quite a mile below Colonel Menard's present residence, but know of no cultivation made by the said claimants at that place; that they kept a negro at a neighboring cabin of Mr. Bougis, to take care of cattle and hogs. Another witness states that, in 1785, he saw François, Antoine, and Jean Baptiste Janis, sons of old Mr. Janis, with some slaves, on a tract of land, some distance (about half a mile) below Colonel Menard's residence, on the east side of the Kaskaskia river, felling trees and making rails for the purpose (as deponent understood) to enclose a field to plant corn in; that, deponent saw corn growing in said field in 1785; does not know the number of acres contained in the field, but it was of considerable size; that there were several cabins built on the land, in which the slaves slept and ate; that deponent knows of no improvement made by Vital Beauvais. From the testimony before the Board, it would seem that the said Nicholas Janis and his sons did clear and cultivate a field, in the spring of 1785, and planted the same in corn, on a tract of land anciently conceded by the French Government to Barrois, but neither of the tracts conceded them appear to have been either improved or cultivated, and no other cultivation is proved to have been made by either of the parties, except as before stated. The Board can here only remark, that, had the cultivation been made by the father and his sons conjointly, on any part of land conceded to them, in that case, the Board could have felt itself warranted in approving of the confirmation of 3 arpents by 52 to each of the sons; and 400 acres to Nicholas Janis, the father. Yet as the parties may possibly have intended to improve thereon, and may have failed in doing so from a want of information of the lines, the Board submit this case to the consideration of Congress. The concession to Vital Beauvais having never been followed by actual cultivation or improvement, he can, therefore, have no pretensions to any land in virtue of that concession. Mr. Caldwell did not concur in the above decision.

Improvement of Joseph Mieux and Pierre Picard.

No. 1541.—The claim of BARTHOLOMEW RICHARD, assignee of Antoine Morin, who was assignee of Joseph Mieux and Pierre Picard, for 6 arpents in front by 40 arpents deep on the hills. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Richard, assignee, as aforesaid.

In support of this claim, the claimant has filed two concessions, granted by the commandant, in 1783, to a certain Perrie Picard and Joseph Mieux, on the east side of Kaskaskia river, each three arpents in front, from the said river to the hills, and forty arpents deep on the said hills; bounding on the one side by the run where Madame Allary made sugar, and on the south by vacant lands; that, by an assignment on the back of said concessions, the same appears to have been assigned to a certain Antoine Morin, who, by deed dated on the 4th April, 1789, conveyed the same to the said Bartholomew Richard; which claims appear to have been supported before the Governor by the following testimony, to wit: "Antoine Peltier, dit Antya, Louis Buatres, and Jean Baptiste Gendron state, in substance, that Antoine Morin cultivated and ploughed on a tract of six arpents front, three arpents whereof were conceded to Pierre Picard, and by him assigned to said Morin; the other three arpents were conceded to Joseph Mieux, who sold the same to Pierre Picard, who, on the 29th of December, 1783, sold the same to the said Antoine Morin; on which lands was built a lodgeable cabin: at least twenty arpents well fenced and sowed with different kinds of grain for several successive years, immediately after their acquisition; but afterwards, abandoned the same on account of the Indians. The deponents have no knowledge that these lands were cultivated or conceded to any one before, except that the deceased widow Allary made sugar thereon in the season, as several other persons did in the same season. Upon which testimony Governor Harrison confirms the same to the said Richard, to be laid off as the concessions direct." On examination of witnesses by the present Board, touching the validity of this claim, the deponents state that Pierre Picard obtained a concession from Dumontbruin, commandant; that he transferred it immediately to Antoine Morin, the elder; that said Morin cultivated before or in the year 1785, on the said land, raised crops, built a cabin, and remained thereon three or four years; situated three miles above Kaskaskia, on the east side of Kaskaskia river; some time after, Bartholomew Richard had a farmer on the same land, and raised crops thereon; the deponents further state that this is the same improvement on which the said

Antoine resided, and is the same described in the deposition under No. 2047, relative to Antoine Morin, senior's, improvement; and that the same land was formerly claimed by widow Allary, whose father had been in possession long before the recollection of these deponents; but these deponents do not know that the said Allary had a concession for said lands.

Improvement of Paul Poupard.

No. 469. The claim of PAUL POUFARD, for fifty acres, a sugar camp. This claim is confirmed by Governor Harrison to the said Paul Poupard. The deponents state that the mother of Paul Poupard had, about thirty years ago, a sugar camp on the Grand Ruisseau, which she always cultivated as a sugar camp, and Joseph Poupard says that, in the partition of the mother's estate amongst the children and heirs, this sugar camp was allotted to the said Paul Poupard, as one of such children and heirs; from which it would seem that this claim cannot be called an ancient allotment under either the British or French Governments.

It therefore ought not to be confirmed.

Improvement of Catharine Oubuchon.

No. 816. The claim of PIERRE GODIN, assignee of Catharine Oubuchon, for fifty acres, as a sugar camp right. This claim is confirmed by Governor Harrison to the said Pierre Godin. The deponents all state that this is the same claimed in the name of Jean Baptiste La Croix, under number 748, Mrs. La Croix's maiden name being Catharine Oubuchon, and they know of no other sugar camp belonging to any of the name of Oubuchon.

Therefore, this claim ought not to be confirmed.

Improvement of Nicholas Smith.

No. 515. The claim of JAMES RAIN and MOSES TENANT, assignees of the heirs of James Moore, assignee of Nicholas Smith, for eighty acres, in right of improvement and cultivation. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the heirs of James Moore, but which, in the opinion of the commissioners, has been improperly made; because, four hundred acres have previously been confirmed by Governor St. Clair to the heirs of Nicholas Smith, in right of improvement and cultivation, and is supported before the present Board under No. 521, and it does not appear that there were two of this name in the country entitled to improvements, but is believed to have been granted in right of the same person; yet, as the claimant, on the faith of this confirmation, has located and surveyed this claim, and improved it extensively by building a mill thereon, the Board are of opinion that in justice he ought to be permitted to substitute an unlocated militia right. They do, therefore, authorize the surveyor to survey an unlocated militia right here, so as to cover the improvement and location, provided it does not interfere with any vested right.

A list of claims reported through mistake by the former Board of Commissioners, as having been confirmed by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories, to such persons as were entitled to donations of four hundred acres as heads of families, in pursuance of the resolutions of the 20th June, 1788, and the 3d March, 1791; which said donees, on examination, are found not to have had special confirmations in their favor; yet, as they are found on the approved list of heads of families transmitted by the Governor, and as, from the testimony recently taken before the present Board, they are found to be within the provisions of the aforesaid resolutions, the Board are therefore of opinion that the said claims ought to be confirmed.

The task of deciding on the foregoing statement of claims having devolved on a majority of the commissioners, in consequence of a difference of opinion in the Board with respect to that part of the resolution of the 20th June, 1788, which relates to donations; it being alleged that the said resolution does not intend the donation of 400 acres for any but those who were heads of families in the several villages of Illinois in 1783 or 1788; but in our opinion it appears evident, from a considerate view of the before recited resolution, that it was the intention of its benevolent framers to provide an equivalent, under certain qualifications, for that description of persons who were heads of families in the newly acquired country, as a remuneration for the probable loss they would sustain by the introduction of the new Government, and consequent failure of Indian trade: which qualifications seem principally to be, they must have been settlers in the country, and heads of families, become citizens of the United States, or some one of them, on or before 1783. From which we can discover no reason why the heirs of those who died heads of families after the conquest, (1778,) and before 1783, are not equally entitled to the bounty intended by Congress, with those who are heirs to the heads of families who died in 1783, or 1788. And besides, in this manner was the before recited act construed by the different Governors, as well in granting donations to the heads of families in the Illinois as at Vincennes; and the late Board of Commissioners at Vincennes, while acting under a similar law granting donations to the heads of families at that place, observed the same rule of decision.

SPECIAL CASE.

No. 1806.—By a reference to the transcript transmitted by the former Board of Claims, founded on acts of Congress granting donations of 400 acres to heads of families in the Illinois, it will be seen that the donation of Daniel Flanary was rejected by the said Board, under an impression that two improvement rights of 400 acres each had been granted in right of this man, to wit: 400 acres to Layton White, under claim No. 520, and 400 acres to Raphael Drury, under No. 557; the Governor having, as appears by his transcript of confirmations, affirmed to Raphael Drury 400 acres, bounded by the Marias Macoupin on one side, as having been improved by Daniel Flanary in 1781. But from testimony since taken before the present Board, it is proved that this land was not cultivated by the said Flanary, but that Drury is in fact himself entitled to the same, by virtue of actual cultivation and improvement made thereon; and it appearing also that the patent grants this land to said Drury, and not as assignee of any one, and he, said Drury, in his notice filed claimed the same in his own right, and not as assignee of said Flanary. The Board are, therefore, of opinion, from testimony adduced to them, that this donation of Daniel Flanary ought to be confirmed.

No. 12.

A transcript of donations confirmed by the Governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories to those persons who were heads of families in the Illinois country, pursuant to the resolution of the 20th June, 1788, and the act of the 3d March, 1791, but which have not been supported before the commissioners appointed in pursuance of the act of the 20th February, 1812.

Donation of Joseph Anderson.

No. 294.—The claim of PIERRE MENARD, assignee of Joseph Anderson, for a donation of 400 acres of land. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Anderson, but which is unsupported before the Board.

It is proved that Joseph Anderson came to the Illinois country in the year 1786, but had lived there before; was a single man; that in 1787 he made an improvement, that he then lived with a certain James Wiley; that while making said improvement, he had hired hands working with him; but when he got married, and went to housekeeping, deponent does not know.

Donation of Matthias Barker.

No. 163.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who purchased at sheriff's sale the donation right of Matthias Barker for 400 acres. This claim is likewise derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara. The only testimony adduced in support of this claim states that the deponents know nothing of this man.

Donation of Jean Boudoin.

No. 164.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who purchased at sheriff's sale the donation right of Jean Boudoin for 400 acres.

This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to James O'Hara, assignee as aforesaid.

The deponents likewise state that they know nothing of this man.

Donation of Jacque Boutellet.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Jacque Boutellet for a donation of 400 acres.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to John Edgar, who, through mistake, styles him assignee of Jean Boutellet; but, on examination of said Edgar's conveyance from said Boutellet, it appears that the confirmation of this claim by the said Governor ought to have been as first above stated. One witness states that he knew Jacque Boutellet; that he got married at Prairie du Rocher in 1791, but kept no house previous to his said marriage; that he knew the father of the said Jacques; that he died at Prairie du Rocher in 1771. Another witness states, that he knew a man by the name of Jacque Boutellet, who lived at Prairie du Rocher; that he got married about twenty years ago, but kept no house previous to his said marriage. Another witness states, that he knew two men by the name of Jacque Boutellet, father and son, at Prairie du Rocher. The father died some years before the arrival of the Americans. The son died some years ago at Prairie du Rocher; does not know that he was married on or before 1788, but knows he was many years before he got married cultivating his own land, with a house and lot of his own, which descended and was allotted to him in the partition of his father's estate; that said Boutellet lived in said house many years before he got married, having a negro slave, who worked with him in the farming business; that he took his god-mother, the widow Cochont, to live with and keep house for him; that she continued to live with him, not only before he got married, but until her death; that said Boutellet, if now living, would be about fifty years old; that his mother died before his father; that said Boutellet kept house as above stated before 1788; that when Mrs Cochont went to live with said Boutellet, as above, she was a widow; that he, Boutellet, the son, was the eldest of the children of Jacque the elder. Although the commissioners have no reason to doubt that said Boutellet had land as before stated, they cannot forbear to remark that the witness must be mistaken as to the time when Mrs Cochont went to live with this claimant, for she did not become a widow until after 1788, as appears by different depositions now before the Board; therefore, said Boutellet could not have been a house-keeper as above stated on or before 1788.

Donation of Michel Chartran.

No. 723.—The claim of JEAN F. PERRY, assignee of Michel Chartran, for a donation of 400 acres of land.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Jean F. Perry. It is proved that Michel Chartran in the year 1783 was living in the Illinois country; that he then had two children by an Indian woman; that he always lived with his mother, and never kept house. This man is supposed to have received a militia donation of 100 acres, (see No. 727.)

Donation of Francois Charpentier.

No. 169.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who purchased at sheriff's sale the donation right of Francois Charpentier for 400 acres.

This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara.

In support of which, it is now proved that Charpentier, (his Christian name not known) lived some years ago (how long deponent does not recollect,) at a certain Mr. Bienvenue's, for whom he worked, but does not know that he was a married man, or that he kept house, and only staid about a year in the country; the deponent also knew a man by the name of Carpentier, (whose Christian name he does not recollect,) and who, as long as the deponent remembers, always lived at St. Genevieve. The witness is now fifty-one years old.

Donation of Pierre Cailloux.

No. 171.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who purchased at sheriff's sale the donation right of Pierre Cailloux for four hundred acres.

This claim likewise derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara. It is proved that Pierre Cailloux lived with his wife and family at St. Phillip's, but had removed to St. Louis before the Americans took possession of the country; that said Cailloux seldom lived long at a time with his wife, often going away for a considerable time. Another witness states that he knew a man by the name of Cailloux, (whose given name he does not recollect;) that he had no family at this place, (Kaskaskia) except one son; that he and his son lived in Kaskaskia about a year, when the father went on La Balm's expedition against Detroit, in 1780, and has not lived in the Illinois country since; that his wife and the other children lived on the Spanish side. Another witness states that he knew a man by the name of Cailloux, (whose Christian name he does not recollect;) that he was the head of a family, and kept the ferry between Kaskaskia and St. Genevieve; that his family lived on the east side of Mississippi, but is not sure whether before or after the arrival of General Clark; that he left this country, and went to live somewhere about Vincennes, since which time the deponent never saw him. Another witness states that he knew a man by the name of Cailloux, (whose given name he does not recollect;) that he kept the ferry (and was a householder) between Kaskaskia and St. Genevieve, after the arrival of General Clark, but how long after he does not know; that he went from Kaskaskia to Vincennes, where, as deponent has heard, and believes, the said Cailloux died.

Donation of Jean Baptiste Curé.

No. 182.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who purchased at sheriff's sale the donation right of Jean Baptiste Curé for four hundred acres.

This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara. It is proved that a certain Curé, (his Christian name not recollect,) came to Kaskaskia with General Clark's troops, and went away about seven or eight months afterwards, worked at his trade, and boarded with the deponent; does not know whether he belonged to Clark's army or not.

Donation of Antoine Cotineau.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Antoine Cotineau, for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved by one witness that Antoine Cotineau was about nineteen years of age in 1783; that he was a single man, and that he did not get married, nor keep house either in 1783 or 1788, but always lived in other families; that he got married in 1803, and still resides in Prairie du Rocher. Another witness states the same in substance. Another witness states that said Cotineau was not married in 1788; that he lived with deponent in Prairie du Rocher, but that he had houses and a lot of his own at that time, and before, but did not reside in either of them; that said Cotineau, on and before that year, worked on his own account as a farmer; had cattle, horses, and other stock of his own; that the corn, and other produce he raised, he deposited in the houses on his own lot; that his stock was always fed and wintered on his own premises.

Donation of Francis Deleaurie.

No. 724.—The claim of JEAN F. PERRY, assignee of Pierre Martin, who was heir of François Deleaurie for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Jean F. Perry. The deponents state that they never knew a man of the name of Deleaurie as the head of a family in the Illinois, but that they knew a very old man of this name, who lived and died at Pierre Martin's in Cahokia; that he never was head of a family or kept house to their knowledge.

Donation of John Fowler.

No. 913.—The claim of JOHN BAIRD, assignee of John Reynolds, who was assignee of John Fowler, for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim likewise derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to John Reynolds, assignee, as aforesaid. The deponents also state that they know no such man.

Donation of Jean Flander.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Jean Flander, for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved that Jean Flander came to the village of the Prairie du Rocher in 1771; that he lived from that time until 1798, in that village, with a certain Louis Pellet, dit La Soud; that he was never married nor kept house; that he died in the year 1796.

Donation of Marie Girardin.

No. 117.—The claim of NICHOLAS JARROT, assignee of Augustin Girardin, one of the heirs of Marie Girardin, widow of Michel, for two hundred acres, being the one-half of the donation of said Marie. This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Jarrot. It is proved that, between the years 1785 and 1788, the deponent knew a woman named Girardin; that Michel Girardin, then of Prairie Dupont, called her mother; her Christian name he does not recollect, neither does he know whose widow she was; that she was head of a family, as deponent believes, in Prairie du Pont, in 1788.

Donation of Alexander Hilaire.

No. 170.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who purchased at sheriff's sale the donation right of Alexander Hilaire for four hundred acres.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara. The only evidence adduced in support of this claim is, that the deponent knew nothing of this man.

Donation of Pierre Loquet.

No. 193.—The claim of WILLIAM MCINTOSH, assignee of John Edgar, assignee of John Dumoulin, assignee of Gabriel Marleau, heir of Pierre Loquet, for four hundred acres, the donation of said Loquet.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said William McIntosh. The deponents state that they never knew a man of this Christian name whose surname was Loquet, but they knew René Loquet, who died at Cahokia, before the arrival of General Clark; that his widow continued to be head of a family until she died, in 1786.

Donation of Joseph Lieberville.

No. 161.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who purchased at sheriff's sale the donation right of Joseph Lieberville for four hundred acres.

This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Gov. Harrison to the said James O'Hara. It is proved that Joseph Lieberville was an ancient inhabitant of the country, and a housekeeper; but that he died before the Americans took possession of the country. It is further stated that Joseph Lieberville, son of the before named Joseph, was a young man, kept no house, had no family, went with General Clark to take Vincennes, returned, staid some time, went down the Mississippi, and has never returned; the wife of Joseph, Sen. died before deponent's recollection.

Donation of Antoine Louviere, Jun.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Antoine Louviere, Jun. for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved by one witness that Antoine Louviere, Jun. was living in the Illinois country in 1783, was then about sixteen years of age, and lived with his father; that he did not keep house until he got married, in 1796. Another witness states that he knew Antoine Louviere, Jun. in 1783; that he was then a single man; that he kept no house until he got married, after the year 1788. Another witness states that he knew Antoine Louviere, Jun.; was not married in 1783, nor does deponent know that he was married in 1788; that he still lives in the country. Two other witnesses state that said Louviere, Jun. was not married in 1788; that, about the year 1786, the father of said Louviere gave to him his share of the property in the community which existed between the said father and the deceased mother of the said Antoine, Jun., consisting of land, slaves, &c.; but they do not know that Louviere, Jun. worked on his own account before his marriage.

Donation of Pierre Louviere.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Pierre Louviere, for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim likewise derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved that Pierre Louviere was living in the Illinois country in the year 1783, was then about eighteen years of age, and lived with his father; that he did not keep house either in 1783 or 1788; that he got married in the year 1791. It is also proved by another witness that he knew said Louviere in the year 1783; that he was then a single man, and lived with his father; that he kept no house until he got married, after the year 1788. Another witness states that he knew said Louviere, in 1783, to be a single man; thinks he got married in 1788 or 1789; has now a daughter about twenty years old. Two other witnesses state, that about the year 1786, the father of said Louviere gave to him his share of the property in the community which existed between the said father and the deceased mother of the said Pierre, consisting of lands, slaves, &c. but they do not know that said Pierre worked on his own account previous to his marriage, about twenty-one years ago.

