Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 1, 1829.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before you a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, exhibiting the periods at which the quarterly accounts of the respective receivers in office have been returned and adjusted, with the balance on hand, agreeably to the last monthly return. Also, a statement of the quantity of land sold, and the amount of purchase money received under the credit and cash system for the year 1828, and for the first six months of 1829. And also the amount paid in cash and stocks within those periods, after deducting the incidental expenses, with some suggestions by the Commissioner as to the policy of the government in relation to the public lands. To which is appended a report of an investigation, made by your direction, to ascertain the character of certain claims to land in Arkansas, founded on Spanish grants.

All which is respectfully submitted for your consideration.

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 21, 1829.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the usual annual report in relation to the affairs of this office.

The paper marked A exhibits the periods to which the quarterly accounts of the respective receivers in office have been returned and adjusted, with the balances on hand, agreeably to the last monthly returns of the receivers of public moneys respectively.

The paper marked B exhibits the quantity of land sold, and the amount of purchase money received under the cash and credit systems, for the year 1828, and the first six months of 1829; and also the amounts paid into the treasury in cash and stock within those periods respectively, after deducting the incidental expenses.

The gross proceeds on account of the public lands for the years 1827, 1828, and the first six months of 1829, amount to $4,075,282, and the sums paid into the treasury and accounted for within the same period is $4,079,043, giving an average annual gross receipt of more than $1,600,000; but as a portion of these receipts was for lands heretofore sold under the credit system, this amount cannot be assumed as the permanent annual revenue to be derived from the sale of the public lands.

There is reason, however, to believe that there will be an annual demand for about one million of acres of the public lands, which, at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, will give an annual revenue from this source of $1,250,000, which will probably be increased with the progress of population and improvement. That these causes create a demand for the public lands equal, if not superior, to that arising from their fertility, when taken in connexion with their locality, is evinced by the following facts: That the cash sales of land in the State of Ohio for the year 1828, where the lands have generally been in market for thirty years, equal those in any other State, with the exception of Indiana.

That the cash sales in the Steubenville land district, where the lands have been in the market for nearly forty years, and within which there is not more than two or three hundred thousand acres of public lands left for sale, and which of course are of the most inferior quality, amounted in 1828 to $35,000; whereas the sales in the Piqua district, in the same State, where the lands have only been in the market for six or eight years, and a very small portion of them sold, and within which there are extensive bodies of land of excellent quality, the sales for the same period amounted to only $2,000; and in the Territory of Arkansas, where there are immense bodies of land of very superior quality, subject to entry at the minimum price, the sales within the year 1828 amounted to only $2,000.

The act of Congress requiring that the public lands should be sold only for cash, and the immense quantity of those lands that has been brought into market in the States and Territories extending from the northern lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, have had the effect not only of checking, but of almost entirely putting an end to the speculations in the purchase of the public lands, and it is believed that the purchases now made from the public are almost exclusively for the purpose of occupation and improvement—a result the most desirable from any system that may be devised for the disposition of the public domain.

On the 4th of July last the several laws relative to the lands that had been sold on a credit expired, and all lands purchased on credit, which had not been paid for or relinquished, reverted to the United States, and the money heretofore paid on them was forfeited. The amount of money thus paid and forfeited is estimated at $700,000. These forfeitures are confined exclusively to the amounts paid on lands further credited under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1821, and those supplementary thereto. From 1824 until July last the parties incurring these forfeitures had the privilege of settling their accounts by relinquishing a portion of the lands purchased, or by paying for the same at a discount of thirty-seven and a half per cent. without interest. Under these circumstances, it is contemplated to offer for sale the relinquished lands and those reverted as soon after April next as circumstances may make it expedient, unless Congress shall otherwise by law direct.

When the public lands were sold on a credit, which, in fact, extended to five years after the payment of one-fourth of the purchase money, it became indispensably necessary to protect the United States against improper combinations, by which the purchaser might permit the land to be sold for taxes, that an arrangement should be made with the people of the Territories, when those Territories were about to assume the form of States, by which the lands sold by the United States should be exempted from taxes for a period equal to that to which the credit given on them was extended; and, accordingly, a compact was entered into with the people of the new States, within which the public lands lie, by which the lands sold by the United States should be exempt from taxes for five years. The credit system being now entirely abolished, one of the reasons for this stipulation has ceased to exist, and, as those States complain of such exemption of the lands from taxes as a grievance, it is respectfully suggested whether it would not be advisable to exonerate them from this contract. Although the exemption of the lands sold by the United States from taxes for a given period has, no doubt, a tendency to promote emigration generally to the States within which the public lands lie, yet it is perhaps better that each of those States should have the option of deciding how far such exemption might comport with their own views of their own interests.

With the termination of the credit system, all legal objections to the entire consolidation of the land offices within the respective States has ceased, and on that subject I take leave to refer to the following extract from a report made from this office, and submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury in January, 1825: "After the lands in any State have been all surveyed and offered at public sale, and when the debt due for lands heretofore purchased in such State shall have been liquidated, a further and more extensive reduction of the land districts may be made by limiting them in such State to a single district, and locating the land office at the seat of government of the State.

"In any arrangement that may be made for the reduction of the number of land districts, the fact that a large debt is due on account of lands, the payments for which are to be made at the option of the debtors, either at the treasury of the United States or at the office where the lands were purchased, is entitled to much attention in respect both to the rights and accommodation of the purchasers; and when it is also taken into consideration that the disbursements of the public money are very limited in nearly all that section of country where the public lands lie, and that, from the force of circumstances, these disbursements will not probably be materially increased, it is submitted how far other considerations than those arising from the reduction of the expenses of collecting this branch of the revenue might make it inexpedient to reduce the land districts to the number proposed in this report, until those circumstances shall have occurred which would justify the reduction of them to a single district in each State."

A consolidation of the land offices would materially reduce the expenses incident to the collection of this branch of the revenue as well as those incident to this office; and should Congress, under all the circumstances belonging to the question, deem such an arrangement expedient, it might be immediately carried into effect in the State of Ohio, where the lands in each land district have all been offered at public sale, and gradually be extended to the other States, as the fact that all the lands in each of the land districts had been offered at public sale might occur.

Suspicions having been excited that extensive frauds had been practiced in the Territory of Arkansas, under the provisions of the acts of May 26, 1824, and May 22, 1826, authorizing the claimants to lands, whose titles were derived from the Spanish government, to institute proceedings in the court for the said Territory to try the validity of such claims, I was authorized by the President to instruct Colonel Isaac T. Preston, the register of the land office at New Orleans, who possessed, in an eminent degree, the qualifications necessary for making such an investigation, to proceed to Little Rock for the purpose of examining the Spanish documents that had been filed, and on which the court had confirmed a number of claims, and, by comparing them with documents that were known to be genuine, to ascertain the extent of the frauds that had been practiced. The communication from him, dated October 10, 1829, herewith transmitted, and marked C, exhibits the result of his investigation, from which it appears that one hundred and seventeen claims, covering sixty thousand acres of land, were confirmed by the court of Arkansas between the 19th and 24th of December, 1827; that seven claims, covering twenty thousand acres of land, were yet pending; and that one hundred and eighty-eight claims had been withdrawn or struck from the docket because security for the costs had not been given, and that there exists no doubt but that the whole of those claims are founded on forged evidences of title. And it further appears that, under an order of court made on October 9, 1828, the original papers, on which these claims were founded, have been withdrawn from the files of the court, with the exception of those filed in fifty-eight of the cases.

Application has been made to this office to issue patents on entries made at the land offices at Little Rock and Batesville for eighty-four of the claims confirmed by the court. For the first six cases presented for entries made at Batesville patents were issued, but as the number of applications for patents increased, as the patents were all required to be issued to assignees, and as, on a comparison of the assignments with each other, I was satisfied that they had been manufactured by a few individuals, my previous suspicions, as to the frauds committed on the court, were so far confirmed as to justify me in withholding the patents in all the other cases.

Two of the cases in which patents have issued were no doubt founded on fraudulent evidences of title.

Measures have been taken to procure, if possible, a revision by the court of Arkansas of all those cases which have been confirmed by the court, and the registers of the land offices at Batesville and Little Rock have been instructed not to permit any entry to be made on their books by virtue of such confirmations, and to give public notice that no patents will be issued on entries heretofore made by virtue of such confirmations until Congress shall have acted upon the subject.

The powers of the court of Arkansas in relation to these cases will, by the provisions of the law, cease in May next. Some immediate legislative provision is therefore indispensably necessary, by which the powers of the court may be continued for the special purpose of acting on the cases now pending, and on the bills that may be filed to obtain a revision of the cases heretofore decided by the court. It may, perhaps, be deemed more expedient to repeal forthwith the acts of 1824 and 1826, so far as they respect the Territory of Arkansas, and at the same time to re-enact such provisions as may be necessary to enable the court to receive and act upon the bills that may be filed for a revision of the cases heretofore confirmed, and providing for an appeal on such bills of revision from the court of Arkansas to the Supreme Court of the United States. Some further legislative provisions will be also necessary in relation to the papers that have been withdrawn from the files of the court, and in relation to the admission of entries and granting of patents, so as to protect the United States from imposition by forged assignments from fictitious confirmees, should the court ultimately refuse to reverse the judgments heretofore rendered.

In relation to the fraudulent claims in Louisiana, alluded to in the communication of Mr. Preston, it is apprehended that they exist in a greater extent than is stated by him; but, acting upon the principle that forgery can form no foundation for a good title, the surveyor of Louisiana has been instructed not to survey, or to receive for record any survey, including lands claimed by virtue of written evidence of title emanating from the Spanish government, and confirmed by Congress, when there was good reason to believe that such written evidence of title had been forged, and to proceed to survey the lands so claimed as public lands. So soon, therefore, as any portion of these lands shall have been sold by the United States, the parties claiming under a title purporting to have emanated from the Spanish government, and confirmed by Congress, will have an opportunity of obtaining a judicial decision as to the validity of their claim, and also as to its proper location. In almost every one of these cases the original papers on which the claim was founded have been withdrawn from the land office in which they were filed; the expediency, therefore, of some legislative provision is suggested, by which the original papers shall be required to be produced in court in all cases of controversy relative to title, arising between parties claiming by purchase from the United States, and those claiming by virtue of an act of Congress confirming a claim purporting to have been founded on written evidence of title derived from the Spanish government, and which evidence of title has been withdrawn from the register's office.

All which is respectfully submitted.

GEO. GRAHAM.

Hon. SAMUEL D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas Territory, October 10, 1829.

SIR: It was impossible to induce such a person from New Orleans to attend at Little Rock as would have rendered the United States any service. I determined, therefore, though at a considerable sacrifice, to come myself, and arrived here last Monday, the day indicated in Mr. Roane's letter as that on which the court of this Territory would sit to try land claims; but the court adjourned until Monday next, without doing any business. I determined to stay until that day, although my engagements in Louisiana render it impossible I should stay longer.

I regret to inform you that the impositions practiced on the United States have been much more extensive than you supposed when you wrote to me. The adjudications in favor of what are called Bowie claims in the list, which you enclosed to me, amount to sixty-three ; but I find that decrees in favor of one hundred and seventeen of those claims were rendered from the 19th to the 24th of December, 1827. Enclosed you have a list of the names assumed and the quantities confirmed. The claims thus confirmed, amounting to upwards of 60,000 acres, are floating through the Territory, to be located on the best unappropriated lands in any quantities above eighty acres ; it having been proved and decreed in every case that the land conceded by the Spanish governor had been appropriated by the United States.

An order of court was made on the 9th of October, 1828, authorizing the claimants to withdraw their original papers on filing copies ; but fifty-eight of the originals are still on file, which I have seen. I have stated to Mr. Roane that, if he can by any means obtain a revision of the claims, and can send the original papers, which I have seen, and the others which have been withdrawn, (but which there is no doubt were precisely similar,) to New Orleans, with a commission to take testimony, I can prove them, by a great many witnesses of the highest character and standing, to be forgeries.

But you will see by the act of Congress that it makes no provision for further proceedings. The time limited for appealing has elapsed in all the cases. Whether the principles of practice in this Territory would authorize a revision in this court I am ignorant. The attorney of the United States seems to think it possible, but speaks hopelessly of the undertaking, on account of the number of the parties interested, some of them innocent purchasers, and the limited time during which the powers of the court will exist under the law. I have expressed to him the wish of the government that the revision should be attempted if there is a probability of success. This is the extent of my powers.

On the supposition that the only existing remedy is the exercise of the powers of government at Washington, I will now give you some information that may be useful, and perhaps more when I return to New Orleans.

The Bowie claims filed amounted to 117 that have been confirmed ; seven still on the docket, calling for upwards of 20,000 acres ; and 188 claims, which, on the 24th of October, 1828, were struck from the docket because the parties neglected to give security for costs. The whole of these claims were filed in November, 1827, and the 117 were confirmed within a month afterwards. It is unfortunate that but two of the judges of the Territory (Judges Trimble and Johnson) were present on the trial of the cases, their importance requiring the wisdom and care of a full court. The other judge was unavoidably absent. The attorney of the United States, as appears by a bill of exceptions, expressed his ignorance of the character of the claims, that he thought evidence might be obtained to resist them, and asked, unsuccessfully, time for investigation and to procure testimony. The depositions of three men, John Herberard, David Devore, and Lemuel Masters, were taken and filed in each of the 124 cases confirmed and pending. The depositions in every other case were but copies, substantially, and in general literally, of that filed in the first, except the name of the claimant. Enclosed you have copies of their depositions in one case, there being no other testimony in any of the cases. That every one of the confirmed claims should have happened to fall on lands in this Territory appropriated by the United States, and that these witnesses from Louisiana should have known it, ought to have excited surprise ; and the absurdity of the supposition that they should have personally known so many individuals who petitioned for lands in Upper Louisiana from 1785 to 1798, and who were all living petitioners by attorney before their court in 1827, should have struck the judges; and the depositions of these witnesses having been impeached by nature, should have been discredited by the court.

The claims are founded on pretended requêtes and orders of survey purporting to be signed by Governors Miro and Gayoso. I have stated to you that those governors kept journals of all their orders of survey, which are duly certified, and in my possession ; therefore, Heberard's belief that they were burnt or deported by the Spaniards is unfounded.

But the requêtes and orders of survey themselves exhibit abundant internal evidence of their falsity. The signature of Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, who always wrote his name in full, and in a fine hand, is but miserably imitated. I brought with me many of his genuine signatures to make the comparison.

Governor Miro generally wrote his name Estevan Miro in full, though sometimes he signed "Miro" alone. It is the last signature which has been counterfeited in every instance, and the counterfeiter, by long habit, (for it commenced just after the war, when Mr. Harper was first appointed, with the claims of Gabo Felice, Labvada and others,) has learnt to imitate those four letters very well. But Miro wrote a free, careless, quick hand; the counterfeiter has invariably written slowly, with great care, and generally pointed.

A comparison of the requêtes plainly proves that there could not have been employed more than four, and I think but two hands in draughting and signing them, although they purport to be the petitions of one hundred and twenty-four persons, written and signed by themselves at different times during fifteen years. They all purport to write good hands and sign their names well, although proved by Heberard, who swears he knew them to have been to a great extent hunters and trappers in Upper Louisiana, while it is notorious that, before the change of government, but few people at the posts of Arkansas and Ouachita, except the public officers, could write their names. In the writing of the requêtes scarcely any effort is made to imitate the Spanish character, although purporting to have been written by so many Spaniards ; the character of the writing is evidently American.

There is one class of these requêtes which, from the writing and other circumstances, I judge to have been executed by the same person, in which three of the most common words in business relative to lands are spelled erroneously—tiera for tierra, omitting an r; ordiniaria for ordinaria, adding a letter, and in fact a syllable; and profondidad for profundidad. The class in which this error appears runs through the whole period from 1785 to 1798. If they were genuine, then it would present this remarkable fact, that a great many different persons, residing at different places, and writing their petitions at different times, during fifteen years, should have committed the same error in spelling the same three words, which they happen to use in their petitions : for bear in mind that these petitions all purport to have been written by the petitioners themselves, and are signed in the same handwriting in which they are written.

I took a petition or requête, purporting to have been addressed to Miro in 1788, and laid it by the side of one purporting to have been written and signed by another individual, addressed to Gayoso, in 1798, and they were as evidently in the same handwriting, signatures and all, as two signatures of the same cashier. The same good language was used, and the same bad words in the same places, and the same words in the same places were spelled erroneously in the same particulars. I repeated this comparison with the same result in several instances.

You will observe that, of the claims presented to you for patents, a great many are for 560 arpents, and of the confirmed claims not reported to you many are for the same quantity. The petitioner in these cases prayed for 14 arpents front, by the ordinary depth, which, multiplied, produces the quantity of 560 arpents. The Spanish word for fourteen is catorce; the spelling in the requêtes for this quantity is invariably cartose con profondidad ordinaria. But what is, if possible, more conclusive of the forgery, the Spanish governors in their orders of survey invariably adopt the same bad spelling contained in the requête, cartose profondidad ordinaria. The spelling of numbers is generally bad in the governor's orders of survey, the counterfeiters having, probably, a genuine order to copy from, but not calling for the quantities he wished; thus, he writes dose for doce, trese for trece, dies for diez, and in almost all of them there are other inaccuracies; thus, marso is written for marzo, estableser for establecer, ciendo for siendo, esta-parta very often for esta parte, and los limetes almost always. Uneducated as the Spaniards generally were, I have never seen a genuine order of a Spanish governor which contained an erroneous word or letter. In one series of these orders of survey, (I call a series those written in the same hand,) the name of Laveau Trudeau, the surveyor general, is invariably spelled Lavieau Trudieau, and Orleans, Orlians, errors that no clerk in the office of a Spanish governor ever committed, and which at least would have been corrected before signing.

I laid orders of survey, purporting to have been given by Miro in 1788, by the side of orders purporting to have been given by Gayoso in 1798. They were, word for word and letter for letter, (orthographical errors not excepted,) alike, and the comparison left no doubt that they had been written by the same hand, with the same pen, and with the same ink. If the same clerk had served both Miro and Gayoso at those different periods, (which, however, is not the fact,) it is impossible that his hand should not have changed more in ten years. Moreover, these orders of survey are not in the handwriting of any clerk of either Miro or Gayoso whose writing I have ever seen, and I think I have seen the handwriting of all who had any connexion with the land department. Every one of these orders of survey, through a series of fifteen years, were directed to Trudeau, although he never was in this Territory, nor directed the surveys here; the few orders of survey that were really given for lands within the Territory of Arkansas were invariably given to the commandants of the posts.

These orders of survey are for lands above this place, also on White river, on the Cache Black river, St. Francis, &c. It is almost as notorious that the Spanish governors never made concessions in those countries as that they never granted lands in the District of Columbia. Those countries were unknown, except to the natives and demi-savages, in the time of Miro. I have conversed with Colonel Sylvanus Phillips, who settled at the mouth of the St. Francis about the year 1797. He ascended the Arkansas about that time; there were no settlements above this place. There were two Frenchmen, named Tessier and Duplasse, living at the mouth of Cache river, and no other settlements in that direction. He did not at that period hear any person inquiring for lands in the interior, and never heard of any of the persons mentioned in the enclosed list. In fact, the commandants, by direction of the governor, restrained the settlements to the vicinity of the posts for the security and convenience of the whole. Colonel Phillips was himself ordered in to the post of Arkansas from the mouth of the St. Francis as late as the year 1799. Having been a good deal engaged in land speculations himself, he would certainly have known it if any attempts had been made to appropriate the lands up these rivers. Major François Vaugine was the son-in-law of the Commandant Valiere, and the Commandant Chalmitte married his sister. He must possess ample information to refute all these claims. He lives near Mr. Roane, and I have urged the latter to acquire from him, and to communicate to you or the Attorney General all the information he can.

I have copied, and enclosed herewith, a Spanish order of survey, which is substantially, and almost literally, the form of nine out of ten of all the orders of survey issued by Miro, Gayoso, or Carondelet. Under it is a literal copy of one of the orders in the Bowie claims, from which all the others filed scarcely vary, as far as I have examined them, and the examination has been indiscriminate; by which you observe that in these pretended orders the conditions that the land is vacant, that the grantee shall not injure the adjacent proprietors, that he shall make the road in one year, and that the concessions shall be null if the land is not settled in three years, all prescribed by the general regulations of the province, are invariably omitted. And this omission was designed, because, if the conditions had been expressed on the face of the orders, adjudications could not have been made in their favor without proof of compliance with the conditions. The attempt to antiquate and disfigure the paper are awkward and manifest. I saw some sheets in which the first or interior page which contained the writing was very old, while the fourth or exterior page, which was exposed, was quite fresh; others had manifestly been dipped in Red river or Arkansas; in two that I saw the coloring matter had scaled off in spots, and left the writing and paper as fresh as when new; in some the folds were rubbed through, while the outside leaf, within an inch of the rent, was as stiff and strong as ever. The tout ensemble, to an eye accustomed to see ancient Spanish documents, would produce the instant and undoubted conviction of their falsity.

Another evidence of the falsity of these claims is, that an individual came here some time ago with one hundred similar claims, which were seen by several citizens, and was deterred from filing them by the suspicions that had been excited as to those already filed.

The fact that 188 of those claims filed have been abandoned proves the falsity of the whole. It is true Bowie has an agent here now, and I heard the clerk of the court read a letter from him, requesting that these claims might be reinstated, and offering security for the costs. But this cannot be done now, the time for filing petitions under the law having elapsed. The limited time surely would not have been permitted to pass without an effort on behalf of the claimants, if there had been any reality in their claims. Why the law creating this tribunal was extended by the act of the 24th of May, 1828, I cannot conceive; except the Bowie claims, there were but two adjudications at the December term in 1827, and not an adjudication has been made, or a petition filed since. There were not fifty other claims presented to the court since its organization, and most of them, as far as I can learn, without any just foundation. So that the law establishing the tribunal was a bad one, as the result has awfully proved; and so are all laws establishing tribunals before which individuals may cite their government. The government of a country should act for itself, and as it is presumed to be just, and even generous to individuals, otherwise it should be dissolved. The judges of such tribunals too often adopt the baneful principle that, as judges, they may see, through the lights of law and evidence, that to be true, which as individuals, they know to be false; and to conceive that these lamps were given to lead them into darkness instead of illumination.

I shall stop here until Monday, to obtain, if possible, a continuation of the Bowie cases pending in court, and commissions in each of them to examine witnesses in New Orleans. There are seven of those cases still pending, embracing upwards of twenty thousand acres of land. The attorney of the United States has no doubt the court will reject them, although the deposition of the same three witnesses is on file in each of the cases, as strong and unimpeached, as in any of those that have been confirmed. I have, however, urged him not to go to trial, if possible, but to require the original concessions to be filed, to obtain orders for commissions to New Orleans, accompanied by the original, and have them thoroughly proved counterfeits; for, even if they are rejected, the claimants will certainly appeal, and there is no doubt with success, if a transcript of the record goes up in its present state. Men of the deepest thought, as well as the Bowies, are embarked in this business.

I fear they are meditating something to increase and sanction their claims just as the law expires. Depend upon it, an ounce of prevention will be worth a world of cure. In my opinion, the appeal that has already been taken in the case of Francis Degue against the United States, and is now pending before the Supreme Court, should not be tried on its merits; it must necessarily be decided against the United States, not for 1,600 arpents, the quantity which the judges have thought expressed in the supposed order of survey, (as you will see by their opinion,) but for 3,200 arpents, the real quantity expressed. It would necessarily be decided against the United States, because nothing but a transcript of the papers has been sent to the Supreme Court. The copy of the order of survey will appear fair, and nothing in the transcript casts a shade of suspicion upon it. On the contrary, three witnesses swear to the genuineness of the governor's signature; and their character and their testimony is entirely unimpeached. The decree would necessarily be affirmed, and thus the sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States would be given to all these spurious claims. It is the very thing in which the claimants desire and intend to overreach us, and will succeed in this, or some other shape, if our vigilance is not ever on the alert.

It is for our superiors at Washington to devise the remedy for the evil already done. I question much if it is not a subject of sufficient importance to occupy the attention of Congress. The government have been defrauded out of 60,000 acres of land in this Territory. The parties have the right to select the lands, by the decrees of the court, and are doing so in quantities as small as eighty acres, enabling them to pick the Territory. The government were, in like manner, at the land office in New Orleans, defrauded out of 60,000 acres of as good lands as are in Louisiana. Whether similar practices were attempted at the other land offices in Louisiana and the States of Mississippi and Alabama, I know not; but when I reflect on the insatiable character of successful fraud, I cannot doubt but that similar attempts will be made in Florida, and at every other place which may afford the least prospect of success.

A resolution of Congress might be adopted, directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office not to issue patents in suspected cases, until the original requêtes and orders of survey were deposited in your office, and ascertained to be genuine; and that the Land Committee of Congress should inquire into the frauds practiced in relation to the public lands, with power to send for persons and papers. The clerk of this court should be sent for, with the minutes of the court, and all documents of every description on file in the list of claims I have sent you. The journals of the orders of survey in my office, kept by Governors Miro and Gayoso, should be sent for; and also the Hon. Charles Tessier, of Baton Rouge, and Jean Mercier, of New Orleans, the land clerks of Governor Gayoso, and such other persons and papers as might afford useful information.

The expense would be great; but if it is not incurred, or some other means adopted of successfully resisting these frauds, the lamentable fact will be established that this government, with all its resources and powers, can be successfully plundered by the most unparalleled forgery, perjury, and subornation; and that great actors in the villany may roll in wealth, whilst an honest man and woman may labor their lifetime in these woods to acquire a quarter section of land for their children, and perhaps finally fail because they could not accumulate $200 in addition to the support of their families. And this fact will be practiced upon by the vicious, or rather is now practiced upon in shapes beyond the ken of our imagination, to the incalculable corruption of the morals of the country. As to the fact that many of these claims have fallen into the hands of innocent purchasers, it is worthy of serious consideration, for the greatest efforts have been made to distribute them; but I have no doubt, where one is in the hands of an individual entirely deceived, three are in the possession of persons who had sufficient reason to be on their guard, and prudence plainly dictated to all to purchase of the United States. Forgery creates no rights (the most ignorant man knows) in contests between individuals, but taints all subsequent transfers. Why, then, should it be taken for granted that it can create rights where the government is concerned? If a single patent should be delivered, it will corrupt a community, and embark them on the side of the actors in these crimes against the public officers. If it is declared at once that no patents will be issued on account of the forgery, those who suffer will turn their anger against the true cause of their injury. But what is to be done should be done at once. Every day's delay increases the evil, and renders it more difficult to redress. It should be at once determined to prohibit investigation, and quiet the fears of those who are innocent purchasers, or to pursue it with energy to success.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, &c.,

ISAAC T. PRESTON.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Colonel I. T. Preston to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated October, 19, 1829.

"THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, October 19, 1829.

"SIR: I wrote you at length from Little Rock, giving you all the information I could obtain relative to the spurious land claims which had been confirmed at that place, and will thank you to acknowledge the receipt of my letter.

"The court of the Territory of Arkansas sat on Monday, the 12th instant. Finding fifty-eight orders of survey on file in the clerk's office, out of the 117 that had been confirmed, I determined, after the best reflection I could give the subject, that it was for the interest of the United States, and my duty, to make affidavit that they were counterfeited, and the foundation of an order of court that they should be detained in the custody of the court; for there was on record an order of court authorizing the parties interested to withdraw them, and fifty-nine had already been withdrawn. I therefore made and deposited in court an affidavit, the substance of which is enclosed, and the court made an order that those original documents should remain on file until the further order of the court.

"The attorney of the United States also obtained orders of the court that the original papers should be filed in the cases pending, and that commissions should be sent to New Orleans, accompanied by them, to obtain testimony.

"ISAAC T. PRESTON."

The affidavit referred to in the aforegoing letter is as follows, to wit:

TERRITORY OF ARKANSAS, Pulaski county:

Isaac T. Preston, of the city of New Orleans, being duly sworn, doth depose and say that he has been employed by the government to investigate certain claims to lands confirmed under the act of Congress of the 26th of May, 1824, and the 22d of May, 1826. In that capacity deponent has examined the records of the superior court of Arkansas, in which decrees have been rendered in favor of the claimants; by which search he has been able to find and see the supposed original requêtes and orders of survey, which are the foundations of the claims in the following cases:

George Leonard,	Thomas Waller,	Sastheu Clontier,
Cyprien Metoyer,	Michel Fontenaut,	José Duralde,
Zeno Grillette,	Manuel Lastrop,	Morice Moro,
James Huard,	George Jinks,	Thasemond Laudry,

Ceprien Dupre,	Valdre Martin,	John Innis,
Marcellin Fontenaut,	Jeno Bordalou,	Marcellin Laysard,
Juan Toledano,	John Morian,	James Jones.

Deponent is well acquainted with the genuine signatures of Governors Miro and Gayoso, having a great many genuine records signed by them in his office as register of the land office at New Orleans, and, moreover, with the form, writing, and spelling of orders of survey issued by them. Deponent further says that he has in his charge, at Montgomery's Landing, a regular journal, kept by Governor Miro, of the orders of survey issued by him, certified by his secretary, D. Lopez de Armesto; and also a regular journal, kept by Governor Gayoso, of the orders of survey issued by him, certified by himself. The supposed orders of survey in the above cases are not noted in either of those journals, as deponent believes, after diligent search for concessions in Arkansas. Deponent further annexes to this affidavit three genuine orders of survey, signed by Governor Gayoso, and states, for the information of the court, that the orders of survey now on file in this court, in the case of John Kepler and heirs vs. The United States, and Miguel Gumbecot vs. The United States, are genuine, and signed by Governor Miro. Deponent further states that the internal evidence of the falsity of said orders he will exhibit to the court, in open court if desired. He prays the attorney of the United States may put his application in due form, that the originals on file may be kept in the custody of the court, and transmitted to New Orleans, with commissions, to take the testimony of Jean Mercier and the Hon. Charles Tessier, the clerks of Governor Gayoso, attached to the land office, and of other persons in New Orleans of the highest character, and whom deponent can produce, acquainted with the signatures of Governors Miro and Gayoso, and also with the laws and customs of the Spanish government of Louisiana, and forms and manner of concessions.

21st Congress.] No. 749. [1st Session.

APPLICATIONS OF ALABAMA FOR RELIEF OF PURCHASERS, POSTPONEMENT AND CHANGE OF SALES, AND FOR GRANTING PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS TO OCCUPANTS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 21, 1829.

JOINT MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States, asking relief for the purchasers of public lands, and for other purposes.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Alabama respectfully represents unto your honorable body that in the years 1818 and 1819, for the purpose of contributing to the revenue of the general government, large quantities of the public lands in the State of Alabama were offered for sale, and sold to numerous purchasers, resident citizens thereof, in many instances at the most extravagant and exorbitant prices, the said lands having then commanded prices which are justly and correctly estimated at four times their fair and intrinsic value, inasmuch as in their present improved condition they would scarcely bring the fourth part of the amount at which they were originally sold; that the said citizens who thus purchased at the said sales became involved in heavy pecuniary responsibilities to the government, which they solaced themselves with the hope that industry and economy would remove. This expectation has proved delusive. A sum of money far beyond their means of repayment has been accumulated upon them, until they are constrained to contemplate their impending and irretrievable ruin, unless the kind and liberal hand of a protecting and munificent government should be extended to them.

Impressed with the truth of the foregoing statement, your memorialists deem it unnecessary to enter into a minute detail of the series of causes and events which have produced this most unhappy result: many of them will be found portrayed in striking and impressive colors in the memorials heretofore presented to your honorable body, to which, with becoming deference, they again refer you. But they feel they would be doing the greatest injustice to the citizens of Alabama if they were wholly to omit the exposition of some of the most prominent circumstances which preceded their unfortunate purchases of land, at the then most exorbitant prices. It is a matter which none can controvert that a few years previous to the sales of public lands above adverted to our country had been involved in an extensive war, which drained the treasury of the United States of a large portion of its available funds, which, thus withdrawn and forced into a promiscuous circulation, afforded more money to our citizens than their necessities required; that cotton, the great staple of this State, commanded between twenty and thirty cents per pound; that an unhappy banking mania then pervaded the greater part of the Union; that numerous banks were then established, which emitted paper that proved, in the sequel, to be the mere representation of money, to a very large amount, and which then formed in a great measure the circulating medium of the country; that several millions of Mississippi stock were, at the same time, offered for sale, and purchased at heavy discounts, which, in the hands of the holders, could only be employed or invested in the purchase of public lands in Alabama; and that the value of lands in the cotton-growing part of the country was, by the most prudent, estimated by the price of cotton—to which may the rage for land speculation, and, indeed, speculation of every description, which pervaded this and every other country, be attributed; the anticipated products of which promised to gratify the avarice of the most covetous and miserly. The causes combined subjected many of our best and most prudent citizens, who were desirous of securing to themselves settlements, (which they then hoped would be permanent,) to all the disadvantages incident to unequal competition in the purchase of lands. To secure their lands, they promised more than they afterwards were found to be able to perform—a part thereof in cash, and the balance on short credits. Before the second instalment became due the cotton market sustained a depression of upwards of twenty cents per pound, which awakened them to the sober realities of their situations, and convinced them that their pleasing anticipations of future advancement and prosperity were not only fallacious, but that, without adequate relief from the general government, the sun of their prosperity was forever set. From the difficulties and perplexities of their unhappy situation they were, however, relieved by the liberal interposition of Congress, which, in applying the corrective, permitted the purchasers of public lands to retain such portion of the lands purchased by them respectively as the amount of the payments they had severally made would pay for at the stipulated price, to relinquish the remainder to the government, or to retain it, subject to a liberal and generous deduction of thirty-seven and a half per cent. of the principal they had contracted to pay. This liberal measure was calculated to produce, and did elicit, the warm gratitude of the citizens of our State: they felt that the policy of the government strictly accorded with the true interests of the nation; that in the policy it had pursued towards them it tacitly recognized the orthodoxy of the doctrine that the true interest of the nation is best consulted in parcelling out its lands to its citizens, and thereby multiplying the number of its freeholders. That it better comports with the true interests of the nation to sell its lands (the most valuable of all property) to its citizens for a fair price, or even below it, in preference to disposing of it beyond its value; that thereby you enable the middling classes of the community, who are the bone and sinew, the main pillars of this and every other country in times of danger and emergency, to become the permanent lords of the soil they inhabit, and to connect and identify their interests with those of the country in which their all is at stake; that the prosperity of the citizen is the foundation of the wealth and prosperity of the nation, and that it illy comports with a just and enlightened policy, which so strongly characterizes every measure of the government in relation to the sale, disposal, or allotment of public lands, to hold its debtors, rendered such by unfortunate purchases of lands, to ruinous contracts, entered into, it is true, in good faith, merely because they have placed themselves within its power.

Your memorialists further represent unto your honorable body that the laws passed for the relief of the citizens of Alabama will soon expire by their own limitation; that although they have partially extended relief, yet they have failed to effect much of the good designed by them, so powerful has been the combination of speculators upon the public lands, under the auction system; so extensive and artful in its windings and various ramifications, that the first purchasers were deterred, by the dangers of their situation, from availing themselves of the benefit of relinquishment secured to them by the act of Congress as related either to their improved or timbered lands, as far as the same were necessary to them; because, when the same were thrown into market under the auction system, the combination arrangement, art, and cupidity of the speculators, would begin to operate; their lands would be pushed greatly above the government minimum, unless by a heavy bonus to the speculators, extorted from their actual wants, the occupant secured from them a tacit permission to purchase his home.

Your memorialists further respectfully represent that the history and experience of the past furnish the melancholy truth that, although the citizens of Alabama have been greatly impoverished by the excessive high prices they have been constrained to pay for public lands, yet they believe that, in Alabama, the United States, upon an average, for the last eight years, have not received the one half part of the amount paid by the settlers for their lands; that the balance has been filched from them, and went into the pockets of the artful and designing speculators who attended the sales, not to purchase lands with the view of retaining them, but to speculate on the wants or too confiding credulity of the honest settler.

Your memorialists believe that a corrective remedy to the existing evils they have but faintly delineated may be found in the wisdom and power of Congress. They believe that the proper antidote would be applied if Congress were to pass the bill graduating the price of public lands, as proposed by Mr. Benton, of Missouri, and to secure by law a pre-emptive right to all actual settlers of public land, subject to the following modifications and restrictions, to wit: to permit one class of the purchasers of the public lands, who were actual settlers, and had relinquished a part of their necessary purchases, to enter the relinquished part at the minimum price established by the government, provided the part so retained and entered should not exceed six hundred and forty acres. To permit a second class, who were actual settlers at the time of relinquishing, to enter, at the minimum price, as many acres of unappropriated land, unoccupied by third persons, as he, she, or they had paid for, at a price above ten dollars per acre; and to admit an entry, in like manner, of the number of acres as he, she, or they, had paid for at a price above five dollars per acre.

Your memorialists believe that the general government, in extending the terms of relinquishing and securing preferences to lands, in the manner above specified, will sustain no serious pecuniary loss; and should it, in its wisdom, allow its debtors to relinquish, and to receive stock, in lieu of the amount they have paid for lands, to be re-invested in the purchase of the same lands, and other lands, (if there should be a residuum,) whilst the citizens of our State would be rendered prosperous and happy, the public debt in Alabama would, in a short time, be extinguished, the deleterious credit system no longer be felt, and the foundation of demoralizing speculation be entirely removed.

Your memorialists further represent that there is another class of our citizens having, in their opinion, an equitable claim upon the liberality of the government. They allude to those citizens the extent of whose means and facilities enabled them to pay up the amount of their purchases, at the exorbitant prices at which their lands sold, as is aforesaid. These, by their punctuality to the government, lost the deduction of the thirty-seven and a half per cent. on the amount of their purchases, which was accorded to those less punctual. Your memorialists believe that the due measure of justice would be meted out to them if they, or their heirs, were permitted to enter, at the minimum price, as many acres of unappropriated land, unoccupied by third persons, as they paid for at a price above five dollars per acre; or by issuing stock in their favor equal to the amount of the difference such purchasers lost by not obtaining the thirty-seven and a half per cent. discount extended to others.

Your memorialists humbly hope that the facts and suggestions embodied in this memorial will receive the attentive consideration of your honorable body, that, if found true and just, our citizens may receive relief commensurate and co-extensive with the grievances complained of. They therefore request that your honorable bodies will be pleased to bestow upon this important subject the attention it may be esteemed to deserve. And, as in duty bound, your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

Resolved, That our senators be instructed, and our representative be requested, to use their best exertions to procure the relief mentioned in the foregoing memorial; and that his excellency, the governor, be requested to forward, as soon as practicable, a copy of the foregoing memorial to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and one to each of our senators and representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States, asking a postponement of the land sales in Jackson and Madison counties, and a change of the law regulating such sales, and to allow to occupants a pre-emption right.

The legislature of the State of Alabama, in general assembly convened, respectfully represents, by memorial, that they are induced, from a late communication from George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, to the Hon. Gabriel Moore, a member of Congress, to expect the public lands in Jackson and Madison counties will be exposed to sale some time in the month of November next, which is viewed with some concern by the general assembly.

Your memorialists believe, if their lands are then exposed at auction, because of the great scarcity of the means with which to purchase, owing to the very reduced price of the staple commodity of the country, but little will be realized from the sales. They therefore respectfully advise a postponement of the sales until the pressure of the times shall be in some degree removed. If such postponement should not be thought expedient, your memorialists respectfully ask a delay until some time in the month of February next; and for this reason: that earlier than February the cultivators of your lands, who may wish to become purchasers, will not have realized money for their crops; and hence many, who, with such indulgence, will be enabled to make purchases, will not have it in their power to procure for themselves a home if the sales should be as early as November.

Your memorialists, with much earnestness, respectfully urge a change of the law regulating the manner of disposing of public lands. They highly approve of the plan proposed in the bill introduced and advocated by the honorable Thomas H. Benton, in the Senate of the United States, providing for the future sales of public lands by entry, at fixed graduated prices, and reserving to the actual settler or occupant, in all cases, the right of pre-emption, for a limited time, to any quantity not exceeding one entire section.

Your memorialists deprecate the auction system, because it is the weapon of oppression in the hands of, and in every instance wielded by, speculators; and, frequently, to the utter ruin of the honest planter. Your memorialists ask leave to state that, at the late land sales in the Cahaba district, the lands were generally purchased by a company of speculators, at the minimum price, and immediately afterwards transferred to others who wished to reside upon them, at from three to eight dollars per acre, in pursuance of a previous agreement, extorted at the mercy of the merciless, from the sub-purchaser, under duress of losing his home or submitting to the terms. The terms are, you must pay the price which we ask, and must not bid against our phalanx; for our combined purses are strong, and we will overreach you, break asunder every tender tie which binds you to your home, and drive you from it. This destroys competition in bidding, and the government gets one dollar and a quarter per acre for best lands, under this speculating system; if the lands were at graduated prices, according to quality, this temptation to speculation would be removed, the government would receive a fair price for her lands, and the honest citizen would not be oppressed by the merciless speculator. If it should be thought inexpedient to pass such a general law, let the experiment be tested by confining its operation to the lands in the above-mentioned counties. Your memorialists have full confidence that this small experiment would so recommend the system as that all would unite with one voice to make it a general law.

Resolved, therefore, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit to each of our senators and representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing memorial, and that our senators be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their utmost endeavors to obtain such amendment of the law, and such postponement of the land sales, as are asked for in said memorial.

C. C. CLAY, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved, January 29, 1829:

JOHN MURPHY.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, citizens of Lawrence county, Alabama, respectfully represent that they are holders of certificates of purchase of public lands, upon which further credit has been taken, under the several laws of the United States passed for the relief of the purchasers of public lands. Those lands were purchased in the years 1818 and 1819 by your petitioners or their assignors—a period of the greatest prosperity to cotton growers known in their history. The unparalleled high prices obtained for cotton during these years were of themselves sufficient to induce high prices for new and fertile cotton lands; and had no other causes contributed to that result, your petitioners might now be told, with some degree of propriety, that they were, at the time of contracting for the lands, to judge for themselves of the certainty and stability of the prices of cotton.

But, unhappily for them, other causes, over which they had no control, emanating directly from the policy and laws of the United States, have involved them in their present difficulties and distress. Five millions of dollars of Mississippi stock, issued by the United States to the claimants under the Yazoo purchase, and made receivable in payment of the public lands in Alabama and Mississippi only, created an artificial capital, the effects of which could not easily have been foreseen, and certainly were not anticipated by the plain-dealing planter, who expected to purchase land for cultivation with his own money. The Bank of the United States had then but recently gone into operation, with an immense real or artificial capital; its branches had been liberally extended to the southern and western States; the directors were seeking to withdraw the customers from the State banks, then extremely numerous, the directors of which were, with equal zeal, endeavoring to sustain these local institutions. This competition put it into the power of every one possessing credit to borrow any amount of money he desired. Mississippi stock was then selling at a considerable discount, and frequently upon credit, Armed with these facilities, and attracted by the exaggerated accounts of the soil, the high price of cotton, and the expectation of realizing great profits, those sales were thronged by speculators, literally loaded with Mississippi stock and bank notes. With this fearful odds against them, your petitioners had to enter the unequal competition for the purchase of their homes. The consequences were such as the causes were naturally calculated to produce; lands sold for prices unheard of even in the oldest and best inhabited portions of the Union—prices which astonished all but the infatuated actors in this scene of artificial excitement.

Towards the close of the year 1819 cotton fell in price to less than half its former value, and has continued to decline, with but transient exceptions, down to the present period, and is now not worth more than one-fourth of what it sold for when the lands now occupied by your petitioners were purchased. The diminution of price induced your petitioners to increase the growth of cotton, in the vain hope of thereby obtaining, by increased industry and exertion, funds to pay for their lands. This, they now perceive, has only augmented the evil of their condition. The increased growth of the article, in the United States and elsewhere, having exceeded the demand, has only tended to diminish the price, and leaves your petitioners no nearer the consummation of their wishes.

Your petitioners beg leave to suggest that the late tariff of duties passed by Congress is, to their apprehension, another act of the United States calculated to diminish greatly the value of the lands they have purchased, as it will, in all probability, induce Great Britain to seek her supplies of cotton from some other country than the United States, and as it compels your petitioners to pay a much higher price for the imported articles they are obliged to purchase. In the midst of these evils, the laws heretofore passed for the relief of the purchasers of public lands have been permitted to expire by their own limitation, leaving your petitioners in the bare possession of lands, without the semblance of title, for which they have already paid their full cash value, and upon which they have expended much money and labor in clearing up plantations and erecting many useful and necessary buildings. No alternative is now left your petitioners but to abandon to the United States the money and labor thus expended and seek another home, or to ask of the justice of Congress such relief as the nature and equity of their case seems to them to demand. Embracing with great confidence the latter alternative, they pray that a law may pass authorizing them to pay for the lands thus held, by some equitable scale of graduation of price, to be regulated by the original cost; with the alternative right of taking, in lieu of the land, certificates for the amount already paid by them, and now forfeited to the United States, to be received in payment for any lands hereafter to be sold, or for any debt due for lands already sold, by the United States. And, as a fair criterion of the comparative value of the lands now and when purchased by your petitioners, they beg leave to refer to the accompanying lists of lands and certificates of the registers of the land offices, showing the prices at which they were originally sold, and at which they have recently been valued by sworn commissioners appointed by the State of Alabama, under the authority of a law passed for the disposal of the 400,000 acres of land granted to the State for the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee and other rivers, a copy of which law they also beg leave to refer to.

And to prevent combinations by speculators against those in the occupation of the public lands, by which the occupant is compelled to pay to the speculator a high price, and the government is defrauded of large sums of money, your petitioners pray that a law may pass giving to the occupant the right of taking the land he occupies at the price at which it may be sold at the public sale, no matter who may be the best bidder. Your petitioners humbly conceive that such a regulation would disarm the speculator of all power to tamper with and force the occupant into unjust and illegal contracts with him, to the injury of the United States, and would insure to them the fair value of the lands sold.

And, finally, your petitioners beg leave to call the particular attention of Congress to the peculiar hardship of their situation, resulting from the causes before enumerated; and if it should not be thought advisable to pass a general law on the principle here suggested, embracing all purchasers of public lands where these peculiar causes have not operated, your petitioners pray that a special law may pass for their relief. And, as in duty bound, they will ever pray.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR AN EXCHANGE OF UNPRODUCTIVE SCHOOL LANDS AND MILITARY BOUNTY LANDS UNFIT FOR CULTIVATION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 22, 1829.

Resolved by the people of the State of Illinois, represented in the general assembly, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their best exertions to obtain the passage of a law by Congress, granting to this State the right to surrender to the United States the unproductive sixteenth sections, or the lands selected in lieu thereof, for the use of schools; and to locate other land equivalent to the lands so surrendered, by quarter sections; said land to be applied to the same purpose as the lands surrendered.

THOMAS MATHER, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WILLIAM KINNEY, Speaker of the Senate.
Attest: W. Lee D. Ewing, Clerk of the House of Reps.
Attest: E. J. West, Secretary of the Senate.

To the Congress of the United States:

The general assembly of the State of Illinois respectfully represent to your honorable body, that a part of the land granted for military bounties, in this State, has been found, upon examination, to be unfit for cultivation. It is therefore respectfully submitted to Congress that a law should be passed, similar to that approved May 22, 1826, authorizing certain soldiers in the late war to surrender the bounty lands drawn by them, and to locate others in lieu thereof, to apply to the lands granted for military bounties in this State.

THOMAS MATHER, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WILLIAM KINNEY, Speaker of the Senate.
Attest: W. Lee D. Ewing, Clerk of the House of Reps.
Attest: E. J. West, Secretary of the Senate.

To the Congress of the United States:

The people of the State of Illinois, represented in the general assembly, respectfully represent to your honorable body, that the land heretofore granted to the State for the use of the inhabitants of each township, for the use of schools, having proved unavailable to the State or the people for the objects contemplated in the grant, your memorialists respectfully solicit the passage of an act of Congress giving the assent of the United States to this State to make sale of said land by consent and for the use of the inhabitants of each township, to invest the money arising from such sales in some productive fund, and to apply the proceeds thereof to the purposes of education.

There is another subject connected with the lands reserved to the State for education to which we beg leave to call the attention of Congress, and one which deeply interests the people of this State. The entire township of land heretofore reserved for the purpose of a seminary of learning was located in 1816, when the country was comparatively unexplored, upon township five north, one west, situated in Fayette county, in this State. A large part of this township of land is now found to be filled with lakes and swamps, while other parts of it are barren and sterile, so that it has been found impracticable to lease the same or to apply it in any manner to the objects contemplated in the grant. This township now is, and ever will continue to be, totally valueless for a seminary of learning. Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully request, on behalf of the State, that a law of Congress may be passed authorizing the State to surrender the above-described township, five north, one west, to the United States, and that a like quantity (to wit, one township or thirty-six sections) may be selected by sections and half sections for the use of a seminary of learning; and that the same, when selected, may be patented to the State in like manner as other grants.

RELINQUISHMENT OF PART OF LAND FORFEITED FOR NON-PAYMENT, AND RETAINING THE BALANCE BY PAYING THE RESIDUE OF THE PURCHASE MONEY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1829.

Mr. IRVINE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the administrators of John Wilson, deceased, reported:

That John Wilson and Samuel Martin some years ago entered at the land office of the United States at Chilicothe the southwest quarter of section 13, in township 12, and range 7, lying in Knox county, and wishing to gain further credit, they surrendered the original certificate, and received a new one, under the provisions of the act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1821. Subsequent thereto, the said Martin transferred his interest in said quarter section to the said Wilson, who departed this life without paying the residue of the purchase money. His administrators were informed, and believed such to be the fact, that at any time before the expiration of the 4th day of July last they could relinquish a part of the said quarter section and make payment for the residue. They accordingly made application to the register of said land office, on said 4th day of July, and finding the time allowed by law expired on the preceding day, by the advice of the register they executed a relinquishment for the west half of said quarter section, and tendered the residue of the purchase money to the receiver of said land office. The committee are of opinion that the petitioners are entitled to relief, and have reported a bill for that purpose.

CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1829.

Mr. GURLEY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition and documents of Arund Rutgers, reported:

That petitioner claims one league square of land on the waters of the Dandauere, in the now State of Missouri, in virtue of a Spanish grant or concession made in 1799, and located and surveyed, in conformity thereto, on the 1st of February, 1800, and which was duly certified and recorded by the surveyor general of the then province of Upper Louisiana on the 5th of March, 1800; that petitioner immediately after settled on said land, and made valuable improvements—built dwelling-house, saw and grist mill; that petitioner presented his claim to the commissioners of land titles in that district, a majority of whom recommended its rejection; that afterwards he presented his claim to Frederick Bates, recorder of land titles, and to whom the powers of the commissioners had been transferred by act of Congress of 1813, who recommended it for confirmation, and which was accordingly confirmed by Congress. That between the periods of these two reports one John Welden obtained the confirmation of a settlement claim for 640 acres, the location of which included 500 arpents, equal to 425 26-100 acres, of the land claimed by the petitioner.

