20TH CONGRESS.] No. 616. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF FLORIDA FOR GRADUATING THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS IN THAT TERRITORY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 17, 1828.

RESOLUTION OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF FLORIDA.

Resolved, That the delegate in Congress from the Territory be requested to use his exertions to obtain the passage of a law in that body providing for the graduation of public lands in Florida according to their relative value: for instance, all lands that shall remain in market one year can be entered at one dollar per acre; two years, seventy-five cents; three years, fifty cents; four years, twenty-five cents; and after five years, at the price of surveying such land, with interest.

In submitting this request and plan of graduation to the consideration of Congress, the legislative council are not insensible of the liberality heretofore extended to the people of Florida in the purchase of public lands, and make these suggestions with all possible deference and respect to the better judgment of that body, and would beg leave to remark that such a plan of graduation would be admirably calculated both to guard the interest of the general government as well as to promote the interest of Florida, as there would be no additional expense attending such graduation and sale, and by which, too, every one could become identified with the soil, it matters not how limited his means might be.

Florida is not less exposed than she is conspicuous; possessing a seacoast almost equal to any two States in the Union, indented with ship harbors and inlets, affording a ready access to the maritime and naval operations of both the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic ocean; hence it is all important, in order to resist the hostile armaments of an enemy, in time of war, from possessing these points so vitally important, not only to Florida but to the whole southern country, that a dense population should be induced, if possible, to settle on the extended and diversified range of poor land, spotted with small hammocks, that constitute at least three-fourths of Florida, which never will be inhabited at the present minimum price of public lands, but would soon present the aspect of cultivation and industry, should a plan of this kind be adopted. In all privileges of this sort the agriculturist is to be exclusively benefited, forming, as history and experience has taught mankind, to be the nursing mother of a happy country, and the most solid fund for a nation to rely upon for the support of their fiscal operations, particularly in a country like ours, where every man is placed in a condition to contribute to the end of his own happiness, by throwing his mite into the national weal. Thus it is the wealth of the citizen is manifestly that of the nation; and whilst property passes from the one to the other, for a national consideration only, it clearly shows an additional avidity to labor after their own felicity.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 617. [1ST SESSION.

PLAN TO PREVENT FRAUDULENT COMBINATIONS AT THE RESALE OF RELINQUISHED LANDS, AND TO AUTHORIZE THEIR ENTRY AT FIXED PRICES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 17, 1828.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the memorials of the legislature and people of Alabama, and the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, touching the necessary measures to be adopted calculated to guard the public interest against fraudulent combinations in the resale of relinquished lands, by resolution of the House of the 10th of December last; and who, by a resolution of the House of the same day, were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the sale of relinquished lands, by entry, at certain fixed prices, agreeably to quality, reported:

That the state of things to which the attention of the committee is thus directed has not arisen out of any regulations peculiar to the State of Alabama to be found in the laws by which the public lands were sold prior to the year 1820. The laws were general in their character, the mode and terms of sale were the same, (except in the kind of equivalent to be paid,) wherever the government brought its lands into the public market. Therefore, the evils which have happened, or which are likely to happen, both to the government and the purchasers under that system, ought in its operation also to be general; and it is believed that there are, and will be, many cases proper both for correction and relief, in all the land districts in which sales to any considerable amount were made for some few years prior to 1820. Yet the cases which go to affect the whole transaction, detrimental to the Treasury and the purchasers, and present the strongest reasons for further legislation, are chiefly confined to the State of Alabama. There the abuses and hardships of the credit system have been more strikingly illustrated than in other places, and the condition of matters there has been principally noticed by the committee in the view which they have taken of the subject.

Justice, morality, and policy, require of the government that, in parcelling its domain amongst the cultivators of the ground, a course of plain, fair dealing should be pursued, and the title passed for a reasonable price; and public honor and interest require that this price should be paid directly into the hands of the government, without brokerage. If, then, between these two contracting parties, an organized corps, systematically arranged for buying in and selling out, making up their own gains by cheating both sides, has thrust itself, that ought to be suppressed.

Upon that part of the subject "touching the necessary measures to be adopted calculated to guard the public interest against fraudulent combinations in the resale of relinquished lands," the committee will refer to the evidence before them. The register and receiver at St. Stephen's, in a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, say:

"It would not be proper to omit noticing the prevalence of a system of combination at the public sales, which it rests with the government either to counteract or permit. Its extent, in point of numbers, influence, and capital, put it beyond the ordinary control of the superintendents. From its success, it may be probably continued at future sales here and elsewhere; the principles on which it was formed will therefore be proper to be mentioned. By the exertion of a few speculating gentlemen, a coalition was formed with all men of any tolerable capital, and who were disposed to purchase land. Each deposited a given sum, and became pledged to act in concert. A few were appointed to manage the funds. And in this manner competition was in a considerable degree silenced. Many of the lands were in consequence purchased at low rates; and after several townships were offered, public resales were held by this association, attended with the gain of considerable profit. In a few instances a conflict between this company and actual settlers has produced to the government extraordinary prices. This has resulted in the compromises in subsequent instances."

The extent and continuance of these associations are further shown by the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of March 1826, where it is stated that—

"These combinations take place, for the most part, at the sales of lands that are valuable from their situation, or from the improvements that have been made upon them by the settlers. It appears that the sale of the town lots at the Big Spring, in the Huntsville district, was postponed in consequence of such a combination of individuals; and at the sale in the Choctaw land district of the lands situated in the county of Monroe, which lands had been settled previous to the sale, one of the officers states that the speculators had received as much money at the sale as the United States had! The relinquished lands which were offered for sale at St. Stephen's and at Cahaba, sold in but few instances above the minimum price, although much of the land was originally purchased at very high prices. It is understood that this was in a great measure occasioned by combinations of individuals, and it is apprehended that similar combinations will prevent the relinquished lands which are advertised in May and June next, at Huntsville, from yielding to the treasury the amount which, from their real value, they ought to sell for."

The Commissioner, in the same report, recommends that the persons who have relinquished lands should be permitted to enter them, within a given time, at certain graduated fixed prices, as the most effectual way to guard against such combinations, and to give to the persons who relinquished the lands an opportunity to repurchase those improved by them, at a fair and reasonable price. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report here referred to, and in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, directing him to report whether, in his opinion, the interest of the purchasers of public lands, and the interest of the government, will not be greatly promoted by allowing to the purchasers the right of repurchasing the lands relinquished by them at a certain proportion of the price for which they were originally sold, expresses his concurrence in the views presented by the Commissioner in his report. The facts thus shown, in regard to the existence and extent of these Combinations, and the measures recommended to prevent their effects in future, are forcibly urged by the legislature, and some thousands of the people of Alabama; and also by a communication made to the Committee on Public Lands, in February, 1827, by the whole representation of that State in Congress, as well as in the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, addressed to the Hon. G. W. Owen, in January, of the same year. To the two latter documents the committee would particularly refer, as explanatory of the details of the measure, and to show the process by which they propose to graduate the prices of repurchases by the prices of the first sales, and the reasons for their discrimination among the persons to whom the right of repurchase is recommended.

Upon the general proposition the committee would remark, that the evidence before them leaves no ground to doubt the prevalence of the practice complained of to such an extent as to require, in their opinion, that it should be reached by further legislation, and the remedy proposed appears the most appropriate. Still, it may be inquired, whether that class of citizens, whose lands have reverted to the government by relinquishment, have any claims to a preference over anybody else in the repurchase of a limited portion of the same lands, at the same fixed prices? Some of the reasons urged by the memorialists and their representatives are, that they have, for the most part, remained on the lands; and, by labor bestowed on their improvement, and in fitting them for cultivation, have greatly enhanced their value; and, unless the sacrifice were demanded by some inflexible principle of justice or necessity, so large a portion of the mass of society ought not to be driven from their homes, and their labor taken by others. That, in general, the first purchasers honestly intended to pay for their lands, and hoped to be able to do so. But these lands were chiefly purchased in the years 1818 and 1819, when upwards of two millions of Mississippi scrip, previously much depreciated, were suddenly surrendered in that land market, when the unnatural tide of circulating medium was at its height, and the notes of the local banks, with scarcely an exception, were receivable in payment; and cotton, which was their staple, then sold at from twenty-five to thirty dollars a hundred, and other property at equally high rates. It was upon these appearances of money and means that they made their calculations to meet their contracts with the government when they should become due. But, before the day of reckoning came, they found that they, in common with the community around them, had been deceived by the mere appearance of prosperity. The money that abounded at the time of the sale had mostly been refused at the land offices, and fallen into discredit; and, what affected them still more seriously, the price of cotton continued to fall, till, finally, it did not bring one-third of the price upon which their calculations to pay their land debts had been based. Hence, in despair of paying, they embraced the offer to relinquish, as the best thing they could do.

And they further insist that the large amount paid by them into the treasury ought not to be overlooked, when they ask only for the privilege of re-entering their relinquished lands, at present value, in preference to others who have paid nothing. Connected with this consideration is the fact that but little of the relinquished lands, comparatively, were sold, except in the years 1818 and 1819. Previous to that time the lands had generally been sold at reasonable prices, and even afterwards, in the early part of the year 1820, before the credit system was abolished, the prices seem, upon an average, not to have been extravagant. The conclusion, therefore, is, that, except the sales of those two years, the lands have been chiefly retained and paid for, or will be, under the operations of the relief laws; including, also, a large quantity of the high-priced lands of 1818 and 1819. And the payments upon the sales of these two years, in the opinion of the committee, add much strength to this ground of preference.

The quantity of land sold at public sale in Alabama in 1818 was 1,252,920 acres. The amount of the purchase money was $8,715,905; the fourth part of which was paid in advance, making $2,178,976. This fourth part actually paid amounted to one dollar and seventy-six and a half cents per acre upon all the land sold in that year.

The quantity of land sold at public sale in 1819 was 793,547 acres. The amount of the purchase money was $3,163,549; the fourth part of which, being paid in advance, was $792,137. This fourth part actually paid amounted to one dollar per acre upon all the land sold in that year, lacking a small fraction of a cent.

It will be seen that the aggregate sales of these two years amount to a little more than two millions of acres, and the first payment made therefor is but little under three millions of dollars.

Under the act of March 2, 1821, and the subsequent acts, including that of May 4, 1826, there has been relinquished the quantity of 1,586,213 acres, chiefly of the sales of this period as above shown. The whole amount paid upon these relinquished lands was $7,786,097.

From the high average of their original sales a just idea can be formed of the very high rates of a great portion of these lands. The one-fourth, at least, of this sum having been paid, has, by the process of relinquishment, been transferred to the credit of instalments due upon the lands retained.

There has been paid in cash, exclusive of discount, since the act of 1821, upon lands retained	469,592 00
Making	2,416,116 00
And there is still owing upon the same lands	2,692,362 00
Making	5,108,478 00

It must also be taken into the account that, upon some of the relinquished lands, other instalments beside the one-fourth paid in advance, and falling due before relinquishment, had also been paid, and applied to the lands retained, but to what amount the committee have not been able to ascertain; neither do they, on the other hand, wish to be understood as applying the sums above stated exclusively to the lands retained out of the purchases of 1818–'19. These, without much time and great labor, could not have been separated from the general accounts. They have, as a general guide in arriving at the cost of retained lands, considered the relinquishments in the main to have been out of the purchases of 1818–'19, and only the fourth of the price to have been paid; and, though this rule will not lead to exact certainty, it will render obvious the fact that, for these retained lands, a debt, far exceeding their real value, has been incurred, and which, to a very great extent, has been paid.

The committee have had before them summary statements and tables from the General Land Office, showing the sales of all the lands in the State of Alabama, at the respective land offices, annually, so long as sales were made on credit, and the operations of the relief laws since that time, which they present as part of their report. The sales of the two years adverted to are supposed to have given rise to the greatest inconveniences attending the subject; yet the whole proceedings disclosed by those documents are closely connected therewith.

Your committee are aware that they have failed to present the subject in all its material bearings, nor are they wholly unapprised of reasons that may be offered against the views which they have taken. Yet, upon the fullest consideration which they have been able to give it, they are satisfied that the best way to dispose of these relinquished lands will be to set a price upon them which shall be as near their present value as data furnished by the first sales will permit, and to allow the persons who relinquished a preference in the repurchase of the same land, especially if they have continued in the possession thereof, or of a part contiguous thereto, retained out of the first purchase. But this privilege should be limited both as to quantity and time; and, therefore, the class of former purchasers thought to be the best entitled should not be allowed to re-enter more than four quarter sections, and others less; nor a longer time given than is allowed to make full payment for the lands already retained. Neither is the privilege, in the opinion of the committee, to be extended to the repurchase of any lands which may not have been relinquished under the laws heretofore in force since 1821, allowing relinquishments to be made, as the object of the government, doubtless, will be to close its credit business as speedily as possible, consistently with its own interest, and without using unnecessary rigor towards its debtors. In conformity with which principles they report a bill.

A memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of the northern district of the State of Alabama, beg leave to invite your attention to a subject highly interesting to us, as cultivators of the soil, and one which has received the favorable notice and sanction of one branch of your honorable body during your last session. We then fondly hoped that the relief now about to be asked for would have been, in part, granted, by the final enactment of the bill into a law, which passed the Senate, granting further relief to land purchasers, but as our pleasing anticipations have not been realized, and our conditions, as to this matter, are not better, but worse, we have become strongly solicitous to call your attention again to the subject, not doubting but you, in your wisdom and goodness, will grant us relief.

We would deem it an useless waste of the time of your honorable bodies to undertake a full description of our actual condition and circumstances; suffice it to say, we are here with our families and our all, many of us poor, and without permanent homes; and were we willing, we are unable to migrate to another country. This is the land of our choice, and we desire to stay in it; but the doubt and uncertainty under which we abide is exceedingly distressing to our minds, and creates in us great solicitude to have the question solved, whether government will permit us to remain in this country on terms which the existing state of things will enable us to comply with, or, by a rigid enforcement of her present laws, compel us to seek other homes in a foreign land? An early determination of this question, your honorable bodies will readily perceive, will be of the utmost importance to us. Without, therefore, presuming to dictate to you the precise measure of relief which our necessities may require, or would befit your goodness and wisdom to bestow, we beg leave to suggest a few things to your consideration.

Here permit us to present to your view the different classes of citizens who want relief:

First. The holders of lands on which a second or third payment had been made at the time the first relief was granted, upon which four and six years was given, and which time is now expired, and the land relapsed to government, on account of final payments not having been made thereon.

Second. Those who retained their lands on a further credit of eight years under the hope they would be able to pay for them, but have not.

Third. Those who have come into our country seeking homes, and have settled down on relinquished land under the hope that they would be enabled to purchase it shortly from government, but by the postponement of the sale have remained until they have made considerable improvements thereon. To provide, therefore, for the several classes who need relief, we would humbly propose the following as the basis of a law to be passed on that subject:

Those who hold their lands on a further credit of four and six years be allowed ——— years to make payment of the balance due thereon, with such deduction and privileges as you may think proper to grant. Those who hold their lands on a credit of eight years be allowed the privilege of making further relinquishments, and a longer time to make final payment of the balance due thereon, with such deductions and privileges as you may think proper to grant.

Those who hold an occupancy (by improvement or purchase) on relinquished lands be entitled to a preference in buying the same at a price fixed by law, and to an amount not exceeding four contiguous quarter sections, under such rules and restrictions to regulate conflicting claims, and to guard against monopoly or speculation, as you may think proper to impose.

Various reasons might be assigned to justify a deduction in the price of our lands, but we will content ourselves by adverting to one circumstance, to show the vast difference between our ability now, and what it was at the land sales in 1818, to pay any debt we might then have contracted. At the last-mentioned period cotton (the staple of our country) would readily command from 20 to 30 cents, now it is dull at 6 cents per pound.

Thus our lands, for the purpose of making money by the culture of cotton, are not worth more than one-fourth what they were justly estimated at when first sold by the government. Taking this circumstance alone as a criterion to determine the present value of lands in this country, we would humbly submit to the consideration of your honorable bodies the propriety and justice of granting to those who have made a second payment (on their lands) under the original terms of sale their lands without further payment; of granting to those who have paid only one-fourth of the original price of their lands, upon their paying one other fourth to government; and of granting to those who are now living on or occupying (under their own improvement) any relinquished land which they may have thus in possession, upon their paying to government the one-fourth of the price for which said land originally sold.

We believe it would be very difficult, if not impossible, at this time, to do equal justice to all land purchasers; but every measure of relief ought to approach that standard; and we feel ourselves, in making the foregoing suggestions, fortified by the considerations that a great many of those who have obtained grants for their lands have effected the payment by the relinquishment of certificates which they obtained at half the cost, and the great difference between the present value of lands and their supposed value at the time they were first sold by government, and by the consideration that lands relinquished were returned to government in consequence of the high price at which they were bid off at the sale. Not presuming, however, as before observed, to dictate either the manner or degree, we shall endeavor to content ourselves with whatever measure or mode of relief you may in your wisdom afford us.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 15, 1826.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 8th instant, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the House any information in the possession of the department evincing the propriety of legislative enactment to guard the public interest against the fraudulent practices of combinations of individuals in the resale of relinquished land; and whether, in his opinion, the interest of the purchasers of public land and the interest of the government will not be greatly promoted by enacting some provision which will extend to the person, or his legal representative, the right to repurchase in the land he may have relinquished at a certain proportion of the price for which it was originally sold, I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter, dated the 14th instant, from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the extract of a communication to which it refers from the register and receiver of the land office at St. Stephen's, in Alabama, and the copy of a letter from Mr. Owen, of Alabama, and to express my concurrence in the views presented by the Commissioner upon the subject of the resolution.

I have the honor to be, with very great respect, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 14, 1826.

SIR: The resolution of the House of Representatives of the 8th instant having been referred to this office, it is herewith returned, together with an extract of a letter from the register and receiver of the land office at St. Stephen's, which shows the nature, object, and effects of the combinations which are formed by individuals to purchase up the public lands at public sales.

These combinations take place, for the most part, at the sales of lands that are valuable from their situation or from the improvements that have been made upon them by settlers. It appears that the sale of the town lots at the Big Spring, in the Huntsville district, was postponed in consequence of such a combination of individuals; and at the sale in the Choctaw land district of the lands situated in the county of Monroe, which lands had been settled previous to the sale, one of the officers states that the speculators had received as much money at the sale as the United States had.

The relinquished lands which were offered for sale at St. Stephen's and at Cahaba sold in but few instances for more than the minimum price, although much of this land was originally purchased at very high prices. It is understood that this was, in a great measure, occasioned by combinations of individuals, and it is apprehended that similar combinations will prevent the relinquished lands which are advertised for sale in May and June next, at Huntsville, from yielding to the treasury the amount which, from their real value, they ought to sell for.

The relinquished lands which are now subject to sale are lands that were originally purchased at a high price, and the real value of which has been increased by the progress of population and by improvements made upon them. It is this value, compared with the minimum price at which they are subject to be sold at public sale, that is the foundation of all the combinations of individuals, by which they obtain from the settlers the difference between that value and the minimum price.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the most effectual enactments to guard against such combinations, and to give to the persons who relinquished the land an opportunity to repurchase those improved by them at a fair and reasonable price, would be to increase the minimum price at which the lands that have been relinquished should be sold at public sale, and to permit the persons who relinquished to enter the lands relinquished by them within a given time, at such given, graduated prices, being a fixed percentage upon the prices originally given, as Congress in their wisdom may deem proper; and I would recommend that such graduated prices be established as the minimum price at which the relinquished lands should be sold at public sale, provided no relinquished lands should be sold at private or public sale for less than two dollars per acre.

As it relates to the lands that have been relinquished, the enactment of the foregoing provisions would be essentially beneficial to the government, and they would effectually prevent the combinations complained of; but as the adoption of them may materially affect the operation of any act that may be passed for the further relief of the purchasers of the public lands, and may induce individuals to relinquish lands which they otherwise would not, it would be advisable to guard against such relinquishments by declaring that lands hereafter relinquished should not be subject to entry by the party relinquishing previous to public sale, and that they should be sold at public sale on the terms and conditions provided by the act for lands heretofore relinquished.

It may be proper to add that the lands relinquished in the Huntsville land district, amounting to 416,356.21 acres, which sold originally for $3,147,232 15, are proclaimed for sale in the months of May and June next; and that if any provision is made in relation to the sale of the relinquished lands, it is desirable that it should be made in time to postpone the sale of these lands.

I enclose a letter from Mr. Owen relating to the subject of the resolution.

All which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

LAND OFFICE, St. Stephen's, May 2, 1819.

It would not be proper to omit noticing the prevalence of a system of combination at the public sales which it rests with the government either to counteract or permit.

Its extent, in point of numbers, influence, and capital, put it beyond the ordinary control of the superintendents. From its success it may be probably continued at future sales here and elsewhere.

The principles on which it was formed will therefore be proper to be mentioned. By the exertions of a few speculating gentlemen a coalition was formed with all the men of any tolerable capital, and who were disposed to purchase lands. Each deposited a given sum, and became pledged to act in concert; a few were appointed to manage the funds, and in this manner competition was, in a considerable degree, silenced. Many of the lands were, in consequence, purchased at low rates; and after several townships were offered, public resales were held by this association, attended with the gain of considerable profit. In a few instances a conflict between this company and actual settlers has produced the government extraordinary prices; this has resulted in the compromises in subsequent instances. This combination had been formed and was in operation several days before it was discovered by the superintendents. No mode of resisting its effects were in their power but exercising their private right of bidding up for the lands. Where the prices were known to be greatly inadequate, this was exercised in some cases by the superintendents.

WASHINGTON, January 2, 1826.

SIR: From the conversation we had some days ago relative to the future sale of our relinquished and forfeited lands, I am induced to communicate to you more fully my ideas upon that, to us, all-important subject. The more reflection I bestow upon it the more strongly I am convinced that the two important objects that should be regarded in all legislation on this subject will be more completely attained; that is, to secure the revenue arising from this source to the government, and at the same time preserve the interests of that most important and valuable class of our citizens, the planters or purchasers who seek lands for actual settlement.

I will not say that the modes heretofore pursued were unjust, but that they did operate hardly upon this class of our people all readily admit, and that, too, when no relative increase was added to our revenue. The systems of speculation which have and which will ever exist under the present policy were destructive to the honest planter, when the receipts into the treasury were not increased. Such has been their systematic organization that the minimum was received by the government when the planters had to give fourfold that amount for their lands. This, so far from its being the policy of the government to encourage, should by all means be provided against.

The plan I propose is based upon the principle that the lands relinquished or forfeited have in every instance sold for more than their value. This was from causes now well known, and gave rise to the policy of extinguishing the land debt; a policy by experience proved to be beneficial towards our fiscal operations and productive of great good to the people.

I therefore take the liberty respectfully to submit to your consideration the propriety of recommending to Congress the adoption of the following system for the future disposal of relinquished and forfeited lands; that is, to graduate their prices, conforming to the original price at which the person who has relinquished or forfeited may have the right of preference in purchasing. Thus, to exemplify my idea, when lands have been sold at twenty dollars or more, the right of purchasing at private sale at the sum of ten dollars per acre; when it has been sold at ten dollars, and not more than twenty, the right of purchasing, in like manner, at five dollars per acre; when it has been sold at five dollars, and not exceeding ten, at two dollars and fifty cents per acre; and when it has been sold at two dollars and fifty cents, and not exceeding five, at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. This graduation has been taken to explain the system. Any other, making it more minute or extensive in detail, if deemed proper, can be taken; but that something upon this system can be advantageously done, as well to the public treasury as to the individuals, I am well convinced. To avoid competition and the painful solicitude therewith connected, the advancement of the minimums stipulated would be invited. That great benefit would result to this class of people will be admitted, and that no diminution in the receipts at your land offices would be the consequence I am also well convinced; for the system, as before mentioned, adopted by speculators, at the same time they oppress and ruin the actual settler, prevents the fair competition which would result beneficially to government. They cause the lands to be sold at the minimum; these bring from the occupant an advance with which they enrich themselves.

The plan I propose would give you a fair value for the public lands; your offices would be at all times open; the extra expenses attending a public sale would be greatly diminished; the amounts received at your offices would be increased instead of lessened; the price paid for the lands by the purchaser would go into your treasury, and not into the hands of men combined and associated together to extort from the planter the means of his subsistence.

This system I am well satisfied will meet the views of our administration, when we with grateful feeling acknowledge the kind notice taken of our situation in recommending a continuance of our relief systems. I hope you will view it as I have, and express your assent to its adoption, for a limited time at least.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. W. OWEN.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

P. S.—You will oblige me by favoring me, at an early day, with your views upon this subject.

WASHINGTON CITY, February 12, 1827.

SIR: The senators and representatives of the State of Alabama, believing that the peculiar situation of the purchasers of public lands in that State cannot be distinctly and clearly understood by those who have not devoted much of their time and attention to it, and believing, also, that, when fully and properly understood by the Congress of the United States, those purchasers will be regarded as fit and meritorious subjects for the exercise of legislative beneficence, they have ventured to address you and the committee over which you preside, hoping that the statements which they here make may greatly abridge the labors of the committee in the investigation of the subject. Without taking into consideration the advantages or disadvantages which might result from the proposed measure to the treasury, they would have strong hopes of success; but if, upon an examination of the whole subject, it shall be found that very beneficial results will flow to the people of that State, and also to the treasury of the United States, by passing into a law the bill which has lately passed the Senate, we feel confident the Committee of the House of Representatives on Public Lands, to which it is referred, will give it the most favorable consideration. This subject has excited the deepest interest in Alabama, and is one in which a very large majority of the actual settlers and cultivators of the soil have a direct interest. The legislature of the State has, at various periods, and particularly at its last session, urged upon the attention of Congress this subject, and required of us the exertion of every means in our power to procure the passage of such a law as is contained in the bill now before you. These considerations will, we hope, furnish an ample apology on our part for this interference.

We therefore respectfully submit to the consideration of the committee the reasons which have induced the purchasers of the public lands in Alabama to apply to Congress for the passage of a law upon the subject. The combination of causes which led to the purchase of those lands, at prices which now strike every one with astonishment, are pretty fully and very faithfully detailed in the memorials and petitions before the committee, and to which we beg leave to call your attention.

The effects produced in Alabama by the laws for the relief of the purchasers of public lands heretofore passed we will briefly state. When the statute of 1821 passed, cotton, the staple product of that country, had fallen to about half the price it commanded at the time the lands were sold. Those who expected the price of cotton again to advance, and had the means of carrying into grant a part or the whole of the land they had purchased, did so by transferring the payments made on other lands, or by purchasing from others who had no such hopes or means at half the original cost of their certificates of purchase, and transferring the payments made on them, or paid in money, at a discount of 37½ per cent. Hence it was that those who relinquished lands originally purchased by themselves, and transferred the payments to land retained, actually paid to the government more than 50 per cent. more upon the debt due than those who paid money; and those who, from necessity, sold to others their certificates of purchase at half the original cost for the purpose of enabling them to make payments, lost one-half of the money they had paid to government. In most instances, when the land was improved, the vendor remained in possession of the land after selling the certificate, and still continues to cultivate it.

Where the purchaser availed himself of either of the means of payment enumerated, and obtained patents for all the lands he had purchased, no provision is made for him in the bill. Where he relinquished part of his land, and transferred the payments to secure a small portion of the land purchased, he is permitted to enter at the prices fixed in the bill a number of acres, not exceeding a section, to complete the settlement according to the original intention, adjoining the part retained, settled, and cultivated. The person who sold his certificates at half price, and still remains in the possession and cultivation of the land, is permitted to enter not more than two quarter sections of the land so sold and relinquished, in consideration of having lost one-half of the original purchase money on the whole of the land he had purchased. The latter form the class provided for in the second section of the bill. As many purchases were made between the passage of the statute of 1821 and the time limited for taking the benefit of it, some for the purpose of retaining the land or a part of it, and others for the purpose of relinquishing it and applying the payments made on it to the payment of land retained by the assignee, it became necessary to distinguish between these cases, and give the right of entry, in the first case, to the assignee, as he is presumed to have given full value for the land, and, in the latter, to the assignor, he having sold at half price, and being thereby the sole loser. These cases are provided for by the third section of the bill.

The fourth section gives to the purchaser of a quarter section, or less, who has settled and cultivated the same, the right to enter one quarter section adjoining, provided it is not appropriated by the previous provisions of the bill.

The first four sections of the bill will appropriate but a small portion of the land relinquished, as the class of settlers to whom they apply are not numerous.

The fifth section is the most important, as a great majority of the purchasers took further credit, and now owe an immense debt to the government; and it is on that account so long a time is allowed for taking the benefit of the act. It gives them the right to obtain patents for the land they have retained by paying the prices fixed in the first section of the bill, in addition to the one-fourth heretofore paid; which in most cases will be one-half of the price at which the land sold.

The sixth section merely provides a mode of settling contested claims to pre-emptions arising under the provisions of the fourth section.

The seventh section simply limits the time within which entries and payments are to be made.

It is the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the land, if sold according to the provisions of this bill, will yield more money to the treasury than if sold under the general law at auction, because it has been found by experience that persons from different States attend the sale at Alabama, and form strong combinations for the purpose of speculating upon the settlers and bona fide purchasers. The actual settler, who is extremely anxious to purchase his home or land adjoining to complete his settlement, is compelled to submit to the terms imposed by these powerful companies of speculators, rather than risk losing land so important to him. They, in this way, become the purchasers of all the land at very low prices, and sell at the full value to the actual settler; so the government gets much less than the intrinsic value of the land, and the citizen and cultivator of the soil often pays more for it than it is worth. The State of Alabama has attempted to suppress these combinations by legislative enactments, but the speculators have been so far successful in evading the provisions of the law.

When the foregoing facts and circumstances are taken into consideration by the committee, together with the present very depressed price of cotton, which commands but little more than one-fourth part of the price it sold for when these lands were purchased; the great importance of giving to those who have been so long citizens of Alabama, and who settled it under such disadvantageous circumstances, an opportunity of completing and quieting their settlements; and the still greater importance of putting an end to the odious relation of creditor and debtor which now subsists between the United States and the citizens of Alabama, we feel great confidence they will regard with peculiar favor the bill now before them. Should the details of the bill, however, not comport with their views, we beg that they will so amend it as to make it more perfect, preserving its important principles.

WILLIAM KING.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January, 1827.

SIR: Your note of the 17th instant, covering a copy of a bill reported to the Senate relative to the lands which have been relinquished to the United States, and asking my opinion on the subject, has been received. In compliance with your request, I now enclose a draught of a bill which I think better calculated to promote the interest of all the parties concerned than that reported in the Senate.

The several acts of Congress granting relief to the purchasers of the public lands have been so liberal and so essentially beneficial to the purchasers as to require no change in their principles, and the claims of those persons who have relinquished lands would not be of so important a character as to call for legislative interposition, but for the peculiar situation of the relinquished lands in Alabama.

In that State very large quantities of the most valuable lands, purchased originally at high prices, have been relinquished. In the Huntsville district in particular there have been relinquished 486,240.06 acres of land, which sold originally for $3,611,686 99, that are now subject to sale; and these amounts will be materially increased by the relinquishments which will be made under the act of May, 1826. It is known that many of these lands would command from $10 to $20 the acre if they were the property of individuals; and it is believed that if they were offered at public sale, under the existing laws, the most valuable of them would not bring more than the minimum price of $1 25 an acre to the government.

Such a result would be produced by the improper combination of individuals possessing or commanding capital, and preventing all fair competition at the public sale. Under this view of the subject, it is important for the interests of the United States that these lands should be so brought into market as to insure to the government a fair price for them, in a reasonable time. It is very important, also, as it respects the permanent improvement of the section of the country in which this great mass of valuable relinquished lands lie, that they should be brought into market with as little delay as possible.

If these objects can be obtained by a bill, which at the same time will protect the interest of the fair purchaser and that of those persons who occupy and who relinquished the lands, so far as those interests are entitled to the consideration of Congress, it would be very desirable that such a bill should be passed at the present session.

The bill now enclosed provides for the following classes of persons, whose claims, in relation to the relinquished lands, may be considered as founded on any principle of equity:

First. Those persons who relinquished lands adjoining those retained, and who have continued to cultivate the lands by them relinquished; such persons were not trespassers originally, and although, in some instances, they have been depredators, yet, in general, they have added value to the land by the labor bestowed upon it.

Second. Those persons who purchased with a view to settlement, or otherwise, and who have relinquished a part of their lands. In most cases such persons have paid a very high price for that part retained, while the portion thus retained has been rendered less valuable by being severed from that which was relinquished.

Third. Those persons who were the purchasers of small tracts, and being unable to pay for the same in any manner, sold their certificates for less than had been paid by them to persons who relinquished the lands, and obtained credit for the full amount which had been paid. Such persons having had a rightful possession, and having continued to occupy and improve the land, have a fair claim to the benefits proposed by the bill.

Being opposed, generally, to the principle which gives a bonus to those who trespass on the public lands, I have omitted any clause for the benefit of those actual settlers who were originally trespassers.

The first section of the bill enclosed I consider as essentially important in any bill that may be passed on the subject. It will have a tendency to prevent future relinquishments under an expectation of a repurchase of the land on better terms than those on which it was originally purchased.

It will stimulate all those persons whose lands are valuable, and who, under the provisions of the bill, are permitted to enter them, to do so promptly, while the other provisions of the bill give ample time for the payment of those who may acquire the right to enter lands that would not sell for the price which they cost, but which it may, nevertheless, be desirable for them to retain at the graduated price.

One important objection to the bill reported in the Senate is, that it holds out no inducement to enter relinquished lands until March 30, 1829; and it is believed that but a small portion of such lands would be entered under its provisions previous to that period, at which time, it is more than probable, that further application would be made for delay; thus making the general interest subservient to that of a comparatively small number of individuals.

With great respect, your obedient servant, GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. G. W. OWEN, House of Representatives.

A BILL for the disposal of the lands relinquished to the United States under the provisions of the several acts for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands, and those making further provision for the extinguishment of the debt due to the United States by the purchasers of public lands.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all lands which have been or may be hereafter relinquished to the United States, under the provisions of the several acts passed in the years one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one and one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two, for the relief of the purchasers of public lands, and those passed in one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four and one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six, for the extinguishment of the debt due to the United States by the purchasers of the public lands, shall be subject to private entry at the land office where the lands may be situated, from and after the first day of ———, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven, at the prices for which they were originally sold.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That all those persons, or the heirs of those persons, who have relinquished lands to the United States under any of the acts aforesaid, and who have continued to occupy or cultivate the same, shall be permitted, from and after the passage of this act, to enter the same, or any legal subdivision thereof, with the register of the land office where the lands lie, at any time within one month previous to the period at which the said lands may be proclaimed for sale, at the following graduated prices: Lands, the original cost of which was $28 per acre, and upwards, may be entered at ——— dollars per acre. Lands, the original cost of which was $18 an acre, and less than $28 an acre, may be entered at ——— dollars an acre. Lands, the original cost of which was $12 an acre, and less than $18 an acre, may be entered at ——— dollars an acre. Lands, the original cost of which was $6, and less than $12 an acre, may be entered at ——— dollars; and all lands, the original cost of which was less than $6 an acre, may be entered at ——— dollars: Provided, The said lands shall not have been entered under the provisions of the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That all those persons, or the heirs of those persons, who have availed themselves of the relief granted by the acts aforesaid, and who have relinquished land adjoining those retained by them, shall be permitted to enter the said adjoining and contiguous lands on the terms and conditions specified in the second section of this act: Provided, The quantity thus entered shall not exceed ——— quarter sections: And provided also, That the lands retained shall not have been transferred previous to such entry.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That any person, or his heirs, and if there be no heirs, his widow, who shall have been the purchaser of a tract of land which he or they improved and continued to occupy, and which tract of land had been sold and relinquished to the United States by any other person, such person, his heirs, or his widow, as the case may be, shall be permitted to enter the same on the terms and conditions specified in the first section of this act, and in preference to the person, or his heirs, who relinquished the said lands: Provided, The quantity so entered does not exceed ——— quarter sections.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, That no lands relinquished after the passage of this act shall be subject to private entry, except under the provisions of the second section of this act, until they shall have been offered at public sale, and that no lands relinquished under the provisions of any of the acts aforesaid shall be sold at a price less than that fixed by the graduation established in the second section of this act; and that those relinquished lands which shall not be sold when offered at public sale shall be subject to private entry at the graduated prices aforestated, for ——— months after such public sale, when they may be again proclaimed for sale by the President of the United States, and sold as other public lands.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 8, 1828.

SIR: I enclose several tables, made out by the chief clerk in this office, with the view of furnishing the information required in the memorandum left by you. These tables are made out principally from statements heretofore made, and are believed to be sufficiently correct for any general purpose. The accounts of the receivers having been generally adjusted and transmitted to the Treasury, a more accurate statement could not be made without reference to them, which would have occasioned much more delay.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 618. [1ST SESSION.

CLAIM TO A DONATION OF LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 17, 1828.

Mr. BATES, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Pedro Gonzales, Salvador Gonzales, and Joseph Gonzales, reported:

That, from the petition and documents, it appears that the father and mother of the petitioners, Juan Gonzales and Henrietta (or Rita) Victor, were sent, with other colonists, about the year 1778, from Spain to Louisiana; that on their arrival at New Orleans the other colonists were settled at a place called Nova Iberia, in the Attakapas, and had lands assigned to them, but Juan Gonzales was retained by the governor of the province to serve in the King's hospital in that city; and that, continuing in that service until the change of government, no lands were ever granted to him by the Spanish authorities; that Juan Gonzales died more than fifteen years ago, leaving his widow, Rita Victor, and his three sons, the petitioners, in very poor and reduced circumstances. The petitioners pray for a donation to each of them, of a half section of land, or such other quantity as may be deemed just and proper, "in consideration of the engagements made by the Spanish government with their father and mother, which never have been complied with."

In support of the statement in the petition of the existence of engagements on the part of the Spanish government to grant lands to the father and mother of the petitioners, they produce a paper (in the Spanish language) purporting to be a contract entered into at Malaga, in Spain, by an officer in behalf of the King, with the widow Theresa Gomez, by which it seems to be agreed, in substance, that said Theresa, with her four children, mentioned in the contract, and her nephew, shall be transported to Louisiana at the expense of the King; that a house shall be built for them, and lands pointed out for their use; that they shall be supplied with beasts, utensils, &c., necessary for the culture of the soil; that they shall be furnished with seed, and receive aid in their labor and subsistence until they have gathered the first crop; after which they are to support themselves and pay a contribution to the King, in proportion to their establishments, in order to reimburse the expenses of the transportation and outfit, they and their heirs remaining owners, in perpetuity, of the property that has been assigned them. No specific quantity of land is mentioned in this paper, whose stipulations seem to leave the individuals dependent rather on the bounty than the justice of the government, while the whole tenor of the instrument provides for the reciprocal benefit of the King and the colonist. But, however strong the contract might be in favor of Theresa Gomez, the contracting party, the committee cannot perceive how the petitioners can derive title under it. It is true that one of the affidavits states that Henrietta (or Rita) Victor, mother of the petitioners, is the daughter of Theresa Gomez; yet it also appears that all the colonists, except Gonzales, were settled at Nova Iberia, and had lands assigned them; and it is inferrable from the whole of the documents that Theresa Gomez was among that number, and received the full measure of her engagements. It also appears that the mother of the petitioners is still living, and, of course, if any rights descend from her mother under the foregoing contract, her claim by inheritance would precede that of her children.

No evidence has been produced to the committee of any contract affecting lands between Juan Gonzales, the father of the petitioners, and the Spanish government; and if such had existed, they could not but consider the acceptance, by Gonzales, of service in the hospital at New Orleans, and his continuance in that service as long as the Spaniards retained the country, as an implied revocation of the contract, and sufficient evidence of his abandonment of the original purpose of agrarian settlement.

The committee are aware that it was sometimes the policy of the Spanish government to encourage the population of the provinces by free donations of land, but that policy was not dictated solely by a desire to advance the individual interest of the colonists; it arose, in part, from the desire of the parent country to guard against foreign aggression by strengthening the frontiers, and by settling and improving part of the royal domain to enhance the value of the rest.

Upon the whole matter, it is the opinion of the committee that the claim of the petitioners has no legal foundation; that it is, in fact, a claim of a simple donation; and that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 619. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS DERIVED FROM THE STATE OF GEORGIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 17, 1828.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of James Steptoe and others, reported:

That this case was submitted to the consideration of the Committee on Public Lands, during the session of Congress, in the year 1824, who, on the 11th day of March of that year, made a report, in which the facts of the case are correctly set forth, and which this committee request may be considered as a part of this report.—(See vol. 3, No. 404, page 656.)

In addition to the grounds relied upon in said report, it may be remarked that whatever causes may have influenced the legislature of Georgia in coming to the conclusion, it seems very evident they did not finally conclude to permit locations such as those referred to by the petitioners to be carried into grant. By a report made August 1, 1786, by a committee appointed by the legislature of said State, it appears that at the time the first resolution on the subject passed, in 1784, a committee was appointed to bring in a bill for the purpose of enacting the substance of the resolution into a law, but that no such bill had ever been reported.

On August 7, 1786, a committee appointed for that purpose reported a bill, to be entitled "An act for laying out a district in the bend of the Tennessee river," which, having been read the first time, was finally rejected.

A resolution, however, was passed at the same session declaring "that the title of any person or persons whatever to any land in the district of Tennessee, so far as the same is sanctioned by former resolutions of assembly, should not, in any respect, be weakened or injured by the rejection of the bill aforesaid."

Upon reference to the proceedings of the State of Georgia in relation to such claims, it appears that the governor of the State, on application for grants, refused them. We cannot point out certainly the reasons upon which such refusal was predicated. That the resolution of the legislature directing the commissioners to give up the bonds which they had received to the purchasers, and to suspend further proceedings, was the main ground, there can be no doubt. He might, moreover, have relied upon the rejection of the bill above mentioned in 1786, and that there was no law which would authorize the emanation of patents in such cases.

Independent of the foregoing objections, the committee are of opinion that the great lapse of time since the foundation of these claims was laid forms no inconsiderable reason upon which the petition ought to be rejected.

On March 3, 1803, a law was passed by Congress entitled "An act regulating the grants of lands, and providing for the disposal of lands of the United States south of the State of Tennessee." In the 8th section of this law, lands are appropriated for quieting and satisfying such other claims to lands of the United States south of the State of Tennessee as were not recognized by the articles of agreement and cession between the State of Georgia and the United States, and which claims were derived from any act or pretended act of the State of Georgia, which Congress might think proper to provide for. In said law there is a provision that no other claims shall be embraced by the said appropriation but those the evidences of which shall be, on or before the first day of January next after the passage of the said law, recorded in a book kept for that purpose in the office of the Secretary of State. The claimants in this case seem to admit that they did not comply with the provisions of this law.

The committee submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the claims of the petitioners ought to be rejected.

TO GRANT LAND TO THE WIDOW AND CHILDREN OF A REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIER WHO WERE DEFRAUDED OUT OF IT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1828.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Julia Gwynn, in behalf of herself and daughters, Catharine Gwynn and Susannah Gwynn, reported:

That John Gwynn was a soldier in the revolutionary war, attached to the fourth regiment, Maryland line, commanded by Colonel Carvill Hall; that he died in Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred; and at the time of his decease he was entitled to one hundred acres of bounty land for services in said revolutionary war; and that the above-named Julia Gwynn is the widow, and Catharine Gwynn and Susannah Gwynn are the surviving children and legitimate heirs of said John, deceased, and as heirs petition for said bounty land.

It is in evidence, by letters from the War Department, that on the 14th day of July, 1795, being more than five years previous to the decease of said John Gwynn, a land warrant, No. 11262, was issued to William Marbury, the assignee of one David Lawler, administrator on the estate of the same John Gwynn. In consequence of the warrant issued as aforesaid, the War Department now declines issuing another warrant to the legitimate heirs, who have thus been defrauded out of their land.

It is manifest that a base fraud has been perpetrated, and the government imposed upon by said pretended administrator, or other interested person; but in justice to the character of said William Marbury, the assignee as aforesaid, the committee are induced to acquit him of all knowledge of the fraudulent design and transaction. A patent has been granted upon the aforesaid warrant; the title to the land has been transferred by said assignee, but in whom it is now vested the committee are not informed. There is no evidence, however, to induce a belief that the said John Gwynn, in his lifetime, or the widow and heirs since his decease, were ever concerned in said fraud, or that they have in the least participated in it.

The committee are of opinion that the heirs of said John Gwynn are entitled to relief, and report a bill.

All the reservations herein stated have been entered upon the books of this office.

I am, very respectfully, your humble servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. J. C. ISACKS.

No. 1.

Extract of a letter addressed to John Badollet and Nathaniel Ewing, of Vincennes, by the Secretary of the Treasury, dated October 11, 1806.

"From the sales must be excepted the tracts set aside for satisfying private claims, the college township, as located by my letter of yesterday to the register, the section No. 16 in each township, and all the sections including salt springs as may have been discovered. But you must observe that it is understood that no part of the lands adjoining the great salt spring, upon the saline creek, though ceded by the treaty of June 7, 1803, shall be offered for sale; and you will be pleased, in relation to the other salt springs which may be included within the boundaries of the tract offered for sale, to make report to this department of such as have come within your knowledge, whether returned by the surveyor general or not, and to state whether, in your opinion, any adjoining sections should be reserved by the President of the United States, in conformity with the sixth section of the act of March 26, 1804. It has also been stated that there was on the Wabash a bank of coal which ought to be reserved for the use of the salines, and on that subject I wish also to obtain information. You will perceive that your communications on these several points should be made early enough that an answer and a decision may reach you before the commencement of the sales."

No. 2.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 5, 1827.

SIR: You will be pleased immediately to advise this office of the particular sections and parts of sections in your district which may have been reserved from sale on account of salt springs or saline appearances.

I am, &c., GEORGE GRAHAM.

LAND OFFICE AT VINCENNES, February 26, 1827.

SIR: In conformity with your request of the 5th instant, I have the honor to inform you that the two following quarter sections, viz: southeast quarter section 27, township 2 north, range 2 west; northeast quarter section 14, township 7 north, range 2 west, have been, agreeably to the act of Congress of March 26, 1804, withheld from sale as containing salt springs; and that a number of sections, equal to the extent of one whole township, have been reserved for the use of the salt springs situated within the first named tract; and, agreeably to directions from the Secretary of the Treasury, contained in his letter of October 11, 1806, no lands have been reserved from sale round the second tract.

No evidence of any other salt springs within this district is in possession of this office.

Another reservation, although not coming strictly within the scope of your inquiry, has been made, which I deem proper to mention, namely, that of the northwest quarter of fractional section 26, township 1 north, range 5 west, situated on the bank of White river, and containing a stratum of fossil coal. By reference to the same letter of the Secretary, adverted to above, you will perceive that I was instructed to inform him whether a bank of coal, said to exist on the Wabash, ought not to be reserved for the use of the United States saline. Upon investigation it was found that the said bank was situated in a part of the country to which the Indian title had not yet been extinguished. It struck my mind that the coal bank on White river ought to be reserved as a substitute for the Wabash bank. Whether I stated these circumstances to Mr. Gallatin, or whether I wrote at all on the subject, at this distance of time I cannot recollect, and can find no copy among my letters which has any relation to that matter. The fact is, however, that the quarter in question has never been exposed to sale.

The enclosed list exhibits, beside the salt spring known by the name of French Lick, the designation of all the sections reserved for the use thereof.

I am, &c.,

JOHN BADOLLET.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 622. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF OHIO TO BE ALLOWED TO SELL THE LAND SET APART FOR RELIGIOUS PURPOSES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 21, 1828.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the State of Ohio in general assembly respectfully represents: That by the act of the Congress of the United States of July 23, 1787, authorizing and empowering the then board of treasury of the United States to contract with any person or persons for the sale or grant of a certain tract of land, as therein described, situate and lying in the State of Ohio, it appears that the section or square mile, lot No. 29, in each township or fractional part of a township surveyed agreeably to the land ordinance of May 20, 1785, was intended by Congress "to be given perpetually for the purposes of religion," in each respective township or fractional part of a township in which it might be found.

It also appears by the act of Congress authorizing a grant of land to Rufus Putnam, Manassah Cutler, Robert Oliver, and Griffin Greene, in trust for the persons composing the Ohio Company of Associates, approved April 2, 1792, which said grant was predicated upon the before-mentioned act of July 23, 1787, that said lot No. 29 was thereby reserved for the purposes of religion, agreeably to the provisions of the last-mentioned act.

And it also further appears that in the grant made by the United States to John Cleves Symmes and his associates of a tract of land lying between the two Miamies, in the State of Ohio, the same reservations were made and for the like purposes.

It seems to have been the benevolent intention of Congress, in making the above reservations, to lay a permanent foundation for the support of religion in this part of the country, and thereby confer a lasting benefit upon the future population thereof. This benevolent object has in a measure been attained, but not to the extent desired, and that might justly have been expected, owing in part, as your memorialists believe, to the peculiar tenure by which these lands are held, viz: that of lease for four years. In a country offering every facility of acquiring titles in fee, lease-hold property generally claims the attention of those only who are illy calculated to yield any real advantage to the owners.

Your memorialists being desirous of changing the title of these lands, and well knowing that doubts exist as to the propriety of disposing of them in fee by the State, would express it as their opinion, that an act of the Congress of the United States declaratory of the extent of the grants aforesaid will be productive of much benefit in case the legislature of the State should hereafter determine to dispose of the same; that it will have the full effect of removing every doubt in the minds of the purchasers, and thereby enhance the price which will be obtained for the same. Therefore,

Your memorialists represent that it would be of advantage, and conduce to the future prosperity of those sections of the country, that a law of the United States be passed declaring the authority of the State of Ohio to dispose of the said lands, granted for the purposes of religion, in fee, and that the proceeds thereof be vested in some permanent fund, the proceeds of which shall be applied, under the direction of the legislature, for the purposes of religion within the townships to which they were originally granted: Provided, That the section numbered 29, granted as aforesaid for the purposes of religion, shall not be sold without the consent of the inhabitants of such original surveyed township.

Resolved, further, That the governor be requested to forward the foregoing memorial to the government of the United States.

EDWARD KING, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
A. SHEPHERD, Speaker of the Senate.

TO REFUND TO NORTH CAROLINA MONEY PAID BY THAT STATE TO THE CHEROKEE INDIANS FOR CERTAIN RESERVATIONS OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 22, 1828.

Mr. CARSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution "inquiring into the expediency of refunding to the State of North Carolina $19,969, which sum was paid to certain Indians of the Cherokee tribe for reservations of land within the limits of said State, granted to them, in fee-simple, by the treaty of 1819," reported:

That it was stipulated by said treaty "that to each and every head of any Indian family residing on the east side of the Mississippi river, on the lands that are now or may hereafter be surrendered to the United States, the United States do agree to give a reservation of six hundred and forty acres in a square, to include their improvements, which are to be as near the centre thereof as practicable, in which they will have a life-estate, with a reversion, in fee-simple, to their children," &c.

The facts connected with this claim, and which induced North Carolina to purchase those reservations without first applying to the general government, are briefly as follows:

Immediately after the ratification of the treaty of 1819 the State of North Carolina appointed surveyors and commissioners to survey and sell the lands acquired within her limits by said treaty.

The duties assigned those commissioners and surveyors were performed without a knowledge of what reservations would be taken or where located. Subsequent to the sale by the State commissioners a surveyor was sent by the general government to lay off the reservations for those Indians who claimed under the stipulations of the treaty. The consequence was, that almost all those reservations conflicted with lands previously sold by the commissioners on the part of the State to her citizens, a number of whom had sold their homes in the old settled parts of the State and removed to the newly acquired territory. Those conflicting claims caused much disturbance; the purchasers depending upon the faith of the State to make valid their titles, and the Indians on the faith of the general government to secure them in theirs.

A great number of suits were instituted by the Indians in the courts of law of North Carolina against those citizens who had taken possession under their purchase from the State commissioners; and one case was carried up to the supreme court of that State and decided in favor of the Indians. Disagreeable results were likely to ensue. Necessity compelled North Carolina to take prompt and decisive measures for the relief of those citizens who were likely to suffer. Time would not permit her to apply to the general government to extinguish the Indian title to those reservations. She therefore appointed commissioners with instructions to purchase those reservations, which purchase was effected for the sum claimed by North Carolina, and which your committee believes in moral justice ought to be refunded to her.

The reasons which have brought your committee to this conclusion, are—

First. The general government had no power to exercise any control over any part of the soil within the limits of any of the original States, and that the injuries sustained by North Carolina resulted from the act of the general government in the assumption and exercise of this power, as set forth in the treaty, and which was a violation of the rights and sovereignty of that State.

Second. The general policy of the government has been to extinguish Indian titles to land within the States when she could do so, &c.

Your committee entertain no doubt as to the correctness of the first proposition, "that the government had no power to grant the soil within the limits of the original States," &c. But as this power has been exercised and, consequently, claimed by the government, your committee deem it due to the importance of the question, and to a correct discharge of their duty, to give their views somewhat at length.

According to the usages of nations, and the now universally admitted principle that discovery gives the right of dominion and soil, subject, however, to the occupancy of the natives, the right of the crown of England to her colonies in America, and to grant them by her letters patent to the lords proprietors, &c., has never been doubted.

When the colonies threw off their allegiance to that crown, and established their independence, all the rights which were held by England, whether derived by discovery, conquest, or otherwise, became vested in the respective States, each claiming and holding according to the limits of their original charters; and by the treaty which concluded the war of our Revolution the powers of government and the right of soil, which had previously been in Great Britain, passed definitively to these States; and, as independent sovereignties, they were fully competent to regulate all the relations which were to exist between them and the natives within their respective limits.

It became necessary, however, in the establishment of the federal government, for the States to give up part of their rights as independent sovereignties for the mutual advantage of all. But, in the concession of those rights, it never could have been intended that the right of soil, or the power in any way to control the soil of any of the States was given to the general government, nor can such power be considered as incidental to any of the general powers expressly granted; neither can it be implied by the most forced construction, nor could any necessity arise which, in the opinion of your committee, would justify the government in the exercise of such power without the previous consent of the State or States. If, therefore, the United States have exercised this power to the injury of any of the States, it is but sheer justice that she should reimburse them in all losses consequent upon her own wrongful act.

It may be contended that under the treaty-making power, and that part of the Constitution which makes all treaties the supreme law of the land, this power might be claimed. We deem it a sufficient answer to this to say that the federal government has precluded herself from such construction by their application to the States to cede to them their western territory, &c., and by their acceptance of such deeds of cession; but more especially in the case of Georgia, where the government actually purchased, for a valuable consideration, the surplus territory of that State. There could have been no necessity, therefore, had this power been vested in the government, for such application to the States, nor for their acts of cession, for the same object could have been attained by treaty with the different tribes residing on those lands.

Your committee agree that the general government is now the only power which can extinguish the Indian title to lands within North Carolina. They believe, however, that this power results more from her solemn guarantee of protection to the Indians, and the obligation the Indians are under by treaty to treat with no other power, and the acquiescence of that State in those treaties, than from anything to be found in the federal Constitution; for all powers delegated to the general government by the States were with a view to external operations, and not internal. The treaty-making power, therefore, could only have been intended to regulate our relations with foreign powers, and not with the Indian tribes residing within the limits of any of the States.

This brings your committee to the consideration of the second proposition: "That the government is bound to extinguish the Indian title to lands within North Carolina, and that it has been her policy to do so." But your committee would here premise that this is an obligation to extinguish only, and not a power to dispose of the soil, or in any way to alter the tenure by which the Indians hold title, which is barely a possessory or usufructuary right.

To show the obligation the government is under to extinguish those Cherokee claims, we beg leave to refer to the treaties of Hopewell and Holston, an extract from which is here given.

Extract from the treaty of Hopewell, concluded November, 1785.

"ARTICLE 3. The said Indians, for themselves and their respective tribes and towns, do acknowledge all the Cherokees to be under the protection of the United States of America, and of no other sovereign whatever."

Extract from the treaty of Holston, concluded July, 1791.

"ARTICLE 3. The undersigned chiefs and warriors, for themselves and all parts of the Cherokee nation, do acknowledge themselves and all parts of the Cherokee nation to be under the protection of the United States of America, and of no other sovereign whatsoever; and they also stipulate that the said Cherokee nation will not hold any treaty with any foreign power, individual State, or with individuals of any State."

Laws have also been passed by Congress prohibiting the purchase of lands from Indians by any State or individuals, &c.

It therefore does appear to your committee that the United States are virtually bound to extinguish those titles; or, in other words, to relieve North Carolina of a burden she has imposed upon her by "solemnly guaranteeing to the Creek nation all those lands not ceded by the treaty of Holston," &c., (see 7th article of said treaty,) and by prohibiting the Indians from treating with any State or power whatever, except themselves. And to prove that the government has recognized this obligation, it is only necessary to refer to what has been her general policy upon that subject, and her policy is demonstrable from the different treaties made by her for the above purposes.

It may be objected that, by the payment of this money, we open the door to other States to purchase lands from Indians, and that this act may be referred to as a precedent. In answer, we would say that North Carolina purchased from Indians who were citizens, declared so by the act of the government, and not from Indians in their national capacity.

From every view your committee have been able to take of this subject, they are irresistibly brought to the conclusion that North Carolina should be reimbursed; for all the difficulties in this case have resulted from the improper exercise of power on the part of this government. She granted the soil of North Carolina to those Indians disposed to take reserves, &c.; about fifty did take, which injured North Carolina to the amount of thirty-two thousand acres of land, and that, too, of the choice of the country. And further, those reservations were a part of the consideration given to the Indians in the extinguishment of their titles as a nation; and this forms a strong reason why North Carolina should be indemnified, for it will be recollected that the Indian title to a large quantity of lands within the limits of Georgia was extinguished at the same time, and that the United States were bound by special contract to do so. Those reservations, therefore, were given in the fulfilment of that obligation. Reserves were also taken in Georgia under the same treaty, but appropriations have been made by Congress for their extinguishment.

In conclusion, your committee deem it due to themselves to say that if it should be considered that North Carolina has not a strictly legal claim, it cannot be doubted that they have a strong equitable one; and the course pursued by North Carolina creates an additional obligation on the part of the government to reimburse her the amount paid, with incidental expenses.

In further support of their opinion, your committee would ask leave to attach, as part of this report, the memorial of the legislature of North Carolina, and respectfully ask leave to report a bill.

Report of the joint select committee appointed by the legislature of North Carolina to memorialize Congress upon the subject of the Cherokee lands—1827.

The joint select committee appointed to memorialize the Congress of the United States upon the subject of the Cherokee lands, report that they have had the subject under consideration, and submit the accompanying memorial, and recommend the adoption of the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of this memorial to each of the senators and members of the House of Representatives from this State in Congress, with the request that they present the same to both houses of Congress.

JOHN D. TOOMER, Chairman.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of North Carolina respectfully represents: That at the close of the revolutionary war the territory composing the sovereign and independent State of North Carolina was bounded on the east by the Atlantic, and on the west by the Pacific ocean; on the north by a line beginning on the sea-shore, in the southern boundary of Virginia, in 36° 30′ north latitude, and thence, west, to the Pacific ocean; and on the south by a line beginning on the seaside at a cedar stake, at or near the mouth of Little river; thence, a northwest course, through the "boundary house," which stands in 33° 56′, to 35° north latitude; and thence, west, to the Pacific ocean. The Congress of the United States having repeatedly recommended to the respective States in the Union owning vacant western territory to cede the same to the United States, an act was passed by the legislature of this State, at its session in the year 1789, authorizing certain commissioners to convey to the United States all those lands situate within the chartered limits of North Carolina, (being west of a line beginning on the extreme height of the Stone mountain, at the place where the Virginia line intersects it; thence, along the extreme height of said mountain, to the place where Watauga river breaks through it; thence, a direct course, to the top of the Yellow mountain, where Bright's road crosses the same; thence, along the ridge of said mountain, between the waters of Doe river and the waters of Rock creek, to the place where the road crosses the Iron mountain; thence, along the extreme height of said mountain, to where Nolichucky river runs through the same; thence to the top of the Bald mountain; thence, along the extreme height of said mountain, to the Painted rock, on French Broad river; thence, along the highest ridge of said mountain, to the place where it is called the Great Iron or Smoky mountain; thence, along the extreme height of said mountain, to the place where it is called Unika mountain; thence, along the main ridge of said mountain, to the southern boundary of this State,) upon certain conditions therein expressed. In pursuance of said act the commissioners executed the deed of cession, which was duly accepted and ratified by the United States in Congress assembled on April 2, 1790. By the acceptance of this cession the United States, among other obligations thereby assumed, became bound "that the lands laid off, or directed to be laid off by any act or acts of the general assembly of this State for the officers and soldiers thereof, their heirs and assigns, respectively, shall be and inure to the use and benefit of the said officers and soldiers, their heirs and assigns, respectively; and that all the lands thus ceded, and not appropriated as aforesaid, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of all the United States, North Carolina inclusive, according to their respective and usual proportion in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatever." A part of the territory so ceded now forms the State of Tennessee, bounded on the east by the western boundary of North Carolina, as described in the act of cession, and on the west by the river Mississippi; on the north and south by the northern and southern lines of the ceded territory, All the lands laid off, or directed to be laid off, as aforesaid, by the general assembly of North Carolina, lie within the limits of the State of Tennessee; and after the location of all the said lands there remained within the limits of Tennessee a very large and very valuable residue, which should have been appropriated to the use of the several States of the Union, including North Carolina, in the proportion set forth in the act of cession. The United States still hold under this cession, for the like uses and purposes, an immense extent of country and of great value, situate between the river Mississippi and the Pacific ocean, and between the northern and southern limits of the ceded territory. It is true the act of cession did not require the United States to stipulate that all right and title of the Indians to lands within the limits of North Carolina should be extinguished by the United States, as has been done by Georgia. North Carolina, acknowledging the parental care of the general government, generously confiding in her sense of justice, and believing that good policy would dictate the extinguishment of the Indian title, did not demand such stipulation, which (if required) would have been a very inadequate consideration for the territory conveyed and the sovereignty granted. It is believed that the portion to which North Carolina was entitled, by the act of cession of the residue of lands in the State of Tennessee, after the location of all the military claims, would have been amply sufficient for the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands within the limits of North Carolina, but the United States have appropriated this residue exclusively to the use of the State of Tennessee.

The United States, acknowledging the rights of North Carolina, and yielding to her just claims, attempted, by the treaties of 1817 and 1819 with the Cherokee tribe of Indians, to extinguish their title to all the lands within the limits of this State. This attempt proved abortive by a mistake in describing the territory intended to be surrendered by the Indians. The language of the treaties leaves little doubt of the intention of the contracting parties to extinguish the Indian title to all the lands within this State; but the application of a technical rule produces the difficulty. The treaties stipulate that the Cherokees shall surrender all their lands lying within the limits of North Carolina; and then, unfortunately, set forth the supposed metes and bounds of the territory intended to be surrendered. In these metes and bounds there is a great mistake. The former is called a general, the latter a particular description; and it is said the particular controls and restrains the general description. The lands in the occupancy of the Cherokees not embraced by these metes and bounds, and within the limits of North Carolina, are of great extent and value. This tract of country, from the most accurate information now to be obtained, includes more than one million of acres of land, and is estimated to be worth four hundred thousand dollars, and is occupied by about three thousand Indians. The extinguishment of the Indian title to this district of country, and the removal of this unfortunate race beyond the Mississippi, is of momentous importance to the interests of this State. The fertility of soil, the extent and value of territory, are sufficient inducements to urge the extinguishment of the Indian title; especially as (we think) we have just claims on the general government. These are not the only inducements; the red men are not within the pale of civilization; they are not under the restraints of morality, nor the influence of religion; and they are always disagreeable and dangerous neighbors to a civilized people. The proximity of those red men to our white population subjects the latter to depredations and annoyance, and is a source of perpetual and mutual irritation. It is believed this unfortunate race of beings might easily be induced to exchange their lands in this State for territory beyond the Mississippi, whither so many of their brethren have already gone. It is unnecessary to recite facts or urge arguments to prove that such removal will be beneficial, not only to the citizens of this State, but to the Indians themselves. Aware of the liberal policy which has been pursued by the general government on subjects of this character, it will be sufficient to invite, respectfully, the attention of Congress to this memorial.

Before the ratification of these treaties, North Carolina had the right of sovereignty and soil of all the land within her limits, the Indians enjoying a mere right of temporary occupancy. By these treaties a large tract of land was secured to the heads of the Indian families for life, with remainder in fee to their respective children; and this was a part of the consideration given by the United States to these Indians for abandoning the occupancy of the land then surrendered. It was believed at that time by the statesmen of North Carolina that the United States could not legally deprive this State of the right of sovereignty and soil of the territory thus attempted to be secured to the Indians; but they were unwilling to array opposition against the acts of the general government. With these feelings North Carolina not only acquiesced in the terms of the treaties, but ratified their provisions by legislative acts. Policy soon suggested to North Carolina the propriety of purchasing from the Indians the lands thus secured to them. The peace and tranquillity of her citizens made such a measure necessary. Yielding to this necessity, North Carolina commenced the purchase; a portion only has yet been purchased, and has cost her in the sum paid the Indians, and in incidental expenses, about twenty-two thousand dollars, ($22,000.) The claim of North Carolina to be refunded this sum, (the expenditure of which was made necessary by the unauthorized act of the general government,) is respectfully submitted to the wisdom and justice of Congress.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 624. [1ST SESSION.

VACANT AND UNAPPROPRIATED LANDS IN TENNESSEE.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 21, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of January 14, 1828, "directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the House what is the quantity and quality of the vacant and unappropriated public lands situate in the State of Tennessee, south and west of the congressional reservation line," I have the honor to transmit a letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 18th instant, which contains all the information in this department upon the subject of the resolution.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 18, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the 14th instant, relative to the quantity and quality of the vacant and unappropriated public lands in the State of Tennessee, south and west of the congressional reservation line, and which was referred by you to this office, I have the honor to report that by a deed dated the 25th day of February, 1790, the State of North Carolina ceded all her right, title, and claim to the sovereignty and territory of all that tract of country within the present limits of the State of Tennessee, under certain conditions and reservations, as expressed in a deed from the State of North Carolina dated in December, 1789; among other reservations in this deed are the following:

1. The right to the officers and soldiers of the State of North Carolina to lay off any lands they were entitled to within the limits that had been allotted to them; and that if within the boundaries prescribed for the officers and soldiers of the State line on the continental establishment there were not a sufficiency of lands fit for cultivation, such deficiency should be made up out of any other of the lands intended to be ceded.

2. The right to all entries or grants of land made agreeably to law, and the rights of occupancy and pre-emption, and every other right reserved by law to persons settled on or occupying lands within the limits ceded.

3. The right to remove entries made in the office of John Armstrong, and which interfered with prior entries, and to locate the same on any other part of the land ceded.—(See Laws United States, volume 2, page 85.)

By an act approved May 26, 1790, the country thus ceded was erected into a Territory, and by a subsequent act, approved June 1, 1796, this Territory was admitted into the Union as the State of Tennessee, without any condition or provision whatever in relation to the public lands.—(See Laws United States, volume 2, page 104 and page 567.)

By an act of Congress approved April 18, 1806, it was enacted that for the purpose of defining the limits of the vacant and unappropriated lands in the State of Tennessee, hereafter to be subject to the sole and entire disposition of the United States, the following boundaries were established:

"Beginning at the place where the eastern or main branch of Elk river shall intersect the southern boundary line of the State of Tennessee; from thence, running due north until said line shall intersect the northern or main branch of Duck river; thence, down the waters of Duck river, to the military boundary line as established by the seventh section of an act of the State of North Carolina entitled 'An act for the relief of the officers and soldiers of the continental line and for other purposes,' (passed in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three;) thence, with the military boundary line, west to the place where it intersects the Tennessee river; thence, down the waters of the river Tennessee, to the place where the same intersects the northern boundary line of the State of Tennessee."

The second section of this act provides that upon the senators and representatives from the State of Tennessee, in pursuance of powers vested in them by certain acts of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Tennessee, executing an instrument to be signed by them and approved by the Senate of the United States, agreeing to and declaring, in behalf of the State of Tennessee, that all right, title, and claim which the State of Tennessee hath to the lands lying west and south of the line above described shall thereafter forever cease, and that the lands aforesaid shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States, and shall be exempted from every disposition or tax made by order or under the authority of the State of Tennessee while the same shall remain the property of the United States and for five years thereafter; and the United States do thereupon cede and convey to the State of Tennessee all right, title, and claim which the United States have to the territory east and north of the line hereinbefore described, subject to the conditions contained in the act of cession from the State of North Carolina. And the said section further provides that the State of Tennessee shall have full power and authority to issue grants and perfect titles to lands east and north of the aforesaid line under certain conditions, among which are the following:

1. That all rights to land and interfering locations which are good and valid in law, and which had not been actually located west and south of the line above described previous to February 25, 1790, should be located north of the same.

2. That if the territory ceded by this act to the State of Tennessee should not contain a sufficient quantity of good land fit for cultivation, according to the true intent and meaning of the original act of cession, to perfect all existing legal claims charged thereon by the conditions contained in this act of cession, Congress will hereafter provide by law for perfecting such out of the lands lying west and south of the before-mentioned line.—(See Laws United States, volume 4, page 39.)

By an act supplementary to the above act, approved April 4, 1818, it is provided that the State of Tennessee shall be authorized to perfect titles on all special entries and locations of land in said State made, pursuant to the laws of North Carolina, before the 25th day of February, 1790, that were good and valid under the act of cession from North Carolina, and also to issue grants and perfect titles on all warrants of survey, interfering entries, and locations, which might be removed by the cession act of North Carolina, and which are good and valid in law, and which have not been actually located and granted east and north of the aforesaid line, in the same manner and under the same or similar rules and regulations as are prescribed by the laws in force in the State of Tennessee for issuing the grants and perfecting titles on claims of a like nature for lands lying north and east of the said lines.

Under the provisions of the several laws above referred to the State of Tennessee has proceeded, it is believed, to perfect titles to a large portion of the land lying south and west of the line described in the act of 1806, but this office is possessed of no means to ascertain the quantity of lands to which titles have been granted as aforesaid. It therefore becomes impracticable to state the quantity of public land now vacant and unappropriated in the State of Tennessee; but from an estimate made from the best maps in the possession of this office it appears that the lands lying south and west of the line above mentioned amount to eight millions five hundred thousand acres.

The Indian titles to these lands have been extinguished by the United States. To that portion of them lying east of the Tennessee river, and which amounts to about one million nine hundred thousand acres, it was extinguished by the treaty with the Cherokees at Washington, January 7, 1806, and to the residue, lying west of the Tennessee, it was extinguished by the treaty with the Chickasaws, bearing date October 19, 1818.

It may be proper to remark that previous to the treaties entered into at Hopewell, in 1786, these lands were considered as subject to entry under the acts of the State of North Carolina; it is therefore probable that entries were made to a considerable extent before the provisions of the treaties of Hopewell were known and respected; the titles to which entries have not been perfected until since the cession of the lands by the Cherokees in 1806, and the Chickasaws in 1818. The extent of such entries, or of any other entries that may have been made by virtue of the several provisions of the laws above specified, can only be ascertained by reference to the records of the State of Tennessee; and if the provisions of the second section of the act of Congress approved April 4, 1818, (Laws United States, volume 6, page 272,) have been duly carried into effect, then the files of the offices of the commissioner of land claims for West Tennessee, and those of the register of the land office for West Tennessee, will show the amount of warrants that have been declared to be valid and the amount of grants perfected for lands within the districts ceded to the United States.

The district of country lying south and west of the boundaries designated by the act of April, 1806, is a very fine one, and contains a large portion of lands of very superior quality; from its great extent, however, it must necessarily contain much land of an inferior quality, and as the locations which have been made within it will very generally have been confined to the lands of the best quality, the residuum subject to be disposed of by the United States will generally be of inferior quality.

All which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE GRAHAM.

SALE OF RELINQUISHED LANDS TO ORIGINAL PURCHASERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 23, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 21, 1828.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 20th ultimo, enclosing a bill now pending in the Senate, which provides, among other things, for the sale, at graduated prices, of the relinquished lands to the original purchasers, and asking my opinion whether the operation of the bill would be favorable or otherwise to the revenue from the public lands.

In reply I beg leave to state that in the opinion of this department the principles contained in the bill would probably prove favorable to the revenue to be expected from the sale of the relinquished lands, for the reasons set forth in a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Hon. G. W. Owen, dated in January last, a copy of which will be found in the printed document No. 122, herewith enclosed.—(See antecedent No. 617.) It is proper, however, to add that if the privileges secured by the bill shall be extended to October 1, 1829, the receipts from the public lands for the year 1828 will probably fall short of the sum stated in the annual report from this department of December 8, 1827, by four hundred thousand dollars, that being the sum expected during the year from the sale of the relinquished lands in the State of Alabama.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR AN EXTENSION OF THE TIME FOR ADJUSTING PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 24, 1828.

RESOLUTION OF THE LEGISLATURE OF MISSISSIPPI.

Whereas it has been represented to this general assembly that a number of individuals who would have been entitled to lands lying and being in the land district of Jackson county, under the various laws of the United States on the subject of public lands, had they been able to avail themselves of the benefit and intention thereof within the periods prescribed by said laws; but owing to various causes growing out of events over which many of them could have no control, one of which causes was the want of regularity and neglect of duty on the part of the commissioners appointed for the purpose of receiving and reporting evidence of claims, and another of which causes was owing to a want of information on that subject, of the time and place appointed by said commissioners for the purpose aforesaid, together with a want of information in relation to the evidence necessary to entitle them to the benefit of the laws aforesaid; all of which causes have operated to the manifest injury of a number of the citizens of this State; and it being very desirable, as well to the claimants aforesaid as to the people of this State, that the above description of claims should be equitably disposed of: Therefore—

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened, That our senators in the Congress of the United States be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their influence to procure the passage of a law authorizing the commissioners of the land district aforesaid to receive evidence of all such claims in their district, under such regulations as may be deemed equitable and just, allowing a sufficient time for the promulgation thereof, and also for the adjustment of said claims.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 628. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF FLORIDA TO BE ALLOWED TO SELL THE LANDS RESERVED FOR A SEMINARY AND SCHOOLS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 28, 1828.

Resolved, That the delegate in Congress from the Territory of Florida be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to use all proper exertions to procure the passage of a law authorizing the sale of the lands reserved in this Territory for the establishment of a seminary of learning, and for the use of schools, at such times and under such regulations as the governor and council may by law direct.

In urging this request a second time upon the consideration of Congress, the members of this council disclaim all intention of manifesting a feeling of discontent as respects the course heretofore pursued by that honorable body towards this Territory. On the contrary, they have much reason to felicitate themselves on the munificence which it has ever seemed disposed to exercise, and do most sincerely appreciate the liberality with which their petitions have been regarded; but while they deny all intention or even right to complain, they nevertheless consider themselves entitled to the privilege of presenting at all times to the consideration of Congress such alterations in their system and laws as will, in their opinion, conduce to the general advantage of the community which they represent. The subject proposed in the foregoing resolution is one so important to the interests of Florida, and so vitally connected with the growth and prosperity of the institutions, which it has manifestly been the object of that honorable body to encourage and support, that the members of this council cannot believe that an apology will be considered necessary for presenting it a second time; indeed, they would consider it an aberration from that strict line of duty which their obligations to the Territory and to the government of the United States impose, were they not again to present this matter to the consideration of Congress, and to submit a few of the most prominent reasons upon which they have predicated their opinions.

Congress, at its last session, passed a law granting to the governor and legislative council of this Territory the power to take possession of the lands which are the subject of this resolution, and to lease the same from year to year, and appropriate the money arising from such leases to the use of schools and the erection of a seminary of learning.

In countries presenting a dense population, and where the advantages to be derived from the cultivation of the soil depend upon the skill and care with which it is managed, a system of leasing lands for a term of years may be found to yield a profit without impairing their value; but where there exists a sparse population, and where large bodies of unsettled lands are presented at almost every point throughout the country, renting or leasing, especially from year to year, will ever be found to render them worthless, without producing any equivalent.

Persons acquainted with the mode usually pursued by agriculturists in the southern States must be convinced that a system of improvement enters not into their schemes of policy; their principal object is to draw from the native soil as large a product as it is capable of affording, and when, from such a plan of culture, it becomes exhausted, it is abandoned for a more fertile spot. If this be the course pursued by persons owning the soil, as in many instances it undoubtedly is, what have we to expect from those who have no permanent interest in it? Tenants from year to year, in a country like this, would direct every effort to the attainment of the largest return from their labor without regard to future consequences, and when their leases expired they would leave the lands in a state of premature decay and destruction.

Another important reason presents itself to the members of this council against the adoption of this system: it is, that the revenue to be derived from it would not be sufficient to answer any valuable end. Woodlands, although constantly subject to pillage and waste, could not be rented for any price, and the cleared lands would yield a very small sum in consequence of their not being considered a fair subject for competition. By common consent the person who has cleared a piece of land, known as public land, is considered in some degree its owner, and no other person will oppose him in renting it; he therefore gets it at such price as he is willing to offer, and thereby obtains a privilege to commit every kind of depredation.

For these and other important considerations connected with the object for which these lands have been reserved, the members of this council, representing the people of Florida, conceive that much injury will grow out of this system if pursued. If it be true that experience is at all times a safe guide, we greatly err when we neglect to profit by its lessons; and in looking at Georgia, Alabama, and other neighboring States, we find the worst results have followed the system of leasing the lands set apart for the promotion of literature. The lands have been found to deteriorate from year to year, and the proceeds have scarcely been sufficient to pay the expenses necessarily incurred in placing them in this train of ruin and destruction.

An additional reason, not indeed directly connected with the funds to be raised from these lands, has also had its influence with the members of this body in inducing them to present this request to the Congress of the United States. The Territory of Florida is known to possess an extent of maritime frontier surpassing, in exposure, any other portion of the Union; it is also known to embrace an immense tract of country, the most of which is of such sterility as to present an insuperable barrier to settlement, and that its means of defence in times of invasion must of necessity be less than its situation requires. It would therefore seem that every effort should be resorted to by the government to invite within its borders a permanent population, which would be identified with it in interest, and would be disposed to defend it against foreign assailants; but if the school lands, located as they are in the best sections of the country, should be kept under a lease, this desirable object would be wholly defeated. Persons who depend upon renting lands for a support are generally of an unstable and itinerant character, and, having no permanent interest in the government, would be indisposed to promote it in peace or defend it in war.

As the resolution herewith submitted is only intended to request the passage of a law authorizing the sale of these lands at such times and under such regulations as the governor and legislative council may direct, it would appear unnecessary to suggest at this time any mode for their future disposition; but as the success of this application may, in some degree, depend upon the correctness of their views on this subject, the members of this body believe that a full development of them will not be considered irrelevant.

Into some parts of this Territory a tide of emigration is at this time most rapidly flowing, and not a doubt is entertained but it will continue to flow as long as lands susceptible of profitable tillage can be procured; and when all the good lands of those sections of country are settled, emigrants will be directed to other parts of the Territory which have not as yet attracted their attention. To dispose of the school lands, therefore, upon the most advantageous terms, it is necessary that the governor and council be at liberty to bring them into market at such times as they will be in the greatest demand, from the influx of population to the particular section of country in which they are situated. It is also considered that the most advisable plan to dispose of them will be to sell them upon a credit of from one to ten years; the principal to be secured by personal security and a lien upon the land, and to bear a reasonable interest from the sale, to be paid annually to the commissioners or trustees of the school fund. By an adoption of this course it is believed the lands will sell for a price greater than they would command at any future period, and would yield an annual revenue in interest infinitely larger than could ever be realized from rents.

The members of the council are well aware of the objections which exist to a sale of lands upon credit, but they are convinced that little reflection is required to show that those objections cannot apply to the school lands in this Territory; the quantity to be brought into market at any one time will be too small to invite foreign speculation; they will therefore be purchased by persons settling in the country, and the payment will be amply secured. Instead of their being ruined in the hands of tenants by an improvident system of culture, they will more likely be improved by owners, who will be looking to future benefits and advantages; and if from non-payment they should at any time revert to the government, they will return with an increased value.

With regard to the fund to be raised from a sale of these lands, the members of the council would only observe that, when collected, it might be securely and advantageously vested in some stock which would give an annual income amply sufficient to carry into effect the beneficent designs of Congress in setting them apart.

In conclusion, the members of the council would respectfully remark, that, if rules have been established by Congress in relation to the disposition of the lands reserved for universities and the support of schools which are adverse to the request they now make, they cannot but hope that the reasons here assigned, added to the peculiar situation of the country in which they live, will be considered as affording sufficient grounds for a departure from those rules so far as the Territory of Florida is concerned.

20TH CONGRESS.] No 629. [1ST SESSION.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS IN THE CHOCTAW DISTRICT IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 28, 1828.

Mr. HAILE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of Representatives of January 3, directing the committee to inquire into the expediency of granting the right of preference in the purchase to actual settlers on the public lands in the Choctaw district, State of Mississippi, reported:

That the Indian title was extinguished in the year 1820 to all the lands within the present Choctaw district; and that all the lands acquired by that treaty have been surveyed and brought into market, except a small portion lying within the vicinity of Lake Washington, contiguous to the river Mississippi, and within the limits of a new county just organized by the State of Mississippi. That the settlers at the time they first inhabited the land, and before they had erected any valuable improvements on the same, expected that this portion of the public lands would, like the rest, be speedily brought into market, as at that time it presented no inducements to speculators. The settlers have patiently waited nearly seven years, under the hope that the land on which they reside might be surveyed, and the land brought into market, in order that they might be quieted in their possessions. They think the period has arrived when they ought to have some security offered to them that at no distant day their labor and improvements may not be wrested from them by the combination of unfeeling speculators. From year to year the settlers have been compelled by necessity to erect comfortable dwellings, and have cleared sufficient land for subsistence; that others have been forced to erect horse-mills, gins, and warehouses, for the convenience of this remote part of the State, and completely detached, a very considerable distance, from any other neighborhood by swamps and water, almost impassable at any season of the year.

The documents annexed to this report will show not only the quality of the land, but the causes that have prevented this particular portion from being brought into market.

Instructions have been given from time to time to the surveyor general to complete the surveys in that remaining portion of the Choctaw district. A contract was entered into with Mr. Babbit, who died before the surveys were completed. Since that period, other and various contracts have been entered into, but from a variety of causes the surveys are still delayed. The surveyor general states "that two surveyors, who had taken contracts for surveying to be executed in the vicinity of Lake Washington, in the Choctaw district, have abandoned them to avoid ruin." In June, 1827, in a letter from the same person to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, he says: "I will take this occasion to report to you, formally and officially, as I have several times done incidentally heretofore, that the law of May 24, 1824, cannot be executed in conformity with your instructions on the subject; the execution of a surveying contract being a very different business from that of entering into one, through mistake, produced by a want of experience. The experiment being now made, to the ruin of those who have embarked in the business, no further contracts can be expected, nor could they be executed if obtained.

The committee refer to these facts to show that a still further delay will happen before the lands on which the present settlers now reside will be surveyed and brought into market. In fact, many years may elapse before Congress will increase the price of surveying this description of land; and, unless the settlers are now protected in their possessions, they will be discouraged in any further improvements. It may be contended that the laws interdict settlements on the public lands. But it is impossible to prevent settlements on public lands, particularly after counties are organized. The State must be compelled to make use of the public land in the location of seats of justice for the counties, and, like an individual, must wait until the land is brought into market. Wherever land is expected to be brought into market, the people in other parts of the same State, whose lands are exhausted, and those who are the owners of none, will remove to the new settlement and select a new home. It is right and proper that the first settlers, who have made roads and bridges over the public lands at their own expense, and with great labor and toil, should be allowed a privilege greater than other purchasers. It cannot be denied that these settlers increase the value of the contiguous lands to the United States. By this means an additional amount on the sales of public land is realized to the government. It is just and proper that he who renders a benefit to the public, who, by his enterprise and industry, has created to himself and his family a home in the wilderness, should be entitled to his reward. He has afforded facilities to the sale of the public lands, and brought into competition lands that otherwise would have commanded no price, and for which there would have been no bidders, unless for his improvements.

In Arkansas the right of pre-emption was extended to ten years. By the act of 1814 pre-emptions were allowed in Illinois to the extent of six hundred and forty acres. In all the new States similar privileges have been extended. By a late act of Congress the right of pre-emption was extended in Florida to five years. This is a claim in behalf of a few settlers in the county of Washington, who did not anticipate that the government of the United States would have neglected, for such a length of time, to bring the lands on which they reside into market. Having resided so long on the land, it is natural that they should be attached to their homes, and feel an unwillingness again to emigrate. The committee are informed that that portion of the public land that remains unsurveyed, and not subject to inundation, either by the Mississippi or the swamps, is very inconsiderable. They do not conceive that the government will sustain any loss by granting a similar privilege to the few inhabitants of one county and neighborhood, that has so often been extended to the citizens of other States. They, therefore, report a bill granting a right of preference in the purchase of one quarter section of land only to the persons who inhabited the same prior to the 1st day of January, 1828.

REFERENCE.—See MSS. Rep., p. 589; MSS. Rep., p. 455; see act March 15, 1816, authorizing persons to settle on public lands upon certain conditions.

"THOS. D. MERIWETHER."

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 7, 1828.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 4th instant, I have to state that, understanding there was a very valuable body of land lying along the margin of Lake Washington, (a large lake in the Mississippi swamp,) and free from inundations for nearly a mile back from the lake, instructions were given to Mr. Davis, in January, 1826, (see No. 1,) to extend his meridian and parallel lines to that lake, and to have the lands fronting on it surveyed, agreeably to the provisions of the act passed May 24, 1824. In pursuance of which instructions he entered into contract with Mr. Babbit to survey the lands in the neighborhood of that lake; which contract never has been completed, as appears from the enclosed copy of a letter addressed by Mr. Davis to you, and forwarded to this office, (No. 2,) and also from the extract of a letter from Mr. Davis to this office, (marked No. 3,) dated June 29, 1827. Mr. Babbit is since dead. In consequence of a recommendation from this office, a bill was reported to the House authorizing an increase of the price for surveying this description of lands, but was not acted upon.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. WM. HAILE, House of Representatives.

No. 1.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to G. Davis, dated January 21, 1826.

"I am pleased to find that you are getting offers for surveying the lands in the Choctaw district for $3 50 per mile, which I think they can generally be surveyed for. I had, previous to your communication, heard of the lake between the Yazoo and the Mississippi rivers, and that the lands adjacent were free from inundation, and of good quality. It is desirable that these lands should be surveyed, and if you have not reached this body of land in your regular surveying, you may extend your meridional and parallel lines, to enable you to connect them with the surveying executed.

"It will probably be advisable to survey the lots adjacent to the lake, agreeably to the provisions of the act of May 24, 1824.

"P. S.—I do not feel authorized to give instructions for surveying the lands, under the act of May 24, 1824, different from those heretofore given."

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, (Miss.,) January 31, 1827.

The enclosed correspondence, on the subject of obtaining papers from the office of the registers at Washita and Opelousas, is sent to Mr. Haile, as an act of justice to those concerned, in consequence of my having, in my communication of the 12th instant, given it as my opinion that I had no other way of obtaining them than by paying the fees affixed to the duties of issuing them by law. The perusal of them is well worth the attention of such of our law-makers as are disposed to cast censure, or to countenance censure cast upon executive officers of the government for the non-execution of laws which carry the most conclusive evidence upon the face of them that they never were intended to be executed. Let any candid man look at the act of May 24, 1824, and compare it with the treasury construction of the law, and with my letters to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to Mr. Cook, of the House of Representatives, upon that subject, and if he does not agree with me that the same law ought to have raised the price of surveying to $7 or $8 per mile, and to have allowed this office one extra clerk for every deputy employed in its execution, I shall conclude, and shall be able to demonstrate, that he is incapable of understanding the subject. I have understood that two surveyors who had taken contracts for surveying, to be executed upon that plan, in the vicinity of Lake Washington, in the Choctaw district, have abandoned them to avoid ruin.

All surveying executed under the authority of the government ought to be liberally paid for by the government; and in cases where the claimants are now required to pay, they should make the payments to the land offices on receiving their patents.

If Mr. Haile will have the goodness to leave the enclosed papers at the General Land Office, it will probably be the only favor that I shall ever ask him.

G. DAVIS.

Hon. WM. HAILE, House of Representatives.

The enclosed papers are numbered from 1 to 4.

NOTE.—One of the clerks in this office has just now completed the examination of a small fractional township, recently surveyed, according to the act of May 24, 1824, consisting of not more than what is equal to ten complete square sections, the tabling of which, with the assistance of the deputy surveyor himself, has occupied two entire days of close application; and the front on the river, consisting of only six sections and about a half, has filled nineteen pages of foolscap paper. It will occupy the same clerk, who is a very expert calculator, two days more, or perhaps three, to complete the calculation of areas, and the subdivisions of the fractional square sections, and four days afterwards to make thence neat maps and descriptions of this small fraction, but little more than quarter of a township. Let this be taken as a sample of the work required to be done, in a given time, in the two States of Louisiana and Mississippi.

Extract of a letter from G. Davis, esq., to G. Graham, esq., Commissioner, &c., dated June 29, 1827.

"I will take this occasion to report to you, formally and officially, as I have several times done incidentally heretofore, that the law of May 24, 1824, cannot be executed in conformity with your instructions on the subject—the execution of a surveying contract being a very different business from that of entering into one through a mistake produced by a want of experience. The experiment being now made, to the ruin of those who have embarked in the business, no further contracts are or can be expected, nor could they be executed if obtained."

REPORT AND DECISIONS UPON PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN EAST FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 30, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 29, 1828.

SIR: In pursuance of the provisions of the 5th section of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1827, I have the honor to submit a copy of a letter of the register and receiver of public moneys for the district of East Florida, transmitting their report and decisions upon private land claims.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the PRESIDENT of the Senate of the United States.

LAND OFFICE, St. Augustine, December 12, 1827.

SIR: Accompanying this are our reports. It will be seen that in the space of little more than eight months we have acted on one hundred and ninety-five claims. There are now in the office three hundred and ninety-nine, of which more than one hundred were filed in November last. We could not do more. In another year we can close this business. We had prepared a report of the fifteen claims transmitted from the department, as we were directed by Mr. Graham, but as yet it has been impossible that the clerk could copy it. It shall be sent on in the course of the winter.

We are, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

CHARLES DOWNING, Register Land Office.
W. H. ALLEN, Receiver.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

Report of the land commissioners of East Florida.—How lands could be granted, and that by the governors themselves, &c.

LAND OFFICE, St. Augustine, December 13, 1827.

SIR: In forming a general rule by which this board should be governed in the decision of land claims, we have experienced less difficulty than had been anticipated. The manner as well as the ratio in which lands were granted in East Florida, from which the practice has never varied until the administration of Coppinger, was limited and defined by fixed and settled principles: first, by the general laws of the Indies, where they can be made to apply; and, second, by the decrees of the King of Spain, made specially for these provinces. They prescribe the qualifications of those who shall receive donations, and limit the quantity which the governors shall grant them; and if the enumeration of specific powers is to be construed to exclude those powers not enumerated, and if the governors were restricted by the express provisions of those ordinances from which they derive their authority, there is then no difficulty, from the lights before us, in fixing bounds to that granting power which has hitherto been considered to have had no limits in East Florida but the governor's will and the governor's discretion; nor should we, on this subject, have thought it our duty to do more than to refer to the limitations in the very grant of powers, but for the practice of Governor Coppinger, the universal statement and apparent belief of the people of this section of the Territory, and more especially for the different opinions entertained by the board of commissioners, our predecessors here. We have examined with care and attention every law, ordinance, and decree, either general or special, which relates to the granting of public lands in this province. We have found, in each and all of these, the authority of the governors prescribed within certain and settled limits. It is true that we have not been able to procure the royal order of 1754; but of the importance of this we entertain an opinion different from that of our predecessors. It was promulgated when Florida was a portion of the British empire; it is embodied in the laws of the Indies, if it has any bearing on the subject; and if repugnant to the royal order of 1790, it is repealed by it; or if consistent, modified, amended, and applied to this province.

There were five modes by which lands could be granted in this province:

The first was by the King in person, as in the case of the Duke de Alagon, &c.

The second was by the intendant of Cuba, to whom the King had given a superintendence over the Floridas, with an express direction to use every means in his (the intendant's) power to settle the provinces. (Vide royal order, September 3, 1817.) Under this power, thus conferred, the grant of two hundred and fifty-six thousand acres in Alachua was made to the Arredondos.

Of these two classes of claims we have nothing to say. They were disposed of before the commencement of this board, and none of a similar character have as yet been acted on by us.

The last three modes in which lands could be granted, and granted by the governors themselves, are the subject of this report:

The first is to subjects who lived in towns and wished to settle in the country. The second, to foreigners (Irishmen) who came here and took to the King the oath of allegiance. The third, for military services during the disturbance of this province in 1812, and subsequently under the royal order of 1815.

First, by the laws of the Indies.—By this law "houses, lots, lands, &c., may and shall be distributed to all those who go to settle new lands," &c. Again, as it may happen that in distributing lands there may be a doubt as to the measurement, we declare that a peonia or peasant's portion is a lot of fifty feet in breadth and one hundred in depth, &c., and a gentleman's portion is a lot of one hundred feet in breadth and two hundred in depth, &c. It is evident that this proportion was intended for the very infancy of a settlement, when the inhabitants resided in townships, and those townships were walled in against the surrounding Indians. It is to this law that Governor Quesada refers, by book, chapter, and section, in his "Internal Regulations of Police." He there declares that "he is commanded by royal orders, agreeably to public wants, to apply the most seasonable and quick remedies thereto." The governor says further, in the same document, "I grant to all the inhabitants permanently settled and subjects of his Majesty, in his royal name, for their use, the quantity of land they may require, in proportion to their force." "And although the laws of the Indies (12th title, 4th book, the very law we have above quoted) authorize me to make an absolute distribution of the same, I abstain therefrom for powerful motives, persuaded, &c., that those obtaining grants from me now will be confirmed in them." "The powerful motives" which induced Governor Quesada to abstain from making "absolute grants" were evidently these: that by the laws of the Indies, which gave him that power, he could grant to a peasant or a gentleman but fifty or one hundred feet in breadth and double the quantity in depth, and he hoped, and wisely hoped, that by obtaining further powers of his Majesty the quantity could be enlarged. Quesada, then, (and Cespedez, his only predecessor, made no distribution of lands,) has expressly declared that his authority to grant lands in the province, as governor of East Florida, is derived from the laws of the Indies, book 4, title 12. We have seen what power is there conferred. It is evident from the whole tenor of these "Internal Regulations of Police," which have already been printed by order of Congress, as well as by the quotations made above, that Quesada considered himself empowered to make these grants, not by the omnipotence of his commission as governor of Florida, but by the express provisions of the law itself. We should not have said so much on this subject but for a wish to trace to its source this granting power, and fix its limits, if limits it have. Quesada nowhere claims a right to exceed the number of acres prescribed by law, nor to make a grant for other causes than "head-rights." His practice conformed to his rule. And White, his successor, arbitrary as he was, did not dare even to reduce the quantity prescribed by law until he consulted the King, and obtained permission. If Governor Kindelan had full power to make whatever grants he pleased, why did he apply to the King for authority to give lands for military services; for risking their lives without pay in the defence of the province? In addition to this, it may be well to observe that when, in the necessities of the royal treasury of this city, some sales of lands were made to individuals by order of the governor, and referred to Cuba and Spain for confirmation, these very sales, made by the omnipotent governor, were there annulled, the money ordered to be refunded, and the lands to revert to the royal domains. Thus we see that this "unlimited" power of the governors is conferred by the laws, is limited by the royal orders, and their deeds reserved at will when repugnant to either. In an order of 1814, the King uses these strong words: after declaring "that the little observance of the provisions of the laws of the Indies and ordinances of intendants" have been attended "with great injury to the royal exchequer and of the owners," he adds that he has, therefore, "been pleased to order that the intendants comply strictly with what has been ordered in the said ordinance relative to the distribution of lands." In 1818, his Majesty is still more explict. He declares "that the general expression, granted in so much as it is not opposed to the laws, can give no room for explanation; and making them (the grantees) understand that it is out of their power to alienate them in part or the whole, especially to foreigners." So much for the laws of the Indies. We come now to—

The second, the royal order of 1790.—This order, the first of the kind, intended specifically for the granting of lands in Louisiana and Florida, was made on the application of Governor Quesada to permit the introduction of foreigners (Irishmen) into these provinces. It is in these words: "that those foreigners alone will be received who may, of their own free will, present themselves and swear allegiance to his Majesty, to whom there shall be granted and measured lands gratis, in proportion to the working hands each family may have." The number of acres afterwards fixed on as proper for each worker of a family was one hundred for the husband, as much for the wife, and fifty a head for each child, and each slave of sixteen years and upwards. It is true that Governor White subsequently obtained the permission of the intendant to reduce this assessment to half the quantity, viz: fifty for each head of a family, and twenty-five for the balance. But this minimum ratio was not adhered to by any of his successors. It is then clear that, viewing the power of the governor in the most extensive and favorable sense, the rule to which they were imperatively bound to adhere in the granting of lands to foreigners was this: to give to Irishmen, or to those who called themselves so, "lands in proportion to the working hands each family may have." Thus, a man settling in this province with one hundred slaves was as much entitled to five thousand acres of land for those slaves, one hundred for himself, as much for his wife, and fifty acres for each of his children, as a single man, without a negro in the world, was entitled to one hundred. It is plain, therefore, that the justness or validity of a grant does not depend on its size or quantity, but on its conformity to the law under which it was made. It will be presently seen that the ordinance of March, 1815, directs the governors to grant lands for military services in the same ratio, varying only in the conditions imposed on the grantee of cultivation and occupancy.

It will be seen, too, that this order of 1790 relates entirely to foreigners who should take in this province the oath of allegiance to the King; but as the number of acres prescribed by the laws of the Indies to be given to each native-born subject of his Majesty was intended evidently for the earliest infancy of a settlement, it became customary, as it was doubtless equitable, to grant to subjects of his Majesty the same number of acres as, by the royal order of 1790, was granted to foreigners; but the law, when this is done, imperiously required that they should leave the city and settle on their farms; and Governor White has invariably made it a condition precedent that the grantees take possession of their land in from one to six months. Thus stands the law, and the practice too, until the administration of Coppinger. Until then the uniform course in obtaining grants was this: a memorial was presented by the individual applying, stating his wish to take the oath of allegiance, declaring the number of his family, and praying that the governor grant him a specified number acres in a specified place. The governor sometimes required the engineer to report on the probable influence that the settlement proposed would have on the military defence of the province. Sometimes he directs that the request of the petitioner be granted, saving always the rights of third persons, "until, according to the number of his family, the authorized surveyor shall measure and lay off to him the number of acres he may be entitled to." The surveyor afterwards travelled around the several settlements of the province, required each individual to swear to the number of his family, and laid off to him as much land as the laws gave, in proportion to his workers. This was the practice, and this was the law. It was then necessary that the grantee should live on the land, and cultivate it for ten successive years. Before the expiration of this period of ten years it became forfeited to the crown by a sale or an abandonment. The King himself has more than once declared that lands should not be purchased or obtained but of the King's attorney; and by an edict of Governor White of October 12, 1803, lands abandoned for two years are declared to be forfeited. Suffice it to say, by every regulation, ordinance, and decree on this subject, as well as by the practice invariably pursued, the memorial of the party and the concession of the governor convey nothing more than the right of possession. It is equivalent to a permit to settle a given portion of the public lands, with a promise implied that if the party shall so settle and remain for ten years, he shall become, by such residence, fully and legally entitled to a right of property. This first permit of the governor to settle on the lands is called a concession, which conveys, as we have just remarked, a right of possession, defeasible by sale, by abandonment, or by death. If the widow or the heirs of the grantee shall not remain on the land so long that the ten years possession of the original claimant shall have been completed, then the party has a fair claim to what has been called—

A royal title.—This is nothing more than a real title in fee, as contradistinguished from the possessor's title by concession. It implies the performance of all conditions, and vests in the donee as full and complete a right to give, grant, and convey away as can be made by words. It separates the property from the royal domain. It conveys away whatever the King could give, and leaves no right of forfeiture but by treason or felony. This title is made by the governor, and not by the King, as its name would seem to import, and when limited in the extent of the grant, within the proper powers of the governor, is as full, perfect, and complete as legal ingenuity could devise. But we deem it scarcely necessary to remark that when a governor or other functionary has transcended the powers vested in him, and violated the law under which he acts, his deeds are void, whether by concession or by royal title; and that no force of words, no form of coveyance, can give a right where the maker had none, or vest a title where the law forbids it. If an agent is appointed with limited powers, and he exceeds those powers, his acts are thus far void, whether he derives his authority from a common power of attorney, or from a commission from the King of Spain. The law has declared that no lands shall be granted but on fixed conditions and in fixed proportions; and a grant in which these conditions are violated, and these proportions exceeded, can convey no title and vest no right.

We come now to the grants for military services under the royal order of 1815.

On June 4, 1813, Governor Kindelan, of East Florida, on discharging the militia of the province, asked permission of his Majesty to bestow rewards on individuals for meritorious services, as follows: "To each officer who has been in actual service in said militia a royal commission for each grade he may obtain as provincial; and to the soldiers a certain quantity of land, as established by regulation in this province, agreeably to the number of persons composing each family, and which gift can also be made exclusively to the married officers and soldiers of the said third battalion of Cuba." This is all that is asked by Kindelan, and all that is granted by the King; for the order of March 29, 1815, is a mere naked approval of what was proposed, as above, by Kindelan, "to give to the soldiers of the said third battalion of the Island of Cuba a certain quantity of land, as established by regulation in this province, agreeably to the number of persons composing each family." Now, we have already shown the regulations in this province to be fifty acres for each worker, and double the quantity for heads of families. To say nothing of the fact that every man in this third regiment of Cuba was a man in buckram, we would ask whence does the governor derive his authority to make an unlimited grant of lands, under the order of the King, to an individual without family or force? If, as we have already remarked, he has one hundred slaves, he can have five thousand acres, and if none, he is for himself entitled to one hundred acres, and no more. The advantages the subject derives from this ordinance of 1815 are twofold. First. If he has already obtained lands for his head-rights uuder the order of 1790, he may obtain just as much more for his military services under the order of 1815. Second. If his land is granted under the order of 1790, or by the laws of the Indies, he is compelled to cultivate and occupy them ten years before he can get a title of property; whereas, by the order of 1815, the conditions of the grant have already been performed, and the grant, whether by concession or royal order, on the instant of its date, vests in the grantee a fee-simple, without danger from abandonment or want of cultivation; and this is all. It is limited in its operation to the "soldiers and married officers of the third battalion of Cuba," and it is limited in its extent "to the number of workers in each family." If, then, it is plain that a grant has been made for twenty thousand acres of land to a man without a family, white or black, that grant is bad. We do not deem it the duty of the board to inquire minutely into the number of a grantee's family at the time of the donation, but when an individual states in his memorial that he demands a grant for sixteen thousand acres or more, because he is poor, because he has no slaves; or when a grant is made evidently disproportioned to the workers of the memorialist, and the acknowledged condition of the country, we cannot recommend that grant for confirmation. It has been said, and will again be urged, that these claims would have been valid under the Spanish government; and by the treaty with Spain the United States are bound to ratify and confirm to the persons in possession of the lands to the same extent that the same grants would be valid if the territories had remained under the dominion of the King of Spain." Upon this we have to remark that if the grant is contrary to the letter and spirit of the Spanish laws, there is no reason to believe that the Spanish government would have confirmed it. If Governor Quesada believed that he had no authority to grant lands for "head-rights" until the order of 1790, and Governor Kindelan for military services until that of 1815, it proves this: that in the better days of the Spanish dominion here the governors themselves acknowledged their powers to be limited. In addition to this, there are many instances where the acts of the governors here have been reversed by the authorities at home. The Spanish government, when roused from its lethargy, was governed in its decisions by the laws of the realm, and compelled the governors of East Florida to conform to them; and it is no argument to say that these large grants would have been valid, because the authority of the King would never have been brought to bear on them. This is not true in fact; the King has always acted on grants like these where there was time to communicate and obtain his decision, and these grants of mighty tracts of land by Coppinger, which we are bold to say would never have been made but on the eve and under a certain prospect of a treaty cession—these very grants, if that treaty had failed, would have been declared void by the King himself. We come to this conclusion from his laws and edicts; from his uniform declaration that large bodies of land should not be granted to the rich or to speculators, but should be reserved as gratuities to the poor and honest settler; and that grants should be made for cultivation alone, and not for speculation. "We will give you," is the language of the King to his subjects, "as much land as you can work, and no more." But this matter is not left to supposition All the rights over the soil retained by the King of Spain are transferred to the United States by the treaty, and the United States are now to decide on the validity of these claims, in the same manner as the government of Spain would have done if the government of Spain had been brought to act on them. That duty, by the law of Congress, has been imposed on us; and that duty, to the best of our abilities, limited as we have been in time, we have discharged. And we do now, with great deference and respect, submit this report and the accompanying documents to Congress.

We are, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

CHARLES DOWNING, Register Land Office.
WM. H. ALLEN, Receiver.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

REPORT OF LAND CLAIMS DECIDED BY THE REGISTER AND RECEIVER OF EAST FLORIDA.

No. 1.—Four hundred and fifty acres of land. William Craig, claimant.

This is a good grant. Under the ordinance of 1790 Don Pedro Marrot was commissioned by the governor of East Florida to survey, throughout the several districts of this province, the lands which each claimant had a right to demand under the provisions of the above-named ordinance. In pursuance of his instructions, Marrot surveyed, March 1, 1793, four hundred and fifty acres to Francis Flora. On November 16, 1799, William Craig, the present claimant, who by some means had acquired the title from Flora, applied to Governor White and obtained a concession, and finally, on March 20, 1815, Governor Kindelan gave to Craig a full and perfect title. It is therefore confirmed to William Craig. This land is situated on the east side of St. John's river, at a place called Red Bank.

No. 2.—Two hundred and fifty acres of land situated on the east side of St. John's river, at a place called the Bay of St. Nicholas. William Craig, claimant.

This grant is similar to No. 1. Marrot surveys to John Hammon, on the river St. John's, at a place called the Bay of St. Nicholas, two hundred and fifty acres of land, and grants him a certificate dated January 18, 1792.

William Craig purchases the title of Hammon, by the consent of the governor, and obtains a concession of Governor White, April 22, 1800; and March 20, 1815, he obtains a full and perfect title from Governor Kindelan. It is therefore confirmed to William Craig.

No. 3.—Six hundred and ten acres of land situated at the north wharf of the river Mosquito, and two miles distant from thence. The heirs of José Bonely, claimants.

Joseph Bonely presented his memorial to Governor White September 24, 1796, and on the same day obtained a grant for ten acres of land at the place called North Wharf, on the Mosquito river, and for six hundred acres "two miles distant from the place he mentions." This is the only paper filed in the office. There is no survey, and no appearance of a subsequent perfection of the title; but it was in evidence before the board that José Bonely settled and cultivated the land granted as above, and that he was afterwards made a prisoner by the Seminoles, and his property destroyed. The board, under these circumstances, have confirmed the title to his heirs. Possession and cultivation are proved, and his failure to perfect his title they attribute to his misfortunes.

No. 4.—Two thousand acres of land situated on the west of a large lake about six or seven miles to the east of a plantation of John Williams, known as Spring Garden. Domingo Reyes, claimant.

This is a claim, under the order of 1815, for military services. Don Domingo Reyes calls himself military inspector and overseer pro tem. of the royal and military hospital. He declares that he had borne arms in 1812 in various stations, and had often acted as military secretary. For these multifarious services he prays for two thousand acres of land, and it is granted to him by Governor Coppinger. The memorial is dated February 12, 1816, and the decree of the governor on the 14th of the same month. In most of these claims for military services the title is made at once to the fee-simple of the soil, without, as in this case, any preceding concession. As these grants were made as a reward, or rather as a remuneration for services long since done and performed, we see no difference between a concession and a royal title. Concessions under the order of 1790 require cultivation and occupation; under the order of 1815 nothing is requisite to pass the indefeasible title but the previous performance of military services. The land is described to be west of a large lagoon, distant about six or seven miles from Mr. John Williams' plantation, called Spring Garden, and about twenty miles west of William Williams' plantation on the river Halifax, known by the name of Williams' Place. It is confirmed to Domingo Reyes.

No. 5.—Two thousand acres of land situated on the west side of St. John's river, at a place known by the name of Cabbage Hammock. Francis Marin, claimant.

This claim is similar to that of Domingo Reyes. The petitioner declares that he has performed services as first sergeant of the local militia in 1812, and afterwards; and that, in addition to all this, "he has a large and expensive family." He has thus placed his claim on the double ground of "head-rights and of military services." On the day of his petition, November 15, 1815, Estrada, the acting governor, decrees the land to Mr. Marin "in absolute property;" and in 1821 George J. F. Clarke, the surveyor general of the province, measures it to him. It lies on the west side of the river St. John's, at Cabbage Hammock, and west of Spring Garden. It is confirmed.

No. 6.—Two hundred and sixty acres of land situated on Mills' Swamp, and at a place called Harris' Deading. E. Waterman's heirs, claimants.

Eleazer Waterman, who is now dead, petitions for two hundred and sixty acres of land on Mills' Swamp, and at a place named Harris' Deading; a balance to which he declares himself entitled according to the list of the number of his family and slaves. This petition is dated February 12, 1817. On March 18, 1817, it was granted by Governor Coppinger. There is a survey of the property made to Waterman by the surveyor general in 1821. The board have considered this survey as evidence of continued possession up to its date, and in the subsequent year the province became a Territory. This possession gives to Waterman a title to the land. It is confirmed to the widow and children of Eleazer Waterman.

No. 7.—Three thousand acres of land. The heirs of Thomas Fitch, claimants.

Matthew Guardarrama, by his attorney, Rafael Saavedra de Espinosa, petitioned the government on October 11, 1793, for three thousand acres of land, for the purpose of raising stock, situated on Diego Plains, at a place called Chicazas; and October 16, 1793, Governor Quesada makes the following decree: "Let this party be permitted to place the cattle on the 3,000 acres of land which he petitions for in the place specified, according to the number of his family, and without injury to a third person, until the ten years have been complied with, when the title of property shall be issued to him." And August 31, 1816, Brigida Gomez, widow of said Guardarrama, petitioned the government for a royal title for said land; after which follows the testimony of Francis Paz, Daniel Sweney, and John Gonzalez Montes de Oca, by which it is proved that the conditions of said grant have been complied with. In 1818 Andrew Burgevin surveys the same, after which Governor Coppinger grants a royal title for the said 3,000 acres of land to the widow and heirs of said Guardarrama February 16, 1819. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 8.—One hundred acres of land situated at a place called Governor Grant, North river. John Kershaw, claimant.

Don John Joseph Estrada, governor pro tem. of East Florida, in pursuance of the royal order of March, 1815, grants one hundred acres of land to Joseph and Michael Andrew, artillery-men of the local militia. The deed is dated December, 1815, and is a full and indefeasible conveyance. It is surveyed by Andres Burgevin in 1821. It is located at a place called the Chimneys, known as Governor Grant, bounded on the north by the lands of Lazaro Ortega, on the south by vacant lands, on the east by Guana creek, and on the west by the North river. It has been regularly transferred to John Kershaw, the present claimant, to whom it is confirmed.

No. 9.—Two hundred acres of land situated at a place formerly occupied by John Rains, near Mills' Ferry, St. Mary's river. Zachariah Haddock, claimant.

Zachariah Haddock, in a memorial to Governor White, petitions for five hundred acres of land on the St. Mary's river. The governor, by a decree of September 24, 1803, directs that he shall have two hundred, and no more. In 1816 G. J. F. Clarke, the surveyor general, measures to the claimant two hundred, bounded by the place named Mills' Ferry. The board consider the survey of 1816 by the governmental surveyor general as an evidence of continued possession up to that time. It is well known that many who, by ten years' residence and cultivation, had become entitled to a deed of their lands, were too poor to pay the fees required to procure it. This may be the reason, in many cases, that none has been produced; but the possession of the property gave him a right to the land, and it is confirmed.

No. 10.—Five hundred acres of land situated on the south side of St. Mary's river. Zephaniah Kingsley, claimant.

This is a part of a grant made to Burrows Higginbottom by Governor White on September 24, 1803, for seven hundred acres of land on the banks of the St. Mary's. In 1816 George J. F. Clarke, the surveyor general, measures the five hundred acres now in question to Donna Isabel Higginbottom, the widow, at a place on the said river called Higginbottom Bluff. Independent of the rule adopted by this board to consider a survey, when made by the authority of the government, as evidence of possession and cultivation, always requisite in grants under the royal order of 1790, it is expressly declared by the then surveyor general, in his certificate, that the land had been possessed and cultivated up to the time of the survey. Zephaniah Kingsley presents this claim to the board, and produces a deed of conveyance from Isabel Higginbottom. It is confirmed to him.

No. 11.—Fifty acres of land situated on the north of St. Mary's river, south of Trout creek. Zachariah Hogans, claimant.

On August 5, 1808, Governor White granted to Ulrick Smith fifty acres of land on the west side of the river St. John's, about one mile to the south of the mouth of Trout creek, and almost in front of the battery of St. Isabel. In 1818, on the 22d of July, Governor Coppinger, on a full proof of every requisite condition performed, grants a royal title to the said tract in favor of Smith. From the rule adopted by this board, to consider a royal title dated subsequently to January 24, 1818, on a previous concession, as conclusive evidence of occupancy and cultivation, in accordance with the spirit and condition of the grant, it is confirmed. It appears from the memorial of Zachariah Hogans, who has presented the claim to the board, that he is a purchaser from Smith.

No. 12.—One hundred acres of land situated on St. Mary's river, near Pigeon creek. John Hagens, claimant.

It appears by the certificate of Thomas Aguilar, who acted at that time for the secretary, who was sick, that on May 31, 1805, Governor White granted to John Hagens, for head-rights, one hundred acres of land on the river St. Mary's, bounded on the west by the lands of Dr. Travers; and on May 9, 1818 the same land is laid off and measured to Hagens, by the surveyor general of the province, George Clarke. It is confirmed.

No. 13.—One thousand acres of land situated at the point of St. Pablo creek. John McQueen, claimant.

This is a good title and is confirmed. It appears by the certificate of William Reynolds, keeper of the public archives, that the property has been sold several times by consent of government, until it is conveyed, on September 13, 1811, to Bernardo Segui.

No. 14.—One thousand one hundred acres of land situated at the place called McDougall and Bissett's Mosquito. C. E. McHardy's heirs, claimants.

The father of Mrs. Caroline E. McHardy died in the year 1815, and left her 20 negroes, all field-hands, to her husband, Robert McHardy. On July 1, 1815, in his memorial to Governor Estrada, after stating this fact, petitions for a grant of eleven hundred acres of land, five hundred at the plantation known by the name of McDougall, and the remaining six hundred in that of Bissett. On the 18th day of August, in the same year, the grant is made by Estrada. On September 8, 1818, it is surveyed; in 1819 the petitioner, Robert McHardy, declares that she, his wife, has cleared and cultivated the land, and demands a royal title; they produce the concession, the order of survey, and the decree to examine witnesses as to the performance of the conditions universally imposed. It was proved to the satisfaction of the board that the claimant was in possession when she died, a few years since, and that now the land is claimed and owned by her children. It is confirmed.

No. 15.—Two hundred acres of land situated at a place called Sandag's Bluff, St. Mary's river. Burrows Higginbottom, claimant.

By the rule adopted by this board, to consider a royal title made subsequent to the date specified in the treaty as conclusive evidence of the performance of the conditions of a previous concession, this claim for two hundred acres is confirmed.

No. 16.—Two thousand acres of land situated at the west of a place called New Smyrna. Assignee of Samuel Betts, deceased, claimant.

This is a good title. A previous concession, more than ten years' cultivation, and a subsequent royal title. It is confirmed.

No. 17.—One thousand eight hundred acres of land situated on the banks of Matanzas river. Assignee of Samuel Betts, deceased, claimant.

Hepworth Carter, in the year 1791 and 1792, obtained a grant for two tracts of land situated on the banks of the river Matanzas. In 1803 he sells these two tracts, with the improvements, to Samuel Betts; and on July 3, 1815, Betts, the purchaser, obtained from Governor Estrada a full and perfect title to the land so acquired, containing eighteen hundred acres. It is confirmed.

No. 18.—One thousand acres of land. Heirs of Thomas Fitch, claimants.

Fernando de la Maza Arredondo petitioned the government, and had granted to him, on the 19th of January, 1807, one thousand acres of land on the banks of the river St. John's, at a place called Spring Garden; and on November 16, 1817, Governor Coppinger issued a royal title to him for the said land. Arredondo subsequently conveyed this land to Thomas Fitch, to whose heirs it is confirmed.

No. 19.—One thousand nine hundred acres of land. Heirs of Thomas Fitch, claimants.

Don Juan de Pierra certifies that on July 21, 1803, Governor White granted to Gabriel Perpall nineteen hundred acres of land situated in the territory of Mosquito, at a place known as Mount Oswald; and on May 10, 1815, said Perpall petitioned the government for a royal title for said land.

Then follows the testimony of Joseph M. Hernandez, Fernando de la Maza Arredondo, jr., and John Huertas, proving that Perpall had complied with the conditions of the grant; in consequence of which the governor and auditor of war decreed that there be issued to the interested the necessary royal title, after which Governor Kindelan issued to said Perpall said royal order of 1790, dated May 24, 1815. Perpall subsequently conveyed the property to Thomas Fitch, to whose heirs it is confirmed.

No. 20.—Eight hundred acres of land. Heirs of Thomas Fitch, claimants.

Pablo Fontane petitioned the government on November 14, 1817, for eight hundred acres of land situated on the west side of the river St. John's, at a place called Pengree's Old Plantation, for services, which was granted him on the same day. And on November 15, 1817, Governor Coppinger issued to said Fontane a royal title for the said land, under the royal order of March 29, 1815. Fontane afterwards sold this land to Thomas Fitch, to whose heirs it is confirmed.

No. 21.—Two hundred acres of land. William Drummond, claimant.

William Drummond presents his memorial for five hundred acres of land, and alleges that he claims by purchase from John Youngblood. Youngblood's title is evidence by a certificate of Juan de Pierra, dated February 19, 1799. By this certificate it appears that Juan Youngblood presented his memorial on the day of the date of the certificate, "petitioning for a piece of land situated on the north side of the river St. John's, on the cove of Cedar creek, and called Mount Pleasant," without specifying the quantity. The governor grants the land asked for, "until, according to the number of persons he may have for its cultivation, the corresponding quantity shall be surveyed to him." We find in the survey made by Marrot in 1801, by order of Governor White, that Jesse Youngblood has assigned to him two hundred acres. We believe that the land is the same, and that a mistake has been made by Marrot or Pierra in the first name of the grantee. We hear nothing of Jesse Youngblood; but it was in evidence before the board that he lived for many years on the St. John's river, and that his transferree, Drummond, owns the land at the present time. We therefore confirm to Drummond, if he has any conveyance which has not yet been produced to this board, two hundred acres of land at the place designated, and no more. And if Drummond has no claim by deed or otherwise, we relinquish the right of the United States to John Youngblood, if living, or to his heirs if he be dead.

No. 22.—Three hundred acres of land. Heirs of Ambrose Hull, claimants.

Pedro Marrot, commissioner for the distribution and survey of lands, appointed by the government of East Florida, had surveyed to Daniel Plumer (nine caballerias) three hundred acres of land, on December 9, 1791, for head-rights, at a place called Colonel Plumer, on the river St. John's; and on December 23, 1819, Governor Coppinger issues, in favor of the heirs of said Daniel Plumer, a royal title for the same, under the royal order of 1790. The board have no hesitation in confirming this title. The survey was made by order of White, and the title granted by Coppinger, although subsequent to the date specified in the treaty at which the authority to grant lands is made to cease in the Spanish government, yet they consider the document then granted by Coppinger as conclusive evidence that all conditions of occupancy, either implied or expressed, were fully complied with. It appears by the memorial presented to this board that the land has been sold by the heirs of Plumer to Ambrose Hull, since dead. The claim of the United States is relinquished.

No. 23.—Two hundred acres of land. Heirs of Ambrose Hull, claimants.

In 1800 Governor White grants to James Hall three hundred acres of land, "for head-rights, on Anderson creek." In 1814 he, by the permission of Governor Kindelan, exchanges this grant for two hundred acres on the opposite (north) side of the river St. John's, between the lands of Zephaniah Kingsley and Daniel Plumer. It is afterwards surveyed to him by Geo. Clarke, and on the 18th of January, 1816, Governor Coppinger grants him a royal title. This tract of two hundred acres was afterwards purchased by Ambrose Hull, since dead, to whose heirs it is confirmed.

No. 24.—Nine hundred acres of land. A. McDowall and A. Black, claimants.

José de la Maza Arredondo petitioned the government for nine hundred acres of land situated in Graham's Swamp, which was granted him on May 20, 1805, and on June 20, 1815, Governor Estrada grants him a royal title for said land under the royal order of October 20, 1790. It is confirmed.

No. 25.—Two hundred acres of land. Ann Papy, claimant.

Juan de Pierra certified that on the 3d day of June, 1797, Gasper Papy applied by memorial to Governor White for two hundred acres of land situated on the north and head of Mosquito river, on a creek called Tomoca, and that the governor made the following decree on the said memorial: "Agreeably to his request, without injury to a third person." It being proved to the board that Papy cultivated the land, it is confirmed to Ann Papy, his representative, and the present claimant.

No. 26.—Two hundred and thirty acres of land. Joseph Bergallo, claimant.

Henry Groves petitioned Governor Coppinger for two hundred and thirty acres of land situated at a place called Thomas' Swamp, on the river Nassau, for his services as a militia-man during the revolution in this (then) province; and the said governor issued a royal title, under the royal order of March 29, 1815, to said Groves for the said two hundred and thirty acres of land, which title is dated March 18, 1817. It is confirmed.

No. 27.—Four hundred acres of land. Pedro Cocifacio, claimant.

In 1793 Pedro Cocifacio petitions Governor Quesada for four hundred acres of land "at a place called Donna Maria, bounded by vacant lands, for the purpose of employing his slaves." On the next day, 22d of October, the permission is granted "to locate himself at the place he sets forth, and until, in the survey which must be made to him, there shall be assigned to him by the commissioned officer the number of acres his family may be entitled to." There is no survey filed in the papers; but it was in evidence before the board, on the personal knowledge of the clerk, that the claimant long cultivated and possessed the land granted him. It is confirmed.

No. 28.—Two hundred and forty-five acres of land. Domingo Fernandez, claimant.

Lewis Mattair petitioned the government on January 1, 1807, for four hundred acres of land situated at the mouth of the river Nassau, for head-rights, to which Governer White made the following decree on January 26, 1807: "Let there be granted to the interested two hundred and forty-five acres of land in the place which he solicits, without injury to a third person, and are those that correspond to him according to his family, being well understood that he must not claim damages in case that, from any motive of the royal service, he be ordered to retire into the interior of the province, and that he must establish himself on said land in the term of six months, counted from the date." George Clarke surveys two hundred and forty-five acres of land for said Mattair, on July 16, 1816, at a place called the Orange Grove, on Amelia island. Governor Coppinger gives a royal title in 1820 in favor of said Mattair, and Mattair conveys the land to Domingo Fernandez in 1820. It is confirmed.

No. 29.—Three hundred acres of land. Domingo Fernandez, claimant.

Governor White issues, in favor of the widow and heirs of William Jordine, a royal title for three hundred acres of land situated on Amelia island, at a place called Myrtle Grove, and dated July 8, 1807, under the royal order of October 29, 1790. Bernardo José Segui, in 1814, as attorney for the widow of William Jordine, conveyed the land to Domingo Fernandez, the present claimant, to whom it is confirmed.

No. 30.—One hundred acres of land. Domingo Fernandez, claimant.

William Jondine petitions the government for one hundred acres of land, for head-rights, situated on Amelia island, at a place known by the name of Willow Pond; and Governor White issues a royal title to Isabella Jordine, widow of the said William Jordine, for the said land, on July 18, 1810; and the said widow conveys said tract to Domingo Fernandez, August 18, 1810. The title of the United States is relinquished to the claimant.

No. 31.—Four hundred and fifty-five acres of land. Charles Sibbald, claimant.

Charles Sibbald petitions the government on December 14, 1815, for one thousand acres of land, for head-rights and services, situated on the river St. Mary's, at a place known by the name of Cabbage Swamp. Then follows the reports of the military commandant of Amelia island, and captain of militia of Fernandina, in favor of said Sibbald; after which Governor Coppinger makes the following decree on January 30, 1816: "In consequence of what has been reported by the political and military commandant of Amelia island, let there be granted to the interested four hundred and fifty-five acres of land in the place which he solicits, without injury to a third person, and are those he is entitled to according to the number of slaves he has set forth, and the orders for the general distribution; despatching to him, from the secretary's office, the customary document, which will serve him for his security." It is in proof that Sibbald had occupied and cultivated the tract here granted, and it is confirmed to him.

No. 32.—Two hundred and forty-five acres of land. Philip Solana, claimant.

Philip Solana petitioned the government for lands for services; and Governor Coppinger issued in his favor a royal title for two hundred and forty-five acres, for the rearing of stock, situated on the plains of Diego, at a place known by the name of Two Sisters, and dated May 6, 1816, under the royal order of March 29, 1815. It is confirmed.

No. 33.—Six hundred acres of land. E. Hudnall's heirs, claimants.

In this case the claimants produced to the board the certificate of Juan de Pierra, dated August 4, 1802, to the following facts: "That to the memorial of Don Ezekiel Hudnall, soliciting six hundred acres of land, at a place known as the Beach Hammock, bounded on the south by lands granted to Benjamin Armstrong, the governor granted the land on the day and date of the certificate." It was proved to the board that Hudnall owned the lands to his death, and that they are now possessed by his representatives. It is confirmed.

No. 34.—Three hundred and forty-seven acres of land. John Salome, claimant.

Samuel Eastlake, who lived on the St. John's river, was entitled to three hundred and forty-seven acres of land, and Captain Marrot, on January 6, 1792, surveys to him that quantity, and grants him his certificate as a voucher. In 1800 it appears that Eastlake was dead, and one John Salome had intermarried with the daughter of the deceased. In January of that year he stated to the governor, in a memorial, the above facts, and begs a renewal of the title of Eastlake which had been mislaid. The governor grants his request; and on this petition of Salome, for a renewal of the title to Eastlake, the parties have founded another claim for the like quantity of land. There is but one tract of three hundred and forty-seven acres conveyed by the papers before us. It is evident that Eastlake, by himself and his successors, possessed the land long enough to give him a title. It is therefore confirmed to his representatives.

No. 35.—Three hundred and eighty-five acres of land. Heirs of N. Sanchez, claimants.

Nicholas Sanchez presented himself to government and solicited lands for his services under the royal order of March 29, 1815; and on April 24, 1816, Governor Coppinger issues a royal title in his favor for three hundred and eighty-five acres situated at a place called St. Diego. It is confirmed.

No. 36.—One thousand one hundred and thirty acres of land. John M. Sanchez, claimant.

Francis X. Sanchez petitioned the government for lands, under the royal order of October 29, 1790, situated at a place called San José, on the river St. John's; and on January 29, 1811, Governor White issued a royal title in favor of the children and heirs of said Sanchez, deceased, for one thousand one hundred and thirty acres of land in said place. It is confirmed.

No. 37.—Twelve acres of land. Joseph M. Sanchez, claimant.

This is a claim to twelve acres of land on the outside of the gate leading from this city to Jacksonville. Governor White grants eight acres on the application of the party on 11th January, and four more on May 21, 1808. It was surveyed, cultivated, and possessed till 1819, at which time Coppinger grants him a full and perfect title. It is confirmed.

No. 38.—Six hundred acres of land. Joseph S. Sanchez, claimant.

Pedro Marrot, commissioner for the distribution of lands, had surveyed for Francis X. Sanchez six hundred acres of land situated at a place called San Diego, on May 8, 1793; and on February 12, 1811, Governor White issued a royal title for the same in favor of the children and heirs of said Sanchez, deceased, under the royal order of October 29, 1790. It is confirmed.

No. 39.—Five hundred acres of land. F. M. Arredondo, claimant.

On March 9, 1803, Juan de Pierra certifies that, to a memorial presented by Samuel King soliciting five hundred acres of land on the south part of the river Nassau, about ten miles above its mouth, and to the south of a creek called Sample, Governor White directs that the land shall be granted and surveyed. Annexed to this document is a certificate of Thomas Aguilar, with a dozen titles, declaring that the lands contained in the preceding document have been transferred, with the knowledge of the governor, to Don Fernando de la Maza Arredono, sen., because King had moved to the United States. This paper is dated June 19, 1808. Although the board are decidedly of opinion that no sale could be made of lands before ten years of occupancy had expired, yet as this has been done with the consent of the governor, by whom it might again have been granted, it is constituted by that consent a valid transfer. On September 5, 1819, the land was surveyed by Andres Burgevin, who declares himself constituted for that purpose by the governor. The board, therefore, are of opinion that the title should be confirmed; the survey, by order, being sufficient proof of Arredondo's possession.

No. 40.—One hundred and forty-five acres of land. John Herault, claimant.

John Herault produces a decree of Governor White, dated September 25, 1806, granting him one hundred and forty-five acres of land, "which correspond to him," situated at a place called the Hammock of Deep creek, about seven miles and a half to the northwest of St. Augustine. The condition attached to the decree is that Herault shall take possession in one month after the date. There is no evidence that this was done; but as it was in proof that the party claiming had for many years been in possession of the property, and as he produced a survey of the surveyor general, dated April 20, 1818, the board have no hesitation in confirming his title.

No. 41.—Four hundred acres of land. The heirs of Thomas Fitch, claimants.

Pedro Marrot has surveyed for Francis X. Sanchez four hundred acres of land, on May 9, 1793, situated on the plains of Diego, at a place called the Swamp; and on February 9, 1811, Governor White issues a royal order in favor of the children and heirs of said Sanchez for the said land. Thomas Fitch purchased this land of Sanchez, to whose heirs (Fitch's) it is confirmed.

No. 42.—Two hundred and nine acres of land. Joseph Arnau, claimant.

José Arnau claims a small island on the east side of North river, supposed to be about nine miles from the city of St. Augustine, as well as two hundred acres of land on the main opposite the island. In his memorial to Governor White, dated August 27, 1799, he petitions for the above number of acres, because they "correspond to him and his family according to the gift of the King." The commandant of the engineers, to whom it is referred by the governor, reports favorably; on which Governor White directs that "the land which he solicits be granted to this party, until, according to the persons he has for its cultivation, the correspondent quantity be assigned to him." There is no proof that the precise quantity of land to which he would be entitled by the number of his family was two hundred and nine acres. But the board would deem it onerous and oppressive on the party to compel him at this distance of time to produce evidence on that point. We deem the petition reasonable, and confirm to the applicant the island and the two hundred acres on the main land.

No. 43.—One hundred and forty-five acres of land. Farquhar Bethune, claimant.

On January 30, 1811, Governor White grants in absolute and indefeasible right, without condition, four caballerias and eleven acres, about one hundred and forty-five acres of land, to the children and heirs of Francis X. Sanchez, under whom Bethune claims. There is no evidence of the transfer to Bethune filed before the board. But the right of the Spanish government was vested in the heirs of Sanchez; and the board relinquish and confirm to the parties all claim which the United States may have to the land in question, leaving to the claimant, Bethune, to show, against the original grantees, whatever title he has derived from them. The land is described to be "at a plantation called St. Domingo, &c.," bounded and distinguished as follows: "the first line runs south 25° west, begins on the bank of the river with a cypress marked with a cross, and ends with a stake of the same mark, said line, bounding the land of Don Gerardo Forrester, 51 chains and 50 links long; the second line runs east, begins by said stake, and ends by a red oak marked with the same mark of a cross, on the bank of the river St. John's, measuring 56 chains and 50 links, running on the banks of said river and forming a triangular figure, &c." It may be well to observe that in the deed to this land the governor avows his derivation of a right to grant it from the royal order of 1790, which applies only to foreigners, and Sanchez is said to have been a native subject of the crown of Spain; but as he had authority to grant to natives by other ordinances of the King, the board see no difficulty in confirming the title.

No. 44.—Four hundred acres of land. Levin Gunby, claimant.

In 1803, in answer to the petition of the claimant, Governor White grants the land situated on the west side of St. John's river, at Dame's Point, with the usual conditions. In 1812 the then governor directs the survey to be made to the party, and the surveyor, Clarke, deposes that it was not done because of the disturbances at that time in the province. The board consider that the order of government for the survey is good evidence of conditions performed, and also that the ten years had elapsed necessary to complete his title. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 45.—One hundred and seventy-five acres of land. Clara Prates Arnau, claimant.

Clara Prates Arnau claims one hundred and seventy-five acres of land in the North river, about nineteen miles north of St. Augustine, "to the west of the North river of this city." It is decreed by Governor White that "there be granted to the interested, the deceased husband of the applicant, one hundred and seventy-five acres of land in the place he solicits, &c., with the condition that he has to establish himself on said land within the time of one month counted from the date." There is no evidence that Arnau took possession of the land within the term specified by Governor White; but there is filed in the papers a petition for a survey from the widow, now the applicant, directed to Governor Coppinger, in which she prays a survey of the land originally granted to her husband; this is dated June 15, 1818. Governor Coppinger directs the survey to be made, which is accordingly done, and the board, believing this acquiescence of the governor sufficient proof of the performance of the condition required by White, confirm to the applicant the land in question.

No. 46.—Two thousand six hundred acres of land. Heirs of Ambrose Hull, claimants.

Ambrose Hull petitions the government for lands, and there were granted to him on January 15, 1801, two thousand six hundred acres of land in the Territory of Mosquito, and on February 2, 1812, Governor Estrada issues a royal title in favor of said Hull for head-rights under the royal order of October 29, 1790. The title is therefore confirmed to Hull's representatives.

No. 47.—Two hundred and forty-five acres of land. Heirs of Edward Ashton, claimants.

The heirs of Edward Ashton claim two hundred and forty-five acres of land, and produce a royal title granted by Governor Coppinger on January 18, 1816. In this title it is declared that Edward Ashton was a new settler, and claimed under the ordinance of 1790; that he had lived on the property ten years before the date of the instrument; and that the number of acres granted were those which corresponded to his family. The land is described to be at the head of a creek called Turnbull, to the northwest of this city; the boundaries are contained in the title. It is confirmed.

No. 48.—One thousand acres of land. Heirs of Lucus Creyon, claimants.

The heirs of Lucus Creyon claim title to one thousand acres of land situated in the Territory of Mosquito, bounded on the north by lands of Donna Nicholasa Gomez, on the east and south by vacant lands, and on the west by Indian river. On May 13, 1817, Governor Coppinger gave to Don Francisco Reyes a full and unconditional grant, vulgarly called a royal title, to the lands as above described, because of the royal order of 1790, which order applies alone to strangers, and because of the services of Reyes as one of the militia who were entitled to remuneration under the royal order of 1815. How Reyes, who is declared in the grant itself to be a citizen of St. Augustine, and is believed to have been born a Spanish subject, could claim under the ordinance of 1790, the board is not advised; but they have no doubt that, from the latitude of construction given to the order of 1815, for the remuneration of military services, the governor had the power to make the grant to Reyes. The title of the United States is therefore relinquished to him and to those claiming under him.

No. 49.—Two hundred and fifty-five acres of land. The heirs of Thomas Fitch, claimants.

Pedro Marrot had surveyed on May 10, 1793, for Francis X. Sanchez, two hundred and fifty-five acres of land, for head-rights, situated on Diego plains, at a place called General Savannah; and on February 11, 1811, Governor White issues to the children and heirs of the said Sanchez a royal title for said lands, under the royal order for October 29, 1790. It is confirmed to the heirs of Thomas Fitch, who purchased the land of the grantees.

No. 50.—Two hundred and fifty acres of land. John Low, claimant.

John Low presents his memorial to this board for two hundred and fifty acres of land, and alleges that he receives the title by purchase from William Carney. The title to Carney is evidenced by a full and perfect grant made by Governor Coppinger on April 4, 1816. There is a concession to Carney, a foreigner, under the order of 1790, made by Governor White on July 14, 1800; and previous to the royal grant the land was surveyed by G. Clarke. It is situated on the south bank of Bell's river, a tributary of the St. Mary's, and is bounded as follows: "the first line runs north 39° east, begins with a pine tree, and ends with a stake, seventy-one chains long, and bounds on this side the lands of Eleazer Waterman; the second line runs south 39° west, seventy-one chains, beginning at a pine and ending at a stake on the bank of Bell's river, and bounds on the lands of John Low; the third line runs north 51° west, thirty-five chains, to a pine, and is bounded by vacant pine land. It is confirmed.

No. 51.—Eight hundred and fifty-one acres of land. William Harvey, claimant.

Pedro Marrot, commissioner for the distribution of lands, had surveyed for Hannah Moore, for head-rights, on November 21, 1791, fourteen caballerias and four acres, (equal to 470 acres of land,) situated on St. John's river, at a place called Cunningham, being part of what corresponds to her and family, consisting of one white person and thirteen negroes; and on December 17, 1791, said Hannah Moore petitions the government for the remainder of the land she is entitled to on the west side of the river St. John's, on Peter's creek; to which Governor Quesada makes the following decree on December 17, 1791: "Being true what this party sets forth, Captain Don Pedro Marrot will take measures to have surveyed the number of caballerias she and her family are entitled to according to the instructions, and without injury to a third person;" and on July 8, 1818, Governor Coppinger issued a royal title in favor of the heirs of Hannah Moore for eight hundred and fifty-one acres of land, as above situated. The royal title is evidence of cultivation, and it is therefore confirmed.

No. 52.—Two hundred acres of land. William Harvey, claimant.

William Harvey petitioned the government on November 27, 1817, for two hundred acres of land, for services, situated on Trout creek, at a place known by the name of Mrs. Mutt, about three miles from Picolata; to which Governor Coppinger makes the following decree on December 1, 1817: "In attention to the services which the interested sets forth, and are well known to the government, let this memorial be passed over to the notary of government that he may make out to him the title of property of the lands which he solicits." Governor Coppinger issued a royal title for said land to Harvey on June 9, 1818.

This is a grant for military services. The concession in 1817 was without conditions; all grants made under the royal order of 1815 required no cultivation of ten years or less, and it is as good as a royal title could make it. It is confirmed.

No. 53.—Sixty-nine acres of land. Juana Paredes, claimant.

In 1807 Antonio Cabellero obtained a grant from Governor White for head-rights at Alligator Point. In 1808 he purchased of Mariano Fontan, by the permission of the governor, fourteen acres at the same place; and in 1811, by the like permission of Governor Estrada, he purchased thirty acres more of José Hernandez Carmona, adjoining his former tract. In 1819 the whole is surveyed to him by Andrew Burgevin. There was full proof of its continued cultivation.

Juana Paredes is the present claimant, to whom it is confirmed.

No. 54.—One hundred and ten acres of land. Juana Paredes, claimant.

Governor White, on April 17, 1807, granted Juan Paredes one hundred and ten acres of land on the North river, in lieu of the same quantity previously granted him on the river Mosquito, and found on inquiry not to be vacant. This appears to the board from the certificate of the secretary, Juan de Pierra. On June 2, 1818, Juana Paredes, who represents herself as the daughter and sole heiress of Juan Paredes, petitioned the governor for a survey, which is ordered accordingly, and Andres Burgevin selected for the purpose.

For some cause not known to the board, and not material, it was not surveyed until 1823, and then by a man called G. Darling. It is bounded by the lands of James and Stephen Arnau. It is confirmed.

No. 55.—One hundred and fifty acres of land. Maria Mills, claimant.

William Mills petitions the government on November 13, 1798, for one hundred and fifty acres of land situated on Johnson creek, eight miles to the south of little bar of Matanzas, for head-rights, to which Governor White makes the following decree on November 15, 1798: "Let there be granted to this party for the present, and without injury to a third person, the land which he solicits, until, according to the persons he may have for its cultivation, there be assigned the quantity he is entitled to." On May 12, 1819, George J. F. Clarke surveys for said Mills the said one hundred and fifty acres of land. We have invariably decided that any act done, though subsequent to January 24, 1818, by the governor, or an authorized agent, which would go to prove that cultivation and occupation had followed a long precedent concession, entitled the claimant to a confirmation of his claim. This claim is confirmed.

No. 56.—One hundred and forty-five acres of land. Francis Brady's administrator, claimant.

John Wright petitioned the government on December 22, 1803, for lands for head-rights, situated on Trout creek, St. John's river, and on the same day the following decree was made by Governor White: "Let there be granted to the interested one hundred and forty-five acres of land, which, according to the new regulation, are those that correspond to himself, his wife, and family, without injury to a third person; and with the condition that he cannot claim damages for injuries in case, from a fear of invasion or other motives of the royal service, he be ordered to retire into the interior of the province." In 1821 George Clarke, the surveyor general, measured off the land to the claimant by order of the governor. It was moreover proved by two witnesses that the claimant had lived on the land more than ten years. It is confirmed.

No. 57.—Forty acres of land. Charles Seton, claimant.

Thomas Holland represents to Governor White that he had long lived in the province, on the lands of others, as an overseer, and now wishes to live on his own. He therefore petitions for a small island called Pelot, in the river St. John's. On December 30, 1807, Governor White grants the land; on January 6, 1815, George Clarke, the surveyor general of the province, surveys the island to Holland, and finds it to contain forty acres. This survey would not have been made to Holland without a full compliance with all the implied conditions of a grant like this. It appears by the memorial of Charles Seton, the present claimant, that he is a purchaser from Holland. The title is good against the United States.

No. 58.—Six hundred acres of land. B. M. Mestre, claimant.

On August 7, 1794, Joseph Hughes and Antonio Mestre jointly petition the governor to permit Hughes to sell the lands which had been granted him to Mestre. The governor, on the next day, grants the permission asked, but directs that Mestre shall not have more land than had been granted to Hughes, until, by the general survey, so much should be measured to him as by the number of his family he might then be entitled to. The original grant to Hughes is not produced, nor is the number of acres specified in the official transfer from Hughes to Mestre; but there is, in 1820, a petition from Bartolo M. Mestre, the son of Antonio, requesting the governor to direct a certified copy of the grant to his father for six hundred acres to be given him. There is also, ten days after this petition, a survey of George Clarke to Bartolo M. Mestre for six hundred acres; and Clarke declares in his certificate that the tract surveyed is the same which was conveyed to the father of the petitioner from Hughes, "with the superior permission of the government, and agrees in all its circumstances with the plat." It is therefore confirmed.

No. 59.—Five hundred acres of land. Geronimo Alvarez, claimant.

Geronimo Alvarez, ensign of the Irish company of militia of this city, petitioned Governor Coppinger for five hundred acres of land situated in the district of Mosquito, at a place called Plantation of Gabardy, for his services during the revolution in this then province; and the said governor issued a royal title, under the royal order of March 29, 1815, to said Alvarez for the said five hundred acres of land, which title is dated January 12, 1818. The name of the claimant appears on the roll of the militia on file in the office; and the claim is confirmed to him.

No. 60.—Five hundred acres of land. Heirs of Gerard Forrester, claimant.

Pedro Marrot, commissioner appointed by the governor and commander-in-chief of this province of East Florida for the survey of lands ordered to be distributed by command of his Majesty, certifies that on December 17, 1791, he has had surveyed and delivered to Gerard Forrester, whose family consisted of seven white persons and two negro slaves, five hundred acres of land situated on the river St. John's, at a place called Chichester. This certificate appears to have been signed by Pedro Marrot, and countersigned by Samuel Eastlake, the surveyor, and is a copy of the original on file in the escribano's office, (now public archives.) F. J. Fatio, a witness, states that said Forrester lived on and cultivated said land for a number of years, until his death in 1803. The board therefore confirm the same to his representatives.

No. 61.—One hundred acres of land. Pedro Miranda, claimant.

This is a royal title, dated November 28, 1816, made to Pedro Miranda by Governor Coppinger for military services. It conveys one hundred acres of land, "for a cowpen and herd of horned cattle, on the river Little St. Mary's, in this province, at a place called Mountford and Lowford." It is confirmed.

No. 62.—Two hundred acres of land. Stephen Cheves, claimant.

In this case a certificate of Juan de Pierra was presented to the board, dated November 14, 1793, declaring that on the 11th of the same month Stephen Cheves, a free man of color, presented his petition, and had granted to him two hundred acres of land "situated on the river Matanzas, known as the Plantation of Tom Johnson." There is no survey or other paper than this certificate of Pierra. It was in proof before the board that Cheves had lived on the land and cultivated it so as to entitle him to confirmation. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 63.—Fifteen acres of land. Juan Segui, claimant.

Juan de Pierra, secretary of government, certifies that, to a memorial presented by Juan Segui, soliciting a new concession of fifteen acres of land, which are situated at a place called Macaris, and which he possessed and cultivated from the time of the British dominion, the following decree was made by Governor White December 1, 1806: "In virtue of the interested having proved his being in possession of said land since the British dominion, let it be newly granted to him, the concession being only in force from the day of the date." It was established to the satisfaction of the board that the claimant has lived on the land ever since the above concession. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 64.—One hundred and seventy-five acres of land. Widow and heirs of A. Ponce, claimants.

On October 11, 1803, Governor White granted to Antonio Ponce one hundred and seventy-five acres of land "at the Orange Grove, at the bar of the Mosquito." The claimant produced as evidence of cultivation an authorized survey, 1819, and a royal title of the same year. There was oral testimony to the same fact. It is confirmed to A. Ponce's widow and heirs, the present claimants.

No. 65.—One hundred acres of land. W. G. Perpall, claimant.

In this case the facts are these: on March 14, 1799, Juan de Pierra certifies that John Daly petitioned for one hundred acres of land at the little bar of Matanzas, adjoining Francis Pellicer's, in exchange for the two hundred acres he possessed at the river Nassau. This was granted by Governor White. On March 9, 1808, Maria Daly, the widow of John Daly, obtained a decree that she have a certified copy of this grant; which, on the same day, was given to her, and on June 10, 1808, the escribano, J. de Entralgo, certifies that a regular sale of the land was made by the widow to Perpall, the claimant. This continued recognition of the title in Daly and his widow for nine years, and those who claim under her, having proved continued possession by the government, is considered by the board as ample evidence that every condition enjoined or expressed had been performed, and the title is confirmed.

No. 66.—Twenty acres of land. W. G. Perpall, claimant.

In 1804 Governor White granted to John Capo twenty acres of land north of the fort at this place. In 1810 Capo sells to Sanchez, and sometime afterwards the widow of Sanchez to W. G. Perpall. Each of the parties, the grantee, the first and second transferree, possessed the property from the date of the concession. It is confirmed.

No. 67.—Five hundred acres of land. A. McDowell and A. Black, claimants.

On January 13, 1818, Andrew Burgevin petitions for five hundred acres of land, for services, situated about half a league northeast from a place called Little Orange Grove, and half a league east from the river St. John's; and on the 24th of the same month Governor Coppinger decrees to him the amount demanded, as that "which corresponded to twenty slaves, agreeably to the accompanying list." On May 27, 1818, the land was surveyed by Robert McHardy, and on April 24, 1819, the same governor grants a full title to the land in question. The execution of a royal title, though subsequent to February 24, 1818, is considered by the board as evidence to show that the conditions of the grant in the concession had been performed to the satisfaction of the governor, and therefore the land is confirmed to McDowell and Black, who have filed the claim, and produced to the board a title derived from Burgevin, the grantee.

No. 68.—Two hundred and fifty and one-third acres of land. Francis Sterling, claimant.

Pedro Marrot, commissioner appointed by the governor and commander-in-chief of this province of East Florida for the survey and distribution of lands ordered to be distributed by his Majesty, certifies that he has had measured and delivered to Francis Sterling seven caballerias and seventeen acres, or two hundred and fifty and a third acres of land, for head-rights, situated on the river Nassau, at a place called Sims' Plantation, which certificate is dated March 3, 1792, and countersigned by Samuel Eastlake, surveyor. It was in proof before the board, by the oaths of Joseph Summerall and Frederick Hartley, that the claimant had cultivated and possessed the above tract of land before the date of the survey in 1792 until the present time. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 69.—One hundred acres of land. Heirs of Manuel Solana, claimants.

Don Manuel Solana applies by petition to Governor Quesada, June 11, 1791, for fifty acres of land to the west of the St. Sebastian's river, and by the ferry on said river, in addition to one hundred previously granted him. He states in his memorial that he has a large family of whites and eleven slaves. The governor on the same day grants him the land. Occupancy and cultivation were proved before the board. It is confirmed.

No. 70.—Four hundred acres of land. Heirs of John McQueen, claimants.

Joseph S. Sanchez, as the representative of the heirs of John McQueen, deceased, claims four hundred acres of land on Amelia island, and bounded as follows: north and west by the waters of St. Mary's river, on the south by marshes on a creek called Hogan's creek, as will appear by a survey of John Purcell, made on November 24, 1809. As evidence of title he produces the certificate of Juan de Pierra, the then secretary of the province, dated November 24, 1798, declaring that, to a memorial presented by McQueen on the same day, and stating that the number of his family justified the grant, Governor White decreed accordingly. The board have decided uniformly that the survey made more than ten years after by authority should be considered as evidence of continued possession. Here is the grant of the governor in 1798, the survey of Purcell in 1809. It is confirmed.

No. 71.—Twenty-six acres of land. Mariano Fontan, claimant.

This is an application from Francis Medicis, the attorney in fact for Mariano Fontan, for twenty-six acres of land, described to be on the points of the river Guana, on the east side of the North river, bounding the lands of Dr. Don Thomas Travers. Medicis presents a power of attorney from Fontan, his principal, and a document from the archives containing his own application in 1820 for a certified copy of the concession to Fontan. This is directed by Governor Coppinger to be given to him, and is briefly as follows: Mariano Fontan in 1804 petitioned of Governor White one hundred acres at the place above specified, as due him, a new settler, from the number of his family. Governor White, who seems to have been always rigorous in granting lands to new comers, decrees the land in accordance with the petition, and the condition that he shall take possession of it in one month. There is a note that sixty acres of the land shall be deducted in consequence of a decree made in 1807, on the proceedings instituted by José Hernandez Carmona, Fontan having sold so much to Juan Paredes. It appears in the same note, signed Pierra, that fourteen acres were subsequently sold to Antonio Cabellero. The board have thought the several subsequent acts of recognition of title in Fontan as proof of all conditions performed. First, the concession is made in 1804; in 1807 they permit him to sell to others the greater portion of the tract, and in 1820 a full copy of the title is directed by Governor Coppinger to be given to his attorney. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 72.—Six hundred acres of land. Joseph Fenwick, claimant.

James William Lee on October 5, 1792, petitioned the governor for six hundred acres of land on the north side of the river St. John's, on Trout creek. Joseph Fenwick, the present claimant, purchased the land of Lee, and obtained of Governor Kindelan, on April 16, 1814, a royal title. It was previously surveyed by George J. F. Clarke, and is bounded as follows: on the north, east, and west by vacant lands, and on the south by Trout creek. It is confirmed.

No. 73.—Two hundred acres of land. Francis Richard, claimant.

Lewis Z. Hogans petitions the government on June 12, 1817, for lands, for head-rights, situated on Pottsburg creek, five miles from the river St. John's, and half a mile from said creek; and on the same day Governor Coppinger made the following decree: "Let there be granted to the petitioner two hundred acres of land in the place which he solicits, without injury to a third person, and are those which correspond to himself and the number of slaves which he sets forth as appertaining to him; and for his security let there be despatched to him from the secretary's office a certified copy of this memorial and decree, in the customary form." Hogans obtained an order for a survey which was executed in 1818, and in 1822 conveyed the land to Francis Richard, the present claimant, to whom it is confirmed.

No. 74.—Two hundred and fifty acres of land. Francis Richard, claimant.

Francis Richard petitioned the government on November 5, 1817, for two hundred and fifty acres of land situated near St. Nicholas, at a place called Red Laurel Grove, to which Governor Coppinger makes the following decree on November 7, 1817: "Let there be granted to the petitioner the two hundred and fifty acres of land in the place which he solicits, without injury to a third person; and for the security and evidence of the interested let there be given him the corresponding certificate from the secretary's office, in the customary form." In 1819 it is surveyed to Richard by D. S. H. Miller. Richard has been up to this time in possession of the land. It is confirmed.

No. 75.—Three hundred and fifty acres of land. Francis Richard, claimant.

Reuben Hogans petitioned the government, and there were granted to him on July 20, 1798, three hundred and fifty acres of land situated on St. John's river, at a place called Strawberry Hill; and on April 17, 1817, Governor Coppinger issued a royal title in favor of said Hogans for the same, under the royal order of October 29, 1790. Francis Richard, who presented this claim to the board, claims to be a purchaser from Hogans. It is confirmed.

No. 76.—Two hundred and fifty acres of land. Heirs of J. Simpson, claimants.

John Simpson, September 12, 1791, petitioned for a tract of land on the river St. John's, and on the plantation once occupied by Daniel McGirt. His family, by the statement of the petitioner, consisted of three persons, his father, his wife, and himself. On Marrot's list of individuals living on the St. John's, made in 1792, we find the name of this man and the number of his family. There is nothing to show the quantity of land surveyed to him; but, from the regulations of Governor Quesada, we know that he was entitled to two hundred and fifty acres; and Joseph Summerall having proved his possession until his death, and the subsequent continued possession of his daughter, we think it proper to confirm to the heirs of John Simpson two hundred and fifty acres of land at the place specified.

No. 77.—One hundred and twenty-five acres of land. James Arnau, claimant.

The claimant in this case produced to the board the certificate of Juan de Pierra, under date of April 13, 1807, in which it is declared "that, to a memorial of James Arnau, soliciting that he should have granted to him the land which correspond to himself and wife, and one negro, in the plantation called Marshall, which is about nine miles to the north of this city, bounding on the south the lands of Juan Salon, on the east the North river, and on the north the plantation of the deceased Roque Leonardy," the governor on the same day directed that one hundred and twenty-five acres should be granted him, the petitioner. On the 15th June, 1818, the mother of Arnau, in his absence, and on his behalf, prayed an authorized survey of the land, which was made by Andrew Burgevin. In addition to this, Estevan Arnau proved that James, the claimant, occupied and cultivated the land granted as above. It is confirmed.

No. 78.—Two hundred and fifty and one-third acres of land. David Bayley, claimant.

Don Pedro Marrot certifies that he has had surveyed for the inhabitant David Bayley two hundred and fifty and a third acres of land, for head-rights, situated on Nassau river, at a place called Azzar Bluff, which certificate is signed by himself and the surveyor, Samuel Eastlake, and is dated March 5, 1794. It is proved by the oath of Francis Sterling that the claimant, Bayley, was in the actual possession of said land from the year 1792 until the day of his death, about ten years ago, and that his wife and children hold possession to the present time. It is confirmed.

No. 79.—Three hundred acres of land. Mills Drury, claimant.

Don Pedro Marrot certifies that he has had surveyed for the inhabitant Mills Drury three hundred acres of land situated on the river Nassau, which certificate is signed by himself and the surveyor, Samuel Eastlake, and is dated April 7, 1792. Francis Sterling deposes that claimant was in the possession and cultivation of said lands from the year 1792 until he died, about six years ago. It is confirmed.

No. 80.—Three hundred acres of land. Margaret Scofield, claimant.

On the 6th day of June, 1798, Governor White grants to John Lewis Scofield three hundred acres of land in the Twelve-mile swamp, at a place called Springfield. The grant was made for "head-rights." This appears to the board by the certificate of Thomas Aguilar of the same date. It is true that some suspicion has been thrown on the unsupported certificate of this secretary of government, but it is not likely or probable that a forgery would be committed for so small a body of land; and it is moreover in proof before this board, by the testimony of three witnesses, Antonio Capo, Charles W. Clarke, and Anthony Hainsman, that this tract of land was long cultivated by the claimant, and is still in the possession of his family. It is confirmed.

No. 81.—Five hundred and seventy-five acres of land. Ynez Gomez, claimant.

In 1817 Governor Coppinger, on the application of Joseph M. Gomez, granted to him five hundred and seventy-five acres of land on Trout creek, "without injury to a third person, which are those that correspond to him, according to the number of family and slaves he sets forth." Five hundred more are granted to the applicant for the rearing of horned cattle. Pedro Rodriguez has deposed that in 1819 he was in the place now claimed, and saw negroes, and horses, and a crop. If the province had not been transferred to the United States the party would have lost her land without ten years of continued cultivation; but as this tract, by the testimony adduced, was cultivated up to the change of governments, it is confirmed to Ynez Gomez, the present claimant, and the widow of Joseph M. Gomez. The claim for five hundred acres, for horned cattle, is rejected because there is no evidence that he ever used it to that purpose; five hundred and seventy-five acres are confirmed.

No. 82.—Two hundred acres of land. Francis J. Fatio, claimant.

Don Juan de Pierra, secretary of government, certifies that, to a memorial presented by Robert Caldwell, soliciting two hundred acres of land on the banks of the creek called Sampson and on the road leading to the plantation of Francis P. Fatio, about eighteen miles from this city, the following decree was made October 15, 1799, by Governor White: "Let there be granted to this party the land which he solicits, without injury to a third person, until, according to the number of his family, there be measured the quantity he is entitled to;" which land was purchased by F. M. Arredondo, sen. Bernardo Segui deposes that in 1807 he was on the place here claimed, and that it was settled and cultivated; that there were houses built on the same, and it had all the appearance of a thriving settlement. It is confirmed.

No. 83.—One hundred and sixty-five acres of land. Francis J. Fatio, claimant.

Maria Fortune petitioned the government, November 19, 1804, for three hundred acres of land, for head-rights, situated on Emery creek, known during the British dominion by the name of Moss, to which Governor White makes the following decree November 21, 1804: "Let there be granted to the interested one hundred and sixty-five acres of land in the place which she solicits, without injury to a third person, and are those which correspond to her, being well understood that she must establish herself on said land in the space of one month, counted from the date." This land, upon the death of Mrs. Fortune, descended to Michael Crosby, the Catholic priest at this place, between whom and Mrs. Maria Teresa Fatio an arbitration was held in the year 1821, and Mrs. Fatio obtained the land. On the death of Mrs.

Fatio it descended to the present claimant. George J. F. Clarke was sworn in the case, who proved a long-continued cultivation and possession. It is confirmed.

No. 84.—One thousand two hundred and fifty and one-third acres of land. Alexander Creighton, claimant.

Pedro Marrot, commissioner appointed by the governor and commander-in-chief of the city and province of East Florida, for the survey of lands ordered to be distributed by command of his Majesty, certifies that he has had measured for Alexander Creighton, by Samuel Eastlake, surveyor, November 14, 1792, thirty-seven caballerias and seventeen acres, (or 1,250⅓ acres,) situated on St. John's river, at a place called Levet's Plantation, for head-rights. Mr. Allen, a member of the board, and Mr. Fatio, the clerk, having a personal knowledge of the continued cultivation of this land up to the present time, it is confirmed.

No. 85.—Three hundred and sixty-six and two-thirds acres of land. Geronima Martinelly, claimant.

José Peso de Burgo petitions the government, November 19, 1792, for lands situated on a place called Governor Grant, according to the number of twelve slaves, to which Governor Quesada makes the following decree, November 19, 1792: "As presented with the antecedent to which he refers, and notwithstanding the omission noted in the same to the compliance of the orders of this government, and having taken into consideration what he lastly sets forth, there is granted to him, without injury to a third person, the usufruct of the lands which he solicits, until, in the general survey which is now taking place, there shall be assigned him the number of caballerias his family is entitled to." And on the 28th of February, 1818, Governor Coppinger issued to said Peso de Burgo a royal title for eleven caballerias (or 366⅔ acres of land) in the place pointed out. In accordance with the previous decision of this board, the royal title, when subsequent to January 24, 1818, issuing upon a previous concession, is considered evidence of a full compliance with all the conditions of the grant. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 86.—Six hundred acres of land. Heirs of Z. Haddock, claimants.

In 1798 Governor White, on the application of Joseph Youngblood, granted to him "a plantation on the river St. Mary's, which belonged to the rebel John Bailey." It appears from the testimony of four witnesses, whose affidavits are on file in this office, that Youngblood cultivated the land until 1820, at which time it was conveyed to Haddock, by whose heirs it is now claimed. There is no official paper by which to ascertain the precise number of acres to which Youngblood was entitled, as the quantity in the decree of Governor White is left to be affixed by a subsequent survey; but there is a survey of six hundred acres by one Garvin; and as by the number of his family, proved in the above-named affidavits, he would, under the Spanish government, be clearly entitled to that amount for his head-rights, or under our government by the donation law, we have confirmed to the claimants six hundred acres.

No. 87.—Seven hundred and twenty acres of land. Zephaniah Kingsley, claimant.

John McQucen petitioned the government, under the royal order of October 29, 1790, for lands; and on February 27, 1804, Governor White issued to him a royal title for seven hundred and twenty acres situated on an island called Fort George, in the river St. John's, which land was surveyed April 27, 1792, by Samuel Eastlake, surveyor, under the direction of Pedro Marrot, commissioner for the survey and distribution of lands. It was regularly conveyed to Zephaniah Kingsley, the present claimant, to whom it is confirmed.

No. 88.—Five hundred acres of land. Susannah Cashen, claimant.

James Cashen in 1800 applied to Governor White, by petition, for eight hundred acres of land on the west side of the river St. John's, five hundred at a place called Fleming's island, and three hundred acres more in the immediate neighborhood. This land had before this been granted to one John Saunders, who had begged the government to permit him to surrender it, and to give him in exchange lands less sickly on Tomoca. To this petition of Saunders Governor White acceded, granted the lands on Tomoca, and gave to Artemas Ferguson the lands on the St. John's abandoned by Saunders. Subsequently to this Ferguson died, and Cashen, by permission of the governor, purchased of his widow the improvements and the right to the place; and in 1804 Governor White gave to Cashen a royal title for the five hundred acres on Fleming's island. This claim of five hundred acres is therefore confirmed. The three hundred acres were not granted by the governor, because Cashen had not proved cultivation, and they are rejected by this board for the same reason.

No. 89.—Five hundred and sixty-five acres of land. Zephaniah Kingsley, claimant.

Francis Xavier Sanchez petitioned for lands under the royal order of October 29, 1790, and on January 29, 1811, Governor White issued to him a royal title for eleven hundred and thirty acres of land situated at a place called San José, on the river St. John's. As present claimant is a purchaser under the above royal title, the said five hundred and sixty-five acres are confirmed to him.

No. 90.—Two hundred and fifty acres of land. Eugenia Brant, claimant.

Stephen Brant petitioned the government April 16, 1803, for two hundred and fifty acres of land situated on Bell's river, at a place called Rose's bluff, for head-rights; and on April 18, 1803, Governor White makes the following decree: "Let there be granted to this party the land which he solicits, without injury to a third person, and until, according to the number of family he may have for its cultivation, there be assigned him the corresponding quantity; being well understood that he cannot claim damages or losses in case that, from a fear of invasion or other motives of the royal service, he be ordered to retire into the interior of the province." In 1816 it was surveyed to him by George Clarke, surveyor general, which would not have been permitted without cultivation. It is confirmed.

No. 91.—One hundred and fifty acres of land. Samuel Wilson, claimant.

This claim is based on a certificate of Marrot, dated March 2, 1793. It was given to Wilson for "head-rights." William Lane has deposed that Wilson was more than ten years in possession. It lies on the left bank of Trout creek, near its mouth. It is confirmed.

No. 92.—Three hundred acres of land. Isaac Hendricks, claimant.

In December, 1791, Solomon King presented a memorial to Governor Quesada for one hundred acres of land on the river Nassau, "for the rearing of stock." The memorial was referred to Don Pedro Marrot, who decided against the grant on Nassau, because his (King's) full quantity had been assigned him on the river St. John's.

On reference to the report of Marrot of lands surveyed and granted by him under the direction of Quesada to inhabitants on the St. John's, we find three hundred acres allotted to Solomon King at the place described in this application. It is clear to the board, from the evidence of F. Richard and Z. Hogans, whose depositions are on file in this office, that King and his wife cultivated the land until 1807. The present claimant is Isaac Hendricks, who produced a deed from King to Drummond, and from Drummond to himself. It is confirmed.

No. 93.—Five hundred acres of land. Joseph S. Sanchez, claimant.

This land belonged to Jesse Fish by an old British title. It was sold at a government sale, and bought by Francis X. Sanchez, deceased, the father of present claimant. The title is as old as any in the Territory. It is confirmed.

No. 94.—One hundred and thirty acres of land. William Fox, claimant.

William Fox petitioned the government, March 3, 1806, for lands, for head-rights, on the river St. Mary's, to which Governor White makes the following decree on the same day, month, and year: "Let there be granted to the interested one hundred and thirty acres of land in the place which he solicits, without injury to a third person, which are those that correspond to him; it being understood that he cannot claim damages for injuries in case that, from any motive of invasion, he be ordered to retire into the interior of the province, and that he must establish himself on said land in the term of one month, counted from the date." Two witnesses have sworn to continued cultivation and possession. It is confirmed.

No. 95.—One hundred and forty-eight and one-third acres of land. The heirs of William Hendricks, claimants.

William Hendricks petitioned the government, December 12, 1792, for lands on the river Nassau, under the royal order of 1790, to which Governor Quesada made the following decree January 10, 1793: "Agreeably to his request, without injury to a third person, for which purpose the officer appointed for the general distribution of land will measure to this party the quantity he is entitled to, to make up his complement, in the place pointed out, there being no obstacle in the way." According to the above decree Don Pedro Marrot, the commissioner appointed for the distribution of lands, had surveyed to said Hendricks one hundred and forty-eight and a third acres in the place above pointed out March 16, 1793. Cultivation is proved to the present time by Hendricks and his heirs. It is confirmed.

No. 96.—Three hundred acres of land. Reuben Hogans, claimant.

Reuben Hogans petitioned the government for lands, for head-rights, under the royal order of 1790, and on February 29, 1792, Pedro Marrot, commissioner for the distribution and survey of lands, laid off to him nine caballerias, or three hundred acres, on the south bank of Little St. Mary's river, at a place called Hogans; after which Governor Kindelan issued to said Reuben Hogans a royal title for said three hundred acres of land, dated May 26, 1815. It is confirmed.

No. 97.—Two hundred acres of land The heirs of Charles Hogans, claimants.

Charles Hogans petitioned the government, and there were granted to him, December 12, 1815, two hundred acres of land situated on Hendricks' creek, river St. John's; and on January 12, 1818, Governor Coppinger issued to him a royal title for the same under the royal order of 1790. It is confirmed.

REPORT OF LAND CLAIMS DECIDED BY THE REGISTER AND RECEIVER OF EAST FLORIDA.

No. 1.—Four hundred and twenty-five acres of land. Isaac Sasportas, claimant.

A royal title for lands under the ordinances of 1815. These grants for services require no previous cultivation to perfect them, and are not usually preceded by a concession. The date of this grant is May 6, 1818. It is therefore barred by the treaty and rejected.

No. 2.—One thousand acres of land. The widow and heirs of L. Solana, claimants.

This is a grant made January 24, 1818, for military services, without any preceding concession, and by the treaty of cession is excluded. It is rejected.

No. 3.—Two hundred acres of land. Michael Salome, claimant.

This is a survey of George J. F. Clarke, without any concession or royal title. It is unaccompanied by evidence of cultivation or occupancy, and seems, if it be anything but the unauthorized act of Clarke, the mere inchoate ground or basis for a title never granted. It is rejected.

No. 4.—Five hundred acres of land. James G. Smith, claimant.

A survey of George J. F. Clarke, without concession, grant, or evidence of occupation. It is rejected.

No. 5.—Five hundred acres of land. Ellis Stafford, claimant.

Another of Clarke's surveys. No grant. No occupancy proved. Rejected.

No. 6.—Two hundred acres of land. Jacob Summeral, claimant.

Clarke's survey, dated January 18, 1820; barred by the treaty, if it were as valid as a royal title. Rejected.

No. 7.—Five hundred acres of land. John Bellamy, claimant.

Clarke's survey, dated October, 1820, without grant or proof of occupancy, and barred by the treaty. Rejected.

No. 8.—Five hundred acres of land. The heirs of David Garvin, claimants.

Clarke's survey of December 4, 1817. No grant and no proof of occupancy. Rejected.

No. 9.—Three hundred acres of land. Carlos Clarke, claimant.

The same as No. 8. Clarke's survey, dated March 22, 1821. Rejected.

No. 10.—One hundred acres of land. Charles Brevard, claimant.

Similar to No. 9. Clarke's survey of December 14, 1818. Rejected.

No. 11.—Three hundred and ninety-two acres of land. Lewis Bailey, claimant.

Clarke's survey, November 15, 1818. Rejected.

No. 12.—One hundred and fifty acres of land. Ezekiel Haddock, claimant.

Another of Clarke's surveys, with no evidence of title and no proof of cultivation. Rejected.

No. 13.—Three hundred and fifty acres of land. Jesse Newton, claimant.

Jesse Newton claims three hundred and fifty acres of land on the St. Mary's river. He shows no title but a survey of George Clarke, and even that is after the date specified in the treaty at which the powers of the governors to grant lands should cease. The survey is dated November 27, 1818. It is therefore rejected.

No. 14.—Six hundred and ninety-six acres of land. Simeon Dell, claimant.

This claim embraces three surveys of Clarke at different places, making the aggregate amount of six hundred and ninety-six acres, without any accompanying evidence of cultivation, and the surveys themselves dated in 1820. There is no title shown. The claim is rejected.

No. 15.—Six hundred acres of land. Robert McHardy's trustee, claimant.

The basis of this claim is a concession granted by Governor Coppinger January 28, 1818. It is therefore bad by the provisions of the treaty. There is no evidence before this board of occupancy. It is rejected.

No. 16.—One hundred and fifty acres of land. Ezekiel Haddock, claimant.

A survey of Clarke, without other documents to show titles, or evidence to show cultivation. Rejected.

No. 17.—Two hundred and fifty acres of land. William Hartley, claimant.

Clarke's survey alone, dated July 10, 1819. Rejected.

No. 18.—One hundred and seventy acres of land. John Houston, claimant.

Clarke's survey alone. No title and no occupancy proved. It appears by a deed filed in the papers that this land has been sold by John Houston, the first claimant, as he is named in the survey, or John Carrol Houston, as he calls himself in the deed, to another John Houston, both of this Territory, at the date of the deed mentioned, to wit: June 3, 1822. It is rejected.

No. 19.—Five hundred acres of land. James Dell, claimant.

Clarke's survey alone of September 8, 1818. Rejected.

No. 20.—Two hundred acres of land. William Drummond, claimant.

No title and no proof of cultivation. Clarke's survey, dated November 20, 1817. Rejected.

No. 21.—One hundred acres of land. William Drummond, claimant.

Clarke's survey to Henry Groves, the first claimant, dated December 12, 1818, and a deed from Groves to William Drummond, are the only papers before the board. No evidence has been taken in the case. The survey is too late, even though it were otherwise good. The claim is rejected.

No. 22.—Four hundred acres of land. William Drummond, claimant.

On November 1, 1817, George J. F. Clarke certifies that he had measured and laid off to W. Drummond four hundred acres of land on the river St. Mary's, which he declares that he has performed "by order of the government, in part of those which correspond to him and the persons appertaining to him." To support this claim there is no other document, and no evidence adduced. It must be rejected.

No. 23.—Four hundred acres of land. Westley Low, claimant.

Clarke's survey, dated June 19, 1821. Rejected.

No. 24.—Four hundred acres of land. Horatio Low, claimant.

Clarke's survey alone, dated 1821. Rejected.

No. 25.—Two hundred and fifty acres of land. Reuben Lasseter, claimant.

Clarke's survey alone, dated October 13, 1818. Rejected.

No. 26.—Fifty acres of land. Reuben Lasseter, claimant.

Clarke's survey of October 14, 1818. Rejected.

No. 27.—Five hundred and thirty-five acres of land. John Hampton, claimant.

Clarke's survey, dated May 8, 1818. Rejected.

No. 28.—Three hundred acres of land. William Hogans, claimant.

George Clarke's survey alone, dated May 13, 1818. Rejected.

No. 29.—Two hundred acres of land. Charles Homer, claimant.

No title exhibited but Clarke's survey, dated April 14, 1821. Therefore rejected.

No. 30.—One hundred and eighty acres of land. Louisa A. Christopher, claimant.

This claim is founded on Clarke's survey alone, dated April 9, 1817. There is also filed in the papers a conveyance from one John Carrol Houston to present claimant, dated June 3, 1822, but no proof of occupation or cultivation. It is therefore rejected.

No. 31.—Two hundred and fifty-six acres of land. Theophilus Woods, jr., claimant.

Two surveys of George Clarke, dated December 11 and 12, 1820, one for one hundred and sixty and the other for ninety-six acres, making the aggregate amount of two hundred and fifty-six acres of land, without any evidence of cultivation. The same is therefore rejected.

No. 32.—Two hundred acres of land. Theophilus Williams, claimant.

The only title produced in this claim is a permission from one Fernando de la Puenta, military commandant at Amelia island, to George Vincent, to make use of two hundred acres of pine land for the purpose of rearing stock; which permission is dated October 20, 1805. This land was afterwards sold to present claimant in 1818, and, although James Hall and Britton Knight testify that said Vincent was in possession of said land from 1802 to 1818, yet the board do not consider said Puenta vested with any authority to grant lands, and therefore reject the claim.

No. 33.—Three hundred acres of land. John Birks, claimant.

This is a claim based on Clarke's survey, dated June 16, 1818, with no evidence of cultivation. It is rejected.

No. 34.—One hundred acres of land. William Eubanks, claimant.

A survey by Clarke, dated December 12, 1818. No occupation or cultivation proved. Rejected.

No. 35.—One thousand acres of land. José Bernardo Reyes, claimant.

José Bernardo Reyes petitioned the government June 1, 1818, for one thousand acres of land situated on the river Okelewaha, under the royal order of 1815, and is decreed in his favor by Governor Coppinger on the same day, month, and year. It was afterwards surveyed by Robert McHardy October 3, 1818. As this grant is subsequent to January 24, 1818, as specified by the treaty, it is therefore rejected.

No. 36.—Three hundred and fifty acres of land. Charles Deshon, claimant.

Don Carlos Howard, secretary of the government of East Florida, certifies that, to a memorial presented by Walter Drumer, dated April 5, 1793, soliciting lands on the river St. John's for head-rights, the following decree was placed thereon by Governor Quesada, with the same date: "Let the interested appear and take the necessary oath of allegiance; which done, Captain Don Pedro Marrot, appointed for the general distribution of lands, distribute those which correspond to himself and family on the river St. John's, without injury to a third person, agreeing with the interested on the place which may be most convenient, and does not oppose the orders and instructions which the said commissioner has from this government." George Clarke surveys to William Drummond three hundred and fifty acres of land on the south side of the mouth of the Julington creek, St. John's river, July 20, 1819. William Drummond afterwards conveys the same to present claimant. There is no proof before the board that the original grantee ever took possession of the land, as his name is not on the list of the inhabitants on St. John's river, by Pedro Marrot. It is therefore rejected.

No. 37.—Five hundred acres of land. The heirs of Michael Crosby, claimants.

This claim is founded on a royal title, dated March 2, 1818, under the royal order of 1790, for headrights. Surveyed by George J. F. Clarke April 10, 1818. As there is no previous concession filed in the papers, and as the date of the above royal title is subsequent to that specified in the treaty, the same is rejected.

No. 38.—Eleven hundred acres of land. Patrick Lynch, claimant.

The grant of this land, by royal title, bears date in May, 1818. It is therefore rejected.

No. 39.—Two hundred acres of land. Estevan Arnau, claimant.

This is a royal title bearing date June 19, 1818, and is bad by the treaty. Therefore rejected.

No. 40.—Five hundred acres of land. Charles Edmonston, claimant.

The same as the next claim. A grant made to Francis Gué, under whom Edmonston claims, May 18, 1818. It is barred by the treaty of cession and rejected.

No. 41.—Five hundred acres of land. Charles Edmonston, claimant.

Charles Edmonston claims under Francis Gué, to whom a grant of these lands was made June 18, 1818. It is therefore rejected.

No. 42.—Five hundred acres of land. William Drummond, claimant.

This claim was rejected because there was no evidence of title or possession. It was afterwards renewed in the name of Isaac Hendricks, who had purchased of Drummond, and to whom, on the production of the necessary proof and documents, it has been confirmed.—(Vide report A, No. 92.)

No. 43.—Five hundred acres of land. Antelm Gay, claimant.

Gay claims under Lewis Mattair; which grant, by royal title for military services, is dated April 9, 1818. It is rejected.

No. 44.—Five hundred acres of land. Antelm Gay, claimant.

This grant was made by Governor Coppinger to Joaquin Sanchez April 6, 1818, under the royal order of 1815. Sanchez sold to Gay, the present claimant. It is barred by treaty and rejected.

No. 45.—One thousand acres of land. Petrona Martinez, claimant.

This grant, by concession, is made for military services. It is dated January 26, 1818, and is therefore rejected.

No. 46.—Three hundred acres of land. Zephaniah Kingsley, claimant.

In this claim the only evidence of title produced is a bill of sale from James Martinelly to Zephaniah Kingsley. We can find no grant from Governor Coppinger to the land; and if there ever was one, it is acknowledged to have been made after January 24, 1818. It is rejected.

Water saw-mill rights.

LAND OFFICE, St. Augustine, December 12, 1827.

The grants of five miles square, or sixteen thousand acres of land, for the erection of a water saw-mill, present a class of claims totally distinct from any other in this office. It is to be regretted by us that our predecessors in office, although the whole body of these claims was before them, have never decided a single one by which the principles that would have governed the whole class could have been settled. It is left, then, for us to decide on the validity of these grants, and the interests intended to be conveyed by them, without reference to or assistance from any other source of predecision.

We beg leave to present a short historical abstract of these grants in the order in which they were made.

The first claim of this sort that appears to have been presented to the governor of East Florida is that of Horatio S Dexter, for 2,500 acres.

On October 24, 1801, Don Eusebio Bushnell and D. Seth Stubblefield, both inhabitants of the city of St. Augustine, presented their petition to Governor White, stating "that they desire to build a water saw-mill to saw wood at the head of the creek of Moultrie, or at the crossing-place which goes to Matanzas;" but they go on to say, "to enjoy the end proposed, they have occasion for the superior permission of your excellency, as also to be able to cut the necessary logs in said wood, that by these means they may provide this neighborhood with plank, &c., from its being useful to the petitioners and the public." They ask "the necessary license to be able to effect the building of a water saw-mill."

To this petition Governor White, on the same day, directs the "commandant of engineers to report."

The report of the engineer, Don Pedro Deaz Berrio, is rendered in two days after the order, and is favorable to the petitioners. It declares that "the mill does not [will not] injure the defence of the city;" and if there shall result a benefit to the inhabitants in having a supply of timber at prices more moderate, &c., then he "advises to grant" the license which they solicit, and permission that in the woods they may cut the pieces they may have occasion for.

The decree, dated October 27, 1801, closes the proceedings. It is as follows: "Let there be granted to the petitioners, without injury to a third person, permission to construct a water saw-mill, and to cut timber in the places which they solicit."

These are all the material papers in this case. It may be well to add that Bushnell sells to Cowan, and Cowan to Dexter, and that there is an anonymous survey made, so far as appears to the board, without order, and without authority, in a square of one hundred and sixty chains, and containing 2,500 acres. A mill was erected by Bushnell and Stubblefield.

Before our board no evidence has been taken in this case, nor will it be necessary at this time to notice the testimony of a general application on the subject of mill grants.

Let us examine this claim—the petition, the report, and the decree—the property and the rights demanded, as well as those which have been granted; for on the decision of this will depend the decision of all others of this class of claims.

It must be remembered that this city (St. Augustine) was a military fortress, and every application for lands, or for the privileges of building on and cultivating the lands of the crown, as in the case of the mil quiniento, was referred to the chief engineer for his opinion on the influence which the permission applied for might have on the defences of the city.

The application here is, first, for permission to build a mill on public lands: the leave, on reference to the engineer, is granted; secondly, to cut timber on public lands to saw: this, too, is granted.

It does not appear in any part of the preceding case, the first of the mill grants, that the soil is asked for, or that any definite number of acres is granted on which the applicants may cut their logs. They may build a saw-mill at Moultrie, and may cut logs in the woods. This is all that is asked, and all that is granted. If it be a conveyance of the soil, the limits of the grant are restricted alone to the woods of Florida, which are coextensive with the Territory; and the survey, if the grant had been surrounded by vacant lands, must have heen extended to sixteen, twenty, or fifty thousand acres, as well as to two thousand five hundred acres, the quantity claimed. If a permission to build a mill gives a fee to sixteen thousand acres, and if a license to cut timber in the woods gives a title to the soil, then these mill grants are good.

It would be an idle waste of your time, as well as ours, to reason further on this subject. Independently of the want of power in the governors to make such grants, if they were really made, it is evident, from all the papers or claims of this sort, that no title to the soil was intended to be given. Take up any case at hazard; the terms of all are alike: "you may build a mill, and you may cut timber in the woods," are the words used in every grant; nor was it ever pretended that more was asked or more was given. We have in vain attempted to discover the cause or reason for limiting these grants to sixteen thousand acres. No law, no authority is pretended, but the will of the governor; and it seems at first to have been a gratuitous act of Don George Clarke, who, as surveyor general, bestowed this quantity.

The next on the list, in point of time, is the claim of Robert Pritchard's heirs, for 16,000 acres.

In 1803 R. Pritchard obtains leave to build a saw-mill on Dewees' creek, "and the land necessary for it." This is all that is done before the year 1818. Pritchard dies, and there is no mill built. In 1818 James Hall, who had married his widow, renews the papers, as his copy had been lost. On June 29, 1818, James Hall presents his memorial to the governor; states "that the sickness and death of Pritchard, together with the many well-known delays and obstacles in which his testamentary estate was left, had thus far prevented the erection of the mill," and prays that "his excellency be pleased to grant him two miles and a half of pine land to each cardinal point of the compass, on the same terms and under the same conditions in which it has been made to others." On the 5th day of June, twenty-four days before the date of the petition, the governor grants the request "to carry into effect the erection of a water saw-mill, &c., but with the precise condition that, until he shall establish the said saw-mill, this concession shall be held as not made, and of no value or effect until that event takes place." Now, on this grant, we would observe, first, that in the grant made to Pritchard not one word is said of five miles square or sixteen thousand acres; second, that if it had been a valid grant for "head-rights," it would have been forfeited for fifteen years' abandonment and want of occupancy; third, that all of the parties seemed, in 1818, to consider that their claim was forfeited, and required to be renewed; fourth, that the last grant, under Coppinger, under which alone they can claim, the first being forfeited, though made by Coppinger twenty-four days before it was asked for, was made six months after the date at which it is declared by the treaty the power of the governor on this subject shall cease; and, fifthly, that although the words of this grant are imperative "that this concession shall be held as not made, and of no value or effect until a mill is built," to this day no mill has been built. We would not dwell on this subject but to expose a gross attempt at fraud and imposition. In the petition of James Hall to Governor Coppinger in 1818, he expressly declares that "the mill was not set up in consequence of the illness and death of Pritchard;" yet has this same individual produced a witness to this board, one George Petty, to swear that in 1804 "he was hired by R. Pritchard to build a mill;" that said mill was put in operation, and that said Pritchard died in possession of said mill." Nay, more: this said James Hall (who says, in 1818, that no mill was built, and assigns reasons for the failure; now, when he believes that the performance of the conditions of the grant would place him in a more eligible position in 1827, in a memorial to the President of the United States, which is sworn to, and filed in this office,) solemnly avers that Pritchard did build a mill, and died possessed of it. This claim is bad by abandonment; is bad by the treaty; is suspicious from the relative dates of the memorial and concession, which suspicion is increased fourfold by the subsequent contradictions, on oath, of the several statements of the claimant; and if the governor had power to make such grants, conferred by law, and every other claim of this kind were good, we should pronounce this one bad. There is no pretence, even now, that a mill has been built since 1818.

The next claim, in point of time, is that of William Mills, for 16,000 acres of land.