Donation of widow La Brose.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of the widow La Brose for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved by one witness that the widow La Brose, some time before the year 1783, had separated from her husband; that she was a transient woman, and lived in different families in Prairie du Rocher, and St. Genevieve, and never kept house, to deponent's knowledge, in or after 1783. Another witness states that he knew the widow La Brose; that she was first married to a certain Flumand of Kaskaskia; that, after his death, she went to reside at Prairie du Rocher with her sister, where she married La Brose; that she and her husband (La Brose) kept house at said place for some time after the arrival of the Americans, when they went to reside on the Spanish side of the Mississippi; that she and her husband (La Brose) then separated, when she came again to Prairie du Rocher, and lived with her sister; that she died about six years ago.

Donation of Ambroise Lavigne.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Ambroise Lavigne, for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim likewise derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar.

It is proved by three witnesses that Ambroise Lavigne was a native of the Illinois, was a single man, never kept house, and died about twenty years ago.

Donation of James Morris.

No. 172.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who purchased at sheriff's sale the donation right of James Morris, of four hundred acres.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara.

It is proved that James Morris was living in the Illinois in 1783; that he was then a single man, and kept no house; believes said Morris afterwards went to reside at the Bellefontaine, where he remained some time.

Donation of Alphonse Peter.

No. 711.—The claim of JEAN F. PERRY, assignee of Alphonse Peter's heirs, for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim likewise derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to Jean F. Perry.

It is proved that Alphonse Peter never was the head of a family in the Illinois; that he was a militia man in Cahokia in August, 1790, and is entitled as such.

Donation of Joseph Rell, Sen.

No. 721.—The claim of JEAN F. PERRY, assignee of the heirs of Joseph Rell, Sen., for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the heirs of the said Joseph Rell, Sen.

It is proved that Joseph Rell, Sen. was head of a family in Cahokia, and died there about thirty-five years ago. Another witness states that he knew Joseph Rell, Sen.; that he died before the Americans took possession of the country.

Donation of Joseph Rell, Jun.

No. 729.—The claim of JEAN F. PERRY, assignee of Joseph Rell, Jun., for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim likewise derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the heirs of Joseph Rell, Jun.

It is proved that Joseph Rell, Jun. left the Illinois country when a boy, and has never returned. Another witness states that he knew Joseph Rell, Jun.; that he never was the head of a family; but that deponent knows he was a militia man in Cahokia, in August, 1790, and is entitled as such.

Donation of Joseph Richard.

No. 175.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who was assignee of the heirs of Joseph Richard, for four hundred acres, being the donation of said Richard.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara.

It is proved that Joseph Richard was a native of the Illinois; that he was a young man, and kept no house; that, about two years after the arrival of General Clark, he was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun. Another witness states, that, for nearly seven years before his death, he was possessed in fee of a tract of land; that said Richard having no house, and deponent having one, but no land, he, the witness, and claimant, went into partnership in the farming business, until claimant's death, in about 1782; that witness, during said partnership, went on long voyages, during which, the said claimant had the charge and superintendence, as well of the house as of the farm; that said Richard, at his death, was about thirty years old.

Donation of Louis Rondeau.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Francois Carboneau, assignee of the widow of Louis Rondeau, for a donation of 400 acres.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved that Louis Rondeau left the Illinois about forty-five years ago, and went to reside at St. Louis; that he died on the Missouri river, about twenty years ago; that he never returned to reside on the Illinois.

Donation of Jean Baptiste Richard.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Jean Baptiste Richard, for a donation of 400 acres.

This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved that Jean Baptiste Richard left Kaskaskia with General Clark, when he went to reduce Vincennes; was then a single man, and kept no house; that he never returned to the Illinois; the deponents understood that he married at Vincennes, and know no other man of this name in the country. By an extract from a deed, dated 1st October, 1783, Joseph Boisvert, of St. Philip's, conveyed to Jean Baptiste Richard, an inhabitant of same place, a house and lot in St. Philip's. A witness from Prairie du Rocher states, that he knew Jean Baptiste Richard; that he never was head of a family to deponent's knowledge; but lived sometimes at Kaskaskia, sometimes at Prairie du Rocher, and sometimes at St. Philip's.

Donation of Jean Baptiste St. Ives.

No. 815.—The claim of JEAN BAPTISTE ST. IVES, for a donation of four hundred acres. This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Jean Baptiste St. Ives.

It is proved that Jean Baptiste St. Ives never was head of a family in Cahokia; that he died a few years since a single man. Another witness states, that Jean Baptiste St. Ives was not a householder in 1783 or 1788, but that he was a militia-man at Cahokia in 1790, being then from twenty-five to thirty years old, and is entitled as such.

Donation of Jean Baptiste St. Michel.

No. 716.—The claim of JEAN F. PERRY, assignee of Jean Baptiste St. Michel's heirs, for a donation of four hundred acres. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the heirs of the said Jean Baptiste St. Michel.

It is proved that Jean Baptiste St. Michel never was, to the deponent's knowledge, the head of a family in Cahokia; that he died many years since a single man. It is further proved that he never was head of a family, to deponent's knowledge, but that he was a militia-man at Cahokia in August, 1790, and of full age to do duty as such, and is entitled as such.

Donation of Gideon Thomas.

No. 432.—The claim of WILLIAM MORRISON, assignee of Robert Reynolds, assignee of John Houston, who was assignee of Gideon Thomas, for a donation of four hundred acres. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said Robert Reynolds.

It is proved that the deponents knew of no man in the Illinois by the name of Thomas in 1783, or 1788, or between these years. One of the deponents knew a man by the name of Thomas in this country in the year 1790, but does not recollect his Christian name.

Donation of Joseph Vaudry.

No. 150.—The claim of JAMES O'HARA, assignee of Pierre Menard, who was assignee of John Dumoulin, who was assignee of the daughter of Joseph Vaudry, for a donation of four hundred acres. This claim derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor Harrison to the said James O'Hara.

The deponents state they knew a man named Vaudry in Cahokia, who removed from thence, above thirty years ago, for Canada, but that he was a married man in Cahokia at his departure; they do not know his Christian name, as he was always known by the name of Grand Vaudry.

Donation of Archange Chenier.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Archange Chenier, for a donation of four hundred acres. This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar.

It is proved that the deponents all knew Archange Chenier, widow of Jacques Chenier, to be living with her said husband Jacques on and before 1783, and until he died, about eighteen years ago; that she is now Madame Doza. By reference to the affirmed list of donations to the heads of families in the Illinois, transmitted by the late Board of Commissioners for the district of Kaskaskia, it will be seen that this claim stands confirmed in the name of Archange Doza to this present claimant, under No. 2098.

Donation of Catharine Casson.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Catherine Casson, for a donation of four hundred acres. This claim also derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar.

It is proved that Catharine Casson was married, more than forty years ago, to a certain Mr. Casson; that, about thirty-six or thirty-seven years ago, she intermarried with a certain Pierre Provost; that she and her said husband, Provost, lived and kept house together until about fifteen years ago, when she died. On an examination of the records of the Catholic church at Kaskaskia, it appears that the said Catharine was married to her first husband, Antoine Casson, on the 23d of November, 1751; that she intermarried with Pierre Provost, her second husband, on the 5th of February, 1769; that she died on the 6th of June, 1799; and that her said husband, Provost, died on the 12th of December, 1799.

Donation of the widow Detaille.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of the widow Detaille, for a donation of four hundred acres.

This claim likewise derives its validity from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said John Edgar. It is proved that a certain Detaille, an Indian interpreter at St. Joseph's, had a child by an Indian woman; that the said woman and her said child afterwards came to St. Philip's; and that some time afterwards she got married at Prairie du Rocher to one Nicholas Marchal: that Marchal died before the Americans took possession of the country, but lived with his said wife three or four years before he died. Witness himself married the before mentioned daughter of Detaille. It will be perceived, on examination of the report of the present Board of Commissioners in favor of donations to heads of families, that this claim is confirmed to this present claimant in the name of Mary Marchal, widow, under No. 2055.

Donation of William Tait.

No. 1392.—The claim of WILLIAM TAIT for a donation of four hundred acres of land.

This claim is derived from a confirmation made by Governor St. Clair to the said William Tait. It is proved that William Tait came to the country in 1784, lived with, and kept store for, a certain Colonel Edgar; was a single man, and kept no house in the country; and went to Nashville, in the State of Tennessee, where he got married. From a view of the foregoing testimony, it will be perceived that this confirmation has been made without authority of law.

Donation of Catharine Perrier.

No. 2055.—The claim of JOHN EDGAR, assignee of Catharine Perrier, widow of Jacque, for a donation of four hundred acres.

This donation of four hundred acres is claimed by the said John Edgar, as assignee of Catharine Perrier, widow of Jacque, by deed dated July 7, 1794, and is confirmed to this claimant, as appears by Governor St. Clair's certificate of confirmation, dated February 14, 1799.

Now, under No. 90, in the transcript of affirmations by the former Board, Nicholas Jarrot claims, as assignee of Catharine Grude, widow and heir of Jacque Perrier, deceased, by deed dated November 14, 1802, four hundred acres, the donation of Jacque Perrier, as head of a family. By the testimony on the record of the former Board, it is proved that said Jacque was head of a family in 1783, and was killed by the Indians in July, 1788. By another witness, who deposed before this Board, the same facts are proved, with this difference; that said Catharine and Jacque were married in 1782, and lived together until he was killed in 1790. The former Board, on their records have affirmed this claim thus: "This claim is affirmed. Note.—The said Catharine is on the list of heads of families." Now, as this woman, although on the list, is not entitled, as will be seen by the preceding testimony, and as the claim of this family has been affirmed by the former Board, and sanctioned by an act of Congress, these adverse claimants are left to contest their right to the same, as assignee of the said widow.

With respect to the foregoing statement of claims, the commissioners (Caldwell and Sloo,) beg leave to observe, that they have not entered into an investigation of their several merits, by the examination of witnesses, because it is deemed that such a course would have been productive of much trouble and inconvenience, without being able to detect imposition with certainty, if any, has been practised on the Governors, in allowing those grants; for there is not a muster-roll of the militia, who did militia duty on the 1st of August, 1790, to be found; and but very few of the officers who commanded at that time are now living; therefore, very few claimants could prove their service and enrolment as the law requires, while others would be left in doubt and uncertainty, as the testimony that would now be given could go no further than to say such and such claimants were or were not, to the knowledge of the deponents, in the Illinois country in the year 1790, and perhaps did militia duty within that year: therefore, from these considerations, the said commissioners are of opinion that the certified list of militia-men, taken by Governor St. Clair on account of its antiquity, is the best evidence that this species of claims is susceptible of; which list, from information, was made out by several of the most respectable persons in the different villages of the Illinois, appointed by the Governor for that purpose, who, on oath, certified to him that the persons whose names were entered in the said list, were, to their belief, entitled to militia donations; which, from a certified copy transmitted to the late Board of Commissioners, appears to have been approved of by him; and from this list the late Board of Commissioners affirmed a considerable number of claims without further proof. Nor does it appear that the committee, who reported the law under which we have the honor to act, contemplated an inquiry into the validity of this species of claims by the examination of witnesses. The aforesaid commissioners beg leave further to observe, that in every instance when persons of the same name were found entered on the list of donations to the heads of families, and on that of militia donations, inquiry has been made by witnesses whether there were two persons of such name, the one entitled as the head of a family, and the other as a militiaman: in order, as far as possible, to detect improper grants from documents before us.

JOHN CALDWELL, } Commissioners.
THOMAS SLOO, }

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
January 4, 1813.

In relation to the preceding militia donations, confirmed by Governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories, I can only observe, that, as I am impressed with the belief that some improper confirmations have been made to individuals of this description of claims, I cannot, consistent with my duty, report these confirmations as approved of by me, there having been no testimony examined touching their validity; yet, as a majority of the Board have come to a resolution to do so, (as the former Board have, in their decision of cases not specially confirmed by the Governors, predicated, in some instances, their affirmations of militia donations, on the evidence of the approved list above mentioned, which afforded no better evidence than that which the majority of the present Board have acted on; as in this class of claims the inducement to obtain surreptitious confirmations being comparatively less, and as most of these donations have passed out of the hands of the original donees, and have been patented or located under the direction of the Governors; and the lands thus acquired by many of the most worthy of the yeomanry of the country have been rendered valuable by being extensively improved by the present claimants, who, in the event of a rejection of their rights, would be left without the means of remuneration;) I feel myself, therefore, justified, under all the circumstances, in advising their confirmation by the Government.

MICHAEL JONES, Commissioner.

No. 14.

A transcript of militia donations said to have been granted by the Governor of the Northwest Territory, which, in the opinion of the Board, were improperly made, and ought not to be sanctioned by Congress.

Militia donation of Antoine Cotinault.

No. 751.—This claim is derived from a grant made by Governor St. Clair to John Edgar, assignee of Antoine Cotinault, who sold, as heir to Joseph Terrien, deceased, the militia donation of said Terrien.

This claim appears to have been rejected by the late Board of Commissioners; and, on examination of the same by the present Board, the following facts appear: first, the conveyance from Cotinault, the pretended heir to Edgar, is dated on the 6th January, 1792, and, from a certified abstract of the church record of the interments in the grave-yard of the parish of St. Joseph's, in Prairie du Rocher, the said Joseph Terrien does not appear to have died before the 16th April, 1792, more than three months after the execution of the said conveyance; and besides, the said Terrien appears to have been entitled to a donation as the head of a family, and not as a militiaman, he being, in the year 1790, fifty-eight years old; so that, upon a view of the circumstances attending this case, the present Board are of opinion that the rejection of this claim was proper, the confirmation being fraudulently obtained from the Governor.

Militia donation of Antoine Chenier.

No. 195.—The claim of WILLIAM McINTOSH, assignee of Antoine Chenier, for one hundred acres, being his donation as a militiaman in the Illinois, on the 1st August, 1790.

This claim is said to be derived from a grant made by Governor St. Clair to the said William McIntosh, of the aforesaid one hundred acres. But, on examination of a certain certificate of confirmation, referred to by the claimant, dated 11th February, 1799, the name of said Chenier does not appear. Neither is the name of the said Antoine found on the list of militiamen who did militia duty on the 1st of August, 1790; but under No. 1274, in the affirmed list of the late Board, of confirmations in favor of those who are entitled to donations as heads of families, the donation of said Antoine Chenier is confirmed unto Robert Morrison: therefore, the present commissioners are of opinion that this grant has been improperly claimed.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE AT KASKASKIA,
4th January, 1813.

To the honorable the Board of Commissioners for the adjustment of claims to land in the district of Kaskaskia.

The subscriber having been informed, and understood, as well from the instructions heretofore given by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, as from the laws respecting the claims to land in the Illinois, that, where it should appear that any fraud had been practised by the confirmees or patentees, their agents or representatives, upon proof being adduced to the Board, they would enter into the investigation thereof, and decide thereon according to justice and equity of title; or, where the Board should not think proper to make a decision between contending parties, that they would leave the parties to determine the legality of their titles in a court of law:

Therefore the subscriber respectfully states, that having, as well in his own right as by those by whom he is empowered to act for as attorney or agent, presented several counter claims to fraudulent conveyances and confirmations obtained by surprise of the Governors; and in some cases produced, and in others offered proof of fraud and surprise, on the part of the confirmees or their agents, in obtaining confirmations of such claims; he therefore is driven to the necessity of protesting, and doth hereby most solemnly protest, against all confirmations or ratifications which have been made by the Governors or Board of Commissioners, or which may be made to John Edgar, or any other person or persons claiming, by fraudulent and pretence titles, to the following claims to land entered in your office, to wit:

No. 2055, the donation right of Elizabeth Cotineau, widow.

No. 2055, the donation right of Louis Delisle.

No. 2055, the donation right of the widow of Jean Baptiste Charleville.

No. 2055, the donation right of Charles Renaux.

No. 2055, the donation right of Louis Levasseur D'Espagne.

No. 2083, the improvement right of Louis Delisle.

No. 2082, the improvement right of Antoine Amable Gagne.

No. 2010, the improvement right of Antoine Janis, on a concession.

The subscriber also, in like manner, protests against any confirmation to Nicholas Jarrot, or any other person, claiming, by fraudulent and pretence titles, to the following claims to land entered in your office, to wit:

No. 85, the improvement right of Jacque Ferrier.

No. 2046, the improvement right of Louis Pellet Laundon.

No. 93, the improvement right of Jean Baptiste Barbeau, senior.

The subscriber also, in like manner, protests against any confirmation to William Morrison, or any other person, claiming, by fraudulent and pretence titles, to the following claims to land entered in your office, to wit:

No. 433, the donation right of Pierre Chevalier.

No. 434, the donation right of widow Girardot.

However limited the equitable and judicial powers of your Board may be, inasmuch as the Board can only report an opinion to the Government of the validity of the claim between the Government and the original claimants, yet your protestant only means to lay the groundwork of an appeal to a higher tribunal; and he doth hereby aver, that he is in possession of the legal titles to the above-mentioned tracts of land, and therefore protests against any patent or confirmation being made either to the said John Edgar, Nicholas Jarrot, or Wm. Morrison, or any other person or persons, except to your protestant, or those whom he represents, or his or their assignee; and prays that this protest may be entered by your Board, and forwarded, with your transcripts, to the seat of the General Government.

PIERRE MENARD.

KASKASKIA, January 5, 1811.

SIR:

In compliance with your directions, as communicated to us through our agent, Mr. Robinson, we enclose to you decisions of two among the most important cases which have remained to be decided.

We are, sir, very respectfully,

Your most obedient servants,

MICHAEL JONES,
E. BACKUS.

The Honorable ALBERT GALLATIN.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
December 31, 1810.

Decision of the Board of Commissioners for the district of Kaskaskia, on the grant to Philip Renault of a tract of land of one league in front by five in depth, at Pमिते, so called, on the Illinois river, and of a tract of one league in front by two in depth, at the Grand Marais, so called, including the establishment of St. Philip's, on the Mississippi, already affirmed by this Board to the legal representatives of said Renault, and sanctioned by the act of Congress.

To the very lengthy report of last year, made by the commissioners on this subject, they presume not to add any thing further, except the annexed document, (which they wish to be considered as a part of said report,) affording, under the circumstances of this country, a reasonable presumption that titles which have been regularly commenced have been legally consummated under the French Government; and, as no proof has been adduced of reconveyance, abandonment, or escheat, they do affirm these said claims to the legal representatives of the said Philip Renault.

MICHAEL JONES,
E. BACKUS.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, KASKASKIA,
December 31, 1810.

Decision of the Board of Commissioners for the District of Kaskaskia, on claim (as entered on their records) No. 2208.

This is a claim set up by John Edgar and John Murray St. Clair, for 13,986 acres of land, grounded on a concession made in the year 1769, by John Wilkins, styling himself lieutenant colonel of His Majesty's 18th royal Irish regiment, and commandant in the Illinois, to a company then trading in the country, under the firm of Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan; from whom it descended, it seems, to said Edgar.

In support of this claim, a paper is adduced, purporting to be a patent to the present claimants, from Arthur St. Clair, Governor of the Northwestern Territory. The circumstances of this case are as follows:

First. The said concession from Wilkins was a conditional one, bottomed on the approbation of the British King, or his commander-in-chief in America, which it has never received.

Secondly. It was a concession made without any authority whatever; (for a proof of these two facts, the Board refer to a copy of the said concession, which will be found among their documents annexed to their report of last year on Governors' confirmations; also to General Gage's proclamation, and to that of the British King, in possession of the Treasury Department.)

Thirdly. The said concession was, on the part of Wilkins, a speculating concession, who was to be equally interested with the other partners; this is seen by reference to the documents aforesaid.

Fourthly. Previously to the execution of the pretended patent, Edgar conveyed, by deed, to the said John Murray St. Clair, (a son of said Governor's,) one moiety of this property claimed.