Your committee are satisfied of the truth of the foregoing facts, and without deciding upon the merits of these two conflicting claims, both of which have been confirmed, and believing that the United States would, in equity, be bound, in any event, to make good the deficiency in quantity to either, and being also unwilling to take the improvements of Welden and give them to petitioner unasked for, herewith report a bill authorizing the petitioner, upon relinquishing to the said John Welden all claim to the 500 arpents of land located within his grant, to locate the same quantity upon any lands of the United States within the State of Missouri which are subject to private entry.

APPLICATION OF MICHIGAN FOR GRANT OF A SECTION OF LAND TO EACH COUNTY THEREIN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1829.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The legislative council of the Territory of Michigan respectively pray your honorable bodies to grant to each of the counties in this Territory one section of land, to be located in quarter sections in the several counties and sold under the direction of the governor of this Territory, and the avails to be laid out in building a court-house and jail in each of said counties.

Your memorialists believe that the general government will, by granting this petition confer upon the infant settlements in this Territory benefits far greater than can be properly estimated at the first view, except by those who have experienced the embarrassments and difficulties in erecting public buildings in new settlements.

This Territory has no funds from which it can afford any aid to the several counties in erecting their necessary public buildings, and with a sparse population in the several counties, with little means, they cannot do it unaided. This council looks with confidence to the general government, who own the soil, for assistance in providing for the permanent administration of justice in our new counties, and the granting of this petition will appear more important in view of the following facts:

The Territory of Michigan now contains twenty-six counties: of these, fourteen are organized—five in the country extending from Lake Huron to the Mississippi, and nine in the peninsula, with the exception of the counties of Wayne, Monroe, and Oakland. All these are without any permanent buildings to serve as court-houses and jails. Your memorialists trust, under these circumstances, that Congress will afford the aid they have requested.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the delegate in Congress from this Territory, at the ensuing session of Congress.

Adopted by the legislative council November 5, 1829.

APPLICATION OF MICHIGAN FOR GRANT OF A TOWNSHIP OF LAND TO ESTABLISH A HOSPITAL.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1829.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the legislative council of the Territory of Michigan respectfully represents: That the peculiar situation of this frontier occasions to the citizens a heavy expenditure in the support and relief of sick, indigent, and distressed persons. Many disabled soldiers are discharged from the army at the posts on the upper lakes, and being utterly unable to maintain themselves, and there being no provision for assisting them on the part of the United States, they are thrown upon the community for that support, which must be charitably yielded to them, or they must be left to perish.

In the mercantile marine upon the lakes a large body of seamen are employed, and who are liable to all those accidents which belong to their profession, and which have rendered the establishment of hospitals upon the seaboard for their relief an object of solicitude to the government. These persons, as is well known, generally spend their wages as fast as they are received, and when disabled, or attacked by sickness, they resort to the principal ports along the lakes for the benefit of the poor laws, or for assistance from individuals.

The port of Detroit, from its local situation, uniting the upper with the lower lakes, and from the extent of its trade, is peculiarly exposed to these demands, and the citizens have found, not only that they press too heavily upon them, but that they are rapidly increasing.

Your memorialists respectfully request that a township of land may be granted for the establishment and endowment of a hospital, in Detroit or its vicinity, for the relief and support of discharged soldiers and sick and disabled seamen.

Resolved, That the governor of the Territory be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the delegate from this Territory, at the next Congress.

Adopted by the legislative council October 29, 1829.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1829.

Mr. Hunt, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel W. D. Clark, reported:

That the said Samuel W. D. Clark, in his petition, represents that the Spanish government granted to James Lullards a certain tract of land, on which the petitioner now resides, in the State of Louisiana, and that the petitioner claims the same by purchase from the assignees of said Lullards. He further states that the certificate of said land being vacant at the time said grant was made, together with the plot and certificate of survey, were deposited in the land office of St. Helena on the 14th of August, 1814, for record; and that the clerk of said office neglected to record said papers, or if he did, the book in which said record was made was destroyed by fire, and that the original papers have never been returned; and the petitioner seems also to represent that they cannot be found, although search has been made for them. He also produces evidence to show that the aforesaid tract of land has been cultivated and inhabited ever since the year 1808, and prays for a donation of land, or other just and equitable relief.

The petitioner, however, does not offer evidence to prove that the Spanish government made a grant of the aforementioned tract of land to said James Lullards, or that he ever acquired a title to the same by purchase from the assignees of said Lullards.

The occupancy of the land as represented in the petition, and supported by evidence, cannot, in the opinion of your committee, give to the petitioner any claim for a donation of land.

The committee recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be not granted.

QUANTITY OF LAND REVERTED TO THE UNITED STATES IN ALABAMA, FOR NON-PAYMENT—THE AMOUNT FORFEITED, THE PROPORTION IN THAT STATE TO THE WHOLE AMOUNT FORFEITED ELSEWHERE—THE WHOLE AMOUNT SOLD, THE PRICE, AMOUNT PAID, &c.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1829.

Treasury Department, December 28, 1829.

Sir: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 23d instant, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to make a report to the House, "showing the quantity of land in the State of Alabama which has reverted to the United States for non-payment, and the amount of money forfeited, with the average sum per acre which has been paid for said reverted land, and the proportion which the entire amount of forfeitures in said State bears to the total amount of forfeitures incurred elsewhere than in that State; the number of acres which have been relinquished in said State now remaining unsold and unappropriated, and the average price per acre at which said relinquished land was sold; the number of acres which have been sold at the several land offices in said State during the last three years, with the average price per acre; and also the whole amount which has been paid for lands situated in said State of Alabama," I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which, with the accompanying statements, contains the information desired.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 26, 1829.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, passed the 23d instant, I have the honor to state that the quantity of land in the State of Alabama, further credited, and which has reverted to the United States, is 402,180.88 acres; that the amount of money paid and forfeited on the said land is $558,564 01, which makes the average amount paid on each acre $1 39; that the proportion which the entire amount of forfeitures in the State of Alabama bears to the entire amount of forfeitures incurred elsewhere than in Alabama is as three to one; with the exception of the amount of money forfeited at the land office at Washington, Mississippi, on the first class of lands further credited, the returns for which have not been received; that the number of acres of land relinquished in said State, and which now remain unsold and unappropriated, is 947,329.78 acres; and the average price per acre for which they were originally sold is $5 03; that the number of acres which have been sold at the several land offices in Alabama during the last three years, to wit, 1826, 1827, and 1828, is 413,607.55, for which $576,087 97 have been paid, giving an average of $1 39.3 per acre; that the whole amount which has been paid for lands situated in the said State of Alabama, to the 1st of January, 1829, is $7,450,408 42. I have also the honor to submit the tables marked No. 1 and No. 2, which exhibit the amount of forfeitures in each separate land district, and in each State and Territory.

All which is respectfully submitted.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1829.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition and documents of Antoine Prudhomme, Louis Closeau, and Gilbert Closeau, reported:

That Antoine Prudhomme claims a tract of land of 640 acres, situated on the right bank of the Rigolet de Boudieure, in the parish of Natchitoches, and State of Louisiana; that Louis Closeau claims 640 arpents of land upon the right bank of Red river, in said State; and Gilbert Closeau 400 arpents of land, and adjoining above the land of Louis Closeau. From the testimony and documents accompanying the petition it satisfactorily appears that the land claimed by Antoine Prudhomme was settled in or before the year 1787 by one Pre. Dubanne; that said Dubanne lived on the land until he died, in the year 1796 or 1797; that at the sale of his succession the land was purchased by Joseph Dubanne, one of his heirs, who sold it to petitioner, who immediately took possession of the property, and has lived on it from that period to the present. It also appears from the evidence furnished that Louis and Gilbert Closeau have constantly inhabited and cultivated the lands respectively claimed by them for about 40 years, or since the year 1787.

Without referring to other parts of the evidence, intended to show the equity of the case, your committee are of opinion that the petitioners are entitled to relief under the principles established by the act of March 3, 1807, and that the commissioners for the adjustment of land titles would have recommended the confirmation of petitioners' claims had they been presented to them.

The reason assigned by the petitioners for not having entered their claims before the board is, that they were ignorant of the necessity of doing so. The parties and witnesses appear to be men of fair character, and highly respectable for truth and veracity. In support of this assertion they annex, as part of this report, a certificate from General Overton, the representative from the district in which they reside, and herewith report a bill for their relief.

Washington City, December 9, 1829.

To relieve the committee from any apprehensions of fraud in the claim of Antoine Prudhomme, I will briefly state that I know, personally, the witnesses that testify, as well as Mr. Prudhomme. They are as respectable men as any in Louisiana in point of honesty and probity.

Respectfully.

W. H. OVERTON.

CONDITION OF THE TOMBECKBEE ASSOCIATION FOR THE CULTIVATION OF THE VINE AND OLIVE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 30, 1829.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial and petition of the undersigned, who, at a general meeting of the Tombeckbee Association, held at Greensborough on the 10th of August, A. D. 1829, were appointed a committee on behalf of said association, and of others holding and occupying lands under assignment from members of said association, to represent to Congress such facts connected with the history and present situation of the owners of land within what is commonly called the "French Grant" as they may deem material, and to solicit such indulgence as may be compatible with their situation, and not inconsistent with the objects and provisions of said grant, respectfully showeth:

That the correspondence between the Treasury Department and Charles Villars, late agent of the French company, and also with Frederick Ravesies, his successor, the present agent, will exhibit many of the causes, as they occurred, which tended to retard and to prevent the specific performance of the conditions of the contract made between the honorable Wm. H. Crawford, late Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Villars, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed in March, 1817. To this correspondence the undersigned beg leave to refer your honorable bodies, as containing details now beyond their control, and in part only to be found in the proper office of the Treasury Department, the former agent, Mr. Villars, having omitted to leave any copies or records of the transactions of his agency with his successor. With a view to supply the defect of information arising from the absence of these documents, the undersigned, in pursuance of the objects of their appointment, have resorted to such other sources of evidence as are still accessible. Before they proceed further in this memorial and petition, the undersigned have no hesitancy in stating that they have sought information from sources of unquestionable authority only, and that the facts they are about to relate are not such as apply exclusively to individual cases, but such as involved the general interest of the French emigrants—such as essentially affected all who were concerned. In tracing the progress of the attempts made by the French emigrants and their assigns to avail themselves of the advantages which were generously offered by the grant from Congress, a series of difficulties and disasters, and not unfrequently of ignorance and mismanagement, is presented to the inquirer. This indeed is too often the history of almost every human enterprise, and thus it is that the most liberal purposes of philanthropy, the most confident anticipations of political wisdom, and the most skilful efforts of industry, are frustrated and disappointed. These reflections naturally intrude themselves on the minds of the most unreflecting and careless examiner of the concerns of the Tombeckbee company. We therefore make no apology for them, but hasten to request the attention of Congress to a few of the most prominent and important circumstances accompanying the disastrous attempt of the French emigrants to Alabama. Soon after the passage of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the encouragement of the cultivation of the vine and olive, &c.," before the contract was consummated between the Secretary of the Treasury and the French agent, and indeed before the survey of the land intended for the company, a large number of French emigrants interested in the grant, finding their situation becoming daily more embarrassing in Philadelphia, New York, and elsewhere; finding also that their pecuniary resources were continually diminishing, and anxiously desiring to find and to enjoy a home for themselves and families, immaturely abandoned their places of temporary residence. Having at length assembled in the interior of Alabama, they determined to establish themselves on a spot where the village of Demopolis now stands, on the bank of the Tombeckbee. This determination originated in the belief that the situation they had selected was within the limits of the French grant. At this place, therefore, they proceeded to erect the necessary buildings for the accommodation of their families. Their number soon amounted to about three hundred persons, and it may be safely affirmed that three hundred more helpless beings were never before assembled. They were without provisions, and every article of subsistence was enormously dear; they wanted advice, encouragement, and assistance, and were unacquainted with the language and habits of those whose friendship was so essential. Their situation at once imperiously demanded the products of agriculture and of the mechanic arts, of which they were alike ignorant. Some of them had been trained in camps and battle fields; some of them had been in the city and at the court. There were, however, a few who were acquainted with the cultivation of the vine as practiced in the west of France, and purposed to communicate their skill to their unfortunate countrymen, but they were without vines, and the land destined for their use had not been designated. Here they remained, the subjects of every calamity incident to man—poor, helpless, and strangers, the pity of the humane, the scorn of the unfeeling, and the prey of the dishonest. Some of them died of diseases, the consequence of accumulated privations and of the climate, and some fled in despair to other regions. The survey of the lands intended for these unfortunate emigrants was at length completed, and it was ascertained that Demopolis, the place of their residence, was not within the French grant. But, in the meantime, a considerable number of those who remained had exhausted their very limited funds in making necessary improvements and in procuring subsistence at that place. A new town, called Aigleville, was laid off, and parcels of land in proportion to the respective individual allotments, within the general grant, were designated; many additions were made to the colony by arrivals from Philadelphia and elsewhere; and under the encouragement and patronage of General Lefebvre Desnouelty and a few others, the purposes of the settlement were commenced. Many persons, however, to whom allotments had been made never arrived. A considerable number of them by this time were reduced to extreme poverty, and many of that number had been imprisoned in Philadelphia for debt. To relieve themselves from actual want, and to obtain a release from prison, they sold their land claims to their more wealthy countrymen. And here we will for a moment interrupt this narrative by remarking that by and through these purchasers many of the most thriving settlements and valuable improvements within the grant have been made. Another portion of the persons interested were intimidated from proceeding to Alabama from the alarming accounts which reached them of the difficulties experienced by the first adventurers, and some were prevented from making any attempt at settlement from the information that their lands were already in possession of intruders. This last circumstance has certainly had an influence much more direct and extended than from hasty consideration might be imagined. The cases of intrusion by squatters on the French grants were not very numerous, but this unlawful possession was maintained, and defended, and continued, by all the arts and with all the success which wealth and influence too frequently command in their contests with friendless poverty. It was not until some time in the year 1825 that a judicial decision of the supreme court of Alabama recognized the right of possession in the French claimants. Of these claimants it will be conceded that few, if any, were prepared to encounter the expense of a protracted lawsuit; and the fact is, that lands allotted to several of the French company have been and still continue in possession of intruders, without color of title. It is true that a prompt and effectual remedy may now be had by procuring the interference of the marshal, but the exercise of this remedy would be always invidious, and it would much more accord with the inclination and the interest of those who are thus excluded from the enjoyment of their rights to be placed in a situation which would enable them to sell or lease their lands, for a valuable consideration, to others, who would improve and cultivate them in such way as to meet the purposes of the original contract.

The undersigned committee, on behalf of their constituents, have now communicated to your honorable body some of the principal causes which have prevented the general occupancy of the lands granted to the Tombeckbee Association. Many other causes might be enumerated. It is hoped, however, that those now offered, together with such as will necessarily be presented, in treating of the failure in cultivating the vine, may be satisfactory and sufficient; and here the committee will barely suggest that all the reasons which prevented the settlement of the emigrants necessarily prevented the cultivation of the vine. But there are other facts and circumstances connected with this part of the subject which it may not be improper briefly to represent. The French emigrants very naturally, and, no doubt, very correctly believed, that the Congress of the United States, which granted the land to them for the purpose of cultivating the vine, as well as for other objects, contemplated the culture of vines from France. With this impression, means were speedily adopted to procure vines from that kingdom. Several large and expensive importations were made, sufficient in quantity, it is asserted by respectable individuals, to have supplied the whole of the colony. Of these importations a very considerable part, after various delays on the ocean, at Mobile, and on the river, reached its destination without vegetable life; a much more considerable part arrived at seasons of the year so advanced that it would have been an idle waste of labor to plant. Large parcels, however, were received, apparently in good order, and were planted in proper time. Large parcels were cultivated with care, and with such skill as was possessed by the planters. They almost universally perished, or grew feebly and without fruit. These attempts were persisted in until many, hopeless of success, discontinued planting or cultivating; others persevered, and continue to persevere. Vine-dressers have, at different times, arrived from France; various experiments have been made, and the result of the whole matter has been that the foreign vines are not adapted to the climate and soil of this part of Alabama. These experiments have not been made hastily or injudiciously. Time, skill, and expense have been devoted to this interesting object; but the planters of the vine have been equally disappointed in their hopes of profit, and their wish to realize the just expectations of Congress. The cultivation of the vine is still continued; but the opinion which now generally prevails on this subject is, that success can only be obtained by planting the best vines which are indigenous in the United States, together with such exotic grapes as may have become assimilated to its soil and climate. Under the influence of this opinion inquiries have been made, and information and vines have been obtained from different parts of the United States where the grape has been successfully reared; and experiments are at this time in progress, with flattering prospects of a favorable result. But to ascertain this result time is required, and this committee are confident in declaring, that if reasonable time is granted to effect the contemplated object, honest and skilful efforts will be made to comply with the proposition contained in the second article of the resolution submitted to your consideration. This committee deem it unnecessary to enlarge upon the reasons which induced the land proprietors, whom they represent, to adopt the three several articles of the resolution which is herewith transmitted. The first is obviously intended to avoid a forfeiture until the time therein specified. The object of the second is to be collected from the remarks already offered. It is distinct and specific in its character, and directly calculated to obtain one of the primary objects of the grant, by encouraging not only the cultivation of the grape but the production of wine. As respects the third resolution, this committee take leave respectfully to represent, that the report of the agent from the late Secretary of the Treasury was made on credible evidence, and that the testimony upon which it is founded still generally exists. They deem it not immaterial to state, since the report was made several sales of various parcels of land have taken place at an enhanced price, upon the principle that the facts certified in the agent's report were true, and had been deposited among the archives of the treasury as an authentic document. This report, they humbly conceive, contains, in itself, no evidence of partiality or concealment; on the contrary, it presents an alarming account of a total abandonment of all attention either to their own interest or to the objects of the grant on the part of numerous individuals to whom allotments of land have been made—an abandonment which, we trust, has been sufficiently accounted for in the preceding part of this memorial. In fine, the great objects which the undersigned have in view in thus addressing your honorable body are respectfully to urge the propriety of placing the claimants of land within the French grant, and their heirs and assigns, on the footing of certainty; that therefore a mode may be pointed out by which they may obtain titles in fee, and at the same time that the terms of the original contract may be so altered and modified as to insure the bona fide performance of its most important conditions. The absence of this certainty is seriously felt by every cultivator of land within the French grant; from this cause comfortable buildings of durable materials are not erected, and from this cause a system of agriculture is pursued having for its object immediate profit, without regard to the preservation of the soil. To this uncertainty may doubtless be attributed the unoccupied state of a very considerable part of the land. Let these difficulties be removed, and in a short time almost the whole of the arable soil will be cultivated by respectable citizens, possessing every inducement for improvement in manners, morals, and intelligence. These views of this subject, so important and interesting to the parties, are founded on unquestionable facts; and the remarks and inferences offered are such as are obviously derived from these facts; they are therefore confidently, but respectfully, submitted to the liberal and enlightened legislators of a free people.

Your honorable bodies are humbly requested to pass an act in conformity with the resolutions herewith transmitted, or in conformity with the principles generally contained in them, and to afford such other and further relief as the circumstances of your petitioners may require. And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will every pray, &c.

AIGLEVILLE, November 18, 1829.

Resolved, That a petition be presented to the Congress of the United States praying relief in favor of the grantees under the French grant, to the following effect, viz:

1st. That all the allottees under the contract made between Charles Villars, agent, &c., and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, on January 18, 1819, and their heirs, devisees, or assigns, be allowed further time, until March 3, 1833, to comply with the conditions of said contract, and that the time for the performance of the said conditions be extended until said day.

2d. That all said allottees, their heirs, devisees, or assigns, who shall by that time have complied with the said conditions of settlement and cultivation, shall be entitled to a further credit of five years from and after March 3, 1833, in the payment of their lands, provided they shall produce one barrel of wine for each quarter section, and that they shall be entitled to a patent on the production of said wine and the payment of $1 25 per acre at any time within said extended term of five years.

3d. That all said allottees, their heirs, devisees, or assigns, who have been reported by William L. Adams, the agent of the United States, as having already complied with the conditions of settlement and cultivation by said contract of them required, be entitled to obtain a patent for their allotments at any time anterior to March 3, 1833, upon the payment of $1 25 per acre.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 759. [1ST SESSION.

CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI DERIVED FROM GEORGIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1829.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom had been referred the case of Francis Tennill, reported:

There was issued, January 12, 1795, to Zachariah Cox, by virtue of an act of the legislature of the State of Georgia passed January 7, 1795, (vesting in the said Zachariah Cox and Matthias Maher an undivided portion of a certain tract of territory lying in the great bend of the Tennessee river,) a certificate, No. 196, evidencing and declaring that said Cox was entitled to the one four hundredth and twentieth part of the said territory, provided the one four hundredth and twentieth part of the full purchase money for said territory was paid to Matthias Maher, or his agent, on or before the first day of August next ensuing the date of said certificate. This certificate appears to have been assigned by Cox to Thomas Gilbert without date, who assigned it without date to Francis Tennill.

On April 24, 1802, the State of Georgia ceded to the United States the jurisdiction and right of soil to the whole of that tract of country south of the Tennessee river, which embraced within its boundaries the district of land referred to in the above certificate to Cox, upon certain conditions.

The United States by the terms of the cession had the privilege of setting apart five millions of acres, or the net proceeds arising from the sales of five millions of acres, within twelve months after the said decree of cession shall have been ratified by the State of Georgia, (and not after,) "for the purpose of satisfying, granting, or compensating for any claims other than those therein before enumerated" which may be made to the said lands or any part thereof; of this latter description of claim is the one embraced by the certificate aforesaid to Cox.—(See vol. 1 Laws United States, page 488.)

By the act of Congress passed March 3, 1803, (vols. 3 and 5, page 46,) provision for adjusting those claims arising under the acts of the legislature of Georgia, which were not recognized as valid by the State of Georgia out of the five millions of acres, was made, in part, by authorizing the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and Attorney General, to receive such propositions of compromise and settlement as might be offered by the same companies or persons claiming public lands lying south of the State of Tennessee and west of the State of Georgia, and report their opinion thereon to Congress at the next session.

In 1814 Congress passed the law providing for the indemnification of certain claimants of public lands in the Mississippi Territory.—(Vol. 4 Laws United States, 671.) Under the provisions of this act of Congress the petitioners assert their claim to ask relief.

By this act a board was constituted of the Secretaries of State, Treasury, and the Attorney General, and, by a subsequent law, of other individuals, "who were authorized and required to adjudge and determine upon the sufficiency of the releases and assignments and powers to be executed and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State," contemplated by the first section of the said act.

This law also provides for the issuing of $5,000,000 of stock, known as the Mississippi or Yazoo stock, to such persons as might avail themselves of the conditions of said act, in the following proportions:

To the Upper Mississippi Company	$350,000 00
To the Tennessee Company	600,000 00

To the Georgia Mississippi Company	$1,550,000 00
To the Georgia Company	2,250,000 00
To persons claiming under citizens' rights	250,000 00
	5,000,000 00

The certificate aforesaid, now claimed by Francis Tennill's representative, attaches itself to that fund which was to be created for the indemnification and satisfaction of the Tennessee Company; the whole of which has been expended except the sum of $2,857 73.

At what time Francis Tennill died does not appear, but it is manifested by the documents that within the time prescribed by the acts of Congress, and during the existence of the board organized under the law aforesaid, the Hon. Bowling Hall, a representative from the State of Georgia, as acting, in fact, for Joseph Blackshear and Mary Tennill, administrator and administratrix of Francis Tennill, deceased, tendered releases, according to the requisitions of the acts aforesaid, (as to form and authentication,) to the United States, of certificates No. 196, 207, and 208.

It appears by an endorsement upon the original papers, now on file in the Secretary of State's office, that the board of commissioners decided that "the release as to William A. Tennill, who had also united with the persons aforesaid, (and who was sole proprietor of the two certificates Nos. 207 and 208,) was good," but "bad as to the administrators, who cannot release unless the deceased was insolvent. There must be sent on either proof that the estate of Francis Tennill is insolvent, or a release, assignment, and power from the heirs." This release, assignment, and power, or the proof of insolvency from some, was never sent on or tendered to the board, or filed in the State Department. The one decided to be defective is still on file in the office of State.

The petitioners assign their infancy and remote situation from the seat of government as the cause why this release, &c., or proof was not furnished in time to enable the board to award to them the proportion due to the said certificate, No. 196, then, as now, owned by them, and ask Congress to pass a law for their relief. Without inquiring into the correctness of the decision made by the commissioners, the committee are of opinion that the equitable circumstances of this case address themselves forcibly to the justice of the government, and that relief ought to be granted, for which purpose they report a bill.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS TO EXTEND TIME FOR LOCATING LAND UNDER TREATY WITH THE CHEROKEE INDIANS FOR AN EXCHANGE OF SCHOOL LANDS, AND FOR THE SALE OF LAND IN FORTY-ACRE LOTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 4, 1830.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the legislature of the Territory of Arkansas respectfully showeth: That the law of the 24th of May, 1828, granting a donation of three hundred and twenty acres of land as an indemnity to the actual settlers who were removed by the treaty of 23d of May, with the Cherokee Indians, from that tract of country called Loveley's purchase, in the Territory of Arkansas, has been so unfortunately procrastinated by many unforeseen circumstances, but particularly on account of the land officers refusing to act for want of instructions, that more than a year of the time allowed by the law to locate those claims expired before the claimants were enabled to have their claims proved up and properly authenticated for location according to law. The consequences have been that much of the lands subject to location at the date of the law, and much which has since become subject to location, has been appropriated to the location of Spanish claims, and a great part of it selected for seminary land for the use of the Territory, agreeably to a law of Congress, thereby debarring those claims from their proper right of location, as intended by the law of Congress which granted them. Many of those claims have passed into the hands of other persons, and are now located. A number of them yet remain in the hands of the claimants, and if the time for locating them is not extended until lands are in market to locate them on, they must be lost to the owners. Your memorialists respectfully represent that the surveys of the country acquired of the Cherokees by the above treaty are now progressing. Many of the persons who have received donations are now settled in that country, with an expectation of locating their claims on the improvements which they occupy. We therefore most respectfully pray your honorable bodies to extend the time for locating those claims, so as to give the claimants an opportunity of locating on their improvements, as above specified.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

JOHN WILSON, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved October 31, 1829:

JOHN POPE.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas respectfully represents to your honorable bodies, that of the lands designed by the laws of the United States for the benefit of common schools, there are within this Territory, to the knowledge of your memorialists, several tracts or sections, number sixteen, which have been appropriated or confirmed to individuals under Spanish grants; that when the legal subdivisions or surveys are made of the residue of the public domain in this Territory, doubtless other occurrences will appear, to remedy which, and carry into effect the beneficent designs of the United States, your memorialists ask for the passage of a law similar to the act of Congress relative to the school lands in the State of Missouri, passed in March, 1823, authorizing the governor of this Territory to designate and set apart unimproved lands in the Territory of Arkansas, in lieu of the sections or parts of sections number sixteen which now are, or may hereafter appear, appropriated or otherwise, on view may be found of little value, or deemed unavailing to the funds intended by the United States to be raised from those reservations for the support of common schools, and to be for the use and benefit of the townships where such reserved sections have been appropriated, or may appear of little value.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, &c.

JOHN WILSON, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved April 31, 1829:

JOHN POPE.

To the Congress of the United States:

The memorial of the legislative council and house of representatives of the Territory of Arkansas, in general assembly convened, respectfully represents: That it would operate with peculiar benefit to numerous indigent families in this Territory to have the privilege of entering a less quantity of public land than eighty acres, say forty acres; and that they have also the privilege, whether they enter eighty acres or a less quantity, to run east and west, or north and south, at the option of the person entering the land. Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully ask your honorable body to pass a law extending to the citizens of Arkansas the above-named privilege.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, &c.

JOHN WILSON, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved October 31, 1829:

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 761. [1ST SESSION.

CLAIM OF JOHN EDGAR TO LAND IN ILLINOIS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 5, 1830.

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of John Edgar, reported:

That the said Edgar alleges in his memorial that John Wilkins, a lieutenant colonel in the service of Great Britain, on April 12, 1769, granted to Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan a tract of land in the Illinois country, supposed to contain about thirteen thousand acres, of which he, the said Edgar, afterwards became the owner by purchase at public sale. He further states that prior to the year 1797 he purchased twelve tracts of land of four hundred acres each, which had been given by the United States to the following named persons, being heads of families in the Illinois country, to wit: Maria Labrose, Jean B. Richard, Jean Maria Lefevre, Archarge Cherier, Catharine Casson, Jean Flanders, Jaques Boutillel, Antoine Coutinoult, Antoine Lomire, Pierre Lomire, the heirs of Detaill, and Antoine Lavigre; and that in 1793 he purchased an improvement right of four hundred acres from John Cochran. The said Edgar has exhibited to your committee assignments from all the original claimants of the above-mentioned tracts of land, which appear to be regularly executed, and to vest in him the right which they severally possessed. He has also proved to the satisfaction of your committee that his claim to the said several tracts of land were submitted to Arthur St. Clair, esq., governor of the Northwestern Territory, and approved and confirmed by him, in the years 1791 and 1796, of which confirmations entries were made in a book kept for that purpose, and surveys were ordered at the expense of the said Edgar.

The memorialist further states that after his claims had been confirmed, as aforesaid, he took possession of the lands, and regularly paid the taxes assessed thereon till the year 1813, at which time he was dispossessed by a decision of the board of commissioners appointed under the act of 1812; and he prays that Congress will grant him an indemnity, either in money or in land.

In order that the grounds on which the claim of the said Edgar depends may be fully understood, the committee further report that the Commonwealth of Virginia stipulated in her act of cession to the United States of 1794 that the French and Canadian inhabitants, and other settlers of the Kaskaskia, St. Vincennes, and the neighboring villages, who had professed themselves citizens of Virginia, should have their possessions and titles confirmed, and be protected in their rights and liberties.

In conformity with that stipulation, Congress, by their resolution of June 20, 1788, directed that separate tracts should be reserved for satisfying the claims of the settlers named in the said act of cession, and that measures should be immediately taken for confirming in their possessions and titles the said French and Canadian inhabitants and other settlers, who, on or before the year 1783, had professed themselves citizens of the United States, or either of them, and for laying off the several tracts which they rightfully claimed. They also directed that three additional tracts should be laid off for the benefit of the said inhabitants, of such extent as should contain four hundred acres for each of the families then living at either of the villages of Kaskaskias, La Prairie du Rochers, Kahokia, Fort Chartres, or St. Philip's; and that these additional donations of four hundred acres each should be distributed by lot, and immediate possession given.

It was further provided by the said resolution that the governor of the Western Territory should repair to those settlements, examine the titles and possessions of the settlers, in order to determine the quantity of land they might severally claim, which should be laid off to them at their own expense; and that he should take an account of the several heads of families, in order that he might determine the quantity of land to be laid off.

In further performance of the condition in the said act of cession, Congress, by their act of March 3, 1791, directed that four hundred acres of land be given to each of those persons who, in the year 1783, were heads of families at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country on the Mississippi, and that the governor of the Northwestern Territory should cause the same to be laid out for them at their own expense.

The same act further provided that where lands had been actually improved and cultivated at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, under a supposed grant by any commandant or court claiming authority to make such grant, the governor of the said Territory should be empowered to confirm to the persons who made such improvements, their heirs or assigns, the lands supposed to have been granted, or such part thereof as he might think reasonable, not exceeding to any one person four hundred acres.

On the construction of these laws must depend the validity of the acts of the governor in confirming the claims of the memorialist.

By the act of the 20th February, 1812, the register and receiver of public moneys at Kaskaskia, and such other person as the President should appoint for that purpose, were authorized to examine and inquire into the validity of claims to land in the district of Kaskaskia, derived from confirmations made, or pretended to be made, by the governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories, and were directed to report to the Secretary of the Treasury their opinion on each of the said claims, to be laid before Congress at their next session.

In conformity with the construction given by the commissioners to the last-mentioned act, they proceeded to examine and reject the claims of the said John Edgar, set out in his memorial, as appears by their report to the Secretary of the Treasury, made in 1813, not on the testimony on which the confirmations of the governor had been made in the years 1791 and 1796, but on such testimony as it was in the power of the claimant to procure in 1813, more than twenty years after his claims had been examined and confirmed. It appears to the committee that the governor was not required to reduce the testimony to writing on which he acted, and that no provision was made by law for preserving it, in consequence of which parol evidence was received, of which no record remains; it was, therefore, impossible for the commissioners, at the time they examined these claims, to ascertain on what evidence they had been confirmed. Many of the witnesses examined by the governor, being the most aged men in the settlement, were dead and others had removed before the examination was made by the commissioners; the necessary consequence of which was, that their opinion was founded on a part of the testimony only, and therefore was more liable to error than the original decision. The committee believe that the provision made for the settlers in question by the Commonwealth of Virginia, and by the subsequent acts of Congress, was not intended to receive a rigid construction; but that the governor was purposely vested with power to confirm definitively, and without appeal, all claims which, in his opinion, came within the spirit of the provision. This opinion is strengthened by the fact that he was not directed to require written testimony, and that no provision was made for recording or otherwise preserving any testimony which he might see proper to receive. But admitting that his decisions were subject to revision and reversal, the safety of the parties would seem to require that a revision, with a view to a reversal, should have been made within a reasonable time, and while there was a rational probability that the facts on which the decisions had been made, could be again obtained. It will be recollected that the claimants had no agency in deciding the manner in which the governor proceeded in the discharge of his duty. It cannot, therefore, be imputed to them as a fault that the evidence was not perpetuated, although the omission to do so may have rendered it impossible to review the grounds on which the decisions were made; and, for the same reason, it would be unjust to subject them to the penalty of a forfeiture because such a consequence may have resulted from that omission.

The committee are of opinion that it would be as inconsistent with the common practice of the government as it is with the established principles of equity to give such a construction to the act of 1812 as would vacate all the decisions of the governors of the Territories, and subject the settlers to the necessity of establishing their claims anew, as if they had never been examined or decided. The claimants were illiterate men, and generally unacquainted with the nature of titles and with the legal forms of establishing and preserving them, from which it is a natural conclusion that to sustain the construction given to the act by the commissioners must be fatal to the titles of a large portion of those who are intended to be its beneficiaries; and yet it appears to the committee that such was the view which the commissioners took of the act in question, and of the powers with which it invested them.

If it was the intention of Congress, by the act of 1812, merely to create a tribunal of revision for the purpose of examining and revising the grounds on which former decisions had been made, for the purpose of ascertaining whether those decisions were correct or otherwise, it is very evident that the commissioners mistook their powers, because they viewed the claims as being then presented to them for adjudication for the first time, and proceeded to decide their merits on the testimony then submitted. Opinions thus formed were more liable to be incorrect than the original decisions, because the latter were made in the life of the witnesses most likely to know the facts, while the former were made after many of those witnesses were dead.

There is another consideration which ought not to be overlooked: The commissioners were not authorized by the law of 1812 to reverse the decisions of the governor. They were directed to examine and inquire, and report their opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be laid before Congress; and here their power ceased. The validity of the former decisions were to be decided by Congress. The commissioners did report in 1813, but Congress have not acted on that report, so that the question is still open, whether the decisions of the governor shall be affirmed or reversed.

In relation to the merits of the claim set up by the memorialist to the several tracts of land described in his memorial, the committee report that the tract first described is claimed under a pretended grant from Lieutenant Colonel Wilkins, in the year 1769. The grant was alleged to contain about thirteen thousand acres, but from a subsequent survey, made under the superintendence of the claimant, it was found to contain upwards of twenty-four thousand acres.

The committee are of opinion that this claim cannot be sustained, for various reasons:

First. Because Colonel Wilkins had no power to make the grant, as appears from the royal proclamation of October 7, 1763, by which all such grants were expressly forbidden.

Second. The validity of the grant, by the terms of it, was made to depend on the confirmation of the King or of his commander-in-chief, neither of which has been obtained.

Third. The grant was fraudulent, having been made, in part, for the benefit of the grantor himself, who, as appears by an instrument of writing executed on the 25th of June, 1769, was to have an equal interest with the grantees.

Fourth. The land intended to be granted is described with such a want of precision that neither its situation, quantity, nor limits can be ascertained with any reasonable degree of certainty.

Fifth. The governors of the Territories have no power to confirm British grants, as such; but in cases where such grants have been settled and improved, they were permitted, in virtue of the settlement and improvement, to grant to the settlers as much of the land as they might think reasonable, not exceeding four hundred acres to any one individual. In this case the governor undertook to confirm the entire grant as conveying a right per se, and, in so doing, exceeded the authority which Congress had given him.

In relation to the donation tracts of four hundred acres each, your committee report that it appears from statements obtained from the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the memorialist has been confirmed in his title to three of those tracts which are claimed to have been purchased of Jean Maria Lefevre, Archange Cherier, and the heirs of Detaile, but that the remaining ten tracts have been, and still are, withheld from him.

It is the opinion of your committee, under all the circumstances of the case, that the decision of the governor, on the claim of the memorialist to those ten tracts, ought to be confirmed. Should such be the opinion of Congress, it will be necessary to provide for locating them, as the tracts heretofore surveyed by order of the governor have been otherwise disposed of; and for that purpose the committee ask leave to report a bill.

THE AMOUNT OF MONEY AND LAND GRANTED TO THE NEW STATES FOR THE PURPOSES OF EDUCATION AND THE CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS AND CANALS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 5, 1830.

To the Senate of the United States:

I submit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, giving the information called for by a resolution of the Senate of the 24th December, 1828.

ANDREW JACKSON.

JANUARY 5, 1830.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 4, 1830.

SIR: In the fulfilment of your directions under a resolution of the Senate of the 24th December, 1828, "requesting the President of the United States to cause to be laid before the Senate at the next session a statement showing the amount of moneys appropriated, the quantity of the public lands, with their value at the minimum prices, which have been granted, and the amount of the percentage on the proceeds of lands sold by the United States reserved and pledged to the several States admitted into the Union since the adoption of the Constitution, for the purposes of education and the construction of roads and canals within and leading to said States, specifying the amount received by each State, as far as practicable," I have the honor to submit the accompanying statements, marked A and B, the former (including tables Nos. 1 and 9) prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the latter by the Register of the Treasury.

I have the honor to remain, with high respect, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 14, 1829.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed on the 24th December, 1828, in the words following, to wit: "Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before the Senate at the next session a statement showing the amount of moneys appropriated, the quantity of public lands, with their value at the minimum price, which have been granted, and the amount of the percentage on the proceeds of the lands sold by the United States reserved and pledged to the several States admitted into the Union since the adoption of the Constitution, for the purposes of education and the construction of roads and canals within and leading to said States, specifying the amount received by each State, as far as practicable," and which has been referred to this office, I have the honor to submit the accompanying tables, marked No. 1 to No. 9, inclusive.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 7, 1830.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 6, 1830.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 20th of January, 1829, directing the Secretary of the Treasury "to procure information, and report to the House, what quantity of vacant land, belonging to the United States, yet remains in that part of the State of Tennessee lying south and west of the line established by the act of Congress, approved April 18, 1806, commonly called the 'Congressional Reservation Line;' what quantity of the land south and west of said line has been appropriated to the satisfaction of North Carolina claims, and what portion has been otherwise appropriated; what portion of the land now vacant south and west of said line is of any, and of what, value; whether it is in compact bodies, or detached parcels, or small pieces; and whether the same could, in his opinion, be surveyed and brought into market, according to the present land system of the United States, so as to defray the expenses of doing so, or so as to yield any profit from the sales, or according to the land system of Tennessee, or any other plan he may suggest," I have the honor to transmit a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the accompanying letter and map, received from the secretary of the State of Tennessee, which contain all the information collected by the department in relation to the several matters included in the direction of the House. On the point upon which the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury is required, I have the honor to state that I concur in the views presented in the communication of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 17, 1829.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, dated the 20th January, 1829, requiring the Secretary of the Treasury "to procure information, and report to the House of Representatives, at the next session of Congress, what quantity of vacant land, belonging to the United States, yet remains in that part of the State of Tennessee lying south and west of the line established by the act of Congress, approved April 18, 1806, commonly called the 'Congressional Reservation Line;' what quantity of the land south and west of said line has been appropriated to the satisfaction of North Carolina claims, and what portion has been otherwise appropriated; what portion of the lands now vacant south and west of said line is of any, and what, value; whether it is in compact bodies, or in detached parcels, or small pieces; and whether the same could, in his opinion, be surveyed and brought into market according to the present land system of the United States, so as to defray the expenses of doing so, or so as to yield any profit from the sales, or according to the land system of Tennessee, or any other plan he may suggest," which was referred to this office, I addressed to Daniel Graham, esq., secretary of state for the State of Tennessee, the letter marked A; and in reply thereto, I have received the accompanying communication, marked B, from which it would appear that the quantity of land in the State of Tennessee lying west and south of the line commonly called the Congressional Reservation Line is 6,840,000 acres, of which 942,378 acres were granted by North Carolina previous to the act of cession, and the amount of the adjudications under the laws of Tennessee is equal to 3,550,413* acres, warrants for which have been, or may be, entered within the limits referred to, leaving the quantity of 2,383,824 acres of unappropriated lands subject to the disposition of the United States. In a report made from this office, dated January 18, 1828, and submitted to Congress, the quantity of land lying in the State of Tennessee, south and west of the Congressional Reservation Line, was estimated at 8,500,000 acres. The whole of this portion of the State of Tennessee has been surveyed and divided into ranges and sections, or townships of five miles square, a connected plat of which accompanies the communication of Mr. Graham. If that plat be correct, it will be found to contain upwards of five hundred and twenty-eight sections or townships, including the fractions, and estimating an entire section at 16,000 acres. The quantity of the land in the whole district will be found to correspond very nearly with that heretofore reported from this office, and would make the quantity of unappropriated land upwards of 1,500,000 more than that stated in the communication from Mr. Graham. Whether this discrepancy arises from error in calculation, or from error in laying down the connected plat of the whole district, I am unable to say.

* There is a discrepancy in Mr. D. Graham's statement as to this item. He states it in one part of his communication as 2,550,413 acres, and in another at 3,550,413. Which latter amount is assumed as the correct one, because it corresponds with his balance of the unappropriated lands.

From an inspection of the plat furnished by Mr. Graham it will appear that the unappropriated lands lie in detached parcels; and as 3,500,000 acres of this land have been entered by selection at the option of the claimants, there can be no doubt that very nearly all the lands of the best quality have been appropriated, and that a very small portion of the residue could be sold at the minimum price of the United States lands, until further progress shall have been made in the settlement and improvement of the country, and a greater demand thereby created for the inferior lands.

By a law of the State of Tennessee, passed October 23, 1819, (see Laws of Tennessee, vol. 2, p. 555,) which is very special and particular in its injunctions, this district of country has been divided into ranges and sections of five miles square, varying from the present system of surveying the lands of the United States as to the extent of the sections or townships, but corresponding in this respect with the military townships in Ohio, and which are readily divisible into lots of 100 and of 50 acres. These surveys having been made at the expense of the United States, (that is, the surveyors were paid the amount of their respective accounts in land warrants, at two dollars per acre, which were subject to be entered in this district of country,) there would be no necessity to resurvey the ranges and townships agreeably to the existing laws of the United States; and by employing the surveyor appointed by the State of Tennessee in each separate surveying district, and making him or some other person in each district the entry taker, allowing a percentage on the amount of money paid into the treasury, and no salary; and by adopting, in part, the existing regulations of the State of Tennessee, it is believed that these lands may be brought into market without any extraordinary expense as to the surveying of them, and that they will sell at the minimum prices in due proportions, and in equal periods, with the public lands of similar quality in the adjoining States and Territory of Arkansas. Any disposition of the public lands in a State by which they can be brought into market at a price less than the minimum price of the other public lands operates injuriously on all the other States and Territories where the public lands may lie, and is in contravention of the general principle heretofore pursued, by which equal encouragement has been afforded to the progress of population in each State and Territory in which the public lands are, so far as it respects the sale of those lands.

The construction given to the act of Congress approved April 4, 1818, by the State of Tennessee, and the laws passed by that State in pursuance of such construction, have virtually annulled the provisions of the first condition of the second section of the act of Congress approved April 18, 1806, and those of the third section of said act. It may, however, be proper to add, that no contract between the State of Tennessee and the United States could impair the rights of the holders of land warrants bona fide issued, or of the claimants to lands granted under the laws of North Carolina, passed previous to the act of cession, and that the whole tenor of the legislation of Tennessee has been in a spirit not only of good faith, but has manifested great liberality in relation to the claims derived from the State of North Carolina.

By the act of Congress approved April 18, 1806, provision was made for the reservation of lands for the use of schools from that portion of the lands thereby ceded to the State of Tennessee; and whatever disposition may be made of the unappropriated lands south and west of the congressional boundary line, the uniform practice of the government would require that a quantity of land equal to one thirty-sixth part of the whole district should be appropriated for the use of schools.

All which is respectfully submitted.

GEO. GRAHAM.

Hon. SAMUEL D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 24, 1829.

SIR: Having been informed that your office can furnish most if not all the information required by the enclosed resolution of the House of Representatives, I have taken the liberty to address you on the subject, and to request that you will furnish to me, so far as the records of your office will enable you, answers to the following questions:

1. What quantity of land is contained in that part of the State of Tennessee lying south and west of the line established by the act of Congress approved April 18, 1806?

2. What quantity of lands south and west of said line has been appropriated to the satisfaction of the North Carolina claims?

3. What portion of these lands has been otherwise appropriated?

4. What is the estimated value of the unappropriated lands lying south and west of the line above referred to?

Having been informed that the surveying districts into which the State of Tennessee has been divided (those numbered 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13) correspond with the boundaries of, and include the whole of the lands reserved to the United States by the act of April 18, 1806; and being also advised that there is a connected plat of each of the above land districts in your office designating, from actual surveys, the boundaries of each, I have, if this information be correct, to request that you will furnish copies of the connected plats of each of these land districts. If there are no such connected plats in your office, it is probable that they can be furnished by the surveyors of the respective districts, of which fact you will please advise me.

In answering the fourth question, as stated above, it will probably be expedient to ask for information from the surveyor of each of the districts, or other persons having competent knowledge on the subject.

A reasonable compensation for the expense and trouble of procuring and furnishing the information required will be allowed to you when an appropriation is obtained, and which will be asked for on the account that may be rendered by you.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEO. GRAHAM.

DANIEL GRAHAM, Esq., Secretary of the State of Tennessee, Nashville.

B.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Nashville, Tennessee, August 20, 1829.

SIR: In answering the various interrogatories contained in your letter of the 24th of April last, I have the honor to state:

1. That the whole quantity of land in that part of Tennessee lying south and west of the established line, by the act of Congress approved April 18, 1806, amounts to		6,864,000
2. The quantity granted by North Carolina previously to the cession act.....	942,375
Adjudicated by Tennessee up to the 1st day of January, 1820.....	2,550,413
Adjudicated from January 1, 1820, to August 28, 1829.....	17,388
Leaving a balance of		2,353,824

Two millions three hundred and fifty-three thousand eight hundred and twenty-four acres of vacant and unappropriated land south and west of the line referred to.

The estimate of the quantity of land contained within the whole reservation is made from the official returns of the surveyors of the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th districts, on file in my office.

The quantity granted by North Carolina within that district of country may be a little over the amount here stated, as my researches have not included all, especially in the 7th and 8th districts; but it is sufficiently accurate for any object of general computation.

The item of 3,550,413 acres, adjudicated as valid warrants by the commissioners of Tennessee from 1807 to 1828, is ascertained by careful computations and additions, in which I have employed much time since the receipt of your communication. The warrants thus adjudicated have been all, or nearly all, located upon vacant lands of that country from time to time since the month of December, 1820.

The item of 17,388 acres is the amount of unsatisfied warrants adjudicated by me, as commissioner of land claims, since January, 1828, and none of these have been located or granted, as the surveyors' offices have not been open for receiving entries since 1827; but the unappropriated soil south and west of the line is considered pledged for their satisfaction, and there is no doubt but the general assembly will, at the approaching session, direct the offices to be re-opened for their location.

3. There has been very little of that country appropriated in any other manner—none, perhaps, but a site for the town of Pulaski, in the county of Giles, which was given by Congress to commissioners for that purpose previously to 1819, and the donation to General Green, of 25,000 acres, made by the government of North Carolina at the close of the revolutionary war.

4. In forming an estimate of value on the unappropriated lands we have very little assistance, except from the price of those warrants which have been issued since the surveyors' offices were closed, and which we expect will be admitted to entry in a few months. Of these I have heard of a sale to the amount of 5,000 acres by a gentleman of North Carolina to another of this place, at the price of 12½ cents per acre. This may be considered the minimum price, as smaller quantities have uniformly sold proportionably higher whenever a purchaser could be found, though cash sales are seldom effected at any price. In the summer of 1826 a large stock of 91,000 acres, claimed by the University of North Carolina and the colleges and common schools of this State, was, by direction of the legislature, divided into small parcels of 25 acres each, and sold at 50 cents per acre in cash.

You will herewith receive a connected plan of the whole congressional reservation, which I have formed from the returns of the principal surveyors of the different districts; and to meet, as near as may be, the idea contained in the latter part of the resolution of Congress, I have, with as much accuracy as practicable, laid down every survey made within the 11th and 12th districts. These returns do not come down as late as 1826, and, of course, none of the small entries made on any part of the 91,000 acres above alluded to are here represented. As the labor of laying down the surveys in all the districts would be unnecessarily great, I selected one on the Mississippi border and one on the Tennessee, as exhibiting very nearly an average aspect of the whole. The 7th, 8th, and 9th districts have, perhaps, a larger proportion of vacant land; the 10th is about equal to the 12th; and the 13th is almost entirely appropriated, except in the Mississippi, Reelfoot, and Obion swamps, and on a small portion of its eastern boundary.

A single glance at the face of the 11th and 12th districts, as here fairly represented, must confirm the opinion that the vacant residuum cannot, with any reasonable probability, "be surveyed and brought into market, according to the present land system of the United States, so as to yield any profit from the sales;" but according to the plan adopted by Tennessee north and east of the reservation line, it is probable that one-twentieth part would be granted at 12½ cents per acre, and perhaps one-fifth of the residue at one cent. A larger proportion has not been granted north and east of the line at those prices, where offices of entry and survey have for many years been open in each county.