In January, 1804, he applied, as do the rest, by memorial. "It is his intention," he says, "to build a water saw-mill;" and he asks "for the necessary land on a vacant place on Mulberry creek," granting him also the use of the pine land for the supply of said mill. On January 4, 1805, one year afterwards, Governor White says, "he may build a mill;" and as respects the cutting of timber, "there will be issued to him the permission to do so on vacant lands." And upon these papers the claimant demands sixteen thousand acres of land. It is needless to say one word on a subject like this. It is our present object to vindicate the governors from the charge of violating the law under which they acted. They could not make a grant of this kind, and, with one single exception of Governor Coppinger, they never have. In this case it is our duty to observe that four witnesses have been introduced to prove that the mill on this tract was built and in operation from twelve to nineteen years ago; but this cannot vary the principle of decision. If it demanded nothing more than the right to cut timber; if nothing more was granted or could be enjoyed when the mill was in the full tide of successful operation, surely now there is no just claim for sixteen thousand acres of land, unless it be that the loss of the mill is the acquisition of the soil. This, too, must be rejected, without reference to the powers of the governors. These three grants to Dexter, to Pritchard, and to Mills, are all the mill grants made by Governor White.

The next is a grant to Samuel Miles, by Governor Kindelan, in 1813. In this we find the first mention made of five miles square or sixteen thousand acres. The memorialist says that he is poor; that the government owed him money, and it was long before they paid him; that he had enjoyed a good reputation in the city; that he had contracted marriage with a young lady, (giving her name,) the daughter of a man of the greatest consideration for his character; that his father-in-law died, and his wife too, and he moved into the country; therefore he begs his excellency to give him sixteen thousand acres of land to build a mill, as he is a foreigner. Now, we see nothing in the royal order of 1790, the only ordinance under which a foreigner can claim, by which he is entitled, as such, to sixteen thousand acres of land, either because he is poor, because the government owed him money and had paid it, or because he had married a fine young lady; or because his wife and her father had died, and he had moved into the country. Independently of this want of power, we beg leave to remark that this is one of the claims supported by the certificate of Thomas Aguilar, over which so much suspicion has been thrown, and the original of which is not in the office. One witness has deposed that the grant was made by Kindelan, and the original was in the office; but this and some other of the unsupported certificates of Aguilar are the only grants in the office where no condition is prescribed. In this no mill has been erected.

Bernardo Segui, 16,000 acres. This is a mongrel grant "for taking charge of fugitive negroes," "for disbursing money in their maintenance," "for going to the city of Havana as elector," supporting a widowed mother and two maiden sisters, and for a saw-mill of five miles square of land at the west head of Indian river, "in absolute property." The governor is made to say that for the services and the merits of the interested, and for the advantages that will result to the province, "and according to what is provided in the royal order of 1790, relative to the concession of land to new settlers," he grants "to the said memorialist, in absolute property, the five miles square of land which he asks for." Now, in the memorial to which the concession is attached Bernardo Segui describes himself as a native and resident of this city; and yet the governor declares that the grant is made by the order of 1790, which relates to foreigners—new settlers alone—is limited by the number of workers, and requires ten years' possession to give lands "in absolute property." It is strange that a governor who meant to violate a law should, in doing so, refer to the law itself, and aver its applicability to foreigners alone, when Segui was a native. In vindication of Kindelan, we must add that this, too, is a certificate of Aguilar, though the original is in the office of the public archives.

The year 1816, in which Coppinger was governor, was prolific in these grants. In this year we have no less than eleven.

Zephaniah Kingsley.—Here we have a genuine grant made by Coppinger—a permission to build a mill—"but with the precise condition that until he shall establish said water saw-mill this concession shall be held void and of no effect." There is no pretence that the mill is built, and, by the very terms of the concession, the grant is void. The governor further says, "that then" (when the mill is built) "he may make use of the pine trees comprised within the five miles square." Thus it is clear that, as the mill is not built, he has nothing. If it were built, he would have nothing but a license to cut timber. We would now observe that in this case, as in many others, the surveyor has located these lands, these five miles square, in various parts of the Territory—seven thousand at one place, three thousand at another, and five thousand at a third—sometimes one hundred miles apart, without the possibility of transportation to furnish lumber to a saw-mill.

The case of William Hobkirk is precisely similar to that of Kingsley: a right to build a mill, to be void until erected, and then a right to cut timber in "the five miles square." There is no evidence that a mill has been built.

William Drummond asks for three miles square. It is conceded in the very words and on the very conditions of the two preceding, and no mill has been erected. Eleazer Waterman's claim is similar to the preceding, together with the accompanying certificate of Geo. J. F. Clarke, dated May, 1820, that

Don E. Waterman, of the district under my (Clarke's) command, has built a horse-mill. It will be remembered that in this, as in every other genuine grant, even of Coppinger, when the mill is erected nothing more is granted than a license to cut timber. Five thousand four hundred and sixty acres are surveyed to him by Clarke, and this alone is claimed by him.

Francis Richard.—A permission to build a saw-mill, and to make use of the pine trees which are comprised within a square of five miles. The mill has been built, and Richard, not content with the timber, contends for the land.

Andrew Burgevin.—This is a similar application and a similar concession—"no mill, no grant;" and when a mill, then leave to cut timber; and no mill has been built.

The Marquis Fougères.—This grant was made to Argote Villalobos to build a saw-mill, and to cut the pine trees in the five miles square. The marquis has built a mill, and George Clarke has surveyed to him six thousand acres of land on Indian river. Now, whether this tract of six thousand acres on Indian river, one hundred and fifty miles off, is comprised within a tract of five miles square on Black creek, or how the lumber on that tract can be serviceable to the marquis' mill, we are not advised.

Charles Sibbald.—This claim is divided into three surveys: two thousand in Rowley's hammock, four thousand in Turnbull's swamp, and ten thousand acres on Trout creek, on the St. John's, within five miles square, can never vest a right to the soil in Turnbull's swamp or Rowley's hammock, near one hundred miles off, although George Clarke has surveyed it to him; nor can a right to cut pine trees give Mr. Sibbald a right to the soil. But the board beg leave to remark in this case that if industry and zeal, if the erection of a steam saw-mill, which promises to benefit this section of the Territory more than anything else, will entitle an individual to security and indemnity, Mr. Sibbald has a claim to it; and although, in the opinion of this board, he has no title under the Spanish government or by the Spanish laws, yet, if acting meritoriously in good faith will enable him to come before Congress, he has a fair claim for ten thousand acres on Trout creek; and if we were permitted, we would recommend his relief by a private act of Congress.

The next claims are John Breward, Farquhar Bethune, Jehu Underwood, H. S. Dexter, Charles W. Clarke, John Low, Henry Young, and James Dell, who have not built mills, and Charles Seton, who has.

Of George Clarke's claim we shall speak presently. Breward's is a claim of a similar character to the others, with this difference to its prejudice, that it is supported only by a certificate of Aguilar, without any evidence that the original is in the office.

Bushnell, Mills & Seton have erected mills, which have long since been destroyed. How far the abandonment of a right like this to cut timber when the mill was built is annulled by the subsequent destruction of the mill, and long-continued failure to rebuild it, is not for us to decide. The Marquis Fougères, Mr. Richard, and Mr. Sibbald have mills now in successful operation.

In every other case no mill has been built, and the grant, wherever it is genuine, has declared, in as strong language as could be used, that the grant or license shall be void and considered as not made until the mill is built.

From what has gone before, we are warranted in coming to the following conclusions:

First. That the governors of this province were not authorized by any law, ordinance, or decree, in granting away sixteen thousand acres of land for a mill seat.

Second. That where there is no suspicion thrown over the claim they have never attempted to exercise that power, with the single exception afterwards to be mentioned.

Third. That all they have ever granted is leave to build a mill, and leave to cut timber.

Fourth. That Governor White gave a license to cut pine timber in the woods, and Governors Kindelan and Coppinger gave a license "to cut pine timber" within the five miles square, or sixteen thousand acres.

Fifth. That the building of a mill is made in every case a condition precedent to the license to cut timber.

The exception which we have above alluded to is a royal title to George J. F. Clarke, who claims to have performed all conditions for the sixteen thousand acres. George Clarke has for himself, as for others, surveyed this land in different parts of the Territory.

To give an idea of this claim by royal title, we beg leave to copy the preamble of the grant itself, to show the authority under which the governor acted by his own declaration:

"Don José Coppinger, lieutenant colonel of the royal army, civil and military governor pro tem., and chief of the royal domain of this city and its province, &c.: Whereas, by a royal order communicated to this government, on October 29, 1790, by the captain general of the Island of Cuba and the two Floridas, it is provided, among other things, that to foreigners who, of their free will, present themselves to swear allegiance to our sovereign, there will be granted to them lands gratis in proportion to the workers that each family may have; and whereas Don George Clarke, inhabitant of the town of Fernandina, has presented himself, manifesting that he has constructed from his own ingenuity a machine that, with four horses, saws eight lines at one time, cutting two thousand superficial feet of timber in a day, and soliciting in virtue thereof a grant, in absolute property, of five miles square of land for a stock and supply of lumber, which is the portion that has been granted for water saw-mills," &c.

Now, Governor Coppinger gives this land under the order of 1790. That order restricts the granting of land to foreigners. George J. F. Clarke is described as an inhabitant of Fernardina, and for "headrights." This is for a saw-mill "in proportion to their workers." This says nothing of workers. So much for this royal title. The very preamble of the grant shows the governor's want of power.

The views we have taken on this subject we submit with great deference to Congress.

LAND FOR THE SUPPORT OF SCHOOLS IN THE CONNECTICUT RESERVE, IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 30, 1828.

Mr. VINTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the 27th of December last, concerning a further grant of land for the support of schools in the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, reported:

That, by reference to the compact between the United States and the State of Ohio, entered into at the time of the admission of that State into the Union, the committee find that it was agreed that the United States should cede to the State of Ohio, for the support of schools, a quantity of land equal to one thirty-sixth part of the lands within said State, to which the Indian title had been then extinguished; and, also, that a like proportion should be granted for the residue, upon the extinguishment of the Indian title. At that time the Indian title had been extinguished to that part only of the Connecticut Western Reserve which lies east of the Cuyahoga river, and it is believed that the appropriation of land then made was made with reference to the part of the reserve to which the Indian title was then extinct, leaving the residue to be provided for when the aboriginal title should be extinguished. The Indian title to the residue was extinguished many years since; but no provision for the support of schools has yet been made. The committee are of opinion that the spirit of the compact, and the reason of the case, require that this tract of country should be placed upon an equal footing with the rest of the State of Ohio, and, indeed, of all the western States, in the provision that has been made for the support of schools.

SALE OF LEAD MINES IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 30, 1828.

Mr. JENNINGS, from the Committee on Public Lands, in obedience to a resolution of the 11th ultimo, inquiring "into the expediency of repealing such parts of the laws of Congress as prohibits the sale of public lands in the State of Missouri which contain, or are supposed to contain, lead mines," reported:

That it has been the policy of the United States government, ever since the acquisition of Louisiana, to retain under its own immediate control the lead mines of Missouri, by withholding from sales the public lands within which those mines exist, and by declining to perfect inchoate titles to land, for the same reason, which were derived from the French and Spanish governments. The original motives which led to the adoption of this policy, as is believed, cannot be traced to any documentary source.

It is understood that the government of the United States were informed that there were lead mines in Upper Louisiana when acquired from France; but of their number, their value, or locality, no general or authentic information was then in the possession of the government. The mineral lands were therefore reserved from sale "for the future disposal of the United States." One object of the government in this measure, no doubt, was to ascertain the extent and character of those mines, with a view to prevent a monopoly by individuals, who might otherwise have been enabled to regulate both the supply as well as the price of the manufactured article, as interest or caprice might dictate, and likewise to afford time to enable the government, with more precision, to make such disposition of them as would best comport with the character and interest of the United States.

The committee are of opinion that these motives of prudence and policy no longer exist. The rapid population of the Missouri country, and the knowledge derived from the experience of more than twenty years, sufficiently evince the impossibility of monopolizing the lead ore of that region. The committee have not the advantage of detailed and accurate statements, but, from the best information, they are induced to believe that the mineral district in Missouri extends from the Mississippi, on the east, as far westward as the western limit of the county of Washington, and from the headwaters of the river St. Francis, in the south, as far to the north as the Gasconade and Osage rivers, embracing a region of country variously estimated from sixty to an hundred miles square. In this extensive district it cannot be doubted that there are considerable tracts of land in which no lead has yet been discovered; but, from the best information in their reach, the committee assume it as a fact that the external indications of lead exist in almost every part of that district, and that the metal itself has been procured, in greater or less quantities, at so many various places, and so scattered and diversified through the country bounded by the limits above indicated, that it may fairly be said to pervade the whole district.

As to the value of the mines, the committee will only remark that the district in which they are situate is surrounded by settlements, and is in the centre of a rising State, rapidly increasing, and containing already a population of nearly an hundred thousand souls. And hence the committee infer that their value must be sufficiently known to be rightly appreciated by those who wish to purchase such property from the government.

By the report of the United States agent for lead mines, recently made to the War Department, and to which they refer the House, the committee are informed that the product of the public mines in Missouri has not increased, in consequence of the superior richness of the mines on the upper Mississippi and the exhaustion of the upper veins of ore in the mines of Missouri. Yet the same report informs them that there is no doubt that there are veins of ore in the strata of rock below the usual depth of mining in Missouri, which, though known, are abandoned for the hope of more accessible veins at the Fever river mines. This, the committee suppose, must ever be the case so long as those who work the mines have only a limited and temporary interest in them, and are under the necessity of receiving an immediate remuneration for the capital vested in, and the labor bestowed upon, their mining operations. The ore will remain in its natural bed, and never be drawn forth to mingle with and increase the aggregate mass of national wealth, until subjected to the unimpeded action of exclusive individual interest.

There is another view of the subject, which the committee believe entitled to great consideration. The lead mines of Missouri and of the upper Mississippi, as now known, are numerous and extensive, and new discoveries are making from day to day. If all these are to be occupied by tenants of the government, there will be created a numerous band of dependents, who, however they may affect the general government, cannot but be viewed by the local authorities with distrust and jealousy. A population thus dependent upon the federal government and its officers for the continuance of their avocations must of necessity be unsettled and fluctuating, and the products of their temporary and irregular labors will afford a limited compensation for the exclusion from so large a portion of the State of a more settled, permanent, and useful class of citizens.

Believing that the laws prohibiting the sale of the public lands in Missouri which contain lead mines ought to be repealed, the committee report a bill.

LAND CLAIM IN ILLINOIS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 1, 1827.

Mr. BATES, of Missouri, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the claim of the heirs of Philip Renaut to a tract of land of one league in front by five leagues in depth, situate on Lake Pemiteau, or Peoria, in the State of Illinois, reported:

That this claim was referred to the same committee in the year 1817, who, on February 18 of that year, made a favorable report thereon, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the claimants. To that report the committee beg leave to refer the House; and, as far as it contains a statement of facts relating to the particular tract of land in question, or to the history of the country in which it is situate, they adopt the same as part of this report.

The grant to Philip Renaut, under which his heirs now claim the land in question, bears date in the year 1723. At that period the geography of the Illinois country was very imperfectly known, and very few, even of the prominent features of that region, its lakes and rivers, were then designated by the names which they now bear. These circumstances, coupled with the indistinct phraseology of the grant itself, rendered it difficult for the committee to give precise locality to the claim. But by a careful examination of the earliest authentic history of Louisiana, and of various charts and maps of the first explorers of the Illinois, the committee are entirely satisfied that the grant is properly located on the west side of Lake Peoria, (which is but an enlargement of the Illinois river,) and embraces the site of the old fort and village.

The report of the committee made in 1817, and above referred to, sets forth most of the facts upon which the heirs of Renaut must rest their present claim; the committee will therefore content themselves with stating a single additional fact, by which the principle involved in this case is, in their opinion, settled. This government has already passed upon and ratified the legal validity of Renaut's grant. By the same act of grant under which the present claim is made, another tract situate at a place called the Grande Marias, on the Mississippi, was also conceded to Renaut. A considerable part of this last tract was sold out by Renaut in small parcels. The derivative titles of his vendees have been recognized and favorably reported by the land commissioners of the United States, at Kaskaskia. That report has been confirmed by an act of Congress, and the committee are informed that patents are now in course of emission to those assignees of Renaut.

They have not been able to make up a definitive judgment on this claim entirely free from doubt on the minds of some of the members of the committee. Nevertheless, it is the opinion of the committee that the claim is founded in justice, and is in conformity with the laws and practice of the colony at the date of the grant, and that it ought to be confirmed; and for that purpose they report a bill.

Report of the Committee on Private Land Claims on the petition of the heirs of Philip Renaut, accompanied by a bill for their relief, made February 18, 1817.

That in the year 1717 the King of France granted to the "Company of the West" all the country watered by the Mississippi under the name of Louisiana; that in the year 1723 the agent of the company and the officer of the crown granted in free allodial tenure to the said Philip Renaut "one league in front at the Pemiteau village, on the river of the Illinois, looking to the east, and bounding on the lake which bears the same name as the village, and on the other side by the bluffs opposite the village, a half a league above by five leagues in depth; the point of the compass following the river Illinois, down the same on one side, and ascending by the river Arcony, which forms the middle, through the rest of the depth." The committee are fully satisfied that the grant to Renaut is genuine, and made by competent authority. It is not thought necessary to trace Renaut and his heirs to this period. The Company of the West failed in 1730, and in the following year the country was reannexed to the crown of France, without prejudice to grants made in the meantime by the company. Other land was granted in 1723 to Renaut by the same authority, which he disposed of about twenty years thereafter.

In 1763 that part of Louisiana east of the Mississippi, and north of the 33d degree of north latitude, passed under the dominion of Great Britain, and by the treaty of 1783 was acquired by the United States.

By the act of Congress of March 26, 1804, any person claiming land "by virtue of any legal grant made by the French government prior to the treaty of Paris of February 10, 1753, is authorized to file with the register of the land office of the district a notice of his claim." By this act full power is given to the register and receiver of public moneys to determine, according to justice and equity, upon all claims that shall be so filed. Under this act the representatives of Renaut exhibited to the register and receiver this claim. A special report was made by them on this claim on February 24, 1810, in which they detailed the facts, but declined giving a decision. Mr. Gallatin, then Secretary of the Treasury, addressed a letter to them requiring them to make up a decision. In answer, they express doubts of their power at that time to act; but, they say, if we have such power, we declare our opinions to be in favor of the claim. Their letter is not to be found, but its existence is positively proven by the Hon. Jeremiah Morrow and Samuel McKee, who were formerly members of the Committee on Public Lands.

Upon the whole, the members of the committee are unanimously of opinion that the claim ought to be confirmed, and report a bill for that purpose.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR ADJUSTING PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 1, 1828.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 23, 1828.

SIR: I return herewith the memorial of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi in relation to an extension of the time for adjusting private land claims in that part of the State south of the 31st degree of latitude, and have the honor to state that the first act providing for the adjustment of the land titles in that section of the State was passed April 25, 1812. This act does not expressly limit the period in which the reports of the Commissioner should be made to the Treasury Department; but by the 9th section of the act the period for which compensation shall be allowed to the commissioner for that district is limited to eighteen months.

On the 18th of April, 1814, an act supplementary to that of April 25, 1812, was passed, and the period for filing claims was extended to September 1, 1814, and that for making the reports to November 1, 1814. Mr. Crawford, the commissioner, states that his reports were completed October 20, 1814. The act of March 3, 1819, confirms the reports made in favor of claimants under the act of 1812, and allows the claimants who had not filed their notices of claim, and those whose claims had been rejected under the former laws, to enter them with the commissioners until July 1, 1820, for their decision thereon.

It may be proper to remark, that the acts of 1812, 1814, and 1819, above referred to, embraced all the claims in those parts of the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, south of the 31st degree of latitude, between the Mississippi and Perdido. By the act of May 26, 1824, the claimants to lands between the Mississippi and Pearl rivers (St. Helena district) were allowed until January 1, 1825, and by the act of March 3, 1827, the claimants in that part of Alabama south of the 31st degree were allowed until the 1st of September last to file their claims. No act has passed since that of 1819 giving to the claimants in Mississippi further time to establish their claims.

Very repectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

REORGANIZATION OF THE SURVEYING DEPARTMENT IN THE DISTRICT SOUTH OF TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 2, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 30, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 22d instant, "requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the House a statement showing whether any, and if any, what, difficulties exist in the surveyor's district south of Tennessee which prevent the public lands in that portion of the United States from being seasonably brought into market, and whether any further legal provisions are necessary to facilitate the proper operation of the land system in that quarter," I have the honor to enclose a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which, with the accompanying documents, contain the information required by the resolution.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 24, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with the resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the 22d instant, requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to that House "a statement showing whether any, and if any, what, difficulties exist in the surveying district south of Tennessee which prevent the public lands in that portion of the United States from being seasonably brought into market, and whether any further legal provisions are necessary to facilitate the proper operations of the land system in that quarter," and which has been referred by you to this office, I have the honor to state that the legal provisions which have been deemed necessary to facilitate the proper operation of the land system in that quarter are—

1st. A new organization of the surveying department, by which the offices of principal deputy surveyor should be abolished.

2d. A higher maximum price for the survey of the alluvial lands, and for the surveying of such lines as may be necessary to ascertain and connect the private claims with the township lines.

3d. Additional provision relative to the mode of proceeding in relation to claims confirmed on fraudulent papers, and relative to the survey of claims the locality of which is not so specifically designated in the documents on which they have been confirmed as to enable the surveyor to locate and survey them.

On these several points I beg leave to refer you to the following reports and statements, and to make them a part of this report: Report made to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated December 17, 1824.—(See State Papers, 2d session 18th Congress, vol. 2, No. 24.) Letter to the Hon. John Scott, chairman of the Land Committee, dated December 10, 1825, marked A. Letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated December 14, 1827, and the documents accompanying it, marked 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

The surveyor of the lands south of Tennessee has stated various other deficiencies in the laws relative to the survey of the lands in his district which have created difficulties. These difficulties, so far as they are the proper subject for legislative interposition, it is believed, may be removed by legal provision on the several points above suggested, and by a fair construction of the existing laws.

It will, however, be proper to notice in this report a difficulty which the surveyor south of Tennessee has lately suggested, as one that may possibly delay the return of the surveys made in the southeastern district of Louisiana until that district shall have been surveyed into townships and sections. This particular land district is confined exclusively to the Mississippi swamp, nineteen-twentieths of it overflowed or covered with water the greater part of the year; and although destined to become one of the most productive districts of country in the world, yet at present the lands fit, or that can be made by embankment fit, for cultivation are confined to very narrow slips of land along the margins of the Mississippi, or some of the various bayous connected with it. To attempt to survey such a district of country, in its present situation, into townships and sections, would be a useless waste of time and money, and indeed impracticable at any reasonable expense. The second section of the act approved March 3, 1811, (Laws U. S., vol. 4, p. 356,) was drawn with the express view of adapting the surveys to the nature of this particular district of country.

In pursuance of the provisions of this section, a large number of tracts of land were surveyed in 1816 and 1817 along the margins of the various water-courses within the Mississippi swamp, with narrow fronts, and running as far back as the nature of the land would admit. These lands were withheld from sale for a time, under some doubts as to the propriety of selling them, until the country should be surveyed into townships in the ordinary mode. In 1823, however, Governor Robertson having, in an address to the legislature of Louisiana, complained of the delay on the part of the general government in bringing into market the public lands, and in perfecting the titles of private claims that had been confirmed in that State, it was determined to proclaim for sale the lands that had been thus surveyed into lots, and to patent them, agreeably to the series of the numbers they bore on the respective water-courses, and to cause the private claims and back concessions when surveyed to be patented in a similar manner. The paper marked B contains extracts from the instructions given to the surveyor.

The surveying now required to be executed in this district is the survey of a portion of the private claims and back concessions, and connecting them together in such series of surveys as will enable this office to issue patents for them. These series of surveys will exhibit such of the public lands as may be interspersed among the private claims; and should any legislative measures be necessary in relation to them, they can be had, with a better knowledge of the subject, when the surveys are returned.

The surveying now required to be executed in the southwestern district, and the district north of Red river, in Louisiana, is confined almost exclusively to alluvial lands, and to the surveying of a portion of the private claims, and connecting the private claims which have heretofore been surveyed with the township lines. It is this description of surveying which the surveyor south of Tennessee represents that he cannot procure surveyors to execute for the price allowed by law.

In the St. Helena district, lying in Louisiana east of the Mississippi, and that part of the Augusta district in the State of Mississippi lying south of the thirty-first degree of latitude, which include a large portion of poor and piney barrens, no difficulties have arisen, in executing the surveys, from the price allowed for surveying, or from the manner of laying down the private claims—the law applicable to this district having made special provision on this subject. The causes for delay in completing the township plats for those lands are attributable to the continuance of the laws giving further time to the claimants to file their claims, and to the detention of the papers belonging to the office by the late principal deputy surveyor for nearly two years. A very large portion of the public lands and private claims in these districts has been surveyed at an unusual and extraordinary expense to the public, arising out of the improper survey of them into sections previous to surveying the private claims. Since December, 1826, when the papers of the office were obtained by the present principal deputy surveyor, it is understood that great progress has been made by him in preparing the township plats both of the public lands and those containing private claims. The difficulties which have occurred to prevent the approval and return of those plats by the surveyor south of Tennessee to this office have, from time to time, been communicated to you, and as the remedy is presumed to be entirely within the sphere of executive authority, they are not considered as coming within the scope of the present resolution.

In that part of the Augusta land district which lies in the State of Mississippi, and north of the thirty-first degree of latitude, the lands have long since been surveyed and brought into market.

In the Washington land district lying west of Pearl river the public and private lands have been surveyed and the public lands brought into market. When patents, however, for those lands were required to be issued, such discrepancies were found to exist between the plats returned by the surveyor south of Tennessee to this office and the returns of the register as to make it necessary to return a large proportion of the plats, so long ago as 1822, to the surveyor, to be compared with those in his office and those in the office of the register, and the necessary corrections made. But a very small portion of these plats have as yet been retransmitted to this office, and I am advised by the present surveyor that he is under an impression that a large proportion of these surveys were never actually made, (and he has, in a few instances, furnished satisfactory proof of this fact;) that the necessary corrections cannot be made without resurveys; and that he cannot procure such resurveys to be executed at the prices now allowed by law.

In the Choctaw district all the public lands, it is understood, have been surveyed, except an extensive body of alluvial and overflowed lands lying between the Yazoo and Mississippi rivers. The surveyor was instructed not to section such of these lands as were unfit for cultivation, and to survey those fronting on the Mississippi and on Lake Washington in conformity to the provisions of the act of May 24, 1824. These surveys, he also states, cannot be now executed for the price allowed by law.

From this review it will appear that, with the exception of some overflowed lands, there is little or no public land to be surveyed in the State of Mississippi. The duties of the surveyor general relative to the returns yet required to be made to this office, in relation to lands in that State, consist in examining and certifying the township plats prepared by the principal deputy of the lands in that part of the State south of the thirty-first degree of latitude, and in preparing the township plats in the district west of Pearl river, which were returned from this office for correction.

In the State of Louisiana there is not much public land now required to be surveyed, except such as is interspersed among the private claims; but nearly the whole mass of returns relative to the private claims in this State, the surveying of which has been in progress for nearly twenty years, is yet to be prepared and returned to this office.

In the surveying district south of Tennessee there is now a surveyor with a salary of $2,000, and an allowance of $1,700 for clerk hire; three principal deputy surveyors with salaries of $500 each, and an allowance of 25 cents a mile for examining and recording surveys.

As the great mass of the landed property in Louisiana and a large portion of that in Mississippi is founded on claims derived from other sources than the United States, and as the removal of any of the evidence in relation to these claims, or the surveys of them, from the districts in which they lie, would probably be productive of dissatisfaction to the claimants, I take leave to suggest the following organization of the surveying department south of Tennessee, viz: to limit the powers and duties of the surveyor south of Tennessee, under the title of surveyor for Mississippi, to that part of the State lying north of the thirty-first degree of latitude; to establish a surveyor's office in each of the districts in which there are principal deputies, annexing that part of Louisiana lying north of Red river to the southwestern district; the surveyors to be appointed by the President, and invested with all the powers of the surveyor general; to allow to each of them, including the surveyor of Mississippi, a salary of five hundred dollars, limiting the fees for examining and recording surveys to the surveys of private claims; and granting them fees for copies of any survey or certificate that may be required, except such as may be necessary to obtain patents, and a further allowance each of a sum not exceeding nine hundred dollars for clerk hire.

Such an organization, it is believed, would very much facilitate the returns to this office, and would simplify the business, now very complex; would afford great facilities to the claimants, and would be less expensive than the present organization of that surveying department.

All which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

DECEMBER 14, 1827.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has the honor to submit for the consideration of the Secretary of the Treasury the papers numbered from 1 to 7, in relation to certain claims which are stated to have been recommended for confirmation by the register of the land office at New Orleans on forged documents. The Secretary is also referred to the report made from the Treasury Department to Congress on the 24th of December, 1824, with which there were transmitted several documents relative to the fraudulent claims reported by the register north of Red river, and confirmed by the act of Congress passed the 28th day of February, 1823.—(See State Papers, 2d session, 18th Congress, volume 2, No. 24.)

The particular claims designated in the letter of Mr. Harper, dated the 24th of May, 1827, cover about twenty-six thousand acres of land, much of it believed to be of great intrinsic value; and having understood from Mr. Davis, the surveyor south of Tennessee, that many, if not all, of these claims had been surveyed, and that there was reason to believe that the late principal deputy surveyor for the southeastern district of Louisiana had improperly or inadvertently delivered certificates of such surveys to the claimants, it has become indispensably necessary for the executive government to decide the following point, viz: whether patents shall or shall not be issued for those claims confirmed by Congress on the recommendation of the register, but which claims the register subsequently represents to have been recommended by him on documents which, on more particular investigation, are found to be forgeries. If it be decided not to issue patents for claims thus situated, it will then be necessary to take such measures as will enable the claimants to obtain a judicial decision on the validity of their claims. This may be done in two modes: 1st, by an act of Congress providing specially for this purpose; or by an executive instruction, founded on the principle that the proceedings were rendered null and void, ab initio, in consequence of fraud, directing the land claimed under title papers represented to be fraudulent to be surveyed and sold as other public lands. In this event, the parties claiming under presumed fraudulent papers would be enabled to obtain a judicial decision by instituting suits against the individual purchasers. On reference to Mr. Harper's letter of the 29th August, 1827, it will appear that the original title papers have been withdrawn in all the cases he specifies, except that in the name of Wilson. It is understood that the papers in this case are evidently forgeries, and that Mr. Wilson, who was the assignee, has become so satisfied of the fact that he has taken no measures to avail himself of the confirmation.

It appears, also, from the letter of Mr. Hughes, the present register of the land office north of Red river, that the original papers on which his predecessor reported in favor of claims founded on written evidence, and derived from the Spanish government, have also been withdrawn.

All which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE GRAHAM.

No. 1.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 7, 1824.

SIR: It has been stated at this place that you have said that you had made a report to this department upon the fraudulent grants which were confirmed by the act of the last session of Congress; but as no such communication has been received at this office, I am directed by the Secretary of the Treasury to request that you will furnish him, as soon as practicable, with a copy of the document in question.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD JONES, Chief Clerk.

SAM. H. HARPER, Esq., Register Land Office, New Orleans.

No. 2.

REGISTER'S OFFICE, New Orleans, March 9, 1824.

SIR: In answer to a letter just received from Edward Jones, esq., clerk in the Treasury Department, I have to state that on the 9th of March, 1821, I had the honor of addressing a letter to you, of which the following is a copy:

"REGISTER'S OFFICE, New Orleans, March 9, 1821.

"SIR: In my report on land claims, dated 6th of January last, which I had the honor of transmitting to you, I reported favorably on the following claims, which I have since discovered to be forgeries, viz: Nos. 24, 33, 34 35, 36, 37, 65, 66, and 67. These claims purport to be founded on orders of survey granted by Governors Miro, Guyoso, Galvez, and Carondelet. At the time I received these claims I was much pressed with the business of other claimants; and, besides, they were presented by persons of so respectable characters, to whom they had been transmitted for the purpose, that I did not suspect any fraud was intended; and thus, without minute investigation, I reported in their favor. But since arranging and recording the various land titles presented, I have discovered that the whole of the claims above mentioned are feigned and fraudulent. From a comparison of signatures, and other circumstances connected with the papers, I had no doubt myself of their being forged; but, lest I might be mistaken, I have submitted them to the inspection of several persons, and particularly to former clerks of those governors, who have all concurred in their condemnation. I had always been extremely scrupulous with regard to receiving land titles, and, from the length of time I have been in office, I cannot well be deceived in signatures, several of which I detected on presentation; but, for the reasons above mentioned, I did not bestow the proper attention upon those. I hope, however, that, even if those reports of mine have been adopted by Congress, those spurious claims may be still corrected. So far from wishing them sanctioned, I am determined to prosecute the persons concerned in this nefarious transaction, if, in the opinion of the Attorney General, prosecution can be maintained. Since discovering the frauds practiced on me, I have examined minutely with the translator (who, by-the-by, was not present when these papers were received) every other claim reported on, none of which I have any reason to suspect.

"I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

REGISTER'S OFFICE, New Orleans, May 24, 1827.

SIR: In my reports on land claims, dated January 6, 1821, and transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and which, I presume, are now in your office, in common with others, I reported favorably on the claims Nos. 24, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 65, 66, and 67, believing the titles exhibited at the time to be genuine; but, some short time afterwards, the clerk and translator, being engaged in recording the land titles which I had received, on examining the papers relating to the above numbers, suspected them to be forged, which suspicion he communicated to me. Not being a competent judge of the signatures of the Spanish governors whose names were signed to those papers, I submitted them to the inspection of some gentlemen who were better acquainted with those signatures than myself, who pronounced them to be forgeries.

Thereupon, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, counteracting the reports which I had made on those claims; but it appears, through some unaccountable circumstance, that letter was not laid before Congress, and the whole of my original reports were confirmed.

I have been lately informed that some of the persons concerned in those claims (with a view, no doubt, to induce people to buy them) have said that positive orders had been given by "the department" to the surveyor general to survey those lands, and that the surveys had been returned to my office. The first of these statements I do not believe, and the latter I know to be false. Not knowing what extraordinary measures may be taken to procure patents, I think proper to apprise you that I have not, nor will not, issue patent certificates for those lands without your express order, or unless I shall be compelled so to do by judicial authority.

Please to reply to this letter.

I am, &c.,

SAM. H. HARPER.

No. 24.—Bernado de Deva claims a tract of land situated as follows: in the parish of Lafourche Interior, behind a depth of forty arpents, granted by the King of Spain to Carlos Gauhcan, Lucia Bruse, and others, fronting the property or lands of one Jacente Bernard, and lying on a bayou distant about six leagues from the Mississippi, on the right side thereof; being in the whole a league square.

The claimant produces a request (petition) to the Baron de Carondelet, in which he states that he being appointed by the said baron a curate for the said parish of Lafourche, and that, having gone there, he found neither church nor house to live in, and the inhabitants so poor as to be unable to support him. Under these circumstances, he asks for a league square of land, which, under date of the 14th of March, 1793, Carondelet granted him, and ordered the surveyor to put him in possession. I am, therefore, of opinion his claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 33.—Robert Martin claims a tract of land situated on the Bayou Bœuf, in the county of Lafourche, having a front of forty arpents on said bayou, with a depth of forty arpents, bounded above by land of Pilboro, and below by vacant land.

This land is claimed by purchase under François Flores, in whose favor an order of survey was made by Governor Galvez on the 7th of August, 1777. I am of opinion this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 34.—Robert Martin claims a tract of land situated on the Bayou Blake, in the county of Lafourche, having a front of fifty arpents on both sides of said bayou, with a depth of forty arpents. This land is claimed by purchase under Miguel Saturnine, in whose favor an order of survey was made by Governor Guyoso on the 2d of November, 1798. I am of opinion this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 35.—Robert Martin claims a tract of land situated on the Bayou Bœuf, in the county of Lafourche, having a front of forty arpents on both sides of said bayou, with a depth of forty arpents, bounded above by land of Montaran, and below by land of domain. This land is claimed in right of purchase under Antoine Pilboro, in whose favor an order of survey was made by Governor Galvez on the 2d day of July, 1776. I am of opinion this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 36.—Robert Martin claims a tract of land situated in the interior of Lafourche, on the Bayou Bœuf, having a front of thirty arpents on both sides of said bayou, with the ordinary depth of forty arpents, bounded above and below by public lands. This land is claimed by right of purchase under Jaques Monteran, in whose favor an order of survey was made by Governor Galvez on the 5th of May, 1775. I am of opinion this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 65.—Louis Cossier claims, for the use of Robert Martin, a tract of land situated in the parish of Lafourche Interior, fronting on the Bayou Catton, and containing forty arpents front on each side of said bayou, and forty arpents in depth, bounded, in the year 1788, above and below by vacant land. This land is claimed by purchase under an order of survey made by Governor Miro in the year 1788. I am of opinion this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 66.—Louis Duma, for the use of Robert Martin, claims a tract of land situated in the parish of Lafourche Interior, containing fifty arpents front on each side of the Bayou Catton, and forty arpents in depth, bounded, in the year 1798, above by vacant lands, and below by lands of Cossier. This land is claimed by purchase under an order of survey made by Governor Guyoso on the 7th of March, 1798. I am of opinion this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 67.—Jacques Lambez, for the use of Robert Martin, claims a tract of land situated in the parish of Lafourche Interior, containing a front of thirty arpents on each side of Bayou Catton, and forty in depth, bounded, in the year 1789, by Cossier above, and below by vacant land. This land is claimed by purchase under an order of survey made by Governor Miro in the year 1789. I am of opinion this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 37.—William Wilson claims a tract of land situated on both sides of the Bayou Blake, having a front of forty arpents on both sides of said bayou, with a depth of forty arpents, bounded on one side by lands of Miguel Saturnine, and on the other by vacant land. This land is claimed by purchase under John Llano, in whose favor an order of survey was made by Governor Guyoso on the 8th of August, 1798. I am of opinion this claim ought to be confirmed.

LEXINGTON, August 29, 1827.

SIR: I have this morning received your letters of the 16th instant. Your letter of the 21st June I have not seen, being absent from New Orleans at the time it probably reached that place. I was not aware, before the reception of your last letter, that the lands claimed by Wilson and others had been surveyed. I never furnished the surveyor with any special orders of survey for those lands, and if they have been surveyed, it must have been done under the authority of my general reports, a copy of the whole of which I furnished to the principal deputy surveyor, after the confirmation of those reports by Congress.

When I left home, no surveys for these lands had been returned to my office; and if they had, I should not have issued patent certificates upon them without orders from you.

After being satisfied that the documents on which these claims are founded were fraudulent, I applied to the district attorney of the United States, and also to the attorney general of the State of Louisiana, to inform me whether there was any law of the United States, or of the State, which would authorize a criminal prosecution against the parties concerned in this transaction, and was informed by both these gentlemen that no such law existed; and when those claims were subsequently confirmed by Congress, (which I conceived at the time irrevocably vested the title in the claimants,) and not being able to use these documents in support of a criminal prosecution, I delivered them (one excepted) to James Bowie, who left with me his power of attorney from Robert Martin for that purpose. The original paper in the case of Wilson, not being demanded, is still in my possession. Some of these papers were recorded by the clerk before suspicion attached to them, when I ordered the clerk not to record the remainder, so that if any contestation shall hereafter take place in relation to those title papers, I should suppose the originals would be required to be produced, inasmuch as no certified copy of them can be given from this record book. The fact of my having written a letter to the then Secretary of the Treasury, counteracting my reports upon those claims, has been mentioned in a former communication.

These are all the material facts on this subject which I can at present collect from memory.

I am, &c.,

SAM. H. HARPER.

WASHITA, May 20, 1825.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th March last, requesting me to send to your department before the next session of Congress all the original papers filed with Mr. Sutton, late register, &c.

I received his books, papers, &c., a few days since. On examination, I find there is not one original document amongst the claims recommended by him for confirmation, and confirmed by an act of Congress approved February 28, 1823. The claimants have been suffered to withdraw the original titles.

I remain, with great respect, &c.,

JOHN HUGHES.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to G. Davis, esq., surveyor, &c., at Washington, Missouri, dated December 26, 1824.

"I enclose a copy of a report made to the House of Representatives on the subject of surveying the public and private lands in the district north and south of Red river, and will forward you a copy of the documents accompanying it so soon as they are printed. They consist principally of your late letters, your correspondence with Mr. Wailes relative to the fraudulent claims, and extracts from your private letter of the 29th of October.

"Until Congress shall take some measures in relation to the frauds and attempts to make improper locations, it will be necessary for yourself and principal deputy surveyors to exercise the greatest possible precaution in relation to the approval of surveys for private claims; the deputy surveyors should be instructed to make no surveys without satisfactory evidence that the land surveyed was that intended to be confirmed, which evidence should be returned with the surveys; and if there is reason to believe that the claim is fraudulent or improperly confirmed, or that imposition is attempted in the location of it, all such cases, together with the evidence, should be submitted through you to this office, to be laid before Congress.

"This arrangement will not retard the completion of the township plats and series of surveys, as the claim will be laid down on them as required to be surveyed by the claimant, and the lands will therefore be reserved from sale until Congress shall decide, or point out some mode of deciding, on the suspended and difficult claims.

"In relation to the fraudulent claims in the New Orleans district, no information has been regularly filed in this office. I understand that Mr. Harper says that he wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject, but his letter does not appear to have been received. They were confirmed, I believe, in the names of Martin and Wilson."

Extract from a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Hon. John Scott, chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives, dated December 19, 1825.

"SIR: In reply to your letter of the 16th instant, enclosing two resolutions of the House of Representatives: the one relating to the expediency of erecting the State of Louisiana into a separate surveying district, and the other allowing compensation to the land officers for extra services performed under the act passed March 2, 1821—I have the honor, in reference to the first resolution, to enclose an extract from a report made to the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the surveying district to which Louisiana is attached at present.

"The surveying of the lands in Alabama south of the 31st degree of north latitude by a late act was placed under the superintendence of the surveyor of Alabama, but that act did not repeal the previous law, which had placed the surveying of the private claims under the immediate superintendence of the principal deputy surveyor, appointed under the provisions of the 11th section of the act of March 3, 1819, volume 6, page 434, whose powers extended to that district of country south of the 31st degree of latitude and east of the Mississippi river, in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. Should it be deemed expedient to abolish the office of the principal deputy surveyor, it will be necessary to make provision for placing the surveying of the private claims under the superintendency of the surveyors of the respective States, and for the arranging and transporting the papers and records. The records in relation to the private claims in Alabama south of the 31st degree of latitude are deposited with the register and receiver of the Jackson Cotta district, in Mississippi, and with the principal deputy surveyor. Special provision will be required to be made in relation to them. I have, in my report to the Secretary, suggested the propriety of making provision by law for compelling the officers to surrender up the public papers. It was made in consequence of the refusal of two of the principal deputies, who had been superseded by the surveyor south of Tennessee, to surrender the papers belonging to their office; in one case the papers have been obtained, but in the other they are yet withheld on the plea that they form a part of the vouchers of the account of the principal deputy which has not been settled."

Extract from a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Levin Wailes, esq., surveyor general, Washington, Mississippi, dated July 27, 1823.

"SIR: Your letter of the 30th of April last, relative to the surveying of the private and public lands in the State of Louisiana west of the Mississippi, was, I find, not answered when I came into this office, and I have taken it up with a view of giving you such general instructions relative to the surveying of the lands in the several land districts of that State as will enable us to bring into market as soon as practicable all the unappropriated land—an event particularly desirable, as the delay has been productive of great loss to the public, and afforded ground of complaint to some of the constituted authorities of that State.

"The act of April 18, 1814, having in a great measure removed the difficulties relative to the surveying of the claims confirmed by the commissioners, and the previous acts having authorized complete grants to be surveyed at public expense when necessary, I perceive no reason why all the private claims in the southwestern district of Louisiana may not be promptly surveyed and connected with the township lines, and their proper numbers given them, except that which may arise from the act of the last session of Congress extending the time for entering back concessions to eighteen months, from the 28th of February last; and, to obviate the difficulty, you are authorized to survey all the lands in this district which might be claimed as back concessions under the 5th section of the act passed March 2, 1811, and the two subsequent acts reviving and continuing that section, in the same manner as if they had been entered as back concessions, giving them their proper numbers; and if they shall not have been claimed as such previous to the expiration of the time limited, they may then be considered as tracts surveyed under the discretionary authority vested in the surveyor by the act of March 3, 1811, and sold at public sale as other public lands.

"I am not aware that there are any public lands in this district which may not be divided, agreeably to the general provisions of the laws, into townships and sections, without incurring extraordinary expense, except in that portion of the district which lies east of the Teché and Bayou Bœuf, and perhaps some small portion of land on those bayous emptying into the Gulf of Mexico, between the Teché and Vermilion rivers. Whatever public lands there may be within these portions of the district fit for cultivation you will cause to be surveyed agreeably to the provisions of the 2d section of the act of March 3, 1811, page 141 of the volume of Land Laws, varying the front and depth as circumstances may make necessary. These surveys it would be desirable to connect with the township lines where they have been extended, but where they have not, and where either the nature of the country makes it impracticable, or deputy surveyors cannot be had to run those lines for the sum allowed by law, it may be dispensed with, and the surveys made in conformity to "the instructions given by your predecessor for surveying the public lands adjoining navigable streams, lakes, bayous, &c., in the Orleans Territory, under the 2d section of the act of March 3, 1811," and in conformity to such other instructions as your greater experience may suggest—describing the surveys and giving them their numbers as circumstances may require.

"In the southeastern district there appears to have been surveyed 1,570 tracts between the Lafourche and Chaffalia, in compliance with the provisions of the 2d section of the act of March 3, 1811, and in conformity to the instructions of your predecessor, alluded to in the former part of this letter. These lands, although surveyed many years ago, have not been brought into market, I understand, because the township lines were not run, and they, of course, could not take their sectional numbers. I am confident, from the nature of the country and the prices of labor, that it will be impracticable to obtain surveyors to run the township lines at present for the compensation allowed by law; it is decided, therefore, to bring those lands into the market as soon as practicable, without running all the township lines, and to designate them in the proclamation by the number of each survey, and the particular water-course on which they lie.

"You will proceed to survey immediately the lands in this district, including the island of New Orleans, which are subject to pre-emption as back concessions, whether claimed or not, in the forms that would be given them if claimed, assigning numbers to them in such manner as will completely identify them, and marking particularly in the plats those numbers which are not claimed as pre-emptions. To do this, it would be advisable to divide them into several series of surveys, beginning the numbers in each at some well-known and unchangeable point. Within the island of New Orleans I presume that no other surveys will be for the present required, except those last mentioned, and of some private claims; should there, however, be any public lands within the island which it would be desirable to bring into market, you will cause such to be surveyed in conformity to the 2d section of the act of March 3, 1811, giving them their numbers as above stated.

"The surveys for private claims in the southeastern district will be numbered with the same numbers by which they are designated in the several reports on which they were confirmed."

Extract of a letter from George Davis, surveyor general, dated Washington, Mississippi, April 12, 1826, to George Graham, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

"In reply to the part of your letter of the 15th ultimo, received this morning, which relates to the surveying and numbering of back concessions in the southeastern district of Louisiana, I enclose herewith an extract of a letter from Mr. Turner, principal deputy surveyor of that district, dated the 11th ultimo, and will observe, as I have observed heretofore, that I did not happen to know until lately, if, indeed, I now know, that the system of series of surveys suggested in your instructions to Mr. Wailes on the subject had not been carried into operation before I came into office. This should have been done fifteen years ago, when it might have been very practicable. The difficulty of doing it now is fully exhibited in the enclosed extract, which I do not think can be rendered more plain by anything that can be further said on the subject. The delay of which you speak, and in the regret you express upon the subject I deeply participate, is, as I have just said, of fifteen years' standing, and has at length grown into an evil which it is beyond the powers of this office to remedy, in my opinion, without the aid of additional laws. The connected map of each series of which you speak, you will have perceived, is what is implied in my instructions to Mr. Turner, and which is obviously as necessary as township maps of other parts of the country; but what can now be done?"

Copy of the extract of Mr. Turner's letter, referred to in the foregoing letter of George Davis, dated Donaldsonville, March 11, 1826.

"I have deferred writing to you on the subject of numbering the double concessions till the present, from an expectation that I might, by some labor and expense, succeed in collecting such field notes as would enable me to proceed in making some important connexions, and in laying out the district into series, and to attach the proper numbers to those surveys. In this attempt I have succeeded but partially. I cannot conceive that there is any other possible method of numbering them legally than by making entire connexions of all the series comprised in this district. Under existing circumstances, this appears impracticable, as the most convenient and profitable portion of this work was completed prior to my appointment for this office; so that what yet remains unfinished is both inconvenient and unprofitable, and interspersed throughout the district; consequently, no deputy surveyor would engage to execute, on condition that he must make the connexion for the distance of eight or ten miles, for probably the advantage of surveying three or four double concessions. Had Wilson, at the commencement of surveying these lands, have subdivided the district into series, and enjoined it upon the undertaker to accomplish the surveys of all the double concessions included in such series, and to return such notes as would have enabled him, or any other incumbent of this office, to form connected plans at that time—to have done this, the additional labor would have been comparatively trifling; but at present it is a difficulty of considerable magnitude."

B No. 3.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to George Davis, esq., surveyor general, dated May 29, 1826.

"I deeply regret that the surveys in the southeastern district have been made in such a manner as to make it difficult, if not impracticable, to form them into a series as will enable you to issue patents for private claims. I still hope, however, that this can be done, at least to a great extent; take the Bayou Lafourche for instance, and I should think there was no insuperable obstacle to laying down and connecting the private confirmed claims, the donation claims, pre-emption rights, and the public lands on each side of the bayou, in such a manner as to give them separate numbers, by which they could be patented. In making these connexions, it is probable that you would in some instances be under the necessity of paying more than four dollars a mile for running these lines. The savings that you may make in your contracts for the Choctaw district will create a fund applicable to the cases where you may be compelled to exceed four dollars a mile for running these lines."

B No. 4.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated March 2, 1827, to George Davis, surveyor general, at Washington, Mississippi.

"The difficulties suggested by you, in relation to the surveys of the back concessions or pre-emptions, granted by the 5th section of the act passed March 3, 1811, and those reviving the same, were stated to the Hon. Wm. L. Brent, of Louisiana; and, under some expectation that he might procure an explanatory act, I have deferred giving an answer to your inquiries.

"My own opinion is, that, under the provisions of the act above referred to, and in conformity to the general construction which has been given to all the acts granting pre-emptions, the back pre-emption must be equal in quantity to the front claim, on which it is founded; provided such pre-emption does not exceed forty arpents in depth, and provided it does not cover land claimed by other persons; and provided it does not extend so far in depth as to include land fit for cultivation, bordering on another river, creek, bayou, or water-course.

"No surveys having been made at the time when the law permitting entries to be made expired, and payments having been made on the estimates of the individuals making the entries, such payments will rarely correspond with the quantities which will be contained in the actual surveys. Legislative interposition will, therefore, be necessary. In the meantime, however, the surveys should progress agreeably to the law, and in those cases where the claimant has paid for less than he claims, or claims less land than he has paid for, or than he ought to have paid for, the land thus claimed can be protracted in the mode he claims it, within the regular survey, and designated by dotted or colored lines.

"When a series of surveys in the southeast district, or a township plat in the southwest district, shall have been completed in this mode, they will, if necessary, be submitted to Congress, and such measures taken as to them may seem fit."

C.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated December 15, 1825.

"The surveying of the public lands has progressed regularly and satisfactorily, with the exception of the public lands and private claims in the State of Louisiana, and that part of Alabama south of 31° of latitude. In this section of the country but little progress has been made in surveying the private claims, and such parts of the public lands as it is desirable to bring into market. A variety of causes has occasioned, and will continue to occasion, much embarrassment and difficulty in completing the surveying of this section of the country; much of this embarassment is attributable, however, to the extension of the laws for the adjustment of private claims in Louisiana, to the organization of the surveying department, and to the difficulty of procuring surveyors to survey the public and private lands, and to connect the private surveys which have been made with the township lines, in certain portions of this section of the country, for the compensation allowed by law.

"The surveying of the lands in Louisiana is by the law placed under the superintendence of the surveyor south of the State of Tennessee, who resides at Washington, Mississippi, and the surveying of those in Alabama south of 31° of latitude, by a late act of Congress, was placed under the superintendence of the surveyor for that State; but within this district of country there are three principal deputy surveyors, who are appointed by the surveyor of the lands south of Tennessee, the duties and powers of one of which officers extend to the surveying of the private claims in that part of Alabama lying south of 31° of latitude. In a report formerly made from this office, and submitted to Congress, it was stated that this organization was defective, and further experience has confirmed that impression. It is therefore respectfully recommended that the offices of the surveyor of lands south of Tennessee, and those of the principal deputy surveyors of Louisiana, be abolished; that a surveyor be appointed for the State of Louisiana, whose duties and powers shall be limited to the surveying of the lands within that State; that a principal deputy surveyor be appointed for the State of Mississippi, invested with the powers, and who shall perform the duties required of the surveyor south of Tennessee, in relation to the surveying of the lands within the limits of the State of Mississippi; that the surveying of all the lands south of the 31° of latitude in Alabama be placed under the direction of the surveyor of that State.

"Such an organization, it is believed, would expedite the ultimate completion of the surveying of the lands; would give more general satisfaction to the citizens immediately interested, and might be made more economical. The salaries and clerk hire for the surveyor and principal deputies now amount to $5,200. The principal deputies are allowed, in addition, a fee of 25 cents a mile for every mile of the boundary line of each survey examined by them, and 25 cents for every certificate; allowing to the surveyor for Louisiana, for his own compensation and clerk hire, $3,500, and to the principal deputy for Mississippi, for his compensation and clerk hire, $1,500, the expense under the proposed organization would be $5,000.

"The objection to the abolishing of the office of the principal deputy surveyors in Louisiana, and consolidating the surveying department for both the States of Louisiana and Mississippi under one office, is, that a large portion of the best lands in each of those States is held as private claims, much of the evidence of the titles to which is to be found in the files and on the records of the surveyors' offices; and if they were removed from one or the other of these States, it would subject the claimants to inconvenience, and would produce great excitement among the citizens of the State from which they were removed.

"The public lands in Mississippi, so far as the Indian title has been extinguished, have nearly all been surveyed, and no difficulty exists in relation to the surveying to be executed in that State, except as to the surveying required for the correction of errors. The organization proposed is believed to be entirely adequate for all the purposes of a surveying department located in and confined to the limits of that State.

"Under the existing laws the maximum price allowed for surveying is four dollars per mile, and that sum has been given, indiscriminately, for the surveying of all lands for which contracts have been made. It is represented that much of the alluvial lands in Louisiana, and the surveying and connecting the private claims generally, cannot be contracted for at that price; it is therefore recommended that provision be made by law for increasing the maximum price for surveying the alluvial lands, and for surveying private claims and connecting them with the township lines in that section of the country within the limits of the land district south of Tennessee, and in that part of Alabama south of 31° of latitude; and, if it is deemed necessary, the price now allowed by law for surveying the other description of lands within those districts might be reduced. Should any new organization of the surveying department in this district be made, it will be necessary to provide for the removal and arranging of the papers, and for the infliction of a penalty on any officer refusing to give up the records and papers of his office."

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 636. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIM OF THE MARQUIS DE MAISON ROUGE IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 4, 1828.

Mr. WHIPPLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the claim of the Marquis de Maison Rouge to a tract of land in the State of Louisiana, reported:

The committee do not deem it necessary to enter into an examination of the evidence which has been filed, either in support of or against the claim of the Marquis de Maison Rouge to several tracts of land situated in the parishes of Ouachita and Catahoola, in the State of Louisiana, and said to contain thirty leagues square. It is sufficient, perhaps, for the committee to state that the claimant or claimants set up title to the land in question by virtue of a grant, or pretended grant, issued by the Baron de Carondelet, dated June 20, 1797, and that the government of the United States resist the claim: firstly, because the documents to establish the claim of those who set up title under the Marquis de Maison Rouge, if authentic and genuine, (which is not admitted,) do not show that a grant has ever been made to the Marquis de Maison Rouge in his own individual right; and that it was only a contract with him as agent of the persons whom he was to bring with him as settlers upon the said land, by which the Spanish government bound itself to grant to each of such persons a certain number of acres of land, and that De Maison Rouge did not acquire, by said contract, a right to dispose of the land in question by sale, deed, or last will and testament, or in any other way.

Secondly. That the conditions of said contract were never fulfilled by the said Marquis de Maison Rouge.

Thirdly. That the said land was never surveyed, and that the settlements have not been made, as became requisite by the conditions of the grant, if a grant was made.

Fourthly. That the said land never was located as pretended by the representatives of the Marquis de Maison Rouge, but was at a different place.

The documents and testimony before the committee do not enable them to decide either upon the genuineness of the grant or the validity of it, according to the forms which governed grants legally emanating from the authorities of the then province of Louisiana.

The question arising in this case, as to the validity of the title set up by the representatives of the Marquis de Maison Rouge, is one which, in the opinion of the committee, can only be brought to a termination by the adjudication of some tribunal which can act with deliberation, and under such favoring circumstances as will enable such tribunal, of whatsoever constitution it may be, to avail itself of every requisite, both in law and fact, which may be attainable, to enable it to form a correct judgment respecting the validity of the claim in dispute. It does not occur to the committee that a resort can be had, either by the claimants or the United States, to any tribunal except the following:

1st. The Congress of the United States.

2d. A special commission, constituted by a law of Congress, for the purpose of deciding upon this and other claims similarly situated in the State of Louisiana.

3d. The judicial tribunals of the United States.

Firstly. The committee are aware that it is a delicate duty which they feel themselves bound to perform, when they sanction the opinion that the two houses of Congress do not, by their very constitution, unite all those qualities which are necessary to a thorough, dispassionate, and full investigation of delicate questions of judicature.

It is to questions of policy, expediency, and constitutional provision, rather than the weighing of testimony, the inspection of seals and signatures, and the minute attention which should be given to discrepancies in dates, and the declarations of witnesses, that the capacities of the two houses of Congress are best adapted. For reasons like these, and to exclude interest and passion, the framers of our constitutional code separated the judicial from the legislative powers of the government.

A committee, which is an emanation from the House or Senate, possesses, on account of its limitation of numbers and its quiet and undisturbed sittings, greater facilities for the investigation of judicial questions than the House or Senate in session can be supposed to possess; and yet such is the nature of the testimony presented, even to the committees of either branch of the legislature, that great difficulties are felt in coming to satisfactory conclusions, even upon questions which seem very just to those who present them. Ex parte testimony, designed colorings, omission of facts, and circumstances which might and would explain the transaction if openly and fully stated, and that inability, always felt and acknowledged, of being able to learn from papers what may be inferred or known from the truth-telling or non-truth-telling manner of a witness, place obstacles in the way of just and satisfactory decision, which can only be felt by those who are aware of the unsatisfactory and too frequently unjust decisions of popular assemblies.

The claims of the individuals now under consideration involve in themselves many points which it would be extremely difficult for the two houses of Congress satisfactorily to investigate; such as, firstly, whether the grant in question was genuine in its origin and the title papers authentic.

Secondly. If genuine, whether the title was in due form and valid by the laws of the government from which it originated.

Thirdly. Was the grant absolute or conditional? and if conditional, have its conditions been complied with by the grantee or his representatives?

Fourthly. Was the grant of such a nature as to vest in the grantee any rights in his individual capacity?

The committee are of the opinion that any decision of the two houses of Congress would be unavailing, because, if adverse to the claimants, it would be unsatisfactory, and the right to petition, being always open to the applicant for justice from the government, will be continually resorted to; and the claim, being thus liable to perpetual revision by Congress, would never have a determinate decision. If at any period the government of the United States should direct the lands in question to be surveyed and sold, the claimants would then, with at least a color of justice, demand payment, and insist that they had been deprived of their property without the judgment of their peers, and not according to the laws of the land. In every light in which the committee have been able to view this subject, the opinion is entertained by them that the two houses of Congress do not constitute the tribunal which can most satisfactorily and successfully decide upon the title of those who claim under the Marquis de Maison Rouge.

The second tribunal which suggests itself for the purpose of a final adjustment of these claims is a special commission. The institution of such a tribunal would probably be quite as expensive, if not more expensive, than any other mode which might be resorted to by the government.

Other considerations may also be urged against this mode of adjusting these claims.

A commission may be composed of such individuals as to render it little competent to the able decision of claims like those under consideration. It may also be influenced by local considerations; by improper attachments or personal considerations; by interest, remote or immediate; or by undue solicitations of claimants. Nor can the same reliance be at all times reposed in commissioners which may be in independent judges who hold their offices during good behavior.

This claim, under the act of March 3, 1807, was, by the commissioners appointed in pursuance thereof, reported for confirmation, and yet the government of the United States has not confirmed the claim; and from the lapse of time since the making of that report, and the repeated subsequent applications of the claimants, it would seem that the government has not considered that report as of any authority, and such might and probably would be the result were another special commission to be instituted.

The above considerations induce the committee to consider it inexpedient to recommend the institution of another special commission for the adjudication of the claim in question.

If, then, the question of title to the lands claimed under the grant, or supposed grant, of the Marquis de Maison Rouge cannot be adjudicated by Congress, either on account of its ill adaptation to the discharge of such duties, or on account of its indisposition to perform them, and if a special commission ought not a second time to be instituted for the purpose, then, most assuredly, the claimants ought to be permitted, as a dernier resort, to apply to the judicial tribunals of the country for the final disposition of this long-contested question. The interests of the United States, those of Louisiana, as well as those of the claimants, require that a termination should be made to the state of abeyance which has been permitted to continue up to the present time. The United States, if the rightful owner of this tract of land, ought to provide for its sale, so as to prevent the population of the State of Louisiana from being retarded; and the claimants under De Maison Rouge ought to be put in a condition to avail themselves of their rights, if rights they have.

The committee do not deem it necessary to enter into detailed reasoning to show the propriety, necessity, or safety of the reference of this question to the judicial tribunals of the Union. The reasons for this course are such as must suggest themselves to the minds of all, and must be left to produce that decision at which each member will claim the right to arrive for himself.

The committee report a bill to refer these claims to the United States courts for adjudication.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 637. [1ST SESSION.

LAND FOR THE SUPPORT OF COLLEGES IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 4, 1828.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom has been referred the resolution of the House of the 11th of December last, instructing them to inquire into the expediency of granting, for the support of colleges in Ohio, a quantity of land equal to that which has been granted to the other new States and Territories for that purpose, reported:

That the rule early adopted and generally followed by the United States in regard to the appropriation of land for the purposes of education has been to set apart the 36th part of each township for the maintenance of common schools, and two townships in each of the new States for the use of seminaries of learning therein; and in districts where previous appropriations have interfered with the common school allotment, that deficit has been supplied elsewhere. By the ordinance of the old Congress, passed May 20, 1785, for ascertaining the mode of disposing of lands in the western territory, the common school reservations, and the purposes for which they were designed, are pointed out. By a resolution of the same Congress, adopted July 23, 1787, the board of treasury was authorized to contract for the grant of a tract of country, the boundaries of which are therein described. This is called the sale to the Ohio Company. Among other conditions required of the purchasers by the resolution, the lot numbered 16, in each township, should be given perpetually for the purposes contained in the ordinance of 1785. And further, "not more than two complete townships to be given perpetually for the purposes of an university, to be laid off by the purchaser or purchasers, as near the centre as may be, so that the same shall be of good land, to be applied to the intended object by the legislature of the State." This is the first example for the course which has since been pursued of granting lands for colleges or universities; and two townships has been the quantity granted in the new States. There is no mention made in the compact between the United States and Ohio of two townships of land, or any other quantity, to be granted to the State for the use of seminaries of learning; although the 16th section for common schools is one of the stipulations, and the grant of two townships for seminaries of learning is one of the propositions contained in all the compacts of admission of new States in the west and southwest since that time except Louisiana and Mississippi. From all which the committee infer that the two townships out of the grant to the Ohio Company which were required to be "given perpetually for the purposes of an university," and "to be applied to the intended object by the legislature of the State," were, at the time of the compact, and perhaps long since, understood and considered, both by the United States and Ohio, to be, in effect, a grant to the State and people thereof, and as capable of being beneficially directed to the purposes of education as though the grant had been made directly to the State, or a university established therein. And this, in the opinion of the committee, was a correct understanding of the subject.

At the time the title passed from the government to the company the reservation had not been, perhaps could not be, made by identity; it was therefore included in the grant; but a condition upon which that was made is, that the grantees are to give two townships "perpetually," &c., by which it must be meant that if the title is not formally to be conveyed, at least the entire use and benefit of the property is, by the legislature, to be applied to the purposes of education at a university.

That this perpetual and entire use belongs to the people of the State, and not to the grantees or their assignees exclusively, is a proposition which, in the view of the committee, is further supported by the act of April 21, 1792, in which the contract between the government and company is recited, so far as relates to the description of the land, and in which the quantity of land is stated at 750,000 acres, besides the several lots and parcels of land in the said contract reserved and appropriated to other purposes; clearly showing that this, with other reservations, constituted no part of the land actually bought and paid for, and, for the reason that it had been reserved and appropriated to other purposes, it was "besides" the quantity that the grantees bought for purposes of their own.

There is no complaint that the two townships have not been set apart and received the proper attention of the legislature. From the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, made part of this report, it is understood the former has been done; the latter cannot be a subject of inquiry here; yet the claim is made on the ground that those two townships ought not to be taken into the account or considered in the nature of a donation to the State. The committee could not for a moment question the expediency of granting, for the support of colleges in Ohio, a quantity of land equal to that which has been granted to other new States and Territories for that purpose; yet they feel convinced, upon the best examination they have been able to give to the subject, that the State of Ohio has, from the reservation of the two townships in the grant to the Ohio Company, the same benefits substantially secured to her which the other States have by the grants to them or their universities.

This opinion has been formed independently of another important fact in the history of appropriations for the promotion of education in the State of Ohio; and as a different conclusion would not likely be produced thereby in the committee, it will be sufficient merely to refer the House to it. By the act of May 5, 1792, the President was authorized to grant to John Cleves Symmes and others, for the purpose of establishing an academy, one township of land within the district of country sold to Symmes. The object of this grant not having been carried into effect, by the act of March 3, 1803, another township was granted to the State of Ohio, in the Cincinnati district, for the purpose of establishing an academy, in lieu of the township granted to Symmes for that purpose.

The view thus taken of the subject induces the committee to recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is not expedient to make a further grant of land for the use of seminaries of learning in the State of Ohio.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, General Land Office, January 11, 1828.

SIR: In reply to the inquiry of your letter of yesterday "for information showing the quantity of land enjoyed by the State of Ohio for the support of colleges or seminaries of learning, as distinct from those reserved for the use of common schools," I have the honor to state that by the act of March 3, 1803, entitled "An act in addition to and in modification of the propositions contained in the act entitled 'An act to enable the people of the eastern division of the territory northwest of the river Ohio to form a constitution and State government, &c., &c.,'" (sec. 4 of the act,) there is vested in the legislature of the State of Ohio one complete township, to be located under the direction of the legislature, for the purpose of establishing an academy, in lieu of the township granted for the same purpose by virtue of the act entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to John Cleve Symmes and his associates." The township selected for this object is No. 5, of range 1 east. In the purchase made by the "Ohio Company," under the provisions of the resolution of July 23, 1787, there are two townships reserved for the purposes of an university, which the resolution provides shall be applied to the intended object by the legislature of the State.—(See Land Laws, page 212.) Townships 8 and 9, of range 14, have been selected.

It would therefore appear that there are three townships of land, containing an aggregate quantity of about 69,120 acres, appropriated for college purposes, the right of applying which, to the object intended, was vested in the legislature of the State of Ohio, originally.

I am not aware, however, of what control the legislature has at any time exercised over the lands in question.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. J. C. ISACKS, Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 638. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA TO PURCHASE THE PUBLIC LAND WITHIN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 4, 1828.

A JOINT MEMORIAL to Congress on the subject of public lands.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The general assembly of Alabama feel constrained by the dictates of duty again to present their views to Congress on the subject of the public lands in this State. It is with great deference that your memorialists submit to the consideration of Congress the propriety of selling to the State the whole of the public lands within our boundaries, for such price, and upon such terms and conditions, as may be agreed on by the parties. Many considerations would render such an arrangement desirable if suitable terms can be obtained. In the first place, it is a public inconvenience of no small magnitude for the citizens of this State to have the muniments of their titles at so great a distance as Washington. If titles emanated from the State, the loss of a patent could be supplied by a copy from the proper office at home, instead of Washington city. The convenience of obtaining titles would be greatly increased, and the United States had better have one account with the State than the trouble of dealing with individual purchasers.

The idea of a purchase, however, is founded on the liberality of Congress in adjusting the terms; for if the State is to give the full value, the arrangement, of course, would not be desired. Your memorialists rely on the liberality of Congress, and on that reliance rests the proposition to purchase. Connected with this subject, your memorialists beg leave to represent that nature has furnished objects of internal improvements of great magnitude, to which the enterprise of the State must be shortly called. Feeling a laudable wish to participate in the great efforts of internal improvement that so eminently distinguish the present age, your memorialists, finding the means of the State inadequate to the objects, look with confidence to the general government for assistance in some shape, and the sale of the public domain at a low price seems to be the most suitable means to effect an object so desirable to all.

The Muscle shoals and Colbert's shoals, in the Tennessee river, present obstructions to the navigation of that stream that requires a canal or a railway for the distance of perhaps thirty miles. The immense extent of country to be connected by that improvement at once bespeaks its importance, and stamps it with a national character. It is emphatically a link of great importance in the chain of defence projected by the government. The transportation of troops, munitions of war, &c., as well as the commerce that would necessarily flow through that vein if properly opened, point out claims to the united exertions of the general and State governments. The connexion of the navigable waters of the Tennessee river and the Mobile bay by a canal or railway is another object worthy of national exertion. The great Erie canal shows how far the beneficial effects of opening these veins of internal communication surpass the calculations of the most sanguine. The projected canals in Ohio once finished, and the obstructions of the Tennessee river removed, and a railway constructed between the steamboat navigation of that stream and the Alabama, or some of its tributaries, and a back country will at once be opened of such extent and fertility as to raise our infant seaport into rapid and respectable commercial importance, and reflect the greatest and most permanent benefits on the country at large. These difficulties, though great, are not beyond human powers. They are truly beyond the unaided means of Alabama at this early period of her existence, but if the generous assistance of the United States can be commanded, success will be rendered certain. When the United States were in the germ of existence, and weighed down by the debts of the revolutionary war, the States, with patriotic generosity, extended a helping hand. The revenue from foreign commerce was surrendered by the States, and, in addition to that ample resource, several of the States surrendered a large portion of their public domain. On these pillars the genius of the immortal Hamilton erected the fabric of public credit; under the influence of the system projected by him, and adopted by his cotemporaries, the public debt is annually diminishing by the action of the sinking fund. The public domain is no longer necessary to preserve the credit of the general government. The receipts from commerce will be more than ample to defray the expenses of the civil list, and extinguish the public debt in the lapse of a few years. A large surplus will be left at the disposal of Congress, and the mode of its employment must become a matter of the deepest concern to the States and the people. That the surplus shall be dormant in the Treasury is neither to be wished nor expected. Governments likewise will spend money according to their means; common opinion looks to the application of the surplus funds of the government to the purposes of internal improvement and general education. This must be done, if at all, under the direction and management of the general or the State governments. Many considerations that need not to be now mentioned lead to the anticipation of happier results, by the application of the means under the executive direction of the State authorities, than can be expected under the direction of the general government. So far as education is concerned, it is obvious that the control belongs to the State governments, and it is believed that all the objects of internal improvement can be effected by supplying the States with the means much more to the satisfaction and benefit of the people than by asserting a controverted power to the general government to operate even for public good within the States without their consent. As the United States were sustained and aided by the liberality of the States in the hour of need, and the means then furnished have been found much more than sufficient to effect the object of concession, and the States in turn need the assistance of the general government to enable them to effect objects of the greatest utility to the present and future ages, it is confidently believed that Congress will promptly accord the aid so necessary to the fame and prosperity of the States. The sums given by the United States to Georgia and the Indians for the lands included in Alabama, it is believed, have already been more than reimbursed by the sales already made, so that the unsold lands in our limits have cost the United States nothing. Allowing due weight to all these considerations, your memorialists indulge a hope that the proposition to purchase the public domain will meet with a favorable consideration by Congress, and that it will be sold upon terms that will enable the State to realize a profit, on selling it out to the citizens, sufficient in amount, with the other resources at our command, to accomplish the great objects of internal improvement herein mentioned, and so necessary to the prosperity and greatness of the State, and so beneficial to the present and future generations.

We repeat that the purchase of the whole of the public domain in this State, upon suitable terms, would be the most desirable means of accomplishing the great objects in view. As to terms, it can only be now said that the means of payment must arise out of the sale of the lands, as payment cannot be otherwise made. Should the proposal to purchase be considered inadmissible or inexpedient by Congress, your memorialists beg leave to urge the claims of the State for a suitable donation in lands to aid the State in carrying on the important improvements before mentioned, and more especially the Muscle shoals and other obstructions in the Tennessee river. The practicability of that improvement is no longer doubtful, and your memorialists cherish a hope that the engineers of the United States will be instructed, in the course of the ensuing season, to make a more detailed survey with a view to locate the route, and determine the character and cost of the improvement, and whether a canal or railway will be most advisable; and that a suitable donation in lands will be made to the State for the purpose of effecting an object so desirable. While upon this subject your memorialists beg leave to state that it is doubted by some whether the State would be authorized to charge a toll or duty on boats and other craft, after improving the navigation of the Tennessee river, on account of the stipulation on our admission to the Union that our navigable streams should continue public highways, free for the passage of all the citizens of the United States; and as such doubts are calculated to dissuade the timid from embarking in the removal of obstructions, we respectfully pray that said stipulation may be so explained as to allow a reasonable toll to be charged whenever valuable improvements shall be made in any of our navigable bays and rivers, either by canal or the removal of obstructions from the channel, at great expense

In whatever way it may be the pleasure of Congress to grant us aid in promoting our views, the funds will be faithfully applied to the object for which they may be granted.

The liberal aid afforded to the northwestern States for similar purposes assures us that our application will meet with similar success. We cannot close this communication without presenting the condition of many of the purchasers of public land in this State to the favorable consideration of Congress. Many have been prevented by accident from availing themselves of the laws heretofore passed for their relief, and incurred forfeitures in the course of the present year, after having paid all but the last instalment, and made valuable improvements on the land; some by omitting to notice the time limited for final payment, and many from inability to raise the means of payment, owing to the joint operation of two causes beyond their control. Unusual droughts have prevailed for two successive seasons in many parts of the State, reducing the produce of the soil nearly or quite one-half, and the unexpected and unparalleled reduction in the price of the staple commodity. Forfeitures thus incurred by a people struggling with adversity cannot be retained by a just government. Further time must be allowed them to make payment, or they must be ruined. One of the banks in this State has failed in the course of the present year, which has augmented the public distress and diminished the means of payment. There is another class of citizens entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress. They have been urged by the necessities of the times to sell the certificates of purchase for their homes improved by their labor, and run the hazard of repurchasing. They continue to cultivate the soil and support the government. The law that passed the Senate at the last session proposed to give the person making the relinquishment on the legal holder of the certificate a pre-emption right to the land from which the certificate had been withdrawn. Such a provision would operate most unfairly. In many instances the certificate was sold for half the sum that had been paid on it or less, not with a view to own the soil it covered, but with the express view of relinquishing it in payment for other lands. Under such circumstances, to give a pre-emption right to the person making the relinquishment would give what he never bought or expected to own, and would be giving a boon without regard to merit, at the expense of the cultivator, whose necessities had driven him into the measure of selling his certificate. We repeat that, under such circumstances, the cultivator is the meritorious man, and should have the right of pre-emption. It must be apparent that the purchase of a certificate, in order to relinquish it in payment for other land, changes that inceptive muniment of title into a kind of quasi currency receivable in payment of debts, and dissolves all connexion between the title and the soil it covered. When possession has been left and remained with the seller, and he has continued to improve and cultivate the soil, surely the man who has already obtained by a relinquishment all the benefits he expected under his contract ought not to be allowed a preference in acquiring a new title to the soil. Your memorialists beg leave further to represent that many of the 16th sections allowed for the use of schools are of no value, and they persuade themselves that Congress cannot attach any magic to the particular number of the section, but, on the contrary, will be disposed to give the munificence of the government a practical operation, by allowing other land to be selected where the 16th sections are of little or no value.

Your memorialists beg leave to call the attention of Congress to the views submitted in 1825 on the subject of classifying and graduating the public lands, and allow them to be entered, instead of offering them for sale at auction, and reducing the price from time to time, until all the lands fit for cultivation shall be sold and become liable to taxation, and contribute to the support of government. Presuming that memorial is on file, we forbear to repeat the reasons then submitted in favor of the change proposed, but beg leave to refer to the same. There is another subject which, with due respect, your memorialists beg leave to present to the favorable consideration of Congress. We have some valuable seats for iron works, surrounded by large bodies of poor land suitable for fuel, but totally unfit for cultivation. The minimum price of public lands, as applied to the poor land in question, is unjust, and inasmuch as the State has no means of encouraging the manufacture of an article so necessary, it is respectfully requested that the United States would allow iron-masters to enter a reasonable quantity of poor land unfit for cultivation at a price so low as to afford the desired encouragement.

Resolved, That our senators be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best endeavors to procure the relief contemplated by this memorial.

And be it further resolved, That the governor transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial to our senators in Congress and another to our representatives.

SAMUEL W. OLIVER, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, General Land Office, January 29, 1828.

SIR: Your letter of the 16th instant to the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting information relative to relinquished lands in the Huntsville land district, and to the unappropriated lands in Jackson county, Alabama, was duly referred to this office; but, from the circumstance of its having been misplaced, this answer has been delayed. The quantity of unappropriated lands in the county of Jackson, including school lands, is 712,307.13 acres. The whole quantity of land relinquished to the United States in the Huntsville land district is 551,357.94 acres. It is impracticable to ascertain the relinquished within the limits of the respective counties you designate, without having other means of information than the office now possesses as to the boundaries of those counties.

With great respect, your obedient servant, GEORGE GRAHAM.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 8, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I communicate the information required, in the form of answers to your several interrogatories.

First interrogatory. How much public land remains unsold in the State of Alabama?

Answer. Above the 31st degree of north latitude there remains unsold of the public lands 19,776,870.64½ acres of the lands ceded by the Indians, and it is estimated that there are 9,492,041 acres within the limits of Alabama unceded by the Indians. That part of Alabama south of the 31st degree of north latitude includes 1,658,880 acres. No surveys of this section of country have been returned to this office, and the private claims are yet in a course of adjudication; I am therefore unable to state the quantity of land that will be subject to sale by the United States in this portion of the State.

Second interrogatory. How much land has been relinquished and remains unsold in Alabama?

Answer. There has been relinquished in the State under the act of 1831 and those supplementary thereto, and under acts of 1824 and 1826, 1,482,718.66 acres, the original purchase money of which amounted to $7,578,840 26.

The land relinquished at the land office of Cahaba and at St. Stephen's, under the provisions of the acts of 1821, amounted to about 400,000 acres, were offered at public sale in 1824, and did not generally sell for more than the minimum price. The exact quantity of these lands which have since been sold cannot be ascertained except by a laborious investigation which would occupy much time. It may be proper, however, to state that the fractional sections on the Alabama relinquished as above stated, which sold generally at the highest prices, were not offered at the public sale in consequence of the absence of the surveys of the subdivisions.

The whole of the lands relinquished at any time at Huntsville, and those relinquished at Cahaba and at St. Stephen's since October 1, 1821, are not subject to be offered at public sale; they amount to 1,091,829.61 acres, and sold originally for $5,922,422 10¼. From this quantity, however, there will be a deduction of a small portion of the lands relinquished at St. Stephen's under the act of 1826, which lie in the State of Mississippi, the exact amount of which is not yet ascertained.

Third interrogatory. How much of the land surveyed has not been offered for sale?

Answer. Four millions four hundred and sixty-one thousand one hundred and forty-seven acres, lying above the 31st degree of north latitude, exclusive of the relinquished lands.

With great respect, &c., GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. J. MCKINLEY, Senate.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 639. [1ST SESSION.

REDUCTION AND GRADUATION OF THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 5, 1828.

Mr. DUNCAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution directing an inquiry into the expediency of reducing and graduating the price of public lands, and of making donations to actual settlers, reported:

That their most diligent attention to the subject has been excited, as well on account of the magnitude of the national interests involved in the inquiry as on account of the strong solicitations of the legislative memorials of the several States and Territories of the United States, and the petitions of the people which have been presented to Congress so repeatedly upon this subject.

It appears by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made to Congress at the commencement of their present session, that more than two hundred and sixty-one millions of acres, lying within the States and Territories, have become the absolute property of the United States, free from Indian claim, since the organization of the government, and that during this time only about nineteen millions have been sold to individuals. Thus, in a period of about forty years, the amount of land sold constitutes the one-thirteenth part of the quantity subject to sale. Calculating upon the future from the past, then, a period of more than five centuries must elapse before the whole public domain of the Union, now within the unrestrained control of Congress, will become the property of individuals. None but the best lands have been sold, nor is it believed that, under the present system, much, if any, of an inferior quality will sell until the best shall have been exhausted. Considering how large a portion of the public lands is of small and no value; that nearly fifty-six millions of acres, to which the aborigines yet have title, will, in the course of a few years, be added to the vast quantity before named, making a total of more than three hundred and sixteen millions of acres, we cannot reasonably expect that, under the existing plan, the government can dispose of them in any number of years within our power to enumerate. That so much territory should be withheld from sale for countless generations presents very forcibly the prospect of infinite injury both to the federal government and the States within which they are situated; to the former, on account of the unproductiveness of an immense capital; to the latter, on account of the interminable suspension imposed upon cultivation and improvement, and upon the rights of eminent domain and taxation; presenting withal the anomaly of the exercise on the part of a powerful government of sovereignty in fact over about twelve-thirteenths of the whole territory of seven States declared to be sovereign and independent by treaties, compacts, and constitutions of government. To every citizen of the Union this state of things is injurious; whilst collectively they possess superabundant wealth, they are individually subject to a tax upon the conveniencies and necessities of life, in the form of duties upon imports, to sustain a necessary revenue and to pay the principal and interest of the public debt. A conclusive proof of the insufficiency of the system now regulating this great national interest is found in the fact that it has entirely failed to answer the end for which it was confessedly devised. We are told by documents accompanying the report before mentioned that the expenses on account of the public land up to January 1, 1826, including purchases, surveying, and incidental expenses, amounted to almost thirty-three millions of dollars; that there had been received in cash a little more than thirty-one millions; showing a difference of near two millions of dollars between the expenditures and receipts. If to this balance is added the interest at six per cent. upon the amount expended, we shall have a sum not less than fifteen millions withdrawn from the public treasury, leaving out of view the expenses annually accruing from legislating on account of these lands. It appears, therefore, to your committee that the present mode of selling the public lands has been, and will continue to be, attended with the worst results. The facts stated present the question, whether the interest of the federal government, of the people of the United States, and more especially of the new States, do not require that the sales shall be accelerated in time to come? and this question seems to admit of no other than an affirmative answer. A large part of these lands was ceded to the United States soon after the Revolution for the purpose of enabling the federal government to discharge the public debt. So far from having accomplished that object, the public lands have increased the public debt. The present amount of that debt is about sixty-nine millions of dollars; the interest thereon is about three millions five hundred thousand dollars; a sum more than double as large as the net receipts from the sales of public land during the last year. Is it political economy or sound policy to permit demands so heavy to press upon the people of this country, which yearly subjects the means of subsistence to the operation of indirect taxation, to remain undischarged, when, by giving proper encouragement to the sale and settlement of your immense regions of uncultivated soil, this debt would be quickly paid, the means of living increased, and the strength of the country advanced, by increasing its population and adding to its substantial wealth?

The sale of public land for the year 1826 amounted to $1,163,897 23. It is not probable that the amount of sales for any subsequent year will exceed that sum. Taking that sum, therefore, as a standard, deducting therefrom $111,212 45 for incidental expenses, and $58,444, the five per cent. payable to the States under the contract for their admission into the Union, and the remainder will exhibit the sum of $993,240 78 as the net proceeds of the sales of public lands for each year, which, at six per cent., is the interest upon less than sixteen millions of dollars; so your whole landed capital is worth a sum short of sixteen millions of dollars, and greatly less if the cost of legislation constantly attending subjects growing out of the lands be computed. The three hundred and sixteen millions of acres situated within the States and Territories, after deducting twenty millions, which is near the amount disposed of, if sold at six cents per acre, would produce the sum of $17,760,000, which would produce a clear gain to the government of near two millions of dollars; and if sold at twelve cents, your capital is more than doubled; and if sold at twenty-five cents, the minimum designed by the bill reported, your capital is quadrupled.

Is it not desirable, then, to the whole people of the United States so to apply their own means as to relieve their treasury from all embarrassment, or to change an unproductive into a productive fund? In the light of a question of mere national policy, your committee cannot hesitate to believe that some radical change ought to be made in a system which has for so many years, under some modifications, produced absolutely nothing. But there is a point of view in which the subject presents itself more imposing. The act of cession by which the United States acquired the soil of three States, of the Michigan and Northwest Territories, declares that the lands shall be "disposed of." These words confer the power of disposition in any mode which may consist with the interests of the nation. No doubt one great object was to strengthen the credit of the federal government, by putting it into the power of Congress to secure the public creditors. Here we find that these lands were pledged for the payment of the public debt. May not another motive for the cession be found in a willingness on the part of Virginia to relieve her own citizens from a portion of the taxes which would fall to their lot to pay this debt, and sustain the character and honor of the nation?

The situation of the new States is such as to claim a full portion of the consideration of this government in reference to this subject. To those States it is of pressing moment that the public lands should become the property of their citizens with the least delay compatible with the national interest. The numerous petitions, memorials, and legislative resolutions, heretofore presented from them, evince the lively and anxious concern with which the present state of things impresses them.

If these lands are to be withheld from sale, which is the effect of the present system, in vain may the people of these States expect the advantages of well-settled neighborhoods, so essential to the education of youth, and to the pleasures of social intercourse, and the advantages of religious instruction. Those States will for many generations, without some change, be retarded in endeavors to increase their comfort and wealth by means of works of internal improvement, because they have not the power, incident to all sovereign States, of taxing the soil to pay for the benefits conferred upon its owner by roads and canals.

When these States stipulated not to tax the lands of the United States until they were sold, they rested upon the implied engagement of Congress to cause them to be sold within a reasonable time. No just equivalent has been given those States for a surrender of an attribute of sovereignty so important to their welfare, and to an equal standing with the original States.

A remedy for such great evils may be found in carrying into effect the spirit of the federal Constitution, which knows of no inequality in the powers and rights of the several States, consulting at the same time the moneyed interests of the confederacy, by disposing of the means (in the exchange of lands for money) of the exercise of an undue share of federal influence over any. These purposes may be answered by pursuing a plan so plain and obvious in itself that it would appear to your committee to meet the ready assent of all mankind, viz: sell public land upon the same principles that individuals sell private land and property of every sort, for what it is worth, considering its quality and locality. By adhering to a minimum you fix a price only upon the best, and leave that of less value a dead weight upon the hands of the nation, and upon the prosperity and population of the States. It appears to your committee that a scale of prices adapted to the various quality and value of lands furnishes the most reasonable and expedient system. This is the object of the many memorials before us, and is the essential proposition contained in the bill which has for some years past been under consideration in another branch of the legislature. The bill now presented embraces the same principle, and proposes—

1. That lands heretofore offered at public sale, and which remain unsold, should be offered at private sale at annual reductions of price, commencing at one dollar per acre, and abating twenty-five cents per acre every two years until a purchaser is found, or the lands fall to twenty-five cents. This provision is intended to operate upon such lands only as are now in market at $1 25; a portion of which has been in market for about forty years, and other portions for five, ten, fifteen, twenty, and twenty-five years.

2. That lands not heretofore offered for sale, and which may, by the proclamation of the President, be offered at public vendue, shall have the same rule applied to them.

3. That small tracts of eighty acres be given to the heads of such families as will cultivate, improve, and reside on the same for five years. This proposition has recommended itself to the consideration of your committee by a knowledge of the fact that there are many families who are neither void of industry nor of good moral habits, who have met with a usual share of the difficulties always accompanying the settlement of a new country, and who, living very remote from market, never expect to see the day arrive when they will be enabled to save enough, with all their efforts, from their means of actual support, to purchase a farm and pay for it in cash. Besides, your committee believe that such small earnings applied to the improvement and cultivation of small tracts, scattered through the public domain, would be as advantageous to the public as though they should be paid directly into the treasury. No axiom in political economy is sounder than the one which declares that the wealth and strength of a country, and more especially of a republic, consists not so much in the number of its citizens as in their employments, their capability of bearing arms, and of sustaining the burdens of taxation whenever the public exigencies shall require it. The poor furnish soldiers, and an experience shows that the patriotism which exists apart from an interested love of country cannot be relied upon. The affections of good citizens are always mingled with their homes and placed upon the country which contains their fields and their gardens.

4. The fourth clause of this bill applies to cessions of the refuse lands to the States in which they lie. It provides that all the land which shall remain unsold for two years after having been offered at twenty-five cents per acre shall be ceded to the States in which they lie, upon condition that said States pay into the treasury of the United States the costs of purchase and surveying of said land. The argument in favor of this cession lies in the difference between letting these refuse lands remain idle for the time they probably will remain so if retained in the hands of the federal government, where they are used alone for raising revenue, and the benefits which might be derived from them if passed into the hands of the State, where they would be used for the various purposes of raising revenue, making internal improvements, and for the encouragement of settlements. In the hands of the federal government they would probably remain idle and unproductive for centuries; they would pay no taxes into the federal or State treasuries; they would yield nothing to agriculture; they would be despoiled of their timber, a harbor for wild beasts; cause separations of neighborhoods—great portions of them consisting of lakes, ponds, marshes, and grounds subject to inundation, now the sources of disease and pestilence to the surrounding neighbors, even to those who live upon land bought of the federal government. On the other hand, if ceded to the States it would relieve Congress from the numerous and increasing causes for legislation in relation to them; it would leave them in the hands of a government intimately acquainted with their localities, consequently more capable of legislating upon the subject, and of turning them to the best account, in the promotion of education, improvements, and agriculture, the great purposes for which the God of nature designed them; and it will be seen that if those lands are sold promptly at six cents per acre, which is not far from the cost, that they will yield more than to sell them under the present system at $1 25.

It will be remembered that the government will still own, in the Territories, 101,482,870 acres, and within the limits of the United States, 700,000,000 of acres, which will be an ample fund to offer as bounties for soldiers to enlist in our armies, or to give to the officers or soldiers as an encouragement for the patriotic services of future generations.

To this report the committee have attached the following tables, exhibiting the operation of the system from the commencement up to the present time:

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 640. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS ON ACCOUNT OF INDIAN RESERVATIONS OMITTED IN TREATY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 5, 1828.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the petition of Angelia Cutaw, alias, in Indian, Mutamagoquo, a half-breed Chippewa, and also the petition of Cecille Boyer, alias, in Indian, Kawchichanoqui, of Indian descent, reported:

The petition of Angelia Cutaw, in substance, sets forth that Mutamagoquo, now deceased, the mother of the petitioner, a half-breed Chippewa, was at the treaty of Saginaw, in the Territory of Michigan, which treaty was concluded on September 24, 1819, between the United States, by their commissioner, Lewis Cass, and the Chippewa nation of Indians; that it was the intention of the Indians at the treaty to give her a reservation of one section of land on Flint river, in the Territory of Michigan, in the same manner that reservations were given to other Indians by the third article of the treaty aforesaid; that her mother always, during her lifetime, believed that her name was inserted in the third article of the treaty aforesaid, and that she had been given by said article, by way of reservation, a section of land; that the Indians and the interpreters told her that it should be so; but that, through fraud or accident, her name was omitted to be inserted in the treaty. The deposition of Henry Conner, the interpreter, who acted as such at the treaty, in the opinion of your committee, fully proves the facts stated in the petition, so far as they are material to a decision of the question submitted. Your committee think proper to make an extract from his deposition a part of this report. He says "that he acted as interpreter; that he was employed on the part of the United States as such; that Angelia Cutaw, the mother of the petitioner, was well known to deponent, and was of Indian descent; and that the Indians intended to grant her a section of land on Flint river; that the Indians believed her name was included, as well as herself and deponent; but from misnomer, or otherwise, her Indian name appears not to be mentioned in the treaty, although at the time it was intended to be inserted. Deponent is sanguine in this statement, being called by the Indians specially to interpret in the case, as well as in all other cases alluded to in the petition; and, to the best of deponent's recollection, he understood and believed at the time that she was to have a section of land granted her on Flint river reservation." The other petitioner, Cecille Boyer, states, in substance, the same as is stated by the petitioner, Angelia Cutaw. The only difference between the cases is in the persons concerned, and the right under which they claim. In the former case, the petitioner claims as one of the heirs of her mother, Mutamagoquo, whose name was intended to have been inserted in the treaty; and in the latter case, the petitioner claims in her own right, and proves, by the interpreter who acted at the treaty, that her name was intended to have been inserted, but that it was omitted through fraud or mistake. The principles involved, it will therefore at once be seen, are precisely the same in the two cases. The facts set forth in the petitions being proved to the entire satisfaction of your committee, the conclusion to them is irresistible, that good faith on the part of the United States requires a specific performance of the contract on their part. It is conceived to be altogether immaterial to the justice of the claim of the petitioners whether their names were inserted in the treaty at the time or not, so that it was the intention of the contracting parties at the time that their names should be inserted. That it was the understanding of all parties at the time that reservations should be granted to the said Mutamagoquo, deceased, and the said Cecille Boyer, of one section of land each, lying on Flint river, in the Territory of Michigan, your committee cannot doubt, and therefore accompany this report with a bill for the relief of the said Cecille Boyer and the children of Mutamagoquo.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA TO EXCHANGE THE SCHOOL LANDS WHEN BARREN FOR OTHER LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 6, 1828.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS in relation to an exchange of sixteenth sections.

Whereas it is enacted, by the act providing for the admission of this State into the Union, that the section numbered sixteen in every township shall be granted to the inhabitants of such township for the use of schools: and whereas many of the sections so granted in some of the counties in this State are utterly barren and unproductive, so that the beneficent intentions of Congress will fail of their intended effects unless some relief be afforded: Therefore—

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best endeavors to obtain the passage of an act authorizing the inhabitants of the several townships in this State, wherein the section numbered sixteen (granted for the use of schools) is barren and unproductive, to relinquish the same, and enter in lieu thereof, with the register of the land office for the proper district, another section of land which shall have been offered for sale previously to the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, and remains unsold and subject to entry; and that in such townships (in which said section numbered sixteen may be barren and unproductive) as at present contain no inhabitants, the legally constituted authorities of the county in which such township or townships may be situated be authorized to make such entry, and to apply the emoluments arising from said section, selected in lieu of sections numbered sixteen, to the support of schools in said county, until such townships shall become populated.

And be it further resolved, That his excellency the governor be, and he is hereby, required to transmit a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

RELATIVE TO A CHANGE IN THE ORIGINAL PLAN OF THE CITY OF DETROIT, IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 8, 1828.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned, inhabitants of Detroit and citizens of the United States in the Territory of Michigan, respectfully showeth: That by the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of titles to land in the town of Detroit and Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes," approved April 21, 1806, the governor and judges of the Territory were authorized to lay out a town, &c., and to grant to every citizen of the United States, under certain restrictions, who was an inhabitant of the old town of Detroit at the time of its conflagration, a donation lot not exceeding five thousand square feet; that, in pursuance of the provisions of the said act of Congress, the said governor and judges did lay out a town, embracing a large extent of ground, extending back from the river Detroit nearly one mile, and granted and sold all the lots so laid out by them, and gave deeds to the respective grantees and purchasers for the same. The said governor and judges did also expend large sums of money, and at repeated periods, to cause the said town or city to be surveyed and plats of said surveys to be made and recorded, on which the grants and public sales at auction of the said lots were made. Under those circumstances many of your memorialists became owners of lots, either as donations, or by purchase from the original grantees, or from the said governor and judges, at public auction. Your memorialists beg leave further to remark, that a period of nearly twenty-two years has elapsed since the laying out and establishing the plan of the said city of Detroit; that the titles of the respective owners of lots have for many years been recorded, agreeably to the statutory provisions of the said Territory; that many of your memorialists have expended large sums of money in labor, buildings, and improvements in and about the said lots and the streets on which they are situated; that your memorialists have been subjected to the payment of heavy taxes on the said lots, and have necessarily and unavoidably contributed large sums of money to roads, streets, public buildings, and other improvements within the said city; and, moreover, have been subjected to the depredations of savage enemies during the late war, and the consequences incident to such a state on a frontier Territory during the period of its occupation by the enemy. Your memorialists have, during many years, indulged the hope that a period would arrive when they would be in some measure remunerated and indemnified by the enjoyment of the fruits of their privations and economical savings during so long a period of time, by realizing the benefits of the increase in value of the said property; but just at the dawning of this prospect your memorialists, with mingled emotions of regret and disappointment, find that their hopes and expectations are suddenly obscured and in a great measure dissipated by an attack on their vested rights, entirely unexpected and unlooked for from the source from which it has emanated. It never entered into the minds of your memorialists that, as soon as a supposed improvement in the legislative authority of the Territory should be obtained, legislative enactments, under frivolous and delusive pretences, would be passed to impair and take away rights which we had fondly cherished as inalienable and permanent; but, to the great surprise and disquietude of your memorialists, the legislative council of the said Territory did, by an act entitled "An act relative to the city of Detroit," (see sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 of said act,) approved April 4, 1827, authorize the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and freemen of this city to pass such laws and ordinances as they might think proper; to vacate and alter diametrically the recorded plan of said city; and the act of the said legislative council contains several other arbitrary provisions, intended to impair and take away the legal, vested, and constitutional rights of your memorialists to their property, lawfully acquired; and notwithstanding the remonstrances of your memorialists, directed both to the said legislative council and to the said mayor, recorder, aldermen, and freemen of Detroit, an ordinance of said corporation has been passed vacating the recorded plan of the city of Detroit, and authorizing streets and alleys to be run, in directions entirely different, over the private property of your memorialists, throwing everything into the utmost confusion, and thereby impairing and destroying the property and rights of your memorialists without any kind of expediency or necessity for the public good, but merely to gratify the whim and caprice of some men who pretend to have a great predilection to a rectangular plan, instead of the old plan, which is on the basis of an equilateral triangle. Your memorialists would also observe that by such unwarrantable alteration it will be unsafe to hold any ground within the limits so altered, as the lots, agreeably to the new plan, will frequently be made up of parts of lots owned by various individuals, some of whom are absent from the country and in foreign parts, and others are owned by minors and heirs of the original grantees. It has been speciously urged by those who have planned the alteration that there were errors and incongruities in the old plan. Your memorialists can only reply, in answer to such reasons, that such alteration will only tend to increase, instead of obviating, the confusion which otherwise might easily be remedied.

Your memorialists cannot but be persuaded that the course which has been commenced and pursued, relative to the plan of the city of Detroit, is replete with sinister consequences, and will operate injuriously and ruinously on many of its inhabitants. Such example will also have great weight over the whole Territory, and operate as a great discouragement to men of property in vesting their money in landed property within this city or Territory; for if this corporation has power to alter the plan diametrically this year, what guarantee have the owners of property against future and frequent alterations hereafter? What man of ordinary prudence would, under such circumstances, think of holding any real estate or of erecting buildings in a place under such circumstances?

Your memorialists are fully persuaded that much of the future prospects of this city must be founded on its commercial growth and importance, being the metropolis; and from its advantageous and central position there is reason to believe that it will continue to be the most important commercial entrepot for all the upper lakes and the country bordering on them. Any measure, therefore, having a tendency to unsettle the titles to lots in said city will always and lastingly be felt, and should, therefore, be deprecated as a great public as well as private misfortune.

Your memorialists, in conclusion, beg leave to observe that it is an axiom in civilized governments, as sound as it is wise and just, that much of the prosperity of all states must depend essentially upon the laws which secure and guarantee to private individuals the rights of property and the faithful administration of such protecting laws. Take away such protection and security, and what is there left to stimulate the faithful citizen to honest exertion, and industry, and economy, to acquire real estate? What becomes of private as well as public wealth? Is not the power of states and empires in a measure commensurate with the wealth and numbers of its population? Is not the secure tenure of real estate one of the greatest and most essential and prominent features in our great American bill of rights, the magna charta of American independence? Are not such rights recognized and guaranteed to the citizens of the United States residing under the territorial governments by the provisions of the articles of compact, declared to be unalterable, promulgated by the authority of Congress in their ordinance of July 13, 1787?

Your memorialists, therefore, for these and several other reasons which might with great propriety be urged in the premises, respectfully request that your honorable bodies will take this our memorial into consideration, and the reasons on which it is founded, and also pass in review the act of Congress hereinbefore mentioned, of April, 1806, and especially such part as relates to the duties imposed by the provisions of the said act on the governor and judges, requiring a report of their proceedings; and your memorialists further request that a confirmation by Congress of the acts of the said governor and judges, so far as relates to titles held under them, may be made; and that the original plan, as established by the said governor and judges, may also be approved; and that your honorable bodies will be further pleased to extend your paternal and protecting authority over the rights of your humble memorialists by repealing or annulling the act of the legislative council of this Territory of April 4, 1827, and all other acts supplemental or in addition thereto tending to impair, abridge, or take away the vested rights of your memorialists.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

DETROIT, January 12, 1828.

MICHIGAN TERRITORY, County of Wayne:

I certify the within petition to be a true copy of the original, transmitted by General John R. Williams, of this city, to the honorable Mr. Van Ranssalear, of the House of Representatives.

JOHN McDONELL.

CITY OF DETROIT, January 20, 1828.

AN ORDINANCE.

DETROIT, April 23, 1827.

The following ordinance is published in conformity with the 17th section of the "Act relative to the city of Detroit;" notice will hereafter be given of the time and place appointed for bringing the same under the consideration of a public meeting of the freemen of said city:

AN ORDINANCE relative to a change of the plan of the city of Detroit, passed in conformity with the provisions of the 14th section of an act of the legislative council of the Territory of Michigan, entitled "An act relative to the city of Detroit," approved April 5, 1827.

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the mayor, recorder, and aldermen of the city of Detroit, That so much of said city as is embraced within the limits set forth in the 13th section of the act mentioned in the title of this ordinance be laid out anew, agreeably to the plan draughted by John Mullett, under the direction of the mayor, recorder, and aldermen; of which the original shall be deposited with the city clerk, and a copy thereof shall be placed on the records of the city register. And all streets, alleys, public squares, &c., not therein specially recognized, shall henceforth cease to be such.

SEC. 2. That all owners of lots situated upon that part of the city plat mentioned in the foregoing section, who may approve of the provisions of the 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th sections of the act of the legislative council mentioned in the title of this act, and may desire that the same be carried into effect, shall subscribe a paper to be deposited at the office of the city clerk, setting forth such assent, and thereupon the provisions of the act of the legislative council aforesaid shall be binding upon the lots of such assenting proprietors; and non-resident owners of lots may make known their assent by letter, or other written evidence. And it shall be the duty of the common council to appoint twelve freeholders of the city of Detroit, who shall proceed to affix a valuation to all lots laid out on that part of the plan heretofore established which is changed by this ordinance, and also a valuation to all lots as laid out in the plan adopted in the 1st section of this ordinance. And it shall be the duty of the mayor, recorder and aldermen to grant to such proprietors as may have expressed their assent to the act upon which this ordinance is founded, in the manner before prescribed, an equivalent in lots or money, at the option of such proprietors, upon quit-claim being made to the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and freemen of the city, of all lots for which equivalent is claimed.

SEC. 3. That before any street shall be opened and established on that part of the city plat of which the plan is altered by this ordinance, which shall affect the interest of such owners of lots as may not have declared their assent, as is before provided, the common council shall proceed in the manner prescribed in the 18th and 19th sections of the "Act relative to the city of Detroit," and such owners shall be entitled to the privileges and subject to the provisions thereof.

Attest: JOHN J. DEMING, Clerk of the Common Council.

The following are the sections of the "Act relative to the city of Detroit" referred to in the preceding ordinance:

"SECTION 13. That the mayor, recorder, and aldermen of the city of Detroit, or a majority of them, be, and they are hereby, authorized to cause to be surveyed all that part of the said city lying northerly of Larned street, westwardly of Woodward avenue, southerly of the out-lots, and easterly of the Macomb line, so called, and also all that other part of the said city lying northerly of Larned street, westerly of the Brush line, so called, southerly of said out-lots, and eastwardly of said Woodward avenue, or so much thereof as they may deem expedient, and to relay out and divide the same into lots, streets, lanes, and squares, so that every street running easterly and westerly shall be parallel to said Larned street, and every street running northerly and southerly shall be parallel to said Woodward avenue, or as nearly so as practicable.

"SEC. 14. That it shall be competent for the mayor, recorder, and aldermen of the said city of Detroit, or a majority of them, and they or a majority of them are hereby authorized to provide, by an ordinance to be by them passed, for assessing the value of all the lots owned by individuals or corporations, or held in trust by the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan under an act of the Congress of the United States, approved in April, 1806, in that part of the said city which they, the said mayor, recorder and aldermen, or a majority of them, shall cause to be surveyed, relaid out, and divided, as aforesaid, and for assigning to the owners of such lots other lot or lots to the value assessed, if such owner or owners shall consent to take such lots, and for the payment of said value, or any part thereof, in money: Provided, That a right of appeal be allowed to the circuit court of the county of Wayne; and said court shall cause an issue to be made up, and the amount of damages to be assessed by a jury, from the decision on the value of any lot, if said appeal shall be prosecuted within one year after such value shall be assessed, and not otherwise.

"SEC. 15. That when the value of any lot or lots ascertained and determined, pursuant to the provisions of the ordinance to be passed as aforesaid, or so much thereof as shall be covered by any street or alley, shall be paid or tendered to the owner or owners thereof; or when any other lot or lots to the said value shall be assigned to such owner or owners, the said owner or owners shall thereupon release and quit-claim to the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and freemen of the city of Detroit all title to his, her, or their lot or lots, the value of which has been paid or tendered, or some other lot or lots assigned to the value thereof, as aforesaid; and if such owner or owners, after such payment or tender, or assignment, as aforesaid, shall neglect or refuse, for the space of one year, to execute and deliver to the said mayor, recorder, aldermen, and freemen of the city of Detroit, good and valid release and quit-claim of all his, her, or their title in and to the lot and lots aforesaid, then, and in such case, the deed and deeds of such owner or owners of the lots aforesaid shall be void, and shall not be given in evidence of title in any court of law or equity in this Territory. And the deed and deeds which may thereafter be executed and delivered for conveying title to the lot and lots, or any part thereof, of such owner or owners, shall be deemed and taken to be, in all courts of law and equity in said Territory, conclusive evidence of legal title in fee of the premises described in such deed and deeds, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to deprive or debar the owner and owners aforesaid from having the value of his, her, or their said lot and lots so ascertained as aforesaid and in manner aforesaid: Provided, also, That for recording and registering all deeds and other instruments necessary and proper to be recorded and registered in the fulfilment of the change of the plan of the said city in manner aforesaid, the common council of said city shall, at the expense of the said city, procure such record books and blanks as the said common council may deem suitable; and the city register shall be, and he is hereby, required, when said record books and blanks shall be procured, as aforesaid, to make therein all records and registry of all deeds and other instruments that may be deemed necessary by said common council; and the city register shall receive 6¼ cents for every one hundred words actually written, and no more.

"SEC. 16. That all the expenses which shall accrue for surveying, relaying out, and dividing said city as aforesaid; for assessing the value of lots, and for making all transfers necessary to give this act effect, and for recording the same, shall be paid by the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and freemen of the city of Detroit; and all the lots within the limits mentioned in the 13th section of this act, remaining after all the claims of the owner and owners thereof are satisfied and adjusted in the way and manner as aforesaid, shall become the property and be and remain to the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and freemen of the city of Detroit and their successors in fee: Provided, however, That a lot of suitable size, to be designated by the common council of said city, with the approbation and consent of the governor of this Territory, shall be reserved around the court-house and another around the jail.

"SEC. 17. That it shall be the duty of the mayor, recorder, and aldermen of said city, as soon as convenient after the passing of this act, to make and publish the ordinance prescribed in the 14th section of this act, and thereupon to call a public meeting of the freemen for the purpose of taking the same into consideration, and a majority of said freemen shall approve of such ordinance, or alter and amend the same until approved of; whereupon the said mayor, recorder, and aldermen shall proceed to carry the same into effect.

"SEC. 18. That the common council of the said city, or a majority of them, shall have full power and authority to lay out, establish, open, and make such streets, lanes, alleys, side-walks, highways, water-courses and bridges, within the limit and agreeably to the plan of said city as they may deem necessary for the public convenience: Provided, That notice of the intention to lay out, open, establish, and make such street, lane, alley, or side-walk, highway, water-course, or bridge, shall be given, either personally to those interested or by publication in some newspaper published in said city, previous to the meeting of the common council for that purpose.

"SEC. 19. That when the owner or occupant of any lot, tenement, or premises, through or adjacent to which any street, lane, alley, side-walk, highway, or bridge is proposed to be opened or made, shall claim damages therefor, such owner or occupant shall present his claim in writing, to be filed with the clerk of said city, previous to the meeting of the common council for the purpose aforesaid; and if the common council shall determine that such improvements shall be made, they shall issue their precept in the nature of a venire facias, directed to the marshal of said city, requiring him to summon six disinterested freeholders of said city, who shall assess the damages under oath which the party so claiming may sustain thereby; which sum so assessed, together with all costs, shall be paid or fully tendered before such street, lane, or alley, side-walk, highway, or bridge shall be made, opened, or established; and the marshal is hereby authorized and empowered to administer the oath aforesaid to the said jurors, well and truly to inquire of and assess the damages in the premises: Provided, nevertheless, That the party claiming damages shall have the right to remove such proceedings by certiorari or appeal to the supreme or circuit court of this Territory, upon giving notice of such intention of appeal to said common council in writing within three days after the award of the freeholders aforesaid; but no certiorari, appeal, supersedeas, injunction, or other process from said court shall prevent the immediate making, laying out, or opening such street, lane, alley, side-walk, highway or bridge; and the said supreme or circuit court, on hearing such certiorari or appeal, shall award such damages as may be deemed just, and may render judgment for the same in the same manner as in a suit against the corporation of said city; and if the said supreme or circuit court shall not give judgment for greater damages than those awarded by the freeholders aforesaid, the party removing such suit shall not be entitled to costs."

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 644. [1ST SESSION.

RELATIVE TO A GRANT OF LAND TO OHIO FOR PAYING DEBT INCURRED FOR MAKING CANALS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 11, 1828.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of the 3d of January last, with instruction "to inquire into the justice and expediency of appropriating a portion of the public lands to the State of Ohio to aid the said State in the payment of the debt contracted for the canals authorized by the laws of said State," reported:

That the interesting nature of the work to which the attention of your committee has been directed, and the certainty of its being capable of successful execution, are sufficiently obvious without presenting, in detail, the result of inquiry.

The Ohio canal passes entirely through that State. The length of its main stem is about three hundred miles. Its points of termination are in the Ohio river, at the mouth of Scioto, and in Lake Erie, at the mouth of Cuyahoga. It will afford navigation to the extensive and productive country through which it runs. It will connect the whole eastern, northern, and middle regions of the Union with the valley of the west; uniting the Mississippi and all its streams with the northern lakes and the great rivers through which they discharge themselves—the Atlantic with the Gulf of Mexico. The men, munitions, and provisions in war, the trade and intercourse in peace, that must pour through this channel of inland commerce claim for it a very high degree of national advantage.

The reports of the canal commissioners have been before the committee, which show that funds for the completion of the whole work have been obtained by loan; that near two hundred miles of the line have been not only placed under contract, but are now in a state of forwardness, and that the undertaking is conducted with great skill, enterprise, and economy. That this improvement, commenced in 1825, will likely be finished in less time to come than it has already been in progress. On this ground the assurance will be deemed sufficient, when it is recollected that the State of Ohio, after the most accurate surveys and careful estimates, upon her own responsibility, has engaged to effect the object, and without actual funds has embarked upwards of three millions of dollars in the enterprise, and for the payment of the debt, with the accruing interest, has pledged the property of her citizens and the faith of the State. Her only means (as it is understood) of paying the current interest is by levying an ad valorem tax upon private property and chiefly real estate, which, including the cost of collection, cannot fall much short of twenty thousand dollars a year. Such contributions must be seriously felt by the population of a country recently settled, and which, by continued industry, is but gradually opening to cultivation. These difficulties must be greatly increased by the constant and heavy drains of money which have been and will be made from that State by the purchase of government lands; for Ohio has paid to the United States for lands upwards of sixteen millions of dollars, and now owes between two and three hundred thousand dollars.

Taxes can only be raised off of lands that have been purchased more than five years, because, by the compact, no land is subject to taxation within that period after sale. Under such circumstances, the efforts of a State in such a cause, in the opinion of the committee, deserve to be seconded by the helping hand of the general government.

If precedents are consulted, the appropriations of land made by Congress to the States of Indiana and Illinois, to aid in the construction of canals not commenced, will, it is hoped, fully justify the course here proposed. On the score of interest as well as equal justice, it is believed, the United States might well bear a portion of this expense. The perpetual right which this grant is intended to secure to the government, of carrying on the canal its property and troops free from toll, may, to a great degree, be considered an equivalent. But, in addition to this, the government is still a landholder in the State of Ohio to the amount of seven millions of acres; and though but little of the public land is situated immediately on the line of the canal, yet, in the general increase of value which that improvement will give to property in the State, the government will derive its proportionate advantage. This channel will also aid in the procurement of means to purchase the unsold lands, and greatly facilitate the migration not only to such of them as lie in Ohio, but still further westward. And again: the people of Ohio, owning fifteen millions of acres, have, with a view to enhance the value thereof, incurred a debt of three millions of dollars; the United States own land there to near half that quantity, (of less value, perhaps,) to which more worth will thereby be added with other important advantages. Then is it not reasonable and proper that they should offer at least half a million's worth of that property, which they hold for sale, to aid in paying the debt? The committee would answer in the affirmative; and therefore report a bill to appropriate five hundred thousand acres for that purpose.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 645. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIM IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 12, 1828.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of Thomas B. Magruder, of the State of Mississippi, reported:

The petitioner states that in the year 1788 a grant was made by the Spanish government to a Mrs. Ann Brashears, at that time and ever since a resident of that part of Mississippi in which the land lies, for eight hundred arpents of land lying on the waters of Bayou Pierre, in what is now Claiborne county, in said State. He states that an order and warrant of survey issued from the Spanish government, some time in that year or the year following, for said quantity of land, in favor of said Ann, by the said government; that William Thomas, as acting deputy surveyor for William Vausdan, at that time surveyor for the Natchez district, did, by virtue of said warrant, survey the aforesaid quantity of land for her, on the north side of the north fork of said bayou, including a place known by the name of the White Ground Lick, in said county. He states that she improved and cultivated said tract for several years, being then a widow, and above the age of twenty-one years; and that she resided upon and cultivated said tract of land on October 22, 1795, and for some time anterior and previous thereto; that she confided to the care of said Thomas the above-mentioned order of survey, and patent or grant, and that she never regained the possession of them, having been, as she supposes, accidentally lost or destroyed; that she had procured testimony of the foregoing facts and delivered it to the Hon. George Poindexter, at that time a representative to Congress from said State, to be laid before Congress, accompanying a petition which she had prepared for relief, but that she has reasons to believe they were not presented, and that she knows not what has become of them. He also alleges that on or about November 11, 1788, the said William Vausdan undertook to survey said tract of land for said Ann, but that he surveyed only three hundred acres instead of the quantity which had been granted as aforesaid, without alleging any reason therefor. He also states that thereafter, to wit, about August 29, 1791, a patent issued from the Spanish government to one Benjamin Foy for five hundred arpents of land; that he erected a camp near said White Ground Lick, and on or about the centre of the land so granted to said Ann; that he, the said Foy, then agreed with the said Ann that he would have surveyed for himself only three hundred and twenty arpents, and that his patent should be filled up for that quantity only, instead of five hundred arpents; which compromise and arrangement were made at the request of the then Spanish governor, who assured said Ann that she should have the quantity so granted to said Foy located at some other place; and that the said Foy never claimed any more of said tract so originally granted to said Mrs. Brashears.

He states, further, that in the beginning of the fall of the year 1804 she authorized Major Stephen Minor (at that time a late Spanish governor in that part of the Spanish government) to present for confirmation, to the board of commissioners appointed for examining claims to land by the government of the United States, in the district west of Pearl river, her said claim, upon which land she, the said Ann, then resided. He also alleges that the said Minor claimed for her only three hundred arpents, part of said original grant, because he understood that the part of the said original grant to Mrs. Brashears which had been granted to said Foy was five hundred arpents, and because the survey made for said Ann was for only three hundred arpents, making, in the meantime, no communication to Mrs. Brashears as to the testimony which was necessary to the confirmation of her said claim, and that it was rejected by said board for the want of evidence of said patent. He also states that no part of said land has been claimed by any other person, except, as above set forth, by said Foy, in part. That the said Mrs. Brashears has always been considered as the owner of the residue of said tract, after deducting the aforesaid quantity of three hundred and twenty arpents claimed by said Foy, amounting by estimation to four hundred and ninety-three acres, for which she has regularly paid the taxes for many years down to 1813. He states that she has never conveyed her right thereto to any one, except by deed, to take effect upon her death, to her daughter Elizabeth, who has intermarried with the petitioner. It is also stated in said petition that on or about June 12, 1806, one Richard Sparks produced to the said board of commissioners a claim for three hundred and twenty arpents of land, relying upon a patent to said Benjamin Foy, of date August 29, 1791, and a conveyance from said Foy to him, (Sparks,) dated June 28, 1802, and the evidence of one William Barland that the said Foy was a resident in the Mississippi Territory on October 27, 1795, which claim was confirmed by said board in August, 1806, and a certificate (letter A, No. 786) was issued to him (Sparks) for the same; which said claim of Sparks is located at the upper end and within the boundaries of the original patent to Mrs. Brashears. He states that the residue of the said tract is unclaimed and unoccupied by any person except said Ann Brashears, unless it has been located by some late entry under authority from the general government. He finally prays that the government will confirm the title of said Ann Brashears to four hundred and eighty arpents, or four hundred and ninety three acres, being the quantity for which she has paid taxes, and being the residue of the tract originally granted to her, after deducting the quantity of three hundred and twenty arpents confirmed to said Sparks, or such portion thereof as may yet remain subject to the government of the United States, or that such other relief be granted to her as the justice of her case may warrant.

Stephen Minor certifies, not on oath, that Mrs. Brashears did present a petition for eight hundred acres of land, on the Bayou Pierre, known by the name of the White Ground Lick, and that she obtained a grant or order of survey for only five hundred acres, which he put into the hands of William Vausdan, which he (Vausdan) surveyed sometime in 1788; that he paid him the fees for surveying and obtaining the patent, which he engaged to do. A certificate of survey is presented, signed with the name of William Vausdan, D. S., dated November 11, 1788, for three hundred acres of land, in the name of Ann Brashears, on the north side of the Bayou Pierre, about fifty miles from Natchez; annexed thereto is an extract from the register's office west of Pearl river, showing that Stephen B. Minor, for Ann Brashears, claimed three hundred arpents of land in Claiborne county, Mississippi Territory, on the Bayou Pierre, represented in said plat of survey, by virtue of an order of survey from the Spanish government for eight hundred arpents, including said three hundred arpents, bearing date in 1788, at which time it is asserted she was at the head of a family and above twenty-one years of age, and inhabited and cultivated said tract on the 27th day of October, in 1795; which claim was laid in by said Minor March 22, 1804. This, with the plat of survey, is certified as extracts by B. R. Grayson, register.

It appears that in support of the claim so laid in, one William Thomas made oath that Ann Brashears obtained a warrant of survey from the Spanish government upwards of fourteen years previous thereto for 800 arpents of land; that the witness, as the deputy of said Vausdan under said warrant, surveyed for her that quantity on the north fork of Bayou Pierre, including the place called the White Ground Lick, near to which one Benjamin Foy resided in a camp, which was near the centre of the land; and that the present claim of 300 arpents is within said survey of 800 arpents; and that he knows not why Vausdan failed to return the survey which he had so made.

John Girault, on oath, stated that after said Vausdan resigned as surveyor aforesaid, William Dunbar was appointed to supply the vacancy, and that he, the witness, as his deputy, surveyed for one Benjamin Foy, under the order of the Spanish government, a tract of land of three hundred and twenty arpents within the survey of the said 800 arpents. That said Foy, being interpreter for said government and a favorite, obtained a grant for five hundred arpents, as he understood, but that, as Mrs. Brashears had a prior right, he agreed to take only 320 arpents out of the 800, which he surveyed on the upper end of said 800 arpents.

Stephen Minor made oath that a warrant of survey issued from the Spanish government to Mrs. Ann Brashears for 800 arpents fourteen or fifteen years before the said time. The board of commissioners rejected the claim for want of evidence May 12, 1807.

The affidavit of Gepsen Clark, taken December 10, 1816, shows that he was present twenty-five or thirty years previous thereto, when the survey at the place called the White Ground Lick was made by a properly authorized surveyor for Mrs. Brashears, who then and ever since has resided in the county of Claiborne, in said State of Mississippi, and that he believes she always paid the taxes on said land.

From the foregoing testimony this committee are not willing to recommend that the claim of said Ann Brashears should be confirmed. If there issued from the Spanish government, at the time alleged, a patent or grant, the claim would not require confirmation; but it is apparent, from the history of the case, that no grant was obtained, and that both the petitioner and some of the witnesses use the terms "order of survey" and "grant" as synonymous. That the former did issue from the Spanish government is sworn by both Thomas and Minor. The language employed is too general to be as satisfactory as it might have been. What officer of the Spanish government issued the order of survey, and how the witnesses were satisfied of its genuineness, are matters about which we are left to conjecture. The witnesses who swear to the fact, however, are Minor and Thomas, a deputy surveyor in that quarter of the country, whose testimony, therefore, should have great weight. What has become of Vausdan, and why the papers delivered to him, as well as those delivered to Poindexter, have not been applied for and obtained, is not accounted for. Nevertheless, as it is proven, although not in the most unexceptionable manner, that the order of survey was granted by the Spanish government to said Ann for 800 arpents, and that Foy, who had once claimed 500 arpents, had not insisted on his claim, except as to 320 arpents, on account of Mrs. Brashears's claim thereto; and as it is alleged that there is no claim to the residue, and as one witness swears that he has long resided as a neighbor to her, and has reasons to believe that she has regularly paid the tax thereon, the committee recommend to Congress that the government shall relinquish, as a gratuity, all title with which it is now vested to said Ann, to the residue of the original survey of eight hundred arpents, after deducting therefrom the quantity confirmed, as above stated, to said Sparks; and that upon a plat and certificate of survey of said land being returned to the General Land Office a patent be granted to her for said quantity, saving the rights of others. For this purpose they have reported a bill.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 646. [1ST SESSION.

LAND TITLES IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 13, 1828.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of the undersigned citizens of the State of Missouri respectfully showeth: That at the date of the cession of Louisiana to the United States the titles to land in that province were universally derived from the Kings of France or of Spain, through their official representatives, and were of the following descriptions, to wit:

1. Complete titles (after location and survey) by the supreme authority at New Orleans.
2. Grants or orders of survey made by the supreme authority at New Orleans in the first instance.
3. Grants or orders of survey made by the lieutenant-governor of Upper Louisiana, and by other commandants exercising the functions of sub-delegates.

Your petitioners show that very few titles of the first class existed in Upper Louisiana at the date of the treaty of cession.

Incomplete titles, which constituted the second and third classes, formed more than nineteen-twentieths of the whole, and were considered as secure as those of the first class. Your petitioners show that the second class, namely, that of incomplete titles, originating with the supreme authority at New Orleans, were but few in number; and that the third class, namely, that of incomplete titles, proceeding in the first instance from the lieutenant-governor of Upper Louisiana, and the other officers exercising the functions of sub-delegates, was by far the most numerous, and constituted the principal and most valuable property of the inhabitants. Your petitioners show that of these incomplete titles some were surveyed; others, though not actually surveyed, were special in their description of the land granted; and others, again, were only what was termed floating concessions, which authorized the grantee to locate a certain quantity of land when and where he thought proper, provided he did not interfere with the rights of other proprietors.

Your petitioners show that, at and previous to the date of the cession of Louisiana to the United States, the second and third classes of titles, whether surveyed, special, or floating, were in a constant course of exchange, sale, distribution, and inheritance.

Your petitioners beg leave to refer to the records of the French and Spanish tribunals in Louisiana for the conclusive proof of this allegation. The original deeds of sale or exchange, inter vivos, the schedules and sales of the property of bankrupts and insolvents, and, lastly, the inventories and sales of the property of intestates, now existing among the Spanish archives at St. Louis, demonstrate that incomplete titles, as above described, were a valuable and convertible property, and in every instance recognized as such, not only by the French and Spanish authorities in Upper Louisiana, but by the governor general and the superior tribunal at New Orleans.

Your petitioners show that they, your petitioners, form a part of that numerous class of the citizens of the State of Missouri who are proprietors of, and interested in, those incomplete titles, and who have become vested with them either as original grantees, or by descent, or by purchase. Your petitioners respectfully submit that those incomplete titles so vested in them constitute a species of property as much entitled to the protection of laws, constitutions, or treaties, as any other right or property whatsoever.

Your petitioners show to your honorable bodies that the third article of the treaty of cession guarantees to the inhabitants of Louisiana their property of every description.

Your petitioners further show that not only by the treaty of cession, but also by the treaty of Fontainbleau, in 1762, and that of San Ildefonso, in 1800, the property comprehended in, and consisting of, incomplete titles was distinctly and unequivocally protected.

Your petitioners beg leave to refer your honorable bodies to the letter addressed by Louis XV to M. D'Abadie, director general and commandant of Louisiana, and to the proclamation of Don Manuel Salcédo and the Marquis of Case Calvo, commissioners of the King of Spain, to the inhabitants of Louisiana, for proof of the intention of the high contracting parties in the respective treaties of Fontainbleau and San Ildefonso.

Your petitioners show that the commissioners of the King of Spain, in their proclamation, use the following unequivocal language, to wit: "That all concessions or property of any kind soever, given by the governors of those provinces, be confirmed, though it had not been done by his Majesty."

Your petitioners show that this proclamation was published on the 18th of May, 1803, at New Orleans, after the date of the treaty of cession to the United States, in the presence of the French commissioners, and has never been objected to by either the French or American governments. That the letter to M.

D'Abadie is to be found in the appendix to the United States land laws, and the proclamation of Salcédo and Case Calvo is on the files of the Department of State at Washington city.

Your petitioners further show that the Congress of the United States, influenced no doubt by a sense of justice and the obligation of solemn treaties, has at different periods since the treaty of cession enacted laws for the settlement and adjudication of claims to land in Louisiana, founded on Spanish or French grants and orders of survey.

That the first of those laws was passed March 26, 1804, and the last May 26, 1824.

Your petitioners show that under the laws passed between March 26, 1804, and April 12, 1814, inclusive, a considerable number of those claims have been confirmed, either by the direct operation of the law itself, or through the medium of a recorder or commissioners appointed for that purpose.

That in consequence of the limited provisions of those laws, or of their non-application by the officers appointed to administer them, a great many claims remained undisposed of and unconfirmed, which were based precisely on the same species of original title, and were possessed of equal (and often superior) merits with those that had been confirmed.

That in order to obviate this inconsistency and injustice, and to extend relief to the holders of bona fide French and Spanish incomplete titles, the law of 1824, above mentioned, was enacted.

Your petitioners show that the act of 1824 was intended to be more remedial than the former acts, inasmuch as it did not affix any limit to the quantity of land that might be confirmed under it in Missouri; whereas the former acts restricted that quantity within a league square, or six thousand and two superficial acres.

That the act of 1824 was also more remedial, inasmuch as it authorized the court to adjudicate and confirm, with reference to "the laws of nations, the stipulations of treaties, the proceedings under the same, the several acts of Congress," and lastly, "the laws and ordinances, customs and usages, of Upper Louisiana;" whereas the former acts only referred to the "laws and established usages and customs of the French and Spanish governments," and limited the quantity, as has been observed, within a league square.

Your petitioners further show that under the act of 1824 a great number of petitions have been filed in the district court of the United States for the district of Missouri.

Your petitioners show that the first court under the above law was held in November, 1824, since which time only three final decisions have been made.

The decree in those three causes was against the petitioner; and in two of them, to wit: the widow and heirs of Soulard vs. The United States, and J. Smith, under St. Vrin, against The United States, appeals have been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, which appeals have not yet been heard or decided.

Your petitioners show that by the law of 1824 the time for filing petitions was limited to two years from May 26, 1824, the date of the act, and the time for taking an appeal, if the decree should be against the petitioner, to one year from the date of such decree.

That by an act of Congress of 1826 the time for filing petitions was extended to May 26, 1828, leaving the time within which an appeal was to be taken the same as before.

Your petitioners further show that the judge of the said district court, in his decisions on the above cases, appears to have totally lost sight of that part of the act under which he adjudicated, which refers him to "the law of nations, the stipulations of treaties, the proceedings under the same, the several acts of Congress, the laws and ordinances and the customs and usages of Upper Louisiana," and has thought proper to declare the titles before him "illegal in their origin, and invalid," because they were not conformable to certain regulations made by Count O'Reilly, governor general of Louisiana, on February 18, 1770; to certain other regulations made by Governor Gayoso, of September 8, 1797; and lastly, to regulations made by Morales, the intendant general of Louisiana, of July 17, 1799.

Your petitioners show that the objection taken by the said judge against the title of the petitioners in the three causes in which he has made a decision might be urged with equal propriety against the titles of your petitioners, and, as your petitioners conscientiously believe, against every incomplete title that exists, or has ever existed, in Upper Louisiana.

That your petitioners, therefore, together with all the other persons who had instituted proceedings, with the exception of two, have withdrawn their petitions from before said judge, and paid the costs that have accrued, rather than submit to a decree against them, which, as has been stated, would compel each of them to appeal within one year from the date of the decree or be forever barred.

Your petitioners show that the expenses of such proceedings would, in many instances, be more than the land or title in question was worth; and that the claimant, though he should succeed in reversing the decree against him, would, after all, instead of obtaining redress, have made a disadvantageous and perhaps a ruinous purchase.

Your petitioners further show that if the law of 1824, instead of the construction put upon it, had received the most remedial and liberal interpretation, it would, nevertheless, have operated most grievously upon the claimants.

That under this law the proceedings are to be conducted according to the rules of chancery, thereby subjecting the claimant to all the vexations, delays, and expenses of such a practice.

That under this law it is not only the question of right to confirmation as against the United States, but the title as between private individuals that is to be decided upon.

That by this law the petitioner is obliged to make every adverse occupant claiming even under a title posterior to the date of the concession and survey a party.

That the delay and expense resulting from such a provision to the claimant are manifest and intolerable.

Your petitioners submit that the only question which should be tried by the court is that of the right of the original grantee as against the United States, and that the question of title should be left to be afterwards decided by the proper tribunal between private parties.

That by the terms of this law the petitioner, though he be a resident of Missouri, is bound before he proceeds to file security for costs—a provision which has been found embarrassing and oppressive, and which, even in ordinary litigation between private suitors, is only called for under peculiar circumstances, to be laid before the court upon the oath of the party requesting such security, or upon the oath of some competent witness for him.

That the claimant in all cases, and although he may have a decree in favor of his title, is liable to all such costs as shall accrue upon his own part of the proceedings.

That when the decree is against the claimant, or if he does not within a limited time prosecute his cause to a final decree, or where it shall appear that his claim has heretofore been unfavorably reported upon by the recorder or commissioners, he pays not only his own costs but those of the United States and of every other defendant.

That inasmuch as the judge of the United States district court of Missouri is of opinion that a single rejection is an unfavorable report within the meaning of the act, the consequence will be that in ninety-nine cases in the hundred which have been before the board of commissioners or recorder the claimant will be subjected to all the costs, even though the decree of the district judge should confirm his title.

Your petitioners respectfully submit that under such a law, so construed, delays and obstacles of every sort may be multiplied at the will of the defendants, who, it is obvious, are entirely free from that control which the liability to costs, in the ordinary administration of justice, imposes on the dishonest litigant.

That the law, as it now stands, not only violates the faith of treaties, but the vital principle of all our institutions, which ordains that justice shall not be sold, delayed, or denied to any citizen.

That the effect of the law, as far as it has yet operated, has only been to extort money from your petitioners to the benefit of the officers of the United States district court, who have already received from your petitioners several thousand dollars.

Your petitioners having thus stated as briefly as they could the grievances under which they suffer, and the nature of their rights, beg leave to submit, in the language of the President of the United States in his message to Congress at its last session, that "public faith, no less than the just rights of individuals, and the interest of the community itself, appears to require further provisions for the speedy settlement of their claims."

Wherefore your petitioners respectfully pray that the act of Congress of May 26, 1824, entitled "An act enabling the claimants to land within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," may be so amended as to secure to your petitioners, and the other proprietors of authentic and bona fide French and Spanish grants and orders of survey, a final confirmation of their titles, and so as to exempt your petitioners from the delays, litigation, and costs to which the law in its present shape has subjected and would again subject them; and your petitioners pray that, if the above relief should not be granted to them, the time, at least, for filing their petitions, which, by the act of 1826, expires on May 26, 1828, may be extended for two years from that date, or until the decision of the Supreme Court on the appeal taken in the case of widow and heirs of Antoine Soulard against the United States shall have been pronounced and published in Missouri.

And your petitioners will pray.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 647. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 18, 1828.

SIR: The enclosed papers will show the importance of revising the laws for the settlement of the private land claims in the State of Mississippi.

The causes that have retarded the settlement of the claims in the State of Mississippi have been owing to a misconstruction of the act of Congress of May, 1822.

2. Ignorance as to the limitation of the laws for the prompt settlement of claims.

3. Absence of the claimants, who reside in different States, and who were unacquainted with the mode of proceeding, and the difficulty in obtaining commissions to take testimony from the commissioners.

4. Minors who had no person to represent their claims.

5. Spanish and French inhabitants who were ignorant of the laws.

6. The slow progress in the surveys so as to distinguish private from public claims.

Annexed to this letter you will find a resolution of the legislature of Mississippi on this subject, together with a letter from the register and receiver, to which I refer the committee for further information.

This class of claimants are precisely in the same situation with those in Alabama, for whose benefit a further time was extended by an act of Congress of the last session.

With respect, your obedient servant,

W. HAILE.

Hon. Mr. ISACKS, Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

A RESOLUTION.

Whereas it has been represented to this general assembly that a number of individuals who would have been entitled to lands lying and being in the land district of Jackson county, under the various laws of the United States on the subject of public lands, had they been able to avail themselves of the benefit and intention thereof within the periods prescribed by said laws; but owing to various causes growing out of events over which many of them could have no control, one of which causes was the want of regularity and neglect of duty on the part of the commissioners appointed for the purpose of receiving and reporting evidence of claims, and another of which causes was owing to a want of information on the subject of the time and place appointed by said commissioners for the purpose aforesaid, together with a want of information in relation to the evidence necessary to entitle them to the benefit of the laws aforesaid; all of which causes have operated to the manifest injury of a number of the citizens of this State; and it being very desirable, as well to the claimants aforesaid as to the people of this State, that the above description of claims should be equitably disposed of: Therefore—

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened, That our senators in the Congress of the United States be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their influence to procure the passage of a law authorizing the commissioners of the land district aforesaid to receive evidence of all such claims in their district, under such regulations as may be deemed equitable and just, allowing a sufficient time for the promulgation thereof, and also for the adjustment of said claims.

AUGUSTA, Mississippi, December 25, 1827.

DEAR SIR: At the particular request of some of the persons interested, we enclose the copy of a resolution passed by the general assembly of this State at their last session. The preamble of this resolution we deem sufficiently explanatory of its object. We will, therefore, only remark that at the time of the passage of this resolution it was not known that the claimants in Alabama within this district would be provided for by a law of the last Congress. The resolution must therefore be considered as applying exclusively to the claims in Mississippi.

We further beg leave to refer you to the report of the several commissioners, and particularly to report No. 6 of Mr. Crawford, (to be found in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office,) on a considerable number of claims entered under written evidence of title and reported unfavorably of, for all such claims as appear, from the reports, to have been inhabited and cultivated prior to April 15, 1813. The former register and receiver have issued certificates of confirmation for the quantity of 640 acres. The law, however, on which this class of claims must rest for confirmation being the third section of the act of May 8, 1822, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for adjusting the claims to land and establishing land offices in the district east of the island of New Orleans," we have considerable doubts whether the above-described claims are confirmed by this law; and from the expression of an opinion by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the claim of Wm. E. Kennedy, it would seem that this class of claims, although we believe them equitably entitled, are not confirmed under the existing laws on the subject. We would therefore recommend for your consideration the propriety (in the event of your not being able to effect the object of the before-mentioned resolution) of procuring a law of Congress allowing to such claimants as have heretofore entered their claims with the former commissioners, under written evidence of title, and which have been reported unfavorably of, and who had inhabited or cultivated the same prior to April 15, 1813, a donation of 640 acres.

With great respect, dear sir, your most obedient servants,

WM. HOWZE.
G. B. DAMERON.

Hon. WM. HAILE, Washington City.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 23, 1828.

SIR: I return herewith the memorial of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi in relation to an extension of the time for adjusting private land claims in that part of the State south of the thirty-first degree of latitude, and have the honor to state that the first act providing for the adjustment of the land titles in that section of the State was passed on the 25th day of April, 1812. This act does not expressly limit the period in which the reports of the commissioner should be made to the Treasury Department; but, by the ninth section of the act, the period for which compensation shall be allowed to the commissioners for that district is limited to eighteen months.

On April 18, 1814, an act supplementary to that of April 25, 1812, was passed, and the period for filing claims was extended to September 1, 1814, and that for making the reports to November 1, 1814. Mr. Crawford, the commissioner, states that his reports were completed October 20, 1814. The act of March 3, 1819, confirms the reports made in favor of claimants under the act of 1812, and allows the claimants who had not filed their notices of claims, and those whose claims had been rejected under the former laws, to enter them with the commissioners until July 1, 1820, for their decision thereon.

It may be proper to remark that the acts of 1812, 1814, and 1819, above referred to, embraced all the claims in those parts of the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, south of the thirty-first degree of latitude, between the Mississippi and Perdido. By the act of May 26, 1824, the claimants to lands between the Mississippi and Pearl river (St. Helena district) were allowed until January 1, 1825; and by the act of March 3, 1827, the claimants in that part of Alabama south of the thirty-first degree were allowed until the 1st of September last to file their claims. No act has passed since that of 1819 giving to the claimants in Mississippi further time to establish their claims.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. P. ELLIS, United States Senate.

CONDITION OF THE OFFICE OF THE SURVEYOR OF THE PUBLIC LANDS IN ILLINOIS, MISSOURI, AND ARKANSAS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 14, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 11th instant, "directing the Secretary of the Treasury to lay before the House any information in his department tending to show the actual condition of the office of the surveyor of the public lands in the States of Illinois and Missouri and the Territory of Arkansas, and whether that office, in its present organization and with its present allowance of clerical labor, is competent to discharge the duties, and afford the public and private information required from it by law, and to bring up and complete the unfinished business of the said office now in arrears," I have the honor to submit a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which, with the accompanying documents, contains the information required by the resolution.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 13, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, dated the 11th instant, requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish "any information in his department tending to show the actual condition of the office of surveyor of the public lands in the States of Illinois and Missouri and the Territory of Arkansas, and whether that office, in its present organization and with its present allowance of clerical labor, is competent to discharge the duties, and afford the public and private information required from it by law, and to bring up and complete the unfinished business of the said office now in arrears," and which resolution has been referred to this office, I have now to submit the correspondence marked from No. 1 to No. 6. It will be proper to add that the original communication referred to in the letter from Colonel McRee, of January 30, 1827, was submitted to the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and that it will be found on the files of that committee, or those of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 1.

Copy of a letter from Colonel W. McRee, surveyor general, dated St. Louis, Missouri, January 11, 1826, to George Graham, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SIR: In my estimate of the expenses of this office for the present year, forwarded to you on the 26th of September last, an item was introduced for extra clerk hire. This was done with a view to a special and, I thought, an indispensable object. It was for the purpose of enabling me to put the documents contained in this office into such order, and to take such descriptive accounts of them, as must precede any attempt to record them correctly; and, in short, to post up the work before it can be ascertained with sufficient certainty what has been done in each township, and when, and by whom; all of which is essential not only to accuracy in the transaction of the ordinary business here, but as preliminary in supplying the demands of the General Land Office, or either of the States or the Territory interested, with a correct copy of the surveys that have been executed by the United States within their respective limits. I perceive by the papers of the last mail that Mr. Barton, of the Senate, has handed in a memorial of the legislature of Missouri, asking for additional clerks to be allowed to the surveyor's office in this place for the purpose of furnishing the State of Missouri with copies of the public surveys that lie within it; and that the memorial has been referred. Any attempt to copy the surveys in question while yet the records of the office are in their present condition will but multiply existing errors, and add to the confusion which prevails, without effecting the ostensible object with that degree of accuracy which I presume is, and which certainly ought to be, desirable on the part of the State, and which may be attained if the office is permitted to take the necessary measures to be correct. Of the propriety of the views here stated, I trust you will become fully sensible on the receipt of the estimate called for in your letter of the 20th of October last, and which will shortly be made out and transmitted. In the meanwhile, if the allowance for extra clerk hire is made, I hope it may be done without rendering it a source of future difficulty and mischief, by prescribing its application to an object that cannot be accomplished in the way contemplated, nor undertaken without injury.

I am, &c.

Extract from a letter from Colonel William McRee to George Graham, esq., dated St. Louis, May 2, 1826.

"I find it necessary to state, for the information of the department at Washington, that this office, as now organized, is wholly inadequate to the correct performance of a fourth part of the duties that have devolved upon it, and are required of it by the express terms of the law, independent of those which are incidental, including a large portion of the requisitions of the General Land Office.

"Your letter of the 2d of June last, directing the worn out plats of the different land offices to be renewed with all possible despatch, has not been complied with except in one instance. I found it impossible to execute those instructions, and, after the first effort, gave up the attempt as hopeless. Most if not all the plats sent to the several land offices will require to be renewed within a very few years; a great number of them require to be renewed now. The register of the land office at Kaskaskia reported that all the plats in his office came within the description given in your circular of May 31, 1825, and demand the renewal of the whole number. There are near four thousand wanting in this office under an express injunction of the law, that is to say, several hundred which, from various causes, ought to be renewed, and an entire new set (to be of record, besides those which are now kept in compliance with another enactment) for the use and inspection of the public. And your letter of the 14th of October last contemplates a future demand of some three thousand three hundred for the use of the General Land Office at Washington. But these are mere items. There is near ten years' arrearage of other work on hand, which must be performed before either accuracy or promptness can characterize the operations of this office. Until then I am working in the dark, and the correctness of my intentions affords no guarantee to the government for that of my performance.

"The current duties of conducting the annual surveys of the public lands, &c., and keeping a record of them, are fully equal, and, if properly performed, are perhaps more than equal, to the constant employment of all the means at the disposal of the surveyor. It is apparent, therefore, that the labor bestowed on work of a former period is so much taken from that of the time being, which must be postponed and neglected in consequence.

"I might also mention another class of duties which demand some labor, and obstructs a great deal more—I mean the surveys, &c., of private claims, and from which there is no escape. In relation to all these duties, and to others not enumerated, the law is positive in its injunctions, while it withholds the means of executing them, and is at once imperative and impossible to obey."

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 8, 1826.

SIR: In the estimate of the expenses of the surveying department for the year 1827, I have inserted an item of $1,700 for extra clerk hire in your office; but, as such an appropriation will not be granted by Congress unless it shall be satisfactorily shown that the interests of the government require it, I will thank you to furnish me with a statement in detail of the business required to be done in your office, in order that it may be submitted to the committee of Congress to whom the estimates will be referred.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, January 30, 1828.

SIR: I had the honor of transmitting to you on the 25th instant an estimate of so much of the current business of this office (exclusive of the old unfinished work) as could be ascertained and stated with precision. I was obliged, however, to defer making some explanations which ought to have accompanied it, and which I now beg leave to offer.

The first circumstance that will probably excite your attention on looking over the estimate is the great amount of labor that is required compared with the amount of surveys to be executed and returned; the former being stated at two thousand three hundred and seventy-one days' work, which (allowing three hundred and twelve working days to the year) would therefore occupy eight persons almost a whole year; and, for the most part, in performing the duties incident to directing and to the reception of a less amount of surveys than has frequently been received in the office in one year, with the assistance of only three clerks. It is, notwithstanding, evident that there is no description of work introduced into the estimate, except such as the law directs shall be performed in this office; that the greater part is of urgent necessity, and that none of it can be postponed without inconvenience to the service; and (although, from the nature of the work, it is impossible that the labor necessary to accomplish it can be determined with much accuracy) it might, perhaps, be sufficient to add that the rate of performance has not been gratuitously assumed, but regulated and scaled with care by actual and recent experience. But a more direct and satisfactory explanation may be given. The estimate includes the making out of 809 township plats, and 621 descriptions, in consequence of surveys and resurveys that will be executed under previous contracts, and returned in the course of the present year. And heretofore the plats and descriptions of all original surveys have been made or furnished by the deputy surveyors. This procedure, however, was not the result of choice, but grew out of the excessive disproportion between the duties required of the office and the comparatively trifling means that were assigned to it for their performance. It was physically impossible for the principal surveyor of this district to comply with all the requisitions of the law; and, indeed, there was no alternative left to him but to suspend the public surveys, or to exact the necessary plats and descriptions of the contracting deputies. The latter was adopted; and I need not point out the consequences that ensued, nor remind you of its having been disapproved of and pronounced to be irregular, if not illegal. I have, therefore, not required either plats or descriptions of any deputy surveyor in the contracts of last year; and the labor of making out those documents exceeds, as you will perceive, that of all the other items enumerated in the estimate.

The deputy surveyors, however, do not profit by being relieved of the trouble and expense of furnishing the plats and descriptions; but render at least a full equivalent by obligating themselves, 1st, to survey their lines with the assistance of a flag or fore-vaneman; 2d, to resurvey and correct, before leaving the ground, all lines, the errors of which may exceed the prescribed limits, and to furnish a sketch of each township, showing the connexions of the several water-courses therein, (in order that gross mistakes may be avoided in connecting them on the plats;) and 3d, to establish stone corners to sections and townships where bearing trees are not at hand; or, if stone of the prescribed dimensions cannot be obtained, to erect large and more permanent mounds than those heretofore in use, and to deposit beneath them, and below the natural level of the ground, durable witness materials, which shall be particularly described in the field notes. So that, in future, the discovery of the witness materials (charcoal, or stones of prescribed dimensions) will identify the corner, after the mound may have decayed or been destroyed. A compliance with these and some other conditions set forth in their contracts and instructions will impose on the deputy surveyors the expense of employing an additional hand; of performing more work per mile of their surveys; and of being more exact, both in their operations on the ground and in making their returns. They will therefore not gain anything by the exchange of duties effected under the present arrangement; and the United States, I hope, will not lose by granting to this office the means of enabling it to perform the part it has undertaken in obedience to the law.

The estimate also includes four plats of each township, in lieu of three that were heretofore furnished by the deputy surveyors; two of the former are intended for the use of this office; one of them to be placed on record, and the other to be kept for the inspection of the public, agreeably to an act of Congress. Daily experience shows the advantages that would be derived from this measure, independent of the propriety of complying with a provision of the act referred to. The township plats that are used in common by the public and by the office finally become so worn or mutilated as to be unfit to copy from; and to reconstruct a plat from the field notes will frequently occupy more than twice the time that is required to make out a mere copy. Besides, a correct set of plats placed on record and properly preserved would, in a great measure, prevent the mutilation and loss of portions of field notes, to which they are now exposed in consequence of being obliged to use them on every occasion requiring a new plat, where the one on file happens to be either inaccurate or much injured. The fourth township plat is, notwithstanding, among the least essential of the several objects comprised in the estimate, and, together with the duplicates of the general plats of township exteriors, and the four connected plats of land districts, (amounting in all to about three hundred days' work,) may be dispensed with or postponed with less inconvenience than any other.

I have already intimated that, in some respects, the estimate is necessarily inaccurate. The following considerations will make it apparent that its errors (in rating the labor) are not those of excess. The time that may be occupied in the reception, &c., of any given amount of surveys depends essentially on the character of the work. The number, nature, and extent of the errors that may have been committed on the ground or in the returns of the deputy surveyor influence on every step in the progress of the examinations; making out the plats and descriptions, memoranda of the parts that are erroneous, instructions for their resurvey or correction, &c. The simplest operations may be rendered laborious by the repetitions and various delays that are unavoidable, where the work to be received is badly executed and the returns carelessly made. At the same time it is nearly impossible to make any reasonable calculation whatever concerning those contingencies. It may be objected, perhaps, that the public surveys ought not to be of the description that is here alluded to, and that it would be improper for the United States to provide beforehand for expenses which can only be incurred through the negligence or disobedience of its agents. The estimate is made in conformity with these views; it is, throughout, supposed that none of the surveys will be seriously objectionable; and hence a very probable cause of its inaccuracy, and of its calculations falling below the truth, notwithstanding the precautions that have been taken to insure a faithful and correct execution of the surveys under last year's contracts.

It will not escape your observation that the time which is required to perform the whole of each description of work is estimated according to the quantity which can be done correctly by one person in one day; and that experience does not warrant the supposition that any individual can continue to perform during a whole year at the same rate per diem that he may achieve in a single day.

Some objections may be made to the estimated time required to make out the plats and descriptions exhibited in the table B. On this head I have to remark that the respective times of performance, as set down in that table, are the results of actual trials; and if the time required to complete a plat and description exceeds what has been usual in making out those documents, the quantity of work contemplated to be done on them is also greater. And it would not be difficult to show that it is very necessary to put more work upon the plats. If the distances across, or the dimensions of all the ponds, lakes, swamps, marshes, &c., in the States of Illinois and Missouri, as reported by the deputy surveyors, had been correctly and uniformly set down on the township plats on file in this office, the necessity of examining the field notes of more than 250 townships during the past season would have been avoided; the labor and loss of time which it occasioned would have been saved; and an early (if not a very satisfactory) report, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 4th of last April, might then have been practicable.

I will now proceed to give some account of those portions of work which were omitted in the estimate in consequence either of the difficulty of ascertaining their amount, or of their being looked upon as less urgent than the rest.

First. Recording the field notes of the surveys of public land that will be returned under contracts of the last year. The labor of recording these notes might have been stated with as much accuracy as that of any item in the estimate, but, however useful and requisite the performance of this work may be in other respects, it was not considered necessary, at this time, to the despatch of the ordinary and more pressing business of the office. It is properly a part of a much greater undertaking, and may be delayed until the whole body of the field notes shall be recorded.

Second. Examining and making out plats and descriptions of surveys of public land that may be executed and returned under contracts of the present year.

Third. Repairing or making out plats and descriptions (not heretofore furnished to the land office) of townships that have been surveyed, and which may be advertised for sale during the present year.

There are about 651 townships that have been surveyed, but not advertised for sale, exclusive of those surveyed under contracts of 1825 and 1826, and exclusive of those embraced in Mr. Messinger's contract in the Illinois military bounty tract. Of the above 651 townships, there are 619 of which duplicate plats are on file in this office, but the plats of only 77 are authenticated; and there are 32 townships of which only one plat of each is on file, and of these only eight that are authenticated; so that there are 32 townships of which new plats must be made, 24 of them, perhaps, in duplicate; and 542 townships, the duplicate plats of which must be examined and corrected, or made out anew from the field notes, as may be found necessary, whenever they shall be called for.

Fourth. Resurveys of private claims, in addition to those referred to in the estimate, and correcting or making out new township plats and descriptions that may be required in consequence of such additional resurveys. The decision of the Attorney General in the case of Musick, and in that of Henington, opens a wide field for similar demands on the part of other land claimants. In surveying private claims, this office had heretofore been governed by the terms of the confirmations that were furnished to it by the several boards of commissioners and the recorder of land titles; and, consequently, when a claim was confirmed for a specific quantity, the survey was made to include that quantity and no more, the excess of the old Spanish survey being thrown off from any one of its sides, at the option of the claimants, or the deficiency, if any, made good in the same manner. But, according to the decision of the Attorney General, it appears that in certain cases the claimant is entitled to hold, agreeably to the original Spanish survey, without reference to the quantity specified in the confirmation. The surveys formerly made by this office are therefore void in all such cases, and require to be corrected, and to resurvey them at this time must be necessarily attended with great difficulty. The side of a former survey, on which an excess had been cut off, may have subsequently become the boundary to the survey of another claim; and, in every instance of the resurvey of a claim so circumstanced, it is evident that the re-establishment of the old Spanish boundary line must push the resurvey on the adjoining claim, and the latter may, in turn, be made to encroach on one or more of those which may happen to bind on it. The errors in the several lists of confirmations furnished to this office, and the very inadequate descriptions given of the claims, have occasioned erroneous surveys to be made, which it will also be necessary to correct or resurvey on application of the claimants; and in proof of this I might cite several cases that have already occurred within your own knowledge, and others that have not yet been brought before you by the parties concerned.

Fifth. Making out township plats for the land offices, to replace those that are worn out and useless, agreeably to the instructions received from the General Land Office June 2, 1825.

Several other registers have already applied for new plats. The register of Kaskaskia reports the whole of those in his office to be unfit for use. A considerable number might, therefore, have been included in the estimate; but it was believed to be less important to renew the plats of townships that had been many years in market, and probably contained but very little land unsold, for which there existed any present demand, than to complete those of townships that were about being offered for sale, or which might be brought into market before the close of the year.

Sixth. Miscellaneous work of various descriptions, including such as may be occasioned by unforeseen requisitions of the General Land Office, furnishing information and copies of surveys, &c., to private individuals, and the correspondence of the office. There is a great deal of time that is either occupied or lost by attending to business which may properly be considered as miscellaneous. The law makes the certificate of the principal surveyor, in relation to all surveys executed by the office, receivable as evidence in the courts; and it also directs a set of plats of the public surveys to be kept open for the inspection of the public. Of both these provisions the community avails itself, without stint, to the interruption and great delay of other work. Almost every man that has, or thinks he has, any business with the office, commands its attention, tells his own story in his own way, but too frequently making it necessary to cross-question him before the state of his case can be learned, and possibly, after all, it may result that his affair has no concern with the surveyor's office.

Under the six foregoing heads is comprised a body of work that cannot be brought within the limits of any probable calculation; but however uncertain the amount, a part of it will be indispensable to perform in preference to much that is included in the estimate. Before closing these remarks, I would observe that such is the character of the business of the office, and of its present situation, that whatever may be the description or quantity of current work to be done in it in any one year, the means allowed for its performance should always exceed the estimated labor. There would be no more danger then than now of losing any time; for, if the ordinary business should be accomplished with more ease than had been anticipated, the recording of the field notes and making out plats of about three thousand townships of the old surveys would, alone, furnish objects enough to occupy every individual in the office, and its operations might then be conducted with some regularity. The distribution of labor might be so arranged as to secure greater despatch, and much more accuracy, than can be hoped for at present. Many errors that are now overlooked, many that are committed, would be detected or avoided. In short, all the consequences of being continually in arrears in the performance of ordinary duties, and of having a mass of constantly accumulating unfinished business on hand, would necessarily cease.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

W. McREE.

No. 5.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 15, 1827.

SIR: I have this moment received from Colonel McRee the letter and statement enclosed, and, not having time to copy them, I must request you to return them. In making my estimate for the Treasury Department, I suggested the necessity of allowing $1,760 to Colonel McRee, in addition to the usual clerk hire for the year 1827, and submitted the enclosed copy of a letter from Colonel McRee, dated May 2, 1826. I have just been informed that, although the clerk hire was inserted in the bill sent from the Treasury, the submission was not made to the Committee on Finance, nor was the letter of Colonel McRee sent to the committee. As the bill is now before your committee, the object of this communication is to request that you will submit those papers to the committee, and endeavor to obtain the appropriation for extra clerk hire. The office was much in arrears when Colonel McRee took possession of it; and although he has made application for clerk hire, none was allowed him. An allowance was made to Mr. Davis, in Mississippi, of $1,760.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Col. THOMAS H. BENTON, Senate of the United States.

SENATE CHAMBER, February 16, 1827.

SIR: Your note and papers relative to Colonel McRee's claim for clerk hire were duly received, and by me turned over to General Smith, chairman of the Committee on Finance, who has promised to attend to it, and to return the papers to you.

Yours, respectfully,

THOMAS H. BENTON.

Mr. GRAHAM, Commissioner General Land Office.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 649. [1ST SESSION.

GRANTS MADE TO FRENCH EMIGRANTS FOR THE CULTIVATION OF THE VINE AND THE OLIVE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 18, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 14, 1828.

SIR: Since the report which, in obedience to a resolution of the Senate, I had the honor to make December 21, 1827, in relation to the lands set apart for the cultivation of the vine and olive, (see No. 558, page 674,) some further information has been received, showing more particularly how far the conditions of the contract for the sale of those lands have been complied with in respect to each individual allotment of land; which information I respectfully submit to the Senate as supplemental to the above report. It is contained in a letter and report addressed to this department on the 16th ultimo by the agent of the association to whom the lands were sold. In elucidation of that report, it is deemed proper to accompany it with the instructions under which it was prepared. These, it will be perceived, were addressed to Mr. W. L. Adams, by whom the former report was made; but, in consequence of his decease, the information requested by them has been furnished by the agent of the association.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

AIGLEVILLE, January 16, 1828.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, at Philadelphia, of your letter of July 30, 1827, enclosing a duplicate of your communication of the 19th June last, and have deferred answering it until my arrival home, being then on my way hither; on my return, which was the last of November last, the original of the 19th June had arrived during my absence, and that since its reception, and before my return, another letter was received from the Treasury Department, which was taken out of the post office by Mr. Charles D. Connor, our secretary, and who, when I arrived, was gone on a journey to North Carolina, and consequently I cannot procure this second letter. I was informed that by it some further information was called for by the department, and understanding that Mr. W. L. Adams (now deceased) had been written to on the same subject, I immediately made application to the administrators of Mr. Adams for a copy of your communication to him, and have, a very few days since, been furnished with a copy of your letter to him of May 17, 1827, in which you ask further information—first, relative to the number of acres cleared and cultivated, including those cultivated in vines on each allotment; second, the number of acres cultivated in vines in each; and, third, where olive trees have been planted, the number planted to each allotment. I therefore hasten to transmit you the particular information called for upon those three points, so far as I am enabled from the individual reports heretofore submitted to the committee, which you will find in the enclosed file marked A; from which you will discover, in the different columns, the various information which was required from the late agent. In the first column will be found the numbers of the sections; the second exhibits the numerical numbers of the shareholders; the third the number of acres planted in vines; the fourth the number of acres of land cleared; and the fifth the number of olive trees planted. Whenever the word "planted" occurs in the third column, it is intended to show that the conditions have been performed upon some other allotment therein referred to; also, whenever the word "clearing" is mentioned in the fourth column, it is intended to show that an improvement is at this time making, but the quantum of land cleared unknown to me. I have deemed it necessary to be thus explicit with your honor upon this particular point, inasmuch as many new improvements have been commenced since our report was made last year to the agent.

I have also endeavored to exhibit as correct a view of the particular condition of the reserves as the nature of their situation will permit; showing where any performance has taken place, together with any fulfilments which may have been made upon any other allotment to represent them.

It is with great pleasure that we see that the government has determined to remove the trespassers who have so much annoyed us, as well by their actual occupations as by their constant efforts, tending to our prejudice in every way; and I am in hopes the mere knowledge of the President's orders on that subject will be sufficient to induce them to depart, as several have already consented to do, and that it will be necessary only in a few instances, indeed, to apply the remedy provided.

We have prepared a petition to be presented to Congress this session, and have transmitted it to each branch of the legislative body, through our representatives and senators, as you suggest in your letter of the 19th of June, a copy of which I beg leave to send to your excellency here enclosed, and we hope we will receive some share of the favors which it appears government is disposed to grant to the State of Alabama by the indulgence extended to the land purchasers in the new States, and particularly to ours, which is, in fact, much oppressed by the weight of the landed debt due by her citizens, and which is felt by us all.

I deem it my duty, under the requisition of your excellency's first communication to the Tombeckbee Association, occasionally to advise you of the general state of the colony, and, upon that point, have to inform you that we have suffered severely from the unparalleled drought of the last summer; many of our largest and finest looking vines, which had just commenced bearing luxuriantly, were totally killed by the dry hot weather. Yet, notwithstanding this misfortune, the grantees, with increased diligence, are using every exertion to procure others which are thought to be more congenial to the soil and climate, and are now generally engaged in replanting.

I beg your excellency to receive our thanks for the expression of your good feeling towards us; and with the full belief of a continuance of your good offices towards us,

I have the honor to be, with due respect, your excellency's most obedient, humble servant,

F. RAVESIES, Agent of the Tombeckbee Association.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 17, 1827.

SIR: Your report dated February, and the papers which accompanied it, together with the letter of Mr. Ravesies, were fully received; but not until some time after the adjournment of Congress. The information collected and transmitted by you is on most points satisfactory; on others, however, some further details are desirable. These are: 1st, the number of acres cleared and cultivated (including those cultivated in vines) in each allotment; 2d, the number of acres cultivated in vines, in each; and, 3d, (where olive trees have been planted,) the number of olive trees planted in each allotment.

As you have stated with great exactness the aggregate of these numbers, it is presumed you are in possession of the particulars. These may be formed into a supplementary report, or may be incorporated in that which you have already made, which should, in that case, be recopied. The report will be returned to you for the purpose, if you desire it.

By referring to my letter of instructions, in connexion with the act of April, 1822, and the contract, you will perceive that the detailed information now required was clearly called for in the following paragraph: "It will therefore be necessary for you to examine how far each associate has performed his own individual obligations under the first condition, and how far he has performed his proportion of the general obligations of the association under the other conditions of the contract." But your illness having prevented your report from being made in time for the last session of Congress, no great inconvenience has yet been experienced for the want of this information. You are requested, however, to transmit it as early as practicable, that a full knowledge of the subject may be in possession of the government.

The charge for your services is allowed, and an account for the same, in proper form, is enclosed, which you will sign. You will perceive that, agreeably to your request, the receiver at Tuscaloosa is instructed to pay it; and you will accordingly present it to him for that purpose.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 650. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR FURTHER RELIEF TO PURCHASERS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 20, 1828.

Whereas all the reasons which have heretofore operated on the general assembly of this State in prompting them to solicit the indulgence of the general government towards the purchasers of public lands exist in undiminished force, this general assembly therefore beg leave to reiterate the sentiments of their predecessors on this subject, and, in addition to what has been urged by preceding legislatures, to call the attention of the general government to a measure of deep and prominent interest to a large portion of our fellow-citizens. The general assembly allude to the situation of those individuals who have purchased lands from the general government, made one or more payments thereon, and, after improving the same, have been compelled, by unforeseen misfortunes or the pressure of the times, to suffer their lands to be forfeited. Nor can they pass unnoticed large numbers of their fellow-citizens who, anxious to close their accounts with the government, to escape from a debt that was a perpetual lien on their homestead, and to avail themselves of the power of relinquishing a part of their lands prior to July 4, 1827, under the apprehension that the door of relief would then be closed, have relinquished large portions of valuable and improved lands merely to secure to themselves a house and home, and have thus sacrificed the hard earnings and toilsome sacrifices of younger and better days.

The existing laws of Congress make no provision by which the unfortunate citizen who has expended time, labor, and money on lands thus forfeited or relinquished can have the least preference over the stranger or alien in regaining his forfeited or relinquished property.

It cannot be the policy of a just and wise government to take advantage of the misfortunes of its citizens. The value of labor expended by the unfortunate citizen on the property of the nation will never be appropriated by a magnanimous government without rendering therefor a full equivalent. As little will such a government be disposed to suffer the iron grasp of the heartless speculator to monopolize the scanty earnings of the indigent and unfortunate cultivator of the soil. For these reasons they cannot but believe that the justice and magnanimity of the general government will, in extending relief to those purchasers who, in consequence of inability to complete their payments, have suffered or are liable to the forfeiture of their lands, recognize the propriety of allowing full credit for all sums actually paid, and of exacting no more than a sum which, added to former payments, shall amount to the minimum price of Congress lands.

The general assembly, deeming further detail unnecessary, impressed with gratitude for the past, and confiding implicitly in the future liberality of a protecting government, adopt the following resolutions, viz:

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of a law to extend the time of payment on all lands now forfeited or liable to forfeiture, and to authorize each and every purchaser whose lands are either forfeited or liable to forfeiture to redeem the same on making prompt payment therefor, at a price the amount of which, including forfeited payments, shall not exceed the minimum price of Congress lands.

Resolved further, That our senators and representatives aforesaid be requested to procure, if possible, the passage of a law giving to every purchaser and occupant of Congress lands who has made one or more payments, and whose lands have been forfeited or relinquished, or which are liable to forfeiture, a privilege, in the nature of a right of pre-mption, for ——— years, to repurchase the same, or other lands of equal value, at a sum which, added to his former payments, shall make the amount per acre not to exceed the minimum price of Congress lands; and that in the interim, and before government has disposed of the same, every purchaser who has improved his lands, without completing the payments, shall have the privilege of occupying the same, and enjoying the proceeds thereof.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing preamble and joint resolutions to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

H. H. MOORE, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 651. [1ST SESSION.

CLAIM FOR RIGHT OF DOWER ON LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BELONGING TO THE GOVERNMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 22, 1828.

Mr. LIVINGSTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Rebecca Blodget, reported:

Rebecca Blodget's petition.

She claims her right of dower in two lots of land, and the buildings erected thereon, under the following circumstances:

On March 18, 1793, David Burns conveyed to Samuel Blodget, the husband of the petitioner, lot No. 1, in square No. 430.

On the same day, by another deed, Burns conveys to Blodget lot No. 4, in the same square.

Both these deeds were acknowledged the day of their date, but were not recorded until August 29, 1794.

On January 8, 1794, Blodget conveyed this, together with other property, to Thomas Peter, in trust, to secure the payment of the prizes in the Hotel Lottery, and to indemnify the managers of the said lottery.

The hotel, built partly on No. 4, and having No. 1 annexed to it as an appurtenance, formed the highest prize in the lottery. It was drawn by Robert S. Beckley, who filed a bill in chancery, for the conveyance of it, against Blodget and Peter, his trustee; this was decreed accordingly; and

On January 2, 1805, Peter and Blodget conveyed the premises to Beckley, to whom, also, Munro, the superintendent of the city, conveyed that part of the land on which the hotel stood that belonged to the city.

On May 21, 1810, Beckley, in consideration of $10,000, conveys the whole premises to the United States, excepting, from his general warranty, any defect of title that may arise from the delay in recording the deed from Burns to Blodget, and expressly declaring that he held under those deeds.

The marriage of the petitioner with Blodget, in the year 1790, and his death in 1814, appear to the satisfaction of the committee. But the circumstance that the deeds to Blodget from Burns had not been recorded in the time required by the act of the State of Maryland, (six months,) created a doubt with the Attorney General, (to whom this case has heretofore been referred,) whether there was such a seizin in Blodget as would entitle his widow to claim her dower.

It is understood that, at the time of the purchase by Blodget, an equitable estate alone in the husband would not entitle the widow to dower; but that, by a law passed since that period, the law in this respect is changed; and that, as the law of Maryland now stands, such equitable estate in the husband would entitle the widow to her dower. Some of the committee think that this alone would entitle the petitioner to relief, and that, whenever there is a clear claim binding, according to good conscience, the public ought to act as a conscientious individual would do under similar circumstances; and that, therefore, if Blodget's legal estate, by his neglect to register his deed, had been reduced to a mere equitable right, the United States, who have enjoyed the benefit of that equity, which, joined to a possession of more than twenty years, gives them an indefeasible title, cannot, with propriety, defeat the claim of the widow by taking advantage of any legal bar.

It is also believed that, as Blodget was, during the first six months after the date of Burns' deed to him, undoubtedly seized of a fee in the property, liable to be defeated by not registering his deed within that time, therefore such seizure, although temporary, was sufficient to endow the wife. If Blodget, the day after receiving the deed, and without recording it, had conveyed to another, with a covenant that he was lawfully seized, and the purchaser should have afterwards lost the land by neglecting to register the title, it appears to the committee that no recovery could be had against Blodget on the covenant. If so, then Blodget was lawfully seized, and if he was so seized for a day only the widow is entitled to her dower.

There is another ground on which some of the committee think that the petitioner is entitled. It is this: that the United States hold under Blodget's title, and that, therefore, they are not permitted to get rid of the claim of his widow by denying his title; if she has no title they have none; but they assert a title, and enjoy the benefits of it by possession, and there would be absurdity, as well as injustice, in saying, at the same time, Blodget had a title, and he had none; he had a title for our benefit; he had none for that of his wife. That they hold under Blodget appears clearly from the deduction of title.

The Attorney General, by his report, seemed to think negative proof that the petitioner had not released her dower ought to be furnished; this has been done, as far as was possible, by the oath of a person who examined the records and found none.

Coming to the conclusion that the petitioner was entitled to her dower, the committee found some difficulty in determining in what mode it should be assigned. The building occupied as the General Post Office covers two lots of fifty feet front each; the most valuable of which, being the corner lot, is No. 4, held under Blodget, and it is proved that he expended $27,949 in the building. As it is incapable of division with any convenience, the only resource was an apportionment of the rent; but the size and construction of the building being such as to make it not well fitted for a dwelling-house, it was difficult to fix upon a sum as the exact yearly value. Some of the witnesses fix on ten per cent. of the cost in building as the usual rate; this would give $2,794, taking the sum expended by Blodget as the rule; another witness estimates the yearly value, as it now stands, at two thousand dollars. This does not include No. 1, also a corner lot on which there is no improvement; supposing, therefore, the rent to be $2,000, and placing the lot No. 1 and the superior value of lot No. 4 as an offset against the sums laid out by the United States, a majority of the committee have fixed upon that as the basis of the allowance, and made their calculations as follows:

Whole yearly rent	$2,000
	1,000

And have allowed one-third of this sum to the petitioner during her natural life, commencing from February 20, 1826, when she presented her petition, the committee considering that as analogous to the commencement in the ordinary case of a suit at law; for which purpose they present a bill.

PURCHASER OF LAND INDEMNIFIED FOR DEFICIENCY IN QUANTITY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 25, 1828.

Mr. WM. R. DAVIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Robert L. Kennon, reported:

That they have duly considered the same, and find the statements of the petitioner true: That on January 21, 1826, he purchased at the sale of public lands at the land office at Tuscaloosa a certain tract of land, designated by the register of the said office as the fraction north of section eighteen, township twenty-four, and range five east, and containing one hundred and forty-six acres; and that he made payment in full for the same, as required by law, at the rate of five dollars and five cents per acre; that it has since been ascertained by an officer of this government, the surveyor general, that the said tract of land contains but seventy-five acres and eighty-eight hundredths. It appears to the committee that the government ought to refund to the petitioner the amount he has overpaid, as he was misled by the error of an officer of the government, and was thereby induced to purchase and pay for nearly double the quantity of land that he has received. It is only because this was a fractional section, and the difference great, that the committee have deemed it a proper exception from the general rule.

The committee recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be granted; and for this purpose report a bill.

ADVERSE TO SALE OF SCHOOL LANDS IN MISSOURI ON THE MEMORIAL OF CITIZENS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 25, 1828.

Mr. BARTON made the following report:

The Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration the recommendation of several citizens of Missouri that a law be passed authorizing the sale of the school lands in that State, and are of the opinion that, until the general assembly of that State, to whom the guardianship of those lands appertains, shall request such a change of the laws, it would be inexpedient to legislate upon the subject, and therefore recommend the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That the prayer of the applicants ought not to be granted.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 654. [1ST SESSION.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS IN MICHIGAN AND INDIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 29, 1828.

Mr. JENNINGS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the Territory of Michigan and northern limit of Indiana, reported:

That, from the best information the committee have obtained, a portion of the petitioners have resided on the borders of the St. Joseph's of Lake Michigan, as traders, previous to the extinguishment of the Indian title by the United States, and most of them for some years past; that the lands on which they made settlements are now ordered to be surveyed by the proper authority, and will be brought into market as soon after survey as existing laws will permit.

The object of the petitioners is, to be secured against competition, by being allowed a pre-emption of one hundred and sixty acres each, to include, respectively, their improvements, in whole or in part, so far as it may be practicable The prayer of the petitioners, if it shall ultimately obtain, will enable them to secure, as far as may be practicable, without interfering with the lines of the public surveys, the labor and improvements they have made and bestowed on the soil they inhabit, without paying a price therefor, enhanced by such improvements, and as well by the great convenience they afford to those emigrating to frontier settlements.

The committee conceive that the limited amount above the minimum price per acre which might accrue to the government by refusing the prayer of the petitioners should not be an inducement in coming to the conclusion that the prayer is reasonable and ought to be granted. The committee therefore report a bill.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 655. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 29, 1828.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the reports of the commissioners appointed to ascertain claims and titles to land in Florida, and of the register and receiver of East Florida, reported:

That the boards of commissioners appointed under several acts of Congress were vested with powers to receive claims of every description derived from the Spanish government in the Floridas prior to January 24, 1818, the period subsequent to which all claims made by that government were interdicted by the treaty. The commissioners were required to decide upon claims to the amount of 3,500 acres, and to report to Congress all claims over that amount, with the evidence in support of the same, with their opinion upon their validity. They have performed the duty assigned them, and their reports for claims within their jurisdiction, to wit, of 3,500 acres and less, have been confirmed. Those recommended for confirmation, the title papers to which have been ascertained to be genuine, now remain to be disposed of by Congress. The United States have stipulated in the treaty to confirm them to the same extent that they would have been confirmed under the Spanish government. If the powers of the local tribunals and provincial officers were clearly ascertained, there would be no difficulty on the subject. If the titles were perfect by complete grant, there would be no obstacle to a recognition of their rights. These claims, however, have originated by the concessions of the governors and intendants, some upon condition, and others for public services. The committee cannot doubt that there are valid claims over the quantity of 3,500 acres, as well as those under it, which the United States are bound to confirm under the eighth article of the treaty. The provincial officers of Spain had an undoubted authority to grant the domain of the King under certain restrictions, one of which, in many instances, was the approbation of the superior authorities. Where that assent was not obtained before the change of government, we can only conjecture what Spain would have done from her ordinances, practices, and policy. That it was a matter of common occurrence for the Spanish authorities to reward its favorites for services rendered, is attested by the history of all their provinces, and by the grants of the King himself. The United States cannot inquire how far Spain ought or ought not to have so rewarded them, where the grants are perfect. When they are not consummated by a complete grant, the committee are of opinion that the higher authorities of Spain had the power, and would have execised it, to limit in their decrees of approbation the concessions of the local officers. The United States stand in the place of the King of Spain, and it is believed can exercise that discretion which they would have done. The committee have therefore confirmed, to the extent of a league square, the quantity fixed upon in the law for the settlement of private land claims in Louisiana, (4th volume Laws of the United States, page 680.) This law was passed after a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gallatin, in which he declares it to be his opinion that this was the limit of the jurisdiction of a provincial governor. The committee have provided for that quantity. They are aware that the claimant is not bound to accept it.

Referring, however, to the precedent established in the cases referred to in Louisiana, and believing that the same ought to be granted to the claimants in Florida, and considering it an object of great importance to have the surveys completed, the treaty carried into effect, and the private separated from the public lands, they have reported so much in relation to the commissioners' reports.

They have also provided for the extension of time for the settlement of private land claims in East Florida, and for the confirmation of those under the jurisdiction of the register and receiver, whose report they have examined, and find that the duties were well performed by them.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 656. [1ST SESSION.

ADVERSE TO CORRECTION OF ERROR IN SURVEY OF PUBLIC LAND AFTER THE ISSUE OF A PATENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 10, 1828.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 28th January last, directing an inquiry into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to James Reeves, of Indiana, thirty dollars and fifty-seven and a half cents paid for a certain fractional quarter section of land over the sum to which the quantity really contained in it would have amounted, and also the accompanying documents, reported:

That the fractional quarter was calculated and returned by the proper surveyor to the General Land Office as containing 158.28 acres, and was so bought and paid for by Mr. Reeves, and a patent issued to him accordingly.

It now appears, by a subsequent calculation, that that fraction contains only 133.72 acres; wherefore the applicant claims the surplus.

The act of Congress of February 11, 1805, (3d vol. U. S. Laws, page 637,) declares that the divisions and subdivisions of the public lands "shall be held and considered as containing the exact quantity expressed in such return or returns" of the public surveyors; and this purchase was made under that act.

The practice of the Treasury Department has been to permit all such corrections as that now asked at any time before the issuing of the patent, but not afterwards.

The committee, believing the above-mentioned act to have been intended to put an end to disputations respecting the precise quantity of such divisions of the public lands, and believing that such detections of error in the public surveys would be endless, as the many obstructions to exact measurement and calculation shall be removed by time and improvements, recommend the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That it is not expedient to legislate upon the subject of the above-mentioned resolution.

CLAIM OF A DESERTER FROM THE ARMY TO BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 14, 1828.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Chad Miller, reported:

That the petitioner states that he enlisted as a private in Captain McIntosh's company of flying artillery on or about July 13, 1814, to serve during the war, and then received fifty dollars bounty; that he deserted three days after joining his company, on Saturday night; that on the next Saturday night he delivered himself up to Captain Riley Sweet, of the 37th regiment of infantry, in consequence of the President's proclamation respecting deserters, and continued in the service till April 10, 1815, when he went home, but returned in a few weeks. On his return he found the other soldiers had been paid off and discharged; and Captain Sweet informed him he thought he had lost his pay by being absent; that he would assist him to get his pay, but could not give him any other discharge than the certificate marked A. That the petitioner made application for his back pay and bounty, amounting to sixty-four dollars, at the Treasury Department, in 1819, but his claim was rejected on account of his having been a deserter. He prays Congress to grant him his back pay and bounty and bounty land.

By records in the War Department it appears that the petitioner enlisted, July 13, 1814, to serve during the war; that he deserted on the 27th of the same month, and was returned to the department as a deserter; that on the 10th of August following he delivered himself up to Captain Sweet, of the 37th regiment of infantry, at Fort Trumbull; that the petitioner deserted a second time, April 10, 1815, and was again returned by Captain Sweet as a deserter; that the company to which the petitioner belonged was paid off and discharged, April 30, 1815, by order of the President of the United States, and the petitioner is marked on the pay-roll as a deserter; that the petitioner made application for his back pay and bounty in 1819; and that his claim was rejected, as no back pay or bounty is ever allowed to soldiers who have been returned as deserters.

It appears that the President issued a proclamation, dated June 17, 1814, promising a pardon to such individuals as had deserted from the army who should surrender themselves to the commanding officer of any military post within three months from its date. It is this proclamation under which the petitioner pretends to have delivered himself up, and which pardons his desertion. But this proclamation was issued long before Miller's first desertion, and even before his enlistment, and does not embrace his case, unless we suppose it to have a prospective operation, which would be contrary to the very terms of the proclamation and all sound legal principles, and at variance with the construction uniformly given to such proclamation by the department. But supposing the proclamation did embrace the petitioner's case, as the committee are informed by the War Department, "it could have no effect but to screen him from punishment, and not to restore him to rights which he had forfeited."

Without giving any opinion about the sufficiency of his justification for his second desertion in April, 1815, enough appears to satisfy the committee that the petitioner is not entitled to relief.

By the acts of Congress under which the petitioner enlisted he was not entitled to bounty land or extra pay unless honorably discharged. Hence, as Miller was not thus discharged, and, instead of having faithfully performed his duty, had twice been returned as a deserter, he has no claim by his contract for bounty land or back bounty; and it has been uniformly determined by the War Department that deserters from the army are not entitled to bounty land.

The forfeiture of bounty land and back pay and bounty for desertion is founded in good policy, and should not be departed from. The government is now, in time of peace, sustaining annually a loss of about sixty thousand dollars by desertions from the army: the allowance of this claim would make a bad precedent, and would open a door to a flood of claims of the like kind, and would operate as a bounty for desertion, which it should be our policy to check by every practicable means. No claim of a like kind has ever before been allowed, to the knowledge of this committee.

This committee are aware that the Committee on Private Land Claims of the House of Representatives, at the last session of Congress, reported in favor of this claim, but this committee cannot accord with the principles on which that committee appear to have predicated their report. They state that Miller's desertion in July, 1814, was, under the circumstances of the case, purged by his delivering himself up at Fort Trumbull, in August, 1814, under the proclamation of the President of June 17, 1814. In this that committee are certainly mistaken. For the reasons before given, and which need not be repeated, the committee are satisfied that, under the circumstances of the case, Miller's delivering himself up, as before stated, did not purge his desertion in 1814 Without entering further into the examination of the said report, the committee are of opinion, from the facts of this case, that the petitioner is not entitled to bounty land or to back pay and bounty, either by the terms of his contract with the government, or on any principle of law, usage, justice, or policy. They therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

LAND TITLES IN EAST FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 17, 1828.

At a numerous and respectable meeting of proprietors of lands in East Florida, held, pursuant to public notice, at the new Masonic Hall in Broadway, in the city of New York, on Wednesday, March 5, 1828, Dr. Nehemiah Brush was appointed chairman, and Alexander M. Muir, secretary. The following resolutions were submitted to the meeting, and, after consideration, unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the proprietors now present became purchasers of lands in East Florida in the full faith and confidence that the following clause, contained in the eighth article of the treaty between the United States and Spain, dated February 22, 1819, would have been carried into effect shortly after the ratification of that treaty: "All the grants of land made before January 24, 1819, by his Catholic Majesty, or by his lawful authorities in the said Territories (East and West Florida) ceded by his Majesty to the United States, shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of the lands, to the same extent that the same grants would be valid if the Territories had remained under the dominion of his Catholic Majesty:" and, in the same confidence, have not only expended considerable sums in the purchase of those lands, but many of the proprietors have, in addition, expended large sums of money in establishing settlements, making roads, building houses, and other beneficial improvements; and others of the proprietors, with a view to induce respectable farmers and mechanics to settle in East Florida, have entered into engagements to convey to them certain quantities of land in fee-simple on the condition of such settlement.

Resolved further, That in consequence of the omission of Congress to confirm titles of land in East Florida, or to act upon the reports of the Florida commissioners, all the proprietors have sustained great loss and damage, their capital having remained wholly unproductive for several years in consequence of not having been able to dispose of their lands while the title remained without confirmation; and others of the proprietors have sustained additional loss, and been put to considerable expense, from inability to comply with their contracts made with the first settlers, (of conveying to them certain portions of land in fee-simple,) and the result is that the settlement and further improvement of that Territory is suspended, purchasers not being willing to wait an uncertain and indefinite period for the confirmation of their titles, and settlers not being willing to expend their time and money in making improvements upon lands of which, by possibility, they may be hereafter divested.

Resolved further, That while the proprietors now present repose every confidence in the disposition of Congress to do them justice, they cannot but most seriously regret that the confirmation of titles to lands in East Florida has been delayed for so many years, not only on account of the individual losses of the proprietors, but on account of the injury sustained by the Territory and its inhabitants; and they beg leave most respectfully to represent that should the confirmation be longer suspended, there is the greatest danger that the whole country will be overrun by squatters, and that the live-oak timber, which constitutes a very valuable, and in some instances the sole value of the land, will be cut off and sold, or girdled and destroyed, by which the proprietors will suffer irremediable injury.