Fifthly. The said paper, purporting to be a patent, has never been, as was usual, countersigned by the Secretary of the Northwestern Territory: this instrument, although calling only for 13,986 acres, is made to cover nearly 30,000 acres.

Under these circumstances, if this instrument is to be taken as a Governor's patent, and if this Board be possessed of authority to express an opinion on this subject, they do not hesitate to express one, that the Governor has transcended his powers; that the grant has been improperly obtained, and is of no validity. But the commissioners are disposed to consider an instrument, which is yet in an unfinished state, (not having been countersigned by the secretary) as not having been issued; that, although the Governor may have been unwarily led to give it incipience, yet that, on further consideration, he has not thought fit to complete it by passing it through the customary forms; that, in this inchoate state, it has fallen into the hands of the present claimants, who have adduced it in support of their title; and as this claim is, in the opinion of the commissioners, founded neither in law nor justice, they do reject it accordingly.

MICHAEL JONES,
E. BACKUS.

Renault's claim to lead mines in Upper Louisiana.

St. Louis, February 10, 1808.

SIR:

Please to take notice, that I claim, as a complete title for Jean Baptiste François Meynard, and Amelia Joseph Renault, his wife, of the empire of France, the lineal heir and legal representative of Mons. Renault, "ancien directeur aux Illinois," the two following tracts of land, situate and lying within the district of St. Genevieve, in the territory aforesaid, specially located and described in the words following, viz: [Here follows the description.] Which several tracts of land are, of right, by legal inheritance, the property of the said Jean Baptiste François Meynard, and Amelia Joseph Renault, by virtue of the original grant made "en franc alevu," [In liberum allodium,] unto the said Mons. Renault, the grandfather of the said Amelia Joseph Renault, bearing date at Fort Chartres, the 14th day of June, 1723; a certified copy of which is hereunto annexed, and which I request you to record.

Recorder of Land Titles for the Territory of Louisiana.

Cession de la Louisiane par la France à l'Espagne.

MONSIEUR LABADIE:

Par une acte particulier passé à Fontainebleau, le 13 Novembre, 1762, ayant cédé de ma pleine volonté à mon très cher et très aimé cousin le Roi d'Espagne, et à ses successeurs et héritiers, en tout propriété, purement et simplement, et sans aucune exception, tout le pays connu sous le nom de la Louisiane, ainsi que la Nouvelle Orléans, et l'isle dans laquelle cette ville est située; et par une autre acte, passé à l'Escurial, signé du Roi d'Espagne, le 13 Novembre de la même année:

Sa Majesté Catholique ayant accepté la cession du dit pays de la Louisiane, et de la ville et isle de la Nouvelle Orléans, conformément à la copie des dits actes que vous trouverez ci-jointe, je vous faite cette lettre pour vous dire que mon intention est qu'à la réception de la présente, soit qu'elle vous parvienne par les officiers de Sa Majesté Catholique, ou en droiture par les bâtimens Français qui en seront chargés, vous ayez à remettre entre les mains du Gouverneur, ou officier à ce proposé, par le Roi d'Espagne le dit pays et colonie de la Louisiane, et poste en dépendant, ensemble la ville et isle de la Nouvelle Orléans, telles qu'elles se trouveront le jour de la cession; voulant qu'à l'avenir elles appartiennent à Sa Majesté Catholique, pour être gouvernées et administrées par ces gouverneurs et officiers, comme lui appartenant, en toute propriété, et sans aucune exception.

Je vous ordonne, en conséquence, qu'aussitôt que le Gouverneur et les troupes de Sa Majesté Catholique seront arrivées dans les dits pays et colonies, vous ayez à les en mettre en possession, et en retiriez tous les officiers, soldats, et employés à mon service, qui y seront encore en garrison, pour envoyer en France, ou dans mes autres colonies d'Amérique, ceux qui ne jugeront pas à propos de rester sous les dominations Espagnoles.

Je désire, de plus, qu'après l'entière évacuation des dits postes et ville de la Nouvelle Orléans, vous ayez à rassembler tous les papiers et documens relatifs au finances et à l'administration de la colonie de la Louisiane, pour venir en France en régler les comptes; mon intention est, néanmoins, que vous remettiez au dit Gouverneur, ou officiers à ces proposés, tous les papiers et documens qui concerneront spécialement le gouvernement de cette colonie, soit par rapport au territoire et à ses limites, soit par rapport aux Sauvages et aux différens postes, après en avoir tirés les reçus convenables pour votre décharge; et que vous donniez au dit Gouverneur tous les renseignements qui dependent de vous, pour le mettre en état de gouverner la dite colonie à la satisfaction de Sa Majesté Catholique; et afin que la dite cession soit faite à la satisfaction réciproque des deux nations, ma volonté est qu'il soit dressé une inventaire, signé double, entre vous et le commissaire de Sa Majesté Catholique, de toute artillerie, armes, munitions, effets, magasins, hôpitaux, bâtimens, de mer, &c. qui m'appartiennent dans la dite colonie, afin qu'après avoir mis le dit commissaire Espagnol en possession des bâtimens et édifices civils, il soit dressé ensuite un procès verbal d'estimation de tous les dits effets qui resteront sur les lieux, et dont le prix sera remboursé par Sa Majesté Catholique sur le prix de l'estimation. J'espère, en même temps, pour l'avantage et la tranquillité des habitans de la colonie de la Louisiane; et je promet, en conséquence de l'amitié et affection de Sa Majesté Catholique, qu'elle voudra bien donner des ordres à son Gouverneur, et à tous autres officiers employés à son service dans la dite colonie et ville de la Nouvelle Orléans, pour que les ecclésiastiques et maisons religieuses, qui deservent les aises et les missions, y continuent leurs fonctions, et jouissent des droits, privileges, et exemptions, qui leur ont été attribuées par les titres de leurs établissemens; que les juges ordinaires continuent, ainsi que le conseil supérieur, à rendre la justice suivant les loix, formes, et usages de la colonie; que les habitans y soient gardés et maintenus dans leurs possessions, et qu'ils soient confirmés dans les propriétés de leurs biens, suivant les concessions qui ont été fait par les gouverneurs et ordonnateurs de la colonie; et que les dits concessions soient censées confirmées par Sa Majesté Catholique, quoiqu'elles ne l'eussent pas encore été par moi. Espérant, au surplus, que Sa Majesté Catholique voudra bien donner à ses nouveaux sujets de la Louisiane les mêmes marques de protection et de la bienveillance qu'ils ont éprouvés sur ma domination, et dont les seuls malheurs de la guerre les ont empêchés de sentir les plus grands effets; je vous ordonne de faire enregistrer les présentes lettres au conseil supérieur de la Nouvelle Orléans, afin que les différens états de la colonie soient informés de son contenu, et qu'ils puissent y avoir recours au besoin; et la présente n'étant à d'autre fin. Je prie Dieu, Monsieur Labadie, qu'il vous ait en sa sainte garde.

Écrit à Versailles, le 21 d'Avril, 1764.

LOUIS.

LE DUC DE CHOISEUL.

TERRITORY OF LOUISIANA,
Township and District of St. Louis, ss.

Before me, the undersigned, one of the justices of the peace in and for the township and district aforesaid, personally came and appeared Colonel Auguste Chouteau, who being duly sworn, deposes and says, that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the foregoing is a true copy of a public document promulgated at New Orleans, and is copied from one taken by this deponent from one he saw at New Orleans in the year 1765 or 1766.

AUGUSTE CHOUTEAU.

Sworn to, and subscribed this 6th day of November, 1810, before me,

J. E. GARNIER.

KASKASKIA, January 5, 1811.

I do certify that the within is a true copy of a letter and certificate filed in my office, December 16, 1810.

MICHAEL JONES, Register.

KASKASKIA, January 6, 1811.

GENTLEMEN: Agreeably to your instructions, I have re-surveyed John Edgar and John Murry St. Clair's claim of 13,986 acres of land, (which was granted by patent by Governor St. Clair to said Edgar and St. Clair, as extending from the Mississippi bluffs, from certain and known points, to the Kaskaskia river,) by which I find that said tract contains 23,900 acres of land; and that the upper or northern line of said survey measures 4642 poles, and that the lower or southern line thereof measures 3188 poles; by which you will discover that the upper line measures 1682 poles, and the lower line 1408 poles, longer than they are represented in said patent, and that the tract contains 9914 acres of land more than is called for in said patent.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. RECTOR.

Messrs. BACKUS and JONES.

11th CONGRESS.

No. 181.

3d SESSION.

CLAIM TO A DONATION RIGHT IN THE DISTRICT EAST OF PEARL RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 3, 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of William Coleman, of the Mississippi Territory, made the following report:

That, by the petition and accompanying depositions, it appears that said Coleman presented his claim to a tract of land, which was occupied and cultivated in the year 1797, to the Board of Commissioners for adjusting land claims in the district east of Pearl river; that in virtue of the improvement, he conceived himself to be entitled to a donation right for the said tract, but that his claim was rejected by the Board. The committee cannot ascertain the principle which influenced the Board in rejecting the claim; the evidence produced by the petitioner appears conclusive to bring his claim clearly within the provisions of the law. They are sensible that evidence procured and produced by one party to a controversy, ought to be received with caution, as a ground whereon to form a decision, or to reverse a decision made by a Board of Commissioners, who may be presumed to have had knowledge of the characters of the witnesses, whose evidence was produced in support and in opposition to the claim. They are also aware that, if injustice has been done to the petitioner in the rejection of his claim, the only possible mode in which he could obtain redress, is that which he has pursued. Considering the evidence and circumstances connected with the case as affording strong grounds to suspect the correctness of the decision of the Board, and the mode of collecting the testimony produced to them not affording a sure and safe ground for a determination on the case, the committee recommend a re-examination thereof, by the Register and Receiver of Public Moneys. The land claimed by the petitioner has been disposed of by the United States to other persons who claimed a pre-emption right thereto; if the former decision should be reversed, the petitioner should be authorized to locate a like quantity of vacant land, after the public sales shall have taken place. The following resolution is offered for the consideration of the House:

Resolved, That the Register and Receiver of Public Moneys east of Pearl river be authorized and directed to hear and determine on the claim of William Coleman to a donation of a tract of land; and, in case he shall substantiate his claim, that he be permitted to locate a like quantity of vacant lands in the district, after the termination of the public sales.

11th CONGRESS.

No. 182.

3d SESSION.

SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 9, 1811.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, in obedience to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th ultimo, respectfully reports:

That, in conformity with the provisions of the act "to prevent settlements being made on lands ceded to the United States, until authorized by law," the Registers of the land districts east and west of Pearl river, in the Mississippi Territory, were instructed to give public notice of the act, and to invite persons who had settled on the public lands to avail themselves of the permission granted to them by the act to remain as tenants at will, on their signing declarations that they laid no claim to the land. Copy of which instructions, (marked A,) is hereto annexed.

That it will appear, from the letter of the Register of the Land Office west of Pearl river, dated 28th March, 1807, and from the transcripts of permissions granted in that district to such settlers, (copies of which, marked B, B 2, and B 3, are hereto annexed,) that they did generally comply with the provisions of the law, and sign the declarations required from them.

That no information of a subsequent date has been received, respecting intrusions on the public lands in that district, nor is it believed that such intruders are numerous, or lay any claim to the land, those only excepted who derive their claim from certain species of British and Spanish grants, on which Congress has not yet made a final decision.

That no returns of permissions granted east of Pearl river were received from the late Register of that Land Office, and that the term for granting them had expired before the present Register was appointed to that office.

That, although no official information has been received by this Department respecting the number of intruders, in that district, which includes all the settlements on the river Mobile, it is sufficiently known that they are more numerous than in any other part of the Mississippi Territory; but that it has never been suggested that any of them laid any claim to the land.

That the measures taken prior to the year 1810 for carrying the provisions of the law into effect in Madison county, are detailed in the report, made on the 15th day of December, 1809, to the House of Representatives, and which is respectfully referred to.

That, information having been subsequently received that the claim of Michael Harrison, a Yazoo claimant, was revived, and that he remained on the land, the subject was again laid before the President, and the information communicated to the Secretary of War, as will appear by the correspondence, (marked C.)

That, no power being vested in the Secretary of the Treasury, or in any of the land officers, to take any measures for the removal of intruders, the actual orders given in this instance to that effect did not fall within the province of, and were not transmitted by, the Treasury Department.

And that, as it is not made the particular duty of any local officer to enforce the penalties imposed by the law, it necessarily follows that the evil is neither checked in its first beginning, nor known to the Executive, until its magnitude has become such as to require, for its suppression, the application of military force.

All which is respectfully submitted.
ALBERT GALLATIN.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 7, 1811.

(A.)

Copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to Thomas Williams, Esq. Register of the Land Office west, and Nicholas Perkins, Esq. Register of the Land Office east of Pearl river.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 28, 1807.

SIR: I enclose the copy of "An act to prevent settlements being made on lands ceded to the United States, until authorized by law."

It is thereby enacted, 1st. That persons who had settled on the public lands before the passing of the act, March 3d, 1807, and did on that day reside on the same may, by application to the Register, or to the Register's special deputy, obtain, on certain conditions, permission to remain on such lands.

2d. That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to remove all those who may settle on the land after the passing of the act, or who, being settled previous thereto, shall not, before the 1st day of January next, have obtained permission to remain thereon, in the manner above mentioned. Penalties, and a forfeiture of any supposed title, are also annexed to the offence, on which I will not dwell, as the first mentioned provisions of the act are those which you are to carry into effect.

You will please to appoint as many persons as you may think fit to receive applications, assigning to each such person a tract, designating, by precise boundaries, either one or more counties, or a certain number of townships, so as to render the applications easy to each settler. You may reserve to yourself a certain district, in which you may receive the applications yourself, or appoint a person for that district, as will best suit your own convenience.

The persons thus appointed must, as well as yourself, publish the substance of the act, so that the settlers may know generally that they will be removed, and exposed to penalties, if they do not apply for permissions, and that new settlements are altogether prohibited. Whenever an application is made, it should specify, with precision, the tract applied for, (not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres;) and if the land has been surveyed, the application must be for one or two quarter sections, to be specially designated. As, however, from ignorance, the parties may not be able always to do this, they must be assisted by the officer in framing the application; and even informal ones must not, in the first instance, be rejected, provided they state the watercourses on which the land lies, the date of the improvement, and by whom made. At the foot, or on the back of the application, or of the permission hereafter mentioned, the party must sign a declaration of the form annexed. (A.)

All the applications received by the persons appointed by you must be transmitted to you, and you will thereupon grant permissions of the form (B;) duplicates being signed by the parties, and retained by you.

The applications and permissions must be entered on a book kept for that purpose; but it is not necessary that they should be recorded at large. A register of the form (C) will be sufficient, and by endorsing on each application and permission its number, they may be always referred to from the register.

It is possible, that, from the extent of your district, and the inconvenience and delay arising from double transmission to and from you, of the applications and permissions, you may think it more eligible to authorize at once the persons appointed by you to grant the permissions. This you may do. But in that case, you must transmit to such persons the necessary instructions, and the forms B and C; (the form A they must have at all events;) they must sign the permissions in their own names, adding the words "for A B, Register of the Land Office of ———;" and they must, on the 1st of January next, transmit to you the Register's applications and duplicates of permissions, signed by the parties. You will, as soon thereafter as may be, state to this Department the number of applications and permissions, and, where the land has been surveyed, transmit a list of the tracts for which permissions have been given.

It may not be improper to remark, that such persons as may have formed settlements subsequent to the date which would entitle them to a right of pre-emption, cannot refuse to sign the required declaration, since they do not lay any claim to the land; and without pretending to encourage their expectations, a cheerful compliance on their part with the law, by signing the law, and thus acknowledging themselves to be tenants at will of the United States, would not certainly injure their cause.

As to the persons who, having obtained pre-emptions, wish that they may be converted into donations, it is sufficient to observe, that the present law is inapplicable to them; for their claims being recognised and confirmed as pre-emptions, they cannot be disturbed in their possession, and are positively excepted from the operation of the law.

Congress having directed special reports to be made of all complete British grants, duly filed with the Register, but not confirmed for want of a settlement, before 27th October, 1795, and also of all incomplete titles, which would have been confirmed had they not been granted to minors; these two descriptions of claims must be viewed as being still under the consideration of the Legislature; and claimants of either description, who have, prior to the passing of the present law, made settlements on lands thus claimed, will not be disturbed, though they may not sign the declaration required by the act. The President has also instructed me to say, that a representation having been made to Congress in favor of persons claiming under incomplete Spanish titles, not confirmed for want of actual settlement, on the 27th October, 1795, which representation has not yet been decided upon by that body, he will not order claimants of that description, who have, prior to the passing of the present law, settled on lands thus claimed, to be removed till after the end of the next session of Congress. But this indulgence will not be extended to persons forming settlements after the passing of the act, nor must it, by any means, be construed as giving any sanction whatever to the claim.

It may, perhaps, be useful that the inhabitants of the territory should be made acquainted with the intention of the President, as it relates to these several descriptions of persons.

The certificate, contemplated by the last section of the act, must be expressed in the very words of the act, and will be given by you on the application of either the person acting as marshal, or of the attorney prosecuting for the United States. But as the President has not yet issued any instructions on the subject of removing the intruders, it is not probable that any such application will soon be made. It will be desirable, in the meanwhile, that you should obtain, through the channel of the persons whom you will appoint for the purpose of receiving applications, or in any other way, an estimate of the number of intruders on the public lands in your district, and also whether any of them lay, or pretend to lay, any claim to the land.

And I have to request that you would, from time to time, give information, both to this Department and to the officer acting as marshal, of any new intrusions which may take place.

Should any application be made for a lead mine or salt spring, you will be pleased to transmit the same to this office, together with your opinion of the terms on which it might be proper to lease the same.

I am, &c.

(B.)

Copy of a letter from the Register of the Land Office west of Pearl river to the Secretary of the Treasury.

LAND OFFICE WEST OF PEARL RIVER,
August 10, 1807.

SIR: I have delayed acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 28th March, covering an act for the prevention of settlement on public lands, until I could have it in my power to give you some account of the measures pursued, in order to carry such of the provisions of that law into effect, as appear to have been particularly in your view.

Instead of selecting a number of deputies in the different parts of my district for the purpose of receiving applications and issuing permissions, I thought it the better course to appoint particular places, along on the frontiers, where I could meet the people in person, and soften, as far as possible, the irritation this law had excited, and to explain away misrepresentations, if any were afloat. I have just returned from this service, and am happy to inform you that the experiment has done justice to my expectations. So far from witnessing any irregularity, I found nothing but a disposition to comply promptly with the law. This is to be attributed, not to my feeble efforts, but to the good sense and temperance of the people, and, above all, to that sound republican maxim, that a law, although it may be deemed a bad one, is, nevertheless, until repealed, sovereign.

It cannot, however, be denied, that they were, and still are, alarmed at some of the provisions of this law; and, indeed, from their situation, it is impossible they should be otherwise. Some of those settlers commenced their improvements three or four years ago, under an impression that the lands would be open for sale in a short time. They have continued to improve from necessity, and are now seriously apprehensive that speculators will compel them to pay for their own labor. Let it be recollected that those settlers were not intruders in the strict sense of the word. In seating themselves on the land, their views were to purchase whenever the United States would sell; and they have been extremely anxious for the arrival of this period. When it is considered that the only boon they ask of the Government, is to purchase for a bona fide consideration, I think it may be truly said, they ask but little indeed; and it is to be sincerely regretted that this little should be withheld. I speak with a warmth on this subject which your goodness will excuse. I have been among those people. In them I see industrious citizens, honestly and honorably engaged in the acquisition of a competence for their families, and firmly attached to the principles of our Government. These, Sir, are claims to public patronage, which I feel fully persuaded will strike you with equal force. To quiet their fears, and put their anxieties at rest, I would respectfully suggest, that a right of pre-emption is the only thing, under all circumstances, calculated to produce those happy effects.