In making appropriations heretofore, both under the laws of North Carolina and Tennessee, the holders of warrants were permitted to act on very ample discretion. They were confined by nothing but natural boundaries and the lines of older appropriations; and, in the exercise of their discretion, they laid down and shaped their locations so as to include the greatest possible quantity of good land within their several boundaries. In very few instances could it now be found that an entire section of 640 acres could be laid down on vacant land that would sell, in cash, for as much as would pay the expense of surveying, especially when it is considered that the lines of the different tracts already appropriated could not be sufficiently known to the government surveyor without the expense of a resurvey.

No one can safely venture a positive opinion as to the quantity or portion of the remaining 852,237 acres that might be granted at a graduated price by opening offices for entry in each county, as now practiced by us; but no one at all acquainted with the true situation of the country can for a moment doubt the impracticability of laying off and selling what now remains, upon any system like the present, as practiced by the United States, without positive loss to the government.

Respectfully submitted.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS TO ACTUAL SETTLERS, AND THE APPOINTMENT OF A SURVEYOR GENERAL FOR THAT TERRITORY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 11, 1830.

A MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States, praying a pre-emption right to every actual settler in Arkansas.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, bound by obligations which no consideration can induce them to forego, would humbly suggest to your honorable bodies the propriety of granting to every actual settler now within the limits of our Territory the right of pre-emption. When they reflect upon their remote situation from the protecting arm of the general government; their weakness in point of population; their almost total want of the means of defence; and their proximity to the fearless and vindictive savages, they feel, perhaps, a too certain confidence in the success of their application. Secure to the citizens of Arkansas a right to them so invaluable, and you at once create a love of country which no disadvantage can abate. Give to them a security that their homes are their own, and bravely will they defend them. A few years since Arkansas was a remote and unexplored wilderness, and many, indeed, were the difficulties which opposed the progress of emigration. Those difficulties have, however, been measurably surmounted by the bold and the fearless. Here they came when all was gloom; here they established their homes, and here they are rearing a hardy race of sons. Exposed to all the privations of the wilderness, they have settled upon the public domain, because, upon their arrival here, no lands had been surveyed or offered for sale. The advantages of civilization, the society of friends and relations were abandoned by them under the fullest conviction that here they could obtain farms for their children, and justly claim the soil which yielded them support. In making these observations, however, they acknowledge, with the best feelings, the generosity of the general government in making appropriations for the internal improvement of Arkansas. The western wilds are daily advancing in population, and would it not be policy in the general government to cheer the labors of the honest settler? What will more effectually do so than a grant of a pre-emption right? Other countries have made donations to her settlers; and the country adjoining our territory has offered land as an inducement to emigration. Arkansas has felt the effect of this Mexican liberality, because some of her most flourishing settlements have been drained of their population. The settlers of Arkansas have made lasting and valuable improvements, which tend to enhance the value of her lands; and it not unfrequently happens that they are made the prey of unprincipled speculators. Will the general government, we say, can they, deny to us this request? Will they say to this poor and honest settler that he shall be driven from his home and his fireside by the remorseless speculator? Believing, as we do, in the bold and liberal policy of the present general government, we cannot entertain, we spurn the idea that this protection will be withheld, particularly when we reflect that at least two-thirds of our settlers will be benefited by it. We ask not of the general government a donation of the land; we ask not a diminution of the price; we ask only a preference in paying that price. Actuated by no sordid motive; conscious of the justness and reasonableness of our request, we present this subject to the consideration of the national assembly, with an honest conviction that it will meet with that liberality which has ever characterized that body.

JOHN WILSON, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CHAS. CALDWELL, President of the Legislative Council.

Approved November 5, 1829.

JOHN POPE.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas humbly represents to your honorable bodies that the establishment of a surveyor general's office at some suitable place in Arkansas will not only be of great importance and benefit to the Territory, but certainly much conducive to the interest of the United States, so far as that interest may be connected with the unsurveyed public lands within the Territory of Arkansas. The general assembly will briefly unfold to the view and attention of Congress some of the reasons which have induced them to present this their memorial; from a due and attentive consideration of which by Congress, they conceive the propriety and reasonableness of their present application will appear manifest. In the first place, they will observe that a great portion of the public lands yet to be surveyed within this Territory are remote from the present surveyor's office from four to six hundred miles. This being the fact, a consequence resulting from it is, that the deputy surveyors who contract to survey those lands, and who are frequently under the necessity of calling on the surveyor general for instructions after they commenced their labors, must meet with great difficulty and inconvenience on account of the great distance between the lands to be surveyed and the surveyor general's office. The difficulty and inconvenience here suggested create a suspension of the deputy surveyor's operations until the necessary communications can be made to and from the surveyor general at St. Louis, which is not only ruinous to the deputy surveyors, but detrimental to the United States and the Territory, on account of the great delay thus occasioned by the execution of the surveys. In the second place, the general assembly will further observe that there are large portions of unsurveyed lands on the borders of our great water-courses which ought to have been surveyed years ago; but the almost impenetrable canebrakes, with numerous other obstacles, will always deter surveyors from undertaking at the present prices, especially when it is well known that they would have, in addition, to encounter the same inconvenience and difficulty; the same ruinous expense as that herein above mentioned, occasioned by the time occupied in necessary communications from the theatre of their operations to the office of the surveyor general at St. Louis. The price for surveying land in Arkansas is three dollars per mile, and without the great advantage of having a surveyor general's office within her borders. In the Territory of Florida it is four dollars per mile, with the office of a surveyor general within her bosom. It then appears that the contractors or practical surveyors in Florida have a greater incentive to execute their contracts with fidelity than those of Arkansas, inasmuch as they receive more pay, and have a public instructor, comparatively speaking, within a few links of their compass; yet, as a reason for giving to Florida this two-fold advantage, it is not demonstrated that the public lands within her borders are more arduous and difficult to survey than those in Arkansas. Thirdly. From what has previously been stated in this memorial, the general assembly would respectfully propound to your consideration whether the vast quantity of land yet to be surveyed in this Territory does not seem urgently to require at your hands the establishment of a surveyor general's office therein? Whether the very remote situation of the surveyor general from the unsurveyed lands in this Territory does not render it highly improbable to suppose that he can possess that accurate and correct information of the country so absolutely necessary to the judicious letting of contracts? The surveys of the public land hitherto made in this Territory have been executed principally by surveyors from Missouri and Illinois. Arkansas has, within her Territory, a sufficient number of resident competent surveyors to execute the surveys of the public lands within her borders. In concluding this memorial, it is submitted whether the number and respectability of the population of the Territory, and its daily increase, do not entitle it to the office of a surveyor general?

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 11, 1830.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of John McDonogh, of the city of New Orleans, reported:

That petitioner claims a tract of land on the river Mississippi, in the State of Louisiana, of 14 arpents in front by 80 in depth, equal to 1,120 arpents. That, in support of his claim, he exhibits a deed of sale from Julian Poydrass to Francis Pausset, dated March 20, 1797; a copy of the appraisement of said land, after the death of Pausset, at $3,000, and made February 12, 1803; copy of the probate sale of the same to Michel Mahier for $5,500, on June 2, 1804; a copy of sale from said Mahier to Thomas Dunford, of said land, for $5,500, on July 26, 1806; and, lastly, a sale from said Dunford to petitioner of the land, in consideration of $6,500, dated October 10, 1823.

The petitioner also claims another tract of land, situated on the river Amite, of 1,200 arpents, as having been granted to Domingo Assaretto, by Governor Miro, on February 18, 1788. It appears that the said land was, at different periods, sold for the taxes due thereon, by the sheriff of the parish of St. Helena. That the first sale made for that purpose was of 300 arpents, which was adjudicated to Shepperd Brown & Co., of which petitioner was a partner. The second sale of the remainder of the tract now claimed appears to have been sold to Shepperd Brown, under whom petitioner claims title, but no evidence of the fact appears.

In regard to the first claim, your committee cannot recommend its confirmation, inasmuch as there is no evidence offered of the existence of a title in Poydrass, under whom petitioner claims the land. The several transfers from him to petitioner are satisfactory; and, from the prices paid by the successive vendees, and especially by the last, they cannot doubt that the title, at the respective periods of sale, was considered as good. They are fully induced to this favorable opinion of the claim from the fact that the sale from Poydrass to Pausset, and the appraisement and sale of the land after his death, was made under the government of Spain. Your committee, therefore, report a bill, authorizing the register and receiver of the land office at St. Helena to receive evidence, and report on the claims in the same manner as if they had been entered during the time that the office was open for that purpose.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 11, 1830.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the documents and accompanying testimony of the heirs of Alexander Boyd, deceased, to 300 arpents of land, situated on the river Amite, in the State of Louisiana, reported:

That it appears that said tract of land was regularly surveyed for Alexander Boyd, on the 29th August, 1799, by Carlos Trudeau, royal surveyor of the province of Louisiana, and, as he states, in virtue of an order from Don Carlos de Grand Pré, governor of the district, under date of November 6, 1798.

On the 24th March, 1804, the ancestor of claimants obtained a regular patent for said land from Don Juan Ventura Morales, intendant of the province of West Florida, in which he declares that the same had been surveyed by Trudeau, and that it had been granted to the claimant by Manuel Gayoso De Lemos, governor of the provinces, on the 31st October, 1798.

The first section of the act of Congress of March 3, 1819, recognizes all complete grants as valid made by the Spanish government prior to December 20, 1803, being the period of the delivery of Louisiana by France to the United States. The question then is, whether such complete grant, in favor of said Boyd, for the land now claimed did exist prior to that date?

The customary mode of obtaining land from the Spanish government was by petitioning the governor of the district or post, specifying the land and quantity prayed for. This petition, accompanied with such remarks as he might think proper to make, was forwarded by him or petitioner to the governor of the provinces, who made an order directing the land to be surveyed, and, if found to be vacant, &c., that the prayer of the petitioner be granted.

The survey in this case having been made, in 1799, by order of the governor of the district, together with the practice and usage of the province that required a previous grant or order from the intendant of the provinces, added to the declaration of Morales, who succeeded De Lemos as intendant, that the said land had not only been surveyed by the royal surveyor, but granted by his predecessors on the 31st October, 1798, induces your committee to come to a conclusion favorable to the claimants. Your committee are, however, of opinion that no power existed in the government of Spain after December 20, 1803, to make any valid disposition of the public domain in the territory in which this claim is situated, the same having been conveyed by the treaty of April 30, 1803, to the United States as a part of Louisiana.

Your committee, though not perfectly satisfied with the testimony to show the existence of a grant previous to December 20, 1803, for the land claimed, yet, considering the strong presumption of the fact raised by the evidence and circumstances of the case, the small quantity of land claimed, and the antiquity of the origin of title, recommend its confirmation as a donation, and for that purpose report a bill.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 767. [1ST SESSION.

CLAIM TO LAND IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 11, 1830.

Mr. TEST, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Moses E. Levy, reported:

The petitioner sets forth in his petition that he purchased a tract of land of one Catalina de Jeues de Los Hijuelos, of two thousand acres, in the year 1824; that the land lies in and forms a part of that tract of country in East Florida called the Big Hammock, or Big Swamp, near the head of the Oklewaha river, and which he says has been duly confirmed to him under the acts of Congress in that case made and provided; that the land was very valuable; that he had intended to make an immediate settlement on the same; that to facilitate his design, he disposed of a moiety of the land. He further sets forth in his petition that, since his purchase, and since the treaty of Moultrie with the Florida Indians, (which appears to have been made in the year 1823, one year before his purchase,) the United States have extended the Indian limits so as to include his two thousand acres of land, and that it has accordingly been assigned to the Indians, whereby it is totally lost to him. He therefore prays that, as by the act of the government he has lost his land, they will make him compensation for his loss.

The petition shows a fair case for relief if the proof corresponded with the statement. The only proof, however, submitted to the committee by the petitioner was the survey of two thousand acres of land, situate on the river Oklewaak, made in 1819 for the benefit of Catalina de Jeues Hijuelos. A certificate signed by Mr. Drysdale, (not under oath,) who certifies "that the foregoing is a plat and certificate of survey of a tract of land, which is part of a purchase of about 70,000 acres of land in East Florida, made by Moses E. Levy, in 1824, and that, with the exception of this 2,000 acres, and three other small tracts, the whole of the said 70,000 acres were held by grants of a larger quantity than the land commissioners were authorized to confirm; and this knowledge, he says, is derived from his having been employed as an attorney by him to draw the conveyances, and having, as his agent, paid a part of the purchase money," together with a deed from Catalina de Jeues de Los Hijuelos to the petitioner, made and executed by William Travers, her attorney in fact, (without showing the letter of attorney,) on the 10th day of February, 1825, for the same 2,000 acres of land, as the committee presume from the description. The above is all the evidence presented to the committee, as before mentioned.

The apparent fairness of the case presented in the petition induced the committee, with great labor, to seek among the records of the country for evidence in his behalf. Their search, however, has been fruitless; they have not been able to discover among these records any land of the description of those set forth in the petition confirmed by the commissioners to the petitioner. They do find that, in their returns made to the Secretary of the Treasury on the 31st day of December, 1825, 2,000 acres of land of the above description, recommended by them for confirmation to Catalina de Jeues de los Hijuelos, and which the act of Congress of February 8, 1827, (see Land Laws, page 926,) duly confirms to her. Then, in the first place, the petitioner fails in making out his title to the land, but it rather appears to be in another person. Suppose, however, his title to be good, it does not appear from any testimony before the committee that the land lies within the country lately assigned to the Indians.

Therefore, resolved that the said petitioner is not entitled to relief in this case.

ON AN APPLICATION TO BE ALLOWED TO SELL INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 11, 1830.

Mr. Clay, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the petitions of Conaleskee, (commonly called Challenge,) James Ore, Giles M'Anulty, and George Stiggins, reported:

That the three first named individuals, being heads of Cherokee Indian families, claiming and possessing reservations under a treaty made with that tribe of Indians on the 8th day of July, 1817, state they are dissatisfied with their residence among the whites, by whom they are viewed as inferiors, and treated with contempt and contumely; that they are desirous to remove beyond the Mississippi, and reside among their brethren and equals; that they cannot do so without incurring a forfeiture of the interest they hold under that treaty; and some of them state that they have not the means of removal, unless, by a relinquishment from the United States, they are enabled to sell the lands which they hold. George Stiggins states, in substance, that he holds a like reservation under the treaty made with the Creek Indians, at Fort Jackson, on the 9th of August, 1814; that he has a family of children, whom he is desirous to rear and educate, but is poor and without the means to do so, unless the United States will make a like relinquishment and enable him to sell. His petition is accompanied by a certificate in favor of his pretensions to character and intellect; and that it would be of great benefit to himself and family to grant the prayer of his petition.

Your committee beg leave to state that, by reference to said treaties, it appears a forfeiture would occur, under that with the Cherokees, by a removal of the individual to whom the reservation has been allowed; but the title would vest in his heirs, without such condition of forfeiture, if he remained on the reservation during his life. Under the treaty with the Creek Indians a forfeiture would occur by the removal of the reservee or his descendants.

Your committee are satisfied of the correctness of the views presented by the petitioners in regard to the disadvantages under which they labor among the whites. By the constitution and laws of Alabama they are denied a participation in the privileges of citizenship, common to others, and consequently are viewed and treated as inferiors. From a situation so unpleasant, if not insupportable, it is reasonable they should desire to be relieved. The government of the United States can have no interest in refusing to grant the prayer of the petitioners, except on the contingency of their removal, as above stated, to which they might be compelled, in process of time, by the disagreeable circumstances which attend, and which must continue to attend, their residence among the whites. The contingency alluded to is remote, and altogether in the power of the reservees; and your committee believe that neither the interest nor policy of the United States requires the continuance of the restraint imposed by the terms of the treaty. They therefore ask leave to report a bill.

PROVISION FOR MAKING EMBANKMENTS, BRIDGES, AND ROADS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 12, 1830.

Mr. Livingston, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate, directing them to inquire whether justice and the interests of the United States do not require that provision should be made by law for constructing embankments and bridges and making roads on the lands belonging to the United States in the State of Louisiana, reported:

That the United States own large tracts of land, situated on the banks of the Mississippi, or those of several of its outlets into the lakes and the sea, and on the water-courses, called bayous, in that State; that all these lands are subject to be inundated by the annual rise of the Mississippi until they shall be protected by a levee or embankment; and until that work is performed will be of little or no value.

That such embankment is not only necessary to give value to the lands on which it is erected, but also to protect the adjoining plantations from inundation, and their proprietors, in many instances, from the loss of their crops and consequent ruin.

That every individual owning land so situated is obliged, under very heavy penalties, to make the levee in front of his land, and keep it in repair, on account of the great injury that would result to the community from a breach being made in any part of it. That each grantee of land, under the successive governments of France and Spain, in Louisiana, was also obliged to make and keep in repair a road, of forty feet wide, across the front of his plantation, and make and sustain bridges over the ditches, necessary for carrying off the water that leaked through the levee; all these being matters of the utmost consequence to the whole settlement, were ordered to be performed under heavy fines and forfeitures; and have always been placed under the care of a vigilant police, created for that purpose. When the lands were not granted, and the making of the levee was expensive, it was done, under the Spanish government, at the expense of the crown.

Since the change of government no provision has been made for this purpose by the United States. They own the lands, but are subject to none of the burdens that are imposed on individuals for its improvement, or to prevent its becoming the means of ruin to the adjoining planters. They pay no taxes, and their property is increased in value solely at the expense of the State, which has no interest in the lands, or of individuals less able to bear it; or, if this is not done, the lands remain unimproved, and injure the value of those which have previously been granted.

Under these circumstances, the committee think, in answer to the inquiries they have been directed to make, that both "justice and the interest of the United States require that provision should be made by law for making embankments, roads, and bridges, on the lands owned by the United States in the State of Louisiana," for which purpose they report a bill.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 13, 1830.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of the heirs of Baptiste Le Gendre, reported:

That petitioners claim six arpents of land in front, by forty in depth, on the river Mississippi, in the parish of West Baton Rouge, as having been granted to their ancestor by the Spanish government in the year 1785, and that the same has been constantly inhabited and cultivated by him and his heirs ever since.

From the testimony offered in support of this claim it appears that the said Baptiste Le Gendre received a grant for said land in 1785, and that the same has been, since that period to the present, cultivated by him and his heirs, the petitioners. It also appears that the said land was surveyed on March 9, 1806, by Ephraim Davidson, deputy surveyor, pursuant to an order from the surveyor of the lands of the United States south of the State of Tennessee, and in conformity with the request of the claimants.

Your committee are of opinion that the petitioners bring their claim within the principle established by the second section of the act of Congress of March 3, 1807, and that, had it been entered before the commissioners during the period in which they were authorized to receive them, it would have been confirmed under that act, in common with others resting upon no better evidence or higher title. The fact that this claim was not so entered is not, in the opinion of your committee, a sufficient cause for rejecting it, especially as the petitioners represent, as is probably the fact, that it was owing to want of intelligence in the individual who was then intrusted with the management and administration of their property.

Being of this opinion, your committee report a bill for their relief.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 13, 1830.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of Alexander Fridge, reported:

That the petitioner claims six hundred and forty acres of land in that part of Louisiana lying east of the Mississippi and Island of New Orleans, in virtue of habitation and cultivation, under the act of March 3, 1819. It appears from the testimony adduced in support of this claim that John Fridge, the father of petitioner, settled upon said land in the year 1799, and continued to inhabit and cultivate the same from that time until 1810, when it came into the possession of petitioner, who has inhabited and cultivated the same ever since; that by the act of Congress of April 25, 1812, the commissioner appointed to ascertain title and claims to land in the district in which this claim is situated was required to collect and report to Congress a list of the actual settlers who had no claim to land derived from the governments who had previously possessed the country.

The third section of the act of March 3, 1819, provides that the persons embraced in the list of actual settlers reported by the said commissioner not having any written evidence of claim, reported as aforesaid, shall, when it appears by the said list that the land claimed or settled on had been actually inhabited and cultivated by such person or persons in whose right he claims on or before the 15th day of April, 1813, be entitled to a grant for the land so claimed or settled on, as a donation, provided that the same shall not exceed six hundred and forty acres, &c. Your committee are of opinion that this claim is embraced in the principle established by the third section of the act before referred to, and, had it been entered upon the list of actual settlers, that it would have been confirmed by the same. The petitioner states that there has been no intentional neglect on his part; that he intrusted the entry of his claim to one of his neighbors, and that he remained, until lately, ignorant that he had neglected to do so. Your committee are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and for that purpose report a bill.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 13, 1830.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of François Isidore Tuillier, reported:

That the petitioner claims six arpents of land in front, by forty in depth, on the river Mississippi, in the parish of West Baton Rouge, State of Louisiana, as having been given to him in the year 1785 by the Spanish government, and constantly inhabited and cultivated by him from that time to the present. It appears from the evidence produced that the said land has been in possession of petitioner from 1785 to the present time; that the same was surveyed in 1806 by E. Davidson, United States surveyor.

Your committee recommend the confirmation of this claim, as similar to that of the heirs of Baptiste Le Gendre. They therefore report a bill.

REMEDIES FOR PREVENTION OF FRAUDS IN THE ADJUSTMENT OF LAND TITLES IN ARKANSAS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 14, 1830.

Mr. Storrs, of New York, from the Committee on the Judiciary, who were instructed by a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 22d day of December last to inquire into the expediency of extending the time for appeals from the decisions of the courts in the Territory of Arkansas, under the acts of May 26, 1824, and May 22, 1826, and providing such remedies as it may be in the power of Congress to adopt for the prevention of frauds on the United States under the said acts, reported:

That they have examined the subject so referred to them, and respectfully refer the House to the papers accompanying this report, and the documents communicated to the House with the President's message at the commencement of this session, (Doc. No. 2, pp. 317 to 328,) for the history of the proceedings in the superior court of the Territory of Arkansas under the said acts.

As doubts appear to have been entertained in the court of Arkansas of the power of the court to proceed by bills of review to examine how far any of the decrees under these acts were obtained by fraud, arising out of forgeries imposed on the court, the committee have reported a bill for confirming the jurisdiction of the court to proceed in that way to revise their decrees in cases where bills of review have been already filed, or may be hereafter filed, for that purpose, and to continue the powers of the court until the 1st day of July, 1831. The former acts, creating and continuing their powers, would otherwise expire on the 26th day of May, 1830; and, as the court has adjourned until the first Monday in April next, the remedy to the United States, founded on bills of review, would probably be substantially defeated without continuing them for a period which shall afford ample time to detect, and establish by proof, the numerous forgeries on which most of these claims were founded.

Under circumstances which clearly show that the liberal and generous policy of the government has been greatly abused by claimants under these laws, the committee have deemed it to be their duty further to recommend to the House, in the bill herewith submitted, several provisions, which shall more effectually defeat the success of fraudulent claims. It is manifestly proper that, until a revision of the decrees of the court can be obtained, the right of entering lands under them should be suspended; and that in every case the original warrants, orders of survey, grants, and concessions, on which the claims are founded, should be returned to the files of the court, or deposited in some public office of the government, before the lands are patented. The second section of the proposed bill brings the subject, hereafter, within the further review of Congress, where it can be more satisfactorily determined what further measures may be necessary for securing to fair claimants, only, the privileges granted by the acts in question. In the meantime, the investigations before the court in Arkansas, on the bills of review to be instituted there, will enable Congress to determine, from the evidence produced to the court, the true character of every claim.

A.

STATEMENT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

A statement for the Judiciary Committee.

Previous to January, 1828, there were but four applications to this office for patents for lands confirmed by the court of Arkansas, under the provisions of the act approved May 26, 1824. The entries, in these cases, had been made at the land office at Batesville, and patents were issued. In the months of February and March, 1828, the land officers at Little Rock transmitted the papers in relation to seven claims that had been confirmed by the court, and on which patents were claimed. The letter from those officers, marked No. 1, and dated March 1, 1828, produced an impression on my mind that many of these claims were spurious; and, as a bill was then before the Land Committee for extending the provisions of the act of May, 1824, I enclosed a copy of this communication to the chairman of that committee.—(See letter No 2.) The provisions of the act of 1824 having been extended by the act of May 24, 1828, immediately after the adjournment of Congress I returned to the land officers at Little Rock the papers in all the cases which they had transmitted to this office, for the reasons assigned in the letter No. 3, dated June 3, 1828. In the month of September, 1828, the papers in five other cases were transmitted by the land officers at Batesville to obtain patents. In two of these cases patents were issued, and the others disposed of as stated in the letter No. 4, dated October 9, 1828. Subsequent investigation, however, has satisfied me that those two patents have been improperly issued. It thus appears that in October, 1828, all the applications for patents made to this office had been either patented or the papers returned for further evidence of title. In the months of December, 1828, and January, 1829, thirty or forty claims were received from the land officers at Little Rock and Batesville. By a comparison of the papers in those cases, it appeared that the assignments generally were proved by the same persons before the same officers, and that the signatures purporting to be those of the individuals to whom the land had been confirmed were evidently written by not more than two or three different persons. It was these circumstances which confirmed my previous suspicions of the fraudulent character of nearly all of those claims, and caused the suspension of issuing patents until further investigation. I was informed by the Attorney General that he had made, or would make, an application to the Supreme Court for a mandamus to bring up a number of cases from Arkansas, and that it would be advisable to await the result of that motion. The application was refused by the court, on the 16th of March, 1829, and the course as pointed out in my letter to Mr. Roan, No. 5, dated April 30 last, was then decided on and pursued.

REGISTER'S AND RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Little Rock, March 1, 1828.

SIR: We have been applied to for the location of some Spanish claims in this land district, confirmed by the supreme court for this Territory at their last (December) term. At first we had an idea of not taking any steps relative to their location until we had communicated with you upon the subject, for the reason that those assignments by the original claimant are of a date long anterior to the decrees of the court confirming the land to, and in the name of, said original claimants.

Now, we are bound to presume that those assignments never were presented to the court; or if presented, were deemed insufficient by the court.

We have, however, on more mature reflection, made out three certificates, embracing all the applications of the kind at present before us, which we have the honor herewith to enclose you, together with a monthly abstract of the same. You will also herewith receive the three decrees of confirmation, with all the evidence of the transfer of title, such as it is.

Our motive for this course was to bring all the papers before you as they were presented to us; we will make no entry of them on our books until we hear from you. Whether or not the circumstance above referred to shall interpose any bar to the location of those claims is respectfully submitted to your consideration.

We are informed that there were about fifty thousand acres of land confirmed by the court at their last December term; and from the disposition that is making of those claims there will likely be little or no land sold at this office for some years to come, unless there should be an increased demand for it.

We are, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servants,

BEN. DESHA.
B. SMITH.

No. 2.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 28, 1828.

SIR: As there is a bill now before your committee extending the time for filing petitions under the provisions of an act "enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," I enclose for your information a copy of a letter received from the register and receiver of the land office at Little Rock.

Should it be deemed expedient to extend the time of filing claims under the above-mentioned act, I would suggest the propriety of so amending the existing law as to permit no claims to be hereafter filed except such as had been submitted to the tribunals which had been constituted by law for the adjustment of land claims in the present limits of Missouri and Arkansas, and to authorize the district attorney to enter an appeal in all cases where he might deem it necessary.

The three particular cases referred to in the letter of the register and receiver do not appear, from the records of this office, to have been submitted to any of the former tribunals for adjusting land claims.

With great respect, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Hon. J. C. ISACKS, Chairman of Committee on Public Lands, H. R.

No. 3.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 3, 1828.

GENTLEMEN: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st ultimo, with the papers therein stated.

The following certificates, with the assignments, are herewith returned, for the reasons hereinafter stated:

Certificate No. 2, issued in favor of Allen M. Oakley and John Clark. The copy of the decree of confirmation should be under the seal of the court. The assignment from Sevier to Robert Crittenden must be properly acknowledged, and the assignment from Crittenden is defective, inasmuch as the name of Allen M. Oakley is mentioned in one part of the assignment only.

Certificate No. 3, issued in favor of Allen M. Oakley and John Clark. The copy of the decree is not attested by the seal of the court. There is no evidence that John Dodge, before whom F. Vaugine acknowledged his transfer to R. Crittenden, was at that time a justice of the peace. The assignment from Crittenden is to John Clark only, and is neither acknowledged nor witnessed. The name of Allen M. Oakley is not mentioned in any of the assignments, and therefore ought not to appear in your patent certificate.

Certificate No. 4, issued in favor of Edward Johnson. The assignment from James Scull to Allen M. Oakley and John Clark is dated the 28th of November, 1826, and is neither acknowledged nor proven On the same paper there is an assignment, without date, from D. E. McKenney, as attorney in fact of James Scull, to John Clark, neither witnessed nor acknowledged. The assignment from Oakley and Clark is not acknowledged nor witnessed, and, being dated one day prior to Scull's assignment to them, to wit, the 27th November, 1828, cannot be recognized.

Certificate No. 5, in favor of Robert D. Gibson; No. 6, of Elijah Stuart, and No. 7, of Allen M. Oakley, are all dated the 29th of February, 1828. In these cases the persons to whom the certificates were issued claim in virtue of assignments dated prior to the confirmation by the court to the original grantees. Your certificate should always be issued in favor of the persons to whom the court confirms the claims, or to their assignees, under transfers dated subsequent to such decree. Some defects in the assignments are noted on the papers.

A certificate, No. 5, dated 17th April, 1828, in favor of Abraham Stuart. The assignment from A. H. Sevier to John Wilson, and the power of attorney from Wilson to John Clark, are not acknowledged; and the assignment from John Clark, as the attorney of Wilson, to Stuart, is not witnessed nor acknowledged.

Certificate No. 6, dated 17th April, 1828, in favor of Abraham Stuart, D. E. McKenney, as attorney in fact for James Scull, transfers to A. M. Oakley and J. Clark; this assignment should be properly acknowledged. The transfer from Oakley and Clark to Stuart is neither witnessed nor acknowledged.

Certificate No. 7, dated 17th April, 1828, has the same defects as are noted in the case of No. 6.

Having issued certificates Nos. 5, 6, and 7 on the 29th of February last, the three last-named certificates should have been numbered 8, 9, and 10.

Your information that the court, at its last term, confirmed claims to the amount of 50,000 acres, in small tracts, has caused great surprise, and as numerous forged and fraudulent cases have been presented to the officers in Louisiana for confirmation, I am apprehensive that similar attempts have or will be made to procure the confirmation of cases in your Territory founded on forged papers, and I think it very desirable that the original Spanish papers upon which the confirmations have been made should be examined by some person fully competent to judge of their genuineness, and also that the district attorney should be placed on his guard in relation to such claims.

Suspicion is also attached to some of the assignments herewith returned; witness the great discrepancy in the manner in which the name of Allen M. Oakley is signed.

I have to request that you will be particularly cautious in examining the papers presented to you for location prior to their being sent to this office.

With, &c., &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

The REGISTER AND RECEIVER, Land Office at Little Rock, Arkansas Territory.

No. 4.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 9, 1828.

GENTLEMEN: Your abstracts of certificates, issued during the months of July and August last, for lands located under the 11th section of the act of the 26th May, 1824, with the certificates, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, have been received.

The law allowing an appeal to the Supreme Court in the case of Sylvanus Phillips, the decree has been submitted to the Attorney General of the United States to ascertain whether such an appeal has been or will be taken.

Your certificate, No. 7, in favor of R. Crittenden, assignee of William Scruggs, includes the west fractional half of the southwest fractional quarter of section 18, 13 north, 6 west, but by the entry No. 104, in your list of pre-emptions allowed between the 1st of August and 16th October, 1820, I find that quarter granted as a pre-emption to Wm. Moore, under Francis Fulcher. The case is suspended for explanation on the subject of this apparent confliction between the location and pre-emption.

The assignment from John J. Bowie to Wm. D. Ferguson, received with certificate No. 9, is proved before James Livingston by the subscribing witness; but there is no evidence to show that Livingston was a justice of the peace. The assignment is returned to procure the certificate of the clerk of the county to that effect.

Enclosed you have two patents—one founded on certificate No. 6, in favor of John H. Egner and Charles McArthur, the other on certificate 8, in favor of Morgan Magness.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

The REGISTER AND RECEIVER at Batesville, Arkansas Territory.

No. 5.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 30, 1829.

SIR: At the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, I enclose a copy of a letter from Mr. Wirt, for your information and guidance; and it is the desire of the President that your special and particular attention should be drawn to the cases in Arkansas, arising under the provisions of the act of 1824.

The following circumstances, alluded to in the letter of Mr. Wirt, have produced a strong suspicion that many of the claims presented to the court for the Territory of Arkansas are founded on papers that are not genuine.

First. The great number of cases that have been presented for claims under 500 arpents.

Second. The fact that very few, if any, of those claims were presented to the former commissioners or the recorder of land titles.

Third. It is evident that the assignments in many cases confirmed by the court, from the person purporting to be the grantee, and which have been presented to this office for the purpose of obtaining patents, are signed in the same handwriting.

It is therefore very important that a thorough investigation should be had, and the strictest proof required of the genuineness of the original papers on which the claim is founded. It is also very desirable that a re-examination of the original papers on which each claim has been confirmed by the court should be had by you, with the aid of some person well acquainted with the handwriting of the Spanish officer who signed the grant or order, and who may be particularly conversant with the manner in which the granting of lands was conducted under the Spanish government. I addressed a letter to the land officers at Little Rock some time since on this subject, but have received no answer.

If an individual who is competent to aid you in making this investigation, and who is entirely disinterested, cannot be procured in Arkansas, you will advise me of the fact, as the Executive may perhaps deem it expedient to procure a person to go from New Orleans, where it is presumed there are many individuals who could readily decide whether the original papers on file are genuine.

With great respect, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

SAM'L C. ROANE, District Attorney, Little Rock, Arkansas.

Extract of a letter from William Wirt, esq., dated Baltimore, April 20, 1829, addressed to the honorable Samuel D. Ingham, Secretary of the Treasury.

"The cases committed to my care, by this letter, will require great vigilance and energy as well as accuracy on the part of the district attorneys. There is reason to believe that extensive mischief has been already done in Arkansas by the successful pressure of these claims, and that mischiefs still more extensive are meditated. I refer you to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for a more particular elucidation of this remark, and I see no mode of combating these machinations successfully in that State but by extending the right of appeal to the Supreme Court to these factitious claims, which Mr. Graham understands to have been reduced in the amount of acres claimed, for the purpose of an appeal. It is proper, also, that the district attorneys should understand the act of 1824 to have been construed by the Supreme Court as authorizing an immediate appeal by them, without any previous consultation with the Attorney General, notwithstanding the 9th section of that act, which had been differently construed by myself as well as others. It would be better, therefore, that an appeal should be immediately entered in every case of a decision adverse to the government, where the law permits it, leaving it to the law officer of the government, in Washington, on a more deliberate consideration of the case, either to bring up the appeal or to dismiss it."

B.

LEBANON, Tennessee, July 20, 1829.

SIR: My necessary absence from the Territory of Arkansas has delayed the receipt of your letter of the 30th of April until yesterday, which accounts for the delay in replying to you.

On the subject of the adjudications of the Spanish land claims in Arkansas, I have but little hesitation in believing that some of the claims were forgeries, but so well executed as to deceive the most skillful persons we were able to procure for their inspection, and supported by proof that was satisfactory to the judges of the superior court. There appears to be (impliedly) an idea in your letter, as well as that of the late Attorney General, Mr. Wirt, that more was to have been expected from the exertions of the district attorney in preventing the confirmation of these claims. Had the government placed the means in my power, more, possibly, might have been effected. The proof to invalidate these claims, if any existed, was in the State of Louisiana, and in the Spanish language. The district attorney is the only officer connected with these adjudications who receives no additional compensation for his services; the court there having decided that no fees were to be taxed to him in cases where the cases were decided in favor of the claimant; if in favor of the government, then only ten dollars. A salary of $250 is far from an adequate compensation to enable me to procure interpreters, and to travel to Louisiana, and take depositions, and procure records in each case. However, when these cases first came before the court, I, at my own expense, went to Louisiana, and did procure the testimony in the case of James Ball, assignee of John Filhoil vs. The United States, for a large claim, including the celebrated Hot Springs on the Ouachita, and clearly proved the claim a forgery. However, this single case cost me near one hundred dollars. I then applied to Congress, giving a full view of the case, and my want of means to successfully defend those claims, by searching for testimony, which, for reasons unknown to me, was not granted. Yet, with the limited means in my power, I have succeeded in having struck from the docket more than 200 cases, and I hope

I shall be able successfully to defend such claims as may be hereafter presented in which any doubtful features may appear.

That those claims were successfully pressed on the court at one time was not to be attributed to me. I used every exertion and urged every argument in my power to procure time for further inquiry, but was overruled by the court.

The argument that so large a portion of those claims were under 500 acres was urged to the court, and had its weight with me in forming my opinion as to the incorrectness of many of those claims; but this was only a presumptive kind of evidence, that the court did not deem of that conclusive nature as to authorize a rejection of a specific claim in the absence of other testimony.

On the subject of a re-examination of the original papers in these cases much light might be elicited as to their fairness; but without the aid of some person from Louisiana it would be useless. I have, personally, but a very superficial knowledge of the Spanish language. There are but few persons in the Territory who know anything of the language, and those either ignorant or interested. All the members of respectability are retained by some one or other of the claimants.

If a re-examination of the original papers in each claim which has been confirmed by the court is wished for by the government, it would be desirable that a person qualified to make such examination should be procured from New Orleans, and I would suggest the propriety of this subject being referred to the President immediately, that the proposed examination should be had, say in October next, at Little Rock, as the next term of the superior court for the adjudication of said claims is to be held on the first Monday in that month.

Mr. Wirt's second objection, stated in his letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, as to the power of the Spanish officers to make these grants, the court in Missouri, acting under the law of 1824, required of the claimants to show the authority of the Spanish officers to make these grants. This point was directly made and urged to the court, and by the court overruled. In Missouri there has been no confirmations. The judges of the superior court in Arkansas were well apprised of the decision of Judge Peck, of Missouri, but adopted a different course of decision. Whether warranted in this opinion or not, you can judge as well as myself.

In conclusion, I have only to say, that I am of opinion that there will be few, or probably no more Spanish claims that will be confirmed. The court appears to be, at present, much on their guard as to the character of the claims presented.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM. C. ROANE.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq.,
Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington.

C.

LITTLE ROCK, November 8, 1829.

SIR: The term of the superior court for the adjudication of French and Spanish land claims has just adjourned, and I hasten to lay before you the proceedings that have been had in the court touching the claims that were pending, as well as those that have heretofore been confirmed by the court.

Every case on the docket, with the exception of three cases, (and those are probably good claims,) have been dismissed, and the law authorizing the filing of those claims having expired on the 26th of May last, (1829,) they can never be commenced again, so that the danger that you apprehended of a continuation of the court to confirm claims will now cease.

You will see by the enclosed papers, Nos. 1 and 2, the course that was taken by the district attorney to prevent the immediate and final trial of the cases confirmed by this court; a similar motion was made to apply to all the cases tried at the December term, 1827, of this court, say more than one hundred cases. Such was the disposition of the court, and such the press of the attorneys and other persons interested, that with every exertion and argument I could urge the court precipitately went into the trial without proper examination.

The papers enclosed, marked Nos. 3, 4, and 5, will show the exertions I made to keep the original papers within the control of the government, and will also exhibit the contradictory decisions of the court, at one time gravely proceeding to punish the clerk of this court, on a suggestion that he had suffered the original papers to be taken from his office, and ordering the papers to be kept within their proper files; and at a subsequent term, without any known cause, making a rule on the clerk to deliver the original papers to such persons as might make claim to them, and thereby putting it out of the power of the government to investigate the justice of the claims, by examining the papers, upon which the claims were founded.

The necessity of preserving the original papers within the call of the government I never ceased to urge to the court, but with what success the copy of the record, No. 5, will show you.

Paper No. 6, a copy of Colonel I. T. Preston's deposition, I enclose you, in order that you may be advised fully of the course I have adopted, and the reasons that have impelled me to take the course. I am not advised whether Colonel Preston has furnished you a copy of this paper; it is probable he did; lest he has not, I send it now.

Paper No. 7 is a copy of the bill I have filed, praying a review of the cases confirmed by the court. The charges made in the bill, as sworn to by myself, will fully explain to you my opinion of the cases. The bill, of which paper No. 7 is a copy, I have filed, with a view of seeing what the court would do in such cases, before I should proceed with the other cases that will depend on the same principles. In this case I was so fortunate as to get the assistance of Judge Searcy, who aided me in the argument, and from whom I received much assistance; this assistance was rendered by Judge Searcy, on the belief that the government would compensate him for those services. The land court has adjourned until the first Monday in April next. The law for adjudicating these claims expires on the 26th of May, 1830, so that there will not be time to take any effectual steps in the cases before the act of Congress will expire. The court refused to hold a term at an earlier period than the first Monday in April, as above stated.

Had the court made but short intervals between their terms, so as to have given time for investigating and reviewing the decisions or decrees heretofore entered, the cases might have all been reviewed, and probably reversed; but without an extension of the law, which is not desirable, (at least any extension that would suffer new claims to be filed,) nothing can be done to advantage.

I would suggest the propriety of laying this subject before the Attorney General for his opinion and instructions, and if Congress could be induced to take some steps on the subject that would arrest the patenting of the spurious claims that have been confirmed by this court, without the intervention of the court here, it would insure justice to the government more certainly and at a much less expense. A large portion of the claims confirmed ought never to be patented. Among the claims purporting to be signed by the governor general of Louisiana I find but two that appear to be the genuine signatures of either Miro or de Lemos, to wit, the claims of Kepler's heirs and of Miguel Gimbolet vs. The United States. The others, it seems, were manufactured in Louisiana, and brought to Arkansas by John J. Bowie, or James Bowie, and their agents. There is in Arkansas a powerful interest in favor of those claims. The property in them is widely diffused through every part of the country. A large portion of the land claimed in Arkansas is by virtue of these claims. Even before the confirmation, the persons who were the main actors in this business had sold and ramified the interest in them so extensively that the community were urged by self interest to see them confirmed. That the interest, since their confirmation, has still been further extended, is certainly true. With this view of the cases, I trust you will see what difficulties a review of these cases will encounter here; but under your instructions, and those of the Attorney General, everything shall be done that is within the compass of my power; and if further proceedings are determined on here, I would suggest the propriety of retaining Richard Searcy, esq., of Batesville, to assist me. He is a man of considerable legal ability, and the only lawyer of reputation that is not engaged on the part of the claimants. You have, doubtless, before this time, received Colonel Isaac T. Preston's report; if so, I know of nothing more that I can communicate to you on the subject at present that would be relevant to the business. I have communicated the result of the proceeding of the late term of the superior court to Colonel Preston.

Please let me hear from you at as early a day as practicable.

I am, with much respect, your humble servant,

SAMUEL C. ROANE,
United States District Attorney, Arkansas Territory.

BATESVILLE, Arkansas Territory, November 16, 1829.

SIR: Agreeably to my promise in my letter to you from Little Rock of the 8th instant, I again write to you on the subject of the bills of review which were filed in the superior court of the Territory against Edmund de la Husa and Pierre Godo. In the letter above alluded to, I mentioned that I would forward to you, from this place, copies of the bills filed. After writing that letter I was informed by Mr. Roane, district attorney, that he had forwarded to you the copies. It is therefore unnecessary that I should do so. I send you below a brief of the points urged by the opposing counsel against filing the bills.

This was a new subject to me, one on which I had not reflected, and which I had not time nor the opportunity of investigating between the time of my engagement and the filing of the bills. Since then, the more I have searched into the subject the more complicated and difficult I have found it to be. Since my return home I have examined the libraries at this place, and in twenty volumes of Vesey and six volumes of Johnson's Chancery Reports, and some other books, I have not been able to find a single instance in which a bill of review has been sustained. It is now certain that in all the libraries of the Territory no reported case can be found; and it may well be doubted whether the court will proceed without authorities to decree the necessary relief. There is a case in 4th Vesey, page 186, (Matthews vs. Warner,) in which a commission of review was granted; but that proceeding was very different and unlike the present case. It was also for error apparent on the face of the record. In the case in Hardin's Kentucky Reports, page 345, (Respass vs. McClanahan,) the court of appeals almost positively declare that none but written or record evidence can be received as a ground for a bill of review, and that it cannot be granted "when the facts consist in swearing only," as that would open a door to litigation and perjury.

The character of these cases distinguishes them from all others that ever occurred in any court. The grants were forged.

The only witnesses sworn were non-residents, whose characters were unknown in this county, and, although perjured, it was impossible to prove it without more time. The writs were served not more than thirty days previous to the day of trial. The depositions were frequently sworn to on the same day of the trial, leaving the United States no time or opportunity of producing contradictory testimony. The grants purported to be made in Louisiana, and the witnesses resided there also, and no proof could be adduced from any other place relative to the transaction. Add to this that about one hundred and twenty claims, precisely of the same character, were confirmed at the same time by the testimony of the same witnesses, (in some instances only one witness was sworn.) Against such a proceeding a court of equity must afford some mode of relief.

I hope shortly to receive your reply, with such information on the subject as you may think proper to communicate.

The next term of the court will be held on the first Monday of April next.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD SEARCY.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner, &c.

UNITED STATES vs. EDMOND DE LA HUSA.

Ashley and Crittenden, for the defendant, contended—

1st. That the court had not jurisdiction. Being constituted specially by an act of Congress to try the validity of certain claims, they sat as commissioners, and did not possess, as incident thereto, a general chancery jurisdiction.—(Cited act of Congress of May 26, 1824, page 101, &c.)

2d. If the court ever did possess jurisdiction to review its decrees, that power had expired May 26, 1829.—(Cited act of Congress of May 24, 1828, page 102.)

3d. That no new matter was alleged in the bill of review, and that all the points therein were before the court on a former hearing.—(Cited Maddock, Blake, Mitford, and Harrison, under the several titles of bills of review.)

4th. That none but record or written testimony could be a ground for a bill of review, and that discovered since the decree.—(Cited Hardin's Kentucky Reports, 342, Respass vs. McClanahan. Same, 451, Bowles vs. South.)

The court, after hearing counsel, ordered the bill to be filed, and that process issue, &c.

Superior Court for the adjudication of French and Spanish unconfirmed land claims.

JUAN TOLEDANO vs. THE UNITED STATES. } For the confirmation of 520 arpents of land.

The United States by their attorney, Samuel C. Roane, moves the court to postpone the final adjudication of this case until the next term of this court, for the following reasons, viz: The petition and subpœna in this case were served on the United States attorney within one month of the present term of this court; but more than the 15 days is allowed by law, and in consequence of this short notice the United States attorney has not answered his bill until the present term.

2d. He has not had a sufficient length of time to take counter depositions, if counter evidence does exist.

3d. There are many more cases pending in this court on the same principles, and similarly situated in all respects, and the attorney for the United States asks this continuance for the purpose of procuring such evidence as may exist on the part of the government.

Be it remembered, that when this case came on for trial the United States, by Samuel C. Roane, their attorney, moved the court to continue this case to the next term of this court, (which motion included all cases on the docket similarly situated,) for the reasons set forth in a written motion submitted to the court, marked A, and made a part of this bill of exceptions, which motion was submitted by Samuel C. Roane, United States district attorney, in his official capacity, without affidavit, which motion the court overruled and ordered the cases for trial at the present term of this court, to which opinion and judgment of the court the United States, by their attorney, Samuel C. Isaac T. Preston, being duly sworn in open court, doth depose and say, that he had been employed by the President of the United States to investigate certain claims to land in this Territory, in favor of which adjudications have been rendered by this honorable court, under the acts of Congress of May 26, 1824, and of May 22, 1826; in that capacity deponent has examined the records of this honorable court within the last week, and has been able to find and see the original requêts and orders of survey, which are the foundation of the claims and decrees in the following cases:

George Leonard vs. United States, Cypren Metoyer vs. same, Zeno Grittielle vs. same, James Huard vs same, Onez'me Lacomse vs. same, Juan Vachier vs. same, Valdre Dupless vs. same, Charles Oliver vs. same, Celestin Poire vs. same, Joseph Talbot vs. same, Louis Arnand vs. same, Allen Butler vs. same, Esteren Escallean vs. same, José Currino vs. same, Bernardo Lompeyrac vs. same, Valdre Martin vs. same, John B. Monsier vs. same, Louis La Branche vs. same, Pier Lattier vs. same, Valentine Beane vs. same, Joseph Cannon vs. same, Isaac McDaniel vs. same, Martin Duralde vs. same, Jaques Bossier vs. same, Jaques Escosslua vs. same, Edmond de la Housa vs. same, Jaques Lastrop vs. same, John Morian vs. same, Zeno Bordalon vs. same, Juan Louis Deviel vs. same, Marafate Dubois vs. same, Francis Rachel vs. same, Cyprean Dupre vs. same, Marcellian Fontenent vs. same, Juan Toledano vs. same, Thomas Waller vs. same, Michel Fontenant vs. same, Manuel Lastrop vs. same, George Jinks vs. same, Sosthene Clontier vs. same, José Duralde vs. same, Moria Moro vs. same, Trasemond Landry vs. same, August Genet vs. same, Leander Bayon vs. same, Gdallgo Moro vs. same, Baptiste Thebodiase vs. same, Nicholas Babillian vs. same, Martin Burgant vs. same, Charles Landro vs. same, Juan Duburgh vs. same, Julian Deveros vs. same, Michel La Burgois vs. same, Hugh Howard vs. same, Juan Aubert vs. same, Jean Innes vs. same, Marcellan Laysard vs. same, James Jones vs. same.

The orders of surveys in the above cases purport to have been issued by Governors Miro and Gayoso. Deponent is well acquainted with the genuine signatures of those governors, having a great many genuine records signed by them in his office, as register of the land office at New Orleans; and, moreover, is acquainted with the form and writing and spelling of orders of survey really issued by them; and from this knowledge, positively declares that the orders of survey filed and of record in the above cases are counterfeited, and were never signed or issued by those governors; he annexes and deposits with this affidavit three genuine orders of survey signed by Governor Gayoso, and states, for the information of this honorable court, that the orders of survey now on file in this court in the cases of John Kepler's heirs vs. United States, and Miguel Gimbolet vs. The United States, are genuine, and signed by Governor Miro. Deponent further states that he has, at Montgomery's Landing, a regular journal, kept by Governor Miro, of the orders of the survey issued by him, certified by Dr. Lopez de Arnest, his secretary, and also a regular journal of the orders of survey issued by Governor Gayoso, certified by himself; and deponent verily believes, from diligent searches made by him for concessions in Arkansas, that no one of the supposed orders of survey in the above cases are to be found in the said journals. The internal evidence of the falsity of said orders of survey deponent will exhibit in detail in open court, if this honorable court desires it; and he prays that the attorney of the United States may put his application for revision of these claims in due form, that the originals on file may be kept in the custody of the court and transmitted with commission to New Orleans to take the depositions of John Mercier and the Hon. Charles Fassier, who were clerks in the office of Governor Gayoso charged with the concessions of lands, and of other persons in New Orleans of the highest character, whom deponent can produce, acquainted with the signatures of Governors Miro and Gayoso and also with the laws and customs of the Spanish government of Louisiana with regard to concessions of land, and the forms and manner of granting land. As in duty.