Resolved further, As the sense of this meeting, that inasmuch as most of the titles to lands in East Florida have been examined and reported upon by the different boards of commissioners appointed under the authority of Congress to investigate and examine those titles, and inasmuch, also, as the grant made by the intendant of Cuba to F. M. Arredondo & Son, under which most of those present derive title, was examined and reported for confirmation in the year 1825, and has again been reviewed by a subsequent board, and classed in a report made to Congress at the present session as class No. 2 of land titles, it would be unjust, and would occasion great delay and expense to the present proprietors, to require them to bring actions in the courts of the United States to sustain their titles as proposed by a bill reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Private Land Claims; and it is respectfully suggested that the provisions of the above-mentioned bill ought only to apply to such claims as have been rejected or reported against by the board of commissioners.

Resolved further, That, in the opinion of the proprietors present at this meeting, further delay in the confirmation of their respective titles will be productive of most serious injury, and that Congress be, and they are hereby, most seriously and earnestly invited to take the subject into consideration, and to devise some speedy mode for giving relief to the proprietors.

Resolved, That the preceding resolutions be printed, and copies thereof transmitted to the members of Congress.

By order of the meeting: NEHEMIAH BRUSH, Chairman.

ALEXANDER M. MUIR, Secretary.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 660. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIM IN EAST FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 19, 1828.

Mr. WM. R. DAVIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Hannah Drayton and others, heirs-at-law and devisees of William Drayton, deceased, reported:

That the father of the petitioners, the late William Drayton, a native citizen of the State of South Carolina, who died in the city of Charleston, in the said State, in the year 1792, was possessed, in his life-time, of several plantations and tracts of land in the Territory of East Florida, derived from British grants, whilst that Territory was attached to the British dominions; that when that Territory was ceded to Spain by Great Britain the said William Drayton received no compensation from the British government for the value of his estates in Florida, in consequence of his having sided with his own country in the war of the Revolution; that since the cession of Florida by Spain to the United States the heirs-at-law and devisees of the said William Drayton preferred their claims to the lands aforesaid before the United States commissioners for East Florida, who pronounced no decision in their cases, as their jurisdiction was limited to grants either made or recognized by the Spanish crown. The commissioners, nevertheless, clearly manifest their opinions of the equity and justice of their claims, as the following extract from their report will show:

Extract from Executive papers, 2d session, 18th Congress, part 2, vol. 7.

"We have duly examined and considered the claims, (among which those of Hannah Drayton, &c., &c., are specified.) It does not appear that they were recognized by the Spanish government, and we are therefore of opinion that at the period of the cession of the province to the United States the memorialists had not a valid claim against the Spanish government. It is in proof in all the cases herewith reported, with the exception of two, (Prince and wife, for two tracts,) that the present claimants are citizens of the United States, and that neither they nor those under whom they claim had ever received any compensation from the British government. Although the commissioners do not feel themselves called on to express any opinion on the merits or equity of these claims, they cannot close this report without remarking that many of the ancestors of the present claimants embarked in the revolutionary struggle, and by that act deprived themselves of the right to claim compensation for their land from the British government.

"DAVIS FLOYD.
"GEORGE MURRAY.
"W. H. ALLEN.

"ST. AUGUSTINE, December 29, 1824."

The petitioners do not ask any grant from the United States or recognition of title to the lands of their ancestor, but merely, under the circumstances detailed, that the United States should relinquish the rights which are vested in them to the said lands by the treaty with Spain, February 22, 1819.

The committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted, and for this purpose report a bill.

LOCATION OF THE LAND GRANTED TO THE KENTUCKY ASYLUM FOR TEACHING THE DEAF AND DUMB.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 20, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 19, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 8th instant, "directing the Secretary of the Treasury to communicate to the House the instructions given to the agent for locating the township of land granted to the Kentucky Asylum for teaching the deaf and dumb, his proceedings under them, and any correspondence in the department relative to the same," I have the honor to transmit herewith documents numbered from 1 to 10—2, inclusive, which contain the information and correspondence required by the resolution.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

No. 1.

DANVILLE, April 15, 1826.

SIR: The board of trustees of the Kentucky Asylum for the tuition of the deaf and dumb have been advised by the Hon. Thomas P. Moore of the passage of an act of the present Congress, granting to that institution a township of land, to be located under your direction. The board, understanding it to be the usage of the department over which you preside to permit the parties immediately interested in such cases to make their own selections of land, have appointed the Rev. Samuel K. Nelson, of this place, their agent and attorney for that purpose.

It is the wish of the board that this land should be located in Florida, and deeming it highly important to the institution that there should be as little delay as possible in making the selections, they have directed me to express those wishes to you, and to request that you will be pleased to give the necessary orders to enable their agent, immediately on his arrival in Florida, to proceed to execute the trust confided to him. Mr. Nelson will set out in a few days for Tallahassee, and will, on his arrival, wait upon Governor Duval, to whose care the board desire that the orders from your department may be directed.

I am, sir, with sentiments of the highest consideration, your obedient servant,

J. BIRNEY, Chairman pro tem.

Hon. the SECRETARY of the Treasury.

No. 2.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 4, 1826.

SIR: A communication has been received at this department from Mr. Birney, on behalf of the managers of the Kentucky Asylum for the tuition of the deaf and dumb, stating that the board had appointed you its agent to locate the township of land granted to that institution by an act of Congress passed April 5, 1826, and requesting that the necessary instructions might be transmitted to you at Tallahassee to enable you to execute the trust confided to you.

I have, accordingly, the honor to state that you are at liberty to proceed to locate the said township in any of the Territories of the United States, upon land to which the Indian title has been extinguished. Your location may embrace one entire township, except the section numbered sixteen, set apart for the use of schools; or, if it be preferred, the quantity of a township may be obtained by locations in smaller tracts, it being understood that the whole shall be located in the same Territory, and that the tracts shall consist of not less than four entire and contiguous sections. By the term contiguous, it is not understood that the sections should necessarily form a perfect square; if their relative positions shall constitute an oblong square, there will be no objection to the locations; but sections touching each other at their diagonal corners are not contiguous within the meaning of this instruction.

For your further information I enclose a copy of the act alluded to, and request that, after the necessary selections are made, you will be pleased to submit the same for the approbation of this department.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Rev. S. K. NELSON, Tallahassee.

No. 3.

DANVILLE, Kentucky, August 3, 1826.

SIR: The passage of the law granting the right of pre-emption to actual settlers in Florida, and the title that it conferred on them to a specific tract of land, to the exclusion of the grant to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky, (being unlocated at the time of its enactment,) has rendered inoperative the location made by the institution under the instructions from your department, and placed them in a situation that will not enable them for a long time to dispose of the small part which is not covered by the claims of those entitled to pre-emptive rights. The institution is in such a condition as to require, in a short time, some part of the means that were intended for its aid, and they have supposed that my assent would be of some avail in changing or modifying the location and the instructions under which it was made. I should deem it impertinent to offer an opinion on the construction of the law, or any instructions you might be disposed to give under it, and my only motive for troubling you is the official relation that exists between the inhabitants of that Territory and myself, and the desire I feel, on all occasions, to protect their interests, and the advancement of the country; having this object in view, I should be willing (if, in your judgment, the law authorizes such a construction) to allow the agent of the institution to locate other lands in lieu of those within the present locations covered by the claims of settlers upon any unappropriated lands; upon this express condition, that they be sold at the same time, and by the receiver and register, for the benefit of the institution, and on such conditions as it will prescribe. I could not, in justice to my constituents and the Territory, agree to such a change of location, so far as any little influence that my opinion, as the representative of the Territory, might have on any other condition than a positive covenant on their part to allow the sale of the whole at the next January sale. To permit a change of location to them, with the privilege of holding up the lands for five years, would retard the population, paralyze the energies, and destroy the prosperity of the Territory; against which course, or any policy that would lead to it, I feel it my duty to protest; and, with this view, I addressed the Commissioner of the General Land Office some weeks since, to which letter I respectfully invite your attention.

I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

JOS. M. WHITE.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 4.

DANVILLE, Kentucky, August 18, 1826.

SIR: Mr. Graham's communication, advising me of the decision of your department in relation to the selection which I, as agent for the Kentucy Asylum for teaching the deaf and dumb, had made of lands, has been duly received.

It is scarcely necessary for me to inform you that I felt great disappointment and regret upon finding that decision against us on every important point, and such as must necessarily defeat what we conceived the benevolent intention of Congress, blast our prospects, and utterly disappoint the sanguine hopes of its numerous friends. The instructions, in the first place, restricted us beyond what (as we believe) was the design of Congress. This we think obvious by the promptness by which the clause in the bill granting pre-emption rights to the settlers in Florida, which provided that "the lands granted to our institution should be located in tracts of not less than four entire sections, any law to the contrary notwithstanding," was rejected. In the second place, as our selections had been made under instructions which did not direct the avoidance of the claims of settlers under pre-emptive rights, and being also under an elder grant, we believe that under such an approval as we had a right, under existing circumstances, to expect, we would have had a right to at least that part which you admit to have been made in conformity with those instructions. Mr. Graham, to whom you referred me, informed me explicitly that the approval would be so expressed as not to decide between the parties as to their rights of preference; yet it is obvious that the approval, as made, will deprive us of every legal claim which we might otherwise have had. In the third place, it is the opinion of the board, and of every member of Congress that I have seen, (not excepting Colonel White,) that the selection (excepting the two detached sections) has been made according to the most plain and natural construction of the instructions. The object of the restriction was certainly to prevent our dispersing the claim to an unreasonable extent over the country. The instructions would have admitted of our taking the quantity in nine different tracts. With the exception before mentioned, we have taken it in three. By the addition of the half and quarter sections to the larger tracts, consisting of sections, &c., I really conceived that I was but complying more fully with the spirit and intention of my instructions. Two of the tracts selected contain eight, and the least six "entire and contiguous sections." But, admitting that our zeal may have blinded us, and that we are mistaken on all those points, I still hope that the unforeseen circumstances which now exist will induce you to permit the present location to stand (with the exception made) as to the residue. In relation to the settlers: The face of the country, together with the pre-emption claims, render it absolutely impossible to make it differently without a sacrifice of half the value of the grant. If we are sent to another Territory, it will be to locate lands that will not be worth the minimum price fixed by Congress within the five years in which we are bound to sell. If compelled to complete our locations in Florida under the present constructions, we will be obliged to take lands that will never be worth that price. When the present necessities of this benevolent institution, the face of the country, the preference given to settlers, and especially the fact that all the good lands in the Territory are ordered into market already, and will be sold before Congress will have time to do anything on our behalf—when all these things are considered, may I not hope that you will approve of the location as now made, except so far as it may be hereafter found to interfere with the vested rights of individuals; also, permit us to locate, before the sales, such quantities as may be taken from us by the pre-emptive rights of actual settlers, in similar sized tracts, on the understanding and agreement specified in Colonel White's letter, herewith transmitted. If this is granted, the settlers will obtain all they can claim. The Territory of Florida cannot complain, as the lands will be sold at the same time as if belonging to the United States. Being sold on a credit of four or five years, it will accommodate the citizens of the Territory, and will accelerate, instead of retarding, its population. Our institution will obtain the aid which its present situation so imperiously demands, and be content. You will also be pleased to take into consideration that on our hands will be left all the worthless land included in the present location, a great portion of which was taken to make out the connexion; and I hope you will consider the exercise of the discretion vested in you as not only just, but satisfactory as suggested. Should the best of our lands be taken out by pre-emption rights, it is but just that we should be permitted to replace it with the best that we can then procure, which must necessarily be inferior in quality to the land lost. For a variety of reasons, not necessary now to specify, it is of immense importance to the institution that we should be immediately informed whether or not the locations will be approved with these conditions. If so, I will add the residue to one or other of the three tracts; if not, the time will scarcely admit of our taking the only remaining alternatives.

A speedy reply will not only much oblige the institution, but your obedient, humble servant,

SAM'L K. NELSON.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

P. S.—Should you deem it proper to approve the location, under the circumstances now existing, and with the engagement we have made to have the land sold immediately, (as I almost earnestly hope you will,) to prevent its being disposed of to others than actual settlers it is desirable that the register and receiver at Tallahassee be immediately apprised of our location. I hope that before this time you will have found it convenient to do so in relation to fifteen or sixteen sections approved.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L K. NELSON.

P. S.—Was not section 25, in township 6 north, range 12 west, omitted (through inadvertence) to be approved?

DANVILLE, Kentucky, August 21, 1826.

SIR: The communication from your department, through Mr. Graham, was duly received by our agent, the Rev. S. K. Nelson, and by him laid before the trustees of the Kentucky Asylum for teaching the deaf and dumb, who have charged the undersigned committee to express to you their views.

It was with no little regret that the board found that the selections of their agent had been only partially approved. They had hoped that your department, taking all things into consideration, would have given the most liberal construction which the terms of the grant would have warranted. They were induced and led to expect this from many considerations, some of which they will mention. Between the years —— and 1820 the American Asylum at Hartford, Connecticut, was instituted, after some years' experience, in order to test the practicability of imparting useful knowledge to deaf mutes, a project, at that time, by many considered doubtful. The national legislature was induced to foster and patronize such a laudable design by a grant of a township of land, which has placed that institution upon a firm basis. To show that the grant was not made to a particular State, or that particular institution, Congress has uniformly refused to make a similar grant to New York or Pennsylvania, those States being situated within reach of the national endowment at Hartford. Hartford, situated at a convenient point in the northeastern section of the Union, can supply the demand for the instruction of deaf mutes in that section of the Union.

The object of Congress, in the grant to Hartford, seems to be well understood in that quarter, as all the States east of the Hudson have made provision, by legislative enactment, for the education of their deaf and dumb at Hartford. The wisdom of this course can be easily made manifest by a reference to the annual reports of that institution, particularly those of the last four or five years, and to which we respectfully invite your attention. Entertaining these views of the intention of Congress in making the grant to that institution, situated in the northeast, we, situated near the centre of the southwestern section of the Union, petitioned Congress for the national bounty. In our petition and documents accompanying it, which are on file in Mr. Clarke's (Clerk of the House of Representatives) office, we claimed the national bounty, to answer what we hope may not improperly be called national objects, and to which we earnestly invite you attention.

We further beg leave to urge upon your consideration the vast importance to us of the discretion vested in you.

With all these views plainly and distinctly expressed, Congress has made the grant; may we not, therefore, hope that, considering the extent of country and number of the population looking to us for instruction, (no institution of the kind existing west of Alleghany,) you will be induced to exercise the discretion vested in you, in the manner best calculated to answer the laudable and benevolent design of Congress in making the donation.

The State of Kentucky has done everything which the embarrassed state of her treasury permitted to foster and sustain the institution; she has passed all laws necessary to enable any sister State to enjoy the benefits of the institution upon the same terms as her own citizens. We have seen Mr. Nelson's letter to you on this subject, and inasmuch as all the reasons urged for a liberal construction were made known to Congress before the grant, and as Col. White (whose constituents are most deeply interested) is satisfied, as expressed in his and Mr. N.'s letters, we confidently hope there may be no further difficulties in realizing the donation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

D. G. COWAN.
J. BARBOUR.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 5, 1826.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 18th ultimo, in relation to the lands located by you in West Florida for the use of the Kentucky Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, and requesting, for the reasons therein set forth, that the selections which were not sanctioned by the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of June 26 might now be confirmed. I have also received letters from Messrs. Cowan and Barbour, as a committee on behalf of the asylum, and from Messrs. Moore and White, upon the same subject.

These communications have received all the attention on my part so justly due to the sources whence they come and the interesting character of the institution to which they refer. But with every disposition to favor, as far as may be in my power, the interests of this establishment, I cannot find, in the considerations they present, sufficient grounds for acceding to your proposition.

My instructions of May 4, 1826, were conceived to have been framed in a spirit of much liberality, as applicable to the construction of the act of Congress upon which they were founded, and the manner of your location is still thought to have involved a deviation from the instructions; nevertheless I am not unwilling to sanction those parts of the location lying within townships six and seven, ranges eleven and twelve, (except the detached section No. 3, township six, range eleven,) believing that this course will produce no public inconvenience, and being desirous of going to the utmost extent of the law for the sake of accommodating the institution.

Your request to be permitted to withdraw such portions of your selections as may be found to conflict with pre-emption claims, and to relocate them in small tracts, cannot be acceded to. If the interests of the asylum should be in danger of suffering from these pre-emption claims, Congress must be looked to for the remedy, and would, probably, not be indisposed to grant it. It may also be proper to add that if, on a final adjustment of the line between the State of Alabama and Territory of Florida, it should be found that any portion of your selections should fall within Alabama, a similar resort to Congress will become necessary to confirm such selections.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

WASHINGTON, January 27, 1827.

SIR: A bill passed the Senate and House of Representatives on yesterday authorizing the completion of the location of a township of land for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky, for so much as was covered by the claims of those entitled to the right of pre-emption.

By a reference to that act you will perceive that the pre-emptioners are only required to establish their claims two weeks before the public sale, which is now postponed until the third Monday in May; the consequence of which is that the interference cannot be ascertained until that day. It follows necessarily that no instructions can issue for a relocation until that period, and no patent can issue for any quantity already located until that time, and of such portion as is not offered for sale until that shall be done. My object is to call your attention to these points whenever applications are made to you on the subject. I have also to request that you will direct the location of the remainder in Arkansas.

The act of 1823, directing the location of a township of land in East Florida, has been so far altered as to authorize its location "east of the Apalachicola in sections," and the completion of the location of that in West Florida. I have to request that immediate instructions be given to the governor to locate that township in sections, and the other as soon as the interference shall be ascertained.

I will thank you to order to be forwarded to me a copy of the instructions as soon as they are issued.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

JOSEPH M. WHITE.

WASHINGTON, March 10, 1828.

SIR: I learn that the persons who are interested in maintaining the claim of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky to a larger grant of land than Congress ever intended to give the institution endeavor to sustain it by an argument drawn from the circumstances under which the law was passed. To one who is so familiar with the interpretation of laws as yourself, I conceive it would be an unnecessary consumption of your time to form an argument to repel a construction founded on the intention of the legislature, when the statute itself admits of no diversity of opinion from its plain and obvious meaning. If there is no ambiguity in the words or the context, any resort to the previous proceedings of Congress to ascertain the intention will be inadmissible, as my argument was considered to be predicated on the intention of the parties in construing the ninth article of the Spanish treaty. I do not regret, however, that this attempt has been made, as it enables me to sustain, by the sense of the Senate deliberately expressed, the argument I addressed to the President on the subject. The bill, as reported in the House of Representatives, was a grant of "one township of land, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located, &c., in one entire tract;" a motion was made to strike out "a quantity equal thereto," which was carried; a motion was then made to except section sixteen, which was carried. The bill, as it went to the Senate, provided for a grant of "a township in one entire tract." The committee of the Senate proposed two amendments—one was that it should be located in one of the Territories, and another that it should be sold in five years. These were the only amendments proposed by the committee or any senator. The Vice-President, in inserting the amendment after the word township to be located in one of the Territories, inadvertently struck out or run his pencil across "one entire tract." The error was not discovered; the amendments came to the House, and some member suggested it might be located in small bodies; and when this debate was seen by the Senate, such an intention was disclaimed, and such a feeling excited that a senator proposed an amendment to a bill, on the third of April, giving the right of pre-emption to certain settlers in Florida, providing that the township granted to the asylum should "be located in one entire tract, any law to the contrary notwithstanding." No one contended against it, the error was explained, and the proviso carried by a vote of four-fifths. I thought the amendment would injure the bill, or delay it, and, as it did not appropriately belong to it, I prevailed on a senator to move to recommit the bill for the purpose of striking out that proviso; and the argument I then employed was the one addressed to the President: that under the law none but an entire township could be selected, and the impropriety of attaching such tails to my bills; it was stricken out for these reasons, upon an assurance that none but an entire tract could be located, and that the addenda would be superfluous. From the vote of the House and the Senate it is clearly indicated that there was no intention on the part of either to give the land in small tracts. The vote to strike out "a quantity equal thereto" in the House, and the proviso of the Senate, carried by such a majority, speak a stronger language than the old bill with a pencil mark across an "entire tract," which I pledge myself to prove was done by accident, if necessary. Even if the motion had been made to strike those words from the bill, the conclusion justly to be inferred would be that they were surplusage, and that the bill was sufficiently explicit without them. Those who are unacquainted with the divisions and subdivisions of our surveys, in Congress, might entertain different opinions of their meaning. I think, however, upon a full view of the whole subject, you can find no difficulty in deciding that they are not entitled to the patent. I think it due to the government whose interest is so largely concerned, and to the people I represent, to refer it to the Attorney General for his opinion.

I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

JOSEPH M. WHITE.

MRS. TURNER'S, March 11, 1828.

SIR: In addition to the arguments offered by the Hon. Mr. White to show that the location in Florida of a township of land made for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky is invalid, I beg leave to call your attention to a fact to which I believe he has not adverted, either in his communication to the President or to yourself.

The law granting to this institution a township of land expressly excepts from the grant the 16th section, and consequently conveyed the right to thirty-five sections only; but, by a reference to the location made by the agent, as designated upon the map, I think it will be found that full thirty-six sections have been taken. If this be true, (as I am informed it is,) the location of one section is, independent of every other objection, clearly void, as having no grant to support it; and I would respectfully ask how is it now to be ascertained to which section the void location applies? To my mind the objection would apply as well to one section as another, and would render the location upon every one inoperative until the error is corrected. If so, the contended priority of location over the pre-emption claimants is unquestionably removed.

Permit me to remark that I have no feelings adverse to the Kentucky Asylum, nor do I ask or wish that the whole location made for its benefit should be set aside. It is only in those cases in which a conflict exists between the claims of that institution and these settlers that I am concerned. But as the claims of the asylum, adverse to those of the settlers, are placed for support principally upon the ground of priority of location, it is my duty to show that a legal priority does not exist. In attempting this, however, I do not abandon the other grounds occupied by me in support of the rights of the pre-emption claimants, but, understanding that this matter would be probably referred to the Attorney General for his opinion, I thought it proper that this fact, in addition to the objections suggested by Colonel White, should be placed before him.

I have the honor to be, with feelings of high respect and consideration, your most obedient servant,

JAMES WEBB.

Same to G. W. Ward, register, dated December 10, 1827.

Copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Rev. S. K. Nelson, dated June 26, 1826.

SIR: Your letter of the 20th instant, specifying the locations which you had made for lands in the Territory of Florida, as agent for the Kentucky Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, has been referred by the Secretary of the Treasury to this office; and I am instructed by the Secretary of the Treasury to inform you that those selections have not been made in conformity to the instructions given to you from his office, as will be evident on reference to the enclosed plat. The instructions were that the lands should be selected in tracts of not less than four entire contiguous sections.

In township seven north, of range twelve west, sections twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, thirty-three, and thirty-four, and in township six north, of ranges eleven and twelve west, sections eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-two, and thirty-three, have been selected and located in conformity to the instructions; the residue of the selections specified in your letter are not made in conformity to those instructions, which do not admit of the division of a section.

I am further directed by the Secretary to inform you that whenever you have completed your selections in conformity to the instructions, and shall return the same to his office, they will be approved so far as they may not be found hereafter to interfere with the claims of individuals entitled under the act of the last session of Congress to pre-emption rights. As it is possible such interferences may exist, no patent will be issued for any part of the lands selected by you until that fact shall be distinctly ascertained.

With great respect, &c., GEORGE GRAHAM.

Copy of the letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Rev. Samuel K. Nelson, at Danville, Kentucky, dated October 9, 1826.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th September, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, has been referred to this office, with instructions to inform you that the mode in which you now propose to make your selections in township five, range ten, will be approved, provided the quarter sections heretofore proposed to be located in section twenty-three and in section thirty-one of that township be united, and so located as to join any of the other sections selected in their whole length. The officers of the land office at Tallahassee have been advised of the locations which have heretofore been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and will be advised of the approval of the location now proposed to be made, so soon as information is received of the manner in which you prefer the two quarter sections above referred to to be located. Colonel McRee has been authorized to contract for the surveying of sixteen or twenty townships of land in what has been called Lovely's purchase; and it is probable that the surveys will be made in the course of the present year.

On the other subjects treated of in your letter, you are referred to the previous communication from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the register and receiver at Tallahassee, Florida, dated November 11, 1826.

GENTLEMEN: I now enclose you a list of the residue of the locations made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury for the Kentucky Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, subject to the restrictions and reservations stated in my letter forwarding a list of locations heretofore approved.

In the list of pre-emption claims approved by you, and which you have been requested to forward to this office, you will designate such claims as interfere with the locations made for the Kentucky Asylum.

I am, &c., GEORGE GRAHAM.

Copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Rev. Samuel K. Nelson, at Danville, Kentucky, dated November 11, 1826.

SIR: Your letter has been received and submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I now enclose you a complete list of the tracts of land, as located by him, for the Kentucky Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, subject to the restrictions and reservations heretofore communicated to you; the excess in quantity is not deemed material, as a portion of the land will be taken by the claimants under pre-emption rights.

A list of the selections in township five, range ten west, will be forwarded to-day to the register and receiver at Tallahassee, who have been previously advised of the selections heretofore approved.

Endorsement by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury.

Approved, subject to the limitations heretofore expressed in the letters of this department and the General Land Office to the Rev. Samuel K. Nelson, agent for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky, under the act of Congress of April 5, 1826.

NOVEMBER 11, 1826. R. R.

[Here follows "a map of public surveys, exhibiting, by color, the selections originally approved, for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky, of which there are about 1,219 acres lying north of Ellicott's line. These selections amount to 23,054.98 acres, (including the 1,219 acres lying north of Ellicott's line.)

"Within the limits of these selections there appears, from the returns of the register and receiver, to be 13,919 acres claimed by pre-emption rights, which are subject to relocation under the act of Congress of January 29, 1827."

Copy of a letter to the register and receiver of the land office at Tallahassee from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated April 9, 1827.

GENTLEMEN: I enclose a copy of the 3d section of an act passed on the 29th of January last, and am requested by the Secretary of the Treasury to instruct you to have the same carried into effect, by permitting the Rev. Mr. Nelson, or his authorized agent, to locate, in entire sections, for the use and benefit of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky, such quantity of land as may be taken from the locations heretofore made at your office, for the benefit of said asylum, by the interference of pre-emption claims, which have been granted by you, and which are not subject to revision.

I am also requested by the Secretary to inform you that he has approved of the location of township five, range eleven, north and west, as made by Governor Duval, for the use of a seminary, and to request that you will make the necessary entries in your books and reserve the lands from sale, except so far as they may be claimed by pre-emption rights.

With great respect, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 1, 1827.

SIR: On referring to the record of the lists of selections made by the agent of the Kentucky Deaf and Dumb Asylum, reported in my letter to the register and receiver of November 11, 1826, the southeast quarter of section six north, twelve west, appears to have been erroneously stated the northeast quarter of the same section, which is the tract colored in the map. Be pleased to correct the list.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

G. W. WARD, Esq., Register and Receiver, Tallahassee, Florida.

Copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Samuel K. Nelson, at Tallahassee, Florida, dated May 10, 1827.

SIR: Your letter postmarked April 18 has been received. My communications to the register and receiver at Tallahassee will have anticipated your request as to the patenting of the pre-emption claims.

My own opinion is that the lands granted to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky were appropriated from the date of the approval of the location by the Secretary of the Treasury, which appears to have been given November 11, 1826, and that therefore no location of a pre-emption claim under the 4th section of the act of April 22, 1826, could be legally made on any of the lands appropriated for the asylum after the above date, to wit: November 11, 1826.

You may communicate this letter to the land officers at Tallahassee. I know of no other claims founded on pre-emption rights, except those arising under the 4th section of the act, which can be termed "floating claims." The claims under the 3d section of the act should be located contiguous to the quarter section on which the settlements were made; and if, in doing so, they interfere with the lands selected for the asylum, they would have the preference; but if locations for pre-emption rights granted under the 3d section of the act have been at a distance from and disconnected with the section or quarter section on which the settlement was made, and interfering with the asylum lands, then patents will be withheld for such pre-emption claims until there shall have been a judicial decision.

With, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 31, 1827.

SIR: The papers forwarded by you have been filed in this office as caveats, on the part of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, to await such legal decision as may be had.

I am, &c., G. G.

DAVID THOMAS, Esq., Attorney for the Kentucky Asylum for Deaf and Dumb, Tallahassee, Florida.

NOTE.—The caveats above referred to amounted to seventeen.

Copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the register and receiver at Tallahassee, dated June 8, 1827.

GENTLEMEN: I perceive, from a communication made to this office by the agent of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky, that he states that pre-emptions have been granted in Florida to persons living above the line of demarcation, but within the surveys made by Colonel Butler, who was instructed to connect his surveys with those of General Coffee, under an impression that these surveys would correspond nearly with the true line; but in cases where the surveys of Colonel Butler run above the line of demarcation these lands should be considered as within the limits of Alabama, and should be withheld from sale.

If you have sold any of these lands, or if you allowed pre-emptions within them, you will be so obliging as to furnish a particular list of the same, with the amounts respectively for which they were sold, as patents will be withheld until the sales are legalized. There was an omission in this office to caution you on this subject.

Copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to David Thomas, esq., attorney for Kentucky Asylum, at Tallahassee, Florida, dated July 20, 1827.

SIR: Your letter of the 3d of July, enclosing descriptions of eleven cases of pre-emptions in which you request patents to be suspended, has been received and caveats entered in those cases.

All the evidence of title which the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky has at present or can have in relation to the disputed cases which you have reported to this office is the law granting the pre-emption, the authority to the agent to locate, and the approval of the same by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The manner in which they are to proceed under such title is a question on which the trustees or agent will take proper legal advice. I presume, however, that the evidence of title is entirely sufficient to enable them to institute suits in chancery against the parties holding pre-emption certificates, issued by the register and receiver for the purpose of trying the right of title.

The extent to which the Executive can act in those cases where pre-emption certificates have been issued is to withhold patents where the certificates have been irregularly issued.

The register and receiver have been requested to report all cases where, on a revision of the testimony, they are of opinion that the certificate has been irregularly granted, and patents will be withheld in the cases thus reported by them.

With, &c., G. G.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 21, 1827.

GENTLEMEN: By a letter dated at Danville, Kentucky, June 5, 1827, from the chairman of the board of trustees of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky, it appears that Richard C. Allen, esq., has been appointed their agent and attorney in fact, who has been advised that he will be recognized as such.

The enclosed letter from David Thomas is transmitted for your consideration.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 21, 1827.

SIR: Your letter of the 30th ultimo has been received and submitted to the register and receiver of the land office at Tallahassee. By a letter received from the board of trustees of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky it appears that Richard C. Allen, esq., has been appointed attorney in fact, who has been advised that he will be recognized as such.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 10, 1827.

SIR: The letter addressed by R. C. Allen, esq., agent for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky, to the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 20th of November, covering a copy of the notice filed in your office by the late Mr. Nelson, in pursuance of the act "approved January 29, 1827," has been referred to this office, with directions to inform you that the locations of the entire sections stated in the letter for the benefit of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum will be approved, provided it shall appear that the quantity of land contained in those sections has been taken by the claims of those who are entitled to the right of pre-emption in Florida from the locations previously made for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, but that the locations of the fractional sections cannot be approved.

You are requested to make out a descriptive list of such tracts of land lying within the locations heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, as have been taken by pre-emption claims, and forward it to this office, certified by yourself and the receiver; on the receipt of which, patents will be issued for the lands located for the benefit of the asylum.

You will please communicate this information to Mr. Allen.

With, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Extract from a letter from the Hon. Joseph M. White to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated Harrodsburg, Kentucky, August 12, 1826.

"At the request of the Kentucky Asylum, who are by no means dumb on the subject of their land, I have written to the Secretary, in substance, that if the United States choose to let them sell the best lands in the country and take the proceeds, I have no objection to make, provided it is sold at public auction by the register and receiver, without reserve, as other public lands are sold; but the people of the Territory have powerful objections to their selecting in quarter sections, with the privileges of extorting high prices and holding it up five years."

WASHINGTON CITY, June 20, 1826.

SIR: In conformity to the instructions which, as agent of the Kentucky Asylum for the tuition of the deaf and dumb, I had the honor to receive from you while at Tallahassee, I have proceeded to select the township of land granted to the said institution from the Chippola lands, in West Florida, in townships, ranges, and parcels, as follows, viz: sections 20, 21, 22, 26, 27, 28, 33, 34, and fractional sections 17 and 18; east half of section 32; west half of section 25; south half of section 23; south half of section 24; north half of section 29; and southeast quarter of section 29, of township 7, range 12, north and west. Section 25; east half of section 24; south half of section 13; southeast quarter of section 14; north half of section 3; north half of section 4; and northeast quarter of section 5, of township 6, range 12, north and west. Sections 3, 18, 19, 29, 30, 32, 33; west half of section 34; east half of section 31; west half of section 28; and south half of section 17, of township 6, range 11, north and west. Sections 4, 7, 18, 20, 29, 22; north half of section 27; southwest quarter of section 23; north half of section 21; southeast quarter of section 30; northeast quarter of section 31; west half of section 17; north half of section 8; and north half of section 9, of township 5, range 10, north and west. Section 32, and so much of the most contiguous part of section 33, of township 5, range 9, north and west, as may be necessary to complete the complement. I hope, sir, that this selection will obtain your approval, and that the title of the above-described lands will be perfected to the institution.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL K. NELSON.

DANVILLE, September 24, 1826.

SIR: I have just had the honor of receiving yours of the 5th instant. I cannot express the disappointment and regret we feel at finding that our request to replace, in similar sized tracts, such portions of our locations as may be taken away by pre-emption claims cannot be acceded to. We have no doubt that Congress would readily grant the permission we ask; but the misfortune is, all the valuable land of the Territory will be sold before they can act upon the subject. We are, indeed, in a great strait. If we should withdraw our location altogether, and place it on western lands, in another Territory, our institution must sink for want of present funds. If we continue it under present circumstances and prospects, although we shall be able to realize what will afford present aid, the ultimate object, viz: such an endowment as will render it extensively useful, and a blessing to millions yet unborn, must and will be defeated. This is the first congressional donation of this kind to the southwestern district of the Union. Were all we ask granted, it would not make the endowment worth one-half of what has been realized from a similar grant for the same purpose to the northeast. That request being denied, it is impossible, under the existing circumstances of the case, that it can now ever be worth one-twentieth part of that amount. Still, as in duty bound, I would bow submissively to whatever may be the decision of your department. You have been good enough to express your willingness to sanction those parts of the location which lie in townships 6 and 7, ranges 11 and 12, except sections in township 6, range 11. By adverting to the map of the locations as made, I have concluded that, by dropping the two detached sections—the one first mentioned above, and the other sections, No. 32, township 5 north, range 9 west—and taking in their room those halves of sections Nos. 8, 9, 17, and 21, in township 5, range 10, which were excluded in my first selection, it will make out such a connexion as will, upon the same principles, authorize you to extend your approbation to the balance of my location in township 5, range 10 west, which will then contain ten entire and contiguous sections; and, with the one half and three quarter sections added thereto, complete the quantity, except 141.94 still due. This I have concluded to do, although I know that those four half sections are not worth twenty-five cents per acre—indeed; I would not give twenty-five cents for the whole of them—being principally a deep swamp. But, being anxious to complete the location, I offer this part, as thus amended, to complete the quantity, except the fraction mentioned above, which shall be either added to any part, or the whole, or taken separately, as you may direct. I must request again that you will be good enough to make the necessary communication to the register and receiver at Tallahassee, to prevent their being appropriated to the use of others besides actual settlers. This, I hope, has been done, as to a part at least, before this time. Please inform me whether the amendment made will secure to the balance of the location the sanction of your approbation, and whether I am mistaken in concluding that, should there be found to be more pre-emption claims than we apprehend, in that case there will be no difficulty in obtaining your permission to withdraw it altogether, and locate in another Territory.

Will you be kind enough also to inform me whether Lovely's Purchase, in Arkansas, is yet surveyed; and if not, when it is expected to be done?

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL K. NELSON.

DANVILLE, Kentucky, October 25, 1826.

SIR: Yours of the 9th instant has just been received. To secure the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury to the remaining part of my selection, I would propose to remove the location of the quarter section in section 31, township 5, range 10, and take, in lieu of it, one in section 23 of the same township, which, in conjunction with the other quarter in that section, will then adjoin and extend the whole length of section 22.

I trust that this alteration will be satisfactory, and that the 141.94, marked on the map at first sent me, as still due the institution, will be attached to the quarter in section 30, so as to extend the whole length of section 26. Also that no time will be lost in informing the officers at Tallahassee of this part of our location. I fear that the delay of this imformation will be found to have been greatly prejudicial to our interests.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL K. NELSON.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq.

TALLAHASSEE, May 9, 1827.

SIR: The agent for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky arrived here sometime ago. On examination he found that the greater part of his location had or would be taken by pre-emptions, or, at least, all the valuable part of it; and, from the manner he is compelled to relocate, it will be impossible to get lands of equal value. He is induced to believe, from information and from the practice pursued in the register and receiver's office, that a great many claims have been passed upon and entered on the lands located by him which were illegal and fraudulent, an imposition on the government and the institution he represents; that the construction given to the law by the register and receiver is, in many respects, erroneous; by means of which many entries have been made on his location which are unjust. Being under that belief, and that many would be made that were illegal, he employed me as an attorney to appear before the register and receiver and oppose any entry on the location which I thought illegal, or where the party applying was not entitled; and also to contest such entries that had been made which interfere with his location that were not legally made, and those that were obtained by improper testimony. Being engaged, as I am, to attend to the interest of an institution established on charitable principles, I have taken the liberty of applying to you for a decision on many questions which have arisen and will arise on the investigation of many of those claims, and appealing to you where I think injustice has been done. I have the utmost confidence in the integrity of the register and receiver; yet their partiality for the settlers has induced them to give a construction to the law which cannot be warrantable. They say I am at liberty to appeal from their decision, which I certainly do in every case where it appears to me to be wrong. The agent has instructed me to file in your office caveats against all entries which I consider have been improperly obtained. It would be desirable, could the issuing of the patents be delayed on all entries made within the lands aforesaid, as many fraudulent claims, I have no doubt, will yet be discovered. It has been the uniform practice of the office here to determine upon the rights of persons on affidavits taken before a justice of the peace; and in all cases where any person produced an affidavit of his having inhabited and cultivated previous to January, 1825, they granted him a pre-emption. The consequence was, that many got pre-emptions who inhabited only as overseers, tenants, &c. It appears to me the affidavits should have set forth the circumstances of their habitation and cultivation. Then it is for the register and receiver to determine whether it is such a habitation and cultivation as is required by law. In many cases the witness who proved the right would be the best witness to set aside by a fair statement of all the facts in relation to it.

The register and receiver say they have no power to compel witnesses to appear before them and give testimony either to establish or invalidate a pre-emption right. I made an attempt to take depositions lately in Jackson county in relation to some claims which I was convinced were fraudulent; but those who were concerned were clamorous in opposition to it, and, by their management, prevailed on many of the persons who were witnesses not to give their testimony, on the ground that they were not compelled to swear; and prevailed so far over the justice of the peace as to induce him to refuse to swear those who were willing to be qualified. As these are cases in which the United States are concerned, and also the corporation in Kentucky, could not commissioners to take depositions be obtained from the judges of the United States court? When a caveat is filed in your office, is it not such a proceeding as would authorize the issuing commissions to take testimony? This is a subject which I hope will meet some attention. If the testimony of persons cannot be had, and those interested are instrumental in preventing it, those persons whose claims are contested should be required to re-establish their claims by bringing their witnesses before the register and receiver, and there examined; by which the persons interested would have an opportunity of cross-examination.

I enclose to you the affidavit of the sheriff of Jackson county, which will prove that my statement is correct. I have impeached one claim on the ground that the person had removed from the Territory long before he made his entry or gave any notice of his claim. The law appears to me to be very plain, ("who shall not have removed from the Territory shall be entitled to enter," &c.) If I understand the English language, it means not removed previous to making the entry. I objected before the register and receiver against all removed claims, whether originating within or without the location, on the ground the pre-emption rights could have no preference to the location of the institution only on the tract on which they originated. So soon as they are removed they lose all priority or preference; their claim only commences at the time they make their entry. The location being made, and the land appropriated long previous, it cannot be taken by any removed claim. They sustained me in my objections, so far as it related to those claims originating without the location; and none originating without the location have been removed upon it since I made the objection; but many were removed before, which we insist must be set aside. But I cannot see the difference myself between the claims originating within or without the location: therefore I protest against all floating pre-emptions, as they are called in the country, whether floating from the lands of the institution or from the public lands. It would be unnecessary for me here to give my reasons.

There have been some cases in which persons have been permitted to remove when only one-half of the quarter from which they removed had been entered, the other remaining vacant and unappropriated. It appears to me, if they can remove, the whole of the quarter from which they do remove must be taken; otherwise their entry would be void. To this I wish your particular attention. I wish to appeal to your decision respecting the right of those persons who live north of what is called Ellicot's line, and south of the line to which the surveys in Alabama were extended, to pre-emptions; many have removed their claims into Florida, upon the land of the institution I represent. It appears to me to be a fact well understood and known, that the southern line is the true line; there are mounds thrown up on it at every mile. The line to which the surveys in Alabama have been extended is nothing more than a guide line run by Ellicot's surveyor.

Alabama claims to the line on which the mounds are thrown up. It is certainly the true line. Those persons who live between the two lines are citizens of Alabama, therefore are not entitled to pre-emptions; at least they can have no right to remove their claims into Florida on lands already appropriated. I transmit to your office protests against a number of entries, the returns of which, I presume, have been received. There are a number of other claims on entries which stand in the same situation as some of those, a part of which have not been sent to your office.

The United States and an institution established upon the most charitable principles are interested in these cases and the questions I have set forth. I hope they will command the attention they merit.

I am, with the greatest respect, your obedient servant,

DAVID THOMAS.

TALLAHASSEE, July 3, 1827.

SIR: I received your letter, post-dated Washington, June 1, acknowledging the receipt of the papers forwarded by me. I have enclosed to you a package by this day's mail, in which eleven cases are impeached, which I hope you will also file as caveats in the claims set forth. You say in your letter that you have filed them as caveats, to await such legal decisions as may be had thereon. From that expression I would infer that the validity of those entries must be determined by the judiciary. It has been the practice of the register and receiver, after granting certificates, to reinvestigate claims, and set aside entries where, in their judgment, they had been obtained on incorrect testimony or by any other improper means.

From what I have understood from them, an entry made under pre-emption claim might be made void either at their office or at yours any time previous to the issuing of the patent, which opinion, I supposed, they had obtained by a correspondence with you.

If the validity of these entries and justness of these claims are to be determined by legal decisions, I am at some loss to know in what way it is to be had. Some of the cases depend on testimony, others on questions of law arising out of facts which appear in the office of the register and receiver.

If the institution I represent had such evidence of title as could be read in a court of justice, these questions could be tried by bringing actions against those who are in possession of the land. Will a decision be had here or at Washington, and in what way will the question be brought up?

Will you do me the favor to give me some information on these subjects, or your opinion? I expected you would have answered my letter which accompanied the papers you acknowledged the receipt of. Perhaps you considered it unnecessary, or out of the line of your business.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

DAVID THOMAS.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq.

TALLAHASSEE, November 20, 1827.

SIR: Samuel K. Nelson, late agent of the "Asylum for the tuition of the deaf and dumb of Kentucky," filed with the register of the land office at this place an official notice, specifying the particular sections which he had selected for that institution, dated April 18, 1827, and requested that it be forwarded for your approval. This request, for some cause, was not attended to. As the necessary entries were made in the register's office, and the locations respected by the officers at the sale of public lands in May last, the asylum has sustained no material injury. I have requested that those locations be immediately forwarded and submitted for your confirmation, and have obtained from the register an official copy, which I enclose. In regard to the fractional sections specified, it will be seen by reference to the plats that they are in connexion with entire sections, and that the locations including them are large and compact. I hope, therefore, that these locations will meet your approbation. As those lands are now for sale, and the law requires that they be sold within a short period, it is desirable that the patents issue, and be forwarded to the agent at Tallahassee as early as convenient. The possession of the patents by the agent will allay any fears entertained by persons wishing to purchase as to the legality of title, &c.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. C. ALLEN, Agent Deaf and Dumb Asylum, Kentucky.

APRIL 18, 1827.

SIR: You will please take notice that, according to the provisions of a law of the last Congress entitled "An act to provide for the location of the two townships of land reserved for a seminary of learning in the Territory of Florida, and to complete the location of the grants to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky," approved January 29, 1827, I, as agent of the said asylum, have located, and do now locate, the following sections, viz: in township No. 2, range No. 4, north and west, sections 20, 27, and fractional sections 28 and 34; in township 1, range 3, north and west, section 1, and fractional sections 12 and 2; in township 1, range 8, south and east, sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, and 19; in township 1, range 8, north and east, section 34; in township 1, range 9, south and east, section 7; in township 1, range 5, south and east, sections 21 and 32; in township 2, range 6, north and east, section No. 4.

Besides making the necessary entries in your office, you will be good enough, also, to report this location to the General Land Office.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L K. NELSON, Agent Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Kentucky.

REGISTER'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, November 19, 1827.

I certify that the foregoing is a correct copy of the notice filed in my office by the late Mr. Nelson, agent for the Deaf and Dumb Asylum in Kentucky. Given under my hand the day and date above written.

G. W. WARD, Register.

Copy of the endorsement by the Hon. Secretary of the Treasury.

The whole sections selected are approved, provided the Deaf and Dumb Asylum are found to be entitled to that quantity of land. The selection of the fractional sections is not approved.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 11, 1827.

NOTE.—Mr. Nelson on filing this notice requested it might not be forwarded to the Department for a few days, in which time he hoped to complete his locations. He, however, died before he had an opportunity of doing anything more.

SIR: I herewith enclose you the list required by your letter of the 10th December last, and hope the same may be satisfactory.

LOCATION OF VIRGINIA MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 22, 1828.

Mr. BATES, of Missouri, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition of Francis Preston, with the accompanying documents, reported:

This case has been before Congress almost continually from 1808 to the present time; and although several favorable reports have been made by the different committees to which it has been referred, no relief has yet been extended to the claimant. On May 5, 1826, the Committee on Public Lands made a favorable report (see No. 524, vol. 4) upon this claim, and introduced a bill for the relief of the petitioner, based upon principles which this committee think would have insured its passage if more convenient time and opportunity had been afforded for its consideration. For the facts of the case the committee refer to that report; and in extending relief to the petitioner they would confine themselves to the terms of the bill then reported; but that, by the information of persons whose pursuits and local position give much weight to their opinions, although there be a sufficiency of land remaining vacant in the Virginia reservation between the Scioto and Miami rivers, yet it is of a quality so inferior that to confine the location of the petitioner's warrant to that district would be almost a mockery of his claim. They have therefore thought it expedient to recommend that the petitioner be allowed to locate four sections (equal to 2,560 acres) on any of the public lands of the United States, between the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, which have been ineffectually offered for sale, and are now subject to entry; and that he be allowed to locate the residue (2,440 acres) in the district reserved by Virginia, between the Scioto and Miami rivers; and for that purpose they report a bill.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 663. [1ST SESSION.

INDEMNITY TO THE OWNER OF LAND IN ARKANSAS INCLUDED IN A CESSION MADE TO THE CHEROKEE INDIANS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 22, 1828.

Mr. BATES, of Missouri, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Russel, reported:

It appears, by the petition and documents submitted, that while Louisiana was under the government of Spain there was granted to one John Baptiste Dardenne a tract of land containing 640 arpents, which is equal (within a very small fraction) to 544½ acres, situate on the northern bank of the river Arkansas, at a place called "Chactas Prairie." The title to this land has been confirmed by this government, and the land has been surveyed by authority of the United States, but the title has not yet been perfected by the issuing of a patent. It also appears to the satisfaction of the committee, though not by evidence strictly judicial, that the title and interest of John Baptiste Dardenne have passed to, and are vested in, James Russel, the petitioner. By the treaty of July 8, 1817, between the United States and the Cherokee Indians, there is ceded to the Cherokees a large district of country, in the now Territory of Arkansas, extending from the Arkansas river to White river, and embracing the tract of land now in question; and the United States by that treaty stipulated that all citizens of the United States, except John P.

Lovely, should be removed from within the bounds of the lands thereby ceded. The United States having, without the consent of the petitioner, deprived him of his property, and bound themselves to remove him from the possession and enjoyment of it, it is entirely obvious that the government is bound, in common justice, and by the letter of the Constitution, to make him an adequate and full compensation. Yet the committee have had some difficulty in deciding upon the nature and degree of the compensation which it becomes their duty to recommend; for the petitioner has not followed the accustomed method of asking for general relief, but, confident in the strength of his claim, he has considered himself in condition to make terms with the government. He offers three alternative propositions, either of which he professes a willingness to accept, although he prefers the first. His propositions are: first, that the United States shall restore to him his land, by repurchasing from the Cherokees the tract ceded to them by the above-mentioned treaty of July 8, 1817, and placing it under the civil government of the Territory of Arkansas, within whose limits it is situated; second, that the United States shall pay to him the specific sum of $10,000, either in cash or in certificates receivable as cash, in payment for public lands; or, third, that he shall be allowed to locate the quantity of 544.44 acres of the public lands in the Lawrence land district of Arkansas Territory, before the same shall be offered for sale; and also the right of pre-emption for the like quantity of land in the same district, at the minimum price. To all these propositions the committee believe there are valid objections. Nevertheless, the petitioner's property being taken for public use, the committee believe it is the duty of Congress to provide for him a just compensation; and they conceive that the ends of justice will be answered by permitting him to locate the like quantity of land on any of the public lands of the United States which shall have been surveyed, and the sale of which is authorized by law; and for that purpose they report a bill.

LAND CLAIM IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 25, 1828.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jeremiah Walker, reported:

That the petitioner claims title to a certain tract of land in the State aforesaid, and parish of East Feliciana, as "a head-right or donation," and sets forth that the land was settled in the year 1805, under special permit by the Spanish authority, by one Thomas Smith, under whom he derives his title by regular gradation of transfers from Smith to Sullivan, from Sullivan to White, and from White to the petitioner. The committee are of opinion that the evidence exhibited in support of the claim, as to the time of settlement and continued occupation and cultivation from that time to the present, is ample and satisfactory, and therefore report a bill for his benefit.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 665. [1ST SESSION.

COMPENSATION TO LAND OFFICERS IN ARKANSAS FOR EXTRA SERVICES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 27, 1828.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 27, 1828.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 25th instant, requesting to be informed of the nature and extent of the extra services alleged to have been rendered by the register and receiver at Batesville, under the provisions of the act of May 22, 1826, I have to state that it appears from the records of this office that only six cases have been reported to this office for patents where soldiers have surrendered their bounty lands under the provisions of the act of May 22, 1826. I understand, however, that in a number of cases the application to surrender the patent has been delayed under an expectation that Congress would pass an act by which the applicants would be permitted to make their relocations on any lands between the St. Francis and Arkansas rivers. If such an act were passed it would probably be productive of much speculation, and necessarily very much increase the labors of the register and receiver.

The services required of the register and receiver under the act referred to are: 1st. To decide, on the evidence adduced, whether the land proposed to be relinquished is unfit for cultivation. 2d. To require the production of such evidence as may satisfy them that the party proposing to surrender his patent has removed to Arkansas with the view of actual settlement. 3d. To require satisfactory evidence that the party has not been divested of his interest in the lands proposed to be surrendered, either by his own act or by the operation of law. 4th. To file away their evidence and make their returns to this office.

For these services the register and receiver receive no compensation except their regular salary of $500 per annum. I would therefore recommend a specific allowance for each case decided on, or the same percentage on the land re-entered (estimating it at the minimum price) as is now allowed by law on lands sold.

I enclose for your information extracts from the instructions which have been given to the land officers under the provisions of the act of May, 1826.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. JONATHAN JENNINGS, Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 25, 1826.

SIR: I enclose for your information the copy of an act authorizing certain soldiers of the late war to surrender the bounty land drawn by them, and to locate others in lieu thereof.

The requisites of this act are—

First. That the land patented is unfit for cultivation.

Second. That the party claiming has removed to the said Territory with a view of actual settlement on the lands drawn.

Third. That the party claiming shall not have divested himself of his interest in the land, and that it shall not have been sold for taxes.

On these points satisfactory proof must be adduced to you previous to permitting a new entry.

The proof of the lands being unfit for cultivation should be the affidavit of some disinterested and responsible person or persons who had actually examined the whole of the land; the affidavit to be taken before a magistrate or by yourselves.

The proof that the party had removed to the Territory for the purpose of actual settlement must be such as shall be entirely satisfactory to yourselves.

The evidence that the party had not divested himself of his interest in the land, or that it had not been sold for taxes, should be the certificate of the proper officer that there was no deed of record, and the certificate of the auditor of the Territory that the land had not been sold for taxes.

The patents must be surrendered with a deed of relinquishment properly recorded and certified, and both of them forwarded to this office, with the certificate of re-entry.

I am, &c., GEORGE GRAHAM.

LAND CLAIMS IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 28, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 27, 1828.

SIR: I have the honor to submit copies of two reports made to this department by the register and receiver of the land office for the district of St. Stephen's, in the State of Alabama, under the provisions of the act of Congress of March 3, 1827, both dated February 29, 1828. One report is accompanied by ten abstracts and four special reports, and the other is accompanied by a supplemental report on the claim of Lewis Judson, and a list of the names of the Spanish commandants of Mobile.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

Board of commissioners for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Alabama.

ST. STEPHEN'S, February 29, 1828.

SIR: We have forwarded with this our report upon all the claims which have been presented to us, comprised in ten abstracts and four special reports.

The abstracts are classed from A No. 1 to F No. 2, as follows:

A No. 1. Claims from No. 1 to No. 2, inclusive.
B No. 1. Claims from No. 1 to No. 15, inclusive.
C No. 1. Claims from No. 1 to No. 18, inclusive.
D No. 1. Claims from No. 1 to No. 4, inclusive.
E No. 1. Claims from No. 1 to No. 20, inclusive.
F No. 1. Claims from No. 1 to No. 2, inclusive.
A No. 2. Claims from No. 1 to No. 20, inclusive.
D No. 2. Claims from No. 1 to No. 16, inclusive.
F No. 2. Claims from No. 1 to No. 10, inclusive.

The evidence in each case is reported, and the reasons for our decisions annexed to each claim. In cases, however, where the right of the claimant is apparent from the testimony, and in cases where the claim is manifestly without foundation, we have deemed remarks unnecessary, as all the facts appear upon the abstracts.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

JOHN B. HAZARD.
JOHN HENRY OWEN.

Abstract of claims to land in that part of the former land district of Jackson Court-house which lies within the State of Alabama, founded, as the claimants allege, on grants lost by time and accident, presented to the commissioners appointed under an act of Congress of March 3, 1827, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Alabama," which class of claims are not provided for by law, and therefore, in the opinion of the commissioners, not entitled to confirmation.

Dupont, bearing date December 2, 1772, as appears by an extract from one of the indexes of West Florida, furnished the claimants by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but not reciting the general character of the grant, as a complete record of it does not appear to be in the possession of that officer. The tract named in the index appears to be situated on the river Mobile. The tract claimed, and in relation to which testimony has been adduced, is situated on the bay of Mobile, at about nine miles distant from the mouth of the river. From the uncertainty of the case, and from the circumstance that the land has not been inhabited or cultivated under this claim for the space of forty-seven years, the commissioners are of opinion that it is not entitled to confirmation.
4	Legal representatives of C. Parent.	Charles Parent	166 arpents	On the Tensaw river	Several years previous to 1780, but not certain that it was on the particular tract claimed.	1780	This claim is founded on the same evidence as the one which precedes it, that is, an index of a British grant to Charles Parent, bearing date June 16, 1777, extracted from one of the indexes of the records of West Florida. The evidence adduced in support of it does not prove satisfactorily that the tract claimed was ever inhabited or cultivated by the original grantee, or any person under him. As the character of the grant, from the evidence before the commissioners, cannot be ascertained, and as the tract does not appear to have been inhabited or cultivated for the last forty-seven years, they are of opinion that it is not entitled to confirmation.

REMARKS.

No 1. Granted while the office of the assessor of the intendancy was vacant, and with a condition that application should be made to the intendancy for a title whenever that office should be filled. This condition was not performed; neither does it appear that the land was appraised or paid for according to the Spanish regulations for the allotment of lands at the date of the permit.—(See the letter of Morales, Appendix to Land Laws, page 24.)

No. 2. Granted under similar circumstances and with the same conditions as claim No. 1, and rejected upon the same grounds Inhabitation previous to April 15, 1813, not proven.

No. 3. Cayetano Peres not in office at the date of the grant; therefore rejected as antedated and fraudulent

No. 4. Granted under similar circumstances and with the same conditions as claim No. 1, and rejected upon the same grounds.

No. 5. Cayetano Peres not in office at the time of the grant; therefore rejected as antedated and fraudulent.

No. 6. Granted under similar circumstances and with the same conditions as claim No. 1, and rejected upon the same grounds No proof of inhabitation and cultivation.

No. 7. It appears from the statement of the claimant that this tract has been confirmed to the legal representatives of John Linder, sen., by a former board of commissioners. If thus confirmed, J. Kennedy has his legal remedy against the adverse claimant; therefore a confirmation de novo unnecessary.

No. 8. This grant purports to have been issued by Governor Gayoso de Lemos, directing the commandant to put the original claimant in possession of the land, but is signed by the commandant himself—possibly from a mistake of the copyist, the grant before us being a copy of the original. From its uncertainty, and for want of proof of inhabitation and cultivation, rejected.

No. 9. Petitioned for by way of sale, and granted upon conditions that the oath of fealty be taken by the applicant, and that an appraisement of the land be made; which conditions do not appear to have been complied with.

No. 10. This tract appears to have been paid for at the rate of two dollars per arpent, being the rate at which lands were sold under the third regulation of Morales, passed November 22, 1806, as recited by the commandant in one of the documents relating to this claim; but it appearing to the commissioners, from its boundaries, that it approaches within 33 feet of the old work of Fort Charlotte, and includes part of the parade ground, they are induced to believe that it never could have been the intention of the Spanish authorities to have made the grant.

No. 11. It appears from the statement of the claimant that he has received from a former board of commissioners a donation certificate for part of this tract, by virtue of inhabitation and cultivation of the same; and it is the opinion of the commissioners that in applying for and receiving said certificate, the claimant admitted that he had no written evidence of claim therefor.

No. 12. The instructions from the intendancy that this tract should be surveyed, appraised, and a return made to that tribunal, not obeyed; further, no proof of inhabitation or cultivation.

No. 13. No evidence of title, except the certificate of the provincial surveyor, founded on a survey made by some person not named: but from the circumstance of the survey being made in the presence of the original claimant, it was probably made by him.

No. 14. The transfer, before the commandant, from the devisee of the original claimant to Forbes & Co., merely states that it was obtained as a donation from Galves, the conqueror of it, and does not recite the date or any of the circumstances attending it The commissioners are not advised of any power in Galves, merely as conqueror, to grant the soil. If such power existed, the purchase by Forbes & Co. on March 29, 1806, solely for the use and benefit of General Wilkinson, as alleged by them in their conveyance to him, who was not a Spanish subject, is believed to have been in violation of the Spanish laws relating to lands.

No. 15. A part of this grant, together with the signatures of the French officers, destroyed. One of the claimants stated that this claim had been confirmed by a former board for 1,280 acres, the quantity of which was at that time allowed on the ground of mere inhabitation and cultivation. No additional testimony to set forth the character of the original grant being adduced, this board are of opinion that it is not entitled to confirmation for a further quantity.

No. 16. Cayetano Peres not in office at the time of the grant; therefore rejected as antedated and fraudulent.

No. 17. Cayetano Peres not in office at the date of the grant; therefore rejected as antedated and fraudulent.

No. 18. The strongest evidence adduced by the claimants in support of this claim is a confirmation by Morales, intendant ad interim of the province of West Florida, dated March 7, 1807. Towards the middle of the document, which terminates with the formal confirmation, the intendant ad interim refers to a French grant presented to him as its basis. This grant the intendant ad interim states to have been made to Madam Lusser as far back as the year 1738, and the surveyor general, Pintado, in his certificate of survey, more particularly designates its date as being May 27, 1738, this grant was, therefore, in existence in March, 1807, the date of the confirmation by the intendant ad interim. The claimants have not presented this grant before the present board, neither have they alleged its loss or destruction. In lieu thereof they have introduced a French permit to Madam Lusser, signed January 24, 1737, by Bienville and Salmon, allowing her to occupy a different tract from the one now claimed, and promising a formal grant when surveyed by the King's engineer at Mobile. We are induced to believe it a different tract, for the following reasons: the permit allows her to occupy that part of the island of the Tensaws which is abandoned by the savages of that name; the plat executed by Pintado shows the land now claimed to be situated on the main land, viz: the eastern bank of river Tensaw, and, as far as can be discovered from an inspection of the plat, the tract has nothing insular in its appearance or situation. Moreover, the intendant ad interim, at or about the middle of the document above alluded to, as terminating with the formal confirmation, after recognizing the right of Forbes & Co. to the tract thereinafter confirmed, expressly declares that such recognition was not to extend to the half of the island mentioned in another document, there not being the same grounds to support it. This other document, referred to by the intendant ad interim, is believed to have been the one on which the present claim is founded.

No. 19. Confirmed by a former board for 1,280 acres, and, in the opinion of the present board, not entitled to a further quantity.

No. 20. This claim is founded on a permit from the commandant at Mobile under date of December 20, 1783, and on a plat and certificate of survey dated March 9, 1807. In the field notes of the survey there are several alterations, which appear to have been made for the purpose or enlarging the tract. The undersigned are not advised of the quantity that a commandant could legally grant at the date of this permit; but as this greatly exceeds the quantity usually granted by such officers, and as the tract does not appear to have been inhabited or cultivated for about forty years, they are of opinion that it ought not to be confirmed.

All which is respectfully submitted.

REMARKS.

No. 1. This lot does not appear to have been improved or occupied by the grantee, or any person under him, prior to April 15, 1813, or to have been improved under this claim since that period.

No. 2. In granting this permit the commandant refers to a letter of Morales, (see Appendix to Land Laws, page 24,) notifying him that the tribunal for granting lands was closed, but the commandant assigns as a reason for making this grant, the benefit that would result to the health of the town from the lots being filled up, a condition in the grant which has not been complied with.

No. 3. Cayetano Peres not in office at the date of the grant; it is therefore considered as antedated and fraudulent.

No. 4. Cayetano Peres not in office at the date of the grant; it is therefore considered as antedated and fraudulent.

No. 5. Stated by the applicant to have been confirmed by a former board; and if only in part, there is nothing in the grant or testimony which entitles it to further confirmation.

No. 6. This claim is founded upon an order for survey and appraisement from Morales of a lot petitioned for by Joshua Kennedy, upon the condition that the petitioner took the oath of fealty to the Spanish crown. It does not appear that the petitioner took the oath, or that the lot was appraised, surveyed, or paid for.

No. 7. Stated by the applicant to have been confirmed by a former board; and if only in part, there is nothing in either the testimony or grant which entitles the applicant to a further quantity.

No. 8. This claim is founded on the purchase of two lots, the sales of which were acknowledged before the commandant. The contents of one lot were ascertained, and has heretofore been confirmed for its full quantity. The original contents of the other lot is not ascertainable, and has heretofore been confirmed for 7,200 square feet, the quantity allowed by law.

No. 9. This grant is made on the condition that the lot should be built upon within a year from the date of the grant, which does not appear to have been performed.

No. 10. This appears to have been a permit for temporary purposes only, the right of soil being neither petitioned for nor granted.

No. 11. Cayetano Peres not in the office of commandant at the date of the grant; it is therefore considered as antedated and fraudulent.

No. 12. Founded entirely upon evidence obtained in the Havana, under date of March 20, 1826, from officers of the government of Cuba. How far evidence of this sort is to be received as conclusive, from persons irresponsible for its correctness, is at least questionable. However, admitting the validity of such testimony, there is no proof of a survey having been made, or a valuation of the lot effected, in compliance with the conditions which the grant is stated to have contained.

No. 13. This permit contains a condition which requires the lot to be surveyed, and a return thereof made, which does not appear to have been performed, and the lot does not appear to have been improved or occupied.

No. 14. The titles to these lots are derived under the claim of Thomas Price, and depends on that claim for their validity; which claim is the subject of special report No. 1.

No. 15. Confirmed for 7,200 feet by a former board.

No. 16. Cayetano Peres not in office at the date of the permit; it is therefore considered as antedated and fraudulent.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

SPECIAL REPORT No. 1.

Claim of the legal representatives of Thomas Price to a tract of land within the present corporate limits of the city of Mobile.

Thomas Price, English interpreter, residing in Mobile, petitioned the governor of Louisiana, Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, on April 19, 1798, for a tract of land having twenty arpents in front by thirty in depth, bounded on the north by lands anciently the property of Terry and Mazurie, on the east by the granted lots in the town of Mobile and by the river of that name, and on the west and south by vacant lands.

Manuel de Lanzos, the commandant of Mobile at that time, informed the governor, in furtherance of Price's petition, that the land thus applied for was vacant; that the petitioner was a useful person, had been for several years English interpreter, and that there was no obstacle to his having a grant of the land.

The governor, by a decree dated New Orleans, November 18, 1798, directed the commandant to put the petitioner in possession of the tract, and to forward the proceedings of survey for the purpose of procuring the petitioner a title in due form.

The proceeding is certified by St. Maxent, the commandant at Mobile, under date of December 22, 1805, to be a true copy from the archives.

After the cession of Louisiana, Spain still claimed the district of Mobile, which was subsequently attached to the province of West Florida, and came under the jurisdiction of the intendancy of Pensacola.

On September 1, 1806, Thomas Price, by his agent, Joshua Kennedy, presented to Morales, the intendant of Pensacola, a petition for a tract of five hundred arpents, bounded on the north by lands of Forbes & Co., on the east by the town of Mobile, on the south by lands of Simon Fabre, and on the west by lands of Antonio Espajo, praying the same to be granted to him by way of sale. The intendant directed an examination of the petition by the fiscal. The fiscal, after examining it, was of opinion that if the land was vacant and the petitioner a subject of his Catholic Majesty, to be certified by the commandant at Mobile, the intendant might grant his petition by ordering the commandant to have the land surveyed and appraised, and afterwards to forward the proceedings had thereon to the intendancy for the purpose of making out a formal title, payment into the treasury having been first ascertained.

The intendant, in conformity with the opinion of the fiscal, issued his order to the commandant at Mobile, which order is signed by himself and De Heredia, the assessor of the intendancy.

Sometime thereafter, Thomas Price, discovering that his agent had been mistaken as to the particular tract which he wished him to apply for, and also as to the terms on which he wished a grant of it, addressed a memorial to the commandant at Mobile, representing that on the 20th of August previous he had given a general power to his agent aforesaid to transact in his behalf all business relative to lands claimed by him, the memorialist, in the district of Mobile; and that on the 10th of September following he had sent said agent a copy of the grant of the 600 arpents made to him by Gayoso de Lemos, instructing him to obtain a complete title for the same from the intendancy, and likewise to procure for him a grant of the adjacent vacant lands as a remuneration for services rendered the government and in payment of his salary as interpreter, which he had not received for a period of more than three years; but that his agent aforesaid, prior to receiving said copy and instructions, had for his principal solicited of the intendancy 500 arpents by way of purchase, as appeared from the order above mentioned issued by the intendancy to the commandant, and also from an order of survey directed by the surveyor general, Pintado, to Joseph Collins, his deputy in the district of Mobile, in conformity therewith.

Thomas Price, in his memorial to the commandant, further states that the intendancy had granted, out of the 600 arpents conceded to him by Lemos, a tract of 20 arpents to William McBay, and had also granted to F. Collell a tract which was parcel of another claim belonging to him, your memorialist.

On these grounds Thomas Price requests of the commandant a confirmation of the grant issued by Gayoso; and in payment of the three years' salary due him as interpreter, and also as a compensation for the injury he had sustained by the grants above mentioned to McBay and Collell, solicits a tract of 500 arpents lying to the south and to the west of the former tract granted by Gayoso; with which confirmation and grant he would acknowledge himself entirely satisfied by the royal treasury for the amount due to him as interpreter, and fully indemnified for the grants made to McBay and Collell.

F. M. St. Maxent, the commandant at Mobile, recognizing the correctness of the several statements made by Thomas Price in his memorial, confirmed and ratified in his favor the tract granted by Gayoso, with the express condition that he should never, under any pretext whatever, lay claim to the tracts granted as above stated to McBay and Collell. He likewise granted him the tract of 500 arpents for which he had petitioned adjacent to the former tract, as much to compensate him for the injury resulting from the grants above mentioned as to satisfy his demand against the treasury for his salary as interpreter, the whole being in conformity with the plan presented to him, on which he had made his cipher that it might not be altered; said claim on the treasury to be considered as extinguished, and, with that view, timely notice would be given to the intendant of the province.

The surveyor general, V. S. Pintado, in his directions to his deputy at Mobile in relation to the survey of the tract thus granted, in substance recapitulates the memorial of Price, and the confirmation and grant by St. Maxent consequent thereon, and states that they had been examined by the intendant, and that he had approved of the same, and had ordered him to have the survey made, that a formal title might issue.

Among the documents laid before this board in support of the present claim is a certificate of the former Spanish storekeeper general at Mobile, from which it appears that, by the provincial regulations, the interpreter was allowed a yearly salary of one hundred and eighty dollars.

The evidence thus far consists of Spanish documents, the signatures to which are authenticated by the affidavits of five or six respectable witnesses, and by the certificate of the keeper of the public archives of West Florida at Pensacola; the latter declaring them to be genuine, as well from his own knowledge as from a collation of them with the signatures of the same officers to other documents in his care.

Price's inhabitation and cultivation of the tract granted him by Gayoso are proven for several years subsequent to 1798. His inhabitation and cultivation, and the inhabitation and cultivation of those holding under him, are proven in relation to both tracts, from 1807 to the present time.

The present claimant, probably anticipating the objection to his claim which would naturally arise from its contiguity to the town of Mobile, introduces the depositions of several respectable witnesses, inhabitants of Mobile at the period of the grant by St. Maxent, to show that the land in question was at that time considered to be of little value, and would have been granted to any other person having equal claims upon the Spanish government if proper application had been made for it. It is mentioned in some of the affidavits as being the general belief of the inhabitants, and of the Spanish officers at that time, that the title of Price was genuine and valid.

The present claim was at first favorably reported by the former commissioner of land claims in the district east of Pearl river; but, subsequently, in a supplemental report of the same individual, was represented as not entitled to confirmation, on the belief that it embraced the site of Fort Charlotte and most of the public buildings in and near the town of Mobile. This presumption is alluded to in two of the affidavits introduced by the present claimant, and is followed in each of them by a declaration of the deponent that such is not the fact. For the purpose of arriving at certainty in this particular, the United States deputy surveyor at Mobile was requested to survey the eastern boundary of the claim; his plat and certificate of survey accompany the present report. From these it appears that a distance of two hundred and seventeen feet is its greatest approximation to the former site of Fort Charlotte.'

The preceding is a fair exhibit of the present claim as it stands on the records of this board.

Remarks.

The original claimant, in his petition to Gayoso de Lemos, specifies lands anciently the property of Terry and Mazurie as the northern boundary of the tract solicited. By reference to the plat furnished by the present claimant, marked with the cipher of St. Maxent, as stated in his grant to Price, and of which plat a copy is forwarded with the present report, it appears that a tract of about fourteen arpents in width from north to south, and represented as the property of Forbes & Co., intervenes between the tract laid down as granted to Price and the undefined tract on which is marked the name of Jeremias Terry or Ferry.

The grant to McBay, referred to by Price in his memorial to St. Maxent as a part of the original grant by Gayoso, is unfavorably reported by us in abstract marked A No. 2, claim No. 10, on account of its proximity to Fort Charlotte.

Said grant to McBay is laid down on the plat just mentioned, and also on that accompanying the present report; in the latter, the line of tract, which approaches within thirty-three feet of Fort Charlotte, is shaded with blue. The distance of this line is ascertained by computation founded on the plat drawn by the United States deputy surveyor.

Although it may be a matter of no importance, yet it is proper to state, in order that this may be fairly entitled to the character of a special report, that Price's memorial to St. Maxent is dated November 20, 1806; and that the document containing St. Maxent's confirmation and grant is dated the 25th of September of the same year.

It is also proper to observe that the plat furnished by the claimant is without any authentication whatever, except the cipher affixed by St. Maxent; and that in all the proceedings in relation to the present claim, from the commencement to the conclusion, there is no proof of a survey of the same having ever been effected under the Spanish government.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ST. STEPHEN'S, February 23, 1828.

LAND OFFICE AT AUGUSTA,
District of Jackson County, Miss., December 27, 1826.

SIR: In consequence of the application of Joshua Kennedy, as the legal representative of William E. Kennedy, for a certificate of confirmation on claim No. 103, hereto attached, we have caused the survey of said claim to be made in strict conformity to the original title; and from a careful examination of the several references made by him in his first and second applications, hereto attached, and from all the testimony on the subject of this claim recorded in this office, we are of opinion that the claim is entitled to confirmation, and ought to be confirmed, for 971.85 acres, according to the survey of the same returned by James P. Turner, principal deputy surveyor, recorded in this office. It is manifest from the survey returned by Mr. Turner, and from the evidence before us, that this claim has been fairly obtained, and granted in good faith by the Spanish government; and that the inhabitation and cultivation has been made according to the usages and customs of said government, and does not interfere with the public grounds of Fort Charlotte, as stated in the supplementary report against the claim; and in compliance with the wish of the applicant, we beg leave to submit the subject for your consideration and await your instructions, or such other disposition as you may deem expedient.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servants,

G. B. DAMERON, Receiver.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Com. Gen. Land Office, Washington City.

To the register and receiver of the land office at Augusta, district of Jackson county:

GENTLEMEN: Please take notice that I, as present claimant, apply for a certificate of confirmation for the claim of William E. Kennedy, under Thomas Price, which claim is contained in the report of the commissioner, No. 3, and the evidence recorded in book C, pages 79 to 84, and is for a tract of land containing about six hundred arpents, and claimed under a concession issued by his excellency Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, in virtue of the confirmation of said claim under the act of Congress passed March 3, 1819.

JOSHUA KENNEDY.

AUGUSTA, Miss., November 6, 1826.

To the register and receiver at Augusta, district of Jackson county:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, Joshua Kennedy, present claimant of a tract of land containing 971.85 acres, original claimant Thomas Price, respectfully represents that the original concession and notice of the additional and confirmatory title was given in to William Crawford, late land commissioner; that said commissioner reported favorably of the concession, and after his office had expired, wrote an ex-officio letter against said claim, asserting that at the time he made the report the claim appeared to be a valid one, and that he was not aware that the said claim took in Fort Charlotte, and most or all of the public buildings in and near Mobile. It will satisfactorily appear that the assertions contained in said letter are unfounded and erroneous, by reference to the survey of the same made by James P. Turner, principal deputy surveyor, and to the original Spanish order of survey herewith presented, and also by reference to claim No. 93, and survey of the same, recorded in evidence book C, page 7; which tract of land is situate between the site of Fort Charlotte—all the public buildings under the Spanish government in Mobile, and my claim under Thomas Price, and the western line of the survey of the claim No. 93, (report 6, evidence book C, from page 1 to 11,) is bounded and calls for the eastern boundary of the Spanish survey of my claim under Thomas Price. Additional evidence in relation to said claim was given in to the register and receiver, Barton and Barnett, who made a report thereon, and is recorded in the book of reports, page 313, by reference to which report, and the evidence of James Inerarity and Diego McBay, it will appear evident that the title is genuine, and that the inhabitation and cultivation were made according to the Spanish usages and customs. By reference to the report signed by Willoughby Barton, in the book of reports, page 325, and comparing that supplemental report with the supplemental report recorded in report book, page 330, and with the statement of W. Barton, late register, hereto annexed, and by comparing the survey returned by Colonel Dinsmore, the late principal deputy surveyor, (made under the report and order of Barton and Barnett,) with the survey returned by James P. Turner, a duplicate of which is hereto attached, and with the original Spanish survey now before you, it will appear that said report was made by W. Barton from erroneous impressions, and is so acknowledged in the supplemental report, page 330, and the annexed statement of W. Barton, late register, and that the survey made and returned by Silas Dinsmore, the then principal deputy surveyor, is evidently incorrect. All of the above facts go to prove that the late commissioner, and the late register and receiver acting as commissioners, have been under erroneous impressions in relation to this claim, and that the same is a genuine and valid claim, according to the usages and customs of the Spanish government.

He therefore solicits the favor that the whole of the title, together with the survey of the same returned by James P. Turner, principal deputy surveyor, and the whole of the evidence in relation to this claim may be examined by you; and if, in your opinion, the claim aforesaid be confirmed, to issue the certificate of confirmation for the same, or to make, in place of the supplemental report, which in effect is no report, (recorded in the book of reports, page 325, made by W. Barton, late register,) such a report or supplemental report as to you may be deemed equitable and just.

JOSHUA KENNEDY.

AUGUSTA, December 25, 1826.

Pursuant to an order of survey from the principal deputy surveyor of the land districts east of the island of New Orleans, and in conformity with an order made by the commissioners of the land office at Augusta, district of Jackson Court-house, Mississippi, I have surveyed for Joshua Kennedy a tract of land situated on or near Mobile river, in the State of Alabama, being section No. —, in township No. 4, range No. 1, west of the basis meridian, and bounded as follows: beginning at a post on Mobile river; thence west, 129.58 chains, to a post; thence south 2° east, 75 chains, to a post—a pine bears south 35° west, 1 chain; thence east, 125.50 chains, to a post—a pine bears north 74′ west, 33 links; thence north, 11 chains, to a post; thence east, 5 chains, to a post; north 10° west, 26.50 chains, to a post; thence south 62° west, 7.90 chains, to a post; north 27° 30′ west, 21.28 chains, to a post; thence north 62° east, 8.12 chains, to a post; thence north 27° 30′ west, 2.09 chains, to a post; north 62° east, 15.62 chains, to a post; north 31° west, 8.64 chains, to the place of beginning; containing 971.85 acres, and having such shape, form, and marks, natural and artificial, as are represented on the before-mentioned plat and notes of reference.

Examined November 18, 1826.

JAMES P. TURNER, Principal Deputy Surveyor.
THOMAS BILBO, Deputy Surveyor.

MOBILE, July 25, 1826.

At the suggestion of the counsel of the claimants, I have carefully reviewed the supplementary report of the late register and receiver of the land office at Jackson Court-house, Mississippi, on the claim of William E. Kennedy, under Thomas Price, for six hundred arpents of land adjoining the town of Mobile, and, from the best consideration I have been able to give the subject, make the following individual statement, from a conviction that it is alike due to the cause of justice and of the claimants; and this I do with the more satisfaction, in the hope that it may be instrumental in procuring for that claim a more favorable consideration than it has heretofore received.

The supplemental report was made by the register and receiver on December 29, 1820, in pursuance of a survey directed by them for the purpose of ascertaining whether this claim would actually encroach on the site of Fort Charlotte, or other public grounds in the town, (as was rumored,) which survey was returned into the land office on the 15th of the same month. By that survey it appeared that a number of lots which had been sold by Wm. E. Kennedy, and improved and occupied by the purchasers, were not included in the survey; and that several lots previously conceded by the Spanish authorities, and which had been confirmed by the United States, fell within the lines of the survey. These facts, for the first time disclosed by the survey which (being executed by the United States principal deputy surveyor) they adopted as correct, taken in connexion with other facts and circumstances detailed in the report, induced a suspicion on the minds of the register and receiver that the claim had been surreptitiously obtained; in other words, that it was not bona fide. This impression, I am free to confess, I entertained very strongly at the time the supplemental report was made, and for sometime afterwards. To rebut the presumption of fraud arising from the facts and circumstances detailed in the supplemental report, it has been alleged by the claimant, in a subsequent application to the land office for a certificate, and so the facts satisfactorily appeared to the register and receiver at that time, that at the date of the grant to Price the town of Mobile was an unimportant village, a mere military post without wealth or trade, and the adjoining lands of little value for any purpose; that other lands, above and below the town, had been granted before and after to persons who had no better claim on the justice or liberality of the government than Price, who had rendered important services as English interpreter; that no suspicion ought to attach to the authenticity of the claim on account of its not being found among the archives of Mobile, since it was matter of notoriety that many documents relating to real and personal estate in Louisiana and the Floridas had been removed or destroyed by various accidents.

In addition to the foregoing reasons, which were and are perfectly satisfactory to my mind that the claim is a genuine and valid one, I know, from repeated conversations with many of the ancient and respectable inhabitants of Mobile, that this claim has ever been considered by them as a bona fide one, and I believe no difference of opinion exists among them on the subject.

I have always been of opinion, and remember in some instances to have unreservedly expressed the opinion, that this claim, as reported by the former commissioners, was confirmed by the act of March 3, 1819, and that it would be so held by the judicial tribunals. I am also of opinion that a certificate would have been granted in the first instance but for the after report of the commissioner appended to the original record of the claim, which was regarded by the register and receiver as an intimation of the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which they were well aware would control any act of theirs in relation thereto. The subsequent proceedings, so far as I was concerned in them, are fully explained by the report in connexion with this statement.

By order of John B. Hazard and John H. Owen, commissioners of private land claims in the State of Alabama, now sitting in Mobile, I have surveyed the eastern boundary of the above tract of land, and making due allowance for the magnetic variation between the time of the original survey and the present time, find the lines, according to the bearings and distances, to agree with the boundary designated in the old survey as above represented. The northern and western limits of the fort property, as surveyed and sold by the government, are laid down and its relative position shown. Seventy-six feet nine inches is the nearest point of approximation of the above tract with the land sold.

SPECIAL REPORT No. 2.

Claim of the heirs of Nicholas Baudin to an island in Fowl river, called "Grosse Point or l'Isle Mon Louis," estimated to contain about 14,360 arpents.

This claim is founded on a French concession given at Fort St. Louis on November 12, 1710, by Bienville, lieutenant of the King, and commandant of Fort Louis, and by Darteguiette, commissary ordinary of the marine.

These officers, in their deed of concession to Baudin, state their power as emanating from the court to make grants of cession ("des contracts de cession") in the province of Louisiana; and under this authority it appears they conceded to Nicholas Baudin, the ancestor of the present claimants, the island or tract of land called Grosse Point. Beneath the concession is an approval and ratification of it by Lamothe Cadilac, the governor of Louisiana, signed on September 15, 1713.

It also appears from a writing appended to the document above referred to, signed by Bontru, and certified by Chantalon, clerk, that Madame Paille, widow of N. Baudin, the original grantee, presented at the office of the superior council of the province of Louisiana the aforesaid deed of concession, together with its approval and ratification, with a request that they would receive the said documents "in deposit, in order that they might be enrolled on the minutes of the superior council, that recourse might be had thereto when necessary." Thus far the steps taken in this concession were, as far as this board have an opportunity of ascertaining, in accordance with the usages of the French government in granting lands in its provinces; nor are we aware of any regulation which restricted the authorities of that government in the quantity they might grant. Two certificates were also presented to the board signed, first, by James de la Sampaye, notary public, dated June 16, 1783; and, secondly, by Grimarest, Spanish commandant at Mobile, stating that the originals, the subjects of which have been recited, existed at that time in the archives of the government at Mobile. Several witnesses prove that the tract claimed has been inhabited and cultivated from a period prior to 1761 to the present time. The occupancy being uninterrupted for so long a period, as is proven, first, under the French grant by which the tract was granted, and successively under the English and Spanish governments, is deemed strongly corroborative of the original grant.

This claim is not encumbered with mesne conveyances, but is still in the possession of the descendants of the original grantor.

From the facts here submitted, the undersigned are of opinion that the foregoing claim is entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress.

All which is respectfully submitted.

SPECIAL REPORT No. 3.

Claim of the legal representatives of Joseph Chastang and of Baptiste Laurendine to a tract of land called St. Louis, situate between Three-mile creek, Mobile river, Chickasaw, Bogue and Bouc Houma, and estimated to contain 22,500 arpents.

The original title to this tract the claimants allege to have existed in a Mons. Diron, in virtue of a grant to him by Bienville and Salmon, the former governor, and the latter commissary, "ordonnateur," of the province of Louisiana, dated November 7, 1733.

Of the existence of this grant, the only evidence is contained in a conveyance of said tract, executed June 6, 1746, by Charles Maria de Lalande and his wife, in favor of Joseph Barbeant de Boisdoree and his wife, in the presence of Miligar, notary, and by him attested. In that conveyance the tract called St. Louis is sold to its full extent, as originally granted to Mons. Diron in the manner above mentioned, without reciting its quantity or its boundaries, and without pointing out in what way the said Lalande and his wife derived their title to it. This is the first authenticated transfer of the above tract. The second appears to have been made on July 19, 1759, by the heirs of J. Barbeant de Boisdoree to a Mons. de Bonville; the proof of which transfer is a certificate dated New Orleans, July 17, 1763, signed by Louis Boisdoree, wherein he ratifies the sale to De Bonville, made by his brothers Joseph and Antoine on the day above cited, and mentions that the tract sold was derived by inheritance from his (Louis Boisdoree's) father, and that he had received his share of the purchase money. Another proof of this transfer is a certificate of Pierre Annibal Deville, chevalier of the order of St. Louis, and ancient lieutenant of the King at Mobile, dated December 28, 1763, given to De Bonville aforesaid to enable him to procure a confirmation of his title from De Abbadie, wherein it is stated that De Bonville had, for about four years and a half, owned and been in possession of the plantation called St. Louis, with its full extent, according to the ancient titles, commencing at Bayou Chatogue, (now Three-mile creek;) that he had purchased it on July 19, 1759, of Louis, Joseph, and Antoine Barbeant Boisdoree, whose father had purchased it of Charles Maria de Lalande de Apremont.

Then follows the confirmation by De Abbadie, of which the following is a translation: "I, the director general, commanding for the King at New Orleans, certify that the above-mentioned plantation of right belongs absolutely, as well as its appendages, to Mons. De Bonville, in conformity with the intentions of his most Christian Majesty, and with the power which he has given to his governors and ordonnateurs to permit all his subjects to establish themselves in the department of Mobile where they might think proper.

"In testimony whereof, I have signed the present certificate, and have caused the seal of my arms to [L. S.] be thereunto affixed, and the same countersigned by my secretary.

"ABBADIE

"MOBILE, December 28, 1763.

"By his excellency: DUVIRGE."

The next claimant of the foregoing tract seems to have been John Baptist Luser, from whom it descended to Margaretta Chabalin Deville, of whom it was purchased by John Baptist Laurendine; all of which appears from the following statement:

On May 30, 1807, Cabaret Detresses gave a power of attorney to Hazeur Delorme to represent him in everything requisite to convey a tract of land in the district of Mobile of which he was coproprietor, which said tract had been sold to Baptist Laurendine. This power of attorney was executed in Louisiana before a justice of the peace and two witnesses. On June 3, 1807, Louis Hazeur Delorme, before a notary at New Orleans, and in presence of witnesses, as attorney in fact of Mr. Pierre Marie Cabaret Detresses, in right of his wife, Margaretta Chabalin Deville, conveys to John Baptist Laurendine, represented in that place by his son John Baptist, acting under a power of attorney from his father, certified by Francis Maximilian Maxent, commandant at Mobile, May 20, 1807, a plantation situate upon said post of Mobile, fronting the river St. Louis, (now Chickasaw bouge,) which plantation is known by the name of St. Louis, and lies between Bayou Bouc, Houma, Schateauge, (now Three-mile creek,) and the great marsh, and belonged to said Delorme's principal, and to the wife of his principal, by inheritance from John Baptist Luser, deceased, their grandfather.

From John Baptist Laurendine the chain of title is unbroken to the present claimants.

John Baptist Laurendine, in his transfer of the above tract to Joseph Chastang, the next proprietor, on August 25, 1807, in presence of and certified by Maxent, the commandant at Mobile, recites it as a plantation called St. Louis, situate about a league from, bounded on the north by the Bayou Bouc, Houma, and Techicasahou, (Chickasaw bouge;) on the south by the Bayou Chatogue, (Three-mile creek;) and on the east by Mobile river; and on the west by vacant land; containing about one hundred and fifty arpents in front by an equal number in depth.

Accompanying the present claim is a plat executed by Lafon, geographical engineer at New Orleans, who certifies it to be a correct copy of the original plat of the tract purchased by Baptiste Laurendine. His certificate is dated May 27, 1807.

It appears from the evidence adduced in support of this claim that the land has been inhabited and cultivated from the year 1794 to the present time.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

SPECIAL REPORT No. 4.

Claim of the Church of the Holy Conception, in the city of Mobile, to a lot having four hundred feet in front on Dauphin street, and three hundred feet in depth on Franklin street.

This claim differs in its character from any other laid before the present board of commissioners. The claimants, who are the trustees of the church, and represent it in its corporate capacity, exhibit no title derived from the Spanish government, neither do they allege that any such ever existed. They merely state that if a title ever issued to the church it has been lost by time or accident, and rest their claim entirely upon a long and uninterrupted possession.

The undersigned commissioners regret that they have been unable to acquire any information respecting the laws and regulations of the Spanish government in relation to the allotment of lands to the church; more especially as, without it, they are unable to place this claim in the light in which it would stand if still subject to investigation by the Spanish authorities, and entitled to the favorable interpretation of their tribunals.

That the government of Spain has always extended a fostering hand towards its ecclesiastical establishments requires but a very superficial knowledge of its history and institutions to demonstrate; it has always deemed them to be its principal support and ornament, and there consequently appears to have been no limits to its liberality in their behalf. That this was more particularly the case in the colonies is inferrible from their remote situation, and from the reliance of that government on the church as an auxiliary to retain them in their allegiance to their mother country. Of all the colonies, West Florida, a comparatively recent acquisition, and lying in immediate contact with the territory of a foreign nation, seemed to require the greatest precautions to unite it firmly to the Spanish crown. The political principles of the nation in its vicinity were such as must have incurred the reprobation of an almost absolute monarch; and the heretical opinions entertained by a majority of that nation could have excited little less than sentiments of the deepest indignation in a king pre-eminently Catholic.

To guard against dangers so imminent, by strengthening the loyalty and faith of the inhabitants, a resort would necessarily be had to the ecclesiastical arm; that the latter was constantly exerting itself to avert evils of such magnitude there can be but little doubt; and that there was occasion for such exertions is evident from the 8th regulation of Gayoso to prevent the intrusion of heretic preachers.

With views so similar, and interests so nearly identified, there was nothing to sever and everything to unite them for the purposes of mutual support. The prerogative of the King, too, with respect to the church in these provinces, considered as obtained by conquest, among which were his transatlantic possessions, was much greater than in those which were deemed the original inheritance of the crown; the dependence of the church being on that account more immediately on the crown, the reciprocal duty of protection by the crown was a necessary result. It cannot be a matter of surprise, then, if the premises be duly weighed, that the church should ask no grant of land already allotted to it and set apart for its use. From the government there was nothing to apprehend, and still less from the inhabitants, whose awe and reverence for consecrated property would have been a most effectual safeguard from their encroachments. Standing in the relation in which it did to the Spanish government, there could be no hesitation on the part of the latter, if still exercising dominion, in acknowledging their rights, and in effectually securing their enjoyment of them.

Of the different species of evidence serving to prove a title under the Spanish government, none is perhaps more conclusive than that which manifests a long and undisturbed occupancy. The government of the United States have acted upon this principle in the various acts passed for the purpose of confirming individuals in the possession of lands which they have inhabited and cultivated at particular periods.

The present claim seems to be entitled to the same liberal provision. The lot is proved, by the testimony of old and respectable inhabitants, to have been more than thirty years in the possession and use of the church as a cemetery. Its dimensions may be easily ascertained from mere inspection. Individuals who inhabited and cultivated lots prior to April 15, 1813, have had the same allowed them as donations. The claim of the church not answering the strict requirements of the law, although in its character altogether more meritorious than those of the individuals just mentioned, and under the foregoing considerations, we feel ourselves constrained to recommend the present claim for confirmation.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

St. Stephen's, February 29, 1828.

Sir: We have forwarded with this a supplementary report upon a claim of Lewis Judson to a lot in Mobile, presented on the 30th November last, after the time prescribed by law for receiving claims had expired.

We have also forwarded a list of the Spanish commandants of Mobile, taken from the Spanish records by the clerk of this board

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

JOHN B. HAZARD,
JOHN HENRY OWEN,
Board of Commissioners for the adjustment of Land Claims in the State of Alabama.

St. Stephen's, February 29, 1828.

Lewis Judson presented a claim on November 30, 1827, founded on a grant lost by time and accident, to a lot in the town of Mobile, having thirty-seven feet front on Royal street, and extending back to the river; the occupation of which is proven from 1809 to the present time. It is the opinion of the undersigned that had the said Judson presented his claim to the aforesaid lot within the time prescribed by law, it would have been entitled to confirmation for thirty-seven feet on Royal street, and extending back one hundred and twenty feet, provided the said Judson had not received a donation by virtue of improvement and occupancy, or had a similar claim to the present one confirmed for any part of the lot above described, or for any lot adjoining it.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN B. HAZARD,
JOHN HENRY OWEN,
Board of Commissioners for the adjustment of Land Claims in the State of Alabama.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 667. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR LAND FOR A SEAT OF JUSTICE IN WASHINGTON COUNTY IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 31, 1828.

A MEMORIAL to Congress, praying a donation of one hundred and sixty acres of land to the county of Washington.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened respectfully showeth: That the general assembly of this State, at the last session, did establish and organize an additional county, by the name of Washington, on the Mississippi river above the mouth of the Yazoo river, in that part of this State lately ceded by the Choctaw Indians to the United States; that part of the said land in said county is fertile and now rapidly settling, but by far the greatest portion of said county is an immense swamp, which is not susceptible of settlement or cultivation, and subject to annual inundations by the floods of the Mississippi; a very small quantity of the land in said county has as yet been surveyed, and from its peculiar situation it may be a considerable time before the survey of the balance can be completed.

The survey that has been made is in the lower part of the county, remote from a suitable place for the location of a seat of justice for the same; hence, it is impossible that a seat of justice for the county can be located or public buildings erected with any degree of propriety, as the land on which they must necessarily be situated has not yet been surveyed, and the county must continue to labor under this inconvenience until relieved by your honorable bodies. Your memorialists, therefore, pray that a donation of one hundred and sixty acres of land may be made to said county for the purposes aforesaid, at such place as may be selected for the seat of justice, and your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c. Therefore—

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representative requested, to effect the object prayed for in the foregoing memorial.

And be it further resolved, That the governor of this State be requested to forward the foregoing memorial and resolution to our senators and representative in Congress.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 668. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI DERIVED FROM THE FRENCH AND SPANISH GOVERNMENTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 31, 1828.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the underwritten inhabitants of the State of Missouri humbly showeth: That after a large number of claims which had originated under the French and Spanish governments, in the former province of Louisiana, had been confirmed by a board of commissioners sitting at St. Louis under the authority of an act of Congress, after another class of claims reported by the recorder of land titles under the authority of an act of Congress approved April 12, 1814, had been confirmed by another act, a large balance of claims remained unconfirmed, which were reported, with the opinions of the commissioners on the same. Ever since that time until the passage of the act of May 26, 1824, no means had been provided to enable the land claimants to try the validity of their claims before a competent tribunal to decide finally on the same. In the meantime many parts of the State remained intersected by large tracts of the best land, whose title or right was uncertain, and could not be disposed of safely by the persons claiming them, nor by the United States. These left large interstices of wilderness, which prevented settlements from being connected, roads from being opened, mills from being erected, &c., whilst it left the means to the Indians to commit depredations, particularly in the event of a war.

Your memorialists had confidently expected that, so soon as the part of the country they inhabit became a State, the senators and representative from Missouri would be willing and able to satisfy Congress that your memorialists labored under a great evil, and nothing could relieve them from it but the passage of an act enabling the land claimants to try the validity of their claims by due process of law. But in this they have been long disappointed. At length the evil became so intolerable, and the remedy so unaccountably procrastinated, that the general assembly thought it absolutely necessary to take the subject under their consideration, and passed a resolution on December 3, 1822, from which the following is an extract: "The unconfirmed claims in this State, and a want of a definite tribunal where rights of this kind may be contested and settled, are subjects of much anxiety and solicitude amongst us. We wish this difficulty obviated, and competent tribunals constituted to decide, definitively, these unsettled claims, so that the lands belonging to the United States and those belonging to individuals may be known and set apart; that every inducement may be offered, and every obstacle removed, as far as practicable, to emigrants who may be disposed to locate themselves amongst us," &c. This resolution was presented to the Senate by one of the senators from Missouri; it was referred to a committee of which the same senator was chairman. It is proper to observe that there was at that time a bill on the files of the Senate embracing precisely the demand, and all the views of the memorial or resolution. Instead of the committee taking any notice of that bill in their report to the Senate, they reported a new one, embracing principles in direct opposition to the demand of the resolution, although the report was made by reference to the same resolution. This bill provided that the land claims should be referred once more to the recorder of land titles, which, if it had passed, would have been a third reference of the same subject to authorities incompetent to decide, but made competent only to report opinions to Congress. It does not appear that this bill progressed further.

After much delay Congress has at last passed the act long wished for by the general assembly of Missouri and by your memorialists, entitled "An act enabling the claimants to land within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," approved May 26, 1824. Long before that time many land claimants and their agents had repeatedly made loud complaints, in the State of Missouri and at Washington, on the score of the hardships they experienced in consequence of the long protraction of the decision of their claims, in consequence of the official opinions which the land commissioners have reported against the legality of almost all those claims, and also in consequence of the hard reflections which many had made against the same claims. There was every reason to expect, from these circumstances, that the land claimants would seize, promptly, the opportunity which that act afforded them to bring their claims into court, establish their fairness and legality, and put their detractors to shame. But, far from this, they have evidently shunned the court; but three or four suits, out of several hundred claims, have been instituted in the district court of the United States, sitting at St. Louis, for the first eighteen months out of two years allowed to the claimants to commence their actions. It is only at the last term, within two years, that they have brought a considerable number of suits; yet almost all those land claimants reside in or near St. Louis. These claims amount to about one million of arpents of choice land.

The repugnance of the land claimants to bring their claims before the court has been still more strongly manifested at St. Genevieve, where the court sits also for the convenience of the land claimants. Very few suits have been instituted at that place. The heirs and representatives of François Vallée, the original claimant of Mine à la Motte, and a large tract of land circumjacent to the said mine, have so far shunned the opportunity afforded, at their doors, of a trial at law. They have preferred to present their claim to Congress during the last session, and prayed for confirmation by a special act. Your memorialists are informed that a bill was passed in favor of their claim in the House of Representatives, and was rejected in the Senate. They also are informed that a petition has been lately circulated among the land claimants in and about St. Louis, stating that the powers of the former land commissioners were too limited, in consequence of which they could not obtain full justice from their board, and praying the President of the United States to suggest to Congress the hardships to which they (the land claimants) are subject in establishing their claims in a court of law, and to recommend the reference of the same to some special commission, which is the most irrefragable proof that they have no confidence in the legality of their claims, and dread nothing so much as a trial in the due course of law. Any tribunal that might be substituted to a court of law would be made competent only to recommend their claims for confirmation, but could not be made constitutionally competent to make final decisions against any of those claims.

Your memorialists beg leave to remark that the land commissioners had a sufficient latitude of power to form and report opinions on the respective claims, agreeably to the laws under which they originated. Of course there is no lack of justice on that score. Those opinions may be erroneous; they may be just;

at any rate they are official, and clearly intended to inform the conscience of the members of Congress. They would be of no use whatever if they were not operating as an inducement to Congress to refer to a court of laws all claims against which the opinions of the commissioners stand.

Your memorialists beg leave to suggest further, that, as citizens of the United States, they have a general interest that the rights of the Union to the public land be guarded in the safest manner. They have a still greater interest, as citizens of Missouri, that that right be not surrendered or relaxed, as it would be more beneficial to themselves, and to the other inhabitants of Missouri generally, that if the lands claimed are, of right, public property, they should remain so; for, in that case, they would be offered for sale without any reserve or encumbrance. There would be also a fair competition for purchasers; and the evils arising from a great disparity of wealth among citizens would likewise be avoided. There are many persons in various parts of this State who have settled themselves, though ignorantly, within the bounds of some of the tracts covered with claims. They have made their settlements in due time to be entitled to the right of pre-emption in case these claims should be adjudicated against. The act enabling the land claimants to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims provides that any claimant who shall petition the court under that act shall serve a copy of such petition, with a citation, to any adverse possessor or claimant. Of course the means of making a defence are secured to adverse claimants under settlement rights, or any other interfering rights. If such defendant can make out that any French or Spanish claim is illegal, and, of course, that the land claimed is public property, the contingency on which the right of pre-emption depends remains unimpaired.

It is obvious that the right of adverse claimants to make a defence in a court of law is all-important; that the person to whom it is secured could not be deprived of it by a subsequent legislative provision without receiving an irreparable injury. Yet this would certainly be the case if Congress should confirm any of these claims; for the proceedings before that body would be extra-judiciary and ex parte. No opportunity would be left to adverse claimants to make a defence, and any confirmation, by way of enlargement or departure from the French or Spanish laws under which they respectively originated, no matter how small, would be nothing else but a donation in disguise.

It is to be observed that any legislation of a dubious character, or producing such effects as not to be fully seen or apprehended by the people in general, is uncongenial with the genuine spirit of a representative legislature, and virtually destructive of the responsibility of representatives to their constituents.

The exertions which the heirs and representatives of François Vallée have made to obtain the confirmation, by Congress, of the large and valuable tract of land before alluded to, and the repugnance which the land claimants have generally evinced against going into a court of law for the trial of their claims, ought to raise suspicions against the fairness or legality of the same, and be a very strong reason to induce Congress to be more guarded than ever against introducing any change in the present legislation on that subject.

Your memorialists believe that all the French or Spanish claims, even those that had the most remote equity, have been confirmed. They will, however, abstain to prejudicate the unconfirmed claims. They beg leave only to submit that, as the law now enables the claimants to have the merit of their claims tried before a safe tribunal, constitutionally competent to do them justice, they ought to be left there, and Congress ought not to take any further notice of them.

Unfortunately, two years more have been allowed, by an act entitled "An act for the relief of Phineas Underwood, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1826, to the claimants to bring in their claims before the court. The two years allowed by the first act were, in the opinion of your memorialists, amply sufficient. This extension of time operates injuriously to the people of this State under various respects: first, it gives an opportunity to the land claimants to delay the institution of suits, and, of course, procrastinates the decisions on which the sales and settlement of large tracts of wild land depends; second, it gives them a new opportunity, through their watchful and persevering agent at Washington, to pursue the same course that the heirs of François Vallée did last year, and obtain, if possible, the confirmation of their claims at some unguarded time, which might happen towards the end of the session.

QUANTITY AND QUALITY OF VACANT LAND IN TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 31, 1828.

LAWRENCEBURG, February 7, 1828.

I, Augustin W. Bumpass, principal surveyor of the seventh surveyor's district of the State of Tennessee, do hereby certify that, from the best estimate I can make, the probable amount of vacant land in my district is eight hundred thousand acres; and from the knowledge I have of the quality and situation of the vacant soil in my district, I believe that, out of the eight hundred thousand acres of vacant land in my district, there are eighty or a hundred thousand acres worth twelve and half cents per acre. All the valuable lands in my district are already entered; and what remains vacant is of a very inferior quality; and what is at all fit for cultivation lies in small detached parcels, scattered throughout the whole district in various sizes and shapes. I do not know of a tract of as much as fifty acres of good vacant land in one body in my district; and, most generally, pieces of vacant land fit for cultivation lie in bodies containing from five to twenty acres, surrounded by hills, or land that is not worth paying taxes for.

Given under my hand the date above.

A. W. BUMPASS, Principal Surveyor Seventh District.

COLUMBIA, Tennessee, January 20, 1828.

DEAR SIR: I have, until now, delayed answering your letter in order that I might be enabled to give you such information with regard to the vacant land that lies in the eighth surveyor's district as I hope will be satisfactory. I have done the principal part of the business in the office of this district since 1820, and I am also acquainted with the lands lying in said district.

I would, in the first place, remark that it is, perhaps, one of the poorest districts of land that lies south and west of the congressional reservation. The lands fit for cultivation were nearly all settled by occupants before the office opened for the satisfaction of North Carolina claims. And under the provisions of the different acts of assembly of this State for the benefit of the settlers, very nearly all was entered by them; and in 1823 the legislature authorized the balances that remain on warrants in part satisfied, east of the congressional line, to be brought over and entered west of the same; by which entries of almost any size were made, even down to one acre, and there now remains but a very small portion of that which is vacant that would be worth patenting at all; and all that part which might be considered fit for cultivation lies only on the water-courses, and in narrow slips.

This district contains something more than one million of acres; and of that quantity between two hundred and two hundred and fifty thousand acres have been appropriated, leaving a balance of unappropriated land of, say, seven hundred and fifty thousand acres; and out of that quantity I would judge that not more that twenty thousand would be worth granting at the rate of twelve and a half cents per acre. I do not wish to be understood as saying there are twenty thousand acres fit for cultivation, for such is not the fact; but there are many persons that would be willing to pay a small price for the lands that lie contiguous to them, for the purpose of timber, &c., that would be worth nothing to any other person; and the lands thus situate are pretty near all that would be taken. All the lands in this district, except such as are on the different water-courses, are altogether sterile, and totally unfit for cultivation. And in order to give you full satisfaction upon this subject, I have sketched off a few sections from the general plan, commencing on Tennessee and extending east, which is about a fair average of the district, except that which lies in Maury and Giles counties, which compose a very small part of the district. This statement, it cannot be presumed, is entirely correct, but it is as near so as my information will enable me to make it, and, I trust, will be satisfactory.

Your obedient, humble servant,

H. GROVE, Deputy Surveyor Eighth District.

Hon. JAMES K. POLK.

P. S.—Major J. Brown, the principal surveyor of the eighth district, handed me a letter addressed to him from the Hon. H. L. White, with a request that I should answer it. It was upon the same subject of yours to me, and for answer to which I refer him to your letter. Be so good as to show it to him.

Yours,

H. GROVE.

LAND OFFICE, Ninth District, West Tennessee, February 14, 1828.

DEAR SIR: I have received your note of December 28, 1827, respecting the vacant lands in this part of the State. I presume you are aware of the difficulty of making correct estimates of the lands in this district, in which there is so much poor land, and the part worth anything so widely scattered. Owing to the mode of appropriating the lands in this State heretofore, (which was by warrants, the owners or locators of which had the privilege of satisfying their claims on the best of the lands, without having any regard to the shapes or sizes they might leave the residue of vacant lands,) by which the valuable lands of this part of the State are nearly all appropriated, the good soil that yet remains unappropriated is mere skirts or scraps, from the sale of which the general government can realize little or nothing. In my estimate that I herewith transmit if I have erred materially, it is in putting too high a value on the vacant lands of this district. I think them worth the price estimated, but doubt very much whether the amount could be raised from the sales of them in two years. There is a great quantity of more valuable lands in market at reduced prices. The purchasers of the vacant lands here will be mostly poor men, who have little to give for land. In fact, I do not think their situations would be much mended if they should be enabled to obtain the lands for almost nothing, as the gift would be too well calculated to keep them always poor.

Respectfully, your friend,

JOHN PURDY.

JAMES K. POLK, Esq.

I, John Purdy, principal surveyor of the ninth district, in the State of Tennessee, do certify that there are about nine hundred thousand acres of unappropriated land in this district, one hundred thousand acres of which I think worth twenty-five cents per acre; two hundred thousand acres of which I think worth twelve and one-half cents per acre; and the residue I do not think worth appropriating at any price.

Given under my hand this 4th of February, 1828.

JOHN PURDY, Principal Surveyor Ninth District.

BOLIVAR, Tennessee, February 2, 1828.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 20th December came to hand by last mail, and, in answer to the same, I can inform you that from the best information that I can obtain from my deputies, and other gentlemen of extensive information in my district, there is not one-tenth of the vacant lands in my district that is worth twelve and a half cents per acre, and the balance of it is not worth one cent per acre. The fact is, sir, all of the valuable land in my district has been appropriated by military land warrants from North Carolina; and what vacant land there is, lies in detached parcels, generally very poor. I have, for your satisfaction, taken off from the general plan of my district a transcript of five miles square, which is one section, in order to show more fully the true shape and size of the vacant lands. The lands in said section that are appropriated by warrants are marked with the amount of acres in each claim, and the balance is vacant. The section which I send you is about an average one of my district, though some of them have more entries, and some less, varying according to the quality of the lands.

The foregoing is the only information that I now have in my power to give you as correct concerning the lands in my district. Any information I may hereafter obtain I will readily transmit to you.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great consideration, your humble and obedient servant,

ELIHU C. CRISP, P. Surveyor, Tenth District, State of Tennessee.

P. S.—My district is fifty-five miles long and thirty miles broad.

Yours, &c.,

COVINGTON, January 25, 1827.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 24th ultimo came to hand by last mail, and I lose no time in answering your inquiries.

I have no data by which I can answer minutely without consuming more time than perhaps could be delayed between this and acting on the bill now before Congress. On the subject of the vacant lands remaining in my district: from a rough calculation, my district contains something like one million of acres; and, from the best estimate I can make from the spur of the occasion, there have been about 900,000 acres entered and granted on warrants emanating from the State of North Carolina.

It would be impossible for me to fix upon any minimum price at which to put the land yet vacant, as considerably the greater portion of it consists of swamp lands in the bottoms of the Mississippi, Hatchie, Wolf, and Loosehatchee rivers and their tributary streams, and that lying too low to be reclaimed. There is some high land, but it is generally poor and lies in detached parcels, so much so that I would have no hesitation in saying that it would cost the United States more money to arrange it, to get it into market, than could be realized by it. I do think that at least two-thirds of it would not bring in market one cent per acre, and the balance, perhaps, would not average more than 12½ cents; some small pieces that are improved would sell well, but they are few.

If Tennessee had those lands it would be important to her, as her officers know the title spots still vacant; and, beside which, it would enable her to protect many of her poor citizens in their sheds who have settled on those small pieces of vacant land, and increase considerably her revenue by bringing a considerable portion of land on her tax list that otherwise never will be there.

I regret extremely it is not in my power to give you a more minute statement on the differest points you wish to be informed on relative to the vacant land here, but time will not permit.

In haste, your friend,

J. TIPTON, P. S., Eleventh District, Tennessee.

Hon. JAMES K. POLK.

TRENTON, January 24, 1828.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 25th of last month is now before me, and, agreeably to your request, I have transmitted the following statement—the quantity of acres contained in my district, what amount appropriated, the amount unappropriated, and the probable value thereof:

1st. The amount of acres within the bounds of my district	1,480,400
2d. Amount of acres granted and entered by warrant	984,159½
Balance of vacant land	496,240½

3d. Land fit for cultivation, 60,000 acres, valued at fifty cents per acre.

4th. The balance of 436,240 of no value.

The vast quantity of vacant land that is of no value is occasioned from the Lake of Redfoot, Obion, Forkut, and Deer rivers, and the immense bottoms attached to said rivers and their waters.

I, John B. Hogg, principal surveyor of the thirteenth district, in the State of Tennessee, do certify the foregoing statement to be correct, to the best of my knowledge and belief. And do further certify the lands fit for cultivation within the bounds of my district are in small detached parcels from five to three hundred acres, occasioned by patented land.

JOHN B. HOGG, P. S., Thirteenth District.

PUBLIC LAND IN ALABAMA UNSOLD, RELINQUISHED, SURVEYED, AND RESALE OF RELINQUISHED LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 31, 1828.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 27, 1828.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose you, in compliance with your request of the 26th instant, a copy of my letter to Mr. McKinley of the 8th of February last, and a copy of the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, dated July 31, 1820, to prevent combinations, to which, it is believed, you have reference in your letter.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. GEORGE W. OWEN, House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 8, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I communicate the information required in the form of answers to your several interrogatories:

First interrogatory. How much public land remains unsold in the State of Alabama?

Answer. Above the 31st degree of north latitude there remain unsold of the public lands 19,776,870.64½ acres of the lands ceded by the Indians, and it is estimated that there are 9,492,041 acres within the limits of Alabama unceded by the Indians. That part of Alabama south of the 31st degree of north latitude includes 1,658,880 acres. No surveys of this section of country have been returned to this office, and the private claims are yet in a course of adjudication; I am therefore unable to state the quantity of land that will be subject to sale by the United States in this portion of the State.

Second interrogatory. How much land has been relinquished and remains unsold in Alabama?

Answer. There has been relinquished in the State under the act of 1821 and those supplementary thereto, and under acts of 1824 and 1826, 1,482,718.66 acres, the original purchase money of which amounts to $7,578,840 26. The lands relinquished at the land office at Cahaba and at St. Stephen's, under the provisions of the act of 1821, amount to about 400,000 acres, were offered at public sale in 1824, and did not generally sell for more than the minimum price. The exact quantity of these lands which have since been sold cannot be ascertained except by a laborious investigation which would occupy much time. It may be proper, however, to state that the fractional sections on the Alabama relinquished as above stated, which sold generally at the highest prices, were not offered at the public sales in consequence of the absence of the surveys of the subdivisions.

The whole of the relinquished lands at any time at Huntsville, and those relinquished at the offices at Cahaba and at St. Stephen's, since October 1, 1821, are not subject to be offered at public sale; they amount to 1,091,829.61 acres, and sold originally for $5,922,422 10¼. From this quantity, however, there will be a deduction of a small portion of the lands relinquished at St. Stephen's under the act of 1826, which lie in the State of Mississippi, the exact amount of which is not yet ascertained.

Third interrogatory. How much of the land surveyed has not been offered for sale?

Answer. 4,461,147 acres, lying above the 31st degree of north latitude, exclusive of the relinquished lands.

With great respect, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. JOHN MCKINLEY, Senate of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 31, 1820.

SIR: I am this day authorized by the President to request that you will instruct the registers and receivers of the land offices, especially in the State of Alabama, whenever they perceive that combinations are formed and acted upon, to prevent a competition; that they are authorized to bid a reasonable price for the tracts as they are set up, according to the information they have in their possession, and if no higher bid is offered to declare that the tract is reserved from sale. In the exercise of this power, it is expected that they will not bid the value of the land, and always cease the competition on their part when it exists among the bidders.

In this manner the necessity which has in several instances been supposed to exist of postponing the sales generally will probably be avoided.

The single fact that the land does not sell at its supposed value is not sufficient to justify the exercise of the authority intended to be given. A combination to prevent competition at the sales for the benefit of those associated must exist. That combination may, however, be inferred from the general absence of competition and other concurrent circumstances, of which the register and receiver will judge.

I remain, with respect, &c.,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

JOSIAH MEIGS, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

OPERATIONS OF THE GRADUATING SYSTEM IN THE SALE OF THE STATE LANDS IN TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 2, 1828.

ATHENS, Tennessee, February 28, 1828.

DEAR COLONEL: Owing to my being from home I did not receive your letter until a few days ago. Enclosed you will find the information asked for, and, I believe, pretty nearly correct; it is about the amount of cash received by me and paid into the treasury.

The amount sold at the sale in 1820 I have no account of, not having anything to do at that time with the land office. I have been informed by the treasurer of East Tennessee, who superintended the sales, that the amount of sales was about $480,000; that the land sold averaged about four dollars per acre; and that of that sum $250,000 had been paid into the treasury.

If you recollect, the land sold in 1820 was on a ten years' credit, by the purchaser paying the one-fourth of the purchase money in hand; the whole district was offered for sale on these terms, commencing at two dollars per acre; and in 1824 opened an office and received entries on the balance vacant, with the prices graduated at periodical times, agreeably to the enclosed statement.

I wish you success with your bill graduating the price of the public land throughout the United States; it will bring land within the reach of every man of industry; and I have no doubt that, if the Congress of the United States could witness the good effect that this law has had on the citizens of our little district, (not more than forty miles square,) your bill would pass almost unanimously. The price graduated at periodical times (and the land marked out, that the enterer knows exactly what he gets for his money) creates an unheard-of stimulus among all classes of citizens to become landholders. I know many men in this district who, when the law passed graduating the price, &c., were not worth fifty dollars on earth, that never before owned a foot of land, so soon as they found land within their reach used every exertion, and by their industry and good management got themselves money and entered land that makes them good homes, and they are now respectable members of society. It was not uncommon for many of them to spare their last horse, and some their last cow, to save their homes; and I know some men that could not get enough for their only horse in this district to enter them a quarter section, when, at fifty cents per acre, they got on their horse, rode him to Georgia, and sold him, and walked back with their cash in their pockets, and entered their land that they are now making a good living on; and it is gratifying to have it to say that very little of the land here was entered or purchased for speculation.

I have the honor to be your friend,

NATHANIEL SMITH,
Entry-taker for the Hiwassee District, in the State of Tennessee.

Amount of land entered in the entry office of the Hiwassee district, Tennessee, and amount of cash received, from February 2, 1824, to February 2, 1828.

Price per acre.	Number of acres.	Cash received.
$1 50	100,000	$150,000
1 00	53,000	53,000
50	90,000	45,000
25	80,000	20,000
12½	56,000	7,000
1	122,000	1,220
		276,220

There may be some error, but this is about the aggregate amount.

Letter from the Hon. Mr. Mitchell, of Tennessee, laid on the table by the Hon. Mr. Benton, showing the operation of the graduating system of Tennessee, in relation to the sale of the State lands, &c.

BROWN'S HOTEL, March 29, 1828.

DEAR COLONEL: It is with surprise and regret that I have viewed the untiring opposition made to the system of graduating the price of the public lands. It must arise from mistaken views which gentlemen have taken of the subject; it would be cruel to attribute the opposition to your plan to any other motive. We are too much prone to stick to old precedents, and to follow long-settled practices, without troubling ourselves with an inquiry into the propriety of either.

No subject presents more difficulty in legislation than a judicious disposition of the public lands; and most men are willing to pursue the old erroneous course, rather than to inquire into the defects with which it is surrounded, and the best mode to obviate these defects. The old land system was erroneous in its inception and ruinous in its practices: erroneous, because it was believed by its advocates that it would be highly beneficial to the people who might be desirous of becoming the purchasers of the public lands, and profitable to the national treasury; and ruinous in its practices, because it involved the purchasers in a debt most of them were unable to pay. It would be wholly unnecessary for me to state to you, who have seen the operation of this land system in the west, that the debt to the government, which for years hung over the heads of the people, had a tendency to sour them no little with the government, which they believed was, with a tyrant hand, oppressing them beyond what they were able to bear; and that the high expectations of those who were desirous of enriching the public treasury from the sale of the western lands were totally defeated, because these things, I know, you have seen and fully considered. My object, in this letter, is not to point out the defects of the old land system, (for, as I conceive, these defects must be obvious to all who will bestow a moment's reflection upon the subject,) but to state to you a few facts which have grown out of the operations of a system nearly similar to the one proposed by you.

In the year 1819 the State of Tennessee had some vacant and unappropriated lands to dispose of. I was then a member of the legislature, and was appointed a member of the joint land committee; and being impressed, as I was, with the importance of pursuing some other mode of disposing of our lands than that pursued by the general government in the disposition of hers, I seriously turned my attention to the subject, with a view of devising some system that would operate more beneficially, both to the people and to the treasury, than the long-practiced plan of the United States, than which, I always believed, no worse plan could be devised. Messrs. Grundy, Miller, Murray, and several other distinguished men were also of that committee. In the course of our deliberations I proposed a plan to the committee for the disposition of the lands of the State which exclusively belonged to her, the outlines of which, from memory, I will try to give you. It was as follows:

Instead of offering the lands at auction to the highest bidder, above a fixed minimum, as had been pursued by the United States, that an entry-taker's office should be opened for the receipt of entries of all the lands subject to appropriation by the State; the land was to be sectioned and quarter-sectioned after the manner of the United States land. All persons who had seated themselves upon and were in the actual possession of any of said land were to be allowed a preference and priority of entry for a limited time for the quarter section upon which their improvements might be situated, and, if not entered within that period by the occupant, to be subject to entry by any one else, at the same price, within another limited period thereafter. All lands entered within the first six months, whether by the occupant or others, were to be entered at the maximum price, then to fall 25 or 50 cents per acre in the price each succeeding six months, until the minimum of twelve and a half cents should be reached; still keeping up the preference to the actual settler for a limited time within each six months, giving to him the benefit of the graduation without detriment to the treasury.

This proposition of mine was treated with a levity bordering on ridicule by Messrs. Grundy and Miller. The result was that my project was rejected with great unanimity, to my no small mortification and chagrin; and the United States old plan of public sale, upon credit for three-fourths of the purchase money, was adopted, and became a law, fixing the minimum at two dollars per acre, which was then the lowest price of the lands of the United States. Under this law all the lands in the Hiwassee district, a handsome and healthy tract of country of about forty miles square, were offered for sale to the highest bidder, (without any regard being given to the actual settler,) for one-fourth of the purchase money to be paid in hand, with a credit of ten years for the balance. The whole of the lands subject to sale were offered, and about 110,000 acres did sell at various prices above two dollars, involving some hundreds in an insuperable debt to the State, from which some of our best and most cautious citizens will never be able to extricate themselves; and the result must be that the purchasers and the treasury must both be the sufferers, because the purchasers must forfeit the lands to the State, greatly deteriorated in value by ten years' use.

The law of 1819 made no provision for the disposition of what land might remain unsold. Being thoroughly convinced of the propriety of the graduating system, I renewed my efforts at the called session of the legislature in the year 1820, but it met with not much better success than it had done the year before. In the year 1821 I brought it forward again; its friends began to increase in number, but it still met the opposition of the distinguished gentlemen I have mentioned, on the ground that no one would enter any of the lands until they would fall to the lowest prices. The bill, however, passed the house of representatives; but in the senate the whole bill was stricken out from its title, and a mere scrap offered as a substitute, requiring the lands to be offered for sale a second time, under the same rules of the former sale. With this amendment of the senate the house refused a concurrence, and so the bill failed for that time, and the lands remained undisposed of.

In 1822 I brought the same scheme before the legislature again, and was successful in the house, but it failed again in the senate. I then quit the legislature; but my proposition was taken up by some of its old friends in 1823 and passed into a law, which, according to my anticipations and predictions, has produced the most happy results both to the people and the treasury of the State. Hundreds of men are now freeholders, and independent of the sneers of a landlord, in that tract of country, who, under any other system, probably would never be the owners of a foot of land upon the face of the earth; and, as the land was entered for ready money, all of them are exempt from a debt to the State, which sits like an incubus on most of those who bought land at the sales; and, at the same time, the fearful forebodings of gentlemen have, by experience, been proved to be entirely groundless, because a greater sum of money was paid into the treasury from the entry of these lands than the most sanguine of those who seemed to care for nothing but the augmentation of the treasury could have anticipated. In fact, the result was truly astonishing to them. In the first two quarters of the year that the office was open the receipts into the treasury were larger than could have been anticipated from the disposition of the whole lands of that district, and a large proportion of the whole of the land was entered within those periods at the maximum price, and which were not worth more than the medium price; proving that the fears entertained by gentlemen that no one would enter the lands until they fell to the lowest rates were idle dreams. The lands in that district were entered with a rapidity that astonished myself, who entertained the highest expectations of its complete success, as they were going on at the time when both the bank and land mania had subsided in the southwest in a great degree.

In Tennessee our banks were making the greatest exertions to resume specie payments, and our bank notes were then worth but little less than the paper of any bank in the Union. All the lands, even of the most indifferent quality, were entered at one price or another, leaving but little to be entered at the lowest price, and thereby making more independent freeholders, and producing more money to the treasury than could have been effected in any other way.

If my recollection serves me rightly, between three hundred and fifty and four hundred thousand dollars were paid into the public treasury from the entry of the lands in that small district, after the whole of them had been culled and picked at the land sales which had preceded the entry system.

My experience upon this subject has long since brought my mind to the unalterable conclusion that no system in the disposition of our lands can be adopted which will make as many freeholders united to the soil of the country that they have to maintain and defend, without being burdened and oppressed, and at the same time yield so much to the treasury, as a well-digested graduating system. It will in a short time bring all the refuse lands into usefulness; for such has been the fact in Tennessee that the refuse hills and mountains which lay north and east of the congressional reservation line for half a century, and viewed as worth nothing, have been appropriated by the people under the graduating system of that State, from which a handsome sum of money has been raised to the State by the entrance money, and an annual revenue will be constantly derived to her from them by way of land tax.

From these experimental facts it would seem to me that all the idle fears suggested by gentlemen that the treasury is to be affected by the operations of the graduating system ought to be dissipated. No fears need be entertained of the people who reside upon or near to the public lands entering into combinations and agreements with each other to let the lands fall to the lowest prices before they will enter them, for all know that such a plan would be worse than worthless; for while they would be waiting at the Pool of Siloam for the troubling of the water, a stranger, having no knowledge of or concerns in their plans, would step in before them and defeat all their hopes. A fear that others might get the land pitched upon by an individual as the most desirable to him would always prevent delays in the entry of the public lands. This jealousy it was, in Tennessee, which occasioned so much of the land to be entered at the highest prices.

If these facts will be of any service to you in shedding one ray of light upon the subject I shall be fully compensated for any trouble I have been at in drawing up this hasty note. I wish you great success in the accomplishment of your system, and all others you may propose having the good of the people for their object.

With much respect, your obedient, humble servant, J. C. MITCHELL.

BOUNTY LAND FOR MILITARY SERVICES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 3, 1828.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, who were instructed, by a resolution, to inquire into the expediency of authorizing a military bounty land warrant to be issued in favor of Allen B. McAlhany, who served as a soldier in the late war in the 7th regiment United States infantry, and whose discharge was destroyed, reported:

That the facts set forth are sufficiently proved by the affidavit of the said McAlhany; and also that Francis W. Armstrong, late a brevet major in the same regiment, proves, by his affidavit, "that he knew the said McAlhany as a private in said regiment; that he was discharged at Fort Hawkins in 1815; that he travelled in company with him from that place to his mother's, in Tennessee; that he sustained the reputation of an honest and upright man; and that he has every reason to believe his discharge contained the word 'honorable,' and was written in the usual manner," &c. From which testimony the committee have come to the conclusion that it is expedient and just that the said McAlhany should have the bounty land promised by the government as an inducement for his enlistment into their service, and report a bill for his relief accordingly.

Extract from a letter from Thomas A. Smith, receiver at Franklin, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated February 22, 1828.

It will appear from my account current for the 4th quarter of 1827 that I am in advance to the government $3,178 66. Owing to the absence of Mr. Knox, I have not been able to include in that quarterly account the sums necessarily expended in sending the money to bank, and vouchers to prove the loss of one box of specie stolen from the clerk's room in the steamboat after her arrival at New Orleans, and before the money could be deposited in bank. For this loss it has not been my intention to claim a credit, as I have ordered suit to be brought against the owners of the boat, and have no doubt but that the money will be recovered. If I could have embraced the above items in my accounts for December last, it would have shown a balance in my favor of upwards of $5,000. My being in advance to the government was entirely accidental, and owing to the circumstance of Mr. Rush having directed me to purchase Major Biddle's bills for $22,800 before he received my communication of the 3d of November, advising him of my having sent the money to bank. To prevent any inconvenience to the public, as Major Biddle wished the money to make a payment to the troops, I did, on the 31st of December, turn over to his agent every dollar of the public money in my possession, and such private funds as I had at command. The charge for clerk hire under the law authorizing relinquishments never having been exhibited, I included the charge in my quarterly accounts.

° The monthly statements of accounts of T. A Smith are here omitted, the result being here stated in his favor.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 18, 1818.

SIR: The extent of the sales of public lands which are intended to be offered at public auction during the present and succeeding year, in the Missouri Territory, compared with the amount of bills of the United States Bank and of the Bank of Missouri in circulation in that Territory, forbids the expectation that the purchasers will be able to make payment in them or in specie.

The public interest, therefore, requires that the bills of other banks should be received by the government in payment of the public lands. You are therefore authorized to receive in payment the bills of the banks the list whereof is herein enclosed.

You will, at the end of each month, deposit the whole of the money received during the month in the Bank of Missouri, to the credit of the United States Bank, for the use of the United States, for which duplicate receipts will be executed by the bank. One of the receipts must be transmitted with the monthly account in which it is credited.

Should the Bank of Missouri refuse to receive as cash the bills which you are authorized to take in payment of the public lands, you will make a special deposit of it, and transmit a list of the bills so deposited to this department with your monthly account. A strict regard to punctuality in complying with this instruction is confidently expected. The President calculates upon your zeal in securing to the government, in the approaching sales, the full benefit of a fair competition among the purchasers.

All combinations or associations intended to repress or lessen that competition should be discountenanced, and, if practicable, prevented by the officers of the government, and especially by the receiver and register of the land offices.

I am, &c.,

THOMAS A. SMITH.

Circular to the several receivers of public moneys.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 1, 1825.

SIR: It is thought proper by this department to direct that no bank note of a less amount than five dollars be received in payment for public land.

But as some inconvenience might result to individuals by carrying this regulation into immediate effect, you will, on the receipt of this letter, give notice in one or more of the newspapers in your district that after the expiration of one month from the date of the notice no such bank note will be received by you. After that time the regulation must be strictly enforced.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

C.

Circular to the several receivers of public moneys.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 31, 1826.

SIR: By the first section of an act of Congress approved by the President on the 22d instant, a copy of which is annexed, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to allow to the receivers of public moneys a reasonable compensation for transporting to, and depositing such moneys in, the banks designated by him for that purpose, to be regulated according to the actual labor, expense, and risk of such transportation and deposit to the place of deposit, and returning therefrom.

As to the mode in which these moneys may, in each case, be most safely and economically deposited, the department has not, at present, sufficient information upon which to found special instructions. In the first instance, therefore, recourse must be had, in a great degree, to the discretion of the several receivers. I have, accordingly, to request that the transportation and deposit may be made by the receivers, agreeably to the tenor of the instructions of the 22d of February last, in such manner as, in their judgment, may be most convenient and economical; having regard to the safety of the money, which is in all cases at the risk of the receivers until actually deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States. Of the expenses incurred in such transportation and deposit an exact account must be kept by the receivers and transmitted quarterly to the department, with the vouchers; and if it be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the amount will be allowed and passed to their credit by the accounting officers. It is to be distinctly understood, however, that the Secretary reserves to himself all the authority vested in him by the law of determining, when these accounts are presented, how far the compensation claimed is reasonable.

As the receivers will generally be able, by their past experience, to estimate the labor, expense, and risk of making the deposits, and as it would facilitate the settlement of their accounts for compensation for that service if a rate per centum could be fixed and agreed upon between the several receivers and this department, each receiver is requested to state, for consideration, the percentage upon the amount hereafter to be deposited, which he would be willing to receive as a compensation for that service; the deposits to be made conformably to the instructions of the 22d of February last.

By the second section of the act it will be seen that the Secretary is authorized, in his discretion, to make a like compensation for similar services rendered by the receivers since the act of April 20, 1818. The receivers are hence requested to exhibit an account showing the amount deposited by them in each bank, and stating the rate of an allowance per centum on such amount as will, in their opinion, be a reasonable compensation for the service. Vouchers must accompany these accounts in every instance where practicable. The Secretary will then decide upon the amount to be allowed.

No allowance will be made, under either section of the act, to any receiver whose office is in the same place as the bank of deposit, or where it is so near that the deposit can be made without actual labor, expense, and risk.

In the execution of this act it will not be more the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to see that the strictest economy be observed, than it will be for the interest of the receivers to take care that no motive may be found in the magnitude of the expense to induce Congress to recall a measure which its liberality has adopted solely for the relief of the receivers.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Circular to the receivers of public moneys.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 22, 1826.

SIR: In addition to specie and the bills of the Bank of the United States and its branches, which are receivable in all payments to the United States, the moneys receivable for public lands are as follows:

1. In the land offices in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Michigan the notes of the incorporated banks in Boston, city of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, District of Columbia, Richmond, and the State or Territory in which the land office is situated.

2. In the land offices in Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana the notes of the incorporated banks in Boston, city of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, District of Columbia, Richmond, New Orleans, and the State or Territory in which the land office is situated.

3. In the land offices in Alabama and Florida the notes of the incorporated banks in Boston, city of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, District of Columbia, Richmond, South Carolina, Georgia, New Orleans, and the State or Territory in which the land office is situated.

But this permission to receive the notes of local or State banks is only to be in force provided those State banks pay specie for their notes on demand, and are otherwise in good credit.

For the information of purchasers of public lands each receiver will publish, in one newspaper in his district, a list of the description of funds which he is hereby authorized to receive, and he will give notice, in like manner, of any change which may occasionally take place. But in all such publications he will state that, although, for the accommodation of purchasers, the local or State bank notes therein enumerated are at present receivable, it is desirable that payments be made in specie or the notes of the Bank of the United States or its branches; and that, as the receipt of any of the local or State bank notes may be discontinued at any time without previous notice, it will be well for those who have payments to make to provide themselves with specie or notes of the United States Bank or its branches, to guard against any change that may be found proper in regard to the notes of local or State banks.

No bank note of a less amount than five dollars is to be received, nor any that is not payable on demand.

So long as the notes of local or State banks are receivable, the receivers will note on each receipt for moneys received or paid by them, including their own and the register's compensation, the amount embraced in such receipt of each of the above description of funds, viz: specie, $——; Bank of the United States and branches, $——; Boston banks, $——, and so on. If this endorsement be found impracticable during any public sale, it may, for that time, be dispensed with. The receivers will accompany each monthly return rendered to this department with a separate statement or list showing the aggregate amount received and paid by them during the month in each description of funds, and the balance of each on hand.

The receivers will make their deposits in the following banks, viz:

1. Those in Michigan, in the office of the Bank of the United States at New York.

2. Those in Ohio, in the office of the Bank of the United States in Cincinnati.

3. Those in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas, in the office of the Bank of the United States at Louisville or New Orleans.

4. Those in Mississippi, in the State Bank of Mississippi at Natchez, or in the office of the Bank of the United States at New Orleans.

5. Those in Louisiana, in the office of the Bank of the United States at New Orleans.

6. Those in Alabama and Florida, in the Bank of Tombeckbee at St. Stephen's; the Bank of Mobile at Mobile; or in the office of the Bank of the United States at New Orleans.

The receivers are also at liberty to make deposits in the Bank of the United States or any of its offices which they may find convenient other than those heretofore designated, provided the funds so deposited be entered to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States by the bank or office, unconditionally, as cash.

To facilitate the collection of the notes of the local or State banks, the receiver will, on making a deposit, give notice in writing, by the mail or otherwise, to each of those banks in the State or Territory in which the land office is situated of the amount of its notes contained in such deposit; and if he is informed by the cashier of the bank in which he makes his deposits that the notes of any such bank have not been paid on demand, he will cease to receive the notes of such bank. It may be proper for the receiver, where it has not already been done, to take the first occasion to intimate in respectful terms to each of the local or State banks of his State or Territory whose notes he may receive the consequence that will result from a want of punctuality in paying its notes on presentation.

The receivers will also cease to receive any local or State bank notes that the bank in which they are instructed to make their deposits may refuse to receive as cash, or which, in the exercise of a sound discretion, the receivers may not think it prudent to receive; but in either of these cases they will give immediate information of their proceedings to this department. They will also give early notice to other receivers by whom such notes are receivable.

It is desirable that the deposits should be made by receivers at the close of each month, or as early as may be thereafter; and that they should include all the public moneys which may then be in their possession after reserving enough to pay their own and the registers' salaries and the authorized expenses of their offices. If, however, the amount on hand at the end of each month should not exceed ten thousand dollars, it may be retained until the succeeding month, but under no circumstances should it be retained so as to contravene the act of May 10, 1800, which requires that the money received by the receivers shall be transmitted within three months to the treasury of the United States, as they will thereby render themselves and their sureties liable under their official bonds.

They will take duplicate receipts for each deposit which they may make, one of which should be transmitted with their monthly return to this department, and the other with their quarterly account.

It is not intended, however, to discontinue the practice which has heretofore existed, of authorizing those receivers who are distant from the places of deposit to purchase and remit bills which are authorized to be drawn upon the Treasurer of the United States; on the contrary, whenever the moneys in their hands can be applied in that manner, instructions will be given for that purpose; but no bill must be purchased without a special instruction from this department. That this practice may be pursued whenever it may be desirable, those receivers are requested to inform this department, from time to time of those officers and others who have money to receive from the government and to whom it may be conveniently paid in that manner.

This instruction is intended to supersede those that have heretofore been given on the subjects embraced in it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Circular to the receivers of public moneys, supplementary to that of February 22, 1826.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 22, 1827.

SIR: It has been found advisable, for various considerations, so far to carry into effect an intimation given in my instruction of February 22, 1826, as to discontinue the receipt at any land office of the notes of any local or State bank not established or existing in the State or Territory where the land office is situated. But, that those who intend to purchase public land may have ample time to prepare for this change, it will not go into operation until January 1, 1828.

On the receipt of this instruction the receivers of public moneys will give the necessary notice in one of the newspapers in their districts, and will continue it once a week until the change takes place. The notice should be accompanied with the caution mentioned in the instruction before referred to, that purchasers of public lands may provide themselves with specie or notes of the Bank of the United States or its branches.

In continuing to receive the notes of banks in the State or Territory in which their land office is situated, the receivers will conform particularly to the instruction already mentioned in guarding against the receipt of the notes of any banks that do not pay in specie on demand, or that are not in undoubted good credit; and as the receivers have means, which this department, from its remoteness, has not, of judging of the character and condition of the banks in their State or Territory, full confidence is entertained that they will use all necessary vigilance in preventing the receipt of any notes by which loss may happen to the United States.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

PERSONS EMPLOYED IN THE EXAMINATIONS OF THE LAND OFFICES, AND THEIR COMPENSATION IN 1824–'25–'26–'27.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 4, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 2, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 14th of last month, "directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the House a list of the persons appointed to examine the respective land offices, for the years 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, and 1827; and the amount of compensation, including expenses, &c., which have been allowed to each; and the number of offices examined by each person in the respective years; and, also, that he inform this House what benefits result from such examinations of the land offices," I have the honor to transmit herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the enclosures contained in it, which give the information required.

In regard to the benefits resulting from the examinations of the land offices, I beg that the House will be pleased to take, as my reply, those heretofore stated by the Commissioner, in his letter of February 22, 1826, to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, a copy of which is transmitted with the above enclosures.

I have the honor to remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives of the United States.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 27, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 14th instant, I submit to you the statement marked A, which exhibits the names of the persons who were appointed to examine the land offices for the years 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, and 1827; the amount of compensation, including expenses, which was allowed to each; and the number of offices examined by each person in each year, respectively.

I also enclose a copy of a letter marked B, addressed to the Hon. John Scott, chairman of the Land Committee of the House of Representatives in 1826, on the subject of the examination of the land offices. Although it may not be actually necessary to examine all the land offices annually, yet I think that beneficial effects would result from the occasional examination of them, and that it would therefore be expedient to authorize the Executive by law to cause such occasional examinations of the land offices to be made as might by him be deemed necessary.

With very great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH.

B.

Copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Hon. John Scott, chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, dated February 22, 1826.

SIR: In reply to note of 13th instant, covering a resolution of the House of Representatives, dated the 7th of this month, relative to the expediency of repealing so much of the act of 1804 as makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause, at least once a year, the land offices to be examined, I have to state that, in my opinion, the annual examination of the land offices is productive of beneficial results. It is a direct and immediate supervision of these offices in relation to their accounts, the moneys received, and that on hand, and the mode and manner in which all their books are kept, that ought necessarily to produce beneficial results. These results may possibly be obtained at too great an expenditure. It was deemed expedient by the late Secretary of the Treasury that the examiners of the office should be residents of different sections of the country than that in which the office was located, and as an allowance for mileage was given, the expenses incident to the examination were necessarily increased.

I enclose a copy of the instructions usually given to persons appointed to examine the offices, as exhibiting the duties required of them. A slight indisposition has prevented an earlier answer to your inquiry. I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 675. [1ST SESSION.

REMONSTRANCE OF SUNDRY INHABITANTS OF MICHIGAN AGAINST GRADUATING THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS, &c.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 4, 1828.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The subscribers respectfully remonstrate to your honorable bodies against the passage of a bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands, entitled "A bill to graduate the price of public lands," &c. We think the bill is essentially unjust to those who have already purchased of the United States, and have undergone all the expense, labor, and deprivation of settling a new country. The lands have now become more valuable; but the first settler finds his property falling upon his hands, from the fact that new comers can buy for one-fifth of what he has paid when the country was a wilderness. Our Territory will be filled with squatters, who are a pest to society. By the provisions of this bill any one may obtain an eighty acre lot by residing upon it, and may purchase a thousand acres in its vicinity. Speculation will be the order of the day; immense quantities of land will be purchased at twenty-five cents by companies and individuals; a credit system will be established; and the price of land raised from twenty-five cents to two or three dollars per acre. The cash system for the disposal of public lands has produced the happiest results in establishing a moral population for the Territory of Michigan. The present price secures to the United States a fair compensation for the expenses attendant upon the acquisition and survey of new lands, and secures to the settler a respectable neighborhood. Your honorable bodies cannot for a moment imagine that our society would be benefited by giving away the public lands, and thus enticing the dregs of community from the old States. We appeal to your honorable bodies for protection against a system which we think must drive every respectable man out of this country. If your honorable bodies were disposed to establish a place of refuge for the refuse of society; if you were inclined to draw off from the old States that portion of the people who are a nuisance to any country, we think it would not be amiss to fix upon some place in the interior of the northwestern Territory, and to offer lands, within a given district, to the settler free of expense; but we beg that Michigan may not be selected for that object. We are far from objecting to a grant of land from the United States to the several States and Territories within whose boundaries these lands may lie; but let that grant be made now; now we have roads, and bridges, and canals to make. Let the first settlers be benefited by these lands; let them have some compensation for the expense of making roads for those who are to come after them. It must be obvious to your honorable bodies, that this bill, if it passes into a law, must procrastinate the settlement of new countries, as emigrants will wait until the land falls to its lowest price. We think this bill should be entitled "A bill for the encouragement of squatters and speculators; for the destruction of the moral character of new countries; for a tax upon the first settlers, and a premium to those who come last; and for the establishment of the old credit system."

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 677. [1ST SESSION.

ADVERSE TO GRANTING A TOWNSHIP OF LAND TO KENYON COLLEGE, IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 9, 1828.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill from the Senate entitled "An act granting a township of land to Kenyon College, in Ohio," reported:

That the object of the bill is substantially stated in the title. The committee are fully satisfied that this institution is one of the most interesting which has been recently established, and promises permanent and extensive usefulness, and that the efforts of its founder have been extraordinary and well directed. The committee would gladly be instrumental in its promotion, but, in their opinion, to make the grant proposed would be to introduce a practice in regard to the disposition of public lands the extent of which cannot now be foreseen or limited. The committee cannot resist the consideration that many other seminaries of learning would, in the event of this donation being made, present their claims to a like participation in the liberality of the government. That there are others equally meritorious, or differing only in degree, and less fortunate in other means of support, cannot be doubted. To discriminate between them would be invidious, and might often be unjust, and thereby produce a state of things in which the course of literature and the respect for the government might both be in danger of suffering. To prevent this the tendency of the practice would be to grant the reasonable applications of all, till, in the end, the interest and control of the government might be lost in the collisions and conflicts among the donees and the inhabitants of the country in regard to the division of the lands.

The committee therefore recommend the rejection of the bill.

PUBLIC LANDS WHICH HAVE BEEN IN MARKET FROM FIVE TO TWENTY YEARS AND REMAIN UNSOLD.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 21, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 19, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 18th of February last, "directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the House what quantity of public land now unsold has been in market for five years and under, what quantity from five to ten years, from ten to fifteen, from fifteen to twenty, and what quantity for twenty years and upwards, specifying, under each head, the quantity in each State and Territory; also what amount of debt has been discharged by the relinquishment of public land, and how much thereof was for land sold at more than two dollars per acre," I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 17th instant, which, with the documents to which it refers, contains the information required by the resolution.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives, United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, General Land Office, April 17, 1828.

SIR: In reply to your reference of the enclosed copy of a resolution of the House of Representatives, in the following words, viz: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House what quantity of public land now unsold has been in market for five years and under, what quantity from five to ten years, from ten to fifteen years, and what quantity for twenty years and upwards, specifying, under each head, the quantity in each State and Territory; also what amount of debt has been discharged by the relinquishment of public lands, and how much thereof for lands sold at more than two dollars per acre," I have the honor to inform you that to discriminate between the different periods for which the lands now unsold have been in market, as contemplated by the resolution, would require references to every tract of land now subject to sale in order to make the proposed classification—a labor which might occupy the whole force of this office for many months, to the exclusion of the current business. With a view, however, of affording the most useful information in reference to the resolution, which, under the circumstances stated, can be given, I herewith transmit tables marked A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, K, showing, for each land district in each State and Territory, the following particulars, viz: the dates of the first and last sales; the quantity of land proclaimed for sale; the quantity of land sold to June 30, 1827; the quantity of land proclaimed for sale which remained unsold on June 30, 1827, and subject to private entry on that day; the periods for which the unsold lands have been in market.

The quantity of land unsold subject to private entry is exclusive of the portion of relinquished lands not yet thrown into the market. The deduction of the sum total of lands relinquished under the act of May 4, 1826, from the gross amount of sales in some instances has reduced the net amount of sales to less than that reported on December 31, 1825, prior to the operation of the said act. The accompanying table, marked L, will show the quantity of land relinquished to the United States under all the relief laws, classified according to the provisions of the bill reported by the chairman of the Land Committee of the House of Representatives on the 17th of January last, entitled "A bill to authorize those persons who have relinquished lands under the provisions of the several acts for the relief of purchasers of public lands to purchase the same at private sale at a fixed price." This table also shows the total amount of the debt for public lands which has been discharged by relinquishment, and how much thereof was for land sold for more than two dollars per acre.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

ERROR IN THE LAND OFFICE AT CINCINNATI IN THE QUANTITY OF A QUARTER SECTION OF LAND SOLD TO HENRY CASE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 24, 1828.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 22, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, passed the 21st instant, I have the honor to transmit a copy of the account of Henry Case, for the northeast quarter of section 2, township 8, range 2 west, as rendered to this office; and also a copy of that part of a letter from Mr. Symmes, the register of the land office at Cincinnati, Ohio, which refers to Mr. Case, and the land above described.

I also enclose a diagram of section No. 2, township 8, range 2 west, taken from the original survey; from which it will appear that the east half of that section contains 316.60 acres. It also appears from the books of this office that the southeast quarter of said section was sold on December 22, 1814, as containing 158.30 acres, leaving the same quantity in the northeast quarter; but through the inadvertence of the register of the land office at Cincinnati, the northeast quarter was sold to Mr. Case as containing only 123.58 acres, and that quantity was paid for by him; but previous to issuing the patent the error was detected at this office, and, in conformity to the law and general usage of the office, Mr. Case was required to pay for the quantity of land which the quarter section contained, agreeably to the surveyor general's return.

With great respect, your obedient servant, GEO. GRAHAM.

The VICE PRESIDENT of the United States.

The following is a copy of so much of Mr. Symmes' letter as relates to the case of Henry Case.

LAND OFFICE, Cincinnati, February 12, 1827.

SIR: Henry Case's final certificate, No. 5985, for the northeast quarter of section 2, township 8, range 2 west, called for in your letter of the 18th ultimo, appears to have been regularly forwarded from this office in 1817, but was subsequently returned on account of short payment, the tract being found to contain 34.72 acres of surplus land. Of this fact I was at the pains of informing the proprietor by letter (as I did many others in a like situation) two or three years ago, and he has since called at the office and ascertained the precise condition of his certificate. Under these circumstances I am at a loss to conjecture the object of Mr. Case, in applying through General Noble, without further payment, for a patent, unless, indeed, the signal success of his neighbor, Mr. Hampton, who obtained from Congress last winter an actual donation of some 200 acres of surplus, should have led him to appeal to a member of that body in the hope of a similar boon.

Henry Case, of Hamilton county, Ohio, for the northeast quarter of section 2, of township 8, range 2, containing 123.58 acres, at two dollars.

ON THE OFFICIAL CONDUCT OF THOMAS A. SMITH, RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS AT FRANKLIN, MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 29, 1828.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, on the resolution instructing them "to inquire into the official conduct of Thomas A. Smith, receiver of public moneys at Franklin, in the State of Missouri, whether the said Smith is a defaulter to the government; and if so, to what amount," reported:

The committee have examined the papers referred to them, consisting of the returns of the said receiver for the years 1824, 1825, 1826, and 1827, the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the report of the latter to the Senate. That, from the documents referred to the committee, [see No. 673,] it appears that, at the end of the last quarter of the year 1827, a balance was due to Mr. Smith from the government for advances made by him; that nothing has appeared before the committee showing any official misconduct on the part of Mr. Smith; but, on the contrary, the documents submitted show that he has been faithful, vigilant, and correct in the discharge of his official duties.

The committee therefore request to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 681. [1ST SESSION.

ADVERSE TO THE INDIAN GRANT TO THE DOUBLE HEAD COMPANY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MAY 5, 1828.

Mr. KANE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Zachariah Sims, and others, praying to be indemnified for the loss they sustained in consequence of having been dispossessed by the United States of a tract of land that had been leased to them by a Cherokee chief in 1807, reported:

That the prominent facts of the case are fully and accurately stated in the said memorial, and it is unnecessary here to repeat them. It is manifest to your committee that the lease and deed of confirmation set forth by the petitioners were executed in violation of the act of Congress of March 30, 1802, regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes; the 12th section of which declares "that no purchase, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any claim or title thereto from any Indian or nation, or tribe of Indians within the bounds of the United States, shall be of any validity in law or equity, unless the same be made by treaty or convention entered into pursuant to the Constitution." Your committee perceive no just reason why any compensation should be made to the petitioners on account of anything contained in the correspondence between Return J. Meigs and Henry Dearborn, then Secretary of War, or any act alleged to have been done by the petitioners in virtue of that correspondence. The Secretary of War was not authorized by law to permit any lease of Indian lands; and, if he had such right, it is evident that the advice he gave on the subject of the lease was not pursued, but disregarded by the petitioners. Your committee therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 682. [1ST SESSION.

APPROVAL OF THE OFFICIAL CONDUCT OF THOMAS A. SMITH, RECEIVER OF THE LAND OFFICE AT FRANKLIN, MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MAY 24, 1828.

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 8th instant, relating to the accounts and official conduct of Thomas A. Smith, receiver of public moneys at Franklin, Missouri, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, with documents containing the information desired by the resolution.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 22, 1828.

The Secretary of the Treasury, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate of the 8th instant, "requesting the President of the United States to cause an answer to be given to that part of the resolution of the Senate of the 14th of March last, which required information of the time of receiving the respective balances in the hands of the receiver at Franklin, Missouri, at the end of each quarter of the years 1824, 1825, 1826, and 1827; and also to that part requiring the date of each deposit made by him, with a copy of the certificate of deposit alleged to have been made at New Orleans, under date of December 31, 1827; also, at what time the last account current of that officer, under date of 31st of December last, was received at the General Land Office; and whether that account had been allowed at the treasury when a copy of it was transmitted to the Senate, under the above-mentioned resolution; and, also, that he be requested to cause a report to be made whether the said receiver has not discharged the duties of his said office with fidelity and punctuality, and to the entire satisfaction of the government," has the honor to report to the President:

That, from the monthly accounts current of the receiver at Franklin, Missouri, transmitted to the Senate in compliance with its former resolution of the 14th of March last, and numbered from 1 to 49, it will be seen that, at the end of the month for which each account current is respectively made out, the receiver credits the United States with the aggregate amount of moneys received by him on account of the sales of public lands during the month, without specifying the particular days of the month on which the various sums constituting that amount may have been received. In like manner he charges, at the end of the month, the amount of his payments and deposits on account of the United States, without reference to the particular days on which the payments or deposits were made. From these accounts current it will also be seen that the greater part of the moneys received by this officer have been drawn out of his hands by drafts from the Treasurer, given from time to time to persons in that portion of the Union to whom he had payments to make. These drafts have always been promptly discharged by the receiver; and they have, it is believed, proved a convenient mode of payment to the persons receiving them, whilst the government has thereby saved the expense which would have been incurred if the money had been deposited in bank. The accounts current, it is believed, furnish the true dates of the money received and the drafts paid by the receiver, so far as it regards the month; and except for the four deposits made by him in bank during the period referred to, contain the only information under this clause of the resolution which it is in the power of the department to afford, without resorting to the quarterly accounts and vouchers of the receiver, which could not be transcribed in time to be communicated during the present session of Congress. Copies of two certificates of the said deposits found on file are herewith transmitted, corresponding in date with the accounts of the receiver—one of which is for the deposit made at New Orleans, and charged in the account current of December 31, 1827.

The information desired as to the time when the last-mentioned account current of the receiver, under date of December 31, 1827, was received, and whether it had been allowed at the treasury when the former report of this department was made to the Senate, will be found in the communication of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 14th instant, which has already been laid before you. In regard to the last member of the resolution the Secretary of the Treasury has the honor to report his opinion, that the receiver at Franklin has discharged the duties of his office with fidelity and punctuality, and to the satisfaction of the department.

RICHARD RUSH.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 14, 1828.

SIR: I have the honor, in compliance with your request, to return the resolution of the Senate of the 8th instant, relative to the receiver of public moneys at Franklin, and to refer to the report made from this office to the Secretary of the Treasury on the 21st of March last, as containing the information which this office affords in relation to the resolution of the Senate bearing date the 14th of March last.

The account current of the receiver at Franklin, under date of 31st of December last, was received in a letter from him bearing date January 15, 1827. The time of its receipt at this office was not noted. It appears to have been acknowledged on the 29th of March, together with a letter from him dated the 13th of February, covering his accounts for the month of January last.

The account of the receiver at Franklin for December, 1827, had not been settled at the treasury when a copy of it was transmitted to the Senate.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 21, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, dated the 14th instant, I enclose to you copies of the monthly accounts current rendered by Thomas A. Smith, receiver of public moneys at Franklin, Missouri, for the years 1824, 1825, 1826, and 1827, which exhibit the amount of money on hand at the termination of each quarter of the years above mentioned; the time that those amounts were respectively received; and the time that deposits, payments of drafts, and other payments were made by him during those years. I also enclose an extract from a letter addressed to me by General Smith, assigning the cause of his being in advance for the government at the termination of the last quarter in 1827. It may be proper to add, that the returns required by law to be made by the receivers of public moneys to this office, have been rendered with accuracy and punctuality by General Smith.

All instructions relative to deposit and the purchase of drafts are issued immediately from your office.

With great respect, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 683. [2D SESSION.

OPERATION OF THE LAND SYSTEM AND THE NUMBER OF MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS ISSUED DURING THE LAST YEAR.

COMMUNICATED TO CONGRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES DECEMBER 2, 1828.

Report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 23, 1828.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report in relation to this office:

The paper marked A exhibits the periods to which the quarterly accounts of the respective receivers have been returned to and adjusted at this office, and the balance on hand, agreeably to the last monthly account of the receivers of public moneys, respectively: which exhibits a very favorable view of the regularity with which those officers have rendered their accounts, and of their punctuality, very generally, in depositing the public moneys received by them.

The paper marked B exhibits the quantity of land sold, and the amount of purchase money for the same, for the year 1827, and the first six months of 1828, and the amounts paid into the treasury on account of the public lands for those periods respectively.

The paper marked C exhibits the balances due by individuals for lands purchased at the respective land offices, the total amount of which is $4,174 039. Under the provisions of "An act to revive and continue in force the several acts making provisions for the extinguishment of the debt due the United States by the purchasers of the public lands," approved the 21st of March last, the whole of this amount will have been liquidated by the 4th day of July next, by payments in cash and by relinquishment of the lands originally purchased; or the sums heretofore paid will be forfeited, and the lands will revert to the United States, and thus the whole of the operations under the credit system will be closed at the period above stated.

The act approved the 23d of May last, authorizing the issuing of certificates for the sums heretofore paid for lands which have reverted, or are liable to revert, to the United States, and on which further credit was not taken, will create a demand on the government to an amount that will be upwards of five hundred thousand dollars. The paper marked C shows that, at the date of the last returns, the certificates issued under the provisions of this law amounted only to $53,313 30. It is, however, probable that certificates for nearly the whole of this claim will be demanded and issued previous to the 4th of July next, and that a large portion of them will be repaid to the government in the liquidation of the claims for the lands which have been further credited.

Instructions have been issued to carry into effect all those laws passed at the last session of Congress, the execution of which is placed under the immediate superintendence of this office, and they are in due course of execution.

The survey of the public lands in all the surveying districts is duly progressing, and without material embarrassments, except in those districts where there are private claims yet to be located. The locality of such claims is in many instances so vaguely described, that it is impracticable for the deputy surveyors to find them and lay them down correctly, so that the adjacent public lands may be surveyed; and the claimants in many instances neglect or refuse to furnish that correct information by which the surveyors might be guided. Instructions have, however, been given to the surveyors, that in cases where the descriptions of private claims are so vague that their deputies cannot with due diligence ascertain the locality, or where the claimant, after having been notified by public advertisement of the fact, does not furnish the necessary and satisfactory evidence of the proper location, they cause the public surveys to be closed, without reference to such private claims. I again take the liberty of suggesting the propriety of causing all those lands claimed under confirmations, founded on papers believed to be fraudulent, and the originals of which have been withdrawn from the office in which they were filed, and now withheld from the surveyors, to be surveyed as public lands and brought into market.

The office of General Coffee having been destroyed by fire, and all the records consumed, it is proposed to furnish copies of all the returns which have been made by him to this office, and which are fortunately more complete than the returns which have been generally required of the surveyors. For this purpose an appropriation is necessary, and has been submitted. The State of Ohio having passed an act authorizing the county authorities to obtain certified copies of the surveys of lands within the limits of each county, at the expense of the same, I beg leave to suggest the expediency of authorizing, by law, the surveyors of the United States to furnish, on application of the State authorities, certified copies of the public surveys and field notes, the State paying the expenses incident to the same. A measure of this kind would not only afford a great accommodation to the citizens of the respective States, but would multiply the authentic copies of the records of the public surveys, and thereby guard against accidents.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEO GRAHAM.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Mississippi, Wilkinson County.

On this 30th day of October, A. D. 1828, personally appeared before me, the undersigned, a notary public in and for the State and county aforesaid, Thomas Dawson, who, being duly sworn, deposed: That he has known lands now owned by Dr. John F. Carmichael, on Wilks' Creek, since the year of 1811 or 1812; and that he was told by the family of Jones, who then lived on the land at that time and since, that they were tenants of William Collins, lessee of Don Claudius Bougand; and that said Jones cultivated corn, &c., and attended to stock on said place. And further saith: that, some time in January, 1826, he was applied to as a surveyor to resurvey said land, which he did, and that the place where Jones lived was included in the survey. He also saw, at the time of making the resurvey, and since, the appearance of an old improvement below where Jones lived, on the creek near the edge of the swamp, and also near the line of demarcation, which, from its appearance—the growth of timber, and the remains of a building which hath a tree growing out of them—seemed to be more than thirty years of age; the principal part of which is above the line of demarcation, which runs through both surveys.

T. DAWSON, Deputy Surveyor.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, and given under my hand and seal of office, the date above written.

On the motion of John Henderson, it was ordered that a dedimus potestatum be issued, directed to B. No. 2010. Claudio Bougand, 1,000 arpents.

No. 2014. Claudio Bougand, 1,034 arpents.—(See Journal, page 1365.)

Pursuant to a dedimus potestatum, issued by order of the board, directed to Richard Claiborne and B. Cenas, esqs., of New Orleans, dated February 19, 1806, the following interrogatories and answers were returned, to be read in evidence in the above two claims:

Interrogatories put to Joseph Bonneville concerning certain tracts of land hereinafter mentioned claimed by Claudius Bougand.

Question 1. Did Claudius Bougand reside in the Mississippi Territory on the 27th of October, 1795?

Answer. No.

Question 2. Where did Claudius Bougand reside at that time?

Answer. Previous to that date, Claudius Bougand was an inhabitant of the city of New Orleans, which was in fact part of the province of Louisiana; but that, from some reason unknown to the deponent, the said Claudius Bougand was forced away from this place by the Spanish government to the Havana.

Question 3. About what time did Claudius Bougand return to the city of New Orleans; and has he continued to reside in it ever since?

Answer. Claudius Bougand returned from the Havana to this place towards the latter end of the year 1796, and has resided in the city of New Orleans ever since that period.

Question 4. Had Claudius Bougand an agent in that part of Louisiana now called the Mississippi Territory, to wit: on the 27th of October, 1795; and what was his name?

Answer. In the year 1798 I was present at Claudius Bougand's when Lewis Alston was there; that Claudius Bougand gave order to the said Lewis Alston to take care of his land, to have a road made, and to do everything that was required by the Spanish government; and this respondent verily believes that the aforesaid named Lewis Alston remained on the aforesaid land from the year 1793 to the year 1798, when he died.

Question 5. Was Claudius Bougand the head of a family, or twenty-one years of age, on the 27th of October, 1795?

Answer. He does not know that Claudius Bougand was the head of a family on the 27th of October, 1795, but was 21 years of age at that date.

Question 6. Was Lewis Alston the head of a family, or 21 years of age, on the 27th of October, 1795?

Answer. Lewis Alston was a widower, and 21 years of age, on the 27th of October, 1795.

J. BONNEVILLE.

CITY OF NEW ORLEANS, ss:

These are to certify that, in obedience to a commission to us issued by the honorable the board of commissioners for the lands west of Pearl river, we did, on the 14th day of the present month of March, 1806, cause to come before us, under due previous notice of four days, Joseph Bonneville, who gave answers to the several questions put to him as stated above; and, being duly sworn thereafter, did say that the said answers were just and true, to the best of his knowledge; and further the deponent said not.

Given under our hands, at the city of New Orleans, this 20th day of March, 1806, and 30th year of the independence of the United States.

No. 2010. Claudio Bougand, 1,000 arpents.
No. 2014. Claudio Bougand, 1,034 arpents.

In obedience to a resolution of Congress of the 19th of May, 1828, authorizing an examination and report of the claims of John F. Carmichael to lands said to have been granted by the Spanish government to Claudio Bougand, we have the honor respectfully to report, for the consideration of Congress, the proceedings of the board of commissioners west of Pearl river, as given in the subjoined extracts from their journals, embracing the evidence on which those claims were rejected—that evidence not establishing the residence of the claimant, as stipulated in the second condition of the articles of agreement and cession between the United States and the State of Georgia. In doing this, we believe we fulfil the intention of the resolution. The original Spanish patents are understood to have been laid before Congress at the last session, with the memorial of John F. Carmichael, the present claimant, at whose request we have attached to this report a deposition of Thomas Dawson, a deputy surveyor, which relates chiefly to the appearance of an "old improvement" said to be on the lands in question. We do not discover from "the rules and regulations" which were made applicable to the board of commissioners appointed west of Pearl river, "that our opinion, as to the validity of the claims reported, is required or authorized to be given; we therefore confine ourselves to a report of the preceding documents in relation to those claims. The lands pointed out by the present claimant, as those embraced by the grants to Bougand, remain vacant, with the exception of a lot of one hundred and sixty-eight acres, purchased of the United States June 2, 1826, by John F. Carmichael, the present claimant.

Respectfully submitted.

QUANTITY AND QUALITY OF UNSOLD LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES DECEMBER 9, 1828.

Report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate April 25, 1828, and showing:

1. Quantity and quality of land, at minimum price, unsold June 30, 1828.
2. Probable value and character of same.
3. Length of time some has been in market.
4. Time that same was subject to be disposed of by foreign sovereigns before it came under the dominion of the United States.

SIR: In compliance with so much of the resolution of the Senate of the United States, dated April 25, 1828, as requires "that the President of the United States be requested to cause the registers and receivers of the respective land offices in the different States and Territories to be directed to make a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office (in time to be by him laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next stated session of Congress) upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on June 30, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, so as to show how many acres remain unsold, what proportion thereof (as nearly as can be estimated) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole per acre; with such remarks upon the character of said unsold lands, and the length of time they may have been in market under the laws of the United States, or subject to be given away or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns, before they came under the dominion of the United States, as may be necessary to give the Senate a just conception of their present actual value," a circular letter was addressed to the several registers and receivers of the respective land offices on the 28th of April last, enclosing a copy of the resolution, and requesting that their reports, respectively, should be made in compliance with, and within the period required by the said resolution; and I have now the honor to submit the reports of those officers, so far as they have been received, and which are lettered and numbered agreeably to the schedule herewith transmitted.

A No. 1.

LAND OFFICE, Marietta, October 4, 1828.

SIR: In pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of the United States of April 25, 1828, requiring the registers and receivers of the respective land offices to be directed to make a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on June 30, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, so as to show how many acres remain unsold, what proportion thereof consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre, &c., beg leave to report:

That, from an estimation made of the land remaining unsold in the district of Marietta on the thirtieth of June last, there was about four hundred and six thousand acres; and of first rate land remaining unsold, in the said estimation, there are none of any consequence; of lands of an inferior grade, where families may be reared and supported by the hand of industry, there may be one hundred thousand acres; but as there is so great a quantity of land for sale, it would probably be some years before that quantity could be disposed of at one dollar, or even seventy-five cents per acre. Of the remaining balance of three hundred and six thousand acres, we are of the opinion that there are about one hundred thousand not worth paying taxes for; but to average the value of the whole remaining unsold, we presume that fifty cents per acre would be the utmost extent of its value, and we think quite a high estimate.

The lands in this district have been offered for sale ever since the year eighteen hundred, except the reserved sections and fractions, which have been offered at various prices at different times; but since July the first, eighteen hundred and twenty, all lands in the district remaining unsold have been offered at one dollar and twenty-five cents; at which price (with but few exceptions) there has been sold about fifty-four thousand four hundred acres, amounting to sixty-eight thousand dollars and upwards.

All which is respectfully submitted.

LAND OFFICE, Zanesville, November 1, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to the request contained in your circular of the twenty-ninth of April last, accompanying a copy of a resolution of the Senate passed on the twenty-fifth of the same month, we respectfully report that the land office for the Zanesville district was opened at Zanesville on May 21, 1804, for the disposal of the land lying within said district, and that the sale thereof continued, under what is now denominated the credit system, until July 1, 1820, when, by an act of Congress passed the twenty-fourth of April, in that year, the credit system was abolished after the said first of July, and the price of public land reduced to $1 25 per acre, the payment to be completed on the day of purchase. The quantity of land sold under the provisions of the said act, between the said July 1, 1820, and June 30, 1828, was 161,888 acres; leaving a quantity unsold, in this district, at the latter date, (the period mentioned in the said resolution,) of 647,955 acres, all of which has been offered at public sale for $1 25 per acre, except 4,601 acres relinquished under the act of Congress of May 24, 1826.

No part of the unsold land, we believe, can be considered first rate, and we have no knowledge of any part, to the extent of a quarter section, lying in one body, which is unimprovable in some of the various ways of using and cultivating lands.

Not being particularly acquainted with the precise location of the unsold sections, or parts of sections, we are unable to state a probable average value of the whole of the unsold land per acre, only as we derive information from others. We have conversed with many of our citizens upon the subject of reducing the price of the public lands, and they generally deprecate the measure, as having a tendency to affect the present value of all the improved farms of the country, as well as all other property; and, also, as having a tendency to place the land in the hands of speculators, thereby doing an injury to the actual cultivators of the soil, rather than a benefit; that, although the average value of the unsold land in this district at the present time may be less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, yet it is confidently believed, and the period thought not to be far distant when, from the public internal improvements which are now in progress in our country, the value of the whole will be so much increased that they will continue, as heretofore, readily to sell to actual cultivators of the soil for the present price, and a location upon them be considered a desirable residence.

We have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

2. Tracts relinquished to the United States since July 1, 1820	16,081.60
3. Tracts reverted to the United States since July 1, 1820, and which may be redeemed under the act of March 21, last	3,044.89
Making altogether the quantity of	131,835.81

Of these lands there is not a tract that can be considered as first rate land, though there are few, if any, tracts entirely unfit for cultivation; and the average value of the whole cannot be fixed lower than one dollar per acre. Indeed, I have no hesitation in saying that the whole will command the present minimum price in the course of from five to ten years, there being a part of almost every section sold and improved. There is not, it is confidently believed, a half-quarter section in the district which will not, from some advantages of timber, coal, water, or range for stock, be worth that price to the owners of adjoining lands.

These lands have all been in market since July 2, 1800, with the exception of three (in a few cases four) sections in each township, which were reserved for the future disposal of Congress, and which were first offered for sale in November, 1805, at the rate of eight dollars per acre, under the act of March 3, 1805; and again at the minimum price of four dollars per acre, in the month of September, 1808, under the act of February 29, 1808.

Such of these reserved tracts as remained unsold were offered for sale in the month of September, 1821, at the present minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, under the act of April 24, 1820, and have since been subject to entry at that price, as other lands.

Respectfully submitted.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE AT STEUBENVILLE, October 12, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of 29th April last, I have the honor to report to you, in conformity with the provisions of the resolution of the Senate of 25th April last.

The quantity of land remaining unsold in the Steubenville district I had no means of ascertaining, except from a reference to the register's books. By such a reference and examination I find the quantity to be 131,835.81 acres. These lands have been in market since July, 1800, (with the exception of a few reservations in each township,) and offered for sale at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre. Although, of this quantity there are in several places small pieces of very good land, yet no one tract can be estimated as first rate land. And no tract, of the quantity of a quarter section, is "unfit for cultivation." The whole is well worth, and it is my decided opinion it will soon sell at, the present price. The character of the unsold land, or a great proportion of it, is such that it will be highly useful and necessary to the adjoining lands for timber, water, or range.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LAND OFFICE, Chilicothe, August 12, 1828.

In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the United States of April 25, 1828, requiring the registers and receivers of land offices to report upon the quantity and quality of the public lands which remain unsold in their respective districts; and in obedience to instructions from the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the 29th of the same month, on the same subject, the undersigned have the honor to submit the following report:

On June 30, 1828, there remained unsold in the district of Chilicothe, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, as per statement herewith, 1,011,928.25 acres.

No part of this quantity is considered to be first rate land; and perhaps one-eighth of the whole, or 126,491.03 acres, cannot be cultivated.

We think the whole quantity may be divided into five classes—each class containing one-fifth part of the whole; and that the first class is worth one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; the second class one dollar per acre; the third class seventy-five cents per acre; the fourth class fifty cents per acre; the fifth class twenty-five cents per acre. The average value of the whole, per acre, will then be seventy-five cents.

That part of the district which has been purchased contains sandstone, slate, limestone, coarse marble, burrstone for mills, iron ore, coal, and salt water under the surface; and we have every reason to believe that the lands unsold contain the same kinds of minerals.

The value of these lands will probably be increased twenty-five cents per acre on account of the minerals; for the sole purpose of agriculture, we should not estimate the average value at more that fifty cents per acre.

The public lands are gradually selling, at private sale, for one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; but other lands, which are occasionally offered at public sale in this part of the country, cannot be sold for one-fourth part of their apparent value, which is probably owing to the low price of agricultural productions, and the general decay of trade in the interior.

Statement of the quantity of land unsold in each township.

LAND OFFICE, Cincinnati, November 18, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with your circular of the 29th of April last, enclosing a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed on the 25th of that month, relative to the quantity and quality of the public land remaining unsold in the several districts on June 30, 1828, &c., we have the honor to report:

That in the district of Cincinnati there appears to have remained vacant, at the period referred to, of the lands which had been offered at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, a little over 800,000 acres, of which about 500,000 are found to lie within the State of Ohio, and some 300,000 in the State of Indiana.

This statement excludes nearly 30,000 acres which, having been relinquished, forfeited, and reserved on account of conflicting claims, were not open for entry at the time specified; and includes above 36,000 acres entered by individuals and located by the State of Ohio (per act of Congress) since that period.

In reference to the quality of the unsold lands in this district we can only venture to submit the following estimate of what might possibly be the result of a graduation in the prices from an actual inspection of the premises, not being in possession of the requisite knowledge on which to found any more precise or positive opinion on the subject:

Estimate.

400,000	acres, 1st grade, at $1 25 per acre	$500,000
200,000	acres, 2d grade, at $1 per acre	200,000
100,000	acres, 3d grade, at 75 cents per acre	75,000
100,000	acres, 4th grade, at 50 cents per acre	50,000
800,000	acres, (average $1 03⅛.)	825,000

LAND OFFICE, Wooster, July 28, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with your letter of the 29th of April last, we have to state that the quantity of land remaining unsold on the 30th of June last, after having been offered at one dollar and twenty-five cents an acre, is 162,643.81 acres There is not, in our opinion, any that can be considered first rate; and that one-fourth, or 40,660 acres, is unfit for cultivation; and that the average value of the whole, in our opinion, is 90 cents an acre. The lands in this district have been in market twenty years.

An estimate of lands remaining unsold in the Piqua land district June 30, 1828.

Rivers and navigable streams	11,150.00
	2,294,142.35

SIR: The above estimate is made on the supposition that all the townships are complete, and that each section contains 640 acres. But it may be observed that there are some fractional townships, and that the sections on the north and west of each township contain either more or less than 640 acres. It is believed, however, that the fractional townships not enumerated would about make up the deficiency of a few of those that are taken into the calculation which are incomplete, and that there are as many sections containing more than 640 acres as there are that contain a less quantity. We have concluded that it is sufficiently precise to meet the object of the resolution passed in the Senate of the United States April 25, 1828, to which your circular refers.

The Piqua land offices were opened September 4, 1820, at which time about one-fourth of the lands in the district was offered for sale; another fourth was offered in August, 1821, and the other half in August, 1822.

The lands are principally second and third rate, a small proportion only being first rate, and a considerable part of them flat and wet, interspersed with swamps.

The value of the United States lands in this district, as well as all other western lands, depends entirely on the prices established by Congress.

All which is respectfully submitted by your humble servants,

LAND OFFICE, Delaware District, Ohio, September 28, 1828.

In pursuance of the resolution of the Senate, passed on the 25th day of April, 1828, calling upon the registers and receivers of the respective land offices in the different States and Territories to report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the quantity and quality of land remaining unsold in their respective districts on the 30th day of June, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; what proportion consists of first rate land, and what unfit for cultivation, and the probable average of the whole, per acre, the undersigned have the honor to report that, in the performance of the duties required of them by said resolution, they find there was remaining unsold on the said 30th day of June, 1828, in this district, (1,641,914.92,) one million six hundred and forty-one thousand nine hundred and fourteen acres and ninety-two hundredths of land, mostly of inferior quality.

Three-fourths of the unsold lands lie in the five western ranges adjoining Piqua district, and between the head of Scioto river and lake Erie, embracing the table lands north of the Scioto, and all that region of country well known by the name of Black swamp, which extends quite to the lake, terminating in a surface little above the surface of the water of the lake. The table lands are generally of a good soil, flat and wet, a considerable portion unfit for cultivation. The Black swamp lands are low and wet, timbered with cottonwood, elm, beech, swamp ash, &c., of a very lofty growth, but a small part fit for cultivation, and of little value. Many years will pass before agriculturists will find it for their interest to enter the swamp and commence the process of removing the immense burden of timber, and ditching the lands, so as to bring them into use.

The proportion of first rate land unsold in this district on the said 30th of June last cannot exceed one-eighth part of the whole; one-fourth part, at least, of the whole unfit for cultivation, and the probable average value something less than fifty cents per acre, though difficult to ascertain their precise value, as we are informed by one of the surveyors who has explored the swamp there are six, eight, or more, entire townships of no value whatever.

The lands in this district were brought into market in the years 1820, 1821, and 1822, since which time they have been subject to entry at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Under the act of May 24, 1828, granting to the State of Ohio half a million of acres to aid said State in the construction of canals, &c., the governor has and will select from this district a quantity equal to about three hundred thousand acres. Should such be the result, the entries hereafter will be so limited as not to justify the expenditures of the office, and it is not certain whether the union of Piqua to Delaware would even do so.

Respectfully submitted.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Tiffin, Ohio, 10th month (October) 4th, 1828.

RESPECTED FRIEND: From the books of the land office in this place it appears that on the 30th of 6th month (June) last there remained unsold 1,641,914.92 acres of land, which, considering its situation, I am of the opinion, could not at that time be considered worth more than the following estimate, viz:

One-eighth, 1st rate land.....	205,239.36 acres, at $1,12½.....	$230,894 28
One-fourth, 2d rate land.....	410,478.73 acres, at 75 cents.....	307,859 04
Three-eighths, 3d rate land.....	615,718.09 acres, at 50 cents	308,009 05
One-fourth, too wet for cultivation..	410,478.73 acres, at 12½ cents	51,309 84

This valuation would, in the aggregate, make it worth 54 cents per acre; I think, however, that 50 cents per acre was then about the proper valuation; but to enable Congress to judge more correctly of its value, it will be necessary to be informed that the governor of this State will, in addition to what he has already made choice of, take a large proportion of the 500,000 acres granted to Ohio, out of this district; and selecting, as he does, the most salable parts, the remainder will of course be considerably reduced in value.

I am, very respectfully, thy assured friend,

HORTON HOWARD.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

B No. 1.

LAND OFFICE, Jeffersonville, October 4, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with the resolutions of the Senate of the United States of the 25th of April last, the undersigned having conferred together in the consideration of the several subjects therein mentioned, beg leave to report: That in reference to the first inquiry contained in said resolutions, they have ascertained that the complete quantity of public lands vacant in this district, including as well such as have been entered and relinquished and now vacant as those that had never been entered, and find that the quantity on the 30th day of June last was one million four hundred and ninety thousand nine hundred and twenty-six acres and forty-five hundredths.

As regards the second inquiry, viz: the quantity and average value, we must substitute for facts our mere opinions and speculations upon this subject, without coming to any conclusions that could be deemed even satisfactory to ourselves, were we appointed to affix the selling prices to the several rates herein mentioned.

We beg leave, however, to premise an opinion which is founded somewhat on our present observation, but principally from information derived from persons from various parts of the district.

Considering, under the resolution of the Senate, all lands as first rate, whose value is equal to the present government price, we believe there is one-twentieth of the whole vacant lands in this district of that value; two-twentieths worth only seventy-five cents; seven-twentieths worth only fifty cents; and the remaining ten-twentieths only twenty-five cents per acre, including in the last item the proportion of land unfit for cultivation, estimated at four twentieths of the whole quantity. Agreeably to this estimate, the average value, per acre, will be found to be something like forty-three and three-fourths cents.

We think it unnecessary to go further into detail in the graduation of value. No doubt there are thousands of acres of land not worth the minimum price stated by us, having no reference to their relative situations to other lands; yet we cannot but believe that the worst half of the lands now vacant would average that price.

It is difficult to attach any particular character to the public lands in this district. They may be considered as arable, in the general, and in comparison with other lands in this State; as rated for taxation according to the laws of the State, we should say they would be rated as third rate.

Portions of this district having been purchased from the Indians by the government at different periods, have in that order come into market. That part which was originally a part of the Vincennes district was first offered for sale at Vincennes in 1807; another portion, embracing nearly or quite half of the district, came first into market in the spring of 1808; another in the fall of 1816; and another in the summer of 1820.

As propositions have been made in Congress to graduate the price of public lands according to the periods when the several districts or parts of districts were first brought into market, we would beg leave to remark, as regards this district, such rule would be altogether fallacious. Within the last three years, it will be found that most of the entries have been made in the older and most settled parts of the district. We are sensible, however, that such is not the case in districts so recently come into market; that the best of the land is not yet culled out.

Should it not be deemed derogatory to the objects of the inquiry made by the Senate, we would beg leave to suggest the propriety of the government appointing one or more trusty agents in each district to assess the value of each vacant tract, and attach thereto its assessed value per acre, (being furnished with a list for that purpose.)

The very great variety in the quality of the public lands in general, even in the same neighborhoods, and in fact in the same section, renders this the only practicable way by which the real value can be ascertained.

Although it may be attended with some expense to the government, yet we deem it of sufficient object that the public lands should be for sale at their true value—not to be sold for less; and, at the same time, that the stated price should not be fixed by law, to which a purchaser would have to go whether the land is worth the price or not, as under the present system.

The public lands being thus graduated in price, according to their quality, will, in their disposal, be accommodated to the circumstances of all classes of citizens.

We have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient, humble servants,

LAND OFFICE AT VICENNES, November 11, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the United States of April 25, 1828, and to your circular of the 24th of May last, we have the honor, respectfully, to submit the following report:

The quantity of lands remaining unsold in this district amounted, on the 30th of June last, on the north of the base line, to 1,905,751.89 acres; and on the south of the same, to 1,496,970.42 acres; which added to 3,723.43 acres, within a triangle on the west side of the Wabash, between the districts of Shawneetown and Palestine, in the State of Illinois, belonging still to the district of Vincennes, present an aggregate of 3,406,445.74 acres, as will more fully appear by reference to the enclosed tabular statement (A.)

Of the said quantity, 1,826,750.41 acres were first exposed to sale on April 27, 1807; 1,363,654.82 acres on September 9, 1816; and 216,040.51 on June 18, 1821.

In relation to the various qualities of the lands remaining unsold, it has been impracticable to arrive at anything like precision; but from the means of information within our reach, we are induced to present the following estimate as the nearest approximation to truth of which the case is susceptible, viz: Lands of the first quality, 851,611.43½ acres; lands of the second quality, 851,611.43½; and lands of the third quality and those also which may be considered as unfit for cultivation, 1,703,222.87 acres.

With respect to the value of the first rate lands remaining unsold, it is difficult to form and perhaps rash to express an opinion—that value depending on the greater or less quantity of land in the market; on the greater or less demand on circumstances affecting the prosperity of the United States; and, of course, the abilities of purchasers and inducements to emigration. The same kinds of lands which, in 1816, and subsequent years, sold briskly at $2 per acre, (a price often increased by competition,) sell now slowly at $1 25 ; and but three cases exist since the price of land was lowered, wherein lands were raised above the minimum price, and then the advance had little relation to the quality of the soil, but arose chiefly from some peculiar advantage of locality.

We submit the foregoing observations and facts to the consideration of Congress, unwilling to hazard an opinion of our own. We will only beg leave, respectfully, to suggest whether a further reduction in the price of land would not reanimate the spirit of speculation ; have a tendency to throw the best lands into the grasp of the wealthy, and thus defeat its ostensible object—that of placing within the reach of those least favored by fortune the means of independence. We cannot resist the impression that, with a favorable change of circumstances, especially in the prospects of the class devoted to agriculture, the sale of public lands at the present price would in a great measure reassume its former activity.

There are in this district no existing claims derived from foreign governments. Those derived from the French and British governments have been all settled and satisfied.

We have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servants,

LAND OFFICE AT CRAWFORDSVILLE, September 17, 1828.

SIR: Agreeably to directions contained in a resolution of the Senate of the United States, bearing date April 25, 1828, accompanied by your letter of the 29th of the month, to registers and receivers, "to make a report upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on June 30, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, so as to show how many acres remain so unsold, what proportion thereof (as nearly as can be estimated) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre."

We herewith enclose a report showing the quantity of land remaining unsold on the 30th of June last, after being offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and the time it has been in market, under the laws of the United States prior to that date. Also, the proportion (in our opinion) that may be estimated as unfit for cultivation. And it is our opinion that, after deducting the one-twentieth part from the whole amount, the balance may be classed as first and second rate land generally; but what proportion these rates will bear to each other in quantity we cannot undertake to say with any degree of certainty, but are rather inclined to think that the first rate contains the largest quantity; and it is our opinion that the average value of these lands is not less than the present minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

We have given the quantity of lands reserved for schools and the quantity reserved for Indian individuals. We know of no lands within this district that were subject to be given away, or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns, before they came under the dominion of the United States.

We are, sir, very respectfully,

A. WHITLOCK, Receiver.

LAND OFFICE, Indianapolis, August 21, 1828.

SIR: Your letter of the 29th April last accompanying a resolution of the United States Senate, dated April 25, 1828, was duly received, and, in pursuance of the directions therein contained, I have the honor to report that the land district over which I have control contains about 2,649,600 acres, though it is proper to remark that, in making that estimate, the net amount of fractions, &c., were not calculated. Thirty-five townships were offered at public sale in October, 1820, forty townships in July and August, 1821, and the residue in October, 1822. The whole amount sold at public and private sale since the establishment of the office amounts to 797,498 acres, leaving a balance unsold of 1,852,102 acres, which may be divided into three classes of first, second, and third rate, generally timbered and fit for cultivation in some way.