There are a number of settlers on lands which have been adjudged by the commissioners to be antedated grants.

I have declined granting permissions to those settlers, until I could receive instructions from you, giving them assurances that those instructions would arrive in time to enable them to comply with the law, if your decision should be that they are within its purview. I shall leave this place the day after to-morrow for Richmond, to attend at Burr's trial; from thence I shall proceed to Washington City. In the mean time, I shall leave my office in the charge of Mr. Parke Walton, whose knowledge of business and zealous fidelity will prevent any public inconvenience from my absence, and will ensure a prompt obedience to all instructions which may issue from the treasury.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your most obedient servant,

THOMAS H. WILLIAMS.

ALBERT GALLATIN, Esq., Secretary of the Treasury.

LAND OFFICE WEST OF PEARL RIVER, October 1, 1808.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Register.

CORRESPONDENCE

Respecting removal of intruders in Madison county, Mississippi Territory, subsequent to the report of 15th December, 1809, to the House of Representatives.

Extract of a letter from John Brahan, Esq. Receiver of Public Moneys at Nashville, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated APRIL 20, 1810.

The people of Madison county complain very much in having to pay so heavy a land tax this year: the money is to be collected by the 1st September; and, indeed, many of them are almost unable to pay it without inconvenience. The late decision of the Supreme Court has occasioned a great deal of clamor here about Cox's claim. I have assured the people to rest content; that they will keep the land they purchased, in defiance of any other claim; though some of the purchasers are yet uneasy. I went down to Madison county a few weeks ago, to satisfy them as far as I could, which had a good effect; notwithstanding all this, people are entering land in the office here almost every day; resting, very properly, their confidence in the General Government to make them good titles.

Extract of a letter from Wm. Dickson, Esq. Register of the Land Office at Nashville, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated

JUNE 9, 1810.

I also enclose an extract of a letter from William H. Winston, Esquire, clerk of the county court of Madison. The account he gives has been confirmed by several other letters to the Receiver of Public Moneys and myself.

It appears that many persons have recently purchased from Michael Harrison lands which have been sold under the authority of the United States.

That some few who had purchased from the United States have, in order to quiet their claim, purchased also from Harrison.

That the purchasers from Harrison have given warning to purchasers from the United States, to give immediate possession; this, I am informed, has given much uneasiness.

Harrison is making considerable sales, and exhibits the late decision in the Supreme Court of the United States, as a confirmation of his title.

I am induced to believe the sales here will be very considerable hereafter. The late decision in the Supreme Court of the United States, viz.: Fletcher vs. Peck, has been industriously circulated by the claimants from the State of Georgia, and all possible means made use of to impress on the minds of the people an opinion that this decision completely confirms their title, in opposition to that of the United States.

I am induced to believe that few who have purchased at this office will favor Harrison's claim; but the number of residents without certificate or permission is considerable, and from that class he will draw his principal support.

I propose to attend the court in Madison on the first Monday in July. Whatever information I may procure, I shall immediately after my return forward on to you.

Extract of a letter from Wm. H. Winston, Esq. clerk of Madison County Court, dated

MAY 26, 1810.

At this time, nothing is talked of here but Harrison's claim; a great number of persons have come in from various parts of Virginia, and purchased from him lands previously sold by the United States; and those claimants have ordered off the purchasers under the United States, which has occasioned much uneasiness.

Very little land will be sold, until a change in the public sentiment takes place relative to Harrison's claim, in favor of which I find a very considerable number of the people in this country.

JUNE 27, 1810.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a letter from the Register of the Land Office of Madison county, showing the necessity of an early execution of the intended removal of intruders in that county.

There are two classes of persons, who, according to law, cannot be removed, viz.: 1. Those who have purchased lands from the United States. 2. Those who, having signed the requisite declarations, have received written permissions to remain on the land. Although every individual of either description may show evidence, in writing, of his right to remain on the tract he occupies, I have directed copies to be prepared and transmitted to the War Department, of the returns both of sales and permissions. These will facilitate the necessary discrimination; and in order to prevent any mistake, William Dickson, Register of the Land Office, and residing at Nashville, will be instructed to furnish the officer commanding the detachment with a supplementary list of the sales subsequent to the returns last received, and with that of persons, if any, who may have obtained permissions, and not been returned to this office.

These observations apply exclusively to persons residing on those lands purchased both from the Cherokees and Chickasaws, which form Madison county. No sale has been made or permission been granted by the United States, to remain on any part of the lands lying west of Madison county, which were ceded by the Cherokees, but are not included in the Chickasaw purchase.

I have the honor, &c.

Copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of War, dated

JULY 2, 1810.

SIR: In conformity with the intimation given in my letter of the 27th ultimo, I have now the honor of transmitting to you lists of those two classes of persons, who, according to law, cannot be removed from the public lands in Madison county.

I have the honor, &c.

Extract of a letter from John Brahan, Esq. Register of the Land Office at Nashville, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated

JUNE 4, 1810.

I am sorry to say that the claim of Zachariah Cox, in Madison county, is making a very considerable noise, and creating much confusion there; Colonel M. Harrison, who yet resides in Madison county, appears to be the principal and most active person in the business. I am informed, by respectable authority, that he is selling out his claim to lands there, and that he has been surveying the lands sold by him under the title of Cox, and, in some instances, the land sold by the United States at the late public sales in this place. If Colonel M. Harrison is permitted to remain in Madison county, it will be productive of great injury to the sales of lands under the United States, for people will thereby be induced to believe that his title to the land is good. It would be well if he could be removed out of the country. A number of people would yet enter land in Madison county, if they could receive positive assurance that they would hold the lands when the last instalment was paid. An assurance of this kind would have a good effect.

I have the honor, &c.

P. S.—If Government would remove every person out of Madison county, except such as have purchased of the United States, it would be desirable, and would check the growing evil there in its infancy.

Extract of a letter from John Brahan, Receiver of Public Moneys at Nashville, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated

JUNE 5, 1810.

I wrote you yesterday that Colonel Michael Harrison, claiming under Zachariah Cox, &c. was again selling out lands in Madison county under that title. It is said a number of people have purchased of him, and are settling there: if they are not immediately removed, it may be troublesome to remove them after a while.

Copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of War, dated

JULY 5, 1810.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose copies of letters, received by this day's mail from the receiver of Public Moneys at Nashville, in order that it may be submitted to the President, whether a more speedy removal of Michael Harrison and his adherents than had been contemplated might not be directed.

I have the honor, &c.

Extract of a letter from William Dixon, Register of the Land Office at Nashville, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated

JULY 30, 1810.

SIR: I herewith enclose the returns for the month of June; a few sales were made during that month; this is to be attributed to the impression made on the minds of the people, by the late decision in the Supreme Court of the United States. This impression is now nearly done away, and the minds of the people generally quieted as to their titles. The speculations also which I noticed in my last are nearly, perhaps entirely, at an end.

Extract of a letter from John Brahan, Esq. to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated

JULY 12, 1810.

I discover that Colonel Harrison's claim under Cox is becoming more silent, and people are again entering lands in the office, more briskly than was the case some weeks ago.

SITE FOR THE TOWN OF PULASKI, IN TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the commissioners appointed to fix on a site for the town of Pulaski, in the county of Giles, and State of Tennessee, made the following report:

That the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, by their act of the 14th of November, 1809, erected a new county by the name of Giles, and directed a town to be named Pulaski, to be laid out as the seat of justice for the said county. That the petitioners were appointed by the said act to fix on a situation upon Richland creek, and as near the centre of the said county as an eligible site could be found, for the said town of Pulaski. They were also empowered to receive to themselves and successors in office, for the use of the said county of Giles, a general warranty deed for such quantity of land as might be conveyed to them for that purpose.

It appears that the petitioners have qualified themselves, agreeably to the requisitions of the said act, for the discharge of the duties required of them; and that, in the performance thereof, they found the most eligible site for the said town to be on land belonging to the United States. And as they cannot make purchase or obtain a grant for the land which includes the contemplated site for the town of Pulaski, there not being, as yet, any provision made for the disposal of the lands of the United States within the State of Tennessee, they have petitioned Congress to authorize a special grant for six hundred and forty acres of land, for the before-mentioned purpose, for which they are willing to pay to the United States a reasonable price.

The committee are convinced, from a view of the conditions to which the public lands in that State are subjected, that no general provision for the disposal thereof can, with propriety, be made at present; and when they consider the advantage to a county of having a convenient and central situation for its seat of justice; and that, if the land in question be withheld from the county, a situation less proper must be fixed on, which, in time, might render a removal of the seat of justice necessary, which could not be done but to the great injury of private property and a heavy expense to the county; and as the committee are assured that the Indian title is extinguished, and that it is not any peculiar quality the land possesses, but simply its suitability for the contemplated site for a town, that renders it desirable to the petitioners; they do not hesitate to express their opinion, that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable.

Resolved, That provision ought to be made, by law, for the sale of six hundred and forty acres of land on Richland creek, in the State of Tennessee, to the commissioners appointed to fix the seat of justice for the county of Giles, in trust, for the use of said county, at the same price for which other public lands are sold.

SITE FOR THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT OF THE INDIANA TERRITORY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 23, 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislative Council and House of Representatives of the Indiana Territory, made the following report:

That the seat of government for the Indiana Territory is fixed at Vincennes, on the river Wabash; that, in consequence of the late division of the said Territory, Vincennes has become inconvenient for that purpose, as it is situated on the western boundary line of the Territory. In order to provide a remedy for this inconvenience, the Territorial Legislature have, by law, appointed three commissioners to fix on a proper site, within prescribed limits, for the permanent seat of government for the Territory.

It appears, by the statement of the memorialists, an inspection of the map, and such other information as the committee had access to, that a position may be found within the limits prescribed by the aforesaid law, central and convenient for the present, and for many years to come, for the future population of the Territory. The lands thus proper for the contemplated site are lands to which the Indian title is extinguished, but that have not yet been offered for sale by the United States. It is the prayer of the memorial that Congress would authorize a donation of the lands which the commissioners may designate for the aforesaid purpose. To the committee, the views of the Territorial Legislature appear laudable and just; yet, as it appears to them at least questionable whether such a donation to the benefit of a particular Territory, as is prayed for, could be considered as authorized by the conditions of the act of cession of the State of Virginia to the United States, they cannot recommend a compliance with the application in its extent. They, however, are of opinion that a liberal and just policy would forbid that the United States should withhold from the Territory the lands proper to afford them a convenient seat of government, or exact from them, in consideration of the lands, more than the real and intrinsic value thereof; and that the adventitious value imposed by the circumstances of the lands being selected as the site for the Territorial and hereafter State Government, should of right go to the Territory, and for its use.

They, therefore, respectfully submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That provision ought to be made, by law, for the sale of four quarter sections of land in the Indiana Territory to the commissioners appointed to fix the permanent seat of government therefor, in trust for the use of the said Territory, at the same price for which the other public lands are sold.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR THE PAYMENT FOR PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 28, 1811.

A resolution instructing our representation in Congress to use their endeavors to procure an extension of the time for the payment of public lands in certain cases.

Whereas, many of the citizens of this State, who have purchased lands of the United States, who will not be able to comply with their contracts, and the time is fast approaching (and with many already elapsed,) when they will be deprived of the fruits of their former industry by non-compliance, unless Government should grant them further indulgence; Therefore, resolved, by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives be requested, to use their best endeavors to procure an extension of the time for the payment of public lands to the following effect, (as well for those who come under the pre-emption law as others, as many individuals within the Cincinnati district have paid a high price for the right of pre-emption, in addition to the price to be paid to Government,) viz: where a person has purchased land of the United States not exceeding one section, and paid only one instalment, upon his forfeiting the sum paid, such purchaser, or his legal representative, shall be entitled to right of pre-emption from the time it is forfeited by the act of Congress, until the time of sale, and the terms of payment on the second entry be the same as are now established by law. Where two or more instalments are paid, the purchaser, or his legal representative, shall be entitled to the same privilege, viz.: upon forfeiting the first instalment the second and third instalments shall be placed to his credit on the second purchase. The law thus modified would, perhaps, enable many good citizens to provide in a decent manner for a young and rising family, which, under existing circumstances, they may be deprived of; and as the sum forfeited would be more than six per cent. interest on the purchase-money, it would by no means be injurious to the nation.

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to forward copies of the foregoing resolution to the Senators and Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States.

ILLINOIS AND WABASH LAND COMPANIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ON THE 30TH OF JANUARY, 1811:

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the United Illinois and Wabash Land Companies, praying a compromise of their claim to certain lands in the Illinois Territory, derived under deeds of conveyance from tribes of the Illinois and Piankeshaw Indians, made the following report:

That they have yielded to the subject all the consideration due to a claim highly important, as well from its great extent as from the principles involved in the determination. The principle on which the memorialists rest their claim is, that a grant of lands from a tribe or nation of Indians is valid, as a conveyance of a legal or equitable estate, though unaccompanied by the sanction of the subsisting Government.

In recurring to the proclamation of the King of Great Britain, of the 7th of October, 1763, the committee find a plain and express prohibition to purchase lands of the Indians, embracing this case. The terms of the proclamation are, in the opinion of the committee, too full and explicit to be eluded by any possible mode of purchase, or any ingenuity in reasoning that has been resorted to. This ground would be decisive upon the claim, but for the objection of the claimants, that the proclamation is invalid for the above purpose for want of power in the King over the subject-matter; which objection is illustrated and enforced by an elaborate and able argument incorporated in the memorial; but, on the fullest consideration, the committee are unable to discover sufficient grounds to sustain the objection. If the Indian tribes in question are, at the period of the purchase, to be considered as independent nations, exercising the power of alienation of territory, by treaty of the nation, the King of Great Britain, representing, by the fundamental principles of the Government, the nation in all foreign concerns, was the proper party, competent, at such treaty, to contract with said nations.* But if the Indian tribes have, ever since their intercourse with European nations, been found incapable of independence; if the Powers of Europe have, by right of discovery, occupation, and conquest, claimed and exercised, from the first settlement of the country, the rights of sovereignty and jurisdiction over the territories of the Indian nations; and more especially if the tribes in question, as it seems to the committee, were reduced to the condition of the vanquished in the war of 1755, having fought under the banners of France; then is the conclusion still stronger against the memorialists. To this effect the above proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763, asserts, in strong terms, sovereignty and dominion over the Indian territories; reserves the lands for the use of the Indians; and declares the Indian nations under the protection of the Crown. While such language well comports with the exercise of the King's prerogative over conquered countries, it is utterly inconsistent with the independence of the Indian nations, and their absolute property and right of disposition of the lands reserved to them. It is not necessary to the conclusions the committee have come to, to consider the general question, whether a conveyance of land by Indians, unaccompanied with the sanction of the Government, be valid; but, independently of the above proclamation, the course of argument of the claimants has led the committee into the examination of this question. Your committee submit, as the result of their inquiries on this point, that, although a few solitary instances may be found, in the early settlement of the country, of Indian deeds of land being recognised as valid, yet, that such were the consequences resulting from frauds practised on the simple natives, such the collision of claims and consequent controversies, such the effects upon the public peace and intercourse with the Indian nations, that Government, at a pretty early day, interfered and assumed a kind of guardianship over the rights of the natives; hence, the principle was introduced into the code regulating the intercourse with Indian tribes, which requires the concomitant assent or subsequent sanction of the Government to a conveyance of lands by Indians, in order to render it valid.* This wholesome policy was adopted by other Governments as well as that of Great Britain. This rule became, in the opinion of the committee, a part of the law of the land; and a departure from it would, as they conceive, be productive of the most injurious consequences.

If the purchase of the memorialists be valid, it must be so in all its extent; and to reduce it, by compromise, would be unbecoming the justice of Congress; but, if the grant be invalid, to admit it in any respect would be unauthorized, and a sacrifice of the public property.

* See Trumbull's History of Connecticut, page 117; 2d vol. Neal's History of New England, appendix; Jefferson's notes on Virginia, page 225; act of Massachusetts, passed in 1701; act of New Jersey, of the 13th December, 1703; act of Connecticut of the 9th May, 1717; act of Pennsylvania, of the 14th of February, 1730; act of Georgia, of the 15th of February, 1758.

Whether the extinguishment of the Indian title to the lands in question has been facilitated by the advances made by the memorialists to the Indians does not appear to the committee; but, if the fact be so, to recognise such unauthorized proceedings of individuals with the Indians, as a foundation of a grant from the United States, would encroach upon the great system of policy so wisely introduced to regulate intercourse with the Indian tribes.

The committee, therefore, as the result of the premises, beg leave to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petition ought not to be granted.

LANDS FOR THE SUPPORT OF RELIGION IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the inhabitants of the third township in the eighth range, in Washington county, Ohio, made the following report:

It appears to the committee, by the statement of the petitioners, that the third township of the eighth range in the Ohio Company's purchase is a fractional township, being intersected near the centre by the boundary line that separates the tract purchased from the donation tract conveyed to the said company; that the said fractional township does not contain the section No. 29, set apart for the support of religion in the several townships in the said purchase, whereby the inhabitants are deprived of the benefit of the ministerial lands. The petitioners pray that section No. 26, the property of the United States, which remains yet unsold, may be granted in lieu of section No. 29, and for the same purposes.

In the examination of the subject, the committee observe that the grant of section No. 29 for the purpose of religion, is confined to the purchase of the Ohio Company, and that of John Cleves Symmes and associates; that, in both, the surveys were to be made at the expense of the purchaser, and according to the land ordinance of the 20th of May, 1785. That ordinance prescribes a uniform mode of surveying and numbering the lots or sections in each township, and in fractional parts of townships; provides that the lots protracted thereon should bear the same numbers as if the township had been entire; hence the local position of section No. 29 is the same in every entire and fractional township. Under the grant of section No. 29, in each township, or fractional part of township, to be given perpetually for religion, the provision can only be considered as made in the townships that contained such section. The committee think it probable that many other fractional townships lying on the Ohio river, in the Ohio Company's purchase, are also destitute of the ministerial section; but they have more correct information respecting the tract purchased by John C. Symmes; on three sides of which, fractional townships are formed by the intersection of the Ohio and Big and Little Miami rivers, many of which do not contain the section No. 29, nor have the inhabitants the benefit of the ministerial lands. If any provision be made, it ought to be so general as to extend to all cases of the same kind; and the committee do not consider themselves authorized, on a particular application, to report a general provision; especially as in this case there is no legal claim on the Government. They therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

LAND CLAIMS IN THE DISTRICT OF KASKASKIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom were referred the reports and decisions of the commissioners appointed to settle the claims to land in the district of Kaskaskia, made the following report:

That they have, with due consideration, investigated the decisions of the commissioners in favor of the rightful proprietors of town lots, common fields, allotments, and commons, in the several tracts designated by the name of Kaskaskia, Grand Prairie, Prairie du Rocher, Fort Chartres, St. Philip's, Prairie du Pont, and Cahokia; and the result of their inquiries is, that the decisions ought to be confirmed. These cases are the only confirmations of the said commissioners that have not already been finally acted on by Congress; and the committee think proper to state that, in some respects, they differ from those that have received the confirmation of the Government. In former reports that have been acted on, the claims of individuals were confirmed to the respective tracts that they rightfully claimed; and in the cases under consideration, that mode was attempted to be pursued, and several individual confirmations were actually made; but, in the progress of the business, such was found to be the dilapidated state of the ancient records, and so indefinite were the boundaries of the particular tracts claimed, that the commissioners relinquished the idea of making confirmation of the individual claims in severalty, and extended their inquiries no further than to the ascertainment of the out-boundaries of the lands that had been granted to the inhabitants of a village or settlement; and, with a declaration that, in their opinion, the United States have no interest in the lands within the designated boundary, they affirm the same to the legal proprietors thereof, leaving the several proprietors and claimants to adjust and settle their claims within the tract so confirmed, according to their several rights. This mode of proceeding, however variant from former practice, appears to be justified by the necessity of the case, and is, as the committee conceive, in perfect accordance with the object principally in contemplation of the Legislature, which was that the public lands should be distinguished from those that are private property. The committee have also investigated the report and accompanying documents respecting Governors' confirmations, and, on mature consideration of the subject-matter thereof, they are induced to express an opinion that many of the claims that have been confirmed are destitute of that legal and equitable foundation which, in contemplation of the law, they ought to possess, to entitle them to a confirmation; and the documents, in connexion with other circumstances, afford strong grounds to suspect the correctness of many of the confirmations, the propriety and validity of which are not impeached by any direct evidence in possession of the committee.