No. 7.

To the honorable the judges of the superior court of the Territory of Arkansas, sitting in chancery:

Samuel C. Roane, attorney of the United States for the Territory of Arkansas, for and on behalf of the United States of America, respectfully showeth unto your honors, that Edmond de la Husa, alias Edmond de la Housa, at the December term, in the year 1827, of your honorable court, filed his petition or bill, stating that on the 3d day of May, in the year 1786, at New Orleans, in the then province of Louisiana, being then and there an inhabitant of ———, addressed a petition to ———, then governor of Louisiana and its dependencies, asking of the said governor a grant of a tract of land, in full property, containing fourteen arpents by the usual depth on the Cadran Bayou, which was of the waters of the Arkansas river, on the north side, and of the domain of his Catholic Majesty, situate in the now Territory of Arkansas, and within the jurisdiction of this court; and that afterwards, on the 5th day of May, 1786, at New Orleans, the said governor, who then and there had full power to grant lands, granted the prayer of the said petitioner, and gave unto him the aforesaid tract of land, containing fourteen arpents by the usual depth, and which he states will more fully appear by a reference to the copy of the said petition and grant thereto annexed and marked E, and which was prayed to be made a part of said bill. And it is further set forth in said bill that at the time said grant was made an order of survey was issued to the surveyor general of said province, which order was also stated to be annexed, and prayed to be made a part of said bill. And it is further set forth in said bill that, by virtue of said grant, concession, or order of survey, the said petitioner acquires a claim to said fourteen arpents of land, by the usual depth, which said claim was and is secured by treaty between the United States and the French republic of the 30th of April, 1803, and which might have been perfected into a complete title under and in conformity to the laws, usages, and customs of the government of Spain, under which said claim originated, had not the sovereignty of the country been transferred to the United States. And it is further set forth in the said bill that the said claim was never surveyed under the government of Spain or that of the United States; and that said petition, grant, and order of survey has never been presented to any board of commissioners for adjusting land titles within the knowledge of said petitioner. And it is further stated in said bill that the said petitioner believes that the said tract of land has been appropriated by the United States and patented to other individuals, to the said petitioner unknown, and that he had not the means of ascertaining; whereupon the said petitioner prayed that the said claim might be confirmed to him, in conformity to the principles of justice, and according to the laws and ordinances of the Spanish government, and agreeably to an act of Congress passed the 26th day of May, 1824, entitled "An act enabling claimants to land within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims;" and also prayed to be decreed the privilege of locating a like quantity of land elsewhere in said Territory of Arkansas, according to the provisions of the said law; and also prayed for such other and further relief as in justice and good conscience might belong, &c.

And therefore, at the said December term, 1827, of the said court, the United States, by Samuel C. Roane, their attorney for the Territory of Arkansas, appeared and answered said petition; and witnesses were examined and their depositions published, and the said cause came on for hearing at the term last aforesaid, whereupon it was decreed by your honorable court that said Edmond de la Husa have and recover of the United States the said five hundred and sixty arpents of land, to have and to hold the same to him and his heirs forever; and that the said complainant, or his legal representatives, have leave to enter the like quantity of land in any land office in the Territory of Arkansas, agreeably to the provisions of the above-recited act of Congress, which said decree now remains of record in this honorable court. But your orator, for and on behalf of the United States, avers and says, that the said United States are aggrieved by said decree, and that they ought not to be bound thereby, nor should any such decree have been made or pronounced against them; neither ought the said De la Husa to have recovered against the United States the said land claimed and set forth in the said petition and decreed to him as aforesaid; and the said decree is erroneous and ought to be reversed, and for error do, according to the course of this honorable court, assign the errors therein as follows:

1. Your orator, on behalf of the United States, says, and hopes to maintain, that the original petition and order of survey exhibited in this case is forged and corrupt, and was never signed by Miro, governor of Louisiana, as the same purports to have been.

2. The said petitioner, Edmond de la Husa, is a fictitious person, and had no real existence; and if he ever did exist he was dead at the time of exhibiting this bill.

3. The deposition of John Heberard, on whose testimony this claim was confirmed, is false and corrupt.

4. The original petition and order of survey exhibited in this case show upon the face of them that the writing was not made as early as the year 1786, but appears to have been executed long since, as will appear by reference to genuine original grants signed by said Miro, and now on file in this honorable court, in the cases of John Kepler's heirs and of Miguel Gimblet against the United States.

And your orator further, and on behalf of the United States, avers, that the said decree was obtained by fraud, covin, and misrepresentation; and he further avers that since the adjudication and decree was made in this case he has discovered new and important evidence, which, he believes, will enable him to prove the facts set forth herein, and which was beyond his control and not known to him at the hearing of this case, which he expects to be able to procure and exhibit to this honorable court on the rehearing of this case. For all which said error and imperfections in said decree your orator, for and on behalf of the United States, has brought this, his bill of review, and humbly conceives that they should be relieved therein. In tender consideration whereof, and for that there are divers imperfections and frauds in the said decree and proceedings, by reason whereof the same ought to be reviewed, reversed, annulled, and made void.

To the end, therefore, that the said decree, and all procedings thereupon, may be reversed, annulled, and made void, and that the said Edmond de la Husa and his confederates, when discovered, may answer the premises, and that the said United States may be relieved in all and singular the premises, according to equity and good conscience, &c. And may it please your honors to grant unto the United States your writ of subpœna to review and answer, directed to the marshal of the United States for the Territory of Arkansas, commanding the said Edmond de la Husa to appear before your honors and answer the premises aforesaid. And your orator, as in duty bound, &c.

SAMUEL C. ROANE,
Attorney of United States for Territory of Arkansas.

TERRITORY OF ARKANSAS:

Samuel C. Roane, being duly sworn, says, that the facts stated in the above bill, of his own knowledge, are true; and so far as they are stated upon the knowledge of others, he believes them to be true.

SAMUEL C. ROANE.

Sworn to before me this 19th day of October, 1829, in open court.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 774. [1ST SESSION.

CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 15, 1830.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of James Porliers, and of Alexander Gardipier, Jean Battiste Vine, and Joseph Jourdin, reported:

By an act of Congress approved on February 21, 1823, it was declared "that every person who, on the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twelve, was a resident of Green Bay, Prairie du Chien, or within the county of Michilimackinaw, and who, on the said day, occupied and cultivated, or occupied a tract of land which had previously been cultivated by said occupant, lying within either of said settlements, and who has continued to submit to the authority of the United States, or to the legal representatives of every such person, shall be confirmed in the tract so occupied and cultivated; provided, however, that no person shall be confirmed in a greater quantity than six hundred and forty acres." Commissioners were authorized to adjudicate on claims arising under the act; and the time limited for the exercise of their powers expired on the first day of November then next ensuing.

The petitioners have furnished evidence to prove that they were residents of Green Bay on the first day of July, 1812, and that each has occupied and cultivated a tract of land since that time, and has submitted to the authority of the United States, agreeably to the requirements of the act. The committee are of opinion that if the evidence had been submitted to the commissioners the claims of the petitioners would have been confirmed.

The petitioners, however, represent that, by reason of their absence and that of their witnesses, and the want of a direct communication being open in the fall of the year 1823 between Green Bay and Detroit, the place where the commissioners held their sessions, they were unavoidably prevented from furnishing evidence to support their claims within the limitation of the act, and now pray for a confirmation of their title.

The committee are of opinion that the reasons assigned by the petitioners for not obtaining their evidence and transmitting it to the commissioners are good and sufficient, and report a bill for their relief.

21st Congress.] No. 775. [1st Session.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 15, 1830.

Mr. Irvin, of Ohio, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of Ebenezer Cooley, with the accompanying documents, reported:

That on the 3d day of November, 1762, Louisiana was ceded by France to Spain, and possession given thereof by an order of the King of France bearing date April 21, 1764. In the year 1767 Joseph Bourgeat took possession of a tract of land at the mouth of the Bayou Lalaoache, on the Mississippi, and resided thereon with his family until the year 1774. During his residence on the land he cleared and cultivated about twenty-five acres of it, which, when he removed, he left in the possession of a tenant by the name of Jean, who resided on the land until 1779, when he was compelled to leave it in consequence of the unusual rise of the waters of the Mississippi in the spring of that year. The possession and improvement of the land is proved by three witnesses, to wit: François Grammillon, Simon Craigel, and Baptist Lafleur; two of them speak of the land being granted to Bourgeat, and Lafleur says he believes by Duplessis, commandant, and Ricard, judge. There is no evidence, other than the testimony of these witnesses, offered in support of the claim, and they are silent as to its boundaries and extent.

On the 1st of October, 1800, the Spanish government agreed to retrocede Louisiana to France, and on the 21st of October, 1803, France ceded it to the United States. By the third article of the treaty, the United States agreed that the inhabitants of the ceded territory should be protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property.

After Jean removed from the land in 1779, it remained unoccupied until after the year 1806. A new growth of timber had sprung up, and in point of fact it had again become a part of the forest. No written evidence of transactions anterior to the cession in 1803 has been proffered to the committee, and no excuse is assigned for its absence, from which the committee infer that no written grant was ever made to Bourgeat, and that the claim rests upon a naked possession commenced and ended within the periods before specified. All the ordinances for the granting of land under the Spanish government of Louisiana, so far as they have come under the observation of the committee, require of the settler to make certain improvements within a limited time to entitle him to the right of soil. In this case there is no proof of a compliance with these ordinances by Bourgeat, and from the total abandonment of the property for twenty-four years before the cession of the country to the United States, the committee believe that he forfeited all claim to the land, if any he ever had, and that it was not his intention, nor the intention of his family after his decease, at any time before the treaty of 1803, to resume the possession of the land.

In the year 1798 Joseph Bourgeat departed this life, leaving a will, in which nothing is said about this land. In April, 1806, his wife, to whom he willed his property, transferred to Ebenezer Cooley by deed, as he claims, the tract of land lying at the mouth of the Bayou Latanache. Cooley applied to the board of commissioners appointed for the purpose of ascertaining the rights of persons claiming lands under French or Spanish grants in Louisiana, and in their record the land is described as lying in the county of Point Coupee, on the west side of the River Mississippi, containing twenty arpents in front, viz., ten arpents on each side the Bayou Attanache, with the depth of forty arpents, and bounded on each side by vacant land. The commissioners rejected the claim upon the ground of the length of time it had been abandoned, and also upon the ground that it was unwarranted by any law, usage, or custom of the Spanish government.

On the 8th day of December, 1806, the widow of Joseph Bourgeat sold and conveyed another tract of land for the consideration of three hundred dollars, to the said Cooley, called the Cypress Swamp, beginning ten arpents above the Bayou Latanache, on the Mississippi, adjoining the land first sold to him, thence up the Mississippi twenty-five arpents or thereabouts, with double concession. This deed was acknowledged before Julian Poydrass, judge of the county court of Point Coupee, who certified that the grantor had held, occupied, and enjoyed peaceable possession of the land mentioned in the deed for more than twenty-five years to his knowledge. In giving this certificate the judge was clearly mistaken, as he admits by his written and attested acknowledgment, bearing date October 19, 1817, in which he says it was his intention to certify only that Dr. Bourgeat did formerly settle at the mouth of the Bayou Latanache, but he could by no means pretend to certify the quantity he then occupied, or intended to occupy.

It is proved by one witness, Dr. John Fowks, that he was at the mouth of the Bayou Latanache in 1806, at which time there was no appearance of any settlement having existed thereon for a number of years back, and that from the appearance of the timber he was convinced it had not been cultivated for at least thirty years. He also states that he was acquainted with the purchase made by Dr. Cooley, which consisted of ten arpents above and ten arpents below the bayou, which was the full extent of the claim of that family, and he was perfectly convinced Cooley did not intend originally to exhibit a claim for a greater quantity of land. With respect to the adjoining land, the witness is positive that the claim of Cooley is fictitious. He further states that he purchased a part of the land, and discovering the futility of Cooley's claim he compelled him to give up the contract. He also states that he understood that the land at the mouth of the bayou had been abandoned by the family since 1779, and was only resumed by Dr. Cooley in consequence of its enhanced value by the change of the government.

Another witness, Colonel Bartlet Collins, states that he commenced his settlement in the neighborhood of the bayou in 1807, and remained there seven years; and always understood that the extent of Bourgeat's claim was ten arpents above and ten below the bayou.

George D. Passan, in his deposition, states that in the year 1809-'10 he saw the land at the mouth of the bayou, and that nine or ten arpents front on the Mississippi, by about two or three arpents back, containing about twenty-five arpents, was covered by a small growth of trees, which indicated that it had been formerly cleared; and with the exception of about sixty arpents cleared by Dr. Fowks, and about one hundred and fifty cleared by the witness, all the land between the Bayous Latanache and Moran, which includes all the Cypress Swamp tract and a part of the first tract, was unimproved.

Some idea may be formed of the value of these lands from the sales made by Dr. Cooley. On the 8th day of June, 1809, he sold ten arpents front and the whole depth back for $3,500, to George D. Passan, being a part of the Cypress Swamp tract. On the 24th of May, 1811, he sold the tract at the mouth of the bayou to J. Gray for $15,000, which left still unsold about fifteen arpents front of the Cypress Swamp tract.

The committee are of opinion, from the testimony of these witnesses, and from the fact that the land at the mouth of the bayou, in the claim made to the commissioners, is described as being bounded by vacant land, that neither Bourgeat nor his family asserted any claim to the Cypress Swamp tract before the treaty, and they are compelled to view the claim now set up in the most unfavorable point of light.

Possessed of the first certificate of Judge Poydrass, which he (Cooley) might have known was incorrect, he again applied to the commissioners to confirm his title to a tract of land situated in the county of Point Coupee, on the west bank of the Mississippi, containing two thousand and eighty-four arpents, bounded on the upper side by Colonel Tremè, and on the lower side by vacant land which he purchased of Mrs. Bourgeat. This tract embraces the Cypress Swamp and the land at the mouth of the bayou, for which the commissioners rejected his claim. The commissioners, on the 23d day of March, 1816, confirmed the claim for two thousand arpents of this land, which was approved by an act of Congress May 11, 1820. In this act of confirmation the commissioners were unquestionably misled by the certificate of Judge Poydrass, which they incorporated in their record, and without which they never could have allowed the claim.

Other than the improvements made by Dr. Fowks and Mr. Passan, there is no proof before the committee at what time the other improvements were made, nor is there any evidence at what time the petitioner took possession of the lands. The whole improvements are estimated at about four hundred and fifty arpents, and the land with the improvements are proved to be worth twenty-five dollars per arpent, equal to the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

By an act of Congress of March 3, 1803, the Secretary of War was authorized to issue land warrants to Major General Lafayette for 11,520 acres of land. By an act of March 27, 1804, he was permitted to locate his warrants on any lands, the property of the United States, in the Territory of Orleans. By an act of March 2, 1805, he was required to make his locations with the register of the land office created by that act; the surveys thereof were to be executed under the authority of the surveyor of the United States south of Tennessee, and a patent or patents were to be issued therefor on presenting such surveys to the Secretary of the Treasury, together with the certificate of the register that the land was not rightfully claimed by any other person. There was a further provision in the act that the surveys should not contain less than one thousand acres, and should not include any improved lands or lots, salt spring, or lead mine. Two locations were made by General Lafayette of one thousand acres each, which included the lands cleared by Dr. Cooley; one of these locations was made on the 1st of July, 1810, and the other on the 25th of May of the same year. To the surveys the certificates required by law were attached. The surveyor, in his certificate, states that the surveys included no improvements but Cooley's, which were rejected; and the register certified that the lands located were not rightfully claimed by any other person. On these surveys patents were issued on the 25th of March, 1813, to General Lafayette.

In 1812 he sold these tracts of land to Henry Seymour, who instituted a suit against Cooley, in which, in the year 1825, he succeeded in recovering the lands. In giving their opinion in the above suit, the court pronounced both of the deeds from Mrs. Bourgeat to Cooley to be void, in consequence of their not being executed in conformity to the laws of Louisiana.

From this view of the subject, the committee are satisfied that neither Joseph Bourgeat nor his representatives had any right to the lands mentioned in the memorial of the petitioner at the time of the acquisition of Louisiana by the United States; and they are also satisfied that the commissioners, in confirming the title, were induced so to do from evidence which the petitioner might have known to be incorrect when it was laid before them. The committee are of opinion that the petitioner is not entitled to the relief he prays, and submit, for the approbation of the House, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Ebenezer Cooley.

EXCHANGE OF A CERTAIN CHEROKEE RESERVATION FOR GOOD LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 15, 1830.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Captain John Wood, a Cherokee Indian, reported:

That the petitioner claims and states that he is in possession of a reservation under a treaty concluded with the Cherokee Indians on the —— day of ——, 1817; that at the time of agreeing to take a reservation he stated that he had an improvement in a narrow cove of Cumberland mountain, where he chose his reservation, but that he "did not want mountain;" to this remark, he states that the commissioners replied "that he should have good land." He further states that the surveyor employed to lay off reservations, though requested, would not regard the mountain as the boundaries of the tract to be reserved for the petitioner, but consented to make surveys and plats, both agreeably to his instructions and the wishes of the petitioner. To these plats, as certified by the surveyor, your committee beg leave to refer. The petitioner also sets forth, that he has always been friendly to the whites, and has several times saved their settlements from the murderous incursions of his savage brethren by timely warnings of their impending danger. This statement, in the opinion of your committee, is satisfactorily supported by the evidence which accompanies the petition. The committee, therefore, consider the prayer of the petitioner reasonable, and ask leave to report a bill for his relief.

CLAIM TO LAND IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1830.

Mr. Clay, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John Glass, reported:

That the petitioner states that in the year 1818 Alexander McQuie and James Hogan, jointly, became the purchasers of the northeast quarter of section 4, in township 5, and range 7 west, in the district of lands sold at Huntsville, Alabama; that in the year 1823 the petitioner bought the said land certificate of said Hogan, and took his transfer of the same, under the belief that he would thereby obtain the legal title to said quarter section; that under said purchase he took possession of said land, has since cultivated it, and made thereon lasting improvements; that in March last he applied at the land office in Huntsville to pay the balance due on said land (one-fourth of the purchase money only having been previously paid) and obtain a patent for the same, when he was informed that it could not be done without McQuie's transfer, who, the petitioner alleges, has no interest in the land or certificate. The petitioner states that after diligent inquiry he is unable to learn whether said McQuie is dead or living, or where his residence was or is, and that he never resided in the State of Alabama. The petitioner being otherwise without remedy, the committee beg leave to report a bill.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1830.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of the heirs of John Tuillier, deceased, reported:

That the petitioners claim a tract of land situated in the parish of West Baton Rouge containing six arpents front by forty in depth, equal to two hundred and forty superficial arpents, as having been granted to their ancestor, John Tuillier, by the Spanish government, in the year 1785, and inhabited and cultivated by him and them ever since. It appears by a plat of survey accompanying the petition that the same was surveyed by Ephraim Davidson, by order of the surveyor of the lands of the United States, on the 20th of March, 1806. The affidavits accompanying the petition establish the fact of habitation and cultivation in 1785, and that the land has been from that time to the present inhabited and cultivated by him and his heirs, the present claimants. Your committee are of opinion that the claim should be confirmed, and for that purpose report a bill.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1830.

Mr. Pettis, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Louis Pellerin, reported:

That the petitioners, twenty-five in number, claiming to be the heirs of Louis Pellerin, represent that in 1764 M. D'Baddie, directeur general and commandant for the King in Louisiana, made a grant of land to said Pellerin, in the county of Opelousas, of one and a half leagues in length by three-quarters of a league in breadth, it being a prairie; and also a half league of timbered land, bordering or lying on the front of said first-named grant. They represent that several persons claiming the said land under the said Pellerin, as purchasers, presented their claim before the board of commissioners for the western district of Louisiana, and prayed that the confirmation be made to them; that the petitioners protested, and that the claim was not confirmed to the adverse claimants; that the petitioners have never been confirmed in their title, and that the adverse claimants have possession of the original papers showing the grant, and they can produce nothing but a copy; such a copy is produced duly certified.

A great mass of documents has been produced, showing what was presented to the said board to induce a confirmation to the Collinses, the adverse claimants, which it is unnecessary to notice, as they throw no light on the subject of the original grant.

If the grant, of which a copy is produced, be authentic, it appears that in 1764 a concession was made by the directeur general and commandant of the King in Louisiana to Louis Pellerin of the quantity of land heretofore mentioned, upon conditions that the grantee should continue the establishment where he then was, and that in one year from the date he should improve the lands granted, and in default of which they should be reunited to the domain, and that the rights of seignory should be paid. It does not appear that any of these conditions have been complied with, nor does it appear who has been in possession.

Your committee are not prepared to admit that the directeur general was competent to make grants of this kind; but at any rate the conditions should have been complied with Your committee think that they could not confirm the grant to these heirs. The most that could be done would be to confirm the original claim of Pellerin, and then leave the conflicting claim to be decided between the parties.

It appears, however, from documents obtained from the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that a part of the lands here claimed has been confirmed to the Collinses, the adverse claimants. Your committee therefore recommend that the claim be rejected.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of the heirs of Jean Marie Trahaud, deceased, reported:

That the petitioners claim a certain tract of land, of six arpents in front, by forty in depth, on the right bank of the Mississippi, in the parish of West Baton Rouge, in consequence of a settlement made thereon by their father, with the permission of the Spanish government, in the year 1785, and in virtue of settlement and cultivation since. The evidence adduced proves that the ancestor of petitioners was settled on said land by the Spanish government in 1785; some of the witnesses say that it was granted to him, that he cultivated the same, and that his heirs, the petitioners, are now in possession of said land. Said land was surveyed by order of the United States surveyor on the 9th of March, 1806.

Your committee think the petitioners entitled to relief, and for that purpose report a bill.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR A POSTPONEMENT OF THE SALE OF LAND IN JACKSON COUNTY, AND FOR THE RELIEF OF PURCHASERS OF PUBLIC LANDS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1830.

A JOINT MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States, praying a postponement of the sales of the public lands in the county of Jackson.

The memorial of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama, in general assembly convened, respectfully represents, that it is with deep concern they have observed that the President has deemed it proper to bring the public lands lying in the county of Jackson, in this State, into market on the third Monday of February next. The period thus selected, they are constrained to believe, is peculiarly unfavorable to the interest of the general government, and alike injurious to the interest of the citizens residing in that country. The great pecuniary embarrassment which has been accumulating for the last few years throughout the cotton-growing country has fallen with its full force upon the population of that portion of our State. The abundant crops of the present season, the first for some years which have promised an adequate return to the planter, have been looked to with cheering hope, for the means of extricating themselves from their difficulties, and of securing the possession of their homes.

New Orleans, however, affords to them the only market for the disposal of their staple commodity; and when its great distance, and the intervening obstructions to their intercourse, are taken into consideration, it is obviously impossible for them to receive their returns in time for the sales in February. The experience of all former years must place this fact beyond question. This State is also now bringing into market the lands granted by the general government for the improvement of the Tennessee and other rivers, and the sales of these lands, lying in the immediate vicinity, must, by absorbing a large portion of the circulating medium of the country, add greatly to the existing pecuniary distress. The operation of these combined causes cannot fail to diminish greatly the number of purchasers, and to afford facilities for the combinations of those harpies, the land speculators, who prey alike upon the government and upon the honest occupant of the soil. The county of Jackson contains, it is supposed, at this time, at least 12,000 inhabitants, many of whom have been compelled to seek an asylum on the public lands, from an inability to purchase elsewhere; and their continuance there has been, if not by the permission, at least by the sufferance of the general government. It is therefore confidently believed that they will not be turned shelterless from their cabins, with their wives and helpless children, at an inclement season of the year—at a season too late to effect a new settlement and to make the necessary preparations for the following crop. The considerations which have been urged, it is humbly hoped, will induce Congress to postpone the sales above referred to until the month of September or October next.

Resolved, therefore, by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama, in general assembly convened, That our senators be, and they are hereby instructed to use their best endeavors to obtain, either by application to the President or by the passage of a law, the objects embraced in this memorial.

And be it further resolved, That his excellency the governor transmit one copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

JOINT MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States, asking relief for the purchasers of public land, and for other purposes.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Alabama respectfully represents unto your honorable bodies, that in the years 1818 and 1819, for the purpose of contributing to the revenue of the general government, large quantities of the public lands in the State of Alabama were offered for sale and sold to numerous purchasers resident citizens thereof, in many instances at the most extravagant and exorbitant prices, the said lands having then commanded prices which are justly and correctly estimated at four times their fair and intrinsic value, inasmuch as in their present improved condition they would scarcely bring the fourth part of the amount at which they were originally sold; that the said citizens who thus purchased at the said sales became involved in heavy pecuniary responsibilities to the government, which they solaced themselves with the hope that industry and economy would remove. This expectation has proved delusive. A sum of money far beyond their means of repayment has been accumulated upon them, until they are constrained to contemplate their impending and irretrievable ruin, unless the kind and liberal hand of a protecting and munificent government should be extended to them. Impressed with the truth of the foregoing statement, your memorialists deem it unnecessary to enter into a minute detail of the series of causes and events which have produced this most unhappy result. Many of them will be found portrayed in striking and impressive colors in the memorials heretofore presented by the general assembly of Alabama to your honorable bodies, to which, with becoming deference, they again refer you. But they feel they would be doing the greatest injustice to the citizens of Alabama if they were wholly to omit the exposition of some of the most prominent circumstances which preceded their unfortunate purchases of land at the then most exorbitant prices. It is a matter which none can controvert that a few years previous to the sales of public lands above adverted to our country had been involved in an extensive war, which drained the treasury of the United States of a large portion of its available funds, which, thus withdrawn and forced into a promiscuous circulation, afforded more money to our citizens than their necessities required; that cotton, the great staple of this State, commanded between twenty and thirty cents per pound; that an unhappy banking mania then pervaded the greater part of the Union; that numerous banks were then established, which emitted paper that proved in the sequel to be the mere representation of money to a very large amount, and which then formed in a great measure the circulating medium of the country; that several millions of Mississippi stock were at the same time offered for sale and purchased at heavy discounts, which, in the hands of the holders, could only be employed or invested in the purchase of public lands in Alabama, and that the value of lands in the cotton-growing part of the country was by the most prudent estimated by the price of cotton, to which may be attributed the rage of land speculation, and indeed speculation of every description, which pervaded this and every other country, the anticipated products of which promised to gratify the avarice of the most covetous and miserly. The causes combined subjected many of our best and most prudent citizens, who were desirous of securing to themselves settlements, (which they then hoped would be permanent,) to all the disadvantages incident to unequal competition in the purchase of lands. To secure their lands they promised more than they afterwards were found to be able to perform—a part thereof in cash, and the balance on short credits. Before the second instalment became due the cotton market sustained a depression of upwards of twenty cents per pound, which awakened them to the sober realities of their situations, and convinced them that their pleasing anticipations of future advancement and prosperity were not only fallacious, but that without adequate relief from the general government the sun of their prosperity was forever set. From the difficulties and perplexities of their unhappy situation they were, however, relieved by the liberal interposition of Congress, which, in applying the corrective, permitted the purchasers of public lands to retain such portion of the lands purchased by them respectively as the amount of the payments they had severally made would pay for at the stipulated price, to relinquish the remainder to the government, or to retain it subject to a liberal and generous deduction of thirty-seven and a half per cent. of the principal they contracted to pay. This liberal measure was calculated to produce and did elicit the warm gratitude of the citizens of our State. They felt that the policy of the government strictly accorded with the true interests of the nation; that in the policy it had pursued towards them it tacitly recognized the orthodoxy of the doctrine that the true interest of the nation is best consulted in parcelling out its lands to its citizens, and thereby multiplying the number of its freeholders; that it better comports with the true interests of the nation to sell its lands (the most valuable of all property) to its citizens for a fair price, or even below it, in preference to disposing of it beyond its value; that thereby you enable the middling classes of the community, who are the bone and sinew, the main pillars of this and every other country in times of danger and emergency, to become the permanent lords of the soil they inhabit, and to connect and identify their interests with those of the country in which their all is at stake; that the prosperity of the citizen is the foundation of the wealth and prosperity of the nation, and that it illy comports with a just and enlightened policy, which so strongly characterizes every measure of the government in relation to the sale, disposal, or allotment of public lands, to hold its debtors, rendered such by unfortunate purchases of lands, to ruinous contracts, entered into, it is true, in good faith, merely because they have placed themselves within its power. Your memorialists further represent unto your honorable bodies that the laws passed for the relief of the citizens of Alabama will soon expire by their own limitation; that although they have partially extended relief, yet they have failed to effect much of the good designed by them, so powerful has been the combination of speculators upon the public lands, under the auction system, so extensive and artful in its windings and various ramifications that the first purchasers were deterred by the dangers of their situation from availing themselves of the benefit of relinquishment secured to them by the act of Congress as related either to their improved or timbered lands, as far as the same were necessary to them, because when the same were thrown into market under the auction system the combination, arrangement, art, and cupidity of the speculators would begin to operate; their lands would be pushed greatly above the government minimum, unless by a heavy bonus to the speculators, extorted from their actual wants, the occupant secured from them a tacit permission to purchase his home.

Your memorialists further respectfully represent that the history and experience of the past furnish the melancholy truth that although the citizens of Alabama have been greatly impoverished by the excessive high prices they have been constrained to pay for public lands, yet they believe that in Alabama the United States, upon an average for the last eight years, have not received the one-half part of the amount paid by the settlers for their lands; that the balance has been filched from them, and went into the pockets of the artful and designing speculators who attended the sales, not to purchase lands with the view of retaining them, but to speculate on the wants or too confiding credulity of the honest settler. Your memorialists believe that a corrective remedy to the existing evils they have but faintly delineated may be found in the wisdom and power of Congress; they believe that the proper antidote would be applied if Congress were to pass the bill graduating the price of public lands, as proposed by Mr. Benton, of Missouri, and to secure by law a pre-emptive right to all actual settlers of public lands, subject to the following modifications and restrictions, to wit: To permit one class of the purchasers of the public lands, who were actual settlers and had relinquished a part of their necessary purchases, to enter the relinquished part at the minimum price established by the government, provided the part so retained and entered should not exceed six hundred and forty acres; to permit a second class, who were actual settlers at the time of relinquishing, to enter at the minimum price as many acres of any unappropriated land, unoccupied by third persons, as he, she, or they had paid for at a price above ten dollars per acre; and to admit an entry in like manner of the number of acres as he, she, or they had paid for at a price above five dollars per acre. Your memorialists believe that the general government, in extending the terms of relinquishing and securing preferences to lands in the manner above specified, will sustain no serious pecuniary loss; and should it, in its wisdom, allow its debtors to relinquish and to receive stock in lieu of the amount they have paid for lands, to be reinvested in the purchase of the same lands and other lands, (if there should be a residuum,) whilst the citizens of our State would be rendered prosperous and happy, the public debt in Alabama would in a short time be extinguished, the deleterious credit system no longer be felt, and the foundation of demoralizing speculation be entirely removed. Your memorialists further represent that there is another class of our citizens having, in their opinion, an equitable claim upon the liberality of the government; they allude to those citizens the extent of whose means and facilities enabled them to pay up the amount of their purchases at the exorbitant prices at which their lands sold, as is aforesaid. These, by their punctuality to the government, lost the deduction of the 37½ per cent. on the amount of their purchases, which was accorded to those less punctual. Your memorialists believe that the due measure of justice would be meted out to them if they or their heirs were permitted to enter, at the minimum price, as many acres of unappropriated land, unoccupied by third persons, as they paid for at a price above five dollars per acre, or by issuing stock in their favor equal to the amount of the difference such purchasers lost by not obtaining the 37½ per cent. discount extended to others. Your memorialists humbly hope that the facts and suggestions embodied in this memorial will receive the attentive consideration of your honorable bodies; that if found true and just our citizens may receive relief commensurate and coextensive with the grievances complained of. They therefore request that your honorable bodies will be pleased to bestow upon this important subject the attention it may be esteemed to deserve; and as in duty bound your memorialists will every pray, &c.

Resolved, That our senators be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their best exertions to procure the relief mentioned in the beforegoing memorial; and that his excellency the governor be requested to forward, as soon as practicable, a copy of the foregoing memorial to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and one to each of our senators and representatives in the Congress of the United States.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR A GRANT OF CERTAIN LAND FOR ESTABLISHING PRIMARY SCHOOLS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 18, 1830.

JOINT MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States, praying a relinquishment of claim to certain lands for the purpose of establishing primary schools in the several counties in this State.

To the Congress of the United States:

The joint memorial of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama, in general assembly convened, respectfully showeth: That in many counties of this State there yet remain portions of the public lands unsold, though the same have been subject to entry for many years. No stronger evidence need be adduced of those lands not being worth the minimum price heretofore established than the fact of their having remained undisposed of for such a length of time. Although those lands in the aggregate would produce only an inconsiderable sum, yet, when added to the sums produced by the sales or rent of the 16th sections, your memorialists believe it might effect the laudable object of extending the benefits of education to those who otherwise would remain in ignorance, an object to which the grant of the 16th sections has hitherto proved inadequate. Independent of the establishment and endowment of primary schools, strong reasons exist why those lands should not remain in their present situation. The State of Alabama is anxiously looking forward to the time when all the lands within her limits will become the property of individual citizens, and thus enable the authorities of the same to establish a regular and just plan of taxation for the support of its government; those lands produce no revenue to the State, and it is hopeless to presume that they can ever be disposed of at the present minimum price. They interfere much with the collection of the land taxes, as it is almost impossible for the collectors to ascertain what lands are subject to taxation; an objection which must remain so long as there remain any unappropriated lands within this State. If the lands referred to should be granted to the State, it would be competent for the authorities of the same to affix such prices on the lands as would enable every citizen to become a freeholder. Your memorialists therefore ask that all the lands which have or shall hereafter be subject to entry, for the space of two years, may be granted to the State of Alabama for the purpose of establishing and endowing primary schools in the respective counties of this State, where the said lands may be situate, or, in the event that the grant may not be made, that such measures should be adopted by Congress as will favor the speedy entry and settlement of the said lands.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their endeavors to carry into effect the measures referred to in the foregoing memorial, and that the governor be requested to furnish our delegation in Congress with copies of the same.

ON AN APPLICATION TO BE ALLOWED TO MAKE A NEW LOCATION OF A MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1830.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George Washington Berrian, reported:

That petitioner states that on the 23d October, 1823, he purchased, for a valuable consideration, the southwest quarter of section 33, in township 7 north, range 7 west, of Illinois military bounty lands, and received a regular deed for the same, together with the original patent, dated the 13th of February, 1818; that he continued to pay the annual tax of Illinois on said land, until he was informed, in the fall of 1828, that two patents had been issued on warrant 3574, and that the patent that petitioner held was one of them. Petitioner prays to be authorized to locate the same quantity of land in Illinois, in lieu of that he now claims. Annexed to the petition are two letters from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by which it appears that two patents were issued to James Whitlock, on the 2d day of February, 1818, for the southeast quarter of section 3, in township 2 north, range 4 west; and the second on the 13th February, 1818, for the southwest quarter of section 33, township 7 north, range 7 west. The last patent appears to have been issued in error, and is the one for the land now claimed by petitioner. How far this error may affect the right of the petitioner to the land is not a question for your committee to decide, as petitioner asks for no relief founded upon want of title in consequence of such error. He asks merely that he may be authorized to change his location. Your committee can discover no cause for granting him this right; he does not even allege that the land called for in the patent is sterile or unproductive; and it appears, from a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the 15th January, 1830, that there are no interfering individual claimants to the land in question; wherefore they recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 15, 1830.

SIR: I return the petition of G. W. Berrian, and, in explanation, have to state that James Whitlock having made oath, in conformity to the existing regulations, that his discharge was illegally withheld from him by Samuel Berrian, of New York, a patent was issued in his favor on the 2d of February, 1818, for southeast quarter of section 3, township 2 north, range 7 west, in the Illinois bounty tract, and that Whitlock's notification having been deposited in the office by Mr. Berrian, another patent was issued for southwest 33, 7 north, 7 west, in favor of Whitlock, on the 18th of February, 1818. The error in thus granting two patents to the same individual, and for different tracts, was occasioned by the omission to mark on the warrant the issuing of the first patent, and was not discovered until September, 1827, when the auditor of the State was informed of the circumstance, and notified that the second patent was a nullity, Whitlock's claim to bounty land having been satisfied by the first patent.

I cannot conceive upon what ground Mr. Berrian can found his claim to make a new location in lieu of the tract described in the second patent to Whitlock, for if that patent is decided to be valid, and conveying the right of the United States to the land, he will, as the assignee of Whitlock, hold the tract, there being no interfering individual claimants, and should the patent be void in consequence of its being thus erroneously issued, Mr. Berrian obtained no title by purchasing it.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Hon. H. H. GURLEY, Chairman Committee on Private Land Claims, House of Representatives.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 784. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS IN EAST FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 18, 1830.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 14, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a final report on private land claims in East Florida, prepared by the register and receiver of the district of East Florida, under the act of May 23, 1828, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts providing for the settlement and confirmation of private land claims in Florida."

I have the honor to be, with high respect, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

LAND OFFICE, St. Augustine, January, 1819.

SIR: In obedience to the law of 1828, we now transmit to you a final report on the private land claims within this district.

We have adhered throughout to the principles of decision previously adopted and reported to Congress at its last session. We have become more and more confirmed in the opinion that the positions laid down in that report are correct.

Previous to the years 1790 and 1791, few if any lands had been granted in this district by the Spanish government. It was on the 29th of October, 1790, that the first royal order was issued from the Court of Madrid to the governor of this province, authorizing him to make grants of lands to a certain description of foreigners and under certain conditions. This royal order will be found on page 996 of the last volume of Land Laws. Although this order was intended to embrace the case of foreigners alone, yet, as it was more liberal in the quantity of land to be granted than the royal order of 1756, page —— of same volume, or the laws of the Indies, it was invariably applied by the governors of this province to subjects as well as to strangers. Something was left to the discretion of the governor, and it was his duty to exercise that discretion soundly, both as to the quantity of land to be granted and the tenure by which it should be held. This was done by Governor Quesada, immediately upon the reception of the royal order above alluded to, and as early as the 20th of November, 1790.

By his regulations, page 997 of the same volume, it will be seen that one hundred acres of land were allotted to each head of a family, and fifty acres to the other members. Thus it appears that, no matter from what source may have emanated the limitation above mentioned, it is cotemporaneous with the order itself, and equally obligatory until it should be repealed by competent authority.

So much for the quantity of land to which each applicant was entitled. Upon the subject of the ten years' possession, necessary to complete the title, our predecessors in this office have alleged in their report that this was a regulation of Governor White. Upon a reference to the case of William H. G. Saunders, (Report 2, No. 111,) it will be seen that this is a mistake. In that case, on the 10th September, 1791, after having granted the land in perpetuity, the governor has adopted the following language: "And finally, although this donation and concession is made in perpetuity, the donee, or his heirs, cannot alienate or transfer the said lands to any other owner until the ten years' possession be passed; and even then, the first sale must be executed with permission of the government, and in any other way it should be nulled," &c. He then adds, "Under the said conditions, and not without them, I cede, renounce, and transfer the said lands," &c.

This is one of the first grants made under the royal order of 1790, dated less than one year after the reception of that order, and proving, as we think, conclusively, that this condition, attached to every grant under that authority, is as old as the authority itself.

Upon every grant of lands made by the Spanish governors under the laws of the Indies, or the ordinances of the King, in this as in other provinces, some similar condition was imposed, varying only in its duration. By the laws of the Indies, if we remember correctly, before the title could be consummated, it was necessary that the grantee should prove four years' continued possession. By the regulations of O'Riley, governor and captain-general of the province of Louisiana, no lands granted could be sold until after three years' possession—and by those of Morales, this, together with additional conditions, was imposed upon the grantees. Perhaps a longer term of possession may have been required in this province under the order of 1790, because that order applies solely to foreigners; and if the subjects of the King chose to obtain their lands under the same order, because of a larger quantity authorized thereby to be granted, it was but fair that the prolonged period of possession should attach likewise to them. It has been the policy of every government that possessed colonies abroad to require of the grantees of land some evidence that the application therefor was made not for the purposes of speculation, but of agriculture. The British made no grants but to their own subjects, and invariably attached the condition of two years' continued possession.

Until the year 1790, so far as we have been enabled to discover, there seems to have been no power vested in the Spanish governors of provinces to make grants of land to any others than to native subjects. By the laws antecedent to that date, as we have just observed, three and four years of uninterrupted possession was required on the part of the grantees, they being subjects only. Upon the reception of the order of 1798, Morales, the governor of Louisiana, required that the new settlers who obtained lands under that order, somewhat similar to that of 1790, "should clear and put in cultivation, in three years, all the front of their concessions," &c., on the penalty of having the lands granted remitted to the domain; with the further condition, "That no person shall sell or dispose of the land so granted within the said term of three years." See articles 4th and 6th of his regulations, page 982 Land Laws. The regulations of Gayoso, of the year 1797, are nearly similar. Quesada, the governor of the province, very properly imagined that a foreigner should give a stronger evidence of an intention to remain upon the land than was required of a subject. For this reason, under the order of 1790, he required ten years of continued and uninterrupted possession before a full title was granted to the claimant. It is apparent, then, that before a new comer could obtain a grant or concession of lands in this province he was obliged to take the oath of allegiance to the King in the first place. Then, having discovered vacant lands which suited him, he presented a memorial to the governor, in which he declared his intention to become a subject, and made known his wish to obtain lands, specifying the place at which they were situated. The governor usually decreed the grant, leaving to the surveyor, Don Pedro Marrot, to measure off to the applicant the number of acres to which he was entitled. By the fourth article of the instructions to Marrot, page 998, he was required to administer to all applicants an oath as to the number of their family, and then to survey to them the quantity of land to which they were entitled by the regulations of the 20th November, 1790. This being done, and the claimant having taken possession of his land within from one to six months, as required by the grant, it was his duty to remain on the same for the ten years prescribed by the regulations; and if, within that period, he abandoned it, or sold it without permission of the government, it reverted to the royal domain. After ten years' possession, it was competent to him to prove before the governor the performance of all these conditions, and to obtain a full and indefeasible title. He could then dispose of the land as he pleased.

The royal order of 1815 is the next general ordinance for the disposition of lands. Upon this we have already commented in our former report. It differs from the ordinance of 1790 in this: first, that the grant is made for services, and was intended as a reward or compensation for something already performed; and, secondly, it required no continued possession of ten years to vest in the grantee a perfect title. But, by the express provisions of the royal order of 1815, the quantity of land to be granted is the same as prescribed by the regulations of Quesada, to wit: "According to the number of the grantee's family." By reference to the case of Peter Meranda, on report 3, No. 17, our views upon the first decree of the governor to the memorial of the applicant, and on the relative validity of concessions found in the governor's and escribano's offices may be seen. We have there said that the memorial of the party, and the decree of the governor thereon, found, as it usually was, in the office of the governor's secretary, passed no title to lands in the province. For example, A B would say to Governor White that he intended to bring in the province 100 negroes, and begged of his excellency to concede to him 50,000 acres of land. The decree of the governor in almost every instance was the same—"Let this land be granted to the applicant until, according to the number of his family, the quantity to which he is entitled shall be measured to him." This document—the memorial and decree aforesaid—was always thrown loosely about the office of the governor's secretary, and conveyed no title to the party. It was a bare permission to become a subject, and to complete the further conditions precedent to the grant.

A copy of this was usually given to the applicant, whose duty it was to present it to the surveyor general, who, having administered the oath as to the number of his family, measured off the quantity allowed by law. To the case of Meranda we beg leave to refer for a fuller expression of our views upon this subject. Suffice it to say that we have invariably required full proof of ten years of uninterrupted possession and cultivation before we have confirmed a grant under the order of 1790, and some evidence of the previous existence of an original, as well as some probability upon the face of the paper and size of the grant, that the quantity conceded bore some proportion to the number of the applicant's family, before we have confirmed or recommended a grant made for services since the order of 1815.

The British titles in East Florida are not involved in much confusion. By the treaty of 1783, and by the subsequent proclamation of the King of Spain, twenty-four months were given to British subjects to dispose of their property. By the royal order of the 5th April, 1786, the King granted permission to all those British subjects, who still remained in the province, to retain their lands on taking the oath of allegiance to Spain.

Governor Quesada, in what is called "The Edict of Good Government," article 4th, on the 2d September, 1790, after recapitulating a portion of the order of 1786, adds, "That all those who have not conformed, and do not conform, to the said conditions within thirty days, positively should forfeit their lands." In addition to this, it was customary, and perhaps requisite, that the British grantees, upon taking the oath of allegiance, should present to the governor their title, together with their survey, and cause them both to be recorded in the escribano's office. When this was done, their title was complete.

These, then: 1st. The grants for head rights, no matter under what law they were made; 2d The grants for services under the order of 1815; and 3d. The British grants legalized in pursuance of the royal order of 1786 are the only grants within the province of East Florida the authority to make which can be traced to any law, ordinance, or decree of the Spanish government.

In addition to the above, there are two species of grants which perhaps may be valid, not from any specific authority in the governors to make them, but from the general power with which they were vested to advance the interests of the province. We mean the mill grants and the grants for cow-pens. Of the first we have already expressed our opinion at large in the report of the last session.

Of the second—the grants for cow-pens—it is probable that, after a continued cultivation of ten years, the party claiming may have become entitled to the land. In many cases of this kind the governor has given him a royal title. This, perhaps, was a necessary inducement to the inhabitants to increase their stock of cattle, and thereby add to the wealth of the province.

Upon proof to the governor that a mill had been erected we think it probable that he had the power, in that case, without any positive law, to give a good title to the spot; not to 16,000 acres, but to the ground upon which the mill stood, embracing a quantity sufficiently large for all the purposes and conveniences of the mill aforesaid, with an additional privilege of cutting pine timber either in the woods or within the four miles square, or 16,000 acres, as may be specified in the grant itself. From the above remarks it appears that all grants within the Territory of East Florida are good which contain the above-prescribed requisites.

1st. Under the order of 1790, when the claimant proves ten years of continued and uninterrupted possession.

2d. Under the order of 1815, when it shall appear to have been fairly and honestly made for military services, and adhering, as to quantity, to the proportions made necessary under the regulations of Quesada.

3d. British grants, recognized by the Spanish government, according to the royal order of 1786, and the regulations of Quesada of 1790.

4th and 5th. The mill grants and cow-pen grants, with the limitations above specified.

We did intend to say something upon the subject of the Spanish surveys, from which we are now precluded by the want of time. We will simply remark, upon this subject, that the surveys made under the superintendence of Marrot are entitled to unlimited respect, and should, in every case, be regarded as conclusive of the boundaries. With regard to surveys made by private surveyors, or Mr. George J. F. Clarke, the public surveyor, styling himself the surveyor general, we entertain a widely different opinion. It will be seen, by reference to the instructions given to Mr. Clarke, page 1003 of Land Laws, that he is specially directed, "when called on by any person to measure and bound lands to him, to require his title of property or grant from government, that, on sight thereof, he may proceed to its measurement and demarcation." And yet, let it be remembered that there is in this office a numerous class of claims, founded alone on the survey of George J. F. Clarke, measured without "a title of property or grant from government." He is further directed, in article 4th of his instructions, to conform himself to the directions given to Marrot on the 24th October, 1791, and "to endeavor not, in the front, to exceed one-third part of all lands he should survey." He was directed to keep regular books, in which his surveys should be recorded; and yet, in his testimony, page 1014, he has declared "that he kept no regular books of surveys since June or July, 1817, nor at any previous time." He has further said that he possessed authority to survey lands as surveyor general, and no special order was necessary for him; and adds, "when the land was not specially designated, he would locate wherever the claimant pointed out, provided the place was vacant; and in cases where the land was specially located by the grant, he would, nevertheless, at the request of the grantee, locate it at any other place."

Throughout the whole of Mr. Clarke's testimony he has expressly declared that the instructions given to him by the governor were not obeyed by him, and that he did not consider them obligatory upon him. That Mr. Clarke was honest in his opinion we fully believe, but we cannot concur with him; and we consider every survey so made directly at war with the spirit and letter of his instructions, and, as such, entitled to no respect or consideration whatever. When Mr. Clarke was directed to survey by the grant, and when he tells us that he surveyed, without reference thereto, at a place fifty or a hundred miles off, we believe Mr. Clarke has exceeded his authority. When the grant contains one undivided portion of land, and Mr. Clarke has surveyed a part of it in one place and a part in another, wherever a stick of live-oak or a foot of hammock could be found, the survey is not in accordance with "the title of property or the grant of the government," and is therefore void.

When Mr. Clarke was directed to survey to an applicant four miles square of land in a body, and located a part of it in Alachua, a part on the St. Mary's, and a part on the Indian river, more than one hundred miles asunder, as was his custom, we humbly conceive Mr. Clarke has exceeded his authority. In a word, when to an officer of the government written and positive instructions are given, prescribing his duties and regulating the manner in which they should be performed, and when that officer, before a competent tribunal, has declared upon oath that all of his official acts were performed without reference to those instructions and in direct opposition to their mandates, we have no hesitation in declaring that every such act of that officer is null and void and unworthy of consideration. We have no hesitation in saying that Mr. C. was bound to conform himself to his written instructions as his sole guide in the surveys which he should make; that he was bound to measure to the claimant the lands at the place designated in the grant, and according to the boundaries (if any) therein specified; that he had no authority to subdivide an integral grant, nor to change the location when once it was made; and yet, from the papers in his office, and from the express declarations of Mr. Clarke himself, it appears too plainly that it was his constant practice to do all these. Wherever we have discovered a survey made at a place different from that specified in the grant, we have considered it our duty to look to the grant and not to the survey for the locality of the land. This has occurred in more instances than one, and we now remember two cases of 500 acres each, granted in Twelve Mile Swamp, and afterwards surveyed in Dirbin's Swamp, more than fifty miles distant. These lands were granted for services, and required no cultivation. We have confirmed them according to the grants and not according to the surveys; and if there should be no vacant lands at the place specified in the grant the claimant must lose them.

We have thought it our duty to make these few remarks on the subject of surveys, which will ultimately be found a most important branch of the adjudication of private land claims in East Florida. With these remarks we beg leave most respectfully to submit to you, and through you to Congress, the final result of our labors in this department.

We are, sir, with much respect, your obedient servants,

C. DOWNING, Register.

LAND OFFICE, St. Augustine, January 20, 1829.