I enclose a statement of the sales, monthly, by which it may be seen that there is no great difference in the aggregate of private sales per annum, nor do I believe there will be for many years to come. There are yet whole townships of land in this land district without an entry in them, where the water and quality of the soil is said to be very little inferior to that which was sold at a high rate at the first public sales.

Very respectfully, I am your obedient servant,

ROBERT HANNA, JR., Register.

B No. 4.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Indianapolis, September 29, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to the instructions of the President, I now offer you the following report, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the United States of the 25th April last, to wit:

All the lands in the district have been offered at public outcry for the minimum price.

Since the establishment of the land office for this district the following sales have been made, viz:

	Acres.
In the year 1820	96,094.75
In the year 1821	200,913.64
In the year 1822	149,335.26
In the year 1823	86,619.49
In the year 1824	60,684.23
In the year 1825	52,644.06
In the year 1826	71,167.35
In the year 1827	66,104.24
In the year 1828, up to June 30	23,498.33
Making an aggregate of	807,498.35

The public sales were holden in October, 1820; in July and August, 1821; and in September and October, 1822; during those months 237,170.83 acres were sold, at an average price of one dollar and forty-four and a half cents per acre. The remaining 570,327.52 acres were sold at private sale, from October, 1820, to June 30, 1828, for the minimum price. Supposing the excess of fractional sections will equal the deficit of those that fall short of the usual number of acres, the quantity of land remaining unsold on the 30th June last may be computed at 1,842,101.65. That I may be enabled to give what I conceive to be the "probable average value" of the unsold lands, I will make five equal divisions of them: in doing which, I take into view the soil, their contiguity to mills and other sites for water machinery, water-courses, public roads, and the seats of justice for the several counties within the district. One-fifth may be called first rate, well worth the Congress price, and worthy the attention of the agriculturist. One-fifth may be called second rate; as to its value, it is not equal to the first rate, though in process of time, when the sales shall have diminished, the quantity of first rate may bring the minimum price. The remaining three-fifths will not, in any reasonable time, bring the government price. One portion may be estimated at 75 cents, one at 50 cents, but the third is unfit for cultivation and without value.

The streams that water the district are tributary to the White rivers; they have their source in the north, and pass through the district in a southern direction. All the important roads long since have their direction, and nearly the whole territory has been organized and laid off into new counties by the State legislature. On the margin and in the vicinity of these streams, on the public roads, and near the seats of justice for the new counties, the most choice spots, as it regards soil and locality, have been selected by adventurers; the resident agriculturists, emigrants, and speculators having had nearly eight years to examine the district, it is but reasonable to suppose, from the lapse of time and opportunity offered, that the most desirable lands have been sold. These considerations have had their influence in making up my opinion of the quality and value of those lands. In addition to these, I will add one other—the sales at this office are on the decline. The receipts for the fiscal year ending the 30th of this month, as may be seen by reference to our returns with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, will fall short of those of the last year not less than eighteen thousand dollars.

For the correctness of my view and estimate of the value and quality of the unsold lands, I rely in part on my own knowledge of the district, and in part on information sought and derived from others.

The honorable senator who moved the adoption of the resolution seems to have contemplated a joint report, and I would have preferred uniting with the register, but as he made a separate report during my necessary absence in August, I now cheerfully comply with the call by tendering the foregoing report and remarks.

I am, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. NOBLE.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington.

B No. 5.

LAND OFFICE, Fort Wayne, November 12, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to your circular of the 29th of April last, covering a resolution of the Senate passed the 25th of the same month, and your additional circular of the 24th of September last, in relation to the quantity and quality of the public lands remaining unsold in the different districts on June 30, 1828, we beg leave, most respectfully, to report:

That in the district of Fort Wayne the whole quantity of land remaining unsold at that period, which had been offered at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, was about 1,546,000 acres—about 200,000 acres of which we judge to be first rate.

A very small portion, indeed, (if any,) of the lands in this district is totally unfit for cultivation—for all, or nearly all, that is too wet for plough land is excellent for meadow.

In regard to that branch of the resolution relative to the average value of the whole per acre, it seems to us that no data exist on which we can safely rely to enable us to form any satisfactory opinion; we do not, however, doubt that the lands will readily sell, as fast as they may be wanted, either at the present price or lower, if Congress should think fit so to decide. And we would further respectfully suggest that if a gradation of price be contemplated, it should apply to the different qualities of the lands, to be ascertained and determined by actual view; and when so fixed, should be permanent and unchangeable.

We will now proceed to submit such general remarks as we feel authorized to suggest upon the character of the said unsold lands, and the time they have been in market, &c. The country, generally, composing the Fort Wayne district, presents a level surface, a deep rich soil, and an abundant growth of timber, and, in a state of nature, a large portion of it appears, at first view, too wet for cultivation; but this objection is generally found to disappear when the lands are cleared of the timber and brought into a state of culture.

A portion of the country, remote from the principal streams, is destitute of springs and, during the dry seasons, of running water; but good well water can be procured everywhere at convenient depths. It will, however, be dependent, in a measure, on some substitute for water power for mills, &c. Those parts of the district adjacent to the Maumie St. Maries, Wabash, Mississinawa, and Salamanie, which a reference to the map will show to be extensive, are well supplied with water for all necessary purposes.

Of the whole quantity of lands remaining unsold on the 30th of June last, 1,537,600 acres have been in market, at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, from October, 1823, to October, 1825; and from that period until about May 1, 1827, an additional quantity of about 8,400 acres, being the then unsold balance of four fractional townships north of the Maumie, near Fort Wayne, first offered for sale in October, 1825; in all, 1,546,000 acres.

On or about the first of May, 1827, a barren of 5 miles in width, all along the north boundary of the Fort Wayne district, together with the whole of the aforesaid fractional townships north of the Maumie, remaining unsold, was withdrawn from sale, by direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, for canal purposes—amounting, in the whole, to about 115,000 acres; this comprehends the best, and, with the exception of a body of lands on the Mississinawa and some on St. Maries, almost the only lands in the district which are at this time in demand.

In the foregoing statements and suggestions we have not pretended to unquestionable accuracy, but presume they are sufficiently so, as fully to answer the purposes which were expected.

In conclusion, we would beg leave to submit a few remarks in relation to some parts of the Fort Wayne district which have not yet been offered for sale. Though fully aware, sir, that this is not called for on the present occasion, yet we respectfully presume that it will not be considered as intrusive.

We are advised that at a treaty recently concluded on the St. Joseph's of Lake Michigan, an extensive purchase of valuable lands has been made from the Pottawatomies, embracing all the country between this place and the north boundary of Indiana, not previously ceded, and extending west as far as the country is desirable. This is, in our opinion, a most important acquisition, as well in relation to the general government as to the State of Indiana.

It is sincerely hoped that the necessary measures will be taken to bring it into market as early as possible. Crowds of emigrants are already pressing into the country, particularly the northern part of Indiana and the Michigan Territory; and we humbly conceive that the encouragement of a settlement in that quarter, which an early sale of the lands would certainly afford, would be of great public utility, by keeping the Indians in check, facilitating intercourse among our scattered population, and leading to a speedy consolidation of the whole.

Great part of this tract of country is said to be very fine, especially that which is watered by the St. Joseph's and its branches; at all events, we have conclusive evidence that the lands would sell and settle with wonderful rapidity if brought into market.

An apology is due, sir, on account of this document not having been furnished at an earlier day. Mr. Vance has been absent from this place for some time, and though fully impressed with the importance of this particular duty, and sincerely intending to have performed it in due season, yet, acted on by imperious circumstances, he only arrived here a few days past. We most sincerely hope that no injury to the public may accrue in consequence of the delay.

We have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servants,

SAM. C. VANCE, Register.

C No. 1.

LAND OFFICE, Kaskaskia, November 1, 1828.

SIR: We have had the honor to receive a copy of the resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed on the 25th of April last, requiring from registers and receivers a report to your office "upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on the 30th day of June, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, so as to show how many acres remain so unsold, what proportion thereof (as nearly as can be estimated) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre," &c.

We regret sincerely that is not in our power to comply with your wishes in making out and forwarding, in due season, the report required.

The township plats belonging to this office have become from long and frequent use so much defaced and mutilated that a report embracing the information required by the resolution of the Senate cannot, with any pretensions to accuracy, be prepared.

Application has been repeatedly made by the register to the surveyor general at St. Louis for a new set of plats, which have not yet been furnished, and without which the quantity of land remaining unsold in this district cannot, with any precision, be ascertained.

We have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servants,

S. BOND, Register.
EDW. HUMPHREYS, Receiver.

C No. 2.

LAND OFFICE, Shawneetown, October 8, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to the requisition of a resolution of the Senate of the United States of April 25, 1828, requiring the several registers and receivers to report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on June 30, 1828, the register and receiver at Shawneetown most respectfully beg leave to submit—

That on the day referred to about 2,689,815.87 acres remained unsold, of which the greater part has been in market at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre since July 1, 1820. That about four-ninths, or 1,195,473.72 acres, may, we presume, be fairly classed as the first kind of land; and that about one-ninth, or 298,868.43 acres, would, in our opinion, be a large estimate of the quantity unfit for cultivation, as it is rendered so more from lowness of situation than barrenness of soil; so that eight-ninths of the district may be safely rated as good arable land, with the northern and western part beautifully variegated with woodland and prairie, while the eastern and southern parts present a timbered country, diversified with hill and dale, with gently rolling and table land, washed by the Great Wabash and Ohio rivers, with the Little Wabash, Saline, Big Bay, Cash, and Muddy rivers, with their tributary streams, winding their courses through every part of the district, besides the wealth produced to the surrounding country by the Ohio Saline, and future advantages expected to result from the iron and lead ores, and other minerals with which the southeastern part of the district abounds, so that the average value may be safely rated at one dollar per acre.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

THOMAS SLOO, Register.
JOHN CALDWELL, Receiver.

C No. 3.

LAND OFFICE, Edwardsville, Illinois, November 13, 1828.

SIR: We herewith, in obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed April 25, 1828, transmit to your office a statement showing the amount of lands unsold in this district, the quantity of first rate land, the quantity of second rate, third rate, and unfit for cultivation. In making this classification we have been governed by the surveyor's descriptions principally. We have thrown into the class of "unfit for cultivation" much land described as first rate soil, but which is prairie, and distant from timber. We have estimated the probable value of the whole quantity at $1,341,639 29, or forty-eight and nearly eleven-hundredths cents per acre. In making this estimate of value, we estimate the first rate land at the Congress price, $1 25 per acre; second rate land at $1; third rate land at fifty cents; and that which is reported as unfit for cultivation, at ten cents per acre.

We are, respectfully, your obedient servants,

WM. P. McKEE, Register

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington City.

Report of the quantity and quality of land remaining unsold in the district of lands offered for sale at Edwardsville on June 30, 1828, showing how many acres remain so unsold, what proportion is first rate land, what proportion is unfit for cultivation, and the probable average value of the whole, per acre, &c.; made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States, adopted April 25, 1828.

REGISTER'S OFFICE, Vandalia, October 23, 1828.

SIR: I am required by a resolution of the Senate of the United States of the 25th of April last to report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in this district, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; what proportion thereof (as nearly as may be estimated) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre.

In obedience to which, I have the honor to report, that at the time of the formation of this land district thirty-nine townships of land were transferred to it from the Shawneetown district; and that in the years 1821 and 1822, by the late register, Colonel Cox, and in October, 1827, by myself, eighty-three additional townships of land were offered for sale at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; making in the whole, estimating each section to contain six hundred and forty acres, from which the variation will be slight, two millions eight hundred and ten thousand eight hundred and eighty acres; of which had been sold on the —— day of June last one hundred and ninety-five tracts of different contents, but making in the aggregate seventeen thousand five hundred and eighty-six acres and six hundredths. The residue, estimated at two million seven hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred and ninety-three and ninety-four hundredths acres remaining unsold, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

In regard to the quality of the land, from the best means of information in my power to obtain, about one-third of it consists of first rate land, about one-sixth of second rate land, and the remaining half of land unfit for cultivation.

From this estimate of the quality of the land, and taking the present minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre as the fair value of first rate land, and a proportional diminution of, say 37½ per centum for that which is second rate, it results that the average value of the whole would be fifty-four cents and a fraction per acre; and in this conclusion my judgment concurs.

In relation to the length of time the above land has been in market, thirty-nine townships were transferred from the Shawneetown district to this at the time of its formation, as before observed. Thirty-two townships were offered for sale on the third Monday of January, 1821; eighteen on the third Monday of July; fifteen on the third Monday of August, 1822, and eighteen on the third Monday of October, 1827, and have since been in market under the laws of the United States.

All which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honor to be, with respect, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN MILLS, Register.

Hon. GEORGE GRAHAM, Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington City.

C No. 4 b.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Vandalia, October 14, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to your instructions requiring information in conformity with a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed April 25, 1828, I have the honor to submit the following report.

The land office at Vandalia, and the district to which it is attached, were established by the act of Congress of May 11, 1820; but the office did not go into active operation until January 15, 1821, the day on which the first land sales in the district commenced.

	Acres.
Previous to its formation, there had been offered for sale at Shawneetown, of the lands now comprising this district, fifty townships, amounting to	1,152,000.00
There have been offered for sale in this district, since its establishment, and before June 30, 1828, eighty-four townships, or	1,935,360.00
Making the whole amount of lands offered for sale within this district previous to the last-mentioned date	3,087,360.00
Of the lands thus offered, there has been sold at this office, previous to the 30th of June last	17,586.10
The number of acres that sold at the minimum price were	16,866.10
The number of acres that sold above the minimum price were	720.00
Making	17,586.10
There consequently remains unsold of the lands which have been offered for sale at regularly authorized public sales	3,069,773.90

Of the lands sold above the minimum, the largest price received per acre was $2 17. And they could not have commanded this increased price were it not that they lie in the immediate vicinity of the seat of government of the State, and are of superior quality.

The average price per acre of all the lands sold above the minimum was $1 73. The total amount of excess above the aggregate receipts at the minimum price was only $352.

The whole amount of cash received for lands sold from January 15, 1821, to June 30, 1828, including both days, was $22,334 62.

There remains unsold, so far as is shown by the books of this office, 3,069,773.90 acres; from which is to be deducted whatever amount of lands, lying within this district, may have been sold at Shawneetown prior to the establishment of this office.

There is also a considerable portion of this district surveyed and prepared for market, which has never as yet been offered at public sale. This part of the district is decidedly the best in point of soil and eligibility for settlements, and is now well settled by respectable communities.

In estimating the quality and value of the lands remaining unsold the opinion required to be given must be entirely arbitrary, as there is no evidence on file in this office from which such information might be gathered; nor is it possible to form anything like an exact estimate, without an actual survey of the whole body of lands in question.

From frequent inspections, however, of much of the district, and from such sources of information as I could avail myself of, the following facts and opinions are respectfully submitted:

The Vandalia district includes the counties of Fayette, Shelby, Marion, and parts of Clay, Wayne, Lawrence, Crawford, Clark, Edgar, Vermillion, and Tazewell, and lies nearly in the centre of the State; no part of it being watered by either of the great rivers which form our boundaries. Few or no settlements had been made within the district previous to its formation in 1820. It was created the year after the establishment of the seat of government of this State, which, at the time of its location here, (in order that it might be as near the centre of the State as practicable,) was located on the frontier settlements, there being not more than fifty actual settlers in the district at that time. At present, after the lapse of seven years, there are not less than 1,100 legal electors in the same district of country, and it is progressing in population by emigration in a proportionate ratio.

Another part of this district has never as yet been surveyed; in relation to which I know nothing.

The Kaskaskia river, the north branch of the Sangamon, the Vermillion of the Illinois, the Crow Meadow river, Little Wabash, Mackinaw, Salt, Kickapoo, and Sugar creeks, find their sources within this district; and it may be stated generally that, with the exception of the timbered land bordering upon these and the smaller water-courses, the rest of the country is prairie. The belts of timber upon the margin of these streams do not, in any instance, exceed six miles in width, including both sides, except upon the Kaskaskia, where the forests sometimes extend to double that depth. But in many places the prairie comes in so close to the water-courses as to leave only a narrow strip of timber of but little value. Beyond or to the northward of the north branch of the Sangamon river, which runs from the northeast, through ranges eight to one, intersecting townships Nos. 20, 19, 18, 17, and 16, diagonally, until it enters the Sangamon district, the prairie is almost uninterrupted; and south and east of that stream, until the forests of the Kaskaskia intervene, they frequently spread to a width of from 12 to 20 miles, exhibiting immense tracts of country destitute of timber and permanent or living water, and incapable at present of being converted to the purposes of agriculture. The bottom lands upon the margin of some of the larger streams are subject to inundation, and from that cause are of no present value only for their timber.

A very large portion of this district is prairie; and it is a fact yielded by all observers that the interior or middle regions of the larger prairies are always low and covered with lakes and ponds of water, consequently unfit for tillage.

With this explanation, the land lying within the Vandalia district may, in point of quality and character, be divided into four classes, as follows:

1. The first class, being one-fifth of the whole quantity, is first rate land, combining fertility of soil with the conveniences of wood and water. A small part of this is alluvial bottom and woodland, and the residue rich dry prairie, with a soil of from one to four feet in depth, containing and bordered by timber.

The greater part of this class of land lies in the counties of Shelby, with its attached part, Tazewell, where the lands have not yet been brought into market; Fayette, with some portions of Clay and Marion; those parts of Lawrence, Clark, Edgar, and Vermillion, embraced in the district, (with an occasional exception,) are prairie, which it is impracticable to cultivate, on account of the remoteness of timber and the want of water.

2. The second class, being two-fifths of the whole quantity, is second rate, being good arable land, but inferior to the first class in the fertility of the soil and advantages of situation. This is the lowest calculation for this class of land, there being much of it in the district, as I have ascertained from actual inspection.

3. The third class, being one-fifth of the whole quantity, is entirely unsalable, and of no present value, although it includes many tracts which may eventually become valuable. This, however, depends upon contingency—the progress of population and the increase of wealth. This class is composed chiefly of prairie, lying so remote from timber and water as to be unfit for occupation. Some of this land is poor, and will ever remain valueless; a large portion, however, is rich, and admirably adapted to tillage, and may become desirable to the farmer at a period remote from the present, when it shall be guarded from the fires of the autumn, and become overgrown with useful forest timber; when the enterprising occupant shall be satisfied with such water as can be had by digging, and when, in the progress of improvements, our farmers shall be able to command the means of bringing a permanent supply of that element to the surface. At present it will not sell, nor would it be accepted in donation, on the condition of actual settlement. The public domain is vast in extent, and possesses all the advantages of fertility and locality. The poor but enterprising emigrant is not confined in search of a home for his family, and soil to cultivate for their support, to the narrow limits of a single district or State, but he has all the west before him; a country affording more inducements to the hardy and industrious husbandman than all the others that I have any knowledge of. Having it then in his power to select and occupy the very best tracts of land without any fear of molestation, he would reject a proffered donation at the hands of the government of a tract of this class of lands.

The inundated bottom lands are also included in this class. They are only valuable for their timber, some of which is fine, but are rarely purchased on account of that single advantage, inasmuch as it generally lies too far distant from the arable prairie lands for the common uses of husbandry. The soil is in many places of excellent quality, but will not sell until the country becomes densely settled, and a sufficient surplus wealth exists to enable the inhabitant to embank and reclaim it.

A few other situations might be pointed out, in which land intrinsically good, as respects mere fertility, is rendered totally useless by countervailing causes, and which will lie waste until all the better tracts shall be occupied, and the excess of population or scarcity of land shall render it an object with enterprising men to overcome the disadvantages of nature by ingenuity and labor.

Of the whole of this class, therefore, it may be said that it is at present unsalable and of no value; and that it will so remain during a period to which no reasonable foresight can fix a termination.

4. The fourth class, the remaining one-fifth, is good for nothing, being sterile and unfit for tillage, or subject to disadvantages which time, labor, nor ingenuity can remove.

In reply to so much of the resolution as requires an estimate of the average value of the lands which remain unsold, it may be stated that if the actual value were to be ascertained, without reference to the minimum selling price of the government, it would fall very far below that standard, as the value of real estate in this country bears no proportion to the value of other property.

My own opinion is, that even the government minimum price affords too ample a datum by which to fix the value of the first class, and from which to establish an average standard price for the whole. Establishing, then, (without reference to any existing regulation of the government,) the price of the first class at the sum which my own judgment approves, and as approaching as near to a just estimate as my means of obtaining correct information and the character of this report will admit, the following estimate will be the result:

For the 1st class, per acre, $1; for the 2d class, per acre, 50 cents; for the 3d class, per acre, $0; for the fourth class, per acre, $0.

And the average will be thirty cents per acre, or forty-eight dollars for each quarter section of land, making the sum of $920,932 17 for a part only of this single district, all the purchased and unsurveyed lands being excluded from the calculation. But rejecting the fourth class as utterly unsalable, and of no present or future value, (the standard remaining at the above-estimated average,) the sale of the other three classes would produce to the government the sum of $736,745 73. By pursuing this calculation one step further, and placing it on the hypothesis that the whole of the first and second classes, amounting to 1,841,864.34 acres, will at no very remote period be purchased, a sum will be produced equal to, if not exceeding, the intrinsic value of the land, viz: $552,559 30.

But rejecting all these calculations as mere speculations unworthy of consideration, and supposing, in anticipation of future sales, the third class be considered as having acquired a value, and that that value be fixed at twenty cents per acre, then the average value of the whole will be thirty-four cents per acre, or, excluding forty cents, fifty-four dollars per quarter section.

Presuming that every fact tending to elucidate this subject will be acceptable, it may not be irrelevant to state that the sales of land in this country do not increase in an equal ratio with the increase of population, and that the latter affords no just criterion by which any estimate can be formed in relation to the former. The data upon which this position is assumed may be found in the annual receipts of this office, which stand thus:

For the year 1821	$11,886 20
For the year 1822	2,256 35
For the year 1823	800 00
For the year 1824	767 50
For the year 1825	1,219 20
For the year 1826	1,840 75
For the year 1827	2,175 55
1828, up to June 30	1,386 05

By this statement, taken in connexion with that made in relation to the present and former population of the district, it appears that the purchasers do not increase in anything like a proportionate ratio with the increase of population.

The reasons for this are two, and obvious to all observers:

First. Many of the emigrants to this section of the State are poor, and unable to purchase land at its present high price.

Second. Many of those who are able refuse to purchase now, believing that Congress will eventually reduce the price to something like a reasonable standard. The citizens of this country are all aware of the discussions that have been had in Congress on the subject of the reduction of the price of those lands. They believe (which is very natural for them to do) that the price should be reduced; and finding, too, that they are supported in this opinion by many of our most enlightened legislators, and believing that efforts will again and again be made until the object be either effected or totally defeated, they will not enter their lands, except in particular instances where places are found to possess some peculiar advantages; but will continue (as they have long done) to cultivate a still stronger faith in an understanding among themselves not to enter each other's improvements, nor to let any one else do it, until government affords them some relief in the shape of the reduction of the price of its lands.

This position may be more satisfactorily illustrated by the following facts:

In the county of Clay there are about one hundred voting inhabitants, of whom there are not more than twenty freeholders.

In the county of Marion there are about one hundred and fifty voters, and not more than one-fifth, or thirty freeholders.

In the county of Fayette (in which is situated this office) there are two hundred and thirty voters, and the number of tracts bought by actual settlers, speculators and all, does not exceed one hundred and twenty.

In the county of Shelby there are four hundred voters, forty (or nearly) of whom have entered their lands.

In the county of Tazewell there are three hundred and fifty voters, and only seven tracts entered in this office. This, however, is to be accounted for in this way: The greater part of this county is embraced in the Sangamon district, and of that part which lies in this district only one tier of townships, in ranges 1, 2, and 3 east, making three towns, are in market.

These statements, with the accompanying remarks, are respectfully submitted.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient, humble servant,

WILLIAM LEE D. EWING,
Receiver of Public Moneys at Vandalia, Illinois.

SIR: Since I transmitted to you by the last mail the report required by the resolution of the United States Senate, of the 25th April last, I have detected an error in it, which I beg leave to correct. The report stated that "thirty-nine tracts were transferred from the Shawneetown land district to this at its formation." It should be "forty-nine." Fifteen townships were stated to have been offered on the third Monday of August, 1822. It should have been "sixteen." With these corrections the report is correct.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN MILLS.

LAND OFFICE AT PALESTINE, Illinois, September 30, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States, of the 25th of April last, on the subject of the public lands, we submit to you the following statement:

The quantity of land remaining unsold in this district on the 30th day of June last, was 2,496,000 acres, which had been previously offered at $1 25 per acre: 645,000 acres of this amount has been in market at $1 25 per acre nearly eight years; 1,700,000 acres about six years; 85,000 acres four years; and 66,000 acres one year. In the above calculations we have not been exact as to quantity or time, but we deem sufficiently so as will render the Senate that general information they require. Those lands that have been eight years in market formerly belonged to the land districts whose offices were located at Vincennes and Shawneetown, and were offered at public sales at those offices, and the most valuable tracts were there sold, leaving the remainder unsold of a very inferior quality. We have deemed it proper to divide the unsold lands into four classes: the 1st, containing about one-fifth of the whole, of good soil and timber; the 2d, one-fifth, good soil but prairie, lying convenient to timber; 3d, one-fifth of thin soil and sparsely timbered; 4th, two-fifths of the whole unfit for cultivation, being low wet prairies, marshes or deeply inundated by the adjoining streams; and taking the whole collectively, we cannot estimate their value at more than thirty cents per acre. There are about thirty-eight townships in this district that have been surveyed, but not offered at public sales, which, from the best information we can obtain, is of less value than those now in market; and all of which, except one township, is lying in the north part of this district on the tributary streams of the Wabash and Illinois rivers.

We are, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servants,

JOSEPH KITCHELL, Register.

LAND OFFICE, Springfield, Illinois, October 11, 1828.

SIR: The following report is submitted in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of the United States, dated April, 25 1828, requiring the registers and receivers, to report the quantity and quality of land in their respective districts remaining unsold June 30, 1828:

The undersigned have bestowed on the subject all the attention of which they are capable, and have endeavored to make this report as correct as possible, from a careful examination of the plats, surveyors' reports, and our personal knowledge; but yet we may not represent the true situation and character of the district, from our limited means of information.

We find there remains unsold, after having been offered at the minimum price, one million nine hundred and forty-seven thousand three hundred and twenty-four and sixty one-hundredths acres of land, of which two hundred and twelve thousand six hundred and twenty acres of land, as nearly as can be estimated, is of good quality; what is generally considered first and second rate, suitable for cultivation, and will, in all probability, be sold at the present price, should no alteration be made. Most of this land is represented as being timbered, with a competent proportion of prairie. The residue, one million seven hundred and thirty-four thousand seven hundred and four acres and sixty one-hundredths, is represented as prairie, and low wet lands, unfit for cultivation. Although this land is represented as unfit for cultivation, it is so from the circumstance of there being no timber. The quality of much of this land, indeed the larger proportion, is excellent, and equal to any in the district; but its remoteness from timber and water will prevent any immediate sale. We feel much at a loss to say what is the average value of the whole, per acre. To say that the first and second quality of land is worth one dollar and twenty-five cents; the residue is of but little value, and cannot estimate it worth more than twelve and a half cents per acre.

The land in this district was offered for sale at four different periods, and in about equal quantities. The first sale was in November, 1823; the second sale was in November, 1824; the third sale was in October, 1826, and the last sale was in October, 1827.

We are not apprised that any land in this district was given away or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns, before they came under the dominion of the United States.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ST. LOUIS (MISSOURI) LAND OFFICE, October 24, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to your instructions of the 29th of April last, we submit to you the following report upon the quantity and quality of the lands remaining unsold in this district on the 30th day of June last, after having been offered at $1 25 per acre. The quantity so remaining is 2,597,896.89 acres, from which must be deducted, to show what was subject to entry at that time, the quantity of 378,470.46 acres, which had been withdrawn from market by order of the superintendent of lead mines, under the belief that it contained lead mineral.

With respect to the quality of the land so remaining unsold, the proportion thereof which is first rate, the proportion which is unfit for cultivation, and the probable average value of the whole, any answer we can give must be somewhat conjectural; but we believe it may be said with safety that there is not one quarter section of first rate land (wood, water, and soil considered) now subject to entry in the district; and that, if there was one, it would be immediately entered at the present minimum price, The proportion unfit for cultivation, either on account of sterility of soil or want of wood or water, is probably three-fourths of the whole quantity; and the probable average value of the whole may be estimated at fifteen cents per acre.

With respect to the length of time the land in this district was subject to be given away by foreign sovereigns, we may state it at about forty years, to wit, from 1763, when Louisiana was ceded by France to Spain, to 1803, when it was ceded to the United States; and since that time the district has been in market under the laws of the United States, since the year 1818, when the sales first began.

With respect to the general character of these unsold lands, and the present actual value, they may be characterized as the remnants and refuse of nearly forty years' picking and culling under the Spanish government, and ten years under the laws of the United States, and consist of very inferior tracts.

Respectfully, we are, sir, your obedient servants,

WILLIAM CHRISTY, Register.

LAND OFFICE, Franklin, Missouri, October 26, 1828.

SIR: You will receive herewith a report made by the register and receiver of this office, in obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the United States of April 5, 1828.

I am sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. J. BOGGS, Register.

REPORT.

FRANKLIN, Missouri, October 22, 1828.

The register of the land office and the receiver of public moneys at Franklin, Missouri, in obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the United States of April 5, 1828, "requesting the President to cause the registers and receivers of the respective land offices in the different States and Territories to make a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office (in time to be by him laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next stated session of Congress) upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on June 30, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price, of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, so as to show how many acres remain unsold, what proportion thereof (as nearly as can be ascertained) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre; with such remarks upon the character of said unsold lands, and the length of time they may have been in market, under the laws of the United States, or subject to be given away or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns, before they came under the dominion of the United States, as may be necessary to give the Senate a just conception of their present value," have the honor, respectfully, to report:

That the quality of land remaining unsold in this district, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, is two millions seven hundred and nine thousand and seventy-six acres.

About three-fourths of this quantity was offered under the credit system in the years 1818, 1819, and 1820. By the operation of the 3d section of the act of Congress approved April 24, 1820, entitled "An act making further provisions for the sale of the public lands," this quantity was thrown into market on July 1, 1820, at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. The remainder has been since offered for sale, agreeably to the provisions of that act, and has remained unsold principally about five years. The regulations existing in Louisiana, under the governments of France and Spain, on the subject of the disposal of lands, have been since its cession to the United States a source of embarrassment to every tribunal interested in obtaining a knowledge of them. On this subject the register and receiver possess no further information than that which is contained in the known and authorized publications of Congress, which, it is presumed, it would be unnecessary here to repeat. This we the less regret, as other officers, whose duty it will be, in compliance with the resolution of the honorable Senate, to make similar reports, have opportunities of access to living sources of information, or perhaps the more authentic ones of unpublished official documents, which are denied to us, and from which, doubtless, a much more satisfactory knowledge can be obtained of the length of time the said unsold lands were subject to be given away or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns than any which we can furnish. With regard to the quality of these unsold lands, we feel compelled to express ourselves very generally: without an actual examination, no opinion can be formed which deserves to be relied upon as accurate—and the resolution of the Senate did not to us seem to contemplate such a special examination.

We have little doubt, however, that the greater proportion would in this country be considered unfit for cultivation, and would not for a long time be taken at any price, however moderate. There is in the remainder much fine prairie land, generally destitute of water or timber, and frequently of both, but yielding to no land in the world in point of fertility of soil; a considerable quantity of rich alluvial bottom land, the character of which is much impaired by its supposed unhealthiness and liability to inundation, and a portion of moderately good land, with the essential requisites of good water and timber.

To fix upon the average value of these lands with an estimate that approximates in the slightest degree to undoubted accuracy would be extremely difficult, if not altogether impossible, inasmuch as there are no very obvious data upon which to base an opinion. The price would assuredly depend greatly on the demand, and that demand would be regulated by circumstances which it would be impossible to predict with certainty. We are therefore unable to express an opinion upon this point, in which we have any kind of confidence, and we feel that it would be trifling with the subject to deal in vague and general assertion. Judging from the amount of sales made, and the apparent demand for lands at present, we think it a liberal estimate, (after taking into consideration the vast difference in the quality of the lands heretofore sold, and those remaining undisposed of,) to suppose that the average sales for the next five years will be about thirty thousand acres per annum. At the end of which period, we think it probable that the lands remaining on hand will be of such a refuse and inferior quality as not to sell at all, unless at a price greatly reduced.

All which is respectfully submitted.

D No. 3.

LAND OFFICE, Jackson, Missouri, October 17, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with your request in transmitting to us a resolution of the Senate, passed the 25th of April last, the first clause of which is in the words following, to wit:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause the registers and receivers of the respective land offices in the different States and Territories to be directed to make a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office (in time to be by him laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next stated session of Congress) upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on the 30th day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, so as to show how many acres remain so unsold, what proportion thereof (as nearly as can be estimated) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre; with such remarks upon the character of said unsold lands, and the length of time they have been in market under the laws of the United States, or subject to be given away or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns before they came under the dominion of the United States, as may be necessary to give the Senate a just conception of their present actual value"—

We beg leave to make the following report: That the whole quantity of land contained within this land district that has been offered at public sale is about 5,190,491 acres; of this quantity there has been given away, principally by his Catholic Majesty, (the title to which has been recognized and confirmed by this government,) 334,554 acres. There still remain to be adjusted unconfirmed land claims to the amount of 107,268 acres, which have been reserved from public sale. There has also been reserved from public sale, on account of their containing lead mineral, 234,838 acres; and there has been sold, to June 30, 1828, in this land district, at public and private sales, 83,806 acres, leaving on that day, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, 4,430,025 acres, of which quantity we estimate one-fiftieth part to be fit for cultivation, which is 88,600 acres, which, at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, produces $110,750. If we suppose the land unfit for cultivation, which is 4,341,425 acres, to be of no value, and assume the above sum of $110,750 as a data on which to estimate the probable average value of the whole, per acre, remaining unsold, (exclusive of the reserved lands,) it would be only two and a half cents per acre. But although the greater part of the lands remaining unsold in this land district are thought to be unfit for cultivation, owing to the best of the lands having been heretofore selected by individuals under the present as well as the former governments, yet it is estimated that a large proportion of those lands will be valuable, not only on account of the minerals they contain, but also on account of the timber, so that we might fairly estimate that at least one-half the lands that are unfit for cultivation would command twenty-five cents per acre. We have no data by which to ascertain with certainty the time that those lands were liable to be given away or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns, but believe, (except St. Genevieve, and the lands contiguous to it,) that the greater part of the donations of lands were made by the Spanish government between the years 1797 and 1803, and also that they have been in market under the laws of the United States from two to eight years.

All which is respectfully submitted by

RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Lexington, October 8, 1828.

SIR: In reply to yours of April 29 last, annexing the Senate's resolution of the 25th of the same, I have to report, that after having progressed at some length in conjunction with the register, he has declined going any further into the business, stating that it will be impossible for us to arrive at information more accurate than you at present are in possession of. Without his co-operation I can proceed no further.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, &c.,

REGISTER'S OFFICE, Lexington, October 15, 1828.

SIR: To the resolution of the Senate of April 25, 1828, (forwarded by you under date of the 29th,) it is impossible for me to reply specifically.

1st. The quantity of land unsold on June 30 last could only be ascertained by calculating the whole contents of the surveyed parts of the district, and then subtracting the quantity sold, which operation would cost me in clerk hire more than my salary can afford.

2d. A great portion of the land sold in this district was sold or offered at Franklin before the creation of this office. I have no documents on which to found a report of the time when, or of the price at which it was offered, nor of the price at which it sold. Besides, there has been, under different acts of Congress, a considerable quantity of land lying within this district relinquished at the Franklin office—but of these relinquishments I have had no advices for the last four years.

3d. Of the quality of the land remaining unsold I can say nothing, except so far as the field-notes might guide me, and I have seen enough to teach me they are blind guides. They are, I presume, in your office, as well as all the other documents on the subject embraced by the resolution. On the value of the lands, taking the whole district into view, the receiver and I cannot agree. I think, making the present minimum price a guide, that the whole of the unsold part of the district ought to be valued at 62½ cents per acre. The receiver rates it lower. The whole soil is fertile, but there is an over proportion of prairie, and some morass.

Very respectfully,

J. S. FINLEY.

LAND OFFICE, Palmyra, Missouri, October, 30, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States of April 25 last, "requesting the President to cause the registers and receivers of the respective land offices in the different States and Territories to be directed to make a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office (in time to be by him laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next stated session of Congress) upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on June 30, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, so as to show how many acres remain so unsold, what proportion thereof (as nearly as can be estimated) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre; with such remarks upon the character of said unsold lands, and the length of time they may have been in market under the laws of the United States, or subject to be given away or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns before they came under the dominion of the United States, as may be necessary to give the Senate a just conception of their present actual value," the register and receiver of the land office in the district of Salt River, Missouri, have the honor to report that they have obeyed the directions of the President, so far as they were enabled from the means in their possession.

The quantity of land remaining unsold in this land district on June 30 last, after having been offered for sale at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, will be seen by reference to the paper marked A, herewith enclosed. Also, the estimated proportion of first rate land, and of land unfit for cultivation. This estimate of the quality of the lands is made from the description of the surveyors, contained in the field-notes, corrected by our own observation, as far as that extended, and in some instances by the representations of the inhabitants of the district, when it was believed reliance could be placed on the information received. It must, however, be observed that the descriptions of the surveyors apply exclusively to the land bordering on the section lines, and these being generally a mile distant from each other the descriptions must doubtless fall far short of the truth—for here it is known that land of the first quality, and land apparently very poor, approach within a few rods. The land over which the sectional lines pass may be of the richest, and the interior of the section of the poorest class, and conversely; and hence will be perceived the impossibility of making a true estimate of the quality of the land from any means of which we could avail ourselves.

From the impossibility of arriving at a true estimate of the quality of the land in this district, it must be obvious that an opinion as to the average value of the whole, per acre, would be merely speculative, and it is believed could not aid in any degree in forming a just conception of their actual value.

As to the length of time the lands in this district have been in market under the laws of the United States, we have to remark that this district, having been formed out of part of the St. Louis and part of the Howard land districts, and subsequent to the sales in those districts, we cannot give the precise length of time they have been in market; but it is believed the lands west of the 5th principal meridian, (which constitute far the greater part of the district,) and as far north as township 61, inclusive, (except 34 townships in the southwest corner of the district not yet proclaimed for sale,) were offered for sale in the autumn of 1818, and the spring of 1819, at the then minimum price of $2 per acre, and under the credit system. The lands east of the 5th meridian, and those north of township 61, to the boundary of the State, were exposed to sale in the fall of 1822, under the cash system, and have since been in market at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Of the lands sold at St. Louis and Franklin in 1818 and 1819, a portion were relinquished to the United States, under the several laws for the relief of the purchasers of public lands, which were again offered at this office in May, 1825, and in August, 1827, and have since been in market at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

All the lands in this district, it is presumed, were subject to be given away or otherwise disposed of by the sovereigns of France and Spain during the respective periods that the Territory of Louisiana was occupied by them; 138,058.95 acres of which were disposed of to individuals, the titles to which have been perfected; and 90,784.91 acres are claimed under concessions from those sovereigns, the titles to which are yet incomplete.

On the paper marked A, before referred to, will be seen a statement showing the aggregate quantity of land in this district, and the disposition made of it, which we have annexed, believing it might aid the Senate in arriving at the object desired.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants.

LAND OFFICE AT OPELOUSAS, State of Louisiana, October 31, 1828.

In obedience to your instructions of the 29th April last, in relation to the resolution of the Senate of the United States, 25th of the same month, requiring registers and receivers to report to you, &c., upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold on the 30th June last, after having been offered at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, so as to show how many acres remain so unsold, what proportion thereof (as nearly as can be estimated) consists of first rate land, what of land fit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre; with such remarks upon the character of said unsold lands, and the length of time they may have been in market under the laws of the United States, or subject to be given away, &c., under foreign sovereigns, as may be necessary to give the Senate a just conception of their present actual value, we now forward to you the result of our investigations.

We have not given the exact quantity of each entire township, because, no tables having been furnished by the surveyor, the calculations would have been tedious, and, as we conceive, would not the more satisfactorily have answered the views of the Senate than a general result. We therefore, having made several promiscuous calculations, have assumed that each entire township contains 23,000 acres, being about the sum of 640 (the acres usually in a section) multiplied by 36, (the number of sections in a township.) Nor have we been more accurate as to the quality of the lands; and we have been under the necessity, for several reasons, to adjust them under two great classes, viz: "Good cultivable land," and "Lands poor, marshy, inundated, &c.," because the few first rate spots to be found were hardly worth the trouble of classification; and because, from the want of precision in the field-notes, it was often difficult to determine the exact nature of the soil. According to the principles we have here stated, there remains unsold, to the 30th June last, (and very few acres have been sold since,) of the 58 townships and fractional townships exposed to sale by the President's proclamations of June 20, 1818, and of May 6, 1826, about one million two hundred and sixty-six thousand (1,266,000) acres.

We have hereunto annexed a sketch of the country, with the principal towns and water-courses, together with the townships which have been offered for sale, designated by cross marks and colored. And having examined the field-notes and surveying returns of each township, and noted the general result, we have annexed that work also. The lands west of the basis meridian, and north of the 31st degree N. latitude, and up the course of Red river, are probably good; those west and south of the two principal lines are generally very poor. It is said that east of the mouth of the Nementon, and along the coasts of the Gulf, there are some considerable bodies of first rate land. The principal body of good lands is situated east of the basis meridian, and more immediately on the water-courses laid down. The lands in the angle formed by the Red river and Atchafalaya have been surveyed, and were offered for sale in 1812; but for want of some formality the proceedings were considered null. These lands are generally rich, but subject to deep annual inundations from the Mississippi river.

Finally, we may recapitulate that from the present exhibit, and the information we possess, not more than the quantity of eight out of the fifty-eight townships reported can be considered as "good cultivable land," and very few acres "first rate."

As to the probable average value of these lands it is difficult to form an opinion; but, under all the circumstances, we think it cannot exceed fifty cents per acre. Indeed, ten thousands of acres west and south of the two principal lines are fit only for grazing; and we cannot but think that the interests of the nation would be advanced by abandoning them to the first occupant, on his paying for each quarter section a sum sufficient to reimburse the government for the survey, and to pay for the location and entry.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

REMARKS.—The first rate land in these townships is well adapted to the culture of cotton, &c. The second rate would produce wine and silk, two branches of agriculture yet unknown there. Probably the olive tree would also thrive well. The third rate would afford good pasture. The fourth rate includes the barren hills and the overflowed lands, these chiefly bordering the water-courses.

REMARKS.—There is more overflowed land in these twenty-six townships than in the twenty-five townships described before. The observations made on these apply, however, to them also, except as to those in ranges 13 and 14 E., which are situated on the Mississippi.—(See general remarks.)

REMARKS.—These nineteen townships contain but few spots of good land; the second rate of those situated in ranges 1, 2, 3, east, and 1, 2, west, is well adapted to the culture of grapevine and silk, but no attempt has ever been made there to try those two important branches of industry. The third and fourth rate are like those offered in 1822 and 1826, with a larger proportion of overflow. The fractional townships are all overflowed lands.—(See general remarks.)

GENERAL REMARKS.

The foregoing tables show, that in 1822, 25 townships were offered for sale, containing 576,057.40 acres; of which, 34,500 are of 1st rate; 179,889 of 2d rate; 156,700 of 3d rate; and 204,968.40 acres of 4th rate. Of that quantity, 1,361.28 acres have been sold, to June 30, 1828; leaving a balance of 574,696.12 acres unsold, estimated at $264,199 67; making an average valuation of 48 cents per acre.

In 1826, 26 townships, or fractional townships, were offered for sale, containing 532,023.79 acres, of which 56,368.38 are 1st rate; 82,525 2d rate; 97,862 3d rate; 292,453.46 4th rate. Of that quantity, 19,323.03½ acres have been sold, to June 30, 1828, and 2,815 acres are taken up by private claims, (confirmed,) leaving a balance unsold of 509,885.75 acres, estimated at $186,511 31, making an average valuation of 36 cents per acre.

In June, 1828, 12 townships and 7 fractional townships were offered for sale; they contained 333,077.21 acres, of which 4,580 are 1st rate; 31,575 2d rate; 26,811 3d rate; and 341,925 are of fourth rate. Of that quantity 169.76 acres have been sold to June 30, 1828, and 28,181.28 acres are taken up by private claims, (confirmed,) leaving a balance of 304,726.10 acres unsold, valued at $67,049 64, making an average value of 23 cents per acre.

Thus all the lands offered for sale at Ouachita, (land district north of Red river,) amount to 1,441,158.40 acres, of which 95,448 are 1st rate; 283,992 of 2d rate; 282,373 of 3d rate; and 739,347.84 of 4th rate. Of that quantity, 20,853.79½ acres have been sold, and 30,996.28 acres are taken up by private claims, (confirmed,) leaving a balance of lands unsold, to this day, of 1,389,308 acres, valued at $517,760, making an average of 26 3–5 cents per acre.

This statement represents, as accurately as I could do it from the means within my reach, the quality of the lands remaining unsold. The quantity stated is correct, or nearly so, fractions of acres, &c., having often been omitted.

The quantity and quality of the lots fronting the Mississippi are correctly stated; but the sections in the back or depth not having been run, I had no data but from personal knowledge or information as to the quality. I calculated every section at 640 acres, which will bring the quantity near to positive truth.

The basis from which I have made the estimation of the lands, is as follows: I value the first rate at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre; second rate at 75 cents; third rate at 50 cents; fourth rate at 10 cents per acre. This is certainly the greatest price which could now be obtained for the whole, in the supposition that purchasers could be found. These, however, increase only pari passu with the population; and if the tide of emigration does not turn this way, several future generations will yet see the greatest part of those lands uncultivated.

I beg leave to observe that some of the lands classed 4th rate may be partially used as pasture ground, while the balance, being deeply inundated lands, is not worth the estimated value of 10 cents per acre; some of those overflowed tracts being, however, well situated for wood-yards, compensate for those of no value.

I have ascertained the quality of the lands from the field-notes annexed to the maps of the townships; although they only describe the lines run, yet, calculating by approximation from those field-notes, and aided by my own knowledge of the lands in several townships, I arrived at as correct a result as could be expected.

I calculated all the lands sold as being 1st rate; the private claims also, with a few exceptions.

I believe that there are no other private claims within the 70 townships offered for sale in this district than those stated. No other appear on the survey, and there is, (I think,) nothing in this land office to show that any exist.

Respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,

H. BRY, Receiver.

NEW ORLEANS, July 28, 1828.

The undersigned, register and receiver for the eastern district of Louisiana, in obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the United States, April 25, 1828, have the honor to report—

That they have no means of ascertaining the quantity of land remaining unsold in this district on June 30, 1828, no return of the public lands having been made by the surveyor of the United States. The quality of the public land in this district is, in the general, first rate; but nearly all of it is liable to annual inundation, and consequently is of little value; for the expense of reclaiming those lands, or of preventing the water of the Mississippi from overflowing them, it is believed, would exceed their intrinsic value.

The undersigned are of opinion that there is but little, if any, land in this district "subject to be given away, or otherwise disposed of, by foreign sovereigns before it came under the dominion of the United States."

Having stated that nearly all the public land is liable to inundation, it follows that it is nearly all unfit for cultivation; and unless the river, or at least the numerous bayous on which these lands lie, be leveed or dyked, so as to prevent the overflowing of them, it is not believed they will command the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

When, however, the public lands in this district shall be ascertained by actual survey, it may be found that a portion of them will form an exception to the description given above.

All which is respectfully submitted.

LAND OFFICE, St. Helena, October 10, 1828.

SIR: We have the honor to transmit to you our report, in obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the 25th of April last; but regret to say we are not able to make such a report as the resolution requires, as no lands in this district have ever been offered for sale, or any money paid over for any pre-emption claims. It will not be possible to say what is the probable value per acre, as only fifty-five townships have as yet been returned to this office, a very small portion of which appears to be vacant, and that mostly fractions between the donation claims; but we are able to say that a large portion of the vacant lands in this district are very poor pine woodlands, which would not sell, as we believe, for twenty-five cents per acre; but the land on the margin of Casa Maurepas to the High Pine Woods, which is chiefly covered with cane and brush between the rivers Amité and Tickfau, and in which body is contained, perhaps, five or six townships—some of which land, in all probability, will sell for the price required by law, and some few sections for double the amount. But in the above-described district of country there is a great portion that is not arable, lying too low for cultivation unless ditched; and that part of the district is covered by large Spanish grants, which, although they have been rejected by Congress, would form an objection on the part of the purchaser. No part of the above-described lands was settled under the British or Spanish governments, except so much thereof as lies immediately on the east margin of the river Amité; and the settlements formed there being small, the part of the country lying east of that, through which there are no roads, is little known.

We now close our remarks, not being able to give further information until we are furnished with connecting plans of survey of the whole district.

With great respect, we have the honor to be your obedient servants,

P. S.—Large bodies of land are held in this district under complete titles, which are now offered at Congress price, but do not appear to be quick sale.

SIR: We have the honor to transmit you herewith our report, required by a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed April 25, 1828. It is as accurate as the data from which it is formed would enable us to make it. We have had to make calculations and estimates from one hundred and eighty maps of townships, and fractional townships, in which the area of all claims confirmed under complete titles were not given. We hope that it will afford all the information desired, and be thought worthy of some compensation for the labor it has occasioned us.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

Hon. GEORGE GRAHAM, Commissioner of General Land Office.

To the Commissioner of the General Land Office:

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed April 25, 1828, requiring the registers and receivers of the several land offices "to make a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, (in time to be by him laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next stated session of Congress,) upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on June 30, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of $1 25 cents per acre, so as to show how many acres remain so unsold, what proportion (as nearly as can be estimated) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole, per acre; with such remarks upon the character of said unsold lands, and the length of time they may have been in market under the laws of the United States, or subject to be given away, or otherwise disposed of, by foreign sovereigns before they came under the dominion of the United States, as may be necessary to give the Senate a just conception of their present actual value," we have the honor respectfully to report that the land district west of Pearl river was established by an act of Congress, March 3, 1803, and comprised a territory that had passed successively under the dominion of the French, British, and Spanish governments; at least each had exercised the right of sovereignty over it. From the establishment of a post by the French at "the Natchez," in the year 1722, to the year 1763, when France ceded her possessions in America to the British and Spanish governments, there does not appear to have been created any individual interests in the soil, at least none are known to have been recognized by the succeeding governments, the pursuits of the French inhabitants being rather of a commercial character, and confined chiefly to a traffic with the natives. From the year 1764, (the year succeeding that in which they had acquired a right to the country,) when the jurisdiction of the British governors of West Florida was extended as far north as the mouth of the Yazoo river, (the northern extremity of this district,) to the year 1783, numerous and extensive British grants were made in that part of the district bordering upon the Mississippi river and tributaries, and lying west of a line of demarcation established by the British authorities, between the settlements in the Natchez district and the Choctaw Indians, which extends in a southerly direction from a point near the mouth of the Yazoo river to the 31° of north latitude, embracing about two-thirds of the district, and nearly all the valuable land in it.

Spain having, about the year 1779 or 1780, seized upon the British possessions in Louisiana and Florida, the Spanish authorities exercising a jurisdiction over the territory embraced in this district regranted the lands in that portion of it which had been previously disposed of by the British government of West Florida, recognizing and confirming in but few instances those grants, until, by the treaty of San Lorenzo, of 1795, the 31st degree of north latitude was recognized as the southern boundary of the United States, as it had been previously established by the treaty of peace of 1783. In addition to these claims, provided for by the articles of agreement and cession between the United States and the State of Georgia, actual settlers at the time the country was evacuated by the Spanish troops, in the year 1797, received a donation from the American government. These several descriptions of claims alluded to were adjudicated by a board of commissioners created for the purpose, and confirmations were made by that tribunal and by Congress to the amount of 545,480 acres; leaving, together with the lands subsequently acquired by treaty with the Choctaw Indians, concluded at Mount Dexter in 1808, 2,867,240 acres, (exclusive of lands reserved for schools,) subject to the disposal of the Congress of the United States; the whole of which has been offered at public sale, at the periods and in the quantities represented in the table marked A, subjoined to this report, and of which 988,110 acres have been sold. The proportion of the private confirmed claims of lands subject to sale originally, of lands sold, and those remaining vacant, is exhibited in the table marked B, from which it will be seen that not one-third of the vacant land in the district has yet been disposed of.

Estimating the value of the second and third rate land at one dollar, and the pine barren and inundated at five cents per acre, we arrive at the mean or average value of forty cents; which we have adopted, as stated in the table marked C.

We have added another table which, we believe, furnishes a synopsis of all the information desired by the resolution of the Senate. In that, the period during which a portion of the lands in the district were "subject to be given away or otherwise disposed of," is stated at thirty-three years; which goes back to the date at which the British government first exercised a jurisdiction over it. But if it should be thought proper to reckon from the first settlement by the French, seventy-five years will be the period required. The greater portion of the lands now vacant is situated in the eastern part of the district, where pine is almost the exclusive growth; and although the soil may not be absolutely unfit for cultivation, it is certainly of little value. The value of the inundated lands is confined to the timber; that, however, is yet too abundant, and the local situation of such lands is not such as to render them unsalable.

Some of them, perhaps, might be reclaimed, but a donation of them would not be a sufficient inducement to attempt it.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

LAND OFFICE, Choctaw District, Mount Salus, Mississippi, August 18, 1828.

SIR: In pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of the United States, adopted on the 25th of April, 1828, and transmitted with your letter of the 29th of the same month, the register and receiver report: That on counting the number of townships and fractional townships which have "been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre," we find that the whole may amount to 155 townships, equal to 3,571,200 acres.

The public sales commenced in March, 1823, and have continued at the rate of one or two public sales each year, for the term of five years and three months, to the 30th June, 1828.

The quantity sold in that time is 340,422 acres, being something less than one-tenth of all the land of the district which has been offered for sale.

The quantity remaining unsold, of that which has been offered, is 3,230,778 acres. Of this quantity we estimate 1,000,000 acres as being low land, the greater part of which is subject to inundation, and therefore not salable at present. The quantity of first rate land of the district is small, and too much scattered in small bodies to be estimated. The greater part of the salable land is of middling quality of high land.

Perhaps one-half of all the high land may be considered as being too broken or too poor to be salable at the present price of $1 25 per acre. A very small proportion of that part of the district which lies between Yazoo and Mississippi rivers has been offered for sale; that part of the district contains some very valuable land. Knowing that some tracts of poor land, which were not thought to be salable a few years ago, have been purchased and found to be of a better quality than was expected, and that parts of what is called swamp may be cultivated without much expense, we feel not prepared to state any exact quantity which can never be cultivated. We hope the foregoing remarks will prove to be sufficient and satisfactory to the Senate. We are of opinion that the average value of the whole may be rated from 25 to 30 cents per acre.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, passed on the 25th April last, and in obedience to your request of 29th of same month, we have the honor herewith to transmit a report, believing it to be a fulfilment of the resolution, so far as it is practicable for us.

LAND OFFICE, Augusta, District of Jackson Court-house, Miss., September 20, 1828.

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States, of April 25, 1828, requesting "that the President of the United States should cause the registers and receivers of the respective land offices in the different States and Territories to be directed to make a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office (in time to be by him laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next stated session of Congress) upon the quantity and quality of the land remaining unsold in their respective districts on the 30th day of June, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, so as to show how many acres remain so unsold, what proportion thereof (as nearly as can be estimated) consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, and what is the probable average value of the whole per acre, with such remarks upon the character of said unsold lands, and the length of time they may have been in market under the laws of the United States, or subject to be given away or otherwise disposed of by foreign sovereigns before they came under the dominion of the United States, as may be necessary to give the Senate a just conception of their present actual value," the register and receiver of the land office at Agusta, Jackson Court-house, Mississippi, respectfully submit to the Commissioner of the General Land Office the following report, viz:

Average value of the unsold land, 5 cents per acre.
Time since the land has been in market, 15 or 18 years.

To the above quantity of unsold land may be added the lands relinquished under the several relief laws, the returns of which have not been made to this office to a sufficient extent to furnish us with any data from which to calculate the quantity; but as much of this land was entered under the credit system, it is a resonable presumption that, of the land heretofore sold, a large proportion of it has and will be relinquished. We would remark that the land set down as unfit for cultivation is very poor, growth pine, and can never be of any value except it be for naval stores or pine lumber.

The land lying south of the 31st degree of north latitude, in the State of Mississippi, is supposed to contain about the quantity we have set down; the returns have not been made to this office to a sufficient extent to ascertain the precise quantity. This portion of country has been subject to be given away by France, Britain, and Spain, while those countries, respectively, held possession of it for the period of more than one hundred years. It was obtained from France by the treaty of 1803, being considered a part of Louisiana, consequently included in the treaty above alluded to. The United States did not take actual possession of this part of the cession until April 15, 1813; since which time, owing to a complication of circumstances, it has not been brought into market under the laws of the United States. The land bordering on the Pascagoula river is rich cane land, subject to be overflowed by high winter freshets, which often remain on it until May or June, but may be said to be above the ordinary summer swells of the river. That adjoining the sea-coast offers to the agriculturist more flattering prospects. It has been discovered from recent experiments that it is well adapted to the growth of sea-island cotton and sugar-cane; and from the healthfulness of this coast, and its contiguity to the market of the great emporium of the west, we are led to the belief that the time is not distant when those advantages will be properly estimated. A large proportion, however, of this tract of country is poor pine woods, unfit for cultivation.

What we have said in relation to the lands unfit for cultivation north of the 31st degree of north latitude is also applicable to this; and with the exception of that portion of it lying adjacent to the villages, a very small proportion will command any price whatever.

The above is respectfully submitted.

LAND OFFICE, Huntsville, Alabama, October 4, 1828.

SIR: In conformity with a resolution of the Senate of the 25th April last, "directing a report to be made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of the quantity and quality of the lands remaining unsold on the 30th June, 1828, after having been offered at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre," we beg leave to state that the maps of this office exhibit the quantity unsold in this district on the 30th June, 1828, of 3,322,984 acres.

From general inquiry, and length of time those lands have been subject to entry, we presume there is a very inconsiderable part, if any, that may be termed first rate; and from the general face of the country as described in the field notes, we should estimate the greatest proportion of it as mountainous and unfit for cultivation.

Of the above quantity unsold about 49,300 acres have been in market since 1809; 2,394,484 acres since 1818 and 1819; and 879,200 acres since 1820, and 1821.

If not irrelevant to the subject, we can state, from information, that the reverted lands, (where one-twentieth deposit has been paid,) particularly those bordering on the Tennessee river, are viewed, one-third, at least, to be of first and second rate, the remainder unfit for cultivation.

LAND OFFICE, Cahaba, July 8, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with the direction contained in your letter of 29th of April last, I transmit a report, in conformity with a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed on the 15th day of that month.

I am, sir, with much respect, your obedient servant,

LAND OFFICE, Cahaba, July 8, 1828.

In conformity with a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed April 15, 1828, the register of the land office at Cahaba, Alabama, reports, that his land district embraces sixteen ranges, each containing seventeen townships of six miles square, or 6,266,880 acres. Of this there have been offered for sale, at various times, one hundred and fifty-nine townships, of 23,040 acres each; making the whole quantity offered for sale, about 3,663,360 acres, as follows:

31	townships, or	714,240	acres, were	offered in	August, 1817.
30	do.	691,200	do.	do.	October, 1818.
10	do.	230,400	do.	do.	January, 1819.
23	do.	529,920	do.	do.	March, 1819.
13	do.	299,520	do.	do.	May, 1819.
25	do.	576,000	do.	do.	August, 1819.
27	do.	622,080	do.	do.	January, 1820.
159	do.	3,663,360	do.

Of the above quantity which was offered there was sold about 1,843,381 acres, from which 637,223 acres (that were subsequently relinquished to the United States under the provisions of the several relief laws) should be deducted; but as there was about 39,040 acres of the relinquished lands sold again under the cash system, there will be 2,418,162 acres remaining unsold on June 30, 1818, after having been offered for sale at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, with the exception of that part relinquished, which has not since been offered for sale. What proportion thereof consists of first rate land, what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation, or what the probable average value of the whole is per acre, the register has no means of judging. Of the relinquished lands, however, it may be presumed that as those which had been sold for the highest prices were pretty generally surrendered to the United States, they were as generally of the best quality. It will be seen by reference to the dates of the several sales the length of time they have been in market under the laws of the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Cahaba, July 31, 1828.

SIR: Herewith you have my monthly return for July, accompanied with vouchers for all the moneys I paid out; also an account current with the United States, showing the amount in hand subject to treasury draft.

I now state to you it is entirely out of my power to make a report to you, agreeably to a resolution of the Senate of the United States passed on the 25th of April last. The former receivers in this office have never had their books brought up; therefore it is impossible for me to make out any report from those books; and if I were to make out a report from the register's books, it would be the same as his own report. I have been told the former receivers have generally made out their returns by the register's book; but I can assure you, sir, I will always make my returns by my own books, and keep them up every month, or quarterly at furthest. In my first return I charged my commissions on all moneys received. In my last return I have only charged my commissions on the moneys I have paid out. You will advise me which is the correct way to make them out.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. G. MITCHELL.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

G No. 3.

LAND OFFICE, Tuscaloosa, September 24, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States passed on the 25th of April last, we have the honor to report: That on June 30, 1828, there remained unsold in this district three million one hundred and forty-nine thousand three hundred and six acres of land, after having been offered at the minimum price of $1 25 cents per acre; of which 334,622	acres	have been in the market since	July, 1821.

361,870	do.	do.	August, 1821.
458,847	do.	do.	September, 1821.
398,517	do.	do.	October, 1821.
476,941	do.	do.	November, 1821.
380,281	do.	do.	December, 1821.
151,977	do.	do.	January, 1825.
294,411	do.	do.	January, 1826.

277,200 offered at Huntsville before the establishment of this district.

14,640 offered at Cahaba before the establishment of this district.

As the greatest quantity of this land has been in the market since 1821, we are induced to believe there is no part of it would come under the head of first quality, and that there is not exceeding ten thousand acres fit for cultivation. This region of country is generally barren and mountainous, and we are of opinion the average value of the whole would be fairly estimated at five cents per acre.

We are, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servants,

WM. G. PARISH, Receiver.
WM. P. GOULD, Register.

SPARTA, November 7, 1828.

SIR: My report in conformity to the resolution of the Senate of the United States passed April 25 of the present year is herewith submitted to you.

I have endeavored to be as accurate as the nature of the case would admit in calculating the total amount of land unsold, as likewise the quality of those lands in this district; and to this end I have been governed principally by the maps and books in the office, and the representations of individuals residing in different parts of the district.

In this report I believe I have embraced whatever it was my duty to notice, and which, I trust, will be satisfactory to you.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

WADE H. GREENING.

						2,502,735.75	687,371.56

There appears from the abstract here exhibited two million five hundred and two thousand seven hundred and thirty-five and seventy-five hundredths (2,502,735.75) acres of land remaining unsold in this land district on the 30th of June, 1828, of which six hundred and eighty-seven thousand three hundred and seventy-one and fifty-six hundredths (687,371.56) acres are estimated to be worth the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; which, deducted from the whole number of acres, viz: 2,502,735.75, would leave a balance of one million eight hundred and fifteen thousand, three hundred and sixty-four and and thrty-nine hundredths 1,815,364.39) acres of land unfit for cultivation, and of no value, except for the timber. This large proportion of land, of an inferior quality, would reduce the average price to something about forty cents per acre; which, upon the whole, is near what I should judge as the average value of the whole per acre. These lands were offered for sale by the President in the years 1823, 1825, and 1827, except a small part that have been in market ever since the establishment of this district.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. GREENING.

LAND OFFICE, Detroit, August 30, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with your letter of the 29th of April last, and the accompanying resolution of the Senate of the 25th of the same month, we have the honor to state that there has been offered for sale within the present limits of this district about 3,500,000 acres; of this quantity 337,073.66 are sold, leaving about 3,162,926.34 acres unsold. In regard to the proportion which the quantities of the different qualities of soil bears to the whole, we could offer nothing but vague conjecture. It possesses, probably, less of what would be considered first rate land than would be found generally in tracts of similar extent in the country northwest of the Ohio river. Few districts, on the other hand, of the same magnitude, present so little that is unfit for cultivation. There is no part of the district which is either hilly or rocky; nor are there, to our knowledge, any extensive marshes. There are, throughout the tract, numerous "tamarack swamps;" but owing to the facility with which these are drained, and their value afterwards as grass lands, we do not know that they can be considered as diminishing the aggregate value of the lands. The only tracts which can properly be called refuse are small ones, occasionally occuring where the soil is too sandy to be productive. But we are unable to give even a conjectural estimate of the quantity or proportion of this description of soil.

The public lands in this district were first offered for sale by the United States governnent in July, 1818. To the quantity then put into market additions have been made from time to time.

This territory, as is well known, came under the jurisdiction of the United States in the year 1796. The few legal titles which existed previously appear to have been grants made by the French or British authorities. Upon what principle these grants were made we are not able to say, nor how far the conditions of the grants, which appear to have been held under a species of feudal tenure, would warrant the assumption that the lands were subject to be given away.

We have the honor to be your obedient servants,

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the United States of April 25, 1828, a copy of which was forwarded by you to this office on April 29, 1828, we herewith enclose an estimate of the public lands, as required by the resolution.

Respectfully, we have the honor to be your most obedient servants,

H. BOSWELL, Register.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner, &c.

Statement made by the register and receiver of the land office at Batesville, in the Territory of Arkansas, pursuant to a resolution passed April 25, 1828, in the Senate of the United States, relating to the quantity and quality of the public lands remaining unsold June 30, 1828.

	Acres.
The balance of 2,683,671 acres remains yet unsold on June 30, 1828, after being offered for sale.
Of the above balance it is supposed that there is one-fiftieth part considered first rate land	53,633
Of the remaining quantity it is supposed that there is one-fittieth part considered second rate land,.....	52,600
Of the remainder it is supposed that there is one fiftieth part considered third rate land..	51,548
The balance supposed to be totally worthless, and can never be sold at any price whatever...	2,525,890
	2,683,671
The quantity of first rate land will probably sell for one dollar per acre, say 53,633 acres, at $1 per acre.....	$53,633
The quantity of second rate land will probably sell for fifty cents per acre, say 52,600 acres, at 50 cents per acre.....	26,300
The quantity of third rate land will probably sell for twenty-five cents per acre, say 51,548 acres, at 25 cents per acre.....	12,887
Whole amount supposed to be received for the quantity of land unsold on June 30, 1828....	92,820

Supposing, therefore, that the whole number of acres contained in the first, second, and third rate lands, which is 157,781 acres, will sell for $92,820, the average amount per acre of the whole remaining unsold June 30, 1828, being 2,683,671 acres, will be at the rate of near three and a half cents per acre.

The lands in this district have been offered for sale, first, in July, 1822, and at different periods subsequently thereto; and the average length of time it is supposed the lands have remained unsold is about four years.

It is proper to remark, however, that in the above estimate the school lands allotted by Congress, and the locations made by virtue of the 11th section of a law passed May 26, 1824, entitled "An act enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," are included in the estimate.

This report exhibits what lands have been exposed to public sale and at what time; the quantity sold at private and public sale; as well as the quantity still subject to entry on the 30th day of June last.

We are unable to say, with anything near precision, what proportion the quantity of first rate land in that part of our district which has been offered at public sale bears to the quantity still unsold, but would say, in general terms, it was small. We are, moreover, decidedly of opinion that the quantity unfit for cultivation in the same region of country is greater than the quantity of second and third rate land which ranks as cultivable.

We are not prepared to give an opinion as to the probable average value of the whole; anything we might hazard in that way would be sheer conjecture.

LAND OFFICE, Tallahassee, November 3, 1828.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate, passed on the 25th day of April, 1828, we have the honor to submit the following report on the quantity and quality of the land unsold in this district, on the 30th day of June, 1828, in the townships which have been exposed for sale at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre.

From an examination of the records of this office, we find, on the 30th day of June last, there were remaining unsold, within the townships above described, one million five hundred and seventy-one thousand eight hundred and ten acres of land.

With regard to the quality of this land, we believe there are no entire tracts which can be considered as first rate, and from the manner in which this country is interspersed with rich and poor land, it is extremely difficult to form a correct estimate of the quantity of either quality. It sometimes occurs that from five to thirty acres of first rate land may be found on an 8th of a section, while the balance of the tract is of no value whatever. But it is much more usual to find the whole tract entirely valueless, except on account of pasturage and timber. We believe, from the best information we have been enabled to acquire on the subject, the whole number of acres of first rate land remaining unsold, within the townships which have been offered for sale at the minimum price, will not exceed ten thousand acres.

The quantity of land unsold within the townships above described, which is entirely unfit for cultivation, we estimate at one million of acres; though we have no certain or definite data from which this calculation is made, as the field notes of the surveyors give but a very imperfect description of the country, and we have been compelled to rely on our own observations and that of others who have examined the difficult sections of country.

The average value of the lands remaining unsold in this district, after having been exposed to sale at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, we estimate at ten cents per acre; most of the lands remaining unsold consist of pine barren, which, in general, is remarkably poor; but where it is adjoining to the rich lands which have been purchased, it will be entered at $1 25 per acre, on account of the timber, though the soil is of no value whatever until improved by manure.

Two hundred and twenty-two thousand one hundred and sixty acres of this land have been in market since the 16th day of May, 1825.

Fifty thousand six hundred and ninety-one acres have been in market since January 15, 1827; eight hundred and eighty thousand one hundred and nine acres have been in market since May 23, 1827; and one hundred and ninety thousand eight hundred and forty acres have been in market since January 15, 1828.

We have the honor to be, &c., your obedient servants,

R. K. CALL.
G. W. WARD.

Letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with a report from the Register and Receiver of the Land Office at St. Augustine, in Florida, made in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate, of April 25, 1828.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 11, 1828.

SIR: I have the honor to communicate to the Senate a report from the land officers at St. Augustine, in the Territory of Florida, made in pursuance of the resolution of the Senate, passed on April 25, 1828, which has been received since my communication of the 9th instant, under that resolution.

With great respect,

GEO. GRAHAM, Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT of the Senate of the United States.

K No. 2.

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA, November 20, 1828.

SIR: in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate, passed April 25, 1828, we beg leave to present you with the annexed report.

It will be seen that 392,731 acres have been offered for sale at this office, to wit, on the second Monday in May last, but eighty of which have been purchased.

It is impossible to say "what proportion thereof consists of first rate land." We have no means by which to ascertain the proportion but by reference to the field notes furnished us by the surveyor of Florida; and as these merely mention the quality of the land on which the several lines meet at a corner, the information is too scanty to base an opinion on. We presume, however, that 5,000 acres would be a large estimate of first rate land. The good lands in Florida, on the east of the Suwannee, are in small parcels of swamp and hammock, and at great, though irregular distances apart. We allude now to that portion of land which has been surveyed and offered for sale, notoriously the poorest section of the country. On the second point, to wit, "what proportion consists of land unfit for cultivation," we are equally uniformed. The most of the field notes designate the land over which they run as second rate pine; except in a few sandy regions of no great extent, the lands, though poor, are not unfit for cultivation. We should not suppose, from the best information we have been able to procure, that more than 5,000 acres, under the above qualification, were unfit for cultivation. The lands to which we allude were always subject to be given away by the British or Spanish governments, whilst in their possession, unless covered by an Indian settlement, which we believe to have been the fact. And whether so covered or not, it would have been extremely hazardous, during the Spanish rule, to any bold adventurer who might settle on lands so remote from this city. We are disposed to think that the average value of the lands offered by us for sale in May last cannot exceed 50 cents per acre. The remarks above comprehend all the information of which we are possessed. There are, doubtless, in the wide range of country embraced, many valuable tracts, totally unknown to the white man. When these are discovered, they will be purchased and settled. The country is filling up; and when the disputed claims of private individuals are finally adjusted, it is more than probable that an increased population will add energy to the examination of public lands, and lay open to the industrious planter many rich farms now unknown to the oldest settler.

With these remarks we beg leave to submit this report.

CORRECTION OF AN ERROR IN THE RELINQUISHMENT OF A QUARTER SECTION OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 15, 1828.

Mr. JENNINGS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Elijah Carr, reported:

That on the 19th of September, 1818, Elisha Carr purchased the NE. quarter of section 3, in township 2 north, of range 2 east, and the SE. quarter of section 34, in township 3 north, of range 2 east, in the district of Jeffersonville. That, on the 18th of September, 1821, the said Elisha Carr, the original purchaser, relinquished the first-mentioned quarter section of land, and, under authority of law, applied the money paid thereon to the payment of the latter.

That notwithstanding the relinquishment aforesaid, the petitioner and assignee, until within a year past, did not discover that the intention was to have relinquished the latter instead of the first described quarter section of land. That the assignee is now resident on the relinquished quarter section, and has made improvements thereon, greater in amount than the value of the entire original purchase; and that the quarter section so relinquished has been subject to private entry, and on the 31st of October last remained unsold.

The committee, therefore, consider the petitioner entitled to relief, and for that purpose report a bill.

PLAN FOR THE DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATEE TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 16, 1828.

To the Honorable the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in general assembly convened, with respect represents: That before the admission of the State of Louisiana into the Union, the representatives of the people of the Territory of Orleans, in convention assembled, relinquished to the United States, in the name of said people, all rights or title to the waste or unappropriated lands lying within the limits of the said Territory. Without contesting the validity of that act of the convention, your memorialists are satisfied that, under the stipulations of the treaty between France and the United States, by which Louisiana was ceded to them, the sovereignty over those lands could not have been, and was not vested in the general government for a longer time than was necessary to effect the sale of such part of them as could be sold. Fifteen years have since elapsed, and more than one half of those lands have not yet been surveyed.

Owing to the peculiar situation of Louisiana, this delay of bringing into market the lands that might have been disposed of has subjected its inhabitants to great losses and inconveniences. In order to protect their own plantations from inundation, they have had to raise and keep in repair embankments in front of the public lands that lie on the margins of water-courses; to procure the necessary intercourse between the different parts of the State, and to communicate with their home markets, they have been obliged to build bridges and open public roads on those lands, and more than one half of the whole male population of Louisiana, from sixteen to forty-five years have, for the last ten years, and at this time do work at least five days in the year to the making and repairing of those roads, bridges, and embankments on the public lands alone. Emigration which, by increasing our numbers, would have diminished that vexatious tax, has been checked by the course of policy which the general government has pursued; and those whom necessity has compelled to settle on the public lands, hold under too frail a tenure to consider themselves as permanent residents, or to lend a willing hand to the erection of public works.

Congress, by granting time after time rights of pre-emption to bona fide persons settled on the public lands, have raised in those who now stand in that situation expectations which they will find it their interest to realize. The settlers of Louisiana at this time have stronger claims to that favor than any of those on whom it has been bestowed by former laws: most of them have been driven from the settlements they had made in the Territory of Arkansas, and to which they expected to obtain titles, in compliance with the treaties by which the lands they occupied were given to various tribes of Indians.

Your honorable body, on account of the losses and hardships these settlers have sustained, might perhaps deem it just to diminish the price of the lands, or to grant a delay for the payment of it; the difficulty experienced in selling the lands that have been brought into market shows, perhaps sufficiently, that the present prices are too high.

A large extent of country within the limits of our State is covered by inchoate Spanish titles. The grants to Bastrop and to Maison Rouge, all those issued within the jurisdiction of Nacogdoches for lands situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine, and all others in the same situation west of the Mississippi, ought to be finally adjusted, or at least placed in a situation in which their validity might be adjudicated upon by courts of justice.

In the other States, where public lands have been sold, your honorable body has given to them the proceeds of one section in every township, for the advancement of public education, besides other grants they have made to literary institutions. Public lands have been sold in Louisiana, and this State has not so far participated in that liberality.

Your honorable body must be convinced by the information they have at various times received from their registers and surveyors, that the proceeds of the land which remain unsurveyed in this State will never pay the expenses of the survey; the saleable lands lie almost exclusively on the margins of water-courses, the high lands between those water-courses are, with a few exceptions, equally unfit for cultivation and for grazing. Using the base lines already run in every part of the State, and the partial surveys that have been made, your memorialists are of opinion that lines of demarcation might easily be drawn between the lands that are saleable and those that are not. This might be done by the United States surveyors, under the inspection of commissioners appointed for that purpose by the general government; and those lines once ascertained, a proper sense of the justice of your honorable body induces your memorialists to believe that you would, without hesitation, relinquish, in favor of the State of Louisiana, so much of those lands as would be unfit to the use for which alone they had been placed in the hands of your predecessors.

Our increasing prosperity, the distance between our different settlements, caused by the uncultivated lands that separate them, and the difficulties experienced in the navigation of all our rivers except the Mississippi, require many works of internal improvement to be made. The State of Louisiana, not the last in war, will not be the last in peace to raise those monuments of public utility; but to be enabled to do so, we must be the masters of the soil through which our roads and canals are to pass.

The premises considered, your memorialists would recommend that rights of pre-emption may be given to actual settlers.

That the present price of public lands may be reduced, or a delay given for the payment of it.

That the Spanish grants, above referred to, may finally be adjusted, or referred to courts of justice.

That out of the public lands that have, or may hereafter be sold within our limits, the proceeds of one section for every township may be given to the State of Louisiana for the promotion of public education, and that grants, similar to those made in other States, may be made to literary institutions.

That commissioners may be appointed who, with the United States surveyors, shall be instructed to ascertain the lines of demarcation between the lands that are saleable and those that are not within our limits.

That when this is ascertained, the lands adjudged to be unsaleable may be given to the State of Louisiana, on its paying to the United States the actual expenses incurred in ascertaining and running those lines.

That the remaining lands may be brought into market as soon as practicable, and if not sold when offered, that they may be entered at the different land offices, on payment of such reduced prices as will ensure a speedy disposal of them.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your memorialists.

OCT. LA BRANCE, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
AD. BEAUVAIS, President of the Senate.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 688. [2D SESSION.

REFUSAL TO PURCHASE A RESERVATION MADE TO AN INDIVIDUAL IN AN INDIAN TREATY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 16, 1828.

Mr. McDUFFIE, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislative Council of the Territory of Arkansas, urging upon Congress the private claim of James Scull, reported:

That they believe there is no one of the rules that have been established, in relation to private claims, founded on more obvious grounds of policy than that which forbids Congress to act upon any private claim without an application in writing, signed by the petitioner or his authorized agent. However much, therefore, they feel disposed to show deference to the memorial of the Legislative Council of Arkansas, they cannot consider it as dispensing with the necessity of a formal application, by the individual in whose behalf the interposition of Congress is solicited.

This remark is the more peculiarly applicable to the present case, because, if Congress were to grant the application, it could only be upon the supposition that the claimant had made an election, of which there is no sufficient evidence before the committee.

But the committee are of the opinion that it would be inexpedient to grant the appropriation solicited, even if there were no informality in the application.

The United States, in the treaty with the Quapaw Indians, stipulated to grant to James Scull a reservation of 1280 acres of land, in discharge of a debt due to the said Scull by the said tribe of Indians, or to discharge the debt in some other mode. It does not appear that the reservation of land was inadequate to the payment of the debt; on the contrary, Scull himself alleges that it is worth more than the sum due him. It does not appear that he declined accepting the land; but, from aught that appears to the committee, he may now be in possession of it. As the treaty with the Indians absolved them from the debt, it is certainly incumbent on the government to take care that, in making a commutation by its sovereign authority, no injustice be done to the individuals whose rights are subjected to the stipulations of that treaty.

As there is no reason, however, for believing that such injustice has been done, the question presented to Congress is not one of good faith, but of expediency, merely. Is it for the interest of the United States to purchase lands from individuals in the very region where they have millions of acres for sale? As a general rule, the committee think it would be unwise to purchase of individuals at any price; and they can see no reason why the government should, in the present instance, give six dollars an acre for land, of which they know nothing, when it is notorious that the average sales of the public lands do not produce two dollars per acre.

They recommend that the application contained in the memorial be not granted.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS TO CERTAIN PERSONS IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1828.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, being instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting the right of pre-emption to those persons in Florida whose improvements were sold in 1825, and those included in the lands ceded to the Indians, and who would have been entitled to a pre-emption if the sale and cession had not been made before the passage of the pre-emption law of 1826, reported:

That by the act of April 22, 1826, the right of pre-emption to a quarter section of land was given to heads of families, or persons over the age of twenty-one years, who on or before the 1st day of January, 1825, had actually inhabited and cultivated a tract of land in Florida, and had not removed therefrom, of which settlement proof was required to be made to the register and receiver of the land offices. But in May, 1825, and before the passage of the pre-emption law, a part of the public lands in Florida was sold by the United States; and it appears, by a certificate of the register and receiver at Tallahassee, that eight persons had made settlements on the lands which were sold who, under said pre-emption law, had the sale not been made, would have been entitled to a pre-emption in the land they occupied. These persons, in the opinion of the committee, were equally entitled to the favor of the government, on account of these early settlements, with those who did not happen to live on the lands which had been sold before the privilege of pre-emption was recognized; and, as the best amends which can now be made for the loss of their improvements and the lands they had selected, they ought to be allowed the privilege of entering an equal quantity of land, at the government price, elsewhere.

The testimony on the other branch of the resolution shows that two persons, namely, Ellis Wood and Mary Dawes, were actually settlers, and would have been entitled to a pre-emption but that the land on which they lived had been reserved to an Indian chief, by the treaty of September 18, 1823; that by the act of February 2, 1827, section 15, the right of pre-emption elsewhere is given to three persons who had made settlements on lands reserved to Indian chiefs by the same treaty, and the committee see no reason why these two persons should not have the same relief, and report a bill for that purpose.

GRANTED LANDS TO ALABAMA FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF CERTAIN RIVERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 22, 1828.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, who was instructed "to inquire into the expediency of adopting some legislative enactment calculated to give effect to the act 'to grant certain relinquished and unappropriated lands to the State of Alabama for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Tennessee, Coosa, Cahaba, and Black Warrior rivers,' and in such manner as may give to the State authorities the right to make the selection within the counties specified, or grant to the State in addition the remnant of relinquished and unimproved lands within said counties, not exceeding 97,129 acres, for the purposes mentioned in said act," reported:

That by the act of May 22, 1828, chapter 75, 400,000 acres of the relinquished lands in the counties of Madison, Morgan, Limestone, Laurence, Franklin, and Lauderdale, in Alabama, were granted to that State, to be applied to the improvement of the navigation of the Muscle shoals and Colbert shoals, in the Tennessee river, and such other parts of that river as the legislature of Alabama should direct within the State; after the completion of which the surplus, if any, should be applied to the improvement of the navigation of the other principal rivers in the State mentioned in the act; and for that purpose to the State of Alabama was delegated the power to sell, dispose of, and grant the land, at a price not less than the United States minimum price at the time; and if there should not be that quantity of relinquished land in the counties mentioned in the act, the deficiency should be made up out of the unappropriated lands in Jackson county. The committee are informed by a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated on the 14th instant, which they refer to and make part of this report, that the counties named in the act contain 497,219 acres of relinquished lands, and that nearly the quantity stated in the grant could be completed, exclusive of the county of Lauderdale, in which there is 97,601 acres, and that in carrying the act into effect the Executive of the United States had directed, in substance, that all the relinquished land in the counties of Madison, Morgan, Limestone, Laurence, and Franklin should be applied to the satisfaction of the grant, reserving therefrom all the relinquished lands in the county of Lauderdale. That this designation has not been acceptable to the State of Alabama, which claims the right of selecting from the relinquished lands in those counties as they may think proper. It is apparent that the grant would be of much greater value if the 400,000 acres were selected out of the whole quantity in all of those counties, leaving for the surplus the lands of inferior quality, than it would if the lands were taken good and bad together, so far as necessary to go in making up the quantity, and the overplus in like manner reserved. The law does not prescribe in terms how or by whom the selection should be made. It grants to Alabama so much land of a particular description within the limits of certain counties, and empowers her to sell, grant, and apply the same to given purposes. Whether, after the grant has been made, the "donor has the right to point out the thing given," as assumed by the Executive of the United States, or whether the grant should be construed most strongly in favor of the grantee, and against the grantor, or any other rule of construction, as contended for by Alabama, should be applied to the adjustment of this matter, it is, perhaps, not necessary that the committee should express any opinion in arriving at what they consider the best conclusion. As neither mode would appear to be free from inconvenience in practice, so neither, in principle, may be wholly free from exception. If the United States and Alabama have now a joint interest in the whole quantity of relinquished lands within the limits of those counties, differing only in amount upon the principle applicable to private rights, neither exclusively would have the privilege of making partition and division.

But the great improvements of a national kind designed to be made in the State by a judicious application of the lands granted, and the best way to attain those ends by the means at command, are probably the safer grounds for the discretion of the legislature. To make the selection in the mode contended for by Alabama would leave a surplus of inferior lands, distributed through a large district of country, not likely in many years to bring the government price, and to exempt all the lands in one of the counties on the Tennessee river surrounded by the others from the regulations necessary to be made for the lands disposed of by the State, and to make sale of them in a different manner and on different terms would most likely produce the dissatisfaction anticipated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office among the people where the lands are disposed of upon the least advantageous terms to themselves, who would, doubtless, find arguments to convince, at least those interested, that the rule of selection was both arbitrary and unequal. The improvement of the Tennessee itself upon the plan required in the act of last session, and as recommended by the board of internal improvement in document No. 284, of the 7th volume of Executive State Papers, in 1827–'28, to which the House is respectfully referred, must be considered almost indispensable in character, and altogether reasonable in the expense of execution, when compared with the advantage of avoiding thereby the only obstructions to a steamboat navigation of five hundred and eighty, and other water conveyance of near one thousand five hundred miles more, which that river and its tributaries will afford, and in which a portion of one-third of the States in the Union are directly and others indirectly interested. While the improvements in the other waters of the State which the grant contemplates are to the people of Alabama objects of equally general interest, and in a national character highly valuable, the committee have no hesitation in believing that the subject-matter of the dispute might be of much greater value if thrown into the mass of the appropriated lands with which it is connected than it could be to the government if retained; and that the residue of the relinquished lands in the counties mentioned in the act of last session might well be surrendered to the consummation of the public benefits designed to be produced by that law: and for that purpose report a bill.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 14, 1828.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 13th, covering a resolution of the House of Representatives bearing date the 8th instant, and requesting the views of this office in relation to the construction of the act referred to therein, and also as to certain other questions propounded by you, and having a bearing on the subject, I have the honor to state that the act granting for certain purposes to the State of Alabama 400,000 acres of the relinquished lands lying in the counties named therein does not designate the manner in which the relinquished lands granted shall be selected. In carrying this act into effect, it was presumed that the government of the United States, upon the principle that the donor had the right to point out that which was given, had the power to designate the manner in which the lands appropriated should be designated; in doing this, however, it was the wish of the Executive so to designate the 400,000 acres of land granted as that its average value per acre should be at least equal to the average value per acre of the whole quantity from which it was to be selected. It having, however, been ascertained that the quantity of relinquished lands lying within the counties designated in the act was 497,219.83 acres, and that 97,601.43 of that quantity was within the limits of Lauderdale county, and it being believed that the average value of the relinquished lands in that county was less than the average value of those lying within the other counties specified, the proposition contained in the annexed extract of a letter from this office to the Secretary of War was suggested as an eligible mode of carrying the act into effect. I understand, however, that this suggestion was not acceptable to the State of Alabama, and that a claim is set up upon the part of that State to make the selection of the relinquished lands in such manner as she may think proper—a claim which, I presume, will require the interposition of Congress to sanction.

The average value of the whole of the lands above referred to may be estimated at five dollars per acre; but if the State of Alabama has the right of selecting 400,000 acres of the most valuable of this land, the average value of the residue will be very materially reduced, and a large portion of it would not, probably, sell for many years at the minimum price.

Any arrangement that may be now adopted for selecting the lands granted to the State of Alabama will excite much feeling, and be productive of dissatisfaction to the citizens generally of those counties in which the lands granted to the State may lie, arising from the circumstances that these lands constitute a large portion of the best lands in that district of country; that they are generally occupied and improved by the individuals who relinquished them, or by others who have calculated on purchasing them at the minimum price for which the general government sell their lands; but since the grant to the State for the purposes designated, those settlers whose lot it may be to occupy the particular lands granted to the State are aware that they will have to pay the fair marketable value for their lands, while those occupying the portions retained by the United States will expect to obtain them at the minimum price. These considerations will, no doubt, have their influence on the legislature of Alabama, and may produce embarrassment in devising the mode for disposing of those lands. The Tennessee river and its tributaries water a portion of seven States of this Union, and several other States are directly interested in the trade which will flow through that channel. The improvement of the navigation of that river, therefore, on the scale proposed in the act of May last, is an object of very considerable national importance; and as the lands appropriated for erecting a fund for the improvement of the navigation of that river will, under the guardianship of the State of Alabama, no doubt sell for their fair marketable value, they will, if so sold, produce more than four times the sum which they would probably bring if sold under the provisions of the existing laws of the United States for the sale of their lands. It is therefore suggested whether it would not be promotive of the public interest so to modify the law of the 23d of May, 1828, as to grant to the State of Alabama, for the purposes designated in that law, all the lands which may have been relinquished in the counties of Madison, Limestone, Lauderdale, Morgan, Lawrence, and Franklin, previous to the 4th of July, 1827, the effect of which would be to extend the grant from 400,000 acres, to which it is now limited, to about 497,000, the whole quantity relinquished in those counties at the period above designated.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Hon. J. C. ISACKS, House of Representatives.

Extract of a letter to the Hon. P. B. Porter, Secretary of War, from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, August 1, 1828.

SIR: In reply to your note requesting my views of the mode of laying off the 400,000 acres of lands that have been relinquished in certain specified counties in the State of Alabama, and which have been ceded to that State for certain purposes, I have the honor to submit a statement showing the quantity of land relinquished in each of the counties above specified, from which it appears that the excess of relinquished lands in those counties over the quantity granted is 97,219 acres. It also appears that the quantity of lands relinquished in Lauderdale county is 97,601 acres. I, therefore, am of opinion that the lands in the other counties should be appropriated to the use of the State; and if, on a more critical examination, the quantity should fall short of 400,000 acres, the deficiency to be made up from the relinquished lands in Lauderdale. All the counties specified in the act abut on the Tennessee river; and there are large quantities of very valuable land in each of them which have been relinquished. The average value of the relinquished lands in Lauderdale is probably less than that of the residue of the relinquished lands in the other counties.

The lands appropriated to the State should, under judicious management, bring at least two millions of dollars.

REFUSAL TO ALLOW THE LOCATION OF LAND IN LIEU OF PRIVATE CLAIM IN MORE THAN ONE TRACT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1828.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Garrigues Flaujac, reported:

That on an examination of this case, it appears that the register and receiver of the eastern land district of Louisiana reported in favor of the claim of the petitioner to a certain tract of 3,200 superficial arpens of land (equal to 2,708$\frac{1}{10}$ acres) on the bayou Gross Tete, in Louisiana, derived from an order of survey from the Spanish government in favor of Louis Berteu DeAntilly, and that the report was confirmed by the act of Congress of the 28th of February, 1823. That the tract of land thus confirmed having been sold by the United States, the petitioner or his legal representatives was authorized, by the act of May 20, 1826, to locate his claim upon any of the unappropriated lands in the southwestern district of Louisiana, south of Red river, to be made, if possible, in one tract, and to conform, as nearly as practicable, to the lines of the public surveys, on condition that the petitioner should, within one year after the passage of the act, and before such location, release to the United States all his right, title, and interest to the first-mentioned tract. The petitioner executed the said release agreeably to the act of Congress, and located his claim in one tract, to the west of the bayou Carancro, "on the best unappropriated lands; and the survey was made in April, 1827, and returned to the General Land Office."

Shortly afterwards the petitioner applied to the Secretary of the Treasury to have about eighty acres of the said tract (which he stated was marshy and unfit for cultivation) excluded, and for permission to locate a like quantity at some other place, which was not granted.

In his memorial to Congress the petitioner states that, in consequence of his being obliged to locate his claim in one tract, he was compelled to take the whole quantity in the rear of other tracts, removed from any bayou or water-course, and destitute of timber, and that a large quantity of low, marshy, and uncultivated lands are included; "that so extensive a claim as his cannot be located with any tolerable advantage in one tract; that there are intervals of a few hundred acres combining the advantages of fertility and convenience to water-courses and navigation;" and prays an act may be passed authorizing him to locate his claim in four or more tracts.

From information received at the land office it appears that the petitioner's claim was located as favorable to him as was possible, and that it embraces but a small quantity (only about eighty acres in 2,708$\frac{1}{10}$) of marsh land, a less proportion of this kind of land than usual, and even this is susceptible of improvement and cultivation. The committee, therefore, are of opinion the petitioner is not entitled to relief on equitable considerations.

Independent of this view of the case, the committee think it would be improper policy to permit claimants to select in small parcels the best public land, and leave that which is unsalable and unfit for cultivation; nor do they think it proper in any instance to allow of alterations to be made in the location of such claims after a survey has been made and returned to the land office, unless there has been error or manifest injustice done to the claimant, as such a practice would create confusion in the location of claims, and produce serious inconveniences and disadvantages, besides imposing unnecessary labor on public officers and expense on the government. The committee are unanimously of opinion the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

TO VEST THE TITLE TO LAND RESERVED FOR SCHOOLS IN ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI, IN A BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1828.

Mr. BATES, of Missouri, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the "Board of Trustees for the regulation of schools in the town of St. Louis," reported:

That by an act of Congress, passed on the 13th of June, 1812, all town lots, out-lots, or common field lots, included in the survey of the town of St. Louis, by that act directed to be made, which were not rightfully owned or claimed by any individuals, or held as commons belonging to the town, or that the President might not think proper to reserve for military purposes, were reserved for the support of schools in the town of St. Louis, with a proviso that the whole quantity reserved for the support of schools should not exceed one-twentieth part of the whole lands included in the general survey of the town. Since the passage of that act Congress has not legislated upon the subject; but the titles to the unappropriated lots of St. Louis remain, as they then were, in the United States. And, as far as the committee have been informed, the President has not thought proper to reserve any portion of them for military purposes; nor is it believed that they can ever be required for those purposes, inasmuch as other positions in that vicinity have been chosen for the erection of a public arsenal and the cantonment of the troops; and both of these objects are rendered permanent by the erection of costly buildings under the sanction of Congress.

The petitioners were incorporated by an act of the general assembly of the Territory of Missouri, of the 30th of January, 1807, with full powers "to take and hold, by gift, grant, or otherwise, any estate, either real or personal, which may be given for the use of schools, and to lease, rent, or dispose of, to the best advantage, all the lands and other property which hath been, or may be given, by Congress, to said town for the support of schools, and appropriate the same, with the avails of what is rented or leased, as by law directed, &c." They are also enjoined by their charter to keep records of their proceedings, and, when required, lay them before the legislature.

The petitioners state that there are many lots in and adjacent to the town of St. Louis which pertain to the reservation of the act of 1812, but that they are unavailable as a school fund, because the titles still remain in the United States; and although their board was created chiefly for the management of this fund, established by the liberality of Congress, they find themselves unable to accomplish the objects of their institution by reason of the impossibility of controlling property the title of which is in another. And they pray the passage of an act vesting in them the absolute title of all the lots reserved by the act of Congress of the 13th of June, 1812, for the support of schools in the town of St. Louis.

Your committee cannot doubt that it was the intention of Congress, as manifested in the act of 1812, to appropriate the waste lots in question to the education of the youth in the town of St. Louis; and as the legislature of Missouri has deemed the corporation now petitioning the most fit and convenient instrument for effectuating the benevolent purposes of the general government, they are of opinion that the prayer of the petition is reasonable and ought to be granted; and they report a bill for that purpose.

RELATIVE TO QUANTITY OF LAND ON A CLAIM OF SETTLEMENT AND CULTIVATION IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1828.

Mr. BATES, of Missouri, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Peter P. M'Cormack, reported:

That a tract of land, of four hundred and fifty arpens, on Plattin creek, in the now State of Missouri, has been confirmed to the petitioner, in virtue of his settlement and cultivation of the same, under the Spanish government, at and before the 20th of December, 1803. That the official survey of the tract contains six hundred and twenty-four acres; and the petitioner claims six hundred and forty acres under the several acts of Congress giving donations to actual settlers at the time of the acquisition of Louisiana

There is nothing before the committee to account for the difference in quantity between the confirmation and the survey of the petitioner's claim; nor is there any information on that point in the General Land Office, the records of which have been examined with a view to the subject. The committee are therefore compelled to infer that a mistake has been committed, either by the commissioners who confirmed the claim to the extent of four hundred and fifty arpens, or the surveyor, who included in his lines six hundred and twenty-four acres, if not by both. Under these circumstances, they deem it the more just and equitable course to examine the various acts of Congress affecting this class of claims, and award to the petitioner that measure of bounty which the former liberality of Congress intended to bestow.

The first act upon this subject is that of March 2, 1805; it gives to the actual settler, being the head of a family, or twenty-one years of age, who settled with the permission of the proper Spanish officer, and according to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government, a tract of land, not to exceed "one mile square, together with such other and further quantity as heretofore has been allowed for the wife and family of such actual settler, agreeably to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government."

The act of the 13th of June, 1812, dispenses with the necessity of proving permission to settle on the public domain by the proper Spanish officer, and with the fact of cultivation of the land before the 20th of December, 1803, and provides that such claims as were rejected merely because they exceeded the quantity of eight hundred arpens should be confirmed to that extent. The act of the 3d of March, 1813, extends the quantity of donation grants (or settlement rights) to six hundred and forty acres in favor of all whose claims have been confirmed to a less extent by the board of commissioners or the recorder of land titles, with a proviso that in no case shall the grant be for more than was claimed by the party in his notice of claim, nor for more than is contained in the acknowledged and ascertained boundaries of the tract.

These acts of legislation are purely donative, made in favor of an acquired people, and probably with the view of uniting them more closely to this government by the bonds of affection and gratitude; and your committee believe that they ought to be construed in the same spirit of liberality and kindness in which they were enacted. The petitioner has had confirmed to him four hundred and fifty arpens, (about 382 acres;) and, although he has not produced the original notice of his claim, filed with the land commissioners in Missouri, the fact that he had possession of six hundred and twenty-four acres, by a public survey, raises a strong presumption that his claim was for more than the quantity confirmed by the board of commissioners. Upon a view of the whole case, it is the opinion of the committee that the claim of the petitioner, to the extent of six hundred and forty acres, or one mile square, ought to be allowed; and they accordingly report a bill.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE LEGISLATURE OF MISSOURI RELATIVE TO THE GRADUATION PRICE OF PUBLIC LANDS, AND VOTE OF THANKS TO HON. L. W. TAZEWELL.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 22, 1828.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Missouri, That we highly approve of the bill lately pending before the Senate of the United States to graduate the price of the public lands, to make donations to actual settlers, and to cede the refuse lands to the States in which they lie; and that the thanks of the legislature are due to the Hon. Thomas H. Benton, a senator in Congress from this State, for his able, patriotic, and unwearied exertions in endeavoring to procure the adoption of a measure in which the people of this State have so important an interest.

Resolved, That the Hon. David Barton, a senator in Congress from this State, be instructed, and the Hon. Edward Bates, the representative from this State in Congress, be requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of the bill mentioned in the foregoing resolution, either as it originally stood, or as amended in the Senate of the United States at the last session, or in the nearest attainable form thereto; and that the said senator be instructed, and the said representative be requested, to oppose all amendments to said bill which may have the effect of preventing its passage, or dividing its friends, or delaying its decision, or giving to any State, or description of State, any advantage over any other State, or description of State, in the time, mode, or condition of bringing the public lands into market.

Resolved, That the Hon. Littleton Waller Tazewell, a distinguished senator in Congress from the State of Virginia, be requested to accept the thanks of this legislature for the magnanimous and efficient support which he has so liberally afforded to the bill referred to in the above resolutions, and that a knowledge of his correct principles, his statesmanlike conduct, and his strict adherence to justice, induce the legislature to expect his able co-operation in effecting the measure aforesaid.

Resolved, That the secretary of state do forthwith forward to each of these gentlemen a copy of the foregoing resolutions.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

LEAD MINES IN MISSOURI AND ILLINOIS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1828.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit to the House of Representatives a report from the Secretary of War, with documents, reported in compliance with the resolution of the House of the 10th instant, requesting a copy of the instructions given for the government of the agent of the United States superintendent of the lead mines in Missouri and Illinois.

Also a report from the Secretary of War, in compliance with the resolution of the House of the 15th instant, setting forth the reasons upon which it has not been deemed expedient to nominate commissioners to hold a treaty with the Choctaw nation of Indians for the purchase of a certain tract of land, as authorized by the act of Congress of the 24th of May last.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, December 16, 1828.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith a report from the chief of the Ordnance department, to whose management the business of the lead mines is intrusted, prepared in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 10th instant, requesting the President of the United States "to cause to be laid before this House a copy of the instructions given for the government of the agent of the United States superintendent of the lead mines in Missouri and Illinois."

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

P. B. PORTER.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 15, 1828.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 9th instant, which has been referred to this department, I have the honor to report that the enclosed copies of the leases, licenses and bonds contain all the regulations or instructions which it has been considered advisable to specify for the government of the superintendent of the United States lead mines in Missouri and Illinois. It will, however, be seen, from the sixth paragraph of the leases, that the necessity of further regulations for the preservation of order, and to carry into effect those which had been determined upon, was anticipated; these were referred to the superintendent to devise, from time to time, as his experience and observation might show the public interest required; and it is believed further regulations of this character have been found necessary, and accordingly adopted by the superintendent; but of the particular provisions of which no report has yet been made.

As the leases granted in Missouri and Illinois are, in some degree, different in their terms, copies of both are enclosed, and marked No. 1 and No. 2. Number one is the lease required for the lead mines in Missouri; number two, for those at the latter place. No licenses have been granted, except at the lead mines in Illinois, or upon the Upper Mississippi.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

G. BOMFORD, Brevet Colonel on Ordnance service.

Hon. P. B. PORTER, Secretary of War.

LEASE No. 1.

This indenture, made this ——— day of ———, between —— ——, of the army of the United States, acting under the direction of the Hon. —— ——, Secretary of War, of the first part, and —— ——, of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the rents, covenants and agreements hereinafter mentioned, doth, by these presents, grant, lease, and farm unto the said party of the second part, his heirs and representatives, for the full term of three years, from and after the ratification of these presents by the President of the United States, a tract of land, the property of the United States, supposed to contain a mine or mines of lead ore, lying and being in ———, and bounded as follows, viz: ———, containing about ——— acres, to have and to hold the same, from and after the time above stated, for the term aforesaid, unto the said party of the second part, his heirs and representatives, upon the conditions following, viz:

FIRST. That the said party of the second part hereby binds and obliges himself to commence mining and manufacturing lead upon the said land within two months after the date of the ratification as aforesaid, and to continue such mining and manufacturing with a force which shall at no time be less than ——— men, weather and season permitting, without cessation or intermittance of more than one month at any one time.

SECOND. That the said party of the second part, at the end of every month, shall pay to the said party of the first part one-tenth of the product of said mining and manufacturing operations, in clean pure lead, as a rent, for the use of the United States, and deposit the same in a storehouse to be built on the said land by the said second party, under the direction of the said party of the first part, who shall possess the key and custody of the same; and as the one is generally estimated to yield sixty per cent. of lead, it is agreed by the said parties to calculate the product at that rate; and the said second party agrees to pay sixty pounds of lead for each thousand pounds of ore received, to be paid from the first process of melting, i. e., the log furnace.

THIRD. The said party of the second part agrees to make, at his own cost and expense, all the necessary preparation and improvements for the prosecution and fulfilment of this indenture, on his part, for which purpose he is allowed and permitted the use of stone, wood, and water, as may be found upon the premises, and as may be required, without waste or extravagance.

FOURTH. It is further agreed and understood between the said parties that the second party shall keep a book or books in which he shall state a true and faithful amount of all the mineral and lead which he shall raise, purchase, and manufacture, from time to time, which said book or books shall always be open and ready for the free inspection and examination of the said party of the first part; and the said second party agrees to furnish the said first party with a monthly abstract or return of such mining and manufacturing operations at the end of every month, agreeably to a form to be furnished by the first party, which shall contain a list of all the miners or laborers at work at said mine, and which said books and returns the said party shall at any time, when required by the said first party, verify on oath or affirmation.

FIFTH. It is understood and agreed between the said parties that the said party of the second part shall not, at any time nor in any manner whatever, dispose of or sub-lease the said land, or any part thereof, to any person or persons whatever; that at no time, under any pretext, shall the said party, or any one by or under his authority, convey away or remove the whole or any part of the mineral or lead from said land or places of manufacture, without the consent and approbation of the said party of the first part, until all arrearages of rent, which shall be due and owing by the said second party, shall be settled up and paid.

SIXTH. The said second party agrees not to permit any miner or laborer to commence working at the said mine until he signs the rules and regulations thereof; one of which shall be "not to remove, sell, or otherwise dispose of any ore or mineral he may dig to any other than the said second party;" nor to allow any person to continue working after he has broken said regulations.

SEVENTH. The said second party expressly agrees not to purchase, or otherwise acquire, any lead ore obtained from land the property of the United States other than the land leased by the said second party from the United States, nor from land owned or claimed by an individual, without the owners or claimants' special permission. The said second party also agrees not to permit any one under his authority to dig or mine on public land, nor to cut or otherwise to acquire coal, timber, or fuel from public land, without authority from the United States.

EIGHTH. It is, moreover, further and explicitly understood and agreed between the said parties that, upon the failure of the said party of the second part to carry into effect any part of this indenture or agreement, or on his non-compliance with any of its stipulations, the said first party may declare it void and forfeited, at his option, and re-enter and take possession of the premises as if no such indenture or agreement had been entered into.

In testimony whereof, we, the said parties to these presents, have hereunto signed our names and affixed our seals the day and year before written.

LEASE No. 2.

This indenture, made and entered into this ——— day of ———, between —— ——, of the army of the United States, acting under the direction of the Hon. —— ——, Secretary of War, of the first part, and —— ——, of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the rents, covenants and agreements hereinafter mentioned, doth, by these presents, and by and with the approbation of the President of the United States, grant, lease and farm unto the said party of the second part, his heirs and representatives, for the full term of three years from and after the date hereof, a tract of land, the property of the United States, supposed to contain a mine or mines of lead ore, according to the annexed plat of survey, viz:

[Here insert the plat of survey.]

Containing about ——— acres, to have and to hold the same from and after the time above stated, for the term aforesaid, unto the said party of the second part, his heirs and representatives, upon the conditions following, viz:

FIRST. That the said party of the second part hereby binds and obliges himself to commence mining and (if there is wood upon the premises) manufacturing lead upon the said land within two months after the date hereof, and to continue such mining and manufacturing with a force which shall at no time be less than twenty men, weather and season permitting, without cessation or intermittance. Should the said second party not have twenty laborers in his employ, it is understood and agreed that any miner may go upon the above premises and work, provided he will deliver to the said second party all the ore he may dig, upon his paying or securing to be paid to him the usual quantity of lead (or an equivalent) for each thousand pounds of ore; and the said second party, admitting the premises to be occupied, will be considered the same as keeping twenty men in employ.

SECOND. That the said party of the second part, at the end of every month, shall pay to the said party of the first part one-tenth of the product of said mining and manufacturing operations in clean pure lead, as a rent, for the use of the United States, and deposit the same in a storehouse near Fever river, (which shall be designated by the said first party,) free of expense to the United States.

THIRD. The said party of the second part agrees to make, at his own cost and expense, all the necessary preparation and improvements for the prosecution and fulfilment of this indenture on his part, for which purpose he is allowed and permitted the use of all stone, wood and water as may be found upon the premises and as may be required, without waste or extravagance.

FOURTH. It is agreed and understood between the said parties that the second party shall keep a book or books in which he shall state a true and faithful account of all the mineral and lead which he shall raise, purchase, or manufacture, from time to time, which said book or books shall always be open and ready for the free inspection and examination of the said party of the first part; and the said second party agrees to furnish the said first party with a monthly abstract or return of such mining or manufacturing operations at the end of every month, agreeably to a form to be furnished by the first party, which shall contain a list of all the miners or laborers at work at said mine, and which said books and returns the said second party shall at any time, when required by the said first party, verify on oath or affirmation.

FIFTH. It is further understood and agreed between the said parties that the said party of the second part shall not, at any time nor in any manner whatever, dispose of or sub-lease the said land to any person or persons whatever; that at no time, under any pretext, shall the said party, or any one by or under his authority, convey away or remove the whole or any part of the mineral or lead from said land or places of manufacture, without the consent and approbation of the said party of the first part, until all arrearages of rent which shall be due and owing by said second party shall be settled up and paid.

SIXTH. The said second party agrees not to permit any miner or laborer to commence working at the said mine until he signs the rules and regulations thereof; one of which shall be "not to remove, sell, or otherwise dispose of any ore or mineral he may dig to any other than the said second party," nor to allow any person to continue working after he has broken said regulation.

SEVENTH. It is, moreover, further and explicitly understood and agreed between the said parties that, upon the failure of the said party of the second part to carry into effect any part of this indenture or agreement, or on his non-compliance with any of its stipulations, the said first party may declare it void and forfeited, at his option, and re-enter and take possession of the premises as if no such indenture or agreement had been entered into.

In testimony whereof, we, the said parties to these presents, have hereunto signed our names and affixed our seals the day and year before written.

FIRST. All purchases or other acquisitions of ore, ashes, zane, or lead, to be from persons authorized to work the mines, either as lessees, smelters, or diggers, and from no others; and no ore to be purchased from the leased premises of any person without his permission.

SECOND. To commence smelting as soon as one hundred thousand pounds of ore are obtained, and to continue it so long as any is on hand; to weigh a charge of ore for the log furnace, and the lead produced from it, when required by the said first party or his assistant.

FIFTH. The said second party is allowed to have as much fuel as will suffice, without waste, for the purposes of this indenture, and to cultivate as much land as will suffice to furnish his teams, &c., with provender.

SIXTH. It is understood and agreed between the aforesaid parties that the second party shall not

The bond given for the faithful performance of the contract is to be in full force and virtue until a written settlement is made.

It is distinctly understood by the said parties that, upon proof being afforded to the first party that either of the foregoing stipulations have been violated or not complied with, he may declare this indenture null and void, and re-enter and take possession of all the premises as if no such agreement existed.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, December 19, 1828.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant, requesting to be informed by the President whether he had proceeded to nominate commissioners to hold a treaty with the Choctaw nation of Indians for the purchase of a certain tract of land described in said resolution, I have the honor to report to you, for the information of the House, that no commissioners have been nominated to hold such treaty.

The act of Congress of the 24th of May last, appropriating $15,000 to enable the President of the United States to hold a treaty with the Chippewas, Ottawas, Pottawatomies, Winnebagoes, Fox and Sacs nations of Indians, authorized the President also, "if he should deem it expedient," to apply a part of the said appropriation for the purpose of holding a treaty with the Choctaw nation of Indians, to extinguish their title to the tract of land mentioned in the resolution.

Your reason for not having yet taken any measures towards holding the last-mentioned treaty is understood to have been founded on the confident belief of this department that the sum thus appropriated would not, in the most favorable events, be more than sufficient to accomplish the first objects for which it was made; and that it would not be "expedient" to adopt any measures for the attainment of the last until the further pleasure of Congress should be made known to you.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

P. B. PORTER.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 696. [2D SESSION.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1828.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of the heirs and representatives of John Ellis, deceased, late of Adams county, in the State of Mississippi, reported:

The petitioners state that the said Ellis was the holder of an order of survey issued by the Spanish government of West Florida; that, having neglected to locate and perfect the same during the existence of that government above the 31st degree of latitude, after the commencement of the authority of the United States government over that region of country he obtained from the former a patent therefor, including eight hundred arpens. They say that after the organization of the board of commissioners to decide on claims to land west of Pearl river the claim aforesaid was presented to said board, who rejected it, because the survey had been made and the patent obtained after the change of government; and according to the provisions of the act of Congress of the 27th of March, 1804, reported it to the Secretary of the Treasury, with various others, as a rejected claim, to be laid before Congress. They also allege that under the act of Congress of the 30th of June, 1812, the representatives of said Ellis applied to the register and receiver of the land office west of Pearl river, and obtained from them a certificate for six hundred and forty acres of said claim, and caused the same to be surveyed by the surveyor general of the district, in township 1, range 2 west, being section No. 41 in said township, in the county of Wilkinson and State of Mississippi. They further allege that the United States, previous to the enactment of the act of June, 1812, had sold the principal part of said section to Isaac Johnston and Samuel Stockett, who obtained patents for and are in possession of it. They therefore ask leave to locate land anywhere in Mississippi or Alabama, in amount equal to that called for in the aforesaid patent, which is about 677 acres. By an examination of the report of the board of commissioners on claims founded on British and Spanish warrants of survey within the district west of Pearl river, disallowed by said board, made in pursuance of the 4th section of an act of the Congress of the United States, entitled "An act concerning the sales of lands of the United States, and for other purposes," passed March 31, 1808, the committee find that a claim for eight hundred arpents, originating under the Spanish government, situated on the Bayou Sara, dated 15th of April, 1789, in the name of one William Wikoff, had been presented for allowance and confirmation by John Ellis, as the claimant thereof, but was by the board rejected.

The commissioners, in relation to said claim, made the following remarks:

"William Atchison says that he surveyed the land in question for the claimant, by the request of William Wikoff, who said he had sold it to the claimant; and the witness says that Wikoff was of age at the date of the warrant, and the land was not at that time inhabited or cultivated, and has not been so since that he knows of."

A certificate, dated the 18th day of September, 1815, was issued in favor of said Ellis, by the register and receiver west of Pearl river, under authority vested in them by the aforesaid act of the 30th of June, 1812, for six hundred and forty acres, in which they certify to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that he was entitled to a patent therefor from the United States by virtue of said act. A decision having been thus made in favor of the ancestors of the claimants by a tribunal of competent jurisdiction, the committee consider it as improper to inquire into the grounds upon which it was made. They look upon it as conclusive to show his claim upon the government for 640 acres to be valid. If the government has sold the land, or a considerable part of it, surveyed under said certificate, to other individuals, who have obtained patents therefor, it seems to be but just that a compensation should be made to him or his representatives, either in money or land. The testimony on that subject is not entirely satisfactory. Upon application to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, he states that on the 24th of December, 1806, the commissioners west of Pearl river issued certificates of pre-emption to Samuel Stockett and Isaac Johnston; and that a patent issued to the first on the 30th of July, 1812, and to the latter on the 15th of April, 1815. He states, however, that as the plat of the township in which these claims are situated has been returned to the surveyor general for correction, he had no means of ascertaining the confliction of the several claims. But Nathaniel A. Ware certifies, under oath, that by actual survey and an examination of the maps in the land office, he had ascertained that the greater part of the land claimed by the aforesaid heirs had been sold as pre-emptions to Isaac Johnston, Samuel Stockett, and others, who are in possession of it; and that their claims included the best parts of said tract, the spring, and everything that could make it valuable. He also states that upon application to the register for a certified map of the aforesaid township, he informed him that it would be found in the General Land Office in the city of Washington.

The committee are, therefore, satisfied that so great a portion of the land claimed by said Ellis has been sold by the government to others, who have obtained the senior grants and whose claims are paramount both in law and equity to that of Ellis, as they should all be considered as purchasers from the United States; that were this an application to a court of chancery in a case between individuals the contract would be rescinded and relief granted.

They therefore recommend that the claim be allowed, not for the amount of eight hundred arpents, as called for in the patent, but for that of six hundred and forty acres, the amount for which, under the act of 1812, he stands as a purchaser; and they accordingly report a bill herewith.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 697. [2D SESSION.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1828.

Mr. GURLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the case of Hyacinth Bernard, reported:

That the petitioner claims thirty-three arpents of land by forty in depth, on both sides of the Bayou Teche, in the State of Louisiana, as having been purchased by him of the Chetimaches Indians in the year 1804, and as having been inhabited and cultivated by him from that period to the present. He represents that he is the father of a large family; that he has made expensive improvements on the land, and has always considered his title as perfect. It appears that when this claim was first entered with the Commissioner of the Land Office it was unaccompanied with any testimony, and that they recommended its rejection. It was afterwards re-examined, with evidence furnished by petitioner, and recommended for confirmation. This evidence consists of an order under the signature of Mr. Aubry, the then governor of Louisiana, under the French dynasty, dated the 19th of June, 1767, in which he recognizes the Chetimaches nation, and directing the commandant at Manchac to treat their chief with regard; an order of Governor De Galvez, dated at New Orleans the 14th of September, 1777, commanding the commandant and other subjects of the Spanish government to respect the rights of said Indians in the lands which they occupied, and to protect them in the occupation thereof; the sales from the Indians to petitioner of the said lands; and the testimony of several witnesses, testifying to the good character of the claimant. That the Indian title was always considered as good; and that the Spanish government recognized the sales that they made. The Indians themselves, when they made known their claim to our commissioners, which was for a large tract of land, stated that they and their ancestors had sold portions of said land to different individuals; and among which sales they mentioned the one to petitioner, and declared it to have been made in good faith and for a valuable consideration. This declaration, coming from the Indians seventeen years or more after the transaction to which it alludes, together with the testimony of several witnesses of good reputation, satisfies your committee that the sale was made in good faith, and for a valuable and full consideration.

The Indian title was good, for they had been in possession for fifty years, say the witnesses; and both Great Britain and Spain had, by divers acts, recognized their right to the soil, while they respectively retained the sovereignty of the country.

The governor of Spain authorized the Indians to dispose of their lands; and whether a previous permit was necessary or not is a question not involved in this case, as the transfer to Bernard, the petitioner, was made before the commandant who had authority to give it. The laws of the United States were not then promulgated and in force in Louisiana.

Your committee herewith report a bill for his relief.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 698. [2D SESSION.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1828.

Mr. GURLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition and documents of Marcellin Bonnabel, of the city of New Orleans, reported:

That the petitioner claims, in right of his ancestor, Antonio Bonnabel, deceased, 4,020 arpents of land, situated on the north side of Lake Pontchartrain, in the State of Louisiana, as having been granted to the said Antonio Bonnabel by the Spanish government, on the 25th of January, 1799. Said grant for 4,020 arpents is for the quantity of land called for in three previous decrees of the Spanish government; the one for 2,100 arpents, dated the 29th of June, 1797; one for 1,000 arpents, dated the 20th of February, 1798; and the other for 920 arpents, dated the 22d February, 1790; all in favor of Antonio Bonnabel. Petitioner represents that said claim was duly entered with James O. Corly, commissioner of the land office at St. Helena, and by him recommended for confirmation in the list of complete titles; but that the commissioner made a mistake in entering the quantity of land as 400 arpents, instead of 4,020, the quantity called for in the grant recommended by him for confirmation.

The register and receiver of the land office at St. Helena, being convinced of the error, have attempted to correct it by issuing a certificate and order of survey for the complement called for in the grant. This, however, does not, in the opinion of your committee, dispense with the necessity of a confirmation on the part of Congress. Petitioner prays such confirmation; and in support of his claim offers a copy of the certificate of confirmation, dated the 29th of February, 1820; a translation of the original plot of survey and patent; and a certificate of the register and receiver of the land office of the district in which the land is situated, stating, in substance, that petitioner's title papers were duly deposited in the office, and submitted to the consideration of the former commissioner of land claims in that district. That he recommended its confirmation as a complete title. That they have no doubt of a mistake, either in copying the report, or a mistake in the figures in the original, by inserting 400 instead of 4,020. That they entertain no doubt of the validity of the title in Mr. Bonnabel, and have accordingly issued an order of survey for the 4,020 arpents, recommending him, however, to apply to Congress to correct the error.

Your committee are satisfied of the mistake which has produced the injury complained of, and therefore report a bill for his relief.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 699. [2D SESSION.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHT IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 29, 1828.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John Duly, of Indiana, with the accompanying documents, reported:

That the petitioner claims the right of pre-emption to 160 acres of land in the vicinity of New Orleans, in Louisiana, under the 5th section of an act of Congress of April 12, 1814, (4 vol., p. 680,) entitled "An act for the final adjustment of land titles in the State of Louisiana and Territory of Missouri."

That section gave such rights to persons who had "actually inhabited and cultivated a tract of land" in those countries, not rightfully claimed by others, if the occupant had not afterwards left the State or Territory.

It does not appear by the evidence before the committee that the petitioner ever was an inhabitant and cultivator in Louisiana, within the meaning of that law, although he produces some affidavits that he called witnesses to see him plant corn near New Orleans in the year 1814.

It does appear that the petitioner did not present his claim to the proper officers for allowance, within the time required by law. The committee therefore recommend the following:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

The incidental expenses include compensation to registers and receivers for services in previous years, and exclude the expenses of surveying, about $70,000 per annum, the expenses of surveyors general, about $2,000 per annum, and the expenses of the General Land Office, about $30,000 per annum. Adding these three items, and the expenses of the year would be about doubled.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 701. [2D SESSION.

CLAIM OF THOMAS L. WINTHROP AND OTHERS OF THE NEW ENGLAND MISSISSIPPI LAND COMPANY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 31, 1828.

Mr. BERRIEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas L. Winthrop and others, directors of an association called the New England Mississippi Land Company, &c., reported:

1st. That by the articles of agreement and cession of the 24th of April, 1802, between the United States and the State of Georgia it was agreed that the United States might (in such manner as not to interfere with the payment to be made to the State of Georgia, or with the satisfaction of certain land claims, agreed to be confirmed by the United States) appropriate not exceeding five millions of acres for satisfying certain claims on the land then ceded to the United States, commonly called the Yazoo claims: provided the act of Congress making such appropriation was passed within one year.

2d. That by the act entitled "An act regulating the grants of land, and providing for the disposal of the lands of the United States," passed the 3d of March, 1803, so much as should be found necessary of the five millions of acres, reserved as before stated, were appropriated to the purpose for which they had been reserved; but it was provided by that act "that no other claims shall be embraced by this appropriation but those the evidence of which shall have, on or before the first day of January next, [been] exhibited by the claimants to the Secretary of State, and recorded in books to be kept in his office for that purpose," &c.

3d. That, pursuant to the provisions of the last-mentioned act, the claims to the said lands were exhibited to the Secretary of State, including those now in question; but the passage of the final act, providing for their adjustment and satisfaction, was delayed until the year 1814.

4th. That many of the claims so exhibited were found to conflict with each other, and also with rights which had been acquired by the United States, in consequence of surrenders made to the State of Georgia, which, by virtue of the cession, inured to the United States.

5th. That, to make the indemnity and provide for the adjustment of the claims in question, the act of the 31st of March, 1814, was passed, by which—

First, The President was authorized and required to cause to be issued from the treasury of the United States to such claimants, respectively, as had exhibited their claims agreeably to the act of 1803, certificates of stock, payable out of moneys arising from the sale of said public land; and, among other companies, to the persons claiming in the name or under the Georgia Mississippi Company, a sum not exceeding, in the whole, one million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Second, That the claimants of the land might file in the office of the Secretary of State a release of all their claims to the United States, and an assignment and transfer to the United States of their claim to any money deposited or paid to the State of Georgia; such release and assignment to take effect on the indemnification of the claimants, according to the provisions of that act.

Third, Commissioners were to be, and were, accordingly, appointed "to adjudge and finally determine upon all controversies arising from such claims, so released as aforesaid, which may be found to conflict with and be adverse to each other; and also to adjudge and determine upon all such claims, under the aforesaid act, or pretended act, of the State of Georgia, as may be found to have accrued to the United States by operation of law."

6th. That the provisions of the act of 1814 were, in all respects, pursuant to a compromise made in behalf of the United States with the claimants, including the present petitioners, and that the release required by the said act was made by them.

7th. That before the commissioners, the petitioners, as trustees of the New England Mississippi Land Company, claimed as the persons entitled to the one million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars directed to be issued to the Georgia Mississippi Company; their claim to indemnity for 957,600 acres, amounting to $130,425, was resisted in behalf of the Georgia Mississippi Company, on the ground that the consideration money for said lands had not been paid, and that therefore they were, in equity, entitled to the indemnity provided by the act of Congress. It appeared before the commissioners that the land included in said grant, estimated to contain eleven millions three hundred and eighty thousand acres, had been sold by the Georgia Mississippi Company to the New England Mississippi Land Company at the rate of ten cents per acre, two cents whereof had been paid in cash, and the residue secured by negotiable notes with approved endorsers; of which notes, about one-tenth part, say $95,760, then remained unpaid, and belonged to the said original grantees, called the Georgia Mississippi Company, most of the members of which (about three-fourths in amount) had surrendered to the State of Georgia, and received from the treasury the sum they had paid therein, by virtue of the rescinding act (so called) of Georgia; but the other members had released to the United States in virtue of said act of Congress of March 31, 1814, and claimed in conflict with said petitioners such proportion of the indemnity as was equal to their interest in said notes. The commissioners decided that the said notes (although no mortgage was given therefor, and though the signers of said notes had long since transferred their interest in said lands, and although the conveyance from the Georgia Mississippi Company was absolute, and the deed delivered by their written direction to the grantees, upon their giving security as aforesaid) created a lien upon said land; and, in consequence of such decision, they deducted from the claim of said petitioners the sum of $130,425, and distributed the same as follows, viz:

The sum of thirty-five thousand and twenty-two dollars was paid to the said Georgia members who released as aforesaid, being their proportion in said notes; and the residue, say ninety-five thousand four hundred and three dollars, was ordered to be retained in the treasury of the United States, as representing the other owners of said notes, who had surrendered as aforesaid, and thus accruing, by operation of law, to the United States.

8th. The petitioners object to this decision as erroneous: and they ask to have the $130,425 paid to them by the United States, or their release to the extent of the 957,600 acres cancelled, so that they may assert their title to the lands in a court of law. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of

Brown and Gilman, 4 Wheaton, 256, have decided that the grant from the Georgia Mississippi Company to the individuals who afterwards constituted and composed the New England Mississippi Land Company, conveyed the legal estate, notwithstanding the act of Georgia prohibiting the deeds for the same from being recorded; and that, by the terms of the contract and the law of the land, the grantors had no lien on the land for the consideration money, and that therefore the decree of the commissioners, in that respect, was erroneous. For the grounds of that decision, its operation upon the interests of the petitioners and those they represent, the committee refer to the case of Brown and Gilman, to the decrees of the commissioners, (accompanying this report,) and to the accompanying certificates of the two commissioners now surviving.

9th. The committee acquiesce in the correctness of the decision of the Supreme Court, and believe that the decision of the commissioners, on the point of law raised before them, was erroneous, which error is fully certified by said commissioners, and manifestly appears in their records.

It is expressly provided by said act that the release of the claimants was "to take effect on the indemnification of such claimants being made conformably to the provisions of said act." And it is also provided that the commissioners were to adjudge and finally determine upon all controversies arising from such claims so released.

Taking these sections into view, the committee are of opinion that as respects said sum paid on said conflicting claim to said Georgia members, as aforesaid, the petitioners ought not to be relieved, such decision being made final by the act; but as respects said sum now in the treasury, which, by virtue of said act, ought to have been paid to said petitioners, as indemnification for their said release, but which was erroneously withheld from them, as aforesaid; the committee apprehend that the petitioners are well entitled to relief, and for that purpose they report a bill in their favor.

No. 1.

Decree of Commissioners on Yazoo claims, Georgia Mississippi Company.

This company having sold all the lands included in their grant (excepting the reservations for citizens) to certain individuals in Boston, associated under the name of the New England Mississippi Land Company, the whole indemnity provided by the act of Congress for claimants under this grant was demanded by the trustees of the latter company, in behalf of the members thereof, the trustees having released to the United States all the title of the company to the land comprehended in the grant.

This claim was opposed first by the scripholders of the original Georgia Mississippi Company, claiming under certain certificates issued to the proprietors under that grant before the sale made to the New England Mississippi Land Company, which certificates were produced by them and released to the United States. The foundation of this claim rested on the allegation that the New England purchasers had not fully paid the purchase money for the land, and that the original shareholders had a lien on the land for whatever balance was due. The board considered that the principles of equity sanction this opposition; and having ascertained, from the evidence exhibited, that the sum of $95,760 remained due to the original company for the purchase, which, upon the terms of the sale amounted to 957,600 acres, they decreed, upon the grounds stated more particularly in their first decree in this company, that $130,425 12, the proportion of indemnity to which that quantity of land would be entitled, should be deducted from the amount claimed by the New England Mississippi Land Company

The claim of the New England company was further opposed, in behalf of the United States, who claimed to be considered as representing the interests of such of the old Georgia Mississippi shareholders as have surrendered their claims to the State of Georgia and drawn their proportions of the original purchase money from the treasury of that State, and as thereby entitled to retain out of the sum deducted as above stated from the indemnity claimed by the New England company such proportions as those shareholders would have been entitled to had they not surrendered such claims. The board decreed that the United States were entitled to represent the interest of these original surrendered shares, and that the sum stated of $130,425 12 could neither be awarded exclusively to the shareholders who released to the United States nor lessened by the New England company's retaining to the amount of the shares surrendered to Georgia, but that the United States, representing the surrendered shares, should take equally with the releasing shareholders. By this decree the above sum was proportioned as follows:

To shares of Georgia Mississippi Company released to the United States - - - - -	$50,608 48
To the United States representing 284 surrendered shares - - - - - - - -	123,903 94

The claim of the trustees of the New England Company was still further opposed by some of the shareholders in that company, who produced their certificates to the board, and executed individually releases to the United States, and prayed to have their respective proportions of the indemnity awarded to them separately, and protested against its being awarded generally to the trustees for the benefit of the company.

The board considered themselves bound to grant this application, for the reasons stated in their second decree, under this grant of June 29, 1815, but, at the same time, thought the demand of the trustees that these individual claimants should bear their proportion of the expenses incurred by the company, if allowed to receive their proportions of the indemnity separately, just and reasonable.

These claimants, holding shares amounting to —— acres, were therefore, by the award of the board, entitled to receive $259,132 72 as their proportion of the indemnity, deducting their proportion of the expenses, and subject to some other charges for expenses which they settled with the trustees.

The following statement shows the particular distribution, according to the principles above stated, of the indemnity provided by the act for claims under this grant, and the proportion reserved to the United States:

Total indemnity provided for this company by act of Congress, $1,550,000.

Awarded as follows:

To the releasors of Georgia Mississippi Company's certificates.....	$50,608 48
To the individual releasors of the New England Mississippi certificates.....	259,132 72

To the trustees of the New England Mississippi Land Company	$1,077,561 73
To A. Jackson, for his interest in the sale made to the New England Mississippi Land Company	24,831 90
Reserved to the United States, for 284 certificates Georgia Mississippi Company, surrendered to Georgia	123,903 94
Reserved to the United States for incalculable fractions in the divisions of the indemnity.	23
Amount of W. Hampton's 32 shares, claimed in behalf of the United States, and deducted from the claim of the United States against him	13,961 00
Total	1,550,000 00

True copy from the records.

Test: RICHARD WALLACK,
Late Secretary to the Board of Commissioners on Yazoo Claims.

The certificates issued by the Georgia Mississippi Company were generally for four shares each, and the sum awarded to the holder of such certificate of four shares was $1,745 12½.

The fund out of which the holders of the Georgia Mississippi Company's certificates were paid, and the surrenders to the State of Georgia in the said company, consisted of the sum of $130,425 12, reserved from the claim of the New England Mississippi Land Company for unpaid notes of certain original purchasers in that company, and the amount of 691,667 acres of the New England Mississippi Land Company's certificates in the hands of Amasa Jackson; making, together, the amount of $213,305 55, deducting for allowance to the specie payment to the New England Mississippi Company $2,339 22.

Statement, in figures, of the disposition of the above sum of $213,305 55.

To the Georgia Mississippi Company's certificates, including those surrendered to the State of Georgia under Hampton's certificates, and those released to the United States	$188,473 42
Awarded to Amasa Jackson	24,831 90
Total	213,305 32

Attest: RICHARD WALLACK,
Late Secretary of the Board of Commissioners on Yazoo Claims.

No. 2.

Having acted as one of the commissioners under the act of Congress providing for the indemnification of certain claimants of public lands in the Mississippi Territory, I do certify that the board of commissioners did reject the claim for indemnification made by the New England Land Company for that portion of land which was the subject of controversy in the case decided by the Supreme Court between Gilman and Brown, and reported in the 4th volume of Wheaton's Reports. The ground upon which this rejection was made was an opinion which the commissioners then entertained; and the title of this land, through its whole course of transfer, was an equitable title, and the original purchase money not having been paid for it, they considered that the debt was a lien upon the land, and that the claimant had no right to the indemnification until that lien was discharged.

I recollect that our information of the laws of Georgia upon the subject of land conveyances was but imperfect; but in the discussion of this claim before the board it seemed to be given up that the title in all its stages was an equitable title, and so we finally thought. The decision, however, of this question by the Supreme Court is otherwise. They have decided that the title was a legal one throughout; and that question being so settled, I have no hesitation in saying that I should, under such an impression of the law, have awarded the indemnification to the claimants, and I doubt not but that my associates would have concurred with me in this opinion. I now consider this a fair subject for the interposition of the legislature, and should deem it reasonable that the claim should be allowed.

THOMAS SWAN.

ALEXANDRIA, December 30, 1822.

No. 3.

I have examined, as carefully as I could upon so short a notice, the decree of the Yazoo commissioners of March 8, 1816, upon the claim of the New England Mississippi Company, by which the sum of $130,425 12 was deducted from the indemnity claimed by that company, and awarded to the Georgia Mississippi Company, on the ground of a lien asserted by the latter company, for part of the purchase money due for the land which had been granted to the Georgia Company, and by them sold out to the persons composing the New England Mississippi Company.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Brown and Gilman, express an opinion that the claim of the Georgia Company to this lien could not be supported. I have not seen the record sent up to the Supreme Court in this case, and do not see in the printed report of the cause that the same documents and evidence, showing the agreements and correspondence of the two companies upon this subject, were before the court that had been laid before the commissioners. If they were, I suppose it would be right to conclude that the commissioners, and not the Supreme Court, had erred in their decision. The board, in their decree of March 8, 1816, refer to the agreements and correspondence of the parties, and the record in the case of Brown and Gilman will show whether they were introduced into that case.

F. S. KEY.

GEORGETOWN, January 2, 1823.

It is now represented to me that, by the laws of Georgia, a vender has no lien upon land sold when he takes a note for the purchase money. If this be the case, the commissioners certainly erred in their decision. If such a ground had been supported before them, they would certainly have decided against the lien.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1828.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petitions and documents of John Thompson, of the parish of Saint Landry and county of Opelousas, and Christopher Adams and Samuel Spraggins, of the parish and county of Iberville, and State of Louisiana, reported:

That the petitioners claim a tract of land situate on the Bayou Bocufin, the county formerly part of Opelousas, and State of Louisiana, containing three thousand two hundred superficial arpents, equal to 2,708.9 American acres, founded upon a requette, order of survey, or concession, claimed to have been issued by Governor Mero, in favor of Foiebea Mendoza, dated at New Orleans, July 16, 1791. That the board of commissioners, before whom these title papers were presented for confirmation, rejected the claim, on the ground that the requette and order of survey filed in this case were not genuine, but base forgeries; that further time having been given the claimants to produce additional proof, and this having been insufficient to influence a different decision of the board than that which was made originally, your committee do not feel themselves authorized, under all the circumstances of the case, to confirm the title, and thereby reverse the decision and report of the board of commissioners, whose situation better qualified them to judge of the genuineness of the title papers, and also the credibility of the witnesses who have testified in their support. They therefore recommend the rejection of the claim.

CLAIM TO REVOLUTIONARY BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1828.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of George P. Frost, of Rochester, Ulster county, State of New York, reported:

The petitioner states that he served in various military offices during our revolutionary war, and had been promoted to the command of a captain, towards its termination, in the first New Hampshire regiment, commanded by Colonel Cilley, or some person whose name was in sound similar. That, in virtue of the resolutions and laws of Congress, he was entitled to a bounty land warrant for three hundred acres; that he received said warrant, signed, as well as he recollects, by General Knox, then Secretary of War, and that, having placed it in the hands of a friend to make some inquiries and obtain information concerning the mode of its location, &c., it was by him lost in the city of New York, and has never been regained by the petitioner, who supposes it was destroyed. He states that he never made any disposition of it, and that it was his property. He further states that he has not received any patent for bounty land from the government, to which statements he made oath before a justice of the peace, who certifies as to that fact. The petitioner prays that a patent may issue to him for the land to which he is entitled.

Upon application at the General Land Office, it appears that warrant No. 693, for 300 acres of land, was issued, and which has never been presented for a patent. To whom it issued the record does not show. The record, however, proves that the petitioner was entitled to a warrant, and it does not show that one was ever issued to him.

The committee are of opinion that he is entitled to a warrant and patent, and have, therefore, reported a bill in his favor for that purpose.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1828.

Mr. BLAKE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents thereto of John Brest, of the parish of Ouachita, in the State of Louisiana, who prays to have his title confirmed to a tract of land in said parish, reported:

That, in pursuance of the authority of the Spanish commandant at the post of Ouachita, John Pierre Landerau, in the winter of 1801, took possession of a tract of land in the Prairie de Chicots, in the parish of Ouachita; that, by the orders of the same officer, it was afterwards surveyed for him, in 1802, by the Spanish surveyor at the post, the tract containing ten arpents front, or four hundred arpents superficial measure; that the said Landerau lived on the land and cultivated it until the year 1818, when he died; and that the petitioner, John Brest, who married one of the heirs of the said Landerau, has, ever since the death of Landerau, occupied, lived on, and cultivated the same land. The United States commissioners at Opelousas were applied to to grant a certificate for this land in the name of John Pierre Landerau, but the application was rejected, on the ground that a certificate had already been granted in his name for a tract above Fort Miro, on the Ouachita river, twenty-seven miles above the Prairie de Chicots. It appears to your committee that the said Landerau did live on and cultivate a tract of land above Fort Miro, on the Ouachita river; but, in a survey of land claimed by the Baron de Bastrop, in virtue, as it is said, of a prior title, it was ascertained that his claim embraced the whole, or nearly the whole, of the land then occupied by the said Landerau, and that, in consequence of this discovery, Landerau was compelled to abandon the tract of land occupied by him above Fort Miro; and then, at the instance, and by the express authority, of the Spanish commandant, he removed to the Prairie de Chicots, and took possession of the land now in question. It also appears that one Abraham Morehouse went before the commissioners at Opelousas and entered the land above Fort Miro, and received from them a certificate in his own right.

Your committee are not apprised of the grounds upon which the commissioners granted the certificate to Morehouse, there being no record evidence in the case; but they have before them the certificate of the parish judge of Ouachita, stating that there is no deed, or copy of a deed, on file or record in the archives of his office (where all conveyances of real estate ought to be) from John Pierre Landerau to the Baron de Bastrop, to Abraham Morehouse, or to any other person. When the application was made in the name of Landerau for the tract lying in the Prairie de Chicots, it is presumable that the commissioners, who were not the same as in the former instance, were influenced solely by the fact that land had been previously granted in the name of Landerau, without prosecuting an inquiry into the merits of such decision and fully comparing the mutual claims of the applicants. That Landerau could not have sold his claim to the Baron de Bastrop is evident, for he is represented by one of the deponents as crying like a child when he left the premises, and that he was ordered off by the commandant; and as to his trying to maintain his right of property at the time, and to seek redress by a resort to any judicial tribunal, it was a thought not to be indulged, for to him, as it was to others in that country generally, the order of a commandant was an arbitrary decision, from which there was no appeal. It is moreover ascertained by the declaration of one of the deponents, whose character for veracity is sustained by the testimony of distinguished and highly respectable individuals, that the said Spanish commandant told him, after the removal of Landerau, that he was to have the said land in the Prairie de Chicots, in lieu of the land which had been taken from him above Fort Miro. Your committee, therefore, after having again examined and considered the case, and having other evidence than was before them heretofore, have come to the conclusion that it is one within the purview of the act of Congress of March, 1805, on the subject, and that relief ought to be extended to the heirs generally of the said John Pierre Landerau, deceased; and they report a bill for that purpose.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1828.

Mr. VINTON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Ebenezer Cooley, reported:

That Joseph Borgeat, in the year 1767, settled and cultivated, as an indigo plantation, a tract of land on the west bank of the Mississippi, at the mouth of Bayou Attanobe, under the permission of the Spanish authorities. Some of the witnesses say it was granted, but the grant could only be by parcel, as no patent, or warrant of survey, registered or unregistered, or any written evidence of title, is shown ever to have existed. He continued in the occupation thereof till the year 1774, when he moved with his family to Point Coupee, leaving in possession a tenant, (Jean,) who remained there till 1779; when, by the overflowing of the Mississippi, he was compelled to leave it; from which time until after the change of government, in 1803, being about 1806, there was no person in possession. The land remained wholly unoccupied more than twenty-five years. Some of the witnesses say that Borgeat continued to claim the land, and spoke of returning to it when the country should acquire a population sufficient to keep up the levee. He died in 1788; Croyzal, Lafleur, and Grammitton prove the occupation and claim of Borgeat, and Dutton and Towles prove the abandonment of the place, and that the only settlement and cultivation was at the mouth of the bayou, within ten arpents above, and ten below.

There is no evidence that Cooley, or those under whom he claims, was in possession from 1779 till 1806, except the certificate of Judge Poydrass to one of the conveyances of the widow of Borgeat to Cooley, and that by a subsequent certificate of his, dated October 19, 1819, is explained only to mean the former settlement of Borgeat at the mouth of the bayou, as proven by others. In April, 1806, Cooley obtained from the widow of Borgeat, his mother-in-law, who, under the title of her husband, seems to have been authorized to dispose of his estate or conveyance for a tract of twenty arpents in front, viz: ten above and ten below the bayou, and forty back, and filed with the board of commissioners his claim to this tract for confirmation, which was by them rejected. It was on this tract that the settlement had been made by Borgeat; which, together with the abandonment, is stated in the report. The claim was rejected on the ground that Borgeat had forfeited all claim to the land by leaving it and establishing himself elsewhere; that he never had any other title than a naked possession; that, by the usages of the Spanish government, the governor would have granted the land to any other applicant; that the claim could not be supported by any custom of the Spanish government or any law of the United States.

Cooley, however, had obtained another conveyance from Mrs. Borgeat, in December, 1806, for twenty-five arpents in front and fifty back, lying immediately above the last-described tract, and where no settlement or cultivation had previously existed, and had filed his claim before the commissioners, including both tracts in one, procured some additional evidence, not materially, as it is thought, strengthening his claim, and, finally, in the year 1816, obtained a decision of the register and receiver of the eastern district of Louisiana, recommending it for confirmation, which was included in the act of confirmation passed May 11, 1820. [See report of confirmation, E., No. 3.] The part rejected is about 800. The tract confirmed includes that, and is, say, 2,000 acres. The register (Harper) in his letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of the 13th December, 1823, says: "He had no knowledge of the land having been granted to any one," &c.; and further explains, "that in the case of Cooley, if he had known the fact that the government of the United States had granted the land to another person, he should have reported against his claim, on the principle that the Spanish government would have re-granted it upon application during the temporary abandonment of those under whom Cooley claimed title. That not having been done, and Cooley having re-possessed himself of the land, they thought he had at least an equitable right.

The greater part of this same land has been granted by the United States to General Lafayette, under the act of March 3, 1805, and April 27, 1806, and the patent issued May 25, 1813, after the rejection of the first claim filed by Cooley for a part of the land, and during the suspension and before the confirmation of his claim for the whole. The surveys for Lafayette's grants were made in 1811. By the act of 1806, one condition upon which the grants were to issue to Lafayette was a certificate of the register that the land was not rightfully claimed by any other person, and not to include any improvements; no other certificate seems to have been made, except the report of commissioners rejecting his first claim. The other seems not to have been noticed. The second condition was supposed not to operate, because it did not appear that the improvements had been made prior to the act of 1805.

The assignee of Lafayette brought suit in the State court of Louisiana, in 1822, against Cooley, and in 1824 obtained final judgment against him in the Supreme Court, and ejected him from the land. He asks compensation for the value, with improvements.

In any view of the case which has presented itself to the committee, they have been unable to perceive the obligation of the United States to render him a pecuniary compensation either for the land or its improvements. The recovery, if correctly had, must be founded upon the fact that Cooley had no title to the land in question, and if the court were not mistaken in coming to that conclusion there would seem to be an end of his claim. If he has no title, the United States never having contracted to sell him one, or received anything from him in the shape of purchase money, there is nothing in the possession of the government to restore or make compensation for. On the other hand, if, as he asserts, he had a valid Spanish title, then the decision against him was clearly erroneous, and by prosecuting his case into the court of final resort he might have established his right. Instead of doing so, he has thought proper to acquiesce in that decision, notwithstanding his denial of its correctness, and come here for compensation. In the event of a decision against Lafayette's claim, he would probably have been permitted to make another location in lieu of it. Without going, therefore, into the propriety of the confirmation of Cooley's claim, (which may be regarded as at least very doubtful,) the committee are disposed to give him what they would have granted to General Lafayette if his location had been decided to be invalid. This is thought to be an equitable compensation, or, more properly, a donation, induced by the peculiar circumstances of his case. The committee accordingly report a bill.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 2, 1828.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Susanna McHugh, reported:

That this case was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims the last session of Congress, and after a careful investigation the committee rejected the claim, and made report thereof to the House. No additional testimony has been submitted to this committee, and they concur with the former committee in their unfavorable report.

As the report of the committee made last session has been lost or mislaid, your committee think it proper to submit a brief statement of the facts, and show their reasons for rejecting the claim.

It appears from the statement of the petitioner and the accompanying affidavits, that the husband of the petitioner (John McHugh) and his family settled and made improvements on a tract of land on White's bayou, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and State of Louisiana, in the month of March, 1813, and he and his family continued to reside thereon till December, 1814, when he joined the army under General Jackson, (as a militiaman,) to aid in the defence of New Orleans, and continued in the service of the United States till his death, on the 10th of March, 1815. Shortly after the death of her husband his widow, the petitioner, and her family, left the settlement and went to reside with her parents; that at the time the said settlement and improvements were made it was supposed they were on a large survey of D. Amas, which claim was presented against by the act of Congress of 1819.

The petitioner thinks this settlement entitles her to a grant of a tract of land as a donation, and prays Congress to grant the same. After a full examination of this case, the committee think the petitioner has not brought her claim within the provisions or principle of any act of Congress relating to donations to settlers, and that her claim is not more meritorious than thousands of others which have been rejected; that in deciding on this case the committee have been governed by the same principles by which other claims of a similar kind have been decided. To allow this claim would be doing great comparative injustice to many others whose claims have been rejected.

The committee do not think, as has been contended, that the equity of this case is recognized by the principle of the 8th section of the act of 3d of March, 1819. But if even the petitioner has furnished no evidence of the identity of the tract of land settled on, the committee are unanimously of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

APPLICATION OF MISSOURI TO BE AUTHORIZED BY LAW TO SELL THE SCHOOL LANDS AND SALT SPRINGS BELONGING TO SAID STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 5, 1829.

A MEMORIAL to Congress on the subject of the seminary and school lands and public salines.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the State of Missouri, in general assembly, respectfully represents that by the act of Congress of the United States approved 6th March, 1820, to authorize the people of Missouri Territory to form a constitution and State government, and for other purposes, the following, among other propositions, were offered to the convention to be assembled for the formation of a State government, that is to say: "That sections numbered sixteen in every township, and when such section has been sold or otherwise disposed of, other lands equivalent thereto, and as contiguous as may be, shall be granted to the State, for the use of the inhabitants of such township for the use of schools;" that all salt springs not exceeding twelve in number, with six sections of land adjoining to each, shall be granted to the said State for the use of said State, the same to be selected by the legislature of said State on or before the 1st day of January, 1825, and the same, when so selected, to be used under such terms, conditions, and regulations as the legislature of said State shall direct: Provided, That no salt spring, the right whereof now is or hereafter shall be confirmed or adjudged to any individual or individuals, shall by this section be granted to the State; and provided, also, that the legislature shall never sell or lease the same at any one time for a longer period than ten years, without the consent of Congress. That thirty-six sections, or one entire township, which shall be designated by the President of the United States, together with the other lands heretofore reserved for that purpose, shall be reserved for the use of a seminary of learning, and vested in the legislature of said State, to be appropriated solely for the use of such seminary by the legislature." That the foregoing propositions (among others) were considered and acted upon in convention of Missouri, and, by an ordinance passed July 19, 1820, were accepted by the convention, and the conditions of the aforesaid act of Congress complied with. That in relation to the lands already appropriated as above described, (with the exception of seminary lands, which exception is in consequence of these lands having been very recently designated,) the legislature of the State of Missouri, in pursuance of the trust aforesaid, and in aid of the great and important object contemplated, have resorted to various methods of rendering them productive, and in particular that of leasing them to such individuals as have applied therefor; experience, however, has fully demonstrated that this fund will be wholly unavailing in their hands in its present shape. That, in order that the beneficial and laudable objects contemplated by the grants aforesaid may be secured to the people of the State of Missouri, it will, as your memorialists conceive, be necessary that the legislature should possess the unlimited control over the lands aforesaid, with the power of disposing of them by sale. The objections which are urged against the present mode of administering this fund are, in the first place, that in consequence of the great quantity of unappropriated lands belonging to the general government in the State of Missouri on which such persons (as would otherwise be compelled to lease) can settle, the lands in question cannot be leased to advantage The expense, too, which must necessarily be incurred by creating a superintendence over them, renders them much less productive than your memorialists conceive they might be rendered if the lands were sold and the proceeds concentrated in one fund. These objections, your memorialists conceive, arise wholly from the system of granting these lands upon leases, and are such as cannot be remedied by any course of legislation whatever, if, as some have supposed, the State have not the power, under the terms of the original grant, of disposing of these lands by sale. Notwithstanding your memorialists may be of opinion that they already possess this right, yet, so long as the question shall admit of any doubt, it must of necessity have the effect to restrain its exercise. But your memorialists conceive that, the grants aforesaid being made to the people of the State of Missouri, through the medium of the legislature, for the use of the people, no limitations can have any operation further than as it shall furnish an argument against diverting this fund from its original and legitimate object. It is admitted that the grant exists in consequence of a compact, but inasmuch as the United States have received a full and valuable consideration, which formed the inducement of the grant, and inasmuch as they have not reserved to themselves any beneficial interest in the lands aforesaid, or possibility of reversion or any title whatever, it cannot be supposed that they can possess any controlling power. It may be urged, also, that inasmuch as there has been no method pointed out in respect to the manner in which this trust should be executed, that the legislature of the State of Missouri have an unlimited discretion in this respect, and may avail themselves of every possible method of producing the greatest advantage to those whom they represent. This argument, they conceive, is powerfully supported by the fact that the same act grants to the State as well the seminary and school lands in question as the salt springs and lands adjoining each; in respect to which latter the legislature are expressly restrained from selling the same or leasing them for a longer period than ten years, without the consent of Congress; and that the inference from this circumstance is direct that it was the intention of the parties to that compact that no such restraint should exist in relation to the other lands which did not come within this provision. While your memorialists have been thus particular in endeavoring to give the proper definitions of the powers they possess, in order that no conclusion may be drawn unfavorable to their claim from having made this application, they are of opinion that an act of Congress of the United States, declaratory of the extent of the grants aforesaid, will be productive of much benefit in case the legislature of the State should hereafter determine to dispose of the same; that it will have the full effect of removing every doubt in the minds of the purchasers, and thereby enhance the price which will be obtained for the same. Therefore your memorialists represent that it would be of advantage, and conduce to the future prosperity of the State of Missouri, that a law of the United States be passed declaring the authority of the State of Missouri to dispose of the said lands granted, or such as may hereafter be granted, to this State for seminary and school purposes, by sale, and that the proceeds thereof be invested in some permanent fund, the proceeds of which fund shall be applied, under the direction of the legislature, to effect the objects originally intended by the different grants, and to no other purpose whatever: Provided, That the sections numbered sixteen, and all other lands reserved for common schools in each township or fractional township in this State, shall not be sold without the consent of the inhabitants of such township or fractional township as aforesaid; and that the legislature of this State may be authorized and empowered to sell and dispose of, in fee simple, the twelve salt springs and the six sections of land adjoining to each, as hereinbefore mentioned, and apply the proceeds thereof to the purposes of education.

APPLICATION OF MISSOURI THAT THE PUBLIC LANDS CONTAINING LEAD AND IRON ORE MAY BE SOLD.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 5, 1829.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The general assembly of the State of Missouri respectfully represent that they have long witnessed, with solicitude, the policy of the general government in withholding from sale lands lying in this State represented as containing lead and iron ore; but experience has fully shown the incorrectness of this policy and its inefficiency in accomplishing the object contemplated to be effected, to wit, the advancement of value arising from the increase of population and the discovery of ore; for the enhancement thus arising is more than compensated [counterbalanced] by the depredations made on the mineral and timber. We would further represent that large tracts of fertile lands have been returned as containing mineral, upon which no mineral has ever yet been found, and we believe that the retention of those lands by the general government will be against the interest of the Union, and a material injury to the best interest of our State, in preventing large districts of our country from being settled by industrious cultivators of the soil. Your memorialists, relying upon the justice of their petition and upon your wisdom and liberality, pray that your honorable bodies will pass a law to authorize the sale of such lands lying in this State as have heretofore been withheld from sale on account of their containing lead and iron ore, upon the same conditions that other lands of the government are now sold.

Resolved, That it be made the duty of the secretary of state to forward to each of our senators and representatives in Congress a copy of this memorial.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHT TO WILLIAM CONNER, THE HUSBAND OF AN INDIAN WOMAN OF THE DELAWARE TRIBE IN INDIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 5, 1829.

Mr. HAYNE made the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary have taken into consideration the bill referred to them, "granting to William Conner the right of pre-emption to 648 acres of land;" and have examined the facts of the case so far as they are disclosed by the documents which accompany the same. The object of the bill is to vest in William Conner a tract of land in the State of Indiana, on his paying to the receiver of public moneys the sum of $810, in four equal annual instalments, the same to be applied, (through the agent of the Delaware tribe of Indians,) to satisfy the claims on said land of Mekinges, (an Indian woman, wife of said William Conner,) and of Jack Conner, Nancy Conner, Harry Conner, James Conner, and William Conner, the children of the said William Conner; the said tract of land having, by an act of Congress of 7th May, 1822, been granted to said William Conner and wife, with remainder over to the said children.

The grounds on which this application rests are briefly these: It appears that in consequence of some services rendered by said William Conner, in negotiating and carrying into effect the treaty with the Delaware tribe of Indians, made at St. Mary's, in October, 1818, (the proof of which was furnished by the certificates of Jonathan Jennings and Lewis Cass,) Congress passed the act of the 7th May, 1822, entitled "An act granting a tract of land to William Conner and wife, and to their children," by which it is enacted, "that William Conner be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to enter, with the register of the land office at Brookville, without payment, six hundred and forty acres of land, to include his improvements, at a place called the Delaware Towns, in the State of Indiana, which shall be bounded by sectional and divisional lines; and a patent shall issue for the same to the said William Conner and his wife, (an Indian woman of the Delaware tribe,) for and during the natural lives of the said William Conner and wife, jointly, and to the survivor of them during the natural life of such survivor, and to their children and legal representatives of any deceased child or children, as tenants in common, the representatives of any deceased child, taking, together, such portion of the land as such child would have been entitled to if he or she had survived the said William Conner and his said wife, and the said land to be vested in the said children and their lawful heirs, in fee simple."

It appears from the certificate of Robert Hanna, jun., register of the land office at Brookville, that William Conner did, on the 31st August, 1822, regularly enter the said land, under the aforesaid act, in behalf of himself, his wife, and children, and has, it is believed, continued in possession of it to the present time, without having taken out a patent for the same.

It further appears that on the removal of the Delaware tribe of Indians to the west of the Mississippi, the wife and children of said Conner accompanied them, leaving him in possession of said land. Under these circumstances the said William Conner now presents his petition, setting forth that the land can be of no value to the other parties to whom it was granted by the act of 7th May, 1822, inasmuch as they have all left the country, and that in consequence of the limitations contained in said act, it is of little value to him. He therefore prays that the land may be vested in him, and by the bill referred to this committee it is proposed to do so, he paying the usual government price for the same, to be distributed among the other parties having an interest therein. In support of this claim, a petition purporting to be signed by the wife and children of said Conner, and by certain persons calling themselves chiefs of the Delaware tribe, is produced, and several reasons are urged in the petition of Conner himself, to which the Senate is respectfully referred. From the whole view of the case, it appears to the committee that, however just and reasonable the prayer of the petitioner may appear to be, it would not be proper for Congress now to pass an act repealing the act of 1822, and thus attempting to divest the wife and children of William Conner of rights which it was the object of that act to vest in them, more especially as the children of said Conner are still minors, and cannot therefore lawfully give their consent to such an act. If a case can be made out to the satisfaction of any court exercising chancery jurisdiction, showing that it will be for the advantage of miners that an interest held by them in land should be converted into other property, a sale might be ordered, and in such a case proper care would be taken by the court making such order, to protect the rights and interests of the minors; but the committee apprehend that Congress possesses no power to divest such persons of their vested interests, nor do they think that it would be desirable for them to undertake to exercise such power, if they possessed it. The committee are therefore of opinion that the bill "granting to William Conner the right of pre-emption to six hundred and forty-eight acres of land," and repealing the act of 7th May, 1822, granting the same tract of land to William Conner and wife, and to their children," ought not to pass.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioner, William Conner, of the State of Indiana, respectfully represents to you that he has for many years been engaged in Indian affairs, and frequently employed by the United States. That he rendered all the service faithfully within his power to the commissioners, at the time they held the treaty with several tribes of Indians at St. Mary's, in October, 1818, for the purpose of purchasing that valuable country known by the name of "the White River Country." The purchase was made. The Indians proposed themselves to make a grant of land to your petitioner at the Delaware towns; but your petitioner, unwilling to interrupt the progress of the treaty, and upon the advice and promises made by commissioners, that they would represent his case to the United States, and procure the passage of a law vesting in him the fee-simple to the tract of land upon which he then resided at the Delaware towns, he urged the Indians to leave him out of the treaty and abandon the idea of making a grant of lands to him. Your petitioner further states that, prior to the 7th of May, 1822, a bill was reported in the Senate giving him a pre-emption right to the land in question upon his paying the government price. With such a law he would have been satisfied, and so he would now, although it would fall far short of the assurances given him by the commissioners, or that justice which he is entitled to. Your petitioner further states that, during the last war, before and since, he lived among the Indians, and fed them when they had not the means to do it; and at all times was engaged in preparing their minds for the sale of their lands to the United States. That he lived with an Indian woman as his wife till the Indians removed west of the Mississippi, when she removed with her tribe in spite of his persuasions that she should remain. Your petitioner further states that Congress, in 1822, passed a law entitled "An act granting a tract of land to William Conner, and wife, and to their children;" that he never asked for the passage of such a law; and that a grant of the land and of the character as contained in the law, he respectfully asks you not to press upon him, it will be of no use to him.

Among Indians they have no legal marriages, nor would they be recognized by the State courts; nor could proof be produced as to the descendants; nor any laws to regulate descents. The grant is therefore useless to him; and he has not, nor cannot, erect a building upon the land. That by the provisions of the before-recited act he was forced and compelled to enter the land, greatly against his inclination, with the register of the land office at Brookville; and for the obvious reason, if he failed to do so, the land would have been sold at the public sales of land in Brookville, and he should have been deprived of all prospects of Congress granting the relief due to him. The patent under the law he never applied for, and never can; and considers the fee-simple to be in the United States. Your petitioner prays Congress to take his case under consideration, and grant him such relief as the nature of the case requires. And he now declares, and hereby gives up to the United States, and releases to them, any advantages or rights, both in law and in equity, that he may have to the tract of land in question under the provisions of the before-recited act; and that if the relinquishment and release of his claim, above set forth, should be deemed insufficient, the mode and manner which may be adopted and suggested by Congress is hereby assented to.

WILLIAM CONNER,
By his agent, JOHN CONNER.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, of the Delaware tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Missouri, to whom an interest is reserved in a donation made by the United States to William Conner, of Indiana, of a section of land on White river, in the State of Indiana, humbly show that, we are now separated by a distance of upwards of seven hundred miles from the land so donated; and fear that the reservation in our favor, as it now stands, will probably not be of any avail to us; and that, for the purpose of making it of advantage to us, some of whom are just ripening into life, pray that you will authorize William Conner to release the reversion and interest given to us by the donation of the section, by paying to our friend William Marshall, now residing here, in whom we have every confidence, the Congress price for the section of land in such instalments as may be right, to be applied for our relief and benefit, in support, education, and raising; hoping that, by so doing, you will very much relieve us, and make the donation of real service to us, which we fear otherwise we will never feel; and for your kindness we will ever dutifully be thankful.

LAND OFFICE AT BROOKVILLE, August 31, 1822.

I, Robert Hanna, register, do hereby certify that William Conner hath this day entered in this office, for and in behalf of himself and his wife, an Indian woman of the Delaware tribe, and their children, or legal representatives, in pursuance of an act of Congress, approved May 7, 1822, the following described land, to wit: All that part of section twenty-three east of White river, containing 95.61 acres; and all that part of section twenty-six west of White river, containing 372.61 acres; and all that part of the northeast and northwest quarters of section twenty-six, east of White river, 137.92 acres; and all that part of section thirty-five, west of White river, containing 42.14 acres, making in the whole 648.28 acres; all of which is in township number eighteen north, in range number four east.

ROBERT HANNA, JR., Register.

WASHINGTON, January 20, 1823.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiries respecting Conner, I beg leave to state that he was very useful at the treaty of St. Mary's, and that, without his exertions, perhaps no cession could have been obtained. Certainly he might have prevented the execution of the treaty. His influence, however, was zealously exerted to promote the views of the government.

My recollection with respect to the circumstances of his case is rather indistinct, but I believe he was requested not to permit the Indians to urge a claim for land in his favor, and assured that his case should be favorably represented by the commissioners to the government.

I am, dear sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEWIS CASS.

General NOBLE, United States Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 27, 1823.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have to state that John and William Conner were both at the treaty of St. Mary's, in 1818; one as Indian interpreter, regularly in the employ of the government, and the other employed by himself for the particular occasion. Both those individuals have been intermarried with Indian women, and each have had offspring; the latter at least two children, if no more. Both the Conners, finding that reserves of land would be made in favor of other individuals situated like themselves, imparted to me their intentions to participate with the others in those reservations of land. From this purpose I dissuaded them, and John was induced not to interfere, upon an assurance that provision would be made to cover a claim he had against the Delaware Indians. The other (William Conner) was likewise induced to withdraw his pretensions, upon assurance that he should have his case particularly presented to the government, and I gave him the personal assurance that, with regard to the land he had improved, I would favor his claim in any shape he would prefer.

I have no hesitation in stating that those two individuals had it in their power to have prevented any purchase of Indian title to lands on the waters of the White river, unless, if it had been required, a large reserve had been made in their favor, owing to the connexion made with the titles of the Delaware and Miamies tribes by the treaty of 1809, at Fort Wayne.

I am, with much respect, your obedient servant,

JONATHAN JENNINGS.

APPLICATION OF CITIZENS OF MICHIGAN FOR LAND FOR A POOR-HOUSE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 5, 1829.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of certain citizens of the Territory of Michigan, praying for the grant of a township of land for the erection of a poor-house, and for the deposit of such paupers as have gained no settlements in the several towns and counties of said Territory, reported:

Pauperism is an evil which has ever existed in the best regulated governments and the most flourishing communities. As it cannot be avoided, all civilized nations have made some public provision for the maintenance of those who, from their age or infirmity, are unable to support themselves.

In this country the support of the poor, excepting those who have become invalids in the public service, is not a subject of national legislation, but is under the provision of the State laws and municipal regulations. Hence it is that State and local taxes for the maintenance of the poor are as common as those for the support of State governments or the more limited jurisdictions and concerns.

Appropriations of the public lands have not unfrequently been made for the promotion of education and the construction of roads and canals; but these are objects of public importance, and in which the nation itself has an interest and concern. The maintenance of the poor has ever been regarded as a duty of a private and local character, and for which each State, county, or town is liable for its own particular share.

It is true that, from local situations or pecular circumstances, some sections of the country may be more encumbered with the indigent than others. Such inequalities are, however, generally transient and fluctuating; but when they are of a more permanent nature, other causes most commonly exist, as the disbursement of public money, the resort of travel, the thoroughfare of business, the facilities to wealth, and other advantages sufficient to counterbalance the ostensible disparity of the burdened.

The petition represents that two-thirds of the paupers are either emigrants from other States or discharged soldiers and seamen, or the widows and orphans of such from the United States army and navy, and a great share of the other third are foreigners. From these facts the petitioners infer the justice and equality of a claim upon the general government for assistance and relief, and pray for the grant of a township of land in the Territory of Michigan for the purpose of erecting a poor-house in the county of Wayne, and for supporting the above description of paupers.

The committee, however, are not aware of any such great peculiarity in the above description of paupers, or in the excess of their number, as should entitle the Territory of Michigan to the peculiar bounty of government, and recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the above petition be not granted.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 5, 1829.

Mr. EARLL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Young, of Louisiana, reported:

That the petitioner "represents that he emigrated to said State (then a Territory) in 1782 from Virginia, where he has remained ever since, pursuing his business as a farmer." The petitioner further "represents that during the revolutionary struggle he was among the first who stepped forward in defence of his country's rights; that he fought under Messrs. Ritchie, Cannon, and Crawford; that he was hurt at Sandusky plains in June, 1782, and that he furnished himself; for all of which services the petitioner states that he has never received the smallest compensation from his government." The petitioner prays for that "remuneration which has been guarantied to so many under similar circumstances;" and that he "may have confirmed to him the title to the land mentioned in an annexed petition and order of survey." The petition mentioned by the applicant is one from himself to Estavari Miro, the then Spanish governor of Louisiana, dated at New Orleans the 6th day of March, 1790, in which the petitioner stated that he was an inhabitant of Opelousas, and had then been settled there seven years. That he had no lands whereon to establish himself, and prayed for a grant to him of six hundred arpents of land on Buffalo creek, in the district of Natchez. Accompanying this petition is the copy of an order of survey from Governor Miro, dated New Orleans, April 27, 1790, directing the surveyor of the province to locate the said six hundred square arpents of land petitioned for, in the place designated by the petitioner.

There is no evidence before the committee but the statement of the petitioner that any revolutionary services were performed by him. The only question, therefore, in the opinion of the committee, that they are called upon to decide is, whether the petitioner is or is not entitled to lands under the order of survey from the Spanish governor. The order of survey was upon the express condition of making the road and the requisite clearing within a year, and that the grant was to be void and null if, at the expiration of three years, the land should not be settled; and the petitioner was not to sell within that space of time. There is no evidence before the committee of the lands having been surveyed pursuant to the order of survey, or of the petitioner's having made the road and requisite clearing, or of the lands having been settled at the expiration of three years from the date of the order of survey, or that the petitioner did not sell said land within said space of time. It does not appear that the petitioner ever inhabited or cultivated the land mentioned in the order of survey. There is no reason assigned by the petitioner for not presenting his claim to the commissioners appointed to settle land claims in Louisiana, nor is there any evidence that the paper purporting to be an order of survey from Governor Miro is genuine. The committee are, therefore, of the opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

PRIVATE CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 7, 1829.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom the petition and documents of Isidore Moore, of Missouri, were referred, reported:

That on the 1st of June, 1797, Don Zenon Trudeau, then lieutenant governor of the country now formed into the State of Missouri, granted to Thomas Fenwick, an American emigrant, who still resides in Missouri, a tract of five hundred arpents of land, French superficial measure, to be located between Apple creek and Cinge Hommes creek, in the present county of Perry, in the State of Missouri.

The land granted lies within a tract of country upon which the Spanish government permitted a remnant of the old Shawnee nation of Indians to settle after their defeat and dispersion by the United States.

Owing to this usufructuary claim and actual occupation by the Shawnees, Fenwick, the grantee, made no actual location or settlement on the land, but betook himself to some other occupation.

On the 22d of May, 1813, the petitioner, who is a farmer by occupation, with a large family, purchased the claim from Fenwick; and in the following spring, by permission of the Shawnees, settled upon the land authorized to be occupied by the grant, and has resided there ever since, and now has a large plantation and other improvements upon it. When the petitioner purchased and settled this land there was no other lawful mode of acquiring land in Missouri but by means of the Spanish titles, most of which were in an incomplete state when the United States acquired Louisiana. No land office was opened in Missouri until the year 1818, and the law giving other lands in lieu of those injured by earthquakes had not then been passed.

The Apple creek band of Shawnees above alluded to have sometime since been removed by the United States far to the southwest, and the country upon which they resided, lying on the road from St. Louis to Cape Girardeau, within the strongest settlements of the Americans, is in a course of being brought into market as other public lands.

The petitioner laid his claim before the district court of Missouri for decision, under the law of 1824.

That court has no power to confirm a concession situated as this is, never having been located until 1814, and not yet surveyed; and the petitioner withdrew his claim from the court and applies to Congress.

The committee believe that Spain would confirm this claim if she had retained the country. The only obstacle to its being surveyed and occupied within the time contemplated by the grant arose from the act of humanity of the Spanish government in permitting that dispersed band of the Shawnees to occupy the ground granted to Fenwick. That obstacle has since been removed by the consent of the occupants, and the subsequent extinction of their claim by the United States. The committee therefore report a bill to confirm the claim of the petitioner.

FRAUD IN THE LOCATION OF A CANADIAN BOUNTY LAND WARRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 7, 1829.

Mr. JENNINGS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of the 19th instant, instructing the Committee on Private Land Claims to inquire into the expediency of allowing Minor Thomas to locate four hundred and eighty acres of land, as the assignee of Abraham Cutter, late a second lieutenant in the corps of Canadian volunteers, reported:

That the said Cutter, who obtained for his services a bounty land warrant, No. 93, for the four hundred and eighty acres of land aforesaid, conveyed the same to James Hair, of Ohio, by a deed bearing date the 9th of October, 1817; that said Hair conveyed the said warrant to Abraham McCollock, of Virginia, by deed bearing date the 29th of June, 1818, and that the warrant aforesaid was again conveyed by deed on the 22d day of May, 1821, by the said Abraham McCollock to his sons, Ebenezer McCollock and William McCollock, jr., the latter of whom empowered his brother, Ebenezer, to locate the said warrant, which was accordingly done, and a patent thereon issued to the brothers, as assignees, on the 6th of October, 1823.

It likewise appears, from the documents referred to the committee, that the aforesaid Cutter, upon the allegation that the aforesaid land warrant, No. 93, was unlawfully withheld from him by his agent, obtained a certificate signed by Josiah Meigs, late a Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 17th of July, 1820, purporting to authorize the said Cutter to locate the aforesaid four hundred and eighty acres of land; that notwithstanding the said Cutter had conveyed his land warrant for the said four hundred and eighty acres on the 9th of October, 1817, he assigned the certificate thus fraudulently obtained to Minor Thomas on the 16th of July, 1825, who now asks, as the assignee of said Cutter, to locate four hundred and eighty acres of land, by virtue of the certificate aforesaid.

The act of Congress approved March 5, 1816, granting bounties in land and extra pay to certain Canadian volunteers, authorizes the location of such bounties in land only upon warrants issued by the Secretary for the Department of War. The said Minor Thomas asks to be allowed to locate the four hundred and eighty acres of land on the ground that the register of the local land office advised him that a location of the land could be made upon the aforesaid certificate.

In the opinion of the committee, the unauthorized acts of its agents cannot render the United States government responsible for consequences resulting from individual contracts; nor does it appear that the said Thomas has made any legal exertion to obtain reparation for the fraud practiced upon him by said Cutter.

CLAIM TO LAND ON HABITATION AND CULTIVATION IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 9, 1829.

Mr. VINTON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom were referred the petitions of James Porlier, Alexander Gardipier, Jean Battiste Vine, and Joseph Jourdin, praying to be confirmed in certain lands at Green Bay, in the Territory of Michigan, reported:

The committee have examined the depositions and proofs in support of the claims of the petitioners, and ascertain that they are founded upon habitation and cultivation in 1812. By reference to the act of Congress of 21st of February, 1823, it will be perceived that "every person who, on the 1st day of July, 1812, was a resident of Green Bay, Prairie du Chien, or within the county of Michilimackinac, and who, on the said day, occupied and cultivated, or occupied a tract of land, which had previously been cultivated by said occupant, lying within either of said settlements, and who had continued to submit to the authority of the United States, or the legal representatives of such person, shall be confirmed in the tract so occupied and cultivated," &c., with a proviso annexed that no person shall be confirmed in a greater quantity than six hundred and forty acres.

It is alleged by the petitioners that in the year 1823, whilst others claiming lands under the provisions of the above-mentioned act forwarded their entries and testimony to the commissioners at Detroit, according to the provisions of the act, and who, in 1828, had their lands confirmed to them under the report of the commissioners and the act of Congress of the last session, they were, at the time, absent from home, as well as some of their witnesses, and were unable to prepare and forward the necessary proofs of their titles to said lands; that it being late in the fall, and no direct communication being then open between Detroit and Green Bay, the petitioners were unavoidably prevented from forwarding their claims in season for the inspection and consideration of the commissioners, in consequence of which their claims were not confirmed.

The committee consider that the proofs in support of the claims of the petitioners would have been sufficient to have procured them a confirmation by the commissioners, and by the act of Congress of the last session, had they been presented in time to the commissioners to have had them embodied in their reports. This, however, they failed to do; but, satisfied as the committee are of the difficulties which the petitioners labored under, from being upwards of five hundred miles from where the commissioners held their sessions, as well as from the difficulty of sending their papers at a late period in the season, when the ordinary channels of communication were closed by ice, added to the absence of the petitioners from home at the time, they are convinced that there has not been that kind of negligence on the part of the petitioners which should exclude them from a participation of the same rights and privileges which have been extended by government to others whose claims were based upon precisely the same principles. The testimony produced by the petitioners has satisfied the committee, not only that they inhabited and cultivated the lands which they ask to be confirmed in on the 1st day of July, 1812, and even some time previous, but that they had continued to submit to the authority of the United States; and in conformity with these views they herewith report a bill.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 715. [2D SESSION.

CORRECTION OF AN ERROR AT THE LAND OFFICE AT CINCINNATI, OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 12, 1829.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Henry Case," reported:

That from information received at the General Land Office it appears that Henry Case purchased the northeast quarter of section No. 2, township 8, range 2 west, of the land sold at Cincinnati the 17th day of July, 1813, at two dollars per acre. That this quarter section, by the surveyor general's return, contains 158.3 acres. That at the time of sale, by a mistake of the register, it was stated to contain only 123.58 acres. Mr. Case paid for this latter quantity, and received of the register a final certificate, which was presented at the Land Office for a patent, on comparing which with the surveyor general's return the mistake of the register was discovered, and the certificate returned him, who informed Mr. Case of the mistake and of the quantity of land contained in the quarter section. "In conformity with the law and the usage of the office," Mr. Case was required to pay for the 34.72 acres of surplus land before a patent would issue, which he refused. Mr. Case has since demanded of the Secretary of the Land Office a patent for the said quarter section, without paying for the said surplus, which the Secretary refused to issue till such payment should be made.

The said bill requires the Secretary of the Land Office to deliver to Case a patent for said quarter section without paying for the said surplus of 34.72 acres.

The act of the 11th of February, 1805, declares that each section or subdivision of a section of the public lands returned by the surveyor general "shall be held to contain the exact quantity expressed in such return."

This act was evidently intended to put an end to disputes about the quantity of sections and parts of sections of the public lands and make it obligatory on the Secretary to issue his patent for the quantity contained in such returns, and consequently to require payment for the quantity contained in the return previously to issuing the patent. And such has been the construction put on the act, and the practice under it, since its enactment.

It is not pretended on the part of Case that the quarter section does not contain 158.3 acres, but that the Secretary of the Land Office has no authority to correct the mistake and compel him to pay for the surplus.

The committee find that it has been the uniform practice of the land department to correct all such mistakes which may be discovered before a patent is issued, whether for or against the purchaser, and in conformity to this practice Case has been required to make the full payment required of him. From its being formed in the strictest justice, and its long and uniform observance, we think this practice as well as the law fully authorized and required the Secretary to take the course which he has taken in this case; that he has no discretionary authority in such matters, and was forbidden, by the law and practice adverted to, to comply with Case's demand.

In support of the principle on which Case rests his claim, he has introduced the case of James Reeves.—(See Senate Report No. 614, page 7.) This was an application to correct a mistake which was discovered after the patent issued, and, so far from supporting it, militates directly against Case's claim.

This claim is made against the law and the usage of the department relating to such cases. It is also against every principle of justice and equity. There is no dispute about the quantity of the land, or the price to be paid. Case has been required to pay only for the quantity of land he actually received at the price per acre he had bidden, as all other purchasers had been required to do. This he refuses, but asks to have the Secretary compelled to issue a patent to him for land which he has not paid for, and to which he has no claim whatever. To grant such a demand would only be regarded as an invitation to thousands of applications of a similar kind, and we think it would be the best policy to leave such matters to be settled agreeably to the laws and usages of the department, as they have heretofore been.

The committee have been able to find only a single case in which such a request has been allowed, viz: that of Jacob Hampton, and they think this act was passed through mere inadvertence or a misunderstanding of the case.

The committee have been particular in their objection to this claim on account of the principle involved, and not on account of the amount. They are of opinion the bill ought not to pass, and therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill from Senate entitled "An act for the relief of Henry Case" be rejected.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 27, 1828.

SIR: I return the memorandum and report left by you to-day at this office, and have to inform you that the refusal of the register to issue a certificate to Mr. Case, until he paid for the excess of land contained in the quarter section purchased by him, being approved, the agent of Mr. Case was advised that it would be necessary to make application to Congress.

I beg leave to refer you to the act of the 11th of February, 1805, to show that by law the public lands are to be sold in conformity to the surveyor's return. In the case of Mr. Case no error existed in the survey as returned; the mistake was in the register, who charged for less land than was contained in the surveyor's return, and Mr. Case was called upon to refund the difference. Had the mistake been made against Mr. Case, and he had been charged for more land than was returned by the surveyor, the difference would have been refunded to him, provided the mistake had been discovered previous to the issuing of a patent. This practice of the office is believed to be entirely in conformity to the law. After a patent has issued no error, whether in favor or against the purchaser, is corrected, except under the express authority of law. Congress is, of course, entirely competent to relieve individuals from any claim which the government may have against them; and in the case of Mr. Hampton, referred to in Mr. Symmes's letter, one somewhat similar to that of Mr. Case, an act was passed for his relief, but these special cases are not considered as changing the general principle of the law to which the practice of this office conforms.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEO. GRAHAM.

CHEROKEE RESERVATION CONFIRMED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 12, 1829.

Mr. SHEPPERD, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom were referred the petitions of Joseph Elliott, Peggy Stephens, the wife of Sutton Stephens, formerly Peggy Elliott, and Connooluskee or Challenge, reported:

That by the eighth article of the treaty concluded between the government of the United States and the Cherokee nation of Indians on the 8th day of July, 1817, a donation for life of six hundred and forty acres of land is made to such of the heads of Indian families residing on the east side of the Mississippi as might be desirous of becoming citizens of the United States, with an express reservation of the fee-simple in said lands to their children. The petitioners are donees for life under the above-mentioned provision of the said treaty, and ask that the fee-simple in said reservations may be transferred to, and vested in, themselves; and as an inducement to the granting of this request, they are shown to be individuals of industrious habits, and ordinarily discreet and prudent in the management of their interests. But as the committee do not think the present application resolves itself into a mere question of expediency, they deem it unnecessary to enter into a grave consideration of the reasons offered by the petitioners; for a bare statement of the principle involved in the inquiry will at once show that either legislation is unnecessary, or that it would be a violent attempt to interfere with private vested rights, by seeking to take from one individual to give to another; for if it be said that the grant to the father or mother for life, with a reservation in fee to the children, is a mere term of limitation, then the inheritance of said lands would be already in the parent, and consequently would dispense with the necessity of legislation. But the committee by no means assent to such a construction; but think that, from the evident design of the treaty, as well as from the particular phraseology employed, the fee-simple reserved to the children is an estate which they take as purchasers, or a description of persons intended to be ascertained and particularly provided for; that therefore they do not claim by descent, although a life estate be given to the parents; nor is their interest in any other way connected with, or dependent upon, the previous life estate, except in relation to the condition of occupancy and improvement, which extends to and qualifies the entire grant, both for life and in fee. Nor are these reservations in fee-simple any longer contingent, even if any of them were so at the date of the treaty; for, upon inquiry, the committee are well assured that all the petitioners have children, in whom the reservations have vested; and that their parents, the petitioners, have no color of right in asking Congress to attempt the absurdity of giving to them what has already, by a solemn act of the government, been given to their offspring. But from the representations made of the characters and dispositions of the petitioners, the committee, in obedience to many precedents to be found in the laws of the United States, are induced to relieve the petitioners, by providing against the forfeiture of their life estates by removal from the same; and for that purpose they report a bill, therein carefully guarding against any inference of an intention to interfere with the respective rights of the parents and their children.

APPLICATION FOR LAND FOR THE CUMBERLAND HOSPITAL.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 12, 1829.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution instructing them to inquire into the expediency of granting to the Cumberland Hospital, at Smithland, (mouth of the Cumberland river,) one-half of a township of land in the State of Illinois, for the benefit of said institution, reported:

That Smithland is represented as a thriving village of considerable mercantile business, and where a large portion of the produce and merchandise that pass up and down the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers is deposited. At this place many of the larger class of steamboats lay up during the time of low water, in the summer and autumn, which is the most unhealthy season of the year. Many persons, from different States, engaged in navigating these waters are taken sick, and require charity and public assistance for their necessary relief and support. It is further represented that the State of Kentucky has granted the sum of four thousand dollars for the establishment and support of this institution; that a commodious building has been erected; that the public funds are now exhausted, and no further assistance can be expected from the State; therefore an application is made to Congress for the grant of half a township of unappropriated land for the benefit of said hospital.

The support of the poor is a duty enjoined by the dictates of humanity, as well as by the positive law of all civilized nations. In this country the provision for the maintenance of the poor has ever been under the direction of State laws and municipal regulations; and, except in the case of those who may become invalids in the public service, it has never been regarded as the proper subject of national legislation.

Appropriations of public lands have not unfrequently been made for the promotion of education, and the construction of roads and canals; but these are objects of public importance, in which the people at large have a common interest, and from which the nation itself is presumed to derive a benefit. The maintenance of the poor, however, is a duty of a private and local character, creating no general interest, and can better be performed by the respective States, counties, and towns, in which paupers may happen to reside or have a settlement.

Smithland, like many other towns, is, from its peculiar local situation, exposed to a large share of paupers from abroad. It also enjoys peculiar privileges; and derives a profit from its being the resort of travel, the thoroughfare of business, and the depot of produce and merchandise for a large extent of country.

If a grant of land should be made to the Cumberland Hospital, other institutions of a similar character would urge their claims for like donations, and a door would be open to numerous applications for the public lands to aid in the support of the sick and indigent. The committee are of opinion that it would be inexpedient to make the grant of the half township of land, as contemplated in the resolution.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 13, 1829.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of the undersigned, citizens of the State of Missouri, respectfully showeth: That at the last session of Congress an act was passed wherein, amongst other things, it was provided that the time for filing petitions under the act of the 26th May, 1824, entitled "An act to enable claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," should be extended one year longer, to wit: until the twenty-sixth day of May, 1829; and in said act it was also provided that any confirmation to be made under said act was to be of no effect at law or in equity against any title anterior in date to the date of said confirmation.

Your petitioners show that it is highly important to them that the time so given by the act of last session should be further extended in order to protect them and the numerous other claimants of unconfirmed lands in Missouri and Arkansas from the heavy expense of a decree against them and an appeal from that decree to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Your petitioners show that an appeal is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the widow and heirs of Soulard vs. The United States, the decision in which, as your petitioners believe, will establish principles which must necessarily control the district court of the United States in Missouri in its adjudication of the claims of your petitioners; that said district court, according to the doctrine applied by it in the above case of Soulard's heirs, must pronounce a decree against the right of your petitioners; and, as your petitioners firmly believe, against every unconfirmed claim derived from concession or order of survey in Missouri. Your petitioners respectfully show that the appeal in said case of Soulard's heirs vs. The United States will probably be heard at the ensuing session of the Supreme Court, and that the decision of said court thereon will probably be had at the same session or at the session following.