It ought to be observed, that the laws which invested the Governor with the power to confirm claims, also prescribed a rule of decision for his guidance in the performance of the duty.

To test the propriety and validity of the confirmations arranged under the general head of ancient grants, reference must be had to the resolutions of Congress of the 20th of June and the 28th and 29th of August, 1788, and an act of Congress passed on the 3d of March, 1791. The first mentioned resolution substantially prescribes what was requisite to constitute a claim that might be confirmed as an ancient grant; the subsequent resolutions only extend the same provisions to another class of claimants; and the second section of the act of the 3d March, 1791, as far as it relates to the claims in virtue of possession and allotment, may be viewed in the same light. When the provisions of the said first mentioned resolution are applied to the confirmation of grants made by the British commandants, and allowing every latitude of construction in favor of the confirmations, it will appear that no authority is given by the said resolution to the Governor to make such confirmations.

The resolution defines claims that should be confirmed to be for lands allotted according to the laws or usages, &c. The grants in question were made, not only without the authority of law, but also contrary to the public proclamation of 1763.

With respect to the claims arranged under the general head of donations, it is proper to observe, that the resolution of the 20th of June, 1788, authorized four hundred acres of land to be granted to each head of a family then living in the Illinois country; and the act of the 3d March, 1791, provided for a similar grant to each head of a family who had, after the year 1783, removed without the Territory, and should return and occupy the land within five years. On a comparison of the number of claims for donation that have been confirmed by the Governors and commissioners with the number of families reported to be in the country by the above-mentioned resolution, it will appear that an error of no inconsiderable amount exists, either in the computation of the number of heads of families, or the grants of donation that have been made, or in both.

It appears that transfers have been made of the principal part of the claims to a right of donation, before the lands were granted, or had vested in the persons for whom the bounty was originally intended. The validity of such transfers might now be a subject of inquiry, had not other acts of confirmation, in similar cases, already sanctioned the principle. But as these rights to donation have been principally claimed by a few individuals, and as it appears by the general report on rejected claims, now before the committee, that some of those individuals have in other cases made use of most dishonorable and unlawful means to obtain the confirmation of their pretended claims, the committee think it no more than a proper precaution against fraud and imposition, that a re-examination of the former decisions should take place.

This course of proceeding being proposed, a question will arise as to the effect of the Governors' confirmations, whether it is competent to the Legislature to annul such confirmations, or provide for their revision. On this subject, it is worthy of remark, that the act passed on the 26th of March, 1804, certainly contemplated a revision of the Governors' decisions; it provided that every person, claiming lands in virtue of any French or British grant, or resolution or act of Congress, should deliver a notice, in writing, of the nature and extent of his claims, for the purpose of being recorded; and that the commissioners should have power to hear, in a summary manner, all matters respecting such claims, and to decide thereon according to justice and equity. Under the authority of this act, the commissioners at Vincennes did actually revise the former decisions of the Governors in that district. In so far the proposed measure is justified by the precedent of law and practice, and in principle it does not appear objectionable; for, admitting that the Governors were constituted judges by the law, and that their decisions are valid to confer a title, the admission must be limited to the cases of which they were made the judges, and to the titles thence arising. They, however, may more properly be considered as the authorized agents of the Government for certain purposes. The right, then, to inquire into the performance of the duties assigned to them cannot be doubted; and if, in the result of such inquiry, it should be found that they have exceeded their prescribed powers, and made confirmations not authorized by law, it is inconceivable how such act of deciding in cases not submitted to their determination, or such confirmations not authorized by law, can be considered as obligatory on the Government, or valid for the purpose of giving title to the individual claimants.

And in cases that came within the proper range of their powers, and the decisions on which shall have formally corresponded with the provisions of the law, but, on inquiry, it shall be found that the evidence produced in support of the claims is fraudulent, and that the claim has no proper foundation; in these cases, it is believed that the confirmation will not avail the claimants as a title, and that the Government has a right to distinguish such from the other decisions that give legitimate title.

The claimants will, nevertheless, still have an opportunity to avail themselves of their supposed rights before the judicial tribunals of the country.

From these considerations, the committee respectfully submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the report of the commissioners on common fields, commons, and town lots, ought to be confirmed.

Resolved, That provision ought to be made, by law, for the re-examination of the Governors' decisions on land claims in the district of Kaskaskia.

VIRGINIA MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ON THE 26TH OF NOVEMBER 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, who were instructed, by a resolution of the 18th instant, to inquire, what provision ought to be made respecting the location of Virginia military land warrants west of the boundary designated by the act of the 23d of March, 1804, made the following report:

That, at the last session of Congress, the committee, under a similar instruction, made a report, in which the facts relating to this subject are stated in detail; that the resolution then proposed had in view only an immediate provision to prevent conflicting titles arising under grants from the United States to different persons for the same land, leaving the mode for fixing the western boundary of the Virginia military tract as a subject for subsequent provision; but, as the necessity of the immediate provision then recommended has, in some measure, been obviated, and as the subject has been introduced at so early a period of the present session as to promise a speedy determination thereon, and especially as it is believed that the concurrence of the Legislature of Virginia, (who will shortly be in session,) is necessary to the measures that may be adopted for ascertaining and fixing the said boundary line, it has appeared to the committee proper to propose resolutions that shall embrace the whole subject, therefore the following are respectfully submitted:

Resolved, That provision ought to be made, by law, for the appointment of commissioners, on the part of the United States, to act with such commissioners as the commonwealth of Virginia may appoint, to ascertain and finally determine and fix the western boundary line of the Virginia military tract, according to the true intent and meaning of the condition of the deed of cession from Virginia to the United States, touching the military reservation between the rivers Sciota and Little Miami.

Resolved, That provision ought to be made, by law, to prevent the issuing of patents on surveys executed in virtue of Virginia military warrants, west of the boundary line designated by the act of Congress of the 23d of March, 1804.

Resolved, That, in the event of the said existing boundary line being found by the said commissioners to exclude lands belonging to the Virginia military tract, the said commissioners shall ascertain the quantity and quality of the lands so excluded, and shall have power to locate other unappropriated lands, equal in quantity and quality; which lands shall be liable to location under Virginia military land warrants, from and after the day of ———.

EXTENSION OF TIME TO COMPLETE PAYMENT FOR PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 5, 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislative Council and House of Representatives of the Indiana Territory, made the following report:

That the said memorial presents to their consideration, and recommends for adoption, the following provisions:

1st. The repeal of such clauses of the laws for the sale of the public lands as impose interest from the purchase, on such instalments of the purchase money as are not paid when they become due.

2d. That the back interest, which may have heretofore accumulated on any instalment, may be remitted.

3d. That the further time of two years be allowed before lands shall become forfeited for failure in completing the payment of the purchase money.

The committee have given due consideration to the argument and facts contained in the memorial in support of these propositions, and respectfully submit the result of their inquiries.

1st. It is the opinion of the committee, that the repeal of such clauses of the laws for the sale of the public lands as require interest to be paid from the date of the purchase, on the instalments that are not paid when they become due, would be improper; because the repeal of those provisions would, in a high degree, diminish the inducements to the purchaser to comply with the terms of his contract.

By the act of the 10th day of May, 1800, interest was charged on the three last instalments of the purchase money, from the date of the purchase until paid. The provisions of this act made no distinction between the purchasers who made punctual payment and those that did not. To remedy that defect, as is supposed, it was provided by the act of the 26th of March, 1804, "that no interest shall be charged on any instalment that shall hereafter become due, provided such instalment shall be paid on the day on which the same shall become due." This provision offered terms more favorable than before to the purchasers that should make punctual payment, and at the same time left the delinquent purchaser under the operation of the former act. If the provision in question should be repealed, the delinquent purchasers would be again placed on the same footing with purchasers who make punctual payment of their instalments.

2d. To remit the back interest which may have accrued on the instalments that have not been paid when they become due. This appears also to be inadmissible. It is a proposition dependent on that which has been considered; for, if the existing provisions of the law, with regard to back interest ought to be continued in force; if back interest shall be exacted in cases of delinquency in future, no good reason can be assigned why the operation of the law should be restrained in the cases that have already occurred.

3d. To allow a further time of two years before lands shall become forfeited for failure in completing the payment of the purchase money.

This appears to be proposed, not only as an expedient for temporary relief, but for a permanent regulation: as a permanent regulation it cannot be recommended. At present, one year is allowed from the time the last instalment became due, before a resale or forfeiture can take place for failure in payment. To add two years more to the term of credit, which is already too much extended for the interest of Government and the benefit of the individual purchasers, would be adding to the cause of the evils already experienced under the credit system. In proportion as the credit is extended, so will the outstanding debts be augmented and the number of debtors increased.

It is believed that a Government founded on the general sentiment of the community cannot, with safety to itself, hold as debtors the citizens of any considerable portion of the country. Such a state of things will engender disaffection of the most dangerous kind—disaffection nerved by the powerful motives of interest. And as it regards purchasers, the credit at present allowed often induces individuals to make purchases beyond their means. To remove the day of payment two years further from the time of purchase would be adding to those inducements, whilst it still more admits of the intervention of unforeseen circumstances to defeat their hopes. The committee, from these considerations, express their decided opinion that any proposed alterations in the laws for the sale of the public lands, that have for their object the extension of the credit on future sales, are improper, and ought not to be adopted. But so far as the memorial contemplates an extension of time; as a temporary measure for immediate relief, the committee have viewed the application in a different light. They admit the principle in its fullest extent, that the general operation of the laws for the sale of the public lands ought not to be interrupted by acts of temporary suspension, or partial indulgence. This general rule, however, is not so absolute but that it admits of exceptions. The situation of the purchasers who are represented by the memorial, and the circumstances brought into view, are of such character as to give their case a just claim, as the committee conceive, on the Legislature for some measure of indulgence. The low price of produce, and the consequent scarcity of money in the western country, are circumstances of real embarrassment to the purchaser, who must shortly complete his payments, or forfeit his land. In addition to that, the late Indian hostilities on the western frontier (should it terminate in the most favorable manner) will tend to frustrate the exertions of the purchaser to fulfil his engagements to the Government. This last mentioned circumstance is of too recent date to have been brought into view by the memorialists. But, as the effects of such a state of things cannot be mistaken, it was supposed not improper to take it into view in estimating the claim the memorialists have on the Government for an indulgence.

It is believed that a moderate extension of time to the purchasers whose term of credit is about expiring, would not materially diminish the current receipts. For money cannot be employed in that country so as to produce a profit equal to the forfeiture of interest the purchaser will incur who permits the whole term of credit to run before he makes payment; hence, every purchaser who had the means may be presumed to have made payment, and an enforcement of the law would only produce a reversion of the land, but not a payment of purchase money, where the means are wanting. The propriety of this remark may be tested by the experience under former provisions similar to that which will be now recommended.

The committee respectfully submit the following resolutions :

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to repeal such clauses of the laws for the sale of the public lands, as impose interest from the date of the purchase, on such instalments of the purchase money as are not paid when they become due, or to remit back interest which may have accrued on any such instalment.

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to allow a further time of two years, from the time the last instalment shall become due, before a forfeiture can take place for failure in payment on any future sales.

Resolved, That the further time of one year for completing the payments ought to be allowed respectively to all purchasers of public lands northwest of the river Ohio, whose time for completing the payment of the purchase money may have or shall expire on or before the twenty-second day of December, 1812, and whose land has not been actually sold or forfeited for failure in payment; on condition that all arrears of interest shall be paid, to entitle any purchaser to the benefit of this provision.

SITE FOR THE WATER-WORKS AT NEW ORLEANS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 5, 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of New Orleans, made the following report:

That, for supplying the said city with water from the Mississippi, by means of steam engines, the city council have entered into a contract with Benjamin Henry Latrobe and his associates for that purpose; that, by their act of the 27th of April, 1811, Mr. Latrobe and his associates are allowed to place their steam engines, and all buildings necessary for the undertaking, upon a space of one hundred and twenty-five feet by one hundred and fifty feet, of the vacant ground situate between the front of the city and the river, and bounded by Bienville and Custom-house streets. It further appears, that the corporation, in consequence of the claim of the United States to the said ground, do not consider themselves competent to guaranty the possession to the said Latrobe and his associates, for the purpose aforesaid. The object of the petition is to obtain of Congress an act to confirm the corporation of the city in the perpetual possession of the ground described as necessary for the aforesaid purpose. The committee are of opinion, that the United States ought to relinquish their claim to the ground in question, so far as is necessary to facilitate an undertaking which promises such important advantages to the city of New Orleans. They believe, however, that nothing more is necessary, on the part of the United States, than a grant of the use of the ground for the special purpose set forth, and for such length of time as it may be so occupied.

The committee submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That provision ought to be made for securing to the corporation of the city of New Orleans the occupancy and use of a piece of ground on which it is contemplated to erect steam engines for conveying water into the said city: Provided, That, if the said ground shall not be so occupied, or shall hereafter cease to be so occupied the claim of the United States thereto shall remain unimpaired.

LAND CLAIMS IN THE DISTRICT OF KASKASKIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 17, 1811.

Mr. JEREMIAH MORROW, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom were referred the reports and decisions of the commissioners for settling claims to land within the district of Kaskaskia, made the following report:

That they have investigated the report on common fields, town lots, allotments, and commons. These are the only affirmative decisions of the said commissioners that have not been finally acted on by Congress; and they appear to differ only in one respect from those that have been confirmed by Government. In former reports, individual claims were reported and confirmed, in severally; in the cases under consideration, the commissioners found it impossible, in consequence of the dilapidated state of the ancient records, and the indefinite boundaries of the particular tracts claimed, to pursue that course. They have therefore extended their inquiries no farther than the ascertainment of the out-boundaries of the lands that had been granted to the inhabitants of a village or settlement; confirming to the legal proprietors the lands within the designated boundaries, but leaving them to settle their claims within the tract so confirmed, according to their several rights.

This mode of proceeding, however variant from former practice, appears to be justified by necessity, and is equally calculated as the former mode to distinguish the lands that are public from those which are private property. This, in the opinion of the committee, was the principal object in contemplation of the law under which the commissioners acted. They therefore submit the propriety of confirming the aforesaid decisions by law.

The committee have also examined the report and documents respecting Governors' confirmations. It appears that the commissioners have not formally decided on the claims that have been confirmed by the Governors, as the commissioners at Vincennes, acting under the same law, have done. They, however, in their report, state many circumstances and facts that are calculated in a high degree to impeach the validity of many of these confirmations.

It ought to be remarked, to show the necessity of a re-examination of these claims, as well as to do justice to the Governors who made the confirmations, that the multifarious duties imposed on these officers, in their capacity of Governor, Indian agent, and, in one instance, of commander-in-chief, did not allow them the time necessary for the full investigation of the claims presented for their decision; and, perhaps, unsuspecting of the practices of fraud, forgery, and perjury, that have been since developed by the investigation of the commissioners, they may not have examined the claims with that scrupulous attention that was necessary to guard the public property against impositions. The committee cannot, unless they exceed the ordinary limits of a report, particularize the cases of confirmed claims that appear to them exceptionable; they will only, in general, state that the report presents to view a number of cases in which claims have been confirmed, in virtue of improvement rights, when, in fact, no improvement had been made on the land claimed; and of confirmations made in virtue of ancient grants, where there appears no claim of title made out to the claimant confirmed; in some instances, that defect had been supplied by forged conveyances, and also of confirmations in virtue of ancient grants; when it appears that the officers from whom the grants emanated had no competent authority to make them, but, on the contrary, were expressly prohibited the exercise of such powers by the Government then existing.

Under the general head of donations, only one case of improper confirmation is stated by the commissioners. But as the donations have not been awarded to the persons for whom the bounty was originally intended, but have, by transfers of the rights before the property had vested, been engrossed by a few individuals; and as the number of donations have so far exceeded the number of inhabitants entitled to donations, as stated by a committee of Congress under the confederation, the committee believe that a re-examination of this class of confirmations ought also to be made. In considering this subject, it has not escaped the attention of the committee, that questions may arise as to the effect of the Governors' confirmations; whether it is competent to the Legislature to annul them, or to provide for their revision, inasmuch as the laws that invested the Governors with the power to decide and confirm claims have not enjoined on them to report their proceedings, nor made any special reserve of a superintending power in the Legislature; hence it may be alleged, that the Governors were, by the law, constituted judges: that their decisions are conclusive, and valid to give title.

It is believed that nothing more is necessary to clear the subject of difficulty than a correct view of the nature of the claims, of the laws that regulate them, and of the character that the Governors sustained in executing those laws.

The claims have been classed under general heads, and are of the following descriptions: 1. Ancient grants; 2. Improvement rights; and 3. Donations. The laws have recognised, in the first class, a pre-existing legal title; in the second, a right in equity, for the consummation of which they have provided; and, as to the third class, the claims originated in the law itself; the right emanated from the bounty of the Legislature. The Governors were the authorized agents of the Government for executing these laws. The laws that invested them with the power to confirm claims, also prescribed a rule of decision for their guidance in the performance of the duty. It will thence appear, that the right in the claimant has in nowise been derived from the instrument executing the law, but had its existence anterior to the agency of the Governors.

Viewing the Governors as agents, with limited and defined powers, the right to inquire into the performance of the duties assigned them cannot be doubted; and if, in the result of such inquiry, it should appear that they have exceeded the powers with which they were invested; that, from misconception of the law, the admission of fraudulent testimony, or whatever other cause, claims have been confirmed, when, in fact, no right existed in the claimant; in such cases, it cannot be admitted that the mere act of confirmation is of such efficacy as to preclude the Legislature from correcting the error or annulling the erroneous decision. It is, indeed, inconceivable how such confirmations can be obligatory on the Government, or valid for the purpose of giving title. After a re-examination of the Governors' confirmations, the claimants, whose claims may be adjudged to have been improperly confirmed, will, nevertheless, still have an opportunity to avail themselves of their supposed rights before the judicial tribunals of the country.

From these considerations, the committee are of opinion, that the report of the commissioners on common fields, commons, allotments, and town lots, ought to be confirmed; and that provision ought to be made by law, for the re-examination of the Governors' decisions on claims to land in the district of Kaskaskia.

LAND CLAIMS IN THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF THE ORLEANS TERRITORY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 9, 1812.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 8, 1812.