SIR: We have the honor to transmit to you our final reports on the land claims in East Florida. We regret that this could not have been done at an earlier period, but as the renewal of our commission did not reach us until the 1st of July last, and as the claimants before the board were permitted by the law to introduce new testimony up to the 1st of December, we could not sooner perform the duties imposed upon us. Every claim has been now reported on; and, when the arduous duties which we had to perform are duly considered, we flatter ourselves we have not long exceeded the time necessary to complete them.

No. 1, containing seventy-seven cases, is a report of claims confirmed.
No. 2, one hundred and thirty-two cases, is a report on claims rejected.
No. 3, thirty-eight cases, is a report of claims exceeding 3,500 acres, the limit of our final jurisdiction.
Nos. 4, 5, 6, and 7, are reports on claims under the donation act of 1824:
No. 4, the first of donation claims, containing twelve cases, which have been confirmed.
No. 5, and second of donation claims, thirty-seven cases, rejected.
No. 6, and third of donation claims filed subsequently to the 1st of November, 1827, containing seventeen cases, also rejected.
No. 7 and No. 4 of donation claims, containing four cases, recommended to Congress for confirmation.
No. 8, containing thirteen cases, is a report on, and an abstract of, British grants.
No. 9 is a list of twenty-one town lots confirmed to the claimants.
No. 10 is a list of forty-nine town lots in which there is no evidence of title, and which are rejected.
No. 11 contains a list of twenty claims, situated within 1,500 yards of the fortifications of this city, between the North and St. Sebastian's rivers, and held by the same tenure, viz: "That the party should settle on and possess the land until it should be reclaimed by the government for military purposes." These claims we have no power to confirm, but, for the reasons attached to the abstract, we have recommended them for confirmation.
No. 12 contains the cases of the Messrs. Clarkes, of this place, and those who claim under them. The cases are thirty in number.

We have thought it better to embrace these cases in a separate report and abstract, because they were more numerous than those claimed by any other individual, and because they involved more difficulty in their investigation and decision. Of these cases No. 4, including 5, 6, and 7, is recommended to Congress for confirmation. No. 8, including 9, 10, and 11, is also recommended. No. 26, including 24 and 25, is recommended for confirmation. Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, have been confirmed. Nos. 12, 27, 28, and 29, are also confirmed. No. 3 is a part of a grant recommended by the former board of commissioners.

Nos. 1, 2, 21, 22, 23, and 30, are rejected.

No. 13, containing fifty-seven cases, is an abstract of claims in which no title of property has been filed.

No. 14, two cases, is a report and abstract on conflicting British and Spanish grants.

No. 15, containing sixteen cases of claims confirmed and recommended for confirmation by the board of land commissioners, which were left out of their abstracts, and were returned to this board by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for our report thereon.

No. 16 contains ——— cases, which were rejected by the former board of commissioners and never reported to Congress.

We thought it our duty to supply this omission, that both Congress and the claimants might be apprised of the fate of all the claims filed before this board.

In addition to this, sir, we herewith transmit to you an alphabetical list of all the cases reported on during the present session. We believe it will greatly facilitate an examination of the abstracts and reports herewith sent, and enable a party at a glance of the eye to ascertain the fate of his claim. On this list the first ruled column is the number of the report on which the claim will be found, and the second column contains the number of the claim upon that report. It will be seen that, between the 1st of July, 1828, and January, 1829, a space of less than six months, we have decided and finally reported on nearly six hundred claims. To do this, and to meet the views of Congress in bringing to a close the sittings of this board, we have found it indispensably necessary to employ an additional clerk, the one allowed us by law being assiduously engaged in the translation of the Spanish documents before the board.

To this clerk we have given a certified account of services rendered; and although we were not by law authorized to employ him, yet, when it is considered that without his aid the duties of the office could not have been performed, nor the decision of, and the report upon, the claims completed, we hope that his account may be allowed, and our necessary departure from the law in this single instance sanctioned by the proper authority.

In deciding upon the proper sum for his remuneration we have had no guide but the law of 1825, allowing additional clerks to the former board of commissioners. By that we have been governed, as will be seen by the certified account.

With these remarks we have the honor to submit to you the accompanying documents.

We are, sir, with much respect, your most obedient servants,

C. DOWNING, Register.

No. 1.—John Bunch, claimant for 1,168 acres of land.

On the petition of John Bunch, 2,160 acres of land were granted by Governor White in 1804, at Oak Forest, in Mosquito. On the survey of Robert McHardy, it was found that there were at that place 1,168 acres only. Bunch cultivated the land for several years, and in the year 1819 Governor Coppinger gave to him a royal title for this last quantity. By the rule adopted by this board, that, on a previous concession, a royal title signed by the Spanish governor, though dated subsequently to the 24th February, 1818, should be considered as full evidence of the performance of all conditions made necessary by the ordinance of the King, 1790, under which the land was granted, this claim is confirmed. Thomas H. Dummett is the present claimant by purchase from Bunch.

No. 2.—Moses Harrold, claimant for 395 acres of land.

Moses Harrold petitioned the government for lands, for head rights, and there were granted to him on the 21st April, 1807, 395 acres of land, on the river Nassau; which land was surveyed by John Purcell on the 30th November of the same year, and on the 8th May, 1821, Governor Coppinger issued a royal title in favor of said Harrold for the said land. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 3.—Antonio Huertes, claimant for 800 acres of land.

Antonio Huertes petitioned the government for the lands under the royal order of 1790, and on the 20th October, 1813, Governor Kindelan issued to him a royal title for 800 acres on the west side of the river St. Sebastian, nearly opposite the city of St. Augustine. The title against the United States is good.

No. 4.—Patrick Dean, claimant for 995 acres of land.

Patrick Dean petitioned the government for lands under the royal order of 1790, and there were granted to him, by decree of the 31st August, 1804, 995 acres, situated in the territory of Mosquito, on the west side of the river Halifax, opposite Pelican island; and on the 4th June, 1819, Governor Coppinger issued to the heirs of said Dean a royal title for said lands. This claim is confirmed for reasons in No. 1.

No. 5.—Roque Leornady, claimant for 1,400 acres of land.

Roque Leornady petitioned the government on the 3d January, 1792, for lands under the royal order of 1790, situated on the Pablo road, about 15 miles from St. Augustine, on the North river, and Governor Quesada allows him to settle on the land. Andrew Burgevin surveyed said land on the 28th April, 1819, for the heirs of said Leornady, who apply to Governor Coppinger for a royal title for the same, which is complied with on the 25th May, 1821, for 1,400 acres in the same place. This claim is confirmed. A concession in 1792 and the royal title in 1821, though the last is not of itself good, according to the provisions of the treaty, it is good evidence of the performance of the conditions inherent in the grant.

No. 6.—Joseph Dill, claimant for 500 acres of land.

Joseph Dill petitioned the government for lands under the royal order of 1790; and on the 3d January, 1803, 500 acres were granted to him on the south side of St. John's river, at a place called Mill Creek, 40 miles from the city. Robert Clarke Maxey purchased said land from Dill, and on the 18th of May, 1821, Governor Coppinger issued to the heirs of said Maxey a royal title for said land. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 7.—Fernando Felany, claimant for 1,200 acres of land.

Fernando Felany petitioned the government for lands under the royal order of 1790, and on the 20th December, 1792, there were granted to him 1,200 acres, at a place called Tufily, about two leagues south of St. Augustine; on the 18th May, 1819, Governor Coppinger issued in his favor a royal title. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 8.—Robert Andrew, claimant for 500 acres of land.

In 1793 Don Pedro Marrot surveyed to Robert Andrew 500 acres of land, at a place called San Roberts, and Governor White issued to him a royal title on the 6th April, 1809. The title is good. Benjamin Chaires is the present claimant.

No. 9.—John B. Richard, claimant for 230 acres of land.

In 1803 John B. Richard obtained a grant or concession for the land claimed. It is in proof before the board that Richard lived on and cultivated the land until 1810, at which time he died. His widow then moved off of the land, but, as it appears, did not remain away long enough to forfeit her claim, but returned in a short time and perfected it. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 10.—James Felany, claimant for 285 acres of land

James Felany petitioned the government on November 17, 1815, for the lands formerly abandoned by Boeson, situated on the river Matanzas, and on the same day, month, and year, Governor Estrada grants him one hundred and eighty-five acres of land, being the quantity he is entitled to for his head rights, according to the number of his family. Felany also presents to the board a certificate of Pierra, in which he states that Governor White granted to Pedro Chuet one hundred acres of land adjoining the above tract, on September 3, 1805, which was purchased by Felany by deed attached to the certificate of concession. On April 10, 1821, Felany applies to the government for permission to have the lands above mentioned surveyed, which is granted by Governor Coppinger; and on October 6, 1821, Andrew Burgevin surveys for said Felany two-hundred and eighty-five acres of land in the place pointed out.

The permission and order of the governor to survey the lands as then the property and in possession of the claimant, we have considered evidence of continued possession in him up to 1821, about which time the government passed away from the Spaniards. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 11.—William Hollingsworth, claimant for 150 acres of land.

In 1792 Governor Quesada granted to William Valentine 150 acres of land on the river St. John's, and directed Marrot to survey it. The survey was made by Marrot, and proof has been adduced that Valentine, or Hollingsworth, to whom he sold it, and who is the present claimant, have been in actual and continued possession of the land up to this time. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 12.—The heirs of Robert Pritchard, claimants for 250 acres of land.

In 1791 Marrot, who had been directed by Quesada, the governor, to survey lands to the settlers in the country who might want them, and the quantity to which by the regulations they were entitled, certifies that he had surveyed this land to Thomas Bowden. Two witnesses have deposed that Bowden was for many years in possession of the land. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 13.—The heirs of William O'Neal, claimants for 300 acres of land.

Here is a royal title, dated June 15, 1810. The title declares that the grant was made under the royal order of 1790. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 14.—The heirs of Sarah Foulks, claimants for 100 acres of land.

Don Pedro Marrot, commissioner appointed to distribute lands according to the orders of his Majesty, had surveyed for Margaret Jones three caballeras (100 acres of land) situated at a place called Sheron, on the east side of St. John's river, February 20, 1793. The land was purchased of —— Jones by the ancestor of the present claimant, and witness certifies that the parties have been possessed of the tract claimed for many years. It is therefore confirmed.

Nos. 15 and 16.—G. S. Brown and S. Clarke, claimants for 400 acres of land.

Edward Wanton petitions the government, on November 11, 1801, for the following tracts of land for head rights, to wit: One hundred acres situated between Picolata and the plantation of Manuel Solana, on the river St. John's, and six hundred and fifty acres on Cedar Hammock, about two miles and a half to the south of Solana's, on said river St. John's, in front of Tocoi creek; and on November 23, 1801, Governor White makes the following decree: "Let there be granted to this party the land which he solicits without injury to a third person, and until, according to the persons he may have for its cultivation, there shall be measured to him the corresponding quantity;" and Governor Coppinger, on April 26, 1820, issued to him a royal title. These two claims are therefore confirmed. Clarke and Brown claim title by purchase from Wanton.

No. 17.—The heirs of Robert Whitmore, claimants for 150 acres of land.

This tract is claimed by and has been confirmed to William Hollingsworth, No. 11 of this abstract.

No. 18.—James Rose, claimant for 25 acres of land.

The title produced in this case is a certificate of Thomas D. Aguilar, that Governor White granted to James Rose, a free man, (black,) 25 acres of land in Pibot's Swamp. The negro applied for one hundred, but the governor granted no more than twenty-five; two witnesses have been brought forward to prove cultivation and continued possession by the claimant. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 19.—Margaretta O'Neal, claimant for 243 acres of land.

Don Pedro Marrot, commissioner for the distribution of lands by order of his Majesty, had surveyed for Margaretta O'Neal two tracts of land, as follows: One tract containing nine cavalleras and seven acres, or three hundred and seven acres, on Lansford creek, at a place called New Hope, April 16, 1792; the other tract, containing seven cavalleras and ten acres, or two hundred and forty-three acres, on Lansford creek, at a place called O'Neal, made April 17, 1792; and on the 13th March, 1807, Governor White issued a royal title in favor of M. O'Neal for the last-mentioned tract of two hundred and forty-three acres, under the royal order of October 29, 1790. This last is therefore confirmed.

No. 20.—James Pelot, claimant for 620 acres of land.

It appears that the present claimant has presented to this board three claims which should be reduced to the last number of 620 acres, which was evidently given as a substitution of the others. James Pelot has no evidence of his claim but the certificate of Marrot, dated in 1793, without any accompanying evidence of cultivation. John Francis Pelot has a certificate of Pierra in 1803 that the land on Amelia island was granted by Governor White. It appears by many circumstances that the claimants are one and the same persons, in the survey called James and in the grant called John Francis. In support of this position the witness Farquhar Bethune, who proves a long-continued cultivation of the land on Amelia island, calls the claimant there James Pilot. George Clarke surveyed the land. Suffice it to say that if the land on Amelia island was or was not given in lieu of that on St. John's, and if the claimants, James and John Francis Pelot, were or were not the same person, no more can be confirmed than 620 acres. James Pelot has produced no evidence to his claims on the river, and they must be rejected. John Francis has proved that the land on Amelia was cultivated for many years, and although he is called James by the affiant, Bethune, yet there can be no mistake in the land itself. It lies on Amelia island. 640 were granted by White; 620 surveyed by Clarke; and it is confirmed to Pelot by whatever name he be called, James or John Francisco.

No. 21.—Eleanor Pritchard, claimant for 270 acres of land.

In 1808 sundry witnesses being produced by Eleanor Pritchard, the widow of Robert Pritchard, to prove to Governor White the number of her family, black and white, Don John Percell was ordered to survey to the claimant "two hundred and seventy acres of land, which correspond to the interested, her children and slaves," in the place which the certificate points out on the river St. John's. Joseph Somerall and Joseph Hagen, two witnesses introduced by the claimant, have proved the continued possession and cultivation of the place claimed by the then widow, now the wife of James Hall, up to the date of their deposition, June 15, 1824. It is confirmed.

No. 22.—Francisco Diaz Terran, claimant for 300 acres of land.

Fr. Diaz Terran petitioned the government on the 9th March, 1797, for 300 acres of land, situated on the south point of Amelia island, under the royal order of 1790. The governor passed the memorial to the commandant of engineers for his report, who reported in favor of allowing Terran to settle on the lands petitioned for, but that "should the government be obliged to order the inhabitants to retire from Amelia to St. John's river, then he was of opinion that the memorialist should not be permitted to claim damages," to which Governor White makes the following decree on the 11th of the same month and year: "Let there be granted to the petitioner the land which he solicits, without injury to a third person, according to the number of his family and precise conditions of conforming to what is set forth in the foregoing report relative to his not claiming satisfaction for injuries in case that, for the better service of the King, they be ordered to leave the lands set forth, and that the inhabitants thereof retire on the river St. John's." The depositions of two witnesses, taken in the State of Georgia, are filed in this claim to show occupancy of this land by the grantee. They are sufficient to prove the fact of possession, but not the length of its continuance. This may have been an omission of the justice before whom they were taken. It is too late now to remedy the defect, and we have deemed it better to confirm this claim than to do probable injustice by rejecting it.

No. 23.—Pablo Sabate, claimant for ——— acres of land.

"I certify that, on examination of the office of the public archives, I find no grants of the above land from the government; but as early as July 23, 1760, there is a sale on record from John Elegio de la Puente to Jesse Fish, and on March 31, 1792, the said land was sold by a decision of the judicial tribunal of this then province as the property of Fish, and purchased by John Taton, and afterwards sold to intermediate purchasers until September 7, 1809, when Susan Madin, widow of Brian Conner, sold the same to Pablo Sabate, the present claimant." This seems to be a grant in which case the original is lost. The judicial recognition of its validity by the Spanish government, as appears by the above certificate of F. J. Fatio and the sanction of the sale to Taton, is sufficient to ground a decree of confirmation.

No. 24.—Francis Richard, claimant for 650 acres of land.

Governor Quesada granted this land to one Samuel Russell in 1795. Russell lived on the land, as is proved to the board, more than ten years, and sold to Richard. In 1821, by order of the government, it was surveyed to the claimant, to whom it is now confirmed.

No. 25.—Isaac Sasportas, claimant for 425 acres of land.

This is the same claim which was rejected by the board in the session of 1827, as dated after January 24, 1818, and is so reported to Congress on abstract No. 2. It appears now that the royal title then produced to the board, dated May 6, 1818, was granted on a previous concession, issued on the 10th June, 1817. On the production of this new evidence of title the commissioners have no hesitation in deciding that the claim is a good one, and should be confirmed.

No. 26.—George Clark, claimant for 100 acres of land.

John Cabedo petitioned the government on the 23d February, 1801, for permission to transfer his right to George Clark, of one hundred acres of land, situated on Guana creek, to which Governor White made the following decree on the 25th February, 1801: "The transfer is permitted which J. Cabedo makes in favor of George Clark of the 100 acres he obtained on Guana creek, in consequence of which there shall be given to Clark the corresponding document for his security, returning to Miguel Acosta the certificate accompanying this memorial, with the note attached to the same." This sale from Cabedo to Clark, when sanctioned by Governor White, is good proof of conditions performed. It is therefore confirmed.

No. 27.—Antonio Friay, claimant for 1,500 acres of land.

Antonio Friay petitioned the government, and there were granted to him on the 23d September, 1811, fifteen hundred acres of land, situated on the east side of the river St. John's, opposite the mouth of the river Okelewaja; and on the 21st February, 1821, said Friay petitioned the government to issue to him a royal title for said land, which was done by Governor Coppinger on the 9th of the same month and year. In this case the concession is dated in 1811, the royal title in 1821. The concession is always conditional, and the royal title, though after January 24, 1818, is good proof of the performance of those conditions. It is confirmed.

No. 28.—Daniel Hurlbert, claimant for 200 acres of land.

On the 22d August, 1814, a public sale took place in the city of Augustine, by order of the government, of 200 acres of land, situated five miles north of the said city, the property of José Antonio de Yguiniz, which land was purchased by D. Hurlbert, and on the 26th of the same month and year acknowledged by the tribunal to be the property of said Hurlbert. This is somewhat similar to the claim of Pablo Sabate, No. 23, of this abstract, a sale of land to which no original grant is found, ordered and recognized by the judicial tribunal of the country. It is confirmed.

No. 29.—William G. Christopher's administrator, claimant for 500 acres of land.

Don Pedro Marrot, commissioner for the distribution of lands in East Florida, had surveyed for Spicer Christopher, on the 15th February, 1792, 15 caballerias or 500 acres of land, situated on the river Nassau, at a place called Santa Maria, and on the 8th April, 1809, Governor White issued to said Christopher a royal title for said land. It is confirmed.

No. 30.—Philip Solana, claimant for 30 acres of land.

Thomas Aguilar, secretary of government, certifies that, to a memorial presented by Pedro de Cala, dated March 3, 1807, praying for 61 acres of those formerly granted to Antonio Martinez, situated at a place called Muchie, Governor White made the following decree on the 10th March of the same year: "Let there be granted to the interested 30 acres of land of the 140 which are granted to Antonio Martinez, with the condition that he must cultivate the land without intermission, and should he not comply, he will be deprived of the same, and in future no land whatever shall be granted him. Being obliged, at the same time, to deliver in the secretary's office the certificate which was delivered to him from said office on the 4th April, 1804, for 20 acres, which were granted him on a small island to the south of the Matanzas." The grantee afterwards sold to P. Solana, the present claimant, with the consent of the government, on the 30th June, 1821. This sale, in 1821, with the consent of the government, we consider conclusive to show the performance of all precedent conditions, express or implied. Confirmed.

No. 31.—John Jones, claimant for 100 acres of land.

This land was conceded to John Jones on the 26th August, 1803, who cultivated and possessed it, as Joseph Hagen has testified, for more than 25 years. It is situated on the west side of Trout creek, and on the north of St. John's river. It is confirmed.

No. 32.—Scipio, (a free negro,) claimant for 25 acres of land.

Scipio, a free black, petitioned the government on the 12th September, 1809, for 100 acres of land, situated on St. John's river, at a place called Padanaram, bounded on the northwest by the lands of Dr. Travers, and on the southeast by Six Mile creek, to which Governor White made the following decree on the 9th October, 1809: "Let there be granted to the petitioner only 25 acres of land, in the place which he solicits, without injury to a third person, and shall cultivate the same without intermission." It is in evidence before the board that Scipio cultivated the land for the requisite number of years. It is therefore confirmed to him.

No. 33.—George J. F. Clarke, claimant for 1,000 acres of land.

This claim is supported by a concession in 1817, and a royal title in the month of August, 1818. It was not strictly regular that a royal title should be issued until ten years had elapsed after the date of the concession and occupancy proved by the claimant. The governor in this case, as in many others, has departed from the strict rules; nevertheless, the claim must be confirmed.

No. 34.—The heirs of Isaac Lang, claimants for 200 acres of land.

Don Pedro Marrot, commissioned judge by his excellency the commander-in-chief of this province of East Florida for the survey of lands ordered to be distributed by command of his Majesty, certifies, on the 4th of March, 1792, he had surveyed, by Samuel Eastlake, surveyor for Isaac Lang, six caballerias, or 200 acres of land, situated on Little St. Mary's river. It appears, by reference to Marrot's list of persons to whom land had been surveyed, that this person is one of them; and he has produced a witness who proves cultivation four or five years. This, perhaps, is as much as should be required after so long a lapse of time. The claim is confirmed.

No. 35.—Peter Miranda, claimant for 790 acres of land.

Pedro Miranda petitioned the government for lands under the royal order of 1815, and on the 17th of July, 1816, Governor Coppinger issued to said Miranda a royal title for 790 acres, situated on the river Matanzas, to the south of St. Augustine. Charles Robio filed the claim. Confirmed.

No. 36.—Santo Rodriguez, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

Santo Rodriguez petitioned the government on the 22d of December, 1817, for 2,000 acres of land, under the royal order of 1815, situated on the east side of St. John's river, on Dunn's lake, to which Governor Coppinger makes the following decree on the 24th of January, 1818: "Let there be granted to the petitioner the 2,000 acres of land, in the place which he solicits, without injury to a third person, for which there shall be issued to him the title in fee simple from notary's office of government and royal domain." George Clarke surveyed the above tract on the 6th of April, 1818. Confirmed.

No. 36.—Michael Ledwith, claimant for 250 acres of land.

Concession in 1804, on the river Nassau, on Lofton's creek; proof by two witnesses that he cultivated it many years, and that it has never been out of the possession of Ledwith, the grantee, and his representatives. Cyrus Briggs claims for himself and others, the lawful heirs of Ledwith. It is confirmed.

No. 37.—Garret Ledwith, claimant for Pelot's island, about 100 acres of land.

A concession by Governor White, in June, 1803, for Pelot's island, about 100 acres; proof of possession, by two witnesses, until the latter part of 1813. Cyrus Briggs claims for himself and others, the lawful heirs of Ledwith. It is confirmed.

No. 38.—George Anderson, claimant for 450 acres of land.

This land is situated in the Territory of Mosquito, "on the north by John Addison, on the south by the river Tomoca." Claimant holds by a deed made to Mr. Kerr (from whom he inherits) by Gabriel W. Perpall, the grantee. Perpall obtained a royal title to the land from Kindelan, under the order of 1790, in 1815. It is confirmed.

No. 39.—Juan Joaneda, Bartholome Lopez, and Bartholome Leufrio, claimants for 17 acres of land.

Juan Joaneda, Bartholome Lopez, and Bartholome Leufrio, obtained from the British government 17 acres of land, situated between Bridge creek and the river St. Sebastian, in the city of St. Augustine; and in the cession of this then province to the crown of Spain, it was confirmed to them by Governor Zespedez, and lastly by Governor White, who not only confirmed what his predecessor had done, but gave them permission to alienate the same. Of this Gould claims one acre. The whole claim is good, and we confirm it.

No. 40.—Francis Richard, claimant for 1,025 acres of land.

This is a grant made on the 10th of January, 1818. The petitioner, for services, which he tendered a certificate to prove, declares "that he had purchased twenty-nine slaves, and requests for said services the donation to which he was entitled, 875 acres, on the west side of Lake George, in a hammock known as 'Big Spring,' and 150 acres at the same place," for an equal number of acres which he possesses at Matanzas, and of which he makes an absolute abandonment, being in all 1,025 acres. The decree is, that he may have the land. This is a good claim; grants for services should always be made in proportion to the workers, and require no evidence of cultivation. It has been surveyed. Confirmed.

No. 41.—Francis Pellicer, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

Francis Pellicer petitions the government for 2,000 acres of land, under the royal order of March 29, 1815; and by a decree of the 24th January, 1818, Governor Coppinger grants him 2,000 acres at a place called Tomoca, bounded on the north by the lands of Jos. M. Arredondo, on the east by vacant pine land, on the south by the lands of the heirs of John Russell, and on the west by the public road. On the 22d July, 1818, Governor Coppinger issued to him a royal title for the same, and on the 14th March, 1818, Robert McHardy surveys said land for him in the place pointed out. Pellicer sold to Bulow. As this is a bona fide grant, although on the last day, 24th January, 1818, we advise its confirmation.

No. 42.—John Mistre, claimant for 50 acres of land.

In 1816 one hundred acres of land were granted to claimant under the order of 1790, and in 1821 a royal title was made to him of a small island, on which Quesada's battery was built. Confirmed.

No. 43.—Pedro Peso de Burgo, grantee; John A. Cavedo, (present) claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

In February, 1803, Governor White conceded this land at Mosquito wharf, "running thence south for head rights;" two witnesses have deposed that they saw the grantee living on the tract in 1811, with houses and a crop. We are willing to presume a further residence, and confirm the claim.

No. 44.—J. H. McIntosh, claimant for 800 acres of land.

Mulberry Grove, on the St. John's river, a royal title made in 1805, by Governor White to Timothy Hollingsworth, and a conveyance by grantee to claimant, dated 2d May of the same year. It is confirmed.

No. 45.—Juan Segui, claimant for 107 acres of land.

This land is situated on the North river, at a place called San Ignacio, and is founded on a royal title made by Governor White, on the 5th September, 1807, in favor of Lazaro Ortega, who sold the same to present claimant by deed bearing date 29th April, 1809. It is confirmed.

No. 46.—Daniel Hurlbert, claimant for 300 acres of land.

This land is situated to the south of St. Augustine, at a place called Levett, and was sold by order of the government on the 11th September, 1820, to Francis P. Sanchez, who sold the same to present claimant on the 12th April, 1823. This claim is similar in every respect to No. 28 of this abstract, and is therefore confirmed.

No. 47.—Benjamin Chaires, claimant for 300 acres of land.

A royal title made by Governor Kindelan to William Lawrence, in 1815, "to 300 acres of land on Amelia island," based on a concession, in 1805, under the royal order of 1790. Chaires is the purchaser. Confirmed.

No. 48.—Joseph Baya, claimant for 130 acres of land.

These lands were sold by the government, on the 6th November, 1792, as the property of Jesse Fish, deceased, and purchased by Antonio Berta, who conveyed the same to Francisco Rovera on the 29th of December, 1798, who sold the same to José de Zubezarreta on the 30th December, 1799, whose widow, Germana de Saria, sold the same to the present claimant on the 21st June, 1823. It is confirmed.

No. 49.—Francis Goodwin's heirs, claimants for 640 acres of land.

This quantity of land is confirmed to the claimants. For report, see No. 68, abstract B.

No. 50.—Cyrus Briggs, claimant for 250 acres of land.

Concession in 1804, on the river Nassau, on Lofton's creek; proof by two witnesses that he cultivated it many years, and that it has never been out of the possession of Ledwith, the grantee, and his representatives. Cyrus Briggs claims for himself and others, the lawful heirs of Ledwith. It is confirmed.*

No. 51.—Cyrus Briggs, claimant for 100 acres of land.

A concession by Governor White in June, 1803, for Pearson's island, about 100 acres; proof of possession, by two witnesses, until the latter part of 1813 Confirmed.

No. 52.—William Drummond, claimant for 400 acres of land.

This land lies on the river St. Mary's, at a place called Casa Blanca. It was surveyed to Richard Lang by Pedro Marrot in 1792, and resurveyed by George Clarke in October, 1818. In February, 1816, the claimant, Lang, applied to the governor to have a copy of his original concession given him from the office. The governor directs it to be done, and we consider this, together with the survey of Clarke, sufficient evidence of continued possession. It is confirmed.

* These are the same claims confirmed in the name of the Ledwiths, Michael and Garret. Nos. 36 and 37 of this report.

No. 53.—Heirs of Jos. Hagins, claimant for 200 acres of land.

This land was surveyed to Jesse Frost by Pedro Marrot in 1793. It lies on Julington creek, St. John's river. It appears to the board, by two depositions in the case, that Jos. Hagins derived the land from Frost by inheritance, and that the parties have lived on it ever since. Confirmed.

No. 54.—The heirs of Thos. Fitch, claimants for 400 acres of land.

This land lies on Diego plains, at a place called Levett's plantation. In 1818 this land was in contest before the judicial tribunal here, between Montes de Oca and Francis X. Sanchez. The governor adjudged it to be the property of Montes de Oca, and decreed that the full title should be made him. Montes de Oca sold to George Fleming, and Fleming to Thomas Fitch, to whose heirs we confirm it.

No. 55.—James McGirt, claimant.

No. 55. 300 acres of land on St. Mary's river.
No. 56. 300 acres of land on Nassau river.
No. 57. 80 acres of land, a small island on St. Mary's river.

These three cases are reported at length in Nos. 88, 89, and 90, on report marked B.

No. 58.—Francis de Medicis, claimant for 400 acres of land on the west side of the North river.

In 1792 this land was first granted. In 1798 Juan Salon, the original grantee, requested a renewal of his certificate, the first being lost. The certificate was ordered to be renewed accordingly. In 1820 M. Palon, son of John, sold the land to the present claimant before the notary of this city, Juan de Entralgo. There is no positive evidence of cultivation in the case. But the sale in 1820, attested before the notary public, or escrivano, we consider sufficient. He was a judicial as well as executive officer, and we believe he was bound by the nature of his office to record no deed unless the title was good. We have therefore confirmed this claim.

No. 59.—Heirs of Thomas Lamb, claimants for 200 acres of land on Amelia island.

The concession is dated on the 25th of October, 1798. C. W. Clark deposed that he knows the land called Lamb's Old Field, and that it was a matter of public notoriety that Lamb lived on said land for a number of years. John Uptegrove was, in 1802, upon the land, and Lamb was living there with a large family. It is confirmed.

No. 60.—James Hall, claimant for 450 acres of land.
No. 61.—James Hall, claimant for 250 acres of land.

These two claims are confirmed to William Craig. See abstract of the register and receiver of 1827, Nos. 1 and 2.

No. 62.—E. Hudnall's heirs, claimants for 100 acres of land.

The claim of the United States to this land was relinquished by the board of commissioners to David Miller. The parties in this case, as in the preceding, are left to their action at law.

No. 63.—Martin Hernandez, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

This land was granted for military services by Governor Coppinger on the 16th of September, 1817. 500 acres lie in Cyprus swamp, 1,000 at the head of the Northwest creek, emptying into the river Matanzas, and 500 on the river Halifax. It is confirmed.

No. 64.—Francis P. Sanchez, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

This land was granted to Francisco Medicis, for military services, in December, 1815, and sold by him to the present claimant in 1823. There is an order of survey made in 1815, which seems never to have been executed. It lies on the river Ocklewaha, and is confirmed.

No. 65—Achilles Murat, claimant for 1,200 acres of land.

One thousand acres of this tract was granted by royal title in March, 1816, to F. M. Arredondo, jr. It lies on the Matanzas river, about nine miles south of St. Augustine. It was sold by Arredondo, jr., to Moses E. Levy, and by him sold to the present claimant. The other two hundred acres adjoin the first tract, and is derived from Honoria Clarke, whose title has been fully reported on abstract C, No. 14. This is a part of the land assigned to Margaretta Clarke in the distribution of the estate of her mother, Honoria, made in 1809, and fully approved by the government in 1810. The claim to Murat is confirmed.

No. 66.—Mary Dewees, claimant for 500 acres of land.

This is the same land confirmed to Joseph Dill, No. 6, under whom Dewees claims.

No. 67.—Joseph M. Sanchez, claimant for 200 acres of land.

This land lies on the river Halifax, at Mosquito, at a place called Sorruguey. It was conceded by Governor White to Getrudes Carrillo in March, 1804. During the year 1821 Francis de Medicis, as attorney for Mrs. Carrillo, applied to Governor Coppinger for a royal title; upon full proof before the governor that she had complied with the conditions of the grant, he directed the title to be made. Sanchez claims under the grant to Carrillo, to whom, Carrillo, the title of the United States is relinquished.

No. 68.—Hannah Smith, claimant for 389⅔ acres of land.

This land is situated at a place called St. Lucia, on the North river. It is claimed under a royal title made the 10th of July, 1804, to John Andreas, from whose representatives the present claimant has purchased it. Confirmed.

No. 69.—Josiah Smith, claimant for 1,000 acres of land.

On the 10th of May, 1815, the land claimed, described to be "pine land," situated on a "tongue" of land between St. Mary's and Bell's rivers, was granted by Governor Kindelan to Smith for services.

There is filed, amongst the papers in this claim, a survey without signature or certificate. This concession, like that to Pablo Fontane, Report 2, No. 124, we should consider insufficient to justify us in confirming the claim, and for the reasons there given; but in the year 1820 Governor Coppinger executed a royal title in favor of the claimant, and it is confirmed.

No. 70.—James Ervin, claimant for 125 acres of land.

Governor White conceded this land on the 2d of December, 1803. It is situated on river Little St. Mary's, at the crossing place. The evidence is the deposition of Geo. J. F. Clarke that Ervin, the claimant, was in actual cultivation in the years 1809-'10 and '11, and has so continued, with small intermissions, to the present time. It is confirmed.

No. 71.—Andres Papy, claimant for 126 acres of land.

On the 13th of May, 1793, P. Marrot surveyed this land to Josefa Espinosa, and on the 25th of January, 1811, Governor White gave to her a royal title. It was sold by Espinosa to Philip Solana, and by him on the 9th of February, 1819, which sale was duly recorded by the escribano to Anne Pons, under whom Papy claims. It is confirmed. It is situated at a place called Fort San Diego, North St. Augustine.

No. 72.—Edward R. Gibson, claimant for 250 acres of land.

These lands were conceded by Governor Coppinger to Joseph Delespine on July 30, 1816, by virtue of the royal order of 1790. H. Dexter has proved cultivation and possession in the present claimant, who derives his title from Joseph Delespine, the grantee. The lands lie near Moultrie creek, and are said to be bounded by those granted by Daniel Livinney. Confirmed.

No. 73.—Elizabeth Bunch, claimant for 100 acres of land.

In 1806 Governor White granted to Samuel Bunch, the deceased husband of the claimant, by concession, one hundred acres of land, situated on the river Halifax, in front of the first key after passing the key called Pellican. One witness has proved long and continued possession of the parties, and the claim is confirmed.

No. 74.—Benjamin Chaires, claimant for 300 acres of land.

A royal title made on July 4, 1815, by Joseph Estrada, governor pro tempore, to Don Bartolome de Castra y Ferrer, for 300 acres on Amelia island, at a place called Beiche Hammock. The land was first conceded in 1802, under the order of 1790. Benjamin Chaires is the present claimant. It is confirmed.

No. 75.—Josiah Smith, claimant for 400 acres of land.

In 1804 a concession was made to Archibald Atkinson in the usual manner, from whom Smith claims by purchase, situated at Spell's Old Field, on the north branch of the river Nassau. John Uptegrove has deposed that, in that year, he, the deponent, was employed by Atkinson to settle the place. He took with him five or six hands and put up a log building suitable for a residence; he says, moreover, that the lands have ever since been claimed by Atkinson and Smith. José Maria Ugarte deposes that, in 1814, Atkinson having been killed in the service of Spain, his property was directed to be sold by government for the benefit of his representatives, and at that sale, so sanctioned, the land here claimed was purchased by Smith. This is sufficient to justify us in confirming it.

No. 76.—James Curtis, claimant for 400 acres of land.

The evidence in this claim is somewhat defective, but nevertheless it appears to us to be good. The original British title, on which the claim is founded, has not been filed in the office; but there is a certificate of the assistant surveyor general, Benjamin Lord, dated on the 20th May, 1784, to a plat of the land, which plat he certifies to be a true copy of the register plat in the surveyor general's land office in East Florida. The plat and the register aforesaid bears date September 10, 1766. In addition to this, there is a deed of bargain and sale from Thomas Brown to James Curtis, the present claimant, made on August 1, 1784. Properly there should have been produced to the board the original grant made to Stewart, a copy of its register and survey, (which last alone is done,) and some evidence to prove that the sale to Curtis was recognized by the Spanish government; but from the length of time which has elapsed since the date of the transaction, from the antiquity of the deed, and from the difficulty of obtaining written and record evidence of British titles—those titles having been removed by the British government in 1783—we cannot expect such rigid proof as would otherwise be required. Curtis is described in the deed from Brown as a Spanish subject, a lieutenant in the Hibernian regiment, then in East Florida; and as, by the provisions of the treaty in 1783, the British subjects holding lands in Florida were permitted to sell them within eighteen months, which in the present case was done, we confirm the claim.

The land is situated on North river, and on the west side, about eight miles from St. Augustine, on the Bluff Point, at a place called Arrenges.

No. 77.—The heirs of George Long, claimants for 600 acres of land.

It appears, by reference to a list of "inhabitants with their lands on the river Matanzas and its settlement," made by the directions of Governor White in 1801, that George Long, the father of the present claimants, at that time owned six hundred acres of land. In the memorials of Dupont, of Clarke, and of others, these lands of Long are frequently pointed out as boundaries. These claimants had determined to abandon the claim of their father and apply for a donation; that application has been reported on in Report 5, No. 35. It will be seen, by reference to the evidence in that case, that George Long cultivated the land from 1801 to 1813, and that his representatives repossessed themselves of it, as soon as it was safe to do so, in 1821. It is therefore a good claim, and we confirm it.

REPORT No. II.

REJECTED CASES.

No. 1.—Bartholomew Suarez, claimant for 50 acres of land, Moses creek.

The title for this land is dated August 4, 1818.

No. 2.—Pablo Sabate, claimant for 2,500 acres of land, west of Casacola.

Granted by royal title, April 2, 1818.

No. 3.—Estevan Arnau, claimant for 100 acres of land, Mosquito.

Royal title, dated June 19, 1818.

No. 4.—Thomas Backhouse, claimant for 500 acres of land, Indian river.

Grant by royal title, June 20, 1818.

No. 5 —Moses E. Levy, claimant for 500 acres of land, Indian river.

Granted by royal title, to Joaquin Sanchez, June 15, 1818.

No. 6.—John Houston, claimant for 700 acres of land, St. John's and Nassau.

Granted by concession, May 20, 1818.

No. 7.—John Gonzales, claimant for 1,000 acres of land, St. Diego.

By royal title, June 10, 1818.

No. 8.—F. D. McDowell, claimant for 800 acres of land.

The claimant produces here, as his only evidence of title, a certificate of Entralgo, of May 24, 1819, stating that the claimant had no lands precedent to that date.

No. 9.—Octavius Mitchell, claimant for 2,000 acres of land, Mosquito.

Claims by concession, under date June 2, 1818.

No. 10.—William T. Hall, claimant for 2,000 acres of land, Mosquito.

Claims by concession, October 20, 1819.

No. 11.—Flora Leslie, claimant for 500 acres of land, Springer's branch.

This claim is predicated on a certificate of Thomas de Aguilar, of April 12, 1810, the original of which is not to be found in the office of the public archives; and, as claimant has never proved possession of the same, it is rejected.

No. 12.—Susanna Rollins, claimant for 200 acres of land, Nassau.

This concession is dated 1799. In 1801 there was a general survey on Nassau, and this person is not named. With no proof of cultivation, the claim must be rejected.

No. 13.—Isabella Wiggins, claimant for 300 acres of land, Lake George.

This is a claim under the certificate of George J. F. Clarke, of March 23, 1821, with no other document.

No. 14.—J. H. McIntosh, claimant for undefined, river Miami.

The original grantee, John McQueen, petitions the government for 2,000 acres of land on the Miami, on October 29, 1795; and on November 5, 1795, Governor Quesada gives permission to said grantee to establish himself on said lands; but as to the number of acres, "there should be assigned to him the quantity he was entitled to as soon as the general survey took place:" there is no proof before the board of the survey, or the possession or cultivation of said land; it is therefore rejected.

No. 15.—Hannah Nobles, claimant for 1,000 acres of land, Lake St. Mark's.

This is a certificate of John de Pierra of July 3, 1799, for 1,000 acres of land, granted Robert Cowen, the original grantee, by Governor White, on the second of the same month and year; but as neither the original grantee nor the present claimant have proved possession, the claim is rejected.

No. 16.—Thomas Suarez, administrator of Anthony Suarez, claimant for 500 acres of land, Mills' swamp.

The only document presented in this claim is a certificate of survey, of George J. F. Clarke, dated March 1, 1817. No other proof; rejected.

No. 17.—Abner Williams's heirs, claimants for 150 acres of land, river St. John's.

Agreeably to the certificate of John de Pierra, dated June 20, 1801, Anastacio Mombromaty petitions Governor White for the above quantity of land, which is granted him. There is no proof of possession by either of the parties; it is therefore rejected.

No. 18.—Edward R. Gibson, claimant for 125 acres of land, Moultrie creek.

Founded on one of Thomas de Aguilar's certificates, dated July 1, 1815, with no proof of cultivation or possession. Rejected.

No. 19.—George Morrison, claimant for 150 acres of land, St. Mary's river.

This is a certificate of John de Pierra, dated 2d May, 1805. There is no evidence before the board of the performance of the conditions contained in said grant; it is rejected.

No. 20.—Charlotte Gobert, claimant for 100 acres of land, St. Mark's pond.

This claim is founded on a concession made to Charles, a free negro, in 1806, with conditions "that he settle in the term of one month." There is no testimony whatever adduced; therefore it is rejected.

No. 21.—Daniel Hurlbert, claimant for 125 acres of land, Pevel's swamp.

Conceded to claimant on the 3d September, 1805, under the royal ordinance of 1790, with the additional condition "that he take possession of the land in one month from the date of the decree." There is no evidence of the performance of the conditions either expressed or implied.

No. 22.—Joseph Cone, claimant for 115 acres of land, St. Mary's river.

Conceded on the 29th May, 1805, with conditions similar to those of No. 21. There is no evidence, and the claim is rejected.

No. 23.—Robert Hutchinson, claimant for 450 acres of land, Little St. Mary's river.

Conceded on the 8th May, 1816, under the royal order, 1790. Claimant proves nothing, and it is therefore rejected.

No. 24.—The heirs of Robert Andrew, claimants for 100 acres of land.

On the 3d of October, 1793, R. Andrew petitions the governor, Quesada, for permission to exchange the lands which were surveyed to him on the plains of St. Diego for an equal quantity on the Savannah of Urlieche, which request was granted on the 18th of the same month and year; but as there is no proof before the board of his ever having taken possession of the same, it is rejected.

No. 25.—Isabella Wiggins, claimant for 300 acres of land, east of Lake George.

No evidence of cultivation; it is therefore rejected.

No 26.—Josiah Starkey's trustee, claimant for 455 acres of land, St. Mary's river.

In the memorial of the claimant to the board, he speaks of a concession from Governor Coppinger, which is not produced. There is nothing in the papers but a survey by George Clarke, and a mortgage from Charles Sibbald. There is no evidence of cultivation or possession, and the claim is rejected.

NOTE.—We believe this is the same land confirmed to Charles Sibbald in a former session of the board. If so, the party will sustain no injury by failing to file his title in this case.

No. 27.—Joseph F. White, claimant for 250 acres of land.

Concession made by Governor White on the 28th July, 1803, to Alexander Watson, on condition "that he takes possession of the land within six months." In June, 1804, the governor is satisfied, by evidence, that the land was possessed within the six months specified, and directs a survey. Watson sells to White in 1820. There is no evidence before the board of the ten years' cultivation by the party, made necessary by the ordinance of 1790, under which the land was granted. It is rejected.

No. 28.—Robert Andrew, claimant for 100 acres of land.

Conceded on the 18th November, 1799. He has produced no evidence whatever to justify the board in confirming his claim.

No. 29.—Daniel C. Hart, claimant for 150 acres of land.

Concession dated 8th January, 1818, certified by Aguilar, and no original in the office. Without any evidence of cultivation, it must be rejected.

No. 30.—William Barden, claimant for 50 acres of land.

Conceded on the 6th May, 1805. It is proved by James Barden that in August, the same year, the party was in possession of the land, and making a crop upon it. The board consider that, when under the order of 1790, ten years' possession was necessary to complete a title, they cannot be justified in confirming a claim, one year's possession of which alone is proved.

No. 31.—James Lewis, jr., claimant for 50 acres of land.

Conceded 22d December, 1806, on the condition "that he take possession of the same in one month." He has proved nothing, and the claim is rejected.

No. 32.—The widow of Thomas Collier, claimant for 1,200 acres of land.

Concession dated 8th May, 1804. The condition the same as in the preceding claims, without proof.

No. 33.—Delia Broadoway, claimant for 500 acres of land.

Thomas Aguilar's certificate, the 16th September, 1815. The original of which, if there was ever any, is not in the office. No proof of cultivation. The claim is rejected.

No. 34.—Antonio Williams, (free negro,) claimant for 300 acres of land.

Concession dated the 1st December, 1801. Without any proof whatever.

No. 35.—Albany Fallis, claimant for 50 acres of land.

Juan de Pierra, secretary of government, by Thomas de Aguilar, certifies "that, to a memorial presented by Albany Fallis, soliciting the number of acres he is entitled to, situated on a small island in the river Nassau, the following decree was made by Governor White on the 6th November, 1805: "Let there be granted to this interested fifty acres in the place he solicits, which are those he is entitled to, agreeably to his oath, being well understood that he must establish himself on said land in the term of one month, counted from the date." No evidence; rejected.

No. 36.—Michael Lynch, claimant for 335 acres of land.

This land was granted on the 22d of June, 1805, under the order of 1790, with the condition "that he take possession of the same within six months from the date." Nothing is proved, and the claim is rejected.

No. 37.—John G. Rushing, claimant for 80 acres of land.

No title produced, but George Clarke's survey and certificate of the 8th February, 1815. There is no proof of cultivation, and the claim is rejected.

No. 38.—Ezekiel Hudnall's heirs, claimants for 900 acres of land.

This claim is based on concession dated 3d June, 1817, with the condition "that they take possession of it within four months." In April, 1821, there is a certificate and survey of George Clarke. So far from proving a performance of the conditions, a witness, Samuel Kinsley, has been introduced by the claimants, who proves directly the reverse, and deposes in a conversation with said Hudnall that he, Hudnall, declared the fear of the Indians prevented his possession of the land. Hudnall is now dead, and whilst alive he was afraid to take possession of the land. By the condition of the grant his heirs must lose it.

No. 39.—Thomas Andrew, claimant for 200 acres of land.

Concession on the 23d November, 1803, on the condition "that he take possession of the land within one month from the date." He has adduced no evidence, and his claim is rejected.

No. 40.—H. B. Martin, claimant for 400 acres of land.

Conceded on the 3d September, 1803, on the condition that he take possession within six months. There is no proof, and the claim is rejected.

No. 41.—Thomas Murphy, claimant for 3,000 acres of land.

An island in the St. John's river. The concession is dated on the 11th June, 1818. It is barred by the treaty.

No. 42.—William Hart, claimant for 1,400 acres of land.

In 1811 William Hart applied to the governor for an indefinite number of acres on the river St. John's "to establish a cowpen for the security of stock." The governor directed Don Will Craig, a justice of the peace, to report "on the propriety of the petition as well as on the number of the stock of said Hart." This was never done, nor was any grant made to the land. It is true that the representatives of the claimant, in their memorial to the board, have declared that the grant to the land was lost in 1820 in the river St. John's, when their father was drowned; but of this there was no proof; and, as the claim stands, it is a bad one.

No. 43.—Joseph B. Reyes, claimant for 1,700 acres of land.

This claim is based upon Thomas Aguilar's unsupported certificate, without evidence of cultivation or possession, or existence and loss of the original. It is rejected.

No. 44.—Lewis Pike's heirs, claimants for 400 acres of land.

In 1801 the claimant petitioned for lands without specifying the number of acres. Governor White made the following decree: "Let there be granted to this party the land which he solicits, and until, according to the number of his family, there shall be measured the quantity he is entitled to." The land is left undefined in quantity, and, as there is no evidence of possession, the claim is rejected.

No. 45.—John Creighton, claimant for 305 acres of land.

Concession on the 29th of October, 1803, on the condition "that he take possession within one month." He has adduced no proof before the board, and the claim is rejected.

No. 46—George Webber, claimant for 100 acres of land.

Concession on the 21st January, 1804, conditioned that he take possession of the same within one month. There is no proof, and the claim is rejected.

No. 47.—Thomas Yonge, claimant for 1,100 acres of land.

Concession dated the 23d July, 1803, on the condition "that he take possession within six months." There is no proof of performance, and the claim is rejected.

No. 48.—The heirs of Nathaniel Hall, claimant.

This claim is founded on a simple concession made by Governor White 27th July, 1799. There is no proof of possession or any other evidence before the board, and it is therefore rejected.

No. 49.—Elias B. Gould, claimant for 500 acres of land.

This is a part of a grant to George J. F. Clarke, of four thousand acres. (See Report No. 12, claim No. 5, where it is reported on at length.)

No. 50.—The heirs of Augustine Dimillere, claimants for 170 acres of land.

Rejected for the want of proof.

No. 51.—Francisco Paz, claimant for 1,500 acres of land.

On the 12th November, 1815, Thomas Aguilar certifies that fifteen hundred acres of land were granted to the claimant on the Palecco creek for his merits and services under the provisions of the ordinance of 1815. The original of this certificate is not in the office of the public archives. It is rejected.

No. 52.—James Dell, claimant for 500 acres of land.

This is another certificate of Thomas Aguilar's, dated 1816. It does not appear whether the grant was made under the ordinance of 1790, or under that of 1815. If under the first, the claimant should have proved possession, which he has not done, and we cannot suppose it was a grant for services, when the claimant was one of the most distinguished leaders of the rebels. It is rejected.

No. 53.—The heirs of John Faulk, claimants for 250 acres of land.

This claim is based on a certificate of Aguilar's, dated 1817. "That on the 20th June, 1792, Quesada granted this land to the claimant, situated on a place called Andivion's Cowpen, on St. Mary's river." He has produced no evidence to prove possession, and, moreover, it appears by the examination of Don Pedro Marrot's survey, dated the 20th June, 1792, that other lands had been surveyed to this party at a place called "Lime Spring," on the same river. Of this survey no mention has been made in the memorial or decree presented to the board, and it seems strange, if this certificate be not a forgery, that Faulk should have petitioned for lands to the governor, when, on the same day, other lands had been surveyed by Marrot. It is rejected.