Your petitioners further show that it is important to them that the provision hereinbefore mentioned respecting the nullity of a decree of confirmation, as between the confirmee and persons claiming under anterior titles, should be modified so as to exclude all titles subsequent in date and inception to the date of the concession or order of survey upon which, in each case, the claim to confirmation shall be founded. Your petitioners show that this modification is rendered peculiarly necessary in the State of Missouri, in which New Madrid certificates have been located on various unconfirmed tracts, and which, although long subsequent to the date of the concession or survey, might possibly be construed by the said district court of the United States and by the State courts in Missouri to be, as respects a confirmation under the act of the last session, an anterior and a paramount title.

In this view your petitioners pray that your honorable body will, by such an act as to its wisdom shall seem proper, grant them suitable relief.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

AUGUSTE CHOUTEAU and others.

REMISSION OF PRICE OF LAND ABOVE THE MINIMUM VALUE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 14, 1829.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Amos Howe, praying for relief in the payment of money contracted for the purchase of a fractional section of land in the Territory of Michigan, reported:

From the petition and the evidence submitted, it appears that on the 10th day of July, 1818, at a public sale of government lands, held at Detroit, one Amasa Bagley bid off, in his name, the fractional section No. 21, township No. 4 south, of range No. 9 east, containing $103\frac{54}{100}$ acres, at the rate of four dollars per acre, for which he paid the first instalment, being one-fourth of the purchase money; that at the time said land was sold the register at Detroit, under a misapprehension of the law, stated that the minimum price of sections Nos. 15, 21, and 22, in all the townships, was four dollars per acre, and limited the land in said sections at that sum, when in fact the price was established by law at two dollars per acre. The committee have no doubt that the aforesaid fractional section was put up by the register and receiver at four dollars, and not at two dollars, per acre as the minimum price. At the time of the sale, and for a year or more previous to the same, the petitioner was in the possession of said fractional section, and has ever since continued to occupy the same. After the purchase, the petitioner and one Tyler Bingham, who was his partner, but has since left the country, as the assignees of the aforesaid Bagley, obtained a further credit on the balance of the purchase money, under the act of the 2d of March, 1821. Although the purchase was made in the name of Bagley, yet the committee have good reason to believe that it was made for the benefit of the petitioner, or the petitioner and his said partner. The petitioner was poor, and still continues so; has ever occupied the land as his own, and is the only one who is known to take any interest and concern in it. Bagley was a man of property, and about the time of the purchase was in the habit of advancing money for purchasers, and taking the certificates in his own name as security. The petitioner, therefore, may be considered as the real purchaser in equity, and entitled to the same rights as if the purchase had been made in his name.

Other lands of the same value, and in the immediate vicinity of the above fractional section, were sold at two dollars per acre; and it was the improvements that had been made by the petitioner previous to the sale, and not the extra value of the land, that induced the purchase at double that sum. The committee are of opinion that the extra amount of the purchase money over the legal minimum price should be relinquished by the government; and for this purpose they report a bill.

The committee are also informed, by documents from the General Land Office, that there are a few cases in the land district of Detroit similar to that of Amos Howe, and recommend the adoption of the second section of the aforesaid bill for their relief.

QUANTITY AND QUALITY OF INUNDATED LANDS IN LOUISIANA, THE COST OF RECLAIMING THEM, AND THEIR VALUE WHEN RECLAIMED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 15, 1829.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the information required by a resolution of the House of the 24th of December last, in relation to lands on the Mississippi, in the State of Louisiana, which are rendered unfit for cultivation by the inundations of said river.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 14, 1829.

SIR: In obedience to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 24th of December last, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to "communicate to the House any information in his possession, showing the quantity and quality of the public lands in the State of Louisiana which are rendered unfit for cultivation from the inundations of the Mississippi, the value of said lands when reclaimed, and the probable cost of reclaiming them," I have the honor to transmit, herewith, a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 12th instant, the statements and views contained in which are deemed to be of much interest on the subject embraced by the resolution.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

RICHARD RUSH.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives of the United States.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 12, 1829.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, "directing the Secretary of the Treasury to communicate to this House any information in his possession, showing the quantity and quality of the public lands in the State of Louisiana which are rendered unfit for cultivation from the inundations of the Mississippi, and the value of said lands when reclaimed, and the probable cost of reclaiming them," I have the honor to report that the Mississippi, in its course between the 33d degree of north latitude, the northern boundary of Louisiana, and the Gulf of Mexico, inundates, when at its greatest height, a tract of country the superficial area of which may be estimated at 5,429,260 acres; that portion of the country thus inundated which lies below the 31st degree of latitude may be estimated at 3,183,580 acres; and that portion above the 31st degree of north latitude may be estimated at 2,245,680 acres, of which 398,000 acres lie in the State of Mississippi. This estimate includes the whole of the country which is subject to inundation by the Mississippi and the waters of the Gulf. A portion of this area, however, including both banks of the Mississippi from some distance below New Orleans to Baton Rouge, and the west bank nearly up to the 31st degree of latitude, and both sides of the Lafourche for about fifty miles from the Mississippi, has, by means of levees or embankments, been reclaimed at the expense of individuals. The strips of land thus reclaimed are of limited extent; and, estimating their amount as equal to the depth of forty acres on each side of the Mississippi and Lafourche for the distance above stated, they will amount to about 500,000 acres, which, deducted from 3,183,580 acres, will leave the quantity of 2,683,580 acres, below the 31st degree of latitude, which is now subject to annual or occasional inundations; this, added to the quantity of inundated lands above the 31st degree of latitude, makes the whole quantity of lands within the area stated, and not protected by embankments, equal to 4,929,160 acres.

By deepening and clearing out the existing natural channels, and by opening other artificial ones, through which the surplus water that the bed of the Mississippi is not of sufficient capacity to take off may be discharged into the Gulf, with the aid of embankments and natural or artificial reservoirs, and by the use of machinery (worked in the commencement by steam, and as the country becomes open and cleared of timber, by wind mills) to take off the rainwater that may fall during the period that the Mississippi may be above its natural banks, it is believed that the whole of this country may be reclaimed, and made in the highest degree productive.

The immense value of this district of country when reclaimed is not to be estimated so much by the extent of its superficies as by the extraordinary and inexhaustible quality of the soil, the richness of its products, and the extent of the population which it would be capable of sustaining. Every acre of this land lying below the 31st degree of north latitude might be made to produce three thousand weight of sugar; and the whole of it is particularly adapted to the production of the most luxuriant crops of rice, indigo, and cotton. Good sugar lands on the Mississippi, partially cleared, may be estimated as worth $100 per acre, and rapidly advancing in value. The rice lands of South Carolina, from their limited quantity, are of greater value. It is believed that the exchangeable value of the maximum products of these lands, when placed in a high state of cultivation, would be adequate to the comfortable support of 2,250,000 people, giving a population of one individual for every two acres; and it is highly probable that the population would rapidly accumulate to such an extent as to banish every kind of labor from agriculture except that of the human species, as is now the case in many of the best districts of China; and this result would also have been produced in many parts of Holland, had not that country become, from the nature of its climate, a grazing country.

The alluvial lands of Louisiana may be divided into two portions: the first, extending from the 33d to the 31st degree of north latitude, in a direction west of south, may be termed the upper plain, is 120 miles in length, and generally from 25 to 30 miles in breadth, and, at particular points, is of still greater width. That portion below the 31st degree of north latitude may be termed the lower plain. It extends in a direction from northwest to southeast for about 240 miles, to the mouth of the Mississippi; is compressed at its northern point, but, opening rapidly, it forms at its base a semicircle, as it protrudes into the Gulf of Mexico, of 200 miles in extent, from the Chafalaya to the Rigolets. The elevation of the plain at the 33d degree of north latitude, above the common tide waters of the Gulf of Mexico, must exceed one hundred and thirty feet.

This plain embraces lands of various descriptions, which may be arranged into four classes:

The first class, which is probably equal in quantity to two-thirds of the whole, is covered with heavy timber and an almost impenetrable undergrowth of cane and other shrubbery. This portion, from natural causes, is rapidly drained as fast as the waters retire within their natural channels, and, possessing a soil of the greatest fertility, tempts the settler after a few years of low water to make an establishment, from which he is driven off by the first extraordinary flood.

The second class consists of cypress swamps: these are basins, or depressions of the surface, from which there is no natural outlet, and which, filling with water during the floods, remain covered by it until the water is evaporated, or is gradually absorbed by the earth. The beds of these depressions being very universally above the common low-water mark of the rivers and bayous, they may be readily drained, and would then be more conveniently converted into rice fields than any other portions of the plain.

The third class embraces the sea marsh, which is a belt of land extending along the Gulf of Mexico, from the Chafalya to the Rigolets. This belt is but partially covered by the common tides, but is subject to inundation from the high waters of the Gulf during the autumnal equinoctial gales; it is generally without timber.

The fourth class consists of small bodies of prairie lands dispersed through different portions of the plain: these pieces of land, generally the most elevated spots, are without timber, but of great fertility.

The alluvial plain of Louisiana, and that of Egypt, having been created by the deposit of large rivers watering immense extents of country, and disemboguing themselves into shallow oceans moderately elevated by the tide, but which, from the influence of the winds, are constantly tending in a rapid manner to throw up obstructions at the mouths of all water-courses emptying into them, it is fairly to be inferred that the alluvial plain of Egypt has, in time past, been as much subject to inundation from the waters of the Nile, as that of Louisiana now is from those of the Mississippi; and that the floods of the Nile have not only been controlled and restricted within its banks by the labor and ingenuity of man, but have been regulated and directed to the irrigation and improvement of the soil of the adjacent plain; a work better entitled to have been handed down to posterity by the erection of those massive monuments, the pyramids of Egypt, than any other event that could have occurred in the history of that country.

That the labor and ingenuity of man are adequate to produce the same results in relation to the Mississippi river and the plain of Louisiana is a position not to be doubted; and it is believed that there are circumstances incident to the topography of this plain that will facilitate such results.

The Mississippi river, entering this plain at the 33d degree of north latitude, crosses it diagonally to the highlands a little below the mouth of the Yazoo; from thence it winds along the highlands of the States of Mississippi and Louisiana to Baton Rouge, leaving in this distance the alluvial lands on its western bank; from a point a little below Baton Rouge, it takes an easterly course through the alluvial plain and nearly parallel to the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, until it reaches the English Turn; and from thence, bending to the south, it disembogues itself into the Gulf of Mexico by six or seven different channels. The banks of the Mississippi, which are but two or three feet above common tide water near its mouth, gradually ascend with the plain, of which they constitute the highest ridges to the 33d degree of north latitude, where they are elevated above the low-water mark of the river from thirty to forty feet. The banks are, however, subject to be overflowed throughout this distance, except at those points protected by levees or embankments; this arises from a law incident to running water-courses of considerable length, which is, that the floods in them acquire their greatest elevation as you approach a point nearly equidistant from their mouths and sources. The depth of the Mississippi is from 120 to 200 feet, decreasing as you approach very near the mouth to a moderate depth. Exclusive of a number of small bayous, there are three large natural canals or channels by which the surplus waters of the Mississippi are taken off to the Gulf. The first of these above New Orleans is Lafourche, which, leaving the river at Donaldsonville, reaches the Gulf in a tolerably direct course of about 90 miles. The Lafourche is about 100 yards wide; its bed is nearly on a level with the low-water mark where it leaves the river; its banks are high and protected by slight levees, and in high floods it takes off a large column of water. Above Lafourche, the Bayou Manchac, or Iberville, connecting with the Lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain, takes off into the Gulf through the Rigolets and other passes a considerable portion of the surplus water of the Mississippi; the bed of this bayou is 14 feet above the level of the low water of the Mississippi, and as it reaches tide water in a much shorter distance than the Mississippi itself, it would take off a large column of water if its channel was not very much obstructed.* Nearly opposite to Manchac, but lower down the river, is Bayou Plaquemine, a cut-off from the Mississippi to the Chafalaya; but as there is a considerable declination in this part of the plain of the alluvial lands, and being unobstructed in its passage, it is rapid and takes off a large body of water; where it leaves the river, however, its bed is five feet above the level of the low-water mark. About 88 miles above Manchac, and just below the 31st degree of latitude, is the Chafalaya. This is one of the ancient channels of the Mississippi river, and, being very deep, carries off at all times great quantities of water, and were its obstructions removed it would probably carry off a much larger quantity. As the distance from the point where the Chafalaya leaves the Mississippi along its channel to the Gulf is only 132 miles, and that which the Mississippi traverses from the point of separation to the Gulf is 318 miles, it is evident that a given column of water may be passed off in much less time through the channel of the latter stream. From this topographical description of that portion of the plain south of the 31st degree of latitude, it is evident that, independent of the general and gradual declination of this plain descending with the Mississippi, it also has a more rapid declination towards the Lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain on the east, and towards the valley of the great Lake of Attakapas on the west; and it may, as to its form and configuration, be compared to the convex surface of a flattened scollop shell, having one of its sides very much curved, and the surface of the other somewhat indented. There is, therefore, good reason to believe that by conforming to the unerring indications of nature, and aiding her in those operations which she has commenced, this plain may be reclaimed from inundation.

The quantity of water which has been drawn off from the Mississippi through the Iberville, the Bayou Lafourche, and the Chafalaya, has so reduced the volume of water which passes off through the Mississippi proper that individual enterprise has been enabled to throw up embankments along the whole course of that river, from a point a little below that where the Chafalaya leaves the Mississippi nearly to its mouth, and for forty or fifty miles on each side of the Lafourche. The lands thus reclaimed will not, however, average forty acres in depth fit for cultivation, and may be estimated at four hundred thousand acres. This is certainly the most productive body of land in the United States, and will be in a very short period, if it is not at present, as productive as any other known tract of country of equal extent.

If the waters drawn off in any given time from the Mississippi, through the natural channels now formed, were delivered into the Gulf through those channels in the same given time, then they would not overflow their natural banks, and the adjacent lands would be reclaimed. But this is not the fact; and the object can only be accomplished by increasing the capacity and numbers of outlets of the natural channels by which the water is now disembogued, and by forming other artificial ones, if necessary, by which the volume of water that enters into the lower plain of Louisiana in any given time may be discharged into the Gulf of Mexico within the same time. If that volume were ascertained with any tolerable degree of accuracy, then the number and capacity of the channels necessary for taking it off into the Gulf might be calculated with sufficient certainty. A reference to the map of that country will show that the rivers which discharge themselves into the lower plain of Louisiana, and whose waters are carried to the Gulf in common with those of the Mississippi, drain but a small tract of upland country; for Pearl river, and, if necessary, at a very moderate expense, the Teché, may be thrown into the ocean by separate and distinct channels.

At the thirty-first degree of north latitude, and near to the point where Red river flows into, and the Chafalaya is discharged from, the Mississippi, the waters of that river are compressed into a narrower space than at any other point below the thirty-third degree of north latitude. This may be considered as the apex of the lower plain. The contraction of the waters of the Mississippi at this point is occasioned by the Avoyelles, which, during high water, is an island, and is alluvial land, but of ancient origin. From this island a tongue of land projects towards the Mississippi, which, though covered at high water, is of considerable elevation. It is probable, therefore, that at the point thus designated a series of experiments and admeasurements could be made, by which the volume of water discharged, in any given time, on the lower plain by the Mississippi, at its different stages of elevation, might be ascertained with sufficient accuracy to calculate the number and capacity of the channels necessary to discharge that volume of water into the Gulf of Mexico in the same time. With this data, the practicability and the expense of enlarging the natural and excavating a sufficient number of new channels to effect this object might readily be ascertained. If that work could be accomplished by the government, everything else in respect to the lower plain should be left to individual exertion, and the lands would be reclaimed as the increase of the population and wealth of the country might create a demand for them.

The contraction of the plain of the Mississippi by the elevated lands of the Avoyelles, and the manner in which Red river passes through the whole width of the upper plain, in a distance of nearly thirty miles, has a strong tendency to back up all the waters of the upper plain. Therefore it is that immediately above this point there is a greater extent of alluvial lands more deeply covered with water than at any other point perhaps on the whole surface of the plain of Louisiana; and at some distance below this point the embankments of the Mississippi terminate. To enable individuals to progress with these embankments, and to facilitate the erection of others along the water-courses, and to reclaim with facility the lands of the upper plain, it will probably be found to be indispensably necessary to draw off a considerable portion of this water by artificial channels. The Red river, arrested in its direct progress by the elevated lands of the Avoyelles, is deflected in a direction contrary to the general course of the Mississippi, and traverses the whole width of the upper plain in a circuitous course of upwards of thirty miles before it reaches that river. There is good reason to believe that the waters of the Red river, or a very large portion of them, in times past, found their way though Bayou Bœuf and the Lake of the Attakapas to the ocean; and during high floods a small portion of the waters of that river are now dicharged into the Bayou Bœuf at different points between the Avoyelles and Rapide. A deep cut from the Red river, through the tongue of elevated alluvial land east of the Avoyelles, to the Chafalaya, and opening the natural channels by which it now occasionally flows into the Bayou Bœuf, would probably take off the waters which accumulate at the lower termination of the upper plain with such rapidity, and reduce their elevation so much as to enable individual enterprise and capital to continue the embankments, which now terminate below this point, not only along the whole course of the Mississippi, but along all those extensive water-courses running through the upper plain.

The Tensa, a continuation of Black river, is for fifty miles above its junction with Red river a deep water-course, and in breadth but little inferior to the Mississippi. It draws a very small portion of its waters from the highlands, but communicates with the Mississippi by a number of lakes and bayous at different points, from near its mouth to its source, which is near the thirty-third degree of latitude, and through these channels aids in drawing off the surplus water of the Mississippi, while it continues to rise. When the Mississippi, however, retires within its banks the waters in these bayous take a different direction, and are returned through the same channels into the Mississippi. Particular local causes will produce this effect at particular points; but the general cause, so far as these bayous connect with the Tensa, will be found in the fact that there is not a sufficient vent for the waters of the upper plain at the point of connexion with the lower plain of Louisiana. The Tensa is also connected, in times of high water, at several points, with the Washita and its branches. When the Mississippi has risen to a point a few feet below its natural banks the whole of the upper plain of Louisiana is divided by the natural channels which connect the Mississippi with the Tensa, and the Tensa with the Washita, into a number of distinct islands of various extent. The banks of the rivers, and the natural channels which connect them, are very generally the most elevated lands; and each and all these islands might be reclaimed from inundation by embankments thrown entirely around them of from six to twelve feet high, provision being made to take off the rain water, and that occasioned by leakage and accidental crevasses in the banks, with machinery. While the Mississippi is rising the waters are carried off through these natural channels and their outlets into the lakes and the lowest and most depressed parts of the plain. During this process there are currents and counter currents in every possible direction; but when the floods have attained their greatest known height, then this whole plain becomes covered with water, from a few inches to twelve feet deep, as its surface may be more or less depressed, and, if it could be exposed to view, would exhibit the appearance of an immense lake, with a few insulated spots dispersed throughout it, such as the island of Sicily, the banks of the Lakes Concordia, Providence, and Washington, and some very narrow strips partially distributed along the banks of the Mississippi and the other water-courses. If the whole of the upper plain were reclaimed in the manner above mentioned, then the waters, being contracted into much narrower channels, would necessarily be very considerably elevated above the point to which they now rise; and passing off on the lower plain with greater elevation and greater rapidity, and having only the present natural channels of outlet to the Gulf, the inevitable consequence would be that the whole of the lower plain would be inundated, and probably parts of Attakapas and Opelousas would again be subject to inundation.

The reclamation of both of the plains of Louisiana will depend, under any possible plan that may be proposed, upon the practicability of tapping the Mississippi and Red rivers at one or more points, and to an extent that may draw off rapidly such a quantity of water as will prevent the refluent waters now collected just above the 31st degree of latitude from rising to the heights to which they now do, and the practicability of delivering the waters into the ocean within periods equal to those in which they were drawn off. We have seen that the natural channels of the Lafourche, Plaquemine, Iberville, and the Chafalaya have so reduced the mass of water in the Mississippi below their points of efflux, as to enable individuals, by very moderate embankments, to confine that part of the Mississippi within its banks. The Lafourche is the only one of these natural channels that takes off the waters to the ocean so rapidly and directly as to enable individuals to erect levees or embankments along its whole course. The passes at the Rigolets and at Berwick's bay not being sufficient to take off the waters which flow through them as fast as they are discharged into their reservoirs, it is evident that no beneficial effect could be derived from tapping the Mississippi at any point on its eastern bank, or at any point on its western bank above the Lafourche, unless the capacity of the outlets at Berwick's bay and the Rigolets be greatly enlarged. The passes at the Rigolets are well known; and it is probable that by enlarging them and cutting off that portion of the waters of Pearl river which now flows through them, they might be made adequate to take off, in a sufficiently short period, the waters of Iberville and those of the short rivers of Feliciana, so as to prevent that portion of the plain between the Iberville and the city of New Orleans from being inundated, except so far as the waters of Pontchartrain, elevated by high winds and tides, may produce that effect. It is only, therefore, on the west bank of that river, or the south bank of Red river, that the proposed tappings can be made with the prospect of a successful issue.

The course of the Mississippi from Donaldsonville to New Orleans being nearly parallel to the Gulf, and the distance to the Gulf across that part of the plain being much shorter than that by its natural channel to tide water, that portion of the river presents eligible points for tapping, particularly near to New Orleans, the commerce of which, in time not perhaps distant, may require a deep cut to be made to the Gulf. The width of the river at Donaldsonville being about seven hundred yards, the rise above its natural banks about one yard, and its velocity two and a half miles an hour; if, then, by one or more tappings below this point, a volume of water of the above dimensions could be carried off to the ocean with equal velocity, then would the highest elevation of the river be reduced very considerably everywhere below such tapping and for some distance above. Such a reduction of the elevation of this part of the river, aided by the clearing out of the rafts from the Chafalaya, would possibly produce so great a reduction of the refluent waters at the junction of the Red and Mississippi rivers as to enable individuals to proceed gradually to the reclamation of the whole of the upper plain by common embankments. It would then require only an increased capacity to be given to the outlets of the lake of Attakapas to insure the reclamation of both plains. But if this effect cannot be produced by the tappings below the Lafourche, then they must be made at points higher up, either between Plaquemine and the Chafalaya, or at a point about the mouth of the Bayou Lamourie, or Du Lac, on Red river. A reference to the map will show that the waters of Red river can be taken to the Gulf from this point in an almost direct course, through channels that it is more than probable they formerly occupied, and in a distance of less than one-half of that by which they reach the ocean through the channel of the Mississippi, and by forty or fifty miles less than that through the channel of the Chafalaya. A deep cut at this point of ten miles, through an alluvial soil, would discharge the waters of Red river into Bayou Bœuf; and as these waters would pass through an alluvial plain having probably a fall of not less than sixty feet in seventy miles from the point of tapping, there is reason to believe that they would work for themselves, without much artificial aid, a channel of great capacity.

The question then arises, how are these waters, in addition to the superabundant waters of the Chafalaya, which already overflow all the valley of the lake of Attakapas, to be taken off to the Gulf? To solve this question satisfactorily, it will be necessary to take a view of the outlets of the lake of Attakapas. The Teche is a natural canal, almost without feeders or outlet except at its mouth, and having, no doubt, been a channel for a much larger mass of water in time past, its adjacent lands have been formed precisely as those of the Mississippi have been, and its banks, of course, occupy the highest elevation of the country through which it runs. For forty miles above its mouth it is contracted by the waters of the Attakapas lake on the one side, and by those of the Gulf on the other, so as to exhibit almost literally a mere tongue of land just above high-water mark. It enters Berwick's bay about eighteen miles from the Gulf. Nearly opposite to the mouth of the Teche is the mouth of Bayou Black, or Bayou Bœuf. This bayou, like the Teche, is also a natural canal, occupying the highest elevation of a narrow tract of land extending eastwardly nearly to the Bayou Lafourche, that is seldom inundated, and which would seem to be a prolongation of the Attakapas country, inducing a belief that the Teche formerly discharged its waters at a point further east into a bay that occupied the whole of the present plain, from the Attakapas lake to Bayou Lafourche and the Mississippi. It is this elevated ridge that causes the indentation in the lower plain to be deluged by the waters of the Mississippi, which, forcing a passage for themselves across the Teche, have formed an outlet called Berwick's bay. This pass is narrow, and is about seven or eight feet deep, passing, in part of its course, through lands not of recent alluvion, and disembogues into the bay of Achafolia through the lake of that name and two or three other outlets.

Following up then this indication of nature, by cutting artificial outlets from the lake of Attakapas across the Teche, at different points for a distance of fifteen or twenty miles above its mouth, at such places as the drains emptying into the ocean may approach nearest to Attakapas lake, giving to such cuts any width that may be required, and a depth that may be on a level with low-water mark, and embanking the lake of Attakapas so as to raise it three feet above its present surface, it is believed that a capacity may be obtained for taking off any volume of water that it may be necessary to throw into the lake of Attakapas, and at an expense very trifling in comparison to the object to be obtained. All the waters of the Atchafalaya being thrown into Lake Attakapas, and that lake embanked, the whole of the plain between it and the Mississippi would be exempt from inundation. The rain water, and that from the weepings and crevasses in the embankments, would find a reservoir in the deeper lakes and beds of Grand river, the surplus being taken off by machinery, or by tide-locks in some of the bayous which now connect with these lakes in the highest floods.

It is believed that three brigades of the topographical corps, operating for a few seasons from the 1st of November to the 1st of July, would be able to obtain sufficient data to decide upon the practicability of devising, and the expense of accomplishing, a plan that would effect the reclamation of both plains; but if it should be found to be impracticable, or too expensive for the state of the population and wealth of the country, yet the minute knowledge which they would obtain of the topography of the entire plain would enable them to designate different portions of it in both plains which could be reclaimed from inundation at an expense commensurate with the present capital and population of the country.

The gradual elevation of the plain of the Mississippi* by the annual deposits, and the accumulation of population and capital, will ultimately accomplish its entire reclamation from the inundations of the Mississippi; but the interposition of the government, and the judicious expenditure of a few millions of dollars, would accomplish that object fifty or perhaps a hundred years sooner than it will be effected by individual capital aided by the slow operations of nature.

I attach a small diagram of the country, as illustrative of some of the points referred to in this report.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. RICHARD RUSH, Secretary of the Treasury.

An estimate of the expense of excavating outlets from the Lake of the Attakapas to the Gulf of Mexico.

On the presumption that the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, at low tide, reach within six miles of the lake—and it is believed that they do at several points between the Bayou Cypress and Berwick's bay—let positions at one or more of the most favorable of these points be selected, the aggregate width of which shall be two thousand yards. Let such portions of these positions as may be inundated at high water be drained by common embankments, so that oxen may be used in removing the earth; let excavations be made through them, of such numbers and of such widths as may be best adapted to the removal of the earth, leaving, however, the proportion of excavation to that of embankment as three to one. A number of canals will then be formed, with an embankment between each, the excavation of which, their beds being on a level with low water, would not average a depth of three feet. These proportions will give the amount of excavation as equal to 15,840,000 cubic yards, which, at 20 cents the cubic yard, gives $3,168,000 as the expense of excavating outlets which, at low tide, would have the capacity of discharging from the lake, with great velocity, a column of water of fifteen hundred yards in width and one yard in depth at the point where it left the lake.

No estimate, with any tolerable approximation to accuracy, can be made of the expense of excavating a deep cut from Red river to the Bayou Bœuf, and of enlarging the bed of that bayou, of the embankments along the lake of the Attakapas, necessary to give it the required elevation, or for tide-locks, machinery, &c., until an accurate survey on the ground be made. It is possible that the judicious expenditure of five millions of dollars by the government would be sufficient to make the excavations and erect embankments, tide-locks, and other machinery that would be necessary to give such a control over the waters of the Mississippi and its outlets as to reduce them so nearly within their banks at high floods as to enable individual capital to progress with the entire embankment of them, and the reclamation of the whole plain.

The quantity of land belonging to the government within the limits of the alluvial plain may be estimated at upwards of three millions of acres, which, at a minimum price of ten dollars per acre, would be upwards of thirty millions of dollars.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR SALE OF PUBLIC LAND IN VICINITY OF LANDS GRANTED FOR THE CANAL FROM LAKE ERIE TO THE WABASH RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 15, 1829.

A JOINT RESOLUTION relative to the reserved lands of the United States, on the margin of and contiguous to the contemplated canal, to unite the waters of Lake Erie and the Wabash river.

Whereas the Congress of the United States by their act of March 2, 1827, did grant a certain quantity of land in the State of Indiana, consisting of certain alternate sections on each side of said canal, to aid the State in constructing and putting the same in operation. And whereas it will much enhance the value of all the lands in the neighborhood of said canal, and be very beneficial to the citizens

* The gradual elevation of the plain is not perceptible, because the gradual elevation of the beds of the water-courses, arising from the same cause, occasions as general an overflow of their banks as formerly; but that which is perceptible is the rapid filling up of the ponds and shallow lakes; and there can be no question that the great annual alluvion and vegetable deposit must produce similar effects through the whole plain.

The Mississippi river is among the muddiest in the world, and deposits its muddy particles with great rapidity. Its waters hold in solution not less than one-sixteenth part of their bulk of alluvion matter, and some experiments are stated to give a greater proportion. If, then, within the embankments of the Mississippi a piece of level ground be surrounded by a dyke sixteen inches high, and filled with the waters of the Mississippi when above its banks, and those waters drawn off when they have deposited all their muddy particles, nearly one inch in depth of alluvion matter will have been obtained. If this process be repeated as often as practicable during a season of high waters, a quantity of alluvion will have been accumulated of not less than six or eight inches in depth. This process is similar to that termed warping in England, and is in use to some extent along the waters of the estuary of the Humber for manuring lands; and it is a process by which the lands of the plain of Louisiana will be rendered inexhaustible, so long as the Mississippi continues to bear its muddy waters to the ocean.

of Indiana, and greatly facilitate the progress and final execution of the work, if the land reserved by the United States, on the margin of and contiguous to the said canal, were immediately sold and settled. Therefore, be it—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their utmost and united endeavors and exertions to procure an immediate sale of all the lands which the United States may own on the margin of, and contiguous to, said canal, so far as the State may have finally located the same, and made choice of, and selected the lands donated as aforesaid to the State.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be respectfully requested to transmit to each of our senators and representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR FURTHER RELIEF TO PURCHASERS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 19, 1829.

A JOINT RESOLUTION relative to the purchasers of public lands.

Notwithstanding the liberality of the Congress of the United States, in the passage of sundry laws at different times for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands; yet, being sensible of the justice and magnanimity of the general government, and of its willingness to contribute to the general welfare of the citizens of every portion of the Union, the general assembly of the State of Indiana conceive themselves in duty bound to reiterate the sentiment, in part, of their predecessors, by calling the attention of that body to the situation of a large number of their fellow-citizens, whose case has been overlooked or neglected, and which we believe imperiously call for relief on the principles of justice.

The general assembly alluded to those persons who have purchased lands of the general government, made one or more payments thereon, and after improving the same have been compelled, by unforeseen misfortune or the pressure of the times, to suffer their lands thus improved to become forfeited. They would also beg leave to notice another class of their fellow-citizens, who, desirous to close their accounts with the general government, to escape from a debt which was a perpetual lien on their homes, to avail themselves of the power of relinquishing a part of their land, merely to secure a house and home for themselves and families, relinquished parts of large improvements, on which had been expended the money and labor of better days, and to secure a scanty portion for a home to families dear to them, sacrificed their labors. The existing laws of Congress make no provision by which the citizen who has spent money, time and labor on lands thus forfeited or relinquished, can have any advantage over other citizens or strangers to regain his property.

Impressed with the belief that it cannot be the policy of a just and magnanimous government to take advantage of its citizens; that the value of labor expended by the indigent or unfortunate citizen, on property of the nation, can never be appropriated by a just government, without rendering a full equivalent therefor; neither will such a government suffer the avaricious speculator to snatch from or monopolize the hard earnings of the indigent or unfortunate. For these reasons, they cannot but believe that the justice of the general government will extend relief to those purchasers who, in consequence of inability to complete their payments, as aforesaid, have either forfeited or relinquished improvements, by recognizing the principle of giving a preference at the minimum price of the public lands of the general government to such sufferers.

Deeming further detail unnecessary, and implicitly relying on the general government, the general assembly adopt the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of a law granting to every purchaser and occupant of the public lands of the United States, who has made one or more payments thereon, and made an improvement on the same, which have become forfeited, or have been relinquished, a privilege in the nature of a pre-emption for —— years to repurchase such improved lands, at or before the same may be offered for sale or disposed of by the general government, at the minimum price of the public lands, with a right to occupy and enjoy the proceeds thereof.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution to our senators and representatives in Congress of the United States.

ISAAC HOWK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
M. STAPP,
President of the Senate.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR DONATIONS OF LAND TO CITIZENS OF GALENA AND JO DAVIESS COUNTY, IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 20, 1829.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the people of the State of Illinois, represented in the general assembly, respectfully represent to your honorable body: That a number of the citizens of this State and others have migrated to, and settled at, Galena, the principal village at the Fever River lead mines, situate at the northern part of this State; that Galena is now the principal depot for the lead made at said mines; that at the period said citizens migrated to the place where Galena now stands the same was a wilderness or Indian country; that said persons have made improvements at Galena, and occupy and reside upon lots in said village, and in most, if not in all, cases by permission of the agent of the United States who superintends the lead mines.

Your memorialists further represent, in behalf of the citizens of Galena, that at the period they settled there the lands and lots were of but little value, from the remoteness of the place from population, and that the value now attached to said lots is owing to the improvements made upon them by the occupants and the opening of the lead mines. From these considerations it seems but reasonable that said citizens should be secured in the title to the lots improved and occupied by them, and that they should not be compelled to purchase their own improvements. The offspring of their own labor amid the competition which the increased value of the lots and buildings thus made have assumed, Galena has now become the seat of justice of the county, including part of the mineral country, and public buildings are necessary to the administration of justice. As no part of the lands in the county have as yet been sold, no revenue from taxation from that source is derived by which public buildings could be constructed. The government owns the land, and it is, therefore, deemed but reasonable that a portion of it should be given to the county to enable it to construct such public buildings and other improvements as are necessary for the convenience of the public.

Resolved by the people of the State of Illinois represented in the general assembly, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representative requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of a law by Congress confirming and granting to each actual settler in the town of Galena the lot or lots by them improved or occupied; and, further, that they use their best exertions to procure the passage of a law granting one entire section of land to the county of Jo Daviess, to include the town of Galena, to be disposed of by the county commissioners of said county for the purpose of constructing public buildings in Galena and such other improvements as are necessary to the convenience and accommodations of the public.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution, signed by the speaker of the senate and house of representatives, and attested by the secretary of the senate and clerk of the house of representatives, be forwarded to each of our members in Congress.

INDEMNITY FOR DEFECT IN TITLE TO LAND IN LOUISIANA SOLD BY THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 26, 1829.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Nancy Dolan, reported:

That this claim received a careful examination in the committee last year, and the case is fully stated in the report then made, which is now referred to. The committee only think it necessary to state that in the conclusion of that report it is recommended that scrip to the amount of $1,200 should be issued to the petitioner, and made receivable in payment for any public lands, and so provided in the bill. This bill, however, was amended in the House and passed, directing the payment of $1,200 to the petitioner in money; and the committee, now understanding that to be the sense of the House, report the same bill as amended, which was passed in the House of Representatives at the last session.

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Nancy Dolan, report:

That in the year 1818 the Executive of the United States determined to erect a principal military depot at Baton Rouge, in Louisiana. A piece of ground belonging to Mr. Hall was thought necessary to be procured for this work. The United States claimed a quantity of ground contiguous to the town, which had been reserved by the Spanish government, about the old fort at that place. Captain Rogers, the government's agent there, was authorized by the War Department to buy Hall's ground, or give in exchange for it a part of the said military reservation claimed by the United States. The latter course was recommended and effected. Rogers, as the agent of the United States, agreeably to his instructions, conveyed to Hall a portion of the public ground, and Hall conveyed to the United States his ground, which has since been occupied and used for the purpose it was procured for.

Hall conveyed the lot he acquired by the exchange, and the same now in question, to Peters, and Peters to the petitioner, shortly after the contract with Rogers, which was in 1819, for the consideration of $1,200. These deeds all contained a general warranty of title, and seem to have been duly recorded. The petitioner continued the possession of the lot until the last year, when she was evicted by one Poret, who appears to have had a claim to two lots of the ground claimed by the government as public property, one of which was the lot conveyed by Rogers, and purchased by the petitioner. He (Poret) obtained a confirmation of this claim before the board of commissioners for the adjustment of land claims, under the act of the 8th of May, 1822; presented his certificate of confirmation at the General Land Office, and a patent was issued to him for the land. Poret brought an action of ejectment against the petitioner, and upon the strength of his superior title (as it was decided to be) prevailed in the suit. The petitioner, who claimed by mesne conveyances under the deed and warranty of the government, now asks remuneration for the loss.

The facts above stated are fully supported by evidence obtained from the departments, and by the copies of title deeds, and the transcript of the record in the ejectment—all of which are placed in the files of the House.

The committee are of opinion that a fair case for relief has been made out, and therefore they report a bill allowing the issuance of scrip to the petitioner to the amount of $1,200, which will be receivable in payment for public lands, that being the usual mode of making remuneration for the loss of lands sold by the government.

APPLICATION OF MISSOURI FOR A CHANGE IN THE SYSTEM OF DISPOSING OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 26, 1829.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Missouri respectfully showeth: That the system of disposing of the public lands of the United States now pursued is highly injurious, in many respects, to the States in which those lands lie, and to none, perhaps, more so than to the State of Missouri. This general assembly does not deem it necessary to inquire whether the present plan, when first adopted, and for many years thereafter, until the best lands were disposed of, might not have been harmless in its operation; but, under existing circumstances, and the condition of this country and the neighboring countries beyond the limits of the United States, a policy more injurious both to the United States and the States in which the public lands lie could not, as your memorialists confidently believe, be pursued. This general assembly will not set forth and reiterate the several objections to the present system which have heretofore been urged to the consideration of Congress, and which have not been answered satisfactorily to those acquainted with the present condition of the western States. But the general assembly will state that a perseverance in the present system manifestly appears to them to be equivalent to a declaration on the part of Congress that it will not sell or dispose of nine-tenths of the public lands in this State; and this general assembly cannot refrain from declaring that it views such refusal as an infringement of the compact between the United States and this State; and that the State of Missouri never could have been brought to consent not to tax the lands of the United States whilst unsold; and not to tax the lands sold until five years thereafter, if it had been understood by the contracting parties that a system was to be pursued which would prevent nine-tenths of those lands from ever becoming the property of persons in whose hands they might be taxed. The State of Missouri views, with deep concern, a policy pursued by the general government in the disposal of the public lands. In demanding now for refuse lands, the largest part of which are not worth ten cents per acre, the full price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, is, to all practical purposes, raising the prices of the public lands; and that it has the obvious effect of preventing the population of the new States cannot be denied. The general government has absolutely reserved from sale upwards of seven hundred acres of land, under a supposition that it contained lead ore. It has reserved from sale all the salt springs belonging to the government, and the lands contiguous thereto; and it has, through the Executive, refused to sell large districts of country supposed to contain iron ore, except in alternate sections, thereby, in effect, refusing the necessary quantity of those lands upon which to erect iron works. The price of lands, when we take into consideration the quality of those lands, and that they are the refuse of many years' sales, is not only raised, but is raised to a price, in most instances, ten times above their value. The prices are not only raised far above their value, but hundreds of thousands of acres, containing much of the natural wealth and resources of the State, are altogether reserved from sale The population of the State is not only prevented, but hundreds of our citizens have left it to seek lands in the Mexican States; and not one-third part of our citizens, where nineteen-twentieths of the domain are unappropriated, are possessed of lands, and the frontier of our infant State much exposed to the depredations of the restless hordes of predatory savages collected thereon by the same government that refuses us the means of strengthening our frontier, by requiring a price for the wild lands far above their value, thereby forcing numbers of our citizens, with their families and effects, to remove to countries beyond the limits of the United States, there to seek lands on terms more reasonable and advantageous than are offered by our government. This general assembly are convinced that the true interests of the United States, as well as the interests of the new States, require a radical change in the system of disposing of the public lands—to sell as rapidly as possible the wild lands, and apply the proceeds of those sales to the extinguishment of the public debt, the interest of which has consumed, and still consumes, so large a portion of the revenue—to give a home to millions of citizens, and attach them to the soil and institutions of the country—to increase the wealth and strength of the United States, and consequently the ability to bear the burdens of government in times of war or other public calamity—to augment the revenue of the United States, by increasing the consumption of foreign goods on which duties are paid, and the increase of the revenue of the States in which the public lands lie, are blessings and advantages which must arise from a change in the system of disposing of the public lands, and which are surely not to be treated lightly by a wise nation. This general assembly believe that the great objects hereinbefore enumerated can best be attained, and the evils complained of can most readily be obviated, by graduating the prices of the public lands, by making donations of land to actual settlers, and by ceding the refuse lands to the States in which they lie, in the manner proposed by the bill at the last session of Congress, for settlement and cultivation, and to advance the great interests of education and internal improvement. This general assembly, therefore, do most earnestly recommend to the justice, wisdom, and liberality of Congress, the passage of a law to effect those great objects.

APPLICATION OF LOUISIANA FOR A CESSION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS THEREIN TO THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 26, 1829.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in general assembly convened, That it is deemed a matter of the utmost importance to the interests of the State that it should have and possess the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the unappropriated lands within its limits, in order that internal improvements may be promoted and emigration increased.

Resolved, That while the federal government shall continue to claim sovereignty over a large portion of the soil of the State, with its tardy operations in disposing of the same to individuals, and the high prices stipulated in the terms of entry, we shall continue to behold the younger members of this republic outstripping us in population, improvements, and the arts.

Resolved, That inasmuch as a portion of our citizens hold lands under adverse and unsettled titles, the vital object of defence against the inundation of our streams, and the object common to man of rendering better his condition, are both retarded and repressed.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to exert their utmost abilities to obtain from the federal government a cession to this State of the public and unappropriated lands claimed by the United States, at as early a period and on such terms as may be beneficial to the State and advantageous to our citizens.

Resolved, That the governor of the State be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

APPLICATION FOR REMISSION OF PART OF THE PRICE OF LAND PURCHASED IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 27, 1829.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Allen Glover and Geo. S. Gaines, reported:

That the petitioners represent that at a public sale of lands held at the land office at St. Stephen's, in Alabama, in the year of our Lord 1819, they became the purchasers of public lands, at prices far beyond their real value, for the purpose of settlement and cultivation; that having, in the time of high speculation, made these purchases, they determined nevertheless to complete the payment of all the instalments, although at the great sacrifice of their property; that soon after their purchase, Congress reduced the price of the public lands, and have since passed several laws in favor of those who purchased under the credit system; and they pray for some relief from the justice and liberality of Congress.

The committee are aware that the petitioners and many others may have given and paid much more for lands that were purchased some ten or twelve years ago than they are worth at this time. The market price of land, as well as of most other kinds of property, is fluctuating and beyond the control of Congress. When the lands are bought at low prices, and the value is enhanced, the purchasers will derive the benefit; and when the value is depreciated they must, as a general rule, sustain the loss. It must be lamented that those industrious citizens who purchase the public lands for the purposes of cultivation should sustain loss and embarrassment; yet having paid for them, the government would find almost insuperable difficulties in undertaking to refund the money, or to afford other relief. The committee recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners be not granted.

TO REFUND MONEY PAID FOR LAND WHICH WAS HELD UNDER A SPANISH GRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 29, 1829.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on Private Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Pierre Leglise, reported:

That the petitioner was the owner of a tract of land of five arpents front and forty deep, which was part of a tract of fifty arpents front, granted by the Spanish government, which was confirmed by the commissioners. But the commissioners not recollecting that this land was part of a confirmed title, and seeing no evidence of occupation, did not confirm the claimant in his title to the five arpents; in consequence of which, he was obliged to enter his land as a pre-emption in order to save his land, houses, and other improvements, for which he paid $338 to the government.

The committee are of opinion that the money ought to be refunded, and report a bill.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR A REDUCTION IN THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 2, 1829.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Illinois respectfully showeth: That the condition of this State, in connexion with the newly admitted States into the Union, has heretofore, and now again, imposed it on the general assembly, as an indispensable duty, to remonstrate against the mode and price of disposing of the public lands lying within those States, and to urge upon the representatives of the nation the importance and absolute necessity of a salutary change in their disposition.

It has heretofore been represented to your honorable body that the State of Illinois alone contains about forty millions of acres of land, and that an amount very little exceeding one and a half million of acres have as yet been disposed of at the public sales. If the present price at which it is required by law to be sold shall not be reduced, it will be hundreds of years before the soil will have passed out of the control of the general government, and be subject to the laws and jurisdiction of this State. Your memorialists, therefore, cannot resist impressing it on the serious attention of the Congress of the Union how injurious must be the operation of such a retarded disposition of the vast bodies of public land lying within this State, and how inevitably it must check its increase and population, and consequent improvement and resources, proving highly detrimental to the State, in point of revenue, by withholding from taxation such vast proportions of its soil. If, as would seem to be most clearly inferrible, the high price at which those lands are required to be disposed of should prevent their sale, it may be a subject of serious inquiry whether it does not operate as a virtual infraction of the compact in relation to the not taxing those lands before they are sold, and for a certain term of time afterwards. From the terms of that compact, and upon the supposition that the same is obligatory upon the parties to it, any act on the part of the government to delay the sales of the land in a reasonable period, whether accomplished by a positive refusal to sell, or by demanding for it a sum greatly beyond its value, by which the sales would be defeated, in a great measure, if not wholly so, would doubtless be an infraction of the compact itself.

If such hitherto has been the effect of the system still adhered to by the government, it may not be unworthy of consideration, either on the part of the general government or the States, whose interests are directly concerned, to ascertain what might be the legal effects thereof.

Nothing, however, would seem to be more just or conformable to the relation of good faith, which ought ever to exist between a government based on federative principles and rights, and any portions of its citizens with whom it may have entered into agreements for the early disposition of its primary interests in the soil within the boundaries of such federative State, than to affix to its sale a sum not more than its real value, and to do every necessary act to facilitate the disposition of it at the earliest possible period. Indeed, if no other consideration than policy itself, as regards the government, were consulted, it would seem to lead to its early disposition. It never can be the interest of the United States to keep on hand a large and unproductive property, such as that of the public lands, and especially when no good results to the general government from such a course of policy, and which operates so injuriously to the prosperity of the western States. The excessive and unequal price at which the lands are held prevent their sale, and, as a necessary consequence, their population and improvement. Justice, then, to the new States, and considerations of interest on the part of the government, seem to prompt to the necessity of a prompt and reasonable reduction of the price of public lands. The prosperity of the new States would not merely be promoted by such a measure, but the Union at large would be benefited in the same ratio as the new States, in their increased capacity to contribute towards the common burdens of the whole would be increased.

Connected with this question of the reduction of the price of the public lands, there seems naturally to arise two others of similar interest: one is the right of pre-emption in the purchase of the land, and the other of donations of small tracts to actual settlers who shall have occupied and cultivated the same for a given period of time. It cannot, it is believed, be necessary to illustrate either the justice or usefulness of the first, which has been so repeatedly established by the precedents already created by legislative enactments; nor does it seem essential to enter into arguments, or to quote the liberality and discernment of other governments to show the sound policy of the other. It must be obvious to those who will take the trouble to make the inquiry, that its effects would necessarily tend to strengthen the country, to increase its resources, its wealth, and its population. Should the government view the ground which your memorialists have assumed, with relation to the public lands, as neither defensively right, nor based upon the principles of mutual interest and justice, as regards their future disposition, then they hope, that if, from no other consideration than those of general policy, and a due regard to the magnitude of the vital interests of seven if not nine of the new States, they will consent to a surrender of all the public lands within those States upon equitable terms, such as the government, upon enlarged views and due consideration of the interest of the whole Union, shall be willing to extend, and those States shall be willing to accept. It is not for your memorialists to recapitulate the various reasons which might be most forcibly urged for the adoption of such a course in relation to these lands, nor of the many contentions to which the subject may hereafter give birth. Should the present oppressive system continue, and no amelioration take place, it will not be denied that this question is susceptible of being presented in so grave an aspect as to involve considerations of the deepest magnitude, and demand the most serious and enlightened reflection of those charged with the interests of the whole confederacy. It may be one which, if seriously presented, must involve questions of the highest importance to a State, and of the most intense interest to its citizens—no less than of the deprivation of some of the essential attributes of its sovereignty; the control of the internal concerns and police of a free State by a power other than its own; a prohibition to regulate and improve the settlement of lands within its own limits and acknowledged boundaries, according to its own views of its prosperity and happiness; a deprivation of the collection of revenue from vast bodies of soil within such limits, until the general government shall choose to assent thereto, by the disposition of the soil—whether the citizens of such States shall be subject to the operation of the laws of the United States, confessedly purely municipal, which have no existence in the older States, and which they alone have the right to pass, and to which no other power is competent without the consent of their own legislative power; whether, in reality, the compact under which the general government claims these extraordinary powers is consonant to the rights reserved to the States respectively by the Constitution of the United States, or have in anywise been granted by that instrument; and finally, whether the tenure by which they hold the public lands is valid and binding on the new States.

Your memorialists most devoutly hope that not only the agitation of the inquiries, but the questions themselves, may be avoided, and forever put at rest by a just and liberal disposition of the public lands, in the mode herein suggested, or in such other as the views of the government, having a due regard to the rights and interests of the States, shall dictate, and as shall be compatible with the great principles upon which our States and general government have been erected.

INSTRUCTIONS TO LAND OFFICERS IN ARKANSAS RELATIVE TO CLAIMS TO DONATIONS OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 7, 1829.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 5, 1829.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 4th instant, "instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House, as soon as possible, with a copy of all the instructions given to the land officers in Arkansas on the subject of donations of land to certain persons in said Territory, and also with a copy of any opinion he may have received of the Attorney General of the United States upon that subject," I have the honor to transmit a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under date herewith, covering copies of the instructions and opinion referred to in the resolution, numbered from 1 to 12, inclusive.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 5, 1829.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, passed the 4th instant, requiring "a copy of the instructions given to the land officers in Arkansas on the subject of donations of lands to certain persons in said Territory, and also with a copy of any opinion of the Attorney General on the subject," I have the honor to submit the enclosed papers, numbered from No. 1 to No. 12, inclusive, which embrace the information required.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. SECRETARY of the Treasury.

No. 1.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, August 26, 1828.

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with your request, I now state to you the view which is taken at the Treasury Department of the provisions of the 8th section of the act, approved on the 24th May last, granting a donation of land to certain persons in Arkansas.

The persons entitled to such donation must—

1st. Be the head of a family, (a widow or single man cannot claim, unless they be the head of a family,) over the age of twenty-one years, and be an actual settler, at the date of the act, on that part of the land ceded which is appropriated to the Cherokees by the treaty dated the 6th May, 1828;

2d. The person entitled to the donation must have removed from the land appropriated to the Cherokees, according to the provisions of that treaty;

3d. The persons thus entitled may enter with the register, within two years from the passage of the act, two adjoining quarter sections of land, or two or more adjoining fractional quarter sections of such of the public lands as have been surveyed at the time of the entry, and are then subject to sale.

The 9th section of the act has made it the duty of the register and receiver of the land office, at which the application may be made to enter such lands, to take the proper testimony of such actual settlement and subsequent removal, as in cases of pre-emption heretofore granted to actual settlers. With these limited powers, and with the limited knowledge which you possess in relation to the number and character of the settlers on the ceded lands, it will be exceedingly difficult to guard against fraud and imposition. It is your duty, however, so to carry the provisions of the act into effect as to prevent, as far as practicable, imposition on the government.

With this view, you are advised to require of each settler claiming a donation a detailed statement of all the facts on which the claim is founded. This statement should be made on oath administered by the register and receiver; and in addition to the specified facts mentioned in the first and second heads of this communication, the locality and extent of the improvement in consideration of which the donation is granted should be stated, and the members of the family designated and described. All the important facts in such statements should be corroborated by other and creditable testimony. As it may not always be in the power of the parties to procure the attendance of witnesses at the land office, the corroborative testimony may be taken before a justice of the peace, duly certified to be such by the clerk of the county, with the seal annexed.

The treaty not having specified any particular time within which the settlers must remove from the ceded lands, such time will be designated by the War Department, and of which you will be notified.

The certificate of the Indian agent, that the party had removed with his or her family from the lands ceded to the Cherokees, according to the treaty, may be considered as sufficient corroborative testimony as to the fact of removal.

The decision of the register and receiver on each application should be indorsed, under their signatures, on the papers, which should be delivered over to the register, to be filed and carefully preserved; and when the decision is favorable he will issue a patent certificate, in conformity to the form marked A, and forward it to this office. No transfer of a claim can be made until a patent has issued.

A list, in numerical order, of all the cases adjudicated should be forwarded monthly by the register and receiver, and a monthly abstract of entries, accompanied by the patent certificates, should be forwarded by the register. You will take such additional precautions to prevent impositions as circumstances may suggest to you. To guard against the granting of two donations to the same person, or for the same settlement, it will be necessary that each office furnish the other with copies of the monthly list of adjudications, which will, of course, exhibit all the cases presented and acted upon.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

The Register and Receiver at Little Rock and Batesville, A. T.

No. 2.

General Land Office, September 4, 1828.

Sir: I enclose, for your information and guidance, copies of two letters—the one addressed to the Hon. Mr. Sevier, and the other to Colonel McRee. The absence of the township plat, embracing the land desired to be entered, should not prevent the register and receiver from deciding on the right of donation; but the register will suspend the entry until advised of the approval of the survey.

With great respect, &c., your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

The Register at Batesville and Little Rock, A. T.

No. 3.

General Land Office, September 4, 1828.

Sir: Your letter of the 30th of July having been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, I am directed to inform you that he does not consider himself at liberty to suspend the execution of the act granting donations to the settlers on the lands ceded to the Cherokees. The officers will, therefore, proceed to permit entries to be made, agreeably to their instructions, so soon as they are satisfactorily advised that the line from the Arkansas to the southwest corner of Missouri is run. To give the legal right of entry to these donations, it is not necessary that the township plats should be in the office of the registers. It is necessary, however, that the surveys should be approved by the surveyor previous to entry. The registers will, therefore, be directed not to receive entries until they are advised by the surveyor general (Colonel McRee) that he has approved of the surveys; and he will be directed to furnish them with such information from time to time as he may approve the returns.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. A. H. Sevier, Little Rock, A. T.

No. 4.

General Land Office, September 4, 1828.

Sir: The provisions of the law granting donations to the settlers on the lands ceded to the Cherokees authorize such entries to be made on any lands that may be surveyed. No lands can be considered as legally surveyed until the surveys are approved by you; and, as it will not always be in your power to furnish the registers in Arkansas with the township plats immediately on approval, I have to request that you will, from time to time, furnish them with the dates of your approval of those surveys of which you have not furnished them the township plats.

With great respect, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel WILLIAM MCREE, Surveyor General, St. Louis, Missouri.

No. 5.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 26, 1828.

GENTLEMEN: I enclose you a copy of a lettter from a respectable gentleman in Arkansas Territory, relating to land claimants to land under the late law, for your information.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

The REGISTER and RECEIVER at Batesville and Little Rock.

No. 6.

FORT SMITH, Arkansas Terrritory, August 15, 1828.

SIR: I cannot forbear writing to you and affording my additional testimony to the swindling against the government in this section of country. I allude to the operation of the law giving to actual settlers west of the line mentioned in the first article of the late treaty with the Cherokees the right of entering two quarter sections of land; and I believe, without a total suspension of the execution of the law as it now stands, the government will be sadly imposed upon.

I mention but one or two of the devices. Pieces of paper with twenty-one years marked on them are placed in the shoes of children, and witnesses innumerable can be found who will swear that said persons are over the age of twenty-one years, and entitled to a donation. White men, living, and who have lived with the Cherokees for years, have proven up their claims. Removals are made by crossing the line with a horse, and then sworn to, when the persons returned to their improvements. Boatmen who were on the river on that day (2d of May) have also proven up their claims.

But the decisions of the land officers, as they are reported to be, strike me as giving reason for great complaint.

Persons are permitted to give notices of the sections which they wish to enter, and file their claims, and such notices will, in the end, have the effect of actual entries.

This was permitted without a general publication being made. The consequence was that speculators who were about the land offices located claims or filed notices having some effect on the most valuable improvements in other parts of the Territory which had never yet been offered for sale.

I would submit these questions: Can an actual entry be made till the boundary line mentioned in the treaty be run?

Can a claim be said to be proved according to law till a removal, actual and bona fide, has taken place after the line run?

Are lands "authorized for sale" until the proclamation of the President is issued for their public sale?

Ought not a rigid and close examination by the register and receiver, in person, take place under the present law?

Ought not public notice be given for weeks of the day the offices would be open for the reception and location of claims, so as to permit the persons in the distant interested sections of the country to have an equal opportunity of locating as advantageously as persons speculators on the spot?

On the answer to these questions, let me assure you, the prosperity or adversity of the Territory depends.—"Currente calamo."

With great respect, &c.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 17, 1828.

GENTLEMEN: I enclose, for your information, a copy of a letter received from a gentleman of great respectability, who is a resident of Arkansas.

In consequence of this and other representations which have been made to the government in relation to the attempts that will probably be made to impose on the government by improper testimony that will be adduced to establish claims to donations under the act of 24th May last, I am instructed by the Secretary of the Treasury to direct that all the evidence to establish the right to a donation shall be taken by the register and receiver, or by a justice of the peace in their presence; and that so much of your former instructions as relates to the mode of taking the corroborative testimony be annulled.

The Secretary of the Treasury, reposing great confidence in your judgment and zeal for the preservation of the public interest, feels assured that every possible precaution will be used by you to defeat the attempts which there seems too much reason to believe will be made to obtain donations on spurious testimony, and that in all cases where you may have a doubt as to the credibility of the testimony adduced you will suspend the admission of the claim until such doubt shall be removed.

The settlers on the lands ceded to the Cherokees have, I presume, been in the habit of voting; it would, therefore, be desirable to obtain an authentic list of such settlers living west of the line who were permitted to vote at the last election. Such a list might be obtained by the officers at Little Rock from the sheriff of the county, and a copy furnished to that at Batesville; and although it would not be conclusive either for or against the parties, yet it would be a useful document.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

No. 8.

CRAWFORD COUNTY, Arkansas, August 30, 1828.

SIR: A treaty was negotiated by the government, in May last, with the Cherokees west of the Mississippi, making an exchange of country. Consequent on that treaty was a law granting a donation to the actual settler of two quarter sections of land, to compensate him for possessions relinquished.

This act of justice, perhaps benevolence, is likely to subserve the most iniquitous purposes. What I am conscious has been often acted on is now unblushingly avowed—that it is fair, it is advisable, to cheat the government. From the best information I can obtain, not more than 300 genuine claims could be originated under the law. Even this I consider a large estimate; yet universal consent admits that not less than 1,500, probably 2,000, will be offered for allowance.

The government, then, by its vigilance, must save itself from being swindled out of many hundred sections of choice land; it should save from depreciation the genuine claim; and I earnestly entreat it to save, as far as it can, from prostration the morality of the Territory.

To my mind, the law clearly and positively requires the evidence establishing a claim to be adduced before the register and receiver in person; and it further requires, in my view, the running of the Cherokee line before the adduction of this evidence. The line is not run; if adjudications can now take place the law is partial; it operates a system of favoritism; for this line will run through the settlements, and it is very doubtful whether the possessions of many citizens will fall east or west of it, whether they will or will not be entitled to its benefits.

It has been the practice to take the evidence in the country before justices of the peace. A written statement is drawn, "covering the case," and the willing witness gulps it down. Minors, Indians, transient persons, have had their claims most substantially made out on paper. It is sickening to think of the perjuries that have disgraced the country. The only corrective is the taking of evidence before the land officers in person, where, by examination and cross-examination, truth may be elicited from a reluctant witness. With regard to these transactions, I am as open as day in my avowals here, and I seek not concealment in my written communications.

I have the honor to be, &c., &c.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 9, 1829.

SIR: I enclose a copy of an act, approved by the President on the 6th instant, for your instructions as to the extent and meaning of the same.

For reasons stated in the letter to Mr. Sevier, (a copy of which is enclosed,) the 8th section of the act approved on the 24th May last, (page 115, acts of last session,) the persons entitled to the donations therein specified were confined to the settlers on the lands ceded by the treaty ratified the 23d May, 1828, (acts, &c., page 196,) a portion of which lies south of the Arkansas river.—(See the enclosed diagram.*) The question which now arises is whether the 2d section of the present act extends the donations to all persons settled on the lands formerly ceded to the Choctaws, and west of the present west boundary of the Arkansas.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 9, 1828.

SIR: Colonel Benton's letter of the 6th instant in relation to the construction of the 8th section of the act of 28th May last, granting donations to certain settlers in Arkansas, having been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, I am requested by him to inform you that, from the view taken by him of that section, two conditions are essentially necessary to entitle a claimant to the donation granted. The first is, that he must have been "actually settled on that part of the Territory of Arkansas which, by the first article of the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Indians west of the Mississippi, ratified the 23d day of May, 1828, has ceased to be a part of said Territory." Secondly. That the claimant shall have removed from such settlement "according to the provisions of that treaty." The third article of the treaty so clearly designates and restricts the settlers to be removed to those who had settled on the land ceded by the 2d section of the treaty to the Cherokees, that he cannot feel himself at liberty to consider any other persons as entitled to the donation, except such as shall have been actually settled on, and shall have removed from, that part of the country ceded to the Cherokees by the 2d article of the treaty; a part of which country lies south of the Arkansas river.

* Accompanies the original of this report.

The secretary feels the less embarrassment in adhering to the view which he has taken of the conditions of the act, as there are now two propositions before Congress proposing alterations in the law; and should it have been the intention of Congress to have granted the donation to the settlers on the lands heretofore ceded to the Choctaws, that intention can be more explicitly expressed, and provision also be made for confining those donations to such persons only as were actually settled on those lands previous to the cession of them to the Choctaws.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, January 17, 1829.

SIR: My opinion of the case stated from the land office is, that the act of the 6th instant "respecting the location of certain land claims in the Territory of Arkansas, and for other purposes," is confined to the same class of settlers embraced by the act of the 24th of May, 1828, to wit: to the settlers dislodged by the treaty with the Cherokees of May, 1828.

I have the honor to remain, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GENTLEMEN: I enclose for your information a copy of "an act restricting the location of certain land claims in the Territory of Arkansas and for other purposes," passed the 6th instant. The improvements intended to be protected by this act must be of a permanent nature, and not such temporary improvements as may have been made for the purpose of depredating on the public lands by cutting timber, peeling bark, or making sugar camps, &c.

The question arising under the 2d section of this act was submitted to the Attorney General, who has given an opinion that this section does not extend the donations to any other persons than those who were entitled under the 8th section of the act of May last, to wit: "to the settlers dislodged by the treaty with the Cherokees of May, 1828."

INDEMNIFICATION FOR LOSS OF CERTIFICATES FOR LAND IN THE GEORGIA COMPANY'S PURCHASE IN THE WESTERN TERRITORY OF THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 9, 1829.

Mr. BERRIEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of George Wilson, of Pennsylvania, reported:

That by the documents submitted to them, it appears that the petitioner was the proprietor of two several certificates, granted by the then treasurer of the State of Georgia, bearing date August 3, 1795, one purporting to have received from James Harper the sum of eleven hundred and fifty-one dollars and ninety-five cents, in full for sixty-one thousand seven hundred and eleven acres of land, held as citizens' rights, in the Georgia Company's purchase of the western territory of that State—and the other the sum of one hundred and eighty-six dollars and sixty-six and two-third cents, for ten thousand acres of land in the Tennessee Company's purchase in the same territory; that these original certificates were lost by an agent of the petitioner, under circumstances which are fully explained, and supported by sufficient evidence, and that in consequence of such loss the petitioner was unable to present his claim to the commissioners appointed under the act "providing for the indemnification of certain claimants of public lands in the Mississippi Territory," passed March 31, 1814.

The object of the petitioner is to obtain now the indemnification to which he would have been entitled under the aforesaid act, on his compliance with the requirements of the same. The committee having satisfied themselves, from an examination of the evidence produced to them, of the existence and loss of the original certificates described in the petition, and that the petitioner would have been entitled to indemnification therefor under the act of 1814, if he had presented his claim to the commissioners appointed to carry the said act into effect, and had in other respects complied with the provisions of the same ; and that Congress have already, by an act passed on April 16, 1818, in behalf of the representatives of George Pearson, extended relief in a similar case ; and having, moreover, ascertained by inquiry at the proper department, that a considerable balance of the sums appropriated by the aforesaid act for the indemnification of the holders of claims denominated citizens' rights, and also of the holders of claims in the Tennessee Company, remain unexpended in the treasury of the United States, have considered that the prayer of the petitioner is reasonable, and that it ought to be granted.

By referring to the secretary of the board of commissioners under the act of 1814, the committee have ascertained that the indemnification which was allowed to the holders of citizens' rights in the purchase of the western territory of the State of Georgia was at the rate of twelve and a half cents per acre. The number of acres called for by the scrip held by the petitioner being 71,711 acres, the amount to which he is entitled is $8,963 87½ cents, for which sum they accordingly report a bill.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA CLAIMING ALL THE PUBLIC LANDS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 10, 1829.

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That this State, being a sovereign, free, and independent State, has the exclusive right to the soil and eminent domain of all the unappropriated lands within her acknowledged boundaries, which right was reserved for her by the State of Virginia, in the deed of cession of the Northwestern Territory to the United States, being confirmed and established by the articles of confederacy and the Constitution of the United States.

That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use every exertion in their power, by reason and argument, to induce the United States to acknowledge this vested right of the States, and place her upon an equal footing with the original States, in every respect whatsoever, as well in fact as in name.

That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of this resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress, and to each of their excellencies the governors of each of the following States, to wit : Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama, requesting them to lay it before the legislatures of their respective States for consideration, requesting them to adopt similar measures if they should deem it expedient.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN PATENT FOR BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 12, 1829.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled " An act for the relief of Alexander Cunningham," reported:

That though it appears by the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of the 9th of January last, that an error was committed in making out the grant for the military bounty of said Cunningham's father, whereby a quarter section of land was inserted that had previously been granted, yet it is also shown, and so understood, that this error might now be corrected in the office, and a new patent be issued for the quarter section for which the warrant issued; and the committee do not consider that another quarter section ought to be selected or drawn for, especially as it appears from the evidence before them that the person to be benefited by the relief is not the grantee, or his heir-at-law, but an assignee of the title. They therefore recommend the rejection of the bill.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 9, 1829.

SIR: The following is a statement of the conflicting claim of Ward Eldred and —— Foster, to the northeast quarter of section 12, in township 8, south of range 4 west, in the military district of Illinois, viz:

On the 8th December, 1818, warrant No. 19962, in the name of Alexander Cunningham, father and heir-at-law of Francis Cunningham, under whom Ward Eldred claims, was located on the northwest quarter of section 12, 8 south, 4 west.

The entry in the location book, the indorsement on the notification, and the record of the patent, all correspond with this location; but in filling up the patent for A. Cunningham, the words north*east* quarter were erroneously substituted for the north*west* quarter. On the same day the northeast quarter of same section, township, and range, was located by warrant No. 19492, in the name of George Thompson, and conveyed by him to a certain —— Foster, who has improved and occupies the same, as stated in the petition of Ward Eldred.

A new patent can be issued to Alexander Cunningham for the north*west* quarter, on the surrender of the patent erroneously issued for the north*east* quarter.

Should this tract (northwest quarter) have been sold for taxes, the sale will not be legal, because no patent had in fact issued for that tract, although it has been reported to the auditor of the State to have been located by Cunningham's warrants.

The patents in the name of A. Cunningham and George Thompson, the conveyance of Cunningham to Ward Eldred, and his petition, are returned.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

SPANISH AND FRENCH ORDINANCES AFFECTING LAND TITLES IN FLORIDA AND OTHER TERRITORIES OF FRANCE AND SPAIN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 13, 1829.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

By the act of Congress of the 23d of May last, "supplementary to the several acts providing for the settlement and confirmation of private land claims in Florida," provision was made for the final adjudication of such claims by the judges of the superior courts of the districts wherein the lands claimed respectively lie, and by appeal from them to the Supreme Court of the United States; and the attorneys of the United States, in the several districts, were charged with the duty, in every case where the decision should be against the United States by the judge of the superior court of the district, to make out and transmit to the Attorney General of the United States a statement containing the facts of the case, and the points of law on which the same was decided; and it was made the duty of the Attorney General, in most of those cases, to direct an appeal to be made to the Supreme Court of the United States, and to appear for the United States and prosecute such appeal. By the same act the President of the United States was authorized to appoint a law agent to superintend the interests of the United States in the premises, and to employ assistant counsel if, in his opinion, the public interest should require the same.

In the process of carrying into execution this law, it was the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States that a translated complete collection of all the Spanish and French ordinances, &c., affecting the land titles in Florida, and the other Territories heretofore belonging to France and Spain, would be indispensable to a just decision of those claims by the Supreme Court. At his suggestion, the task of preparing this compilation was undertaken by Joseph M. White, of Florida, who was employed as assistant counsel on behalf of the United States. The collection has accordingly been made, and is deposited, in manuscript, at the Department of State, subject to such order as Congress may see fit to take concerning it. The letter from Mr. White to the Secretary of State, with a descriptive list of the documents collected and thus deposited, is herewith transmitted to Congress.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

WASHINGTON, February 11, 1829.

No. 1.

WASHINGTON, February 4, 1829.

SIR: I have the honor to submit for your examination a collection of laws, ordinances, and local regulations, adopted from time to time by the government of Spain, touching the disposition of public lands in her colonies, compiled under the direction of the President of the United States.

In presenting the result of my labors, I beg leave to offer a short sketch of their origin and progress, that a better knowledge of the importance and difficulty of the subject may bespeak for the errors of my work the indulgence they will require.

By the cessions of Louisiana and Florida the United States succeeded to the territorial rights and obligations of Spain in these provinces. In acquiring the public domain the duty of protecting the rights of individuals devolved on them. To dispose of one it was necessary to ascertain the other. The inhabitants of the ceded countries were secured in their lawful possessions by express treaty stipulations, the fulfilment of which were imperiously demanded, both by national interest and national honor.

Various attempts were made by the legislature of the Union to provide for the separation of private from public property, to restore confidence, and to quiet men in their possessions. To a certain extent they have been attended with the happiest effects. The labors of commissioners charged with the duty of investigating the landed titles derived from the former government, and the subsequent legislation of Congress in confirming a vast mass of claims which had been favorably reported upon, did much towards redeeming the plighted faith of the nation and promoting the prosperity of the ceded territories, while they enhanced the value of the public lands, and increased the revenue derived from them.

It is not to be disguised, however, that much yet remains to be done in compliance with the terms and spirit of the cession, and for the security of the interests of the United States.

It has been computed that the unadjusted land claims in Louisiana, Alabama, Missouri, Arkansas, and Florida, yet cover ten or twelve millions of acres. Their validity depends upon principles of Spanish law, local usages, and the construction of treaties, which, sooner or later, must be investigated and determined before the judicial tribunals of the country.

In Arkansas and Missouri a reference of these claims to the courts for adjudication was authorized, some time since, by Congress. In the former, it is understood, considerable progress has been made in determining the validity of titles presented; in the latter a small number only have been definitively acted on. The same question has been differently decided by the courts of the State and of the Territory; and in the former the applicants for confirmation have withdrawn their petitions to await the final decision of the Supreme Court upon a leading question, decided adversely to their interests in the inferior tribunal. No act has, as yet, been passed for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. The magnitude of the grants, the variety of conflicting interests, the number of settlers, and intricacy of the whole subject, have hitherto induced Congress to forbear extending to Louisiana the provisions of the Missouri act, and rendered abortive all attempts on the part of that State to procure the termination of these long-protracted controversies. In the meantime the individual claimants have repeatedly applied to the federal legislature, by petition, for a confirmation of their titles. The impossibility of thus settling numerous and perplexed questions of private right, depending upon foreign law, seems now to be generally admitted; and the refusal of Congress to invest the judicial tribunals with authority to determine them, if it be not a denial or delay of justice, is, at least, a measure of doubtful policy. Though the claimants can institute no process against the United States, the moment they part with their title to individuals a suit may be commenced against the purchaser. In order to avoid the inconveniences arising from a sale under such circumstances government declines bringing the lands into market, and the result is often alike prejudicial to both parties.

By the 8th article of the treaty of cession, which transferred the Floridas from Spain to the United States, the latter obliged themselves to confirm the inhabitants in their possessions. The necessity of fulfilling this obligation, the annulment of the large grants of Alagon, Punon Rostro, and Vargas, and the confirmation of the smaller concessions by repeated acts of legislation, prepared the way for the law of the last session, by which the claimants to lands in Florida were authorized to bring their titles at once to the test of judicial scrutiny. The magnitude of the controversy excited the vigilance of Congress, and while provision was made for the speedy termination of these claims upon principles the most just and liberal, the interests of the United States were most watchfully guarded.

The President was authorized to engage assistant counsel; and, during the last summer, I had the honor to receive a letter, written by his direction, proposing to engage my professional services.

Subsequently, on my return from Quebec, I received, in New York, another communication, enclosing the copy of a letter from the Attorney General, containing the following suggestion:

"I beg leave to suggest that it will be very important to have a complete collection of all the Spanish and French ordinances, &c., affecting the land titles in Florida, and the other Territories and States formerly belonging to the crown of Spain and France at different times. Such a collection will be indispensable to a just decision of these claims by the Supreme Court. If Colonel White could be induced to compile such a collection, with an accurate index, it would be of inestimable value in the controversies, and the expense of printing a full edition would be well bestowed by the government. Such a work seems to me to be imperiously called for by all the courts and all the counsel who will have to act on this interesting subject; and the value of the subject at stake, as well as the activity with which these claims will be urged against the United States, require that no time should be lost in making the collection. Such a work would be of infinitely more value than the assistance of any counsel that could be commanded in the argument of the causes."

It was not without the most unfeigned diffidence I entered on the execution of the task thus proposed to me. My reluctance arose from a knowledge of the difficulties of the subject; the magnitude of the interests involved; the nature and policy of the Spanish government; the obscurity of the laws of Spain; and the want of access to books and documents illustrative of this portion of Spanish jurisprudence. This reluctance was increased, rather than diminished, by an experience of several years, acquired in the office of the United States Commissioner for the adjudication of land claims under the Florida treaty. In common with every jurist and statesman, whose duties have led him to an examination of such topics, I had felt, at every point, the want of authentic information; but to feel this deficiency was much easier than to supply it. Though repeatedly acknowledged by committees of Congress, by judges, commissioners, and other officers of government, nothing had yet been done toward collecting the scattered materials of a compilation like the present, from a thousand different sources, accessible only to the most patient industry. I was encouraged to the undertaking only in consequence of having, while in the office referred to, preserved copious notes of all the general laws and local ordinances, read or quoted, and procured copies of various official letters, decrees, proclamations, and other important public documents.

To have withheld these sources of knowledge from the public would scarcely have been just to the government or the claimants; to have intrusted their revision and arrangement to other hands than my own would have endangered their correctness, and impaired their utility. Preferring to be amenable only for my own mistakes, and willing to encounter the responsibility which belonged to such an enterprise, rather than forfeit the just share of reputation to which my contributions might be entitled, I entered on the execution of the work with a sincere distrust indeed of my own abilities, but a perfect assurance that those who could best appreciate its defects would always be the most ready to treat them with indulgence.

Considering that the portions of the Spanish law thus collected and embodied were hereafter, in all human probability, to have an extensive and material influence, not merely in the adjustment of claims to ten or twelve millions of acres of land, in which the United States are concerned, but also in the settlement of litigation between individuals holding conflicting titles; considering, also, that, while the public domain was to be protected on the one hand, the public faith was to be preserved on the other, I have not felt myself at liberty, in making my selections, to omit anything which, according to my apprehension, could be of consequence to either party.

Allow me, even at the risk of exhausting your patience, to state as briefly as possible the nature and extent of my researches, at least so far as they have led to the acquisition of valuable materials, omitting such as have proved fruitless, or comparatively unimportant.

For the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the information already in possession of the government, I carefully examined all the reports of the various boards of commissioners, from their first organization to the present time. It was only among the more recent of these ponderous masses of manuscript that I found any reference to the laws or ordinances of the country from which the titles in controversy were derived. In general, the cases followed each other in the order in which they were decided, without system or classification. Seldom could any uniform rules of decision be extracted from them, and the correctness of the few adopted was more than questionable, since they frequently consisted of common law principles applied to rights arising out of a different system of jurisprudence, and under a government whose organization, forms, and policy, have little resemblance to those, the maxims of which were thus made tests of excellence, or standards of comparison.

The instructions of Mr. Gallatin, and the report of Mr. Crawford, were also examined with anxious attention. I found, however, that they related chiefly to the interpretation which should be given to our own statutes providing for the adjudication of these claims, and the manner of their settlement, rather than to the treaties and ordinances under which they were to be decided.

In the hope of procuring some light upon the subjects of this compilation, various histories of Spain and of her colonies have been consulted. From these sources little information can be gained with reference to the law of real property, or the organization, powers, and duties, of the local authorities.

The jealousy of the mother country seems for a long time to have shrouded her colonial policy in studied obscurity; and when, at a late period, her provinces were opened to the inquiries of intelligent strangers, this branch of their history attracted little attention. No historian, commentator, or traveller, whose works have fallen within my reach, has attempted to present anything even professing to be full or satisfactory on the subject.

In the early settlement of the American colonies, conflicts with the aborigines, and, subsequently, the contention of European powers for colonial and commercial aggrandisement, prevented uniform legislation or regular systems of government. The accounts which have descended to us of Cortez, Fernando de Soto, and their contemporaries and immediate successors, are little more than chronicles of battles, conquests, or massacres; records of suffering, peril, and adventure. When, in the further progress of the colonies, some traces of their civil history appears, when their local ordinances were framed, and their territorial limits defined, the provinces of Spain were not regulated by charters and commissions, like those of France and England. The obscurity which veils their origin has continued, in some measure, to envelope their policy to the present day.

I find, indeed, in an account of the election of Cortez as president, some mention of an intended application to Don Carlos to ratify it, and subsequently his appointment by the Emperor Charles V to be captain general of New Spain. Soon afterwards, a royal audience [audiencia real] was appointed, and charged with the administration of the civil affairs of the country.

From the appointment of the first viceroy of New Spain, however, to the year 1701, I have met with no specification of his powers; no authentic detail of his subordinate authorities, nor any code of laws or system of regulations relative to concessions of the royal domain.

The viceroyalty was divided into three provinces and twelve intendancies; but these appear to have been political divisions of an entirely different character from others of the same name, adopted by the King of Spain during the last century. In the works of Clavigero, Humboldt, and Bonnycastle, statements of the revenues of New Spain are given. Nothing appears to have accrued from the sales of lands; from which it may, perhaps, be inferred that they were granted gratuitously.

In the history "de las Provincias Internas," extensive grants are spoken of; but whether made by the King in person, or a subordinate authority, does not appear.

The Emperor Charles V granted to a company of Weltzers, a German establishment of Augsburg, the sovereignty of the province of Venezuela, from Cape Vela to Maracapua.

Humboldt mentions that a small number of powerful families possess a great part of the shores of the intendancies of Vera Cruz and San Luis Potosi; and adds, that no agrarian law forces these extensive proprietors to sell their estates—mayorasgos.

Whether these grants were absolute or conditional, in the nature of fiefs, or merely for the encouragement of settlement and cultivation, I have found no means of ascertaining.

There are in Cuba a captain general, intendant, and superintendent general, and eighteen governors of districts, all authorized, in some form, and to some extent, to make grants or allotments of lands. Their powers, in many cases, depend on instructions, official letters, and decrees of the King, captain general, or intendant general, addressed to these respective subordinate departments. West Florida, as is well known, was a dependency of the government of Louisiana; and East Florida was attached to the intendancy of Cuba. To remove, as far as practicable, the perplexity of this branch of the subject, I extended my inquiries to Cuba, and received from thence some official letters, decrees and commissions; and have also obtained whatever authentic papers of this description the archives of Louisiana, and of East and West Florida, afforded.

By direction of the President, I have also collected some documents relative to claims derived from the former British government of West Florida. These claims cover more than a million of acres of land, and appear to be entirely unfounded in law or equity. They are urged upon our government for confirmation, in consequence of a precedent most erroneously and unfortunately established in the settlement of the land claims of Mississippi. Independent of any public act of the Spanish government, these claims, it would seem, were absolutely void at the expiration of the period allowed to the inhabitants of the ceded territory, by the treaty of 1783, for their removal and the disposition of their lands.

If Spain then extended to them some indulgence, in consequence of the value of their possessions, the forfeiture, it is apprehended, was only postponed to the expiration of the period allowed by her liberality.

The justice or policy of the conditions imposed on the inhabitants of Florida by the third article of the treaty between Spain and England, was it is believed, a matter exclusively between those two powers. The United States were neither parties nor privies to the compact; they derived no benefits from, and incurred no responsibilities under it. The treaty was contemporaneous with the acknowledgment of our independence. The invasion by Spain, the surrender and evacuation of the Floridas—all happened while both Spain and the United States were at open war with England. The condition imposed by Spain on England in the cession was the same imposed by the latter on the former in the treaty of 1762. There were numerous precedents of a similar description, all of which have been considered entirely consistent with the established principles of international law. These claims are advanced against the United States after a lapse of forty-five years, and they have been confirmed in the State of Mississippi, whenever the land which they covered had not been regranted by Spain. If it be true that his Catholic Majesty, or his lawful authorities, could rightfully concede the lands which were comprehended in these titles, there can, it is presumed, be little doubt that the cession, in "full property and absolute dominion," of all the territory not granted, conveyed to the United States a title as perfect and indefeasible as any Spain could have conferred upon her own subjects. My province, however, is neither to argue nor decide the question; and I content myself with annexing such documents as exhibit the light in which these titles were regarded by the Spanish authorities.

To avail myself of every facility towards making the researches called for on the faithful execution of this arduous commission, I addressed letters to two learned professors in the universities of Cambridge and Virginia, requesting an examination of the different works in the libraries of each, and translations of whatever might be found connected with the subject. To each I sent a schedule of the ordinances of a general nature referred to in the proceedings of the Spanish tribunals, and of the various boards of commissioners appointed under the laws of the United States. For the assistance and courtesy extended to me by both these gentlemen I owe them my sincere acknowledgments. I am also indebted to a gentleman of great learning and research in Florida for translations of such parts of the Recopilacion de las leyes de los Reynos de las Indias, as related to real property. They have been compared in the Department of State by the authorized translator of the government, and approved.

The Curia Philipica and Febrero Adicionada was found to contain nothing worthy of being presented under my instructions. No reference has been made to the partisans of Don Alonzo, as there is a translation of the work accessible to those who may desire to refer to it.

The compilation which I now send to your department is—

1st. An ordinance establishing the Council of the Indies, dated in 1524, in Spanish, with a translation, to be found in a work entitled "Ordenanzas del Consejo Real de las Indias Neuvamente recopiladas, y por el Rey Don Felipe Quarto."—(Published at Madrid in 1681.)

2d. Various laws, ordinances and decrees, in relation to the organization of Spanish tribunals, the form and authentication of Spanish documents, and the various duties and responsibilities of governors, intendants, and tribunals, relating to the concessions of lands, from a work entitled "Recopilacion de leyes de los Reynos de las Indias mandadas imprimer y publicar por la Majestad Catolica del Rey Don Carlos II."—(Folio; printed in 1756: and again printed in two subsequent editions, 1774 and 1791.)

3d. Extracts on the same subject from the "Novissima Recopilacion de las leyes de España, dividada in XII libros, en que se reforma la Recopilacion publicada por el Señor Don Felipe II, y se incorporan las pragmaticas, cedulas, decretos, ordenes y resoluciones Reales, y otras providencias no recopiladas, y expedidas hasta el de 1804, mandada formar por el Señor Don Carlos IV."—(Printed in Madrid in 1805.)

4th. Extracts from a work entitled "Real Ordenanza para el establicimento y instruccion de Intendantes," &c.—(Printed at Madrid in 1786.)

5th. Decretos del Rey Don Fernando Septimo, from his restoration in 1814 to the end of 1816.—(Printed in Madrid.)

6th. Extracts from the Institutes of the civil law of Spain, by Doctors Don Ignatius Jordan de Asso y del Rio and Don Miguel de Manuel y Roderiguez, with references to the book and chapter of all the most approved writers, compilers, and commentators on Spanish laws.

7th. Treaties relating to the subject of this compilation.

8th. Commissions, official letters, decrees, proclamations, instructions, and regulations of the officers, captains general, intendants, governors, and sub-delegates in Louisiana and the Floridas.

9th. Some papers showing the absolute nullity of the titles derived from the former British government of West Florida, in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and West Florida, and those in East Florida, derived from the provincial government there.

The general laws above specified have been translated or compared by the authorized translator at the Department of State, and those of a local character by those whose accuracy cannot be questioned; the originals, whenever it was practicable, were deposited in the department.

I sought assiduously, but have been unable to discover, a record or notice of the proceedings upon some grant or concession which had been made by a captain general, intendant or governor, and disapproved of by the King. I have been unable to ascertain whether any such exist. In the limited time, and with the limited means allowed me, it is impossible to prosecute my inquiries more extensively than I have done. How far the objects of the government and the ends of justice may be subserved by researches instituted at Madrid, under the permission of the King of Spain, among the archives of the Council of the Indies, is respectfully submitted.

Having stated the origin of the work with which I have been charged; having sketched its plan; given some account of the labor and difficulty of its execution, I may, I trust, be excused from palliating its faults, or insisting on its merits. Let it be permitted to me merely to say, that no pains have been spared to render it correct and useful: of its necessity there can be no doubt. The numerous inquiries I have had concerning its progress, the solicitude evinced for its completion; and the anxiety to procure copies, sufficiently attest the interest it has excited. In the hope that it may not disappoint the reasonable expectations of the government and the public; and that, whatever may be its deficiencies, it will in the main facilitate the administration and attainment of justice, I ask for it your candid consideration; and

Have the honor to subscribe myself, with the highest respect, your most obedient servant,

JOS. M. WHITE.

Hon. H. CLAY,
Secretary of State of the United States.

[Translation.]

That the royal Council of the Indies may reside in the court, and have the servants and officers which this ordinance declares:

Considering the great benefits and advantages which, by the grace of God, we have received, and every day do receive, from the increase and growth of the kingdoms and dominions of our Indies; and, being well advised of the obligation and duty towards them, which this imposes upon us, we are solicitous, on our part, (with God's assistance,) to devise suitable means by which such great kingdoms and dominions may be governed and ruled in a proper manner. And in order that we may provide with the greater judgment, deliberation, and prudence, in matters relating to religion and the good of these States, we establish and ordain that our council of the Indies may always reside in our court, near our person, and in it a president thereof, a grand chancellor of the Indies, who must also be a counsellor; and the counsellors learned men, which the business to come before them will necessarily require, of whom, for the present, there may be eight: a chancellor of the exchequer and two secretaries; a deputy grand chancellor; all of whom must be men of approved morals, of noble and pure lineage, fearing God, and eminent for their learning and prudence; three reporters, and a clerk of the chamber of justice, skilful and diligent in the discharge of their offices, and of approved fidelity; four auditors of accounts, able and competent persons, and a receiver of the fines imposed by the chamber, and confiscations and deposits; two fiscal solicitors; a chief chronicler and cosmographer, and a professor of mathematics; an assessor of suits; an advocate and proctor of poor persons; a chaplain, who may say mass to the council on the days for it; four porters and a constable, who must all be men of the requisite ability and qualifications; and, before being admitted to their offices, they shall take an oath that they will discharge them well and faithfully, and that they will keep the ordinances of the council, those already made and those which shall be made, and the secret of it.

TRANSLATIONS FROM THE RECOPILACION DE LEYES DE LAS INDIAS.

Translation of so much of the "Compilation of the laws of the Kingdoms of the Indies," (recopilacion de las leyes de los Reynos de las Indias,) as relates to the organization of the tribunals, the powers of the different officers of government and the grants of public lands in the American possessions of the Crown of Spain.

Prefatory act declaratory of the authority given to the laws contained in this compilation.

I, Don Carlos, by the grace of God, King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, of the Two Sicilies, of Jerusalem, Navarre, Grenada, Toledo, Valencia, Gallicia, Mallorea, Seville, Sardinia, Cordova, Corsica, Murcia, Jaen, the Algarves, Algesiras, Gibraltar, of the Canary Islands, the East and West Indies, of the islands and continents of the ocean; Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, Brabant, and Milan; Count of Apsburg, Flanders, Tyrol, and Barcelona; Lord of Biscay and Molina, &c., to the dukes, counts, marquisses, nobles, and to the presidents, governors, grand chancellor, and members of our council of the Indies; to our viceroys, presidents, auditors of our royal audiences, governors, magistrates, (corregidores,) superior and ordinary alcaldes, and others; our judges and justices, accountants, and officers of the royal treasury of these our kingdoms of the Indies, islands, and continents of the ocean, our priors and consulates of Seville, Mexico, and Lima, and to our president and judges, and the learned of our court of contratacion of Seville; generals, admirals, captains, and other ministers and officers of our armadas, fleets, merchant ships and vessels employed in the commerce of the Indies, and to all other persons whom the tenor of these, our letters, does or may concern:

Know ye, that from the discovery of our West Indies, islands, and continent of the ocean, our first and principal desire, and that of the Kings, our glorious ancestors, having been to enact laws by which those kingdoms might be governed in peace and justice, many letters, charters, provisions, ordinances, instructions, acts of government, and other public acts, have been issued, which, owing to the remoteness of some provinces, have not come to the notice of our subjects, in consequence of which, great injury may have accrued to the good government, and to the rights of the parties interested; and we, on our part, being anxious to remedy these inconveniences, and taking into consideration the great diversity of matters, and the number and intricacy of subjects, it being, besides, expedient that all that we shall provide and determine be made known to all, in order that they be made acquainted with the laws by which they are governed, and to which they are to conform in matters of government, justice, war, finance, and others, and with the penalties incurred by offenders against those laws; having caused a careful and diligent examination to be made of the books in our offices, and of all the public acts, which, through so long a lapse of time, have become excessively numerous; having seen that some books and volumes, both printed and manuscript, which do not contain that authenticity, weight, arrangement, and clearness, required by our royal enactments, are inadequate and unfit to form the basis of decisions in any matter whatsoever; and that the Kings, our ancestors, had directed and commanded a digest to be made of all matters and final decisions, which had been enacted and determined down to their time, and particularly to the years one thousand five hundred and fifty-two, and one thousand five hundred and sixty: various commissions were given to Don Luis de Velasco, our viceroy to New Spain, at the instance of Doctor Francisco Hernandez de Liebana, fiscal [attorney] of our council of the Indies, directing him to cause a collection to be made of all the letters, enactments, and chapters in the charters, concerning the good government and administration of justice in our royal tribunal [audiencia] of Mexico, that the same might be printed, who committed the execution of this duty to the Licentiate Vasco de Puga, auditor [oidor] of the said tribunal, by whom a volume of ordinances [cedulas] was digested and published in the year one thousand five hundred and sixty-three. Don Francisco de Toledo having subsequently been appointed viceroy of Peru, with special instructions forthwith to cause a compilation to be made of all the ordinances [cedulas] which he might find; he directed that they should be collected into one volume, divided into titles, and arranged in order of matter; but these directions were not carried into effect, it being deemed more proper that the work should be completed within these kingdoms, where, in the year one thousand five hundred and seventy, the King, Don Felipe the Second, caused a declaration and digest to be made of the regulations enacted for the good government of the Indies, in order that they might all be known and understood, suppressing such as were unnecessary, and supplying others which were wanting, promulgating and explaining such as were susceptible of doubtful meaning, or repugnant in themselves, and dividing them into titles and under general heads. Of this work there was only printed and published the title relating to the council and its ordinances, whose provisions were promulgated, and commanded to be enforced by an ordinance of the twenty-fourth of September, one thousand five hundred and seventy-one; and, in order to supply the deficiency caused by the important engagements of our council, orders were given to Diego de Encinas, clerk in the secretary's office, to transcribe the enactments, ordinances, (cedulas) chapters in the ordinances, and letters issued and delivered at different times, down to the year one thousand five hundred and ninety-six, which formed four printed volumes, but which, owing to their not being divided and arranged in a proper manner, have not yet answered the desired purpose of a well digested compilation. In the year one thousand six hundred and eight, Count de Lemus being then president of the council, a commission was appointed and a place designated where the Licentiates Hernando Villagomez and Don Rodrigo de Aguiar y Aucuña, of the same council, were to proceed to execute that work, and to settle all doubtful matters; but the stated duties of their offices did not permit of its being completed, and although its president, the Licentiate Don Fernando Carillo, used particular exertions to promote that object the same causes prevented its completion. As it was, however, so necessary and important its further prosecution was committed to the Licentiate Don Rodrigo de Aguiar, assisted by the Licentiate Don Antonio de Leon, a learned judge of the court of contratacion of the Indies. In the year one thousand six hundred and twenty-eight, while this great work was progressing, the book, which has to this day been in circulation under the title of summary of the general compilation of the laws, was ordered and published for the purpose of promulgating the resolutions and decisions which it contained. After the decease of Don Rodrigo de Aguiar, the work was continued by Doctor Don Juan de Solorzano Pereyra, of the same council, under the direction of the Count de Castrillo, who likewise used his particular exertions in forwarding its completion. In the year one thousand six hundred and seventy the Licentiate Joseph Gonzalez, governor, having, jointly with the whole council, examined what progress had been made up to that time, and, having taken advice from ourselves, thought it expedient to constitute a commission composed of the governor and the Licentiates Don Antonio de Monsalve, Don Miguel de Luna, and Don Gil, the custejon, who were succeeded by Don Alvaro de Benavidez, Don Thomas D. Valdes, Don Alonzo de Llanos, Don Juan de Santelices, Don Antonio de Castro, Don Juan de Corul, and Don Diego de Alvarado, all of our said council of the Indies, to be assisted by the Licentiate Don Fernando Ximenez Paniagua, learned judge of the court of contratacion, in order to discuss and settle such points as might require mature consideration. Subsequently, Doctor Don Francisco Ramos de Manzano, governor, Count de Peñuranda, Count de Medellin, and the Duke de Medina Celi, presidents of our said council of the Indies, continued the same undertaking; and, sensible of the importance, both to our royal service and to public good, of its prosecution and completion, took all necessary measures to attain the desired object, and to give it publicity under the proper authority. Now, having considered and taken advice on the subject, Prince Don Vincente Gonzaga being governor of the council, we decree and command that the laws contained in this book, and framed for the good government and administration of justice in our council of the Indies, in our court of contratacion of Seville, of the East and West Indies, islands and continent of the northern and southern oceans, of their navigation, fleets, and vessels, and all our possessions and dependencies, which are ruled and governed by ourselves, through our said council, be obeyed, fulfilled, and executed, and that they regulate and determine all suits and differences which may arise in this as well as in the aforesaid kingdoms, although some of the said laws be newly made and enacted, and may not have been published or promulgated, or be contradictory of, or different from, other laws, chapters in our charters, and regulations of our kingdoms, or from other cedulas, letters patent, provisions, ordinances, instructions, and acts of government, and other documents, either manuscript or printed; all which our will is that henceforth they have no authority whatever; that no judgments be given according to them, they being hereby enacted in a different form, or expressly repealed, as we do by this law more fully repeal them, but solely according to the laws contained in this compilation, or, in default of them, according to what is enacted by the second law in the first title and second book of this compilation, the cedulas and ordinances given at our royal audiences, continuing in full force and vigor, were not contrary to its provisions; when printed, it shall be made up into one volume and book and placed in the archives of our council of the Indies, revised and signed by the members of our said council; and it shall form an original record, by which, in all cases of doubts and difficulties which may hereafter arise, the text of said laws shall be corrected and amended; another volume and copy shall, moreover, be deposited in our archives of Simancas, revised and amended, signed by the members of our council, compared and collated with it, which shall remain there and shall have the same authority as the original. Such is our pleasure. Given at Madrid the eighteenth of May, one thousand six hundred and eighty-two.

I, THE KING.

By command of the King, our lord,

D. Joseph de Veytia Linage.
D. Vincente Gonzaga.
D. Bernabe Ochoa.
Count de Canulejas de Chinchetra.

Recorded:

D. Francisco de Salazar.

By the Grand Chancellor:

D. Francisco de Salazar, Substitute.

2.—Lib. II, Tit. 1, Law 2.—(Vol. 1, p. 217.)

The laws contained in this compilation to be observed in the manner and cases herein set forth.

Considering that it is of the utmost importance that the laws framed for the good government of our Indies, islands, and continent of the northern and southern oceans, which have been promulgated in separate cedulas, enactments, instructions, and charters, be collected and digested into one body, and in the form of a code, and that the same be obeyed, fulfilled and executed, we decree and command that all the laws herein contained be fulfilled and executed as our laws, and in the manner set forth in the law prefixed to this compilation, and that they all have force of law and supreme authority in whatever they decide and determine; and if it should be deemed expedient to enact others besides those contained in this book, the viceroys, presidents, tribunals, governors, and superior alcades shall give us information thereof through our council of the Indies, stating their motives and reasons for so doing, in order that on due consideration such measures may be taken as shall be thought proper, and added in a separate book. We command that no addition be made to the municipal laws and ordinances of each city, nor in those which shall be made by any community or university, nor in the ordinances enacted for the good and benefit of the Indies, and confirmed by our viceroys or royal tribunals for their good government, when not repugnant to the laws contained in this book, which shall have the same force and operation as if they were confirmed by the tribunals (audiencias) until, after being seen by the council of the Indies, they shall have been approved or rejected. And as regards what is not determined by the laws contained in this compilation, with respect to the decision of causes, the laws in the compilation and partidas of the kingdom of Castile shall be observed in the manner set forth in the following law.

3.—Lib. II, Tit. 1, Law 2.—(Vol. 1, p. 218.)

For the observance of the laws of Castile, in cases which are not provided by those of the Indies.

We decree and command that in all cases, transactions, and suits which are not decided nor provided by the laws contained in this compilation, nor by the regulations, provisions, or ordinances enacted and unrepealed, concerning the Indies, and by those which may be promulgated by our orders, the laws of our kingdom of Castile shall be observed conformably to the law of Toro, with respect as well to the substance, determination, and decision of cases, transactions, and suits, as to the form of proceedings.

4.—Ibid., Law 4.—(Vol. 1, p. 218.)

For the observance of the ancient laws in force for the government of the Indies, and of those which have been re-enacted.

We decree and command, that the laws and good customs anciently in force in the Indies for their good government and police, and the usages and customs observed and retained from the introduction of Christianity among them, which are not repugnant to our sacred religion, or to the laws contained in this book, and to those which have been framed anew, be observed and fulfilled; and it having become expedient to do so, we hereby approve and confirm them, reserving to ourselves the power of adding thereto whatever we shall think fit, and will appear to us necessary for the service of God our Lord, and our own, and for the protection of, and Christian police among, the natives of those provinces, without prejudice to established usages among them, or to their good and wholesome customs and statutes.

5.—Lib. II, Tit. 2, Law 1.—(Vol. 1, p. 228.)

The council of the Indies to be held in the capital, and to have such ministers and officers as are provided by this law.

In consideration of the great benefits and mercies which we have received, and daily continue to receive, from the Supreme Bounty, through the advancement and improvement of the kingdoms and dominions of our Indies, and sensible of the duties and obligations they impose upon us, we desire, on our part, (through Divine favor,) to devise the proper means for the good government of so extensive kingdoms and dominions. And in order to provide with more mature deliberation and better counsel, for the service of God our Lord, and for the good of those States: We establish and ordain that henceforth our council of the Indies shall reside, together with a president thereof, in our capital, near our person, as likewise the grand chancellor, who shall also be a counsellor, such of the learned counsellors as the state of affairs shall require, who for the present shall be eight in number; one attorney, [fiscal,] and two secretaries, and one deputy [teniente] grand chancellor, all of whom will be persons of approved demeanor, and of noble and high lineage, fearing God, and selected for their knowledge and prudence; three reporters, and a clerk of court, skilful and diligent in the discharge of their duties, and of approved fidelity; four able and experienced accountants, and a treasurer general; two attorneys and solicitors; one historian and cosmographer; one professor of mathematics; one assessor of costs of suits; one advocate and attorney for the poor; one chaplain to say mass on council days; four porters and one constable; all able and duly qualified men who, before being installed in their respective offices, will make oath well and faithfully to discharge their duties, and will observe the ordinances now framed, or hereafter to be framed, by the council, and to keep its secrets.

The council to have supreme jurisdiction in the Indies, to make laws, examine statutes, and to be obeyed there and in these kingdoms.

In order that the members of our council may more effectually and with more authority assist us in fulfilling our obligations towards so great kingdoms and dominions, it is our will and pleasure that said council have supreme jurisdiction throughout our West Indies, now discovered, or which may hereafter be discovered, and over the transactions there arising and depending; and that the same may, with our council, and for the good government and administration of justice therein, ordain and make laws, regulations, ordinances, and provisions, general and particular, necessary for the good of those provinces for the time being; and further, that it have power to see and examine, that we may approve and enforce obedience thereto, all ordinances, constitutions, and other statutes, made by prelates, chapters, canons, and convents of ecclesiastics, and by our viceroys, tribunals, councils, and other corporations in the Indies, where, as well as in all the other kingdoms and dominions, in matters relating to affairs of the Indies, and subjects connected therewith, our said council shall be obeyed and respected, in the same manner as our council of Castile, and our other councils, are obeyed in whatever concerns them; and its enactments and commands shall, in every respect, be fulfilled and obeyed in all parts as well of these kingdoms as of those of the Indies, and by all persons whatsoever.

No council, chancery, tribunal, judge, nor justices of these kingdoms, other than the Council of the Indies, shall take cognizance of affairs connected with them.

We decree and command that none of our royal councils, tribunals, alcaldes either of our court or house, chancery, or audiences, nor any other judge whatever, or justices of our kingdoms and dominions, presume to take cognizance, or exercise any jurisdiction over the affairs of the Indies, or anything appertaining to our Council of the Indies, either by petition or complaint, or in the form of appeal, in the usual manner, or in execution, in first, second, or any other resort; but that as soon as any causes come before them, they all be remanded to our said Council of the Indies. And we command the clerks of the alcaldes of court, the clerks in the provinces, and of the Numero and others, whoever they may be, whenever they shall be called upon by our Council of the Indies to lay before it any suit or business whatever depending before them, or passing through their hands, which may in any matter relate to, or be connected with, affairs of the Indies, to appear in person, and make report of said suits or business, without pleading any cause of impediment whatever.

8.—Lib. II, Tit. 2, Law 41.—(Vol. 1, p. 242.)

The full council necessary to grant and reward.

We command that no petition for relief be answered or decreed, and that no relief be granted, or compensation be made, in the absence of the president, or unless all the members of the council be present.

9.—Ibid., Law 42.—(Ibid.)

The nature of the services and evidence of the same to be inserted in the reports, and placed on record, in cases of petition for rewards.

In the reports made to us, in cases of rewards and compensation for services, the qualifications, merits, and services of the persons in whose behalf they are made, shall be fully stated, together with the testimony, and the facts supporting the same, setting forth how and where such services have been rendered, the compensation made in money or otherwise, and the objections of our fiscal, if such there be; and for the better fulfilment of this, there shall be in the custody of our secretaries a record and statement of said compensation and rewards as shall have been granted by us; and each shall keep one for the provinces and districts resorting to his office.

10.—Lib. II, Tit. 2, Law 43.—(Vol. 1, p. 243.)

No memorial for services shall be admitted which shall not be supported by certificates.

No memorial, from any person whatever, shall be received for services, which shall not be supported by certificates from the viceroys, generals, or other chiefs, under whom such services shall have been performed, except those of persons who shall have served in the councils.

11.—Ibid., Law 44.—(Vol. 1, p. 243.)

A petitioner for services performed by another person shall have to prove that he is entitled to claim the compensation.

Whoever shall apply for services rendered by another person, even by his father, besides proving that no compensation has been received, shall have to prove his right to present the claim; and the papers exhibited for that purpose shall be certified by the oldest counsellor, [Togado,] and by the secretary, who shall declare whether he is so entitled, and the amount shall be adjudged by the council, conformably to said certificates.

12.—Lib. II, Tit. 2, Law 45.—(Vol. 1, p. 243.)

The memorial to set forth all the services, and no others to be admitted.

The party addressing a memorial shall therein set forth all the services rendered by him up to its date, because no other shall thereafter be admitted; and the members of our royal Council of the Indies shall receive orders not to admit them.

13.—Ibid., Law 46.—(Ibid.)

In case of pretensions for fresh services, the council shall certify whether they are entitled to additional compensation.

If, after relief shall have been granted to a person who shall have performed additional services, additional compensation be asked for the same, the council shall inquire and declare whether they are entitled to further compensation; and if so, the memorial shall be admitted for consideration.

14.—Lib. II, Tit. 2, Law 47.—(Ibid.)

A person alleging services which he cannot substantiate loses his compensation for those that are proved, and the right of petitioning for the same.

A memorialist alleging in his petition services which are uncertain, and cannot be proved, thereby forfeits his claims for such as are substantiated, and the right of petitioning for the same.

15.—Ibid., Law 54.—(Vol. 1, p. 245.)

No claim for relief to be presented a third time, or be reconsidered.

We command that no claim for compensation for services, grace or relief, or connected with such subjects, of whatever description, be brought before the council a third time; and we permit that, in cases of petitions and memorials for rewards, or for compensation for services, or other matters of grace, the same may be entitled to consideration and reconsideration, the records whereof, and of all matters connected therewith, shall remain in the custody of the secretary of the council, together with the other papers of the office; and after having thus been twice considered, the case shall be closed and ended; and if, with a view of fraudulently using a second time the pleadings and papers, the petitions were withdrawn or secreted, or any of the memorials and decrees contained therein, the person guilty of so doing, if an attorney, shall be suspended from his office for the term of six months, and if the party himself, or any other person acting in his name, he shall incur a fine of ten thousand maravedis to our treasury; and the same shall be observed in cases where, after decision by the report made to us, the party shall have declined accepting the first compensation allowed, or where none shall have been granted.

The pleadings, in cases of claims for services presented by the parties, not to be returned to them, and the official records to be kept secret.

We command that the records of proceedings for services rendered, made out at the request of the parties and laid before our Council of the Indies for the purpose of obtaining compensation, be not returned to the said parties, and that they remain in the custody of the secretaries, who shall keep them as heretofore provided; and the official records made out by the audiences, and sent up, together with their opinions, shall be kept secret, so as to prevent their being seen or read by any one not in possession of the secrets of the council.

17.—Lib. II, Tit. 5, Law 7.—(Vol. 1, p. 275.)

The fiscal to have communication of the petitions for relief, whenever he shall require it, and may plead against them.

The King's attorney [fiscal] may allege and state whatever he may see fit, in the interest of our service, against petitions for reward or compensation for services, and against the pleadings and opinions of the tribunals [audiences] which shall be presented for that purpose; all which shall be communicated to him whenever he may require it.

Rescripts and orders for rewards not to be intrusted to the audiences.

Whereas inconveniences have arisen from the practice of giving our rescripts and letters of reward, patronage, or appointments in our Indies, or others of the same description, directed to our tribunals, [audiences,] which have taken those occasions of interfering in affairs of government: We command that none be henceforth given in that form by our Council of the Indies, but that the said letters be addressed to the viceroys, presidents, or governors.

19.—Lib. II, Tit. 6, Law 25.—(Vol. 1, p. 283.)

Orders for compensation not to be given after four months, without a supplement.

Orders for compensation, which shall not be taken out within four months, shall not be delivered without a supplement.

20.—Lib. II, Tit. 15, Law 1.—(Vol. 1, p. 323.)

Dividing the discovered parts of the Indies into twelve jurisdictions [audiencias,] and in governments, Corregimientos and Alcaldias Mayores.

Whereas twelve tribunals [audiences] and royal chanceries, with the limits prescribed in the following laws, have been established in those parts of our kingdoms and dominions in the Indies which have been discovered to this day, for the government of our subjects, in peace and justice; and whereas their districts have been divided into governments, Corregimientos, and Alcaldias Mayores, in compliance with our laws and orders, and subordinate to the royal tribunals, [audiences,] and all of them under the jurisdiction of our supreme Council of the Indies, which represents our royal person: We ordain and command that henceforth, and till further orders, the said twelve audiences be continued, and, within their respective districts, the governments, Corregimientos, and Alcaldias Mayores, existing at this time, and that no alteration be made therein without express orders from ourselves or from our council.

Decrees of the [audiences] tribunals to be observed and fulfilled as if emanating from the King; and what they are to do in case of war.

We ordain and command that all our councils, judges, justices, knights, squires, officers, and good men of the cities, towns, and villages in the Indies, who, at any time, and on any occasions, in time of peace or war, may have been called by our president and auditors of the royal tribunals, [audiences,] do assist them, and execute and fulfil all that the same shall, in our name, say and command them to do, as good and loyal subjects, and with the fidelity which they owe us; and that for their fulfilment they grant them all the aid and favor which they may require and demand, under pain of incurring our disgrace, and the other penalties to which are subject such vassals as do not assist their Kings and masters, and refuse to execute their decrees and commands, to which penalties we condemn them, in case of disobedience, to be executed upon their persons and their goods.

We do further command that, where the president is governor and captain general, the royal tribunal [audience] shall issue no orders in matters of war, nor shall interfere therein, whenever the governor and captain general shall be present; these being under his exclusive jurisdiction, or, when absent, under that of the audience. This shall be so executed wherever the laws in this book make no special provision in the case.

Those who shall think themselves aggrieved by the acts of the viceroy or president may appeal to the audience.

We declare and command that whenever a person shall think himself aggrieved by any official act or decision of the viceroy or president he may appeal to our audiences, where justice shall be done to him, according to the laws and ordinances; and the viceroys and presidents shall not prevent their appeals, nor shall be present at the examination and decisions of their causes, for which purpose they shall abstain from attending.

23.—Lib. II, Tit. 15, Law 43.—(Vol. 1, p. 336.)

The viceroys and presidents to exercise jurisdiction in matters of government; the captains general in matters of war.

Matters and affairs of government are under the exclusive jurisdiction of viceroys and presidents, with the privilege of appeal to the tribunals, [audiences,] as provided by law 35 of this title. And we command that, in cases of doubts, the orders of the viceroys and presidents be executed, and that the audiences give us notice thereof, together with their motives and reasons, in order that we may take such measures as may be necessary. And matters relating to war, military government, and garrisons, are under the jurisdiction of the captains general, and the audiences shall not take cognizance thereof, even by way of appeal; for our pleasure is that, if any person shall think himself aggrieved by the decisions of the captain general, such person shall, in cases where he is of right entitled thereto, be allowed to appeal to our board of war of the Indies; and in cases of soldiers, the laws contained in the title which treats of such matters shall be observed.

24.—Lib. II, Tit. 15, Law 57.—(Vol. 1, p. 340.)

In the absence of the viceroy or president, the tribunals [audiences] to assume the government; the senior auditor [oidor] to take the place of the president, although he were captain general.

We command that, in the absence of the viceroy or president, or during their inability to govern, our royal tribunals [audiences] shall succeed to the government, and shall have the same power as the viceroy or president while serving in those capacities; the senior auditor [oidor] shall be president, and shall alone decide in all matters properly belonging to the president; if a captain general, such senior auditor shall, nevertheless, exercise that office until we shall have appointed a successor, or sent thither such person as, agreeable to our orders, shall be authorized to that effect, unless, by the laws contained in this book, some other or contrary provision be made with respect to particular audiences.

Each audience to keep a register of the inhabitants and of their occupations, a copy of which to be transmitted to the council.

The audiences shall, besides, keep a register, where shall be inscribed the names of the inhabitants of their respective districts, a statement of their services, and the amount of compensation paid to each, in money, by way of extra compensation [ayuda de costa] or otherwise, and of the offices to which he has been appointed; which register shall agree with the journal of the audience, in order that whenever a claim for services shall be presented said audience may set forth its opinion thereon. Of this register a copy shall be transmitted to our royal Council of the Indies, with as little delay as possible; and if, subsequently, there be made to it any addition, correction, or amendment, information thereof shall immediately be transmitted to us, that the corresponding alterations may be made in the copy first sent, and that we may know what is the nature of the services and grant the proper compensation.

The auditors, [oidores,] alcaldes, and King's attorneys, [fiscales,] shall not own any houses, huts, estates, gardens, or lands.

We forbid the auditors, [oidores,] alcaldes, and King's attorneys owning, in any case, or in any manner whatever, any houses for their dwellings or for rent, or any huts, estates, lands, or gardens, or building any houses or stores within the cities where they may reside, or without the same, or in any other place within the district of the audience, in their own right, nor in that of any other person, directly or indirectly, under the penalties incurred by those who trade, contract, or exercise any lucrative occupation.

27.—Lib. II, Tit. 16, Law 56.—(Vol. 1, p. 385.)

The officers mentioned in the preceding to forfeit the value of their estates, even after disposing of them; as also the persons in whose name they were held.

Whereas, notwithstanding the provisions enacted by the Emperor and by the Kings, our grandfather and father, the said ministers interpose third persons in whose names they own houses and exercise trade, they being the real owners; and whereas our service requires that offences should be punished without waiting for the delays of legal inquiries: We command that, besides the aforesaid penalties, whenever it shall appear that they purchase or have purchased, or that they own or have owned, in the names of other persons, the property above mentioned, although they may have sold the same, and in fact transferred it to another possessor, they shall forfeit the amount for which such property shall have been sold; and further, the persons in whose name such property stood shall incur the penalty of forfeiture to the amount of the sale of such gardens, houses, lands, or estates.

28.—Lib. II, Tit. 16, Law 57.—(Vol. 1, p. 385.)

The ministers not to sow any wheat or corn.

The presidents, auditors, alcaldes, and attorneys, shall in no case sow any wheat or corn, either for their own use or for sale.

29.—Lib. II, Tit. 16, Law 64.—(Vol. 1, p. 386.)

Prohibiting the officers of audiences to trade and contract; which may be proved by informal evidence.

We declare that the prohibition to trade and contract, contained in the laws of this title, extends to the secretaries, servants, and other members of the families of the viceroys, presidents, judges, alcaldes, and King's attorneys in the audiences, and the reporters and clerks, and all other of our officers in the Indies, who shall observe and fulfil these provisions as if they were specifically mentioned therein; and from this moment we do declare them as included and comprehended in said provisions, not only in the cases therein provided, but also in all others where it can be proved that they have been concerned, either openly or secretly, in any firm, or traded under the name of a third person or substitute. And we command that the proofs of these offences may be by such witnesses as are deemed competent in cases of bribery of the judges and other officers. And to the end that this may be carried more fully into effect, and that it may be known when these offences have been punished, it is our pleasure that, in the examinations and inquiries which shall be made into the conduct of our viceroys, presidents, judges, alcaldes, attorneys, governors, justices of the peace, (corregidores,) and other justices and officers in the Indies, the provisions of this law be made the subject of particular inquiry, in order that justice may be executed against the offenders, as well for the past as for the future.

The foregoing prohibition extends to the wives and children of said officers while under their authority.

We declare that the law prohibiting the viceroys, presidents, and other officers of audiences, from trading and contracting extends to their wives, and children unmarried, unless they have taken the veil, or live separately.

31.—Lib. II, Tit. 18, Law 36.—(Vol. 1, p. 412.)

When in cases of grants of land the persons interested are cited to appear, the King's attorney is to be summoned in behalf of the Indians.

It being our wish that the Indians be protected and well treated, and that they be not molested nor injured in their persons or property: We command that, in all cases, and on all occasions, when it shall be proposed to institute an inquiry whether any injury is to accrue to any person in consequence of any grant of land, whether for tillage, pasture, or other purposes, the viceroys, presidents, and judges shall cause summonses to be directed to all persons whom it may really concern, and to the attorneys of our royal audiences, wherever Indians may be interested, in order that all and every person may take such measures as may be expedient to protect his rights against all injuries which might result therefrom.

Visitors to ascertain whether certain farms are located to the prejudice of the Indians; and, if so, to see justice done them.

Whereas some grazing farms, owned by Spaniards for the use of their cattle, have been productive of injury to the Indians, by being located upon their lands, or very near their fields and settlements, whereby said cattle eat and destroy their produce, and do them other damage: We command that the judges who shall examine the lands make it their duty to visit such farms, without previous request to do so, and ascertain whether any injury accrues therefrom to the Indians or their property; and, if so, that, after due notice to the parties interested, they forthwith, and by summary or legal process, according as they may think most fit, remove them to some other place, without damage or prejudice to any third person.

33.—Lib. II, Tit. 33, Law 1.

OF APPLICATIONS FOR OFFICES.

The audiences to receive applications for offices, and to give their opinions thereon.

In order that we may be made fully acquainted with the qualifications and capacity of persons in our service, and that they may be suitably rewarded: We do order and command that whenever any one shall appear before us, either in person or by attorney, to ask for reward or employment in our royal service, he shall come before the royal audience of the district, and shall set forth the object of his petition, and the said audience shall inquire and secretly receive official information respecting the qualifications of such person; which being done, the president and auditors shall add thereto their opinion of the same, and determine the reward to which he may be entitled; and after having closed and sealed the same, and without communicating it to the party, they will transmit it officially, through two different channels, to our Council of the Indies, in order that, upon consideration, suitable and just provision may be made; and in case the party should wish to apply in person, his application shall be received and transmitted, without the opinion of the audience, in order that the same may be dealt with according to its merits.

34.—Lib. II, Tit. 33, Law 3.

No application to be received from persons who shall not declare what they intend to ask.

If the applicant does not declare before the audience what he intends to petition for, his application shall not be received.

35.—Lib. II, Tit. 33, Law 3.—(Vol. 1, p. 507.)

The informations shall be referred to an auditor of the audience, who shall investigate the qualifications or disqualifications of the party.

Whenever any application is to be received by our royal audiences they shall use particular care and diligence in examining and determining the qualifications or disqualifications of the applicant, and the president, or the auditor who shall preside in his stead, shall appoint an auditor of the same audience, who shall, in person, execute such investigation of qualifications, and examine witnesses; he shall not refer it to the clerk nor to any other person; and the clerk shall certify that the same were examined by said auditor in person. No other judges but those of audiences shall have power to make such investigations.

36.—Lib. II, Tit. 33, Law 4.

The witnesses examined to be competent; to be summoned by the King's attorney; the most inviolable secrecy to be kept.

Investigations of office shall be made by the summons and under the directions of the King's attorney of the audience; the witnesses examined shall be the most honorable, credible, conscientious, and competent that can be found, and such as shall be known to be incapable, on any pretence, to conceal the truth; and the auditor shall administer to them an oath to keep the secret, which secret shall be so inviolable that neither the names of the witnesses nor the subject-matter of their depositions shall, in any case whatever, come to the notice of the party.

37.—Lib. II, Tit. 33, Law 5.

The opinion to be in the handwriting of an auditor; to be signed by the president, auditors, and attorney; and not to be delivered to the party.

The opinion shall be written in the handwriting of one of the auditors, with the day, month, and year; and shall be signed by the president, auditors, and attorney; and neither the information, opinions, nor duplicates thereof, shall be delivered to the party.

38.—Lib. II, Tit. 33, Law 6.—(Vol. 1, p. 508.)

The president and auditors, the attorney being summoned, shall examine the proceedings, and give their opinion, and in what form.

We command that after the auditor to whom the investigation has been referred shall have made and completed it, he shall lay the same before the audience; and that, in presence of the president and auditors, the attorney being duly notified, and not otherwise, the proceedings be examined, and an opinion given for or against, describing the qualifications of the applicant, and setting forth what the audience shall know or believe of the persons, in what manner they have served us, or whether they have failed in their duties; what compensation they have received in money, offices, extra compensation, or otherwise;

what amount in rents, premiums, or remuneration they are entitled to, and out of what fund to be paid; and if the applicant be a monastery, hospital, or charitable institution, what are its wants, what alms, and where to be given; and they shall endeavor to point out some expedient by which our treasury may not be affected. And they shall, upon all these matters, ascertain the truth and set it forth entire, briefly, fully, and substantially, without preamble or additions. They shall not recount what may appear from the proceedings, nor refer to them; and if they judge it proper to send the opinion separate from the proceedings, they may do it secretly, and state what connexion of consanguinity or affinity may exist between the applicant and any of the auditors of that audience. The proceedings and opinions shall, moreover, remain of record, in order that, in case of need, copies of the same may be obtained.

The King's attorneys shall use due diligence, apply for what is necessary, and give notice thereof to the council.

The attorneys of the audiences shall, on their own part, use all due diligence, and ask for the needful, in order that the proceedings and opinions may be accompanied by the proper evidence, and that the deserving may be remunerated. And whereas they are apt to differ in opinion and to require the conflicting opinions to be entered on the journal of the audience, if said audience decline their being so entered the attorney shall give information thereof to us in our Council of the Indies, and in a separate letter, and of what he thinks proper and fit to be done, setting forth all that shall be well founded, certain, and true, in order that we may distribute the rewards according to the merits of those who have performed services.

40.—Lib. II, Tit. 33, Law 8.—(Vol. 1, p. 508.)

No informations to be received except concerning persons of reputation and ability; the opinions to state how long they have been in the Indies, and whether they have exercised any mechanical trades.

The president and auditors shall not admit to give the said information to any persons but those who are generally reputed to possess such merits and qualifications, and to have rendered such services as will entitle them to a reward from us; and they shall state in their opinions how long such persons have been in the Indies, and whether they have served in menial capacities or exercised any mechanical trade.

Governors and judges not to receive information from persons or places remote from the audience; the inquiry to be made by a commission [receptoria;] what is enacted to be observed concerning legal inquiries, [informaciones de oficio.]

We ordain and command that the governors and judges shall receive no informations respecting qualifications and services, but that they shall refer the petitions to our royal audiences; and if the inquiry is to be made in provinces or places so distant from the audiences that the parties cannot, without much cost and trouble, produce their witnesses, said audiences shall appoint commissions, [receptorias,] before which the governors and corregidores shall proceed personally to receive the informations from the applicants, without substituting others in their stead; they shall transmit the proceedings to the audiences, and the same shall be observed in legal inquiries, [informaciones de oficio.]

The ordinary judges to take cognizance of matters relating to settlements on lands newly discovered, and in other cases.

If any chapter, council, or corporation, or any private person, shall apply to us for the purpose of settling newly discovered lands, of discovering others, or for other matters wherein it is necessary, in order to make the proper provisions, to proceed to an inquiry and obtain a full knowledge of the subject of the application, we command that in such and other similar cases they shall lay the same before the ordinary officers of justice of the place or island where they reside, in order that, after due examination, they may give their opinions; and the applicants shall not be heard in any other manner or form.

43.—Lib. II, Tit. 34, Law 29.—(Vol. 1, p. 518.)

The visitor may execute the penalties decreed against officers [ministros] who are proprietors of houses, country-seats, and mills.

The visitor may, notwithstanding appeal sued out either of office or at the request of the party, execute the penalties imposed by laws 54 and following, title 16, of this book, upon such judges [ministros] as shall be proprietors of houses, country-seats, mills, and other estates, for the sake of public example and of justice to all parties.

44.—Lib. III, Tit. 2, Law 15.—(Vol. 1, p. 529.)

Services to be rewarded where rendered, and in no other place or province.

It is our pleasure that services be remunerated where they shall have been performed, and in no other place or province in the Indies; and as regards the soldiers of Chile, the law 19 of this title shall be observed.

45.—Lib. III, Tit. 3, Law 2—(Vol. 1, p. 543.)

The viceroys to possess the qualifications required by this law.

All who may be appointed viceroys of Peru and New Spain shall possess the abilities and qualifications required for such important and elevated offices; and as soon as they enter upon the exercise of their functions they shall make it the object of their first and greatest care to endeavor that God our Lord be served, and His holy law preached and taught for the benefit of the souls of the natives and inhabitants of those provinces; they shall govern them in peace and tranquillity, endeavoring to increase and improve them; and they shall provide everything which may be necessary for the administration and execution of justice, agreeably to the powers granted them by the laws contained in this book; they shall, moreover, have charge of the government and defence of their respective districts, and they shall reward and compensate the descendants and successors of such as have rendered services in the discovery, pacification, and settlement of the Indies; they shall give special attention to the good treatment, protection, and increase of the Indian population; and particularly to the faithful collection, administration, and recovery of the funds of our royal treasury; and in all cases, things, and affairs that shall come before them, they shall do all that to them may appear fit and necessary, and provide and order all that we could do and provide, of whatever sort or nature it may be, within the provinces under their charge, if such provinces were governed by ourselves in person, in all matters that are not expressly prohibited by law; and we command and order our royal audiences of Peru and New Spain, and others subject and subordinate to the jurisdiction of viceroys, and all governors, justices, subjects, and vassals of ours, ecclesiastical and secular, of whatever state, condition, grade, or dignity, to obey and respect them as persons representing us; to observe, fulfil, and execute their orders and commands, whether verbal or in writing, and not to plead any excuse or delay in obeying their letters or mandates, nor give them any other meaning, interpretation, or declaration, nor to wait until again required, nor consult us touching the same, nor to expect other commands, but to obey as if commanded by ourselves personally, or by letters signed with our royal hand. All this they should observe, under pain of incurring our displeasure and such other penalties as await those who do not obey our letters and commands, and such others as shall be imposed upon them; to which, by this our law, we condemn, and have condemned, all such as shall act contrary thereto. And we give and grant to, and confer upon, the said viceroys all such sufficient and full power as may be requisite and necessary for the observance of all that is herein contained, or in any manner consequent upon it; and we promise, upon our royal word, that all that they may do, order and command in our name, and under our power and authority, shall be held firm, stable, and valid forever.

46.—Lib. III, Tit. 3, Law 4.—(Vol. 1, p. 545.)

The viceroys to be presidents of their respective audiences.

We order and command that the viceroys of Peru and New Spain be presidents of our royal audiences of Lima and Mexico, as provided by laws 3 and 5, title 15, and law 1, title 16, book 2, and others contained in said book, which treat of the authority exercised by the viceroys in our name, and annexed and appertaining to the other presidents of our audiences and chanceries of these our kingdoms, and that they enjoy the powers and prerogatives which, as such, they are entitled to.

47.—Lib. III, Tit. 3, Law 5.—(Vol. 1, p. 545.)

The viceroys are governors of their respective districts, and of the provinces subordinate thereto.

It is our will, and we command, that the viceroys of Peru and New Spain be governors of the provinces under their authority, and that they rule and govern the same in our name; that they grant such rewards, favors, and compensation, as to them may seem fit; and that they fill the offices of government and justice established by custom and not prohibited by our laws and orders. And all our subordinate audiences, judges, and justices, and all our subjects and vassals, shall consider and obey them as governors, and shall allow them freely to enjoy and exercise such offices, giving and granting them all the aid and assistance which they may ask and want.

48.—Lib. III, Tit. 14, Law 13.—(Vol. 1, p. 624.)

Viceroys to send information of such as pretend to rewards, and of those whom they have rewarded.

We desire to grant rewards and remunerations and to distribute the offices and profits of the Indies between persons who have deserved well, and who have most faithfully served us, as is provided in law 2 of this book; and whereas some persons come from those kingdoms to these to ask for rewards, alleging injuries, and complaining of the viceroys and presidents for not giving them employment, patronage, and other advantages; and whereas it is proper that we should possess a full knowledge of the truth, we command the viceroys and presidents, on all occasions, to transmit to us particular and specific information of all deserving persons who expect reward for services rendered in the reduction, pacification and preservation of those provinces, with the qualifications and circumstances of each, and of such persons as they may have rewarded and preferred there, and their reasons and motives for doing so, and the foundation of the complaints and wrongs. This information shall be specific, without regard to considerations of enmity or affection, as is required by the nature and importance of the matter.

Lands already discovered to be peopled before new discoveries are made.

Whereas the chief object which induces us to make new discoveries is the preaching and spreading of the holy Catholic faith, and that the Indians be educated and made to live in peace and good order, we order and command that, before granting new discoveries and settlements, orders be given that what is now discovered and reduced to peace and obedience to our holy mother the Catholic church be peopled and permanently settled for the peace and harmony between the two republics, as provided in the laws which treat of the settlements; and after what is now discovered shall have been peopled and settled in peace and obedience to the holy apostolic see and to ourselves, then shall it be proceeded to discover and settle the circumjacent country, and to continue in making new discoveries.

No person to make, on his own authority, any new discovery, entry, or settlement.

We ordain and command that no person, of whatever estate or condition, shall make, upon his own authority, any new discovery by land or by water, nor any entry or settlement, nor found any town in lands now discovered, or hereafter to be discovered, in our Indies, without license or appointment granted by ourselves, or by such persons as may be thereto authorized, under pain of death and forfeiture of all their goods to our chamber, [camera.] And we command the viceroys, audiences, governors, and other justices, not to grant any license to make new discoveries without consulting us and obtaining our special license. But in that which is now discovered and pacified we permit them to grant licenses, within their respective jurisdictions, to form such settlements as may be proper, observing the laws contained in this book, provided that, such settlements being made, they immediately transmit to us information of what they shall have done. And as respects the power of the viceroys in relation to new discoveries, the law 28, title 3, (51,) lib. 4, shall be observed in the cases therein mentioned.

51.—Lib. III, Tit. 3, Law 28.—(Vol. 1, p. 552.)—Referred to in No. 50.

The viceroys to have power to order new discoveries.

We further grant power to the viceroys, although prohibited from establishing governments for new discoveries, and from reducing and settling the same, to do so if necessary or proper for the tranquillity, quiet, and peace of their provinces, they employing for that purpose the idle people who jeopard and disturb the public peace, and giving us prompt notice thereof; and we do grant them permission to appoint for such discoveries and settlements such persons as to them shall appear most fit; and we command the viceroys and auditors to give the necessary instructions, in order that the natives be well treated, the principal object being to spread and teach the doctrine of our holy Catholic faith.

No governors to make entries, [entradas,] barters, or contracts in other governments.

We forbid our governors in the Indies, and their lieutenants, to go or send out of their respective governments into any other whatever, either by sea or land, to make entries, [entradas,] barters, or contracts, with the Indians, under any color or pretence, without license from the governors in whose districts they should have to enter for that purpose, under pain of our displeasure, and forfeiture of whatever they may carry away, take, or barter, to our chamber of treasury, and of being suspended from their offices and functions.

53.—Lib. IV, Tit. 1, Law 14.—(Vol. 2, p. 4.)

Discoverers to render an account, to be rewarded, and send statements to the council.

Those who may go forth on voyages of discovery, whether by sea or by land, by virtue of agreement made in the Indies, shall render an account to the government or audience with whom such agreement shall have been made of their discoveries and of the results thereof, who shall transmit a full and detailed statement of the whole to our Council of the Indies, in order that that may be provided which shall be most proper for the service of God our Lord, and for our own. The discoverer shall have charge of the settlement of what he shall have discovered, provided he do possess the necessary abilities for that purpose; or he shall receive such remuneration as he may be entitled to for his labor and expenses in fulfilling the agreement, provided he shall have complied with it on his own part.

No discoveries to be made at the cost of the King.

We command that no discoveries, new sea voyages, or settlements, be made at the charge of our treasury; and those who govern shall not expend any moneys for such purposes, although they may be authorized by us to make discoveries and voyages, unless they are specially authorized to do it at our cost.

55.—Lib. IV, Tit. 3, Law 1.—(Vol. 2, p. 7.)

Governors to inform themselves touching what is to be discovered, and, after making the agreement, to give information thereof.

We charge and command all who administer the government, spiritual and temporal, of the Indies to inquire, with great care and diligence, whether there is within their respective districts, or within the lands and provinces adjoining the same, which do not belong to any other government, any land to be discovered and pacified, and the number of people and nations inhabiting therein, and the substance and quality of the land, without sending thereto any warlike people or other persons who might cause scandal. And having so informed themselves, through the best means within their reach, and likewise of the persons most fit to make the discovery, they shall make a contract and agreement with them, offering them such honors and profits as may, with justice, and without prejudice to the natives, be so offered, taking care that said agreements be in conformity with the laws of this title, and to others which prescribe the forms of discoveries; and of all that they shall have ascertained and agreed upon they shall inform the viceroy and the audience, and they shall transmit said information, in like manner, to the council, in order that if, after due examination, the discovery should be adjudged expedient, license may be granted to them, agreeably to what is provided in that behalf.

56.—Lib. IV, Tit. 3, Law 8.—(Vol. 2, p. 9.)

The leaders of discoveries, [adelantados,] superior alcaldes and corregidores, to contract for the founding of cities.

Among other matters which may be agreed upon with the leader of the discovery, [adelantados,] one shall be that within a certain time he shall erect, found, build, and people at least three cities, and a province with suffragan villages, and, if he be a corregidor, a suffragan city, with jurisdiction over a sufficient number of villages for the labor and supply of the city.

57.—Lib. IV, Tit. 3, Law 28.—(Vol. 2, p. 11.)

Those who faithfully fulfil their agreement shall receive vassals and perpetual titles.

If the adelantado, or principal chief, shall have duly accomplished his voyage and fulfilled his agreement, we will acknowledge his services and diligence by granting him for reward perpetual vassals, with the title of marquis, or some other, whereby we may honor his person and his house, agreeably to what shall have been settled by the contract.

The settlement being completed, the principal settler [poblador] may establish the right of primogeniture and work the mines by paying one-fifth to the crown.

He who shall have performed his contract, and made a settlement in conformity to his agreement, is hereby empowered and permitted to establish therein the right of primogeniture [mayorazgo] to all that he shall have built, and to all that shall have been granted to him, and the improvements he may have made within the same; also the mines of gold and silver and other minerals, and salts and pearl fisheries, provided that out of such gold, silver, pearls, and all other proceeds of such metals and mines, the founder and inhabitants of said settlement, and all other persons, shall give and pay unto us and our successors one-fifth, free from all charges, from the expiration of the first ten years.

59.—Lib. IV, Tit. 5, Law 6.—(Vol. 2, p. 15.)

Agreements for the founding of cities with ordinary alcaldes and regidores to be made according to this law.

If the situation of the land be adapted to the founding of any town to be peopled by Spaniards, with a council of ordinary alcaldes and regidores, and if there be persons who will contract for their settlement, the agreement shall be made upon the following conditions: That, within the prescribed time, it shall comprise at least thirty heads of families, each of whom to possess a house, ten breeding cows, four steers, or two steers and two young bullocks, a breeding mare, a breeding sow, twenty breeding ewes from Castile, and six hens and a cock; he shall, moreover, appoint a priest to administer the sacraments, who, the first time, shall be of his choice, and afterwards according to our royal patronage; he shall provide the church with ornaments and articles necessary for Divine worship, and he shall give bond to perform the same within said period of time; and if he fails in fulfilling his agreement he will lose all that he may have built, worked, or repaired, which shall be applied to our royal patrimony, and incur the forfeiture of one thousand ounces of gold to our chamber [camera;] and if he should fulfil his obligations there shall be granted to him four square leagues of territory, either in a square or lengthwise, according to the quality of the land, in such a manner that, when located and surveyed, the four leagues shall be in a quadrangle, and so that the boundaries of said territory be at least five leagues distant from any city, town, or village, inhabited by Spaniards, and previously settled, and that it cause no prejudice to any Indian tribe, nor to any private individual.

60.—Lib. IV, Tit. 5, Law 7.—(Vol. 2, p. 16.)

The lands granted to be in proportion of the number of heads of families specified by the agreement, and upon the same conditions.

If any one should propose to contract for a settlement in the prescribed form, to consist of more or less than thirty heads of families, provided it be not below ten, he shall receive a grant of a proportionate quantity of land, and upon the same conditions.

61.—Ibid., Law 8.—(Ibid.)

The sons and relatives of the founders to be considered as housekeepers.

We constitute as housekeepers of the new settlement the son or daughter of the new founder, and all his relatives, of whatever degree, although within the fourth, they being married and having distinct and separate houses and families.

62.—Lib. IV, Tit. 5, Law 9.—(Vol. 2, p. 16.)

The founder to enter into agreement with each person enlisted for the settlement.

In contracts for new settlements made by the government, or whoever shall be thereto authorized in the Indies, with cities, adelantado, superior alcalde or corregidor, the person entering into the agreement shall do so likewise with each individual who may enlist to join the settlement; and he will bind himself to grant building lots in the new settlement, together with pastures and lands for cultivation, in a number of peonias and caballerias proportionate to the quantity of land which each settler shall obligate himself to improve; provided it shall not exceed, nor shall he grant more to each, than five peonias or three caballerias, according to the express distinction, difference, and measurement, prescribed in the laws of the title concerning the distribution of lands, lots, and waters.

63.—Lib. IV, Tit. 5, Law 10.—(Vol. 2, p. 16.)

If there be no founder but married housekeepers, the settlement shall be granted to them, provided they be not less than ten in number.

Whenever particular individuals shall unite for the purpose of forming new settlements, and among them there shall be a sufficient number of married men for that purpose, license may be granted to them, provided there be not less than ten married men, together with an extent of territory proportionate to what is stipulated; and we empower them to elect, annually, from among themselves, ordinary alcaldes and officers of the council.

64.—Lib. IV, Tit. 6, Law 7.—(Vol. 2, p. 18.)

The requisites of this law to be observed before remunerating discoverers, pacificators, and founders.

It is our will and pleasure that all who may have served in the discovery, pacification, and settlement of the Indies be rewarded. And, in order that they may the better obtain the reward, without injury to the most meritorious, we command the viceroys and presidents to observe this order whenever they shall have occasion to grant such rewards, in those cases and for those things to which they are authorized by our powers and instructions. Those who are entitled to rewards shall make a declaration of their merits and services before the audience of the district, having previously summoned our attorney, who, after consideration, shall grant rewards in our name to those who shall have the best title thereto, conforming, in graduating the amount, to Law 14, Title 2, Lib. III; and they shall order a secret register to be kept in the custody of the clerk of the government, where shall be recorded, for reference, the names of all the persons applying, with a summary account of their merits and services, together with what they shall do to reward them, and their motives for the same; all which shall be signed by them, and certified by the secretary of government. And there shall be, at the beginning of the said record, a transcript of this our law, in order that the rewards and remunerations be made in conformity thereto, and in no other manner. Each year they shall transmit to our council a statement of all that they shall have done in the year, and entered in said record; which statement shall be signed and authenticated by said secretary, in order that we may know in what manner the provisions of this our law shall have been carried into effect.

65.—Lib. IV, Tit. 7, Law 6.—(Vol. 2, p. 20.)

The tract not to be located in a seaport, nor any other place which may be injurious to the crown.

No tract of land for new settlements shall be granted or taken by agreement in any seaport, nor in any part which might, at any time, be prejudicial to our royal crown or to the republic, our will being that they be reserved to us.

66.—Ibid., Law 7.—(Ibid.)

The territory to be divided between the person who makes the agreement and the settlers, as follows:

The tract of territory granted by agreement to the founder of a settlement shall be distributed in the following manner: They shall, in the first place, lay out what shall be necessary for the site of the town and sufficient liberties, [exidos,] and abundant pasture for the cattle to be owned by the inhabitants, and as much besides for that which shall belong to the town [propios.] The balance of the tract shall then be divided into four parts; one to be selected by the person obligated to form the settlement, and the remaining three parts to be divided in equal portions among the settlers.

The lots to be distributed by lot.

The lots shall be distributed among the settlers by lot, beginning with those adjoining the main square, and the remainder shall be reserved to us, to give, as rewards, to new settlers, or otherwise, according to our will; and we command that a plan of the settlement be always made out.

68.—Lib. IV, Tit. 7, Law 12.—(Ibid.)

No houses to be erected within 300 paces from the walls.

We command that no houses be erected within the distance of three hundred paces from the walls or breastworks of the town, this being necessary for the good of our service and for the safety and defence of the towns, as provided with regard to castles and fortresses.

69.—Lib. IV, Tit. 7, Law 13.—(Vol. 2, p. 22.)

Sufficient commons to be designated.

The reservations [exidos] shall be at such a distance that, in case the town should increase, there may still be a sufficient space for the amusement of the people, and for cattle to go at large without doing any damage.

70.—Ibid., Law 14.—(Ibid.)

Commons to be reserved.

After having laid out a sufficient quantity of land for the liberties of the town [exido,] conformably to what is provided in that behalf, the persons authorized to make the discovery and settlement shall lay out reservations [dehesas] adjoining the liberties [exidos] for oxen, horses, and cattle, to be slaughtered, as well as for the ordinary number of other cattle which the settlers are bound, by law, to maintain, and a good deal more, besides, which shall belong to the council, and the remainder shall be laid out for cultivation in tracts equal in number to the town lots contained in the settlement, and to be drawn by lot. And if there be any land suited for irrigation, it shall also be distributed by lot in the same proportion to the first settlers, and the remainder shall remain vacant, that we may grant them to new settlers. From these lands the viceroys shall separate those which appear to be fit for reservations [propios] for those settlements which have none; the proceeds of which will serve to pay the corregidors, leaving always sufficient liberties, reservations, and pastures, as is prescribed above, and let it be so executed.

Declaring what persons shall be selected as settlers of new colonies, and how to describe themselves.

We command that, whenever a colony shall be drawn from any city, the judges and municipal council [regimiento] shall cause all persons wishing to join the new settlement to give in their names and description before the secretary of the council, admitting all married men, the sons and descendants of the settlers of the place from whence the colony sets out, who do not possess any lots nor lands for pasture or cultivation, and excluding all persons who do possess such lots or lands, in order that what is already peopled may not be depopulated.

If the natives oppose the settlement, they shall be induced to remain peaceable, and the settlement shall continue.

Should the natives attempt to oppose the settlement, they shall be given to understand that the intention in forming it is, to teach them to know God and His holy law by which they are to be saved; to preserve friendship with them, and teach them to live in a civilized state, and not to do them any harm or take from them their settlements. They shall be convinced of this by mild means, through the interference of religion and priests, and of other persons appointed by the governor, by means of interpreters, and by endeavoring, by all possible good means, that the settlement may be made in peace and with their consent; and if, notwithstanding, they do withhold their consent, the settlers, after having notified them pursuant to Law 9, Tit. 4, Lib. 3, shall proceed to make their settlement without taking anything that may belong to the Indians, and without doing them any greater damage than shall be necessary for the protection of the settlers and to remove obstacles to the settlement.

The term to be extended if accident should prevent the completion of the settlement.

In case any fortuitous circumstance should prevent the completion of the settlement within the term prescribed in the agreement, the settlers shall not forfeit what they may have expended or built, nor incur the penalty; and the governor of the district may extend the term according to the circumstances of the case.

74.—Lib. IV, Tit. 2, Law 1.—(Vol. 2, p. 39.)

OF THE SALE, COMPOSITION, AND DISTRIBUTION OF LANDS, LOTS, AND WATERS.

Lands, lots, and Indians, to be granted to new settlers; and what are a peonia and a caballeria.

In order to promote the zeal of our subjects in the discovery and settlement of the Indies, and that they may live in that ease and comfort which we desire them to enjoy, it is our will that there be distributed among them houses, lots, lands, caballerias and peonias, to all those who shall repair to settle on new lands in the villages and places which shall be designated to them by the governor of the new settlement, making a distinction between gentlemen or esquires [escuderos] and laborers [peones] and those of inferior grade and merit, and graduating such grants according to their qualifications and services, in order that they may attend to working the said land and to the breeding of stock; and when said settlers shall have lived and labored in said settlements during the space of four years, they are hereby empowered, from the expiration of said term, to sell the same, and freely to dispose of them at their will as their own property; and the governor, or whoever shall be thereto authorized by ourselves, shall, in the distribution which he shall make of the Indians, and according to the merits and rank of said settlers, grant them said Indians, so that they may enjoy the profits arising from their possession, according to the established rates and the enactments in that behalf.

And whereas it may happen that, in the distribution of lands, doubts may arise respecting the measurement thereof, we declare that a peonia is a lot of fifty feet front and one hundred feet deep, one hundred fanegas of arable land fit for the cultivation of wheat or barley, ten for corn, two huebras (a measure equal to as much land as a yoke of oxen can plough in one day) of land for garden, and eight for planting other trees which grow in dry land, with pasture sufficient for ten breeding sows, twenty cows, five breeding mares, one hundred ewes, and twenty goats. A caballeria is a lot of one hundred feet front and two hundred feet deep, and equal, in all other respects, to five peonias, that is five hundred fanegas of arable land fit for the raising of wheat or barley, fifty for corn, ten huebras of land for gardens, forty for other trees growing in dry soils, pasture for fifty breeding sows, one hundred cows, twenty mares, five hundred ewes, and one hundred goats. And we command that the distribution may be made in such a form that all shall participate in the good as well as in the middling, or all other qualities of land in the tract which shall be allotted to them.

Mode of distributing the lands in new settlements.

It shall not be lawful to give or distribute lands in a settlement to such persons as already possess some in another settlement, unless they shall leave their former residence and remove themselves to the new place to be settled, except where they shall have resided in the first settlement during the four years necessary to entitle them to fee-simple right, or unless they shall relinquish their title to the same for not having fulfilled their obligation; and we declare as null any distribution which may be made contrary to the provisions of this our law; and we condemn those who may make such distribution to suffer our displeasure, and to be fined ten thousand maravedis for the benefit of our chamber [camera.]

76.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 3.—(Vol. 1, p. 40.)

The houses to be built and the pasture lands occupied within a given time, under the penalties provided by this law.

The persons who shall accept grants of caballerias or peonias shall enter into an obligation to build upon the lots and to occupy the houses, to divide and clear the arable lands, and to work and plant them, and to stock with cattle those which are destined for pasture, within a limited time, divided into terms, and declaring what is to be done in each, under the penalty of forfeiting their grants of lots and lands, and besides a certain number of maravedis for the republic; which obligation shall be in due form, with good and sufficient sureties.

77.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 4.—(Vol. 2, p. 40.)

The viceroys to have power to grant lots and lands to settlers.

If, in those parts of the Indies which are already discovered, there should be any sites and districts sufficiently good to render it expedient to settle the same, and if any person should apply to form settlements therein, in order that they may do so with zeal and profit the viceroys and presidents shall, in our name, grant them lots, lands, and waters, taking into consideration the situation of the land; provided it be not to the prejudice of any third person, and that said grants be for such a period as we shall determine.

78.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 5.—(Vol. 2, p. 40.)

The distribution of lands to be made by the advice of the cabildo, and to the regidores in preference.

In distributing the lands, waters, watering places, and pastures among the settlers, the viceroys or governors thereto authorized by ourselves shall make such distribution by the advice of the cabildo [council] of the cities or villages, taking care that a preference be given to the regidores if they do not possess an equivalent quantity of lands and lots. The Indians shall be left in possession of their lands, hereditaments, and pastures, in such a manner that they shall not stand in need of the necessaries of life, and shall be allowed all the aid and facilities for the sustenance of their household and families.

79.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 8.—(Vol. 2, p. 41.)

Declaring to whom application is to be made for lots, lands, and waters.

We command that if petitions be presented asking for lots or lands in any city or village where our audience shall reside, such petitions shall be addressed to the cabildo [council,] who, having considered the same, shall name two deputy regidores, who shall inform the viceroy or president of the opinion of the cabildo; and the same having been seen by the viceroy, president, and deputies, the order shall be issued, signed by all, and in the presence of the clerk of the cabildo to be entered in the record of the cabildo. And if such petition be for distribution of waters and of lands calculated for the erection of mechanical engines, it shall first be presented to the viceroy or president, who shall refer it to the cabildo; whence, after due examination, notice shall be given by a regidor to the viceroy or president, who, after having considered the same, shall give such orders as may be deemed expedient.

80.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 9.—(Vol. 2, p. 41.)

No land to be granted to the prejudice of the Indians, and those thus granted to be restored.

We command that the farms and lands which may be granted to Spaniards be so granted without prejudice to the Indians; and that such as may have been granted to their prejudice and injury be restored to whoever they of right shall belong.

81.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 11.—(Vol. 2, p. 41.)

Possession to be taken of lands distributed within three months, and plantations made, under penalty of forfeiture.

All the settlers and housekeepers to whom distributions of lands shall be made shall, within the three months which shall be stipulated, take possession of the same, designate their confines and the boundaries which separate them from other lands, by planting, in the proper season, willows and other trees, in such a manner that, besides a correct and agreeable laying out of said lands, they may avail themselves of the timber which they may want, under penalty if, after the expiration of said term, they shall not have planted the aforesaid boundaries, of forfeiting the land, that the same may be vacated and granted to some other settler. This shall be done, not only with regard to the lands, but likewise with regard to the settlements and improvements which they may hold and be possessed of within the limits of towns and villages.

82.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 12.—(Vol. 2, p. 42.)

The grazing estates for cattle to be located apart from the villages and fields of Indians.

Whereas the grazing estates for horned cattle, mares, swine, and others, large and small, cause great damage in the corn-fields belonging to the Indians, and particularly where such cattle are allowed to go at large, we do command that no estates whatever be granted in any parts or places where any damage can accrue to the Indians; and where said cattle cannot be dispensed with they shall be removed far from any Indian settlements and fields, since there are separate lands appropriated for cattle and grass, where they may graze without injury. And the justices shall take care that the owners of cattle, and all who have an interest in the public good, shall employ a sufficient number of herdsmen and watchmen to guard against all injuries; and in case any damage shall accrue, they shall make them give satisfaction.

(83.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 13.—Vol. 2, p. 42.)

The viceroys to cause the cattle to be withdrawn from lands proper for irrigation, and wheat to be raised thereon.

We command the viceroys to inquire concerning lands susceptible of irrigation, and to order the cattle to be withdrawn from the same; and they shall cause wheat to be sown on the said lands if the proprietors have not a legal title to raise cattle thereon.

(84.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 14.—Vol. 2, p. 42.)

Owners of lands, &c., having a legal title thereto, to be maintained in the possession of the same; the others to be restored to the King.

Whereas we have fully inherited the dominion of the Indies; and whereas the waste lands and soil which were not granted by the Kings, our predecessors, or by ourselves, in our name, belong to our patrimony and royal crown, it is expedient that all the land which is held without just and true titles be restored as belonging to us, in order that we may retain, before all things, all the lands which may appear to us and to our viceroys, audiences, and governors, to be necessary for public squares, liberties, [exidos,] reservations, [propios,] pastures, and commons, to be granted to the villages and councils already settled, with due regard as well to their present condition as to their future state, and to the increase they may receive; and after distributing among the Indians whatever they may justly want to cultivate, sow, and raise cattle, confirming to them what they now hold, and granting what they may want besides, all the remaining land may be reserved to us, clear of any encumbrance, for the purpose of being given as rewards, or disposed of according to our pleasure; for all this we order and command the viceroys, presidents, and pretorial audiences, whenever they shall think fit, to appoint a sufficient time for the owners of land to exhibit before them and the ministers of their audiences, whom they shall appoint for that purpose, the titles to lands, estates, huts, and caballerias, who, after confirming the possession of such as hold the same by virtue of good and legal titles, or by a just prescription, shall restore to us the remainder, to be disposed of according to our pleasure.

(85.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 15.—Vol. 2, p. 43.)

Lands to be admitted to composition.

With a view to the greater advantage of our vassals, we order and command the viceroys and president-governors not to alter the acts of their predecessors with regard to lands admitted by them to composition, [compuestas,] and to leave the holders thereof in quiet possession; and those persons who shall have encroached and held more than, according to the boundaries, they are entitled to, shall be allowed to pay a moderate composition, and new titles shall be issued to them. All the lands which are to be admitted to composition shall be sold at auction, and without reserve, to the highest bidder, as tenant at will, [censo al quitar,] agreeably to the laws of the kingdom of Castile. And we commit the execution of the foregoing provisions, as to manner and form, to the viceroys and presidents, to be carried into effect with the least possible charges; and to save, as much as may be, the expenses of collection, they shall order our royal officers in each district to make such collection themselves, without sending executors for that purpose, and availing themselves of our royal audiences, or, if there be none, of the corregidores.

And whereas titles to lands have been issued by officers who were not authorized to distribute such lands, which titles have been confirmed by ourselves in our council, we command those who have letters of confirmation to retain them, and that they be maintained in their possession, within the limits therein prescribed; and as regards their encroachment beyond said limits, they are hereby entitled to the benefits of this law.

Lands to be granted and sold according to the provisions of this law.

In order to avoid the inconveniences and damages resulting from the sale or gift to Spaniards of caballerias or peonias and other tracts of land to the prejudice of the Indians, upon the suspicious testimony of witnesses, we order and command that all sales or gifts shall be made before the attorneys of our royal audiencias, to be summoned for that purpose, who shall be bound to examine, with due care and diligence, the character and depositions of witnesses; and the presidents and audiences, where they shall administer the government, shall give or grant such lands by the advice of the board of treasury, where it shall appear that they belong to us, at auction, to the highest bidder, as other estates of ours, and always with an eye to the benefit of the Indians. And where the grant or sale shall be made by the viceroys, it is our will that none of the officers above mentioned shall interfere. Upon the letters which shall be granted to the parties interested they shall sue out confirmations within the usual time prescribed in cases of grants of Indians, [encomiendas de Indios.]

No lands to be admitted to composition which shall have belonged to Indians and are held by illegal title; and the attorneys and protectors are to see justice done.

In order more effectually to favor the Indians and to prevent their receiving any injury, we command that no composition shall be admitted of lands which Spaniards shall have acquired from Indians in violation of our royal letters and ordinances, and which shall be held upon illegal titles; it being our will that the attorneys-protectors should proceed according to right and justice, as required by letters and ordinances, in procuring such illegal contracts to be annulled. And we command the viceroys, presidents, and audiences to grant them their assistance for its entire execution.

Lands to be left in possession of the Indians.

We command that the sale, grant, and composition of lands be executed with such attention that the Indians shall be left in possession of the full amount of lands belonging to them, either singly or in communities, together with their rivers and waters; and the lands which they shall have drained or otherwise improved, whereby they may, by their own industry, have rendered them fertile, are reserved, in the first place, and can in no case be sold or aliened. And the judges who shall have been sent thither shall specify what Indians they may have found on the land, and what lands they shall have left in possession of each of the elders of tribes, caciques, governors, or communities.

No one to be admitted to make composition who shall not have held the land during ten years. Indians to be preferred.

No one shall be admitted to make composition of lands who shall not have been in possession thereof for the term of ten years, although he should state that he is in possession at the time; for such circumstance, by itself, is not sufficient; and communities of Indians shall be admitted to make such compositions in preference to other private individuals, giving them all facilities for that purpose.

90.—Lib. IV, Tit. 12, Law 20.—(Vol. 2, p. 44.)

The viceroys and presidents to revoke grants of land made by cabildos, and to admit them to composition.

Our pleasure is, that the viceroys and president-governors shall have power to revoke and annul grants of land made by the councils [cabildos] of cities, or hereafter to be made, within their respective districts, unless such grants be confirmed by ourselves; and if said lands belong to Indians, they shall be ordered to be returned to them, and the uncultivated lands shall remain as they are: those who hold them shall be admitted to make composition, paying to us such sum as may be deemed just.

Viceroys and presidents not to appoint commissioners to receive composition without positive necessity, and giving notice thereof to the King.

Where any private person shall have occupied lands belonging to public places or corporations they shall restore them, conformably to the law of Toledo, and to those which prescribe the mode of effecting such restitution, and establish the right of prescription for the benefit of private persons. And we command the viceroys and presidents not to grant commissions for compositions of land without evident necessity, and immediately notifying us of the motives which induce them to grant such commissions, in what places the lands are, and who are the persons interested: how long they have held them, and the quantity of plain or forest land. And we command them, whenever they may have to grant such commissions, to name persons whose age, experience, and abilities shall fit them for their execution.

92.—Lib. IV, Tit. 13, Law 1.

Of reservations, [propios,] and reservations to be laid out at the founding of settlements.

The viceroys and governors, being thereto authorized, shall lay out, for each town or village which shall be newly founded and peopled, the lands and lots which they may want, and the same shall be granted to them as reservations, [propios,] without prejudice to third persons. They shall transmit to us information of what they shall have laid out, that we may order the same to be confirmed.

93.—Lib. IV, Tit. 17, Law 5.—(Vol. 2, p. 57.)

Pastures, mountains, waters, and limits, to be common; and provisions to be observed in the island of Hispañola.

We have ordained that pastures, mountains, and waters, shall be common in the Indies: And whereas some persons, without any title from us, have occupied extensive tracts of land, and will not permit any one to establish pens and herdsmen's huts thereon, and to drive their cattle thither, we command that all pastures, mountains, and waters, in the provinces of the Indies, be common to all the inhabitants thereof, present and to come; and that they may freely enjoy the use of them, and construct their huts near their pens, drive therein their cattle, either in herds or separately, at their option, all ordinances to the contrary notwithstanding; which, if necessary for this object, are hereby so far repealed, and declared to be of no force or value. And we command all councils, justices, and regidores to observe and fulfil the provisions of this our law; and all persons who shall hinder their execution shall incur a fine of five thousand ounces of gold, to be levied on their persons and property for the benefit of our chamber [camera.] And as respects the city of Santo Domingo, in the island of Hispañola, the same provisions shall be enforced, provided it be understood as applying only to lands situate at the distance of a radius of ten leagues from said city, and without prejudice to third persons. And as to lands lying at the said distance of ten leagues, we hereby authorize and declare it to be our pleasure that each flock or herd be entitled to a tract of one league in circumference, within which no other shall erect any pens or huts, provided the pasture of said tract be common to all, as provided above. And wherever there shall be any flocks or herds, sites shall be granted for the erection of workshops and other improvements; and on each grazing farm there shall be a stone house, and not less than two thousand head of cattle; and if there be above six thousand head, two tracts shall be granted; and if above ten thousand, three tracts; each tract shall have its stone house, and no person shall be allowed to occupy more than three tracts. And this shall be observed wherever there shall be no title or authority from ourselves by which a different disposition should be made.

94.—Lib. IV. Tit. 17, Law 8.—(Vol. 2, p. 58.)

Wild fruits to be common.

Our pleasure is, and we hereby declare, that the wild fruits of the woods be common, and that every one may gather them, and carry away the plants to place them within their improvements and estates, and to use them as common property.

OF THE GOVERNORS, CORREGIDORES, SUPERIOR ALCALDES, AND THEIR DEPUTIES, AND ALGUACILES [CONSTABLES.]

Describing the governments, offices of the corregidors, [corregimientos,] and of the superior alcaldes, [alcadias mayores,] reserved to the will of the King and his lieutenants, named by the council.

In conformity with the provisions of the Law 1, Title 2, Lib. 3, the appointment and disposition of the corregimientos, [offices of corregidors,] and the principal alcaldias superiores, [offices of supreme alcaldes,] in the Indies, is reserved to us, together with the power of fixing the pay and salary which they are to receive in each year; of which offices mention is made in this recopilation, and particularly in the laws contained in this title. And in order that their nature may be distinctly understood, it is our pleasure to declare them, as follows:

Peru, &c..... ———

New Spain, &c..... ———

(Page 115.)—The governor and captain general of Florida shall be appointed by ourselves, and immediately subject and subordinate to our Council of the Indies, and to no other audience thereof; but it shall be his duty to fulfil the orders of the viceroys of New Spain, with respect to matters of superior government, and others established by custom.

96.—Lib. V, Tit. 2, Law 47.—(Vol. 2, p. 125.)

The prohibition of treating, &c., to apply to governors, corregidores, and alcaldes, with their lieutenants.

We declare that the governors, corregidors, superior alcaldes, and their lieutenants, are included in the prohibition and penalties imposed upon officers trading and contracting in the West Indies, and that in their trials and punishment the Law 54, and following, of Title 16, Lib. 2, in that behalf, shall be observed.

97.—Lib. V, Tit. 8, Law 1.—(Vol. 2, p. 144.)

The viceroys and justices to have no power to appoint clerks, [escribanos;] they shall receive their title from the King, through the Council of the Indies.

Whereas the practice has been introduced by the viceroys, audiences, governors, and other justices, in the Indies, under pretence that there is a want of royal clerks, [escribanos,] in the cities and settlements, to appoint persons to write and act in the visits and inquiries [residencias] as well as in other affairs, and to draw writings, testaments, and public instruments, as if they were, in reality, our royal clerks, [escribanos,] whence it has risen that the records of proceedings, inquiries, and examinations, are liable to contain material errors and nullities; and whereas it is necessary that they should combine that correctness and skill so important in the exercise of those functions, and which are known, upon examination; and that a proper degree of security and good form should prevail through the records and protocols, which they do not keep with sufficient care and attention; whence result confusion and doubt in the establishment of truth, and sometimes the loss of records and writings, together with the statement of established facts; and whereas it is already provided by our royal orders, [cedulas,] that no one can exercise those offices, but such as derive their title and employ [notaria] from our royal person, or from such others as are empowered, with our special license and authority, to confer them, because this is an act of our jurisdiction, and a part of our royal prerogative; and desiring to apply the proper remedy to these and to many other inconveniences affecting the government and the rights of parties, we ordain and command that the following be observed precisely and inviolably, and that none of our viceroys, presidents, audiences, governors, corregidors, judges, and commissioners for visits and inquiries, perquisidores, ordinary alcaldes, or justices, of whatever name, dignity, or quality, have power to appoint, or issue titles or commissions of clerks, [escribanos,] either perpetual or for a limited time, for any purpose whatever, whether general or private, however secret or important, under the pretence that there is a deficiency of clerks in the district where they wish to appoint them, nor for any other cause, however necessary, nor to consent to tolerate or permit them to serve; taking care that all offenders be prosecuted with all the rigor of the laws; that they shall be accused in the visits and inquiries, and that all proceedings, judicial and extrajudicial, public writings, testaments, notifications, and others, which are to be made before clerks, [escribanos,] and attested, legalized, and authenticated by them, shall pass through, and be delivered and acted upon by public royal escribanos, deriving their title and authority from the Kings, our predecessors, or ourselves, through the Council of the Indies. And no one who shall have exercised the office of escribano by virtue of an appointment from viceroys, governors, audiencias, and other officers referred to above, shall presume to continue to exercise such office, under a penalty of five hundred dollars for the first offence, and of eight hundred for the second; and in case of a third offence, not only the pecuniary penalty hereby imposed shall be executed, for the benefit of our treasury, of the judge, and of the informer, in three equal portions, but that, likewise, of six years banishment from the kingdom or province wherein the offender may reside. And it is our pleasure that the same be practiced and executed with regard to the judges, attorneys, [procuradores,] and clerks, [escribanos,] who shall admit the writings and instruments, and the judicial or extrajudicial proceedings, or who shall use the same, adding, with respect to the escribanos who shall offend against the foregoing provisions, the penalties imposed by law upon persons guilty of forgery. And to give more effect to the foregoing, we declare that all the instruments, writings, and judicial and extrajudicial records, made out or acted upon, and all attestations and testimonies given in violation of this our law, shall be of no effect or value, nor shall be permitted to be offered, in court or out of court, since being deficient in form of substance, which defect is material, and wanting our sanction, through the title already given, or to be given, by our said council, who alone have power to grant it, they can have no effect or value whatever. Nor shall our said judges and justices, in like manner, permit that the clerks of government, [escribanos de gobernacion,] who shall have no particular or express power from us to make out records of proceedings, unless where such power shall appertain to their office, under the penalties defined above, and of nullity of their acts. And we command the attorney [fiscales] of our audiences to take special care that the provisions of this law be observed in their respective districts; and the same obligation of deriving their titles or commissions from the Council of the Indies, is to extend to the clerks [escribanos] appointed in these kingdoms of Castile, to act with the judges in visits, inquiries, and indayations, who, in compliance with our orders, commissions, and letters, may have to proceed to the Indies. And whereas it may happen that at the time of making new discoveries and settlements, there may be a deficiency of clerks, [escribanos,] or that those who are in the cities, towns, and villages may die, or be disabled from serving, and that, if it were necessary to wait for such offices to be sold, the course and despatch of business might be suspended, we hereby grant power and license to the viceroys, presidents, and governors to appoint, in the cases just referred to, and in no others, as clerks [escribanos] of the numero and council, such persons, as being able and sufficient, may appear to them duly qualified to discharge the duties of those offices, until we may dispose of them in favor of such persons as we may choose to appoint, or sell the same, or until such relinquishments be made according to law: of all which they shall advise us through our Council of the Indies.

98.—Lib. VI, Tit. 3, Law 9.—(Vol. 2, p. 209.)

Subjected Indians not to be deprived of the lands which they before possessed.

Whereas the Indians would sooner and more willingly be reduced into settlements, if they were allowed to retain the lands and improvements which they may possess in the districts from which they shall remove, we command that no alteration be made therein, and that the same be left to them to be owned as before, in order that they may continue to cultivate them and to dispose of their produce.

99.—Lib. IX, Tit. 27, Law 1.—(Vol. 3, p. 326.)

No stranger or prohibited person shall be permitted to trade with the Indies.

We order and command that no stranger or any other person forbidden by these laws be permitted to trade with, or contract in the Indies, or from thence to these kingdoms, or to any other parts, or to go thither, if not thereto authorized by letters of naturalization or license from us. They shall not make use of such license, except with their own funds, and not with those of any other individuals of the nation, whether private or united in corporations or companies, public or secret, composed of many or few persons, and whether in their own name or in the name of persons interposed in their stead, under the penalty of forfeiting the goods thus traded or contracted for, and of all other goods in their possession, to be applied, one-third to our royal chamber, [camera,] one-third to the judge, and one-third to the informer. The same penalty shall be incurred by foreigners residing in the Indies, and trading thence with these kingdoms, or contracting without our license. The same penalty shall, moreover, be incurred by the natives of those kingdoms substituted in the stead of such foreigners, and trading or contracting for them or any of them. And we command the president, and the judicial and ministerial officers of the tribunal [casa de contratation] of Seville, and the judge [official] of the tribunal of the Indies, in the city of Cadiz, if it shall be our pleasure to authorize such tribunal, and our viceroys, audiences, and justices in our Indies and the islands adjacent, to cause, with particular care, this law to be observed, and all that is contained therein to be fufilled, as well as all such other laws as prohibit strangers to trade and contract, and to enforce the penalties hereby imposed, without remission.

100.—Lib. IX, Tit. 27, Law 19.—(Vol. 3, p. 330.)

Persons legally licensed [compuestos] not included in the prohibition of foreigners.

Foreigners licensed [compuestos] by virtue of our orders and commissions, by officers legally authorized to that effect, are declared not to be included in the prohibition of foreigners, when they shall have been thus licensed, but such only as shall arrive without our order or license.

101.—Lib. IX, Tit. 27, Law 21.—(Vol. 3, p. 331.)

Licensed strangers to be withdrawn from the seaports.

We command that it shall be lawful to grant to strangers lawfully licensed permission to live and reside wherever they please in our Indies, and to trade and contract therein, notwithstanding what is prohibited above, provided they do not reside in maritime ports and places, which shall be prohibited by heavy penalties, and they shall be removed to such distance in the interior as shall be deemed proper; and, with a view to greater security, the viceroys and governors shall ascertain what are the occupations, the callings, and the means of living of such strangers, and what persons they trade with, in order to know whether they act according to law, or whether they transcend their obligations.

No stranger to be considered as naturalized so as to trade and contract in the Indies who shall not possess the qualifications required by this law.

In order that a stranger of these kingdoms may be considered as naturalized, so as to be authorized to trade and contract in the Indies and western islands, it is our will, and we command, that he must have resided within these kingdoms, or in the Indies, during the space of twenty consecutive years; and during ten of these years that he have owned a house and real property; that he be married to a native, or daughter of a stranger, born in these kingdoms, or in the Indies: Provided such strangers shall not enjoy this privilege, unless they shall have been declared by our royal Council of the Indies to have complied with the provisions contained in this law; for this purpose they shall apply to our said council, and transmit the proceedings and formalities which, for this purpose, they shall institute and fulfil, before the audiences within the provinces where they may reside, if such there be, and before our attorneys who shall be duly summoned; or before the consulado, if such proceedings be had in the tribunal [casa] of Seville, with respect to inhabitants of Seville, San Lucar, Cadiz, or other parts of these kingdoms, who shall make such allegations as to them shall seem fit; and, when prepared for decision, shall transmit said proceedings, together with their opinions thereon, to the council; and, where there shall be no such audiences, the proceedings shall be had before the governor, or superior judge, and conducted by an attorney, to be appointed and summoned for that purpose; and the judges before whom such proceedings shall be had shall give their opinions thereon. The council, having considered said proceedings and fulfilled the foregoing directions, shall receive orders to issue our letters of naturalization, and our authorization to trade and contract in the Indies: And provided, further, that such strangers, after being authorized in the manner above stated, shall trade only with their own funds, and shall not be permitted to do so with the goods of other strangers not enjoying such privileges, under penalty of forfeiture of the merchandise with which they trade under their names and of the authorization granted to them, for thus having made an illegal use of it: And provided also, that, within the term of thirty days, counting from the date of such authorization, they shall make an inventory, upon oath, of their goods, and file the same before the court of justice of the town wherein they reside, in order that it may, at all times, be known what amount of property they owned at the time they commenced trading in the Indies; and if they shall fail so to do within the above-mentioned period, the license granted them shall become null and repealed, and they shall, as before, be considered as strangers.

The real property mentioned in the preceding law to amount in value to four thousand ducats, and to appear by documents.

Besides the qualifications described in the preceding law, we order and declare, as relates to that clause requiring strangers to be possessed of real estate in order to acquire the right of naturalization, and of trading and contracting in the Indies, that such estate shall be, and known to be, of the value of four thousand ducats, either belonging to them or acquired by legacy, donation, purchase, or on condition, all which must be made to appear by documentary evidence, sale, or perpetual permutations, and not by mere testimony of witnesses.

No. 4.

ROYAL REGULATION OF OCTOBER 15, 1754.

Experience having proved the inconveniences that arise to my subjects of the kingdoms of the Indies from the decree issued by royal order of the 24th of November, 1735, that those who would enter upon the royal possessions of those dominions should necessarily apply to my royal person to obtain their confirmation within the time assigned, under the penalty of losing them in case of their failure to do so; and many persons having failed to avail themselves of this benefit, from their inability to sustain the expense of an application to this court to obtain the confirmation of what they compromised for or purchased, it being of small amount, or some few caballerias, [lots,] and those who may apply, from their purchases being of greater value, are at great expense on account of the testimony they must present, the transmission of money, the appointment of agents, and other necessary expenses that usually exceed the principal sum paid for the composition or purchase of these royal lands before the sub-delegates; and, as a consequence of this, much land is left uncultivated which might support the provinces in which they are, by being cultivated and grazing cattle; and it is another result that persons occupy lands illegally, through defect of title, without properly cultivating them, for fear of being denounced and prosecuted for it; and my royal treasury also suffering, both in the amount of sales of these lands, and in the consequent neglect of agriculture and tending of cattle: I have therefore resolved that in the grants, sales, and compromises of royal cultivated and uncultivated lands now made, or which shall hereafter be made, the provisions of the regulation shall be faithfully observed and executed.

I. That, from the date of this my royal order, the power of appointing sub-delegate judges to sell and compromise for the lands and uncultivated parts of the said dominions shall belong thereafter exclusively to the viceroys and presidents of my royal audiences of those kingdoms, who shall send them their appointment or commission with an authentic copy of this regulation. The said viceroys and presidents shall be obliged to give immediate notice to the secretary of state and universal despatch of the Indies, of the ministers whom they shall make sub-delegates in their respective districts and places where they have been usually appointed, or where it may seem necessary to appoint new ones for his approbation. Those at present exercising this commission shall continue. These, and those whom the said viceroys and presidents shall hereafter appoint, may sub-delegate their commissions to others for the distant parts and provinces of their stations, as was previously done. By virtue of this law, my Council of the Indies and its ministers are excluded from the superintendence and management of this branch of the royal hacienda.

II. The judges and officers to whom jurisdiction for the sale and composition of the royal lands [realengos] may be sub-delegated shall proceed with mildness, gentleness, and moderation, with verbal and not judicial proceedings, in the case of those lands which the Indians shall have possessed, and of others when required, especially for their labor, tillage, and tending of cattle.

But in regard to the lands of community, and those granted to the towns for pasturage and commons, no change shall be made; the towns shall still be maintained in the possession of them; and those that may have seized shall be restored to them, and their extent enlarged according to the wants of the population; nor shall severe strictness be used towards those already in possession of Spaniards or persons of other nations; and in regard to all, the requirements of Laws 14, 15, 17, 18, and 19, Title 12, Lib. 4, of the Recopilacion de Indias, shall be observed.

III. The present regulations, and the appointment which shall be issued in the form prescribed in the first section, being received by the principal sub-delegate, they shall furnish, on their part, general orders to the justices of the capitals and chief places of their respective districts, commanding them to be published therein in the manner usual with other general orders issued by viceroys, presidents, and audiencias relating to my service, so that every and all persons who shall have possessed royal lands, whether settled, cultivated, tilled, or not, from the year 1700 to the day of the publication of said order, may prove before the sub-delegate, by themselves, their correspondents, or attorneys, the titles and patents in virtue of which they hold their land. For this exhibition an adequate time shall be fixed, proportioned to the distances; and notice shall be given that they shall be deprived of, and ejected from, such lands, and grants of them made to other persons if they fail to exhibit their warrants within the limited time without just and proper cause.

IV. If it shall appear from the warrants or writings so presented, or from other legal authority, that these persons are in possession of such royal lands by virtue of a sale or composition made by the sub-delegates so empowered before the said year 1700, although these acts may not have been confirmed by my royal person, nor by the viceroys and presidents, they shall still be suffered to retain free and quiet possession of them, without being caused the least molestation or deprived of any rights by these orders, conformable with the 15th Law, Title 12, Lib. 4, of the Recopilacion de Indias, already cited.

On these warrants it shall be noted that the persons have complied with the obligation of exhibiting them, so that they may not in future be disturbed in nor sued for their royal lands, they nor their successors. If persons have not warrants, their proof of long possession shall be held as a title by prescription. If they shall not have tilled or cultivated these lands, the term of three months, prescribed by the 11th law of the said title and book, shall be allowed them, or whatever time may be thought sufficient for this purpose; and notice shall be given them that if they fail to cultivate the lands, they shall be granted to those who shall lodge information thereof, under the same condition of cultivating them.

V. The possessors of lands sold, or compromised for by the respective sub-delegates, from the said year 1700 to the present time, shall not be molested, disturbed, nor informed against now nor at any time, if it shall appear that they have been confirmed by my royal person or by the viceroys and presidents of the respective districts while in office; but those who shall have held their lands without this necessary requisite shall apply for their confirmation to the audiencias of their district, and to the other officers on whom this power is confirmed by the present regulation. These authorities, having examined the proceedings of the sub-delegates in ascertaining the quantity and the value of the lands in question, and the patent that may have been issued for them, shall determine whether sale or composition was made without fraud or collusion, and at reasonable prices. This shall be done with the judgment and advice of the fiscals; after considering every circumstance, and the price of the sale or composition, and the respective dues of medianata* appearing to have been paid into the royal treasury, and the King's money being again paid in the amount that may seem proper, the confirmation of the patents of the possessors of these lands shall be given in my royal name, by which their property and claim in the said lands shall be rendered legal, as well as in the waters and uncultivated parts, and they and their successors, general and particular, shall not be molested therein.

VI. If, by the proceedings that should have been used for the sales and compositions, unconfirmed since the year 1700, it shall appear that these royal lands have not been surveyed nor valued, as is understood to be the case in some provinces, the confirmation shall be withheld until this be executed; and the King's money shall be regulated by the increased value of the lands, as determined by the survey and valuation, which money must precede the confirmation.

VII. There shall also be contained in the general orders to be issued, as before said, by the sub-delegates, to the justices of the chief towns and places of their district, a clause that those who shall have exceeded the limits of the purchase or composition, adding thereto, and entering upon more land than was granted, whether the principal part be confirmed or not, shall necessarily apply to them for the composition of these lands, so that after a survey and valuation of them the patents and confirmation of them may be issued.

Notice shall also be given that the lands so occupied shall be adjudged in a moderate quantity to those who shall inform of them, and that the royal lands occupied without title shall be adjudged to be the property of the King if, within the time appointed, the intruding possessors shall not discover them and treat for their composition and confirmation. This shall be observed and fulfilled without exception of persons or communities, of what state or description they may be.

VIII. A proper reward shall be given to those who shall inform of lands, grounds, places, waters, and of cultivated and desert lands, and shall be allowed a moderate portion of those of which they shall have informed as being occupied without title. This shall also be included in the public notice which the sub-delegates to be appointed shall cause to be published in their respective districts.

IX. The audiencias shall issue the confirmations by provinces, and in my royal name, after an examination by the fiscal, as before said, without greater judicial expense to the parties than what is required by the regulated prices for such act. For this purpose they shall collect from the sub-delegates of their district the proceedings that have taken place in the sale or composition of that for which confirmation shall be required. With these, and in proportion to the estimated value of the lands, and considering, at the same time, the benefit which it was my pleasure to grant to those my subjects, by relieving them from the expense of applying to my royal person, they shall determine the sum to be paid me for this new favor.

X. To avoid costs and delay in this business, which would happen if, after the patents have been issued by the sub-delegates, the audiencias should determine upon new surveys, or valuations, or other measures, the sub-delegates shall report to the respective audiencias the original proceedings upon each matter. These they shall consider as finished and prepared for the issuing of the patents; and after being examined by the audiencias, and the opinion of their fiscals being received, they shall be returned, and, if no objection is made, the warrants be issued, or the measures used that shall be dictated as previously necessary, and in this way shall be facilitated the prompt issue of the royal confirmations, without a duplication of new patent.

XI. These audiencias shall be a court of appeal for trying the decisions and sentences of the sub-delegates pronounced by them in any suit about the sale or composition of royal lands, the information lodged concerning them and their survey and valuation. By this provision, the expensive recourse to the council will be avoided, and the necessity will no longer exist of abandoning claims, which some persons have been obliged to do from their inability to sustain the consequent expense of the recourse.

* First fruits of the half year.

XII. In the distant provinces of the audiencias, or where sea intervenes, as Caraccas, Havana, Carthagena, Buenos Ayres, Panama, Yucatan, Cumana, Margarita, Puerto Rico, and in others of like situation, confirmations shall be issued by their governors, with the advice of the oficiales reales, [King's fiscal ministers,] and of the Lieutenant General Letrado, where he may be stationed. The same officers shall also determine the appeals from the sub-delegates who shall have been, or shall be, appointed in each one of the said provinces and islands, without recourse being had to the audiencia or chancery of the district, unless the two decisions be at variance, and then this is to be officially, and by way of consultation, to avoid the expenses of appeal. Wherever there shall be two oficiales reales, the younger in office shall be the advocate of the royal treasury in these causes, and the elder the associate judge of the governor, using the aid of counsel where there is no auditor or lieutenant governor, and if the question is a point of law, by applying to any lawyer within or out of the district. And where there shall be but one oficial real, any intelligent person of the place may be appointed as the advocate of the royal treasury. It shall also be the duty of the governors, with their associate judges, to examine concerning the compositions of the sub-delegates, as provided in respect to the audiencias.

XIII. The money arising from the sales and compositions of each audience and district, and from the King's money paid for confirmations, shall be deposited in the proper office, and an account kept of them in a separate book; and the audiences and presidents thereof, the governors and oficiales reales of the districts shall furnish me an account, through my secretary of despatch of the Indies, of what this branch of the royal revenue may have produced in each year, so that, upon their information, I may be able to make the proper disposition of this revenue.

XIV. The sub-delegates who may be appointed for the administration of this business shall not exact any fees from the parties for what services they may have rendered; I therefore assign to each one, by way of gratuity, two per centum on the amount of their sales and compositions, as was allowed by the council in their regulation of the year 1696; and the clerks alone, before whom the proceedings, shall receive the regular fees, which shall be certified at the end of the records. In case of a violation of this rule, the respective audiencias and the governors shall proceed against them.

I will that all the provisions of this regulation be strictly and punctually observed by my viceroys, audiencias, presidents, and governors of all my dominions of the Indies, and by sub-delegates and other persons whom its observance does or may concern, and that it be not violated for any cause or pretext, as it is proper for my service, and the good of those subjects. And I command that notice be taken of this regulation by the general accompting office of the Council of the Indies, by the audiencias and chanceries, governments and cities, by the tribunals and accompting offices of the royal treasury, by their recording it, and by all other offices whom it may concern, so that it may be understood and faithfully observed by all.

I, THE KING.

Given at San Lorenzo el Real, October 15, 1754.

DON GULIAN DE ARRIAGA.

No. 5.

ROYAL ORDINANCE.

I, the King, influenced by the paternal love which all my subjects, even the most distant, merit of me, and by that sincere desire which I have felt ever since my elevation to the throne to render uniform the government of the vast empires that God has intrusted to me, and to place my extensive dominions of the two Americas in proper order and defence, and to render them prosperous, have resolved, from the best information and mature reflection, to establish in the kingdom of New Spain intendants of army and province; that, being provided with competent authority and salaries, they may govern the towns and inhabitants in peace, and with justice, as to what is confided to them by these regulations; may preserve their police, and secure the lawful claims of my royal treasury, with the integrity, zeal, and vigilance prescribed by the wise laws of the Indies, and the two royal ordinances published by my august father, Lord D. Felipe Quinto, and my beloved brother, D. Fernando the Sixth, on the fourth of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighteen, and the thirteenth of October, one thousand seven hundred and forty-nine, whose wise and just laws I wish to be faithfully observed by the intendants of the said kingdom, with the extensions and restrictions to be expressed in the articles of this ordinance and regulation.

ARTICLE 1. That my royal will may have its effect, fully and promptly, I order that empire to be divided, for the present, into twelve intendancies, exclusively of the Californias, and that hereafter the territory or limits of each intendancy, to bear the name of its capital city, shall be considered as one province alone. In this capital the intendant shall reside, and what at present are termed provinces, shall be called partidas, [districts,] and bear the names of the former. One of these intendancies shall be the general intendancy of army and province, and shall be established in the capital of Mexico. The eleven others shall be of province alone, and of which one shall be established at the city of Puebla de los Angeles; another at the town and station of New Vera Cruz; one at the city of Merida de Yucatan; at the city Antequera de Oaxaca; at the city of Valladolid de Mechoacan; at the city of Santa Fé de Guanaxuato; at the city of San Louis Potosi; at the city of Guadalaxara; at the city of Zacatecas; and one at the city of Durango; the other shall be that already established at the city of Arispe, and extends to the two provinces of Sonora and Sinaloa. Each of the above intendancies shall comprehend the jurisdictions, territories, and districts allotted to them, respectively, at the end of these regulations, which shall be delivered to the new intendants whom I may appoint, with their corresponding commissions, (to be issued for the present by the office of state and of the general despatch of the Indies.) I reserve to myself to appoint, forever, and during my pleasure, to these offices persons distinguished for their zeal, integrity, and intelligence, and deportment, who will relieve me of my cares, by my committing to them the immediate government and protection of my people.

ART. 2. The viceroy of New Spain shall continue, with the full extent of the superior authority and various powers conferred on him by my royal commission and instruction, and by the laws of the Indies, as the governor and captain general over that district. To these high offices is added that of president of the audiencia and chancery of the metropolis of Mexico. But the superintendence and regulation of my royal treasury, in all its branches and revenue, is committed to the care, direction, and management of the intendancy general of the army and treasury, to be established in the said capital; and the other intendancies of province, which I order by these regulations to be created, shall be subordinate to it.

ART. 6. Of the junta superior.—This junta shall meet once or twice every week, on the days and at the hours which the superintendent shall appoint, according to his own important occupations, and those of the other vocals, [members,] but, if any urgent occasion happen, he shall have power to convene extraordinary juntas. But all these shall be governed by the present regulations, and the orders which I shall furnish in future, for rendering uniform, as far as possible, in the provinces of the said empire, the government of, and administration of justice in, matters relating to my royal treasury, and to war.