SIR:

I have the honor, in conformity with the act respecting claims to land in the Territories of Orleans and Louisiana, to transmit a copy of the report made by the Commissioners for the Eastern District of the Territory of Orleans, on the claims to land within the said district which they have not confirmed.* On inquiring why the claims in the said report were not arranged into three general classes, as directed by the act aforesaid, I was verbally informed by the commissioner who delivered the report, that all the claims thus rejected were considered by the Board as belonging to the third class: that is to say, as claims not entitled to confirmation, either under the acts of Congress, or in conformity with the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish Government. A letter subsequently received from another commissioner is also transmitted.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir,
Your most obedient servant,

ALBERT GALLATIN.

The Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

Decisions of the Board of Commissioners for the Eastern District of the Territory of Orleans, of Land Claims registered in the books of Michael Cautrelle, Deputy Register.

No. 1.—BELONY LANDRY claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing three arpents in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on one side by land of Michel Judice, and on the other by land of Raphael Landry.

*The reports now published embrace the claims confirmed, as well as those rejected.

There was an order of survey in the year 1783, for fifty arpents front, and forty arpents depth, obtained by Louis Judice from Governor Miro. The three arpents of land now claimed are part of the said tract, and purchased by the wife of the claimant in the year 1799; the land having been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten years prior to the 20th December, 1803. Confirmed.

No. 2.—JOSEPH CALLIOT claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents and twelve toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the lower side by land of Pablo David.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803; and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 3.—OLIVIER TERRIO claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents and seventeen toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Estevan Landry, and on the lower by land of Pedro Leblanc.

This land was surveyed by Don Louis Andry, in the year 1773, in favor of Armand Babin, who obtained a complete grant to the same in the year 1775 from Don Louis de Unzaga, then Governor; the present claimant holds by different deeds of sale under the aforesaid grant. Confirmed.

No. 4.—BERGITE FOREST, widow of Pierre Braux, claims a tract of land, situate on the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Pedro Duplessy, and on the lower by land of Anselmo Landry.

This land is part of fifty arpents front on the usual depth of forty, for which Louis Judice obtained an order of survey, in the year 1783, from Governor Miro. Pierre Braux, the husband of the claimant, purchased of said Judice in the year 1787; the land having been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten years prior to the 20th December, 1803. Confirmed.

No. 5.—SILVAIN LEBLANC claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing three arpents and twenty-four toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by the land of Mr. Judice, and on the lower by land of Joseph Hughes.

It appears that the land now claimed was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and that Anselmo Landry obtained an order of survey for the same in the year 1785, under whose title the claimant holds; the land having been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten years prior to the 20th December, 1803. Confirmed.

No. 6.—SILVAIN LEBLANC claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents and sixteen toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Armand Babin, and on the lower by land of Simon Landry.

This land was surveyed by Don Louis Andry in the year 1773, in favor of Pedro Leblanc, who obtained a complete grant for the same in 1775 from Governor Unzaga; the present claimant holds as the representative of Pedro Leblanc, deceased, his father. Confirmed.

No. 7.—PIERRE HOUVRE claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing two arpents and eighteen toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on one side by land of Joseph Malbouroux.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by him, or those under whom he claims, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 8.—EDWARD GODWIN claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing one arpent in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Augustine Burleau, and on the lower by land of Pedro Braux.

The land is a part of five arpents front and forty depth, mentioned in No. 1; the present claimant holds by purchase, under the title mentioned in No. 1. Confirmed.

No. 9.—RAPHAEL LANDRY claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing seven arpents front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Bellony Landry, and on the lower by land of Augustine Burleau.

This land is part of a tract of fifty arpents front and forty in depth, mentioned in No. 1; the claimant holds by purchase, under Louis Judice, in the year 1793. Confirmed.

No. 10.—PIERRE CARMOUCHE claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents and five feet in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Maxin Prejeau, and on the lower by land of Juan Janesoin.

This land was surveyed by Don Louis Andry in the year 1774, in favor of Amand Prejeau, who obtained a complete grant for the same, in the same year, from Governor Unzaga; under which grant the present claimant holds by regular deed of sale. Confirmed.

No. 11.—PIERRE CARMOUCHE claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents twenty-four toises and two feet in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Prejeau, and on the lower by land of Amand Prejeau.

The land was surveyed by Don Louis Andry, in the year 1774, in favor of Maxin Prejeau, who obtained a complete grant for the same, in the same year, from Governor Unzaga; under which grant the present claimant holds by regular deeds of sale. Confirmed.

No. 12.—PIERRE CARMOUCHE claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents one toise and five feet in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Carlos Prejeau, and on the lower by land of Maxin Prejeau.

This land was surveyed by Don Louis Andry in the year 1774, in favor of Joseph Prejeau, who obtained a complete grant for the same in the year 1775, from Governor Unzaga; under which grant the claimant holds by regular deed of sale. Confirmed.

No. 13.—ARMAND BABIN claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents one toise and four feet in front, and forty arpents in depth; and bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Richard, and on the lower by land of Joseph Prejeau.

This land was surveyed by Don Louis Andry in the year 1774, in favor of Carlos Prejeau, who obtained a complete grant for the same, in the same year, from Governor Unzaga; under which grant the present claimant holds. Confirmed.

No. 14.—PIERRE AVRIEUX claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing six arpents and four toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Carlos Dugast, and on the lower by land of Amable Robichaud.

This land was surveyed by Don Louis Andry in the year 1774, in favor of Francisco Dugast, who obtained for the same a complete grant in 1775, from Governor Unzaga; under which grant the present claimant holds by regular deeds of sale. Confirmed.

No. 15.—JEAN ORRY claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing six arpents and one toise in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Dominique Badaeu, and on the lower by land of Pierre Chenet.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803; and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 17.—JEAN REYNAUD and PETARIN claim a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing three arpents and twenty-seven toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Noel Dugast, and on the lower by land of Pablo Forest.

This is part of a tract of land of five arpents and four toises in front, on the usual depth, surveyed in the year 1774 by Don Louis Andry, in favor of Anselmo Forest, who obtained a complete grant to the same in 1775, from Governor Unzaga; the claimant holds three arpents and twenty-seven toises of said land by virtue of the successive sales. Confirmed.

No. 18.—JEAN ROM claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing three arpents and twenty-four toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Gabriel Rodrigue, and on the lower by land of Baptiste Luquel.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 19.—ETIENNE BREAUX claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents in front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Anselmo Landry, and on the lower by land of Carlos Landry.

This is part of a tract of land of fifty arpents front, on the ordinary depth, mentioned in No. 1. The claimant holds by purchase under the title there mentioned; and it appearing that the land has been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years prior to the 20th December, 1803. Confirmed.

No. 20.—JOSEPH and PIERRE LANDRY claim a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Raphael Landry, and on the lower by land of Pedro Duplessy.

This is part of fifty arpents front on the usual depth, mentioned in No 1. The claimant holds by purchase under the title there mentioned; and the land having been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years prior to the 20th December, 1803. Confirmed.

No. 21.—JEAN MARIE ARMANT claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing eight arpents and ten toises in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded above by land of Saturnin Bruno, and below by land of Francisco Lebceuf.

The first depth of forty arpents of the land now claimed was surveyed in the year 1771, in favor of Joseph Forest, who obtained a complete grant for the same, in 1773, from Governor Unzaga. Pierre Dupain obtained an order of survey, in 1795, for a second depth to the aforesaid land, from the Baron de Carondelet, then Governor. The present claimant holds under the above titles. Confirmed.

No. 22.—JEAN MARIE ARMANT claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing seven arpents and twelve toises front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded above by land of Mr. Godin, and below by land of Francisco Dominique Lebceuf.

There is a regular grant for six arpents and twelve toises front of this land in the year 1773, from Governor Unzaga, in favor of Saturnin Bruno, who purchased the remaining arpents in 1781, which has been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten years prior to the 20th December, 1803. The present claimant holds under the title of said Bruno. Confirmed.

No. 23.—LOUIS PARENT claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Iberville, containing five and a half arpents in front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Pedro Cloatre, and on the lower by land of Francisco Babin.

There is an order of survey in the year 1786, in favor of the claimant, by Don Estevan Miro, then Governor, the land having been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years next preceding the 20th December, 1803. Confirmed.

No. 24.—RAYMOND BRAND claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents and eight toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Landry, and on the lower by land of Atanagio Dugast.

This land was surveyed by Don Louis Andry, in the year 1774, in favor of Maturin Landry, who obtained a complete grant for the same, in the year 1775, from Governor Unzaga; under which grant the present claimant holds. Confirmed.

No. 25.—PAUL MELANSON claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing six arpents and ten toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Maxin Landry, and on the lower by land of Joseph Dupuis.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by him, or those under whom he claims, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 26.—SILVAIN LEBLANC claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing six arpents and twelve toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Estevan Benois, and on the lower by land of Pedro Laurone.

No. 307.—HYPOLITE LANDRY claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Iberville, containing six arpents and five toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Victor Blanchard, and on the lower by land of Guillaume Germain.

This is part of a tract of land of eight arpents and five toises in front, on the ordinary depth, surveyed in the year 1772 in favor of Firmin Landry, who obtained a complete grant for the same in 1775 from Governor Unzaga; under which grant the claimant holds by virtue of successive sales. Confirmed.

No. 308.—PIERRE FREDERIC, for himself, and for the infant heirs of Mathias Frederic, deceased, and also for François Frederic, Antoine Frederic, and Noel Guisclar, as husband of Charlotte Frederic, claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing fourteen arpents and thirteen toises in front, to eight of which front arpents there is the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and to the remaining six arpents and thirteen toises front the depth of eighty arpents, and which said tract is bounded on the upper side by land of Louis Mouton, and on the lower by land of Estevan Tupo.

In the year 1775 a tract of land of twenty arpents front, on the usual depth of forty, was granted by Louis de Kerberrec, at that time Governor, to André Neau, which was afterwards transferred to one Delery, who being unable to support the road levée, twelve arpents of it were re-annexed by his consent, in writing, to the domain. The remaining eight arpents front, with the depth of forty, (part of the present claim,) passed, by virtue of successive sales, under the aforesaid grant, to Mathias Frederic; six arpents and thirteen toises in front, with the depth of forty, the balance of the tract here claimed, was granted to Juan Mouton by Don Louis de Unzaga, in the year 1773; and, in 1783, Mathias Frederic, who had become proprietor of said land, obtained a regular order of survey from Governor Miro, directing him to be put in possession of the second depth of the aforesaid six arpents and thirteen toises front. The tract now claimed is held under these several grants by the claimants, as heirs of Mathias Frederic, deceased. Confirmed.

N. B.—This tract of land was divided among the aforesaid claimants, whose several respective claims have been registered and acted upon by the Board; but, in consequence of the title to the second depth of the six arpents and thirteen toises mentioned above not having been recorded by Antoine Frederic, in claim No. 105, and by Noel Guisclar, in claim No. 106, whose shares include the said six arpents and thirteen toises, the second depth was rejected. The titles being here recorded, the second depth to said land is now confirmed.

No. 309.—JOSEPH BABIN claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Iberville, containing three arpents twenty-nine toises and two feet in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Hypolite Landry, and on the lower by land of Donat Landry.

Joseph Athanas Landry being proprietor of twelve arpents front, with the depth of forty, was, by a regular order of survey from the Baron de Carondelet, in the year 1794, put in possession of the second depth of forty arpents; of which land the present claimant now holds, by purchase, three arpents twenty-nine toises and two feet front, with the whole depth of eighty arpents. It appears, also, that said land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th of December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 310.—DONAT LANDRY claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Iberville, containing three arpents twenty-nine toises and two feet in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Babin, and on the lower by land of Paul Babin.

This is part of the tract of land of twelve arpents in front, and eighty in depth, mentioned in the last, No. 309; the claimant purchased from his father, Joseph Athanas Landry; the land having been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years prior to the 20th of December, 1803.

No. 311.—HYPOLITE LANDRY claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Iberville, containing three arpents twenty-nine toises and two feet in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Laurent Cigut, and on the lower by land of Joseph Babin.

This is part of a tract of land of twelve arpents front, and eighty in depth, mentioned in No. 309; the claimant purchased from his father, Joseph Athanas Landry; and the land having been inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years next preceding the 20th of December, 1803. Confirmed.

No. 312.—JOSEPH CALLOUET claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing three and a half arpents in front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Pierre Houvre, and on the lower by land of the claimant.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th of December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 313.—EUSEBE MELANSON claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Melanson, and on the lower by land of Donat Leblanc.

This tract of land is composed of a portion of two grants made in the year 1774 by Governor Unzaga; the one in favor of Santiago Leblanc, and the other in favor of Marcel Leblanc; to which tracts a grant of the second was made by Governor Miro, in the year 1791; under which titles the claimant holds. Confirmed.

It appears that this tract of land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. The Board confirm the claim to the extent of forty arpents in depth. The claimants pretend that this tract is part of a larger tract granted by the French Government to one Nicholas Verret, to run back from the river as far as land could be found, and that the records have been consumed by fire, and the title-papers destroyed; but the Board having no evidence of the grant under which they claim, they reject so much of the claim as exceeds the usual depth of forty arpents.

No. 422.—PIERRE and ALPHONSO PERRET claim a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents and twenty-four toises in front, and of a depth extending back to a particular lake, and bounded on the upper side by land of the claimants, and on the lower by land of Evariste Villiavasse.

It appears that this tract of land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. The Board confirm the claim to the extent of forty arpents in depth, but reject so much as exceeds the depth of forty arpents, as in the preceding number; it being part of the grant then mentioned.

No. 423.—EVARISTE VILLIAVASSE claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents in front, and of a depth extending back to a particular lake, and bounded on the upper side by land of Pierre and Alphonso Perret.

It appears that this tract of land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. The Board confirm the claim to the extent of forty arpents in depth, but reject so much as exceeds that depth; the land being part of the grant to Nicholas Verret, mentioned in No. 421.

No. 424.—VALENTIN LANDRY claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing two arpents eight toises and one foot in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side, by land of Simon Bourgeois, and on the lower by land of Joseph Landry.

It appears that the first depth of this land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years prior thereto. So much the Board confirm, but reject the claim to the second depth of forty arpents.

No. 425.—SIMON BOURGEOIS claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing two arpents in front, and eighty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Baptiste Drouilly, and on the lower by land of Valentin Landry.

It appears that the first depth of this land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. So much the Board confirm, but reject the claim to the second depth of forty arpents.

No. 426.—JOSEPH ARCENAUX, Sen. claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing three arpents two toises and three feet in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Jerome Godet, and on the lower by land of Joseph Arcenaux, Jun.

It appears that the first depth of this land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. The Board confirm the claim to the extent of forty arpents in depth, but reject the second depth of forty arpents.

No. 427.—JOSEPH ARCENAUX, Jun. claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents three toises and one foot in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Arcenaux, Sen., and on the lower by land of Henry Landry.

It appears that the first depth of this land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. So much the Board confirm, but reject the claim to the second depth of forty arpents.

No. 428.—BENJAMIN LEBLANC claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing two arpents, and twenty-five toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the lower side by land of Pedro Blanchard.

This is part of a tract of land of eight arpents and twenty-five toises in front, on the ordinary depth, surveyed in the year 1771 in favor of Simon Leblanc, who obtained a complete grant for the same in 1774 from Don Louis de Unzaga; under which grant the claimant holds by regular deeds. Confirmed.

No. 429.—ALEXANDRE Mc. DOUGALD claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Iberville, containing thirty-six superficial arpents and sixty-hundredths, and bounded on the upper side by land of Desily Babin, and on the lower by land of Pierre Bassett.

It appears that the land now claimed was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by those under whom the claimant holds for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 430.—LUC GAUDIN, BONAVENTURE GAUDIN, JUN., and BAPTISTE MELANSON, claim a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents and fourteen toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Juan Arcenaux, and on the lower by land of Iago Dugast.

This land was surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, in the year 1782, in favor of Batista Bonaventura, under whose title the claimants hold by virtue of successive sales; the land having been inhabited and cultivated ever since the time of making the survey. Confirmed.

No. 431.—JOSEPH BOURGEOIS claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing one arpent and twenty-five toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Baptiste Bernard, and on the lower by land of Louis Breaux.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by him, or those under whom he claims, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 432.—JEAN KLINGS claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing one arpent in front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Pavie, and on the lower by land of Firmin Dupuy.

It appears that the land now claimed was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by the claimant, or those under whom he holds, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 433.—JEAN BAPTISTE CHIASSON claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing six arpents six toises and three feet in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Abraham Arcenaux, and on the lower by land of Jean Baptiste Gaudin.

It appears that the land now claimed was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by the claimant, or those under whom he holds, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 434.—AUGUSTIN MALLET, JUN., a free man of color, claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents in front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Augustin Mallet, Sen., and on the lower by land of Mr. Dejean.

It appears that the land now claimed was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by the claimant, or those under whom he claims, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 435.—CHEVALIER MELARCHER claims the following tracts of land, viz: the first, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents and one toise in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Madame Michel Migot, and on the lower by land of Louis Gaudin; and the second tract, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing two arpents twenty-four toises and four feet in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Benjamin Myr, and on the lower by land of Madame Michel Migot.

It appears that the land now claimed was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated for more than ten consecutive years prior, by those under whom the claimant holds. Confirmed.

No. 436.—MICHEL DORADOU BRUGIER claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing twenty arpents in front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the lower side by land of Firmin Broussard.

This land was regularly granted to Gregorio French, in the year 1773, by Don Louis de Unzaga, then Governor; under which grant the claimant holds by virtue of successive sales. Confirmed.

No. 437.—Mr. MERCIER claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing thirteen arpents and three-fourths in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Leblanc, and on the lower by land of John Wederstrand.

Gil Leblanc, having improved the tract of land now claimed, petitioned and obtained from Governor Gayoso, in the year 1798, a regular warrant of survey, under which title the present claimant holds by regular deeds. It also appears that said land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 438.—PIERRE LANOIX claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing two arpents five toises and five feet in front, and eighty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of François Pochet, and on the lower by land of Mathieu Brignac.

It appears that the first depth of forty arpents of this land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years prior. So far the Board confirm, but reject the claim to the second depth of forty arpents.

No. 439.—MAGDELAINE BABIN, widow of Anselme Leblanc, claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing eight arpents and eight toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Madame Etienne Leblanc, and on the lower by land of Madame Pierre Landry.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by her, or those under whom she claims, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 440.—OZITTE LEBLANC, widow of Etienne Leblanc, claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents in front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Madame Hyacinte Landry, and on the lower by land of Madame Anselme Leblanc.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by her, or those under whom she claims, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 442.—RICHARD FOWLER claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing twenty-one arpents and twenty-four toises in front, of which three arpents and fourteen toises have the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and the remaining eighteen arpents and ten toises have a depth of eighty arpents; and said tract of land being bounded on the upper side by land of Mr. Cantrelle, and on the lower by land of Gabriel Arcenaux.

It appears that the first depth of forty arpents of the land now claimed was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years prior. So far the Board confirm, but reject the claim to the second depth.

No. 443.—MARGUERITE POIRIER, widow of Charles Hebert, claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing five arpents in front, and forty in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Francisco Terrio, and on the lower by land of Estevan Melanson.

This tract of land was surveyed in the year 1782, in favor of Ambrosio Terrio, by Carlos Trudeau, Surveyor General, who put him at the same time in possession; to which title the present claimant has succeeded by regular deeds. It also appears that said land has been inhabited and cultivated ever since the making of the survey. Confirmed.