No. 54.—Frederick Hartley, claimant for 400 acres of land.

This case has been acted on and rejected by the former board. It appears by the affidavit of James Simerall that he was compelled by the Spanish government to move from this place in consequence of the revolution, and other lands have been granted to him in lieu of this.

No. 55.—Andrew Drouillard, claimant for 3,000 acres of land.

On the 10th January, 1818, the claimant petitioned and obtained leave of Governor Coppinger to change the location of lands that had been granted him in the preceding year, to the north of Dunn's Lake, at a place called Oldfield. The grant is encumbered with these conditions: "That as soon as he proves possession of the land, cultivation without intermission, and that he has built the necessary houses and fences, there shall be issued to him a title of property agreeably to the survey which the surveyor may present." On the 15th of April succeeding, the land was surveyed by Clarke, but it does not appear that any proof was adduced to the governor, and none is before us, to show that either of the preceding conditions was complied with. It is rejected.

No. 56.—William Hull, claimant for 500 acres of land.

Concession made the 1st March, 1792, to "that quantity of land which may correspond to himself and family." The governor directs that Don Pedro Marrot may proceed to survey to the petitioner "as much land as he and his family may be entitled to." There is no plat of a survey filed before the board, nor does Hull's name appear on the list of inhabitants upon the river St. John's, to whom lands had been surveyed by Marrot. The number of 500 acres assumed as the amount of the grant is entirely gratuitous, as the number to which he was entitled was directed to be specified by a survey, which was never made. It is rejected.

No. 57.—Joseph Mills, claimant for 200 acres of land.

This claim is founded on a bare memorial, of the 15th February, 1793, to which Governor Quesada makes the following decree on the same day, month, and year: "With respect to what the party sets forth, should nothing against it occur to the officer charged with the distribution of lands, let the quantity wanting to complete what his family is entitled to be granted to him, in the place which he points out." As the claimant has never produced a plat of the survey of the same, or proof that he cultivated the land, we are of opinion that it should be rejected.

No. 58.—William Ulmer, claimant for 200 acres of land.

William Ulmer petitioned the government on the 15th September, 1803, "for two hundred acres of land situated at Mosquito, about ten miles from New Smyrna, which place was owned during the British dominion by John Tenant;" to which Governor White made the following decree on the same day, month, and year: "Let there be granted to this party the 200 acres of land which he solicits, without injury to a third person, and until, according to the number of workers he may have for the cultivation thereof, there shall be measured what he is entitled to, being well understood that he must take possession of the said land in the term of six months, counted from the date of this decree." There is no evidence, and the claim is rejected.

No. 59.—David Turner, claimant for 90 acres of land.

By the certificate of John de Pierra, dated 3d February, 1809, David Turner petitions the government for lands under the royal order of 1790, (setting forth the number of his family and slaves,) which is acceded to by Governor White, who grants him 90 acres, but with the express condition that he shall "establish himself on said land within the term of one month." There is no proof before us of the compliance with this condition, and it is therefore rejected.

No. 60.—Pollard McCormock, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

On the 11th July, 1803, McCormock petitioned for two thousand acres of land at Tomoca, under the order of 1790. Two days afterwards the governor, having heard the report of the engineer, gives him the land on condition that he take possession within six months. On the 3d October, 1803, the claimant represents to the governor that he has not taken possession of the land in consequence of constant bad weather, and begs that John Purcell may be directed to survey the lands. The governor granted the request, with the express condition that the survey of Purcell should not exempt the land from forfeiture in the event that the claimant did not take possession of them, with a sufficient number of workers to correspond with the number of acres granted, within the six months from the date of the concession. There is no survey, and no evidence that he ever took possession. It is rejected.

No. 61.—William Ladd, claimant for 1,525 acres of land.

John de Pierra certifies that on the 3d of January, 1804, the lands claimed were granted by Governor White on the condition "that he take possession of the same within six months from the date." He has adduced no proof, and his claim is rejected.

No. 62.—Hibberson and Yonge, claimants for 2,000 acres of land.

On the 23d February, 1815, Governor Coppinger granted to Hibberson and Yonge 2,000 acres of land on St. Mary's river, "with the understanding that as soon as the survey and plat of said land shall be presented to them, and they prove having cultivated and improved them in a proper manner, the title and absolute property shall be despatched to them." In the succeeding year Joseph M. Hernandez, as a quit for the claimants, petitioned the governor to change the location of one thousand acres of the grant to a place called "Trout Creek Swamp." The change is permitted, and in 1816 George Clarke certified that he had surveyed one thousand acres of land on Trout Creek Swamp; and in 1821 he further certifies "that he surveyed another thousand at the same place, which latter change had been permitted by government on the 20th June of the same year." This last decree is not amongst the papers. It does not appear that either of the tracts were possessed or cultivated by the claimant; and if there be any title whatever to the second tract of one thousand acres on Trout Creek Swamp, surveyed by George Clarke in 1821, it passed by the decree of the governor, after his power had ceased under the treaty. They are both bad.

No. 63.—James Pelot, claimant for 496 acres of land. No. 64.—James Pelot, claimant for 356 acres of land.

It seems by the papers before the board that Pedro Marrot surveyed to James Pelot the two tracts of land above claimed: one at a place called Pelot, on the river St. John's, and the other at Pumpkin Bluff, on Nassau, in the year 1793. There is no evidence before the board that he possessed or cultivated these lands, but we are fully satisfied that six hundred and forty acres on Amelia island were granted to the claimant in lieu of these two surveys. These six hundred and forty acres have been confirmed; and in the decree of confirmation, No. 20, of abstract No. 1, will be found more at large our views upon this subject.

No. 65.—Josiah Dupont's heirs, and Gideon Dupont, claim, viz: No. 1, 1,850 acres of land; No. 2, 500 acres of land; No. 3, 500 acres of land; No. 4, 1,400 acres of land.

On the 18th August, 1792, Josiah Dupont, a new settler, prays for "one-half of the quantity of acres of land corresponding to himself, his wife, five daughters, two sons, and twenty-seven slaves, upon the head of lhe East Water stream, ten miles south of the Fort Matanzas," and the other half on the head of a stream called Graham, adjoining the lands of Jesse Fish, and adds: "That the lands described are the same where he is now settled by the verbal permission of the governor."

The decree is: "That he may remain where he is established, permitting him at the same time to augment to the quantity of land to which he is entitled according to the regulations of this government, in the place called Graham's Creek," &c., "and until the general survey, which is now taking place, when he will receive his complement, of which he will remain proprietor.

"QUESADA."

This is on the 31st of August. The general survey of 1792 extended to Matanzas.

The second claim is based on a concession of Quesada, dated the 18th of October, 1794. Dupont, in his memorial, says to the governor "that his force being so large he cannot take his lands in one place; that his excellency had already granted him one thousand acres of rice land, one hundred in the large orange grove, and he wishes permission to take five hundred more to complete his complement, between the lands of Travers, Cartel, Palisier, and Clarke." The governor grants the request "until the final survey takes place, for the quantity corresponding to his force." There was no survey until 1801.

The third claim is this: In July, 1801, the 28th, Dupont petitioned for five hundred acres of land more, in Graham's Swamp. The engineer's report is favorable, and White, on the 29th July of the same year, granted the lands "until his due complement should be surveyed."

Fourth. Don Gideon Dupont, on the 27th May, 1802, makes application to the governor "for 700 acres of land in Graham's Swamp;" "bounded on the south by those lately granted to his father, Josiah Dupont;" "and the petitioner to make his settlement as soon as the irruptions of the savages shall have ceased," "and, in addition to the 700 acres, also the intervening spaces."

"The engineer, to whom the subject is referred, reported that there existed a difficulty—that this land is solicited by Josiah Dupont, under date of the 28th July, 1801, and by George Long on the 7th October, same year."

He then adds: "But 700 acres and 700 acres more of intervening space are 1,400 acres ceded to a person who, according to what I have heard, has not sufficient property to cover it according to the regulations." "And of this I am of opinion that the most that ought to be granted him is 200 acres with the intervening space." The decree of the governor, after the party had taken the oath of allegiance, is this: "Let the prayer of the petitioner be granted, without injury, &c., and until, according to the force he possesses, the corresponding quantity of land be surveyed." This decree is dated the 3d June, 1802. It may be well to remark that these are the same lands petitioned for by his father in the above case No. 3, and that this Gideon Dupont now claims them to be different tracts, asks confirmation of 500 acres, No. 3, as heir of Josiah, and 1,400, as bounding the former, for himself. Long, who, by the report of the engineer, was a conflicting claimant, appears by the survey of Marrot, in 1801, to have had alloted to him 600 acres, and that claim is now before the board.

It is unnecessary to comment on the fraudulent attempt to impose on this board by making separate duplicate concessions to the same land, and claiming as a second grant a mere copy of the first, so as to obtain a double quantity.

The evidence in support of the first three claims is the affidavit of C. W. Clarke. He swears that Josiah Dupont "lived at a place called Murrits' Old Field, at the head of the east prong of Matanzas river," and continued to live there, and to cultivate the land, until about the beginning of the year 1802, when the Indians came and carried off his negroes, &c. That Dupont had between thirty and forty working hands and several hundred head of cattle. That when Dupont was driven from the place, one Hughes and two old negroes were left by him in care of, &c. He adds that Dupont's negroes were never reclaimed from the Indians.

There is a letter to the board, filed in September, 1824, from Joseph M. Hernandez, claiming most of the above land, and tendering proof, when called on, that Dupont had forfeited his title. He was never called on.

Upon the examination of the surveys made by Don Pedro Marrot at Matanzas, in 1801, in January, Dupont's name does not appear. In each of the cases above this survey is made a prerequisite to a consummation of his title. It was indispensably necessary to settle and define the quantity of acres to which he was entitled.

From the instructions given to Marrot (1791) each party to whom lands were surveyed should take an oath as to the number of his family. In the 6th article of instructions he is directed to "give notice very particularly to all the grantees, that they have to perform certain requisites before they can be considered as possessed of a full title and be able to dispose of what is now given them." "He shall send them to the office of the secretary of government for their respective titles, when they will receive the necessary information."

It is evident that the title, which must be obtained after the survey is made, differs from the title by concession, such as is produced by the claimants in this case; for in the first article of his instructions Marrot is directed to make the surveys "limiting himself to the title."

Dupont's name, as we have said, does not appear in the survey on Matanzas in 1801, the only one ever made there. It would seem he had not abandoned the country; because the date of the survey is in January, and one of his memorials is dated in July of the same year. But it is certain that if he still remained in the province he neglected to have his lands included in the general survey; without which, by the positive provisions of the grant itself, the title could not be perfected. When lands are given gratuitously, and slight conditions, mostly formal, are imposed, and the party fails or refuses to comply with them, he cannot complain if they are lost.

The quantity to which he was entitled depended on the number of his workers, and this number he was required to verify on oath. This he has failed to do; he has not given to the government the evidence required to authorize the grant. He has not had his limits defined, when a surveyor was sent for that purpose to the spot, nor procured the full title, prescribed in the regulations; nor does it appear that he has lived out the ten years, without which his title is unquestionably bad. If we do not receive the omission of his name on the surveys of Marrot in January, 1801, as it is, perhaps, our duty to do, as conclusive evidence to show the abandonment, it is because, in July of the same year, his third petition to the governor contradicts the presumption; but still his time would not be completed in July, and his failure to comply with the conditions of the grant by having it surveyed, and the deficiency of the proof of continued possession, if there were no other papers in the cause, would prevent a confirmation of these claims. The most of these lands have been granted to others at subsequent periods, and, so far as they have been regranted, the claim of the United States has been already relinquished by the board of commissioners, and our investigation of these cases would be a useless labor. But it may not be that all the lands claimed by the heirs of Dupont are granted and confirmed to others. And for this residue, if any there be, we are driven to act on these cases.

It should be presumed that the agents of a foreign government had done their duty, and not injustice, by giving away lands already the property of another, and nothing is produced by Dupont to rebut this presumption.

But this matter is not left to presumption. In 1805 Governor White directed a letter to the captain general of Cuba, of which the following is an extract: "Surprised to see that Dupont considered himself to have a just title to reclaim lands which, if his father, by going to the United States, had not abandoned, would not be hereditary until after ten years of uninterrupted cultivation, they are conceded to the grantees in absolute property; in which respect Dupont is deficient; and convinced that, to listen to such pretensions, would give occasion to numberless lawsuits, disturbing the quiet of good and bona fide settlers, who would not feel secured in their lands, even though they had possessed and cultivated them for successive years, and built houses on them. The circumstances under which this individual claims are particularly objectionable, as, after having taken the oath of allegiance on the 3d June, 1802, and having granted to him, on the same day, seven hundred acres of land for twenty-five negroes, which he offered to introduce into the province, he returned to the United States, where he has constantly resided with his mother and sisters, and returned here solely for the purpose of asking for the lands of his father, and selling them, as he explains in his petitions, not with a view of establishing himself in the province, as is proved by his not having negroes in it, or having brought with him even one of the twenty-five which he offered." It may be further remarked that the greater part of the lands claimed by Dupont were formerly granted to others. And attending to such pretensions as his, would be the cause of hindering individuals from asking for lands although they should see them uncultivated; but they might be dispossessed of them, or exposed to an expensive lawsuit." After this, we may be permitted to express our surprise that the Duponts should come before this board. The four claims are rejected.

No. 66.—The heirs of Philip Dill and John H. McIntosh, claimants for 800 acres of land.

This is the same tract of land claimed by both, for the benefit of McIntosh. In 1801, on the petition of Phillip Dill "for a plantation on the west side of the river St. John's, abandoned by Francis Richard, as well as another adjoining it, containing in all eight hundred acres," Governor White decreed that the lands be granted, and until, according to the number of his family, &c.

Sometimes it may be inferred that the conditions on which every grant under the order of 1790 was made, viz: ten years' cultivation, have been complied with; and that the lapse of time, two intervening rebellions, and a partial change of population, always incident to a transfer of a province from one government to another, may prevent the possibility of obtaining proofs, otherwise easy of access. Here nothing is left to conjecture. The witnesses produced by the claimants have reduced it to a certainty that Dill resided on the land at most but three years. Seymour Pickett says "Dill settled land in 1802, lived on it about two years and removed to the Bluff, where he died, and that none of his family, so far as he believes, ever moved back to the place."

Isaac Hendricks deposes that Dill resided on the place about three years, and died; that the family, on the death of Dill, gathered in the crop and moved to Pittsburg, the said land, as witness understood, having been sold." McIntosh has produced a deed from James Dill to this land, dated 1805. McIntosh gives as a reason to the board for not obtaining royal titles, the insurrection in 1812; but nothing prevented his showing to this board that he had performed the implied conditions of the grant, and thereby became entitled to them.

We have too often expressed our opinion on cases similar to this to be at a loss to decide. Governor White, in his letter in the case of Dupont, expressly says that lands cannot be inherited until the ten years are lived out." It is then in the power of the heirs to complete the term and perfect the title, and it is in more than one decree declared "that they cannot be alienated without the permission of the government." Here there was an abandonment, and a sale in three years. If one could not forfeit his lands by abandonment, this tract would belong to Francis Richard, to whom, as appears by the memorial of the party himself, it had been previously granted. He obtained it there by the abandonment of Richard, and by his own abandonment he must lose it. If McIntosh, his transferee, had cultivated the land on the sale, something might be left to inference from the acquiescence of the government; but on this there is no proof, and it is rejected.

No. 67.—Clarissa Fish, claimant for 150 acres of land.

Claimant purchased of Andrew Campbell in 1821. To Campbell this land was granted by concession in 1804. One witness knew that the land was cultivated in 1805. One year's occupancy will not give a title. It is rejected.

No. 68.—Francis Goodwin's heirs, claimants for 1,300 acres of land, 1,300 acres of land, 640 acres of land.

The first claim is to land on Pablo creek, on concession dated in October, 1791. He prays to be permitted to establish himself on Pablo, and that a grant be made him of the acres corresponding to the number set forth, viz: a wife, three children, and nineteen negroes. In February, 1792, he prays that the number of acres "which correspond to himself, three children, and nineteen negroes," may be granted "on the plantation which, under the British government, belonged to one Baileys, four miles south of one St. Vincent Ferrer," &c.

The decree of the governor is the same in both cases. It, in the first, permits the party to be established for the present on the land, until, in the general survey which is about taking place, there shall be measured to him the number of acres that correspond to his family, of which he shall be put in possession, with the corresponding title."

In the second, the governor says, "agreeably to the request, for which purpose let the memorial be passed to the Captain Don Pedro Marrot, charged with the general distribution of lands, until he measure to this party those corresponding to this family, in the place he points out." Goodwin then had changed his wish to locate on Pablo, and obtained leave to settle elsewhere. The governor permitted the change, and directed him to have the quantity which Marrot should ascertain on the oath of the party to be the portion to which he was entitled.

In May, 1792, Marrot surveyed to Goodwin, at the place mentioned in the second memorial, the land to which he was entitled by the number of his family, under the preceding decrees of Queseda, to wit, 640.

Goodwin now, by his representatives, claims the whole three, making 3,240 acres. It would be well if so glaring an effort at imposition could be punished by the loss of the whole claim. But Mr. Hendricks having proved that he lived on the survey of Marrot No. 3, at a place called Strawberry, by which name it is also called in the survey up to 1805, this last tract of 640 acres is confirmed, and the other two are rejected.

No. 69.—John Love, claimant for 300 acres of land.

This is an old British grant, 1772, of lands fifteen miles south of St. Augustine, and a survey in 1781. The claimant has produced to the board his evidence of citizenship in South Carolina in 1798. This grant was never recognized by the Spanish government, and by proving himself a citizen of the United States he has proved that he has no title to this land. It is rejected.

No. 70.—George Tillet, claimant for 250 acres of land.

This claim is evidenced by Marrot's survey in 1792, on Trout creek; in 1801 on Marrot's second survey, or, rather, list of inhabitants on the St. John's, Tillet's name is not to be found. It is therefore to be presumed that he had abandoned the place. It is rejected.

No. 71.—Francis P. Sanchez, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

This is a certificate of Thomas de Aguilar, that in December, 1815, Estrada granted Don John Perchman, cornet of the squadron of dragoons, for services, 2,000 acres of land, at a place called Ocklewaha, on the St. John's river.

In 1819 Perchman sold to Sanchez. In the memorial of the claimant to this board, he speaks of a survey made by authority in 1819. If this had been produced it would have furnished some support to the certificate of Aguilar. As it is, we reject the claim.

No. 72.—Hibberson & Yonge, claimants for 2,000 acres of land.

In 1815, Hibberson & Yonge, representing to the governor that they had greatly improved the country as merchants, and benefited the treasury by the payment of duties, say, "that they mean to devote themselves to agriculture, and pray the donation of 2,000 acres of land on the river St. Mary's, in absolute property, provided they cultivate them and improve them in a proper manner, for which titles may be expedited as soon as surveys are presented in due form; and if your excellency does not determine to conform to these terms, that they may be granted to them on the same terms as they have been granted to the other new settlers, at all times."

The governor's grant is "with the understanding that, as soon as the survey and plat of said land shall be presented to them, and they prove having cultivated and improved them in a proper manner, a title shall be given," &c. Signed, Kindelan.

On the 16th February, 1816, Joseph M. Hernandez, as the agent of Hibberson & Yonge, represented that the lands on the St. Mary's river, conceded as above, were not vacant, wherefore he "prays permission to locate one thousand acres on Trout Creek Swamp, reserving to himself the right to locate the other thousand acres elsewhere too, if necessary." The governor permitted the exchange, and cancelled the grant of one thousand acres on the river St. Mary's.

In 1821 Hernandez obtained leave to locate the whole on Trout creek, in Twelve Mile Swamp, with an order of survey in that place.

It appears by the certificate of George Clarke, in 1820, that he had then surveyed one tract of a thousand acres on Trout creek. No survey was ever made of the other tract of one thousand acres, either on St. Mary's or on Trout creek. The decree of the governor required that the parties should produce proof of cultivation before a title would be given. And we require the same. There is no evidence that the claimants settled the land, and it must be rejected.

No. 73.—John Bellamy, claimant for 500 *acres of land.

This land is situated on McGirt's creek, and the only document presented to this board is a survey made by George J. F. Clarke on the 28th October, 1820; it is therefore barred by the treaty.

No. 74.—Susanna Cashen, claimant for 300 acres of land on the river St. John's.

The only evidence of title filed in this case is the survey of Andrew Burgevin, dated 1821. It is rejected.

No. 75.—John D. Kehr, claimant for 300 acres of land on Amelia island.

John de Pierra, in 1801, certifies "that on the application of the claimant three hundred acres of land were granted him on Amelia island, in three separate tracts of one hundred acres each, under the royal order of 1790." He has not proved compliance with the conditions, and the claim is rejected.

No. 76.—William Cain, claimant for 200 acres of land.

This is a British grant, made to John Burnett by Governor Moultrie, and sold to Cain on the 10th March, 1781. The lands lie on the south fork of Nassau river. In the memorial to this board the representatives of Cain call themselves citizens of the United States, and residents of Florida. There is no evidence before this board that Cain took the oath of allegiance to the Spanish King, or that this claim was even recognized as valid by the government here. It is therefore rejected.

* Claimant subsequently filed his petition for this land under the donation act, which was rejected. Vide No. 23, of Report 2, on donation claims.

No. 77.—George Copeland, claimant for 400 acres of land.

To the petition of Henry B. Martin, under whom Copeland claims, on the 3d September, 1803, for four hundred acres of land in the Territory of Mosquito, Governor White decrees as usual, "that he shall have the number of acres that correspond to his laborers, which shall afterwards be surveyed to him on the express condition that he take possession of the land within six months from the date of the decree." There is a deed filed in this office, executed by Martin in the year 1808, in the city of New York, to George Copeland, in which Martin calls himself "a resident of that city." There is no proof of possession within the six months of a survey, or of subsequent cultivation, on the part of Martin, and this deed describing himself as a citizen of New York, five years after the concession, is positive proof of abandonment.

No. 78.—James Darley, claimant for 500 acres of land.

This land lies at Mosquito. There is no evidence of title filed before this board, but the survey of Robert McHardy, dated January 25, 1818. In his memorial to the board he has referred to documents filed in the claim immediately following this as evidence of a grant made to him by Governor Coppinger in the preceding year.

No. 79.—James Darley, claimant for 500 acres of land.

This land lies on Turnbull's swamp. It appears by the certificate of Thomas Aguilar, the original of which is not to be found, that on the application of the claimant one thousand acres of land were granted him by Governor Coppinger, as head rights, on the 14th June, 1817; one half of which, No. 78 of this abstract, was surveyed to him at Mosquito, and the other half in Turnbull's swamp on the 20th June, 1818. He has produced no evidence to prove his cultivation, or to account for the loss of the original. Both of these claims are therefore rejected.

No. 80.—Paul Dupon, claimant for 3,000 acres of land.

Paul Dupon solicited from the government (and there was granted to him on the 8th May, 1818,) a small island situated on the east side of the river St. John's, bounded on the south and east by a creek called Dunn's creek, which island contains 3,000 acres; and on the 26th April, 1819, Governor Coppinger issued to said Dupon a royal title for the above-mentioned island under the royal order of 1790. This claim is barred by the treaty.

No. 81.—James Munroe, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

James Munroe states to the governor "that, previous to his removing into the province of East Florida, he authorized Alexander Drysdale to petition to the said government on his behalf for lands for head rights, having at that time forty negroes; but through a mistake Drysdale only mentions four negroes, therefore the government only granted three hundred acres at Mosquito to Munroe." On the 3d August, 1803, Munroe petitioned the government for the remaining quantity added to the three hundred acres already granted, having brought into the province fifty negroes; to which Governor White made the following decree on the same day, month, and year:

"Let there be granted to this party the residue of the land which he solicits, up to the quantity which he is entitled to, for the fifty negroes belonging to him, without injury to a third person, and with the condition that he must take possession of said land in the term of six months, counted from this date."

F. BETHUNE.

The only witness sworn in the case deposes that Munroe lived on the land four or five*—left it. We consider that an abandonment before the ten years' occupancy forfeited the land. It is rejected.

No. 82.—	Augustine Buyck,	claimant for	1,500	acres land.
No. 83.	"	"	1,500	"
No. 84.	"	"	2,000	"
No. 85.	"	"	50,000	"

No. 82.

John de Pierra's certificate, the only document of title, is to this effect: "That to the memorial of Augustine Buyck, praying for one thousand five hundred acres of land in the vicinity of the old town of St. Peter's, at Mosquito, in the place called Spruce Pear Creek, otherwise Haile's Creek, the following decree was rendered: 'The lands solicited by the petitioner are granted, and until, according to the number of his family, the corresponding quantity of land be measured for him." The certificate and decree are both dated on the 18th day of July, 1801. The party, in his memorial to this board, declares that the land had been surveyed.

No. 83.—2,000 acres.

On the very same day and year John de Pierra certifies that, on the petition of Buyck, praying for 1,500 acres of land in the vicinity of the old town of St. Peters, at Mosquito, in a swamp or hammock situated opposite to Mount Oswald, towards the beach or north of the town, Gov. White decreed: "The lands solicited by Augustine Buyck are granted, &c., and until," &c. The original of this last grant is not on file in the office of the archives. This last, if not a forgery, is evidently a grant for the same land as in No. 82. Gov. White never granted two tracts of land on the same day to the same individual without taking notice in either of that fact; and it is a fraud on the part of Buyck or his agent to attempt thus to impose them on the board as several.

No. 84.—2,000 acres.

A grant by concession, in 1799, of two thousand acres of land "to the south of the town of Matanzas, and until," &c. Buyck's name does not appear on the list of lands surveyed by Marrot in 1801. It is plain, then, that at that time he had not settled them, or that he failed to survey them, which we consider equally fatal. The memorial to the board avows that they never were surveyed.

No. 85.—50,000 acres.

The memorial of this party to the governer in 1802 and his memorial to this board in 1823 present a curious contrast. In 1802 he says to the governor: "That, possessing an increased number of new negroes, and some white natives of America desiring to associate with him, &c., he solicits 50,000 acres of land at Mosquito," not wishing to exclude Ambrose Hull, who, though then driven away by the Indians, is determined to return as soon as an increased number of settlers shall afford him protection; but adds "that no obstacle should be allowed to prevent the grant to him, because grants of the same kind had been made to others"—they "having spent so much time without taking any steps towards the cultivation pretended, any right they may have had is lost." The petitioner promises peremptorily "to make good the said establishment between this (July 22, 1802) and the month of next December; which time being past it will remain at your excellency's discretion to grant that territory to whoever may ask for it." He goes on to add: "A considerable number of planters, whom the subscriber offers to bring to that place, will have a sufficient field-force to fulfil the royal intentions, and restrain the rapacity of the savages who have, up to this time, infested the plantations established to the north (quere, south?) of this city."

The lands are granted on the condition "that he cannot cede them away without permission."

In his petition for the land he gives as an inducement to the grant a pledge to repress the Indians. In a memorial to us he gives as a reason for not cultivating the lands the hostility of these Indians, to suppress whom he has pledged himself. It is too absurd for argument.

The claimant has tendered a receipt for $30 paid by him as a tax on his property in 1803. This is the first time we have learned that Spanish planters were assessed in taxes.

Charles W. Clarke swears that Buyck settled here in 1792, and was driven off by the savages in 1800. It appears that in Buyck's petition for land, No. 84, that he had lived at another place, as he there declares that he had sold or commuted some other lands of which he speaks.

If the evidence is intended to apply to either of these cases Mr. Clarke is mistaken. The first grant was made in 1799; but the testimony of Mr. Clarke is perfectly correct as explained by the party's memorial in the case alluded to. These cases are therefore rejected, because the party does not prove continued possession, nor can the hostility of the savages be received as an excuse, when the largest grant made, if made at all, was induced by the promise of Buyck to suppress them. We will add that there is no evidence that the grant of 50,000 acres was ever in the office of archives; and that Governor White was not in the habit of making large grants on slight causes.

No 86.—Buyck and Dupont, claimants for small island of land.

Buyck and Dupont ask leave "to make lime and build a hut on a small island between the two bars of the river Matanzas."

The governor, Quesada, in 1794, granted the leave asked and added: "But not to be considered their property until the general survey takes place, when it may, or may not, be included in their complement, if it is fit, proper, or not." We follow the translation though it seems a bad one. It does not appear that any subsequent steps was taken in this business; and on this permission to make lime, with an express declaration that the property is not granted, Buyck claims the land. Such are many of the claims in this office. It is rejected.

James McGirt, claimant.

No. 87, —— acres land; No. 88, 500 acres land; No. 89, 300 acres land; No. 90, small island of 90 acres; No. 91, 500 acres pine land; No. 92, —— land; No. 93, 600 acres land.

No. 94.—D. McGirt, the son.

In 1796 an application to take the plantation of the widow Ashley, then vacant, in exchange for those which had been granted to him in 1794, which he had been compelled to abandon. Decree "that he might take possession until the survey was made and his portion allotted to him."

No. 88.—500 acres.

An application, in 1792, from McGirt, who styles himself an old inhabitant, for several tracts, viz: 300 acres nine miles from this place, on a plantation which formerly belonged to Governor Grant; 200 acres on Suwannee creek, near the other, and 300 acres on Nassau river, for cattle raising.

The governor, Quesada, directs Marrot to survey to the applicant the lands asked for.

No. 89.—300 acres.

Another petition for 300 acres of land on Bell's creek, on the St. Mary's, "as a part of the land which appertains to him." This is in 1793. Quesada directed Marrot to report "whether any lands had been surveyed to McGirt, and on the propriety of the present application specially."

Marrot states, in his report, the grants made in 1792, as specified above in No. 88, which lands had not been surveyed, and adds, "that in March of the same year he (McGirt) was permitted to abandon the 300 acres on Governor Grant, and to take in its place 300 acres on Black creek, which John McQueen had surveyed to him." Marrot reported that "the place asked for is vacant, and that the petitioner is an old inhabitant;" and Quesada directed, "always according to the number of the family which the party may have, &c., let there be measured," &c.

No. 90.—An island of 80 acres.

The petitioner states that he had by permission moved to St. Mary's, where he had not land enough, and solicits the grant of a little island of 80 acres, opposite his plantation, which had been once ceded to Thomas Criar, who had abandoned it. He asks a further grant of a piece of land on the lower part of the Rose's Bluff, "which is convenient for the cutting of materials for building the houses he shall have to erect." This is in 1798.

The engineer says there is no objection to the grant of the land first asked for, but "that the grant to cut lumber should be limited to the quantity wanted for his buildings." Thus it appears that Rose's Bluff was not intended to be conveyed away; such, in every case of mill grants, is the decree, viz: "that he cut timber," and yet in those cases the land is now claimed.

The governor directs the land to be granted "until his portion should be allotted," and that "the permission to cut timber should be limited as advised by the engineer."

No. 91.—500 acres pine land.

In 1799 McGirt represented to Governor White that he had no pine land attached to his tract on St. Mary's, and prayed that 500 acres of pine land the most convenient to his place be granted.

Pierza makes a note that this land was granted to John Lowe in 1803.

No. 92.—For —— acres.

A permit to John McQueen and James McGirt to make the exchange alluded to in No. 89, and the parties claim it as a separate grant.

No. 93.—For 600 acres.

In January, 1792, Don Pedro Marrot certifies "that he had measured to McGirt 18 cavallerias (600 acres of land) at a place called Andrew's Point, on account of what corresponds to him, whose family consists, according to the oath taken, of 14 persons, to wit: husband, wife, six children, and six negroes." This tract is situated on the river St. John's.

No. 94.—Daniel McGirt, the son.

From what we can infer from the phraseology of this party's memorial to Governor White, in 1797, it seems that, as he was going to get married, he wanted permission from the governor to take a piece of land on the river St. John's, called Longs, formerly granted to his father, James.

The engineer, when it was referred to him, reported that he could not find any grant of the lands in demand to his father, but advises that it be given to Daniel in the usual manner; which is done.

James McGirt's name appears nowhere on the list of Marrot, except on that of 1801, where he is registered as possessing 680 acres of land, in his "statement of inhabitants on the rivers Nassau and St. Mary's," and his son Daniel for 200 acres on the same list.

It appears to the board, from an examination of all these cases, that James McGirt was an old settler. The best evidence of the quantity to which he was entitled is to be found in the certificate of Marrot, No. 93. By this it appears that 600 acres were his just portion. These, by subsequent abandonments and exchanges, were finally located on St. Mary's in a tract of 300 acres, No. 89, and 300 on Nassau, for cattle raising. The other 80 acres, which make up his complement of 680 in the list of surveys by Marrot, is the island petitioned for in No. 90. We are willing to confirm this claim of James McGirt and his heirs to 680 acres of land, as surveyed by Marrot, viz: 300 acres on Nassau, No. 88; 300 acres on Bell's creek, St. Mary's, No. 89; the island of 80, opposite thereto, No. 90.

McGirt states that he was an old settler in 1792; he is so termed by Marrot; and in 1801 he is found on those tracts in the general survey.

The exchanges from place to place were, some by compulsion and all by permission. It is fair to infer that he lived out the term of ten years, and became entitled to the land.

The land granted to Daniel McGirt in 1797 was on St. John's; in 1801, at the general survey, he is on the St. Mary's. He has not proved the duration of his possession, and it is rejected.

No. 95.—Sarah Tate, claimant for 450 acres of land.

These are the same lands confirmed to George Anderson. It will appear, by reference to the printed reports of the land commissioners of East Florida, that the claimant's ancestor, Edward Tate, in 1811 represented to the governor that he had been employed so long at Picolata; that he had lost his buildings erected at Tomoca, on this land, granted in 1803, and that they (the Tomoca lands) were granted to Sans as vacant lands. He therefore prays his excellency to grant him, in place thereof, 450 acres of land on the river St. John's. This grant on the St. John's was made accordingly, and confirmed to claimant on the 22d January, 1824, and now the Tates claim both. It is absurd; this claim is rejected.

No. 96.—John B. Gaudry, claimant for 3,000 acres of land.

On the 6th of October, 1817, the claimant, by his attorney, B. de Castro y Ferrer, petitioned for 3,000 acres at Spring Garden, having a family and seventy-five negro slaves. The governor granted the land on the 8th, with the proviso "that, as soon as he should make it appear that he is in possession, and cultivates it without intermission, the title of property shall be issued to him, agreeably to the survey and plat which the surveyor shall present." Two months afterwards it was surveyed by McHardy. Seven months from the date of the concession the claimant, by his attorney, again represented to the governor that he had performed the conditions, and petitioned for a full title.

He tenders several witnesses to prove the occupation and cultivation, with which the governor seems perfectly satisfied, as, by his decree of the 14th of the same month, he pronounces it proved "that claimant had complied with the conditions imposed on him," and directs "that, in virtue of the royal order granting lands to new settlers, a full title shall be executed to him, according to the plat and survey."

We have frequently decided that where the date of the concession would admit the presumption that the party had lived out his ten years on the land, a royal title, or any other act done by the governor, though subsequent to the 24th of January, 1818, would be received by this board as conclusive proof to show that the claimant had performed the conditions, and cultivated the land; but when the concession is dated in October, it is mere mockery, in the subsequent May, to talk of continued cultivation. On the first organization of the board of commissioners, in 1823, the claimant, in his memorial, represented himself as "a resident of Georgia;" it is evident, then, that in 1822 or 1823 he had abandoned the land, and as the governor's power to make grants on the 24th January, 1818, was ended by the treaty, this claim rests upon the concession alone; and, although the governor was satisfied with the proof before him, it convinces us that the claimant lived but a few months on the land, and he therefore must lose it.

No. 97.—Peter Mitchell, claimant for 550 acres of land.

The memorial of P. Mitchell to this board states that in 1813 this tract of land was granted in absolute property to John McClure by Governor Kinderlan, and that the royal title, together with the survey made by John Purcell in 1811, are on file in the office of public archives of this city. He further states that this tract of land, on the demise of J. McClure, was, by his legal representatives, conveyed to George Atkinson, in trust for the house of Carnookau & Mitchell, of which Peter Mitchell is a partner.

There are but two documents filed in this case: The certificate of George F. Clarke, to which we shall presently refer, and the survey made by Peter Mitchell himself, in 1823, of 550 acres of land on the river Ocklewaha. If there was a royal title to McClure, it has not been brought to this office. It seems, from the certificate of Clarke, above alluded to, that the title of McClure, in the wording, embraced the whole of the land on which stood the fortifications, town, and commons of Fernandina. Clarke says, in 1813, when by the commission of the government he, Clarke, was engineer of the fortifications and distributor of the town lots of that place, McClure stopped his progress by exhibiting his title to the soil. On this Clarke wrote to Governor Kinderlan, and received the following answer:

"I am surprised that Don John McClure should have stopped you in the measurement of lots, which has been committed to your charge by government. He never could have supposed that the title given him could be in injury to the lands that were previously destined for the habitations of those who settled in the town of Fernandina. Therefore you will warn him, by my order, to desist from embarrassing, in anywise, your functions therein; and inform him that if he has anything to allege in support of his right before a competent tribunal, (that is, in case he has sustained injury by the establishment of said settlement,) on these being made manifest, he will be compensated by an equal quantity of land, in a convenient place, without injury to a third person."

Clarke further certifies that some time after this John McClure having died, his cousin, another John McClure, came to Florida, and obtained an order for the sale of all the property of the deceased; this tract was advertised amongst the rest of deceased's property. Clarke forbade the sale, and the commandant of that place having failed to interpose when required so to do by Clarke, the governor, Coppinger, was again applied to. This is in March, 1816; in April of the same year Coppinger writes the following letter to the civil and military commandant of that place, with a copy of which Clarke was furnished: "Having been informed on the 28th of last month by Don George Clarke, surveyor, &c., at Fernandina, respecting the sale of McClure's plantation, &c., I require that you comply exactly with the order of the 19th July, 1813, passed to the aforesaid surveyor by my predecessor, permitting the sale to take place only as to those lands that are not wanted nor comprehended in the settlement and fortifications thereof, and make known to the person interested that he is to direct his recourse to this government, who will compensate him for the land of which he is dismembered with an equal portion in any vacant place that may suit him, without injury to a third person."

Clarke further certifies "that in 1821, F. Bethune, on the part of the claimants, petitioned the governor for 550 acres of land, in 'compensation' of the defalcation of said tract of land, which part he abandons, with all his rights, for the public good of said town."

To this memorial Coppinger answers, in a private letter to Clarke, "that he was officially informed of the transfer of the province to the United States, and could not make the grant."

Clarke says that this quantity of 550 acres was rather more in amount than McClure had lost, but from his knowledge of the sentiments on this subject of both the governors, Kinderlan and Coppinger, he is fully confident that it would have been granted if applied for in time, without hesitation; and he says further, that if he had been called on, as surveyor general, by the representatives of John McClure, "to survey to him this amount for the further approbation and formalization of the same by government, he would have done so, as he more than once offered to do." From this it appears evident that the parties were entitled to some land, as McClure's representatives, from the Spanish government, but they have neglected to avail themselves of their privilege until it was too late; and if Governor Coppinger, in 1821, thought that he had no power to make the grant, in 1823 Peter Mitchell had no power to make the location. It is rejected.

No. 98.—Hibberson & Yonge, claimants for 45 acres of land.

This is Aguilar's certificate, that, on the 25th January, 1810, the governor granted this land, near the military post of Amelia island, and authorized John Purcell to survey it. It does not appear that it was surveyed, nor is there proof of cultivation. It is rejected.

No. 99.—Robert Hutchinson, claimant for 150 acres of land on Little St. Mary's swamp.

This claim is for 150 acres. In support of it he presents a certificate of Aguilar that on the 13th February, 1816, 450 acres were granted him as head rights.

There is no evidence of cultivation, and no reason given for the loss of the original. It is rejected.

No. 100.—Samuel King, claimant for 300 acres of land.

This land lies on the south side of the river Nassau, about 10 miles from its mouth. In 1804 the application was made to Governor White, "on account of the death of Margaret Carter, who claimed said land as belonging to her deceased husband, James Sample." The governor directed him to hold possession of the land, 300 acres, and the concession to be considered as in force from March 9, 1803. This grant is made under the royal order of 1790; and no cultivation being proved, it is rejected.

No. 101.—The widow and heirs of Antonio Martinez, claimants for 70 acres of land on Moultrie creek.

This grant was made on the 3d June, 1806, by concession from Governor White, and was surveyed by James Purcell in the following July. It is for "head rights," without proof of cultivation. Rejected.

No. 102.—Rob. Pritchard's heirs, claimants for 700 acres of land at Goldsby's lake.

This is Aguilar's certificate, dated in the year 1800. White decreed that the land should be granted "until, according to the number of persons he may have for its cultivation, there be allotted him that which he is entitled to."

It will be seen by reference to No. 21 of report A, that in 1808, upon a full hearing of the whole matter, Governor White directed 270 acres to be granted to the widow of R. Pritchard, "that being the whole amount to which, from the number of her family, black and white, she was entitled." That amount has been confirmed to her.

This tract of land was surveyed by George Clarke in 1819; and three witnesses swear that the claimant lived on the south side of Goldsby's lake, on a tract said to contain 700 acres. The 270 acres confirmed are at the same place, on the south side of Goldsby's lake, and on this the claimants have resided. Governor White thought them entitled to 270 acres of land only; and this claim is rejected.

No. 103.—Gachalan Vass, claimant for 250 acres of land, Pablo creek.

In 1793 this land was surveyed by Marrot. He does not prove possession for the ten years required, and it is rejected.

No. 104.—James Tool, claimant for 945 acres of land in Graham's swamp.

A permission in 1803, by Governor White, to have the lands which correspond to him; no further steps seem to have been taken in the case. No proof of his family, of survey, or of cultivation. It is rejected.

No. 105.—Francis Triay, claimant for —— acres of land on the North river.

A concession in the usual form in 1802, without proof of cultivation. Rejected.

No. 106.—William Travers, claimant for 100 acres of land on Potsburg creek.

Concession in 1799 to John McQueen, without proof of cultivation. Rejected.

No. 107.—Isaac Tucker, claimant for 200 acres of land.

This is Aguilar's certificate: "That in 1804 the claimant petitioned for 200 acres of land, and Governor White gave him but 100 acres, declaring that to be all to which he was entitled." The grant, if made at all, lies on the river St. Mary's. In 1817 George Clarke surveyed this land, on the river St. John's, at a place called ————, two miles below the Cowford; and in 1821 George Clarke changed the location to another point upon the same river. There is no proof of cultivation, and we cannot confirm it.

No. 108.—Gabriel Triay, claimant for Key Vacas.

Concession dated January 2, 1818, for military services. The title of the United States to this key was relinquished by the board of land commissioners to some other claimant.

No. 109.—Farquhar Bethune, claimant for 172 acres of land.

This land is situated on Amelia island, near the lands of Thomas Yonge, on Egan's creek.

The evidence of title is a concession made by Estrada, on August 25, 1815, under the order of 1790. The application of Bethune is for 100 acres of land, and this is the quantity ceded; but George J. F. Clarke, on December 13, 1818, in the plenitude of his power, surveyed to Bethune 172 acres. Clarke, produced as a witness before the board, has deposed that Bethune did cultivate the land during the time that it was considered his property.

It appears from this affidavit, and the survey of Clarke already spoken of, that the one hundred acres on Amelia island had been taken from Bethune by the government, and the survey of Clarke was made on St. Mary's river in lieu thereof. Clarke's survey, then, is too late, and the claim is rejected.

No. 110.—Thomas Backhouse, claimant for 500 acres of land on Indian river.

A grant by royal title, made on the 20th June, 1818, for services. Rejected. We believe this to be the same claim as No. 4 of this report.

No. 111.—Wm. H. G. Saunders, claimant for 1,200 acres of land, St. John's river.

On the 10th September, 1791, Governor Quesada made to John Saunders, ancestor of the claimant, a concession for the land in question.

This is one of the first grants made under the order of 1790, and differs materially in its phraseology from the abbreviated concessions subsequently adopted. It commences in the usual form, and follows the formalities of a royal title. It grants and concedes the land in perpetuity, and then attaches the following conditions: "That Saunders shall, within two years, build a house proportioned to his means; that he shall clean and clear the land for the purpose of cultivating; and that he shall have, within the term of three years, at least five head of horned cattle for every fifty acres of land not fit for cultivation." &c.; "and finally, although this donation and concession is made in perpetuity, the donee or his heirs cannot alienate or transfer the said lands to any other owner until the ten years of possession be passed, and even then the first sale must be executed with permission of the government, and in any other way it should be null," &c.

The governor proceeds to say: "Under the said conditions, and not without them, I cede, renounce, and transfer the said land," &c. Mary Carney, the witness produced on the part of the claimant, deposes that John Saunders, the grantee, in the years 1790 and 1791, with his family and a pretty large number of negroes, lived on the land claimed, built houses thereon, and made one crop; and that in 1791 he was compelled to leave it, in consequence of the disturbances upon the river. On the 11th of September, 1792, we hear from Saunders again. In a memorial to the governor he then represented the place, called Russellton, the one now claimed, "as very noxious to the health, as well from the greater part being infested by corrupted vapors, which are exhaled from the putrid waters of the swamps and lakes which surround it, as also from the many insects engendered in the marshes," &c. He says, moreover, that "the health of his family is deteriorated, their bodies oppressed and troubled with swellings, and threatened with dropsy;" wherefore he prays "the benignant heart of the governor, condoling with his deplorable state, to grant him, in exchange, an equal quantity of land on the Mosquito." The governor, on the reception of Captain Marrot's report, "that the land at Russellton is surrounded by putrid waters," directed Marrot to survey to him an equal quantity at the place solicited. In 1796 Saunders, for malpractices against the government, was banished the province; and a few years afterwards, as we believe, the most of this tract was granted to another as vacant land. Since the change of flags the present claimant, the son of John, has moved into the territory, and taken possession of the place.

Such is the history of this case. So far as these lands have been regranted, the parties litigant have their remedy at law; so far as they have not, the claim of Saunders is rejected: First, because the title under which he claims is a bare concession to his father, with conditions attached which were never performed; for although the houses were completed, nothing else was done; secondly, because the party himself solicited an exchange, which was granted him; thirdly, because he was banished and his lands thereby forfeited; and fourthly, because, by the testimony of his own witness, he lived but one year upon the land; and if there had been no exchange, no malpractice, and no banishment, this would be insufficient to justify us in confirming this claim.

No. 112.—William Travers, agent of Yellowly, claimant for 500 acres of land.—No. 113.—William Dry, claimant for 1,000 acres of land.—Nos. 114 and 115.—Same. Lots in St. Augustine.

These are all British claims, which seem not to have been recognized by the Spanish government, and must be rejected.

No. 112 was granted by Governor Tonyn in April, 1777. It lies in Derbin's swamp, three-fourths of a mile east of the river St. John's.

No. 113 was granted to Alexander Gray by James Grant in February, 1771. It lies on the east fork of Diego river, and was sold by Gray to the present claimant in 1775.

The other two are for lots in this city, claimed by Dry, a British subject; they are all rejected.

No. 116.—Andrew Atkinson, claimant for 100 acres of land.

This land is claimed by concession, dated in February, 1792, "as necessary to complete the number of acres belonging to his family." It lies near St. Vincent Ferrer. There is no evidence of cultivation, and it must be rejected.

No. 117.—The heirs of Antonio Andrew, claimants for 500 acres of land.

In 1796 these lands were granted under the royal order of 1790. There is no number of acres specified in the memorial of the party, or in the decree of the governor. The lands lie at New Smyrna.

Two witnesses have been sworn. George Clarke says that they, the claimants, were a number of years settled on the land, and were driven off, about thirty years ago, by the Indians. Lorenzo Capella, the other witness, seems to be more minutely informed on the subject. He says the claimants were settled on the land and made one crop, and were ready to make a second, when the Indians forced them to abandon it. These depositions were taken in the year year 1827; thirty years ago will bring us back to 1797. The concession was made in 1796, one year before. This proves conclusively that Mr. Clark was mistaken in supposing the family had lived on the land a number of years, and that Capella is correct in saying that they left after one year.

This board has always decided that one year's cultivation, whatever might be the cause of abandonment, would not justify us in confirming a claim. It is rejected.

No. 118.—John Jones, claimant for 500 acres of land.

The concession under the royal order of 1790, "until the quantity to which he is entitled shall be surveyed to him," is dated February 11, 1801. Marrot's list of the inhabitants on St. John's of February 27, 1801, does not contain his name. There is no evidence of cultivation, and it is rejected. One hundred acres have been already confirmed to John Jones, report (No. 4 and No. 31) of 1828, this session; and we imagine this to be the same person, and all the land to which he is entitled.

No. 119.—Ezekiel Tucker, claimant for 150 acres of land.

This land lies on the river Nassau, at a place called Tucker's Creek. It was granted by Governor Coppinger by concession dated March 18, 1817, under the order of 1790.

The claimant has produced no evidence of cultivation, and it is rejected.

No. 120.—Stephen Eubank, claimant for 255 acres of land.

There is a concession for this land signed by Governor White, and dated February 4, 1806. The only description of the land in the paper presented to us is "that it is bounded on the east by lands granted to E. Tucker."

The concession of White required that the party should establish himself on the land within one month. There is no proof that he did so, or that he possessed it subsequently. It is rejected.

No. 121.—Paul Dupont, claimant for 3,000 acres of land.

This land lies at Spring Garden. The basis of the claim is this: A concession from Governor Coppinger, dated October 8, 1817, in virtue of the royal order of 1790; a certificate of survey, December 8, 1817; a memorial for an absolute title, dated May 9, 1819; and a decree for taking testimony to prove settlement and cultivation, together with the testimony of Robert McHardy, A. Burgevin, and Fr. Ferreira, of the same date. Then follows the decree of the governor for an absolute title, and the title itself made on the same day, May 14, 1818.

It will appear by reference to No. 80 of this report that the governor, about this time, had granted another tract of the same quantity to the same individual.

This claim is almost precisely similar to that of John B. Gaudry, reported (No. 96) above, and for the reasons given there, to which we refer, it is rejected.

No. 122.—M. Villalonga, claimant for 10 acres of land.

No. 123.—Same, 6 acres of land.

Thomas Aguilar certifies that, on a favorable report of the commandant of engineers, Governor White, on the 24th of October, 1801, granted 10 acres of land to the claimant, without the gates of St. Augustine, and within the 1,500 yards, on the usual conditions.

No. 123 is also a certificate of Aguilar, that on the 10th of November, 1790, Quesada granted to the claimant three acres of land, which he possessed during the British dominion, "at a place called Marcazaz;" and on the 24th of November, 1804, Governor White granted to the same individual three acres more at the same place.

As there is nothing in these cases but the certificate of Aguilar, we cannot confirm them.

No. 124.—Pablo F. Fontaine, claimant for 3,000 acres of land.