This superior junta shall not only have exclusive jurisdiction of these two branches or objects, but of the public property, and revenue, and community, goods of the towns; for the management and judicial superintendence of which, I confer on this junta what jurisdiction and powers may be necessary to the absolute exclusion of all my tribunals, and it shall be subordinate to my royal person alone, through the office of the universal despatch of the Indies. The cases which arise under the ordinary royal jurisdiction, and those of police and government, in appeal from the intendants, their sub-delegates, and other common judges, shall remain subject to the audiencia of the district in which they may occur, as they are by the laws of the Indies.

ART. 7. The political governments of Puebla de los Angeles, of Nueva Vizcaya, Sonora, and Sinaloa, the offices of corregidor for Mexico and Antequera de Oaxaca, that of Vera Cruz to be created, and the offices of superior alcalde or corregidor for Valladolid, Guanaxuato, San Luis Potosi, and Zacatecas, shall be respectively united with the intendancies which I establish in said capitals and their provinces, and the emoluments at present enjoyed by them who hold the said offices shall cease, and the president regent of the audiencia of Guadalaxara shall, for the present, govern that intendancy. And I command that the intendants have in charge the four branches or subjects of justice, police, treasury, and war, giving them, for this purpose, as I do, all the necessary jurisdiction and powers. These intendancies shall be subordinate and dependent in regard to the two first branches; those of Arispe and Durango on commandant general of their provinces; the other ten on the viceroy, and all of them shall be subordinate to the territorial audiencias, according to the distinction of commands, the nature of the cases and objects of their cognizance, and conformably with the collected laws of the Indies, as will be explained in the body of this ordinance; for it is my royal intention that the jurisdictions established therein, shall not all concur in one person, by confounding or changing, or by implication. These regulations are principally intended to prevent the frequent difficulties and questions of jurisdiction that would arise between governors, corregidors, or superior alcaldes, if these ancient officers should remain distinct in the capitals and provinces where the new ones are now established.

ART. 81. The intendants shall also be the exclusive judges of the causes and questions that may arise in the district of their provinces about the sale, composition, and grant of royal lands, and of seignory, it being required of their possessors, and of those who pretend to new grants of them, to produce their rights and institute their claims before the same intendants, so that these matters being legally prepared in conjunction with a promoter of my royal treasury, whom they may appoint, may be decided upon, the opinion of their ordinary assessors being heard, and they may admit appeals to the superior junta de hacienda; or, if the parties interested do not appeal, they shall communicate to it the original proceedings for its information when they shall judge these proceedings ready for the issuing of the warrant Being seen by the junta they shall be returned, and the warrant issued unless some difficulty occur; and then, before executing it, the measures found to be neglected by the junta shall be observed. The proper confirmations shall, in consequence, be furnished by the same superior junta in due time, which shall proceed in the case, as also the intendants, their sub-delegates, and others, in conformity with the royal regulation of the 15th of October, 1754, as far as it may not be opposed to the requirements of the latter, without losing sight of the wise dispositions of the laws cited therein, and of the 9th, Title 12, Lib. 4.

Section 61, page 70.

It shall be an object worthy of the special attention of the intendants, not only to encourage and extend, through the lands situated within their respective districts, which may be calculated for such culture, the valuable produce of grana fina, or cochineal, which in former times was much cultivated in many provinces of this empire, but is now confined to that of Oaxaca, by efficiently assisting such Indians as shall apply themselves to that most useful branch of agriculture, in order to enable them freely to dispose of it within the said kingdom, (New Spain,) or, if they choose, to send it to Spain on their own account, as they are allowed to do by Law 21, Title 18, Lib. 4; but also to take care that the said natives and other classes of the people should devote themselves, in preference, to the sowing, raising and preparing of hemp and flax, conformably to Law 20 of the same title and book. And if, in order to attain so important objects, the intendants should find it necessary to make a distribution of the King's lands or of private domains, I grant them power to do so, giving notice thereof, together with their motives, to the supreme board of the treasury; but this is to be understood, as respects the property of private individuals, as applying only to such as, either from the negligence or inability of the owners, shall remain unimproved, and the aforesaid board shall make compensation for the same out of the public treasury; and as respects the royal lands, without prejudice to such commons as, by the provisions of the Law No. 8, ought to belong to each town or corporation; and the lands of the second class shall be distributed by the said intendants in lots proportioned to the number of Indians married, who shall not own any, either in their names, or in the names of their wives, with defence to alien the same, in order that their heirs of both sexes may succeed to the said lands. For my royal pleasure is that all said natives may own a competent amount of real property, and that the lands which shall be distributed for the aforesaid objects, whether purchased with public funds, or commons, or King's domains, may belong to those individuals to whom they shall have been allotted, whether they be Indians, or belong to other classes, together with the necessary right of property; retaining always the right reserved to my royal crown and to the public domains, respectively; and our intendants shall see that they are, by all, improved for their own benefit, by making them understand the advantages which are to accrue to their interests from this beneficent provision of mine. And where any shall not apply themselves to improve in a proper manner the lands which shall have been allotted to them, the same shall be taken from them (which I command to be done without mercy) and granted to others who shall fulfil the conditions.

Section 81, page 93.

The intendants shall also be the particular judges in transactions and suits originating within the district of their provinces, over sales, contracts, and distributions of lands in possession of or held from the King; the persons in possession, and those applying for new grants of the same, shall establish their titles and lay their petitions before the aforesaid intendants, who, after a legal investigation conducted by an attorney of our royal treasury, whom they shall appoint for that purpose, shall decide the same according to law, by the advice of his ordinary assistants, [asesores,] and shall grant appeals to the supreme board of treasury. And in case the parties interested shall fail to appeal, he shall transmit the case, together with the original records, whenever he shall deem them sufficient to determine the title, to the said board, who, after examining the same, shall, if no cause to the contrary be shown, return the said records, for the purpose of deciding the title, or, in order that such formalities as shall have been found wanting may be fulfilled; by which means new confirmation may, without let or impediment, be adduced, upon which the said supreme board shall decide in due time—they, as well as the intendants, their deputies and others, proceeding according to the provisions of the royal instruction of the 15th October, 1754, so far as the same be not repugnant to the present law, and without losing sight of the beneficent dispositions contained in the laws therein cited, and in Law No. 9, Title 12, Book 4.

Section 305, page 407.

In the same manner that the magistrates in the Indies are liable to be called to account [residencia] on leaving their employs, it is my will and pleasure that the intendants of said kingdom be likewise so liable, with respect to officers of justice, police, and government, which I commit to them as corregidores; and this is to be understood as applying in like manner to their substitutes, deputies and other subalterns. The inquiries to that effect shall be instituted by my Council of the Indies, who shall proceed according to the provisions of Laws No. 69, Title 15, Book 2, and No. 8, Title 12, Book 5, and the records duly completed, with the sentences, shall be transmitted to said tribunal, who, after due consideration, will do justice in the case.

EXTRACTS FROM THE INSTITUTES OF THE CIVIL LAWS OF SPAIN, BY DOCTORS D. IGNATIUS JORDON DE ASSO Y DEL RIO, AND D. MIGUEL DE MANUEL Y RODRIGUEZ.

Historical introduction.

This legal and historical information, which we have brought down to this period, upon the four states or conditions of our jurisprudence, we believe will suffice to form some idea of what Spanish legislation is; conceiving our Kings, by means of such solid ground-works, have been at all times very solicitous and careful of the right administration of justice, without there being observable the least neglect or inattention to this object, so interesting to a monarchy, happy from those early years, which, having sprung up amongst wars, confusion, and turbulence, hath nourished itself and grown with them until it hath attained to rendering itself robust and vigorous in the pacific days of our always unconquerable Catholic monarch, Charles the Third, (whom God prosper.) Happy days, in which we hope, through Divine favor, and the affectionate love of so beneficent a sovereign towards his people, to see Spanish jurisprudence acquiring all the fulness of its lustre, by which, in a short time, the dark cloud of ignorance and confusion must be dispersed, that, with so much self-injury, conceals it from our sight and knowledge. Let us see, therefore, upon what certain principles justice is found established among us, and the lawful consequences which ought to be deduced from them, according to our laws, in order that, being prepared with these means, we may proceed to the study of the elements of our law.

The only object of law is justice, which is "rooted virtue, [raigada virtud,] which always lasts in the wills of just men, and gives and distributes to every one equally his due or right."—(L. 1, Tit. 1, P. 3.) All law is divided into written and unwritten. Of written law we only know one kind, which is law: "that is, the reading [leyenda] in which there exists [yace] written instruction and chastisement; which binds and restrains the life of man, that it may not commit evil, and points out and teaches the good which man ought to do and practice."—(L. 4, Tit. 1, P. 1.)

From this definition these four principles are extracted: 1st. That the law is a general precept to all the kingdom. 2d. That no one can establish or publish it but the King.—(L. 12, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 3d. That all those who live under the dominion of the King are bound to obey it.—(L. 15, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 4th. That its virtues or maxims are seven: to believe or ordain, to command, to unite, to reward, to forbid or prohibit, and to punish, as expressed by L. 5, Tit. 1, Part 1.

From the first principle it follows: 1st. That the law is not obligatory, unless published by proclamation [pregon] or edict, executed by order of the magistrate, according to Auto Acordado, 1st April, 1767.—(L. 12, T. 2, Lib. 3, Nov. Rec.) 2d. That, immediately on being published, it binds, without any excuse or exemption being admitted under pretence of ignorance; because all, without distinction of person or quality, are bound to know and to study it, (L. 20, Tit. 1, Part 1, and L. 1, Tit. 1, Lib. 2, Rec.,) which clearly repeals the limitation of this rule, which L. 21, Tit. 1, Part 1, draws. 3d. That the law ought to conform itself to that which commonly and not that which rarely happens.—(L. 8, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 4th. That it ought to be clear and intelligible, so that all may understand it.—(Ll. 8 and 13, Tit. 1, Part 1.)

From the second principle it is inferred: 1st. That the lords or vassals cannot make a law without having the royal permission for the purpose, neither can any other person.—(L. 12, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 2d. That the laws, statutes, and ordinances which a corporation, [concejo,] an assembly, [junta,] or college, [collegio,] establishes for its government, have no force and are not binding if they want the royal approbation.—(L. 8, Tit. 1, Lib. 7, Rec.) 3d. That the King alone can annul, in part or in whole, and interpret the law according to Ll. 14 and 17, Tit. 1, Part 1, with other laws. 4th. That he may exempt any one from its penalties and obligation, as the exceptions of Ll. 3, Tit. 8, Part 7, and L. 31, Tit. 4, Part 5, and others of this tenor, prove. 5th. That only the civil laws of the kingdom, and not other foreign laws, are binding.—(L. 8, Tit. 2, Lib. 1, Fuero Juzgo, and those agreeing with it.)

From the third principle it is inferred: 1st. That those who shall live for any time in the kingdom of the lawgiver are bound to contract and litigate according to the laws of the country, unless they should contract with respect to real property situate in other countries.—(L. 15, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 2d. That offenders ought to be punished according to the law of the dominion in which they transgressed or contravened it.—(L. 15, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 3d. That the law does not cease to bind by its non-use, it being necessary for it to be repealed, in order not to be in force.—(Auto 2, Tit. 1, Lib. 2, Rec.)

Finally, conformable to the seven virtues or maxims of law, it is evident: 1st. That its precepts ought to be respecting things good, reasonable, just, and not opposed to the law of God.—(Ll. 1 and 4, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 2d. That the time and place, when and where, the law is published ought to be suitable.—(L. 4, Tit. 2, Lib. 1, del Fuero Juzgo.) 3d. That the law should reward and punish according to the merit or desert of each one.—(L. 3, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 4th. That the laws should unite men by love and friendship.—(L. 6, Tit. 2, Lib. 1, Fuero Juzgo, and L. 7, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 5th. That the prince ought to observe the law, although he cannot be compelled to do so.—(Ll. 15 and 16, Tit. 1, Part 1.) 6th. That the law ought to be made by wise, learned, faithful, and upright men.—(L. 9, Tit. 1, P. 1.)

Under the name or term of unwritten law we distinguish three kinds: those are use, custom, and the common law, [uso, costumbre y fuero.] Use is that which arises from those things which a man says and does, and is of long continuance, and without any interruption.—(L. 1, Tit. 2, Part 1.) In order that a use be valid five things ought to concur: 1st. That it be of a thing from which good may follow. 2d. That it be public. 3d. That there intervene the general consent. 4th. That it be not opposed to any written law. 5th. That it have the consent or order of the King.—(Ll. 2 and 3, Tit. 2, Part 1.)

Custom [costumbre] is the law [derecho] or rule [fuero] which is not written, and which men have used for a long time, supporting themselves by it in the things and reasons with respect to which they have exercised it.—(L. 4, Tit. 2, Part 1.)

On this definition are founded three axioms: 1st. That custom is introduced by the people, under which name we understand the union or assemblage of persons of all descriptions of that country where they are collected.—(L. 5, Tit 2, Part 1.) 2d. That it receives its authority from the express or tacit consent of the King.—(L. 5, Tit. 2, Part 1.) 3d. That, once introduced, it has the force of law.—(L. 5, Tit. 2, Part 1.)

From the first axiom it is inferred: 1st. That, in order to establish a custom, the whole or greater part of the people ought to concur in it.—(L. 5, Tit. 2, Part 1.) 2d. That ten years must have elapsed amongst persons present, and twenty at least amongst persons absent, in order to its being introduced.—(L. 5, Tit. 2, Part 1.) 3d. That, in default of this continuance, it shall be proved by two sentences of judges, or judgments given upon or according to it.—(L. 5, Tit. 2, Part 1.) 4th. That, for the same proof, one sentence alone shall be sufficient, when this was given upon a question, whether that which was alleged to be was or was not a custom, and the judge determined that it was.—(L. 5, Tit. 2, Part 1.)

From the second axiom it follows: 1st. That tacit consent cannot be supposed or presumed, when the custom is opposed to the law of God, to good reason, to the law of the kingdom, and to natural law.—(L. 5, Tit. 2, Part 1; L. 3, Tit. 1, Lib. 2, Rec., and Aut. 2, Tit. 1, Lib. 2, Rec.) 2d. That the custom introduced by error, stealth, or with force, and opposition of some, is of no validity.—(L. 5, Tit. 2, Part 1.)

From the third axiom it proceeds: 1st. That custom ought to possess the virtues of law. 2d. That it ought to be a good interpreter of it.—(L. 6, Tit. 2, Part 1.) 3d. That, being general and immemorial, it may repeal or alter the anterior law by the approbation of the prince, being supposed or presumed.—(L. 6, Tit. 2, Part 1, vide Berni Apuntam, on L. 4, Tit. 2, Part 1.) 4th. That it is itself destroyed and repealed by a new law, or by the revocation of the ancient custom.—(L. 6, Tit. 2, Part 1.)

There are two kinds of custom, one general and the other special or particular.—(L. 4, Tit. 2, Part 1.) The special or particular custom is of two sorts, either with respect to a specific or determinate thing, (ex. gr., with respect to a particular place or person,) or with respect to the whole of certain persons or places. The general is with respect to specific acts of all the inhabitants of the kingdom. Hence it arises, that a custom generally introduced by all the kingdom may destroy the law; but a particular custom in any province or seigniory has only this effect in that district or part where it hath been exercised.—(L. 6, Tit. 2, Part 1.)

Fuero [forum] is a use and custom combined, as appears from L. 7, Tit. 2, Part 1. By this definition, it is certain that a fuero has the force of law.—(L. 7, Tit. 2, Part 1.) And, consequently, it must possess the circumstances which a use and custom require, in order to be valid.—(L. 8, Tit. 2, Part 1.)

BOOK II.

OF THINGS.

TITLE I.

Of the division of things.

We have treated hitherto of the first object of law, which relates to persons; we proceed now to treat of the second, which relates to things. The term thing is applied to whatever is of such a condition that it may be counted among our property.

The first general division of things is that which is made into things of divine right, and those of human right. The first are divided into things sacred and religious. The latter into things common, public, of a corporation or a university, and private.

Every sacred thing is established for the service of God; and therefore the dominion of such is not in our person, and cannot be counted as property, (Ll. 12 and 2, Tit. 28, Part 3,) as are churches, altars chalices, &c.—(L. 13, Tit. 28, P. 3.)

We term religious that place where any one is buried in order never to be removed thence, and if all his body or at least his head lies there.—(L. 14, Tit. 28, P. 3.)

Although our laws may have borrowed these divisions from paganism, nevertheless, since the solemn consecration of churches and cemeteries has been established, we are of opinion that immediately upon being consecrated, religion occupies them and cannot be separated from them at any time. The consequences, therefore, which result from this principle ought to be explained by the canon law.

Things common are those which belong to the birds, to the beasts, and to all other living creatures, as being able to make use of them as well as men.—(L. 2, Tit. 28, P. 3.) Such are the air, the waters from heaven, the sea and its shore.—(L. 3, Tit. 28, P. 2.) By shore of the sea we understand whatever part of it is covered with water, whether in winter or summer.—(L. 4, Tit. 28, P. 3.) Hence it arises that any one may fish or navigate on the sea, and on its shore, where also he may build a cottage or house for shelter.—(Ll. 3 and 4, Tit. 28, P. 3.)

Things public are those which belong only to mankind.—(L. 2, Tit. 28, P. 3.) Hence it is: 1st. That rivers, ports or harbors, and high roads [caminos] are things public.—(L. 6, Tit 28, P. 3.) 2d. The walls and gates of towns or cities according to L. 20, Tit. 32, P. 3, and L. 3, Tit. 5, Lib. 6, and L. 3, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec., are public in their benefits to all; wherefore the obligation to repair them is common to all, although L. 15, Tit. 28, P. 3, classes them among things holy, adopting in this the doctrine of the Romans. 3d. That not only may the natives or inhabitants of a place make use of things that are public, but also strangers.—(L. 6, Tit. 28, P. 3.) 4th. That although the banks of rivers may belong to persons on whose estates they are situate, nevertheless they cannot prevent any one from making fast his boats or vessels [sus embarcaciones] to the trees or posts in them, and doing all that may be convenient for the free use of the things which belong to the art, calling, or industry by which he makes his livelihood.—(L. 6, Tit. 28, P. 3.) 5th. That notwithstanding he whose grounds are planted on the bank of the river may be the proprietor of the trees, he cannot cut that to which any boat or vessel hath been moored, or to which a person may be desirous to moor one.—(L. 7, Tit. 28, P. 3.) 6th. That no new mill nor any other thing can be built on the part of the river by which its navigation may be impeded, and any old building may be destroyed or pulled down which obstructs the common use of these things.—(L. 8, Tit. 28, P. 3.) 7th. That neither can any building or thing be erected by which the common use of high roads, squares, or market places, [plazes,] any threshing grounds for corn, &c., [exidos,] churches, &c., may be obstructed.—(Ll. 22, 23, and 24, Tit. 32, P. 3.)

Things belonging to a corporation or university are those which belong exclusively to the inhabitants [al comun] of any city, town, or castle, or any other place where men reside.—(L. 2, Tit. 28, P. 3.) Of these some may be used by any inhabitant of that city, town, or place, and others are for the particular use of the corporation, [concejo,] which ought to apply the fruits, produce, or rents to the common benefit of the city or town.—(Ll. 9 and 10, Tit. 28, P. 3.)

Of the first description are fountains or springs, places where they hold markets and fairs, and places where the corporation meet, sandy beaches or grounds [arenales] which are on the banks of rivers; and, finally, commons or pasture grounds, [dehesas.]—(L. 9, Tit. 28, P. 3.)

Of the second kind are flocks, fields, and vineyards, olive plantations, and lands, which produce fruit and rent.—(L. 10, Tit. 28, P. 3.) The great variation which is observed in this principal part of our jurisprudence renders its comprehension very difficult; and therefore, for greater clearness, it is necessary to treat of each thing separately.

With respect to what relates to the use of forests or woods, [montes,] and the commonable lands of a corporation or municipal body, [terminos de concejo,] it is to be observed that the abuse arising from their occupancy by many private individuals, without the royal license, gave rise to the following orders or provisions: 1st. That every common [termino] or forest [monte] occupied should be restored to the corporation or municipal body to which it belonged; and when once restored should not be transferred or sold, nor the pastures ploughed or converted [ne romper sus exidos] into arable lands.—(L. 1, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec.) 2d. That from this restitution the clerk or officer [oficial] of the corporation shall not be excepted, under pain of loss of office, and of being rendered unfit to hold it.—(L. 2, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec.) The process and mode which are to be observed by the judges in such restitution are prescribed by L. 3, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec., conformable [arreglada] to L. 18 of Toro, and the modifications laid down in Ll. 4 and 5, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec. 3d. Those commons [terminos] occupied or sold without the royal license, ten years previous to the year 1551, in which the law of King Charles I was published, were required to be reconverted into pasture ground, giving information to the council of what part might have been worked or cultivated by the permission of the municipality, [pueblo.]—(L. 6, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec.) 4th. That vineyards, orchards, or buildings made on common [termino] belonging to a King or a corporation, with the license of the council, possessed for twenty years, shall not be destroyed or pulled down, but the person who possesses it shall pay an annual tax or rent, [censo,] at the rate of five maravedis for every acre of vineyard; and so proportionally.—(L. 3, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec.) 5th. That the buildings given up on account of improper occupation shall not be destroyed, nor the forests or woods [montes] already planted be felled or laid waste, except they should be so extensively planted that the people can cut estovers, [lena,] which shall be done so as to leave the two principal boughs on the trees, [dexando horca y pendon,] that they may grow again, and never to cut the trees at the trunk or foot, allowing the smaller branches [montes] to remain for pasturage, (L. 7, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec.;) all which hath been extended to the forests or woods belonging to private individuals.—(L. 28, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec.) 6th. That no grants [mercedes] may be made of commons [terminos] by the King, corporation, nor judges.—(L. 10, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec.) 7th. Nor may justices grant commonable lands without royal license.—(L. 10, Tit. 7, Lib. 7, Rec.)

Also, in consideration of the utility of these public forests or woods, [montes,] it hath been ordered: 1st. That the planting of trees should be attended to according to the quality of the soil, the old forests [montes] being preserved, and watches [guardas] placed thereover; for which purpose the justices shall visit, every year, the said forests, and take care that the penalties expressed in the ordinance be carried into effect, (L. 15, Tit. 7, Lib. 7,) which must be confirmed by the council.—(L. 13, Tit. 1, Lib. 7, Rec.) 2d. That the corregidors, or magistrates, who should be remiss in the fulfilment of these laws shall lose a third of their salary, (L. 16, Tit. 17, Lib. 7, Rec. ;) all which hath been expressed more fully in the ordinances of the 7th and 12th December, 1748, which direct that no trees shall be cut without permission of the justice ; and that for every old tree cut five young ones shall be planted ; all felling or burning of public groves [alamedas] with walks, mountains, woods, &c., is forbidden ; and it is ordered that each inhabitant shall plant, every year, five trees, in the situations which should appear best to the corregidor; and, not having them, acorns may be planted at his discretion; that the justices may take cognizances of this, and not the audiencias nor chanceries, with appeal to the board [junta] of works and woods. This ordinance was extended to the forests of private individuals, by the cedula of 18th October, 1763.

TITLE II.

Of dominion, the modes of acquiring it, and its kinds.

The first species of right in the thing is that of dominion, which is a power that arises from the right every one has in the thing, by reason of which he may dispose of and derive from it every possible advantage ; may exclude others from its use, and claim it [vindicarla] from any possessor, unless a contract or the law hinder it. It is, from this, inferred that there are two kinds of dominion, one absolute, or perfect, which consists both of the power of disposing of and receiving the profit, (utilidad ;) the other qualified, or less perfect, by which these two rights are divided between the direct or immediate proprietor, who may dispose of the thing; and the useful usufructuary [util] proprietor, who has the power of claiming [vindicarla] and of enjoying the use or profits of it. Of this last class are the feud or fee [feudo] and the enfiteusis, [lease,] which we proceed to explain before entering on the exposition of the modes of acquiring dominion.

Feud is a grant which the lord makes to any man, on condition that he becomes his vassal, and does him homage, to be faithful to him.—(L. 1, Tit. 26, P. 4.) The origin of feuds must be ascribed to the ancient Franks or Germans; for it appears that their Kings were accustomed to grant lands to their generals and nobles, [senores,] on the condition of their doing homage and performing military service. From them the Lombards adopted them, who introduced them into Italy in the sixth century.—(Jorge Adam Struvio, Syntagma Juris Feudalis, cap. 1, 3.) Feuds were not known in Spain until the ninth century; and the first notice that is taken of them is by the Emperor Charles the Bald, having granted, in fee, Barcelona to Wifredo II, the Handsome, [belloso.]—(Diago, Hist. de los Condes de Barcelona, Lib. 2, cap. 7.) From Catalonia it is to be supposed that feuds would be introduced into Castile; and, in truth, the Behetrias, such as they are described by Pedro Lopez de Ayalo, in his Cron. del Rey Don Pedro, Ano. 2, cap. 14, and the dominio solariego, partook much of the nature of feuds; to which were annexed homage and military service until the duty paid in lieu of military service, [lanza,] and the annats of the half year, [media annata,] were introduced as equivalent to them. This is confirmed by L. 68, Tit. 18, P. 3, which, referring to the solemnities of investiture, says that the grandees [ricoshomes] granted feuds; and that there existed feuds, strictly so called, in Castile, is proved by Tit. 26, P. 4; the laws of which, upon the constitution, dissolution, and recognition or acknowledgment of the feud, and the obligations of the feudatory, agree with the feudal laws of the Lombards contained in the Consuetudines Feudorum. We only observe one remarkable difference in point of succession or descent; for L. 6, Tit. 26, P. 4, says that the succession does not descend beyond grandsons, but returns to the lord; and it is clear that, by the feudal common law, the succession was extended in infinitum; but this gives us to understand that such a law, enactment, or provision was made in favor of lords to afford them by this means the greater liberty of disposal.—(See Tit. 25, P. 4, upon the reciprocal obligations of vassals and lords, and the cases in which the former might abandon the feudal dominion [senorio] of the latter.)

L. 5, Tit. 30, P. 3, makes a clear distinction between the feud usufruct and emphyteusis. The last is a contract or agreement which is made respecting real property granted for the whole life of the tenant, or his heirs, on condition of the payment of an annual rent, or as shall be agreed on.—(L. 28, Tit. 8, P. 5.) Whence it follows: 1. That it is a contract partly between sale and lease.—(L. 3, Tit. 14, P. 1.) 2. That the terms set forth in the deed must be fulfilled.—(L. 28, Tit. 8, P. 5.) 3. That if the thing or property be lost or destroyed by fire, earthquake, or inundation, the tenant [enfiteuta] shall not be obliged, from that time forward, to pay the rent, [pension;] but if the whole be not destroyed, so that there should remain at least an eighth part, he shall be obliged to pay.—(L. 28, Tit. 8, P. 5.) 4. If the tenant hath allowed three years to go by without paying the rent to a lay lord, the property becomes forfeited, [cae en comiso,] without its being necessary to have recourse to the authority of the judge: Provided, however, That if, within ten days after the expiration of the above time, he should wish to pay the rent, the lord must allow him to retain the thing or property.—(L. 28, Tit. 8, P. 5.) 5. That if the direct or immediate lord be an ecclesiastic, an omission to pay the rent for two years is sufficient to work the forfeiture of the property.—(L. 28, Tit. 8, P. 5.) 6. That the tenant may alien the land, acquainting the lord who has the right of pre-emption [tanteo] with the price that another has offered; and he not giving that price, or being silent with respect thereto for two months, the tenant may sell, but to a person from whom the lord may recover the rent, in order that he shall execute a new deed of lease, and for which he is entitled to a relief, [laudemio,] which is the fiftieth part of the price or value.—(L. 29, Tit. 8, P. 5.) 7. That by alienating is understood selling, exchanging, pledging, or mortgaging, imposing services, or assigning to one without such power of alienation.—(L. 10, Tit. 23, P. 7.) And thus the tenant [el enfiteuta] shall be able to rent the land or thing, notwithstanding Lopez (L 29, Tit. 23, P. 7, Gl. 3) says the contrary. 8. That if a sale thereof was made without the permission of the lord, and he knew and consented to it, no forfeiture is incurred.—(Lopez, L. 29, Tit. 8, P. 5, Gl. 6, Quaest. 4.)

The modes of acquiring or absolute dominion are either by the laws of nations or by the civil or municipal law. The natural modes are original or derivative. The first are so called because by them that thing which was not in the power or possession of another commences to be under the dominion of some one, and derivative modes are so called because by them the dominion is transferred from one to another. Of the original, some put us in possession of [entregan] the body or substance of the thing, as occupancy or invention; others produce a certain augmentation to the thing already ours: such does accession. Tradition or delivery [entrega] is the derivative mode.

Occupancy is the taking corporeal things which do not belong to another with the intention of retaining them for one's self. Things are said to be no one's property which, by their nature, are not under the dominion of any one, or were thrown away by the owner with the intention of parting with them in future.—(Ll. 49 and 50, Tit. 28, P. 3.)

To industrial accession belongs the union or addition of another person's property to one's own: ex. gr., a foot to a statue of the same metal; the writing to the paper; a tablet to the painting, and a house to the soil. In these cases the accessory or addition belongs to the owner of the principal; the foot in respect of the statue, the writing in respect of the paper, the tablet in respect of the painting, the buildings and fruits in respect of the land on which they were planted or sown, and the materials in respect of the building being considered as accessories; but he who united or added another's property with or to his own, or worked on it with good faith, [con buena fé,] shall be entitled to remuneration for the expenses and improvements from him who acquires them by reason of the accession; and if he proceeded with bad faith [mala fé] he loses the whole, as explained, with a variety of examples, by Ll. 35, 36, 37, 38, 42, and 43, Tit. 28, P. 3, which have copied all that the Roman laws say upon the subject.

A species of industrial accession is the specification or formation of a new kind of thing with the material of another, as if from grapes wine be made, a vase from silver, &c. If the materials of which the thing is constructed cannot be reduced to their original state, they shall belong to him who made it in good faith, on paying the value of the materials to the owner; and if it be possible to reduce them to their original state, the thing shall be given to the original owner of the materials, who shall satisfy the party for the expense occasioned in forming the new thing; but in case of acting in bad faith the workman shall lose his labor and expenses.—(L. 33, Tit. 28, P. 3.)

Mixtion [mixtion] results from the mixture of materials of one kind with those of another; and therefore he who mixes his own gold with that of another never makes it his, although he may have done it with good faith, (L. 24, Tit. 28, P. 3;) and if they should be mixed by chance, or by the will of the owners, they shall be common, they being such as can be separated; and if this be not possible, each shall preserve his property in his share.—(L. 34, Tit. 28, P. 3.)

Tradition or delivery, [tradicion,] which is the derivative mode of acquiring dominion, is made when men give possession of their property to others for some lawful reason.—(L. 46, Tit. 28, P. 3.) It is corporeal, as if delivery be made of the thing into the hands of him who purchases it, &c., (L. 46, Tit. 28, P. 3.;) and also fictitious or feigned, as in the case where one should transfer or alien a thing which he hath lent to another.—(L. 47, Tit. 28, P. 3.) This takes place in respect to things corporeal as well as incorporeal, and as demonstrated by the examples referred to in Ll. 46 and 47, Tit. 28, P. 3.

Symbolical tradition or delivery is when one thing is delivered in token or earnest [senal] of another, the dominion of which it is desired to transfer; ex. gr., if the keys of the granary be delivered which contains the corn which is sold.—(See Ll. 6, 7, and 8, Tit. 30, P. 30.)

The modes of acquiring full dominion, according to civil or municipal law, are prescription, donation, and other contracts, of which we shall speak hereafter. We are now treating of prescription as having a very natural connexion or affinity with possession, which we are to consider as accessory to dominion, although it may happen that it is sometimes found separate.

Prescription is to hold the property or thing of another for a certain time, and to make it thereby one's own, so that the right owner cannot afterwards deprive you of it. To constitute prescription, good faith, [buena fé,] just title, and capacity of the thing for the purpose, and of the person who prescribes, are necessary; as, also, continued or uninterrupted possession for a determinate time.—(L. 9, Tit. 29, P. 3.)

Good faith consists in the possessor's believing that the person from whom he received the thing had right to alien or transfer it, (L. 9, Tit. 29, P. 3;) and therefore there will not exist good faith: 1. If the right owner of the thing sold warns or gives notice to the purchaser that it does not belong to the vender.—(L. 10, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 2. Nor if one purchases a thing from a minor, a madman, or the attorney of another, fraudulently or collusively inducing him to dispose of it.—(L. 11, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 3. But there will exist good faith in one who, when he receives the thing, believes the person from whom he makes the purchase to be the right owner, and he ought to be in possession of it all the time necessary by law to acquire the right of prescription; so that if, before the completion of this time, bad faith intervenes, he cannot prescribe, (Ll. 12 and 14, Tit. 29, P. 3,) unless he received the thing by way of gift or exchange, in which cases good faith at the time of delivery is sufficient.—(L. 12, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 4. In the same way, if such possessor, knowing that the thing did not belong to the person who transferred it to him, should sell it to another before the expiration of the time necessary to complete his prescriptive right, the latter cannot take it by prescription, because there existed bad faith at the time of its passing to him, (L. 12, Tit. 29, P. 3;) so that it follows that there must exist good faith at the commencement of the possession of the thing.—(L. 12, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 5. If, with respect to slaves or animals, this bad faith supervenes before the females conceive or are with young, he shall not acquire the young.—(L. 5, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 6. There is not bad faith in one who acquires a thing through the medium of an attorney, if the latter informed his constituent that it was transferred to him by a just title, although it be false, because the error arises in respect of the principal by a lawful reason or way.—(L. 14, Tit. 29, P. 3.)

Just title consists in the cause or consideration by which possession of the thing is obtained, being one of those by reason of which dominion is acquired, as purchase, gift, inheritance, &c.—(Ll. 9, 14 and 15, Tit. 29, P. 3.)

There is capacity in the thing if it is from its nature capable of prescription; and therefore sacred and religious things cannot be acquired by time, nor civil jurisdiction, nor tributes and royal rights.—(L. 6, Tit. 29, P. 3.)

In order that the person may be able to prescribe, it is necessary—1st. That he be of sane mind; wherefore the madman and idiot [desmemoriado] cannot begin to prescribe; but if, previously to becoming mad, such a one begin to acquire, the capacity of person will continue in, and enure to him or his heirs.—(L. 2, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 2d. It will be sufficient that the capacity exists in the attorney who may prescribe for the principal; in which case the bad faith of the former does not prejudice the latter, as we have already said.—(Ll. 13 and 14, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 3d. Mortgagee and lessee cannot prescribe, because they are in possession in the name of another.—(L. 4, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Recop.) 4th. Nor can one joint heir or copartner prescribe against another.—(L. 5, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.)

Continued or uninterrupted possession is necessary to the acquiring the thing. By possession, we understand the lawful possession [tenencia derecha] which a man has of things corporeal, with the assistance of the body and mind.—(L. 1, Tit. 30, P. 3.) There are two sorts of possession: one natural, as when corporeal possession is had of the thing, as of a house, an estate, &c., (L. 2, Tit. 30, P. 3;) and the other civil or by permission or sanction of law, as when a person goes out of or quits his house with an intention of not relinquishing it, then he is in possession by will, [de voluntad,] and this is as valid as though he were in corporeal possession.—(L. 2, Tit. 30, P. 3.) The possession of things incorporeal, as services, [servidumbus,] rights, [derechos,] &c., is proved by use and the sufferance of the owner.—(L. 1, Tit. 30, P. 3.)

Every person of sound mind may gain the possession of things by himself, or by another duly authorized or empowered by him. Hence it is: 1st. That children acquire or hold possession for their parents, and the attorney for his principal.—(Ll. 3 and 11, Tit. 30, P. 3.) 2d. The guardian or curator for the ward or minor, the madman, and the spendthrift, [degastador.]—(L. 4, Tit. 30, P. 3.) 3d. The officer of the corporation [oficial del comun] of any city or town for the corporation whose officer he is.—(L. 4, Tit. 30, P. 3.) 4th. The laborers and ploughmen who are tenants or lessees of any estate for the proprietor of it.—(Ll. 5 and 9, Tit 30, P. 3.) 5th. He who shall promise to hold possession of a thing for the person in whose name he promises to possess it.—(L. 3, Tit. 30, P. 3.) 6th. The friend or innkeeper, [huesped,] &c., for him in whose name he has possession.—(L. 12, Tit. 30, P. 3.) Possession is also gained by those modes which transfer dominion, of which various examples may be seen in Ll. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 15, Tit. 30, P. 3.

As possession consists in corporally or mentally possessing [tenencia] the thing, it follows that the possession of personal property [muebles] will be lost: 1st. Always when the thing is reduced to that state in which it cannot be possessed corporally nor by will, [de voluntad,] of which examples are given in Ll. 14 and 17, Tit. 30, P. 3; but in those cases the owner, although he loses the possession, does not lose the dominion, and therefore may recover the thing from the possessor.—(L. 14, Tit. 30, P. 3.) 2d. The possession of real property [cosas raices] is lost if the possessor is evicted by force; if, when he is not present, another enters on it, and prevents his re-entry; and if, seeing that another enters on his property, he submits to it, and does not drive out the intruder, (L. 17, Tit. 30, P. 3;) but in neither of these cases does he lose the dominion.

No one ought to be dispossessed without a hearing, (L 2, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.;) nor can the creditor of his own authority enter by force on the property of his debtor, but shall be obliged to pursue his remedy by another mode, as laid down by Ll. 5 and 6, Tit 15, Lib. 4, Rec.; neither can the property of the deceased be taken possession of without the will of the heirs, nor the inheritance of one who is in the service of the King, (L. 3, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.;) but he who possesses the thing a year and a day in the face of the claimant or plaintiff, according to the custom of some cities, ought not to be compelled to answer with respect to the possession, provided he have it with title and good faith.—(L. 3, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.)

Continued or uninterrupted possession for the time pointed out by the laws causes prescription. Hence it follows: 1st. That possession, being interrupted or impeded by any reason or cause, also interrupts or impedes prescription; so that, in order to prescribe subsequently, the person must begin to possess anew.—(L. 29, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 2d. That prescription is interrupted by the interposition of a judicial demand, or even by a simple complaint, [querella,] and by a claim made before the neighbors of the place where the house or property is situate, and, if the possessor be a minor, before his guardian.—(Ll. 29 and 30, Tit. 29, P. 3.) 3d. That if the debtor wishes to gain by time or prescription what he owes, and renews the obligation or makes an acknowledgment of the debt, in this case the prescription is interrupted.—(L. 29, Tit. 29, P. 3.)

The time in which things are prescribed is comprehended under the two kinds of prescription, immemorial and temporal. The first is proved by witnesses of good fame or character, who depose to having seen the person in possession of the thing or property for forty years, and having heard their ancestors say that they never saw nor heard anything to the contrary.—(L. 1, Tit. 7, Lib. 5, Rec.) By immemorial possession, seigniory or dominion of cities, towns, and civil and criminal jurisdiction, are acquired; but not that which kings possess by their pre-eminence and taxes, nor taxes, nor tributes, (L. 1, Tit. 15, Lib. 5, Rec.,) which ought to be taken as an exception to what we have said before. Neither by it are duties [alcabalas] prescribed, although the doing so may have been tolerated or permitted, (L. 2, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.) Nor is the right to raise or levy taxes or impositions acquired, (L. 8, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.) It may be remarked, that the right of prescription as to dominion or property is interrupted by the interruption of possession.—(L. 7, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.)

Temporal prescription is confined or limited to a certain number of years. To this sort belong—1st. The limitation of a year, in which the claim to the penalty incurred by judicial bail for not producing the person bailed is prescribed.—(L. 10, Tit. 16, Lib. 5, Rec.) 2d. The prescription of three years, in which personal property is acquired, (Ll. 15 and 17, Tit. 29, P. 3;) and the salaries or wages of apothecaries, spice venders, and other tradesmen or mechanics, in respect of their wares and work, (L. 9, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.;) and the fees [salarios] of advocates and solicitors are prescribed.—(L. 32, Tit. 16, Lib. 2, Rec.) 3d. The prescription of ten years, in which real property [las raices] is acquired among persons present, (L. 18, Tit. 29, P. 3,) and in which the executive action is barred.—(L. 6, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.) 4th. That of twenty years, which prescribes the right of absent persons to real property, (L. 18, Tit. 29, P. 3,) and the personal action and execution [executoria] granted thereon.—(L. 6, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.) 5th. That of thirty years, in which property generally is acquired, even without good faith, with the difference that in case of there being good faith, if another deprives the possessor by prescription of the property, he may sue for its recovery, unless it be the right owner who ousted him; but if he possessed it with bad faith he cannot demand back the possession, except in cases where the property was stolen from him, or he was deprived of it by the judge for not answering on citation, and he should not demand it within the year.—(L. 21, Tit. 29, P. 3.) Actions real, hypothecary, and mixed, are also prescribed in thirty years.—(L. 6, Tit. 15, Lib. 4, Rec.)

BOOK III.

OF ACTION.

TITLE I.

Of jurisdiction, judges, and trials, or judicial proceedings in Spain in general.

Having treated of the two first objects of justice, it remains to discuss in this third book the last, which relates to actions, under which term is understood all that is embraced or comprised in a trial or judicial proceeding, [juicio;] therefore we shall treat in succession of each of its parts.

Jurisdiction is the power which the King or lord of a domain possesses over his subjects or vassals, as arising from the dominion which he exercises over them. This dominion [imperium] is pure [mero] and mixed.

Pure dominion or jurisdiction is that which confers upon the prince the power of deciding criminal causes. Mixed is that which confers upon him the cognizance of civil causes.—(L. 18, Tit. 4, P. 3.) Thus, then, this supreme jurisdiction, in matters civil and criminal, resides only in the King, (L. 1, Tit. 1, Lib. 4, Rec.;) and, therefore, no lord or private individual can exercise, in the dominions of the crown, this jurisdiction without producing the title or privilege he possesses for so doing.—(L. 2, Tit. 1, Lib. 4, Rec.) Whence proceeds the pre-eminence or right of the crown to appoint secular judges to the cognizance of these two kinds of causes, as also escribanos and other ministers of justice.—(L. 2, Tit. 4, P. 3.)

Jurisdiction, in the first place, is ordinary or delegated. Ordinary is that which is vested with every extension in the magistrate by reason or virtue of his office. Delegated is that which is given to any one for the cognizance of a certain and determinate cause, which is exercised by all judges who are commissioned or deputed [comisionados.]

From the different nature of these two jurisdictions we deduce that the ordinary is favorable and perpetual, and the delegated odious and limited.

First. Wherefore, if a commission is given to an ordinary judge to take cognizance of any cause over which he possesses ordinary jurisdiction, he is understood to exercise the latter, unless something be added to or taken from it; but, even in this last case, if he hath not made use of the limitation or extension, he will be always considered to have exercised the ordinary.—(Hevia, Cur. Filip., part 1, 4, num. 4 and 5.) 2d. That both jurisdictions concurring in one judge, he is understood to exercise the ordinary.—(Hevia, ibid., num. 5.)

As in delegation oftentimes regard is had to the ability or fitness which the substitute shows for the office which he is to exercise, it hence follows: 1st. That the appointment can only pass to his successor when the substitute or delegate is not named, or, being named, if it can be proved that the person delegating was unacquainted with the delegate at the time he commissioned him.—(Hevia, ibid., num. 12.) 2d. That the delegate cannot commit his jurisdiction to another judge, although he be an ordinary one.—(L. 47, Tit. 18, P. 3.)

In the second place jurisdiction is divided into privative or exclusive, [privativa,] and preventive, [acumulativa.] The first is that which of itself alone deprives other judges of, or excludes them from, the cognizance of the cause; and this all judges enjoy or exercise to whom causes are committed, with an inhibition to others of the district to take cognizance of them. The second is that by which a judge may have cognizance of causes which another judge undertakes, or in which he has concurrent jurisdiction, with prevention between them.—(L. 19, Tit. 8, Lib. 2, Rec.) The latter those enjoy: 1st. Who acquire it by favor of the person while living. 2d. Those who acquire it by prescription. 3d. Those who possess jurisdiction delegated to them by a judge superior to the one of the district or place, by reason or virtue of which they may inhibit the ordinary and other judges from the cognizance of causes contained in their commission, although they may be pending before such judges; and, in the meantime, if this commissioned judge dies, or his office or power is defective or at an end, they cannot even take cognizance of such causes without a new power or delegation from the person who appointed, [el delegante.]—(L. 47, Tit. 18, P. 3; Hevia, ibid., n. 14 and 15.)

In the third place, jurisdiction is divided into necessary and voluntary. Necessary is that which is actually exercised over persons who are subject to it. Voluntary is that which is possessed over him who, of his own accord or free will, is disposed to submit to it.—(L. 32, Tit. 2, P. 3.)

From this last arises the jurisdiction called prorogada, which is the extension of jurisdiction to the case or person to which or whom it is not by its nature extended.—(Carleval, Tit. 1, Disp. 2, Sec. 1, Q. 8, L. 20, Tit. 21, Lib. 4, Rec.)

Hence it is that, in order to be bound by an incompetent jurisdiction, [prorogarse la jurisdiccion,] two things are necessary. The first, consent of the parties; the second, that the judge, to whom submission is made, has antecedently lawful jurisdiction.—(Carleval, ibid., num 979 and 1071.)

The first requisite arises from tacit or express consent, whence springs jurisdiction prorogada, tacit or express. Tacit jurisdiction prorogada takes place when those who contract or commit a crime subject themselves to a foreign or other [ageno] judge, who has cognizance of any of these proceedings in another jurisdiction, (L. 32, Tit. 2, P. 3,) or when one appears before a judge, to whose jurisdiction he is not amenable, without pleading to it, (L. 32, Tit. 2, P. 3, Carleval, ibid., sec. 2, num. 892 to 1000;) but contumacy, as it is compulsory, or not voluntary, does not induce or infer submission, [prorogacion.]—(Carleval, ibid., num. 1000, et seq.) Jurisdiction prorogada express is, when one submits to the jurisdiction of another judge, renouncing his own privilege or right, (Carleval 1, ibid., sec. 1, num. 967, and sec. 2, num. 1003 to 1019,) where may be seen the cases in which this express consent is not valid; neither does this jurisdiction take place when the defendant files a cross bill, by way of compensation or set-off against the plaintiff, before the same judge before whom he is sued or cited. The reason of this submission [prorogacion] is founded on this principle: that it is proper that after the plaintiff hath desired to establish or obtain his right before a judge, the defendant should be allowed to do the like before the same judge.—(L. 20, Tit. 4, P. 3.)

From the second requisite follows: 1st. That every superior judge may submit to the jurisdiction of an inferior ordinary judge.—(L. 7, Tit. 9, P. 1.) 2d. That so also may the judge of equal jurisdiction submit to that of his equal.—(Hevia, ibid., num. 23.) 3d. That the jurisdiction of every ordinary judge appointed for one or three years, although the term be expired, is submitted to until his successor enters on the possession of the office.—(L. 5, Tit. 5, Lib. 2, Rec.) 4th. That all jurisdiction, although necessary or compulsory, [forzosa,] may be exercised in another territory with permission of the judge of that district.—(Hevia, ibid., num. 25.) 5th. That the prince, lord, or judge, being absent from their territory or jurisdiction, may appoint a person to preside or decide in their name; but having two or more separate seignories or jurisdictions, and being in one of them, they may take cognizance of causes from the other, provided that the party be not obliged to go from his domicile.—(L. 13, Tit. 7, P. 3.)

Hence it also follows that all jurisdiction, from its nature, may be submitted to unless that its constitution or a statute forbid it on another account.—(Carleval, ibid., sec. 4.) By the law of the realm the following persons are prohibited from submitting themselves to an incompetent jurisdiction: 1st. Laymen to an ecclesiastical judge.—(Ll. 11 and 13, Tit. 1, Lib. 4, Rec.) 2d. Persons under twenty-five years of age, without the authority of their curator.—(Carleval, ibid., n. 1130.) 3d. Agriculturists, [labradores,] even in case of submitting themselves to the nearest royal corregidor, or to the head of the district.—(L. 25, Cap. 4, Tit. 21, Lib. 4, Rec.) 4th. Poor persons.—(Carleval, ibid., n. 1142.) 5th. An attorney without special authority.—(Carleval, ibid., n. 1143.) Jurisdiction by its constitution cannot be submitted to: 1st. In suits pending in the audiences, which cannot be invoked to the council.—(Ll. 10 and 23, Tit. 5, Lib. 2, Rec.) 2d. In cases of the value of thirty thousand maravedis, the cognizance of which belongs to the councils or corporations of cities or towns.—(Pragmatica of 28th of June, 1619.) 3d. In causes of appeal, because no appeal can be preferred but to the immediate superior judge.—(Carleval, ibid., sec. 5, num. 1224.)

The effects of prorogacion are: 1st. That this jurisdiction passes to the successor in office, unless the submission hath been personal.—(Carleval, ibid., sec. 6, num. 1234 and 1235.) 2d. That being made to the judge delegate, it is at an end with the delegation.—(Carleval, ibid., num. 1236.) 3d. That the sentence given by the judge, to whose jurisdiction submission hath been made, may be carried into execution by him, unless the assistance of another jurisdiction be necessary, as happens in respect of the ecclesiastical judge, who cannot execute his sentences without the assistance of the secular power.—(Ll. 14 and 15, Tit. 1, Lib. 4, Rec.) 4th. That, when once the submission is admitted by the judge, he can be compelled to the cognizance of the cause.—(Carleval, ibid., n. 1240.) 5th. That the judge may delegate this jurisdiction which has been submitted to.—(Carleval, ibid., n. 1241.)

From the royal and ecclesiastical jurisdiction emanate other subordinate or inferior ones, known under the name of fueros privilegiados; such are the military jurisdiction, those of the universities, and of the inquisition, &c.; but such as can in no way prejudice or affect the civil or royal, from whence they have derived their existence. For the conservation of this jurisdiction, reference is had to the following provisions: 1st. That no ecclesiastical jurisdiction can impede the royal, under pain of losing its privileges [see naturaleza] and its temporalities, [temporalidades,] (Ll. 3 and 4, Tit. 1, Lib. 4, Rec., jointly with L. 12, Tit. 8, Lib. 1, Rec.,) which comprises the penalty of judges conservadores who intermeddle in profane or lay causes. 2d. That only in causes relating to benefices, tithes, and in criminal and matrimonial causes, can ecclesiastical judges cite laymen in the tribunal or jurisdiction [cabeza] of the bishops.—(L. 5, Tit. 1, Lib. 4, Rec.) 3d. That ecclesiastics who possess temporal jurisdiction must exercise it through laymen.—(L. 8, Tit. 3, Lib. 1, Rec.) 4th. That the corregidors and justices must make their report every year, if the ecclesiastical judges usurp the royal jurisdiction.—(L. 17, Tit. 5, Lib. 3, Rec.) 5th. That special commissions may not be given in prejudice of the ordinary jurisdiction, except when it shall seem fit to the council.—(L. 10, Tit. 9, Lib. 3, Rec.)

These jurisdictions are given and appropriated by the King to magistrates who judge in his name; therefore they are called judges, which implies good men, who are appointed to order and to administer justice.—(L. 1, Tit. 4, P. 3.) Hence it is that every judge ought to be qualified, of good manners and habits, and endowed with the qualities expressed by L. 3, Tit. 4, P. 3. This qualification or fitness consists in age, science, and capacity. In respect of age, no one under twenty-six years can hold a judicial appointment.—(L. 2, Tit. 9, Lib. 3, Rec.) As regards science, every judge must have studied ten full years, (L. 2, Tit. 9, Lib. 3, Rec.,) and must decide by the laws of the kingdom.—(L. 4, Tit. 1, Lib. 2, Rec.) Finally, in regard of capacity, neither the insane, [loco,] the dumb, the deaf, the blind, the habitually infirm, the religious, the female, nor the clergyman, can be a judge.—(Ll. 7 and 8, Tit. 9, Lib. 3, and L. 10, Tit. 3, Lib. 1, Rec.)

As a judge ought to be a good man, [hombre bueno,] it is inferred that no man of ill conduct can be judge nor alcalde.—(L. 7, Tit. 9, Lib. 3, Rec.) 2d. Nor he who receives presents for administering justice.—(L. 5, Tit. 9, Lib. 3, Rec.) 3d. That no one can be such in causes in which his relations and friends [allegados] are interested.—(Ll. 9 and 10, Tit. 4, p. 3.)

The obligations of judges are very numerous, and do not properly belong to the object of our institutes. Reference is made to Ll. 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, Tit. 4, p. 3, and Ll. 3 and 16, Tit. 9, Lib. 3, Rec.

There are three kinds of judges, ordinary, delegated, and arbitrators, or judges of the fact, [arbitros.] The ordinary are persons who are ordinarily appointed to perform their offices in regard of those over whom they are to decide, in places in which they have jurisdiction.—(L. 1, Tit. 4, p. 3.) In this class are comprehended all judges who are appointed officially by the King, as magistrates, [corregidores,] alcaldes, &c., (L. 1, Tit. 4, P. 3,) with regard to whose powers, privileges, and other things belonging to their office and duties, there are various provisions collected in various titles of Lib. 2, Rec., which ought to be studied with reflection.

Delegated judges are those appointed to hear and determine [oir] certain or specific suits by command of the King, or of other judges ordinary, [jueces ordinarios,] (L. 19, Tit. 4, P. 3;) and it is to be observed that he who is delegated by the King may commit to another his delegation; but not he who is delegated by the ordinary judge.—(L. 19, Tit. 4, P. 3.) In the person delegated by the ordinary judge, these four circumstances ought to concur: 1st. That he exercise his jurisdiction in the territory of the person delegating. 2d. That the cause or suit over which the delegation devolves be within the cognizance of the person delegating. 3d. That it be not of that number which cannot be delegated according to L. 18, Tit. 4, P. 3. 4th. That he investigate the cause to which he is commissioned, abiding in the place directed by the commission, or appointed by the person delegating.—(L. 17, Tit. 4, P. 3.) These circumstances are not necessary with respect to the person delegated by the King, who, before setting out on his commission, ought to qualify himself with the solemnities of the oath, and other requisites expressed by L. 18, Cap. 19, and 20, Tit. 26, Lib. 8, Rec., not being able to give as his sureties any of the officers who shall accompany him, nor the escribano de camara. Auto 28, Tit. 19, Lib. 2, Rec., explains the mode in which these judges, commissioned by council, [concejo,] must proceed in commissions de oficio, not being allowed to be accompanied by agents [diligencieros] or fiscals, (Auto 9, Tit. 1, Lib. 8, Rec.;) nor to exceed the bounds prescribed to their powers.—(Auto 4, Tit. 1, Lib. 8, Rec.) Their commission being completed, they ought to give an account of it to the council within twenty days, (L. 46, Tit. 4, Lib. 2, Rec.,) without whose certificate they cannot obtain that from the fiscal of having giving an account of the penalties or fines of the camara.—(Auto 3, Tit. 13, Lib. 2, Rec.) The persons whom these judges shall condemn ought to present themselves to the council within fifteen days, if within the walls of the city, [los puertos,] and within forty days if without the city.—(Auto 5, Tit. 14, Lib. 2, Rec.)

These delegations are made for two purposes, either for the full or entire cognizance of the cause to definitive sentence, or for conducting the process [actuar el proceso] the judge delegating reserving to himself the pronunciation of the sentence.—(L. 1, Tit. 4, P. 3.)

Every delegated judge ought to decide according to the orders of the persons delegating, (L. 1, Tit. 4, P. 3;) and from this principle it follows that he can only hear the cause delegated, and its accessory, without which the commission cannot be carried into effect, [expedirse.]—(Ll. 19 and 20, Tit. 4, P. 3, L. 46, T. 10, P. 3.) 2d. That it is in the power of the person delegating to suspend him from the exercise of the office delegated whenever he pleases.—(L. 19, Tit. 4, P. 3.) 3d. That the person delegated may take cognizance of [oir] the action of reconvention, and the agreement by the parties to refer to arbitrators, [compromisos] upon matter appertaining to the commission, although nothing relating thereto be expressed in it.—(L. 20, Tit. 4, P. 3.) Delegated jurisdiction is terminated, 1st, By the revocation of the person delegating.—(L. 21, Tit. 4, P. 3.) 2d. By the non-exercise of it within the year, by the person delegated.—(L. 35, Tit. 18, P. 3.) 3d. By the death of the person delegating, or of any of the parties before the commission is entered on, [principiarse] (L. 21, Tit. 4, P. 3;) for the delegation once acted on is perpetuated.—(Hevia, ibid., n. 11.) Of the delegation of the coroner, or judge of inquest, [juez pesquisidor] we will treat in the 11th title.

BOOK II.—Part 2.—Chap 2.

OF THE ROYAL EXCHEQUER.—BIENES.*

Chattles vacant and without owners.

1. The royal treasury is heir, where succession fails in the fourth degree, to the chattles of a known owner dying intestate, after the wife, who alone is preferred and has the better right; which chattles are called of an intestate, and vacant.

2. The royal treasury also succeeds to and takes possession of the chattles left derelict and abandoned, not having an owner, and is preferred to any person whatsoever who may have first taken possession of them, as belonging to nobody; because it is a royalty and the King's right, asserted and notorious, and the primitive right of the occupation of chattles without a master merges in it. These chattles are known to be derelict by the signs of an intention to leave them.

3. Chattles lost and without a possessor, the owner of which is uncertain, shall be applied to the use of his Majesty, as the Catholic Kings, in a compiled law, give to understand that they possess this dominion by virtue of the bull of the supreme pontiff's so confessing, as donees of his holiness Pius IV.

4. Although in other kingdoms of his Majesty's monarchy, the administration and collection of chattles without owners appertains to the officers of the tribunal of the holy crusade, in the kingdom of Peru, where their pretensions to this were very ancient, it is declared to belong to no others than the King's officers, who are, in all its minutest branches, charged with the royal revenue; and this being the case, and the said proceedings and investigations being made, as the laws of the kingdom direct, according to the usual administration of justice, they shall take an inventory of them, and incorporate them in the royal patrimony, without allowing the said officers of the tribunal of the holy crusade to enter upon possession of them.

5. In derogation of, and to the injury of this royal right, interdictory papal decrees have been despatched to Peru, respecting chattles without owners, in favor of the religious order of our Blessed Lady of Mercy, and not to militate the reagainst what his Majesty has commanded in Spain, let said briefs be withdrawn, as contrary to royal orders and the King's prerogative, and said chattles belong to the royal cabinet and treasury.

6. From hence it results that the treasurer of the royal revenue is to take charge of this branch and class, in the same manner as the others which he administers, both himself and the other officers of his department, as this royal order directs.

7. The doubt remains if there can be a prescription against his Majesty of vacant and unowned chattles, and if such are alienable; which doubt, observing distinctions clearly explanatory of doubtful points, is satisfied as follows:

8. Chattles vacant, derelict, and abandoned, have a prescription against the Prince: this prescription is against the right to them; also, the things themselves found. If we treat of prescribing the title to the chattles, immemorial prescription is necessary: thus, the cited authors write, and I weigh law 1, chap. 15, of the divisions of book 4 of the Digest, [Recopilacion,] where it treats of the jurisdictions, that some are imprescriptible, and others are prescribed by immemorial use; then saying that it is thus understood as respects the tributes and rights due to the crown.

9. If we treat of prescribing the chattles when they are vacant or abandoned: notice being given to the treasury, they are prescribed by four years, if he who seeks the prescription has a title and good faith, as in a public sale, movable by three years, immovable by ten years, to persons present; without a title and with good faith, thirty years.

10. In the lost effects of uncertain owners no prescription takes place, because there is bad faith, and that resists even immemorial use, and for that reason the law of the kingdom, treating of them, said that privilege, use, and custom were necessary; that is, a privilege made use of and kept as in the law of lawful money.

11. As respects the donation and privileges of these chattles, it is said: the privileges comprise the vacant and abandoned, because the prince can bestow them, and those of the intestates of these kingdoms. The uncertain, that is, those goods without owners, whose masters are not known, from being lost, belonging to the King solely, as donee of the supreme pontiff for special purposes, and not appertaining to him as a prince, he cannot bestow them; and to be able to obtain them, use and custom must concur with privilege, for which purpose prescription of forty years and privilege are equal to immemorial usage.

12. Those of travellers, that is, of strangers, appertain to pious works, and although in the kingdom of France they belong to the King, not so in Spain absolutely, but only the disposal and custody of what shall remain after the necessary expenses of the funeral.

* Bienes seems to include all kinds of property; perhaps with exception of Mayorasgo and bienes raices, real property; although, in many respects here, it, bona stabilia, seems confined to personal effects.

Law 34. That the King's solicitors [fiscales] be protectors of the Indians, and defend and plead for them—Philip II, at Alonzon, in Arragon, 6th September, 1563; and in Ordinance 81 of the Audiences [Audiencias] of this year, Madrid, 8th January, 1575; at the same place, 23d June, 1587; and in Ordinance 93, Audiencias, 1596; Philip IV, in this collection [recopilacion.]

The King's fiscals in our royal courts of audience [reales audiencias] shall be protectors of the Indians, and aid and favor them in all cases and things where they have a lawful right, to obtain justice, and plead for them in all civil and criminal suits, whether official or between parties, with Spaniards demanding or defending; and so they shall give the Indians to understand, and in particular suits between Indians, they shall assist neither of the parties; and in the courts of audience where there may be general protectors, advocates, and solicitors for the Indians, they shall report how they may aid them in complying with what is wanting, and co-operating with them, should it appear necessary.

Law 35. That, when an Indian has a suit with the royal treasury, a person shall be provided to defend the Indian.—Emp. Charles and the Prince Regent, at Valladolid, February 13, 1554.

In case the fiscal prosecute a suit against any Indian, and that no protector should be present, or the solicitors prevented from defending from being employed by other litigants, the court will appoint a person more proper for his defence.

Law 36. When notice of granting lands shall be given to those interested, the fiscals shall be cited for the Indians.—Philip II, at Aranjues, May 24, 1571, and Philip IV, in this collection.

We desire that the Indians may be in every respect relieved and well treated, and receive no molestation, damage, or injury, in their persons or property. And we command that, on all cases and occasions where it may be necessary to send or get information whether any injury would result to individuals by granting lands to cultivate or distribute, or for other purposes, the viceroys, presidents, and auditors, will cause to be cited those really interested, and on the part of the Indians the fiscals of the royal audience, in order that all and each of the aforesaid may take his proceedings and allege his right against any injury that may result to his prejudice.

Law 46. That, where there may be no fiscals, the factors of the royal domain make the judicial inquiries required for the fiscal of the council.—Emp. Charles, and Prince Philip in his name, at Valladolid, August 7, 1548.—(See Law 37, Chap. 4, Book 8.)

If the fiscal of the council should have occasion to make judicial inquiries, or other proceedings in the Indies, we order the factors of our royal domain, where no fiscals are provided to attend to this with all care and diligence, and without excuse or delay send an answer of what they shall have done in the business about which the fiscal wrote to them: for thus our royal service requires.

(Vol. 2.)

Law 25. That the Indians may freely trade their products and provisions.—Emp. Charles and the Kings of Bohemia regents, Valladolid, May 12, 1551; Philip II, at the Prado, January 30, 1567.

It falls out that the magistrates, rulers, and guardians [encomenderos] of the Indians do not allow them to trade freely with their provisions and other things, under the pretext of good order, or because they are under their charge, [encomienda,] from which the Indians receive much vexation and injury, with force and violence, not being able to dispose of their produce and provisions, which they are sometimes deprived of, having to support their wives and children. We order our courts and tribunals not to permit these grievances, but allow them freely and without impediment to sell their goods and produce.

Law 30. That the encomenderos [guardians] do not succeed to the lands vacant by death of the Indians.—Emp. Charles and the Prince Regent, Madrid, May 14, 1546.

The encomenderos cannot succeed to the lands and hereditaments vacant by the death of the Indians of their encomiendas, without heirs or successors; the towns of which they were resident shall succeed, as far as the amount necessary to pay the tribute at which they might have been taxed, and something over, and the surplus be applied to our royal patrimony.

Law 22. That the fiscals defend the law suits of the communities of Indians.—Philip III, at Madrid, February 13, 1698, chap. 12; Charles II and the Queen Regent.

The fiscal of the court of audience has to demand in the causes touching the imposts and goods of the community what he shall judge proper, being their defender and advocate in all demands, petitions, answers, exceptions, and every other judicial proceeding whatsoever, and have recourse to all in the completest manner, as he is obliged to do, so that all the suits have to be at his risk; and this is conformable to what is charged all fiscals in the defence and protection of the Indians and their property; and if his occupations should not allow him to do thus, he will hand them over to the advocates, protectors, and solictors, who may be appointed to take charge of Indian affairs, whom we command to assist and help those referred to in this and take charge of them, the same as the other tribunals do.

Law 2. That the audiences shall take private cognizance of these rights, and report officially.—Philip II and the Princess Regent, at Valladolid, June 19, 1558.

The audiences have to take private cognizance of the rights of the Caziques; and if the Caziques or their descendants pretend to succeed to them and the jurisdiction which they formerly had, and if they should demand judicially let them proceed as has been commanded; and they shall also report officially on what passes on this subject; and it being plain to them that any have been unjustly dispossessed of their caziqueships and jurisdictions, rights, and revenues annexed to them, they shall be restored to the said parties to whom they appertain; and the same shall be done if any towns are dispossessed of the right which they had of electing caziques.

Law 6 charges the tribunals and royal officers with the recovery of effects without owners, and commands the laws to be observed.—Empress Regent, Madrid, November 27, 1552; Philip IV, same place, August 26, 1631.

In the recovery of effects without owners, the masters of which do not appear, the proceedings commanded by the laws of our kingdom of Castile being taken, and it belongs to our royal cabinet and treasury, our tribunals and royal officers shall take great care and not consent or allow that the treasurers and collectors and other persons charged with the recovery of the property of the tribunal of the holy crusade, recover anything unless with our royal letters patent, signed by our Council of the Indies, giving proper orders for the aforesaid; and let law 18, chap. 20, book 1, and law 1, chap. 5, book 5, be observed and kept.

Law 24. That duties on sales [alcabala] be not recovered from the Indians.—Same, chap. 3.

The Indians henceforth have not to pay the alcabala for what they sell, traffic, or contract, not belonging to Spaniards or persons who ought to pay it, because they have to pay it for what they sell, not belonging to Indians but to others; and, in order that their intervention should not prevent its being recovered, they shall be warned and apprised every time it appears, that the things they sell belong to themselves or other Indians, and that they have not in their shops merchandise, manufactures, or utensils of their trades, belonging to Spaniards, or others liable to the duty, for sale, and that all they have for sale belongs to them or other Indians, and that they do not clandestinely sell anything not belonging to themselves or other Indians; and if they have for sale anything belonging to any person liable to the duty, they shall discover and show it; and if, warning having been given, the contrary shall appear, double the amount of the duty shall be recovered from the concealer, and he shall be imprisoned in jail thirty days. All which will be thus done.

OATH TO BE TAKEN BY THE GOVERNORS.

Laws of Indies, Book 5, Chap. 2.

You swear to God on this cross, and to the words of the Holy Evangelists, that you will exercise well and faithfully the office of governor and captain general, of which you have received the gift; and you will maintain the service of God and of his Majesty, and attend to the well-being and good government of that province; and you will look to the welfare, augmentation, and preservation of the Indians; and you will do justice on both sides, without respect to persons; and you will keep and obey the articles respecting good government and the laws of the kingdom, orders, and dispositions of his Majesty, both those which are made and issued, and those to be made and issued, for the good government of the monarchy of the Indies; and you will not treat nor contract, by yourself, nor by intermediate persons, and you will have no bargain nor concert or understanding with your lieutenant, sheriffs, nor other officers, about salaries or impositions, and you will leave these free to them, as his Majesty orders; and you will not bear nor consent that your officers exact too much fees, nor presents, nor bribes, nor any other thing beyond their dues, under penalty of privation of office, and paying from your perquisites; and that you will keep and make keep the tariff and such dispositions as in it are found; and that you will not carry with you any of the aforesaid officers at the request or by the intercession of any one about this court nor out of it, agreeably to the article of good government which speaks to this point, but will freely carry with you such persons as, in your judgment, are fit for these offices; and if you have received any officers contrary to this form and tenor, you will despatch them immediately; and in everything you will act as you ought and are obliged to do.

Say: Yes, I swear.

Then, as you do this, God assist you; and if not, may He call you to account.

TRANSLATIONS FROM THE NOVISSIMA RECOPILACION DE LAS LEYES DE ESPAÑA.

[Latest compilation of the laws of Spain, in twelve books, in which are incorporated the compilation published by Don Philip II, in the year 1567, and subsequently reprinted in 1775; and the orders, decrees, royal resolutions, and other provisions, not before compiled, down to the year 1804. Compiled by order of Don Carlos IV. Madrid, 1805.]

Liber III, Title 5, Law 1.—(Vol. 2, p. 19.)

OF ROYAL DONATIONS, GRANTS, AND PRIVILEGES.

Royal grants cannot be revoked, without some default of the grantee; and descend to his heirs.

Those things which the King gives to any one, cannot be taken from him, either by the King or by any one else, without some fault of his; and he to whom they are given, shall dispose of them at his will, as of any other things belonging to him; and, in case of his dying intestate, it shall descend to his heirs, nor shall his wife demand any part thereof; in the same manner, the husband shall not demand any part of what may have been given by the King to the wife.

Ibid., Law 7.—(Page 21.)

No grants of villages, castles, lands, and hereditaments of this kingdom, can be made in favor of any King or other persons, strangers therein.

In pursuance of the foregoing law, (Law 6,) we declare that we will not give or grant to any king or other person, being out of, or strangers to, these kingdoms, any cities, villages, castles, hamlets, lands, or hereditaments, nor any islands belonging to these kingdoms, or to our royal crown, nor permit or cause any to be so given or granted; and we assert it upon our true faith and royal word; and we forbid any and all our subjects to presume to give, sell, or exchange any towns, villages, castles, lands, or hereditaments, nor any islands belonging to our kingdoms, to any king, lord, or any other person, being out of, or strangers to, our kingdoms, under penalty of incurring our displeasure.

Lib. 7, Tit. 3, Law 4.—(Vlo. 3, p. 286.)

Jurisdiction of justices and regidors in matters connected with ordinances concerning the rents of the municipal domains of the villages, with appeal and resort to the chanceries.

Whereas the town of Valladolid and the city of Grenada have made and continue to make ordinances, as well for their officers and functionaries and superintendents of the limits and commons in the country and the weights and measures as for other matters which are of the resort of the judiciary and regidors, we command the auditors and alcaldes not to interfere therein except by way of appeal and in cases of damages; and in these cases the judge who shall have given judgment shall be called, in order that the same may be tried without the delays of pleading. And we command, further, that the same be observed in cases of complaints and damages concerning the rents of the domains [propios] of the council, or of those which are collected for the fraternity, [hermandad.]

Lib. VII, Tit. 16.

OF THE MUNICIPAL DOMAINS [PROPIOS] AND TAXES [ARBITRIOS] OF TOWNS.

Law 1.—(Vol. 3, p. 382.)

Nullity of grants made by the King of the municipal domains of the towns.

Our will and pleasure is, that the cities, towns, and villages shall retain their rights, revenues, and municipal domains, [propios,] and that no grants be made of them; wherefore, we command that all grants of the same, or any part thereof, which we may make to any person be of no value whatever.

Law 2.—(Vol. 3, p. 382.)

Restitution to the towns of the estates, rents, and offices appertaining to the municipal domains, [propios.]

Whereas our pleasure is, that the cities, towns, and villages be relieved, with regard to their municipal domains, [propios,] we command that the stores, shops, granaries, and the lots within their squares and market spaces which yield rents, or which they may rent, and which were set apart as the municipal domains of said cities, towns, and villages, as also the offices appertaining thereto, or which are to be granted to said cities, towns, and villages, and from which rents may accrue to the same, which may have been entered and unjustly occupied by any person, or by virtue of any power which they may possess, without paying any equivalent or rent for said lots, be forthwith returned to said cities, towns, and villages. And if any charters or grants of this property have been made by the Kings, our ancestors, or by ourselves, we further command that the same be of no value, and that they be neither obeyed nor fufilled; and that our justices shall incur no penalty whatever for not fulfilling them, although they may contain clauses contrary to this order.

Law 3.—(Vol. 3, p. 382.)

Mode of terminating suits relating to municipal domains and to rents belonging to towns, and of executing the sentences.

We order and command that all suits which may arise touching the revenues and municipal domains of the cities, towns, and villages of our kingdoms and seigneuries be decided and determined in a summary way, without the delays or forms of judgment, in the same manner as with respect to our revenues and rights; that is to say, that if two sentences shall have been given by any two judges which shall agree with one another they shall not be appealed from nor complained of; and if one of said sentences be contrary to the other, then said sentence may be appealed from or complained of. And we command that no appeal be granted on any action but a definitive sentence, and on interlocutory questions, for which appeal must of right be granted; nor shall any superior judges grant any writ of inhibition against judges of original jurisdiction until they shall have ascertained whether there be cause for an appeal, under penalty of such protest as may be entered against them, the costs being moderate.

Law 4.—(Vol. 3, p. 383.)

Requisites for the renting of the domains and revenues of the council.

Whenever the estates, domains, and revenues of the cities, towns, and villages shall be about being rented we command that a day be fixed by the council for a public renting of the same, when they shall so be rented and adjudged, after being publicly offered during nine days, at the end of which the day for adjudication shall be fixed. The adjudication shall be to the highest bidder, provided he be not one of the persons disqualified by the provisions of law 7, title 9, of this book; and the persons to whom adjudication shall be made shall make oath that such adjudication is not for the benefit of any persons so disqualified, but for his own, under penalty, to those who shall take such adjudication in behalf of persons disqualified as above, of the punishment provided by the law above cited, and of said renting being made at their own risk, in the manner above set forth.

Law 7.—(Vol. 3, p. 384.)

Duties of the corregidors in the renting of the revenues and municipal domains, and manner of proceeding therein.

We command the corregidors to make themselves acquainted with the manner and conditions upon which the domains are rented, and to take such measures that their proceeds may not be lost through neglect or partiality, and not to consent to their being rented by persons in power nor by officers of the council, either by themselves or through persons interposed in their behalf. They shall act in such manner that any person who pleases may be entirely at liberty to bid and rent said revenues without any fear whatever; and we further command them to do the like with respect to the revenues and domains of the villages and hamlets within their respective districts.

Law 8.—(Vol. 3, p. 384.)

Duties of the intendants-corregidors in the public leasing of the municipal domains of the villages, and care of the public supplies.

Nothing is more important for the public good than fairness, integrity, and loyalty, in the public leasing of the domains of towns, and in the care of their supplies, because the general good is interested in having the former leased for their just value, and in procuring the latter with the greatest possible convenience and least cost; for this purpose, it is necessary to avoid the leagues and monopolies which are frequently found to exist within and without the corporations [ayuntamientos.] With this view, the intendants-corregidors shall see that the city appoint, annually, two of its deputies, who, together with the attorney, recorder, and assessor, shall attend at the accustomed place, or at such other as shall be made known to them, for the purpose of making adjudications of said domains and supplies, after having given thirty days' public notice thereof, in the first place, by sending their notices to the surrounding villages, and then by putting up handbills, in such a manner that it shall be generally known, and that all may come to put in their bids, being informed of their free admission; and they shall see that the regidors do not interfere, to the prejudice of the public, in using their authority to procure for their friends and intimates the benefit of leasing the domains at a lower rent, or of supplying, at a higher price, the objects which are to supply the means of subsistence. They shall, moreover, charge and command the other justices of the cities, towns, and villages within their provinces, to proceed, in this behalf, with uniformity, correcting the abuses which have heretofore existed and contributed to their present misfortune and falling off; and, should their orders and vigilance prove inefficient, they shall report the same to the governor of my council, or to its attorneys, that the proper remedies may be adopted, and a punishment provided for such as shall commit or conceal those injurious excesses.

Law 12.—(Vol. 3, p. 389.)

Peculiar cognizance and direction of the council in matters relating to the domains and duties of the towns, and establishment of the office of accountant general for the same at this court.

The desire which I entertain of relieving my beloved vassals, being a subject of my constant solicitude, I neglect no means or diligence which may be conducive to it. This idea has made me conscious that the want of municipal domains which is generally felt by the cities, towns, and villages of these my kingdoms, which should constitute their precise dotation, has compelled them, in all cases of necessity, to apply for grants of power to lay on supplies and other articles of commerce certain duties, under the description of arbitrios, to be applied to the necessities which suggested such applications, and using other means injurious to the public good, under pretence of relieving public pressure, so that this species of exactions has proved more burdensome than the contributions imposed for the support of the commonwealth. And, although such grants ought to be limited to the period for which they were made, were their proceeds faithfully applied to the ends for which they were intended, it has happened that, though successive extensions, they have become endless, under the specious pretence of being compelled, for want of municipal domains, to consume part of their proceeds in meeting the indispensable charges of the commonwealth. In consequence of this, and the absence of a better administration in the management of the public treasury, the towns have been so far reduced that it has become impossible for them to satisfy the annual charges imposed upon them. And although this important subject has at all times attracted the attention of my glorious ancestors, as involving the happiness of the towns, who have provided such remedies as appeared most expedient and beneficial for the government, direction, and faithful administration of the public moneys, yet they have not produced the good effects which were to have been expected from them, on account of their not having been properly applied by the different persons to whose care they were committed—who, I have remarked, have not made use of all that activity and zeal for the public good which they ought to have manifested in the discharge of duties of so confidential a nature. Wishing to devise a remedy for this evil, I have resolved that all the municipal domains and duties possessed and enjoyed by each of the towns of my kingdoms be placed under the superintendence of my council of Castile, whom I most particularly charge to take cognizance of said domains and duties, and of their value and charges, in order that, conformably to the accompanying instructions, (Law 13,) they may direct, govern, and administer the same, and to take, annually, an account thereof, in order that, their real proceeds being known, it may also be ascertained whether they have been applied to the purposes for which they were intended, without any diversion in favor of others, not contemplated. And it is my will that said council shall annually render me an account, through my treasury, of the state of the municipal domains and duties, their value, charges, the redemptions which may have been made, the duties which may have been abolished in consequence of the expiration of grants, which it may not be expedient to continue, in order that I may know the results of this provision. And to the end that said council may discharge this trust in such a manner as to promote my royal service and the good of my subjects, I have resolved to create, at this court, an office of general accountant, under the title of municipal domains and taxes of the kingdom, through which the accounts shall be rendered, according to the aforesaid instructions; and I set apart two per cent., which shall be levied on the value of the municipal domains and taxes, to pay their salaries, and those of accountants and officers who shall, besides, reside in the provinces, which shall be accounted for at my general treasury, with a view that if it should amount to more than the indispensable salaries, it may be reduced to less than two per cent. I further command that, from the first of August next, the duty of four per cent. which was levied for the profit of my royal treasury may be discontinued, and from that time my towns and subjects are relieved from the same.

Law 13.—(Vol. 3, p. 390.)

Instructions for the government, administration, and accountability of the municipal domains and duties.

1. The council of Castile, to whom I confide the direction of the municipal domains and taxes of the kingdom, shall take all such measures as it may see fit, in order that the same may be administered with due fidelity, and that their products be applied agreeably to law.

2. To this end, it shall require statements of the domains possessed by each town, and the taxes which it levies, setting forth whether they are perpetual, or only for a limited time, and if raised by virtue of a royal authority, or by consent of the corporation or council; what are their value, charges, and obligations; the whole to be distinctly stated.

3. On being made acquainted with the true value of said domains, and the obligations and charges to which they are liable, it shall regulate and settle those which each town shall have to meet; that is to say, by pointing out the amount to which it must confine itself, as well in the costs of the administration of justice, as in festivals, salaries of physicians and apothecary, and teachers, and the other obligations which it may have assumed, taking care that such assignation be with due regard to the value of the domains, and that there always may remain an excess which may be applied to pay off its taxes, if such there be; and if not, to be applied to the reduction of the duties, [arbitrios.]

4. The intendants of army and province being the persons to whom, in consideration of their integrity and knowledge, I have confided the care of the police and government, and all other matters connected with the management of the affairs of treasury and war, and who, from the nature of their offices, ought to be acquainted with the condition of the towns in their respective provinces, it is my pleasure that they also have the care of the domains and taxes, and that they take such measures as they may think expedient to conform their administration to my royal intentions; entering, for that purpose, into communication with such person as may be designated by the council, with a view that they should proceed with uniformity in all their acts, and that the council may advise them of whatever it may think calculated to lead to the desired end.

5. It shall be the duty of the intendants to let it be understood by all the justices of each town within their respective jurisdictions that the municipal domains are to be administered by them with perfect fairness, suppressing all monopolies and misapplications of their proceeds; that leasable estates be annually offered to be leased publicly, and adjudged to the highest bidder, without permitting that, in such leasing, the justices or their relatives take any part, either directly or indirectly; and the other subjects, whose administration may be committed to them, be administered with the greatest justice, and proper accounts rendered thereof; they shall see that the proceeds of such leases be paid into the treasury, or in the hands of the major domo of the domains, to whom, for this duty, and for the responsibility of the public moneys, there shall be allowed fifteen per thousand.

6. They shall annually make out their account, charging themselves with the proceeds of the domains, distinguishing each species; and the credit shall consist of warrants issued by the justices, for the complete settlement of expenditures made by the council, and certified by the accountant, if there be one, or, in default thereof, by the clerk or recorder of each town, of the fifteen per thousand allowed to the treasurer, and of the unavoidable expenses of administration.

7. These accounts shall be transmitted, in due form, within the space of one month from the expiration of the year, to the respective intendants, who shall refer the same to the accountant's office for examination and allowance; and after settlement, that is to say, after the charges shall have been proved, and the credits given, according to the regulations made by the council, of the fifteen per thousand allowed to the treasurer, and the expenses of administration, they shall be investigated and finally passed. But if it shall happen that they are not conformable to said regulations, they shall be returned to the justices, with the necessary remarks, in order that the objectionable parts may be explained. If such explanations be not made within the term of one month, the objectionable items shall be struck out from the account, and the justices shall be prosecuted by the intendant, for recovery, without the privilege of pleading being allowed them. All this shall be done of office, without the least expense to the town; and for this extra duty the accountant shall be allowed a suitable additional compensation out of the two per cent., and the same to the other officers whom it may be found necessary to employ on that duty.

8. The accounts being settled one way or another, the accountant shall give a certified and detailed statement of the debits and credits, as also of the result, which the intendant shall transmit to the council, in order that the accountant department at the court may take such measures as may be called for by any case that may occur.

9. If the council shall think it expedient to call for the accounts, in order that they may be revised by the accountant, the intendants shall forthwith transmit the originals, retaining all necessary information touching the same, to have their results ready to be used in the succeeding accounts.

10. If any extraordinary expenditure should be incurred by the town, it shall not be paid without representing the same to the intendant, who, if he ascertains the same to be indispensable, shall authorize its payment, provided it shall not exceed one hundred reals; but if of larger amount, he will inform the council thereof, and await its decision, which he shall communicate to the town, that it may conform thereto.

11. In the year 1745 instructions were issued for the government and administration of the domains of the kingdom, and in those towns where they have been carried into effect the contemplated results have been obtained; wherefore it is my will that the municipal domains of the kingdom be managed and administered in conformity thereto, and that the council see to their entire observance and fulfilment.

12. In compliance with said instructions, there shall be commissions, composed of the superintendent and two members of corporation, [ayuntamiento,] to attend to the administration and despatch of all affairs connected with the municipal taxes, to the receipts delivered to the parties interested, and to all measures for their better administration. And, sensible of the benefits which have resulted from this mode, it is my will that therein, and under the same rules, the municipal domains be likewise managed and administered, and that the same be established in those towns where it does not already exist. The council shall provide such measures as shall be deemed expedient, in order that such commissions be presided by the corregidors or superior alcaldes; and where there shall be no such officers, in consequence of the small size of the towns, said commissions shall be composed of the alcaldes and regidores, and, if thought proper, of the general attorney and recorder, [procurador sindico generale,] to be presided by the highest in rank.

13. Where there are no municipal taxes, these commissions shall attend to the best management of the municipal domains; and where there are such taxes, of both.

14. It shall be their duty to inquire whether the taxes which weigh most heavily upon the people can be changed for others less burdensome, and to represent the same to the intendant, in order that, if he thinks it proper, he may communicate it to the council, who shall advise me, through the department of the treasury, of whatever shall be deemed expedient for the relief and benefit of the town, and communicate such resolution as I may form to the intendant, who shall make known the same to the commission for its fulfilment, in such a manner that the town shall not incur the expense of a single maravedi for such substitution of taxes, since the whole is to be done through government interference.

15. The intendants shall notify the towns, or the commissions which shall be established therein, that the accounts of taxes are to be made out and transmitted by the accountant, in the same manner as provided in relation to accounts of the domains.

16. The council shall advise me through the treasury, in the manner before provided, of what taxes are necessary to the towns, according to their wants, and of the expediency of extending the term of such as are already granted, after the expiration of the grant; they shall, for that purpose, carefully inquire into the condition of the town, and of its wants, in order that, if possible, the inhabitants may be relieved of their burdens.

17. It shall make all such provisions as it may deem proper to prevent the proceeds of taxes from being, under any pretence, applied to other purposes than those for which they are intended, and in order that the excess be applied, as far as it may go, to pay off the mortgages on the same, to the end that the towns may by all possible means be relieved from the burden of duties imposed on the principal articles of consumption.

18. In those towns where the domains do not suffice to fulfil their engagements, the council shall endeavor to apply the excess arising from taxes to the purchase of some estates sufficient to complete the dotation required, so that it may not be compelled to resort to other means prejudicial to the liberty and enjoyment of the commons by the inhabitants; and so long as the funds shall be inadequate to the purchase of estates, the deficiency arising from the domains shall be supplied by the taxes.

19. To the end that the council be placed in possession of the requisite information respecting the domains of the kingdom, and that the accounts now transmitted, or hereafter to be transmitted, be examined and settled without expense to the towns, I have resolved to establish at this court an office of general accountant of the municipal domains and taxes of the kingdom, consisting, for the present, and until experience shall have enabled us to know what persons are necessary for the discharge of its duties, of an accountant general and eight officers; and in order to provide for the payment of their salaries, and those of an accountant and two officers to be appointed in each office of accountant of army and province, it is my will that an allowance of two per cent. be made out of the proceeds of the domains and taxes, and that this allowance be expressed in the accounts of the accountant general, in order that if the said allowance should amount to more than said salaries, the same may be reduced so as merely to cover indispensable expenditures; and it is my pleasure, further, that from and after the 1st of August next, the four per cent. levied by the royal treasury upon the proceeds of the municipal taxes be discontinued.

20. The accountant shall be able, skilful, zealous, and otherwise qualified for the discharge of his office; and care shall be had that the officers be intelligent and experienced in the management and settlement of accounts, and that their qualifications be known at the accountant general's office, from which they shall be detailed to assist the accountant in a manner calculated to expedite the transaction of business.

21. The council shall, through the treasury, communicate to me such propositions as it may deem expedient, concerning all matters connected with the execution of the foregoing provisions, and the salaries to be allowed, bearing in mind that they are to receive no emoluments for this service, which is to be performed ex officio.

22. The office of accountant above referred to shall be established in the palace called of the Queen Mother, in one of the offices of said council, and all accounts touching the municipal domains, pending and settled, shall immediately be referred to it, and the accountant shall forthwith proceed to their final settlement; their results shall be communicated to the council, whose advice shall be taken on the definitive settlement, and the available balances, if any, shall be applied to the purposes for which they are intended.

23. To this office shall be referred all communications made by the intendants concerning the municipal domains and taxes of the kingdom, their value and charges, in order that, the same being communicated to the council, it may make the dotation prescribed by the third chapter of these instructions.

24. In like manner reference shall be made as above of all the accounts which shall be presented to the council for examination by the accountant, but the same shall not be finally passed until after having been communicated to the council, and its advice taken thereon.

25. All the certificates given by the accountants of army and province, of the debits and credits of the accounts stated by them in the different towns, shall likewise be filed in said office, in order that it may acquaint the council with the condition of all and each of the municipal domains of the kingdom.

26. The accountant shall transmit, for despatch, to the first chamber of the council, all that shall relate to the municipal domains of the kingdom; and shall, agreeably to the decisions given therein, communicate the provisions adopted in that behalf to the intendants for their due observance, and shall give such orders as may be expedient for the same.

27. If, notwithstanding these instructions, it shall happen that measures of expediency require that any of the articles therein contained be amended or extended, with a view to a more complete fulfilment of my desire to see the municipal domains managed and administered with fairness and integrity, and the towns enjoying the relief contemplated by them, the council shall, through my treasury, advise me thereof, and await my royal decision.

28. In order that I may be made acquainted with the results of these provisions, it is my pleasure that the council inform me, through the same channel of the treasury, once in each year, of the condition of the municipal domains and taxes of the kingdom, their value, charges, and the extinguishments of encumbrances, the taxes which have been discontinued in consequence of the expiration of the grants, which there may have been no reason for renewing.

29. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, having understood that some of the municipal taxes have been specifically appropriated for the pay of the ordinary service, utensils, and other contributions, and to refund to the royal treasury various sums paid in different parts for quarters and other necessities of the towns, as likewise for the payment of the contribution of one-tenth, it is my pleasure that all kinds of taxes be administered by the intendants, under the control of the superintendent general of the royal treasury, and that the council do not meddle therewith until it shall have been informed by said superintendent that said sums have been refunded to the royal treasury.

Regulations allowing such towns as possess neither municipal domains nor taxes to make the requisite propositions.

Whereas one of the principal objects of the attention of the council is the administration of the municipal domains and taxes of the towns, and to see that these be provided with a sufficient amount thereof to meet their charges, agreeably to the provisions of the royal decree and instructions of the 30th July, 1760, (see the preceding law,) the intendants in all those towns which, at the time of making out the statement of their municipal domains, shall make it appear that the proceeds thereof are inadequate to meet their legal expenditures and charges, shall notify the justices of the city, town, or village, where such may be the case, to propose such taxes as may be deemed most expedient and less burdensome to the town, to be applied to the ends above referred to, without specific destination, but that of meeting its general engagements, taking into consideration the funds available for any object whatever. This done, the intendants shall make report thereof, and shall make out a separate statement to accompany the above proposition, which shall express individually, and in detail, the proceeds, charges, and condition of the commons; and if such proposition be for the privilege of clearing and cultivating the land, the wants of the town shall be expressed, and it shall be shown that there are no other means of supplying them. The rate of taxes chargeable to each fanega of land to be cleared, and the annual proceeds of each, whether distributed among the inhabitants, leased, or adjudged to the highest bidder, whether the authorization so granted to clear the land shall be prejudicial to the herdsmen of the town, and to the persons enjoying the right of commons for want of pasture, these persons being consulted thereon, as also the attorney and recorder general, and all other persons who shall be interested, and the travelling herdsmen frequenting the commons, pastures, and watering places; and if said proposition be for the privilege of enjoying the right of pasture, the intendants shall in like manner proceed to summon all persons interested, to ascertain whether such right may be prejudicial to the flocks belonging to the mesta from the causes before referred to. They shall state the extent of ground to be enclosed, together with the limits thereof, in order that the same may not be exceeded in case of differences concerning them; the amount of proceeds which, on a fair computation, may be anticipated for each year; whether any town owns pasture grounds within the tract proposed to be enclosed, and how many there are. If such proposition be for permission to make plantations of grape-vines, the intendants shall state whether they abound in the country, what is the extent of the tract of land, and whether it is calculated for grain, pasture, or timber; and lastly, if it be for the cutting of timber, brushwood, or weeds, the condition of the timber shall previously be ascertained by some practical and intelligent person, who shall state in his report whether there has before been such a cutting of timber, brushwood, or weeds, and how many years since, by what authority or permission, what profits it has yielded, and those which are anticipated on fair presumption from the cutting now asked; and also whether a refusal to grant the permission asked can prove injurious to the increase of the timber and to the preservation of the pasture. They shall further state in how many years the cutting of said timber, brushwood, or weeds may be beneficial, adding to all this information their own opinion with clearness and distinctness, in order that the council may, upon a view of the whole subject, determine what shall be most expedient.

Lib. VII, Tit. 16, Law 17.—(Vol. 3, p. 398.)

Particular jurisdiction of the council in matters of municipal domains and taxes, whether of mere government or of litigation

The intendant of Palencia having communicated to me the provisions enacted by the criminal chamber of Valladolid to arrest the proceedings in the case of a prosecution commenced by the superior alcalde of the city of Aguilar de Campoo, against the purveyor of meat of said place, in certain matters connected with the municipal domains, it is declared that the cognizance of such proceedings does not belong to the chancery of Valladolid, nor to its criminal chamber, because all the chanceries and audiences are disqualified from taking such cognizance, as well in matters of government as of litigation, respecting affairs of municipal domains and taxes, whose inspection is reserved in the first instance to the intendants, under the control of the council, even after the royal order of November 13, 1766, (Law 26, Title 2,) which separates the offices of corregidors from those of intendants; and that, in this case, the intendant could not, therefore, take cognizance by way of appeal, which was the means by which the said purveyor was brought before him, because it has been adjudged, and constantly practiced, that original jurisdiction having been granted in those matters to the corregidors and superior and ordinary alcaldes, appeals can only be brought before the council to the exclusion of all other tribunals, agreeably to the royal decree of the 12th May, 1762, (Law 15.) This decision shall be communicated to the chancery, with notice not to presume for the future to take cognizance in such matters, either by way of original resort or appeals; and to the intendant not to admit therein any appeals from the ordinary justices, their cognizance being particularly reserved to the council.

Liber VII, Title 21, Law 1.—(Vol. 3, p. 477.)

BOUNDARIES OF THE TOWNS; VISITS; RESTITUTION OF PROPERTY OCCUPIED BY STRANGERS.

Defence of dispossessing the towns of their lands and tenements without a hearing and judicial decision.

We ordain that the councils, cities, towns, and villages who may possess, either by purchase or prescription, any lands, forts, or tenements, shall not be dispossessed thereof without being previously notified and heard, and the right of the parties decided, whether by right or privilege; and if they shall have been so dispossessed, the same shall be restored to them without the delays of trial and judgment.

Law 2.—(Ibid.)

Restitution of the lands and hereditaments belonging to the councils, and prohibition of working or selling them, and of ploughing the reservations, [exidos.]

We ordain that all the reservations, timber lands, lands, and hereditaments belonging to the councils of our cities, towns, and villages within our kingdoms and seigneuries, which have been taken and occupied by any persons on their own authority, or by virtue of any letters of ours, be forthwith restituted and restored to the said councils to which they belong; but we forbid such councils to work the same, or to sell or alien them, unless it be for the common advantage of said cities, towns, or villages to which they belong; and if any person shall have ploughed or settled any part of the said hereditaments, the improvements shall forthwith be destroyed; and we command the same with respect to the reservations owned and possessed by the said towns, and that they be not ploughed for the cultivation of grain; and if any person has our authorization for doing so, they shall send the same to us, in order that, upon a view of it, we may adopt such measures as we may think expedient.

Obligation of the towns and of the regidors to prosecute the suits instituted for the recovery of their hereditaments and revenues.

Whereas some gentlemen and persons in power are in the practice of seizing the revenues, lands, and jurisdictions of the cities and towns, and do other damage to the prejudice of the public good; and whereas the regidors and other lawyers within the same show favor to those persons in the corporations of said towns, by placing obstacles to the course of justice against them, we therefore command that said regidors, and said lawyers who may be regidors, show no favor to such gentlemen and persons in power, nor to any other persons, either publicly or secretly, in the suits which may be instituted against them, nor prevent their being prosecuted; and that all be animated by one desire of guarding, protecting, and aiding the course of justice in favor of the domains, revenues, lands, jurisdictions, and privileges to which the towns are entitled over the same, under penalty of thereby losing their offices, and of being excluded from the corporation, [ayuntamientos;] and with a view to the punishment of such as shall offend against this provision, and to afford an example to others, we command the judiciary officers of the places where such things may happen to proceed to carry such penalty into execution; and the same penalty shall be incurred by the corregidors, alcaldes, bailiffs, and justices, [merinos,] and by all other persons whatsoever holding a seat in the council, who shall show any favor, to the prejudice of such city, town, or village, to any person, prelate, order, or monastery, in violation of the foregoing.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 4.—(Vol. 3, p. 478.)

Restitution by the officers of the council of what shall have been taken of their lands and revenues.

All superior alcaldes, or regidors, members, jurors, or clerks of the council, or all other officers whatsoever, in any city or town of our kingdoms and seigniories, who may have taken or occupied any revenues of the domains, or any rights or lands, meadows, pastures, timber lands, commons, waters, salt works, and jurisdictions whatsoever, or any other things belonging to the same, whether commons or waste lands, or any municipal domains belonging to said cities, towns, and villages of our kingdoms and seigniories, shall restore them free and unencumbered to the corporation or council of said city, town, or village, through the clerk of said council; and thenceforth they shall not again take the property so occupied and restored, nor take any other of the things above described, under penalty, in case of their doing so, besides the other penalties provided by the laws of these kingdoms, to the said alcaldes, regidors, or clerks of the council, or to any other officers thereof so guilty of taking or occupying any of the things before mentioned, and of not restoring the same, or of hereafter taking or occupying them or any of them as aforesaid, of thereby losing their said offices of alcaldes, regidors, members, jurors, or clerks, or any other offices in said council, and of being removed from said offices, that we may dispose of the same according to our pleasure, without any other sentence or declaration whatsoever, and without any trial or suit, and of being incapacitated from holding any other office in said council; all corregidors, commissioners, or local judges, may, ex officio, execute the aforesaid penalty.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 5.—(Vol. 3, p. 478.)

Manner of making restitution to the towns of lands occupied by strangers.

The attorneys [procuradores] in the cities and villages of our kingdoms shall prefer a complaint, by petition, to these cortes, stating that such council, gentleman, or other persons, unduly and unjustly take and occupy the places, jurisdictions, lands, meadows, pastures, watering places, &c., of the hereditaments belonging to them, or of parts thereof, and, which is worse, that even the natives and inhabitants of the cities and villages wherein they reside, seize and occupy the tenements belonging to them; and that, although the villagers have complained to us and obtained sentence of restitution, such sentence has not been carried into execution, and asking that, to the end that said sentence may be executed, the original owners may again occupy the said hereditaments as heretofore, in such a manner that the towns shall be doubly indemnified: first, by the reoccupation of their hereditaments, and then by the recovery of costs incurred in obtaining them. And whereas we are advised that many cities, towns, and villages within our kingdoms, and especially within the possessions of our royal crown, are in a great degree dispossessed and deprived of their said property and jurisdictions, and of their lands, meadows, pastures, and watering places, and, notwithstanding they have obtained sentences of recovery, yet they cannot have the same carried into effect: therefore, we, wishing to provide a redress of those abuses, ordain and command that whenever any council shall complain that another council, or any gentleman, or any other person whatsoever, have taken and occupied their tenements, jurisdictions, lands, meadows, pastures, watering places, or any other hereditaments appertaining to said council, or any other things belonging thereto, it shall be the duty of the corregidor or of any other judge who can take cognizance thereof, or of any commissioner of inquiry appointed by ourselves to summon the other party against whom such complaint is made, and to appoint, as we do hereby appoint, a term of thirty days, which shall not be extended, within which he must and shall show what title or right he has to said tenements, jurisdictions, lands, meadows, pastures, watering places, or any other thing so occupied by him; and said judge or commissioner shall investigate the same, simpliciter, and without judicial forms, and ascertain the truth either by deeds, witnesses, or any other means in his power, the property taken from said council or appertaining to its jurisdiction, or to the common stock of property thereto belonging, by such persons as may be charged with taking the same. And said inquiry being made, and proofs obtained within the said term of thirty days, as also such as may have been adduced by the other party within said term, no other writings or answers being admitted, nor objections to witnesses, nor permitting any writings to be presented on either side, if it shall be found that the seizing or occupation of said tenements or lands, or any of the things above described is true, or that said council was dispossessed of the same, they shall immediately, without any other form of judgment, conclusion of suit, or any other delay whatsoever, restore, or cause to be restored, said property to the council, with the free and undisturbed possession of all that shall have been taken from it as aforesaid; and they shall cause the attorney of said council to be put in said possession, and shall protect and maintain him therein. They shall prevent said council from being disturbed, either by the other council or by any other person formerly in the wrongful possession of said tenements, nor permit that any impediment or resistance whatever be offered to it; and if any such should be attempted, we command that it be put down and punished, which punishment we, by these presents, do ordain; and that, by the very act, the said occupant who shall make any resistance against said sentence or command shall lose, and thereby shall have lost, all right which he may have or pretend to have to the ownership or property of the thing for which he contends or to which he may lay any pretensions; he shall, moreover, lose any office which he may hold, whether of us or of any city, town, or village; and if he holds no such office, he shall forfeit one-third of his goods for the benefit of our chamber; and if he have no right whatever to the thing for which he contends, he shall forfeit the value thereof and as much more besides, one-half for the council against which he contends, and the other half for our chamber and treasury, besides incurring the other penalties above described. All which we command to be observed and fulfilled, although the party which may have held such occupation should appeal to the judge of inquiry, and again from his sentence, or although he may use any other expedient to arrest such sentence; and notwithstanding, further, anything which he may allege about the cause being depending before us in our council or before our audience, or any other judges, or any other things or reasons which he may allege to prevent the execution of said sentence, saving, however, his right of property, if he should have any, which he may come or send to be proved before us in our council, and anything which they may deem sufficient to establish the same; but in the meantime the sentence shall be executed fully and effectually. And with regard to the sentences heretofore given concerning the things mentioned above, or any of them, by any corregidors, judges, or commissioners, as well under the reigns of the Kings Don Juan and Don Enrique as of any other, and of ourselves, we command that where said sentences are already executed and carried into effect, the other parties interested be heard as to the right of property; and that, in the meantime, the councils in whose favor such sentences were given take possession as aforesaid, notwithstanding the depending of any cause, whether in first or other instance, or of appeal, saving always, as aforesaid, the rights of the parties with respect to the right of property; but where such sentences shall have been given without summoning or hearing the parties in possession, we command that in such case the causes be remanded to be commenced anew, according to the tenor of this law. And we command the said parties interested that, with respect to the possession of the things which they may have so restituted, or which they may have to restitute, they offer no resistance, nor take nor occupy the same upon their own authority, nor disturb nor interrupt the council or councils in said possession, nor the inhabitants or residents of the tenements whereof such possession was given, until the question of property shall have been examined and decided, under pain of incurring the penalties above stated. And to the end that these causes touching said tenements may be more speedily expedited, we command the parties who may sue out appeals, or who may think themselves aggrieved by the sentences or commands given therein to appear before us in our council, within the term prescribed by law, to prosecute their claims, if such be their pleasure; and that in the meantime no judge or judges whatever of our house or court, or of our chancery, presume to meddle with or take cognizance of such suits or demands, nor impeach the jurisdiction of the same, nor their execution by such judges as we may appoint for that purpose.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 6.—(Vol. 3, p. 480.)

Instructions to judges concerning the fulfilment of the provisions contained in the preceding law.

We command that the judges, who shall proceed according to the law of Toledo concerning the restitution of the hereditaments belonging to the towns, (see the preceding law,) shall observe the provisions of said law agreeably to the following instructions: First, that when any council, or its attorney, shall complain of some other council, church, monastery, hospital, gentleman, or other person whatsoever, who may have taken possession and occupied any tenement, meadow, pasture, common, or watering place, or any other hereditament appertaining to said council, shall summon the party or parties against whom such complaint shall be directed and assign a term of seventy days, which shall not be extended; and within such term he shall notify both parties to exhibit their title to the possession of such tenement, common, meadow, pasture, or watering place, or of any other public property forming the subject of such complaint, by the examination of deeds or witnesses, as the case may be. Further, during said term the judge shall proceed, ex officio, simpliciter, and in a summary way, to inquire and ascertain the truth concerning the matter in dispute. He shall, further, after the expiration of fifty days of said term of seventy days, make publication thereof, or sooner if the parties agree thereto, and shall cause all the writings and evidence then collected to be communicated to the parties, whether obtained at the instance of said parties or by the judge in regular process of law; and he will then receive the pleadings and answers, and the proofs to substantiate the same, adduced by the adverse party, which said judge may think ought to be received; provided all this take place within the said term of seventy days and not thereafter. And at the expiration of the said term the said judge, upon the proceedings had and the proofs adduced, and the written evidence produced on both sides within the aforesaid term, without granting any extension thereof, nor receiving any writings, pleadings, or any other things which may be offered after the expiration of said term of seventy days, without any form of judgment, shall pronounce sentence; and if he shall find that said council has been dispossessed of its property then demanded, he shall forthwith, and without any delay whatsoever, restore and cause to be restored to such council, or to its attorney in its name, the possession of such property as may have been taken from it, and shall protect and maintain it in said possession and prevent its being occupied by the said or any other council, or by any other person whatsoever, under the penalties provided by the law of Toledo, saving, however, in case such sentence be against any church, hospital, monastery, or military order, or against any person having any title to the same tenement, that if, in such case, said sentence be appealed from in time, said judge shall grant them such appeal before our council, but before no other judges whatsoever, and the execution shall be suspended. And, in like manner, if it be alleged before said judge that a suit is depending before another judge concerning the possession of the tenement or hereditament which forms the subject of the action, and if the restitution be demanded within the prescribed term, he shall take no further cognizance of said suit and possession, and shall remand the same to the judge before whom it shall be depending. In like manner, if execution be sued out upon a sentence or sentences given by the judge in such cases of tenements which shall not have been tried according to the law before referred to, of which appeal shall have been sued or which may have been annulled, or on which question shall be depending, and proof of the same be adduced, such sentence or sentences shall not be executed, and the suit or suits shall be remanded to the judge before whom said question shall be depending, unless said sentence shall have been given upon process conformable to the law of Toledo; and in all the foregoing, we command said judge to observe and fulfil the provisions of the law of Toledo as the same are therein set forth; and, with respect to such cases as are not provided by said law after the parties shall have been summoned, justice shall be done to them in a brief and summary way, without the delays or forms of judgment, with due regard only to the truth as the same may be established.

Instructions to judges how to proceed in suits for the recovery of hereditaments agreeably to the provisions of the preceding law.

Whereas the instructions given to judges (see the preceding law) provide that the execution shall be suspended in cases where the defendant holds by any title from the council, we command that if said title shall have been granted, without license from us, by the city, town, or village, plaintiff in the case, subsequently to the year 1542, the judges shall execute the sentence which restores the possession notwithstanding any appeal. And we command that the judges, in suits for the recovery of hereditaments, shall take up the proceedings and pleadings at the stage where they shall have been brought by other judges in such suits, or by ordinary judges, and that they do justice therein according to the law of Toledo, the instructions predicated thereon, (Laws 5 and 6,) and the present law, provided said suits shall not be depending before our audiences or any of them.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 8.—(Vol. 3, p. 481.)

Defence to grant the tenements appropriated to the councils.

Whereas it sometimes happens that the judges who are sent to try causes respecting the tenements belonging to the cities, towns, and villages of our kingdoms adjudge to said councils sundry tenements and pastures which were occupied by others, and whereas some persons contrive to obtain from us grants of such tenements and pastures, or of parts thereof, and others contrive to obtain such grants from the councils to which the same were adjudged; whereas both these practices are prejudicial to ourselves and injurious to the public good of our kingdoms, we command that henceforth no such grants be made by ourselves, or by any of the cities, towns, and villages possessing such tenements or pasture, nor by any part of them.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 9.—(Vol. 3, p. 482.)

Defence to the corporations (ayuntamientos) to make grants of any council lands without royal license.

Whereas supplications have been addressed to us that henceforth no grants be made to any person whatsoever of the tenements and municipal domains, and of the commons belonging to cities and villages, on account of the great injury which results therefrom to the said cities and villages of our kingdoms; and whereas some have the privilege not to make such grants, and not to execute such as may have been made, but not yet completed, we declare that much moderation has been observed therein, and that due consideration shall be had, in that behalf, for the future; but we ordain that no justices or regidors shall have power to grant any lands whatever, without previous license from ourselves to that effect, and that such as may have been made without such license be of no value; and with respect to grants made by ourselves, stating the persons to whom the same were made and the lands granted, we command the members of our council to adopt such measures in that behalf as justice may render expedient.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 10.—(Vol. 3, p. 482.)

Defence to grant authority for the sale of commons or for ploughing the land.

Considering the great inconveniences which result from the sale and alienation of lands and commons, I have resolved henceforth to prohibit such sales and alienation, and that those which are actually sold be confirmed, and no others, causing the same to be redeemed, and that the profits thereon be paid into the royal treasury; and with respect to the authority applied for for the ploughing of the land, it shall be absolutely refused under all circumstances, whether it be for public or private benefit; and it shall be ascertained what authority has been so granted and for what time; and after the expiration of the period for which the same shall have been granted it shall absolutely cease, and no further use shall be made of it, and both shall determine, on account of the prejudice resulting therefrom to the public good and to cultivation, and of the burden which such authority imposes upon the poor classes.

Duties of the corregidors and judges to repair and lay out the hereditaments contiguous to other kingdoms.

We ordain that, in order that the limits of our kingdoms may be known, which adjoin other conterminous kingdoms, the corregidors and judges of the cities and villages adjoining the same take particular care to place boundaries and landmarks in such manner that it may be clearly ascertained how far the limits of our kingdoms extend.

Ibid., Law 12.

Annual visit of the corregidors to the hereditaments of towns, restitution of such as are occupied, and execution of sentences given in their behalf.

We command the corregidors and governors, diligently and ex officio, to inform themselves, within the term of seventy days, counting from the time of their arrival at the place where they are to be received, of such sentences as may have been given in favor of such place, upon the lands and hereditaments thereof, and in whose possession the same are and have been. They shall cause such sentences to be exhibited to them, and take copies of the same; they shall ascertain which of them have been executed, and whether, after they have been so executed, such tenements have been trespassed upon by the persons who previously held them, or by any other, contrary to the tenor of such sentences; they shall cause the same to be forthwith executed, and such tenements to be left free and unencumbered if the same shall have been taken and occupied contrary to such sentences; and they shall command that no such persons again presume to occupy them, under the penalties provided by said sentences, which they shall cause to be executed against such persons as they shall find to have violated or to be violating said sentences, conformably to the tenor and form of the law of Toledo and the instructions (Laws 5 and 6) predicated thereon; they shall in like manner inflict the penalties therein provided for the first occupation; they shall, moreover, visit all the said tenements of the city or village, and all the lands appertaining thereto, without receiving any compensation for that service; and during such visits they shall not encumber themselves with any civil affairs which may embarrass or retard them. They shall ascertain whether there are not other occupied tenements upon which no sentence has been pronounced, and if the occupants are under their jurisdiction they shall take cognizance thereof, agreeably to the provisions of said law, and cause restitution to be made; and if not within their jurisdiction they shall give us notice thereof, stating what and how many such hereditaments there are, and by whom they are held, in order that we may provide what shall appear to be just. They shall likewise visit, once a year, and in person, the towns and villages of the district under their charge, either by themselves or by their deputies, and not by bailiffs or clerks. They shall inquire how they are governed, how justice is administered, and in what manner their officers discharge their duties—whether there are persons in power who oppress the poor; and they shall cause all abuses to be reformed if they can do it with propriety, and if not, they shall give us timely notice thereof. They shall engage to use all their power to cause the provisions contained in this chapter to be fulfilled and executed, and if the assistant, or governor, or corregidor, be negligent in observing the foregoing directions respecting said tenements, they shall send others, at their costs, who shall fulfil the same.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 13.—(Vol. 3, p. 483.)

Defence to ordinary judges to visit the places within their jurisdiction in the months of June, July, and August.

We command the ordinary judges not to visit the places under their jurisdiction during the months of June, July, and August, and our council shall give such orders in that behalf as shall be necessary to prevent any inconvenience to the farmers during that season of harvest.

Ibid., Law 14.—(Ibid.)

Defence to the corregidors and other judges to visit the towns in their respective districts more than once.

Although by the Law 12 of this title it is ordered to the assistants, governors, corregidors, and resident judges of our kingdoms, to visit the villages and places of the districts under their charge once in each year, either by themselves or their lieutenants, and not by bailiffs or clerks, and to inquire how the same are governed, how justice is administered, and how the officers thereof discharge their duties; whether there are persons in power who oppress the poor, and to cause all such abuses to be corrected if they can properly do so, and if not, to give us timely notice thereof, as set forth at greater length in the law to which we refer, whereby it appeared that sufficient provision was made for the good government and administration of justice, and for the welfare and comfort of our subjects, yet experience having shown that many inconveniences resulted from the frequency of said visits, and that their being made once in each year subjected said cities and villages, together with their inhabitants, to annoyance and oppression, and that not only the objects contemplated by said law are not attained, but, on the contrary, the injury which results therefrom is much greater than any benefit that can arise from said annual visits, in order to check the excesses which are committed on such occasions, having consulted our council thereon, we have commanded this law and supreme order to be enacted, whereby we forbid and command that henceforth none of the said assistants, governors, corregidors, and resident judges of the kingdoms, or of the villages and places belonging to the orders or to abbots and seigniories, or of the territories of towns independent thereof, or of any other part, to visit said villages and places of the district under their charge more than once during the entire period of their government, although the privilege of said independent villages and places, or of any of the others above described, should stipulate that they may be visited once in each year, for, with respect to this, we repeal and annul such privileges and the law above referred to; and we order that the same be observed and fulfilled agreeably to the tenor of this law and supreme order; and that to said assistants, governors, corregidors, and resident judges and others whatsoever whose duty it is to make such visits in said villages and places once during the whole period of their government, no salary or additional compensation whatsoever be allowed, nor to their ministers, officers, or servants, either for each day or for the whole service, nor any board or lodging, nor any other things whatsoever, except such as by the laws of our kingdoms, or by ordinances confirmed by us, or by the provisions contained in their titles, are allowed them, under the penalty, in case of exceeding the number of visits, of immediate forfeiture of their offices, and of whatever salary or compensation they may receive contrary to the provisions of this law and supreme order, and of quadruple amount thereof besides.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 15.—(Vol. 3, p. 484.)

Time at which the judges of provinces and districts are to visit their respective towns—declaration and limitation of the preceding law.

We command all the corregidors, assistants, and governors, and their superior alcaldes and lieutenants, now appointed and authorized, or hereafter to be appointed and authorized, in all the provinces and heads of districts, whether by myself or by persons legally empowered to make such appointments to any of the said offices, not to visit the towns and villages within their respective districts, nor such as are or may be exempted, more than once in three years, allowing ten days to each village and two to hamlets containing one hundred housekeepers, or in districts or councils composed of hamlets containing a smaller number of inhabitants, whose stewards and councils they shall summon to appear before them at the head town of such districts. It shall not be lawful for said corregidors, governors, or superior alcaldes, to make more than one visit in three years, nor to receive more than one thousand two hundred maravedis per day for themselves, and four hundred for the bailiff who shall accompany them. They shall be attended in such visits by one of the clerks of said towns or villages, if there be any, and if not, they shall bring them from the head town of the district, with a compensation of six hundred maravedis per day. The said judge, bailiff, and clerk shall not be engaged for a longer time, nor receive any other fees for any journey, nor for signing any sentences or proceedings, warrants or orders of arrest; nor shall the clerk draw any compensation for writing the proceedings, or for visiting the municipal domains or commons, nor the said judge and bailiff part of any fine which shall be recovered on their information, which fines shall only be recovered at the request of some person or persons belonging to said town or village; and although by the laws of these kingdoms part of said fines ought to belong to them, yet it shall be their duty to apply one-half thereof to our treasury, and the other for the benefit of the municipal domains of said town or village, or of some charitable institution, under penalty, if it be proved against them by two concurring witnesses, or by three, deposing to separate facts, or by any other testimony, according with the laws of these kingdoms, that they have levied greater fees or compensation, board, presents, or other things, directly or indirectly, by themselves or by persons interposed in their stead, to refund the same into said treasury, towns, and villages, with the quadruple amount besides. The resident judges shall ascertain the same, and bring charges against them for the said offence, and they shall execute such sentences as they may pronounce against said judges, bailiffs, and clerks, whatever be the amount thereof, and although it should exceed the three thousand maravedis, provided it be such as can be recovered without appeal. They shall, moreover, proceed against the officers who shall have paid such compensation, and shall cause them to refund the same, out of their own goods, to the domains, commons, and other revenues from which they shall have drawn said compensation, any excuse or appeal notwithstanding. And we command the president and the members of our council of treasury, and the president and members of the orders, and all other persons of whatever rank or condition they may be, to provide and order that in all the commissions which shall be granted to the said corregidors, governors, and superior alcaldes, by any of said offices, this our law be recited, that they may know their obligation to observe and fulfil the same; and if they shall not do so, we command our resident judges to examine the same, bring charges against them, and execute such condemnations as may be passed upon said judges, bailiffs, and clerks, of whatever amount, and although they should exceed the three thousand maravedis, if the same can be recovered notwithstanding appeal; and they shall cause the said amount to be refunded out of the goods of such officers and other persons who may have paid it, to the profit of the municipal domains, commons, and other revenues from which such sums shall have been drawn, notwithstanding any appeal which may be taken therefrom. All which shall be observed, fulfilled, and executed in the manner aforesaid, notwithstanding any laws or ordinances of these our kingdoms, and anything to the contrary thereof, so much whereof as touches the foregoing we hereby supersede, abrogate, modify, repeal, and annul, and declare to be of no value or effect, otherwise remaining in full effect and vigor for the future.

Lib. VII, Tit. 21, Law 16.—(Vol. 3, p. 485.)

Time and manner in which the corregidors are to visit the towns of their respective districts.

35. The corregidor shall not, during the entire duration of his office, visit the towns and villages of his jurisdiction, nor the exempted places under his charge, more than once, although he should enjoy privileges to the contrary; and then it shall be with a salary of four ducats vellon for each and every day which he shall justly and legally occupy in such visits. The clerks whom he shall take along with him to act therein shall receive one thousand maravedis vellon for each day of labor, and the bailiff five hundred maravedis of lawful money, under the penalty, in case they should exceed that amount, or the number of visits aforesaid, of being forthwith removed from their offices; and whatever they shall receive over and above the prescribed salary, although by way of extra compensation, or in any other manner, contrary to the tenor of the foregoing, shall be refunded, with the quadruple amount besides; and, in every respect, the order (Law 14) ordered to be promulgated on the 15th September of the year 1618 shall be observed and fulfilled.

36. With regard to the time which is to be consumed by the corregidors in their visits, they shall conform to the provisions of the preceding law; it being well understood that they shall not spend therein a greater number of days than that which is specified in said law; that is to say, ten days in each town and two in the villages of one hundred housekeepers; and with respect to villages of a less number of inhabitants, they shall make such visits by districts or councils, calling them to the head town of such districts; but if the number of days allowed by law should not be necessary, they shall remain only during the requisite time, avoiding with the most careful and scrupulous attention all superfluous or voluntary delay and detention; and the said corregidors and the members of the said first chamber of government, charged with the administration of the provinces, shall take care that there be transmitted through them to the council brief recapitulations of the results of such visits, that the proper steps may be taken without loss of time.

37. The payment of the stipulated salaries shall be made out of the forfeitures and fines; and, in case such fines should not amount to a sum sufficient to meet said salaries, the deficiency shall be supplied out of the moneys arising from the municipal domains and taxes of the towns which shall have been visited, the said visit being for their benefit and advantage; and if, after such salaries shall have been paid, the fines imposed should leave a balance unexpended, said balance shall be scrupulously applied to the credit of said fund arising from the domains and taxes, deduction being first made of the fines levied for the profit of the treasury.

38. The said corregidors or superior alcaldes, their officers and attendants, shall receive no donations or presents of any kind whatsoever, either directly or indirectly, and upon no pretence, cause, or motive, take higher compensation than is before prescribed; and they shall maintain themselves in said visits at their own cost, without soliciting or permitting said towns to maintain them or any other person belonging to them.

39. They shall positively forbear from appointing accountants for said visits, such appointment being wholly unnecessary, burdensome to the towns, and expressly contrary to law, without any other use than that of doubling the fees and cost of such visits; for the same reason they shall not carry more than one clerk, who, in that capacity, and without performing other duties, shall set down the proceedings; he shall never belong to the village which is to be visited, but he shall be drawn from the head town of the district, or from some other place.

43. The members of the first chamber of government, charged each year with the correspondence with the provinces, shall see that the respective corregidors and superior alcaldes perform the visits at the time and in the manner stipulated, and shall give information of the whole to the council.

44. They shall in said visits examine and ascertain by actual inspection the limits of the towns within their jurisdiction, laying out such as from evil intent or neglect have become uncertain, for which purpose they shall erect the necessary landmarks, and they shall do the like with respect to the limits of conterminous foreign kingdoms.

Lib. VII, Tit. 22, Law 1.—(Vol. 3, p. 486.)

OF DEPOPULATED SETTLEMENTS AND THEIR REPOPULATION.

Defence to housekeepers who own dwellings within the walls of towns to reside in the suburbs, and to new comers to settle without said walls

We command all persons who own or may own dwelling-houses within the walls of cities, towns, and villages of our kingdoms not to presume to go out to reside in the suburbs without said walls; and, in like manner if there be any land within the city or village which can be occupied, such persons as may come from elsewhere to reside therein shall not dwell in the suburbs. And whereas it is expedient to endeavor to populate first the cities and enclosed villages, and not to attend to the peopling of suburbs which are not enclosed, and to the depopulation of those which are enclosed and fortified, we command that the merchants and jewellers and other persons living within enclosed places do not go out to sell their goods and merchandise in the suburbs; and that henceforth all the said merchants, as well those of our capital as those of other cities and villages, sell their merchandise within the walls; and that our household purveyors, whenever we shall visit such cities or villages, together with the purveyor of the said cities or villages, cause to be given to the merchants of our courts lodgings and stores in proper places, as, duly and honestly, and without inconvenience to the citizens, the same ought to be given.

Lib. VII, Tit. 22, Law 2.—(Vol. 3, p. 486.)

Defence of pulling down what has been built or planted on public ground, or on ground belonging to any council; taxes imposed thereon.

Whereas it has been represented to us that many persons, citizens and residents in the cities, towns, and villages of our kingdoms, have entered upon and taken parts of the lands belonging to the crown and to the councils of said cities, towns, and villages, wherein they have planted vines, gardens, and trees, and erected various other improvements, with license from said councils of such cities, towns, and villages, granted long since, which lands, thus worked and improved, they state are now asked and demanded of them; and whereas much injury would accrue in said improvements and plantations to those who have improved and planted such lands, if they were now compelled to relinquish them; whereas it belongs to us, as King, Queen, and lords, to provide the proper remedies, we command that there be levied upon all such as shall have planted in said royal and council lands vines, gardens, and other plantations, or made any other improvements with license of the council of said city, town, or village, within the term of twenty years last past, a tax of five maravedis for each aranzada of vine, and at the same rate for other things so planted and erected, according to the quality of the land, and on these terms said lands shall remain to those who shall have thus planted or improved them, and the said tax so imposed on said hereditaments shall be for the profit of the domains of the councils of said towns, cities, or villages, in order that the same may serve to meet the other impositions and wants of the town.

Lib. VII, Tit. 22, Law 3.—(Vol. 3, p. 487.)

Regulations for the new settlements of Sierra Morena, and municipal law of the same.

Whereas a proposition has been made to me for the introduction of six thousand German and Flemish Catholic colonists within my dominions, I have resolved to accept said proposition under the several conditions which, having been reduced to an agreement, are set forth in detail in my royal order [cedula] promulgated from the Pardo on the 2d April of this year; and charged the council to prepare, with the agreement of the superintendent general of the royal treasury, such instructions as may be proper for the introduction and establishment of said settlers; and, agreeably thereto, the attorney [fiscal] of said council has, by its order, prepared said instructions, under the regulations contained in the following chapters, which I approve and confirm, and command to be punctually fulfilled, in every respect, as the same are therein set forth.

Instructions.

5. The first care of the superintendent of said settlements shall be to select the tracts on which the settlements are to be made, and to see that they be healthy, airy, and free from stagnant waters which may produce diseases; and they shall cause a plan thereof to be made, in order that in all doubts which may arise, the exact location of the tracts may be ascertained on a mere inspection, and the matter settled.

6. Each settlement shall be of fifteen, twenty, or thirty houses at most, and a sufficient extent shall be given to each.

7. The superintendent will be at liberty to locate the houses either contiguous to each other or to the farm which shall be assigned to each settler, in order that he may reside near said farm, and enclose and cultivate the land, without loss of time in going to or returning from his work, adopting this last mode in preference, whenever the situation of the land will admit of it.

8. To each house-keeping settler shall be given, of that land which is denominated level land or fields, fifty fanegas of arable land for his share in the distribution, it being well understood that, if any part of the tract belonging to each settlement be proper for irrigation, it shall be distributed among all, in proportion to the share to which each may be entitled, in order that they may lay it out into gardens, or in such other improvements as the nature of the land may admit or require; it shall be incumbent upon the settlers to open the channels for irrigation, and to contribute equally to their repairs, the expenses of which shall be paid in proportion to the benefits derived therefrom.

9. There shall, besides, be distributed among them tracts of land upon the hills and declivities for the plantation of vines and timber; and liberty shall be left to them to drive their cattle, sheep, goats, and swine in the valleys and upon the mountains for the benefit of pastures, and to cut wood for necessary purposes, each one planting, on his own account, such trees as he may please on the commons and public grounds, for the purpose of raising timber for his own use and for sale.

10. An account shall be taken of the value of those lands and lots which shall be equally distributed to each new settler, and having regard to the time necessary for clearing and ploughing the same; a slight tax shall be laid thereon in behalf of the crown, and all other emphiteutic conditions, and particularly that of remaining forever the property of one single settler, and of not being subject to be encumbered by any tax, or liable for any bonds, security, tribute, or any imposition whatever, which might be charged upon said lands, houses, pastures, or timber land, under pain of being forfeited, and of reverting to the crown to be granted to some other settler; and, consequently, such lands shall not be divided, nor aliened in mortmain, nor shall there be founded upon them any ecclesiastical benefices, anniversaries, or any other charges of such nature.

11. When the tracts which are to be assigned to each settlement shall have been laid and marked out, stone landmarks shall be erected, which shall divide each settlement from the others already occupied, or to be occupied, in order that thereby all differences and disputes between the old and new settlers may be avoided.

12. For the same reason boundaries and landmarks shall be marked and erected between each lot, the settlers taking care to plant fruit or forest trees along the dividing lines as the best mode of setting out such lines of division; there shall be in each settlement a record of distribution which shall contain the number of tracts in which the same may be divided, and the name of the settlers to whom they shall have been allotted, giving to each of them a sheet or plot of his tract, which shall be his title for the future, and which shall remain in his possession, to be consulted without the necessity of resorting to the record itself.

13. The distance from one settlement to another shall be such as may be convenient, as a quarter or half a league, more or less, according to the location and fertility of the land; and care shall be taken that there be, at the beginning of the book, a plan which shall represent the tract and define its boundaries, in order that the same may at all times be clear and easily ascertained.

14. Every three or four settlements, or five, if the location require it, shall form a parish district or council, with a deputy from each settlement, who shall be the regidors of such councils; and they shall have a curate and alcalde and an attorney, [personero,] common to all the settlements, who shall constitute their government, spiritual and temporal. The alcalde, deputy, and attorney, aforesaid, shall be elected on some holy-day, which shall not interfere with their labor, and in the manner prescribed in the act granted on the 5th May, and the instructions of June 26, 1766, (Laws 1 and 2, Tit. 18,) it being well understood that none of those offices shall ever be made perpetual, but remain elective, constantly and perpetually, in order to spare to these settlements the injury which has resulted from their alienation to older ones; and it is hereby declared that, within the first five years, the superintendent of the settlements shall have power, himself, to make such elections, or those to similar offices.

15. In a convenient place, that is, in a central spot of the settlements of each council, there shall be erected a church, with a dwelling for the curate, a council house, and jail, which buildings shall be used promiscuously by all the settlers of such settlements, for their temporal and spiritual purposes.

16. In the same neighborhood may be located the artisans, exercising trades for the convenience of the district, and their allotments of land shall be assigned to them in said places, in the same manner as to other settlers.

17. For the future, it shall be incumbent upon the said settlements, in each council, to establish mills and other mechanical fabrics, either to be worked by water or wind, and the same shall be erected in the most convenient places, without prejudice to third persons; this being submitted to the corporation, [ayuntamiento,] whose deliberation and consent shall first be had.

18. For the present, the election of a curate shall be of a person speaking precisely the language of the settlers, and the ordinary diocesan shall grant him license, upon presenting his testimonials and his appointment, made by the superintendent of the settlements in my name; but, as soon as the necessity of employing foreign priests shall have ceased, the election shall be made generally, and free for all the clergy, and the chamber shall give its advice, upon which his Majesty shall make the appointment by virtue of his royal patronage.

19. The tithes arising from uncultivated lands, such as those which have been recently ploughed, belong wholly to the royal patrimony, as Jura Regalia, and as an indemnity for the expenses incurred by the formation of those new settlements, and by the conversion, by dint of heavy expenditures of money, of lands abandoned, and in which there are no permanent improvements; and the attorneys shall oppose any demand or unfounded pretensions which might be raised against the royal title.

20. To the curates shall be applied the ecclesiastical benefices which remain vacant in the colleges formerly belonging to the regulars of the company (Jesuits) who served in the churches, saving always the rights of the founders; and, in the meantime, such allowance shall be made to them out of my royal treasury as the superintendent shall judge proper.

21. Each council in the new settlements shall be entitled to commons for black cattle, [boyal,] sufficient for the maintenance of beasts of the plough; but the pasture grounds, exceeding those just mentioned, shall not be rented, and shall serve for grazing lands for cows and other tame and wild cattle, to supply beasts of the plough, and it shall not be lawful for the mesta, or any other herdsmen, to acquire possession thereof, nor introduce therein any other kind of cattle ; these commons for black cattle shall be made and marked out, and shall be located in some place which, besides being provided with water for the cattle, shall be at convenient distance from all the farms which shall compose the settlement, if it be practicable ; and this location shall be made by the superintendent of said settlements, by virtue of his authority.

22. If it be found expedient to set apart any lands as a reservation for the council, to be worked by the settlers, and whose products shall be applied to meet the general expenditures, and to other public purposes, the same may also be laid out, under the denomination of council reservation, Senara, [Consejil,] and shall be entered in the records of distributions, in the same manner as the commons for black cattle. It being well understood that, in these settlements, no tax shall ever be laid upon any provisions, nor upon any stores or shops which may have the effect of forestalling or impeding commerce.

23. The selection of sites and boundaries of the new settlements shall be made by the superintendent at pleasure, who shall endeavor to make it in such places as not to include the property of the inhabitants of the villages and hamlets standing near the Sierra, and in such manner as not to cause any damage to them ; but if there should be any fields within the limits of the new settlements which, either on account of its containing water fit for cattle, or of being surrounded by said limits, it should become necessary to include therein, in such case the superintendent may do so, on giving to the persons interested some other lands of equal extent and value with those thus taken from them, and located in some other districts; all this shall be done in a summary manner, upon a view of the real state of the case, and with the aid of skilful persons, who shall measure and lay out both tracts, the latter of which shall be located, surveyed, and marked out, at the cost of my royal treasury, without permitting any delays or difficulties to be interposed in an operation which requires promptness and activity to be brought to a speedy and proper termination.

24. As there may arise doubtful cases, requiring a superior decision, it shall be the duty of the superintendent to refer the parties to the council, who shall do the needful therein, without, therefore, delaying his operations, unless he shall receive express orders to do so ; because the laying out and planting of new settlements ought to be viewed as of an executive and summary character, and because the occurrence of a slight injury (for which there is always time enough to afford indemnity) is infinitely less important than a delay in establishing these families, prejudicial to my royal treasury, and ruinous to those families themselves.

25. Agreeably to the foregoing, all sites shall be considered as calculated for new settlements which are uncultivated in the Sierra Morena, and particularly those in the districts of Hespiel, Hornachuclos, Fuenteovejuna, Alanis, el Santuario de la Cabeza, la Penuela, la Aldegüelu, the Commons of Martinmalo, with all the neighboring districts, and generally all such as are situated in the chain and branches of said ridge, [sierra,] (and which the superintendent shall think proper for the location of new settlements.)

26. As fast as the survey shall proceed, a plan or drawing shall be made, and a duplicate thereof shall be transmitted to the council, without delaying the clearing of the land and the erection of houses, and other preparatory measures ; and said plan shall exhibit the boundaries, that the council may approve the same, or decide whether any change is to be made ; such descriptions shall also serve to suggest and supply information, upon due consideration of which all proper measures may be resolved upon and decided ; the other duplicate shall remain in the possession of the superintendent for his direction, and to be placed, in due time, on the record of distributions, as provided in the 13th article : said plans shall be signed by the superintendent and by the engineer or surveyor, or such other officer as may have made the survey, and may be made up upon the model of the plan of the abandoned settlement of Espiel, as transmitted by the intendant of Cordova.

27. The colonists shall be established on the located lands of the new settlements, in proportion to the number of houses and the extent of each tract, in order that they may build their huts and cabins, and commence to clear the land and fell the timber ; care shall be had that settlers using the same language be placed together, in order that they may have a curate speaking that language for the present, which would be very difficult if those who use different languages were mixed together.

28. The superintendent shall, nevertheless, be authorized to promote intermarriages between the new settlers and Spaniards, of both sexes respectively, with a view to their more easy incorporation with the nation ; but they shall not, for the present, be subjects of the kingdoms of Cordova, Jaen, Sevilla, or of the province of La Mancha, for fear of inducing the settlers of the surrounding country to leave their homes and come into the new settlements, which the superintendent and his subalterns shall take particular care in strictly preventing.

29. It shall be lawful for said superintendent to draw from the hospitals now established, or hereafter to be established, within the kingdom, such persons as he may think proper to promote said marriages, as soon as they shall have been instructed in the Christian religion, and enabled, through the exercise of some profession, to earn their bread, or acquired sufficient strength to devote themselves to agriculture.

30. It is hereby declared that the persons taken from the hospitals of Cordova, Jaen, Sevilla, and Almargo, already established, or hereafter to be established, shall not be comprehended in the prohibition of being carried to the new settlements of Sierra Morena on account of vagrancy, or of having abandoned their property, not with a view of defrauding the ancient settlement, but only when impelled to it by indolence and idleness.

31. The foregoing renders it necessary that said superintendent should keep up a correspondence with those who have the charge of the hospitals now established, or hereafter to be established, and to confer with the respective intendants and corregidors concerning whatever may be expedient ; said hospitals and houses of charity being considered as a perpetual nursery of settlers whence the Sierra may be supplied with useful and industrious inhabitants

32. Among other things, said superintendents shall take particular care that the new settlements be upon or near the King's highways, as well for the sake of the greater facility it shall afford them in disposing of their produce as for the advantage of being protected, and of presenting a refuge against thieves and public malefactors.

33. All the colonists who exercise any mechanical trade ought to be supplied with the proper utensils for their respective professions, in order that they may forthwith be employed for the benefit of the settlements.

41. There shall likewise be distributed to each family two cows, five ewes, five goats, five hens and a cock, and a breeding sow.

47. The superintendent shall establish in such place as he may judge most convenient one, two, or more, free weekly markets, according to the extent of the new settlements, where the inhabitants and the troops may be supplied with necessaries at fair and current prices.

52. In whatever is before stipulated, and in all other things annexed and connected therewith, full power is conferred upon the said superintendent, with the faculty of delegating one or more persons in his stead, and to the exclusion of all intendants, corregidors, judges, and justices, being accountable only to the council, through its first chamber of government, and, in matters of economy to the office of superintendent general of the royal treasury, to the end that, by these means, he may not be disturbed in the exercise of his powers, nor impeded in giving effect to them. It is well understood that when the settlements shall be completely established, they shall remain subject to the laws in force in their respective districts [partido;] but till then the local judges shall not have power to interfere with the new settlers, nor shall the inhabitants of the adjoining districts be entitled to enter with their cattle within the limits of the new settlements, nor these in those of the old ones, as well because such community of rights is prejudicial, as with a view to prevent dissensions and jealousies which would easily arise between the new and the old settlements, an inconvenience which must cease as soon as the former shall have become accustomed to the country, and to the use of the common language.

53. These instructions shall likewise be placed at the head of the records of distribution, that the same may always be known, and that they may always be considered by the new establishments as invariable by-laws of the settlements, and as a rule for such as may in future be formed upon the model of these.

54. Within the term of two years, if it cannot be done before, each settler ought to have his dwelling finished and his farm in operation; if this be not the case, or if any looseness be observed in his conduct, he shall be considered as in the class of vagrants, and it shall be left at the discretion of the superintendent of the settlement, according to circumstances, either to dispose of him for the service of the army, navy, or any other which he may judge proper, or to extend the term, if he shall allege true and just cause.

55. In the years set apart for the clearing, breaking, and cultivation of the lands within their respective tracts, the colonists shall pay no rent or tax whatsoever, on account of the emphiteutic right, into my royal treasury, and its assessment is left to the prudent regulation of the superintendent of the settlements, who shall make it with due regard to the laws of the kingdom.

56. Although, by these presents, we have granted an exemption of tribute and charges, for six years, to foreign mechanics who shall repair to these kingdoms, [Law 1, Tit. 2, Lib. 6,] this term is extended to ten years, in consideration of the character of the settlers, and of the greater labor which they shall have to encounter, in building, improving, and cultivating the land.

57. Considering that these are waste lands, they are exempted from tithes for the term of four years, said tithes being left for the benefit of the colonists; and any pretensions which may be set up for them shall be opposed by the attorneys; and at the expiration of the said term of four years they shall thereafter be for the benefit of my royal patrimony, as set forth in article 19.

58. The superintendent shall have power to receive the offers and propositions of all such capitalists as may wish to form settlements, on their own account, in any tracts or portions of the Sierra Morena, making to the settlers the same distribution as the royal treasury, and they are empowered to collect tithes in my royal name to meet the costs and expenditures; this right shall never be taken from them, nor redeemed nor incorporated with my royal patrimony, but, on the contrary, the stipulations herein contained shall be observed with good faith towards them, and, upon application to me through my council, I shall grant my sovereign approbation.

59. The new settlers shall be bound to keep their houses occupied, and to dwell in the hamlets, without moving or permitting their children or domestics to remove to other places, unless with license from me, for the term of ten years, under penalty of being enrolled in the service of the army or navy to all who shall act contrary to this stipulation. In this respect the condition of the colonists is not rendered worse, since in those countries whence they come the laborers are generally subjected to the performance of such duties [manentes y adscripticios.]

60. After said term of ten years the settlers, or their heirs and assigns, shall be bound likewise to keep their houses occupied, for the purpose of receiving the profits of the land, under the penalty of forfeiture of said land, and of its being granted to some other actual settler.

61. The settlers shall not have power to divide their tracts, although such division should be between heirs, the same being intended to be always owned by one single person; nor shall the same be aliened in mortmain, as before provided, either by bargain between living persons or by testament, under the same penalty of forfeiture; and against these provisions no custom, prescription, possession, or length of time, shall have any force, all this being provided against by an annulling clause; nor shall any tax [censo] or any other burden be imposed thereon, this being in conformity to the nature of the emphiteutic contract, and to the usual mode of making it.

62. It being intended that each tract or lot shall descend from father to son, or to the nearest relative, or to a daughter married to an actual settler who possesses no other tract, with a view that two tracts be never united in the same person, care shall be had on the part of the government to distribute, successively, lands or new tracts to second, third, and other sons, in order that, in this manner, the improvements and increase of population may gradually continue.

63. If any settler shall die intestate, without leaving any known heir who has any claim to succeed to his property, his tract shall revert to the crown, to be granted to another actual settler.

64. Of all alienations which shall be made to persons qualified to that effect—that is to say, to taxable cultivators, the entire tract being so aliened, and not in parts, an entry shall be made upon the record of distributions, in order that the change of owners may be known, and whether the contract be contrary to the by-laws of the settlement and to the responsibility of allegiance to the crown.

65. Whenever the alienation of the tract belonging to a settler shall be made to another settler by conditional bargain, the fine shall be paid to my royal treasury at the rate prescribed by the law of Partida, (Law 29, Title 8, Part 5)—that is, the fifteenth part; otherwise, the bargain and transfer shall be null and void, and no change of owner shall result therefrom.

66. At the expiration of the ten years' exemption those new settlers shall pay me all the tributes which at that time shall be levied upon my other vassals, as also the emphiteutic right which shall be regulated, in acknowledgment of the direct seigneury, according to the provisions of article 55.

67. In order that in those settlements the settlers be at the same time cultivators and herdsmen, without which agriculture cannot flourish, since a few herdsmen may consume all the common produce, as is unhappily the case in many parts of these kingdoms, each settler shall convert to the particular use of his cattle all the pasture grounds within his tract, independently of the right of driving it upon the commons or grounds laid out and assigned, or to be laid out and assigned, to each village.

68. If, for the future, any portion of the land belonging to the council is leased out, the settlers shall be preferred; and whoever shall enter once into possession of it shall not be ejected as long as he shall not be in arrears for two years for the payment of the rent, or abandon, for the same length of time, the culture of the same, in which cases the land may then be leased to some other settler.

69. As a general rule, the settler shall be preferred to a stranger in all cases of leases, of whatever kind.

70. The settlers of each district [feligresia] or council shall be obliged to assist in the erection of churches, chapter-houses, jails, ovens, and mills, as buildings intended for public convenience, and in future they shall contribute for their repairs when the public funds shall be deficient.

71. The avails of the oven and mill shall constitute part of the revenues of the council, as also such portion of the grain-fields as shall be assigned by the superintendent of the settlements as nurseries for the council. The power of leasing such lands to settlers, on payment of a rent, shall remain in the villages composing the council, under the conditions contained in the sixty-eighth article, or they may sow and work them in common, and apply the proceeds to the revenues, all in conformity to the instructions of the 30th July, 1760, (Law 13, Title 16,) subject to the regulations and orders of the council.

72. It may be useful to admit at once in each village two or more Spanish settlers, particularly from Mercia, Valencia, Cataluña, Aragon, Navarre, and all the northern coast of Gallicia, Asturias, Montañas, Vizcaya, and Guipuzcoa, in order that foreigners may unite with the natives and intermarry, the said Spaniards remaining subject to the same regulations as the foreign colonists.

73. Catholic strangers may generally be admitted into those settlements, although not comprehended in the contract; an entry shall be made of their parentage and country, and there shall be distributed to them the same lands, utensils, and assistance, as to those who are included in the contract.

74. All the children shall be sent to the primary schools, of which there shall be one in each council, for the use of the villages therein contained; said schools to be located in the neighborhood of the churches, in order that said children may, at the same time, learn the language and religion of Spain.

75. There shall be in those settlements no classes for grammar, and still less for any of the higher branches, in observance of the provisions of the laws of the kingdom, by which they are, with reason, prohibited in places of that description, (Law 1, Title 2, Lib. 8,) whose inhabitants are destined to till the land, raise cattle, and to exercise the mechanical trades, which constitutes the muscle and strength of a state.

76. The practice of leasing the pastures for neat cattle, of renting out the commons, and of planting vines, is the means of annihilating the breed of cattle, by reducing their numbers; wherefore it is positively forbidden to allow such practices, and that of admitting farmers who are not, at the same time, herdsmen; the number of cattle shall be regulated by that which each herdsman can drive upon the common of pasture, to share equally its benefits with others. Under these regulations, the superintendent shall frame the proper municipal ordinances, and make them known to the colonists, and to all others whom it may concern, by means of translations in the respective languages, in order that they be made acquainted with the spirit of the government, and that they may act accordingly.

77. A literal fulfilment shall be enforced of the condition 45, enacted in cortes, to prohibit the establishment of any convent or community of either sex, although under the denomination of hospitals, missions, residences, or farms, or any other, under any pretence or color whatsoever, or under the description of hospitals, (Note 1, Tit. 26, Lib. 2,) because all spiritual matters are to be regulated by the curates and ordinary diocesans, and all temporal matters by the justices and corporations, including the hospitals.

78. It shall be lawful to transfer some of the apothecary's stores existing in the regular houses of the company (Jesuits) to those settlements, to supply the sick with medicines; the hospitals shall be administered by them until the towns are founded, and governed by the rules which are in force in the army, and by such as may be dictated by the prudence of the superintendent.

79. All the provisions contained in these instructions shall be observed, not only by the commissioners charged with the direction of the new settlements, and by the settlers themselves, but also by the judges and justices of the kingdom; to this end they will be communicated to all parties concerned, and they shall be printed and distributed, in order that it may come to the notice of all persons in an authentic and solemn form.

Admission of Greek colonists in these kingdoms; their location, and distribution of lands in new settlements.

I have resolved to accept the proposition presented to me by the chief of the Greek colony, and by the greater part of those who compose said colony, established at Ayazco, a port and city in the island of Corsica; and I command that said Greeks be supported, from the time of their embarcation, at the expense of my royal treasury, with the greatest charity and hospitality, out of the fund for temporalities, as a work so in accordance with religion, and whose tendency will be to prevent those families to repair to the land of heretics, at the risk of being perverted. These new colonists shall be distributed among settlements separate from all others, in order to avoid discord, and to facilitate their administration by ecclesiastics using their language, to whom the ordinary clergy shall grant the proper licenses, and who shall receive their professions of faith. Their chapels shall be decently ornamented, and the sacred vessels, ornaments, and other effects, shall be drawn from the churches and colleges formerly belonging to the regulars of the company, (Jesuits,) these being destined by a supreme order [pragmatica sancion] of the 2d April of last year (Law 3, Tit. 26, Lib. 2) to be applied, among other objects, to destitute parishes; none are more deserving of this benefit or more worthy of attention. To these new colonists shall be distributed lands, flocks, and utensils, according to the terms of their proposition, and in the manner provided for the settlements of the Sierra Morena, (see the preceding law;) and they shall be entitled to all the exemptions and privileges which are granted to said settlers by my royal orders [cedulas.]

Lib. VII, Tit. 22, Law 5.—(Vol. 3, p. 494.)

Repopulation of the province of Ciudad Rodrigo, and division of its domains in pasture and arable land.

Whereas it has been represented to my council by the intendant, deputy, attorney, and steward of the five fields of the city and land of Ciudad Rodrigo, in how deplorable a condition the agriculture and farmers had been thrown by idleness and various abuses, said council, in a report dated the 4th of April, has suggested to me the most expedient means, as well to correct said abuses as to relieve such parts of said five fields as are entirely depopulated, provide for their repopulation, and for the distribution of the lands among the natives; and, agreeably to what has been so suggested to me, I have resolved to appoint a superintendent for the settlement of the province of Ciudad Rodrigo, and I command him to repair thither, together with an engineer and such assistants as may be necessary, and, beginning with the bishopric, to make out a plan of the whole district, with the limits and delineations very accurately drawn, of all the one hundred and ten abandoned tracts, the measurement, extent, and boundaries of each, designating the most healthy spot whereon to establish the settlement, and suggesting the means most expedient to accomplish the same; he shall, in doing so, conform with the by-laws framed for the settlement of the Sierra Morena (law 3) and with the provisions for the distribution of lands, in order to equalize the lots and the rents, so far as they can be adapted to the circumstances; he shall designate those which have been entirely abandoned, and which, as royal domains, ought to pay the tithes levied upon lands recently cleared, of which I grant four years' exemption to the new settlers, and ten years' exemption from the payment of the tributes. He shall, moreover, after having consulted the most experienced, intelligent, and practical elders of the province, and made such other inquiries as he may judge proper, proceed, upon a view of the titles, to separate the arable lands from such as are fit both for pasture and cultivation, and from those which are only fit for pasture; and he shall assign those that have no proprietors to the natives and inhabitants who are cultivators, by distributing said lands among them, conformably to the provisions enacted by my council, and giving the preference to such as are destitute, in order that they may establish themselves thereon. And considering that the settlement and promotion of agriculture are the surest means of securing plenty and public prosperity, and constitute that which I am most anxious to encourage in my kingdoms and seigneuries, said council shall frame such provisions as it may judge most conducive to that end.

Lib. VII, Tit. 22, Law 6.—(Vol. 3, p. 495.)

Rules for the locating and erecting the settlements on the Madrid road, by the province of Extramadura.

1. In all places where a bridge is hereafter to be erected, or where there may be one already erected, and which is without inhabitants, a settlement shall be formed on the most healthy spot, to be selected for that purpose.

2. Such settlement shall be located on the road side, to guard the same and to supply the travellers going backwards and forwards.

3. Each settler shall be a farmer, with a tract of land to cultivate, which shall be given to him upon payment of a light emphiteutic tax, and of such rent, in produce, as may be assessed thereupon, which rent shall not exceed the tenth part, whether payable to the actual proprietor of the soil or to the public, if the land be common; it is understood that if said land be covered with timber, it shall be exempt from the payment of said rent during the number of years in which the proprietor shall derive any considerable profit from the clearing of the same.

4. It shall be their duty to tend and preserve the timber, conformably to the ordinances concerning timber-lands, in consideration of the value of said timber, and to engraft the wild olive which abounds therein; they shall enclose such lands while such engrafting takes place, and while the trees are young, in order that they may not be injured by cattle.

5. Those new settlements shall be exempt, during six years, from all council tributes and charges, in the same manner as such exemption is granted to the foreign mechanics and cultivators who come to settle in these kingdoms, who ought not to be more favored than the natives; although it shall be lawful to admit also in said settlements such Portuguese, as, from the scarcity of hands in Extramadura, are employed as laborers and reside there, if they are industrious and faithful.

6. As soon as such settlements shall contain twenty housekeepers they shall be under the Alfonsine jurisdiction, in order that they may be protected against all kinds of vexation.

7. The intendant shall, under the orders of the council, take charge of these new settlements, whose inhabitants may enclose their fields according to the custom of the country, and protect their produce against all injury from cattle.

8. It shall be lawful for him to avail himself of the services of some gentlemen of the country, who, in the capacity of his deputies, will make themselves useful, from pure zeal, and without compensation, and merely to serve, with much credit to themselves, his Majesty and the country, and he shall reward them and their families, by conferring personal distinctions upon them.

9. This settlement shall be extended in preference towards the frontier, this part being, in a great degree, and to the discredit of the nation, uncultivated and deserted, while the opposite frontier is well settled and covered with houses, upon a similar soil.

10. No suits shall be admitted touching these lands, the settlement being prejudicial to no one, and paying a sufficient revenue, in the improved cultivation of the soil; and the State has a right to remove such obstacles.

11. The settlements shall be as much encouraged in the lands susceptible of being irrigated, as in the hilly tracts; but a preference shall be given to the natives of the districts, and to such proprietors as may choose to make them on their own account, and under the proper regulations; and the justices and corporations shall promote these most useful undertakings.

Lib. VII, Tit. 22, Law 7.—(Vol. 3. p. 495.)

Conditions and by-laws for settlements, which shall be observed by the inhabitants of the new village of Encinas del Principe.

In conformity with the plan of the 3d of September, 1778, presented by the intendant of the army and province of Extramadura, a settlement shall be formed on the desert lands of the northern section of the council of Mata, near the point where it adjoins the tract of the Calzada de Oropeza, one of those belonging to the count of that name, and towards the east of that of Gordo, belonging to Count Miranda, and distant from the hotel of the village of Navalmoral de la Mata, towards the west, by the royal road to the capital, twelve thousand three hundred and ninety yards, and from the landmark which separates said council from the county of Oroposa, two thousand two hundred and eighty yards, by the same road. This situation, from its altitude, will secure healthiness and a free circulation of air, and a free drainage of the waters, whether proceeding from the rains or springs, and besides lies near the springs of Quadra. This settlement shall be called by the name of Encinas del Principe, and shall have the jurisdiction and powers of a town; and the roads, messuages, tracts of land, for cultivation and pasture, and commons for neat cattle, and all other appurtenances set forth in the explanation and notes annexed to said plan.

2. There shall be established in said new settlement twenty-four cultivators, on such spots as are designated in the plan referred to, in order that they may have their houses at once in the same village and upon their own lands, and that they may dwell precisely each upon his farm. It is not, however, intended to refuse the neighborhood to such useful mechanics as may choose to settle there and build houses at their own cost, provided they erect the same upon the fixed alignment, in order not to obstruct the circulation of air, or spoil the beauty of the village.

3. There shall be given to each of the twenty-four laborers a tract of land containing sixty fanegas, each fanega to consist of six thousand and four hundred square yards, [varas,] the usual measure of Extramadura: said tract shall be enclosed and laid out for each housekeeper, not only during the season of sowing and reaping, but also in those of ploughing and stubble, with absolute right over it. Such as shall enter the same on pretence of driving his cattle thereon as being stubbled or commons, or for any other cause, shall be severely punished, and the most prompt and efficient justice shall be administered in such cases: each tract being laid and marked out, and dividing ditches dug out, until fences, live hedges, or trees, can be erected and planted to mark such divisions, to which particular attention shall be paid.

4. The best part of each tract is to be reserved for the raising of wheat and other grain, or seeds of equal value, the farmer being left at liberty to lay out the remainder in plantations of vine, olive, figs, and such other trees as he may think fit; and to be enclosed in the manner set forth in the preceding chapter.

5. The valuable trees which are at present standing upon the tracts to be distributed shall be preserved and grafted by each settler, provided that if they should impede the permanent cultivation of grain, the useless ones shall be thinned off and uprooted, as also such as ought not to be preserved; and, in order to save trouble, the useful trees, such as the wild olive, live and other oaks, which are to remain on the land, to be grafted, pruned, and formed into olive plantations, shall be pointed out to the settler at the time of delivering said tract to him, and shall be entered in the record of distribution which is to be kept. Particular care shall be taken to preserve against any damage from cattle, especially from neat cattle and goats, the young olive plants, until they shall have acquired a certain height.

6. In order that the settler may reap all the benefit of his labor, for the good of the State, sow his fields without intermission, draw pasture from them for his cattle, and that he may, at no time, meet with any impediment therein, and that no damage be done to the trees which he may plant or preserve, as often happens from the breaking in of cattle belonging to others, from the absence of the herdsmen, and from the power and interest of their proprietors, and even with respect to trees already grown up, the said settlers are hereby allowed to enclose their lands; and the entrance thereof will at all times be forbidden for any cattle but his own and such as he shall permit by agreement, and which he shall, for his own advantage, admit at the proper season, taking care that no damage be done.

7. In order to plough his tract, each settler shall keep one pair of oxen, cows, mules, or horses, and one head for relief or increase; which, with the former, if they are all sound, shall be sufficient to replace such as may be disabled by disease or otherwise, and such as may die, until they can be replaced.

8. The settler shall have power to keep as many as two hundred head of sheep, for which he may rent his lands.

9. He shall, besides, be allowed, at the extremity of his lot, and contiguous thereto, fifty fanegas of land, as pasture for said two hundred head of sheep, at the rate of one hundred estadales, each of sixteen square yards, [varas,] for each head.

10. In order that, by this means, the pastures for the sheep may surround the tracts, the twenty-four settlers may, either all together or by twelve or six, or in any other manner, unite in such a way as to secure to the two hundred sheep belonging to each of them the benefit of the aggregate of all the pasture land appertaining to the corresponding number of farms; it being well understood that whoever may wish to enclose his pasture ground, in order to cultivate it, shall be at liberty so to do, taking, in such cases, that only which belongs to his tract.

11. No other cattle of the settlement shall, in any manner, have right to enter the pasture grounds so laid out, in order that the portion assigned to each settler may not be diminished, and that no door be opened to many other abuses.

12. On hearing that settlers are establishing themselves, there shall be assigned to them pasture for beasts of the plough, either adjoining that which is laid out for sheep, or on the commons of the Mata, which are adjacent thereto, and lying between points at the west and south of the site designated for the foundation of that settlement.

13. The allowance shall be at the rate of one thousand two hundred estadales as aforesaid, making three fanegas of land, of the extent above mentioned, for each pair, and one head besides, for relieving said pair.

14. As to the private right of such pasture grounds, the same rules shall be observed as are provided with regard to sheep.

15. Until said allowance shall be made, (which is not to be delayed beyond the time necessary for that purpose,) the said beasts of plough belonging to the settlers may be fed like those of the other settlements of the Mata, with free entry upon the commons for neat cattle, and upon other pasture grounds on which such cattle are allowed to graze.

16. Each one of the twenty-four settlers shall be included in the distribution of the municipal domains and commons of the council of Mata, and of each of its four villages, so that he may be considered in the same light as the other settlers and herdsmen; which shall be observed without effecting any alteration, until the profits of the remaining commons for all the villages of said council be regulated and increased.

17. The sheep allowed to each settler, and others which they may keep, may, like the others of the settlement, graze in winter and summer upon the waste lands called Deheson, Casarejos, Roncadero, and Berrocal, which are included within the limits of the council, and on all others which may be included therein; as also upon those of the estate of Placentia, which are common with those of said council until they shall be divided, in which case the settlers shall be treated with due regard to their rights as inhabitants of the land. But they shall not have the right of pasture in the lands laid out for other settlements, in the same manner that these have no right of pasture on the arable and pasture grounds which shall be assigned to new settlers.

18. It shall not be lawful, at any time, to divide these tracts of arable and pasture, nor to impose any tax or other charge upon them; but they shall remain the property of one sole settler, subject to the royal taxes only, as the same shall be specified hereafter.

19 Nor shall said tracts be united in one person to other tracts of the same settlement, nor to those which may be granted to other settlers in other settlements, as a dotation for the inhabitants thereof. And if this should happen, either by gift or inheritance, it shall be lawful for the owner to retain which of the tracts he shall choose, and to settle some one else on the other, by selling or granting the same within the term of one year; and if he shall not do so within said term, it shall be done by the judge, at auction, giving the preference, however, to his relatives, or, in their default, to inhabitants of the settlement. And in case there should be no such purchasers, the same preference shall be given, as respects all foreigners whatsoever, to the inhabitants of the other settlements within the council of Mata; provided that the said settlers of Mata, as well as the strangers who may purchase or inherit such tracts of land, be obliged to reside in the village of Encinas del Principe, and to keep therein a house open and occupied by constant tenants and bona fide residents.

20. In no case shall these settlements fall into mortmain or in ecclesiastical possession: it shall always remain the property of a legal subject, who shall cultivate the same himself or by his servants.

21. They shall perpetually remain the property, by right of inheritance, of the settlers and their heirs, with the power of selecting among their children, giving preference to their male over their female issue, such as they shall please to designate as their heir, and in default of these, among others of their descendants, or collateral relations, according to the degree of consanguinity; provided that, in case of their dying intestate, the nearest of blood to the last proprietor shall inherit the property, the male having preference over the female relative. The aforesaid provisions relating to the prohibition of its falling into mortmain or ecclesiastical possession, or in the hands of persons unable to cultivate the land themselves, as taxable housekeepers, to be always attended to.

22. In case of there being no descendants of the first purchaser, the last possessor shall freely elect whom he pleases to be his successor, he being an actual settler, established as above set forth. And in case of this last possessor's dying intestate, his successor shall be appointed by the council, upon the proposition of the corporation of the council of Mata.

23. For the present, each possessor shall pay three per cent. upon the whole product of the cultivation of the land, and raising of cattle kept upon the same, with the exception of the timber which is to remain exempt from this contribution, and of the crop of wheat, on which he shall only pay one per cent.; the whole being in lieu of rent for the land, and which, in case of delay, he shall be made to pay by the justices and board of municipal domains.

24. These rents shall be collected by the steward [mayordomo] of the municipal domains, and shall be applied to meet the common expenditures of the settlement, with the understanding that there is to be no other municipal domains or revenues in the lands, which has been the cause of the decay of the old settlements and of agriculture, and of many other evils. And in order to make up the deficiency of these funds, the farmers and other inhabitants of the settlement shall pay their ratio of the public expenditures, according to the proceeds of their fields, their cattle, or of their trade, during the preceding year; and the ordinary expenses shall be apportioned with the strictest economy and fidelity, while the extraordinary charges shall not be apportioned without first applying to the council, agreeably to the laws.

25. The farmers, as well as all other inhabitants, who shall establish themselves in the settlement, shall, during the first six years, be exempt from the payment of the provincial contributions; it being well understood that no imposts shall be established on provisions nor any other necessaries of life whatsoever, nor upon any liquors, with the exception of spirits, which shall, when sold, on account of their mischievous tendency, be charged with an increased price, for the benefit of the municipal revenues. At the expiration of the said six years, the mode of paying the royal contributions shall be regulated upon full knowledge of the subject and a due regard to the means of affording facilities to the settlers in the commerce of their produce.

26. The alcalde and members of the council shall be elected from among the settlers, as in the other settlements of the Meta, provided that either the alcalde or the regidor be taken from among the farmers; and, conformably to the instructions of the 30th July, 1760, (Law 13, Tit. 16,) they shall form the board of municipal domains, who shall settle all matters concerning the rents and apportionment of charges which shall be made in case of a deficiency in the public funds.

27. The alcalde of the village of Encinas del Principe shall exercise jurisdiction, personally, over all the territory, whether private property or distributed land, which shall be assigned to him, and, out of said territory, over all the lands which shall constitute the commons of the council of Meta, to the exclusion of the other alcaldes of the villages of said council; he shall, with the regidor, attend the sittings of the general and ordinary corporation [ayuntamiento] of the council, all agreeably to the established practice and custom, and to the royal order [cedula] of the 12th of July, 1663, concerning its exemption from the jurisdiction of the city of Placentia, so that this settlement shall, in all matters relating to the jurisdiction, cognizance, and authority over its public property, have the same powers as the other settlements within the council of Meta, without any difference whatsoever in this respect, because it forms with them the same community; its inhabitants shall have the use of its wood, lumber, waters, and other benefits arising from the commons of the said council and territory of Placentia, in the same manner as the same are or may be enjoyed by the inhabitants of the other settlements within the said council and territory; meanwhile all the commons and hereditaments of the council of Meta shall, as before, remain undivided.

28. To the end that, for the future, no doubts may arise, nor any suits or litigation, to the prejudice of this new settlement, against those of the said council of Meta or any other within the county of Oropesa, or the Gordo; and in order that the territory of the village of Encinas del Principe may be exactly known, the intendant of Extremadura shall take care that, on due notice given to the stewards of the other settlements of the council of Meta, and of other conterminous districts, the whole tract of land assigned to said new settlement be marked out in conformity to the above-mentioned plan.

Lib. VII, Tit. 22, Law 8.—(Vol. 3, p. 498.)

Re-establishment and settlement of the port and city of Alcudia, in Majorca.

I have judged it expedient to resolve and command that the maritime port and city of Alcudia be restored and re-established upon its ancient footing in the kingdom of Majorca, and that, consequently, the custom-house be reopened therein.

1. For this purpose, the officers and other persons in the employ of my royal treasury, who may be required for the garrison of that place, shall return to, and reside in, the said city of Alcudia, with defence to them to leave it without very urgent and grave motives, and without the necessary permit or license.

2. The smugglers who may, at this time, be lurking in Minorca may freely return to reside in the same city, and I hereby grant them the necessary pardon and license; and such persons as are fit and qualified shall repair to and settle in the said settlement and custom-house of said port.

3. Such inhabitants and new settlers who shall establish themselves within the city or territory of Alcudia, whether they be natives or resident foreigners, shall not be subject to the payment of any contributions during the term of six years: for I hereby exempt them from such contributions according to the laws (Law 1, Tit. 2, Lib. 6) of these my kingdoms.

4. The royal audience of Majorca shall order to the said city of Alcudia all such persons as shall be banished from Palma for slight offences to increase its population, the superintendent taking care to give them useful employment in some trade, or in agriculture.

5. All the lands which shall be cleared anew and cultivated shall be exempt from the payment of tithes for the term of twenty-five years, provided that such persons as may clear said lands shall reside and keep house in the city of Alcudia, and be bona fide settlers and inhabitants thereof and of its territory.

6. To such as shall take up their residence in said city, a distribution shall be made of the lots containing ruinous houses within the same; and there shall be assessed upon the same, with my approbation, and by the advice of the council (to whom notice shall be given,) a small tax, to be levied after the expiration of the first fifteen years after the same shall have been granted, unless the new settler shall prefer paying the value of said lots as assessed by appraisers, in which case the money shall be deposited in order to be paid over to whom it may belong.

7. Such persons as shall take the said lots shall be assisted with the grant of fifty pounds, majorquinas, from my royal treasury, to aid them in paying the necessary expenditures, upon condition of their refunding said money, by instalments, in the term of eight years; and that if they do not begin to rebuild the house within that of one year, and finish it in two years, the same shall be granted and allotted to some other settler.

8. The same shall be done with respect to the untilled lands which are destined to be settled, and which belong to my royal person, as with regard to those belonging to the city and to private persons; they shall be divided into sections of fifty Castilian fanegas each, at most, and granted to the inhabitants and to the new settlers, subject to a moderate tax for the benefit of the municipal domains, or of whoever shall be lord of the land, to begin after the expiration of fifteen years from the grant.

9. The same shall be done with regard to the two hundred and eighteen engines for drawing water [norias] erected for the irrigation of the land, which appear to have been destroyed, out of two hundred and sixty-three which were formerly in operation. They shall be distributed to whoever shall ask them for the purpose of repairing and using them, under the same condition expressed with regard to the lands, of the payment of a light tax, and of the reimbursement of their value, at the expiration of fifteen years from the grant.

10. In order not to prejudice the right of the lords proprietors, nor that of the new colonists to whom the land may be adjudged, as soon as said lands shall be ploughed and under cultivation, edicts shall be issued, calling upon said proprietors to repair to and cultivate said lands within the term of one year; with notice that it shall be proceeded, within the specified term, to distribute them among such persons as shall apply for them, if not done by the proprietors themselves, in order that each may be established, together with his engine to draw water, and begin irrigating the land attached thereto.

11. No duties or contributions whatsoever shall be levied upon the tradesmen who may settle into the city itself, and form societies or fraternities, they being hereby exempted from said duties or contributions. Declaring, as I hereby do declare, that said tradesmen, although organized in societies, shall pay no other duties than those of examination upon being received masters.

12. For the present, the interest upon the fifteen parts of the redeemable tax, which is now chargeable upon the inhabitants of said city, amounting to sixteen thousand and seventy-three pounds, is reduced to the ratio of one per cent. in each year, out of which a fund shall be formed for the purpose of paying off the sums due to the farmers of said tax. And, in order to facilitate the accomplishment of that object, I intrust the examination of this point to my royal audience of Majorca, extinguishing and discontinuing, and I command the same to be extinguished and discontinued, the interest of premium, current and in arrear, upon the one thousand five hundred pounds, which were granted on loan at five per cent. per annum, the same having been done by virtue of a defective and usurious contract, and declaring that the principal alone shall be refunded.

13. In order to give a free scope to the judicial investigations which may arise in the execution of this project of settling anew the town of Alcudia, a board shall be constituted, to be composed of the reverend bishop, the regent of the royal audience and the intendant; upon the condition that they shall not be replaced by other persons, although any of them should fail to attend, in which case it is my pleasure to place the whole management and direction of affairs in the hands of such as may be present, who shall decide in all cases which may arise in said matters, or consult my council whenever it shall appear to them to be necessary, proceeding always with due knowledge, and upon the principles of government.

14. In order that all the points above set forth may be put into practice at Alcudia, I have resolved to appoint a substitute of the intendant, who shall govern said settlements according to the laws, customs, and usages of Alcudia (without recurring to the by-laws of the settlements of Sierra Morena or Andalusia;) and said substitute shall have all the necessary powers, the council framing the proper instructions which shall be constantly kept in view by the said substitute and intendant.

Lib. VII, Tit. 22, Law 9.—(Vol. 3, p. 500.)

Articles to be observed in restoring the settlements of the city of Salamanca.

The board of settlement of the city of Salamanca shall, in the summary proceedings, and provisional determinations, as to the means most expedient for restoring the settlement and population of the places confided to it, and in the execution of its provisions, observe, for the present, the rules and declarations contained in the following articles:

1. Conformably to the dispositions enacted by the council, in its acts of the 11th October, 1781, and 13th May, 1784, for the adoption of said means, sufficient provision is made for notification to the representatives of the proprietors of the places therein named. And it is the duty of said representatives to give notice to their principals, and acquaint them with the proceedings, without said proceedings being therefore suspended, on account of the importance to the public that the settlement should not be delayed.

2. In proceeding with respect to places belonging to several joint owners, an understanding shall be had with the one holding the greatest share, or, in his absence, with such representative as he may have designated for that purpose.

3. The commission granted to the board not only includes the restoration of the places which were formerly settled, but also the settlement of such others as may afford sufficient lands and pastures to support new settlers, according to the amount required for each by the provisions of the 15th article.

4. In locating the settlers who may establish themselves in each place, regard shall be had, not only to the lands which are now cleared for cultivation, but also to such as are known to have formerly been cultivated, and whose depopulation has been caused by having been converted into pasture grounds by the herdsmen to whom they were leased.

5. If in the sections containing but little arable land, and where little is known of their former destination, there should be, in the parts which are used for pasture, any tract or tracts fit for cultivation, and possessing the qualities set forth in chapter 14, the board shall communicate the fact to the council, and transmit thereto the record of proceedings, to enable said council to make such provisions as shall be most expedient for the promotion of agriculture.

6. The board shall conform to the declarations contained in the two foregoing chapters, with regard to the settlement of the hamlets, farm-houses, barns, and messuages, either on small or large farms, which are reputed at this time to be private property, admitting thereon as many settlers as may be supported by the arable land contained therein, or by such as may be fit for cultivation; saving, however, and without prejudice to the right of his Majesty and of the public, which are retained over the property, in all or in part, in the reservations, commons, and pastures for neat cattle, which form part of the municipal domains, and in the waste lands or commons which, under the former settlements, belonged to the councils or inhabitants of other settlements.

7. The present tenants or lessees, who have taken up their residence on the spot without having other residences in other places, shall be preferred; as also such as may have other residences, on condition of renouncing it and of binding themselves to remove to the new settlements within the time to be prescribed by the board, and on due consideration of the circumstances of the applicant, and of such others as may present themselves, in relation to the more or less speedy removal to said settlements.

8. The sons and sons-in-law of the present lessees shall likewise be preferred as new settlers, provided they be seventeen years of age, brought up as farmers, and able to conduct a farm by themselves ; and provided, further, that they shall keep a separate house from their fathers, if these should establish themselves in the settlements, with their cattle, utensils, and other implements necessary for the establishment of a farmer.

9 The present lessees are excluded from the privilege of selecting settlers of their choice, or of giving any preference to any persons besides that which is granted to themselves, their sons and sons-in-law, conformably to the provisions contained in the two preceding chapters; and in default of these, the proprietors of the land shall freely name persons of their choice, to the number which the place may be capable of receiving, and the (junta) board shall specify the time within which they shall be bound to establish their residences, and decide between the applicants in favor of the most capable of becoming an actual settler, and of undertaking and carrying on farming operations.

10. In admitting settlers holding farms and residences in other settlements, whether nominated by the proprietors of the land or by the board, the latter shall examine into the circumstances of the applicants, and into their motives for changing their residence; an express renunciation of their privileges as housekeepers of their former place of residence shall be required of them, and notice thereof shall be given to the local justice of the place where they may reside at the time, in order that they may not be considered as holding their domicil therein after the expiration of the time limited for their removal to the new settlement; the council approves the resolution of the board that the admission of such settlers must always be beneficial, because their removal will always make room in the old settlements for others to take their places; because the other settlers shall thereby acquire more room, and perhaps be relieved from great inconvenience; and because it is always desirable that the population be divided among a greater number of villages; and, as is well known, it is always beneficial to agriculture that the farmer should have his dwelling at the shortest possible distance from his fields.

11. Having seen the fraudulent and artful means that are made use of in falsely acquiring a domicil in certain places, and in endeavoring by various artifices to frustrate the resolutions of his Majesty and the council, the board shall pay particular attention to the admission of settlers, carefully attending to the prohibitions contained in the foregoing chapters, and looking rigidly to the strict fulfilment, after such admission, of the obligation of removing and actually fixing their domicil in the new settlements, and in admitting others in their stead whenever they shall neglect doing so.

12. Among the prohibitions prescribed to the settlers by the act of the council of the 10th of June, 1788, there is one obliging them to erect a house for themselves within the term of two years, without, however, preventing them to enter immediately into the possession of the tracts of land distributed to them; and in the decree of the 31st of July of the same year it is declared that the colonists who may erect houses shall have the ownership thereof on payment of a small tax. And whereas some of the settlers who were admitted in the said year 1788 have not fulfilled the above-mentioned conditions, the board shall, on principles of justice, prescribe another term of two years, after the expiration of which the land shall be declared to be vacant; and if at the end of said two years said houses be not erected, the above provision shall be carried into execution.

14. In order to prevent arbitrary proceedings in regulating the number of settlers who shall be located in each settlement, the quantity of land which shall be destined for cultivation, and that which is to be granted to each colonist, it is ordered that the board shall appoint an impartial surveyor, who shall measure the land at present under cultivation, which measurement may be made in the presence of the representatives of the proprietor and of the applicants, or in their own presence, for which purpose they shall be notified of the day, and the salary of the surveyor shall he paid by them in equal portions; the board shall in like manner appoint two skilful and practical farmers, who shall have no interest in the leases of said places, and who shall, in presence of the proprietor—who shall be notified to that effect—examine the respective tracts, and declare, upon examination of such indications as they may find, what has formerly been under cultivation and subsequently converted into pasture grounds; and who, in default of such indications, shall, upon the general and certain testimony of the inhabitants of the settlement, and upon examination of the quality of the soil, declare what parts must necessarily have been under cultivation; they shall, even in those places where it cannot be ascertained whether more land has been formerly cultivated than what shall at the time be under cultivation, inquire what parts are of the proper quality for the culture of grain, and measure the whole conformably to what has been said in relation to cultivated lands; whereupon the board shall proceed forthwith to divide into lots the lands which may be at the time, or may previously have been, under cultivation, suspending the clearing of such parts as may never have been cultivated until the decision of the council shall be known, as provided in chapter 5.

15. The lots shall be composed of forty-five fanegas of arable land, subdivided into two parts, [hojas] to be alternately sowed, and containing each twenty-two fanegas and a half, being the quantity which can be ploughed by a yoke of oxen; and if the land be of such a quality as to require two years' rest, the lot shall contain sixty-seven fanegas and a half, in order that the settler may have twenty-two fanegas and a half to sow in each year; the board shall particularly see that the condition of all the settlers be equal, in order that they may each possess the advantages of all the various qualities of land in as few parcels as may be, and as near as possible to their respective dwellings. All the settlers of one settlement shall alternate the ploughing of their respective parts in the same order, and shall not be permitted to make any change therein without grave motives.

16. Preference shall be given, in the granting of lots, to applicants owning one yoke of oxen only, provided he be a farmer by profession, a grower of grain, or exercising any other employ, if he make it appear to the board that he possesses one yoke, and the utensils and other necessary implements; in the latter case the board shall inquire into his motives for changing his trade, and whether it may not be inexpedient to permit him to abandon his former pursuits, on account of their being incompatible with the occupation of farming by himself.

17. There shall be laid out for each settler, besides the pasture in fallow and stubble land, and stiff soil, five fanegas adjoining the part which is to be ploughed, taking care that it be as near thereto as may be, and fit for neat cattle; and consequently if there be any meadows near by, the said tract shall be laid out therein.

18. All under-leases are absolutely prohibited; therefore the colonists settled on the arable land shall in no manner be dependent upon the herdsmen, lessees of the commons and timber-lands; nor shall these be in any manner dependent upon the former; to this end it is ordered that commissioners shall be appointed by the herdsmen and farmers, with an umpire in case of disagreement, agreeably to law, who, with due regard to the rent paid to the proprietors for all the profits of the land, shall decide upon and separate the lands belonging to each lot, and that which belong to the commons and timber-land, as likewise upon all the profits thereof; and each shall assume his respective obligation to pay the rent to the proprietors, according to law.

19. Whereas it is indispensable that the settlers should have the privilege of felling trees, both for fuel in their houses and for utensils and implements of husbandry, the board shall ascertain the quantity of timber, shrubs, and brushwood growing on each tract of land, to whom they belong, and who enjoys the profits thereof; and it shall communicate the result of its inquiries to the council, with its opinion thereupon, in order that the necessary provisions may be made for the preservation and increase of timber.

20. Whereas the settlers now do, and will herafter want to, keep and raise cattle beyond what is wanted for the plough, as also swine for the consumption of their families or for commerce; and whereas it is expedient to aid them in this respect, the better to promote agriculture, the board shall discuss and seriously consider, according to the particular circumstances of the cases which may occur, and such others as it may observe, of the means proper to be adopted for the grant of pasture and acorn land for the use of its own cattle and no other, to such as are only herdsmen and lessees of such hereditaments; and it shall settle the amount which shall be paid of right to the proprietor, always conforming to the rule which forbids all under-leases.

21. Supposing that there be granted to each settler twenty-two fanegas and a half for each portion of land to be alternately sown, for which, as for the pasture land, he shall have to pay rent to the proprietor, in those tracts where there are lands entradizas, the board shall inquire into the quality and quantity of said lands entradizas, who holds possession of them, and enjoys their profits, and what are the customs of the country with respect to the use which is made of, and the profits which are derived from, such lands; and it shall transmit information thereof to the council, with all other facts that may occur to them, and give their opinion thereon.

22. The settlers being established, with bona fide domicil, it shall be their duty to maintain their tracts under good cultivation with their yoke of oxen and all farming utensils and implements necessary to a farmer; and in case it shall appear, from manifest decay, that he leaves his lands uncultivated, or if he becomes insolvent, without means of improving his condition, another shall be appointed in his stead; and these are the only two cases in which the land can be taken from him.

23. It shall not be lawful for the proprietor to increase the rent of the land and pasture of each tract; nor shall they be divided at the death of the settler; nor shall any charges whatsoever be imposed upon the right of possession of the house; nor shall any one tract be united with another; nor shall any land be held by any person who is not a bona fide settler, with a fixed residence in the village, conformably to the laws of the kingdom.

24. The possessor of the tract shall have power to name as his successor to the same any one of his sons or grandsons, and in default thereof, any of his daughters or granddaughters; but always under the supposition that such successor must continue in the residence of his devisor. In default of descendants, the proprietor shall have power to name another settler, giving the preference to a neighbor, if there be any without any land; and in all cases the new possessor shall make good to the heirs of the former the value of the possession of the house. All these rules, provisions, and declarations shall be understood without prejudice of any amendment or reform that time or experience may dictate; and whenever the board shall see fit to suggest any such amendment or reform, it shall give advice thereof to the council. In like manner, as it may be necessary in many cases to lay out said lands in sections less unconnected, in order that each settler may enjoy the benefits arising from lands of all qualities, the board shall examine whether it shall be expedient that the fallow and stubble lands be made commons for all the farmers of each town, as likewise the five fanegas of pasture, forming them all into a common or meadow for neat cattle; and said board shall further inquire into the manner in which the same can be done.

Lib. III, Tit. 3, Law 1—p. 25.

Observance of the Alfonsine privilege in the kingdom of Valencia.

Whereas the settlement of small villages is expedient to promote the more easy cultivation of the soil and the increase of population, I have thought fit to command, agreeably to the opinion of my council, that a republication be made, in the kingdom of Valencia, of the continuance and confirmation of the privileges granted by King Alfonso, in the cortes of the crown of Arragon held in the year 1328, by which inferior jurisdiction was granted to whoever would form a settlement of fifteen houses, and of the same number of housekeepers to occupy the same, under such conditions and circumstances as are expressed in said grant; and that as respects the extension of said grant to all other parts of Spain, as proposed by the council, said council will advise me of the manner, conditions, and forms in which it may be expedient for me to grant such favor.

Title XVI, Lib. 7.

OF THE MUNICIPAL DOMAINS [PROPIOS] AND DUTIES [ARBITRIOS] OF VILLAGES.

Law 1—p. 53.

Jurisdiction of the council over the administration of the revenues arising from the municipal domains and duties [propios and arbitrios:] his Majesty reserving to himself the granting of, and first breaking ground in the same.
[N. B.—Propios are real estate or domains, and arbitrios are certain duties granted to towns and villages, from which they derive a municipal revenue to meet their charges.]

Whereas one of the principal grievances under which villages are laboring consists in the taxes [arbitrios] and excises levied by royal authority; and whereas these grievances are increased by the want of fidelity in administering the same, and in converting their proceeds to the use of the purposes for which they were granted; whereas my desire still is that my beloved subjects be relieved in every possible way, I command the council to use the strictest diligence in making provision for the collection, without fraud or waste, of the proceeds arising from the municipal domains and taxes [propios y arbitrios] of such villages as are within the competency of the council, and that such proceeds be applied to the purposes for which they were granted, without any diversion whatsoever, agreeably to the royal resolutions enacted upon that subject, refraining, for the future, from granting to any village permission or authority to levy such taxes, because I reserve to myself the granting of the same; and it is my will that, whenever the council shall be of opinion that any village is entitled to grants of that nature, it may acquaint me with the just and precise motives upon which such opinion is founded through the channel of the treasury, and no other, in order that I may adopt the proper resolutions upon the subject. The same shall be done, likewise, with respect to the permission of first breaking ground, as is already provided. And I specially charge the council to take particular care that an account be taken annually of the municipal domains and taxes, and to advise me of the result through the same channel, agreeably to what is already ordered on the subject; bearing in mind that, without proper accountability, it is impossible to establish such rules as are suitable for the good administration of any object, and to apply the revenue derived from the municipal domains and taxes, after satisfying the rents and charges, to the redemption of debts, and to other purposes useful to the public, as required by the condition of the villages.

Lib. VII, Tit. 24.

OF TIMBER LANDS [MONTES] AND NURSERIES [PLANTIOS.]

Law 1 (in addition to Law 28—p. 56.)

Complement to the ordinance concerning timber lands of 1748, and to the one in addition thereto of 1751.

I command that the royal order [cedula] of the 20th February, and that of the 2d May, of the present year, be strictly carried into effect; and that, consequently, matters remain in the same state as before the royal decree of the 1st of May, 1802, (law 28,) and in that in which they ought to be in conformity to the general ordinance respecting timber lands [montes] of the year 1748, (law 21,) and to the one in addition to it of 1751, (law 23,) and to the royal order of December 31, 1800, (law 27;) and that, agreeably thereto, all the sub-delegates created by virtue of said royal decree of the 10th of May, 1802, be discontinued with respect to all matters relating to the economy, government, and litigation respecting timber lands, without changing anything in whatever was, previously thereto, entrusted to the justices; these remaining subject, in such matters, to the marine jurisdiction exercised by the captains general of the departments, and to the military commandants in the respective provinces.

Lib. VII, Title 25.

OF THE COMMONS AND PASTURE GROUNDS.

Law 1 (in addition to Law 14, Nov. Rec.)—p. 56.

Privilege of possession granted to the owners of flocks, members of the Mesta, (a body composed of the owners of cattle in Spain,) of the commons belonging to military orders, as well as of all others.

I have resolved that the herdsmen [ganaderos] who are members of the council of the Mesta, shall enjoy the right of possession in all the commons belonging to the military orders, in the same manner as in those which are the property of prelates, ecclesiastical communities, and private secular persons, notwithstanding the orders issued against their being so subject to this right of possession; with this proviso, that if, in the commons belonging to prelates, communities, and seculars, the pasture be fit for neat cattle, or calculated to produce acorns or fruits of more value than grass, such herdsmen shall not enjoy said right of possession, nor shall they enjoy the same in commons belonging to the orders which shall possess the aforesaid qualities; provided, further, that as regards those herdsmen who are called stationary, [estantes,] and who do not drive their cattle from their own grounds and limits to graze during the winter and summer, and who might have rented commons belonging to the orders of Santiago and Calatrava, this be understood so as to preserve to them their pastures within the same, agreeably to my royal order issued on the 15th of March, 1734, in favor of the inhabitants of the nineteen towns of the district of Serena, respecting the commons, so called, and belonging to the order of Alcantara. That the chamber of council of one thousand five hundred shall have cognizance of, and jurisdiction over, the question of possession of all the commons of the kingdom, (those of the orders being included,) of taxes and all matters connected therewith; and that the council of treasury shall take cognizance only of all matters of administration, collection of rents, recovery of moneys, and letting out of commons belonging to orders, and of all matters connected therewith.

Law 4, title 8, book 2, of the Novisima Recopilacion, published in Madrid in the year 1805.