No. 441.—L. H. GURLAIN, as agent for the "Eastern Shore of Maryland Louisiana Company," claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing ten arpents and seven toises in front, and a depth extending back to the lake Maurepas, and bounded on the one side by land of J. Macdonough and Sheperd Brown, and on the other by land of Antoine Trigre.

It appearing to the satisfaction of the Board that this tract of land was inhabited and cultivated on the 20th December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years next preceding, the Board confirm the title to the extent of forty arpents in depth, and reject the claim to the balance.

No. 16.—GENEZI ROUSSIN claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing six and a half arpents in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Mr. Renio, and on the lower by land of Michel Braux.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by him, or those under whom he claims, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding. Confirmed.

No. 292.—EDMOND CAPDEVIELLE claims a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Iberville, and containing two arpents twenty-seven toises and two feet in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Jean Holl, and on the lower by land of Alexandre Hebert.

It appears that the claimant did actually inhabit and cultivate the land now claimed on the 20th December, 1803, and that the same was continually inhabited and cultivated by him, or those under whom he claims, for more than ten consecutive years next preceding.

No. 391.—ISIDORE BLANCHARD claims, for the parish church of the parish of Ascension, a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents one toise and four feet in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of William Conway, and on the lower by land of Jean Vessier.

There is no written evidence of title to the land claimed; the church is built upon it, and it has been used as a glebe for a great number of years, and is claimed by the people of the parish, as belonging to them, for the use of the church. The Board are of opinion it ought to be confirmed.

No. 392.—AUGUSTIN DOMINIQUE TUREAU claims, for the church of the parish of St. Jacques, a tract of land, situate on the west side of the river Mississippi, in the county of Acadia, containing four arpents and four toises in front, and forty arpents in depth, and bounded on the upper side by land of Patrice Urielle, and on the lower by land of Mr. Poëlyfarré.

There is no written evidence of the title to the land claimed; the church is built upon it, and it has been used as a glebe for a great number of years, and is claimed by the people of the parish, as belonging to them, for the use of the church. The Board are of opinion it ought to be confirmed.

Rejected claims from the books of Michel Contrelle, Deputy Register of the county of Acadia and part of the county of Iberville.

No. 93.—HUBERT REMY claims a second concession of forty arpents in depth, lying immediately back of a front or first concession, which we have already confirmed to him in page 266, No. 93, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is founded solely upon a petition (requête) to Governor Salcedo, in the year 1802, with the commandant's certificate that the land was vacant, and might be granted without prejudice, &c. Had the Governor even a right at that period to grant the land, he has never acted upon the petition, nor does it appear that it has ever been presented to him. We are of opinion that this claim to a second concession ought not to be confirmed under any law, custom, or usage of the Spanish Government, and do therefore reject it.

No. 101.—BENJAMIN BABIN claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a front or first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in No. 101, page 267, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant has no other foundation for his title to this second depth than having occupied the front and first depth, and having occasionally supplied himself with timber from this second depth. According to the laws, customs, and usages of the Spanish Government, no front proprietor, by any act of his own, could acquire a right to lands further back than the ordinary depth of forty arpents; and although the Spanish Government has invariably refused to grant the second depth to any other than the front proprietor, yet nothing short of a grant or warrant of survey from the Governor could confer a title or right to the land; we therefore reject the claim.

No. 140.—GUILLAUME ARCENEAUX claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth of two arpents twelve toises and one foot front, being part of a larger front, which we have already confirmed to him in page 271, No. 140, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant produces no manner of evidence whatever in support of his claim to this second depth. He merely states, in his notice, that his title to the part of this land, to which this additional depth is claimed, is founded upon a grant for the same in favor of Louis Andry, from whom, by different intermediate conveyances, it passed to the claimant's father, who made a donation of it to the claimant. No grant or title from the Government in favor of said Andry is exhibited, nor any evidence that such grant or title did ever exist. We are therefore of opinion that his claim to this second depth ought to be rejected.

No. 159.—MICHEL POIRIE claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have confirmed to him in page 272, No. 159, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is of a similar nature to the preceding: there appears in support of it only the bare statement of the claimant, in his notice, that it is part of a tract for which there was a grant of the first and second depth, in favor of Louis Andry, from whom his title is derived. No grant or title from the Government is exhibited, nor is there any evidence whatever to substantiate the claimant's statement. We are therefore of opinion that his claim to this second depth ought to be rejected.

No. 200.—SIMON GOTEREAU claims a second concession, lying immediately back of a front or first concession, which we have already confirmed to him in page 276, No. 200, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is founded solely upon a petition (requête) to the Governor of the province, in the year 1798, with the commandant's certificate that the land was vacant, and might be granted without prejudice, &c. It does not appear that the petition was ever acted upon by the Governor, or that it was ever presented to him. We are of opinion that this claim to a second concession ought not to be confirmed under any law, usage, or custom of the Spanish Government, and do therefore reject it.

No. 201.—RAPHAEL GOTEREAU claims a second concession, lying immediately back of a front or first concession, which we have already confirmed to him in page 276, No. 201, among the confirmed claims.

This second depth, together with the first depth of forty arpents, was conveyed, in the year 1801, to the claimant by Simon Gotereau, his father, and composes part of the land petitioned for in the year 1798 by him, as stated in the preceding claim; and for the reasons there assigned, we are of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 202.—JOSEPH GOTEREAU claims a second concession, lying immediately back of a front or first concession, which we have already confirmed to him in page 276, No. 202, among the confirmed claims.

This second depth, together with the first depth of forty arpents, was conveyed in the year 1805 to the claimant by Simon Gotereau, his father, and composes part of the land petitioned for in the year 1798, by him, as stated in claim No. 200; and for the reasons there assigned, we are of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 216.—PIERRE BERTRAND claims a second concession of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a front or first concession, which we have already confirmed to him in page 277, No. 216, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is founded solely upon a petition (requête) to the Governor of the province, in the year 1791, with the commandant's certificate that the land was vacant, and might be granted without prejudice, &c. It does not appear that the petition was ever acted upon by the Governor, or that it was ever presented to him. We are of opinion that this claim ought not to be confirmed under any law, custom or usage of the Spanish Government, and do therefore reject it.

No. 222.—MARIE FOREST, widow of Jean Baptiste Bergeron, claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately behind a first depth, which we have already confirmed to her in page 278, No. 222, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant has no other foundation for her title to this second depth than having occupied the front and first depth, and having occasionally supplied herself with timber from this second depth. According to the laws, customs, and usages of the Spanish Government, no front proprietor, by any act of his own, could acquire a right to lands further back than the ordinary depth of forty arpents; and although the Spanish Government has invariably refused to grant the second depth to any other than the front proprietor, yet nothing short of a grant or warrant of survey from the Governor could confer a title or right to the land. We do therefore reject the claim.

No. 223.—HENRY LANDRY claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 278, No. 223, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is in every respect similarly situated to that in the preceding number, being founded solely upon the claimant's having occupied the front depth, and occasionally supplying himself with timber from this back depth; and for the reasons already assigned, we are of opinion that the claim ought to be rejected.

No. 224.—MICHEL BERGERON claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 278, No. 224, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is in every respect similarly situated to those in the two preceding numbers, being founded solely upon the claimant's having occupied the first depth, and having occasionally supplied himself with timber from the second depth; and for reasons already assigned, we are of opinion that his claim ought to be rejected.

No. 334.—ABRAHAM ROM claims a second depth of forty-four arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, already confirmed to him in page 288, No. 334, of the confirmed claims.

The claimant states this second depth is part of a larger tract, having a depth of eighty-four arpents, which was by Governor O'Reilly granted to one Petit Antoine, for the purpose of establishing a vacherie, and that the title-papers have by some means or other been destroyed; but there being no evidence whatever produced in support of this statement, we are of opinion that his claim to this second depth ought to be rejected.

No. 335.—ALEXIS PERRET claims a second depth of forty-four arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 288, No. 335, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is founded upon the same pretensions as that of the preceding, viz: that it is a part of a tract having a depth of eighty-four arpents, which was formerly granted by O'Reilly, the first Spanish Governor of the province, to a certain Petit Antoine, and that the written evidence of title has by some means been destroyed; but this being a bare statement, unsubstantiated by any evidence of its truth, we are of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 336.—ALEXIS PERRET claims a second depth of forty-four arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 288, No. 336, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is situated in all respects similarly to the preceding, being claimed by the same persons, and being part of the tract there said to have been granted by Governor O'Reilly. There being no manner of evidence whatever exhibited to prove that the title-papers, which are stated to have been either lost or destroyed, were ever in reality obtained from the Spanish Government, we are of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 337.—DOMINIQUE LE BŒUF claims a second depth of forty-four arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 288, No. 337, among the confirmed claims.

This second depth is claimed as forming part of a larger tract, which is represented by the claimant, in Nos. 334 and No. 335 preceding, as having been granted formerly by Governor O'Reilly; and the claimant producing no evidence in support of his claim, we are of opinion that it ought to be rejected.

No. 338.—ANASTASIA CORMICO, widow of Pierre Bourg, claims a second depth of forty-four arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed in page 288, No. 338, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is founded upon the same pretensions as the preceding, being part of a tract which is represented in Nos. 334 and 335 to have been formerly granted by Governor O'Reilly. We are therefore of opinion, for reasons before assigned, that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 339.—WILLIAM PRIESTLY claims a second depth of forty-four arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, already confirmed to him in page 288, and No. 339, among the confirmed claims.

This second depth is claimed as being part of a larger tract, which is represented by the claimants, in Nos. 334 and 335, to have been granted formerly to one Petit Antoine by Governor O'Reilly; of which we have no manner of evidence, and are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 340.—PAUL DAVID claims a second depth of forty-four arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 288, No. 340, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is represented by the claimant as being part of a larger tract, which in the six preceding claims is stated to have been formerly granted by Governor O'Reilly to a certain Petit Antoine; in support of which statement no evidence has been produced to us, and we are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 346.—JOSEPH LEBLANC claims a second depth or concession of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a front or first concession, which we have already confirmed to him in page 264, No. 61, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second depth is founded solely upon a petition (requête) to the Intendant General of the province, in the year 1801, with the commandant's certificate that the land was vacant, and might be granted without prejudice, &c. Had the Intendant even a right at that period, to grant the land, he has never acted upon the petition, nor does it appear that it has ever been presented to him. We are of opinion that this claim to a second concession ought not to be confirmed under any law, custom, or usage of the Spanish Government, and do therefore reject it.

No. 371.—JOHN COXE claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 291, No. 371, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant has no other foundation for his title to this second, than having occupied the front and first depth, and having occasionally supplied himself with timber from this second depth. According to the laws, customs, and usages of the Spanish Government, no front proprietor, by any act of his own, could acquire a right to lands further back than the ordinary depth of forty arpents; and although the Government has invariably refused to grant the second depth to any other than the front proprietor, yet nothing short of a grant or warrant of survey from the Government could confer a title or right to the land. We do therefore reject the claim.

No. 431.—PIERRE and ALPHONSE PERRET claim a second depth, and extending back to a particular lake, and lying immediately behind a first depth of forty arpents, which we have already confirmed to the claimants in page 295, No. 421, among the confirmed claims.

The claimants pretend that the tract of land to which they claim this additional depth is part of a larger tract granted by the French Government to one Nicholas Verret, to run back from the river Mississippi as far as the first lake, and that the records have been consumed by fire, and the title-papers destroyed. But they having presented no evidence of the grant under which they hold to the Board, we are of opinion that their claim to this additional depth ought to be rejected.

No. 422.—PIERRE and ALPHONSE PERRET claim a second depth, and extending back to a particular lake, and lying immediately behind the first depth of forty arpents, which we have already confirmed to them in page 295, and No. 422, among the confirmed claims.

This claim to a second or additional depth is in every point similarly situated to the preceding claim. The claimants state this is part of the tract formerly granted to Nicholas Verret by the French Government; the written evidence of which grant has been destroyed. But there being no evidence before the Board that such grant did ever exist, we are of opinion that their claim to this additional depth ought to be rejected.

No. 423.—EVARISTE VILLIYASSE claims a second depth, extending back to a particular lake, and lying immediately behind a first depth of forty arpents, which we have already confirmed to him in page 295, No. 423, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant pretends that the tract of land to which he claims this second or additional depth is part of a larger tract, which was granted by the French Government to a certain Nicholas Verret, to run back from the river Mississippi to a particular lake; and that the records have been consumed by fire, and the title-papers destroyed. But he having produced no evidence to the Board in support of his statement that such grant ever existed, we are of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 424.—VALENTIN LANDRY claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 295, No. 424, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant states, as a foundation to his title to this second depth, that it is part of a larger tract of land, having a depth of eighty arpents, which was granted to M. Cantrelle by Governor Galvez, in the year 1780, and that the written evidence of the grant has either been lost, or was, whilst in the possession of Mr. Trudeau, the then Surveyor General of the province, consumed in the general conflagration of the city of New Orleans, in 1788. But he having exhibited no manner of evidence to prove the existence of such a grant, we are of opinion that his claim to this second depth ought to be rejected.

No. 425.—SIMON BOURGEOIS claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 295, No. 425, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant states that this second depth is part of the tract mentioned in the preceding number, and represented by the claimant to have been granted in the year 1780, by Governor Galvez, to M. Cantrelle, and that the title-papers have been lost, or consumed at New Orleans, in 1788, whilst in the possession of Mr. Trudeau, Surveyor General. But there being no evidence exhibited to the Board to prove that such title-papers did ever exist, we are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected.

No. 426.—JOSEPH ARCENAUX, Sen. claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 295, No. 426, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant shows no other foundation for his title to this second depth than having occupied the first depth, and having occasionally supplied himself with timber from this second depth. According to the laws, customs, and usages of the Spanish Government, no front proprietor could, by any act of his own, acquire a right to lands further back than the ordinary depth of forty arpents; we do therefore reject the claim.

No. 438.—PIERRE LANOIX claims a second depth of forty arpents, lying immediately back of a first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 296, No. 438, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant in support of his title to this second depth, produces the certificate of some old inhabitants, his neighbors, certifying that the second depth has, by the persons under whom the present claimant holds, been cultivated ever since the year 1772, until 1807, when it was purchased, together with the front and first depth, by the claimant. But according to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish Government, no front proprietor, by any act of his own, could acquire a right to lands further back than the ordinary depth of forty arpents; and although the Government has invariably refused to grant the second depth to any other than the front proprietor, yet nothing short of a grant or warrant of survey from the Governor could confer a title or right to the land; we therefore reject the claim.

No. 442.—RICHARD FOWLER claims a second depth, lying immediately back of a first depth, of eighteen arpents and ten toises in front, being part of a larger front, which we have confirmed to him in page 297, No. 442, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant states that his claim to this second depth is founded upon a grant from the Spanish Government, in favor of Manuel Andry, for a larger tract, of which this is part. But he has not produced the grant, or any evidence whatever, to prove that there ever was one, or any other sufficient title made by that Government; we are therefore of opinion that his claim to this second depth ought to be rejected.

No. 444.—L. H. GUERLAIN, as agent for the Eastern Shore of Maryland Louisiana Company, claims a second depth, extending back quite to the lake Maurepas, and lying immediately behind a front or first depth, which we have already confirmed to him in page 297, No. 444, among the confirmed claims.

The claimant states that this land is part of a tract sold by the Colapissas nation of Indians, in the year 1739, to one Delille Dupard, from whom the aforesaid company claims by successive transfers; and pretends that the land, whilst the property of said nation of Indians, had a depth extending back to lake Maurepas; but of this fact, there is no other evidence than the deposition of the late Surveyor General of the province, stating that he heard his father, who served as interpreter at the sale made by the Indians, say that the land sold was to extend back to the lake Maurepas. The sale is stated to have been a verbal one, but there is no certain evidence that a sale has been made as stated by the claimant, nor is there any act of Government respecting it, nor are there any defined limits given to the land by the pretended sale; we are therefore of opinion that the claim ought to be rejected.

SECOND SPECIES OF THE FIRST CLASS OF DECISIONS.

No. 3.—JOSEPH DECUR claims a tract of land, situate in the county of Pointe Coupée, and fronting on the False river, containing six hundred and fifty-nine superficial arpents, bounded on the upper side by land of Henry Lagrange, and on the lower two sides by vacant land.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to the present claimant on the 2d day of April, 1790, they are of opinion that his claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 6.—PIERRE MICHEL claims a tract of land, situate in the county of Acadia, and on the left bank of the Mississippi, containing five arpents twelve toises in front, by the common depth of forty arpents, bounded on the upper side by land of Basile de Rocher, and on the lower by land of Paul Martin.

It appears to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to the present claimant on the 10th day of July, 1777; they are therefore of opinion that said claim ought, and it is hereby confirmed.

No. 7.—PIERRE MICHEL claims another tract of two hundred and sixteen superficial arpents of land, situate in the county of Acadia, being what is called a second depth, and adjoining other land belonging to him.

It appearing to the Board, from an order of survey exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to the present claimant on the 8th day of January, 1782; and from the certificate of Laveau Trudeau, late Surveyor General under the said Government for the province of Louisiana, that the survey was made on the 6th day of February following; and it further appearing to the Board that the requisitions under the first section of the law of Congress organizing this Board have been complied with, they are of opinion that the said claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 8.—LEONARD POMET claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Orleans, twenty-seven miles below the city, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing five arpents in front, by forty in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of John Donat, and by land of Charles Calphat on the lower.

It appears to the Board, from the documents exhibited, that said land is a part of twenty arpents of front by forty in depth, which was granted by the French Government to the late Simon Calphat, by a patent dated the 2d day of October, 1767; that, at his death, it descended to his son, Lewis Simons, from whom it was purchased, and is held by the present claimant. The Board is therefore of opinion that the said claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 9.—MARY DARDEN claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, containing six hundred and eighty superficial arpents, being what is called a second depth, and adjoining land that was granted by the Spanish Government to Anthony Rodriguez, her former husband, fronting on the Mississippi.

It appears to the Board, from an order of survey exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to the present claimant on the 8th March, 1791; and, from the certificate of Laveau Trudeau, late Surveyor General under the Government aforesaid for the province of Louisiana, that the order of survey was duly executed on the 22d of November, 1799; and it also appearing to the satisfaction of the Board that the requisitions under the first section of the act of Congress organizing this Board have been complied with, they are of opinion that said claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 10.—JOSEPH MCNEIL claims a corner lot of ground, in the city of New Orleans, consisting of sixty feet fronting on Royal street, and one hundred and eighteen and a half on Custom-house street.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to Manuel Toledano on the 16th day of June, 1792, and, by purchase, the same has become the property of the present claimant, the Board is of opinion that said claim ought, and it is hereby confirmed.

No. 11.—Said MCNEIL claims another lot of ground, in the said city of New Orleans, containing seventy feet fronting on Royal street, by one hundred and twenty in depth.

It appears to the Board, from two patents exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to Ambrose de Leibana in two separate parcels: one on the 24th September, 1793; the other on the 26th of the same month and year; and that, by divers sales since made, the whole has become the property of the present claimant; the Board is therefore of opinion that his claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 12.—Said MCNEIL claims another lot of ground, in the city of New Orleans, containing thirty feet in front on Chartres street, by one hundred and twenty in depth.

It appears to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said lot was granted by the Spanish Government to Anthony Ceulino on the 2d day of September, 1793, and that, by sales of the same since that time, it has become the property of the present claimant; they are therefore of opinion that his claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 15.—PIERRE BELLY claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, consisting of twenty arpents, fronting on the Mississippi, and being upon its right bank, and varying in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of Philip Roth, and on the lower by land of Godfrey Roth.