This land is situated on Vackasasa creek, about ten leagues southwest of Alachua. It purports to have been granted for military services on the 15th of May, 1815. This paper is not filed in the office of the archives, where it should certainly have been found if the claim is genuine. The paper presented to us is claimed to be the original, and proof of the signature of Kinderlan was tendered to this board, but not received.

We have rejected this claim because we do not think it genuine, and for the following reasons:

The first is, that the land did lie within the Indian boundary, within which grants were seldom made by the Spanish governors.

Secondly, it is a well-known fact that little at that time was known of the country so much removed from the sea-coast as this.

Thirdly, and above all, the grant is dated on the 15th of May, 1815, by authority of a royal order of March 29 preceding, which was transmitted from Madrid by way of Havana, and communicated to the governor of this place by the captain general, Apodaca, by a letter bearing date on the 7th of July, 1815, nearly two months after the date of the grant.

No. 125.—Jacob Worldly, claimant for undefined acres of land.

There is no evidence of title in this case. In November, 1806, Worldly makes an application to Governor White to grant him on Trout creek the number of acres which might correspond to him and his family. Governor White in the same month directed William Lawrence to report whether or not Worldly possessed and cultivated the lands which he claimed. One year afterwards Lawrence made a favorable report of this fact, and here the matter seems to have rested. As there is no proof in the office to show that any subsequent steps were taken to consummate the title, and as this claim was filed here on the 12th of November, 1828, it is rejected.

No. 126.—Ezekiel Tucker, claimant for 100 acres of land.

In 1805 Tucker, representing himself as an American citizen, applied to Governor White for 200 acres of land, about sixty-five miles north of this city, and twenty south of St. Mary's, at a place called Nassau. Governor White directed that 100 acres should be granted, on this condition, amongst others: "That he should establish himself upon it within the term of six months." There is no proof that he did so then, or at any subsequent period; and we doubt whether Governor White would have granted land to an American citizen in the face of a royal order which forbid it. This, too, as well as No. 125, was filed in this office on the 12th of November last; and for all of these reasons, either of which would be amply sufficient, it is rejected.

No. 127.—Pedro Peso de Burgo, claimant for 400 acres of land.

The grant to this land is dated April 15, 1815; it is therefore bad. It was made for military services, and is situated at St. Vincent Ferrer, on the river St. John's. Rejected.

No. 128.—Hannah Smith, claimant for 400 acres of land.

In 1817 the claimant applied to Governor Coppinger for 400 acres on Deep creek, under the order of 1790, and they were conceded.

It does not appear that the claimant has ever cultivated the land. James Hall, in whose veracity, as it will appear by our report of the last session, we place no confidence, has sworn, generally, that the state of the country was such at the date of the concession as to make it dangerous to locate a settlement; but it does not appear that since the change of flags Mrs. Smith has made the attempt, as by the provisions of the treaty with Spain it was her duty to do. It is therefore rejected.

No. 129.—Charles Gobert, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

In November, 1804, Charles Gobert presented a memorial to Governor White, in which he avowed his determination to cultivate coffee in the province, and applied for 2,000 acres of land situated on Dunn's island, about ten miles south of a place called Rallstown, east side of St. John's river, in lieu of 2,000 acres theretofore granted him at Mosquito. The decree of the governor is that the land shall be granted, with the same conditions under which Drayton's island was granted to George Sibbald, "specifying said conditions in the certificate which shall be issued to him from the secretary's office."

This claim should be rejected for uncertainty; the certificate spoken of should have been produced, and this uncertainty would have been removed.

We have examined the grant of Drayton's island to Sibbald, which was acted on by the board of land commissioners, and find their decree to be in the following words: "The board having ascertained that this claim is covered by a British grant, they therefore order that it be reported to Congress for their determination." From this decree it was impossible for us to ascertain the nature of the grant to Sibbald; we have, therefore, deemed it our duty to look into the grant itself. The original concession specifying the particular conditions is not before us. But the royal title made to Kingsley, the purchaser from Sibbald, in 1815, presents the following facts in the case: first, that the land was granted to George Sibbald, in 1804, under the royal order of 1790; secondly, that the lands were adjudged to Kingsley by a decree of the government in 1811; and thirdly, in the language of the instrument of the title, "considering that he has already passed more than ten years of uninterrupted possession to obtain the useful and direct dominion of the said island of Drayton, made buildings on it, cultivated it, and finally complied with all the other conditions established by the government for grants and concessions of this nature," the royal title aforesaid was granted him. From all this, it appears that these lands were granted under the order of 1790, which required ten years' peaceable possession to make a concession valid. In the case of Drayton's island this continued possession was proved to Kindelan, and he has given a valid title. In the case before us nothing has been proved and the title is bad. Independent of this, we believe this to be the same land subsequently granted to Thomas Murphy, No. 41 of this report; and if it be so, the Spanish government must have considered that in 1818 Gobert had failed to comply with the conditions imposed and that this land was public property. Rejected.

No. 130.—Joseph M. Hernandez, claimant for a marsh lot, (undefined.)

On the 8th April, 1818, Governor Coppinger gave to the claimant a royal title to the marsh in front of his plantation.

No. 131.—Sebastian Garcia, claimant for 15 acres of land.

Same, claimant for 6 acres.

These two claims are situated outside of the city of St. Augustine: No. 131 at a place called Aigachy, near Mose, and No. 132 without the new lines of the city, adjoining the lands of John Gianopoly. No. 131 is a concession from Governor Quesada of the 9th of November, 1792. No. 132 was conceded by Governor White in 1802. There is no evidence of cultivation in either case, and they are both rejected.

REPORT No. III.

No. 1.—James Dailey, claimant for 23,000 acres of land on Dunn's lake.

An application for six miles square on Dunn's lake, in absolute property, to establish a saw mill. The decree is dated on the 10th November, 1817, and makes the grant in absolute property.

We have already said that there is no permission to erect a mill over which a deep suspicion does not rest which passes the title to the soil, and does not prescribe that the grant is void unless the mill is erected. This grant conveys more land than any other of the kind. It is for six miles square; and G. Clarke certifies that he surveyed to the claimant in December, 1817, 23,000 acres of land. We do not believe this grant is valid. It is Aguilar's certificate of title, and nothing more. It is rejected.

No. 2.—Joseph Dalespine, claimant for 43,000 acres of land.

No. 3.—Same, for 10,244 acres of land.

The first is for services for various sums of money which he claims of the royal finance for supplies, provisions, &c.; and thirdly, for the losses which he has sustained during the years 1813 and 1814 for his loyalty, &c. This appears by the memorial of the claimant to the governor, April 6, 1817, in which he also states that for all these he had received no recompense. He therefore prays for 50,000 acres in fee simple on the west side of Indian river, or river Ys, opposite Marratt's island On the 9th of the same month Coppinger decreed that 43,000 acres should be granted.

This is Thomas Aguilar's certificate. We cannot recognize this grant as valid. Coppinger was liberal enough, but Aguilar would make him boundlessly extravagant. It is rejected.

There is on the back of the Spanish certificate of title an acknowledgment from Dalespine that he holds one-half of the land claimed in trust for Michael Tagarges, of Charleston, and a covenant to convey it to any one whom the said Tagarges may designate.

No. 3.—Pablo Fontane, of whom Dalespine is a purchaser, produces the certificate of T. Aguilar to this effect: that in 1817 he, Fontane, presented his memorial to the governor, stating that, as others had obtained lands for services, he had formerly procured a grant of four miles square on Trout creek, which, when examined, was found to be private property; wherefore he wishes to locate the grant on Indian river. The governor assented to the proposal. It does not appear that the original of Aguilar's certificate, or the papers of the first grant on Trout creek, said to be returned, are found in the proper office. But in 1820 there is another petition and memorial of Fontane for a survey. The decree is favorable, and we believe the signature is the governor's own handwriting. It is furthermore certified by Entralgo, and we can have no doubt that the grant was made. Andrew Burgevin, by direction, surveyed it. This grant will depend for its decision solely on the power of the governor, on which point we have already expressed our opinion. We should have remarked that Fontane styled himself a merchant in this case, as does Dalespine himself in the preceding.

No. 4.—Eusebio Maria Gomez, claimant for 12,000 acres of land.

Thomas de Aguilar, secretary of government, certifies that, on the 15th day of July 1815, Eusebio Maria Gomez presented a memorial praying for 12,000 acres of land, for services and head rights, situated on the rivers Jupiter and Santa Lucias, including the old English settlements on said rivers; to which Governor Estrada made the following decree on the 16th of the above month and year: "Let there be granted to the interested, on the terms which he indicates, the lands which he solicits, in the place pointed out, without injury to a third person, as the services which he states are well known to this government; and, that this gift may be made known, let there be issued to him from the secretary's office the corresponding certificate." We have always required the party to show some cause, however slight, for the loss of the original of Aguilar's certificate. This is not attempted; and, independent of all other grounds of objection, on this alone we would reject the claim.

No. 5.—Daniel O'Hara, claimant for 15,000 acres of land.

Thomas de Aguilar, secretary of government, certifies that Daniel O'Hara presented a memorial, dated September 3, 1803, soliciting 15,000 acres of land, (vacant,) situated at a place called Nassau, between the rivers St. John's and St. Mary's, when the survey takes place. Governor White passes the memorial to the commandant of engineers for his report; agreeably to which, Governor White made the following decree, dated the 5th of the same month and year: "Let there be granted to this interested the land which he solicits, without injury to a third person; and until, according to the number of workers he may have for its cultivation, there shall be measured what he is entitled to, it being well understood that he cannot claim damages for injuries, in case that, from fear of an invasion or other motives of the royal service, he be ordered to retire into the interior of the province; and that he must take possession of the said land within the space of six months from the date."

This, if genuine, of which we are not satisfied, is a mere grant for head rights, and is a bare declaration that, when he proved the number of his family, he should have surveyed to him as many acres as, by the regulations, he was entitled to. It does not appear that he proceeded to perfect his title, or to ascertain the number of acres, or to cultivate and possess it. Rejected.

No. 6.—Philip R. Young, claimant for 25,000 acres of land.

This is a plain royal title, made by Governor Coppinger in 1816 for services. The land in the grant is located at Spring Garden, and subdivided as follows: 12,000 in the neighborhood of a lake named Second, and known as Valdey's, and the remaining 13,000 at a larger lake higher up, known as Long lake; all on the west side of the river St. John. If the governor had power to make so large a grant, this is good; but, as our opinion is adverse, we cannot recommend it.

No. 7.—George Fleming's heirs, claimants for 20,000 acres of land.

This land lies on Indian river, at the mouth of St. Sebastian's river. There is a royal title in 1816 for services. If the governor had power to make so large a grant, this is a good one.

No. 8.—Antonio Acosta, claimant for 8,000 acres of land.

This is another of Aguilar's certificates, without an original. In May, 1816, "as he has been a constant resident at Fernandina, being continually employed in mercantile pursuits; has served whenever the governor thought proper; has been ready with his person, funds, and influence, in the defence, &c., of this town, (Fernandina;) has never received any salary, &c., for his expenses, supplies, and losses; and has refrained from troubling the government with his importunities," he prays for 8,000 acres of land. But as he is ignorant of the lands that are vacant, and wishes to avoid disputes, he prays the governor "will be pleased to approve the surveys, whenever the surveyor general shall have done so, on vacant lands."

The grant is made, with special directions to the surveyor general to have them surveyed.

If this grant was evidently genuine we should deem it incomplete. It is a promise to recognize a survey when made, and a power given to make it. There is no evidence that the survey was made; there is no pretence that it was recognized when made, and the grant consummated by such recognition. It is true that, in the memorial to this board, he says "the land was surveyed in the usual manner pursued by Mr. Clark: 1,500 acres in Jobing Hammock; 1,500 acres on the north of Dunn's creek; and 1,000 acres at Bowley's old field, with a tender of those surveys when required." The surveys are not produced; and if there was no objection to the grant on the proof of its genuineness, we should require some evidence that the surveys were shown to the governor, and approved and ratified. It is rejected.

No. 9.—Francis J. Avice, claimant for 500 acres of land.

This is a part of grant of 30,000 acres made to —— Arredondo, and confirmed by board of land commissioners. We have no wish or power to sever it from the larger grant; the one will decide the fate of both.

No. 10.—Francisca Aguilar, claimant for 30,000 acres of land.

It appears that the petitioner possessed a certificate of Thomas Aguilar, and presented it to the governor of Cuba in 1823, with a request that a certified copy of Aguilar's certificate should be made by the notary of Cuba, and the original, to wit, Aguilar's certificate, returned to her. This is done with all the imposing pomp of the seal notarial, &c.; but it amounts simply to this: that, in 1815, Aguilar certifies that Governor Quesada, in 1794, on the 24th of February, granted to the petitioner, in absolute property, 30,000 acres of land at a place called Haw Creek, situated to the south of the river St. John's, about twelve miles distant therefrom.

Let us look at the memorial on which the grant is made. In 1794 Don Juan Rodriguez states "that having a sufficient number of slaves to dedicate himself to agriculture and the raising of horned cattle, and also to aid in the maintenance of his large family," he hopes that his excellency, following the spirit of royal orders, which protects the Spanish inhabitants who have sacrificed themselves in the service of the said province during the turbulent times which have taken place in it, your memorialist having been one of its defenders; for which reason he prays," &c.

Now, every remark made by us in the case of the two Arredondos will apply with double force to the case before us, with this essential difference against this claim: that in 1794, when this grant bears date, we do not believe that any disturbance whatever had taken place in this province. In 1796 there was a small rising on the St. John's river, and the Arredondos may claim that services were rendered at that period. But here is a bold appeal in 1794 to the governor to reward services performed "during the turbulent periods which have taken place in it;" and there was no turbulence until 1796. "Following the spirit (we use the words of the memorial) of the royal orders, which protects the Spanish inhabitants who have sacrificed themselves in the service of the province;" such, in 1794, is an appeal to the provisions of a law passed in 1815. We are unwilling by any opinion of ours, liable as we may be to error, to debar any individual from a redress in the courts of his country. We will not, therefore, pronounce this grant a fraud or forgery, but we unhesitatingly reject it.

No. 11.—George Atkinson, claimant for 15,000 acres of land.

George Atkinson petitions the government, on October 8, 1816, for 15,000 acres of land in Cedar swamp, and on the west side of a lake called Upper Little lake, for his services during the years 1812, 1813, 1814, and 1815; to which Governor Coppinger made the following decree on the 20th of the above month and year: "Taking into consideration the merits, as set forth by Don George Atkinson, and the benign will of his Majesty, requiring that his meritorious subjects be rewarded, I grant him possession, and without injury to a third person, of the lands which he solicits in his memorial; and, agreeably to which, the surveyor general will survey the same in the place he points out, or in others that may be vacant, and being in places equally advantageous.

"COPPINGER."

No. 12.—George Atkinson, claimant for 4,000 acres of land.

This grant bears date February, 1810. It is first certified by Thomas de Aguilar, and afterwards by Juan de Entralgo, as on file among the papers under his charge as escrivano. Mr. Fatio, the clerk of this board, certifies that the original of the paper produced—itself evidently a copy—is on file in the office of the public archives.

Meranda, from whom Atkinson purchased, petitioned for this land for his services as a place on which to work his negroes. It seems strange that Governor White, whose rigorous refusal to give large portions of land is so remarkable, should break down a settled principle of action more than once in favor of this individual. Meranda was, as he declares in some of his memorials to the governor, the second pilot of the bar. If we credit the document here produced and filed to this second pilot, Governor White, after having already granted 368,000 acres for his extraordinary services, gives, in addition, the 4,000 acres claimed as above. In addition to all this, the grant is made for services in 1811, and the law authorizing such grants was passed in 1815. On this subject we beg leave to refer to our remarks in the case of Arredondo, of this abstract No. 15. We cannot recommend it.

No. 13.—F. M. Arredondo and son, claimants for 38,000 acres of land.

A grant, by concession, of 38,000 acres of land "situated on both banks of a creek which empties into the Suwannee river, called Alligator creek, commencing seven miles west of the Indian village called Alligator Town, about forty miles from Payne's Town and eighty miles from Buenavista, known under the denomination of Alachua."

The petitioner declares his services and the increased number of his hands as an inducement for the grant, and it is made by Governor Coppinger "in absolute proprietorship." On March 24, 1817, at a subsequent period, Andrew Bergevin was authorized to survey the land; but it does not appear to have been done. We have no doubt but this grant is genuine, and the sole question to be decided is as to the power of the governor. We have already given our views on this point. If we are right, the claim will be rejected, unless Arredondo had the requisite number of workers to entitle him to so large a grant. It will be submitted to the courts of the country for a final decision.

No. 14.—F. M. Arredondo, claimant for 50,000 acres of land.

This grant is similar in all its parts to the preceding; it is dated in 1810. It is certified by Aguilar in the first instance, by Philip Alvaris afterwards, whose character for good faith and credit, judicially and extrajudicially, is avouched by the same witnesses notarial, as in the other following this; it comes from the same offices; it is signed by the same governor; it is granted for services, under the order of 1790, in the same form and manner as the preceding; it is then liable to the same objections, and must share the same fate. We cannot recommend it.

No. 15.—J. M. Arredondo, claimant for 40,000 acres of land.

The title paper in this case is an unqualified and unconditional royal title, purporting to have been made by Governor White on the 12th day of January, 1811. The preamble declares that whereas Don Joseph de la Mazo Arredondo, a subject of his Catholic Majesty, resident and merchant of this city, &c., has represented, &c., praying for a concession of 40,000 acres in absolute property, at a place called Oquilabaga, &c. In consequence of the merits and the well known services of the petitioner, rendered by his person and property during the unfortunate period under which this part of his dominions labored; and, at the same time, according to what is set forth in the royal order of 1790, relative to the granting of lands free of expense to new settlers: wherefore, and being known to me the merits and laudible services of the memorialist, I have thought proper to grant, &c., the 40,000 acres solicited, &c. The residue of this grant is in the usual form. The genuineness of this grant is evidenced by the certificate of Thomas de Aguilar, and subsequently, on March 18, 1819, by the certificate of Filipe Alvarez, that this is in conformity with the original on file in the notary public's office at Havana, and of Don Joseph Leal, that he, Alvarez, is another notary. If this grant, either by copy or original, was ever on file in the archives in this city, it has not been made known to the board, nor is there any attempt made to account for the strange fact, that the original of a grant to land in Florida should be on file in the Havana and not in the city of St. Augustine.

There are many objections to this grant, besides the want of power in the governor to depart from the line of his instructions, as laid down by the royal orders under which he acted:

1st. The bare certificate of Aguilar is not sufficient to justify us in recommending for confirmation.

2d. It is suspicious that this grant and this certificate should be found in Cuba without a trace of it remaining here. It was made, if made at all, by White, the governor here; Aguilar was the secretary here; here was the land, and here all similar records were deposited. We should require that some satisfactory reason should be given for the departure in this case from a rule almost universal. Great care was taken by the American commissioners, at the change of the flags, that the titles to property should not be removed to Havana; and it is believed that care, accompanied by some violence, was effectual.

3d. Governor White was more rigorously exact in granting lands than any who preceded or came after him. His regulations are exact and precise, and his official declaration uniform and peremptory on this subject; and we doubt whether there is one single exception to Governor White's adhesion to the rules which he had prescribed for himself under the provisions of the law, unaccompanied by positive suspicion of unfairness.

4th. The grant is made under the order of 1790, "relative to strangers;" Arredondo was a "resident and subject." The order of 1790 requires that lands should be granted in proportion to the workers; here nothing is said of workers, but it is granted for services. Now, whatever may have been the practice of his successors, we doubt that Governor White ever granted lands for a particular reason, and cited the law in the body of the grant as his authority, directly adverse to the authority claimed.

5th. This grant was made "for the merits and well known services of the petitioner" in 1811; and the law giving authority to reward services by grants of land was passed in 1815; and the war which gave occasion to the law commenced 1812.

We are not disposed to pronounce on the authenticity of this grant so as to bar the claimant from his remedy in a court of law, but we cannot recommend it for confirmation.

No. 16.—F. M. Arredondo, claimant for 250,000 acres of land.

This is one of Aguilar's certificates, dated April 2, 1809. It states: "That to the memorial of the claimant of the same date, soliciting, in virtue of their merits and services, which rendered in favor of his Majesty, in the city, with his person and his property, the concession, in absolute property, of ten miles to each cardinal point of the compass, of vacant lands, at a place called Calaso Gachey in the Spiritu Santo, its boundary running from the river of the same name to the river Manaty, in consequence of this solicitude the following decree was this day made known thereon:" "Being, as they are, evident to this government, the merits and recommendable services rendered by the interested in this representation, I have thought proper to grant him, as in the name of his Majesty I do grant him, in absolute property, the said ten miles of land, in a square, for himself, his heirs, and successors." "Without the necessity of any other title, separating the royal domain from the right and dominion which it had to said lands, ceding and transferring them to the said Arredondo, his heirs, and successors, that, as their own, they may use and enjoy them without any encumbrance whatever, with all its entrances, outlets, uses, and customs, and everything else that belongs to it by right; and for his security and confirmation in any event, the secretary of government shall despatch to him the corresponding certificate.

"WHITE.

"And, in compliance with what is ordered in the preceding superior decree, I give the present in St. Augustine, Florida, the 2d day of April, 1809. THOMAS DE AGUILAR."

There is a copy of the memorial and decree forwarded from the city of Havana, with another certificate of Aguilar, dated January 5, 1824, that the original remained in the hands of the claimant. The evidence in support of the claim is this: The deposition of the same Aguilar, taken by interrogatories, directed to Havana, and the affidavit of William Reynolds, late keeper of the public archives of this city. Aguilar recollects perfectly of making the grant, and swears to the power of Governor White to do so. He gives his opinion that a copy of the grant may be found in the office of Vedal, of that city, and swears that the copy heretofore spoken of is a correct one; that the grant was not only legal, but, from the services of Arrendondo to the government, highly merited. All of which facts and circumstances he is fully acquainted with, having been for many years secretary to the government. When cross-examined, he says "it was not a general custom to have grants for lands in Florida recorded in Havana, and that the copy of this grant was there recorded lest it should be lost or mislaid. A course not necessary, but optional with the parties, grants being universally recorded in Florida where the lands lay." He then deposes that the copy of which we have spoken is a correct one.

William Reynolds, in his affidavit before a justice of the peace, deposes that he had seen in the office of Mr. Law, late alcalde, a paper purporting to be a grant to F. D. Arredondo, jr., by Governor White, for a large tract of land in East Florida, which said document has not been in the possession of the affiant, as keeper of the public archives. One-fourth part of this land has been sold by claimant to Moses E. Levy, by deed bearing date January 4, 1822.

From the abstract of the documents and testimony rendered as above, the opinion of this board must be against this claim. It is a certificate of Tho. Aguilar, with a certified copy of that certificate from Havana, where the grant, properly, never should have been recorded. It is a grant made for services in 1809, six years before the royal order of 1815, the only authority that we know of, given to the governors of East Florida, to reward the services of subjects by the donation of lands. It is said to be made by Governor White, who was more rigorously exact in conforming to the laws and ordinances, and more parsimonious in his grants, than any governor who preceded or came after him. It is made in absolute property, which was never done and could never be done, until the royal order of 1815, and to a man who, by the evidence before the board, was twenty-one years of age at the date of the grant, and a minor by the Spanish laws. We will not by our sentence preclude the party from going before the courts, but we cannot recommend it for confirmation.

No. 17.—Peter Merando, claimant for 368,640 acres of land.

As this is a large grant, and one which has been much spoken of, we shall give at length the petition of the party, and the decree of the governor:

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., November 19, 1810.

SEÑOR GOVERNOR: Don Pedro Merando, second pilot of the launch of the bar of this port, with the most profound respect, states to your excellency that he has had the honor to serve his most Catholic Majesty (whom God preserve) from the year 1788, when he was employed as a rower in said launch, in which capacity he continued until, by his distinguished merits and skill, he was appointed to his present employment. Furthermore, your excellency well knows the truth of his good management, fidelity, and love of the service of his Majesty, proved in divers expeditions, which, by order of this government, the deponent made in the year 1795, in the rivers of this province, when it was ravaged by the rebels; and as for such remarkable services, and others latterly performed to the satisfaction of your excellency: wherefore he prays your excellency to be pleased, in recompense of what he has set forth, and in consideration of his impoverished situation, to grant him an absolute property, eight leagues square, in the royal lands which are on the waters of the bays of Hillsborough and Tampor, in this province, by virtue of the royal orders for the granting of lands gratis to the Spanish subjects, a favor which he hopes to obtain from the justice of your excellency. PEDRO MERANDO.

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., November 26, 1810.

The merits and services which this party sets forth being well known and established, let there be granted to him, on the terms which he solicits, the quantity of land, at the points indicated, without injury to a third person; and to authenticate this grant at all times, let a certified copy of this memorial be issued from the secretary's office for his security.

WHITE.

The witnesses examined in this case before the former board of commissioners are Gabriel W. Perpall, F. Bethune, James Hall, Antonio Alverez, and B. Segue. The only point upon which their examination goes is the authenticity of the original and the signature of Governor White. Perpall says that "it looks like the signature of White, but he cannot swear to it." "That, from the finishing of the flourish attached to the name, he cannot believe or disbelieve it to be genuine, as the difference might arise from the position in which the writer's hand was placed, or from some other cause."

Carrado has never seen the governor write, and knows nothing about it.

Bethune does "not think the writing as perfect as Governor White's signature usually was, the governor being remarkable for great precision therein; but it may nevertheless be his, as it may have been written when he was unwell." When cross-examined, he says "the governor died in 1811, and had been indisposed several months before his death, but was not confined to his bed." That he had seen the governor sign different decrees, some of which were for land, and some for passports, but neither within a few months before his death." When asked whether he had seen Governor White write on any other occasion than those mentioned above, so as to enable him to acquire a knowledge of the governor's handwriting, he answered in the negative. He says, furthermore, "that the governor, a few years before his death, drank a little hard in the afternoon, though he did not usually transact business at that time." The witness, in 1810, lived on the river St. John's, and came occasionally to town.

James Hall was acquainted with the governor from 1798 until 1810, and "has often seen him write." When the original was presented to him, he said "the signature of White looks something like the governor's, but witness had never seen any of his writing done so incorrectly as this." That his opinion is formed "from the latter part of the name White, which appears to have been written lower down than was usual with the governor." "That this is the only material difference perceived by the witness, though the whole does not appear so correct as he, White, usually wrote."

The above witnesses seem to have been sworn on the part of the United States, and those that follow on the part of the claimant. Antonio Alverez deposes "that he is acquainted with the handwriting of Governor White. That he has been a clerk in his office, in which situation he has often seen him write. That he entered said office in the year 1807, and continued there with two slight intermissions, until the change of flags in 1821;" when the original concessions, brought before the board, from the office of the public archives, by the keeper thereof, was exhibited to the witness, and he was asked whether he believed the signature "White" to be genuine, he answered simply in the affirmative. When cross-examined, he deposes "that his opinion of the genuineness of the signature is formed both from the signature itself and the flourish immediately under it." "He has no particular recollection of the t's or the e's in Governor White's name, or the manner in which the first was crossed, or the second joined to it, but from the general appearance of the signature believes it to be genuine." He does not believe the e is made totally different from the manner in which Governor White usually made it, but it seems closer to the t than Governor White placed it usually; that the governor signed his name with great uniformity, and he considers this signature regular and uniform."

The witness knows nothing of the making of this grant. He says that concessions for lands were deposited in the government secretary's office. When asked if it was within his knowledge that, since the time at which this concession was made, it had always been in the said office, he adverted to the date of the concession, and answered in the affirmative. He, furthermore, deposes that vacant lands, situated at a distance from St. Augustine, were not considered of much value or importance about the year 1810; and to the question of the district attorney, he answers "that Goveronor White was always cautious and sparing in granting to individuals any part of the public lands." B. Segue "is well acquainted with the handwriting of Governor White, having seen him write many times." Witness lived in the government notary's office, from whence it was his duty, almost every day, to carry papers to the governor for his signature. In this office he continued, with a few intermissions, from the year 1800 to the year 1812 or 1813. When the grant now under adjudication was presented to him, and he was asked whether he believed the signature to be genuine, he answers "that he has no doubt of it." He says, further, "that he became acquainted with the existence of this grant a few days after it was made, as he (the witness) drew the memorial at the request of Mr. Merando; and that the lands, situated at such a distance from St. Augustine as those granted by this concession, were then considered of very little value.

On a question of the district attorney, whether the governors of this then province were not regulated in the distribution of lands to individuals more by the principles and rules they had adopted and established for the granting of lands than the value of lands granted? the witness answers "that the governors were regulated, in the granting of lands, by the merits of the individual, the number of his family, or the value of the lands asked for, according to his own discretion." We have thus given, at full length, the documentary evidence upon which this claim is based, and an abstract of the evidence taken before the board of commissioners, nearly as long as the depositions themselves, adopting, for the most part, the language of the witnesses; not that we have deemed this testimony at all important to the decision of the case, if our decision was final, but it may be satisfactory to the numerous claimants under the pretended grantee. It seems to us strange that the name of White should be attached to a grant like this, whose uniform practice and unvarying declarations have shown, in the language of the witness Alverez, "that he was always cautious and sparing in granting to individuals any part of the public lands." There are many letters of Governor White to the superintendent at Cuba. There are many of his decrees and regulations, in all of which he has invariably declared that he would conform to the laws in granting of lands. Nay, more, he has, by his own act, made those laws more rigorous than they were, and circumscribed within narrow limits his own authority. He has said in his letter to the governor general of Cuba that the regulations of Quesada were too liberal, in granting one hundred acres to the heads of families, and one-half of that quantity to its members; and by his (Governor White's) own decree he has reduced the relative quantity to fifty and twenty-five acres.

If we examine the laws of Spain, we shall see by the laws of the Indies, published in the recent copy of the Land Laws, page ——, and in the royal order of 1754, so much spoken of, published in the same book, for the first time, page ——: we shall find by those laws that no authority is given for a grant like this. The only subsequent decree upon the subject of land, which we have been enabled to discover, is the royal order in 1790, made specially for this province. That order applies exclusively to foreigners; and it was a matter of courtesy on the part of the governors to extend its provisions to the native subjects of Spain. It has been contended that, by the provisions of that order, there is no fixed quantity of acres named, to which the party should be entitled; or, in other words, the power of the governor, upon that subject is left without limit. Without adverting to the many declarations of his Catholic Majesty, made in his royal orders, of dates both previous and subsequent, that lands should be granted in proportion to the workers of a family, or, in other words, that no man should have granted to him more lands than he could cultivate; and, furthermore, that lands should only be given for the sake of cultivation and improvement, and not for the sake of speculation, we might admit, for the sake of argument, that the quantity to be granted was left only to the governor's discretion. That discretion has been exercised by Governor Quesada, in the first place, and afterwards by Governor White. This last governor, in his letter to the Marquis De Somerruelos, the captain general of Cuba, dated October 15, 1803, uses these words: "My predecessor has assigned one hundred acres of land to the fathers of families, and fifty to each child or slave, whether full grown or small, a quantity really excessive, and could only have taken place at that time in which there were few strangers who came in solicitude of lands; but at present there are many who come, and consequently there would result the greatest injury in the improvement of the province, unless said number of acres be diminished, on account of its being more than one individual can cultivate in a year, even divided into three parts, for the purpose of giving rest to the lands. Which circumstance I have had also present for the deduction which has been made."

After this, it is impossible for us to believe that Governor White, either before or after dinner, ever made a grant of 368,640 acres of land to any individual whatever. The grantee cannot claim the land under the laws of the Indies, or the royal orders of 1754 or 1790, and we know of no authority vested in the Spanish governor, before the year 1815, to make a grant to any individual for services, however much more than Governor W. that governor may have been disposed to be liberal.

If we look at the grant itself, and take the claim and merits of Miranda, as set forth by himself, to be true, how contemptible and ridiculous do they seem when viewed as a basis for a grant like this. P. Miranda, second pilot of the launch of the bar of this port, promoted by his distinguished merits and skill, from a common rower on board of said launch, claims a principality as his reward. In addition to high services as pilot and rower, he represents that he has made some magnificent expeditions in the rivers of this province, and then, for his services and his poverty, modestly begs for eight leagues square, by virtue of the royal orders for the granting of lands gratis to Spanish subjects.

We will not pronounce this grant a forgery, and thus debar the party of the rights which he may have acquired by the law of May 23, 1828. We are prevented from this by the deposition of Segue and Alvarez; but we think it our duty to say that we view any grant purporting to be made by Governor White to a larger amount than is prescribed by the royal orders and by his own regulation as extremely suspicious. We consider him the most correct governor who has ever presided in East Florida, the most strictly observant of the laws, and the most parsimonious of the public lands, and we do firmly believe that if his example had been followed by his successors, and if his name had never been signed after his death, there would now be no confusion in the land titles of East Florida. We furthermore believe that previous to the year 1803 Governor White never made a grant of land more extensive than that prescribed by the regulations of Quesada, nor subsequently to that period more extensive than was permitted by his own. We do not believe that he has ever yet made a grant for services, nor for anything other than head rights; that he has never made a grant, when living, of 20,000 acres to one individual, whatever he may have done since dead, and that he has never made a grant within the Indian boundaries, within which limits this land then lay. It is true that the original of this document or claim has been found in the office of the public archives, but it is a matter of history that the papers now deposited there were for a long time after the change of government most loosely kept and guarded, and it was a matter of equal facility to take a paper out or smuggle it in. From the best evidence we have been able to acquire upon this subject, it appears to the board that there were two offices at this place under the Spanish government: the escribano office, which was regularly kept in books, stitched together in consecutive pages, with all the records closely following each other, so as to make it extremely difficult to interpolate a grant. For the records of this office we have high respect; it seems to have been a place where all grants were recorded when fully matured. The other, the office of the governor's secretary, was of a different character; here all the papers were in loose and detached sheets, easy to have been taken away, or to have had a forged document thrust among them, without the power of detection. This is the office in which all the memorials for lands, with the inchoate decree of the governor, were first thrown; and it does appear to the board that these first decrees do in no case amount to a grant, but barely give to the applicant the right to become a settler upon the performance of all the conditions imposed by the law. We will give an exemplification of our ideas: A B, upon coming into the province, if he is a new settler, writes his memorial to the governor, and applies for 50,000 acres of land. The governor says, "Let it be granted until, according to the number of his family, the portion to which he is entitled is allotted to him." This paper is thrown into the governor's secretary's office, and, as we conceive, is itself no record, and conveys no title. It is a bare permission to the applicant to settle in the country, and to receive his lands, if he shall take the oath of allegiance; 50,000 acres, if he has workers enough to justify the grant, and 500 if by the number of his family he is entitled to no more. It will not be pretended that the party could claim the lands thus granted if he never afterwards took the oath of allegiance, nor can it be pretended that by the mere grant, as above supposed, the 50,000 acres are conveyed until some subsequent step is taken by the party to consummate his title. In addition to the oath of allegiance, he was required to swear to the number of his workers, and when this was done, according to the number of his workers was the quantity granted, and subsequently surveyed by the public surveyor. Then it was that the documents were all transferred to the office of the escribano, fairly written out in a book of records, and entitled to the fullest confidence; but the loose papers in the governor's secretary's office, the first memorial and decree, such as we have just described it, do not seem to have conveyed any title, to have been considered any record, or worthy of any preservation. It was over this last office that Thomas de Aguilar presided; it is from this office that so many monstrous grants have emanated; it is from this office that the originals of Thomas de Aguilar's certificates of grants are lost, and it is in this office that the original of the grant before us is to be found. It may be as well from the loose manner in which these documents in the governor's secretary's office were kept as from the little faith to be attached to Aguilar's certificates that so many of the originals of those certificates are lost; and, if the view which we have taken of this matter be correct, Aguilar may have been a meritorious officer, his certificates perfectly genuine, and the grants which are pretended to be conveyed by them of no validity. It is possible that, after making the application for the lands, as certified by Aguilar, the party, unable or unwilling to comply with the conditions, had abandoned his intention of becoming a Spanish subject and a Spanish grantee, and yet, having scrupulously preserved the certificate of Aguilar, given at the time when the original, known to be of no value, was thrown away, has come before this board since the change of flags and applied for the lands; and such a case, if it were not for the "grant on absolute property," might we deem this of Miranda's to be. If he had asked for ten leagues square of Governor White, and the governor had said, "Let it be done in proportion to his family," and Miranda had proved that he had a thousand negroes or a thousand children, Miranda would have been entitled to the amount, however large, which, by the regulations, he could claim for them; but as he has proved neither the one nor the other, and has never surveyed the land, even if the grant be genuine, he can take nothing by a title like this.

No. 18.—F. M. Arredondo, claimant for 1,500 acres of land.

This is a part of a grant for 10,000 acres of land made to Entralgo, and recommended for confirmation by the board of land commissioners.

No. 19.—Belton A. Copp, claimant for 1,500 acres of land.

This is a part of a grant made to George Clarke for 26,000 acres, already reported.

No. 20.—A. Gay, claimant for 500 acres of land.

This is a part of a grant made to George Fleming, and reported in this abstract, No. 7.

No. 21.—Peter Miranda, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

This is a part of 10,000 acres claimed by Miranda, and recommended to Congress for confirmation by the former board of land commissioners.

A part of this same claim, 4,000 acres, has been sold to Juan B. Entralgo, and recommended by the same board.

No. 22.—Jos. M. Hernandez, claimant for 10,000 acres of land at Salt Spring.
No. 23. " " 5,000 " west side of St. John's.
No. 24. " " 5,000 " east of St. John's.
No. 25.—Frs. P. Sanchez, " 1,400 "

These tracts are all claimed under the same title. On the 18th November, 1817, Joseph M. Hernandez alleging, in his memorial to the governor, "That his, the governor's, power for the distribution of land is unlimited," for the several causes of "military services and an increased force on the part of the petitioner," prayed the donation of 20,000 acres of land, divided as above specified. The governor alleges that, as the petitioner is one of those who contribute most to the improvement of the province, the land is granted in absolute property and dominion.

In 1820, on the application of Hernandez, Andrew Burgevin was authorized to survey the several tracts. He did so, and for his service Hernandez conveyed to him 1,400 acres, the same now claimed by F. P. Sanchez, No. 25.

If Hernandez is correct in his memorial, &c., "the power of the governor to grant lands was unlimited," then this claim of 20,000 acres is good; but, as we entertain and have expressed a different opinion upon that subject, we cannot recommend the whole of it for confirmation.

No. 26.—Francis P. Sanchez, claimant for 500 acres of land.

This is a part of 10,000 acres granted to F. M. Arredondo, 5,000 acres of which, lying upon Back creek, was sold to John B. Entralgo, in whose name that quantity was recommended by the former board of land commissioners; and 4,000 acres of the same grant, lying east of Spring Garden, have been recommended in the name of the same individual. These three are parts of one integral grant, and cannot be severed in the decision.

No. 27.—Henry Eckford, claimant for 46,080 acres of land, Hillsboro' bay.

This is part of the land claimed by Pedro Miranda, No. 17 of this report.

No. 28.—Jasper Ward, claimant for 128,000 acres of land.

No. 29.—Dionisia Segue, claimant for 5,333 acres of land.

No. 30.—Dionisia Segue, claimant for 4,000 acres of land.

No. 31.—Anne Ortega, claimant for 100 acres of land.

No. 32.—Anne Ortega, claimant for 100 acres of land.

No. 33.—Ralph King, claimant for 5,000 acres of land.

These claims are portions of large grants purchased of the grantees by the several claimants.

No. 28 is a moiety of a large Alachua grant made to F. M. Arredondo & Son, which was recommended for confirmation by the board of land commissioners.

No. 29 is a part of a mill grant made to Samuel Miles, and reported on by this board during the session of 1827.

No. 30 is a part of a grant made to E. M. Gomez, and reported on above, No. 4.

No. 31 is a part of a large grant made to Peter Miranda. See this report, No. 21.

No. 32 is part of a grant made to Antonio Huertas, which was recommended by the board of commissioners.

No. 33 is part of a mill grant claimed by F. Bethune, and reported on by this board during the last session.

No. 34.—Andrew Burgevin, claimant for 500 acres of land.

No. 35.—A. Burgevin, claimant for 500 acres of land.

No. 34 is situated on a branch that runs from the west into the river St. John's, and is about twelve miles south of Lake George. It is a part of a larger grant made to A. Huertas, and already reported on, by whom this tract was sold to the present claimant.

No. 35 is situated at a place called Big Spring, and is a portion of a large grant made to Peter Miranda, and also reported on.

No. 36.—Jacob Worldly, claimant for 4 miles square of land.

This claim was filed here on the 12th November, 1828, and we regret that it was filed at all, as it is decidedly the most confounded claim that has ever been presented to us; it is a mill grant, all of which we thought we had decided on during the last year. On the 27th April, 1817, Jacob Worldly, representing himself to be desirous of building a water saw-mill on Trout creek, on the river St. John's, applied for a right of "four miles square, or its equivalent, for the necessary and contingent consumption of wood." On the 3d June, same year, the grant was made by Governor Coppinger, under the precise conditions "that until the said machinery is erected the concession shall be without effect;" and further, "with the understanding that unless the construction of said machinery shall take place within the term of six months from the date hereof the said grant shall be null and of no value."

This was in June, 1817; the claim, as we have said before, was filed in 1828, a term of more than eleven years. It is not proved or pretended that the machinery was erected within the six months prescribed by the grant, or at any subsequent period up to the present time, and yet it is claimed by Worldly. It is rejected.

No. 37.—The heirs of Thomas Fitch, claimants for 4,500 acres of land.

Governor Coppinger issues a royal title for four thousand five hundred acres of land, situated on the river Halifax, for services under the royal order of March 29, 1815, to Fernando de la Maza Arredondo, jr., which title is dated March 7, 1816. Thomas Fitch has purchased of Arredondo, and claims before this board. It is considered a good claim, and we recommend it for confirmation.

No. 38.—Domingo Fernandas, claimant for 16,000 acres of land.

This claim is bad; it is supported by no other evidence than Aguilar's certificate, dated November 17, 1817. It purports to have been granted for the many losses and services of the petitioner. The lands are located by the petition itself in Cabbage swamp. We cannot recommend it for confirmation.

REPORTS NOS. 4, 5, 6, AND 7, AND NOS. 1, 2, 3, AND 4, OF DONATION CLAIMS.

No. 4.

DONATION CLAIMS—REPORT NO. 1.

No. 1.—Andrew Pacety, claimant for 640 acres.

The land is situated on Armstrong branch, fourteen or fifteen miles west of St. Augustine. Antonio Coneres and Antonio Ponce depose that the claimant commenced his cultivation in 1818, and has continued it ever since; that he was then over twenty-one years of age; has a white family, two negroes, and a stock of cattle, and no claim derived from the Spanish or British government. Confirmed.

No. 2.—Eleanor Hogins, claimant for 640 acres.

Robert Hutchinson and William Black swear to the cultivation from 1818 to the present time. Her husband is since dead, leaving herself a widow with one child and several negroes. Hutchinson says the husband had a grant from the Spanish government, but the land was found to be covered by an older grant and abandoned. The claim is confirmed to Mrs. Hogins.

No. 3 —The heirs of John Garcias, claimants for 200 acres of land.

John M. Bowden deposes to the cultivation of the land from the year 1818 to the death of Garcias in 1822. The case is fully made out, with the exception of the quantity to which he is entitled; we think the quantity allowed is all that can be given under the deposition.

No. 4.—William Silcox, claimant for 640 acres.

This land lies on Willis creek, near Cedar swamp, in the county of Duval, and on the St. John's river. Two witnesses swear that in 1819 he was the head of a family, and 21 years of age, and lived on the tract claimed the whole of that year, and some time previous. We have no criterion by which to judge of the size of his family, but as he appears to be an old settler, and the land is poor, we confirm to him the 640 acres of land.

No. 5.—John Edge, claimant for 640 acres.

Three witnesses prove that he is fairly entitled to the land claimed. It lies at the head of Sawpit branch, south of Julington creek. He settled it in 1818, with a large family, and has resided on it ever since. Confirmed.

No. 6.—John Carr, claimant for 250 acres.

This land is situated on the south side of Lofton's swamp, emptying into Nassau river.

George Wilds proves cultivation from 1817 to the date of his affidavit, 1825; he proves all that is required by the statute. There is no evidence as to the size of his family, and 250 acres are confirmed.

No. 7.—John Dixon, claimant for 350 acres.

This land is situated on St. Mary's river, on the public road. Two witnesses prove the claimant to have lived on the land twenty years. In one of his papers he claims 640 acres, in another 350. We confirm to him 350 acres.

No. 8.—Reuben Charles, claimant for 350 acres.

This tract is about 12 miles north of St. Augustine, in the Twelve Mile swamp. George Gianoply deposes "that in 1818 he was upon the land claimed by Charles, who had a large log-house on said land, and had three or four acres cleared; that in the year 1819 he planted rice," &c. Andrew Storrs was there in the year 1822, and found Charles and his family in possession. William Hartley and James Plummer prove his possession before 1819, and afterwards; that he was a married man, and fifty or sixty years old. Another witness proves that he has no land derived from the British or Spanish government.

There is no witness to prove the number of his family, but, from all the circumstances, we think fit to give him 350 acres.

No. 9.—Bartolo Solana, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated near Big Cypress swamp, and near the St. John's river. It is proved by one witness that claimant settled this land in 1816, and has lived on it to the present time; that he has a large family, and a stock of one hundred head of cattle; and that he has no claim from the British or Spanish government. It is confirmed.

No. 10.—Magdalena Solana, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated on the south side of Six Mile creek, east of St. John's river.

Andres Papy and Bartolo Solana prove "that from 1818 to the present time the claimant has possessed and cultivated the land." "She has a daughter and three negroes." We confirm to her this claim. Some time after the 24th January, 1818, a grant was made to her deceased husband of 1,000 acres of land, which claim was barred by the treaty, and is therefore equivalent to no grant at all. If the Spanish government thought fit to give her 1,000 acres, we have no hesitation in confirming to her 640 acres.

No. 11.—Emanuel Crespo, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is said to be situated about a mile to the north of Tocoy creek, near St John's river.

It is in proof before the board that claimant has been in continued possession of the land, with a numerous family, from the year 1818 to the present time, and every way entitled to the land. It is confirmed.

No. 12.—Robert Miller, claimant for 200 acres of land.

Many witnesses have deposed to the fact that James Baird, in the first instance, and afterwards the present claimant, who intermarried with Baird's widow after his death, cultivated a place called Martin's Island, from the year 1814 to 1822. The island is supposed to contain about 200 acres, and as the evidence is perfect, the claim is confirmed.

DONATION CLAIMS—REPORT No. 2.

No. 1.—John Jones, claimant for 640 acres of land.

John Jones has two claims before the board derived from Spanish grants: one, for 100 acres, has been confirmed; the other, for 500, has been rejected. It may or may not be the same individual, though we are inclined to believe it is. Five or six witnesses testify that Jones never settled upon this land until August, 1823. This claim is rejected.

No. 2.—John B. Strong, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This claim is supported by no evidence; and it is a matter of notoriety that he never lived in the country. Rejected.

No. 3.—Henry Swinney, claimant for 640 acres of land.

There is no evidence in this claim, and we reject it.

No. 4.—Abraham Bellamy, claimant for 640 acres of land.

There is no evidence, and the claim is rejected.

No. 5.—William Haddock, claimant for 640 acres of land.

No evidence. Rejected.

No. 6.—Thomas Jones. claimant for 640 acres of land.

There is no evidence, and it is rejected.

No. 7.—William Hart, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land is situated on the west side of St. John's river, on Trout and Moncriff's creeks.

This claim is rejected for two reasons: First. That four witnesses are sworn that William Hart lived upon the land, improved, and cultivated the same in 1810 or 1812.

They further add that he and his heirs have had possession of the land ever since. From this testimony it is evident that the possession spoken of is what the deponents consider a legal possession. The law of 1824 requires that on February 22, 1819, the claimant should have actually inhabited and cultivated the tract. This does not appear by the testimony to be the case.

Secondly. William Hart, by his representatives, has presented to this board a claim for 1,400 acres of land, derived from the Spanish government.—(No. 42, report 2.)

No. 8.—James Burney, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land is situated on the south side of Trout creek, near the mouth of Six Mile creek.

From the testimony of Robert Rawlins and Benjamin Rawlins, it appears that the claimant lived upon this land from the year 1818 to 1820, but it nowhere appears that he was then 21 years of age, or the head of a family, or that he had any claim derived from the Spanish or British government.

It should, moreover, be added that this claim was filed in this office on the 3d October of the present year; and we are under the impression that the period allowed to parties to file their claims, which, by the law of 1827, expired on the 1st November of that year, was not revived by the law of 1828. For these reasons this claim is rejected.

No. 9.—John Ashton, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land lies about a mile from Mr. Cowen's, and twelve miles from St. John's river.

Joseph Somerall swears that the claimant was driven off of the place in 1812 by the dangers of the revolution; that he was a single man, and upwards of twenty-one years of age.

The law requires the party to live upon the land in 1819, which he did not; that he should be the head of a family, which a single man without slaves is not; that he should have no claim derived from the Spanish government; and Ashton has filed the certificate of survey of George Clarke, for 300 acres, dated April 10, 1818. For all these reasons, and because the claim was never filed until November, 1828, it is rejected.

No. 10.—Manuel Solana, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land is described to be "eight miles south of Picolata Fort, on the St. John's river."

There are three depositions in this case:

1st. John Andrew, who says, "in 1817 or 1818, on a place near McCullock's branch, the claimant resided and had some cattle; that he had a person living on said land who cultivated a part of it." Andrew afterwards stated to the receiver, Mr. Allen, that he had been mistaken as to the property, and knew nothing of the matter.

2d. Manuel Crespo deposes that he is acquainted with claimant, who took possession of this tract in 1819, and built houses thereon; and he does not know that claimant owns any other lands in the Territory.

3d. C. W. Clarke swears that he knows the claimant, whom he considers as a head of a family.

This claim is rejected: First. Because it does not appear, from the deposition of Crespo, that Solana was in possession of the land on the 22d day of February, 1819.

Secondly. Solana is a single man, without property, and, whatever Mr. Clarke may think, cannot be considered as the head of a family.

No. 11.—John Toy, claimant for 640 acres of land.

No. 12.—Francis Durant, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 13.—Joseph Watson, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 14.—Richard D. Ford, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 15.—Peter Nicholas, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 16—Nathaniel Tanner, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 17.—Jesse Wilson, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 18.—Blake Williamson, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 19.—Robert Gilbert, claimant for 232 acres.

No. 20.—Joseph R. Prevat, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 21.—Richard Tice, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 22.—Ann Stalling, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 23.—John Bellamy, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 24.—Thomas Prevat, claimant for 640 acres.