Whereas some persons in our kingdoms hold and possess some cities, towns, and villages, and civil criminal jurisdictions, without having for them either our title or that of the Kings, our predecessors, and it is doubtful if the said persons could acquire against us and our crown for any time, we ordain and command that immemorial possession, proved according to, in conformity with, and with the qualities which the law of Toro requires, which is law 1, title 17, book 10, that it may suffice to give title against us and our successors to any cities, towns or villages, or places of civil or criminal jurisdiction, and anything or part of it, with the things to the sovereignty and jurisdiction annexed and belonging, provided that the said time of the said prescription shall not be interrupted nor charged by us or by our order, or otherwise in our natural or civil name.

Law 1, title 17, book 10, to which the foregoing refers, is as follows:

We order that the [Mayorasgo] inheritance may be proved by the writing of the institution of it with the writing of the [licentia] authorized officer of the King who gave it, the said writings being such as to entitle them to credit; or by witnesses who may depose which the law directs of the tenor of the said writings, and likewise by immemorial custom proved with the qualities which the said effects or inheritances derive from their previous possession. It is to know that the elder legitimate children and their descendants succeeded to the said effects by means of inheritance, in case the possessor of it shall have left other legitimate children, without giving them of what they succeed to in the said estate anything or equivalent for the succession in it; and that the witnesses be of good repute, and that they say that thus they saw them for the period of forty years, and thus they heard it said of their elders and ancestors, and thus they always saw and heard, and also that they never saw or heard say to the contrary, and that, regarding it, it is the public voice and reported and common opinion amongst the neighbors and inhabitants.

Royal decree abolishing the department called "Gobernacion de Ultramar," government of the possessions beyond sea, and re-establishing the Universal Ministry of the Indies, on the same footing as in the year 1787.

By this my royal decree, the department called "government of possessions beyond sea" is abolished, and the universal ministry of the Indies is restored, such as it had existed from the remotest times to July 8, 1787. You will take notice of the above for its fulfilment, in whatever concerns you, and communicate copies of this decree to the other departments of the universal despatch. Vol. 1, p. 110.

Royal decree of his Majesty, re-establishing the Chamber of the Indies, (Camara de Indias,) with the powers it possessed in May, 1808, being composed, for the present, of the officers [ministros] herein described.

By my royal decree of this date, [see the following,] I have resolved to re-establish the royal and supreme Council of the Indies, granting to it, for the present, the powers which it had on May 1, 1808, and with the number of officers expressed in the nomination which accompany the same, confirming and ratifying, for the future, its last organization, which limits to five the number of members entitled to wear sword and robes, and to fourteen those wearing robes, independently of the attorneys, [fiscales,] also wearing robes, [togados.] And whereas the good government, eccleciastical as well as temporal, of those dominions, requires that the Chamber of the Indies, as anciently established, and with the enjoyment of equal dignity with that of Castile, should resume the exercise of its authority, without alteration in its former powers, I also have resolved to re-establish, as I hereby do re-establish, and confirm, the same. It shall consist, for the present, of the president and five ministers, three wearing robes, [togados,] and two wearing robes and swords, [de capa y espada,] who are designated in a list signed by my royal hand; but, when it shall have been reduced to the number required by the aforesaid organization, it shall only consist of the president, a minister wearing sword and robes, and three togados. You shall take notice of the above, and communicate the same to all whom it may concern.

Vol. 1, p. 107.

Royal decree re-establishing the supreme Council of the Indies, with the same powers as it existed in the year 1808, and declaring the number of ministers of which it is to consist.

The torrent of evils which afflict many of the provinces of my dominions in America; the general subversion of the public administration prevailing in others, and the disorder and confusion introduced even in the administration of justice itself, called for my royal attention from the moment that, restored through a special favor of Divine Providence to the throne, I resumed the government of my kingdoms. The desire of restoring peace and happiness among my beloved vassals in those countries has induced me to reflect seriously and maturely upon the means of attaining that object; and, after a long examination, it has occurred to me that one of the most expedient was the re-establishment of the supreme Council of the Indies. That tribunal which in all times has professed love and fidelity for the Kings, my ancestors, has always been distinguished for the zeal and correctness with which it has discharged the many and important trusts committed to it; whereby it has not only deserved their confidence, and been raised to equal honors and privileges with the royal council, but also that of the natives and inhabitants of those countries who felt how much they were indebted to that body, created for their benefit and protection, almost at the time of the discovery of that immense section of the globe. Wherefore, moved by these considerations, and sensible of the importance to the good government of those dominions, that the ministers in whom I repose my confidence should possess the peculiar abilities and information which their administration requires, I have resolved to re-establish the aforesaid council, which, for the present, shall continue invested with the same powers it possessed on May 1, 1808. It will consist, as formerly, of three permanent chambers, (Salas,) viz: two of government and one of justice, which shall be composed of the ministers named in the list signed by my hand. And whereas it is not expedient that the number of places be increased, which was fixed to five ministers with swords and robes, by royal decrees of March 13, 1760, and August 25, 1785, and to fourteen ministers, togados, two attorneys, [fiscales,] also togados, two secretaries, and one accountant, established by the decrees of July 29, 1773, February 26, 1776, and June 6 and March 11 following: it is my will that these decrees be observed by completing the number of ministers of that class, and suppressing those who exceed the number of ministers of the other class, as the same shall become vacant; and that there be always among them some ministers who shall be natives of the Indies. As soon as the council shall have entered upon the exercise of its functions they shall inquire into the changes which, in those extensive and valuable dominions, have originated from the great and extraordinary occurrences which have taken place in the mother country, and shall propose to me whatever they may think expedient for the restoration of order therein, and for the promotion of their welfare and prosperity. You will take notice of the above, and communicate the same to all whom it may concern.

Circular from the minister of war, ordering that the captains general of provinces who united in their persons the presidencies of the chanceries and audiences, be again presidents, with the same prerogatives.

The King has deemed it expedient to command that the captains general who united in their persons the offices of presidents of the chanceries and audiences by virtue of the decrees of his august father and ancestors, be again made presidents of the same, with the same prerogatives, pre-eminences, and faculties which were granted and assigned to them by said decrees.

By order of his Majesty I communicate the above for your information and fulfilment. God preserve you, &c.

Royal decree, commanding that the respective departments of state and despatch perform the same duties as in 1808, excepting those appertaining to the secretary of state and universal despatch of the Indies and to the royal house and patrimony, agreeably to the royal decrees of 22d May and 28th June last.

Desiring that the duties performed by the office of the secretary of state and despatch should follow the natural course to which my subjects are already accustomed, I have resolved that the same affairs shall pass through the offices of secretaries of state and despatch which appertained to them, respectively, in 1818, with the exception of such as belong to the secretary of state and universal despatch of the Indies, which I established by my royal decree of the 28th June last, and those which are of the resort of my royal house and patrimony, which shall pass through the office of my superior majordomo, as provided by my royal decree of the 22d May last. You will take notice of the above and adopt measures for its fulfilment.

THE DUKE OF SAN CARLOS.

Vol. 1, p. 174.

Royal order [cedula] notifying the dominions of his Majesty in America of the re-establishment of the Council of the Indies.

I, the King, have resolved, on the 2d of July of the present year, to issue a royal decree, whose tenor is as follows: [Reciting said decree, which see above.]

And the installation of my Council of the Indies aforesaid having been effected accordingly, and my said royal resolution promulgated therein, I have commanded that this my royal order [cedula] be issued, by which I enjoin all viceroys, presidents, regents, and auditors of my royal audiences in both Americas and in the Philippine islands, and pray and charge all the right reverend archbishops, the reverend bishops and chapters of the metropolitan and cathedral churches within those my dominions, they having seen my royal decree, to observe and fulfil the same and cause it to be observed and fulfilled, each in what may concern him, said viceroys causing the same to be communicated to the intendants and governors within their respective jurisdictions, in order that the latter may order it to be published within the districts under their respective command, and that it may thus come to the knowledge of all my vassals within those parts.

Vol. 1, p. 175.

Circular from the universal department [ministerio] of the Indies, commanding the chiefs and superior authorities within those dominions faithfully to observe the laws and royal orders forbidding them to permit the arrival in America of persons prohibited by those laws.

Although, by the laws of the Indies, and by subsequent royal orders, it is particularly recommended to the chiefs and superior authorities of those dominions, and to the judges of arrivals [arribadas] within the ports of the monarchy, to be careful and vigilant in not permitting the passing to the aforesaid dominions of persons forbidden to do so by said laws and orders, it is the King's pleasure again to remind and to recommend to them their observance and fulfilment with the greatest strictness, and to inform them that his Majesty will look with the highest displeasure upon any departure from the laws in that behalf. They shall, therefore, not only prevent any person from passing to the Indies without a previous and scrupulous examination of the documents, which, agreeably to recent enactments, they have a right to make, but, also, although such documents might prove sufficient, if they have good reason to believe that in the present state of those dominions it is not expedient that such person should proceed to the Indies, it shall be their duty to detain said person, giving immediate notice thereof to his Majesty through the department under my charge, setting forth the motives upon which they shall have acted, and without prejudice of the judicial proceedings which may be required by law.

By royal order I communicate the foregoing to you for your information and its fulfilment in what may concern you. God preserve you many years.

Madrid, August 7, 1814.

Vol. 1, p. 194.

Royal order of his Majesty and of the members of the council, by which it is enjoined to restore to the council the direction, government, and administration of the domains [propios] of the kingdom, with such powers and jurisdiction as it exercised formerly in matters of litigation and government, and in re-establishing the office of accountant general in that branch, and in others therein mentioned.

Don Ferdinand VII, by the grace of God King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, &c., &c., to the members of the council, presidents, regents, &c., &c: Know ye, that whereas my council continues to propose to me all that can be conducive to the good of my people, and to the promotion of all sources of public prosperity which were committed to its care by the Kings, my ancestors, at various times, and which I have confirmed to them by my royal decree of the 27th of May of the present year; and whereas one of those which have the greatest influence upon the happiness of the villages, of the provinces, and even of the whole monarchy, is the government of the municipal domains [propios] of the kingdom, said council has applied itself to the examination of this most important business; and in consideration of various representations which were made to it concerning the existence of the papers of the office of accountant general of this province, alienations of mortgages which had been made during the domination of the enemy, and various other points, the same were referred to my attorneys, [fiscales,] together with the preceding ones. These, in order to show the necessity of granting expressly and permanently to my council, the most ancient and immemorial authority by virtue of which it had, from the remotest ages of the monarchy, presided over the management, government, direction, and distribution of the municipal domains [propios] and taxes [arbitrios] of the kingdom, made a statement of the ancient resolutions, in the cortes and out of them, and of the writings which went to establish the same, of the alteration which it underwent in the year 1752, on account of the management and direction of this business having been placed in the hands of Don Pedro Diaz de Mendoza, by Don Fernando VI; of the energetic representation made by my council in consequence thereof; and of the royal resolution given by Don Carlos III, my august grandfather, in the year 1760, declaring that all the municipal domains of the kingdom were to pass under the superintendence of my council, charging it especially to take cognizance thereof, of their value and charges, and to govern and administer the same according to the instructions addressed to it in that behalf, taking an annual account thereof, in order that, being made acquainted with their proceeds, it might be ascertained whether they have been applied to the objects for which they were intended, without being diverted to other purposes to which they did not belong. They subsequently reported what progress the said branch of revenue had made under the direction of my council during the twenty-five years which intervened between the years 1760 and 1785; having demonstrated to the King and to the kingdom by their report of the 7th November, 1786, that the result of their labors had been the ascertainment of the real mortgages, [fincas,] and of the effects and revenue of the municipal domains and taxes; to systematize their management and direction, and the recovery of moneys without diversion or depredations; to discriminate between true and voluntary charges; to reform abuses and illegal expenditures; and the formation of regulations for twelve thousand five hundred and twenty-six villages, and the gain, by means of these regulations and a strict economy, of large sums in profits, savings, and capitals, amounting to three hundred and eighty-one million thirty-eight thousand four hundred and one reals and twenty-two maravedis, exclusive of the amount of ordinary and extraordinary charges provided for each village by the regulations. And after giving an account of the other changes which took place until, in the year 1803, the council recovered all its authority in this respect, and continued to enjoy the same up to the year 1808, when commenced the public calamities which afflicted the kingdom; they concluded with the opinion that the authority of my council ought to be restored over said branches of revenue in the whole extent of its ancient and characteristic functions; as also the office of accountant general, with such fixed rules and systems as it would judge most fit for the management and despatch of that business. And the same having been seen by my council which conformed in every respect to the opinion and representations of my attorneys, it acquainted me, by its report of the 12th of this month, with its views of the necessity and expediency of making known to the kingdom that the powers and jurisdiction which it formerly possessed over the municipal domains of the towns and villages had been restored to it, and that all the innovations which had been introduced under the management and application of this branch of revenue during my absence from these kingdoms had been disapproved; and, agreeably to this opinion, I have, by my royal resolution, thought fit to declare, as I hereby do declare, null and void the decrees of the cortes called extraordinary enacted in that behalf. And I command that, notwithstanding those decrees, and the other provisions enacted by the authorities which succeeded one another during my captivity, the government, direction, and administration of the municipal domains [propios] of the kingdom be restored to my council agreeably to the instructions of the 30th July, 1760, and other subsequent decrees and orders, together with the same authority and jurisdiction which it exercised in the year 1808, as well in matters of economy as in those of litigation; re-establishing the office of accountant general, although composed for the present of such officers as exist at this time, and appointing only the accountant. My council will further inform me of such other things as it may find to require reform, or which may promote the prosperity of the towns, and call for amendments of the rules by which this branch of revenue is governed.

My royal determination, above referred to, having been published in full council, its fulfilment was decided upon, and, to that end, I publish this royal order [cedula] whereby I command all and every one of you, each in your respective places, districts, and jurisdictions, to take notice, observe, fulfil, and execute the same, and to cause it to be observed, fulfilled, and executed, in whatever may concern you, without infringing or permitting it to be infringed or violated in any manner whatsoever. Such is my will, as also that the same faith and credit be given to the printed copy signed by Don Bartolomé Muñoz de Torres, my senior secretary of the chamber and government and member of my council, as would be given to the original.

Given at the Palace, the 22d August, 1814.

I, THE KING.

I, Don Juan Ignacio de Ayestaran, have caused the foregoing to be written by order of his Majesty. [The signatures follow.]

Vol. 1, p. 251.

Royal order of his Majesty and council commanding that the jurisdictional lords, so called, be reinstated in the enjoyment of the receipts of the rents, proceeds, emoluments, and rights of their territorial seigneuries and others therein mentioned.

Don Fernando VII, by the grace of God King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, &c., &c., to the members of my council, presidents, regents, &c., &c.: Know ye, that a decree of the general and extraordinary cortes, of the 6th August, 1811, incorporated to the nation all the jurisdictional seigneuries of what class and condition soever, abolished the loans [prestaciones] which had their origin in the jurisdictional title, excepting those which arose from free contracts in consequence of the right of property, leaving the territorial and freehold seigneuries in the class of other particular rights of property; and suppressing also the privileges called exclusive, peculiar, and prohibitory, which had the same origin in seigneuries, such as those of fowling, fishing, oven, mills, water privileges, commons, and others, and making other declarations. At this juncture various other representations were made to me by several grandees of Spain and titularies of Castile, by jurisdictional lords of villages, in the kingdoms of Aragon and Valencia and other provinces, complaining of the spoliations and infractions which, under pretence of said decree, they had suffered and continued to suffer in the enjoyment and receipt of the rights and profits reserved by that decree, asking to be promptly reinstated and indemnified for the damages and losses which they had sustained, and some of them asking that the same might be annulled. These representations I thought it expedient to refer for deliberation to my council, together with the royal orders of the 16th and and 20th June and 4th July of this year, who, after having heard my attorneys on these points, examined the subject with all the deliberation required by its importance. On its part, my council, having observed the care and circumspection with which said attorneys refrained for the time from expressing an opinion upon the subject of annulling said decree before they could collect all the necessary data to substantiate their opinion on so interesting matters, abstained also to enter upon the examination of that point until those officers should report their opinion thereon. As regards the reinstatement asked for by the jurisdictional lords in the enjoyment of the rights which had been taken away from them in an arbitrary manner by the towns within their respective seigneuries, although reserved to them by the decree of the cortes, the council agrees likewise with the opinion of my attorneys, who acknowledge the justice of the request and the expediency of providing without delay the proper measures to arrest the progress of so grave evils, and presented to me its opinion in a report of the 18th August, of this year, embracing, likewise, that part of the decree warning all persons who considered themselves entitled to be reinstated to present their titles to the chanceries and audiences of the district. And, agreeably to said opinion of my council, I have deemed it expedient, by my royal resolution, to order that the jurisdictional lords be immediately reinstated in the enjoyment of all the rents, proceeds, emoluments, and rights, of their territorial and freehold seigneuries, and in that of all other immunities which they had enjoyed before the 6th August, 1811, the origin of whose jurisdiction is known not to have arisen from exclusive privileges, without being therefore obliged to present their original titles; said reinstatement being understood to be accompanied by the recovery of all the proceeds and rents which have, or ought to have, accrued from the date of such spoliations, all according to these presents, and saving all that I may hereafter determine, by advice of my council, respecting the nullity, continuance, or abrogation of the decree of the general and extraordinary cortes of the 6th August, 1811, in relation to the abolition of seigneuries. This, my royal determination, having been published in full council, its fulfilment has been resolved upon, and to that end I issue this my royal order, [cedula,] by which I command all and every one of you, each in your respective places, districts, and jurisdictions, to take notice thereof, to observe, fulfil, and execute the same, and to cause it to be observed, fulfilled, and executed, each in whatever will concern you, without contravening, or permit or cause any contravention thereto, in any manner whatsoever. Such is my will, as also that the printed copy signed by Don Bartolemé Muñoz de Torres, my senior secretary and clerk of the chamber and member of the council, be entitled to the same faith and credit as the original.

Given at the Palace, the 15th September, 1814.

I, THE KING.

I, Don Juan Ignacio de Ayesteran, secretary of the King, have caused the same to be written, by order of his Majesty. [The signatures follow.]

Vol. 1, p. 274.

Royal order communicated by the secretary of grace and justice to the president of the council, in relation to the expediency of replacing the common and royal timber lands for the use of the marine department upon the same footing as in the year 1808, by virtue of which the decree of the 14th January, 1812, and all other orders issued since that date are repealed.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: The secretary of state for the marine department informs me, under date of the 13th instant, of the following:

The King, convinced of the necessity of providing prompt remedies for the damages accruing to the state from the scandalous cutting, burning, and destroying, and other injuries of all sorts experienced by the timber lands of the kingdom, and which threaten their ruin, and considering the repeated representations addressed to his Majesty touching this important subject, the vigilance and attention of the government becoming every day more important to the preservation of this valuable nursery of timber necessary for naval constructions and other public purposes, in consequence of the progressive diminution which it has experienced and the increasing demand for the same; the decree of cortes called general and extraordinary, of the 14th January, 1812, having abolished the office of conservator general of timber lands, and all other subordinate officers of that branch of administration, as well in the maritime as in the internal provinces, together with those of visitors, superintendents, and other inferiors, to whose care and direction were confided their preservation and increase, agreeably to the laws of the kingdom and the royal orders in that behalf enacted; his Majesty has resolved that things should be replaced on the same footing as in the year 1808, with respect to the timber lands common and royal, which are for the use of the marine; and that with regard to the timber growing on private lands, no alteration be made for the present, saving always whatever his Majesty may hereafter think fit to determine, after fully examining that point: so much of the said decree of the cortes, and whatever orders may have been issued since the aforesaid period of 1808, being consequently repealed.

By royal order I communicate the foregoing to your excellency for the information of the council and for other requisite purposes. God preserve your excellency many years.

MADRID, September 13, 1814.

The foregoing order having been published in the council, it has resolved that whatever his Majesty has been pleased to command thereby be fulfilled, and that the same be communicated to the intendants, governors, corregidors, and superior alcaldes of the kingdom, with whatever else may be necessary for that purpose.

MADRID, September 27, 1814.

Vol. 1, p. 276.

Circular from the royal council directing that, to the end that this supreme tribunal may be fully informed concerning the settlement of accounts of the municipal domains of the towns in each province, and of the possessions aliened by said towns since the year 1808, said council be advised, with the least possible delay, whether such accounts have been rendered at the accounting offices of the principal provinces up to the year 1813, together with those of the eighteen maravedis per cent and other matters therein set forth.

Whereas the office of general accountant has been re-established for the municipal domains and taxes of the kingdom, by royal decree of the 12th August last, by advice of the council and by the royal order issued agreeably thereto on the 22d of same month, (p. 194,) and communicated to you and to others charged with the execution thereof; and whereas the cognizance, direction, government, and administration of that subject has been restored to said council, such as it existed in the year 1808, said supreme tribunal being desirous of being made acquainted of the condition of the settlement of the accounts respecting the municipal domains of the towns of this province, as also of the property which has been alienated by said towns since the aforesaid period of 1808, it has resolved, by decree of this date, that you should inform it, with the least possible delay, whether such accounts have been presented at this principal office of accountant up to the year 1813, together with the proceeds of the eighteen maravedis per cent. and other impositions upon the said branches of revenue, as has been ordered; and, in case any town or towns may not have rendered such accounts, you are commanded to cause them to do it within the exact term of two months.

The supreme tribunal directs at the same time that you should cause said accountant's office to prepare a detailed statement predicated upon the regulations communicated to the towns, and upon their revenues and possessions, of such as they own at this time or may have aliened since the said year 1808, setting forth the name of the town, the description, value, and revenue of the property, according to their condition during the five years which preceded 1808, with the cause or motive for such alienation, the authority upon which it was made, and the amount for which said property was sold. Said statement should, although the property so alienated may have been destined for pasture or cultivation, exhibit, by suitable notes, what revenue it formerly yielded and the amount for which it was sold.

With respect to the duty of the treasurers and receivers of the revenue of stating and rendering accounts of the eighteen maravedis per cent. and other particular impositions, and their transmission through you to this accountant general's office, the council has further been pleased to direct you to cause that of this province to render to the council, through me, within the shortest possible delay, the said accounts, together with the excess of the eighteen maravedis per cent., and to account for the tax levied in favor of the manufactures of earthen ware, and subsequently applied, by royal order, to the exigencies of the crown, and whose collection had been confided to the said accountant general's office, either by bills in my favor or by any other means which may present themselves, and to hold in readiness any available sums, with a statement of the years to which they belong, without waiting for the settlement of the accounts, which may be done hereafter; taking, therefore, such time as may be necessary to collect all the requisite certificates, and in the meantime the acknowledgment of the receipts of said bills by this general accountant's office shall be a warrant for a temporary credit.

The foregoing is communicated to you by order of the council for its punctual observance, and it is expected that you will immediately acknowledge the receipt thereof, in order that it may be communicated to the council.

God preserve you many years.

Royal order [cedula] of his Majesty commanding the re-establishment in America and the Philippine islands of the system of government, economy, and administration of justice which existed there before the new laws, so called.

Whereas my supreme Council of the Indies was charged at the time of its re-establishment the 2d July last (page 107) to take into consideration the innovations which in those extensive and valuable possessions had arisen from the great and extraordinary occurrences which have taken place in the mother country, and to suggest to me whatever it might deem expedient to restore the best order therein and promote their welfare and prosperity, said supreme council, in their report of the 5th September, represented to me the necessity and expediency of attending as far as possible to diminish and correct the evils inflicted upon them by the provisions of the general and extraordinary cortes, so called, by introducing, without due examination and circumspection, into the system of legislation so respectfully observed during several centuries, innovations which might prove very dangerous; and, in conformity with their opinion, and with the proposition in another report of the 7th November last, as also with the representation of Don Angel Alonzo y Pantiga, ex-deputy in said cortes for the province of Yucatan, touching the re-establishment of the offices of casiques [cacicazgos] and justices of the Indians, taking into further consideration the tenor of the circulars communicated by the universal ministry of the Indies in relation to the cessation of the provincial deputations and other subjects connected with the elections of parishes and corporations, [ayuntamientos,] I have resolved the following:

1. The constitutional [ayuntamientos] corporations in the two Americas and the Philippine islands are henceforth abolished, and their functions, as limited by law, are, agreeably to the royal decree recited in the circular of the 20th June, transferred to the ayuntamientos which existed at the time that the constitution and decrees of the cortes altering the old system were received in those dominions.

2. To this end shall forthwith be re-established the ordinary alcaldes, regidors, and other chapter officers whose functions were discontinued at that period who are not disqualified by law or noted for entertaining disloyal sentiments; and said ordinary alcaldes shall exercise said jurisdiction until the day on which those who are elected at the beginning of the year shall enter upon the same, agreeably to the laws and practice in those dominions.

3. The other chapter officers shall be reinstated in their former offices, according to their nature, whether perpetual, salable, or relinquishable; wherefore the parish elections referred to in my royal decree of the 24th May of the present year are considered as null.

4. Whereas it may happen that said ayuntamientos may not contain a sufficient number of persons for their reorganization, I charge the viceroys and superior chiefs, after taking all proper information, to proceed to a temporary election of such chapter officers as may be wanting, taking care to give the preference to such relatives of the last deceased incumbents who may be qualified therefor, who may not have renounced their offices in consequence of the changes above referred to, under an impression that the same were suppressed. They shall, in proceeding to make said appointments, confer the right of property in the same, observing the usual forms of valuation, sale by auction, and others prescribed by law and by the former ordinances on the subject.

5. In like manner, and with the least possible delay, the offices of caciques and justices of the Indians suppressed by the constitutional ayuntamientos shall likewise be re-established, and their jurisdiction shall be exercised in the manner prescribed by Law 13, Tit. 7, Lib. 6, and Law 6, Tit. 3, Lib. 6 of the Compilation of the Indies, [Recopilacion de Indias,] and by other provisions in that behalf.

6. The corporations [ayuntamientos] created by virtue of the new instructions in those towns where none existed previous to their promulgation in those dominions shall be absolutely suspended, whether approved or not, as well in order that these provisions of the new laws, so called, may not be confirmed without mature investigation, as in order to avoid the inconsistency and consequent prejudice to my royal treasury which would result from some offices being made elective, and others liable to be renounced and sold, this provision is made with the assurance that, in directing the continuance of the ayuntamientos, or the establishment of new ones in those places where none exist at present, I shall take into consideration the circumstances of the towns, as the same shall be made known by the inquiries now making or to be made, and which it is the duty of the superior chiefs to communicate to me for my royal sanction.

7. The judges formerly appointed as judges of original jurisdiction shall also cease to exercise their functions and to enjoy the immunities granted to them by the said constitution and decrees of the cortes, and in their stead the functions prescribed by the laws and ordinances concerning the intendants shall be exercised by the sub-delegates, superior alcaldes, corregidors, or lieutenants, using the same denominations as practiced heretofore.

8. The aforesaid suppression of the provincial deputations shall extend to the offices of political chiefs, and their powers shall revert to the authorities and bodies which formerly exercised them.

9. The governor intendants shall resume all the powers appertaining to them before the promulgation of the constitution, so called, and shall consequently exercise said powers, as well in matters of government as in those of economy and litigation relating to the royal treasury, agreeably to the laws and ordinances respecting intendants.

10. And, lastly, it is my will that the royal audiences in those dominions may again exercise jurisdiction and power in the same manner and form as before the new regulations issued by the abovementioned cortes.

These resolutions having been communicated to my Council of the Indies on the 7th and 29th November last, it was resolved to issue this my royal order, by which I command all the viceroys, presidents, regents, and auditors of my royal audiences in both Americas and the Philippine islands to observe and fulfil, and cause the same to be observed and fulfilled, each in what may concern him; and the said viceroys and presidents shall take measures to have it immediately communicated to the intendants and governors of their respective districts, in order that they may cause the same to be promulgated within the limits of their respective jurisdictions and commands, for its complete observance.

Royal order [cedula] of his Majesty and council restoring, in behalf of the royal timber lands, commons, and municipal domains, the royal ordinance of the 12th December, 1748, concerning timber lands and nurseries, and the two offices of conservators of the same.

Don Fernando VII, by the grace of God King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, &c., to the members of the council, presidents, regents, &c.: Know ye, that King Don Fernando VI, my august uncle, having heard of the serious injury accruing to the commonwealth from the imperfect observance of the laws and ordinances of these kingdoms respecting the increase and preservation of the timber lands and nurseries, from the neglect of the justices in carrying into execution the provisions and penalties enacted for the accomplishment of this important object, to the end that said injury may not be increased and made irreparable, he issued on the 12th December, 1748, with the advice of the council, a royal order, reciting the instructions which had been framed in that behalf, and which are inserted in the title 24, lib. 7, of the Novisima Recopilacion. Repeated provisions were made by my august grandfather and father for the fulfilment of said instructions, which remained in force until on the occurring of the late disturbances the general and extraordinary cortes, so called, issued the decree of the 14th January, 1812, repealing all the provisions of the laws and ordinances relating to timber lands and nurseries, so far as they applied to those in private ownership, and suppressing the office of conservator general of timber lands, and all subaltern offices and justices appertaining to that branch, both in the maritime provinces and elsewhere, with all others subordinate thereto, of whatever denomination, and providing that all denunciations should be made before the justices of the respective towns, with the right of appeal before the territorial audiencies. In this juncture repeated complaints, requests, and reclamations were laid before my royal person, having for their object to set forth the immense injury and incalculable mischiefs accruing to the towns and to my royal treasury, with regard to the timber lands and nurseries, in consequence of the abandonment in which they had been left after the suppression of the authorities specially charged with their preservation and increase, and calling my attention, always alive to the promotion of the general prosperity of the monarchy, to the importance and extent of such notable disorders, and to the urgent necessity of providing proper and efficient remedies to correct them, whereupon I directed my council to advise me upon such measures as it might think most expedient in that behalf. In compliance with this direction, it was resolved to refer the subject, together with other previous matters, to my attorneys, [fiscales,] who, with due consideration of the resolutions enacted by the Kings, my predecessors, for promoting the growth of timber and spars, so important and necessary to the welfare of the state in all its branches, and having before them my royal decree of the 13th September last, restoring the subject upon the same footing as in 1808, as regards the common and royal timber lands for the use of the marine, reported all that was suggested to them by their zeal as to the means of repairing the mischiefs occasioned by the late disturbances and by the before-mentioned decree of the cortes, and of improving, through the closer vigilance and special protection of the government, this most interesting branch of public resources, which, having been seen and considered by my council with the most mature deliberation, said council laid its opinion before me, in its report of the 7th instant, and agreeably thereto I have judged it expedient to order the restoration, in its full force and vigor, of the royal ordinance of the 12th December, 1748, together with that of the other laws and orders in force in 1808, and to appoint the visitors, guards, and overseers, and others formerly attached to that branch of the administration, to the end that means may be adopted for its fulfilment in all its parts; restoring likewise the offices of conservator of the twenty-five leagues of the court and of the interior of the kingdon, with their respective secretaries, all which it is my will that it may be understood as applying to the timber lands, either royal, common, or belonging to the municipal domains, [propios,] those belonging to private individuals remaining free; and under this limitation I hereby repeal the said decree of the 14th of January, 1812, and all such orders as may have been promulgated since that date. All which shall be executed for the present, and until I shall have, with the advice of my council, resolved upon what may be thought most conducive to the promotion of the growth of timber, and to the economy to be observed in the better government of the timber lands. The foregoing order having been read in the council, its execution was resolved upon, and to that end I issue this my royal order, [cedula.] Wherefore I command all and every one of you, each in your respective district and jurisdiction, to take notice thereof, to observe, fulfil, and execute, and to cause the same to be observed, fulfilled, and executed, each in what will concern you, without contravening, or permitting or causing any contravention to the same in any manner whatever. Such is my will, as also that to the printed copy of this my order, signed by my secretary, Don Bartolome Muñoz de Torres, senior clerk of the chamber of government of my council, the same faith and credit be given as to the original.

Given at the Palace, the 19th October, 1814.

I, THE KING.

I, Don Juan Ignacio de Ayesteran, secretary of the King, our lord, cause the above to be written, by order of his Majesty.

Vol. 2, p. 327.

Circular from the royal council, enjoining, by royal order, the observance of the provisions in the different articles therein expressed, whose object is the fulfilment of the resolutions of the council, and of the circular of the 19th of September, 1814, concerning the settlement of accounts respecting the municipal domains of the towns, at the respective accountants' offices, down to the year 1813.

By the circular order of the 19th September, 1814, (vol. 1, p. 276,) the council thought fit to direct, among other things, that the intendants should, within the least possible delay, state whether the towns had presented at the principal accountants' offices the accounts of their respective municipal domains and revenues, down to the year 1813, together with their respective quota of the two reals and eight maravedis per centum, and of other imposts upon the same branch, agreeably to orders to that effect; and, in case any town or towns should not have presented their said accounts, as aforesaid, to urge them to do so within the precise period of two months.

In compliance with this resolution, the intendants transmitted to the council statements of the dispositions they had made for its entire fulfilment; but, after the expiration of the aforesaid period of two months, specified by the said order for the said settlement of accounts, representations were made by some of the said intendants, alleging the resistance which had been offered on the part of the corporations and municipal juntas of the domains, notwithstanding the repeated letters which had been addressed to them, and the threats of fines and other penalties provided by the instructions, but which were treated with indifference; and that, finding that their endeavors led to no results, they informed the council thereof, in order that, convinced of the neglect with which the justices managed the public revenues, said council might exercise its superior authority over said corporations and juntas, to cause them to adopt the most efficient measures to comply, without further delay, with so important an obligation; and that the omission to punish the authors of so culpable neglect would be the cause of the non-fulfilment of those supreme resolutions.

The council having taken into its consideration the subject of these representations, as also the indispensable necessity of providing a remedy to these disorders, by adding to the penalties formerly established, by the orders and instructions framed for the government of that branch, others, whose effect shall be to correct such scandalous neglect and disobedience of the provisions of the council, directed said representations to be referred to the attorney, [fiscal,] who made such report thereon as to him appeared most expedient; whereupon the council laid before his Majesty, in its report of the 11th March last, its opinion upon the subject; and, conformably thereto, his Majesty, in his royal resolution, published on the 2d instant, has been pleased to command that the provisions contained in the following articles be observed and carried into execution throughout the kingdom:

1. The corregidors and superior alcaldes shall not, at the expiration of their term, be reappointed unless they shall prove that they have previously presented all the accounts of municipal domains and revenues, down to the year 1813, at the office of the accountant of the province, by the exhibition of the letter from said office to them, without which document they shall not be consulted by the chamber respecting any jurisdiction; wherefore the proper notice shall be given thereof to said tribunal. They shall, moreover, be disqualified for promotion in the judicial career, except in particular cases where they cannot be superseded, and which shall in due time be made known to the council, who, if it think proper, shall not prevent the accountant's office from granting the aforesaid certificate, in which mention shall be made of what shall have been granted by the council.

2. The other members of the corporations and boards of municipal domains and revenues shall be deprived of their eligibility to any judicial office, except only the regidors who are freeholders, who, instead of the above penalty, shall be fined two hundred ducats each, and for every year for which the presentation of accounts within the term prescribed shall have been omitted, and this disqualification shall continue until said accounts shall have been presented, in which case, if elected, they shall continue to serve.

3. The clerks of the corporations, and fieles de fechos, shall likewise be disqualified from holding their offices, as also the stewards of the domains, until said accounts shall have been presented; and others shall be appointed in their stead, who shall discharge their duties ad interim.

4. The foregoing shall be applicable to those towns in which there are no judges of letters, [juez de letras,] in which the alcalde or alcaldes shall, besides the penalties above set forth, suffer imprisonment in the capital or head town of the district, [partido,] as provided in the orders inserted in their regulations, in addition to the fines therein imposed.

5. The amount of the fines thus levied shall be applied to the fund arising from treasury penalties, and shall be paid over to the depositary of said fund on his giving the requisite receipt for the same.

6. And, lastly, in order to do away the excuse alleged by the towns, that they have no funds arising from their domains wherewith to pay, along with the accounts, the amount of the seventeen per centum, they shall proceed to recover the large amounts standing to the credit of all, or the greater part of said towns, against the taxable inhabitants of the first and second classes. This recovery shall be made with due regard to the qualifications and circumstances of the debtors, because those of the second class who are the stewards and depositaries, and other persons who have the charge of the collection of rents or other funds applicable to the use of the councils, governments, and corporations, do not deserve the same favor and indulgence as those who are chargeable in the first instance, with balances of rents for the leases of municipal domains and lands, and for taxes or other debts of that description. With this knowledge and distinction, they shall proceed to recover all said debts, from all persons able to pay the same, immediately; and to such as are unable to do so, without involving themselves in ruin, a moderate delay shall be granted, at the discretion of the intendants, upon such security as they may require, according to the ability of each, in order that the amount may be levied upon them, or process instituted against the sureties, and always in such a way as not to inflict, knowingly, any serious injury upon the debtors, or leave them without any means whatsoever of living. The amounts recovered in this manner shall be paid over to the treasury and depositary of rents in the capitals of each province, so as to cover the sums due by the towns for the seventeen per centum for every year for which the same shall not have been paid.

And whereas, it is commanded, in the 2d article, that the persons therein mentioned shall incur the aforesaid penalties and forfeitures, if said accounts be not presented within the term as set forth, the council has been pleased to direct that you grant them such further delay as may appear to you to be expedient and necessary, provided it shall not exceed three months with respect to the accounts in arrear to the end of 1813; and, as regards those for the year 1814 and the following, the foregoing provisions shall be executed within the term prescribed by these orders and instructions.

The foregoing is communicated to you by order of the council, for your information, and its fulfilment within the province under your command. You will acknowledge its receipt, that I may lay the same before the council.

God preserve you many years.

Royal order [cedula] providing for the observance in the two Americas, and the Philippine islands, of the regulation respecting the audiences of the year 1776, with regard to the number of ministers, without altering their present compensation, until the enforcement of the new regulations framed for each of the said tribunals.

By the King: The general and extraordinary cortes so called, by a regulation of the 9th October, 1812, made material alterations in the organization of the superior courts of justice throughout my dominions, by reducing, in some respects, their powers, extending them in others, repealing the former distinction between the offices of auditor and criminal alcaldes, and ordering that suits by petition should be heard and decided by turn by the magistrates of each audience, and not before those by whom the parties to the suit thought themselves aggrieved, as was formerly ordered and practiced. In order that said trials, by turn, should be introduced in the Indies, the said cortes directed that the audiences of Mexico and Lima should consist of one regent, twelve ministers, and two attorneys, [fiscales,] and the others of one regent, nine ministers, and two fiscals, the presidency of said audiences being, to all intents, vested in the regent. In order to complete this number, the regent filled some vacancies, and was to supply them all; but, in consequence of my return and restoration to the throne, this was not realized, and hence the known inequality prevailing at this time in my audiences and in the royal chanceries within those dominions. On the re-establishment of my Council of the Indies, it entered upon the examination of these innovations; and, agreeably to the opinion set forth in its report of the 5th September of last year, I have judged it expedient to resolve that said tribunals and audiences be re-established upon the same footing and with the same powers as in the year 1808. My council purposely omitted, in their said report, the point in relation to the number of auditors, alcaldes, and attorneys who were to compose the said audiences, because, in so important and interesting a point as the correct administration of justice, it was proper to reserve it for a more mature and separate investigation. This was accordingly done; and having heard the accountant and my attorney, having before it the title of the laws which treat of the audiences of the Indies, the regulations issued on the 11th March, 1776, and 27th of the corresponding month in the year 1788, and those framed by the aforesaid cortes, said council, in its report to me of the 7th April last, demonstrated the necessity of adopting, in relation to this important subject, such measures as would present the least inconveniences; and being desirous of forthwith attaining this desirable end, and convinced that it was to be found in the said regulations of 1776, on account of the advantages it possesses in relation to the number of places over that of 1788, it expressed its opinion that I ought to accept and prefer it with regard to the audiences of Cuba, Caraccas, and Cuzco, as applicable only to the number of places, including the former ones of presidents, without making any alterations as to the present compensation; and to be understood only in relation to the present time, and until the viceroys, captains general, and presidents of audiences, taking into consideration the education and customs of the inhabitants of all classes in their respective districts, their extent, population, riches, trade, remoteness from the throne, powers of the audiences, and other points touching the subject, shall transmit authentic information, and their opinion thereupon. The council further represented to me that, in the event of my adopting said regulations, the chamber would take care that there should be in each audience the proper number of judges and attorneys, transfer those who should exceed that number, and consult me as to supplying vacancies. And by my royal resolution, promulgated on the 9th May last, I have deemed it expedient to conform to the advice of my council; and, consequently, it is my will that the audiences of my dominions in the Indies, besides their respective presidents, be composed of the number of ministers prescribed in the said regulations of 1776; that is to say, those of Mexico and Lima of one regent and ten auditors, five criminal alcaldes, and two fiscals, one civil and another criminal; those of Guadalajara, Guatemala, Cuba, Manila, Charcas, Chile, Santa Fé, Quito, Buenos Ayres, Cuzco, and Caraccas, of one regent, five auditors, and two fiscals, civil and criminal, without alteration in the compensation now received by them. And to the end that such regulations may be framed as shall best suit each audience for the future, I command all my viceroys, governors, captains general, and presidents of audiences, in both Americas and the Philippine islands, to collect all the necessary information and data, and to transmit the same, together with the advice of the tribunals and their opinion thereon. Such is my will, and the general accountant's office for the Indies shall take notice of this my royal order [cedula.]

Royal decree suppressing the universal ministry of the Indies, and directing all its business to be distributed among the other departments, according to its nature.

Being fully convinced of the advantages accruing to my subjects both in Spain and the Indies from the practice of causing the business of the same nature to be transacted and despatched in the respective ministries [departments] of Spain, I have judged it expedient to suppress, as I hereby do suppress, the universal ministry of the Indies; and I command that its business be distributed among the departments, according to its nature, in the same manner as was directed by my august father, by decree of the 25th April, 1790; and, in order that the expenditures be not increased, but, on the contrary, reduced, if possible, it is my pleasure that, in order to carry this, my royal decree, into full effect, the respective ministries [departments] select from among the present officers of the universal ministry of the Indies hereby suppressed as aforesaid, such persons as may be considered as qualified and necessary in each department. And in consideration of the distinguished services and abilities of Don Miguel de Lardizabal, my secretary of state for the universal despatch of the Indies, I have resolved to reserve to him a seat in the council of state, with the salary and perquisites appertaining to that office, as enjoyed by the others of his rank. You shall take notice of the foregoing, and communicate the same to all whom it may concern. Signed with the royal hand of his Majesty.

Circular from the minister of finance, directing that the royal council, agreeably to the royal order of the 30th July, 1760, communicate through that department, and not through that of grace and justice, in all matters concerning municipal domains and revenues.

Under this date I communicate the following to the royal council:

Don Manuel Silvestre Rubio, having recently represented to the King that the council has not fulfilled the repeated orders issued by his Majesty through this department, commanding that he should be placed in possession of the office of clerk which his Majesty has been pleased to confer upon him in the office of accountant of the municipal domains and revenues of the kingdom, and the King being thereby informed that notwithstanding the order communicated to the council and to the department of grace and justice, on the 4th June last, the council still continues to transmit the reports touching the municipal domains and revenues through the last-mentioned department, and that said department still takes cognizance and exercises jurisdiction over the affairs appertaining thereto, as it began wrongfully to do from the happy restoration of his Majesty to the throne. His Majesty has heard with displeasure the want of compliance with the aforesaid order of the 4th June, and therefore he has been pleased to command that the royal order [cedula] of the 30th July, 1760, be revived in all its force and vigor, so far as it provides that the council shall, in all matters concerning the affairs of the municipal domains and revenues, communicate through the treasury department, and that the department of grace and justice abstain from all interference therein.

By order of the King I communicate the foregoing to you for your information, and its fulfilment in that part which concerns you. God preserve you many years.

Circular from the royal council, granting to the corregidors and superior alcaldes appointed by his Majesty in the seigneurial towns the privilege of presiding over the boards of municipal domains and revenues, as was determined with respect to the royal granaries.

The council having been made acquainted with the doubts which have arisen, whether the superior alcaldes appointed by his Majesty within the seigneurial towns had the right of presiding over the board of public granaries which had been taken from them by the royal order and instruction of the year 1792, relative to the public granaries, has deemed fit to declare, as a general rule, in a royal order communicated by the accountant general of public granaries of the 1st of June of this year, that the superior alcaldes appointed by his Majesty in the seigneurial towns shall, like those of royal towns, enjoy the power and sole jurisdiction of presiding over the boards of public granaries, exercising the same functions as now belong to them as judges thereof, and without prejudice of any further provisions which it may be thought expedient or necessary to adopt for the future.

And now, on account of similar doubts having been suggested by the corregidor and corporation of the village of Chinchon, relative to the presidency of the board of municipal domains, the council has resolved to direct a circular to be issued, to the end that the corregidors and superior alcaldes appointed by his Majesty in the seigneurial towns may enjoy, for the present, as in the royal towns, the right of presiding not only over the boards of public granaries, as declared by the council in its circular of the 1st of June last, but also over those of municipal domains.

I communicate the foregoing to you, for your information and its fulfilment as to so much thereof as concerns you, and to the end that you may communicate the same to the justices of the towns within your district. You will please acknowledge its receipt.

God preserve you many years.

Circular from the royal council, directing the justices of the towns to inquire concerning the lands occupied as hunting grounds within their neighborhood, and set apart as belonging to the royal patrimony, distinguishing such as are fit for cultivation from those which are calculated for pasture; and for other purposes therein set forth.

Under date of the 23d of March, 1808, his excellency Don Pedro Cevallos communicated to the council the following royal order:

SIR: Under date of yesterday, the King has addressed to me the following royal decree:

Being desirous to promote, by all means in my power, the welfare of my beloved vassals, and convinced of the advantages which would accrue to the city of Madrid and to other neighboring towns, from the improvement of the hunting grounds, and from the destruction of the wolves, foxes, and other noxious animals, whereby many barren tracts of land would be brought into cultivation, the cattle for the consumption of Madrid be supplied with pasture, and the city with wood and coal, I have resolved to carry this project into execution; but, as the important cares by which I am surrounded prevent my attending, at this time, to the manner in which it may be done, I reserve to myself the right of adopting the most proper measures for that purpose, and, in the meantime, you will give publicity to this, my royal decree, and propose to me such ideas as may appear most expedient.

ARANJUEZ, March 22, 1808.

DON PEDRO CEVALLOS.

By royal order I communicate the foregoing to your excellency for the information of the council, in order that you cause the same to be published.

And on the 2d April of the said year 1808, the said Don Pedro Cevallos addressed to his excellency the Duke del Infantado, president of the council, the following communication:

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: By royal decree of the 22d March last, his Majesty was pleased to direct me to propose to him such ideas as might appear to me most expedient for the improvement of the hunting grounds, and the destruction of the wolves, foxes, and other noxious animals. Anxious to show myself worthy of such honorable confidence, it has occurred to me that no means could be more efficient in attaining that object than a reference to the knowledge, wisdom, and prudence of a tribunal the most respectable in every respect, and which so deservedly enjoys the unbounded confidence of the nation. I consequently hope that the royal council will convey to his Majesty, through me, whatever may appear to it to be expedient in relation to the subject, as applicable to the warren and parks belonging to the royal grounds, and offer its opinion with all the freedom it may think fit. The above is communicated to your excellency, that you may lay the same before the council for its co-operation in the benevolent designs of the monarch who glories in being the father of his subjects.

The royal order and communication herein enclosed were laid before the council, by order of the supreme central board of government of the kingdom, on the 6th November of said year. In order that said council might proceed with full knowledge of the subject to execute that trust, it was determined, by resolutions of the 25th of April and 26th of November of said year 1808, that, after having heard the attorneys, sindics general, and stewards, and the deputies of the commons, [comun,] you should inform it, through me, with all the promptness required by so important a subject, of what lands are occupied as hunting grounds in the vicinity of the town; what parts are calculated for cultivation and what for pasture; what portions are entirely enclosed, and how long they have been converted into parks; that this operation should be confined to a mere inspection of the land by the members of the corporation and the deputies who may be acquainted with the subject, and to collecting all other information which, by virtue of their office, they may deem useful, and which they may derive from the knowledge of intelligent private individuals, without recurring to the forms of a judicial inquiry, they availing themselves, likewise, of the papers which must have been preserved in the archives of the town, the whole without incurring any costs or expenditure of any money whatever.

In consequence of the occurrences which took place, the orders of the council issued in compliance with the benevolent intentions of his Majesty remained without effect.

At this juncture, his excellency Don Pedro Cevallos, under date of the 30th of December last, communicated the following royal order to the Duke del Infantado, president of the council.

Most Excellent Sir: The King having, from the first moment of his restoration to the throne, been desirous to give to his beloved vassals the most authentic testimony of his love, has suffered no opportunity to escape of doing so, in spite of the great obstacles placed in his way by the circumstances of this melancholy epoch. Among the objects of his benevolence and of his paternal solicitude, one of the most efficient has been to deprive himself, for the benefit of agriculture in the vicinity of the capital, of the lands which had been laid out by his predecessors into parks for the innocent amusement of the chase, in order to put them under cultivation. He resolved, consequently, to submit cheerfully to a sacrifice which deprived him of his recreation; but, wishing at the same time to reconcile the interests of the royal patrimony with those of the towns who were to enjoy this benefit, he consulted the supreme council of Castile respecting the mode of carrying it into effect. The unfortunate occurrences which soon took place prevented the royal intentions from being fully fulfilled, and nothing could then be done. His Majesty having, through Divine Providence, been restored to the throne, and retaining the same ideas in behalf of his loyal vassals, who, through the late glorious struggle, have not shown themselves unworthy of his kindness, he has resolved that the said tribunal perform the trust confided to it with all possible promptness, and with that wisdom and zeal which constitute its character. I communicate the foregoing to your excellency, by royal order, for the information of the council.

The council, upon a view of proceedings above referred to, and of the opinions of the attorneys, has resolved to direct you, most particularly, to execute with the least possible delay, and without permitting any procrastination in a subject of so much importance, the provisions of the 25th of April and 26th of November, 1808, and to acknowledge the receipt of this order by return of mail.

I communicate the foregoing to you, by order of this supreme tribunal, for your information and its fulfilment in such parts thereof as concern you.

God preserve you many years.

Royal order [cedula] suppressing the universal ministry of the Indies, and distributing its affairs in the manner therein set forth, with other matters therein expressed.

I, the King. One of my first cares, after my happy restoration to the throne of my forefathers, has been particularly to fix my attention upon the inhabitants of the Indies, where an intestine and desolating war has reduced to the last stage of misery some of the finest provinces. Being informed of the melancholy condition of many of the towns, and of the necessity, if possible, of putting an end to so serious misfortunes, it occurred to me that one of the first measures to be adopted was the re-establishment of the universal ministry, formerly instituted for the purpose of taking cognizance of all the affairs of that extensive country; but, having subsequently discovered that this remedy was not sufficient for so great evils, and convinced that useful benefits would accrue to my subjects in Spain and the Indies, if the affairs of the same nature in both hemispheres were transacted and despatched by the respective ministries of Spain, I judged it expedient to suppress, as I accordingly did, by my royal decree of the 18th September last, (vol. 2, p. 665,) the aforesaid ministry of the Indies, commanding, in proper time, that its affairs should be divided and distributed between them, according to their respective classes, upon the same terms which were provided by my august father in his decree of the 25th of April, 1790. My royal resolution above referred to having been examined in my supreme board of state, with a view to its more complete fulfilment, and due regard being had, among other things, to the convenience resulting from uniformity in the transaction of the affairs of the Indies and of Spain as being both integral parts of one nation, agreeably to their opinion, I have resolved and commanded: 1. That the suppression of the universal ministry of the Indies be carried into effect. 2. That the respective secretaries of the despatch take care that the necessary departments for the Indies be immediately organized, entirely distinct from those of Spain. 3. That the persons who shall compose the same be acquainted with American affairs; or, at least, possessing the proper qualifications for the efficient discharge of those duties. 4. That, in order to avoid the delays which they might be subjected to, and to remove all motives of confusion, the affairs of the Indies be weekly laid before me, at the despatch, by the secretaries to whom they respectively belong, they taking particular care that the same be totally separate from those of the peninsula. 5. That where the concurrence of one or more ministries shall be necessary, orders be mutually communicated for their punctual, speedy, and simultaneous fulfilment. 6. That the important affairs of the Indies and Spain be treated with equal preference in the council and in the supreme board of state. 7. That my supreme Council of the Indies consult with me in all the affairs of importance with that zeal and knowledge for which it has been known ever since its establishment. 8. And that hereafter the same tribunal issue in the form of order [cedula] all the resolutions which have the force of law. Consequently, I hereby command all viceroys, governors, presidents, regents, and auditors of my royal audiences in both Americas and the Philippine islands, and all other authorities and persons herein concerned, to take notice of this my royal order, [cedula,] and to understand the same for its punctual fulfilment in all that may concern them.

SAN ILDEFONSO, August 24, 1770.

The lieutenant general, Don Alexander O'Reilly, in his letter No. 33, written at this place under date of the 1st of March, transmitted to me copies of the three instructions framed for the lieutenant governor, established in the Ilioneses, that of the Natchitoches and the nine particular lieutenants of the partidos [districts] of this province. He states that he repaired in person to Pointe Coupée, [Punta Cortada,] and that he appointed, at the instance of the inhabitants, a surveyor for each partido [district] for the purpose of surveying their land, with one-half the salary heretofore allowed them. He encloses one set of instructions, which explain the mode of proceeding in that behalf, and states that the grants of lands within this province have been intrusted by his Most Christian Majesty to the governor and commissary ordonnateur, and that he considers it expedient that henceforth the governor alone be authorized by his Majesty to make such grants, and that he be directed to conform, in the distribution of the royal lands, to all the provisions contained and published upon this subject.

The King having been made acquainted with the dispositions of said lieutenant general, and with what he proposes on the subject, has approved the same, and directs that you and your successors in said government have the sole power of distributing the royal lands, conforming in all respects, as long as his Majesty shall not make any other provisions, to the said instructions, dated from this city on the 18th of February of this year. All which I communicate to you for your own government and for its fulfilment, and I pray God to preserve you many years.

I enclosed to your honor a printed copy of the law of the 27th of September last, commanded to be kept, complied with, and executed by a royal order of the 18th of October subsequent, declaring suppressed all entailed estates of primogeniture, [mayorazgos] trusts, [fidei comidos] rights of presentation, [patronatos,] and everything else expressed therein, that your honor may please to order its observance by those to whom it corresponds, and advise me of the receipt. God preserve you many years.

The LEARNED JUDGE, Florida.

Printed copy referred to above is translated as follows:

Grace and Justice.

By a decree of the 12th of this month the King has been pleased to direct to me for circulation the following law:

Don Fernando VII, by the grace of God, and by the constitution of the Spanish monarchy, King of the Spains. To all who shall see and hear these presents, be it known that the cortes have decreed and we sanction the following:

The cortes, after having observed all the formalities prescribed by the constitution, have decreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1. All primogenitures, trusts, rights of presentation, and every other description of entail on real property, movables, or fixtures, rents, annuities, seigneuries, or of any other kind whatsoever, are suppressed, which are from henceforward restored to the class of absolutely free.

ART. 2. The actual possessors of the entails suppressed in the foregoing article can from henceforward freely dispose as their own of half the property of which these consist, and after their death the other half shall pass to him who ought to succeed to the mayorazgo, if it subsists, that he may also dispose freely of it as owner. This half, which is reserved for the immediate successor, shall never be responsible for the debts contracted, or which may be contracted, by the actual possessor.

ART. 3. To give effect to what is ordered in the foregoing article when the actual possessor desires to alienate, in whole or in part, his half of the property entailed up to this time, a valuation and division of the whole shall be made with the intervention of the immediate successor, and with the most rigorous exactness, and if he should be absent, or under the control of the actual possessor, by the syndic of the town where the possessor resides, without his exacting for it any dues or emoluments whatever. If the above requisites should be wanting, the contract of alienation shall be null.

ART. 4. In domestic trusts, the rents of which are distributed amongst the relatives of the founder, although they may be of different lines from now, a valuation and distribution of them shall take place amongst the actual possessors of the rents in proportion to what they may receive, and with the intervention of the whole of them, and each one may freely dispose of the half of his share, reserving the other for the immediate successor, according to what is prescribed in article 3.

ART. 5. In primogenitures, [mayorazgos,] trusts, and rights of presentation which are elective, when the choice is perfectly free, the actual possessors may as owners dispose of all the property immediately; but if the election must be precisely made amongst persons of one particular family or community, the possessors will dispose only of half, and reserve the other for the successor who may be elected, the valuation and division to be made with the intervention of the syndic, as prescribed in article 3.

ART. 6. Also, in the case of the two preceding articles, as well as in that of the second, it is declared that in the provinces or towns in which, by their particular laws, is established a communication in full proprietorship of unentailed property between married persons, the property so situated is, up to the present time, subject to it, and which property the actual possessor can dispose of, and of which he or she was in the dominion of at the time of the decease of the other.

ART. 7. The encumbrances, [rent charges,] whether temporary or perpetual, by which entailed property without special mortgages is generally bound, shall be assigned in an equal proportion on the possessions distributed and divided, as has been provided, if the interested do not, by common accord, prefer another method.

ART. 8. What is commanded in articles 2, 3, 4, and 5 is not to be understood to respect those properties entailed up to this time, and about which are pending suits of incorporation or reversion to the nation, provisional possession, administration, possession, propriety, incompatibility, incapacity of possessing, nullity of foundation, or any other which may place in doubt the right of the actual possessors. In these cases, such persons nor their successors cannot dispose of their property until in the last instance the pending suits shall determine the right of proprietorship in their favor, and which shall be according to the laws made up to this date, or which shall be made in future. But it is declared that, to shun malicious delays, if he who loses the suit of possession or provisional possession should not establish the right of proprietorship within four precise months, counted from the date on which the sentence was notified, he shall not afterwards have any right to reclaim, and he in whose favor the provisional possession or possession may be declared shall be considered as a possessor in proprietorship, and can use the powers granted by article 2.

ART. 9. It is also declared that the preceding dispositions do not prejudice the demands of incorporation and revision which in the future may be renewed, although the property entailed up to the present time may have passed as free to other owners.

ART. 10. It is also to be understood that what is ordered is without prejudice to the alimony or pensions which the actual possessors have to pay to their widow mothers, their brothers, immediate successors, or other persons, according to the foundations, or particular agreements, or to judicial decisions. The properties until now entailed, although they pass as free to other owners, are subject to the payment of these alimonies and pensions whilst those who receive them now live, or while they preserve the right of receiving them, excepting that those who receive the alimony are the immediate successors, in which case they shall cease to enjoy them as soon as the actual possessors die. Hereafter the obligations which at present exist of paying such pensions and alimonies shall cease; but it is declared that if those actual possessors do not invest in the said alimonies and pensions the sixth clear part of the rent of the entailed estate, [mayorazgo,] they are obliged to contribute, with what is wanting of it, to provide a dowry for their sisters, and help their brothers in proportion to their number and necessities, and the immediate successors will have a like obligation as respects the half of the property reserved.

ART. 11. The part of the rent of the entailed estate which the actual possessors may have lawfully assigned to their wives as long as they remain widows shall be paid to these whilst they ought to receive it, according to the stipulation, satisfying the half at the costs of the unentailed property; and the other half by what is reserved for the immediate successor.

ART. 12. It is also to be understood that the preceding dispositions do not hinder that in the provinces or towns where, by the particular custom, married persons succeed each other in the usufruct of the entailed property by the way of widowhood, it shall be so done with those who are now married as respects the entailed goods which may not have been alienated when the married party possessing died, the integral half which belongs to him passing thereafter to the immediate successor as has been provided.

ART. 13. The titles, prerogatives of honor, and whatever other pre-eminences of this class the actual possessors of entails may enjoy as annexed to them, subsist on the same footing and follow the order of cession prescribed in the conditions, deeds of foundation, or other documents from which they proceed. The same shall be understood for the present, respecting the right to present to ecclesiastical livings or other appointments until it shall be otherwise determined. But if the actual possessors should enjoy two or more grandeeships of Spain or titles of Castile, and should have more than one son, they may distribute amongst these the said dignities, reserving the principal for the immediate successor.

ART. 14. No person can in future, either by bequest or by any other title or bequest, found feetail estates, trusts, presentation, chaplainry, bequest for pious uses, or any entail whatsoever on any class of property or rights, nor prohibit, directly or indirectly, their alienation. Neither can any person entail bank debentures or any other foreign funds. The churches, monasteries, convents, and all other ecclesiastical communities, as well secular as regular, hospitals, charity-houses, poor-houses, schools, confraternities, brotherhoods, commanderies, and every other establishment, whether ecclesiastical or lay, known by the name of mortmains, [manos muertas,] cannot from this time in future acquire any real or immovable property in any province of the monarchy by testament, donation, purchase, exchange, rent charges, infeudation, adjudication of rents, or in payment of rents due, nor by any title whatsoever, either lucrative or onerous.

ART. 15. Neither in future can the mortmains impose or acquire by any title, capitals at interest of any discription imposed on real property, nor impose nor acquire tributes, nor any other species of encumbrance on said property, whether consisting in the loan of any sum of money, or any part of the produce, or of any service in favor of the mortmain, and all annual encumbrances.

MADRID, September 27, 1820.

Wherefore, we order all tribunals, magistrates, chiefs, governors, and other authorities, civil, military, and ecclesiastical, of every class and dignity whatsoever, that they observe and cause to be observed the present law in all its parts. You will cause it to be made known, for compliance with it, and order that it be printed, published, and circulated. This is the rubric of the royal hand.

At the Palace, the 12th October, 1820.

By royal order I communicate this to your excellency for your information and compliance. God preserve your excellency many years.

HAVANA, August 26, 1816.

I enclose to your excellency, for information, proof, and compliance, by that sub-delegation, and officers of the royal domain, where should appear in the corresponding form a certified copy of the agreement which, on the 9th instant, I made with the most excellent Lord Don José Cienfuegos, captain general of this island and the two Floridas, suspending the proceeding commenced in the time of the most excellent lord, his predecessor and mine, on the question to which of the two authorities belongs the superintendency of the royal domain of said two Floridas; and determining that, until his Majesty shall otherwise resolve, both possessions depend on this intendancy of the army, to which is annexed the same sub-delegated superintendency general of the royal domain of this island, in all matters and incidents which may offer in this department, as is specified in said agreement. And I charge your excellency to be pleased to give me, by the first opportunity, competent advice of the receipt and consequent dispositions.

Act of accord between the captain general and intendant of Cuba, declaring their joint jurisdiction over the department of royal domain in the Floridas.

HAVANA, August 9, 1816.

In the city of Havana, August 9, 1816, the most excellent lord the governor and captain general, Don José de Cienfuego Jovellanos, and his lordship the intendant, Don Alexandro Ramirez, having seen the proceedings respecting the competition between the captain general and the intendant of this island, as to which of the authorities appertains the cognizance of the affairs of the royal domain of the Floridas, and that, from the documents collected in said proceedings, it results: 1st, that, by the royal letters patent of August 17, 1772, it is ordered "that the province of Louisiana and the city of New Orleans depend on the captaincy general and the department of the royal domain of the Havana, after the same manner as the government of Cuba;" the 2d, that, by a royal order of January 26, 1782, directed to his excellency Don Bernardo de Galves, who was at that time captain general of the Floridas, it was provided that, as superintendent of the royal domain of said provinces, he should communicate certain notices to the intendant of Louisiana; the 3d, that this department has not been uniformly governed, and since the intendancy had been established at Pensacola the intendant pro tempore considered himself independent of every authority of this island, and that he ought to exercise the functions of superintendent, respecting which the regency of the kingdom commanded information to be given to this intendancy of the army, by an order of January 19, 1813, in which is expressed, "that it not being found inconvenient that Florida depends on this captaincy general in everything respecting security and defence, neither would it be so that it should be subject in everything else to the intendancy of the army and superior council of the domain of this city;" the 4th, that, by another order of the same regency of the kingdom, of November 27, 1812, it was provided that this captaincy general and intendancy of the army should proceed in concert in the affairs of the Floridas, and proposing what they believed convenient for the administration, collection, and distribution of the public domain in said provinces; the 5th, that, finally, this intendancy was empowered for the commission of inquiry, which it conferred on Don Antonio Cabanas, suspending the said intendant pro tempore, Don Juan Ventura Morales, from which have resulted various incidences and different royal orders, all directed to the same intendancy of the army, that it may cause said affairs to be brought to a conclusion, and give an account of the results, the present chiefs, considering that his Majesty not having made any express resolution respecting the exercise of the superintendancy of the royal domain in said provinces, causes confusion in this department, which occasions serious injury to the royal service; that it is of importance that the jurisdiction of these affairs should have a common centre, and which should be the intendancy of the army, as well from analogy as because the said commission of inquiry, and its incidences are rooted in it, and by the virtual tenor of said royal orders; and that it is also of importance to reunite the cognizance of the economical department of said provinces, to inquire into their income and expenditure, and to make proper regulations on those points, granting that they depend on these royal coffers for their principal disbursements, which are the expenses of the garrison—having minutely examined everything referred to, and assuming no personal powers but what may be derived from the sovereign pleasure of his Majesty, and what they deem promptly requisite for his better service, to remove doubts and embarrassments, and to give course to the various proceedings detained by this question of jurisdiction, do agree—

1st. That the point of doubt, or competition, raised in the time of the most excellent Lord Don Juan Ruiz de Apodaca, respecting the exercise of the superintendency of the royal domain in said provinces, remains reserved for the determination of his Majesty.

2d. That, in the meanwhile, both the ministers of these royal coffers, as well as their excellencies, the governor, and military and political commandant of St. Augustine and Pensacola, shall communicate directly with the intendancy of the army of this island, (it being taken for granted that, for the present, they depend upon it for all kind of aids,) in such affairs as may offer relative to the royal domain and its incidences, without preventing that the said commandants should also communicate with this captaincy general in the cases and things of the service appertaining to its powers, and which may require its cognizance.

3d. That to the intendancy of the army of this island shall belong the determination and decision of all the affairs of the royal domain, or annexed or incidental thereto in said provinces, conformably to the ordinance of the intendants of New Spain, and posterior royal orders, and, consequently, their excellencies the governor and commandant of St. Augustine and Pensacola, as sub-delegates, shall observe towards the said intendancy the respective subordination which the said ordinance provides. All which shall be taken notice of, and observed, until the sovereign determination on the first point of this joint resolution; and that the captain general and intendant of the army shall, between them, treat of those matters which may offer and require their reciprocal and united concurrence, with the harmony and concord which the good of the service exacts, and giving an account to his Majesty, with certified copies of the documents they have had before them. With which this act was concluded, and they signed it.

LOUISIANA.—EXTRACT FROM THE GRANT TO CROZAT.

Louis, by the grace of God King of France and Navarre, to all who shall see these present letters, greeting:

The care we have always had to procure the welfare and advantage of our subjects, having induced us, notwithstanding the almost continual wars which we have been obliged to support from the beginning of our reign, to seek for all possible opportunity of enlarging and extending the trade of our American colonies, we did, in the year sixteen hundred and eighty-three, give our orders to undertake a discovery of the countries and lands which are situated in the northern part of America, between New France and New Mexico; and the Sieur de la Sale, to whom was committed that enterprise, having had success enough to confirm a belief that communication might be settled from New France to the Gulf of Mexico, by means of large rivers; this obliged us, immediately after the peace of Ryswick, to give orders for the establishing a colony there, and maintaining a garrison, which has kept and preserved the possession we had taken, in the very year 1683, of the lands, coasts, and islands, which are situated in the Gulf of Mexico, between Carolina on the east, and Old and New Mexico on the west. But a new war having broken out in Europe shortly after, there was no possibility, till now, of reaping from that new colony the advantages that might have been expected from thence, because the private men, who were concerned in the sea trade, were all under engagements with other colonies, which they have been obliged to follow: And whereas, upon the information we have received concerning the disposition and situation of the said countries known at present by the name of the province of Louisiana, we are of opinion that there may be established therein a considerable commerce, so much the more advantageous to our kingdom, in that there has hitherto been a necessity of fetching from foreigners the greatest part of the commodities which may be brought from thence, and because, in exchange thereof, we need carry thither nothing but commodities of the growth and manufacture of our own kingdom, we have resolved to grant the commerce of the country of Louisiana to the Sieur Anthony Crozat, our counsellor, secretary of the household, crown, and revenue, to whom we intrust the execution of this project. We are the more readily inclined hereunto, because his zeal, and the singular knowledge he has acquired in maritime commerce, encourage us to hope for as good success as he has hitherto had in the divers and sundry enterprises he has gone upon, and which have procured to our kingdom great quantities of gold and silver, in such conjunctures as have rendered them very welcome to us.

For these reasons, being desirous to show our favor to him, and to regulate the conditions upon which we mean to grant him the said commerce, after having deliberated this affair in our council, of our certain knowledge, full power, and royal authority, we, by these presents, signed by our hand, have appointed, and do appoint, the said Sieur Crozat, solely to carry on a trade in all the lands possessed by us, and bounded by New Mexico, and by the lands of the English of Carolina, all the establishments, ports, havens, rivers, and principally the port and haven of the Isle Dauphine, heretofore called Massacre; the river of St. Louis, heretofore called Mississippi, from the edge of the sea as far as the Illinois, together with the river St. Philip, heretofore called the Missourys, and of St. Jerome, heretofore called Ouabache, with all the countries, territories, lakes within land, and the rivers which fall directly or indirectly into that part of the river of St. Louis.

THE ARTICLES

1. Our pleasure is, that all the aforesaid lands, countries, streams, rivers and islands, be and remain comprised under the name of the government of Louisiana, which shall be dependent upon the general government of New France, to which it is subordinate; and, further, that all the lands which we possess, from the Illinois, be united, so far as occasion requires, to the general government of New France, and become part thereof; reserving, however, to ourselves the liberty of enlarging, as we shall think fit, the extent of the government of the said country of Louisiana.

3. We permit him to search for, open, and dig, all sorts of mines, veins, and minerals, throughout the whole extent of the said country of Louisiana, and to transport the profits thereof into any port of France, during the said fifteen years; and we grant, in perpetuity, to him, his heirs, and others, claiming under him or them, the property of, in, and to, the mines, veins, and minerals, which he shall bring to bear, paying us, in lieu of all claim, the fifth part of the gold and silver which the said Sieur Crozat shall cause to be transported to France, at his own charges, into what port he pleases, of which fifth he will run the risk of the sea and of war, and the tenth part of what effects he shall draw from the other mines, veins, and minerals; which tenth he shall transfer and convey to our magazines in the said country of Louisiana.

We likewise permit him to search for precious stones and pearls, paying us the fifth part, in the same manner as is mentioned for the gold and silver.

We will that the said Sieur Crozat, his heirs, or those claiming under him or them the perpetual right, shall forfeit the property of the said mines, veins, and minerals, if they discontinue the work during three years; and that in such case the said mines, veins, and minerals shall be fully reunited to our domain, by virtue of this present article, without the formality of any process of law, but only an ordinance of reunion, from the sub-delegate of the intendant of New France, who shall be in the said country; nor do we mean that the said penalty of forfeiture, in default of working for three years, be reputed a comminatory penalty.

7. Our edicts, ordinances, and customs, and the usages of the mayoralty and shrievalty of Paris shall be observed for laws and customs in the said country of Louisiana.

Given at Fontainbleau, the fourteenth day of September, in the year of Grace 1712, and of our reign the seventieth.

LOUIS.

By the King:

PHILIPEAUX, &c.

Registered at Paris, in the parliament, the four and twentieth of September, 1712.

[The articles omitted relate to commercial or temporary regulations. Crozat surrendered his grant to the Crown in 1717, in which year Louisiana was granted to the "Western Company," with the same extent as it had been granted to Crozat. The Western Company surrendered their grant to the Crown in 1730-'40.]

ROYAL ORDER, [DESPACHO.]

Don Carlos, by the grace of God King of Castile, Leon, Arragon, of the two Sicilies, of Jerusalem, Navarre, Grenada, Toledo, Valencia, Gallicia, Majorca, Minorca, Seville, Sardinia, Cordova, Corsica, Murcia, Jaen, of the Algarves, Algesiras, Gibraltar, of the Canary Islands, of the East and West Indies, of the Islands and Continent of the Ocean, Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, of Brabant and Milan, Count of Apsburg, Flanders, Tyrol, and Barcelona, Lord of Biscay and Molina, &c.:

Whereas I have judged it proper to retrocede to the French republic the colony and province of Louisiana, I command you, as soon as these presents are exhibited to you by General Victor, or any other officer duly authorized by said republic to receive the same, to put him in possession of the colony of Louisiana and its dependencies, together with the city and island of New Orleans, with the same limits it has at present, which it had whilst it belonged to France, and at the time she ceded it to my royal crown, and such as it ought to be found after the treaties successively concluded between my states and those of other powers, in order that, henceforth, the same may belong to said republic, and that she may cause it to be administered and governed by her own officers and governors as her own possession, without any exception whatever. I command you that, as soon as the troops of the French republic shall have taken possession of said colony, you cause to be withdrawn from it all the officers, soldiers, and functionaries who garrison or serve therein, and send them to Spain, or to other parts of my possessions in America, excepting such as shall prefer remaining in the service of France, whom you shall by no means prevent from doing so. I command, further, that after the evacuation of said posts and city of New Orleans, you cause to be collected all the papers and documents relating to the royal treasury and to the administration of the colony of Louisiana, in order to bring them to Spain for the purpose of settling the accounts; delivering, nevertheless, to the governor or other French officer commissioned to take possession, all those which may relate to the limits and boundaries of said territory, as also those which relate to the savages, (Indians,) and other places, taking due receipt for the whole, for your own discharge; and to give to the said governor all the information which may be proper to enable him to govern said colony in a manner satisfactory to said republic. And with a view that such cession be made to the satisfaction of both powers, you will make out an inventory, by duplicate, signed by yourself and by the commissioner of said republic, respectively, of all the artillery, arms, ammunition, effects, magazines, hospitals, naval constructions, &c., which belong to me within said colony; and you will proceed, jointly with said commissioner, to make an estimate and true appraisement of all the effects to me belonging in the different parts of the colony in order that their value may be reimbursed by the French government upon the footing of said appraisement. Meanwhile we hope that for the tranquillity of the inhabitants of said colony, and, we promise ourselves, from the sincere amity and close alliance which unite us to the government of the republic, that said government will issue orders to the governor and other officers employed in its service in the said colony and city of New Orleans, that the ecclesiastics and religious houses employed in the service of the parishes and missions may continue in the exercise of their functions and in the enjoyment of the privileges, prerogatives, and exemptions granted to them by the charters of their establishments; that the ordinary judges may, together with the established tribunals, continue to administer justice according to the laws and customs in force in the colony; that the inhabitants may continue and be protected in the peaceful possession of their property; that all grants or property of whatever denomination made by my governors may be confirmed, although not confirmed by myself. I hope, further, that the government of the republic will give to its new subjects the same proofs of protection and affection which they have experienced under my dominion.

Given at Barcelona, the fifteenth of October, one thousand eight hundred and two.

I, THE KING.

DON PEDRO CEVALLOS.

BARCELONA, October 16, 1802.

I transmit it to you by order of his Majesty, in order that, being informed of the same, you may, on your part, contribute to its fulfilment.

God preserve you many years.

Don Manuel Salcedo, brigadier in the royal armies, military and political governor of the provinces of Louisiana and West Florida, inspector of the veteran troops and militia of the same, royal vice-patron, substitute judge of the general superintendence of post offices, &c., and Don Sebastian Calvo de la Puerta y O'Farrill, marquis of Casa Calvo, knight of the order of Santiago, brigadier in the royal armies, and colonel of the infantry regiment stationed at Havana, commissioners on the part of his Majesty for delivering this province to the French republic:

We make known to all the vassals of the King, our master, of all classes and conditions whatsoever, that his Majesty has resolved to make a retrocession of the province of Louisiana for the mutual satisfaction of both powers; and, continuing to give the same proofs of protection and affection which the inhabitants of this province have always received, he has thought fit to settle, among other things, certain points: which we deem it our duty publicly to make known for the particular government and disposition of all whom it may concern.

1. His Majesty, in consideration of the obligations imposed by the treaties, and wishing to avoid the differences which might arise, has been pleased to resolve that the delivery of the colony and island of New Orleans, which is to be made to Major General Victor, or other officer lawfully authorized by the government of the French republic, shall be made in the same manner that it was ceded by France to his Majesty, by virtue of which the limits of both shores of the river St. Louis, or Mississippi, shall remain as irrevocably fixed by the seventh article of the definitive treaty of peace concluded at Paris on the 10th of February, 1763, and consequently the settlements from the river Manchack, or Iberville, to the line which divides the American territory from the dominions of the King shall remain in the possession of Spain, and annexed to West Florida.

2. All persons, employed in any capacity whatever, who may wish to continue under the domination of the King, shall repair to the city of Havana, or to other parts of his Majesty's possessions, unless they prefer remaining in the service of France, which they are fully at liberty to do; but if any reasonable motive should, for the present, prevent the former from fulfilling this provision, they shall in proper time make it known to their chiefs, respectively, in order that the needful may be done.

3. The generous piety of the King will not fail to continue the pensions granted to the widows and to persons retired from service, and in due time they will be made acquainted with the manner in which this shall be carried into effect.

4. His Majesty, in expressing the hopes which he entertains for the welfare and tranquillity of the inhabitants of the colony, promises to himself, from the sincere friendship and close alliance which unite the Spanish government and that of the republic, that the latter will give orders to the governor and other officers in its service within the said colony and city of New Orleans, in order that the ecclesiastics and religious houses in the service of the parishes and the missions may continue in the exercise of their functions, and in the enjoyment of the privileges, prerogatives, and exemptions which are granted to them by the charters of their establishments; that the ordinary judges may likewise continue, together with the established tribunals, to administer justice according to the laws and customs in force in the colony; that the inhabitants shall be maintained and protected in the peaceful possession of their property; that all grants and property, of whatever description, derived from the governors of these provinces shall be confirmed to them, although not confirmed by his Majesty; hoping, further, that the government of the republic will give to its new subjects the same proofs of protection and affection which they have received while under the domination of his Majesty.

5. In order that all persons interested may take such steps as they shall judge most convenient to their interests, we further make known that in all cases of doubt they may apply to either of us for whatever shall be wanted, in conformity with the royal orders and instructions given to us.

And in order that this may be known by all, we have ordered these presents to be published with the accustomed solemnity and forms, to the sound of drums, and affixed in ordinary places.

And to the end that the same may forever hereafter appear by this solemn act, the undersigned have signed these presents in the French and Spanish languages; have thereto affixed their seals, and caused the same to be countersigned by the secretaries of the respective commissions the day, month, and year above written.

ARTICLE 1. Whereas by the article the third of the treaty concluded at St. Ildefonso, the 9th Vindémiaire, an 9, (October 1, 1800,) between the first consul of the French republic and his Catholic Majesty, it was agreed as follows: "His Catholic Majesty promises and engages on his part to retrocede to the French republic, six months after the full and entire execution of the conditions and stipulations herein relative to his royal highness the Duke of Parma, the colony or province of Louisiana, with the same extent that it now has in the hands of Spain, and that it had when France possessed it, and such as it should be after the treaties subsequently entered into between Spain and other States." And whereas, in pursuance of the treaty, and particularly of the third article, the French republic has an incontestable title to the domain and to the possession of the said territory: the First Consul of the French republic, desiring to give to the United States a strong proof of his friendship, doth hereby cede to the said United States, in the name of the French republic, forever, and in full sovereignty, the said territory, with all its rights and appurtenances, as fully and in the same manner as they have been acquired by the French republic, in virtue of the above-mentioned treaty concluded with his Catholic Majesty.

ART. 2. In the cession made by the preceding article are included the adjacent islands belonging to Louisiana, all public lots and squares, vacant lands, and all public buildings, fortifications, barracks, and other edifices, which are not private property. The archives, papers, and documents relative to the domain and sovereignty of Louisiana and its dependencies will be left in the possession of the commissaries of the United States, and copies will be afterwards given in due form to the magistrates and municipal officers of such of the said

Livingston, ministre plenipotentiaire des Etats Unis, et James Monroe, ministre plenipotentiaire et envoyé extraordinaire des dits Etats, auprès de gouvernement de la république Française: Lesquels après avoir fait l'échange de leurs pleins pouvoirs sont convenus des articles suivants:

ARTICLE 1. Attendu que par l'article 3 du traité conclu à St. Ildephonse le 9 Vindémiaire, an 9, (1 Octobre, 1800,) entre le premier consul de la république Française et sa Majesté Catholique, il a été convenu ce qui suit: "Sa Majesté Catholique promet et s'engage de son côté, à rétrocéder à la république Française, six mois après l'execution pleine et entiere des conditions et stipulations ci-dessus, relatives à son Altesse Royale le Duc de Parme, la colonie ou province de la Louisiane, avec la même étendue qu'elle a actuellement entre les mains de l'Espagne, et qu'elle avait lorsque la France la possédait, et telle qu'elle doit être d'après les traités passés subséquemment entre l'Espagne et d'autres états."

Et comme par suite du dit traité, et spécialment du dit article 3, la république Française a un titre incontestable au domaine et à la possession du dit territoire, le premier consul de la république, désirant de donner un témoignage remarquable de son amitié aux dits Etats Unis, il leur fait, au nom de la république Française, cession, à toujours et en pleine souverainté, du dit territoire, avec tous ses droits et appurtenances, ainsi et de la manière qu'ils ont été acquis par la république Française, en vertu du traité susdit conclu avec sa Majesté Catholique.

ART. 3. Les habitans des territoires cédés seront incorporés dans l'union des Etats Unis, et admis, aussitôt qu'il sera possible, d'aprés les principes de la Constitution fédérale, à la jouissance de tous les droits, avantages et immunités des citoyens des Etats Unis, et en attendant, ils seront maintenus et protégés dans le jouissance de leurs libertés, propriétés, et dans l'exercise des religions qu'ils professent.

ART. 4. There shall be sent by the government of France a commissary to Louisiana, to the end that he do every act necessary, as well to receive from the officers of his Catholic Majesty the said country and its dependencies, in the name of the French republic, if it has not been already done, as to transmit it in the name of the French republic to the commissary or agent of the United States.

ART. 5. Immediately after the ratification of the present treaty by the President of the United States, and in case that of the First Consul shall have been previously obtained, the commissary of the French republic shall remit all the military posts of New Orleans, and other parts of the ceded territory, to the commissary or commissaries named by the President to take possession; the troops, whether of France or Spain, who may be there, shall cease to occupy any military post from the time of taking possession, and shall be embarked as soon as possible, in the course of three months after the ratification of this treaty.

ART. 6. The United States promise to execute such treaties and articles as may have been agreed between Spain and the tribes and nations of Indians until, by mutual consent of the United States and the said tribes or nations, other suitable articles shall have been agreed upon.

ART. 7. As it is reciprocally advantageous to the commerce of France and the United States to encourage the communication of both nations for a limited time, in the country ceded by the present treaty, until general arrangements relative to the commerce of both nations may be agreed on, it has been agreed between the contracting parties that the French ships coming directly from France or any of her colonies, loaded only with the produce or manufactures of France or her said colonies, and the ships of Spain coming directly from Spain or any of her colonies, loaded only with the produce or manufactures of Spain or her colonies, shall be admitted, during the space of twelve years, in the ports of New Orleans, and in all the other legal ports of entry within the ceded territory, in the same manner as the ships of the United States coming directly from France or Spain or any of their colonies, without being subject to any other or greater duty on merchandise, or other or greater tonnage than those paid by the citizens of the United States.

During the space of time above mentioned no other nation shall have a right to the same privileges in the ports of the ceded territory: the twelve years shall commence three months after the exchange of the ratifications, if it shall take place in France, or three months after it shall have been notified at Paris to the French government, if it shall take place in the United States; it is, however, well understood that the object of the above article is to favor the manufactures, commerce, freight, and navigation of France and of Spain, so far as relates to the importations that the French and Spanish shall make into the said ports of the United States, without, in any sort, affecting the regulations that the United States may make concerning the exportation of the produce and merchandise of the United States, or any right they may have to make such regulations.

ART. 8. In future and forever, after the expiration of the twelve years, the ships of France shall be treated upon the footing of the most favored nations in the ports above mentioned.

ART. 9. The particular convention signed this day by the respective ministers, having for its object to provide for the payment of debts due to the citizens of the United States by the French republic prior to the 30th of September, 1800, (8th Vindémiaire, 9,) is approved, and to have its execution in the same manner as if it had been inserted in the present treaty; and it shall be ratified in the same form and in the same time, so that the one shall not be ratified distinct from the other.

Another particular convention, signed at the same date as the present treaty, relative to a definitive rule between the contracting parties, is in the like manner approved, and will be ratified in the same form and in the same time, and jointly.

ART. 10. The present treaty shall be ratified in good and due form, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the space of six months after the date of the signature by the ministers plenipotentiary, or sooner, if possible.

In faith whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles in the French and English languages, declaring, nevertheless, that the present treaty was originally agreed to in the French language, and have thereunto put their seals.

Done at Paris, the tenth day of Floreal, in the eleventh year of the French republic, and the 30th of April, 1803.

Ratified 21st of October, 1803.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND SPAIN.

Treaty of friendship, limits, and navigation between the United States of America and the King of Spain.

His Catholic Majesty and the United States of America, desiring to consolidate, on a permanent basis, the friendship and good correspondence which happily prevails between the two parties, have determined to establish, by a convention, several points, the settlement whereof will be productive of general advantage and reciprocal utility to both nations.

With this intention, his Catholic Majesty has appointed the most excellent Lord Don Manuel de Godoy, and Alvarez de Faria, Rios, Sanchez Zarzosa, Prince de la Paz, Duke de la Alcudia, Lord of the Soto de Roma, and of the State of Albala, grandee of Spain of the first class; perpetual regidor of the city of Santiago; knight of the illustrious order of the golden fleece, and great cross of the royal and distinguished Spanish order of Charles the Third, commander of Valencia del Ventoso Rivera, and acenchal in that of Santiago; knight and great cross of the religious order of St. John; counsellor of state; first secretary of state and despacho; secretary to the Queen; superintendent general of the posts and highways; protector of the royal academy of the noble arts, and of the royal societies of natural history, botany, chemistry, and astronomy; gentleman of the King's chamber in employment; captain general of his armies; inspector and major of the royal corps of body guards, &c., &c., &c.; and the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of their Senate, has appointed Thomas Pinckney, a citizen of the United States, as their envoy extraordinary to his Catholic Majesty. And the said plenipotentiaries have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. There shall be a firm and inviolable peace and sincere friendship between his Catholic Majesty, his successors and subjects, and the United States, and their citizens, without exception of persons or places

ART. 2. To prevent all disputes on the subject of the boundaries which separate the territories of the two high contracting parties, it is hereby declared and agreed as follows, to wit: The southern boundary of the United States which divides their territory from the Spanish colonies of East and West Florida shall be designated by a line beginning on the river Mississippi, at the northernmost part of the thirty-first degree of latitude north of the equator, which from thence shall be drawn east to the middle of the river Apalachicola, or Catahouche; thence along the middle thereof to its junction with the Flint; thence straight to the head of St. Mary's river; and thence down the middle thereof to the Atlantic ocean. And it is agreed, that if there should be any troops, garrisons, or settlements of either party in the territory of the other, according to the above-mentioned boundaries, they shall be withdrawn from the said territory within the term of six months after the ratification of this treaty, or sooner, if it be possible; and that they shall be permitted to take with them all the goods and effects which they possess.

ART. 3. In order to carry the preceding article into effect, one commissioner and one surveyor shall be appointed by each of the contracting parties, who shall meet at the Natchez, on the left side of the river Mississippi, before the expiration of six months from the ratification of this convention, and they shall proceed to run and mark this boundary according to the stipulations of the said article. They shall make plats and keep journals of their proceedings, which shall be considered as part of this convention, and shall have the same force as if they were inserted therein.* And if, on any account, it shall be found necessary that the said commissioners and surveyors should be accompanied by guards, they shall be furnished in equal proportions by the commanding officer of his Majesty's troops in the two Floridas, and the commanding officer of the troops of the United States in their southwestern territory, who shall act by common consent and amicably, as well with respect to this point as to the furnishing of provisions and instruments and making every other arrangement which may be necessary or useful for the execution of this article.

ART. 4. It is likewise agreed that the western boundary of the United States, which separates them from the Spanish colony of Louisiana, is in the middle of the channel or bed of the river Mississippi, from the northern boundary of the said States to the completion of the thirty-first degree of latitude north of the equator. And his Catholic Majesty has likewise agreed that the navigation of the said river in its whole breadth, from its source to the ocean, shall be free only to his subjects and the citizens of the United States, unless he should extend this privilege to the subjects of other powers by special convention.†

ART. 2. Para evitar toda disputa en punto à los limites que separan los territorios de las dos altas partes contratantes, se han convenido, y declarado en el presente articulo lo siguiente, a saber: Que el limite meridional de los Estados Unidos, que separa su territorio de el de las colonias Españolas de la Florida Occidental y de la Florida Oriental, se demarcará por una linea que empieze en el Rio Misisipi, en la parte mas septentrional del grado treinta y uno al norte del equador, y que desde allì siga en derechura al este, hasta el medio del rio Apalichola ò Catahouche; desde alli por la mitad de este rio hasta su union con el Flint; de allì en derechura hasta el nacimiento del rio Sta. Maria; y de allì baxando por el medio de este rio hasta el oceano Atlantico. Y se han convenido las dos potencias en que si hubiese tropa, guarniciones, ò establecimientos de la una de las dos partes en el territorio de la otra, segun los limites que se acaban de mencionar, se retirarán de dicho territorio en el termino de seis meses despues de la ratificacion de este tratado, ò antès si fuese posible, y que se les permitirá llever consigo todos los bienes y efectos que posean.

ART. 3. Para la execucion del articulo antecedente se nombrarán por cada una de las dos altas partes contratantes un comisario y un geómetra que se juntarán en Natchez en la orilla izquierda del Misisipi, antés de expirar el termino de seis meses después de la ratificacion de la convencion presente, y procederán á la demarcacion de estos limites conforme á lo estipulado en el articulo anterior. Levantarán planos y formarán diarios de sus operaciones, que se reputarán como parte de este tratado, y tendran la misma fuerza que si estubieran insertas en el. Y si por qualquier motivo se cryese necessario que los dichos comisarios y geometras fuesen acompañados con guardias, se les darán en numero igual por el general que mande las tropas de S. M. en las dos Floridas, y el comandante de las tropas de los Estados Unidos en su territorio del sudoeste, que obrarán de acuerdo y amistosamente, asi en este punto como en el de apronto de viveres é instrumentos, y en tomar qualesquiera otras disposiciones necesarias para la execucion de este articulo.

ART. 4. Se han convenido igualmente que el limite occidental del territorio de los Estados Unidos que los separa de la colonia Española de la Luisiana está en medio del canal ó madre del rio Misisipi desde el limite septentrional de dichos Estados hasta el complemento de los treinta y un grados de latitud al norte del equador; y S. M. Catolica ha convenido igualmente en que la navegacion de dicho rio en toda su extension desde su origen hasta el oceano, será libre solo á sus subditos y á los ciudadanos de los Estados Unidos á menos que por algun tratado particular haga extensiva esta libertad á subditos de otras potencias.

*On the 24th of May, 1796, in conformity with this stipulation, Andrew Ellicott was appointed commissioner, and Thomas Freeman surveyor, on the part of the United States, for the purpose of running the boundary line mentioned in the second article of the treaty Mr. Ellicott published his journal at large in the year 1803.

†According to the definitive treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain, "the navigation of the river Mississippi, from its source to the ocean, shall forever remain free and open to the subjects of Great Britain and the citizens of the United States." Whatsoever right his Catholic Majesty had to interdict the free navigation of the Mississippi to any nation at the date of the treaty of San Lorenzo el Real, (the 27th of October, 1795,) that right was wholly transferred to the United States, in virtue of the cession of Louisiana from France, by the treaty of Paris, of the 30th of April, 1803. And as the definitive treaty of peace with Great Britain was concluded previously to the transfer to the United States of the right

ART. 5. The two high contracting parties shall, by all the means in their power, maintain peace and harmony among the several Indian nations who inhabit the country adjacent to the lines and rivers, which, by the preceding articles, form the boundaries of the two Floridas. And the better to obtain this effect, both parties oblige themselves expressly to restrain by force all hostilities on the part of the Indian nations living within their boundary; so that Spain will not suffer her Indians to attack the citizens of the United States nor the Indians inhabiting their territory, nor will the United States permit these last-mentioned Indians to commence hostilities against the subjects of his Catholic Majesty or his Indians in any manner whatever.

And whereas several treaties of friendship exist between the two contracting parties and the said nations of Indians, it is hereby agreed that in future no treaty of alliance or other whatever (except treaties of peace) shall be made by either party with the Indians living within the boundary of the other, but both parties will endeavor to make the advantages of the Indian trade common and mutually beneficial to their respective subjects and citizens, observing in all things the most complete reciprocity, so that both parties may obtain the advantages arising from a good understanding with the said nations without being subject to the expense which they have hitherto occasioned.

ART. 6. Each party shall endeavor by all means in their power to protect and defend all vessels and other effects belonging to the citizens or subjects of the other which shall be within the extent of their jurisdiction by sea or by land, and shall use all their efforts to recover and cause to be restored to the right owners their vessels and effects which may have been taken from them within the extent of their said jurisdiction, whether they are at war or not with the power whose subjects have taken possession of the said effects.

ART. 7. And it is agreed that the subjects or citizens of each of the contracting parties, their vessels or effects, shall not be liable to any embargo or detention on the part of the other for any military expedition or other public or private purpose whatever. And in all cases of seizure, detention or arrest for debts contracted or offences committed by any citizen or subject of the one party within the jurisdiction of the other, the same shall be made and prosecuted by order and authority of law only and according to the regular course of proceedings usual in such cases. The citizens and subjects of both parties shall be allowed to employ such advocates, solicitors, notaries, agents, and factors, as they may judge proper in all their affairs and in all their trials at law in which they may be concerned before the tribunals of the other party, and such agents shall have free access to be present at the proceedings in such causes and at the taking of all examinations and evidence which may be exhibited in the said trials.

ART. 8. In case the subjects and inhabitants of either party, with their shipping, whether public and of war, or private and of merchants, be forced, through stress of weather, pursuit of pirates or enemies, or any other urgent necessity, for seeking of shelter and harbor, to retreat and enter into any of the rivers, bays, roads, or ports belonging to the other party, they shall be received and treated with all humanity and enjoy all favor, protection, and help, and they shall be permitted to refresh and provide themselves at reasonable rates with victuals and all things needful for the subsistence of their persons or reparation of their ships and prosecution of their voyage; and they shall no ways be hindered from returning out of the said ports or roads, but may remove and depart when and whither they please without any let or hindrance.

ART. 9. All ships and merchandise, of what nature soever, which shall be rescued out of the hands of any pirates or robbers on the high seas, shall be brought into some port of either State, and shall be delivered to the custody of the officers of that port, in order to be taken care of and restored entire to the true proprietor as soon as due and sufficient proof shall be made concerning the property thereof.

ART. 10. When any vessel of either party shall be wrecked, foundered, or otherwise damaged on the coasts or within the dominion of the other, their respective subjects or citizens shall receive, as well for themselves as for their vessels and effects, the same assistance which would be due to the inhabitants of the country where the damage happens, and shall pay the same charges and dues only as the said inhabitants would be subject to pay in a like case; and if the operations of repair should require that the whole or any part of the cargo be unladen, they shall pay no duties, charges, or fees on the part which they shall relade and carry away.

ART. 11. The citizens and subjects of each party shall have power to dispose of their personal goods within the jurisdiction of the other by testament, donation, or otherwise; and their representatives, being subjects or citizens of the other party, shall succeed to their said personal goods, whether by testament or ab intestato, and they may take possession thereof, either by themselves or others acting for them, and dispose of the same at their will, paying such dues only as the inhabitants of the country wherein the said goods are shall be subject to pay in like cases.

And in case of the absence of the representative, such care shall be taken of the said goods as would be taken of the goods of a native in like case, until the lawful owners may take measures for receiving them. And if questions shall arise among several claimants to which of them the said goods belong, the same shall be decided finally by the laws and judges of the land wherein the said goods are. And where, on the death of any person holding real estate within the territories of the one party, such real estate would, by the laws of the land, descend on a citizen or subject of the other were he not disqualified by being an alien, such subject shall be allowed a reasonable time to sell the same, and to withdraw the proceeds without molestation, and exempt from of Spain to the dominion of the river Mississippi, and, of course, prior to the United States possessing the Spanish right, it would seem that the stipulation contained in the 8th article of the definitive treaty with Great Britain, as quoted, could not have included any greater latitude of navigation on the Mississippi than that which the United States were authorized to grant on the 3d of September, 1783. The additional right of sovereignty which was acquired over the river by the cession of Louisiana was paid for by the American government, and therefore any extension of it to a foreign power could scarcely be expected without an equivalent.

ART. 12. The merchant ships of either of the parties which shall be making into a port belonging to the enemy of the other party, and concerning whose voyage and the species of goods on board her there shall be just grounds of suspicion, shall be obliged to exhibit, as well upon the high seas as in the ports and havens, not only her passports, but likewise certificates, expressly showing that her goods are not of the number of those which have been prohibited as contraband.

ART. 13. For the better promoting of commerce on both sides, it is agreed that if a war shall break out between the said two nations, one year after the proclamation of war shall be allowed to the merchants, in the cities and towns where they shall live, for collecting and transporting their goods and merchandises; and if anything be taken from them, or any injury be done them within that term, by either party, or the people or subjects of either, full satisfaction shall be made for the same by the government.

ART. 14. No subject of his Catholic Majesty shall apply for or take any commission or letters of marque for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers against the said United States, or against the citizens, people, or inhabitants of the said United States, or against the property of any of the inhabitants of any of them, from any prince or state with which the said United States shall be at war.

Nor shall any citizen, subject, or inhabitant of the said United States, apply for, or take, any commission or letters of marque, for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers against the subjects of his Catholic Majesty, or the property of any of them, from any prince or state with which the said King shall be at war. And if any person of either nation shall take such commissions or letters of marque, he shall be punished as a pirate.

ART. 15. It shall be lawful for all and singular the subjects of his Catholic Majesty, and the citizens, people, and inhabitants, of the said United States, to sail with their ships, with all manner of liberty and security, no distinction being made who are the proprietors of the merchandises laden thereon, from any port to the places of those who now are, or hereafter shall be, at enmity with his Catholic Majesty or the United States. It shall be likewise lawful for the subjects and inhabitants aforesaid, to sail with the ships and merchandises aforementioned, and to trade with the same liberty and security from the places, ports, and havens of those who are enemies of both or either party, without any opposition or disturbance whatsoever, not only directly from the places of the enemy aforementioned, to neutral places, but also from one place belonging to an enemy to another place belonging to an enemy, whether they be under the jurisdiction of the same prince, or under several; and it is hereby stipulated that free ships shall also give freedom to goods, and that everything shall be deemed free and exempt which shall be found on board the ships belonging to the subjects of either of the contracting parties, although the whole lading, or any part thereof, should appertain to the enemies of either; contraband goods being always excepted. It is also agreed that the same liberty be extended to persons who are on board a free ship, so that although they be enemies to either party, they shall not be made prisoners, or taken out of that free ship, unless they are soldiers, and in actual service of the enemies.

ART. 16. This liberty of navigation and commerce shall extend to all kinds of merchandises, excepting those only which are distinguished by the name of contraband; and under this name of contraband, or prohibited goods, shall be comprehended arms, great guns, bombs, with the fusees and the other things belonging to them, cannon ball, gunpowder, match, pikes, swords, lances, spears, halberds, mortars, petards, grenades, saltpetre, muskets, musket balls, bucklers, helmets, breastplates, coats of mail, and the like kinds of arms, proper for arming soldiers; musket rests, belts, horses, with their furniture, and all other warlike instruments whatever. These merchandises which follow shall not be reckoned among contraband or prohibited goods, that is to say: all sorts of cloths, and all other manufactures woven of any wool, flax, silk, cotton, or any other materials whatever; all kinds of wearing apparel, together with all species whereof they are used to be made; gold and silver, as well coined as uncoined; tin, iron, latten, copper, brass, coals; as also wheat, barley, and oats, and any other kind of corn and pulse; tobacco, and likewise all manner of spices, salted and smoked flesh, salted fish, cheese and butter, beer, oils, wines, sugars, and all sorts of salts; and, in general, all provisions which serve for the sustenance of life; furthermore, all kinds of cotton, hemp, flax, tar, pitch, ropes, cables, sails, sail cloths, anchors, and any part of anchors; also ships' masts, planks, and wood of all kind, and all other things proper either for building or repairing ships, and all other goods whatever, which have not been worked into the form of any instrument prepared for war, by land or by sea, shall not be reputed contraband; much less, such as have been already wrought and made up for any other use, all which shall be wholly reckoned among free goods: as, likewise, all other merchandises and things which are not comprehended and particularly mentioned in the foregoing enumeration of contraband goods; so that they may be transported and carried in the freest manner by the subjects of both parties, even to places belonging to an enemy, such towns or places being only excepted as are at that time besieged, blocked up, or invested. And except the cases in which any ship-of-war, or squadron, shall, in consequence of storms, or other accidents at sea, be under the necessity of taking the cargo of any trading vessel or vessels, in which case they may stop the said vessel or vessels, and furnish themselves with necessaries, giving a receipt, in order that the power to whom the said ship-of-war belongs may pay for the articles so taken, according to the price thereof at the port to which they may appear to have been destined by the ship's papers; and the two contracting parties engage that the vessels shall not be detained longer than may be absolutely necessary for their said ships to supply themselves with necessaries; that they will immediately pay the value of the receipts, and indemnify the proprietor for all losses which he may have sustained in consequence of such transaction.

ART. 17. To the end that all manner of dissentions and quarrels may be avoided and prevented on one side and the other, it is agreed that, in case either of the parties hereto should be engaged in a war, the ships and vessels belonging to the subjects or people of the other party must be furnished with sea-letters, or passports, expressing the name, property, and bulk of the ship, as also the name and place of habitation of the master or commander of the said ship, that it may appear thereby that the ship really and truly belongs to the subjects of one of the parties; which passport shall be made out and granted according to the form annexed to this treaty. They shall likewise be recalled every year; that is, if the ship happens to return home within the space of a year.

It is likewise agreed that such ships, being laden, are to be provided not only with passports as above mentioned, but also with certificates, containing the several particulars of the cargo, the place whence the ship sailed, that so it may be known whether any forbidden or contraband goods be on board the same; which certificates shall be made out by the officers of the place whence the ship sailed, in the accustomed form; and if any one shall think it fit or advisable to express, in the said certificates, the person to whom the goods on board belong, he may freely do so; without which requisites they may be sent to one of the ports of the other contracting party, and adjudged by the competent tribunal, according to what is above set forth, that all the circumstances of this omission having been well examined, they shall be adjudged to be legal prizes, unless they shall give legal satisfaction of their property, by testimony entirely equivalent.

ART. 18. If the ships of the said subjects, people, or inhabitants of either of the parties, shall be met with, either sailing along the coasts or on the high seas, by any ship-of-war of the other, or by any privateer, the said ship-of-war or privateer, for the avoiding of any disorder, shall remain out of cannon shot, and may send their boats aboard the merchant ship which they shall so meet with, and may enter her to the number of two or three men only, to whom the master or commander of such ship or vessel shall exhibit his passports concerning the property of the ship, made out according to the form inserted in this present treaty; and the ship, when she shall have showed such passport, shall be free and at liberty to pursue her voyage, so as it shall not be lawful to molest or give her chase in any manner, or force her to quit her intended course.

ART. 19. Consuls shall be reciprocally established, with the privileges and powers which those of the most favored nations enjoy, in the ports where their consuls reside, or are permitted to be.

ART. 20. It is also agreed that the inhabitants of the territories of each party shall respectively have free access to the courts of justice of the other, and they shall be permitted to prosecute suits for the recovery of their properties, the payment of their debts, and for obtaining satisfaction for the damages which they may have sustained, whether the persons whom they may sue be subjects or citizens of the country in which they may be found, or any other persons whatsoever, who may have taken refuge therein; and the proceedings and sentences of the said courts shall be the same as if the contending parties had been subjects or citizens of the said country.

ART. 21. In order to terminate all differences on account of the losses sustained by the citizens of the United States, in consequence of their vessels and cargoes having been taken by the subjects of his Catholic Majesty, during the late war between Spain and France, it is agreed that all such cases shall be referred to the final decision of commissioners, to be appointed in the following manner: His Catholic Majesty shall name one commissioner, and the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of their Senate, shall appoint another, and the said two commissioners shall agree on the choice of a third, or, if they cannot agree so, they shall each propose one person, and of the two names so proposed one shall be drawn by lot in the presence of the two original commissioners; and the person whose name shall be so drawn shall be the third commissioner; and the three commissioners, so appointed, shall be sworn impartially to examine and decide the claims in question, according to the merits of the several cases, and to justice, equity, and the laws of nations. The said commissioners shall meet and sit at Philadelphia; and in the case of the death, sickness, or necessary absence, of any such commissioner, his place shall be supplied in the same manner as he was first appointed, and the new commissioner shall take the same oaths, and do the same duties. They shall receive all complaints and applications authorized by this article, during eighteen months from the day on which they shall assemble. They shall have power to examine all such persons as come before them, on oath or affirmation, touching the complaints in question, and also to receive in evidence all written testimony, authenticated in such manner as they shall think proper to require or admit. The award of the said commissioners, or any two of them, shall be final and conclusive, both as to the justice of the claim and the amount of the sum to be paid to the claimants; and his Catholic Majesty undertakes to cause the same to be paid in specie, without deduction, at such times and places, and under such conditions, as shall be awarded by the said commissioners.

ART. 22. The two high contracting parties, hoping that the good correspondence and friendship which happily reigns between them will be further increased by this treaty, and that it will contribute to augment their prosperity and opulence, will, in future, give to their mutual commerce all the extension and favor which the advantages of both countries may require.

And, in consequence of the stipulations contained in the fourth article, his Catholic Majesty will permit the citizens of the United States, for the space of three years from this time, to deposit their merchandises and effects in the port of New Orleans, and to export them from thence without paying any other duty than a fair price for the hire of the stores; and his Majesty promises either to continue this permission, if he finds, during that time, that it is not prejudicial to the interests of Spain, or, if he should not agree to continue it there, he will assign to them, on another part of the banks of the Mississippi, an equivalent establishment.*

ART. 23. The present treaty shall not be in force until ratified by the contracting parties, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in six months from this time, or sooner, if possible.

In witness whereof, we, the underwritten plenipotentiaries of his Catholic Majesty, and of the United States of America, have signed this present treaty of friendship, limits, and navigation, and have thereunto affixed our seals respectively.

* The fourth article here alluded to, as the consideration for granting the right of deposit to American citizens at New Orleans, fixes the western boundary line between the United States and the Spanish province of Louisiana. In the year 1802, the Spanish intendant at New Orleans having shut the citizens of the United States out from this deposit, without assigning any equivalent establishment elsewhere, the act was highly resented. Representations, however, were made by the American Executive to the government of Spain, and the deposit was restored. But the purchase of Louisiana, in 1803, put an end to further anxiety on the subject.

TREATY OF AMITY, SETTLEMENT, AND LIMITS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE KING OF SPAIN.

By the President of the United States.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a treaty of amity, settlement, and limits between the United States of America and his Catholic Majesty was concluded and signed between their plenipotentiaries in this city, on the 22d day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, which treaty, word for word, is as follows:

Treaty of amity, settlement, and limits between the United States of America and his Catholic Majesty.

The United States of America and his Catholic Majesty, desiring to consolidate, on a permanent basis, the friendship and good correspondence which happily prevails between the two parties, have determined to settle and terminate all their differences and pretensions by a treaty which shall designate with precision the limits of their respective bordering territories in North America.

With this intention the President of the United States has furnished with their full powers John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State of the said United States; and his Catholic Majesty has appointed the most excellent Lord Don Luis De Onis, Gonzales, Lopez y Vara, lord of the town of Rayaces, perpetual regidor of the corporation of the city of Salamanca, knight grand cross of the Royal American Order of Isabella the Catholic, decorated with the Lys of La Vendee, knight pensioner of the royal and distinguished Spanish Order of Charles the Third, member of the supreme assembly of the said royal order of the council of his Catholic Majesty, his secretary, with exercise of decrees, and his envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary near the United States of America.

And the said plenipotentiaries, after having exchanged their powers, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. There shall be a firm and inviolable peace and sincere friendship between the United States and their citizens, and his Catholic Majesty, his successors and subjects, without exception of persons or places.

ART. 2. His Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States in full property and sovereignty, all the territories which belong to him, situated to the eastward of the Mississippi, known by the name of East and West Florida. The adjacent islands dependent on said provinces, all public lots and squares, vacant lands, public edifices, fortifications, barracks, and other buildings, which are not private property, archives, and documents, which relate directly to the property and sovereignty of said provinces, are included in this article. The said archives and documents shall be left in possession of the commissaries or officers of the United States duly authorized to receive them.

ARTICULO 2. S. M. Ca. cede á los Estados Unidos en toda propiedad y soberania, todos los territorios, que le pertenecen, situados al Este del Misisipi, conocidos bajo el nombre de Florida Occidental y Florida Oriental. Son comprehendidos en este articulo las yslas adyacentes dependientes de dichas dos provincias, los sitios, plazas publicas, terrenos valdios, edificios, publicos fortificaciones casernas, y otros edificios, que no sean propiedad de algun individuo particular, los archivos y documentos directamente relativos á la propiedad y soberania de las mismas dos provincios. Dichos archivos y documentos se entregarán á los comisarios ú oficiales de los Estados Unidos debidamente autorizados para recibirlos.

ART. 3. The boundary line between the two countries west of the Mississippi shall begin on the Gulf of Mexico, at the mouth of the river Sabine, in the sea, continuing north along the western bank of that river to the 32d degree of latitude; thence, by a line due north, to the degree of latitude where it strikes the Rio Roxo of Natchitoches, or Red river; then, following the course of the Rio Roxo westward to the degree of longitude 100 west from London and 23 from Washington; then, crossing the said Red river, and running thence by a line due north to the river Arkansas; thence, following the course of the southern bank of the Arkansas to its source, in latitude 42 north; and thence by that parallel of latitude to the South Sea. The whole being, as laid down in Melish's Map of the United States, published at Philadelphia, improved to the first of January, 1818. But, if the source of the Arkansas river shall be found to fall north or south of latitude 42, then the line shall run from the said source due south or north, as the case may be, till it meets the said parallel of latitude 42, and thence along the said parallel to the South Sea: all the islands in the Sabine and the said Red and Arkansas rivers, throughout the course thus described, to belong to the United States; but the use of the waters and the navigation of the Sabine to the sea, and of the said rivers Roxo and Arkansas, throughout the extent of the said boundary, on their respective banks, shall be common to the respective inhabitants of both nations.

ARTICULO 3. La linea divisoria entre los dos paises al occidente del Misisipi, arrancará del Seno Mexicano, en la embocadura del Rio Sabina, en el Mar, seguirá al Norte por la orilla occidental de este Rio, hasta el grado 32 de latitud; desde, alli por una linea recta al Norte, hasta el grado de latitud en que entra en el Rio Roxo de Natchitochez, (Red river,) y continuará por el curso del Rio Roxo al oeste, hasta el grado 100 de longitud occidental de Londres y 23 de Washington; en que, cortará este Rio, y seguirá por una linea recta al Norte, por el mismo grado, hasta el Rio Arkansas, cuya orilla meridional, seguirá hasta su nacimiento en el grado 42 de latitud Septentrional; y desde, dicho punto, se tirará una linea recta por el mismo paralelo de latitud, hasta el Mar del Sur. Todo segun el Mapa de los Estados Unidos de Melish, publicado en Philadelphia, y perfecionado en 1818. Pero si el nacimiento del Rio Arkansas se hallase al Norte ó Sur de dicho de grado 42 de latitud, seguirá la linea desde el origen de dicho Rio recta al Sur ó Norte, segun fuese necesario, hasta que encuentre el expresado grado 42 de latitud, y desde, alli por el mismo paralelo, hasta el Mar del Sur. Pertenecerán á los Estados Unidos todas las yslas de los Rios Sabina, Roxo de Natchitochez y Arkansas, en la extension de todo el curso descrito; pero el uso de las aguas, y la navegacion del Sabina hasta el Mar, y de los expresados Rios Roxo y Arkansas, y en toda la extension de sus mencionados limites, en sus respectivas orillas, sera comun á los habitantes de las dos naciones.

The two high contracting parties agree to cede and renounce all their rights, claims, and pretensions to the territories described by the said line:

Las dos altas partes contratantes convienen en ceder y renunciar todos sus derechos, reclamaciones, y pretenciones, sobre los territorios que se describen that is to say, the United States hereby cede to his Catholic Majesty, and renounce forever, all their rights, claims, and pretensions to the territories lying west and south of the above-described line; and in like manner his Catholic Majesty cedes to the said United States all his rights, claims, and pretensions to any territories east and north of the said line; and for himself, his heirs, and successors, renounces all claim to the said territories forever.

ART. 4. To fix this line with more precision, and to place the landmarks which shall designate exactly the limits of both nations, each of the contracting parties shall appoint a commissioner and a surveyor, who shall meet, before the termination of one year from the date of the ratification of this treaty, at Natchitoches, on the Red river, and proceed to run and mark the said line from the mouth of the Sabine to the Red river, and from the Red river to the river Arkansas, and to ascertain the latitude of the source of the said river Arkansas, in conformity to what is above agreed upon and stipulated, and the line of latitude 42 to the South Sea: they shall make out plans and keep journals of their proceedings, and the result agreed upon by them shall be considered as part of this treaty, and shall have the same force as if it were inserted therein. The two governments will amicably agree respecting the necessary articles to be furnished to those persons, and also as to their respective escorts, should such be deemed necessary.

ART. 5. The inhabitants of the ceded territories shall be secured in the free exercise of their religion without any restriction; and all those who may desire to remove to the Spanish dominions shall be permitted to sell or export their effects at any time whatever without being subject, in either case, to duties.

ART. 6. The inhabitants of the territories which his Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States by this treaty shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States as soon as may be consistent with the principles of the federal Constitution, and admitted to the enjoyment of all the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States.

ART. 7. The officers and troops of his Catholic Majesty in the territories hereby ceded by him to the United States shall be withdrawn, and possession of the places occupied by them shall be given within six months after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, or sooner, if possible, by the officers of his Catholic Majesty to the commissioners or officers of the United States duly appointed to receive them; and the United States shall furnish the transports and escort necessary to convey the Spanish officers and troops and their baggage to the Havana.

ART. 8. All the grants of land made before the 24th of January, 1818, by his Catholic Majesty, or by his lawful authorities in the said territories ceded by his Majesty to the United States, shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of the lands, to the same extent that the same grants would be valid if the territories had remained under the dominion of his Catholic Majesty. But the owners in possession of such lands, who, by reason of the recent circumstances of the Spanish nation and the revolutions in Europe, have been prevented from fulfilling all the conditions of their grants, shall complete them within the terms limited in the same respectively from the date of this treaty; in default of which, the said grants shall be null and void. All grants made since the said 24th of January, 1818, when the first proposal on the part of his Catholic Majesty for the cession of the Floridas was made, are hereby declared and agreed to be null and void.

ART. 9. The two contracting parties, animated with the most earnest desire of conciliation, and with the object of putting an end to all the differences which have existed between them, and confirming the good understanding which they wish to be forever maintained between them, reciprocally renounce all claims for damages or injuries which they themselves, as well as their respective citizens and subjects, may have suffered until the time of signing this treaty.

1. The renunciation of the United States will extend to all the injuries mentioned in the convention of the 11th of August, 1802.

2. To all claims on account of prizes made by French privateers, and condemned by French consuls, within the territory and jurisdiction of Spain.

en esta linea; á saber, S. M. Ca. renuncia y cede para siempre, por si, y a nombre de sus herederos y sucesores, todos los derechos que tiene sobre los territorios al Este y al Norte de dicha linea; y los Estados Unidos, en igual forma, ceden á S. M. Ca. y renuncian, para siempre, todos sus derechos, reclamaciones, y pretensiones, a qualesquiera territorios situados al Oeste y al Sur de la misma linea arriba descrita.

ARTICULO 4. Para fixar esta linea con mas precision y establecer los mojones que señalen con exactitud los limites de ambas naciones, nombrará cada una de ellas un comisario y un geómetra, que se juntarán antes del termino de un año, contado desde la fecha de la ratificacion de este Tratado, en Natchitoches, en las orillas del Rio Roxo, y procederán á señala y demarca dicha linea desde la embocadura del Sabina, hasta el Rio Roxo, y de este hasta el Rio Arkansas, y á averiguar, con certidumbre, el origen del expresado Rio Arkansas, y fixar, segun queda estipulado y convenido en este Tratado, la linea que debe seguir, desde el grado 42 de latitud, hasta el Mar Pacifico. Lleverán diarios y levantarán planos de sus operaciones, y el resultado convenido por ellos se tendrá por parte de este Tratado, y tendrá la misma fuerza que si estuviese inserto en el; deviendo convenir amistosamente los dos gobiernos en el arreglo de quanto necesiten estos individuos, y en la escolta respectiva que deban llvar, siempre que se crea necesario.

ARTICULO 5. A los habitantes de todos los territorios cedidos se les conservará el exercicio libre de su religion, sin restriccion alguna; y á todos los que quisieren trasladarse á los dominios Españoles, se les permitirá la venta ô extraccion de sus efectos en qualquiera tiempo, sin que pueda exigirseles en uno ni otro casa derecho alguno.

ARTICULO 6. Los habitantes de los territorios que S. M. Ca. cede por este Trátado á los Estados Unidos, serán incorporados en la Union de los mismos Estados, lo mas presto posible, segun los principios de la Constitucion Federal, y admitidos al goce de todos los privilegios, derechos, é inmunidades, de que disfrutan los ciudadanos de los demas Estados.

ARTICULO 8. Todas las concesiones de terrenos hechas por S. M. Ca. ó por sus legitimas autoridades antes del 24 de Enero, de 1818, en los expresados territorios que S. M. cede á los Estados Unidos, qûederán ratificadas y reconocidas á las personas que esten en posesion de ellas, del mismo modo que lo serian si S. M. hubiese continuado en el dominio de estos territorios; pero los propietarios que por un efecto de las circumstancias en que se ha hallado la nacion Española y por las revoluciones de Europa, no hubiesen podido llenar todas las obligaciones de las concesiones, serán obligados á cumplirlas segun las condiciones de sus respectivas concesiones, desde la fecha de este Tratado, en defecto de lo qual serán nulas y de ningun valor. Todas las concesiones posteriores al 24 de Enero de 1818, en que fueron hechas las primeras proposiciones de parte de S. M. Ca. para la cesion de las dos Floridas, convienen y declaran las dos altas partes contratantes que quedan anuladas y de ningun valor.

3. To all claims of indemnities on account of the suspension of the right of deposit at New Orleans in the year 1802.

4. To all claims of citizens of the United States upon the government of Spain, arising from the unlawful seizures at sea, and in the ports and territories of Spain or the Spanish colonies.

5. Finally. To all the claims of subjects of his Catholic Majesty upon the government of the United States, in which the interposition of his Catholic Majesty's government has been solicited before the date of this treaty and since the date of the convention of 1802, or which may have been made to the department of foreign affairs of his Majesty, or to his minister in the United States.

And the high contracting parties, respectively, renounce all claim to indemnities for any of the recent events or transactions of their respective commanders and officers in the Floridas.

The United States will cause satisfaction to be made for the injuries, if any, which, by process of law, shall be established to have been suffered by the Spanish officers and individual Spanish inhabitants by the late operations of the American army in Florida.

ART. 10. The convention entered into between the two governments on the 11th of August, 1802, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 21st of December, 1818, is annulled.

ART. 11. The United States, exonerating Spain from all demands in future on account of the claims of their citizens to which the renunciations herein contained extend, and, considering them entirely cancelled, undertake to make satisfaction for the same to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars. To ascertain the full amount and validity of these claims, a commission, to consist of three commissioners, citizens of the United States, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which commission shall meet at the city of Washington, and, within the space of three years from the time of their first meeting, shall receive, examine, and decide upon the amount and validity of all the claims included within the descriptions above mentioned. The said commissioners shall take an oath or affirmation, to be entered on the record of their proceedings, for the faithful and diligent discharge of their duties; and in case of the death, sickness, or necessary absence of any such commissioner, his place may be supplied by the appointment, as aforesaid, or by the President of the United States, during the recess of the Senate, of another commissioner in his stead. The said commissioners shall be authorized to hear and examine, on oath, every question relative to the said claims, and to receive all suitable authentic testimony concerning the same. And the Spanish government shall furnish all such documents and elucidations as may be in their possession for the adjustment of the said claims according to the principles of justice, the laws of nations, and the stipulations of the treaty between the two parties, of the 27th of October, 1795; the said documents to be specified, when demanded, at the instance of the said commissioners.

The payment of such claims as may be admitted and adjusted by the said commissioners, or the major part of them, to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars, shall be made by the United States, either immediately at their treasury or by the creation of stock bearing an interest of six per cent. per annum, payable from the proceeds of sales of public lands within the territories hereby ceded to the United States, or in such other manner as the Congress of the United States may prescribe by law.

The records of the proceedings of the said commissioners, together with the vouchers and documents produced before them, relative to the claims to be adjusted and decided upon by them shall, after the close of their transactions, be deposited in the Department of State of the United States; and copies of them, or any part of them, shall be furnished to the Spanish government, if required, at the demand of the Spanish minister in the United States.

ART. 12. The treaty of limits and navigation of 1795 remains confirmed in all and each one of its articles, excepting the 2d, 3d, 4th, 21st, and second clause of the 22d article, which, having been altered by this treaty, or having received their entire execution, are no longer valid.

With respect to the 15th article of the same treaty of friendship, limits, and navigation of 1795, in which it is stipulated that the flag shall cover the property, the two high contracting parties agree that this shall be so understood with respect to those powers who recognize this principle; but if either of the two contracting parties shall be at war with a third party, and the other neutral, the flag of the neutral shall cover the property of enemies whose government acknowledge this principle, and not of others.

ART. 13. Both contracting parties, wishing to favor their mutual commerce, by affording in their ports every necessary assistance to their respective merchant vessels, have agreed that the sailors who shall desert from their vessels in the ports of the other shall be arrested and delivered up, at the instance of the consul, who shall prove, nevertheless, that the deserters belonged to the vessels that claimed them, exhibiting the document that is customary in their nation; that is to say, the American consul in a Spanish port shall exhibit the document known by the name of articles, and the Spanish consul in American ports, the roll of the vessel; and if the name of the deserter or deserters who are claimed shall appear in the one or the other, they shall be arrested, held in custody, and delivered to the vessel to which they shall belong.

ART. 14. The United States hereby certify that they have not received any compensation from France for the injuries they suffered from her privateers, consuls, and tribunals, on the coasts and in the ports of Spain, for the satisfaction of which provision is made by this treaty; and they will present an authentic statement of the prizes made, and of their true value, that Spain may avail herself of the same in such manner as she may deem just and proper.

ART. 15. The United States, to give to his Catholic Majesty a proof of their desire to cement the relations of amity subsisting between the two nations, and to favor the commerce of the subjects of his Catholic Majesty, agree that Spanish vessels, coming laden only with productions of Spanish growth or manufactures, directly from the ports of Spain or of her colonies, shall be admitted, for the term of twelve years, to the ports of Pensacola and St. Augustine, in the Floridas, without paying other or higher duties on their cargoes, or of tonnage, than will be paid by the vessels of the United States. During the said term no other nation shall enjoy the same privileges within the ceded territories. The twelve years shall commence three months after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty.

ART. 16. The present treaty shall be ratified in due form by the contracting parties, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in six months from this time, or sooner, if possible.

In witness whereof, we, the under-written plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and of his Catholic Majesty, have signed, by virtue of our powers, the present treaty of amity, settlement, and limits, and have hereunto affixed our seals, respectively.

Done at Washington, this 22d day of February, 1819.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS. [SEAL.]
LUIS DE ONIS. [SEAL.]

And whereas his said Catholic Majesty did, on the twenty-fourth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty, ratify and confirm the said treaty, which ratification is in the words and of the tenor following:

[Translation.]

Ferdinand the Seventh, by the grace of God, and by the constitution of the Spanish monarchy, King of the Spains:

Whereas, on the twenty-seventh day of February, of the year one thousand eight hundred and nineteen last past, a treaty was concluded and signed in the city of Washington, between Don Luis de Onis, my envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, and John Quincy Adams, esq., Secretary of State of the United States of America, competently authorized by both parties, consisting of sixteen articles, which had for their object the arrangement of differences and of limits between both governments and their respective territories; which are of the following form and literal tenor:

"Therefore, having seen and examined the sixteen articles aforesaid, and having first obtained the consent and authority of the general cortes of the nation with respect to the cession mentioned and stipulated in the 2d and 3d articles, I approve and ratify all and every one of the articles referred to, and the clauses which are contained in them; and, in virtue of these presents, I approve and ratify them; promising, on the faith and word of a King, to execute and observe them, and to cause them to be executed and observed, entirely, as if I myself had signed them: and that the circumstance of having exceeded the term of six months, fixed for the exchange of the ratifications in the 16th article, may afford no obstacle in any manner, it is my deliberate will that the present ratification be as valid and firm, and produce the same effects, as if it had been done within the determined period. Desirous at the same time of avoiding any doubt or ambiguity concerning the meaning of the 8th article of the said treaty, in respect to the date which is pointed out in it as the period for the confirmation of the grants of lands in the Floridas, made by me, or by the competent authorities in my royal name, which point of date was fixed in the positive understanding of the three grants of land made in favor of the Duke of Alagon, the Count of Punonrostro, and Don Pedro de Vargas, being annulled by its tenor, I think proper to declare that the said three grants have remained, and do remain, entirely annulled and invalid; and that neither the three individuals mentioned, nor those who may have title or interest through them, can avail themselves of the said grants at any time, or in any manner: under which explicit declaration the said 8th article is to be understood as ratified. In the faith of all which I have commanded to despatch these presents. Signed by my hand, sealed with my secret seal, and countersigned by the under-written my secretary of despatch of state.

Given at Madrid, the twenty-fourth of October, one thousand eight hundred and twenty.

(Signed) FERNANDO.
(Countersigned)
EVARISTO PEREZ DE CASTRO."

"Por tanto, habiendo visto examinado los referidos diez y seis articulos, y habiendo precedido la anuencia y autorizacion de las cortes generales de la nacion por lo respectivo á la cesion que en los articulos 2° y 3° se menciona y estipula, he venido, en aprobar y ratificar todos y cada uno de los referidos articulos y clausulas que en ellos se contiene; y en virtud de la presente los apruebo y ratifico; prometiendo en fé y palabra de Rey cumplirlos y observarlos, y hacer que se cumplan y observen enteramente como si Yo mismo los hubiese firmado: sin que sirva de obstaculo en manera alguna la circumstancia de haber transcurrido el termino de los seis meses prefijados para el cange de las ratificaciones en el articulo 16; pues mi deliberada voluntad es que la presente ratificacion sea tan valida y subsistente y produzca los mismos efectos que si hubiese sido hecha dentro del termino prefijado. Yo deseando al mismo tiempo evitar qualquiera duda ó ambigüedad que pueda ofrecer el contenido del articulo 8° del referido tratado con motivo de la fecha que en el se señala como termino para la validacion de las concesiones de tierras en las Floridas, hechas por mi ó por las autoridades competentes en mi real nombre, á cuyo señalamiento de fecha se procedió en la positiva inteligencia dejar anuladas por su tenor las tres concesiones de tierras hechas á favor del Duque de Alagon, Conde de Puñonrostro, y Dn. Pedro de Vargas: tengo á bien declarar que las referidas tres concesions han quedado y quedan enteramente anulades è invalidadas; sin que los tres individuos referidos, ni los que de estos tengan titulo ó causas puedan aprovecharse de dichas concesiones en tiempo, ni manera alguna: bajo cuya explicita declaracion se ha de entender ratificado el referido articulo 8°. En fé de todo lo cual mandé despachar la presente firmada de mi mano, sellada con mi sello secreto, y refrendada por el infrascripto mi Secretario del despacho de Estado.

Dada en Madrid, a veinte y quatro de Octobre, de mil ochocientos veinte.

(Sig.) FERNANDO.
(Refren.)
EVARISTO PEREZ DE CASTRO."

And whereas the Senate of the United States did, on the nineteenth day of the present month, advise and consent to the ratification, on the part of these United States, of the said treaty, in the following words:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 19, 1821.

"Resolved, two-thirds of the senators present concurring therein, That the Senate, having examined the treaty of amity, settlement, and limits, between the United States of America and his Catholic Majesty,

And whereas, in pursuance of the said advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, I have ratified and confirmed the said treaty, in the words following, viz:

"Now, therefore, I, James Monroe, President of the United States of America, having seen and considered the treaty above recited, together with the ratification of his Catholic Majesty thereof, do, in pursuance of the aforesaid advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, by these presents, accept, ratify, and confirm the said treaty, and every clause and article thereof, as the same are hereinbefore set forth.

"In faith whereof, I have caused the seal of the United States of America to be hereto affixed.

"Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, this twenty-second day of February, in the [L. S.] year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one, and of the independence of the said States the forty-fifth.

"JAMES MONROE.

"By the President:

"JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, Secretary of State."

And whereas the said ratifications, on the part of the United States and of his Catholic Majesty, have been this day duly exchanged, at Washington, by John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State of the United States, and by General Dn. Francisco Dionisio Vives, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of his Catholic Majesty: Now, therefore, to the end that the said treaty may be observed and performed with good faith on the part of the United States, I have caused the premises to be made public; and I do hereby enjoin and require all persons bearing office, civil or military, within the United States, and all others, citizens or inhabitants thereof, or being within the same, faithfully to observe and fulfil the said treaty, and every clause and article thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the United States to be affixed to these presents, and signed the same with my hand.

Done at the city of Washington, the twenty-second day of February, in the year of our Lord
[L. S.] one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one, and of the sovereignty and independence of the United States the forty-fifth.

JAMES MONROE.

Don Antonio Porcel, knight pensioner of the royal and distinguished order of Charles III, of the council of state, and secretary of state and of despatch of the ultra-marine government, &c.:

I certify that, under date of the 6th of February, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, royal letters patent of the same tenor were sent by the late Council of the Indies to the governor captain general of the Island of Cuba and its dependencies, to the intendant of the army and royal business of the Havana and its district, and to the governor of the Floridas, that each should do his utmost, in his particular department, to give effect to the grant made to the Duke of Alagon, of various lands in East Florida, of the following tenor:

THE KING.

My governor and captain general of the Island of Cuba and its dependencies: The Duke of Alagon, Baron de Espes, has manifested to me, on the twelfth of July last, as follows: "Sire: The Duke of Alagon, Baron de Espes, captain of your Majesty's royal body guards, with the greatest respect exposes that, it being the interest of the crown that the uncultivated lands should be given to great capitalists, in order that they may be peopled and cultivated, from which flow the advantages pointed out and advised by all politicians, and by means of which much or nearly most of the fertile soil of the Floridas has been discovered, and it being a right of your Majesty, as absolute lord, to distribute them for the benefit of agriculture, and in reward and recompense of the eminent services which have been rendered to your Majesty and your whole kingdom; being desirous of deserving those marks of the value of his magnanimous courage, and of contributing, as far as possible, to fulfil the designs of population, so interesting to the commonweal, he humbly requests your Majesty that you would deign to grant him all the uncultivated land not ceded in East Florida, which lies between the rivers Saint Lucia and St. John, as far as the mouths by which they empty themselves into the sea, and the coast of the Gulf of Florida, and the adjacent islands, with the mouth of the river Hijuelos, in the twenty-sixth degree of latitude, following the left bank up to its source, drawing a line from Lake Macaco, then descending by the way of the river Saint John to the Lake Valdes, crossing by another line from the extreme north of said lake to the source of the river Amarima, following its right bank as far as its mouth, in the twenty-eighth or twenty-fifth degree of latitude, and running along the sea-coast, with all the adjacent islands, up to the mouth of the river Hijuelos, in full property to himself and his heirs; allowing them also to import negroes, for the labor and cultivation of the lands, free of duties: a gift which I hope to obtain from your Majesty's innate goodness."

Having taken the premises into consideration, and bearing in mind the distinguished merit of the memorialist, and his signal zeal for my royal service, as well as the benefits to be derived by the State from an increase of population in the countries the cession whereof he has solicited, I have judged fit to grant him the same, in so far as is conformable to the laws of these my kingdoms, and to make it known to my Council of the Indies, for its due execution, by a royal order of the 17th of December, in the year aforementioned. Wherefore I charge and command you, by this my royal cedula, with due observance of the laws to such cases pertaining, to give full and effectual aid to the execution of the said cession, taking all requisite measures for its accomplishment, without injury to any third party; and in order that the said Duke of Alagon may forthwith carry his plans into execution, in conformity with my beneficent desires in favor of the agriculture and commerce of the said territories, which require a population proportioned to the fertility of the soil and the defence and security of the coasts, he giving regular accounts of his proceedings; it being understood that the introduction of negroes, which the same cession comprehends, ought, as far as relates to the traffic in them, to be subject to the regulations prescribed in my royal cedula of the 19th of December last, for such is my will; and that due note be taken of the present cedula in the office of the accountant general of the Indies.

Dated at the Palace, the sixth of February, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen.

I, THE KING.

By command of the King our lord:
ESTEBAN VAREA.

And I confirm this exemplification, at Madrid, the fifteenth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and twenty.

I certify that the foregoing signature of his excellency Don Antonio Porcel, secretary of despatch of the ultra-marine government, is that which he is accustomed to put to all his writings; and, for the proper purposes, I give the present certificate, signed by my hand, and sealed with my seal of arms, at Madrid, the twenty-first of October, one thousand eight hundred and twenty.

Certifico que con fecha de seis Febrero, de mil ochocientos diez y ocho, se expedieron por el estinguido consejo de las Indias reales cedulas de igual tenor al gobernador capitan general de la Ysla de Cuba y su distrito, al intendente de exercito y real hacienda de la Havana y su distrito, y al gobernador, de las Floridas, para que cada uno en la parte que le tocase dispusiese lo conveniente á que tubiese efecto la gracia concedida al Brigadier Conde de Puñonrostro de varios terrenos situados en la Florida Occidental, cuyo contenido es el siguiente.

"EL REY. Mi gobernador y captain general de la Ysla de Cuba y su distrito: El Brigadier Conde de Puñonrostro me hizo presente en exposicion de tres Noviembre del año ultimo lo que sigue—Señor: El Brigadier Conde de Puñonrostro, grande de España de primera clase, y vuestro gentilhombre de camara con exercicio, &c., &c., P. A. L. R. P. de V. M. con le mas profundo respeto expone: que movido del anhelo de procurar por todos los medios posibles el hacer productible parte de los immensos terrenos despoblados é incultos que V. M. tiene en las Americas, y que por su feracidad prometen las mayores ventajas, tanto al que expone como al estado, si llegase á verificarse, como lo espera, el noble proyecto que anima al exponente de convertir una pequeña parte de aquellos desiertos en morada de habitantes pacificos Cristianos é industriosos, que aumentando la poblacion de vuestros renos, fomenten la agricultura y el comercio, y por consiguiente hagan immensos los ingresos de vuestro real herario. Esta empresa dirigida por persona que al conocimiento del pays reune las circunstancias de poder comparar los progresos que han hecho por este medio otras naciones, como la de los Estados Unidos, que en una epoca muy limitida ha elevado su poder á un grado extraordinario, distinguiendose la Mobila adyacente á la Florida, que en los seis años ultimos aprovechandose de la emigracion se ha convertido de un pays inculto y desierto, en una provincia rica y comerciante, cultivada y poblada con mas de 300,000 habitantes. Esto mismo debe suceder á la Florida en el corto tiempe de diez y ocho ó veinte años si se adoptan las medidas conducentes á ello, y si al exemplo del exponente avandonan otros la apatia y se dedican á labrar su fortuna individual, y por consiguiente la del Estado. Confiado pues en lo recomendable de esta empresa, en los vivos deseos que animan a V. M. por la prosperidad de la nacion, y en los servicios y sacrificios del exponente, se atreve á suplicar á V. M. que en remuneracion de ellos se digne concederle en plena propriedad y con arreglo a la leyes que rigen en la materia, todas las tierras incultas que no se hallen cedidas en la Florida, comprendidas entre el rio Perdido al occidente del Golfo de Mexico, y los rios Amaruja y el Sn. Juan, desde Popa hasta su desague en el mar por la parte de oriente, por el norte la linea de demarcacion con los Estados Unidos, y al sur por el Golfo de Mexico, incluendo las yslas desiertas en la costa. Por tanto, á V. M. rendidamente suplica, que en atencion á lo expuesto, y á las includables ventajas que resultan á la nacion, se sirva acceder á esta solicitud y mandar al mismo tiempo se comuniquen las correspondientes ordenes á las autoridades del pays, prebiniendoles presten al exponente todos los auxilios y proteccion necesaria, asi para la designacion de los terrenos, como para llevar á efecto la empresa en todas sus partes: gracia que espera de la munificiencia de V. M." Enterado del contenido de esta exposicion, y atendiendo al distinguido merito de este sugeto, y a su acreditado celo por mi real servicio, como tambien á las ventajas que resultaran al Estado del aumento de poblacion de los citados paises que pretende, he tenido á bien acceder á la gracia que solicita en cuanto no se oponga á las leyes de esos mis reynos, y comunicarlo al mi Consejo de Indias para su execucion en real orden de diez y siete de Diciembre, del referido año. Don Antonio Porcel, knight pensioner of the royal and distinguished order of Charles III, of the council of state, and secretary of state and of despatch of ultra-marine government, &c.:

I certify that, under date of the 6th of February, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, royal letters patent of the same tenor were sent by the late Council of the Indies to the governor captain general of the Island of Cuba and its dependencies, to the intendant of the army and royal business at Havana and its districts, and to the governor of the Floridas, that each should do his utmost, in his particular department, to give effect to the grant made to Brigadier the Count of Punonrostro, of various lands situated in West Florida, of the following tenor:

THE KING.

My governor and captain general of the Island of Cuba and its dependencies: The Brigadier Count of Punonrostro submitted to me, on the third of November last, what follows: "Sire: The Brigadier Count of Punonrostro, grandee of Spain of the first class, and your gentleman of the bed chamber in actual attendance, &c., &c., throws himself at your Majesty's royal feet with the most profound respect, and submits to your Majesty, that, prompted by the desire of promoting, by all possible means, the improvement of the extensive waste and unsettled lands possessed by your Majesty in the Americas, which, by their fertility, offer the greatest advantages, not only to your memorialist, but to the State, provided due effect, as is hoped, be given to the noble project, formed by your Majesty's memorialist, of converting a small portion of those deserts into the abode of peaceable Christians and industrious inhabitants, who will increase the population of your kingdoms, promote agriculture and commerce, and thereby add immensely to your royal revenues. This enterprise should be conducted by a person who, with a knowledge of the country, would combine the intelligence necessary for comparing the progress made by other nations in similar situations, and particularly by the United States, which, within a very recent period, have advanced their power to an extraordinary height, and especially in the instance of the Mobile country, adjoining Florida, which, in the last six years, has received such an influx of emigrants as to be converted from a desert waste into a rich commercial province, highly improved and peopled with more than three hundred thousand souls. A similar change would be effected in Florida within eighteen or twenty years by the adoption of judicious arrangements and by those exertions which your Majesty's memorialist proposes to employ for the promotion of his personal interest, and consequently that of the State. Relying on the merits of the case, and the lively interest felt by your Majesty in the national prosperity, and in the services and sacrifices of your Majesty's memorialist, he humbly requests your Majesty that, taking them into consideration, you would be graciously pleased to grant and cede to him, in full right and property, and the mode and manner required by law, all the waste lands, not heretofore ceded, in Florida, lying between the river Perdido, westward of the Gulf of Mexico, and the rivers Amaruja and St. John's, from Popa to the point where it empties into the ocean, for the eastern limit; and for the northern, the boundary line of the United States; and to the south, by the Gulf of Mexico, including the desert islands on the coast. He therefore humbly prays, in consideration of the premises, and the unquestionable advantages to be derived by the nation, your Majesty will be pleased to grant this his petition, and thereupon direct the necessary orders to be given to the local authorities to afford him all due aid and protection, as well in designating the territory referred to as in giving full effect to the whole enterprise. All which he hopes from the munificence of your Majesty."

Having taken the premises into consideration, and bearing in mind the distinguished merits of the memorialist, and his signal zeal for my royal service, as well as the benefits to be derived by the State from an increase of population in the countries, the cession whereof he has solicited, I have judged fit to grant him the same, in so far as is conformable to the laws of these my kingdoms, and to make it known to my Council of the Indies, for its due execution, by a royal order of the seventeenth of December, in the year aforementioned; wherefore I charge and command you, by this my royal cedula, with due observance of the laws to such cases pertaining, to give full and due effect to the said cession, taking all requisite measures for its accomplishment without injury to any third party, and to the end that the said Count of Punonrostro may forthwith carry his plans into execution, in conformity with my beneficent desires in favor of the agriculture and commerce of the said territories, which require a population proportioned to the fertility of the soil and the defence and security of the coasts, he giving regular accounts of his proceedings, for such is my will; and that due note be taken of the present cedula in the office of the accountant general of the Indes. Dated at the Palace, the sixth of February, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen.

Don Antonio Porcel, knight pensioner of the royal and distinguished order of Charles III, of the council of state, and secretary of state and of despatch of the ultra-marine government, &c.:

I certify that, under date of the ninth of April, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, royal letters patent of the same tenor were sent by the late Council of the Indies to the governor captain general of the Island of Cuba and its dependencies, to the intendant of the army and royal business of the Havana and its district, and to the governor of the Floridas, that each should do his utmost, in his particular department, to give effect to the grant made to Don Pedro de Vargas of various lands situated in the Floridas, of the following tenor:

THE KING.

My governor and captain general of the Island of Cuba and its dependencies: Under date of the twenty-fifth of January last Don Pedro de Vargas manifested as follows: "Sire: Don Pedro de Vargas, knight of the royal order of Alcantara, treasurer general of the royal house and patrimony of your Majesty, with the most profound respect, at your royal feet, exposes: That there is a quantity of vacant and unpeopled land in the territory of the Floridas, and desiring that if your Majesty shall deign to reward his passable services, and the proofs which he has given of his royalty, it may be without the least burden on the public treasury, or in prejudice of any third person, as may be done at present by some lands of that country, he beseeches your Majesty that, by an effect of your sovereign goodness, you would deign to grant him the property of the land which lies comprised within the following limits: that is to say, from the mouth of the river Perdido, and its bay in the Gulf of Mexico, following the sea-coast, to ascend by the bay of Buen Socorro, and of Mobile, continuing by the river Mobile till it touches the northern line of the United States, and descending by that in a right line to the source of the river Perdido, and following the river Mobile in its lower part, and the bay of that name, returns by the sea-coast towards the west; comprehending all the creeks, entries, and islands adjacent, which may belong to Spain at the present time, till it reaches the west line of the United States, then returning by their northern line, comprehending all the waste lands which belong or may belong to Spain, and are in dispute or reclamation with the United States, according to the tenor of the treaties; and also all the waste land not ceded to any other individual, which is between the river Hijuelos, in East Florida, and the river St. Lucia, drawing a line from the source of one river to the source of the other, and following by the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, from the mouth of the Hijuelos to the point of Tancha, and doubling this by the coast of the Gulf of Florida, to the mouth of the river Saint Lucia, with the islands and keys adjacent."

Considering the contents of this exposition, and attending to the merit of the individual and his accredited zeal for my royal service, as also to the advantages to result to the State from peopling the said countries, I have thought proper to accede to the favor which he solicits, in as far as it be not opposed to the laws of these my kingdoms, and communicated it to my Council of the Indies for its accomplishment in a royal order of the second of February last. Consequently, I command and charge you, by this my royal cedula, that, conforming to the laws which regulate in these affairs, and without prejudice to third persons, that you efficaciously aid the execution of the said grant, taking all the measures which may conduce to its due effect, as also to the augmentation of the population, agriculture, and commerce of the aforesaid possessions, giving account, from time to time, of the progress made, for this is my will; and that due notice shall be taken of this cedula in the office of the accountant general of the Indies. Dated at the Palace, the 9th of April, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen.

SURRENDER OF THE FLORIDAS BY SPAIN.

In the place of St. Augustine, and on the 10th day of July, eighteen hundred and twenty-one, Don José Coppinger, colonel of the national armies, and commissioner appointed by his excellency the captain general of the Island of Cuba to make a formal delivery of this said place and province of East Florida to the government of the United States of America, by virtue of the treaty of cession concluded at Washington on the 22d of February, eighteen hundred and nineteen, and the royal schedule of delivery of the 24th of October of the last year, annexed to the documents mentioned in the certificate that form a heading to these instruments in testimony thereof, and the adjutant general of the southern division of said States, Colonel Don Robert Butler, duly authorized by the aforesaid government to receive the same, we, having had several conferences in order to carry into effect our respective commissions, as will appear by our official communications, and having received by the latter the documents, inventories, and plans appertaining to the property and sovereignty of the Spanish nation held in this province and its adjacent islands depending thereon, with the sites, public squares, vacant lands, public edifices, fortifications, and other works, not being private property, and the same having been preceded by the arrangements and formalities that, for the greater solemnity of this important act, they have judged proper, there has been verified, at four o'clock of the evening of this day, the complete and personal delivery of the fortifications, and all else of this aforesaid province, to the commissioner, officers, and troops of the United States; and, in consequence thereof, having embarked for the Havana the military and civil officers and Spanish troops in the American transports provided for this purpose, the Spanish authorities having this moment ceased the exercise of their functions, and those appointed by the American government having begun theirs; duly noting that we have transmitted to our governments the doubts occurring whether the artillery ought to be comprehended in the fortifications, and if the public archives relating to private property ought to remain and be delivered to the American government by virtue of the cession, and that there remain in the fortifications, until the aforesaid resolution is made, the artillery, munitions, and implements specified in a particular inventory, awaiting on these points and the others appearing in question in our correspondence, the superior decision of our respective governments, and which is to have, whatever may be the result, the most religious compliance at any time that it may arrive, and in which the possession that at present appears given shall not serve as an obstacle.

In testimony of which, and that this may at all times serve as an expressive and formal receipt in this act, we, the subscribing commissioners, sign four instruments of this same tenor, in the English and Spanish languages, at the above-mentioned place, and said day, month, and year.

Do certify by these presents that, on the seventeenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one of the Christian era, and forty-six of the independence of the United States, having met in the court-room of the Government House in the town of Pensacola, accompanied on either part by the chiefs and officers of the army and navy, and by a number of the citizens of the respective nations, the said Andrew Jackson, major general and commissioner, has delivered to the said colonel commandant, Don José Callava his before-mentioned powers; whereby he recognizes him to have received full power and authority to take possession of, and to occupy, the territories ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Washington on the 22d day of February, 1819, and for that purpose to repair to said territories, and there to execute and to perform all such acts and things touching the premises as may be necessary for fulfilling his appointment conformably to the said treaty and the laws of the United States, with authority likewise to appoint any person or persons in his stead to receive possession of any part of the said ceded territories, according to the stipulations of the said treaty; wherefore the colonel commandant, Don José Callava, immediately declared that, in virtue and in performance of the power, commission, and special mandate, dated at Havana on the 5th of May, 1821, he thenceforth and from that moment placed the said commissioner of the United States in possession of the country, territories, and dependencies of West Florida, including the fortress of St. Mark's, with the adjacent islands dependent upon said province, all public lots and squares, vacant lands, public edifices, fortifications, barracks, and other buildings which are not private property, according to, and in the manner set forth by, the inventories and schedules which he has signed and delivered with the archives and documents directly relating to the property and sovereignty of the said territory of West Florida, including the fortress of St. Mark's, and situated to the east of the Mississippi river, the whole in conformity with the second article of the treaty of cession concluded at Washington the 22d of February, 1819, between Spain and the United States, by Don Luis de Onis, minister plenipotentiary of his Catholic Majesty, and John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State of the United States, both provided with full powers, which treaty has been ratified on the one part by his Catholic Majesty Ferdinand the Seventh, and the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, on the other part; which ratifications have been duly exchanged at Washington the 22d of February, 1821, and the forty-fifth of the independence of the United States of America, by General Don Dionysius Vives, minister plenipotentiary of his Catholic Majesty, and John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State of the United States, according to the instrument signed on the same day; and the present delivery of the country is made in order that, in execution of the said treaty, the sovereignty and property of that province of West Florida, including the fortress of St. Mark's, shall pass to the United States, under the stipulations therein expressed.

MARINE DEPARTMENT—COLONIES, LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS, 15 Vindémiaire, year 12, October 8, 1803.

The colonial prefect and commissioner on the part of the French government for receiving and delivering Louisiana to Mr. Morales, intendant of that country for his Catholic Majesty:

SIR: Despatches from my government, forwarded by land from Washington city, reached me yesterday. They bring me the treaty for the cession of Louisiana to the United States.

The First Consul has been pleased to confide to me, in the name of the French republic, the charge of receiving and surrendering that country.

His intention, however, is that I should not enter upon the active execution of his orders in that respect, and that I should not deliver my powers until after the exchange of the ratifications between France and the United States. The ratification by the First Consul has already been sent to our diplomatic agent, for the purpose of being exchanged as soon as the President of the United States will be ready to proceed to that exchange.

My instructions, as well as other important dispositions connected with the entire fulfilment of my mission in this place, render it necessary for me to hasten, as much as possible, its accomplishment.

I hope you will be disposed to contribute to it, in what concerns you, by preparing your statements beforehand.

I have the honor to be, with perfect consideration, &c.,

LAUSSAT.

Copy of a letter from General Wilkinson and W. C. C. Claiborne to the Secretary of State, James Madison, esq., December 20, 1803.

CITY OF NEW ORLEANS, December 20, 1803.

SIR: We have the satisfaction to announce to you that the province of Louisiana was this day surrendered to the United States by the commissioner of France, and to add that the flag of our country was raised in this city amidst the acclamations of the inhabitants.

The enclosed is a copy of an instrument of writing which was signed and exchanged by the commissioners of the two governments, and is designed as a record of this interesting transaction.

Accept assurances of our respectful consideration.

JAMES WILKINSON.

Hon. JAMES MADISON,
Secretary of State, City of Washington.

No. 25.

Act of delivery by France to the United States of the province of Louisiana, December 20, 1803.

The undersigned, William C. C. Claiborne and James Wilkinson, commissioners or agents of the United States, agreeably to the full powers they have received from Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States, under date of October 31, eighteen hundred and three, and twenty-eighth year of the independence of the United States of America, (eighth Brumaire, twelfth year of the French republic,) countersigned by the Secretary, James Madison;

And citizen Peter Clement Laussat, colonial prefect and commissioner of the French government for the delivery, in the name of the French republic, of the country, territories, and dependencies of Louisiana to the commissioners or agents of the United States, conformably to the powers, commission, and special mandate which he has received, in the name of the French people, from citizen Bonaparte, First Consul, under date of June 6, eighteen hundred and three, (seventeenth Prairial, eleventh year of the French republic,) countersigned by the secretary of state, Hugues Maret, and by his excellency the minister of marine and colonies, Decrès:

Do certify by these presents that, on this day, Tuesday, December 20, eighteen hundred and three of the Christian era, (twenty-eighth Frimaire, twelfth year of the French republic,) being convened in the hall of the Hotel de Ville, of New Orleans, accompanied on both sides by the chiefs and officers of the army and navy, by the municipality and divers respectable citizens of their respective republics, the said William C. C. Claiborne and James Wilkinson delivered to the said citizen Laussat their aforesaid full powers, by which it evidently appears that full power and authority has been given them, jointly and severally, to take possession of and to occupy the territories ceded by France to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the thirtieth day of April last past, (10th Floréal,) and for that purpose to repair to the said Territory, and there to execute and perform all such acts and things touching the premises as may be necessary for fulfilling their appointments conformably to the said treaty and the laws of the United States.

And thereupon the said citizen Laussat declared that, in virtue of and in the terms of the powers, commission, and special mandate, dated at St. Cloud, June 6, eighteen hundred and three of the Christian era, (seventeenth Prairial, eleventh year of the French republic,) he put, from that moment, the said commissioners of the United States in possession of the country, territories, and dependencies of Louisiana, conformably to the first, second, fourth, and fifth articles of the treaty, and the two conventions concluded and signed April 30, eighteen hundred and three, (tenth Floréal, eleventh year of the French republic,) between the French republic and the United States of America, by citizen Francis Barbé Marbois, minister of the public treasury, and Messieurs Robert R. Livingston and James Monroe, ministers plenipotentiary of the United States, all three furnished with full powers, of which treaty and two conventions, the ratifications made by the First Consul of the French republic, on the one part, and by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, on the other part, have been exchanged and mutually received at the city of Washington October 21, eighteen hundred and three, (twenty-eighth Vindémiaire, twelfth year of the French republic,) by citizen Louis André Pichon, chargé d'affaires of the French republic, near the United States, on the part of France, and by James Madison, Secretary of State of the United States, on the part of the United States, according to the procès-verbal drawn up on the same day.

And the present delivery of the country is made to them, to the end that, in conformity with the object of the said treaty, the sovereignty and property of the colony or province of Louisiana may pass to the said United States, under the same clauses and conditions as it had been ceded by Spain to France, in virtue of the treaty concluded at St. Ildefonso on the first of October, eighteen hundred, (ninth Vindémiaire, ninth year,) between these two last powers, which has since received its execution by the actual re-entrance of the French republic into possession of the said colony or province.

And the said citizen Laussat has in consequence, at this present time, delivered to the said commissioners of the United States, in this public sitting, the keys of the city of New Orleans, declaring that he discharges from their oaths of fidelity towards the French republic the citizens and inhabitants of Louisiana who shall choose to remain under the dominion of the United States.

And that it may forever appear, the undersigned have signed the procès-verbal of this important and solemn act, in the French and English languages, and have sealed it with their seals, and have caused it to be countersigned by their secretaries of commission, the day, month, and year above written.

REGULATIONS OF O'REILLY, GAYOSO, AND INTENDANT MORALES.

Don Alexander O'Reilly, commander of Benfayon, of the order of Alcantara, inspector general of infantry, appointed, by special commission, governor and captain general of this province of Louisiana.

Divers complaints and petitions, which have been addressed to us by the inhabitants of Opelousas, Attacapas, Natchitoches, and other places of this province, joined to the knowledge we have acquired of the local concerns, culture, and means of the inhabitants, by the visit which we have lately made to the Côte des Allemands, Côte des Accadions, Hyberville, and La Pointe Coupée, with the examination we have made of the reports of the inhabitants assembled, by our order, in each district, having convinced us that the tranquillity of the said inhabitants, and the progress of culture, required a new regulation, which should fix the extent of the grants of lands which shall hereafter be made, as well as the enclosures, cleared lands, roads, and bridges, which the inhabitants are bound to keep in repair, and to point out the damage by cattle, for which the proprietors shall be responsible: for these causes, and having nothing in view but the public good and the happiness of every inhabitant, after having advised with persons well informed in these matters, we have regulated all those objects in the following articles:

1. There shall be granted to each newly arrived family, who may wish to establish themselves on the borders of the river, six or eight arpents in front, (according to the means of the cultivator,) by forty arpents in depth, in order that they may have the benefit of the cypress wood, which is as necessary as useful to the inhabitants.

2. The grantees, established on the borders of the river, shall be held bound to make, within the three first years of possession, mounds sufficient for the preservation of the land, and the ditches necessary to carry off the water. They shall, besides, keep the roads in good repair, of the width of at least forty feet between the inner ditch, which runs along the mound and the barrier, with bridges of twelve feet over the ditches which may cross the roads. The said grantees shall be held bound, within the said term of three years' possession, to clear the whole front of their land to the depth of two arpents; and, in default of fulfilling these conditions, their land shall revert to the King's domain, and be granted anew; and the judge of each place shall be responsible to the governor for the superintendence of this object.

3. The said grants can neither be sold nor aliened by the proprietors until after three years of possession, and until the above-mentioned conditions shall have been entirely fulfilled. To guard against every evasion in this respect, the sales of the said lands cannot be made without a written permission from the governor general, who will not grant it until, on strict inquiry, it shall be found that the conditions above explained have been duly executed.

4. The points formed by the lands on the Mississippi river, leaving, in some places, but little depth, there may be granted, in these cases, twelve arpents in front: and, on a supposition that these points should not be applied for by any inhabitant, they shall be distributed to the settlers nearest thereto, in order that the communication of the roads may not be interrupted.

5. If a tract belonging to minors should remain uncleared, and the mounds and roads should not be kept in repair, the judge of the quarter shall inquire into the cause thereof. If attributable to the guardians, he shall oblige them to conform promptly to this regulation; but, if arising from want of means in the minors, the judge, after having, by a verbal process, attained proof thereof, shall report the same to the governor general, to the end that the said land may be sold for the benefit of the minors; (a special favor, granted to minors only;) but, if no purchaser shall, within six months, be found, the said land shall be conceded gratis.

6. Every inhabitant shall be bound to enclose, within three years, the whole front of his land which shall be cleared; and, for the remainder of his enclosure, he will agree with his neighbors, in proportion to his cleared land and his means.

7. Cattle shall be permitted to go at large from the eleventh of November to the fifteenth of March of the year following, and at all other times the proprietor shall be responsible for the damage that his cattle may have done to his neighbors. He who may have suffered the damage shall complain to the judge of the district, who, after having satisfied himself of the truth thereof, shall name experienced men to estimate the value of the same, and shall then order remuneration without delay.

8. No grant in the Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, shall exceed one league in front by one league in depth; but when the land granted shall not have that depth, a league and a half in front by half a league in depth may be granted.

9. To obtain in the Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, a grant of forty-two arpents in front by forty-two arpents in depth, the applicant must make appear that he is the possessor of one hundred head of tame cattle, some horses, and sheep, and two slaves to look after them—a proportion which shall always be observed for the grants to be made of greater extent than that declared in the preceding article.

10. All cattle shall be branded by the proprietors; and those who shall not have branded them at the age of eighteen months cannot thereafter claim a property therein.

11. Nothing being more injurious to the inhabitants than strayed cattle, without the destruction of which tame cattle cannot increase, and the inhabitants will continue to labor under those evils of which they have often complained to us; and considering that the province is at present infested by strayed cattle, we allow the proprietors, until the first day of July of the next year, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-one, and no longer, to collect and kill, to their use, the said strayed cattle; after which time they shall be considered wild, and may be killed by any person whomsoever; and no one shall oppose himself thereto or lay claim to a property therein.

12. All grants shall be made, in the name of the King, by the governor general of the province; who will, at the same time, appoint a surveyor to fix the bounds thereof, both in front and depth, in presence of the judge ordinary of the district, and of two adjoining settlers, who shall be present at the survey. The abovementioned four persons shall sign the verbal process which shall be made thereof, and the surveyor shall make three copies of the same, one of which shall be deposited in the office of the scrivener of the government and cabildo, another shall be delivered to the governor general, and a third to the proprietor, to be annexed to the titles of his grant.

In pursuance of the powers which our lord the King (whom God preserve) has been pleased to confide to us by his patent, issued at Aranjuez, the 16th of April, 1769, to establish in the military, the police, and in the administration of justice and his finances, such regulations as should be conducive to his service and the happiness of his subjects in this colony; with the reserve of his Majesty's good pleasure, we order and command the governor, judges, cabildo, and all the inhabitants of this province, to perform punctually to all that is required by this regulation.

Given at New Orleans, the 18th of February, 1770.

Instructions of Governor Gayoso for the administration of posts and the distribution of lands.

Instructions to be observed by the commandants of the posts in this province for the admission of new settlers:

1. If the new settler comes from another post in the province, where he has obtained a grant of land, no other grant shall be made to him; and if he undertakes to fix himself down he must buy lands, or produce my special permission for the grant; and in order to determine whether he has before obtained land or not, the commandant of the post from which he goes shall express it in his passport.

2. If the new settler is a stranger, and is not a farmer, nor married, nor has property in negroes, merchandise, or money, he shall have no right to solicit a grant of lands until he has remained four years, conducting himself well, in some honest and useful occupation.

3. Artisans shall be fully protected, but no land shall be granted to them until they have acquired property, and have lived three years in the exercise of their art or profession.

4. To no unmarried emigrant, who has not a trade or profession, shall lands be granted till after the expiration of four years; and then only on his showing that he has been, without interruption, honestly employed in the cultivation of the earth; without which necessary circumstance he shall not be entitled to a grant.

5. If any person, as described in the last article, after having lived in the country two years, shall obtain a recommendation from a farmer of honesty, who shall be willing, from his industry and application, to give him his daughter in marriage, as soon as the marriage is accomplished in due form he shall be entitled to receive a grant of land, agreeably to the terms contained in this instruction.

6. The privilege of enjoying liberty of conscience is not to extend beyond the first generation. The children of those who enjoy it must positively be Catholics. Those who will not conform to this rule are not to be admitted, but are to be sent back out of the province immediately, even though they possess much property.

7. In the Illinois none shall be admitted but Catholics of the classes of farmers and artisans. They must also possess some property, and must not have served in any public character in the country from whence they came. The provisions of the preceding article shall be explained to the emigrants already established in the province, who are not Catholics, and shall be observed by them; the not having done it until this time being an omission and contrary to the orders of his Majesty, which required it from the beginning.

8. The commandants will take particular care that no Protestant preacher, or one of any sect other than the Catholic, shall introduce himself into the province; the least neglect in this respect will be a subject of great reprehension.

9. To every new settler, answering the foregoing description, and married, there shall be granted two hundred arpents of land; fifty arpents shall be added to every child he shall bring with him.

10. To every emigrant possessing property and uniting the circumstances before mentioned, who shall arrive with an intention to establish himself, there shall be granted two hundred arpents of land; and, in addition, twenty arpents for every negro that he shall bring: provided, however, that the grant shall never exceed eight hundred arpents to one proprietor. If he has such a number of negroes as would entitle him at the above rates to a larger grant, he will also possess the means of purchasing more than that quantity of land if he wants it; and it is necessary by all possible means to prevent speculations in lands.

11. No lands shall be granted to traders; as they live in the towns they do not want them.

12. Immediately on the arrival of a new settler the oath of fidelity shall be required of him. If he is married he shall prove that the wife whom he brings with him is his lawful wife. If he has goods or personal property they shall both declare what part of them belongs to the portion of the wife, and whether any part belongs to any person who is absent; giving them to understand that, if the contrary of what they assert is proved the lands which are granted to them shall be taken back, with all the improvements they have made upon them.

13. At the time when they take the oath the above particulars are to be attended to; and no lands are to be granted for any negroes which are not proved to be lawfully and wholly the property of the emigrant; nor for the wife whom he brings with him unless she is proved to be his lawful wife. In default of making such proofs he is to be taken as coming within the description given in the 2d article.

14. The new settler to whom lands have been granted shall lose them without recovery if, in the term of one year, he shall not begin to establish himself upon them, or if, in the third year, he shall not have put under labor ten arpents in every hundred.

15. He shall not possess the right to sell his lands until he shall have produced three crops on the tenth part of his lands, which shall be well cultivated; but in case of death he may leave them to his lawful heir, if he has one resident in the country. If he has no heir in the country they shall in no event go to an heir who is not of the country, unless such heir shall resolve to come and reside in it, conformably to the established conditions.

16. Debts contracted out of the province cannot be paid with the produce of lands thus granted, if there are debts due in the province, until after five harvests shall have been gathered. If for bad conduct it shall become necessary to eject the settler from the country before he shall have made the three crops necessary to give him the dominion of the soil and the right to dispose of it, the lands shall then again become united to the domain of the King; and in the same state shall be granted alternately to the young man and young woman residing within one league of the land which shall thus become vacant, who by their good conduct shall best deserve such a gift. The question, who is entitled to this preference, shall be decided in an assembly of the most considerable people, headed by the commandant; which decision they shall make without any expense. They shall only consult me in the case, making known the circumstances for my approbation, and shall without delay put the deserving person in possession.

17. The forms established by my predecessors in which to petition for lands shall be followed under the conditions expressed in this order, with the difference only that when the quantity of land amounts to or exceeds three hundred arpents the fees to the secretary must be paid.

18. It shall not be permitted to any new settler to form an establishment at a distance from other settlers. The grants of lands must be so made as not to leave pieces of vacant ground between one and another, since this would offer a greater exposure to the attacks of the Indians, and render more difficult the administration of justice and the regulations of the police so necessary in all societies, and more particularly in new settlements.

MANUEL GAYOSO DE LEMOS.

NEW ORLEANS, September 9, 1797.

General regulations and instructions of Morales for conceding lands.

Don John Bonaventure Morales, principal comptroller of the army and finances of the provinces of Louisiana and West Florida, intendant (par interim) and sub-delegate of the superintendence, general of the same, judge of admiralty and of the lands, &c., of the King, &c.

The King, whom God preserve, having been pleased to declare and order by his decree given at Santa Lorenzo the 22d of October of the last year, 1798, that the intendency of these provinces, to the exclusion of all other authority, be put in possession of the privilege to divide and grant all kind of land belonging to his crown, which right, after his order of August 24, 1770, belonged to the civil and military government, wishing to perform this important charge, not only according to the 81st article of the ordinance of the intendants of New Spain, of the regulations of the year 1754, cited in the said article, and the laws respecting it, but also with regard to local circumstances and those which may with injury to the interests of the King contribute to the encouragement and to the greatest good of his subjects already established, or who may establish themselves in this part of his possessions.

After having examined with the greatest attention the regulation made by his excellency Count O'Rielly, February 18, 1770, as well as that circulated by his excellency the present governor, Don Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, January 1, 1798, and with the counsel which has been given me on this subject by Don Manuel Serrano, assessor of the intendency, and other persons of skill in these matters; that all persons who wish to obtain lands may know in what manner they ought to ask for them, and on what conditions lands can be granted or sold; that those who are in possession without the necessary titles may know the steps they ought to take to come to an adjustment; that the commandants, as sub-delegates of the intendency, may be informed of what they ought to observe; that the surveyor general of this city, and the particular surveyors who are under him, may be instructed of the formalities with which they ought to make surveys of lands, or lots, which shall be conceded, sold, or arranged for; that the secretary of the finance may know the fees he is entitled to, and the duties he has to discharge, and that none may be ignorant of any of the things which may tend to the greatest advantage of an object so important in itself as the security of property under the conditions to enlarge, change, or revoke that which time and circumstances may discover to be most useful and proper, to the attainment of the end to which the benevolent intentions of his Majesty are directed; I have resolved that the following regulations shall be observed:

ARTICLE 1. To each newly arrived family [a chaque famille nouvelle] who are possessed of the necessary qualifications to be admitted among the number of cultivators of these provinces, and who have obtained the permission of the government to establish themselves on a place which they have chosen, there shall be granted, for once, if it is on the bank of the Mississippi, four, six, or eight arpents in front on the river, by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and if it is at any other place, the quantity which they shall be judged capable to cultivate, and which shall be deemed necessary for pasture for his beasts, in proportion according to the number of which the family is composed; understanding that the concession is never to exceed eight hundred arpents in superfices.

ART. 2. To obtain the said concessions, if they are asked for in this city, the permission which has been obtained to establish themselves in the place from the governor ought to accompany the petition, and if in any of the posts the commandant at the same time will state that the lands asked for are vacant and belong to the domain, and that the petitioner has obtained permission of the government to establish himself, and referring to the date of the letter or the advice they have received.

ART. 3. Those who obtain concessions on the bank of the river ought to make, in the first year of their possession, levees sufficient to prevent the inundation of the waters, and canals sufficient to drain off the water when the river is high; they shall be held, in addition, to make, and keep in good order, a public highway, which ought to be at least thirty feet wide, and have bridges of fifteen feet over the canals or ditches which the road crosses, which regulations ought to be observed, according to the usages of the respective districts, by all persons to whom the lands are granted, in whatever part they are obtained.

ART. 4. The new settlers who have obtained lands shall be equally obliged to clear and put in cultivation, in the precise time of three years, all the front of their concessions, of the depth of at least two arpents, on the penalty of having the lands granted remitted to the domain if this condition is not complied with. The commandants and syndics will watch that what is enjoined in this and the preceding article be strictly observed and occasionally inform the intendant what they may have remarked, well understanding that in case of default they will be responsible to his Majesty.

ART. 5. If a tract of land belonging to minors remain without being cleared, or as much of it as the regulations require, and that the bank, the road, the ditches, and the bridges, are not made, the commandant or syndic of the district will certify from whom the fault has arisen; if it is in the guardian he will urge him to put it in order, and if he fails he shall give an account of it; but if the fault arises from the want of means of the minor to defray the expense, the commandant or syndic shall address a statement of it to the intendency, to the end that sale of it may be ordered for the benefit of the minor, to whom alone this privilege is allowed, if in the space of six months any purchaser presents; if not, it shall be granted gratis to any person asking it or sold for the benefit of the treasury.

ART. 6. During the said term of three years no person shall sell nor dispose of the land which has been granted to him, nor shall he ever after the term, if he has failed to comply with the conditions contained in the preceding article; and to avoid abuses and surprise in this respect we declare that all sales made without the consent of the intendency, in writing, shall be null and of no effect; which consent shall not be granted until they have examined with a scrupulous attention if the conditions have or have not been fulfilled.

ART. 7. To avoid for the future the litigations and confusions of which we have examples every day, we have also judged it very requisite that the notaries of this city and the commandants of posts shall not take any acknowledgment of conveyance of land obtained by concession, unless the seller (grantor) presents and delivers to the buyer the title which he has obtained, and in addition being careful to insert in the deed the metes and bounds and other descriptions which result from the title, and the proces verbal of the survey which ought to accompany it.

ART. 8. In case that the small depth, which the points upon which the land on the river is generally formed, prevent the granting of forty arpents according to usage, there shall be given a greater quantity in front to compensate it; or if no other person asks the concession, or to purchase it, it shall be divided equally between the persons nearest to it that may repair the banks, roads, and bridges, in the manner as before prescribed.

ART. 9. Although the King renounces the possession of the lands sold, distributed, or conceded in his name, those to whom they are granted or sold ought to be apprised that his Majesty reserves the right of taking from the forests, known here under the name of cypress woods, all the wood which may be necessary for his use, and more especially which he may want for the navy, in the same manner and with the same liberty that the undertakers have enjoyed to this time, but this notwithstanding they are not to suppose themselves authorized to take more than is necessary, nor to make use of splitting those which are cut down, and which are found to be unsuitable.

ART. 10. In the posts of Opelousas and Attakapas the greatest quantity of land that can be conceded shall be one league in front by the same quantity in depth, and when forty arpents cannot be obtained in depth, a half a league may be granted; and for a general rule it is established, that to obtain in said posts a half a league in front the petitioner must be owner of one hundred head of cattle, some horses and sheep, and two slaves; and also in proportion for a larger tract, without the power, however, of exceeding the quantity before mentioned.

ART. 11. As much as it is possible and the local situation will permit, no interval shall be left between concessions; because it is very advantageous that the establishments touch, as much for the inhabitants, who can lend each other mutual support, as for the more easy administration of justice and the observance of rules of police indispensable in all places, but more especially in new establishments.

ART. 12. If, notwithstanding what is before written, marshy lands or other causes shall make it necessary to leave some vacant lands, the commandants and syndics will take care that the inhabitants of the district alone may take wood enough for their use only, and well understanding that they shall not take more; or if any individual of any other post shall attempt to get wood, or cut firewood, without having obtained the permission of this intendency, besides the indemnity which he shall be held to pay the treasury of the damage sustained, he shall be condemned for the first time to the payment of a fine of twenty-five dollars, twice that sum for the second offence, and for the third offence shall be put in prison, according as the offence may be more or less aggravated; the said fines shall be divided between the treasury, the judge, and the informer.

ART. 13. The new settler [comme le nouveau colon] to whom land has been granted in one settlement, cannot obtain another concession without having previously proven that he had possessed the first during three years, and fulfilled all the conditions prescribed.

ART. 14. The changes occasioned by the current of the river are often the cause of one part of a concession becoming useless, so that we have examples of proprietors pretending to abandon and reunite to the domain a part of the most expensive for keeping up the banks, the roads, the ditches, &c.; and willing to reserve only that which is good, and seeing that unless some remedy is provided for this abuse, the greatest mischief must result to the neighbors, we declare that the treasury will not admit of an abandonment or reunion to the domain of any part of the land the owner wishes to get rid of, unless the abandonment comprehends the whole limits included in the concession or act, in virtue of which he owns the land he wishes to abandon.

ART. 15. All concessions shall be given in the name of the King, by the general intendant of this province, who shall order the surveyor general or one particularly named by him to make the survey, and mark the land by fixing bounds, not only in front but also in the rear; this [survey] ought to be done in the presence of the commandant or syndic of the district, and of two of the neighbors, and these four shall sign the proces verbal, which shall be drawn up by the surveyor.

ART. 16. The said proces verbal, with a certified copy of the same, shall be sent by the surveyor to the intendant, to the end that on the original there be delivered, by the consent of the King's attorney, the necessary title paper; to this will be annexed the certified copy forwarded by the surveyor. The original shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, and care shall be taken to make annually a book of all which have been sent, with an alphabetical list, to be the more useful when it is necessary to have recourse to it, and for greater security, to the end that at all times and against all accidents, the documents which shall be wanted can be found; the surveyor shall also have another book, numbered, in which the proces verbal of the survey he makes shall be recorded, and as well on the original, which ought to be deposited on the record, as on the copy intended to be annexed to the title, he shall note the folio of the book in which he has enregistered the figurative plat of survey.

ART. 17. In the office of the finances there shall also be a book numbered, where the titles of concessions shall be recorded, in which, besides the ordinary clauses, mention shall be made of the folio of the book in which they are transcribed; there must also be a note taken in the contadoria or chamber of accounts of the army and finances, and that under the penalty of being void. The chamber of accounts shall also have a like book, and at the time of taking the note shall cite the folio of the book where it is recorded.

ART. 18. Experience proves that a great number of those who have asked for land think themselves the legal owners of it; those who have obtained the first decree by which the survey is ordered to measure it and put them in possession, others after the survey has been made have neglected to ask the title for the property; and as like abuses continuing for a longer time will augment the confusion and disorder which will necessarily result. We declare that no one of those who have obtained the said decrees, notwithstanding in virtue of them the survey has taken place, and that they have been put in possession, cannot be regarded as owners of land until their real titles are delivered completed with all the formalities before recited.

ART. 19. All those who possess lands in virtue of formal titles [titres formels] given by their excellencies the governor of this province since the epoch when it became under the power of the Spanish, and those who possessed them in the time when it belonged to France, so far from being interrupted shall, on the contrary, be protected and maintained in their possessions.

ART. 20. Those who, without the title or possession mentioned in the preceding article, are found occupying lands, shall be driven therefrom as from property belonging to the crown; but if they have occupied the same more than ten years, a compromise will be admitted to those who are considered as owners, that is to say, they shall not be deprived of their lands. Always that after information and summary procedure and with the intervention of the procurer of the King at the board of the treasury, they shall be obliged to pay a just and moderate retribution, calculated according to the extent of the lands, their situation, and other circumstances, and the price of estimation for once paid into the royal treasury. The titles to property will be delivered on referring to that which has resulted from the proceedings.

ART. 21. Those who are found in the situation expressed in the 18th article, if they have not cleared nor done any work upon the land they consider themselves proprietors of, by virtue of the first decree of the government, not being of the number of those who have been admitted in the class of new-comers in being deprived or admitted to compromise, in the manner explained in the preceding article, if they are of that class, they shall observe what is ordered in the article following.

ART. 22. In the precise and peremptory term of six months, counting from the day when this regulation shall be published in each post, all those who occupy lands without titles from the governor, and those who, in having obtained a certain number of arpents, have seized a greater quantity, ought to make it known, either to have their titles made out, if there is any, or to be admitted to a compromise, or to declare that the said lands belong to the domain, if they have not been occupied more than ten years, understanding if it passes the said term, if they are instructed by other ways, they will not obtain either title or compromise.

ART. 23. Those who give information of lands occupied after the expiration of the term fixed in the preceding article, shall have for their reward the one-fourth part of the price for which they are sold or obtained by way of compromise, and if desirable, he shall have the preference, either by compromise at the price of appraisement, and there shall be made a deduction of one-fourth, as in the former.

ART. 24. As it is impossible, considering all the local circumstances of these provinces, that all the vacant lands belonging to the domain should be sold at auction, as it is ordained by the law 15th, title 12th, book 4th, of the collection of the laws of these kingdoms, the sale shall be made according as it shall be demanded, with the intervention of the King's attorney for the board of finances, for the price they shall be taxed, to those who wish to purchase, understanding if the purchasers have not ready money to pay it shall be lawful for them to purchase the said lands at redeemable quit rent, during which they shall pay the five per cent. yearly.

ART. 25. Beside the moderate price which [the] land ought to be taxed, the purchasers shall be held to pay down the right of media annata or half years, to be remitted to Spain, which, according to the custom of Havana, founded on law, is reduced to two and a half per cent. on the price of estimation, and made eighteen per cent. on the sum, by the said two and a half per cent.; they shall also be obliged to pay down the fees of the surveyor and notary.

ART. 26. The sales of the land shall be made subject to the same condition and charges of banks, roads, ditches, and bridges, contained in the preceding article. But the purchasers are not subject to lose their lands if in the first three years they do not fulfil the said conditions. Commandants and syndics shall oblige them to put themselves within the rule, begin to perform the conditions in a reasonable term, and if they do not do it, the said work shall be done at the costs of the purchasers.

ART. 27. Care shall be taken to observe in the said sales that which is recommended in the eleventh article, seeing the advantages and utility which result from consolidating the establishments always when it is practicable.

ART. 28. The titles to the property of land which are sold or granted by way of compromise shall be issued by the general intendant, who, after the price of estimation is fixed, and of the media annata, (half year's,) or rent, or quit rent, the said price of estimation shall have been paid into the treasury, shall put it in writing, according to the result of the proceeding which has taken place with the intervention of the King's attorney.

ART. 29. The said procedure shall be deposited in the office of the finance, and the title be transcribed in another book intended for the recording of deeds and grants of land in the same manner as is ordered by the 17th article concerning gratuitous concessions. The principal chamber of accounts shall also have a separate book, to take a note of the titles issued for sales and grants under compromise.

ART. 30. The fees of the surveyor, in every case comprehended in the present regulation, shall be proportionate to the labor, and that which has been customary till this time to pay. Those of the secretary of finances, unless there be extraordinary labor, and where the new settlers are not poor (for in this case he is not to exact anything of them) shall be five dollars, and this shall include the recording and other formalities prescribed, and those of the appraisers and of the interpreters, if on any occasion there is reason to employ him to translate papers, take declarations, or other acts, shall be regulated by the ordinance [tariff] of the province.

ART. 31. Indians who possess lands within the limits of the government shall not in any manner be disturbed; on the contrary, they shall be protected and supported, and to this the commandants, syndic, and surveyors ought to pay the greatest attention to conduct themselves in consequence.

ART. 32. The granting nor sale of any lands shall not be proceeded in without formal information having been previously received that they are vacant, and to avoid injurious mistakes we premise that, besides the signature of the commandant or syndic of the district, this information ought to be joined by that of the surveyor and two of the neighbors well understanding. If, notwithstanding this necessary precaution, it shall be found that the lands have another owner besides the claimant, and there is sufficient reason to restore to him, the commandant or syndic, surveyor and the neighbors, who have signed the information, shall indemnify him for the losses he has suffered.

ART. 33. As far as it shall be practicable the inhabitants shall endeavor that the petitions presented by them to ask for lands be written in the Spanish language, on which they ought also to write the advice or information which the commandants have given. In the posts where this is not practicable the ancient usage shall be followed.

ART. 34. All the lots or seats belonging to the domain, which are found vacant either in this city, or boroughs, or villages already established, or which may be established, shall be sold for ready money, with the formalities prescribed in the article 24th, and others which concern the sale of lands.

ART. 35. The owners of lots or places which have been divided, [repartis,] as well those in front as towards the NE. and SW. extremities, NE. and SW. shall, in three months, present to the intendency the titles which they have obtained, to the end that, in examining the same, if any essential thing is wanting, they may be assured of their property in a legal way.

ART. 36. The same thing shall be done before the sub-delegates of Mobile and Pensacola; for those who have obtained grants for lots in these respective establishments, to the end that this intendency, being instructed thereon, may order what it shall judge most convenient to indemnify the royal treasury, without doing wrong to the owner.

ART. 37. In the [contadoria] office of the comptroller, contadoria of the army, or chambers of accounts of this province, and other boards under the jurisdiction of this intendency, an account shall be kept of the amount of sales or grants of lands, to instruct his Majesty every year what this branch of the royal revenue produces, according as it is ordered in the 13th article of the ordinance of the King, of the 15th of October, 1754.

ART. 38. The commandants or syndics, in their respective districts, are charged with the collection of the amount of the taxes or rent laid on lands for this purpose; the papers and necessary documents are to be sent to them and they ought to forward annually to the general treasury the sums they have collected, to the end that acquittances clothed with the usual formalities may be delivered them.

And that the present regulation may come to the knowledge of everybody, and that the thirty-eight articles of which it is composed may have their full and entire effect, until it pleases his Majesty to order otherwise; it shall be translated into French by M. Pierre Derbigny, the King's interpreter, shall be printed in the two languages, forwarded to all places and posts within the jurisdiction of this intendency; that the commandants, as sub-delegates thereof, shall make it known to the inhabitants in the usual form, and that it be published in this city; there shall also be sent a copy to M. the governor, and to the most illustrious cabildo, to the end that they please to lend their aid in the execution of that which has been before ordered, conformably to the laws and ordinances which have been made on this subject, and in the persuasion that this can be done without injury to the King's interest, and tend the more to the encouragement, the welfare, and prosperity of his subjects in this colony.

Refusal of the Intendant to sell lands, &c.

NEW ORLEANS, April 3, 1800.

I have to reply to your communication No. 9, that I cannot at this time consent to the sale of lands, in the manner and under the circumstances requested; and I have to make the same reply to that of the 6th February last, No. 8, in which you ask for 100,000 arpents. God preserve you, &c.

RAMON DE LOPEZ Y ANGULA.

DON HENRY PEYROUX, Commandant at New Madrid.

A further refusal, because the proposals appear speculations hurtful to poor people, &c.

NEW ORLEANS, April 3, 1800.

It was never the intention of the King to dispose of the lands in such large quantities, and under such circumstances as are stated in your letter of the 9th of February last, No. 9, and the petition of the inhabitants accompanying it.

It is true that in the new regulation there are provisions made for the sale of lands in the manner referred to ; but it is only under the previous formalities there specified, and with a reference to the ability and forces of the persons desirous of purchasing, because it would not be just that, for a small consideration, one or more speculators should make themselves masters of a great extent of lands, to the prejudice of others coming to settle, and who consequently find themselves driven to purchase those lands which they might otherwise have obtained free of expense.

For these reasons, I cannot at present accede to the before-mentioned proposal, which you will make known to the parties concerned. God preserve you, &c.

RAMON DE LOPEZ Y ANGULA.

Communication of the decease of the assessor of the intendency, and no receiving petitions for public land till another is appointed.

NEW ORLEANS, December 1, 1802.

On account of the death of the assessor of this intendency, and there not being in the province a learned man who can supply his place, I have closed the tribunal of affairs and causes relating to grants and compositions of royal lands, as the 81st article of the royal ordinance, for the intendants of New Spain, provides that for conducting that tribunal, and substantiating its acts, the concurrence of that officer shall be necessary.

I make this communication to apprise you of this providence, and that you may not receive or transmit memorials for the grant of lands until further orders. God preserve you, &c.

No. 27.

[Translation.]

SAN LORENZO, October 22, 1798.

In a royal order of this date I communicate the following to the governor of this province : "The King has been pleased to resolve, after having seen your letter of the 31st of August of last year, No. 3, addressed to the Prince of Peace, and another letter from the intendant, ad interim, of this province, of the 16th of October of the same year, No. 174, respecting the power of granting and distributing the King's lands in the district under your command, which power was vested in the political and military government, since the royal order of the 24th August, 1774 ; that, with a view to the good of the service, and for the better fulfilment of what is contained in the 81st article of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, the power of granting and distributing all kinds of lands be restored to, and made the particular province of, the intendency of this province, with inhibition to other authorities, in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws : consequently, the power of making such grants, heretofore vested in the government, is repealed and abolished, and shall henceforth reside in the intendency." This resolution is communicated to you for your information and its due fulfilment.