It appearing to the Board, from patents exhibited, that said land was originally granted by the Spanish Government, in different parcels, to different individuals, and at different times, all prior to the 1st October, 1800, and, by divers sales since, the whole has become the property of the present claimant; the Board is therefore of opinion that his claim ought, and it hereby is confirmed.

No. 16.—JOSEPH MCNEIL claims a piece of ground, in the city of New Orleans, consisting of three lots, viz.: one forty feet in front, by one hundred and nine and a half in depth, on Royal street; another adjoining the former lot, and forming one of the corners of Royal and Custom-house streets, running ninety feet on the former, and fifty-six feet on the latter: the last lot having fifty-three and a half feet fronting on Royal street, by ninety feet in depth, and adjoining the other two lots.

It appears to the satisfaction of the Board, from a patent produced, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to Elisha Winter on the 23d day of May, 1794, and by divers sales since made, the same has become the property of the present claimant; the Board is therefore of opinion that his claim ought, and it hereby is confirmed.

No. 17.—ALEXANDER MILNE claims a tract of land, situated on the bayou St. John, and on the left side thereof, about two miles below the bridge, containing seventeen arpents twenty-nine toises in front, by forty arpents in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of the widow Durocher, and on the lower by land of Peter Palao.

It appears to the Board, from patents exhibited, that fifteen arpents twenty-nine toises in front, by the depth aforesaid, of said land, which had been, on the 12th day of June, 1766, conceded by the French Government to Bartholomew Roberts, was afterwards, viz., on the 27th day of August, 1771, confirmed to him by the Spanish Government by patent; that the remaining two arpents of front, with the depth aforesaid, was granted by the Spanish Government to John B. Blaize, under a patent bearing date the 20th April, 1771; and it appearing that said land has, by legal conveyances, become the property of the present claimant, the Board is of opinion that his claim ought, and it hereby is confirmed.

No. 18.—PHILIP ROTH claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing five and a quarter arpents of front, by eighty arpents in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of Antoine Maxent, and on the lower by land of Pierre Belly.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government on the 18th day of July, 1796, to the present claimant, the Board is of opinion that his claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 20.—PIERRE BELLY claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, bounded on the upper side by land of Godfrey Roth, and on the lower by land of John Serret, and containing three arpents forty-eight feet and seven inches in front, by forty arpents in depth.

It appears to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to Pierre Truhan, on the 7th July, 1774; and it appearing, from divers instruments of conveyance, also exhibited, that said land has become the property of the present claimant, the Board is of opinion that his claim ought, and it hereby is confirmed.

No. 21.—FRANÇOIS RIVAS claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the left bank of the Mississippi, containing twelve arpents five toises and one foot in front, by forty arpents in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of Thomas Estevan, and on the lower by land of Thimoleon Lesassier.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that eight arpents four toises of front, by forty arpents in depth, of said land, was granted to Anselme Landry on the 5th day of February, 1775; and it appearing to the Board, from a certain decree in writing signed Louis Dotisné, commandant and judge of the district of Iberville, dated the 10th day of July, 1780, that four arpents one toise and one foot front, by the depth aforesaid, (remainder) of said land, having belonged to Jacob Landry, who had neglected to keep the levée in order, although twice required by him, the said commandant, &c. so to do; and that, in consequence of the necessary repairs having been made by Nicholas Triste, said land last aforesaid was by the commandant aforesaid adjudged to him; and it also appearing to the Board, from divers instruments of conveyance, also exhibited, that the whole of the said land has become the property of the present claimant, the Board is of opinion that his claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 22.—THIMOLEON LESASSIER claims a tract of land situated in the county of Iberville, and on the left bank of the Mississippi, containing six arpents two toises and a half of front, by forty arpents in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of François Rivas, and on the lower by land of Simon P. Babin.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to Joseph Landry on the 5th day of February, 1775, and from divers instruments of conveyance, also exhibited, that it has become the property of the present claimant; the Board is of opinion that this claim ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 23.—JOSEPH MCNEIL claims a lot of ground, in the suburb of St. Mary, in the county of Orleans, consisting of sixty feet on the side of the levée, by three hundred and thirteen feet in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of John Rhea and Cohgran, on the lower by land of Samuel Corp, and in the rear by Magazine street.

It appearing to the Board, from a decree in writing signed by Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, Governor General of the province of Louisiana, dated the 8th day of August, 1797, that said land was adjudged to John Gravier, in consideration of its having belonged to his brother, Bertrand Gravier, who died intestate; and it likewise appearing to this Board, from divers instruments of conveyance, also exhibited, that said land has been transferred to, and is now held by the present claimant, the Board is therefore of opinion that his claim ought, and the same is hereby confirmed.

No. 24.—JOHN RHEA and COHGRAN claim a lot of ground, in the suburb of St. Mary, in the county of Orleans, consisting of sixty feet fronting on Levée street, sixty-one feet in the rear, three hundred and three feet on one side, and three hundred and thirteen on the other, bounded on the northeast by a lot of ground of Joseph McNeil, and on the northwest by Magazine street, and on the southwest by Gravier street.

It appearing to the Board, by the bill of sale produced that Bertram Gravier, having inherited said land from Mary Derlond, his deceased wife, did, on the 15th day of March, 1794, convey the same to Joseph Hervier; and it also appearing, from an instrument of conveyance, dated in 1803, that said Hervier sold it to the present claimants, the Board is therefore of opinion that their claim ought, and it hereby is confirmed.

No. 25.—THOMAS MCCORMICK claims a lot of ground in the city of New Orleans, containing thirty feet fronting on Custom-house street, by one hundred and fifty in depth, bounded on the northeast side by land of William Garland, and on the northwest by land of Hardy de Boisblanc.

It appears to the Board, from an instrument of conveyance exhibited to the Board, that Charles Hardy Boisblanc, having inherited said land from his deceased mother, on the 3d day of April, 1797, sold it to Anne Brune; and it likewise appearing, from a like instrument of conveyance, also exhibited, that, on the 27th day of December, 1805, she sold it to the present claimant, the Board is of opinion that his claim ought, and the same is hereby confirmed.

No. 26.—CATHERINE LAJONCHERE claims a tract of land, situated at a place called the English Turn, about twelve miles below the city of New Orleans, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing two hundred and eighty superficial arpents, bounded on the upper side by land of Charles Lacheregue, and on the lower by land of Louis Ducreau.

It appears to the Board, from an order of survey exhibited, that the same was issued by the Spanish Government, on the 12th day of February, 1790, in favor of Charles Lajonchere Danois, late husband of the present claimant, for the land in question; and it moreover appearing to the satisfaction of the Board that the requisitions under the first section of the law of Congress establishing this Board have been complied with, the Board is of opinion that the claim aforesaid ought, and it hereby is established and confirmed.

No. 29.—BONAVENTURA LEBLANC claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the left bank of the Mississippi, containing nine arpents and twelve toises in front, by forty arpents in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of Peter Alain, and on the lower by land of Joseph Richard.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to the claimant, on the 5th day of November, 1774, they are of opinion that his claim ought, and it is hereby confirmed.

No. 30.—JOSEPH LEBLANC claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the left bank of the Mississippi, containing four arpents in front, by forty in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of Francis Hebert, and on the lower by land of John B. Babin.

It appears to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government, on the 5th day of November, 1774, to the present claimant; they are therefore of opinion that his claim ought, and the same is hereby confirmed.

No. 31.—STEPHEN HEBERT claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the left bank of the Mississippi, containing seven arpents and thirteen toises of front, by forty arpents in depth, bounded on the lower sides by land of Alexander Hebert, and on the other sides by vacant land.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to the present claimant, on the 5th day of November, 1774, they do confirm his said claim.

No. 32.—MARIA BERMUDEZ claims a lot of ground, in the county of Iberville, and in the town of Galvez, forming one of the corners of St. Mark and Claiborne streets, containing ninety feet on the former, and ninety on the latter, bounded on the southeast by land of Ferdinand Percy, and on the remaining sides by vacant land.

It appearing to the Board, upon the oaths of Joseph Sanchez, Francis Massias, and Joseph Capitan, inhabitants of the county of Iberville, that Joseph Bermudez, deceased, late husband of the claimant, was one of the settlers of the post of Galveztown, who came from the Canary Islands in the year 1779, at the expense of the King of Spain, and that to him was given by the Spanish Government a piece of ground of about one hundred superficial arpents, within the district of Galveztown aforesaid, and also a lot of ground in the town of Galvez, containing ninety feet square, the Board therefore confirm said claim.

No. 33.—Said MARIA BERMUDEZ also claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and the post of Galveztown, containing five arpents fronting on the river Iberville, by twenty arpents in depth, bounded on the north by the river aforesaid, on the east by land of John Hernandez, on the west by land of Wykoff, and on the south by vacant land.

From the evidence offered in the preceding case of the present claimant, the Board do confirm her said claim.

Nos. 34 and 35.—MICHAEL MASSIAS claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, containing one hundred and twenty superficial arpents, bounded on the north by land of Thomas Collado, on the west by land of Diego Quintana, and on the other sides by vacant land.

He also claims a lot of ground in Galveztown, containing ninety feet square, and fronting on Iberville street, bounded on the northeast by land of Augustin Lombardo, and by land of John Hernandez on the southeast.

It appears to the Board, upon the oaths of Joseph Sanchez, Francis Massias, and Joseph Capitan, inhabitants of the county of Iberville, that the said Michael Massias, the claimant, is one of the first settlers of the post of Galveztown, who came from the Canary Islands in the year 1779, at the expense of the King of Spain, for the purpose of promoting agriculture in the province of Louisiana; on which account the Spanish Government assigned him a piece of land in the post of Galveztown aforesaid, of about one hundred superficial arpents, together with a lot in Galveztown, containing ninety feet square; and it further appearing to the Board, from the certificate of Charles Laveau Trudeau, Esq. late Surveyor General under the Spanish Government aforesaid for the province of Louisiana aforesaid, that the aforesaid one hundred and twenty arpents of land was, on the 15th of November, 1793, duly surveyed in favor of the present claimant, the Board do hereby confirm the whole of his claim.

Nos. 36 and 37.—JOSEPH MASSIAS claims a tract of land, in the county of Iberville and district of Galveztown, containing eighty superficial arpents, bounded on the north by land of Fabien Ramos, on the east by land of Joseph Pino, on the west by land of Joseph Capitan, and on the south by vacant land.

Also two lots of ground, situated in the town of Galvez, fronting each other, and forming two of the corners of Claiborne and Galvez streets, containing each ninety feet square.

It appearing to the Board, upon the oaths of Joseph Capitan, Joseph Sanchez, and Francis Massias, inhabitants of the county of Iberville, that said Joseph Massias, the present claimant, is one of the first settlers of the post of Galveztown, who came from the Canary Islands in the year 1779, at the expense of the King of Spain, for the purpose of improving agriculture in the province of Louisiana; on which account the Spanish Government assigned him a piece of land to establish himself upon, situated in the district aforesaid, consisting of about one hundred superficial arpents, together with a lot in Galveztown, containing ninety feet square; that the same quantity of land was in like manner aforesaid assigned, at the same epoch, to Joseph Massias, deceased, father of the claimant, which, at his death, was left to the claimant; and it further appearing to the Board, from the certificate of Charles Laveau Trudeau, late Surveyor General under the Spanish Government for the province of Louisiana, that the said eighty arpents of said land was duly surveyed in 1794 in favor of the claimant, the Board do hereby confirm the whole of his claim aforesaid.

Nos. 38 and 39.—JOSEPH CAPITAN claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, containing one hundred superficial arpents, bounded northerly by land of Maria Ramos, on the east by land of Joseph Massias, on the west by land of Francis Massias, and on the south by vacant land. He also claims a lot of ground, in the county aforesaid, and in the town of Galvez, forming the southwest corner of Claiborne, and Galvez streets, and containing ninety feet square.

It appearing to the Board, upon the oaths of Francis Massias and Joseph Sanchez, inhabitants of the county of Iberville aforesaid, that Joseph Capitan, the present claimant, is one of the first settlers of the post of Galveztown, who came from the Canary Islands in the year 1779, at the expense of the King of Spain, for the purpose of promoting agriculture in the province of Louisiana; on which account the Spanish Government assigned him a piece of land to establish himself upon, situated in the district of Galveztown aforesaid, containing about one hundred superficial arpents, together with a lot in the town of Galvez, containing ninety feet square, the Board do hereby confirm the claimant in the whole of his claim aforesaid.

Nos. 40 and 42.—FRANCIS MASSIAS claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and in the district of Galveztown, containing one hundred and twenty superficial arpents, bounded on the north and on the east by vacant land, on the west by land of Joseph Capitan, and on the south by land of John Medina. Also, a lot of ground in the district aforesaid, and in Galveztown, forming the southwest corner of St. Matthew and Humas streets.

It appearing to the Board, upon the oaths of Joseph Capitan and Joseph Sanchez, inhabitants of the district aforesaid, that the said Francis Massias, the present claimant, is one of the first settlers of the post of Galveztown aforesaid, who came from the Canary Islands in the year 1779, at the expense of the King of Spain, for the purpose of improving agriculture in the province of Louisiana; on which account the Spanish Government assigned him a piece of land to establish himself upon, situated in said district, and containing about one hundred superficial arpents, together with a lot of ground in Galveztown, in said district, containing ninety feet square, the Board do hereby confirm the present claimant in his claim aforesaid.

No. 41.—WILLIAM BLAKE claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the left bank of the bayou Plaquemine, bounded on the east by land of Alexander Darden, and on the west by land of Pedro Egrimier, and on the south by vacant land, and containing four hundred superficial arpents.

An order of survey being exhibited to the Board, appearing to have been issued by the Spanish Government, on the 1st day of July, 1794, in favor of the present claimant, for the land in question; and it likewise appearing to the Board, from the certificate of Charles Laveau Trudeau, Esq., Surveyor General under the Spanish Government for the province of Louisiana, dated November 15, 1802, that the order of survey aforesaid was duly executed; and it also appearing to the satisfaction of the Board that the requisitions under the first section of the act of Congress establishing this Board have been complied with, they do hereby confirm the claim aforesaid.

No. 43.—JOSEPH PEREIRA claims a lot of ground in Galveztown, in the county of Iberville, forming one of the corners of St. Matthew and Galvez streets, and containing ninety feet square, and adjoining land of Maria Ramos.

It appearing to the Board, upon the oaths of Joseph Capitan, Joseph Sanchez, and Francis Massias, inhabitants of the district of Galveztown, that said Joseph Pereira, the present claimant, is one of the first settlers of the post of Galveztown, who came from the Canary Islands in the year 1779, at the expense of the King of Spain, for the purpose of improving agriculture in the province of Louisiana; on which account the Spanish Government assigned him a piece of land in the said district, together with a lot of ground in Galveztown, containing ninety feet square, the Board do hereby confirm the claim aforesaid.

No. 44.—JOHN HERNANDEZ claims a lot of ground in Galveztown, in the county of Iberville, containing ninety feet square, and forming the northeast corner of Jefferson and Acadian streets.

It appearing to the Board, that the oaths of Francis Massias, Joseph Sanchez, and Joseph Capitan, inhabitants of the county of Iberville, that John Hernandez aforesaid is one of the first settlers of the post of Galveztown, who came from the Canary Islands in the year 1779, at the expense of the King of Spain, for the purpose of promoting agriculture in the province of Louisiana; on which account the Spanish Government assigned him a piece of land in the district aforesaid, containing about one hundred superficial arpents, together with a lot of ground in Galveztown, ninety feet square, the Board do hereby confirm the claim last aforesaid.

No. 46.—THOMAS DURNFORD, as acting executor of John Harrison, deceased, claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the left bank of the Mississippi, containing twenty arpents and seventeen toises of front, and converging towards the rear twenty-five degrees; bounded on the upper side by vacant lands, and on the lower by land of one Michel.

It appearing to the Board, from a letter exhibited, signed by Francis Rivas, and dated 30th of October, 1802, and addressed to Thomas Durnford, aforesaid, executor as aforesaid, that he, the said Durnford, was called upon, in virtue of his said executorship, to make or repair the levée and road upon the said tract of land, from which it is made to appear that the said John Harrison, deceased, was recognised by the authority aforesaid as having been, in his lifetime, the proprietor of said land; it further appearing to the Board, from a memorial dated the 23d day of November, 1802, and addressed by the said Thomas Durnford, in his capacity of executor as aforesaid, to the Intendant General of the province of Louisiana, that it was therein stated that the land aforesaid had been conceded by the Baron de Carondelet, whilst Governor of Louisiana, (which must have been prior to 1798,) to John Harrison, deceased; which fact appears to have been recognised by the patent which was upon said memorial, ordered by the Intendant General aforesaid to be issued; which order is dated on the 15th day of November, 1802, and is exhibited to the Board; and it further appearing to the Board, from the certificate of Charles Laveau Trudeau, Esq. late Surveyor General under the Spanish Government, dated the 27th of March, 1803, that a survey of said land was duly made in favor of the estate of the deceased John Harrison; under all these circumstances, the Board are of opinion that the claim of Thomas Durnford aforesaid, as executor of John Harrison, deceased, aforesaid, ought, and the same hereby is confirmed.

No. 48.—MARGUERITE ROBERT, widow of the late Bartholomew Durocher, claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Orleans, and on the right bank of the bayou St. John, containing four hundred superficial arpents, bounded on the upper side by vacant land, and on the lower partly by land of Alexander Milne, and partly by vacant land.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the French Government to Andrew Jung, the 22d day of June, 1766, and, from divers instruments of conveyances, that said property has been transferred to the present claimant, they do hereby confirm her in her said claim.

No. 49.—JOSEPH ENRY claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing three hundred and sixty-six superficial arpents forty-three toises and thirty feet, bounded on the upper side by land of Peter Landry, and on the lower by land of John B. Lambremont.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government, on the 20th July, 1796, to the present claimant, they do hereby confirm his said claim.

No. 50.—JOHN B. LAMBREMONT claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing two hundred and forty-seven superficial arpents, bounded on the upper side by land of Joseph Henrique, and on the lower by land of Simon Leblanc.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to the claimant on the 20th day of July, 1796, they do hereby confirm his said claim.

No. 51.—MATURIN LANDRY claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing five arpents seventeen and a half toises in front, by the common depth of forty arpents, bounded on the upper side by land of Baïste Leblanc, and on the lower by land of Joseph Landry.

It appears to the Board from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to Augustin Landry on the 7th July, 1774; and it appearing from an instrument of conveyance, also exhibited, that he afterwards transferred it to the present claimant, they do therefore confirm his said claim.

No. 52.—IGNATIUS LANDRY claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing five arpents seventeen and a half toises in front, by forty arpents in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of Maturin Landry, and on the lower by land of Amant Melanson.

It appearing to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to Augustin Landry on the 7th day of July, 1774; and it also appearing, from divers instruments of conveyance, likewise exhibited, that the land was transferred to the present claimant, the Board do hereby confirm his claim aforesaid.

No. 53.—AMANT HEBERT claims a tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing five arpents in front, by forty in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of Peter Hebert, and on the lower by land of Joseph Dupuis.

It appears to the Board, from a patent exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish Government to Augustin Morino on the 11th day of July, 1774; and it also appearing to the Board, from an instrument of conveyance likewise produced, that he afterwards conveyed it to the present claimant, they do hereby confirm his said claim.

No. 54.—Said AMANT HEBERT claims another tract of land, situated in the county of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Mississippi, containing five arpents six toises one foot and a half in front, by forty arpents in depth, bounded on the upper side by land of Batiste Hebert, and on the lower by other lands of the claimant.