God preserve you many years. SOLER.

The INTENDENT ad interim of Louisiana.

ARANJUEZ, May 29, 1804.

The King has been pleased to approve the disposition, by sale, which you have made of some royal lands in the district of Baton Rouge, with the agreement of his Majesty's commissioners for delivering this province; and I communicate the same to you for your information, by royal order, in reply to your letter of the 5th December of last year, No. 265.

Señor Don JUAN VENTURA MORALES.

ARANJUEZ, February 20, 1805.

The King having been made acquainted with the contents of your confidential letter of the 31st July last past, No. 48, in which you state that the commandant of Pensacola, Don Vincente Folch, had given orders to the governor of Baton Rouge not to allow any lands to be located after the 20th of June without his order, nor to grant possession of those which had been sold by the intendency since the 18th May, 1803, from which have resulted the damages which you mention, his Majesty has directed me to communicate to said commandant, as I accordingly do, under this date, the provisions of the royal orders of the 22d October, 1798, 14th November, 1799, and 29th May, 1804, declaring, consequently, that you should bring to their conclusion such cases as are now depending respecting grants of land, and such others as may arise; and his Majesty hopes that you will employ your well-known zeal in drawing from that branch all possible advantages for the benefit of the royal treasury. All which I communicate to you, by order of his Majesty, for your information. God preserve you many years.

SOLER.

No. 28.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY COMMISSIONERS.

Opelousas claims.

No. 1.

Pierre Arceneaux claims one-third part of the land lying between the Coulé d'Aigle and Frederick Monton's land, being in depth forty arpents. This land was purchased by the said Pierre from Frederick Monton, who purchased from an Indian chief of the tribe of Attacapas. The notice of this claim is accompanied by the following documents: 1st. A certified copy of a deed of sale by Achenoya, chief of the Attacapas tribe of Indians, vested with power by Jacob Latortue, jr., and Baptiste, (as set forth in said deed of sale,) to Frederick Monton, for a tract of land in the quarter called Bayou de Blanc, in the county of Opelousas, bounded on one side by other land of the purchaser, and on the other side by the Coulé d'Aigle, with the depth of forty arpents, for the consideration of one hundred and fifteen dollars; sale passed 29th July, 1802, before Honoré de la Chaise, then acting as commandant for the post of Opelousas. 2d. A sale by the said Frederick Monton to the said Pierre Arceneaux, passed the 5th October, 1804, before the said Honoré de la Chaise, then styling himself "commandant for the United States of America" of the post of Opelousas, for one-third part of the land purchased by the said Monton from the Indians, to be taken next to the Coulé d'Aigle. No evidence has been adduced in this claim to establish a title by occupancy; it is, therefore, to be inferred that the claimant relies on the validity of the Indian title, and presumes the transfer passed before the commandant to be good and sufficient. It may not be improper here to inquire whether, and how far, this case, and others similarly circumstanced, may be affected by the laws of the United States, restraining the purchasing of the lands of Indians by unauthorized individuals. By an act of Congress passed 30th March, 1802, "for regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers," it is enacted that no grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or any title or claim thereto, from any Indian or nation, or tribe of Indians, within the boundaries of the United States, shall be of any validity, unless made by treaty or convention, made pursuant to the Constitution. And it is made a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, for any person not employed under the authority of the United States to negotiate any treaty or convention with Indians, or treat with them for the title or purchase of any lands held by them.—(See the twelfth section of the above recited act.) The provisions of the statute above quoted were, by an act of Congress passed the 26th March, 1804, entitled "An act erecting Louisiana into two Territories," &c., extended to the Territories, to take effect from and after the first day of October, 1804. Anterior to the said first day of October an act passed the 31st October, 1803, entitled "An act to enable the President of the United States to take possession of the territories ceded by France to the United States, and for the temporary government thereof," was to remain in force. By the last-mentioned act, neither the right of the Indians to sell, nor of any individual to purchase from them, has been interdicted or restrained. No doubts, therefore, can exist of the Indians within the limits of Louisiana having had the same right to pass sales of their lands at any time previous to the first day of October, 1804, that they enjoyed whilst Louisiana continued to be a colony of Spain; such sale, however, could only vest in a purchaser the kind of title which the Indians held. It, therefore, becomes necessary next to examine the nature and tenure of the Indian title to land in Louisiana. The Spanish functionaries seem to have made a distinction between Indians who had partaken of the rites of baptism and the ordinary tribes or nations of Indians within the limits of Louisiana. The former were denominated "Christian Indians," a term usually, if not invariably, incorporated in the body of the instrument by which their titles to lands were transferred to others. These Indians seem to have been considered capable of holding and enjoying lands in as full and ample a manner as any other subjects of the crown of Spain. That the tenure of the title of lands held by Indians not denominated Christians may be more clearly comprehended, and that repetition may be avoided in the progress of this report, the undersigned commissioners think it necessary here to insert such extracts, both from the testimony adduced and written documents filed in other claims held under purchase from Indians, as may appear in any degree applicable to the one under consideration, to which they may find it convenient and useful to make frequent references in their remarks on other claims similarly circumstanced. From testimony given in the claim of Thomas Nicholson (which will be reported among the claims in the county of Attacapas) by Louis C. de Blanc, esq., formerly exercising the office of commandant, civil and military, for the district of Natchitoches, and afterwards the same office for the district of Attacapas, the following is extracted: "The right of the Indians to sell their lands always was recognized and admitted by the Spanish government." "We always consider the title from the Indians to their villages the best of titles, because the original property of the soil was in them, and when this country was conquered the laws of the conquerors were enforced, but the property of the aborigines was held sacred. Hence the difference between the titles of Indians and other subjects. The other subjects who wanted land must demand and have a written title; it was not necessary for the Indians, because they already held a title to the land they claimed. Their title originated in first occupancy, cultivation, and settlement. The Indians never claimed other lands than their villages, and when they did, it was given them by the government. There never was any instance of the government of Spain taking land from Indians, especially their villages. Even when the Indians had abandoned some old villages, because their hunting was exhausted, and had established new ones by the grant of the Spanish government, their villages deserted were always considered as their property, subject to their disposal, and the inhabitants never suffered to settle there, but were always driven off. There was no time fixed in which a deed must be presented for approbation. It could be presented in one year or a hundred years, and it would always receive the sanction of government. The laws made it necessary, when the Indians sold their lands, to have the deeds presented to the governor for approbation. This was only a form, as the governor, in all cases, approved, and never refused. The villages of the Indians never consisted of less than a league, and often two leagues or more, in front, and it was the custom of the Spanish government, whenever they granted land to Indians, to give them a league or more square."

In the claim of Miller and Fulton for a tract of land on Bayou Bœuf, in the county of Rapides, purchased from Indians, which will be reported by the register and receiver of this district, pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress passed the 27th of February, 1803, will be seen the testimony of Mr. Charles Laveau Trudeau, many years surveyor general of the province of Louisiana, under the Spanish government, from which the following is extracted: "The deponent knows of no ordinances or regulations under any governor of Louisiana, except O'Reilly, by which the Indians inhabiting lands in the province were limited in their possessions to one league square about their villages; but this regulation has not been adhered to by any of his successors. The deponent knows that the custom was, that when a tribe of Indians settled a village by the consent of the government, the chief fixed the boundaries; and where there were one or more neighboring villages, the respective chiefs of those villages agreed upon and fixed the boundaries between themselves; and when any tribe sold out its village, the commandant uniformly made the conveyance according to the limits pointed out by the chief. The land claimed by the Indians around their villages was always considered as their own, and they were always protected in the unmolested enjoyment of it by the government against all the world, and has always passed from one generation to another so long as it was possessed by them as their own property. The Indians always sell their land with the consent of the government; and if, after selling their village and the lands around it, they should, by the permission of the government, establish themselves elsewhere, they might again sell, having first obtained the permission of the government, and so on, as often as such permission was obtained, and no instance is known where such permission has ever been refused or withheld. These sales were passed before the commandant of the district, and were always considered good and valid without any order from the commandant."

In the claim of Miller and Fulton for land on Bayou Bœuf, the following is an extract from the testimony of Mr. Valentine Laypard, late commandant under the Spanish government for the post of Rapides: "The deponent has never known a smaller quantity than a league square of land to be assigned to any one tribe of Indians, let their numbers be what they might; and in one case, viz: the Apalachie tribe, (a small tribe,) a much larger quantity than a league square, of the first quality, and situation on Red river, was assigned to them."—(See Rapides Reports, No. 125.) Extract from the testimony of the same person in the claim of Miller and Fulton for land on Red river: The deponent saith "that he had been agent of Indian affairs for many years, under the Spanish government, for the post of Rapides, spoke the language of the Indians, &c.; that in the year 1803 the Apalachie and Tensaw tribes of Indians came to the deponent, as Indian agent, to inform him of their having sold their land to Miller and Fulton, and requested him to pass the sale; that the deponent replied to the Indians that neither himself nor they could dispose of or convey their lands without the authority and approbation of the governor of the province." By referring to the documents filed in the claim, it will be seen that application was made to the governor, who gave his written permission for the chief to sell, with the consent of his nation.—(See Rapides Reports, No. 126.)

In the claim of Patrick Morgan and Daniel Clark for a tract of land in the county of Attacapas, which will be reported among other claims of the said county, it will be seen that a Mr. Fuselier de la Clair had purchased from Rinemo, chief of the Attacapas village, called in French "Lamonier," the said village and land depending thereon, of two leagues in front from north to south, limited on the west by the river Vermilion, and on the east by the river Techè. This sale was passed in November, 1760, when Louisiana was subject to France; and being executed before Mr. Kerlerie, then governor of the province, is evidence that the consent of the governor to sales passed by the Indians was at that date considered necessary to their validity. About the same time that the above sale was passed, three or four other purchases were made from the Indians of the Attacapas, by which a very large portion of the land of that district, and nearly or quite all of the valuable lands on the river Teché were embraced. After Louisiana had changed sovereigns, and became a colony of Spain, the Count De O'Reilly, the first governor of the province under the Spanish monarchy, passed regulations or ordinances, by which no grant for land in Opelousas, Attacapas, or Natchitoches, could exceed one league square. It would seem that in some cases these regulations were intended to have a retrospective operation; for we find that Mr. De la Clair, in the year 1770, petitioned the governor for a grant of one league front by a league in depth, expressly admitting in his petition that the sale from the Indians "was not sufficient to assure to him the property of the said land." On this petition, the said Governor O'Reilly, on the 2d of March, 1770, made what was denominated a provincial concession, ordering the surveyor to make out the limits to the petitioner of a tract of land of one league in front by a league in depth. In like manner have the other purchases from the Indians been reduced to one league square, the surplusage not having been considered as reverting to the Indians, but as making a part of the royal domain, which has been granted from time to time, as it may have been petitioned for by other individuals.

In the claim of Stephen Lynch, (Rapides Reports, No. 108,) it will be seen that Lynch purchased from the attorney in fact of the Reverend Mr. McGuire, who purchased from Indians, and is to be entitled to receive nothing in payment from the purchaser until the sale made by the Indians to McGuire shall have been ratified by the governor. In the same claim a document is filed which appears to be a transcript of a judicial investigation and decision of the conflicting claims of the said Lynch and a man named Carrigan, before Cæsar Archinad, alcalde of the district, who has decided that Lynch's title is good, provided Carrigan shall not be able to produce a prior conveyance from McGuire or his attorney, and provided, also, that the sale from the Indians to McGuire shall be ratified by the government.

In the claim of Joseph Gillard, (Rapides Reports, No. 57,) in passing the sale from the Indians to Collin Lacour, the commandant of Natchitoches, before whom it was executed, Louis C. de Blanc has inserted a condition, making it necessary that the deed should be presented to the governor general of the province for his approval and confirmation.

In the claim of John Lyons for a tract of land on the Bayou que de Tortue, purchased from an Indian of the Attacapas tribe, named Celestine, the commandant who wrote the deed of sale, and before whom it was executed, (Louis C. de Blanc,) has included a provision whereby it was made necessary to present the deed for the approbation of the governor general of the province. In the foregoing document strong evidence is perceived of the general understanding that the sanction of the governor of the province, whilst Louisiana continued to be a Spanish colony, was necessary to the validity of all sales made by Indians other than those denominated Christians; and it necessarily results that titles held under such sales were inchoate until that sanction was obtained. The sales by the Indians transferred the kind of right which they possessed. The ratification of the sale by the governor must be regarded as a relinquishment of the title of the crown in favor of the purchaser. May the Indians, on account of being the aborigines of the country, be considered as having, at all times, had a right to the unappropriated or unoccupied lands? And can their sales of lands which they did not occupy be taken as vesting in a purchaser an indefeasible title? It will be noticed that, in the extract made from the testimony of Mr. De Blanc, there is an assertion that the title of the Indians, especially to the lands, including their villages, was considered, under the Spanish government, as "the best of titles;" and that this title was held sacred on account of their being the aborigines of the country. The same witness has also said that even the villages abandoned by the Indians were afterwards regarded as their property, and subject to their disposal. The undersigned commissioners do not perceive the orthodoxy of these assertions. If the Indian title really possessed the dignity which Mr. De Blanc has assigned to it, a formal extinction of that title, by treaty or purchase, by the French or Spanish governments, ought to have preceded all grants made by either of these governments, because there was not perhaps a spot of the country susceptible of settlement which the roving natives had not, at some past period, occupied It will be observed that in another part of his testimony Mr. De Blanc has insinuated that this country was conquered from the Indians. The inquiries and researches of the undersigned, however, afford them no evidence of any fact which can induce them to consider the country as having been acquired by conquest; on the contrary, the Indians seemed to have permitted European emigrants to usurp the sovereignty of the country without making any opposition to them; and the right thus obtained by the crown of France, and afterwards transferred to that of Spain, has acquired force and validity by prescription—has been legitimated by the tacit acquiescence of the natives in that usurpation. If it should be asked what evidence exists of the law of prescription operating to the extinction of the Indian title to lands in Louisiana, it might be replied that the evidence is to be found in the various acts of the Spanish government in relation to the Indians, evincing that the government recognized no title in them independently of that derived from the crown—a mere right of occupancy at the will of the government; else why was the sanction of the government necessary to all sales passed by Indians, which may be clearly established by a recurrence to written documents, and the testimony of Messrs. Trudeau, De Blanc, and Laypard? And why was it not necessary to have such sanction of the sales made by other subjects of the Spanish government? The force and effect of prescription, in abolishing the Indian title to lands in Louisiana, is further established by the Indians permitting themselves to be removed from place to place by governmental authority; by their condescending in some cases to ask permission of the government to sell their lands, and, when that permission was not solicited, assenting to the insertion of a clause in the deeds of sale expressly admitting that their sales could be of no validity without the ratification of the government. "There was no time fixed," says Mr. De Blanc in another part of his evidence, "in which a deed must be presented for approbation. It might be presented in one year, or a hundred years, and would always receive the sanction of the government." Would it not be a very preposterous regulation, under any form of government, and very unlikely to have existence under a monarchical one, that should require the acts of an inferior to be submitted to a superior officer for his scrutiny and approbation, and at the same time deny to such superior the right of rejection? That, therefore, the governors of the Spanish colony of Louisiana had the right not only of rejecting Indian sales, but of actually annihilating them, it is conceived will not be denied; nor is it at all probable that the governors, either, would always sanction, or have always sanctioned, such sales. Let it be remembered that in the whole extent of the western district there are not more than three out of the many sales made by Indians since Louisiana became a colony of Spain which are known to have received the governmental sanction. And let it be known, also, that a sale that may have been rejected by any governor would not have been exhibited to the board of commissioners as evidence of title. Therefore, although the board of commissioners have no means of producing any proof of the rejection of any Indian sale, it does not follow that none have been rejected. The practice by Governor O'Reilly of reducing the quantity of land embraced by sales which had been made by Indians under the sanction of the government, when Louisiana was a colony of France, was much more arbitrary. But if it could be established that no Indian sale was ever rejected by the Spanish government, this would only prove that none had been presented but such as were admissible; not that a case might not occur which would demand the exercise of the governor's negative. Suppose, for example, a sale from the Opelousas Indians, at a time when that tribe had dwindled down to not more than twenty persons, which should embrace half the unoccupied lands in the county of Opelousas, can it be imagined that such a sale would not have been rejected by any governor of Louisiana? Many of the sales from the Attacapas Indians were obtained about the time of the change of government by which Louisiana was transferred to the United States, some of them subsequent to that change, and at a time when it is known from good information that those Indians were reduced to one single village, the inhabitants of which were short of one hundred. In some cases, as will appear by the subjoined schedule of Indian sales, six or eight distinct tracts have been sold by the same individual Indian. Is it not probable that if sales had been passed under circumstances such as are stated above, before the change of government, or prospect of such a change, they would have been rejected? Although no time may have been prescribed within which the sales of Indians were to have been presented for ratification, the purchasers could not have been ignorant that the regulations required that they should be presented at some time for ratification, because the condition was generally expressed in the face of the deed; and therefore they must have known that those titles were incomplete at all times before the ratification. The undersigned commissioners are of opinion that there is a wide difference between the titles of such persons as have purchased lands from Indians which such Indians were actually occupying at the date of their sales, and the titles and claims of persons who purchased from Indians not in the actual occupancy of the land at the date of their sales. Purchasers of the first description, although the deeds of transfer may not have been presented, and, of course, could not have received the governmental sanction, may be considered as having extinguished the kind of title which the Indians enjoyed, and are, therefore, in the opinion of the commissioners, equitably entitled to so much, at least, of the land claimed as would be a full indemnity for the consideration paid for it. Purchasers of the second description would not, in the opinion of the board, be entitled to any remuneration, because it is conceived the Indians in such cases were selling a thing to which they had no kind of title. The investigation of claims for land purchased from Indians seems to have brought into view four distinct classes: First, claims for lands purchased from Indians denominated Christians, whose sales are generally for small tracts of such extent as an Indian and his family might be supposed capable of cultivating, passed the proper Spanish officer and duly filed of record. These sales are believed to have been valid, by the usages of the Spanish government, without ratification being necessary. Secondly, claims for lands purchased from some tribe, or chief of some tribe, of Indians, the sale of which may have been ratified by the governor of the province. These are also considered as valid—the Indian sale transferring their right—the ratification by the governor being regarded as a relinquishment in favor of the purchaser of the right of the crown. Thirdly, claims for lands purchased from Indians of the description last mentioned, who, from the evidence adduced before the board, shall appear to have been in the actual occupancy of the land at the date of the sale, but whose deeds of sale may not have been presented for the ratification of the governor. In this case the Indians are considered as having transferred only the right of occupancy, which they held at the will of the government. The title is incomplete, but the purchaser supposed to have an equitable claim for the confirmation of his title to so much of the land claimed as would be a full indemnity for the consideration he may have paid. Fourth, and lastly, claims for lands sold by Indians of the last description who did not occupy them at the date of their sales, and whose sales have not been ratified by any governor of Louisiana. Such sales are considered as vesting no titles in the purchasers, (unless accompanied by some equitable circumstance in their favor,) and, in the opinion of the board of commissioners, ought not to be confirmed. Of this last class is the claim at present under consideration, unattended by any circumstances known to the board of commissioners which might entitle it to a confirmation.

Governor White's letter.

SEÑOR CAPITAN GENERAL: Don Gideon Dupont, having gone to the United States of America in November or December, 1802, taking with him eleven negroes belonging to his father, who, in April of the same year, had changed his abode to that country, where he died, which negroes had remained mortgaged in this place to answer for certain debts he had contracted, has now returned, claiming part of the lands which were granted to his said father, and had been since granted to others. His change of domicil having been public and notorious, and it being conformable to the ninth article of the edict respecting concessions of land, published on the 12th of October, 1803, which I have transmitted to your excellency in my official letter, No. 677, index 65—from this incident, and the said article not providing to whom should belong the buildings or improvements on the lands abandoned or not cultivated for the two years prescribed in it, the doubt occurred to me whether they belonged to the King or to him who changed his abode, abandoned or did not cultivate the lands, or to him to whom they were last granted, and judging proper to hear my assessor general on the subject, I transmitted to him the official letter marked No. 1, to which he replied as your lordship will see in the document No. 2.

The answer of my assessor has not relieved me from the doubt which I proposed to him, and although I might have insisted on his answering me categorically, I have avoided doing so, that I might not enter into discussions which generate nothing but useless disputes in the endeavor to sustain the first opinion formed, and I, in consequence, determined what seemed to me most conducive to the interests of the King and to the improvement of the province, with a reservation of what your lordship may be pleased to direct, according to what the annexed edict (No. 3) will make known to you.

Should a person be asked what punishment the man would deserve who committed a murder, the answer would properly be that he deserved death, although he who kills another in his own defence or in other particular cases does not deserve it. In the same manner my assessor might very well have declared to me his opinion, whether or not the person who is proved to have changed his domicil, or has abandoned or not cultivated the lands within the two years pointed out, ought also to lose the improvements which might be on them, without confining to the variations and modifications which laws or general rules may have, according to the circumstances which occur in the particular cases of those whom I excepted, as did also the same assessor himself, when, with his knowledge and approbation, I established the general rules of the said edict of 1803, which I pray your lordship to have in view, as I am well persuaded that general laws or penalties are not always applicable to individual cases, although kings and princes establish them that they may serve for government of subaltern judges, who only know the facts and crimes committed in individual cases, exacting from them the observance, except when cases occur distinct from those which are present to the mind of the legislator.

Besides the analogous reasons which I have stated in my official letter No. 1 for considering the improvements referred to on abandoned or uncultivated lands as belonging to the King, I rest on another very powerful one, inasmuch as it interests the increase and improvement of agriculture, which is, that many continue working lands which perhaps they would abandon if they knew that they would have to be paid for the improvements by the individual to whom they were subsequently granted. On the other side, it being determined that they should lose the lands as a punishment for their abdication and carelessness in abandoning them for two successive years, it appears a necessary consequence that the lands, which are the principal, reverting to the royal patrimony, the improvements, which are accessory, should follow the same fate, although it would be convenient that the government should be able to give them to the person who may solicit the lands, if his merit and circumstances entitle him to said favor, which will serve as an incitement to agriculture. Surprised to see that Dupont considered himself to have a just title to reclaim lands, which, if his father, by going to the United States, had not abandoned, would not be hereditary until after ten years of uninterrupted cultivation, they are conceded to the grantee in absolute property, in which respect Dupont is deficient; and convinced that to listen to such pretensions would give occasion to numberless lawsuits, disturbing the quiet of good and bona fide settlers, who would not feel secured in their lands, even though they had possessed and cultivated them for successive years, and built houses on them, the circumstances under which this individual claims are particularly objectionable, as, after having taken the oath of allegiance on the 3d of June, 1802, and having had granted to him on the same day seven hundred acres of land for twenty-five negroes which he offered to introduce into the province, he returned to the United States, where he has constantly resided with his mother and sisters, and returned here solely for the purpose of asking for the lands of his father and selling them, as he explains in his petition, not with a view of establishing himself in the province, as is proven by his not having negroes in it, or having brought with him even one of the twenty-five which he offered.

It may be further remarked that the greater part of the lands claimed by Dupont were formerly granted to others; and attending to such pretensions as his would be the cause of hindering individuals from asking for lands, although they should see them uncultivated, lest they might be dispossessed of them, or exposed to an expensive lawsuit I have determined, in order to cut up by the root these inconveniences and abuses, restrained in a great measure by the said edict of 1803, to transmit to the King the memorials presented by Dupont on this occasion, with a certain plan in which I propose and establish the circumstances which ought to concur in the new settlers, that they may be considered as such, and in consequence enjoy the favors dispensed to them. The manœuvres undue and intrigues of a great number of those who, only in name and from having taken the oath of fidelity, style themselves new settlers, exact all the attention of government. There are individuals of this class who, having taken the oath, absent themselves from the province, and at the end of two or three years return with considerable cargoes, which they introduce without payment of duties, which expeditions they repeat, until, tired of this rotation, they disappear without having been in the province two successive months ; others are married, come and go without bringing their families; others, like comets, make their periodical revolutions until they disappear altogether; others hire out their lands which were granted to them and go strolling about; others absent themselves, as soon as the lands are granted to them, for the negroes they declare they possess, and at the end of years return, asking for them, without having brought any negroes with them, at a time when they are regularly granted to others. Lands are granted to others for the number of white and black workmen they offer; and then sending off the white people and selling or hiring out the negroes in different employments than those of the field, the lands remain desert and uncultivated; others become subject to take off cargoes of cedar wood, and the cargoes being finished, there is an end to the allegiance. Finally, Señor Captain General, this province has more the appearance of an American factory or colony than a Spanish province. It is a matter of deep regret to me that there is no Spanish individual whom I can commission to examine and consult with on the measures necessary for my decisions, since those who have some intelligence and are of any character step aside and enter into speculations, and others, prostituting themselves for the vile gain produced to them by the forming petitions and memorials, (as there are no regular professors here—all set up for attorneys and advocates,) patronize the villanies and intrigues of these knights of the post, fomenting and fostering lawsuits and processes for whomsoever they can, all the profit redounding to themselves and the notary, and comprising the parties, who find themselves obliged to seek for money to pay the costs and for the work of their protectors by means not very regular, which again produce new lawsuits, forming in this manner a circle of dissensions which cease not until the ruin of the litigants is accomplished.

As these evils produce effects diametrically opposite to the intentions of the King, who so much desires the increase of the province in its population, agriculture, and commerce, I have collected in my plan referred to all that, after mature reflection, I believe would contribute to the sovereign intentions under present circumstances, and according to the experience which I have acquired during the nine years of my being on this post. May God preserve your excellency many years.

No. 33.

[Translation.]

Governor Estrada to the captain general respecting a grant of lands within the Indian boundaries.

Most Excellent Sir: With my official letter of the 26th June last I stated to your excellency that I was taking the necessary information to complete the report required by your excellency on the memorial and plan presented by Don Cristoval Gios for the settlement of the south coast of this province, which report is as follows:

Don Cristoval Gios, a native of New Orleans, asks the King for the gratuitous concession of a territory situated on the west coast of this province from 29° to 24° 54′, with an extent from the coast to the interior of 15 leagues.

By the nicest calculation, this territory comprises six millions and a half of acres, English statute measure, which is used in this province.

1. The plan begins by bringing to the notice of government that there are on that coast the three ports of Espiritu Santo, Carlota, and San Carlos, which if settled and fortified would serve as points of defence and reunion against any hostile attempt—a truth which needs no demonstration.

2. The said plan goes on, that it would also be advantageous to the province that the Indians in these neighborhoods should be civilized, and that a high road be opened from the bay of Espiritu Santo to St. Augustine, between which points no communication exists at present.

3. He finally concludes with the undeniable fact that the province and royal treasury would also derive much advantage from the cultivation, rearing of stock, fisheries, and the timber and naval stores which would be drawn from this establishment.

I have understood that in the office of the captain general should exist the reports made by Señor Don Vicente Folch, in the year 179–, respecting the three ports referred to by the petitioner, said officer having been commissioned by the most excellent lord Don Luis de las Casas, by order of the King, to make plans of said coast, and examine carefully the points proper for establishments, so that nothing would remain to be further added on the subject, having before you said report, and that made to your excellency by Señor Don Enrique White, deceased, on the 3d of November, 1809, (letter No. 1,206,) in consequence of a similar petition made by Don Richard Reynal Keene.

That the civilization of the Indians of those parts would be beneficial to this province is undoubted; but as Don Cristoval Gios does not mention the means to be used for obtaining so laudable an end, I may be excused from discussing the subject; still I cannot but observe to your excellency that this government has never lost sight of this object, and I am of opinion that it can only be brought about by time. Man in the savage state approximates slowly to a state of civilization; and from what I have observed and the information I have received, these Indians will in a short time be obliged to apply themselves to grazing and tillage, from the scarcity of game. They already provide this city with the fresh meat consumed here, and many Indians have over a thousand head of cattle. The savage who from a hunter becomes a herdsman or laborer has passed the most arduous step towards civilization, and, but that the nation is now engaged fighting for existence with the tyrant of Europe, and consequently cannot spare funds from its defence for an enterprise of this nature, it would be easy for me to show your excellency that the only way to accelerate the civilization of the red people would be to continue, as hitherto, giving them a fair commerce and providing them from time to time with the implements of labor they may want, and especially to appoint a resident Indian agent, as the Anglo-Americans do, who would instruct them by his intelligence and by his example in agriculture; but this must be reserved for more happy times.

What Don C. Gios says in the third paragraph is undeniable; but the objection arises that he does not point out the means by which he proposes to execute so vast a project as the populating of such an extensive country. The eastern coast of this province is three-quarters part uninhabited, although every imaginable facility has been extended to the numerous settlers. Here lands are given gratis, and the title of proprietorship, after ten years' uninterrupted cultivation; and many or the greater part of the natives and foreigners already established, or who may come to establish themselves, would purchase them rather than delay the ten years, (a provision of this government,) for the purpose of enjoying at once the advantages of the absolute dominion to make use of them at will—all as I have represented to your excellency at length in my representation dated the 19th June last, letter 26. Here the new settler introduces all his property free of duties, and also will meet aid which Don Cristoval Dios cannot afford them; so that if any of his Majesty's subjects are desirous of emigrating to the American dominions they will find lands here as fertile as those of Espiritu Santo and a government already established capable of assisting and protecting them.

But the greatest objection to the project of Don Cristoval Gios remains to be examined, and it is that the lands he asks the cession of are not public; they are the property of the Indians, who look with much interest to any usurpation of them, however small it may be. The preservation of their lands is one of the bases of our friendship with them; and in all the harangues pronounced by the governors of this province they have been always promised the same treatment and privileges they had under the British government. That government ruled the land as a sovereign, but left the Indians the property of the soil, except those places which they had acquired from the aborigines by purchase or by a solemn treaty made with the chiefs. The Anglo-Americans follow this same rule with the Indians who are under their dominion, and it is certain that the same rule has been religiously observed in the two Floridas, no white man being permitted to purchase land from the Indians without the intervention of the government to prevent frauds, and prohibiting strictly that any person should establish himself in the territory known as theirs.

In virtue of this, I am of opinion that unless Don Cristoval Gios obliges himself to purchase from the Indians the lands he pretends to, and that said purchase is made with the knowledge and in the presence of this government and interpreters appointed by it, his project is rather directed to compromise the tranquillity of this province, and therefore that perpetual silence on the subject should be imposed upon him.

God preserve your excellency many years.

From the captain general, answering that the proposal for alienating public lands cannot be acceded to, being prohibited in several royal orders.

HAVANA, September 14, 1811.

I have seen the letters of your excellency, Nos. 26 and 37, relative to the proposition that, under present circumstances, it would be useful to alienate to new settlers the public lands of that province on the terms which it expresses, and, in answer, I state to your excellency that such alienation of lands cannot take place, as, by a royal order of the 14th of November, 1804, the admission of citizens of the United States into the Floridas is prohibited; and, by another of the 31st of March, 1806, that the sales of lands which were made to foreigners in West Florida should under no pretext be continued.

Letter to the governor of Florida, containing the royal order that the laws of the Indies respecting lands should be observed.

MADRID, June 8, 1814.

The King, desirous to prevent the doubts which have begun to be raised by reason of the decree of the 4th of January of last year, relative to the distribution of lands, and that all disputes may disappear which have arisen from the forgetfulness and want of observance of the provisions of the laws of the Indies and the ordinances of intendants, with serious injury to the royal treasury and the proprietors, who, agreeably to the same, have legally acquired them, has been pleased to command that the intendant comply exactly with what is directed in said ordinances respecting the alienation of lands, the proceeds of which, as well as of everything else of the royal domain, should be applied to the support of the expenses of the same; and that in their tribunals they attend to what is prescribed in the laws of the Indies, and particularly in the royal instruction of the 15th of October, 1754, not admitting the least recourse of a corporation or town against those lands which, being already laid off and measured, should be adjudged to their owners in virtue of a title of gift, composition, or purchase, as it is his Majesty's desire that interpretations to the contrary of this command should in no manner prejudice his royal interests, nor those of his loyal subjects in these dominions, which I communicate to your excellency by royal order, for your information, and that you may command its punctual execution.

God preserve your excellency many years.

The governor of East Florida to the Marquis Someruelos.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Florida, June 19, 1814.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: The deplorable condition in which this place and province are at the present time, and the fact that out of the one hundred and fifty-one thousand and thirty-one dollars four reals annually appropriated, nine hundred and twenty-five thousand one hundred and thirty-three dollars and one and a half reals were due to them at the end of April last, compel me to devise some means of relief from the embarrassments in which they are constantly involved from the want of funds necessary to supply their immediate wants, such as the purchase of provisions, the pay of the 3d battalion of Cuba, annual presents to the Indians, and the discharge of the accumulating dues to the officers of the royal treasury, invalids, Florida pensioners, and to the heads of families of those settlers who are entitled to daily alms and stipend, and whose clamors are so continual that they would move the most obdurate heart with compassion.

The greater part of the commerce of this province at the present time is carried on in British vessels coming to the port of Fernandina, Amelia island, for the purpose of taking timber and carrying it to England, paying the slight duty of 7½ per cent., levied upon a moderate valuation. This timber is felled by the inhabitants wherever they please, without any restrictions; and the Americans, our neighbors, receive the benefit of the greater portion, without paying any duty to us, as they cut the timber clandestinely; and to this is added the inconvenience of the impracticability to prevent it, on account of the desert state of the country where said timber is found.

I am of opinion that, in order to secure to the King that which belongs to him, some useful provision might be made for the welfare of this province; and it is this: that as in West Florida, where, in order to assist the royal chest, which, perhaps, is not so embarrassed as this, a determination has been adopted to sell, indistinctly, to natives and foreigners, the royal lands, according to their quality, the same system be likewise established here of aliening to the new colonist, now admitted or hereafter to be admitted, agreeably to what has been provided by his Majesty in his royal orders. The lands are given gratis to such as, possessing the requisite qualifications, come to settle thereon, but, in consequence of a government disposition, the title to the property is not conveyed until after the completion of ten years of uninterrupted possession and cultivation. This practice is injurious, because the time is too long during which they cannot dispose of the land granted to them in proportion to the number of their families and slaves, and because, in case of diplomatic changes, they could not establish in proper form their legal right of property, which would expose them to lose the improvements they might have made thereon. If the royal lands could be purchased by the persons above mentioned, and by the inhabitants already settled, who, I have no doubt, would do so in order not to incur the delay of ten years above referred to, this great obstacle would be removed, and many more new settlers would come, who, on receiving immediately their title to the property, would value the land at the price of their money, and improve it so as to derive some benefit therefrom, whence would result the improvement and advancement of the country itself, an accession to the royal treasury, and a check, in some degree, upon the Americans availing themselves of what belongs to us, since each colonist would take good care that his property should not be carried away.

The means which I propose to your excellency is not solely for the advantage of the country and the relief of the unhappy state of the royal chest, but also for the improvement of the unfortunate circumstances in which the nation stands at the present time; for it is necessary that her great resources should be applied to sustain her, and to meet, by some means or other, her immense charges and expenses, not by opposing in any manner the will of the sovereign, who wishes to promote and advance his royal interests by all possible means; but it appears to me, on the contrary, that his royal intentions would be fulfilled by the increase of this province and the relief of his royal treasury. If, therefore, your excellency should be of opinion that the measures proposed above will meet the approbation of his Majesty, I hope I shall merit yours by carrying them into effect.

God preserve you many years.

His Excellency the MARQUIS OF SOMERUELOS.

Marquis Someruelos to the governor of East Florida.

HAVANA, September 14, 1811.

I have seen your letters No. 26 and 37, suggesting the expediency, in the present circumstances, of aliening the royal lands to the new settlers in this province within the term therein expressed, and I have to state, in reply, that such alienation cannot be made, on account of the prohibition, by royal order of the 14th of November, 1804, of the admission into the Floridas of citizens of the United States; and by another order, of 31st March, 1806, of the continuance, on any pretence whatever, of the sale of lands to foreigners who happen to be in West Florida.

God preserve you many years.

Proceedings of the provincial deputation at Havana respecting East Florida lands.

I certify that at a session of the provincial deputation held the day of this date, president the most excellent lord the captain general, superior political chief of the province, proceeding to discuss the exposition made on the 27th of July in favor of East Florida by the deputy from thence, Don Fernando de la Maza Arredondo, whose opinion was supported by that of the 31st, made by Señor Don Juan Bautista de Gulianena, stating that said favors were of the highest consequence to East Florida, which he represented, the first proposition, conceived in the following terms, was read:

1st. "That to those loyal residents and inhabitants who with so much patriotism have defended the city of St. Augustine, Florida, during the last siege, from March, 1812, to May, 1813, there be granted, in absolute dominion of proprietorship, six caballerias of land to each head of a family—three to each individual of it, and the same to the slaves."

The deputation bearing in mind the several laws of the Indies, which grant to the settlers of these countries the right in proprietorship of the lands which they are able to cultivate, which favor has been lastly ratified by several royal letters patent and orders in favor of the colonists who desire to establish themselves in both Floridas, and judging that our government ought not less to favor those soldiers and citizens who, for the space of fifteen months, have suffered all the calamities of a rigorous siege, amongst whom are many who, existing in these provinces since they were restored to Spain by the peace of 1783, ought to be considered as settlers of them, it is agreed that notice be given to the councils [ayuntamientos] of both Floridas that they announce to their respective townships [pueblos] that vacant and public lands are to be distributed according to the provisions of the decree of the 4th of January of the present year, that they shall proceed to solicit the designation of the portions of land which can be cultivated by the soldiers who have distinguished themselves; the inhabitants, not proprietors, who desire to apply themselves to agriculture; the countrymen who have contributed to the defence of the country in the present war; and the creditors of the public treasury whom it may suit to receive lands in compensation for their credits; which instances the councils will remit to this deputation, designating the portion of land they may deem proper to grant to each individual, in order, when seen, to proceed according to the said decree.

[Here follow regulations for the trade of Amelia island, &c., but having no reference to lands.]

This proposition was unanimously approved of without discussion, and with the same unanimity it was agreed that a certified copy of this act, and the exposition made in the session of the 27th July, by Señor Don Fernando de Arredondo, be officially communicated to the most excellent lord the captain general, superior political chief of both Floridas, recommending to his excellency that, inasmuch as it interests the general good of the nation, and in particular of these inhabitants, his excellency will permit the immediate execution of what the deputation proposes, for the purpose of improving the favorable circumstances which at present concur in those places for the promotion of industry, and, in the meanwhile, consult his Majesty for the royal approbation.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Florida, September 13, 1818.

SEÑOR GOVERNOR: Don Nicolas Garrido, in the name of the most excellent lord the Duke of Alagon, grandee of Spain of the first class, and captain of the King's body guard, as his attorney in this East Florida, sets forth: That the royal letters patent of the 6th of February of this year express that his Majesty granted rents unto the aforesaid lord Duke of Alagon, in full property, for himself and his heirs, all the uncultivated lands in East Florida, which are not granted, and comprise the rivers St. Lucia, Hijuelos, and St. John, on both coasts, east and west, with the adjacent islands, from twenty-five degrees to thirty and a half in latitude, inclusive, with the object that this province may enjoy the advantages of which it is susceptible, in favor of its population, agriculture, industry, and the defence and security of its coasts, all of which is loudly called for. To carry into due effect, in a clear and exact manner, the spirit of this royal resolution; to shun for the present and in future interminable claims, lawsuits, and disputes, which would originate amongst a number of individuals who believe themselves with a right to large portions of land which are not in actual cultivation, and which have been granted to them by your excellency or by your predecessors at different periods from the first royal order of the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety, and the others which have made and prescribed rules and conditions limiting such grants; and lastly, to have a basis on which to rest, and without which it would not be possible to move in the vast undertaking, which the lord duke has placed in my care, I find myself under the absolute necessity of resorting to your excellency, whom his Majesty orders and charges, according to the laws which govern in the matter, to aid effectually the execution of said grant, taking all the measures which lead to its due effect, in order that your excellency be pleased to determine on the following particulars, and to make a specific explanation, which, according to the royal mandates, may be expected from the justice and attention of your excellency, and is necessary, in order that the proprietors or intended proprietors of the lands which are not in cultivation may know the right which they have or cease to have over them; and that the germ of claims, so injurious to the progress of an undertaking of this class, may be destroyed forever. First. At what time did the assignment of lands commence? Second. How titles of proprietorship on lands should be considered? What circumstances characterize them? How is this right to lands which have not been cultivated since they were granted acquired? and what difference is there between these and the certified papers which accredit that the individual possessing them has had lands decreed to him, as is the case with a multitude of persons? What consideration, then, do these papers deserve, and what right may they have to claim under them? Third. What is the sum total of acres in what are called titles of proprietorship? Fourth. In what situation will those be who, holding these titles of proprietorship, may not have complied, or do not continue to comply, with the conditions prescribed by the royal orders respecting the donations of land, the principal object of which has always been cultivation, and under which they have always been granted to them? Fifth. Have those who are provided with such titles, or others, power to alienate the lands which have been granted to them? Sixth. Can those individuals allege any right, who, in virtue of legal titles of proprietorship, took possession of the lands which were assigned to them, cultivated them for some time, and afterwards left them, and suffered them to remain uncultivated, when no cause existed in the province to prevent their returning to them? Seventh. In what manner are those concessions considered which were made to foreigners, or natives, of large portions of land, who have disappeared, carrying with them their documents, without having cultivated or even seen the lands granted to them? Eighth. Can those persons, to whom assignments of large portions of territory have been made for the establishment of factories, such as water or steam mills, who did not then comply, nor have not since presented themselves, to establish their machinery, (allowing that none exists in the province which is known,) be considered now or in future with any right? If, in a space of time, such as has elapsed until now, they have not established their works, will there be any reason why said lands should not be declared open, and revert to the class of public lands? Ninth. The allotments of lands made for rearing cattle are in the same case, and exact the same decision. After your excellency has attentively considered and explained these particulars, forming such a determination on each of them as you may judge proper, as the authority immediately charged by his Majesty to comply with the royal precepts, and the organ through which they are to receive their due execution and effect, I request your excellency will be pleased to announce to the public of this city the result of your determination, by means of an edict, as has been done at other times, which, prescribing limits and rights according to equity and justice, to which the mass of proprietors and pretenders to lands shall adhere, I may put in operation those belonging to the most excellent lord Duke of Alagon, and by this means the enterprise would not be interrupted and embarrassed as it would be at every step by a host of claims, should not the decision of your excellency be made, which is the only one that can fix my ideas on the subject for the advantage of the enterprise. The object of this representation is nothing more than to solicit the establishment of a system which, resting on reason and justice, may serve me for a rule in the whole circle of the commission, and your excellency will agree in the necessity of establishing it; but if it only on one side treats of avoiding reclamations, each person having a right to know what his rights are according to the royal decrees, on the other, I assure myself, that every consideration on the part of your excellency will only be extended in favor of the poor individuals who have performed services to the province, and his Majesty has been pleased to grant them a corresponding quantity of land by his late royal order on the matter. This can offer no difficulty, as there is no property in this case which merits so much respect, as what has been justly assigned to a person who has served his country, and is in indigence. Following up this same principle, and the instructions given me by the lord Duke of Alagon, with particular attention and charge, I shall do all in my power for the benefit of these people in the discharge of my commission. Your excellency will also be pleased to order that I shall be furnished with a copy of the royal orders which govern on the matter of concessions of lands; the regulations which prescribe forms for the allotments of lands, and the edict on lands of the twelfth of October, one thousand eight hundred and three, the knowledge of the laws which have governed on the matter, being indispensable for the extension and opening this commission.

NICOLAS GARRIDO.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Florida, October 14, 1818.

Let it be passed to the auditor of war.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Florida, September 16, 1818.

To his excellency the governor, political and military, &c.:

To proceed with proper effect, and to determine as to the particulars referred to by Don Nicolas Garrido in this memorial, I have occasion to have annexed to it the royal letters patent of the 6th of February of the present year, which declares the grant of vacant lands in this province made by his Majesty to the most excellent lord Duke of Alagon. The royal order of the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety, which commenced the said grants to private individuals of this place, and all the others which may have been afterwards made on the subject, including the edict of the twelfth of October, one thousand eight hundred and three, your excellency will please order it so, and being done, have all returned to my study.

RUPERTO SAAVEDRA.

ST. AUGUSTINE, September 17, 1818.

The present notary will place in continuation a copy of all the documents to which the auditor of war refers in his foregoing decree, applying to the office of the secretary of the government that he may exhibit for the purpose those which are not in his own office, and it being done, return the proceedings to the consultation.

Notary of Government.

In St. Augustine, on the same day, month, and year, the foregoing decree was made known to Don Nicolas Garrido, which I attest.

[Translation.]

Don Juan Nepomuceno de Quesada, colonel of the royal armies, and commander in chief of this city and province of St. Augustine, Florida, by his Majesty.

FLORIDA, November 20, 1790.

Whereas by the last packet which arrived at this port his excellency the captain general of this province encloses me, under date of the 29th of November of the last year, the following royal order:

In virtue of which I order the same to be published for the present that it may be made known to all, being understood that only those shall be admitted as resident settlers who, besides their good conduct and honorable proceedings, are good farmers and mechanics, who are beneficial to the settlement and advancement of the province, for which purpose there shall be granted them the gifts set forth in the inserted royal order. It is also made known to those who have obtained lands, in the meantime, from this government that they present themselves to the same within the space of two months, for the purpose of asking and obtaining the requisite title of property from the office of the government secretary, from whence the necessary orders will be issued, after having registered the same in the notary's office.

And that it may serve as an incitement to all, I order, according to the powers I am vested with, and make known for the present that the grants be of one hundred acres to each father of family, and fifty to each white person, or of color, of which said family is composed; also, if persons are desirous of obtaining a greater quantity of land, and there being a probability of their cultivating the same, they shall obtain an additional number of a thousand acres, it being understood that in all the concessions the utility and not the quality of the lands shall be attended to, so that each person shall acquire a proportionate quantity of each, as also that the width of each of said concessions must be only the third part of the length, and said length must not extend on the banks of the rivers and creeks, but towards the interior of the lands; vesting always with the government the care of rewarding or punishing with additional expenses or absolute privation, as time shall discover, the merit, application, and advantages of the agriculturists, or the contrary vices.

A copy from the original, I attest.

DOMINGO RODRIGUEZ DE LEON,
Notary of Government.

[Translation.]

Don Enrique White, colonel of the royal armies, civil and military governor and chief of the royal finance of this city and province of St. Agustine, Florida, by his Majesty, &c.: Whereas it being necessary to vary and modify, in part, the rules and conditions which the government had established for the concessions and divisions of lands to the new settlers, in consideration of the actual circumstances, on account of the great number of persons coming to enjoy the favors and privileges which his Majesty has granted to those who may come to establish themselves in this province, many abuses have arisen on the part of those grantees under the system and object which influenced the government at that time in the prosecution of that plan; those, as well as other inconveniences which experience has demonstrated, have plainly shown that they may tend to the hindrance of the advancement and prosperity of the province, for which reason, and to remedy the same, I have thought proper and ordered that the rules prescribed in the following articles be observed for the future:

1. That whenever the new settlers shall take the customary oath of allegiance they shall declare exactly the number of their children, their sexes and ages, and, in consideration of which, lands will be allotted them, except those under eight years of age.

2. That to each head of a family there shall be granted fifty acres of land, and an equal quantity to a single person, widow, or widower, and to the children, or slaves, of sixteen years, twenty-five acres each; but from the age of eight to sixteen years there shall be granted fifteen acres each.

3. That to those employed in the town, of whatever class they may be, if lands be granted them, or to their slaves, it shall be with the express condition of their cultivating the same within one month of the concession, being understood that if they fail in so doing it shall be granted to whomsoever shall denounce and lawfully prove the same.

4. That all concessions, in which no time is specified, shall become extinct, and shall be considered as null, if the persons to whom they are made do not take possession and cultivate the same within the space of six months.

5. That to none of those who cede or convey their lands to others, under pretence of selling the improvements, there shall be granted them more lands in future; nor shall these transfers or conveyances be admitted if done without the consent of government.

6. Notwithstanding what is stated in the foregoing article, if it should suit any settler to change his situation, if he desires it, granting him land in the place he may choose, but on consideration of giving up the improvements of the land he left, for the benefit of the royal revenue, which will prevent the abuse of the transfers and sales, which are prohibited under any pretext whatever until the proper time pointed out in the former plan or rules.

7. That on the lands not fit for cultivation but have timber, or that are only proper for pastures, for which purpose alone they have been solicited, the owner cannot prevent any person from cutting and appropriating the timber to his own use who may present themselves with an order from the government, but it is understood that it shall not injure the owner thereof.

8. That all those who shall, for the future, ask for lands, must indicate a fixed spot, from whence the measurement must commence; which will be the cause of avoiding the mistakes and disputes which by that fault have been experienced, particularly a short time back.

9. That all persons who shall have abandoned or discontinued the cultivation, nor actually cultivates the lands, which at any period shall have been measured to them by the surveyor general, although they have obtained the corresponding title of property from the notary's office, they shall lose their right to the same, and shall be given to any person not having lands for cultivation who shall legally prove that said lands have been uncultivated at least two years following.

And for the punctual observance of what has been set forth, and that no person may plead ignorance, I order that copies be posted up in the public places of this city, as is customary, and that one be transmitted to the brevet captain of militia, commandant of the same, and commissioned judge of the rivers St. John's and St. Mary's, Don John McQueen, that he may cause it to be made known to those inhabitants.

St. AUGUSTINE, October 12, 1803.

By order of his excellency:

JOSÉ DE ZUBIZARETTA, Notary of Government.

Letter from Governor Kindelan to the Captain General of Cuba.

[Translation.]

ST. AUGUSTINE, Florida, June 4, 1813.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: The 1st of this month I discharged from the military service, in which they were employed, the three companies of white militia of this city, not only for want of provisions here, but for the urgent necessity there was that the inhabitants should be allowed to turn, once more, their attention to the care of their respective families and occupations, with the object of making as light as possible the injuries suffered by them in the insurrection of the province.

With this motive I cannot but recommend to your excellency the fidelity manifested by the militia and third battalion of Cuba in the performance of their duty, from the first moment in which the rebellion broke out, and for which I consider them worthy the gifts to which the supreme governor may think them entitled, taking the liberty of recommending the granting of some, which may be as follows: to each officer who has been in actual service in said militia, a royal commission for each grade he may obtain as provincial, and to the soldiers a certain quantity of land, as established by regulation in this province, agreeably to the number of persons composing each family, and which gifts can also be exclusively made to the married officers and soldiers of the said third battalion of Cuba.

Men in general require to be excited by some stimulus, and it is not easy to find any who are indifferent to public approbation of their services. What I propose, without giving them in reality anything, will be the means of contenting them, and produce henceforward the best effects, it being understood that this gift will be for those who occupy themselves in the defence. And for this end, and in case that these my ideas merit the approbation of your excellency, I enclose, as regards the officers of both corps, lists of those who ought, in that case, to be comprehended. God preserve your excellency many years.

His Excellency DON JUAN RUIZ DE APODACA.

Royal order of March 29, 1815.

[Translation.]

Under date of the 29th of March last his excellency the minister of Indies writes me the following:

"I have informed the King of what your excellency sets forth in your letter, No. 236, of the year 1813, relative to the rewards which the governor of East Florida considers the individuals of the companies of white militia and married officers and soldiers of the third battalion of the regiment of Cuba entitled to for their meritorious conduct during the insurrection of this province; and at the same time that his Majesty approves said gifts he desires that your excellency will inform him as to the reward which the commandant of the third battalion of Cuba, Don Juan José de Estrada, who acted as governor pro tem. at the commencement of the rebellion; the officers of artillery, Don Ygnacio Salens, Don Manuel Paulin; and of dragoons, Don Juan Puchernan, are entitled to, as mentioned by the governor in his official letter. By royal order I communicate the same to his excellency, for your information and compliance therewith, enclosing the royal commissions of local militia, according to the note forwarded by your excellency."

I forward you a copy of the same, enclosing also the documents above mentioned, that you may give them their correspondent direction with the intention, by the first opportunity, of informing his Majesty of what I consider just as to the remuneration before mentioned. God preserve you many years.

Governor pro tem. of East Florida.

ST. AUGUSTINE, October 2, 1818.

Having seen the foregoing, for the more correct information of the consultation, let the present notary certify the conditions under which this government has, at different epochs, granted the lands of the province, according to what appears in his archives, and also annex an attested copy of one of each of the titles of proprietorship which has been issued in each class, and let the proceedings be returned to the señor auditor of war for his opinion. Assessment thirty-two reals.

In St. Augustine, on the same day, month, and year, the foregoing decree was made known to Don Nicolas Garrido, which I attest.

ENTRALGO.

[Here follows, fo. 18 a. 19, a petition to obtain a title of proprietorship, translations of such are to be found in part 1st of the report of the land commissioners for East Florida.]

SEÑOR GOVERNOR: I have seen the memorial of Don John McQueen, which, by order of your excellency, the notary has brought me to consult upon; and although it might be done simply in a decree, yet I think it better, in an opinion, to point out rules for cases of a like nature, which must occur frequently in future, that your excellency may adopt one of them as general. The government, when it received royal orders for the admission and survey of lands to new settlers, established with discretion, and conformably to the usual practice in other parts, that the corresponding title (of which there are many in the notary's office) should be issued to the grantees, expressing in each one the land granted, its limits and boundaries, and the conditions, which, being complied with in the time previously fixed upon, would transfer the useful and direct dominion of the lands granted. This administrative disposition is still in force, and in consequence of it, there are many who are in the case of that transfer of dominion, without occasion for more titles than those conferred on them at the time of the survey of the lands; but there are others who, although they ought to be in a similar situation from having passed the ten years' possession prescribed, and have complied with all the conditions under which lands were granted, want the titles for causes which the government has subjected them to, amongst them the want of a surveyor many times; amongst these is the petitioner who presents the documents, by which he shows the concessions and boundaries of the various lands which he possesses in distant places more than ten years, and it is of public notoriety that all, with the exception of the small tract of Montehermoso, have been cultivated by him during that time, and that he has buildings on them agreeably to the conditions of the concession, since, although he has not any at present on the place called San Juan Nepomuceno, it is well known to all of us who are in the province, that, on the insurrection of the rebels in the year 1794, the many and good buildings which McQueen had there were burned by order of the government; also those of other inhabitants situated on that part of the river St. John. For these considerations, the request of McQueen appears to me strict justice, and that accordingly the titles of proprietorship should be issued to him for the lands he asks for without conditions, as he has complied with the exception of Montehermoso, which ought to be issued to him as peculiar; and if this opinion appears to your excellency well founded, you can determine accordngly in occurrences of a like class.

JUAN DE ENTRALGO,
Notary of Government.

[From folio 21 to folio 24 is a title in absolute propriety, under the royal order of 1790; for translations of such, see part 1 of the report of land commissioners for East Florida. From folio 24 to 26 a title under the royal order of 1815; for translation see the same. From 26 to 29 a conditional title; see the same.]

Certificate.—As I best can and ought to do, I certify and attest that the conditions prescribed by this government for grants of land, to which the decrees of the 2d instant, placed on the proceedings, refers, are the same which appear in the foregoing title, delivered in favor of Don John McQueen, dated the 12th of March, 1804, which conditions subsisted in all their force until the year 1815, when the then governor of this place, Brigadier Don Sebastian Kindelan, altered them at his discretion, granting lands under the single circumstance that when the grantee proves that he has cleared them, built houses, fences, and other things necessary for the improvement of a plantation, the title of proprietorship should be delivered to them, as has been done to several who have not passed the ten years' possession pointed out in said title of McQueen, as appears from the different proceedings in the archives in my charge, to which I refer; and in compliance with orders in said decree, I sign and seal these presents, in St. Augustine, Florida, the 9th of October, 1818.

JUAN DE ENTRALGO,
Notary of Government.

To his excellency the political and military governor:

Having acquired such ideas as appear to me sufficient to determine on the particulars submitted and petitioned for by Don Nicolas Garrido, resident in this city, attorney to the most excellent lord Duke of Alagon, in his memorial of folio 1, I proceed now to form the opinion which your excellency has been pleased to require from me on this business, reducing the answers to the following tenor and form :

First. The assignment of lands commenced from the receipt of the royal order on the admission of settlers, as is clearly shown from the annexed attested copy, folio 8, and communicated by the captain general of the Havana, on the 29th of October, 1790.

Second. In my opinion, titles of proprietorship should be considered in the same class to which they refer, characterized with the circumstance that those who have obtained such as were delivered according to the form, folio 20, to the late John McQueen, have acquired irrevocably the right of property, because they have had granted to them the useful and direct dominion to the lands after the ten years of possession and compliance with the conditions upon which the grant was made, appearing from the copy, at folio 25, so that when the absolute titles have been delivered they confer on the possessors the power to sell, cede, exchange, transfer, and alienate at their will, as well by themselves as their heirs and successors, without a reservation by the crown of the direct dominion, or anything else whatsoever. Those who, having obtained a concession of lands, have not cultivated them from the time they were granted, can have no right to them; much less will they have the title of absolute property, which is delivered after ten years' possession, to establish which must be preceded by formal proof of compliance with the conditions. For this reason there is so marked a difference between the titles of proprietorship and simple certificates issued by the secretary of government, when the concession of lands is made, that the former enjoy an irrevocable right, and the certificates are of no value nor effect unless the prescribed conditions have been complied with; otherwise, such papers deserve no regard, nor can the grantees by means of them claim any right to the lands granted, which should now be considered vacant.

Third. The sum total of the number of acres in the titles of proprietorship should be in the notary's office, where such documents are made out, and the notary can give the interested the information required on the subject.

Fourth. Those who have titles of proprietorship, who have complied with the conditions pointed out to entitle them to them, or have obtained them as a remuneration for services or other considerations deemed by the government sufficient for the purpose; in these cases there is a precise obligation to respect said titles, especially as the said conditions have been established at the will of the governors, and that the royal order of 1790 on the subject imposes none, but expressly states that lands shall be granted and surveyed, gratis, to those foreigners who of their own free will present themselves to swear allegiance.

Fifth. The 1st law, 12th chapter, 4th book, of the Digest of the Laws of the Indies, which treats of the distribution of lands to settlers, says that they having made their dwelling place and tillage, and resided in the settlements four years, the power is granted them from thenceforward to sell and make use of them freely at their will as a thing of their own; consequently, all those who have merited the title of proprietorship with the useful and direct dominion are authorized to alienate the lands granted to them.

Sixth. Those individuals who have taken possession of the lands granted to them, and have acquired the title of proprietorship by the process of time and prescribed conditions, are true proprietors and owners to dispose of the land as best suits them, although, after that they may not have cultivated them, as from the moment they are provided with the title they are exempt from conditions. Lands, for some time, and afterwards separated themselves from them, leaving them uncultivated without having obtained the title of proprietorship, should be subject to the decision of a judicial sentence, in which, after hearing the parties, justice may be done. Since it being public and notorious, that at different periods this province has suffered cruel devastations and ruin, by the invasion of Indian savages, banditti, and rebels, who have reduced it to a deplorable state; and, also, that many inhabitants in such continued vicissitudes have suffered the loss of the greatest part of their property, that their fields have been ravaged, their houses burned, and that they have been reduced to the extreme of misery, abandoning their lands without being able to re-establish themselves, some from indigence, and others because the simultaneous disturbances had withdrawn them from the thoughts of improvement. All those who labor under such circumstances can allege a right, and without a legitimate conviction they could not be dispossessed of the lands granted to them, nor shall I venture my judgment in a matter so abstract, and which requires very mature and concentrated reflection.

Seventh. Without doubt, the royal letters patent of the 6th of February of the present year, by which his Majesty has made a donation to the most excellent lord Duke of Alagon of lands in this province, limit it to uncultivated lands which have not been granted; for which reason these ought to be considered altogether exempt from the favors imparted to the lord duke; yet it is improper to explain, in this particular, that the concessions made to foreigners or natives of large or small portions of land carrying their documents with them, (which shall be certificates issued by the secretary,) without having cultivated or even seen the lands granted to them, such concessions are of no value or effect, and should be considered as not made, because the abandonment has been voluntary, and that they have failed in complying with the conditions prescribed for the encouragement of population.

Eighth. The assignments of extensive portions of territory, which have been made for the establishment of factories to persons who did not then comply, nor have not since presented themselves to establish their mechanical works, ought also to be considered without any right or value, and said lands declared perfectly free, that they may revert into the class of public lands; in this particular, also, the conditions for which they have been granted should be referred to; and in case that any of them should have no limits, an equitable term be specified for the establishment of the works, which being passed without carrying them into effect, they be declared vacant.

Ninth. The allotments of lands made for rearing cattle, which may not have titles of proprietorship, as there are some such known to me, ought also to be subject to circumstances, since, although all do not enjoy the favor of the useful and direct dominion, there are many who if they made an abandonment, it was involuntary, with the loss of the whole or the greater part of their cattle in times of sedition and of the aggressions of the Indians; which case, as a particular one, exacts the determination to be made, with permission to the parties to plead.

Having complied on my part with what your excellency, by your decree of the 14th ultimo has been pleased to confide to me, I am of opinion that, for the information of all the inhabitants of this province, edicts shall be fixed up in the public places of it, that full warning being given to the parties who have not complied with the conditions prescribed in the 7th and 8th articles, may know that they have no right to reclaim those lands, which they have not cultivated through their own fault and omission. This is my opinion; and your excellency's superior knowledge will determine what you may esteem and judge most convenient.

RUPERTO SAAVEDRA.

ST. AUGUSTINE, October 29, 1818.

I conform to the foregoing opinion, and let it be complied with, assigning the term of six months, counted from this date, for the establishment of the mechanical works referred to in the 8th article on the terms expressed therein.

Before me. JUAN DE ENTRALGO, Notary of Government.

On the same day, month, and year, the foregoing opinion, and the decree conforming thereto, have been made known to Don Nicolas Garrido, which I attest.

ENTRALGO.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Florida, November 25, 1818.

Señor Governor Don Nicolas Garrido, in the name of the most excellent lord Duke of Alagon, grandee of Spain of the first class, and captain of the King's body guard, as his general attorney in this East Florida, states to your excellency that he has read with due reflection the proceeding which, under date of the 29th of October, your excellency has been pleased to direct to him, and order to be made out in consequence of the explanations and determination I solicited from your excellency in my representation of the 13th September, respecting the concession of lands made by this government, and in presence of the opinion of señor the auditor of war, therein inserted, and the other documents which compose said proceedings, I cannot do less than bring to the consideration of your excellency the following observations. In the 6th article of the said opinion of the señor auditor is read: "Those who may have cultivated the lands for some time, and afterwards separated themselves from them, leaving them uncultivated, without having obtained the title of proprietorship, should be subject to the decision of a judicial sentence, in which, after hearing the parties, justice may be done." According to the sense of this article, it appears that the necessary right for the proprietorship can be acquired, even without complying with the precepts and the conditions which the law, the royal orders, and the regulations exact. Whence is this right? If they absent themselves voluntarily, without fulfilling the time of the contract, and, consequently, without obtaining the title which determines the absolute property, what title remains to them to claim under? If any should be conceded, then it would be subverting the principle which constitutes property itself. This is a matter which demands for itself a fixed determination, derived from sound judgment and the spirit of the laws, that individuals who are in such a case may know that they have no right whatever to the lands which they abandoned voluntarily; and, therefore, there is no reason why they should not revert to the class of public lands, making null the titles of cession which were made of them. In the continuation of the same article, the señor auditor calls the consideration of the government in favor of those individuals, who, from the insurrections which have occurred in this province, have experienced the loss of their property, [goods,] and been obliged to abandon their lands, and suffer various other calamities. Doubtless it is reasonable that those comprised in this circumstance should be indemnified; the mode, and how, will be determined by his Majesty, or whoever he shall delegate for the purpose, as has been done on other occasions, when each person proves in due form the amount of his losses; but as to the right that the propriety of the lands they cultivated should be granted them, there is none, unless he who founded the regulation which serves, and has served, as a basis to charaterize the proprietorship which is this day respected, had presented some method by which to decide, which is not adverted to; and if from that time until now this essential clause has suffered any alteration, it must have been at the expense and to the injury of the rigorous principles of justice. In the 8th article the señor auditor says: "That the lands designated for the establishment of factories [artefactos] shall return into the class of public lands; but if any of the concessions want the prescription of a term, it is now fixed," which being expired, and the mechanical works not established, they are declared vacant; and in virtue of this opinion, your excellency has been pleased to concede to the grantees the term of six months. No royal order nor the regulation speaks of the concessions of lands for the establishment of factories, and much less of such as are treated of, which cannot offer any benefit to the public of this province; but, laying that aside, your excellency has seen that in the many months which have passed since the grantees in these permissions to establish works have obtained them, and with them assignments of large portions of land, no effect, no result, has appeared, not a single plank has been exported to begin one of the works, which their proposers promised: it remains to understand that these projectors did not desire such permissions, and the assignment of lands annexed to them for the purpose they asked for, and if not so, they hope for further time to decide; the good intentions of your excellency have been, without doubt from the different appearance their solicitation had, to grant them now six months further term would appear to overstep the bounds of generosity. It further goes to impede the freedom of certain lands for a longer time, over which there is no right, whether from the nature of the concession, or from their not having given the smallest proof of their valuing it, or complying with it. If any of these individuals has obtained this favor as a reward for services performed, he will immediately have resource to your excellency, that he may be attended to as his Majesty has provided. The 9th article of the señor auditor says: "The allotments of lands made for rearing cattle which may not have titles of proprietorship, as there are some such known to me, ought also to be subject to circumstances, since, although all do not enjoy the favor of the useful and direct dominion, there are many if they made an abandonment, it was involuntary, with the loss of the whole or the greater part of their cattle, in times of sedition and of the aggressions of the Indians; which case, as a particular one, exacts the determination to be made, with permission to the parties to plead." The concession of a great extent of land for the rearing and pasture of cattle constitutes no more than the usufruct of it for the time agreed upon, but the grantee has not, nor never had, the most remote right to solicit the proprietorship, for there is no law or regulation upon which to found it, and, consequently, the land does not go out of the class of public lands, since it is the same as if it was held on rent. Those who have obtained those concessions as a recompense for services are in the same case with the others, and can allege no other right than what is extended to all those who have suffered losses, and faithfully followed the cause of his Majesty. Your excellency having taken notice of these reasons, and of the necessity there is that your resolution be fixed in a conclusive and clear manner, as well for the reasons I have set forth in my former representation, as that the royal orders and regulations upon which it has to be founded present a luminous path which leads to the realization of the intentions of his Majesty, I again request your excellency to be pleased to give it speedily, and in the manner to be expected from your zeal and justice. Also, having asked your excellency in my first representation for an account of the number of acres which resulted under what are called titles of absolute property, and not having them inserted in the proceeding, I repeat to your excellency my instance on the subject.

ENTRALGO.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Florida, January 18, 1819.

SEÑOR GOVERNOR: By the genuine and literal words of the royal order of the 17th of December, 1817, I understand that the royal grant made to the most excellent lord Duke of Alagon is confined to uncultivated lands, which are not ceded in East Florida, and without injury to a third person; consequently, all those which your excellency and your predecessors granted in virtue of royal orders are therefore exempt from any inquiry respecting the distribution of them up to the date on which possession was given of all that remained vacant, when the attorney of the most excellent lord duke presented to your excellency for the purpose the said royal letter patent. Without doubt, my opinion to your excellency should incline against those grantees who absolutely, by a total abandonment, never took possession of the lands, nor cultivated them at any time; since, having failed in compliance with the general conditions for which they were granted, implying the encouragement of population, every active and passive right respecting the concession has become extinct, and, consequently, they ought to remain vacant and public for the benefit of the most excellent lord Duke of Alagon, esteeming as null and of no value nor effect all the simple certificates which may have been issued, and they preserve relative to said concessions.

The royal order, communicated to this government by the captain general, under date of the 29th of November, 1790, respecting the admission of foreign settlers, which is copied at folio 8, says that lands shall be granted and surveyed gratis, in proportion to the laborers each family may have. His excellency the governor, at that time Don Juan Nepomuceno de Quesada, designated and established the number of one hundred acres for each head of a family, and fifty for each person, white or colored, of which it consists; prescribing at the same time certain conditions which appear from the proceedings which, unless the grantees had complied with, they could not obtain the title to the useful and direct dominion to the lands granted. His successor, Don Enrique White, followed the same system until, by a regulation made on the 12th of October, 1803, he made certain changes reducing the number of acres to be distributed by the principle of Señor Quesada. This rule remained so until Brigadier Don Sebastian Kindelan succeeded to the command, who, anxious for the pacification and improvement of the province which had been desolated by the incursions of the Indians and two insurrections of the inhabitants, he granted the lands without any restriction, according to the royal order of the 29th of November, 1790, without any other condition than clearing them, building houses, fences, and other things necessary for the improvement of a plantation, which, being complied with, the grantees got the title of absolute property, as appears by the certificate of the notary in folio 28. In such a manner there has been so great a variation in the distribution of lands that each governor has made it at his discretion, and as his zeal for his Majesty's service and the improvement of the province suggested, without abiding by the first law, twelfth chapter, fourth book, of the Digest of the Laws of the Indies, cited in my former opinion, to which said distribution should be subject. Under such a hypothesis, there is no doubt but all those grantees of lands who resided on and cultivated them for the space of four years are absolute masters of them, and have the power to sell and make use of them at will, as their own, as said law directs. There may be many individual settlers in good faith who took possession of the granted lands, and perhaps, at the end of a year, more or less, were obliged to abandon their houses, crops, and everything else, through the vicissitudes of the province; this is no reason why they should lose their right to the same lands, nor cease to be entitled to all the considerations which equity permits, when they remained in the province, being, through their fidelity and love of country, spectators of its ruins, and that the abandonment which they have made has been involuntary, and if they did not return to undertake anew their labors in the country, it has been because the means of some were exhausted, and others dreaded the continual hostilities, either of the Indians or the many vagabonds and fugitives from the neighboring States of America, who pass over and reside in the province at their will for want of force to restrain them. For these reasons, and many others which are obvious on the particular manifested to your excellency in my former opinion, "that those who labor under such circumstances can allege a right, and without a legitimate conviction they could not be dispossessed of the lands granted to them, for which they should be heard before the tribunal." I repeat the same now to your excellency in attention to this particular, although I shall not fail to explain, in obedience to the declaration solicited by Don Nicolas Garrido, that in case there are any grantees to land who may have absented themselves from this province without having complied with the prescribed conditions, and that by such voluntary abandonment they have not the title of property, they are in no manner entitled to it; and, consequently, having lost all his right, the said lands should remain in the class of public lands, being in different circumstances from those who have remained in the province, whose losses, although they cannot be remunerated with portions of land, exact in themselves every consideration that they should not be dispossessed of those which the government has already granted to them as settlers; and to which they may again return to apply their labor and care when in a condition to do so, this being the cause that they should preserve their claims and right, that they may return to enjoy their lands when in a condition to do so. Although no royal order, nor the regulations, speaks of concession of land for the establishment of mechanical works, it is very obvious that it being the will of his Majesty to improve the province which he has taken so much interest in, dispensing for the purpose copious favors, the governors had the privilege of granting lands for the establishment of said works with the same inducement of the title of proprietorship to all those who contributed by their expenditures to works of so much utility to the improvement of industry. Nevertheless, as it is certain that many individuals who have obtained such concessions have remained in inaction, without having for so long a period advanced the establishment of said works, it appears just that such concessions which have remained in inactivity should be declared null and of no effect; but not so against those who have advanced the establishment of their works, since, by their industry and expenditures, they have made themselves entitled to every protection to animate their perseverance. I conclude by stating to your excellency that, as respects the concessions of land made for the pasture of cattle, the conditions ought to be attended to, and the decision subject to the circumstances which concur, agreeably to what I have shown your excellency in my former opinion, as it depends on them whether they should or should not be adjudged to be out of the class of public lands. And as respects the information solicited of the number of acres of land distributed with titles of proprietorship, the interested can apply to the notary's office, where it will be delivered to him. This is my mode of thinking, and your excellency's superior knowledge will determine what you think best and most correct on the business.

No. 44.

Extracts from the definitive treaty of friendship and peace between his Britannic Majesty, the most Christian King, and the King of Spain, concluded at Paris the 10*th day of February,* 1763.

Art. 7. In order to establish peace on solid and durable foundations, and to remove forever all subjects of dispute with regard to the limits of the British and French territories on the continent of America, it is agreed that for the future the confines between the dominions of his Britannic Majesty and those of his most Christian Majesty in that part of the world shall be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the river Mississippi, from its source to the river Iberville, and from thence by a line drawn along the middle of this river, and the lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain, to the sea; and for this purpose the most Christian King cedes, in full right, and guarantees to his Britannic Majesty, the river and port of the Mobile, and everything which he possesses or ought to possess on the left side of the river Mississippi, with the exception of the town of New Orleans, and of the island in which it is situated, which shall remain to France; it being well understood that the navigation of the river Mississippi shall be equally free, as well to the subjects of Great Britain as to those of France, in its whole breadth and length from its source to the sea, and expressly that part which is between the said island of New Orleans and the right bank of that river, as well as the passage both in and out of its mouth. It is further stipulated that the vessels belonging to the subjects of either nation shall not be stopped, visited, or subjected to the payment of any duty whatsoever.

Art. 20. In consequence of the restitution stipulated in the preceding* article, his Catholic Majesty cedes and guarantees, in full right, to his Britannic Majesty, Florida, with Fort St. Augustine, and the Bay of Pensacola, as well as all that Spain possesses on the continent of North America, to the east or to the southeast of the river Mississippi; and, in general, everything that depends on the said countries and lands, with the sovereignty, property, possession, and all rights acquired by treaties or otherwise, which the Catholic King and the crown of Spain have had, till now, over the said countries, lands, places, and their inhabitants; so that the Catholic King cedes and makes over the whole to the said King, and to the crown of Great Britain, and that in the most ample manner in form.

[It is necessary to observe that the preliminary articles which, so far as relates to the three articles here inserted, are verbatim the same with those of the definitive treaty, were signed on the third day of November, 1762, on which same day, as will appear, France ceded Louisiana to Spain.]

PROCLAMATION OF THE KING OF GREAT BRITAIN.

By the King—A Proclamation.—George R.

Whereas we have taken into our royal consideration the extensive and valuable acquisitions in America, secured to our crown by the late definitive treaty of peace concluded at Paris the 10th day of February last; and being desirous that all our loving subjects, as well of our kingdoms as of our colonies in America, may avail themselves, with all convenient speed, of the great benefits and advantages which must accrue therefrom to their commerce, manufactures, and navigation, we have thought fit, with the advice of our privy council, to issue this our royal proclamation, hereby to publish and declare to all our loving subjects that we have, with the advice of our said privy council, granted our letters patent under our great seal of Great Britain to erect, within the countries and islands ceded and confirmed to us by the said treaty, four distinct and separate governments, styled and called by the names of Quebec, East Florida, West Florida, and Grenada, and limited and bounded as follows, viz:

First. The government of Quebec, bounded on the Labrador coast by the river St. John, and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river, through the Lake St. John, to the south end of the Lake Nipissim; from whence the said line, crossing the river St. Lawrence, and the Lake Champlain, in 45 degrees of north latitude, passes along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the said river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea; and also along the north coast of the Baye des Charleurs and the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to Cape Rosiers, and from thence, crossing the mouth of the river St. Lawrence by the west end of the island of Anticosti, terminates at the aforesaid river St. John.

Secondly. The government of the East Florida, bounded to the westward by the Gulf of Mexico and the Apalachicola river; to the northward by a line drawn from that part of the said river where the Chatahoochie and Flint rivers meet, to the source of St. Mary's river, and by the course of the said river to the Atlantic ocean; and to the east and south by the Atlantic ocean and the Gulf of Florida, including all islands within six leagues of the sea-coast.

Thirdly. The government of West Florida, bounded to the southward by the Gulf of Mexico, including all islands within six leagues of the coast, from the river Apalachicola to Lake Pontchartrain; to the westward by the said lake, the Lake Maurepas, and the river Mississippi; to the northward, by a line drawn due east from that part of the river Mississippi which lies in thirty-one degrees north latitude, to the river Apalachicola or Chatahoochie, and to the eastward by the said river.

BRITISH ORDINANCE.

The following ordinance was obtained from among the manuscripts delivered to the minister of the United States at London, and is the only paper on the subject:

His Majesty's instructions, &c.

West Florida, Pensacola, November 1, 1765.

Whereas nothing can more effectually tend to the speedy settling our said colony, the security of the property of our subjects, and the advancement of our revenue, than the disposal of such lands as are our property upon reasonable terms, and the establishing a regular and proper method of proceeding with respect to the passing grant of such lands, it is, therefore, our will and pleasure that all and every person and persons who shall apply to you for any grant or grants of land shall, previous to their obtaining the same, make it appear before you, in council, that they are in a condition to cultivate and improve the same, by settling thereon, in proportion to the quantity of acres desired, a sufficient number of white persons and negroes; and, in case you should, upon a consideration of the circumstances of the person or persons applying for such grants, think it advisable to pass the same, in such case you are to cause a warrant to be drawn up, directed to the surveyor general, or other proper officers, empowering him or them to make a faithful and exact survey of the lands so petitioned for, and to return the said warrant within six months, at the furthest, from the date thereof, with a plat or description of the land so surveyed thereunto annexed: Provided, That you do take care that, before any such warrant is issued as aforesaid, a docket thereof be entered in the auditor's and register's offices; and when the warrant shall be returned by the said surveyor, or other proper officer, the grants shall be made out in due form, and the terms and conditions required by these our instructions be particularly and expressly mentioned in the respective grants. And it is our further will and pleasure that the said grants shall be registered within six months from the date thereof, in the register's office, and a docket thereof be also entered in our auditor's office, in case such establishment shall take place in our said province, or that, in default of such entry, such grant shall be void; copies of all which entries shall be returned regularly by the proper officer to our commissioners of our treasury, and to our commissioners for trade and plantations, within six months from the date thereof.

And whereas great inconveniences have arisen in many of our colonies in America, from the granting excessive quantities of land to particular persons, who have never cultivated or settled it, and have thereby prevented others, more industrious, from improving the same; in order, therefore, to prevent the like inconveniences for the future, you are to take especial care that, in all grants to be made by you, by and with the advice of our council, to persons applying for the same, the quantity be in proportion to their ability to cultivate; and you are hereby directed to observe the following directions and regulations in all grants to be made by you, viz:

That one hundred acres of land be granted to every person, being master or mistress of a family, for himself, or herself, and fifty acres for every white or black man, woman, or child, of which such person's family shall consist, at the actual time of making the grant; and in case any person applying to you for grants of lands shall be desirous of taking up a larger quantity than the actual number of persons in his or her family would entitle such person to take up, it is our will and pleasure, and you are hereby allowed and permitted, to grant unto every such person or persons such further quantity of land as they may desire, not exceeding one thousand acres over and above what they are entitled to by the number of persons in their respective families: Provided, it shall appear to you that they are in a condition and intention to cultivate the same: And provided, also, that they do pay to the receiver of our quit-rents, or to such other officer as shall be appointed to receive the same, the sum of five shillings only for every fifty acres so granted, on the day of the date of the grant: that every grantee, upon giving proof that he or she has fulfilled the terms and conditions of his or her grant, shall be entitled to another grant in proportion, and upon the conditions above mentioned: that, for every fifty acres of lands accounted plantable, each patentee shall be obliged, within three years after the date of his patent, to clear and work three acres at least in that part of his tract which he shall judge most convenient and advantageous, or else to clear and drain three acres of swampy or sunken grounds, or drain three acres of marsh, if any such be within the bounds of his grant: that, for every fifty acres of land accounted barren, every patentee shall be obliged, within three years after the date of his grant, to put and keep on his land three neat cattle, which number he shall be obliged to continue on his land until three acres of every fifty be fully cleared and improved: that if any person shall take up a tract of land, wherein there shall be no part fit for present cultivation, without manuring and improving the same, every such grantee shall be obliged, within three years from the date of his grant, to erect, on some part of his land, one good dwelling-house, to contain at least twenty feet in length and sixteen in breadth, and also to put on his land the like number of three neat head of cattle for every fifty acres: that if any person who shall take up any stony or rocky grounds, not fit for culture or pasture, shall, within three years after the passage of his grant, begin to employ thereon, and so to continue for three years next ensuing, in digging any stone quarry or mine, one good and able hand for every hundred acres of such tract, it shall be accounted a sufficient cultivation and improvement; that every three acres that shall be cleared and worked as aforesaid, and every three acres which shall be cleared and drained as aforesaid, shall be accounted a sufficient seating, planting, cultivation, and improvement, to save, forever, from forfeiture, fifty acres of land in any part of the tract contained within the said patent; and the patentee shall be at liberty to withdraw his stock, or to forbear working, in any quarry or mine, in proportion to such cultivation and improvement as shall be made upon the plantable lands, or upon the swampy or sunken grounds and marshes which shall be included in the same patent: that, when any person who shall hereafter take up and patent any land shall have seated, planted, and cultivated or improved the said land, or any sart of it, according to the directions and conditions above mentioned, such patentee may make proof of such seating, planting, cultivation, and improvement, in the general court, or in the court of the county, district, or precinct, where such land shall lie, and have such proof certified to the register's office, and there entered with the record of the said patent, a copy of which shall be admitted, on any trial, to prove the seating and planting such land. And, lastly, in order to ascertain the quantity of plantable and barren land contained in each grant hereafter to be made within our said province, you are to take especial care that, in all surveys hereafter to be made, every surveyor be required and enjoined to take particular notice, according to the best of his judgment and understanding, how much of the land surveyed is plantable, and how much of it is barren and unfit for cultivation, and, accordingly, to insert in the survey and plat by him to be returned into the register's office, the true quantity of each kind of land. And it is our further will and pleasure that in all grants of land to be made by you, as aforesaid, regard be had to the profitable and unprofitable acres, so that each grantee may have a proportionable number of one sort and the other; as, likewise, that the breadth of each tract of land to be hereafter granted be one-third of the length of such tract, and that the length of each tract do not extend along the banks of any river, but into the main land; that thereby the said grantees may have each a convenient share of what accommodation the said river may afford for navigation or otherwise. And it is our will and pleasure that in every grant of land within our said province, to be hereafter made by you, you take especial care that a clause be inserted reserving to us, our heirs, and successors, a quit-rent of one halfpenny sterling per acre, payable at the feast of St. Michael, every year, the first payment to commence on the said feast of St. Michael, which shall first happen after the expiration of two years from the date of the grant, and to be payable on every ensuing feast of St. Michael, or within fourteen days after.

Entered at Pensacola, November 3, 1765.

[In addition to the foregoing, it has been considered proper to give the views of the commissioners "for ascertaining claims and titles to land within the district of West Florida," on the subject of British claims, extracted from 2d part, Vol. VII., 2d sess. 18th Cong , letter M, page 177.]

Report on British claims.

The law organizing this board of commissioners has directed us to examine and determine the validity of claims submitted for adjudication, "agreeably to the laws and ordinances heretofore existing of the governments making the grants respectively." In addition to this, the attention of the commissioners is directed to two objects in the investigation of British claims: 1st, to ascertain how far they are valid by the law of nations; and, 2d, how far they have been considered valid under the Spanish government; and, if satisfied that said claims be correct and valid, shall give confirmation to them.

The great reliance of the British claimants is placed upon the effort to prove that their titles are valid by the laws of nations They do not pretend that they were considered valid under the Spanish government, but endeavor to avail themselves of the jus postliminium, as laid down in Vattel, and other writers upon the laws of nations. Let us for a moment examine the soundness of this position.

"The right of postliminium," says Vattel, "is that in virtue of which persons and things taken by the enemy are restored to their former state, on coming again into the power of the nation to which they belonged." There are two modes by which they may be restored to the possession of the original proprietors: 1st, by reconquest, and 2d, by treaty stipulation. Although prisoners of war may have given their parole, territories and towns submitted to the enemy, and sworn and promised him allegiance, yet, if retaken, they are to be re-established in their former condition, and enjoy the right of postliminium. The acquisition of immovables is not fully consummated till confirmed by a treaty of peace, or by the entire submission or destruction of the State to which they belonged. Till then the sovereign has hopes of retaking them or recovering them by a peace. "Provinces, towns, and lands, which the enemy restores by the treaty of peace, are certainly entitled to the right of postliminium." "The enemy, in giving back a town at the peace, renounces the right he had acquired by arms." "But if that town," says Vattel, "had been ceded to the enemy by a treaty of peace, or was completely fallen into his power by the submission of the whole State, she has no longer any claim to the right of postliminium, and the alienation of any of her possessions by the conqueror is valid and irreversible; nor can she lay claim to them, if, in the sequel, some fortunate revolution should liberate her from the yoke of the conqueror." "Its former state is absolutely destroyed; all its relations, all its alliances, are extinguished."—(Vattel, b. 3, c. 14, sec. 212.)

"Whatever is ceded to the enemy by a treaty of peace is truly and completely alienated. It has no longer any claim to the right of postliminium, unless the treaty of peace be broken or cancelled." "It might be said, in general, that the right of postliminium no longer exists after the conclusion of the peace. That right entirely relates to a state of war."—(B. 3, c. 14.)

As the right of postliminium relates to, and is founded on, a state of war, it has no effect or operation, except amongst the belligerents or allies who made a common cause, and are partakers and associates in the war.—(Vattel, b. 3, c. 14, sec. 207.) Spain and England were the only parties and privies to the war terminated by the capitulation of 1781, and the treaty of 1783. We have no evidence that the British claimants were deprived of their lands by conquest; but even admitting it to be the fact, agreeably to the doctrines laid down in Vattel, the jus postliminium could only have been made to operate in their favor, had Florida, at the peace, been restored to England, who was the original owner. As those private rights were recognized in the articles of capitulation, and in the fifth article of the treaty, there is every reason to believe that there is no ground upon which this principle could be introduced, as that cannot be restored which was never lost by conquest. Further, as the country was ceded to Spain, the enemy and conqueror, instead of being restored to England, the original owner and nation to whom it belonged, the right of postliminium is taken away, unless the treaty be broken or cancelled. If cancelled or broken, it would be good ground of complaint to be brought by England against Spain; but it is a question in which it is believed the United States could not interfere. They were neither parties nor privies to the war, the capitulation or treaty, and as such can claim no rights, and consequently have incurred no obligations under them.

From this view of the subject, it is considered that the principle of the jus postliminium could not be made to operate in favor of British subjects; as Florida was ceded away by her, instead of being restored to her, by the treaty of 1783. Had it availed anything, Great Britain would not have provided for those claimants in the treaty, or made them remuneration when they failed to dispose of their lands agreeably to the stipulations of the treaty. Upon examination, it will be found equally evident that the United States are under no obligations on this occasion. They were not parties or privies to the war. Although Spain was at war with England during the latter part of the American revolution, yet we were not allies, engaged in a common cause, associates in the same contest. There was no treaty of offensive or defensive alliance between them. Conceding this point, however, and it avails nothing, in order that the doctrine of jus postliminium should be introduced with effect, we should have been allies of England, who lost the country by conquest, and to whom it should have been restored either by reconquest or treaty stipulation. American citizens can occupy no better ground than the citizens of Great Britian; and those, we have seen, cannot avail themselves of the right of jus postliminium.

As the right of postliminium no longer exists after the conclusion of a peace, the British claimants are precluded from availing themselves of it by the treaty of 1783. This instrument placed these claims entirely upon different grounds; recognized them, and made provision for their disposition by the subjects of Great Britain who were inclined to emigrate. The jus postliminium has no bearing upon the subject; but the question is made to turn, exclusively, upon the construction of the treaty.

By the articles of capitulation, signed at Pensacola, in 1781, by the commanders of the Spanish and British forces, it was provided that "the British inhabitants, or those who may have been subjects of the King of Great Britain in the said countries, may retire in full security and liberty where they shall think proper; and may sell their estates, and remove their effects, as well as their persons; the time limited for their emigration being fixed to the space of eighteen months." This indulgence was incorporated in the treaty of 1783, with the additional provision of extending the time if necessary. It is contained in the 5th article of the treaty, which was ratified on the 3d of September, 1783, and is as follows: "His Catholic Majesty agrees that the British inhabitants, or others who may have been subjects of the King of Great Britain in the said provinces, may retire in full security and liberty where they shall think proper, and may sell their estates, and remove their effects, as well as their persons, without being restrained in their emigration under any pretence whatever, except on account of debts or criminal prosecutions; the term limited for this emigration being fixed to the space of eighteen months, to be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty; but if, from the value of the possessions of the English proprietors, they should not be able to dispose of them within the said term, then his Catholic Majesty shall grant them a prolongation proportioned to that end." In the year 1785, it is said a prolongation of four additional months was given by the King of Spain.

Upon the subject of capitulations, Vattel says: "The governor of a town, and the general who besieges it, have a power to settle the terms of capitulation; and whatever agreement they thus form within the term of their commission is obligatory on the State or sovereign who has invested them with the power by which they conclude it."—(B. 2, c. 14, sec. 207.) It is no doubt upon this principle that the provision of the article of capitulation, in favor of British claimants, was incorporated in the 5th article of the treaty of 1783, and also for the purpose of consummating the arrangements. This was necessary, as Vattel declares that "immovable possessions, lands, towns, provinces, &c, become the property of the enemy who makes himself master of them; but it is only by the treaty of peace, or the entire submission and extinction of the State to which these towns and provinces belonged, that the acquisition is completed, and the property becomes stable and perfect."—(B. 3, c. 19, sec. 197.)

In examining the phraseology of the 5th article of the treaty, it appears that all British claimants were entitled to the indulgence; not only "British inhabitants," but those "who may have been subjects of the King of Great Britain in the said provinces." Those who were citizens of the United States at the date of the treaty, if they had been subjects of the King of Great Britain in said provinces, were entitled to every indulgence in the disposition of their property. If they failed to avail themselves of those provisions, it is their own neglect, and they cannot but charge themselves with the consequences. The treaty is to be construed like any other contract; and if the parties have not complied with the conditions, they are compelled to abide the result, or submit to the penalty. Their claims occupy precisely the same ground, however different may be the character of the claimants. Agreeably to the spirit, at least, of national law, Spain was authorized in requiring such a provision as that contained in the 5th article of the treaty. "Every state," says Vattel, "has the liberty of granting or refusing to foreigners the power of possessing lands or immovable property within her territory. If the sovereign does not permit aliens to possess immovable property, nobody has a right to complain of such a prohibition; for he may have good reason for acting in this manner; and as foreigners cannot claim any right in his territories, they ought not to take amiss that he makes use of his power and of his right in the manner which he thinks most for the advantage of the state."—(B. 2, c. 8, s. 114.) The sovereign may also forbid the entrance of his territories either to foreigners in general, or in particular cases, or to certain persons, or for certain particular purposes, according as he may think it advantageous to the state.—(B. 2, c. 7, s. 94.) The King of England had likewise the power and right to accede to the stipulations in the 5th article of the treaty of 1783. "The necessity of making peace authorizes the sovereign to dispose of the property of individuals; and the eminent domain gives him a right to do it."—(Vattel, b. 4, c. 2, s. 12.) In the treaty of 1783, the property of individuals was not ceded away absolutely, but only conditionally, where the claimants failed to dispose of it within the limitation.

If Spain refused to extend the time, as contemplated in the 5th article of the treaty, it was a subject of complaint by England against that government. The United States could not interfere in deciding such a question, as it would be an infringement of the independence of the original parties concerned.—(Vattel, b. 2, c. 4, s. 54; b. 4, c. 4, s. 40; Preliminaries, s. 9.) But it was not the fact that England complained or remonstrated on the occasion. Upon the expiration of the term within which the British claimants were to return and dispose of their property, that government made compensation to her citizens, which was an acknowledgment that she had no complaints or demands against the King of Spain. With this fact before them, it would not become the American government to interpose in the contracts of other sovereign powers, and declare that either had failed in compliance.

Most sovereign states have adopted, in some shape or other, the principle contained in the 5th article of the treaty, in order to prevent foreigners from owning real property within their limits, and thereby obtaining an influence which might be wielded to the injury of the country. It was no doubt principally from this consideration that the 5th article of the treaty was framed and incorporated in that instrument. In effect it required "the British inhabitants, or the others who may have been subjects of the King of Great Britain in the said provinces," either to remain in Florida as citizens of Spain, or to dispose of their property within the limitation. From the language of the articles, they appear to have had their election, and it is believed that where they failed to avail themselves of the indulgence secured by this provision of the treaty, or to obtain the confirmation of the Spanish authorities, which was equivalent to a release, the lands were considered vacant, and subject to forfeiture. Similar provisions are contained in the treaty of 1763, which are found in the proclamation of General Gage, bearing date 30th December, 1764, addressed to the inhabitants of Illinois and Vincennes, respecting their lands, upon taking possession of their country by the troops of his Britannic Majesty. In Siera's case, Governor O'Neal declares that the time had expired within which British claimants were to return and dispose of their property, and it is understood that it was regranted whenever applications were made to that effect. The 8th section of the act of Congress passed the 30th of March, 1803, making provisions for the disposal of the lands of the United States south of the State of Tennessee, and the 1st section of the act passed 5th July, 1812, upon the same subject, expressly recognize the fact of Spain having regranted lands originally granted by the British authorities in West Florida. The board of royal treasury, by a decree dated 24th of September, 1801, at New Orleans, which was founded upon official proceedings instituted to ascertain the buildings and lots in Pensacola to which the King of Spain was entitled by conquest, and from absolute relinquishment of the same by proprietary owners, exposed those houses and lots to sale at public auction. Whenever they were presented, after a limited period, they were either confirmed, or declared to be forfeited by the Spanish authorities. It was the policy of the Spanish government to have their lands settled and cultivated; foreigners were, as far as possible, excluded, unless they were Catholics. In their concessions, the petitioner was requested to take an oath that no foreigner was interested in the land solicited, and that he or she would not convey to such at a subsequent period. A difference in religion was not tolerated. Such was the effect of these regulations that most of the English removed from Florida, particularly from East Florida, after the treaty of 1783.

These facts combined, are conclusive as to the opinion entertained by the Spanish authorities in relation to the validity of such claims. Had those now under consideration been brought into controversy before the Spanish tribunals anterior to the cession of the country to the United States, there can be no hesitation in believing that they would have been declared null and void. The British claimants have not attempted to make out a valid title under the Spanish government, or to show that the Spanish tribunals would have considered their claims valid and correct. They are, no doubt, satisfied of their weakness upon this ground, and it accounts for those claims being permitted to lie dormant in the hands of the proprietors for upwards of forty years. During this period no notice was given of their existence; many were unlocated, and none in actual occupation of the proprietors. The King of England's proclamation, bearing date October 7, 1763, by which the governments of East and West Florida are created, vests the governors with the power to grant and dispose of lands "to any such person or persons, upon such terms, and under moderate quit-rents, services, and acknowledgments, as have been appointed and settled in other colonies, and under such conditions as shall appear to us to be necessary and expedient for the advantage of the grantees, and the improvement and settlement of our said colonies." The governors were authorized to grant lands to new settlers, and to reduced officers of the army and navy, in the following proportions: To any person having the rank of a field officer, 5,000 acres; to any captain, 3,000 acres; to any subaltern, or staff officer, 2,000 acres; to any non-commissioned officer, 200 acres; to any private man, 60 acres. No limits, except that of the advantage of the person, and the improvement and settlement of the colonies, are imposed upon grants to new settlers; but the proclamation expressly declares that all these grants are subject to the same conditions of cultivation and improvement. Further, no plat is filed, in some cases, to show that they ever were surveyed; and the warrants, which require upon the face of them that they should be located in six months from the time at which they were issued, are entirely floating claims. No evidence, either, has been presented to show that the condition subsequent upon which the perfect grants were made, have ever been fulfilled. This alone, agreeably to Blackstone, renders the claims at least voidable, and may be declared void by the commissioners. Under such circumstances, we do not believe they would be recognized as possessing any validity under the laws of England, the government from whence they emanated.

Whether the British claims are, ipso facto, void, or only voidable, the United States are entitled to the right and immunities of Spain, by a transfer of the sovereignty and domain of Florida, under the treaty of February 22, 1819. Admitting that they are only voidable, the United States and their tribunals can declare them void, as did the Spanish authorities. If Spain could regrant them, and sell them at public auction, the United States, as the successor of Spain, are entitled to all the advantages resulting from a similar disposition of the property. As Spain, in her practical construction of the treaty, has viewed those claims as subject to forfeiture whenever they have not been regranted or confirmed by her legal authorities, they must be vacant, and consequently belong to the public domain. The doctrine of prescription, as a bar to such claims, as well as the plea attributing their want of location, and compliance with conditions to the peculiar situation of the country, are also superfluous, as it is admitting claims to exist which have been forfeited. The Partidas, as cited upon the subject of appeals from the judgments of Spanish tribunals, is equally far from being in point, as it could only apply between parties and privies within their legal jurisdiction. Under no circumstances would this law and the doctrine of prescription avail the claimants anything against the government, however effectual they might be in a private controversy. Neither can they derive any advantage from a non-compliance with the 5th article of the treaty, unless they can also show that they have received a confirmation or conveyance from the Spanish government to the land in question. Were the United States to recognize those claims it would be altogether a gratuity, an act of munificence, and not one which was the result of legal obligation. Congress are competent to make such a grant; but, as a special court of legal jurisdiction, we have no such authority, and can exercise no discretion upon the subject.

In the treaty between Spain and the United States no provision was made for the British claimants, but only such as emanated from his Catholic Majesty and his lawful authorities; and, by the law organizing this board of commissioners, none are to be examined except those claimed and owned, bona fide, by American citizens, and for which no compensation has been made by the British government. This has been construed by the claimants as a recognition of postliminary rights; but, if the law is examined, it will be found to be a mistake, as the commissioners are first directed to ascertain whether they are valid by the law of nations; how far they are so considered under the Spanish government, and, after this inquiry, are made the judges whether they are valid and correct, and entitled to confirmation.

It is believed that the commissioners have no power to declare a forfeiture in those cases where the claim exceeds 3,500 acres. Here they are only intended to act as an inquest, or court of inquiry, and furnish Congress with the facts upon which a forfeiture may be declared. It is their province to ascertain what lands belong to individuals, as distinguished from those which have accrued to the United States under the treaty. Those arising from forfeiture constitute as perfect a class of rights as those to the soil which has never been appropriated to individual uses; they appertain, in all regular governments, to the sovereignty and domain, and cannot be separated from them.

From every view which we have been enabled to give this subject, we are constrained to declare all British claims within our jurisdiction, which were not confirmed by Spain, or disposed of in conformity with the 5th article of the treaty of 1783, forfeited, void, and of none effect. They are not valid by the law of nations, and would not be considered valid under the Spanish government. We are therefore convinced that they are not valid and correct; and, agreeably to the provisions of the law organizing this board, they must be rejected. With respect to the British claims exceeding 3,500 acres, we believe the reasons contained in this opinion are altogether applicable, and request that they may be received as our report in both cases.

All which is respectfully submitted by the undersigned commissioners.

PETITION OF F. M. ARREDONDO.

SEÑOR GOVERNOR: I, Don Fernando de la Maza Arredondo, junior, an inhabitant of this city, with due respect to your lordship, say that, to be on my guard in the case of the cession of this province to the United States happening to take effect, and to have a safeguard to oppose to any claim, which, under the pretext of ancient titles, might be attempted by English subjects upon any of the various lands which have been granted to me, although by their emigration they lost all their right, your lordship would be pleased to aid me, by ordering that, by the notary of the government, testimony in continuation be authorized of the third article of the definitive treaty of peace between the crown of Spain and that of England, signed at Versailles on the twentieth of January, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, and the official letter of prolongation for the emigration of the English subjects; which documents are collected in evidence to the acts of inventory of bargain and sale of the houses and grounds which reverted to the royal patrimony at the time of the English having evacuated this province, by their owners having left them pro derelicto. That there be also authorized the testimony of the fourth article of the edict of good government, published in this place on the 2d of September, 1790, relative to the royal order of the 5th of April, 1786, upon the remaining, in this said province, of the English inhabitants, under the indispensable condition of taking the oath of fidelity; which royal order, which is in the office of the secretary of the government, I pray you to be pleased to order to be delivered to the said notary, that he may legalize testimony from it, and that the whole proceeding may be lodged in the public office, and that testimony of the whole process may be furnished to me; therefore, I pray your lordship to be pleased to decree as I request, which favor I expect from your justice.

F. M. ARREDONDO.

JUAN DE ENTRALGO, Notary of Government.

NOTIFICATION.

At St. Augustine, on the same day, month, and year, I notified the preceding decree to Don Fernando de la Maza Arredondo, jr.

Attested: ENTRALGO.

In compliance with the command, and at sight of the definitive treaty of peace made at Versailles the twentieth of January, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, which was approved in Spain by the King our lord, I copy literally the third article, which, with the said approval and official letter of prolongation aforesaid, is as follows:

ARTICLE 3. His Britannic Majesty shall cede to his Catholic Majesty East Florida, and his Catholic Majesty shall keep East Florida, it being well understood that there shall be granted to the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, who are established as well in the island of Minorca as in the two Floridas, the term of eighteen months, which shall be counted from the day of the ratification of the definitive treaty, to sell their property, recover their debts, and transport their effects and persons, without molestation on account of their religion, or under any other pretext whatsoever, excepting that of debts or criminal causes; and his Britannic Majesty shall have the power of causing to be transported from East Florida all the effects which may belong to him, whether artillery or any others whatsoever.

Don Carlos, by the grace of God King of Castile, Leon, Arragon, the two Sicilies, Jerusalem, Navarre, Granada, Toledo, Valencia, Galicia, Majorca, Seville, Sardinia, Cordova, Corsica, Murcia, Jaen, the Algarves, Algesiras, Gibraltar, the Canary Islands, the East and West Indies, the islands and continent of the ocean, Archduke of Austria, Duke of Borgona, Brabant, and Milan, Count of Apsburg, Flanders, Tyrol, and Barcelona, Lord of Biscay and of Molina, &c.: Whereas, in consequence of the preliminary articles of peace between my crown and that of England, signed at Versailles the twentieth of January of this year, by the Count of Aranda, my ambassador to the most Christian King, with my full powers, and by Don Alcine Fitz Herbet, minister plenipotentiary of the King of Great Britain, of which ratifications made by me and his Britannic Majesty were afterwards changed in due form, the same Count of Aranda on my part, and on that of his Britannic Majesty the Duke of Manchester, ambassador to the most Christian King, and his plenipotentiary, have labored and brought to a happy conclusion the definitive treaty of peace, which consists of a preamble and twelve articles, with other two separate articles, all in the French tongue, the contents of which, with its translation into Spanish, is of the following tenor. [Here was inserted the treaty.] Wherefore, having seen and examined the before-inserted definitive treaty, the twelve articles which it contains, and the two separate ones which follow it, I have come to approve and ratify what it and they contain, as in virtue of these presents I approve and ratify it in the greatest and most ample form that I can, promising, on the faith and word of a King, to fulfil and observe it, and to cause it to be fulfilled and observed entirely, as if I myself had done and signed it. In faith of which, I have ordered these presents to be despatched, signed with my hand, sealed with my privy seal, and countersigned by the underwritten, my counsellor of state, first secretary of state and of despatch. Given at St. Ildefonso, the twelfth of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three.

I, THE KING.

JOSÉ MONINO.

OFFICIAL LETTER.

SIR: At the moment of sailing for Vera Cruz, the sixteenth of this month, his excellency Count de Galvez charged me to copy for you the royal order which he had just received, considering the delay with which his excellency could execute it if he waited to put it in execution from Mexico; in virtue of which I do it, the said royal order being of the tenor following:

ROYAL ORDER.

THE PARDO, February 7, 1785.

In consequence of what I have intimated to your excellency in the letter of the 24th of January last, the King has been pleased to prolong by four months the eighteen stipulated in the definitive article of peace for the emigration of the English subjects who may be in West Florida. I communicate to your excellency this royal determination, that its fulfilment may be provided for. God preserve your excellency many years.

DON JOSÉ DE GALVEZ.

Señor COUNT DE GALVEZ.

God preserve you many years. Havana, the 19th of May, 1785. I kiss your hands, and am your most obedient servant,

BERNARDO FRONCOSO.

Señor DON VICENTE MANUEL DE ZERPEDES, Florida.

FOOTING.

It is agreeably to the documents cited, which have been delivered to me by the governor and commander general of this place, to whom I returned them; and, in virtue of this decree, I give these presents at St. Augustine, of Florida, the 8th of March, 1791.

DOMINGO RODRIGUEZ DE LEON, Notary of Government.

It is agreeably to the testimony of their originals, which are collected for the process instituted in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety, upon the sale of houses and lands which were abandoned and returned into the royal patrimony, in consequence of their English owners having emigrated, which process is in the archive under my charge, to which I refer; and, in fulfilment of the command in the decree preceding, I sign and seal these presents at St. Augustine, of Florida, the 18th of February, 1820.

JUAN DE ENTRALGO, Notary of Government.

ROYAL ORDER.

THE PARDO, April 5, 1786.

Of this date I communicate to the captain general of both Floridas, Count de Galvez, the following royal order: At a council of the board of state, and upon a view of what your excellency has expressed in a former letter, number fifty-six, and of the contents of the copy enclosed from the governor of Louisiana, Don Etevan Miro, respecting the difficulties which occur, that the English and American families established at Baton Rouge, Mobile, Pensacola, and Natchez, may go from said provinces, agreeably to the last treaty of peace, the King has been pleased to approve of the provision which your excellency has made with the said governor, that no novelty should take place towards the said families, it being his royal will that the permission be continued to them of dwelling where they are established, on the condition that for the present, and as indispensable circumstances, they take a solemn oath of fidelity and obedience to his Majesty, and that they go not out of the limits where they are actually situated without the power of going to other parts, not having an express license of the government; that those who shall not comply with these just conditions, depart by sea for the colonies of North America, at their expense, or, in defect of that, at the expense of the King, who shall be reimbursed from their effects as far as possible; that this same concession be extended to the inhabitants of East Florida as far as it may be adapted to it; and that in Natchez and other places of both Floridas, where it is convenient, parishes of Irish clergy be established, in order to bring said colonists and their children and families to our religion, with the sweetness and mildness which it advises. In order that this royal resolution may have due accomplishment and the good success which his Majesty promises himself, it is necessary that your excellency (availing yourself of your own observations, and of those which the Governors Miro and Zerpedes may furnish you) form a plan or arrangement of the mode which should be pursued in the said parishes, with an expression of the number of clergymen who are to serve them, in an understanding that under this date I inform the bishop of Salamanca to cause, in the meantime, four to be chosen, of known zeal, virtue, and learning, from those of that university, or any other part where he has them, and that this royal resolution be sent to the said governors for their understanding and fulfilment. God, &c. Such is the order of his Majesty for the purposes therein expressed. God preserve you many years.

THE MARQUIS OF SONORA.

The GOVERNOR of St. Augustine, of Florida.

DECREE.

ST. AUGUSTINE, of Florida, August 12, 1791.

Let a copy of this royal order be taken in the royal office, and let the original be returned to the department.

QUESADA.

NOTE.

That, of the date of the preceding decree, a copy of this royal order, which remains in the office under my charge, and was returned to the office of the government secretary, was taken, according to the orders of the same decree.

GONZALO ZAMORANO.

It is agreeably to its original, which is in the secretary's office of this government, to which I refer; and, in fulfilment of orders, I seal and sign the present testimony, at St. Augustine, of Florida, the 18th of February, 1820.

JUAN DE ENTRALGO, Notary of Government.

FOURTH ARTICLE OF THE EDICT OF GOOD GOVERNMENT.

The King our lord, by royal order of the 5th of April, 1786, grants to all the foreigners who may have been inhabitants of this province at the time of the English authority, that they may remain in it, protected in the possession of their land and effects, under the indispensable conditions of taking the oath of fidelity, of not augmenting the said lands, nor transferring themselves to any others; consequently, all those who have not conformed and do not conform to the said conditions within thirty days positively, by proceeding to show me their dispositions in person, or, if absent, by letters, to do what is proper, shall depart from this province aforesaid.

This is agreeably to the fourth article of the edict of good government, which is in the bureau of war, and was published in this place, with the usual formalities, on the 2d of September, 1790, by order of the political and military governor thereof, as appears from the book of edicts, which is in the archives under my charge, to which I refer; and, in fulfilment of orders, I seal and sign these presents, at St. Augustine, of Florida, the 18th of February, 1820. Sealed.

I, James S. Zingle, keeper of the public archives pro tem., do certify that the above and foregoing twelve pages contain a faithful transcript of the original now on file in my office. Witness my hand, November 29, 1822.

JAMES S. ZINGLE.

A new decree of the governor to a memorial presented by Don Juan Johnson, St. Augustine, Florida, August 30, 1785.

Under date of the 13th July last it is declared, on sight of the report of the secretary of this commandancy general, Captain Don Carlos Howard, qualified by his Majesty to attest and determine on the value and authenticity of every English document, that he considered Don Juan Johnson not qualified to execute the sale and alienation of the lot and edifices cited in the annexed memorial, not because he doubted that the said Don Thomas Nixon was then the lawful proprietor, and fully entitled to dispose of the real property which he had in this province, conformably to the tenor of the last treaty of peace, but because the power which Don Roberto Payne passed to the memorialist, Don Juan Johnson, in no manner cites, expresses, or quotes the letter of attorney granted by said proprietor Nixon to the said Payne, who gave the power to Don Juan Johnson; consequently, if Don Roberto Payne effectively received legal powers from Don Thomas Nixon, his having neglected to pass over the originals, or well-authenticated copies, to Don Juan Johnson makes said Payne, by the mere fact, the principal and only cause of the manifest inability of Don Juan Johnson to have the power to alienate said lot and buildings. And whether it be inadvertence, ignorance of the laws, or any other motive whatsoever, which may have induced said Don Roberto Payne to fail in so essential a point, the property of Don Thomas Nixon cannot be exempted from sharing the same fate as that of several other British subjects who have abandoned their immovable property without taking measures to sell it; and the same happened to several Spaniards, when, in the year 1763, this province was ceded to Great Britain, the abandoned possessions falling then to the King of England, in the same manner as they now devolve to the King, my master, the primitive term of eighteen months and the succeeding prolongation of four months stipulated for in the last definitive treaty of peace having ended on the 19th of June last.

I do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct translation from a document in the Spanish language, recorded in a book in the office of the public archives.

Witness my hand and private seal, at the city of St. Augustine, Florida, the 15th of December, [L. S.] 1828.

Extract of a treaty between Great Britain and the Upper and Lower Creek Indians, signed at Pensacola, in the province of West Florida, the 28th of May, 1765.

"ARTICLE 5. And to prevent all disputes on account of encroachments, or supposed encroachments, committed by the English inhabitants of this or any other of his Majesty's provinces on the lands or hunting grounds reserved and claimed by the Upper and Lower Creek nations of Indians, and that no mistakes, doubts, or disputes may for the future arise thereupon, in consideration of the great marks of friendship, benevolence, and clemency extended to us, the said Indians of the Upper and Lower Creek nations, by his Majesty King George the Third, we, the said chiefs and head warriors, leaders of our respective nations, by virtue and in pursuance of the full rights and powers we have and are possessed of, have agreed, and we do hereby agree, that for the future the boundary be at the dividing paths going to the nation and Mobile, where is a creek; that it shall run along the side of that creek until its confluence with the river which falls into the bay; then to run round the bay and take in all the plantations which formerly belonged to the Yanmasee Indians; that no notice is to be taken of such cattle or horses as shall pass the line; that from the said dividing paths towards the west the boundary is to run along the path leading to Mobile, to the creek called Cassaba; and from thence, still in a straight line, to another creek or great branch, within forty miles of the ferry, and so to go up to the head of that creek; and from thence turn round towards the river so as to include all the old French settlements at Tassa; the eastern line to be determined by the flowing of the sea in the bays, as was settled at Augusta. And we do hereby grant and confirm unto his Majesty, his heirs and successors, all the lands contained between the said lines and the sea-coast."

To prevent all disputes on account of encroachments, or supposed encroachments, made by the English inhabitants of his Majesty's said province on the lands or hunting grounds reserved and claimed by the Upper and Lower nations of Creek Indians, and that no doubts, mistakes, or disputes may for the future arise, in consideration of the great marks of friendship, benevolence, and clemency, generosity, and protection extended to us, the said Indians of the Upper and Lower Creek nations, by his Majesty King George the Third, we, the chiefs, head warriors, and leaders of our respective nations, by virtue and in pursuance of the full rights and power which we now have and are possessed of, have agreed, and we do hereby agree, that for the future the boundary line of his Majesty's said province of East Florida shall be all the sea-coast as far as the tide flows in the manner settled with the English by the Great Tomachiches, with all the country to the eastward of St. John's river, forming nearly an island from its source to its entrance into the sea; and to the westward of St. John's river by a line drawn from the entrance of the creek Ocklawagh into said river above the great lake, and near to Spalding's upper trading storehouse, to the forks of Black creek, at Colville's plantation; and from thence to that part of St. Mary's river which shall be intersected by the continuation of the line to the entrance of Turkey creek into the river Altamaha; that no notice is to be taken of such horses or cattle as shall pass the line; and

APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR A DONATION OF LAND FOR MAKING A ROAD FROM CHILICOTHE TO MARIETTA, IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 16, 1829.

MEMORIAL.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the road leading from Chilicothe, by the way of McArthurstown, Athens, and the mouth of the Little Hockhocking, to Marietta, has been and is still likely to remain in a bad condition, and cannot admit the transportation of the United States mail in stages, and can only be conveyed on horseback;

And whereas the improvement of said road would not only be a saving to the United States, by rendering the transportation of the mails less expensive, but would also open at once to a large and populous section of our State a direct communication, in one direction to the Ohio canal, at Chilicothe, and in the other to the Ohio river, and the contemplated slackwater navigation of the Muskingum river;

And whereas there are lands lying on said road and in its vicinity belonging to the United States, the legislature of Ohio do respectfully solicit from Congress a donation of fifteen sections of said lands, the avails of which shall be expended under the direction of the legislature, for the improvement of said road: Therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their exertions to obtain from Congress the donation above mentioned.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit to each of our senators and representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution.

EDWARD KING, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
SAMUEL WHEELER, Speaker of the Senate.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original remaining in this office.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, Columbus, Ohio, February 5, 1829.

SIR: In obedience to the request of the legislature of Ohio, I transmit to you a copy of the preceding memorial and resolutions.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR GRANT OF LAND TO COMPLETE THE CANAL BETWEEN ILLINOIS RIVER AND LAKE MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 16, 1829.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the people of the State of Illinois, represented in the general assembly, respectfully represent: That in the year 1827 an act was passed by Congress granting to this State a quantity of land on the route of the projected canal to connect the waters of the Illinois river with those of Lake Michigan, equal to one-half of the land lying within the range of five sections in width on both sides of the canal, and equal in length to said canal. Your memorialists represent that, in conformity to the object contemplated by said grant, a law was passed at the present session of the general assembly of this State providing for the sale of the land granted by Congress to the State, and an immediate application of its proceeds to the construction of the contemplated work.

A large portion of the land embraced in that grant is low, wet, and unfit for cultivation, and therefore will afford but little advantage to the interests of the canal; and your memorialists are fully convinced that the available portion of that grant will not yield a fund sufficient to complete more than one-half of the canal contemplated. Your memorialists deem it unnecessary to dwell upon the importance of a work of such deep interest to the people of this State and of such great advantage to the general government. They cannot look to the resources of this State as furnishing ground for a hope that she can, in any reasonable period, complete a canal of such great extent without further assistance from the general government. They believe that the nation feels too deep an interest in this work to see it languish for the want of means to complete it, and they feel assured that the policy which led to this donation will be pursued until the object shall be fully attained. They therefore respectfully pray that the alternate sections reserved by Congress in their act of March, 1827, may be granted to the State of Illinois, for the purpose of enabling her to complete a navigable communication between the Illinois river and Lake Michigan.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR GRANT OF LAND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE NAVIGATION OF CERTAIN RIVERS THEREIN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 16, 1829.

To the Congress of the United States:

The people of the State of Illinois, represented in the general assembly, respectfully represent to your honorable body that the Kaskaskia river is susceptible of being made navigable, and at no great expense, from the seat of government of this State to its confluence with the Mississippi, a distance of about three hundred and fifty miles by water; that this river passes through a section of country of remarkable evenness of surface, and passes through or forms the boundaries of seven counties of this State, to wit: Randolph, Monroe, St. Clair, Washington, Clinton, Fayette, and Shelby; that the counties of Montgomery, Bond, Marion, Jefferson, and Perry, are situate in its immediate vicinity, and would be greatly benefited by the improvement of the navigation of said river; that by removing the obstructions the river would be navigable for six months in each year, and that the channel at the Ripples in said river can be deepened at no great expense, and that the material obstructions to its navigation is caused by snags and drift-wood.

It is further represented to your honorable body that the unassisted means of the State are not adequate, at this time, to improve this river and make it permanently navigable. To show the importance of this work, your memorialists state that the counties above enumerated, situate upon or in the vicinity of this river, contain a large population, and are increasing more rapidly than at any former period of our State government; that this population is at the distance of twenty-five to eighty miles from the Mississippi; that the exchangeable surplus productions of this section of country, for the want of a navigable river upon which to convey them to market, are taxed with a heavy land carriage, as well as all importations, and which diminishes the value of the one and enhances the price of the other. Your memorialists further represent that the reasons and principles of this memorial are also applicable to the Sangamon, Macoupin, and Big Muddy rivers, in this State, all of which pass through fertile sections of country, and with adequate means could be made permanently navigable for many months in each year. Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully solicit that an act of Congress may be passed granting to this State such quantity of land as Congress shall deem just, to be disposed of by the legislature of the State, and to be applied exclusively to the improvement of the navigation of said rivers. The enlightened policy heretofore pursued by Congress, and the liberal precedents made in aid of the new States to construct works of internal improvement, induces your memorialists to hope that this reasonable application will be successful.

WILLIAM KENNEY, Speaker of the Senate.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 17, 1829.

Mr. GURLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the case of Josiah Barker, of Louisiana, reported:

That the petitioner claims 1,687 arpents of land, commencing 40 arpents from the river Mississippi, in the State of Louisiana, by virtue of a grant from the Baron de Carondelet, governor general of the province of Louisiana, to Madam Hindron, under whom petitioner claims title, and dated at New Orleans in the year 1795. The grant appears to be genuine, and to have been duly recorded with the commissioner of land claims, but made no report thereon. It further appears that the land claimed has been in possession and occupation of petitioner, and the person under whom he holds title, from the date of the grant to the present time.

Your committee believe the petitioner entitled to the land, and therefore report a bill for his relief.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 740 [2D SESSION.

CLAIM TO LAND BETWEEN ROBERTS'S AND LUDLOW'S LINES, IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 18, 1829.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the resolution of the 6th instant, directing an inquiry into the expediency of carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to enter into certain negotiations relative to lands located under Virginia military land warrants, lying between Ludlow and Roberts's line, in the State of Ohio," reported:

That on looking into the subject of the reference, they find that three several bills have heretofore passed the House of Representatives to quiet the title to certain persons who purchased lands of the government between Ludlow's and Roberts's lines, which lands are claimed by persons holding under Virginia military land warrants. Those bills, in each instance, did not pass through the House till the session was too far advanced to give to the Senate time to act upon them.

The committee concur in the report heretofore made on this subject, and beg leave to adopt it as a part of their present report.* They would remark, in addition to the facts stated in that report, that the Supreme Court of the United States, during its present term, has made a decision in a cause between a military claimant and a purchaser of the United States, whose title was defended by the government, which completely and finally establishes the validity of military titles acquired between Ludlow's and Roberts's lines previous to the year 1812. It now only remains for the United States to quiet the title of those who have purchased of the government and made valuable improvements on these lands, by purchasing in the title of the Virginia military claimants; or, on the other hand, to leave them to be evicted, and thus subject the government to the much larger and more importunate claims of the present occupants. The committee have not hesitated to adopt the former course, and in so doing have imitated the example of the committees which have heretofore examined this subject, and whose recommendations have successively received the sanction of the House. They therefore report a bill.

No. 7.

REYNOLDS, plaintiff in error, vs. MCARTHUR, defendant in error.

Opinion of Supreme Court.

This is a writ of error to a judgment rendered by the supreme court of Ohio for the county of Champaign, in an ejectment, in which the lessee of Duncan McArthur was the plaintiff, and John Reynolds was defendant. The plaintiff claimed the land in controversy under a patent issued on the 12th day of October, 1812, founded on an entry made in the year 1810, on a military land warrant granted by the State of Virginia for services during the war of the revolution in the Virginia line on continental establishment.

The title of the defendant is thus stated: The land was sold by the United States at their land office in Cincinnati, in the year 1805, to Henry Vanmeter. It reverted to the United States in the year 1813 on account of the non-payment of the purchase money, and was again sold during the same year at the same office to Henry Vanmeter, to whom a certificate of sale was issued, which he afterwards transferred to the defendant, John Reynolds.

The verdict and judgment were in favor of the plaintiff in the State court. At the trial the counsel for the defendant moved the court to instruct the jury on several points made in the cause, and excepted to the refusal of the court to give these instructions. The judgment of the State court, having been against a title set up under several acts of Congress, is brought before this court by writ of error, that the construction put on those acts by that court may be re-examined. The inquiry will be, whether the court ought to have given any of the instructions which were required.

The several prayers for this purpose will be considered in the order in which they were made.

1st. The first instruction asked is: "That the lands west of Ludlow's line, east of Roberts's line, and south of the Indian boundary line, had been withdrawn from appropriation under and by virtue of military land warrants prior to the year 1810; and that as the same had, pursuant to the acts of Congress in such cases made and provided, been directed to be surveyed and sold, and had accordingly been surveyed and sold to the defendant prior to the year 1810, the plaintiff's patent is void, and their verdict ought to be for the defendant."

This motion does not question the bounds of the lands reserved by Virginia for military bounties; but, supposing the tract of country west of Ludlow's line, east of Roberts's line, and south of the Indian boundary line, to be within that reserve, asks the court to say that Congress had, prior to the year 1810, when Mr. McArthur's entry was made, withdrawn it from appropriation under and by virtue of military land warrants.

*For this report vide vol. 4, No. 521, March 28, 1826; for report May 4, 1824, vide vol. 3, No. 410; for report January 21, 1825, vide vol. 4, No. 441; for report May 12, 1826, vide vol. 4, No. 526.

Before deciding on the propriety of refusing or granting this prayer, it will be necessary to review the legislation of Congress on this subject.

The act of 9th of June, 1794,* taken in connexion with the reservation in favor of their officers and soldiers, contained in the deed of cession made by Virginia, unquestionably subjected the whole of the military reserve to the satisfaction of those warrants for which the reserve was made. Had Congress, previous to the year 1810, withdrawn that portion of this reserve which lies between the line run by Dudley Ludlow and that run by Roberts from its liability to be so appropriated?

So early as the year 1785 Congress passed "an ordinance† for ascertaining the mode of disposing of lands in the western territory," in which, for the purpose of securing to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line on continental establishment the bounties granted to them by that State, it is ordained "that no part of the land between the rivers called Little Miami and Scioto, on the northwest side of the river Ohio, be sold, or in any manner alienated, until there shall first have been laid off and appropriated for the said officers and soldiers, and persons claiming under them, the lands they are entitled to, agreeably to the said deed of cession and act of Congress accepting the same."

The scrupulous regard which this clause, in the ordinance of May, 1785, manifests to this condition made by Virginia in her deed of cession is the more worthy of remark, because at that time no suspicion was entertained that the military warrants of Virginia would cover the whole territory; and it was even doubted, as the legislation of Congress shows, whether any part of that territory would be required for them. Even under these circumstances Congress declared the determination not to sell or alienate any land between the Scioto and the Little Miami.

In May, 1796, Congress passed "an act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the territory northwest of the river Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river."‡ The second section enacts "that the part of the said lands which has not been already conveyed, &c., or which has not been heretofore, and during the present session of Congress may not be appropriated for satisfying military land bounties, and for other purposes, shall be divided," &c.

This law, then, from which the whole power of the surveyor general is derived, excludes from his general authority all lands previously appropriated for military land bounties and for other purposes; and consequently excludes from it the lands between the Scioto and the Little Miami. In May, 1800,§ Congress passed an act to amend the act of 1796, which enacts "that for the disposal of the lands of the United States directed to be sold by the original act, there shall be four land offices established in the said territory." The places at which these land offices shall be fixed are designated in the act, and the district of country attached to each is described. One of these places is Cincinnati, the place at which the lands in controversy were sold; and the district attached to it is that below the Little Miami. It is perfectly clear, from the language of this act, that it extends to those lands only which were comprehended in the act of May, 1796; and that no one of the districts established by it comprehends the land in controversy. Any general phrases which may be found in the law must, according to every rule of construction, be limited in their application to those lands which the original act authorized the surveyor general to lay off for the purpose of being sold. If he surveyed any lands to which that act does not extend, he exceeded his authority, and the survey is not sanctioned by law. If land thus surveyed by mistake has been sold, the sale was not authorized by the law under color of which it was made.

The counsel for the plaintiff in error has pressed earnestly on the court the grants made to John Cleves Symmes and to the purchasers under him. We are not sure that the argument on this point has been clearly understood, and have therefore examined that transaction in order to discover its influence, if it can have any, on the question now under consideration.

In 1787 John Cleves Symmes applied to Congress for a grant to himself and his associates of the lands lying within the following limits, viz: "beginning at the mouth of the Great Miami river; thence, running up the Ohio, to the mouth of the Little Miami river; up the main stream of the Little Miami river to the place where a due west line to be continued from the western termination of the northern boundary line of the grant to Messrs. Sargent, Cutler & Co. shall intersect the said Little Miami river; thence due west, continuing the said western line to the place where said line shall intersect the main branch or stream of the Great Miami; thence, down the Great Miami, to the place of beginning."

In consequence of this petition, a contract was entered into for the sale of one million of acres of land, to begin on the bank of the Ohio, twenty miles along its meanders, above the mouth of the Great Miami; thence to the mouth of the Great Miami; thence up that river to a place where a line drawn due east will intersect a line drawn from the place of beginning, parallel with the general course of the Great Miami, so as to include one million of acres within these lines and the said river; and from that place, upon the said Great Miami river, extending along such lines, to the place of beginning, containing, as aforesaid, one million of acres.

The language of this contract does not indicate any intention on the part of Congress to encroach on the military reserve which the ordinance of May, 1785, then in full force, had exempted from sale or alienation.

In 1792,‖ Congress, at the request of John Cleves Symmes, passed an act to alter this contract in such manner that the land sold should extend from the mouth of the Great Miami to the mouth of the Little Miami, and be bounded by the river Ohio on the south, by the Great Miami on the west, by the Little Miami on the east, and by a parallel of latitude on the north, extending from the Great Miami to the Little Miami, so as to comprehend the proposed quantity of one million of acres. The lands, then, which might be granted to John Cleves Symmes in pursuance of this act of Congress, lay between the Great and Little Miamis, and were to lie below the Little Miami; the Scioto is above that river; so that Congress could not have intended that this grant to Symmes should interfere with the military reserve.

On the 30th of September, in the year 1794, a deed was executed in pursuance of the act of 1792, conveying to John Cleves Symmes that tract of land beginning at the mouth of the Great Miami river, and extending from thence along the river Ohio to the mouth of the Little Miami river, bounded on the south by the river Ohio, on the west by the Great Miami, on the east by the Little Miami, and on the north by a parallel of latitude to be run from the Great Miami to the Little Miami, so as to comprehend the quantity of 311,682 acres of land. It is obvious that this patent does not interfere with the military reserve. But John Cleves Symmes had sold to several persons, who purchased in the confidence that he would comply with his contract for one million of acres, and be enabled to convey the lands sold to them.

In March, 1799, Congress passed an act declaring that any person or persons who, before the first day of April, in the year 1797, had made any contract in writing with J. C. Symmes, for the purchase of lands between the Great Miami and Little Miami rivers, which are not comprehended in his patent dated the 30th of September, 1794, shall be entitled to a preference in purchasing of the United States all the lands so contracted for, at the price of two dollars per acre.

In March, 1801, Congress passed an act extending this right of pre-emption to all persons who had, previous to the first day of January, 1800, made any contract in writing with the said J. C. Symmes, or with any of his associates, for the purchase of lands between the Miami rivers, within the limits of a survey made by Israel Ludlow, in conformity to an act of Congress of the 12th of April, 1792. The provisions of this act are supposed to contemplate the survey and sale of the lands which had been sold to J. C. Symmes, between the Miami rivers, in like manner as had been prescribed for other lands lying above the mouth of Kentucky, by the acts of 1796 and 1800. The right of pre-emption was limited to lands within Israel Ludlow's survey; but that survey contained less than 600,000 acres, and the contract of Symmes was for one million of acres. Congress, therefore, resumed the consideration of this subject, and in May, 1802, extended this right of pre-emption to all those who had purchased from J. C. Symmes lands lying between the Miami rivers and without the limits of Ludlow's survey. It cannot be doubted that this right of pre-emption, allowed to the purchasers under J. C. Symmes, was limited to lands lying between the Miami rivers, and lying within his contract. Congress could never have intended that this contract should interfere with the military reserve. That reserve was of lands lying above the Little Miami. The sale to Symmes was of lands lying below that river. It was made while an ordinance was in full force declaring the resolution of Congress not to alienate any part of that reserve. Their contract was made in subordination to that ordinance, and cannot have been intended to violate it. The terms of the contract do not purport to violate it. The land sold to Symmes, and the pre-emption rights allowed to the purchasers under him, are so described as to furnish no ground for the opinion that Congress could have suspected them to interfere with the military reserve. If the Scioto and the Great Miami, contrary to all probability, should take such a direction as to produce a possible interference between the lands sold to Symmes and the reserve which Congress had declared its resolution not to alienate, some difficulty might possibly arise in a case where one of the parties claimed under a military warrant, and the other under a pre-emption certificate. But that is not the case. The title of the plaintiff in error is under a purchase made at a sale of the lands of the United States at Cincinnati by Henry Vanmeter, who is not stated to have held a pre-emption certificate, or to have been a purchaser under Symmes. The instruction which the court was asked to give is, that the land between the lines of Ludlow and Roberts had been withdrawn from appropriation, under and by virtue of military land warrants, previous to the year 1810. This withdrawal is not in express terms, but is supposed to be implied from a direction to survey the lands between the Great and Little Miamis, which had been exempted from the operation of the acts of 1796 and 1800, under the idea that they were comprehended in the contract with Symmes. Congress could not suspect that the lands to be surveyed under this law could interfere with the lands lying between the Little Miami and the Scioto; and, consequently, cannot have intended by this act to vary the boundary of the military reserve.

It has been very truly observed that all the laws on this subject should be taken together. The condition inserted in the deed of cession of Virginia, which reserves the land lying between the Little Miami and the Sciota for the purpose of satisfying the warrants granted to the officers and soldiers of that State; the ordinance of May, 1785, declaring that no part of that reserve should be alienated; the contract with Symmes for the sale of lands lying between the two Miamis; the acts relative to pre-emption, and which direct the survey and sale of the lands lying between the Miamis, without any allusion to the military district, must be taken into view at the same time. It is, we think, impossible to believe that Congress supposed itself, when directing the survey and sale of lands between the Great and Little Miamis, to be abridging or altering the bounds of a district which Virginia had reserved in the deed of cession by which the country northwest of the Ohio had been conveyed to the United States.

When Congress designed to act on this subject, the purpose was expressed, and overtures were made to the other party of the compact to obtain her co-operation. In executing the act of May, 1800, the surveyor general had caused a line to be run from what he supposed to be the source of the Little Miami towards what he supposed to be the source of the Sciota, which is the line denominated Ludlow's, and surveyed the lands west of that line in the manner prescribed by the act of Congress.

In March, 1804,* Congress passed an act establishing that line as the western boundary of the reserve, provided the State of Virginia should, within two years after the passage of the act, accede to it. Virginia did not accede to it.

In 1812† Congress made another effort to establish this line. The President was authorized to appoint commissioners to meet others which should be appointed by Virginia, who were to agree on the western line of the military reserve, and cause the same to be surveyed and marked out. These commissioners met, and after ascertaining the sources of the two rivers, employed Mr. Charles Roberts to survey and mark a line from the source of the one to the source of the other. This line is called Roberts's line. The Virginia commissioners, however, refused to accede to this line. This act provided that until an agreement shall take place between the commissioners, the line designated in the act of 1804, which is Ludlow's, should be considered and held as the proper boundary line. This enactment is provisional and prospective.

In 1818‡ Congress passed an act declaring that from the source of the Little Miami to the Indian boundary line, established by the treaty of Greenville, Ludlow's line should be considered as the western boundary of the military reserve, until otherwise directed by law; and that, from the said Indian boundary line to the source of the Scioto river, the line run by Charles Roberts shall be so considered. When we review the whole legislation of Congress on this subject we think the conclusion inevitable, that in the acts of 1801 and 1802, which have been cited, the legislature did not consider itself as altering the boundary of the military district, or as withdrawing, before the year 1810, any part of the territory lying between the Little Miami and the Scioto, from being appropriated by the military land warrants granted by the State of Virginia.

If those acts have this effect, it is one which was not intended. Before a court can be required to declare the law which would arise between conflicting statutes of this character, the fact that they do conflict ought to be clearly established. The counsel for the plaintiff in error has argued this part of the case as if the fact was established; as if a line drawn from the source of the Little Miami to the source of the Big Miami would include the land between Ludlow's line and that of Roberts; and this court has thus far treated the question as it has been argued. But this fact is not established in this cause. It is not among the facts agreed by the parties. Nor was the State court requested to instruct the jury, that, if they should find the land west of Ludlow's, and east of Roberts's line, to lie between the Little and Big Miamis, or within Symmes's Purchase, "that it had been withdrawn from appropriation under and by virtue of said military land warrants, prior to the year 1810;" and that McArthur's patent was consequently void. The court was not required to state the law hypothetically, as being dependent on the fact, but to assume the fact, and to state the law positively upon that assumption. The record, we think, did not authorize the court to consider this fact as established, and to withdraw it from the jury. There is no error in refusing this instruction.

2d. The counsel for the defendant then asked the court to instruct the jury that, as the second section of the act of Congress of April 11, 1818, declares "that from the source of the Little Miami river to the Indian boundary line established by the treaty of Greenville in 1795, the line designated as the westerly boundary line of the Virginia tract by an act of Congress, passed on the 23d day of March, 1804, entitled 'An act to ascertain the boundary of the lands reserved by the State of Virginia, &c., &c., shall be considered and held as such until otherwise directed by law,' and as the said boundary line was run by Ludlow, under the directions of the surveyor general, pursuant to an act of Congress entitled 'An act to extend and continue in force the provisions of an act entitled "An act giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the territory northwest of the Ohio, and for other purposes,"' approved May 1, 1802, and offered for sale at public auction at the land office at Cincinnati, pursuant to the act entitled 'An act making provision for the disposal of the public lands in the Indiana Territory, and for other purposes,' approved March 26, 1804, must be construed as having relation back to the time the said recited act of March 23, 1804, was passed, and had its effect; and as the defendant's patent is for lands west of Ludlow's line, and south of the Greenville treaty line, and is based on an entry made in 1810, on a Virginia continental land warrant, which land had been surveyed and sold to the defendant, pursuant to the acts of Congress prior to the year 1810, the plaintiff's patent is void, and their verdict ought to be for the defendant."

The prayer for this instruction is founded on the assertion that Ludlow's line was run under the directions of the surveyor general, pursuant to the act of Congress of May 1, 1802, granting pre-emption rights to purchasers from John Cleves Symmes; and that the land in controversy was sold pursuant to the act of March 26, 1804, making provision for the disposal of public lands in Indiana Territory, and for other purposes. If, by the words "pursuant to an act of Congress," as used in this prayer, it is intended to say that the boundary line run by Ludlow was correctly run, as required by the act of May 1, 1802, and that the sale of the land in controversy was authorized by the act of March 26, 1804, then the court is required to decide facts not admitted by the parties, which are proper for the consideration of the jury; and then to declare the law arising upon those facts. If those words mean no more than that the line was actually run under the authority of the surveyor general, and that the land in controversy was actually sold at the land office in Cincinnati by the officers of government, the question fairly arises, What influence have these facts on the rights of the parties? Do they, taken in connexion with the act of the 23d of March, 1804, and of the 11th of April, 1818, justify the inference which the court is asked to draw, that the act of 1818 relates back to the act of 1804, and takes effect from its date, so as to avoid a patent issued in October, 1812, on an entry and survey made in 1810?

It has already been stated that the act of the 23d of March, 1804, establishes Ludlow's line, not absolutely, but on condition that Virginia shall assent to it, and that Virginia never did assent to it. It has also been stated, that, in 1812, Congress authorized the President to appoint commissioners, who should proceed, in concert with such as might be appointed by Virginia, to run a line, which should constitute the western boundary of the Virginia military reserve. These commissioners did meet, and did cause a line to be run from the source of the Little Miami to the source of the Scioto. This is called Roberts's line. The commissioners of Virginia did not assent to this line; consequently it is of no operation. The act of the 11th of April, 1818, declares that Ludlow's line shall be considered and held as the true western boundary of the Virginia military reserve, until otherwise directed by law. But from what time shall it be so considered and held? The language of the law is entirely prospective. It is a principle which has always been held sacred in the United States, that laws by which human action is to be regulated look forwards, not backwards, and are never to be construed retrospectively, unless the language of the act shall render such construction indispensable. No words are found in the act of 1818 which render this odious construction indispensable. The language is, that Ludlow's line shall be considered and held; that is, shall in future be considered and held as the true western boundary of that reserve. That this was the understanding of the legislature, is rendered the more probable from the clause which relates to patents. It does not annul patents already issued, but declares that no patent shall be granted on any location and survey that has or may be made west of this line. Patents which have been granted are not affected directly by the words of this law, and must depend on the pre-existing acts of Congress.

The argument is, that this act, declaring that Ludlow's line shall be considered and held as the western boundary line of the reserve, until otherwise directed by law, proves, that, according to the true construction of the deed of cession, this line is in reality the true boundary, and, therefore, that all titles previously acquired to lands lying west of this line are invalid.

We cannot admit the correctness of this argument. That, in the state of things which existed in 1812 and 1818, Congress might establish the western boundary of the military reserve, was to affect titles thereafter to be acquired, is not questioned. Congress might fix a reasonable time within which titles should be asserted, and might annex conditions to the extension of this term. But to look back to titles already acquired—to declare by a law what was the meaning of the compact under which those titles were acquired, is to construe that compact, and to adjudicate in the form of legislation: it would be the exercise of a judicial, not of a legislative power. This construction can never be admitted by the court, unless it be rendered indispensable by the language of the act. We do not think that the language of this act does require it. If the language of the statute does not require this construction, neither does the fact that Ludlow's line was run by order of the surveyor general, and that the land in controversy was sold by the regular agents of government. These facts cannot, we think, carry back the act of 1818 to 1804, and give it a retrospective operation.

We do not inquire into the power of Congress to pass such an act. There is undoubtedly much force in the argument suggested at the bar, that the general power of legislation which Congress could exercise over the territory northwest of the Ohio passed to the new government when the territory was erected into a State, and that Congress retained only the power of a proprietor, with a capacity "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the property." But it is unnecessary to pursue this inquiry, because we are of opinion that this construction is inadmissible. The court, therefore, did right in rejecting this prayer.

3d. The third instruction asked by the defendant is in these words: "That, according to the true intent and meaning of the act and deed of cession from Virginia to the United States, and the several acts of Congress relative to the sale of the public lands of the United States, the land lying between the rivers Scioto and Little Miami is bounded by a line extending from the source or point of land furthest removed from the mouths of these rivers, from which the rain, descending on the earth, runs down into their respective channels, along the top of the ridges dividing the waters of the Scioto from the waters of the Great Miami, which empty into the Ohio below the mouth of the Little Miami, as delineated on the diagram returned by the county surveyor for the defendant in this cause; and as the plaintiff's patent covers land west, or without the boundary of the district so bounded as aforesaid, as is based on an entry on a Virginia continental land warrant, which entry was made in the year 1810, and which said entry and patent cover land which had, pursuant to the acts of Congress, been surveyed and sold to the defendant, prior to the date of the plaintiff's said entry, the plaintiff's patent is void, and their verdict ought to be for the defendant."

In the case of Doddridge vs. Thompson et. al., this court said that the territory lying between two rivers, in the whole country from their sources to their mouths, and a straight line drawn from the source of one river to the source of the other, was considered in that case as furnishing the western boundary of the lands lying between them. One or both of the rivers may pursue such a course that a straight line from the source of one to the source of the other may cross one or both of them. Such a case may form an exception to the universal application of the straight line, and may go far in showing that no general rule can be laid down which will fit every possible case. But this obvious and reasonable rule has been adopted by Congress, as well as by this court. The act of 1804 adopts a straight line. The act of 1812 obviously contemplates a straight line; and the act of 1818 adopts Ludlow's line from the source of the Little Miami to the Indian boundary line, established at the treaty of Greenville, and the line run by Roberts, from the Indian boundary to the source of the Scioto.

The counsel for the defendant in the State court abandoned the rule adopted by Congress and by this court, by taking for his commencement "that point of land which is furthest removed from the mouth of the respective rivers, and from which the rain descending on the earth runs down into their respective channels," and to draw a line from that point along the tops of the ridges dividing the waters of Scioto from the waters of the Great Miami.

We feel some difficulty in comprehending the principle which was suggested and can sustain this rule. Why should a line drawn along the top of the ridges which divide the waters of the Scioto from those of the Great Miami constitute the true boundary of the country lying between the Great and Little Miami? Would such a line certainly lead to the source of the Scioto, or to that of the Little Miami? We can give no satisfactory answer to these inquiries. It is some objection, too, to this instruction, that the jury would be much and unnecessarily perplexed in finding the point of land furthest removed from the mouth of each river, and from which the rain descending on the earth runs down into their respective channels. If any point exists which would fit all parts of the description, and could be found by the jury, it is by no means certain that such point would be in a line which would mark the boundary of the country between the two rivers.

The rule which the court was asked to lay down appears to us to be entirely arbitrary; and this prayer was properly rejected.

4th. The fourth instruction has been abandoned by the plaintiff in error.

5th. The proposition on which the fifth prayer depends is, that the sources of the two rivers must be "at that point in their respective channels at which, from the union of several streams, sufficient water flows at an ordinary stage on which to navigate small vessels loaded." This rule for ascertaining the source of a river is entirely new in this country. A stream may acquire the name of a river which is not navigable in any part. A river which is navigable may retain that name above the highest navigable point. The meaning of words, as commonly used, must be changed before the source of a river can be confounded with its highest navigable point. The court did not err in rejecting this prayer.

6th. The proposition on which the sixth prayer depends is, "that the sources of the two rivers must be considered as commencing at that point in their respective channels from which the water flows at all seasons of the year."

Is this proposition so invariably true as to become a principle of law? We think it is not. A stream may acquire the name of a river, in the channel of which, at some seasons of extreme drought, no water flows. For a great portion of the year parts of a stream may flow in great abundance, in which, during a very dry season, we may find only standing pools. It would be against all usage to say that the general source of the river was at that point in its channel from which the water always flows. This prayer, we think, ought not to have been granted.

7th. The seventh prayer depends on the proposition that the sources of the two rivers must be fixed at that point in their respective channels furthest removed from their respective mouths, at which water is found at all seasons of the year.

If the terms of this proposition be taken according to their most obvious import, it would seem to vary from the sixth only in this—that the sixth fixes the source of a river at the point in the channel from which water flows at all seasons in the year, while the seventh fixes it at that point which is furthest removed from its mouth, at which water is found at all seasons. Understanding it in this sense, the proposition would not raise the question, which of several was the main branch, but at what point the source of that main branch was to be found. The remarks made on the sixth prayer would apply with equal propriety to this, and the court would come to the same conclusion on both. But we understand from the argument that the counsel for the plaintiff in error intended by this prayer to furnish a rule by which the main branch might be designated. That rule is, that the branch in whose channel water might be found furthest removed from the mouth of the river is its main branch.

Is this proposition universally true? That branch of a river which is entitled to the appellation given to the main river is a conclusion of fact to be drawn from the evidence in the cause. Consequently, no general rule can be laid down which will, in all cases, guide us to a correct conclusion. One of the forks may have retained the name of the main river in exclusion of the others. The Scioto and Miami are both Indian names; and if any one branch of either had received from the natives, and retained exclusively, the name given to the main river, that would have been the stream referred to in the reserve contained in the deed of cession, although water might have been found in a dry season of the year in the channel of some other, at a greater distance from the mouth of the river; or the white men who explored the country before the deed of cession was executed may have fixed the name on some one of the branches of the respective rivers.

When France ceded to Great Britain all her pretensions to the country lying east of the Mississippi, "from its source to the river Iberville," no man could have been so extravagant as to assert that the source of the Mississippi was to be looked for through all its branches, and fixed at that point in the channel of either in which water might be found furthest removed from the mouth of the river. The size of the rivers, and the notoriety of the names by which they were designated, place the unreasonableness of such a pretension in so strong a point of view, that we can scarcely bring ourselves to suppose that there is any resemblance between the case put by way of illustration, and that under consideration. And yet, what is the real difference in principle? If one branch of a small river has, by consent, retained the name of the main river, in exclusion of the others, that branch must be considered, in the absence of other circumstances, as the true boundary intended by the parties in a deed which calls for the stream by its name. The fact may be less certain and less notorious, but, if it exists, it must be followed by the same consequences.

If neither branch had notoriously retained the name of the river, the main branch is entitled to it. But the main branch is not necessarily that in whose channel water might be found at all seasons of the year at the point furthest removed from its mouth. The largest volume of water is certainly one indication of the main stream; which does not necessarily accompany that which the counsel for the plaintiff in error has selected as the sole criterion by which it is to be determined. The length of the stream is another. It is obvious that two branches may pursue such a course that the source of the longest may be nearer the mouth of the river than that of the shortest.

We think the rule proposed in this prayer does not furnish a certain guide to conduct us to the source of the river; and therefore the instruction ought not to have been given.

8th. The eighth prayer requires the court to instruct the jury that the source of each river is at that point furthest removed from its mouth, from which the rain runs down into its channel.

We cannot perceive in the rule which this instruction proposes any principle which will conduct us to the source of the main stream. Every objection to granting the seventh prayer applies with equal force to this. They need not be repeated. The court did not err in rejecting it.

The instructions to the jury for which the plaintiff applied to the State court are some of them mixed questions, involving fact with law, and requiring the court to decide the fact, and then to declare the law upon that fact. Others propose a rule as of universal application, to ascertain the main branch of a river and the source of that main branch, which would, unquestionably, in many cases mislead us. They propose one single circumstance, in exclusion of all others, as being the infallible evidence of a complex fact depending on a number of varying circumstances. The court very properly refused to give any of these instructions.

The court is of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the State court, and that it ought to be affirmed with costs.

Remarks.—Claim numbered 1, designated as Cat Island, contains 2,078.01 acres, most of which are unfit for cultivation. The permit on which this claim is founded calls for the whole island. From the long and continued inhabitation and cultivation it would seem that the claimant ought to be entitled to the whole island if the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government would warrant such an opinion.

Remarks.—Claims Nos. 1, 2, and 3, were reported unfavorably of by the former commissioners, for want of inhabitation and cultivation; and although the additional testimony which has been adduced in their support does not amount to full and satisfactory proof of inhabitation and cultivation, according to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government, they are, therefore, forfeited; yet as the inhabitation and cultivation were prior to 1803, we are of opinion they ought to be confirmed for a reasonable quantity.

Claim No. 4.—This claim is founded on an order of survey, issued by Governor Miro, in favor of Louis Boisdoré, and confirmed to his widow, Marguerette Douisson, by the Intendant Morales, April 4, 1808. It does not appear by the title papers that an actual survey was made with geometrical precision, yet a map or conjectural plan, definitely fixing the limits of the claim, was made by the Surveyor General Pintado, May 30, 1810. This claim extends from Pearl river to the Bay of St. Louis, and is supposed to contain about one hundred thousand acres. The additional testimony adduced to us proves incontestably that this claim has been inhabited, and a part of the land kept under cultivation upwards of forty years; it is also in testimony before us that the extent of this claim was distinctly known to the neighbors, and that the claimant set up his claim to the whole limits contained within the before-mentioned figurative plan. The above claim is forfeited, under the Spanish laws, usages and customs, for want of inhabitation and cultivation within the time prescribed by those laws and regulations; yet as the inhabitation and cultivation appear to be very ancient, it is conceived that this claim ought to be confirmed for a reasonable quantity.

Remarks.—The above claims were considered by the former commissioners forfeited under the Spanish law for the want of inhabitation and cultivation. Certificates of confirmation, however, have been issued by our predecessors to the claimants for the quantity of six hundred and forty acres. The claimant claimed their privilege under the act of May 24, 1828, of reviving their claims in those cases where additional testimony has been adduced; the proof, in substance, amounts to the same as that recorded by the former commissioners; all the claims appear to have been inhabited and cultivated prior to April 15, 1813. We are therefore of opinion that the respective claimants ought to be quieted in their claims.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 742. [2D SESSION.

APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR GRANT OF LAND FOR SUPPORT OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 20, 1829.

MEMORIAL.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The general assembly of the State of Ohio, in the discharge of their duty to their constituents, and under the influence of a regard to the welfare of the nation, and of that portion of it which they especially represent, do respectfully ask that the Congress of the United States will grant to this State, solely and exclusively for the support of colleges and universities therein, a quantity of land equal to two townships, to be located within the State, in such manner as to the wisdom of Congress may seem best, so as to comport with the general interest, and secure the full value of the grant for the purpose for which it shall be made. And they will ask the attention of Congress to a brief statement of some of the reasons by which they are induced to make this application.

Enlightened patriots have always sought to secure the welfare and advance the happiness of the nation by the diffusion of knowledge. In all ages and under every form of government the prosperity of the community, the happiness of its members, the permanence of good institutions, and the progress of improvement, have been closely connected, not merely with a measure of acquaintance with the fundamental principles of political and moral truth, but also with the diffusion of literature and science in their higher and more extended forms. Such is and must necessarily be the case, especially where free government and liberal institutions are established, and where, consequently, all is dependent upon the intelligence and virtue of the people. Aware of this truth, both the general and State governments of the United States, from a very early day of their existence, have yielded their aid in various ways to the operation of an enlightened system of education. And in common with her sister States, Ohio has given not a small degree of attention to this subject. But although something has been done—as much, perhaps, as could be expected from the recentness of the date of her political existence and the paucity of her means—yet much more must be accomplished before the state of public scientific education shall accord with the rank she must hold, and the influence she must exert in the great community of which she is a member.

But this State, although boasting an extensive territory, a fertile soil, and numerous population, and destined to take a high station among the members of the general confederacy, has yet no adequate means of creating and fostering scientific institutions, without resorting to the odious measure of direct taxation. Possessing no national domains, and having amongst its citizens few, or none, whose love of literature would prompt, and at the same time, their wealth would make them able, to endow public seminaries of learning, and the revenue of the State being pledged on account of the public works of improvement, which are deemed to be essentially important to its prosperity, the interests of science must be neglected, and languish unless aid can be obtained in the mode now proposed.

Nearly all the original States on the Atlantic coast, and those which were formed from them on the easterly side of the Ohio, possessed a considerable property in lands, or had at command other resources of which they were able to avail themselves, as they were disposed, for the encouragement of learning. And to the States formed under the auspices of Congress northwest of the Ohio, as well as elsewhere, considerable donations of land have been made by the United States for this purpose. Yet it may justly be feared, it is proper to remark, that the funds thence arising will fall short, at the value these lands now bear, of accomplishing, in any good degree, the object for which they were intended. Ohio, however, has yet received no grant of this character, unless the lands included in the Ohio Company's purchase and Symmes' purchase should be so considered. But neither the State nor the inhabitants of those districts have ever thus regarded them. And without attempting a detailed argument of this question, it is respectfully alleged that the townships granted to Symmes, and the Ohio Company, for literary institutions, were as truly a part of the purchase, though for a specific object, as any other lands which they obtained; that they were designed for the special benefit of the inhabitants of those districts, respectively; and accordingly the location of the seminaries was confined to them, and that the inhabitants of other districts of the State have no other or greater advantages from them than are enjoyed by the inhabitants of the neighboring States within equal distances. Upon the principle of equal distribution, therefore, it is believed that Ohio has strong claims on the general government. And besides, the lands granted are found to be in fact entirely insufficient to erect and sustain the institutions which have been founded upon them, even in conjunction with the other means which they can command. For these and similar reasons, which the wisdom of Congress will readily suggest to their reflection, it is hoped and earnestly desired that the grant of land requested will be made.

Resolved, by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That the governor of this State be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial, and of this resolution, to each of our senaters and representatives in Congress, and that they be requested to use their endeavors to obtain a grant of land for the purposes therein set forth.

EDWARD KING,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Speaker of the Senate.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 744. [2D SESSION.

APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR DONATION OF LAND FOR SCHOOLS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 23, 1829.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Ohio respectfully represents: That preparatory to the formation of a State government of the territory northwest of the Ohio river, propositions were made by an act of Congress of the 13th of April, 1802, in which it was contemplated that lands equal to section number sixteen in every township should be granted to the inhabitants of such township for the use of schools; which act, with the conditions and provisions which it contained, was, by an ordinance of the convention of said Territory, subsequently made in the same year, accepted and agreed to by the people of said Territory with certain qualifications, and, especially, that in addition to the lands equal to section sixteen, a donation equal to one thirty-sixth part of the quantity of land in the United States military tract, and in the Virginia reservation, should be made for the use of schools; and, also, that a grant of the same kind, or such other provision as Congress might deem adequate, should be made to the inhabitants of the western reserve; and that land equal to one thirty-sixth part of all the lands which might thereafter be purchased of Indian tribes by the United States lying in the State of Ohio should be given as aforesaid for the use of public schools within the same; that by an act of Congress passed the 3d day of March, 1803, the qualifications provided by the convention aforesaid were acceded to on the part of Congress, and grants made, embracing the full proportion for schools in the United States and Virginia military districts, and also fifty-six thousand acres to the western reserve, being equal in quantity to one thirty-sixth of all that part of the western reserve to which the Indian title had then been extinguished; that since the time of making the grant, on the part of the general government, of what was then the stipulated proportion, the western reserve, by a treaty made between the United States and sundry Indian tribes at Fort Industry on the 4th of July, 1805, the Indian title to about one million five hundred and forty thousand acres of land lying on the west side of the Cuyahoga river, being the Indian title to all the remaining land in said western reserve, was extinguished—one thirty-sixth part of which amounts to about forty-three thousand acres. The design of this memorial, as well as those which have heretofore preceded it, is to procure from your honorable bodies the passage of an act at an early day making a grant to the State for the use of schools in the said western reserve, of the land intended to be appropriated to such purpose. Immediate attention in relation to this grant is the more necessary at this period, in consequence that the legislature of Ohio is organizing and carrying into operation a system of school education throughout the State, and the great importance to the welfare and perfection of this system that the extent of the means in every section of the State should be clearly ascertained.

It is not supposed by your memorialists that the question of right on the part of Ohio is in any way involved in the subject of the appropriation now sought. The laws, ordinances, and propositions alluded to are no doubt thoroughly understood by Congress, and the hopes and expectations of the people of Ohio duly appreciated; and in inviting the attention of your honorable bodies to the subject of this grant, your memorialists would respectfully suggest, as heretofore, inasmuch as the appropriation has been long delayed, the propriety of authorizing said lands to be located in sections, out of any lands belonging to the United States within the State of Ohio not otherwise disposed of, in the manner the governor of the State may think it advisable to prescribe.

Resolved, That the foregoing memorial be submitted to Congress; and that the governor be requested to forward to each of the senators and members of the House of Representatives in Congress from the State of Ohio a copy thereof.

EDWARD KING, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
SAMUEL WHEELER, Speaker of the Senate.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 745. [2D SESSION.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI THAT PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS BE GRANTED TO CERTAIN SETTLERS IN WASHINGTON COUNTY, IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 23, 1829.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi respectfully represents: That the county of Washington, in said State, which is a part of the lands purchased from the Choctaw tribe of Indians at the treaty of Doak's Stand, has been settled by an industrious and enterprising population, which has experienced great privations and difficulties in effecting such settlements, and that most of the people residing in said county have located themselves on the public land belonging to the United States. Your memorialists further state that when the survey of that country was first attempted the surveyors could find no lands but swamps, entirely overflowed and unfit for cultivation, and in consequence thereof they desisted from making the surveys, and the land was, for that reason, not at that time brought into market, nor indeed has it been yet offered for sale, as they are informed, nor has any inhabitant of that part of the country as yet been able to purchase land and secure a home for himself and family, with the exception of a few at the lower end of Washington county, whose lands were surveyed in time. Your memorialists further state that after the first attempt to survey these lands was made and failed, many persons undertook, with great difficulty and many privations, to explore the county and search out the lands that would be worth surveying, and would be fit for cultivation, and afterwards settled upon them as public lands, there being no opportunity to purchase, as they had not been surveyed or brought into the market. This circumstance pointed out the good lands to the surveyors, and the new settlers offered them every facility in the prosecution of the public surveying. Many of these persons are meritorious citizens, and would have purchased the land at their first settlement if any opportunity had been offered them; they have now made lasting and some of them valuable improvements on those lands, and fear, as soon as the lands are brought into the market, those improvements will be a temptation to speculators to deprive the settlers of the land on which they are made, unless some provisions should be made in their favor by the wisdom and equity of Congress. They submit to the consideration of your honorable bodies that a right of pre-emption has heretofore been granted in similar cases, and such would seem now to be the well-considered and settled policy of the government towards this hardy and meritorious class of citizens; they therefore pray your honorable bodies to take their condition under your consideration, and that you pass a law granting to such settlers a right of pre-emption to the lands in Washington county on which they have settled before the public surveys are made under the authority of the United States; and they, in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

W. L. SHARKEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
A. M. SCOTT,
Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 746. [2D SESSION.

ON THE APPLICATION OF LOUISIANA FOR A CESSION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS IN THAT STATE, AND FOR A GRANT TO CONSTRUCT A CANAL.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 24, 1829.

Mr. ISACKS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom certain resolutions of the legislature of Louisiana have been referred—one set of which represents the great public inconvenience which exists on account of the United States retaining the property in, and exercising jurisdiction over, the unappropriated lands within that State, the tardy operations in bringing the same into market, the high prices exacted therefor, and the advantages to result to the State and to the Union by placing the public lands under the control of the State, to be more speedily and equitably disposed of, and the proceeds applied to the purposes of internal improvement, and asking for a cession of all the public lands to the State, the other asking for an appropriation to be made for the construction of a canal between the river Mississippi and Lake Pontchartrain—reported:

That most of the principles assumed in the first resolution have been recognized by this committee in their report and bill presented to the House at the last session of Congress, wherein the graduation of the price of all the public lands of the United States is recommended and provided for, and also a cession of the refuse lands to the States in which they may be; and to the propriety of making this general and important change in the disposal of the government lands the committee still adhere. They are convinced that it is the most judicious course for the federal legislature to take in regard to its public domain, if not the only safe and advantageous measure which can be adopted with a view to that great interest. And it is confidently believed that the state of the country, its increasing population, the condition of the waste lands, the improvements which must await the individual ownership of the soil, and the equity and fitness of the principle which seeks for the distribution of the general property of the government among its citizens at its ad valorem rate, with many other considerations, conduce to hasten the success of this measure. But this change ought, in the opinion of the committee, to be general, and therefore they do not deem it expedient to recommend any change in the mode of disposing of the public lands, or a cession of the same, which shall apply specially to the State of Louisiana, at least until the great question which embraces the views presented in these resolutions shall be settled by Congress. Uniformity must be observed throughout the extensive region over which the land system operates; and though some difference may exist between different parts in regard to the public property, (and perhaps in none more than in the State of Louisiana,) compared to the rest, yet that is not deemed to be at present so striking as to render it necessary to exempt the lands there from what is now the rule, while it may last, or from the more desirable rule, should it obtain in future, as to public lands elsewhere. These reasons are, however, intended to be confined to the general mode and terms of sale and cession. Local causes may exist to require a greater amount of this property to be granted in one place than in another for local purposes, where the value of the whole property shall be improved by such surrender, or the general interest of the Union shall be promoted by the application of it to improvements of a national character; and in the State of Louisiana these causes do exist to a greater extent than in any other part of the public land region. Much of the public lands in that State never can be of any use or value till it is first reclaimed from the inundations of the Mississippi and some of its tributaries; and, when that is done, they will require what now an immense amount of public and private property imperiously demand—protection by levees or other safeguards from the same floods. If the interest of the United States were alone to be consulted, this branch of the subject ought to receive the earliest and most deliberate attention of Congress.

The committee, while on this point, would respectfully refer the House to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the 12th of January last, showing that upwards of two millions and a half acres of the public lands below the 31st degree of north latitude are subject to annual inundation, which, if reclaimed and protected from the waters, would be the most valuable and fertile lands on the continent, and admirably adapted to the culture of sugar and cotton. This quantity, added to the lands above that point subject to be overflowed, swells the whole amount to near five millions of acres.

This immense amount of national wealth, and capable of presenting so great a field for individual enterprise, is now entirely lost; but, to recover which, the committee will feel it their duty to present to the House a bill, so soon as the details of the plan can be digested.

In addition to these subjects of legislation, that State, in common with others, presents obstructions in its navigable waters, and channels of communication necessary to be formed between them: of the former, is the great raft in Red river; and of the latter, is the canal between the Mississippi and Lake Pontchartrain. The attention of the committee being directed to the propriety of making a grant of the public lands for the construction of that canal, they have examined the report of the board of internal improvement, communicated on the 1st of March, 1827, and to which the House is respectfully referred in the seventh volume of Executive Papers, No. 133.

In this report, the great commercial and military advantages of this work are so fully shown, that the committee feel it unnecessary to say more than to express their entire concurrence with the views presented therein, and that a grant of land may, with great safety, be made to the State of Louisiana for the accomplishment of that object; and that such grant ought, in its value and amount, to be worthy the importance of the work to which it is intended to be applied. Similar grants to the one here recommended have been made to the States of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, and Alabama, for objects of like interest to the Union and those States respectively. These precedents show that the expediency and policy of making grants of land to the States for internal improvement have received the repeated sanction of Congress, and afford a strong argument in favor of the present application on the ground of equality, in aid of the justice and propriety of the measure in itself. Every consideration, therefore, entitled to weight, in the opinion of the committee, unites in recommending a suitable appropriation of the public lands for this object; and for that purpose they report a bill.

20TH CONGRESS.] No. 747. [2D SESSION.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 25, 1829.

Mr. STEVENSON, from the select committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of distributing, annually, amongst the several States, in proportion to their representation in this House, all moneys arising from the sales of the public lands, after paying out of the same such sums as may be annually required for the extinguishment of Indian titles, the expenses of supporting land offices, for surveying the public lands, and other necessary expenses relating thereto, reported:

That, in obedience to the order of the House, the committee have had the subject of the said resolution under consideration, and find the property to which the resolution relates embraces a wide range of inquiry as to its extent and value, and also as to such other facts as may tend to an enlightened legislation upon this subject.

It must be obvious to those who give any attention to the extensive landed property, the right to which is in the United States, that the course of policy adopted with regard to its sale or distribution will have a great effect on the general interests of the citizens of the republic. The whole landed superficies of our States and Territories, and of the great western region, comprises fourteen hundred and four millions of acres, and the indisputable right of soil yet remains in the United States to one thousand and sixty-five millions of acres of this. The measures regarding the disposal of this immense property should therefore be most carefully considered in their various relations to the national advantage; should be devised under a liberal and expansive view of the progress of population; and, being adopted in wisdom, should be persevered in with unvarying steadiness. Any material deviations from adopted principles would, necessarily and unavoidably, prove unjust and injurious in their operations upon those citizens who had made their arrangements and rested their prospects upon a consistent course of national principles.

From the lateness of the period of the session at which your committee was appointed, and the time necessarily occupied in collecting and arranging the facts deemed essential to the information of the members of the House prior to any attempt at legislation on the subject of the resolution, it is evident that no prudent decision could be made by Congress during the present limited session. The committee have therefore arranged their report, in part, with a view to comprise such facts regarding the public lands as, being diffused among the citizens, would impart a distinct knowledge of the extent and vast importance of the landed property belonging to them, each in an equal degree; and an acquaintance with which, on their part, might elicit the intelligence and opinions of the people at large upon the course of legislation most wise and most acceptable to them, and thus be calculated to influence their representatives in their future legislation.

The committee have confined their statements and views to as narrow a compass as seemed admissible under a due consideration of one of their leading objects—that of giving to such persons as may not have access to official documents the advantage of an acquaintance with the land concerns of the nation—in their prominent features at least.

At the close of the revolutionary war the confederated States found themselves without any special bonds of Union, deeply involved in debt, and their credit destroyed. To bind these by some common ties, to raise their credit, and to enable them to meet their obligations, were considerations of the highest moment. The boundaries of several of the States were undefined, and there were conflicting claims set up to the lands of the west. The confederation asked of such of the States as asserted claims to the unsettled lands lying west of the great range of mountains to make deeds of cession to the sovereignty and soil of these western lands, in order to insure harmony amongst the States; to unite them more certainly by the bonds of property held in common by them all; and, by the gradual sale of these lands, to provide the means of paying off the revolutionary debt. The request was met with a spirit of patriotism; cessions were made by individual States to nearly all the property lying west of the Appalachian mountains and east of the Mississippi river, embracing the richest and best watered valley of the inhabited world.

The sovereignty and right of soil of Louisiana and Florida, an empire in extent, have since been added to the national domain by purchases from France and Spain.

The public lands, as now held by the United States, may, therefore, be classed under the three following heads:

First. Those which were ceded by several of the old States to the confederated government and to the present government of the United States.

Second. Those which were acquired by purchase from France by the treaty of Paris of the 30th of April, 1803.

Third. Those which were purchased of Spain by the treaty of Washington of 22d February, 1819.

That portion of the public lands belonging to the first class, which was ceded to the United States before the adoption of the present Constitution, and which constituted what was then called the "Northwestern Territory," and is the now States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and the Territory of Michigan, and the Northwest or Huron Territory, was claimed entire by the State of Virginia, and in part by the States of New York, Massachusetts, and Connecticut, under their respective charters or grants from the crown of Great Britain. The metes and bounds set forth in these charters or grants were so vague and indefinite as to give rise to conflicting claims very difficult to adjust. It seems, however, that the title of the State of Virginia to all the above-described territory was better founded than that of any of the other above-mentioned States. Be that, however, as it may, the State of New York, on the 1st of March, 1781; of Virginia on the —— day of ——, 1784; of Massachusetts on the 19th of April, 1785; and Connecticut on the 13th of September, 1786, (with a reservation of what is commonly known by the name of the Western or Connecticut Reserve, the jurisdiction to which was afterwards, by deed of the 30th of May, 1800, released to the United States,) ceded all their right, title, and claim, as well of soil as jurisdiction, to the United States, to be, in the language of the grant from Virginia, held and "considered a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become, members of the confederation, or federal alliance of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever." These grants covered about 165 millious of acres. It ought, perhaps, to be added, that the State of South Carolina, on the 9th of August, 1787, made a cession of the territory lying south of the line of North Carolina, and north of a line drawn due west from the source of the river Tugoloo; but, inasmuch as it was afterwards ascertained that the source of the Tugoloo reached the southern boundary of North Carolina, this grant or cession, in point of fact, passed nothing. The liberal intention of the State should, however, be fairly appreciated. After the adoption of the present Constitution, the State of North Carolina, by deed, dated the 25th of February, 1790, ceded to the United States all that portion of her western land which now constitutes the State of Tennessee. This cession transferred the jurisdiction over about 26,500,000 acres; but the right of soil was subject to many grants and limitations, and the United States treasury has not yet been benefited by any sales made thereof.

On the 24th of April, 1802, the State of Georgia ceded to the United States the jurisdiction and soil of all that part of the present States of Mississippi and Alabama which lies north of the 31st degree of north latitude, for which the United States agreed to pay, "out of the first net proceeds of the lands thus ceded, one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the State of Georgia, as a consideration for the expenses incurred by the said State in relation to the said territory;" and also, to "extinguish, for the use of Georgia, as early as the same could be peaceably obtained, on reasonable terms, 'the Indian title' to all the lands within the State of Georgia," as limited by said cession. The delay of the United States to comply with their agreement to extinguish the Indian title to the land of Georgia, whether unavoidable or not, whilst it was extinguishing in other States, has retarded the population of that large State; has kept down her relative political power, and been the cause of the late unpleasant controversy between the Executive of Georgia and the Executive of the United States. As the right of the State of Georgia to this territory was unquestionable, the United States obtained by this grant a clear title, as well of the right of soil as of jurisdiction, to about sixty millions of acres; five of which have been sold for more than twelve millions of dollars, and upwards of nine of which have been already paid into the treasury of the United States. There are yet fifty-odd millions of acres to sell. The third article of cession by Georgia declares that all the lands ceded shall, after satisfying the various claims recited, "be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of the United States, Georgia included, and shall be faithfully disposed of for that purpose, and for no other purpose whatever."

Second. By the treaty of Paris of the 30th April, 1803, France ceded to the United States the soil and jurisdiction of what was then called the colony or province of Louisiana; and it appears that, on the same day, and at the same place, there were two other treaties executed between the same parties; by the one of which, the United States engaged to pay to France the sum of eleven millions two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and by the other, to its own citizens, in discharge of claims against the French government for spoliations, released by the same treaty, the sum of three millions seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. At the time of this cession, the bounds of Louisiana were vague and unascertained; but by the treaty with Great Britain, of London, of the 20th of October, 1818, the northern bounds were fixed to run with the 49th degree of north latitude, from the former line of the United States to the Pacific ocean; and by the treaty with Spain, concluded at Washington on the 22d February, 1819, its western boundary was settled to begin at the mouth of the Sabine, and to run thence on the western bank of that river to the 32d degree of north latitude; thence, by a line due north, to the Red river; then, following the course of the Red river, to the degree of longitude 100° west from London and 23 west from Washington; then, by a line due north, to the Arkansas; thence, by the southern bank of the Arkansas, to its source, in the 42d degree of north latitude; thence, by that parallel of latitude, to the South sea; but if the source of the Arkansas should be found to be north or south of the 42d degree of north latitude, then by a line due north or south, as the case might be, to that parallel of latitude. The land acquired by this purchase amounts to about eight hundred and fifty millions of acres, and consists of the States of Louisiana and Missouri and the Territory of Arkansas, and about seven hundred and fifty millions to the north and west of said States and Territory.

Third. The land acquired from Spain by the treaty of Washington of February 22, 1819, is well known by the names of East and West Florida; for the absolute title, as well of soil as jurisdiction, of which the United States released the claim of its citizens against Spain for spoliations, and agreed to pay them, in discharge of said claims, the sum of five millions of dollars, which has accordingly been done.

The quantity of land acquired by this purchase exceeds forty millions of acres, including the Territory of Florida, and what now constitutes a part of the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana.

For the purpose of more distinctly bringing into comparative view the important relation which the United States lands bear to those of the rest of the Union, the committee have arranged the table No. 1, which shows the respective superficies, in acres, of all the States and Territories. From this it will appear that the whole number of acres within the present limits of the old thirteen States, and including what now constitute the States of Maine and Vermont, and the District of Columbia, is two hundred and thirty-seven millions six hundred and seven thousand six hundred and eighty acres; and that the whole number of acres in the States of Kentucky and Tennessee is fifty-one millions three hundred and ninety-two.

The lands which now constitute the State of Tennessee were ceded to the United States by North Carolina, but the soil has been nearly covered by rights under reservations in the deed of cession, and by grants from the United States. A balance of about three millions of acres may probably remain to the United States after all the rights under these reservations and grants of Congress are satisfied. Within the limits of the other new States and Territories, embracing the lands ceded to the United States, with the right of soil and sovereignty, exclusive of the Territory of Huron and the great western region, there is held by the United States three hundred and eight millions one hundred and ninety-five thousand four hundred and eighty-six acres; and that in the Territory of Huron and the great western region there is held by the United States, as nearly as can be estimated, eight hundred and seven millions of acres. From the same table it will also appear that in the new States and Territories the Indian title has been extinguished to upwards of two hundred and fifty-eight millions of acres.

By the tables No. 2 to 11, inclusive, showing the distribution of the lands in the several States and Territories, it appears that of the quantity to which the Indian title has been extinguished about thirty-one millions of acres have been conceded to satisfy private claims and reservations, or have been given by acts of Congress to the new States for common schools, and as donations, &c. That about twenty-one millions of acres have been sold, on which, as will appear by table No. 12, upwards of thirty-six millions of dollars have been paid into the public treasury, and that a balance remains unpaid on account thereof of upwards of four millions of dollars. Table No. 1 shows that upwards of two hundred and five millions of acres, to which the Indian title has been extinguished, remain unsold. It may be useful here to state that nearly ninety millions of these have been surveyed at the public charge, within the several States and Territories, and are now ready, without incurring further expense, to meet the demands of settlers.

The expenditures made and strictly chargeable on account of lands, since the organization of the government of the United States, have been nearly as follows:

For the purchase of Louisiana	$15,000,000 00
For the purchase of Florida	5,000,000 00
Payment to the State of Georgia	1,250,000 00
Payment on account of Yazoo scrip	4,950,000 00
Payment on account of Indian cessions, to January 1, 1826	3,392,494 00
Paid for surveying 140,000,000 acres of public lands	2,164,368 00
Expenses incidental to the sales of the public lands, salaries, commissions, &c., to June 30, 1828	1,435,197 24

The table No. 13 shows the operations in the Land Office of the United States for each year from the 1st January, 1821, to the 30th June, 1828, a period of seven and a half years. By this it appears, within that period nearly six millions of acres have been sold; that upwards of nine millions of dollars have been paid into the treasury during that time in payment of the purchase of land; that the incidental expenses, salaries, commissions, &c., are less than seven hundred thousand dollars for the whole term; and that the annual income, even under our present population, is very considerable.

In the table No. 1, showing the superficies of the respective States and Territories, the committee have given the population of the United States under the census of 1800 and 1820, showing its distribution in the respective States. The actual relative population to the relative superficies of the States is thus brought into view at two distinct periods. They have also given, from the best information, an estimate of the probable population and its distribution in the year 1830, which they believe will be found substantially correct. They have likewise hazarded a conjectural estimate of the population in the year 1860: a period thirty years hence, it is true, yet regarded by many as not too distant for the arrangements of individuals, with a view to the benefit of those in whom they feel an immediate interest, but certainly not too distant for a paternal government to embrace within its calculations in providing for the general benefit. It is but a conjecture of what will be when the boy who is now rocked in the cradle has reached the period when he is rendered eligible to a seat in the Senate of our country. It is but an estimate of what will be in the lifetime of the present rising generation, and made in the hope that the course of legislation may be adapted to its welfare.

The actual population of the United States in 1790 was three millions nine hundred and twenty-one thousand four hundred and twenty-six; to this add thirty-five per cent., and you have nearly the actual population of 1800, which was five millions three hundred and nineteen thousand seven hundred and sixty-two; add to this thirty-five per cent., and you have nearly the actual population of 1810, which was seven millions two hundred and thirty thousand nine hundred and three. So of 1820, which was nine millions six hundred and thirty-seven thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine; to this add, in like manner, thirty-five per cent., and you have thirteen millions eleven thousand three hundred as the population of 1830, and which is believed to be distributed as in the table No. 1. From the best information the number and distribution must come very near the fact, as will be found by the next census.

By this mode of calculation (of adding thirty-five per cent. to the population of each period of ten years) the number in 1860 will be upwards of thirty-two millions of souls, and there is every reason to believe this estimate will prove correct.

Circumstances favorable to such ratio of increase exist in as high a degree as heretofore. We have extensive regions of country favorable to an extending population; means of supporting life seem equally certain; the protecting power of the nation has increased; our climate has improved; the conveniences and comforts of life have multiplied; and why should not its population continue to advance, to the period named, in its former ratio? Under the conviction that the ratio of increase for the last forty years will not be dimished for the succeeding thirty, and that we will, consequently, have a population within the present limits of the Union of thirty-two millions in 1860, the committee have hazarded an opinion of the probable distribution of this population in the several States and Territories for that year, as will be seen in the table No. 1. The committee cannot enter into a detail of all the considerations which have influenced their opinion as to the distribution according to the table. They have, however, had reference to the relative surface of each State; to its soil and productions; to climate, as affecting health and population; to the proportion of lands adapted to cultivation; to the facilities of approach to market; to the seats of commerce; to the application of labor; to the facilities of acquiring the rights of citizenship, and to various other circumstances.

The population of part of the eastern section of our country has nearly reached its highest point; its surplus is filling up New York, and tends strongly toward the west; the committee, however, allow that the temperate climate, the extensive surface, the fertile soil, the central position, the fertility, yet low price, of lands in Virginia, must, ere long, command a large accession from the surplus population of other States, and raise her in the proportionate scale of population to the square mile.

Next to Virginia, Georgia is the largest State in the Union, and her population to the square mile by far the lowest of all the old States; but, as she will shortly be freed from her Indian population, she will doubtless experience a great proportionate increase of numbers; especially so as a portion of her lands are found fitted for the culture of the sugar cane. The committee believe the increase in the numbers of these States will therefore equal their estimate for 1860. From the eminent advantages, agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial, of New York and Pennsylvania, there can be little doubt but that they will long retain the foremost rank in population.

Florida has a large surface, but her vast swamps and unproductive sand hills preclude a numerous population.

The survey of the lands lying in Louisiana has been too long retarded They ought at once to be brought into market, as their adaptation to the culture of the sugar cane renders this measure an important national object.

In table No. 1 the committee have given the number of square miles in each State and Territory, and the probable proportion to the square mile in each for 1830 and 1860.

If the committee are sustained in the opinions they have formed from the facts before them, as to the increase of population and its distribution, it must, of course, be admitted that the national lands will, under a well-devised system of sales, prove a vast resource to the nation or to the States, and a sure recourse for the increasing population of our country, which seeks, by the possession of a portion of the soil, to maintain personal independence, and, by its culture, to be enabled to rear a family.

The public lands in all the now organized States should be surveyed and put into the market at a reasonable, but unvarying price; and it will be very generally in the power of him who is disposed to win his living by the culture of the soil to command the means of purchasing what may be essential to him. Thus the excess of population will be provided for, and the lands rejected by the first settlers will all be gradually purchased, as the worst will be enhanced in value by the improvements around them, and finally command a price equal to what was paid originally for the best. The nation, by being itself the great proprietor, will keep within itself the power of apportioning, for a small consideration, a freehold to each of its industrious and virtuous sons; and no combinations of men, or of States, can be formed to enhance the price to the actual settler.

The material question submitted to the committee for their opinion, under their instructions, yet remains to be answered; that is, whether it is expedient to provide by law for the distribution of the amount of all sales of the public lands amongst the several States? The committee have concluded that it is expedient, and will briefly state the principal reasons which have led them to this opinion.

For many years the public lands were viewed as the great resource of the nation. Its credit was mainly based on this property, which was pledged for the payment of the public debts; they were, therefore, guarded as a treasure. Claims to any part of them were examined with the strictest scrutiny, and every attempt to obtain donations was repelled by Congress. Within a few years, however, a greater laxity in legislation has prevailed. Claims rejected at the land offices have been readily allowed by Congress. Grants to colleges and other institutions, of small tracts, having been obtained with facility, and other evidences having been manifested of a disposition on the part of Congress to concede the rights of the many to the importunities of the few, large donations were successfully solicited, and during the session of 1827 and 1828 Congress actually gave away, to States and to individuals, not less than two millions three hundred thousand acres of choice lands, comprising a surface equal to that of two of the States, Delaware and Rhode Island, and worth in the market at least three millions of dollars. Encouraged by the success of these applications, several of the new States have now boldly demanded of Congress the surrender of the lands within their limits, although the sovereignty and right of soil were obtained by the treasure, or won from the Indians by the blood of the citizens of the old States. These new States have affected to assert a right to what they, however, come before Congress to have awarded them by concession. Your committee will enter into no argument on the subject. These demands, the committee are disposed to believe, have been rather the acts of certain individuals than the deliberate expression of the people at large. The patriotism of the citizens of the old States, who voluntarily conceded these lands to the Union, might here be placed by the committee in strong contrast with the want of that feeling in the citizens of the new States who could seriously demand from the Union the surrender of all this invaluable property to them alone. But if any States have, in reality, an unhallowed desire to get, it may be useful to them to reflect that the other States have the power to keep, and that it is the duty of the representatives of these to know that if the national property is parted with, it is parted with only for the general advantage.

It appears to your committee that the time has arrived when the community should be awakened to a protection of their rights; when measures should be adopted in the national councils to give the States a direct interest in the income arising from the sales of the public lands. This individual measure would at once check further concessions, and effectually prevent the selfish from availing themselves of the advantage presented by some great crisis in public affairs to obtain propitiatory concessions from rival parties deeply injurious to the general interest. The committee cannot devise a surer guard to the purity of legislation, with respect to the public lands, nor an application of their value more just and equitable, as regards the interests of all the States, than by recommending for the consideration of Congress the policy of directing, by law, that the proceeds of all sales of the public lands, after deducting expenses, should be distributed to the several States, in the ratio of their population, as ascertained at the usual periods of taking the census. This policy would undoubtedly always influence a majority of Congress, because only the members from a State about to receive a cession would venture to make such gift, when the evident consequence would be the diminution of the direct revenue of the States represented by the rest. This measure would likewise interest the States in the adoption of a system of rigid economy, as relates to the expenditures of the land offices, and no private or other claim would be sanctioned but as their justice might be clearly established.

The average of the sum annually received into the treasury on account of public lands for the seven and a half years ending the 30th of June, 1828, after deducting all expenses, has been one million two hundred and three thousand two hundred and fifty-five dollars and eighty-three cents.

That the annual receipts from this source will soon be advancing seems certain from various causes, especially from the much greater annual increase of population, not of ratio, but of actual numbers, and from the facts that some of the old settlements are full; that the lands in the old States are now nearly all taken up, and that the large amount of lands reserved to private claimants in the original grants in the neighborhood of the United States lands are now settled and taken from the market, as are also a considerable part of the donations made by Congress.

It must, then, be evident that, unless the United States create rivals in her own land market by further concessions or donations, (the holders of which would, of course, occupy the market by selling low what had cost them nothing,) there must be a sure and hereafter an annually increasing demand for the public lands, and consequently an increasing amount in cash will be received for national purposes, or for the proposed distribution, and which, in all probability, will average three millions of dollars yearly for the next ten years; an amount which can be most beneficially applied by the States in well regulated systems of education, in constructing roads, bridges, canals, and such other useful works as may be deemed advisable by the respective States.

A division of the public lands among the States has been suggested to the committee. This measure, they believe, would be injurious. There would be an impossibility so to locate the several divisions as to attach to them an equal value. Each State would have a system of sales differing from that of the other States. Struggles would take place in Congress for measures to advance the value of the possessions of some of the locations over that of others. Serious collisions would necessarily occur. Speculation, fraud, and corruption would be attempted in the State legislatures: all which and other serious evils would be avoided, and the greatest possible benefits derived to the States from the sale of these lands by the general government agreeably to the present organized system, and from directing, by law, the distribution of the proceeds of sales among the several States.

It has been said that "a national debt is a national blessing." The maxim may be true so far as regards the individual interests of money-lenders, who naturally prefer the nation as security to every other, but it is false with respect to the general interests. That this national property would be rendered a national blessing and a stronger bond of union to the States cannot be doubted, should the general government agree to the recommendation of your committee, and make the proposed annual or other regular distribution of the net proceeds of sales of the public lands amongst the several States.

In conclusion, the committee will only add that, should Congress not deem it advisable at the present time to adopt their recommendation in relation to the public lands, they will nevertheless cherish the hope that the facts and views which they have here presented will effectually check in the future the giving away this most invaluable national property.

In conformity to the opinion of the committee, they report, for the consideration of the House, the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide by law for the annual distribution amongst the several States of the Union, in proportion to their respective population, the net proceeds of the sales of all public lands.