No. 25.—John Bellamy, claimant for 150 acres.

No. 26.—William Williamson, claimant for 640 acres.

In these cases, from No. 11 to 26, inclusive, there is no evidence whatever, and they are all rejected.

No. 27.—William Gardner, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated near the St. John's river.

Two witnesses swear that claimant "never took no head rights," except 150 acres on Julington creek. His taking this 150 acres is fatal to his donation claim. Rejected.

No. 28.—Nathaniel Stephens, claimant for 640 acres.

This land lies on the Little St. Mary's river.

The evidence in this case proves that in 1818 the claimant lived upon the land, with a wife and two children. Bailey, the witness, was at his residence in 1818, and whether he remained there until the 22d February, 1819, does not appear; wherefore it is rejected.

No. 29.—Benjamin Rawlins, claimant for 640 acres.

Rawlins claims the land lying in the county of Alachua, on San Filasko creek. The testimony produced clashes with his claim. John Uptegrove, the only witness sworn, deposes, in 1825, "that he, claimant, had resided on a place called Bear Branch, Nassau creek, Duval county, from the year 1818 to that time. We cannot confirm to him the place on Bear Branch, for he does not claim it, nor the place in Alachua, for he does not prove his claim; and they are widely apart.

No. 30.—Emanuel D. Mott, claimant for 640 acres.

The land lies on the river St. John's.

Samuel Fairbanks and John Jones both swear that the claimant settled on the land about two years before the 8th day of December, 1824, the date of their deposition. This carries the settlement back to December 8, 1822, and the claim must, of course, be rejected.

No. 31.—John Andrew, claimant for 640 acres.

B. Solana deposes that two years previous to the exchange of flags claimant took possession of the land, planted potatoes and pumpkins, kept stock, and had cow-pens; built a house when he took possession, which blew down in 1825; and continued in possession until September of the same year. When cross-examined he says that Mr. Andrew had no negroes, never resided on the land for five or six months at a time, and was not, when he took possession, a married man or the head of a family. It is rejected.

No. 32.—David Williamson, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is claimed in Alachua. There is no evidence filed in the case, and Horatio Dexter has sworn, in another case, that there were no settlements in Alachua previous to the change of flags, which we believe to be the fact. This claim is rejected.

No. 33.—William Daniel, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated on St. Mary's river, on Deep Run creek. Two witnesses prove that on the 22d February, 1819, he inhabited and cultivated the land, "and has had principal control of his father's family before and after the date above mentioned."

From this evidence it is plain that Daniel was a young man, living with his father, and managing his estate. We do not consider his case as embraced by the law, and reject it.

No. 34.—Thomas Bowden, claimant for 640 acres.

Two witnesses have deposed "that when they knew Thomas Bowden (without saying at what time) he lived on a certain tract of land on the south side of Goodby's lake, said to contain 250 acres, and cultivated the same for many years."

This evidence is not sufficient to support the claim, and it is rejected.

No. 35.—Joseph and Matthew Long, claimants for 640 acres.

This land is said to be situated on Graham's creek, near the King's road. Gab. W. Perpall and Charles W. Clark say that the parents of the claimants took possession of the land in 1800, abandoned it in 1812, reclaimed their possession before 1824, and the present claimants, now above twenty-one years of age, have had possession of it since 1822 or 1823.

This claim must be rejected, because the Longs have two claims filed before this board, No. —, Report —, derived by grants from the Spanish government.

The case is plain enough. The Longs had a grant from the Spanish government, which, it will be seen, they have neglected to produce, as they hoped to obtain a larger amount under the donation law, and thus they have lost both of their claims.*

No. 36.—Heirs of Zachariah Haddock, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated on Cabbage swamp, St. Mary's river.

J. D. Hart deposes that in 1817 he was upon the land claimed; that it was then cultivated by Haddock, with two or three houses built upon it; that he was the head of a family, which consisted of a wife and two children, and was over the age of twenty-one. There was no evidence to prove that he continued his possession until 1819, and therefore it is rejected.

* Since writing the above the Longs have produced their titles, and their claim has been confirmed.—(See Report 1, No. 77.)

No. 37.—Gamaliel Darling, claimant for 640 acres of land.

John Leornardy, the only witness sworn in this case, says that he, the witness, was upon the land in 1817; that Darling then had at work six hands; there was a small house and some corn; the land lies in Twelve Mile swamp. No evidence is produced to show that the claimant lived upon the land in 1819, 1820, or 1821. It is therefore rejected.

DONATION CLAIMS—REPORT No. 3.

No. 1.—Adam Cooper, claimant for 640 acres of land.

In a letter of the claimant, filed before this board, he states "that he lives on this land now, and has done so ever since 1822." He says, further, "that his claim was filed in October, 1827;" of this we have no recollection, nor is it so recorded. The affidavit of Benjamin Wood states positively that claimant lived on the land situated in Little St. Mary's neck on the 22d February, 1819. This is at variance with the declaration in the letter; and we are more disposed to believe the man's word than his witness's. The letter and affidavit are both dated in October, 1828, and filed on the 29th of the following month. Claim is rejected.

No. 2.—Joseph Maria Caldez, claimant for 640 acres of land.

Maximo Hernandez deposes that he has known the claimant about ten years; that he has occupied the land ever since he knew him; that he is over twenty-one years of age, a resident of Florida, the head of a family; has had possession of the land up to this time; and as far as he believes owns no land derived from the Spanish or British government.

Domingo Alberes deposes that he is acquainted with claimant, who settled the place in January, 1819; that he is now the head of a family, consisting of a wife and three children. From what we can gather from the papers, this land lies at a place called Angola, on Oyster river, near the Gulf of Mexico.

The testimony does not show that in 1819 the claimant was 21 years of age or a married man; and from the silence of the two affidavits upon that subject, and from their never failing to state those two important facts when they do exist, we are compelled to infer that Caldez is not embraced within the spirit or letter of the law of 1824. Above all, this claim was filed here in September, 1828, and is rejected.

No. 3.—Antonio Machaco, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land lies at Key Pueblo, on the Gulf of Mexico, about eight or ten miles from Charlotte harbor.

Joseph Cadao swears that he has known claimant twenty years, who has occupied the land claimed about fifteen years, (the deposition is dated in 1828;) that he is over the age of twenty-one, a resident of Florida, the head of a family, claims no title from the British or Spanish government, and has been in the actual possession of the land since 1813.

Regregrio Andres "has known claimant fifteen or twenty years, who has cultivated the land claimed in 1819, and has a wife and one child."

The evidence in this case, as in the preceding, is defective. The claimant is not shown to have been an adult or married man in 1819; and from having now but one child in a prolific country, we presume he was not married at that time. This claim was filed in September, 1828. It is rejected.

No. 4.—Andrew Gonzales, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land is situated on the gulf side of Florida, on the northeastern end of Sarasota bay.

Joseph Caldez swears "that he knows the claimant, who has resided on the land about twenty years; is fifty years of age, and the head of a family; that he has no land but this, and still lives upon it.

John Russell was on the place in 1824, where he found houses built and provisions growing.

Housa Maria Pancia swears to nearly the same facts as Caldez. He says the claimant cultivated the land since 1819, and during that year; and that he has a wife and four children now living on the place. This claim was filed the 5th September, 1828.

No. 5.—Antonio Gomez, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land lies on Sarasota bay. The evidence in support of the claim is this: Joseph Caldez, in June, 1828, deposes that he has known the claimant for twenty years, who has lived upon the land sixteen years, and is over the age of twenty-one years, a resident of Florida, the head of a family; has been in actual possession of the land up to the present time; and as far as the witness knows, has neither Spanish nor British grant.

Housa Maria Pancia "has known the claimant ten years; who was in actual possession and cultivation of the land in 1819; he has planted fruit trees; he still lives on the place, and has a wife and five children." It will be observed that none of the witnesses proved the party to have been twenty-one years of age or a married man in 1819, without which his claim cannot be confirmed.

No. 6.—Julian George, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is described to be on Key Pelew, in the vicinity of Charlotte harbor. Jos. Maria Pancia, being sworn before a justice of the peace, deposes "that he has known the claimant several years; that in 1819 he cultivated about ten acres in corn and other provisions, and has now a wife and four children." The testimony of Jos. Caldez is, that he has known the claimant, who has lived on the land 12 years, up to this date; he is 45 years of age, the head of a family, a resident of Florida, and has no claim derived from the Spanish or British government. This claim is as defective in proof as the preceding. It was filed September 15, 1828.

No. 7.—Peruko Pompon, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated on Key Pelew, near Charlotte harbor. Domingo Alverez and Joseph Caldez testify that they have known the claimant for about 12 years, and that he has resided on the place from that time to the present, (June, 1828;) that he is forty years old, the head of a family, consisting of a wife and three children, and a resident of Florida; he claims no land derived from the British or Spanish government. This claim was filed in September, 1828. It is equally defective with the cases immediately preceding, and is rejected.

No. 8.—Antonio Pancia, claimant for 640 acres.

We cannot discover whether this man's name is Pania or Pancia; he is the same who, as a witness, has been so often called in this report by the name of Pancia. The land which he claims lies on Key Pelew, about 8 miles north of Charlotte harbor.

Manual Hosa and Maximo Hernandez swear that they have known the party about 12 or 15 years; that he has cultivated the place about 12 years, and that in 1819 he made a crop of corn and peas; that he has a wife and two children, the eldest of whom is about 10 years of age; that he has been in the actual possession of the place ever since, and, as far as the witnesses know, has no claim derived from the Spanish or British government. This claim was filed in September, 1828.

No. 9.—Jos. Maria Godoya, claimant for 640 acres.

Maximo Hernandez is the only witness sworn in this case, and his evidence has been so informally taken that we cannot receive it. A commission in 1825, signed by the secretary of the board of land commissioners, and directed to two gentlemen, has been executed by one alone, and that one signs as a witness to the mark of Hernandez, and not as a commissioner.

We will briefly state the evidence, such as it is: Witness knows the claimant, who has resided on the land situated on Sarasota bay since the year 1812 to the date of the deposition, which, by the way, has no date; he is the head of a family, and now over 21 years of age, and he believes claims no land derived from the British or Spanish government. This claim was filed in September, 1828. Rejected.

No. 10.—Jacob Yelvington, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated on the south side of Six Mile creek. John Ford, the only witness sworn, says that at the date of his deposition, October 17, 1828, the claimant was 21 years of age, and the head of a family; that he took possession of the land in January, 1821, and has resided on it ever since, either in person or by representative; that he had five or six in family, and that he believes he has no claim derived from the Spanish or British government.

We cannot recommend this claim, because it does not appear that claimant was a married man or 21 years of age before July 17, 1821, and because this claim was filed in this office after November 1, 1827.

No. 11.—Sarah Ballard, claimant for 640 acres.

James Burney and James Long, in October, 1828, depose "that claimant lived on and cultivated a tract of land on the north side of Trout creek, at a place formerly called Carter's, from the first of the year 1819, as early as February, to some time in 1820. Claimant is 21 years of age, and the head of a family. Witnesses do not believe she has any claim under the Spanish or British government.

It appears from this evidence that the claimant at best lived upon this land but a single year.

This claim was filed before this board in the month of October, 1828. We cannot confirm it.

No. 12.—Francis J. Avice, claimant for 640 acres.

The land is described as "situated on the east side of St. John's river, between the lands of John B. Entralgo and Dr. Brush, nearly opposite Pallattia."

Peter Rodriguez swears that he was on the land claimed previous to the exchange of flags in the year 1821, and saw claimant at that time, who was building a house, and that there was also a family by the name of Stafford residing there. Witness believes the claimant was above the age of 21 at that time, and has no claim derived from the Spanish or British government.

Mr. Avice at this time has no lands immediately derived from either of those governments, but he has large claims by purchase, which have been filed before this board, and we therefore do not consider that his case is embraced by the spirit of the law. He was at that time a single man, and as such we do not consider him as the head of a family.

If the testimony proves the title in any one, it is in Stafford, and not in Avice. The claim was filed in the year 1828, and we cannot recommend it.

No. 13.—Sheddrick Stanley, claimant for 640 acres.

This would have been a good claim had it been filed sooner. It was presented here in October, 1828. The evidence is this: That claimant occupied the land on St. Mary's river, in the year 1800, and continued there until the year 1821; that he was then 21 years of age, and the head of a family, consisting of a number of children and three or four negroes. The witnesses, J. D. Hart and John Warren, never heard of his claiming any land under the Spanish or British government.

No. 14.—Joaquin Caldez, claimant for 640 acres.

The land is situated on Oyster river, about eight miles from Tampa bay.

Andrew Gomez and Antonia Frasia say that they have known claimant fifteen years; that he is over the age of 21; that he is the head of a family, consisting of a wife and three children; has lived on the land ever since they knew him, and has no claim derived from the British or Spanish government.

The evidence is defective in not proving that he was 21 years of age and a married man in 1819. The claim was filed in September, 1828, and is rejected.

No. 15.—David Hagens, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land lies on the public road leading from Jacksonville to Camp Pinckney, in the fork of Mills's Swamp, near the mouth of Alligator Creek, in the county of Nassau.

James Long, Benjamin Rawlins, and I. D. Hart, depose that claimant settled on the land in 1817, and has resided there ever since, with a family of four children and two or three negroes; that he was more than 21 years of age at the time, and has no claim derived from the Spanish or British government.

If this claim had been filed sooner, it would be good; but as it was never presented until October, 1828, if our view of the law be correct, we cannot confirm it.

No. 16.—John Hall, claimant for 640 acres of land.

This land is described as lying on or near Cedar creek, on the west side of St. John's river. The evidence is that in February, 1819, he was the head of a family, twenty-one years of age, and settled on the land.

He is an old man, and if his claim had been filed in time, we would confirm it; but it was presented to this board in September, 1828.

No. 17.—John Silcox, claimant for 640 acres of land.

The witness proves that he actually lived on and cultivated a tract of land on Cedar creek, on the west side of St. John's river, during the whole of the year 1819, and before and after; that he was then twenty-one years of age and the head of a family. This claim has been filed since the 1st of December, 1828, and must of course be rejected.

DONATION CLAIMS—REPORT No. 4.

No. 1.—John F. Brown, claimant for 640 acres.

The evidence in this case is this: First, the affidavit of the claimant, that, on July 19, 1819, and ever since that time, he has been in the possession and cultivation of a tract of land in Duval county, situated on the St. John's river, between Dunn's creek and Clapboard creek; that he was then twenty-one years of age, and the head of a family, and has no claim derived from the Spanish or British government.

The facts just stated from claimant's affidavit are fully proved by two respectable witnesses.

Mr. Brown is a man of a large family, and we recommend this claim to Congress for confirmation.

No. 2.—James Rowse, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated on St. Mary's river. The claimant settled the place in 1819, during the month of March, and by the evidence produced he is entitled to the land. We therefore recommend it for confirmation.

No. 3.—Cotton Rowles, claimant for 640 acres.

Three witnesses have deposed that this land, situated on the south prong and near the head of Trout creek, was settled by the claimant about the beginning of the year 1821, and that he resided on it until 1823 or 1824 They further prove that he is the head of a family, and over twenty-one years of age, and has no land derived from the Spanish or British government. We recommend his claim for confirmation.

No. 4.—Wade Silcox, claimant for 640 acres.

This land is situated on the head of Thomas's swamp, near the line of Nassau and Duval counties. The testimony of two witnesses is, that the claimant settled on the land in 1820, and has remained in possession of and cultivated it ever since; that he was then over twenty-one years of age, the head of a family, consisting of a wife and child, and claimed no lands derived from the British or Spanish government.

This claim was filed here in the month of November, 1828, and it will be seen by reference to report No. 3, donation claims, that the board have not considered themselves authorized by law to confirm claims filed subsequently to November, 1827. But as these cases, the cultivation of which commenced between February, 1819, and July, 1821, are of necessity to be reported to Congress, we feel it our duty to say, that had this case been filed in time, we should not have hesitated to recommend it for confirmation.

REPORT No. 8 OF BRITISH CLAIMS.

9	do	2,000	"
10	do	500	"

In these cases, William Travers claims, as agent, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, for the heirs of Thomas Forbes; Nos. 7, 8, 9, and 10, for the heirs of William Panton.

It is a matter of public notoriety that the house of Panton, Leslie & Forbes, of which Thomas Forbes and William Panton were partners, continued, by the permission of the Spanish government, to do a large mercantile business in the city of St. Augustine, and were generally employed by the government to furnish supplies, both in money and in goods.

Some of the partners of this house were permitted to purchase lands and to hold them in East Florida. It has not appeared to us that either of the above claimants, Forbes or Panton, took the oath of allegiance to the Spanish government, or became Spanish subjects. The only evidence which has been produced to us is a certificate from the keeper of the public archives of this city, that Don John Leslie, as appears by some of the records in his office, presented himself for the house of Panton, Leslie & Co., and declared the four principals of the house to be William Panton and Thomas Forbes, (the present claimants,) Charles Maclatchy, and himself, and that the said company owned in this province 72,820 acres of land.

By the regulations of government here, the British subjects holding lands were required to present themselves to the proper authorities, and to make known the number of acres claimed by them, and the course they intended to adopt; that is to say, they were required to declare whether their intention was to sell their lands and retire, or to become Spanish subjects and remain.

The claimants in these cases have so presented themselves, and have declared themselves owners of the above quantity of land. It is more than probable that they performed the other requisites of the law, but from the little care with which the records of that time were preserved, it is more than probable that the evidence of that fact has been lost. Suffice it to say, that as Panton and Forbes remained in the province during the whole time of the Spanish dominion, presented themselves to the government as the owners of these lands, and were accredited and favored agents and owners of lands other than these, we are disposed to believe these claims are good.

The position of the land, together with the date of the grant, and the governor who made it, may be seen by reference to the abstract accompanying this report.

No. 11.....Francis Kinlock ..... 2,350 acres.
12.....do. ..... 500 acres.
13.....do. ..... 500 acres.

The date of the grants and the locality of these several tracts will appear upon the abstract accompanying this report.

These are marked British grants, unaccompanied by any proof that these claims were ever recognized by the Spanish government. Indeed it is not so pretended. The Kinlocks were, by their own showing, always British subjects or American citizens; and we presume there can be no question of the position that all such claims are bad.

REPORT No. 12.

OF THE CASES OF GEORGE J. F. CLARKE, &c.

No. 1.—George J. F. Clarke, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

The grant is said to have been made by Governor Kindelan, on the memorial of claimant, stating his many services; and as a further inducement, "that he had no pay, stipend or other pecuniary aid from the government for four years." He prays for 2,000 acres; one thousand in Twelve Mile swamp, bounded by the lands of Charles and George Clarke, and one thousand in the hammock called Chacala, which bounds Payne's savannah on the west.

The decree of Governor Kindelan in July, 1814, is this:—That being aware of the services of the petitioner, and the sovereign will "requires that good subjects should be rewarded," the petition is granted. Now the "sovereign will," which grants the power to reward good subjects, is dated in March, 1815, nearly one year after this grant.

It is Thomas Aguilar's certificate alone; we reject it.

No. 2.—George J. F. Clarke, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

This tract is divided; one thousand acres is situated in Cedar hammock, south of Mizelle's lake, and one thousand acres at the head of Deep creek. In his memorial to this board the claimant states, "the grant was made for services rendered government." The governor's decree is dated February 16, 1811.

If this grant is for services, it is too early by four years. The royal order authorizing their reward in land bears date 1815. If it is made for head rights, cultivation and occupancy should be proved, which is not done. Let it be remembered that in the preceding grant in 1814, and this is dated in 1811, he states that he had received no pay, stipend, or other pecuniary aid from the government for four years.

This, too, is Aguilar's certificate; rejected.

No. 3.—George J. F. Clarke, claimant for 4,500 acres of land, Tallahassee and Chacala hammock.

This is a part of a grant made to George J. F. Clarke by Governor Coppinger, as appears by the certificate of Juan de Entralgo, on the 17th December, 1817, for services. Clarke sold of this tract 2,000 acres, to Entralgo, to whom that portion was recommended for confirmation by the former board of land commissioners, July 6, 1824. This part must abide the fate of the other.

No. 4.—George J. F. Clarke, claimant for 4,000 acres of land.

No. 5.—Elias B. Gould, claimant for 500 acres of land.

No. 6.—Simington, Forbes & Smith, claimants for 1,500 acres of land.

No. 7.—Thomas Massier, claimant for 1,000 acres of land.

These three claims are a part of No. 4.

This tract is divided in the petition of the claimant into three parts: 1,000 acres at a place called Spring Garden, on the west side of Lake George; one thousand on the river Hillsborough, at a place called M'Dougall's old plantation; two thousand acres at the big bend of Derbin's swamp. The original decree is presented to the board of date May 3, 1816, and two respectable witnesses, Perpall and Alverez, depose positively to their belief that the decree and signature are in the handwriting of Coppinger. The witnesses had frequently seen the governor write, and we have no doubt the claim is genuine. The consideration is for services, and as those of Mr. Clarke were notoriously many and meritorious, we have no hesitation in recommending this claim for confirmation.

Of this land 500 acres in Derbin swamp have been sold to E. B. Gould, who has presented his claim to this board, and the same quantity to Simington, Forbes & Smith, so as to make up the tract of 2,000 acres in that place; 1,000 acres at M'Dougall's has been sold to Thomas Napier, and 1,000 acres at the Big Spring still belongs to the grantee. We consider it as one integral grant and beyond our final jurisdiction; it is, therefore, recommended. These lands were surveyed in 1819, by Andrew Burgevin.

No. 8.—George J. F. Clarke, claimant for 4,000 acres of land.

Nos. 9 and 10.—M'Intosh & Clinch, claimants for 2,000 acres of land.

No. 11.—Thomas Napier, claimant for 1,000 acres of land.

Parts of No. 8.

On the 10th June, 1816, Charles W. Clarke having petitioned Governor Coppinger for this quantity of land "for services," the governor decrees accordingly. The original is before the board, and proved to be genuine by two respectable witnesses, well acquainted with the governor's handwriting. The land lies on Chacala hammock, and has been surveyed. Two thousand acres of this land has been sold to General McIntosh and Colonel Duncan Clinch, the first of whom has since transferred it to George J. F. Clarke. The said George has purchased the balance of his brother Charles, and of the whole he has conveyed to Thomas Napier 1,000 acres. The present claimants are all before the board for their separate tracts, but we consider it an integral grant and beyond our jurisdiction to confirm. As it is evidently a genuine grant, we recommend it for confirmation.

No. 12.—William Garvin, 3,000 acres.

No. 13.—Thomas Napier, 1,000 acres.

Garvin, in 1817, prays a grant, in absolute property, of 3,000 acres of land—2,000 on the Indian river, at a place called Flounder creek, and 1,000 on Youngblood's hammock.

The original memorial and decree is presented to the board, and proved to be genuine by two repectable witnesses. The land is granted for losses and services. One thousand acres of that on Indian river is claimed before the board by Thomas Napier, who is a purchaser of Garvin. The title of the United States is relinquished.

No. 14.—George J. F. Clarke, 350 acres.

No. 15.—McDowell & Clarke, 450 acres.

No. 16.—Charles and George Clarke, 1,000 acres.

No. 17.—James Clarke, 300 acres.

No. 19.—Charles and George Clarke, 1,000 acres.

These claims are subdivided parts of a claim of Honoria Clarke, the widow of Thomas Clarke. Thomas Clarke had obtained several grants of land from the British government here, and had purchased some of other grantees. In 1787, Florida having then become a Spanish province, and Thomas Clarke dead, the widow proceeded to consummate her titles by application to the Spanish governor, Zespodes, for their recognition. In her memorial to the governor she presented nine documents, which, together with the memorial accompanying them, were placed before the secretary of the government for his report. The three first were evidences of titles to the lots in this city, with which we have no concern. The other six are as follows, viz:

No. 4. 300 acres of land on the western bank of the Matanzas, 2½ miles northwest of the fort called Worcester, granted to Thomas Clarke in 1770.

No. 5. 500 acres of land 16 miles south of this city, granted in 1780, called Holmes, to the widow Honoria Clarke.

No. 6. 300 acres near Pablo creek, granted in 1775.

No. 7. 700 acres on the Middle creek of Nassau.

No. 8. 500 acres on the Twelve Mile swamp, now the property of Duncan L. Clinch, was granted in 1769 to William Penn, and by him sold to Thomas Clarke.

No. 9. 300 acres east of Pablo creek.

No. 9 was given to the widow Honoria by a direction of Governor Tonyn to the surveyor general to measure off to her that quantity of land at the place specified. The secretary, Howard, reported that this property, from Nos. 4 to 9 inclusive, belonged, from the documents presented, to the widow Honoria Clarke.

In 1792 Mrs. Clarke represented to Governor Quesada that the lands which she owned on Nassau, 700 acres, and on Pablo creek, 600 acres, "were so encroached on by neighbors, and it was so difficult, from the removal of the British settlers, to ascertain the lines, that she was willing to relinquish them to the government if the government would grant to her the same quantity on Julington creek." The governor, on a favorable report of the comptroller of the royal domain, authorizes the transfer, and directs the survey to be made by Don Pedro Marrot on Julington creek. In 1815 Thomas Aguilar certified that on the memorial of Honoria Clarke, in 1792, praying a grant of 1,000 acres for head rights at the following places to wit: 300 acres on the south side of Emery creek, at Matanzas; 300 acres at a place called Johnson's Old Plantation, near to Francis Pellicer's; 400 acres in a hammock, between Derbin's swamp and the Twenty-Mile House, on the road to the Bluff—the governor made the grant, and decreed the survey "as soon as convenient."

The survey does not appear on the list of Marrot in 1801; but, in the titles and positions of Buyck and Dupont, in 1792 and 1801, (2 and 5,) the land of Mrs. Clarke on the Matanzas are referred to as boundary lines to the grant. So seem to stand these titles until 1801, when Honoria Clarke represented to Governor White that the land on Julington creek, 1,300 acres, were occupied previously to her exchange, authorized in 1792; and those on Emery's creek, 300 acres, were too much inundated for cultivation; wherefore she prays for 1,600 acres of land on Graham's swamp, at the head of Matanzas river. Governor White authorized the survey, and directed that she be furnished from the secretary's office with "a certified copy of the memorial and decree, which will serve her as a copy in form." This last is a genuine document. Some time after the death of Mrs. H. Clarke her property was divided amongst her heirs—a copy of which division is filed before us from the record.

The testimony before the board is solely in reference to the grant of 1,000 acres made, as certified by Aguilar, by Quesada in 1792, "for head rights." It is this Francis Pellicer swears: "That C. W. Clarke, the son of Honoria, has been for many years, and is now, in the cultivation of a tract of land on Emery's creek, Matanzas river, which he understands to be a part of this grant." Joseph S. Sanches swears "that the land at Emery's creek has been cultivated and possessed by claimants for more than fifteen years." So stand the document and testimony in these cases—cases which have given us more trouble to understand and elucidate than any other in the office.

To the lands granted by the British government to Thomas Clarke and Honoria, his widow, and to those under whom they claim as purchasers, the Clarkes have an undoubted title. The British grantees were required in 1787 to submit their claims to the government, and obtain a confirmation. Mrs. Clarke has done so; and on her title to Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, the decision of the secretary, sanctioned as it was by the Spanish government, is conclusive. Nos. 6 and 9, 300 acres each, on Pablo creek, and No. 7, 700 acres on the river Nassau, she exchanged in 1792 with government for the same quantity on the Julington creek; and subsequently, in 1801, adding to the 1,300 acres on Julington 300 of a grant on Emery's creek, (part of 1,000 for head rights,) she petitioned and obtained leave to locate the whole 1,600, to wit: 1,300 on Julington, and 300 on Emery's creek, on Graham's swamp.

No. 4 of the document presented to Secretary Howard, to wit: 300 acres, called Worcester, on Matanzas; No. 5 of the same document, to wit: 500 acres at a place called Holmes; and No. 8, 500 acres on the Twelve Mile swamp, now claimed by Colonel Duncan L. Clinch, already alluded to in this report, are based upon valid British grants, recognized by the Spanish government, and are valid.

Mrs. Clarke, though a British subject, took the necessary oaths of allegiance to Spain, and remained in the country; and the many acts of the Spanish government, already alluded to, show that her claims were recognized as good; and we so consider them.

Nos. 6, 7, 8, and 9 of lands on Nassau river and Pablo creek, and were exchanged and abandoned for 1,300 acres on Graham's swamp. This exchange was made by Governor Quesada first, and Governor White afterwards.

The title to the 1,300 acres of land on Graham's swamp is valid; but the parties claim 300 acres more, under the same title, by exchange, for the 300 relinquished on Emery's creek.

It should be remembered that this on Emery's creek is a part of 1,000 acres claimed as a donation to Mrs. Clarke in 1792, of which there is no direct evidence but the certificate of Aguilar. Such a certificate, if unaided by collateral proof, we can never recognize. The best evidence that the grant was made is to be found in the memorial of Mrs. Clarke in 1801, to permit her to exchange lands, a part of which are these very 300 acres on Emery's creek, proved nowhere to be granted, but by the certificate aforesaid, and the authority given by Governor White to do so. Take away this grant by exchange in 1801, to lands in Derbins' swamp, and we should have no hesitation in rejecting this claim of 1,000 acres; as it stands, with the evidence before the board, that these lands were divided among the heirs of Honoria Clarke in 1806, and that division recognized as valid, and admitted to record; taken too in connexion with the testimony of Sanchez and Pellicer, we have no doubt that the grant was made in 1792, and conceded by Governor White in 1801, as the property of Mrs. Clarke. It at the same time appears to us that Mrs. Clarke did not abandon Emery's creek as she had proposed; and that she is not entitled to the 300 acres in Derbin's swamp, which her representatives claim, as obtained in its place. In 1806 Emery's tract was divided amongst the heirs of Mrs. Clarke. In 1828 the evidence is that the place had been cultivated fifteen years back.

They cannot, therefore, claim the 300 acres in Derbin's swamp, and still hold possession of Emery's tract, which was tendered by Mrs. Clarke in exchange for it. For these reasons we confirm to Mrs. Honoria Clarke's representatives the 1,000 acres granted in 1792 for head rights, and divided into three tracts, as above described, and 1,300 acres only in Derbin's swamp.

In our decision on these cases it will be seen that the numbers which we have used refer to the document presented by Honoria Clarke, and not to the number on this report.

No. 20.—Geo. J. F. Clarke, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

Thomas Aguilar's certificate is dated the 13th January, 1812 There is no original in the office of public archives. It is to this effect, that in the memorial of George J. F. Clarke, of the same month and year, stating that Governor White had granted him 2,000 acres of land in Derbin's swamp for his services during the years 1797 and 1799, he had found those lands not suitable to his purpose, and prays that he may locate the grant at a place called Yellowsasse, which is an orange grove, situated west of the river St. John's, and south of the road to Panton Leslie's store. Estrada decreed the exchange. It is strange, if this grant was ever made, that the original by White cannot be found. It should be remembered that the royal order authorizing grants of lands for services is dated in 1815, and this certificate in 1812, one year after Governor White's death. The claim is rejected. See No. 1 of this report, where the claimant declares, in 1814, that he had received "no pay, stipend, or reward, for four years."

No. 21.—C. W. Clarke, claimant for 375 acres.

This is a petition in 1815 for 500 acres of land as head rights. Estraldo, the acting governor, decides that he is entitled to only 375. Aguilar's certificate of these facts is dated in the same year. There is no evidence of occupancy. It is rejected.

No. 22.—C. W. Clarke, claimant for 300 acres of land.

Aguilar certified that Coppinger granted claimant 300 acres of land on the east side of Lake George, for agriculture and raising of stock, in 1817. There is an affidavit taken in this case, of too general a nature to benefit the claimant; it is, "that the country, from the revolutions and invasions of the province, was in that state of troubles and fears which went to deter settlement in the unprotected part thereof." A man has no right to ask for land incumbered with condition of settlement, when he knows he cannot settle it. It is at his price. If he chooses to settle it, and run the hazard, he may; but he cannot give as a reason for not performing a condition implied a fact which he knew at the same time would prevent the performance. In any event it does not cure the defect of Aguilar's certificate. It is rejected.

No. 23.—C. W. Clarke, claimant for 1,576 acres.

No. 24.—Richard Weightman, claimant for 200 acres.

No. 25.—Andrew Stores, claimant for 500 acres.

No. 26.—C. W. Clarke, claimant for 2,300 acres.

No. 27.—Daniel Clarke, claimant for 500 acres.

No. 28.—James Clarke, claimant for 500 acres.

No. 29.—Thomas Clarke, claimant for 500 acres.

No. 26 is another of Aguilar's eternal certificates, of which Nos. 23, 24, and 25 are portions.

In the memorial to this board Clarke says the land was divided as follows, to wit:

800 acres on the east side of Lake George.

404 acres at the same place.

202 acres at the same place.

200 acres sold to Richard Weightman, situated at the same place.

500 acres sold to Andrew Stores.

All these tracts, except the two last, are said to have been surveyed, and we are favored with the metes and bounds.

By the certificate of Aguilar, already mentioned, it appears that this land was granted by concession for services in 1817.

Nos. 27, 28, and 29 are all grants for services, dated on the 18th December, 1817, and located in Twelve Mile swamp, evidenced by Aguilar's certificate, the original of which is not to be found.

The evidence in claim No. 26, of which Nos. 23, 24, and 25 are component parts, is this: George J. F. Clarke, the brother of the claimant, deposes that, at the suggestion of the governor, made to the deponent, the said Charles W. Clarke would get more land; deponent wrote a petition for claimant, presented it, and understood from the governor that it would be granted. The evidence in claims Nos. 27, 28, and 29 is the oath of the same party, G. Clarke, the father of the three claimants, "that Governor Coppinger having spontaneously expressed to me his sense of the services of these men, and his desire to give each of them a tract of land, witness wrote claimants' memorials, and handed them to the governor, who passed them over to his secretary, Aguilar, for their decrees; and that he, witness, afterwards received from Aguilar the certified copies now before the board." As these claims of his brother and sons depend solely upon the evidence of Mr. Clarke, we take pleasure in saying, from our knowledge of his character, that notwithstanding his relationship to the parties, we place implicit reliance on his statement, and confirm the four claims above.

No. 30.—George J. F. Clarke, claimant for 1,000 acres in the Big Savannah, at Matanzas.

A grant, as Aguilar certifies, made in 1801, for cattle grazing. There is no proof, and the claim is rejected.

REPORT No. 14.—A REPORT ON CONFLICTING BRITISH AND SPANISH GRANTS.

No. 1.—William Thomas Jones, claimant for 2,000 acres of land.

This is a British grant made by Governor James Grant, on the 12th January, 1770, to Abraham Jones, the ancestor of the present claimant. There is a survey properly certified, and an indorsement on the back of the grant that it was registered in January, 1770.

The land lies in the fork of Maxton's, now McGirt's, creek and the river St. John's. Much testimony has been filed in the case, all of which amounts to this: That when this province was transferred by the British to the Spanish government in 1763, Abraham Jones, the grantee, being then dead, all his family, with the exception of his son William, removed to the State of Georgia. William, then a minor by the laws of Spain, remained in the city of St. Augustine, an apprentice to a trade. The treaty between Spain and Great Britain was signed in January, 1783, and ratified by the King of Spain in September following. In May, 1783, William Jones's brothers signed a deed to him for the land in question, conveying to him all the right and title which they might possess thereto. The deed further specifies that William intends to remain in Florida; and by the direction of their father's will his lands should belong to either of his sons who should continue to reside in the province. It is uncertain at what time William abandoned his residence in this place. It appears from the testimony before us that in 1794 or 1795 he removed to the State of Georgia, and continued there until his death in 1814. Whether he remained in the province until his settlement in Georgia we have no means of deciding.

The above is a succinct abstract, embracing, as we believe, all the important points contained in the voluminous testimony before us from William Jones; the title to the present claimant is regularly deduced.

No. 2.—John H. McIntosh, claimant for 3,274 acres of land.

This is as good a Spanish title as can be made; and if there was no conflicting British claim, we should have no hesitation in confirming it. As it is, it becomes our duty to report the evidence of title to Congress.

It covers the land claimed by Jones in the preceding number of this report. It lies between the river St. John and McGirt's, once Maxton's, creek. The title is as follows: In 1792 a survey, under the direction of Pedro Marrot, of ninty-eight cavallerias and eight acres (3,274 acres;) and on the 27th of February, 1804, a royal title, made by Governor White to John McQueen, to whom it had been first surveyed and conceded; and in March, same year, a sale by McQueen to the present claimant, duly authorized and recorded.

No. 15.—A report of 16 claims omitted on the abstracts of the land commissioners and transmitted to us by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

No. 1—W. J. Fatio, and others, claimants for 720 acres of land.

This claim was confirmed by the commissioners on the 12th of October, 1824. It was a mistake in the department to transmit it to us with those which follow. It is the third claim on report No. 6, of December 29, 1824, and has been confirmed by Congress.

No. 2.—Francis P. Sanchez, claimant for 800 acres of land.

Sanchez purchased this land of Joseph Maria Agarte, to whom it was conceded by Coppinger, for services, in December, 1817. It was surveyed by Burgevin, at a place called Alligator Creek, and at another place called Funk's Savannah, in February, 1821. 350 acres were laid off at the first place, and 450 acres at the second. The decree of confirmation is dated June 10, 1824.

No. 3.—Bernardo Segui, claimant for 7,000 acres of land.

This grant was made by Estrada to the claimant on the 20th December, 1815, surveyed by Burgevin on the 10th of September, 1818, and recommended for confirmation on the 20th of January, 1824. It lies on the east side of the St. John's river, at a place known as Buffalo Bluffs.

No. 4.—Wm. Williams' heirs, claimants for 2,020 acres of land.

No. 5.—180 acres of land.

In 1803 Williams having proved to the satisfaction of Governor White, by the report of the engineer, that under the royal order of 1790 he was entitled as a new settler to 2,200 acres of land, they were granted to him at Smyrna.

In 1804, having discovered that the lands at the place were sterile, and the location sickly, he applied for and obtained leave to locate 2,020 acres, a part of the grant on the St. John's river, on a creek called Spring Garden, "the mouth of the aforementioned creek forming the survey," reserving at the same time 180 acres of the first location to cover the buildings which he had already erected. The evidence in this case, to wit, the testimony of Summerrall and Dexter, is already before the department at Washington. It was confirmed on the 1st of October, 1824.

No. 6.—Nicholas Rodriguez, claimant for 300 acres of land.

Quesada conceded this land to Lorenzo Rodriguez in February, 1793. On the death of Lorenzo, Nicholas, the son, became the purchaser; and the petition and sale of Lorenzo was confirmed by an official act of the Spanish government on the 18th of September, 1816. The land was confirmed to the present claimant by the board of land commissioners on the 11th of September, 1824. It is situated on Anastatia island, at a place called Buena Vista, and on a creek called Cano de la Escelta, near the light-house.

No. 7.—George Atkinson, claimant for 550 acres of land.

All the papers in this claim were copied at large by the former board of commissioners and sent on to Washington. They are shortly these: in 1816, George Clarke having surveyed the land in the preceding year, Governor Coppinger granted to Atkinson 550 acres of land, on the north side of the river St. John's, by royal title. Atkinson was a new settler, and obtained the land under the order of 1790. This claim, as was suggested by a note indorsed at the department, is on the abstract of 1824, No. 26 of report No. 1. It is there registered in the name of Francis P. Sanchez, which is a mistake; Sanchez has no such claim, and the date of the survey and of the grant, as well as the location and boundaries of the land, prove the identity of the claim and the misnomer of the claimant on the abstract. It was confirmed on the 11th of June, 1824.

No. 8.—Antonio Alverez, claimant for 1,500 acres of land.

This land, on the first memorial of the claimant to the board, was claimed to be situated on the west side of the Octawaha creek, and to have been surveyed there by Andrew Burgevin, "by the authority of the government," granted to Burgevin for that purpose. By the permission of the board he subsequently changed the location of the grant, having perhaps discovered better land upon which to place it. The title to this property has been transmitted to the department. It was recommended for confirmation on the 8th September, 1824.

No. 9.—Samuel Clarke and George S. Brown, claimants for 3,000 acres of land.

In April, 1798, Thomas Travers, on behalf of the children, then in the United States, of his brother, Patrick Travers, deceased, "a subject of his Catholic Majesty," petitioned for 3,000 acres of pine land, at a place called Pigeon creek, on the river St. Mary's, "for the purpose of building a water saw-mill," and 300 acres of planting land, on Amelia island, at a place called the Horse-Pen. On a favorable report of the engineer, Governor White conceded the land to the claimant in 1799, Geo. Clarke surveyed it in 1819, and Governor Coppinger, in the same year, issued a royal title. The lands seem to have been regularly conveyed from the grantee to the present claimants. Three witnesses have been sworn in this case, whose testimony is on file in the department at Washington. They all prove the same fact, that Travers built the mill in compliance with the terms of the grant, and that Clarke and Brown have greatly improved the property. This claim was confirmed by the board of commissioners on the 28th of December, 1824. We do not know what has been done with the claim to the 300 acres at the Horse-Pen, on Amelia island.

No. 10.—William Travers, claimant for 450 acres of land.

In pursuance of the royal order of 1790, Governor White granted to L. Ortega, June, 1798, 450 acres of land, at a place called Santa Lucia, on the North river. It was surveyed by Andrew Burgevin, and sold by Ortega to the present claimant. On the testimony of one witness, that it had been cultivated by Ortega up to May, 1821, it was confirmed by the board of land commissioners on the 30th of September, 1824.

No. 11.—W. P. Sanchez, claimant for 100 acres of land.

In 1797 Governor White conceded to John Bousquet 200 acres of land, situated on Guano creek, on the North river. In the subsequent year the governor permitted the grantee to transfer his claim to John Cavedo and A. Acosta, one-half to each. In 1804 it (Acosta's portion) was surveyed, and came by regular conveyances to the possession of the present claimant, to whom it was confirmed on the 11th of October, 1824.

No. 12.—John B. Gaudry, claimant for 1,500 acres of land.

Gaudry claims this land under a grant made to Don Bartolo de Castro y Ferrer, by Governor Coppinger, on the 9th of October, 1817, under the royal order of 1790. The land is situated at a place called Spring Garden, on the river St. John's, and was recommended for confirmation on the 21st of September, 1824.

No. 13.—Frances Ferreira, claimant for Key Bacas.

The grant to this land was made by Governor Kindelan, in January, 1814, for services. The testimony is filed in the land office at Washington. It was recommended for confirmation on the 19th June, 1824.

No. 14.—Joseph M. Hernandez, claimant for 3,200 acres of land.

Hernandez claims this land as attorney for his wife, Dona Anne Maria Hill, widow of Samuel Williams, to whom it was granted by royal title dated April 18, 1817, "by virtue of the royal order of 1790." It is situated in the territory of Halifax, and was surveyed by John Purcell in 1804.

No. 15.—Michael Crosby's heirs, claimants for 2,000 acres of land.

It appears by the decree of the boards in this case of December, 1824, that Coppinger conceded this land to Michael Crosby on the 24th January, 1818, and issued a royal title for the same on the 2d day of March succeeding. It was surveyed by George Clarke on the 12th day of April, 1818. It lies on the west side of the river St. John's, opposite to a place called Mount Tucker. All the papers in this case are on file in the land office at Washington.

No. 16.—Margaret Acosta, claimant for 34½ yards front of land.

Acosta laid her claim before the board of commissioners for six hundred and forty acres of land under the donation act. That claim was rejected, and thirty-four and a half yards front upon the road leading from the gate of the city, and within five hundred yards of its fortifications, were confirmed to her. It is a claim similar to those on report No. 11 of this session. The decree of confirmation bears date the 28th December, 1824.

"Whereupon it is ordered that these claims be rejected, the applicants having failed to show that they are bona fide citizens of the United States, and that they have never been compensated for these claims by the British government, from whom they derive title."

And from the minutes of April 1, 1824, we extract the following:

49 "J. Freeman Rattenbury presented his memorial to this board for two thousand six hundred acres of land, situated in the following manner, viz: one-sixth part thereof, situated on the southern extremity of Jupiter island; one-sixth part on the point, situated to the north thereof, on Indian river; and the four remaining parts in the wood or swamp in the southeast part of Lake George, without exhibits; which was, after due consideration, rejected by the board.

50 "J. Freeman Rattenbury et al. presented their memorial to this board for fifty thousand acres of land in East Florida, without exhibits, which was rejected by the board."

21st Congress.] No. 785. [1st Session.

DEFICIENCY IN QUANTITY OF LAND SOLD.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 19, 1830.

Mr. Hunt, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John Salady and George Salady, reported:

That the petitioners show, by a certificate of the register of the land office at Chilicothe, that on the 6th day of August, 1814, they purchased the fractional section twenty-six, in township two, of range twenty, containing 434.10 acres, for which they have paid $1,000 70, including $132 50 as interest. On the 30th day of May, 1820, the petitioners state that they received a patent of the same.

The petitioners produce the affidavit of William Kendall, a county surveyor, that he surveyed the same fractional section on the 31st of September, 1819, and that it contains only 370.96 acres. For this deficiciency in the quantity of land purchased and paid for, the petitioners pray Congress to afford them some relief.

Two questions are presented in this case: one is, whether there is an error in fact, as represented by the petition; and the other is, whether Congress should now correct the error, if it is satisfactorily established? The township stated in the petition was subdivided under the provisions of the act of Congress approved the 11th of February, 1805, concerning the mode of surveying the public lands. It appears by the official plat of survey in the General Land Office, and by a calculation now made agreeably to that survey, that the fractional section contains the full quantity as purchased and paid for by the petitioners. The committee are of opinion that it would be impolitic and hazardous to consider the survey of William Kendall, or any other person not employed by the government, of superior authenticity to the survey made by the United States surveyor, and are, therefore, not satisfied that any deficiency in quantity does exist.

If the deficiency could be satisfactorily shown by a certificate of the United States surveyor, still the policy of the government would not, in the opinion of your committee, warrant the correction of errors, except, perhaps, in extreme cases, after a patent has been issued. The townships and subdivisions surveyed under the authority of the United States generally contain, and even exceed, the quantity represented; and if in any instance there may be a deficiency, the government is under no covenant or obligation to make good or supply the defect. In the survey of the public lands it must be equally known to all that mistakes may occur; but a defective measurement may always be ascertained and avoided by a careful examination or resurvey before purchase. If, however, purchasers trust in the correctness of the public surveys, and there is a deficiency in the tract patented, it is their loss; and if there is an overplus, it is their gain. After land has been selected, the money paid for it, and the patent has issued, the contract should be regarded as final and complete.

The committee recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

21st Congress.] No. 786. [1st Session.

CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 20, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ann Brashears, reported:

The petitioner claims four hundred and eighty acres, being a residue of eight hundred arpents surveyed to and occupied and cultivated by her as long ago as the year 1788 or 1789. She states in her petition that in the year 1788 a patent and grant for eight hundred arpents of land, lying in the now county of Claiborne and State of Mississippi, situate on the waters of Bayou Pierre, was made to her by the Spanish government. That an order of survey issued, and that one William Thomas, then acting as deputy for William Vausdan, the surveyor for the Natchez district, surveyed the tract on the north side of the said Bayou Pierre, including a place called the White Ground Lick. That she entered upon and occupied the land, resided upon it, and raised several crops of corn, &c. That she intrusted her papers to the care of the deputy surveyor, who lost them, or at least never returned them to her, whereby she lost the evidence of her claim. That evidence of her claim was afterwards collected and handed to George Poindexter, a representative from that State, to lay before Congress, which she believes never was done; but the papers were lost, or not returned to her, nor does she know what became of them. She further states that the said Vausdan, instead of laying off for the quantity of eight hundred arpents, he only laid off and made return of three hundred acres, without giving any reason to the petitioner for so doing. That subsequently to the grant made to her, a grant issued to one Benjamin Foy, an interpreter to the Spanish government, and a favorite of the officers of the government, for five hundred arpents, who intended to locate his warrant on the same lands which she occupied and cultivated; but that, by and with the advice and consent of the then governor, a compromise was made between them, and Foy agreed to accept of three hundred and twenty arpents; and it was agreed between them, the governor consenting thereto, that she should have the three hundred and twenty arpents taken by Foy in some other place. She further states that she requested and authorized a certain Major Stephen Minor, lately a governor in that part of the country, in the fall of the year 1804, to procure, of the commissioners appointed by the government of the United States to adjust land claims east of Pearl river, for her a confirmation to the said land. That the said Minor, understanding that the location of Foy covered five hundred arpents, claimed of the commissioners only three hundred arpents. That she being a widow, and unable to attend to her own affairs, her papers, many of them, being lost, and the said Minor failing to inform her what other evidence was necessary, and the commissioners not being satisfied of the validity of her claim, were constrained to reject it.

That she has always been considered the owner of the said four hundred and eighty arpents, the residue of the said tract after deducting the said Foy's three hundred and twenty arpents, and has paid the taxes for the same. That Foy transferred his claim to one Richard Sparks, who was confirmed in the same by the said commissioners. That she has as yet no legal title to her land, and asks Congress for relief. The justice and equity of her case appears clearly established by the records of the commissioners allowing the claim of Sparks and rejecting hers, the letter of Governor Minor, the affidavit of Gipson Clark, together with various other papers exhibited in the case. The committee therefore report a bill.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 787. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI AND ARKANSAS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 20, 1830.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the 22d December, 1826, reported that they find that the greater part of the claims mentioned therein have been heretofore sufficiently provided for by law. They have taken into consideration the particular claim of Wilson P. Hunt, esq., as assignee of Gregoire Sarpy, for a patent to the quantity of a league square of land, French measure, containing seven thousand and fifty-six French arpents, equal to six thousand and two acres and a half of English measure, lying on the Rivierre des Peres, near St. Louis, in Missouri, and report:

That, on the 28th day of October, 1802, Don Carlos Dehault Delassus, then lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, granted to Gregoire Sarpy six thousand arpents of land, on the said river, which was surveyed by the Spanish authority before the 10th day of March, 1804, part on the Rivierre des Peres, and part on the river Merrimack, about twenty miles from St. Louis.

Under the act of Congress passed April 12, 1814, the recorder of land titles at St. Louis, acting as a commissioner of the United States, confirmed the claim of Mr. Sarpy for a quantity "not exceeding a league square," to lie on the Rivierre des Peres, in the county of St. Louis, and transmitted his report of confirmations to the General Land Office, which was laid before Congress.

By the act of April 29, 1816, Congress confirmed this report of the recorder and ordered the survey to be made accordingly by the surveyor of the United States. This was afterwards done for the whole quantity of a league square, as represented in the accompanying plat and certificate of survey.

After the confirmation of 1816 Wilson P. Hunt, being disposed to settle at St. Louis, purchased this tract, for the whole quantity of a league square, upon the faith of the several confirmations under the acts of 1814 and 1816, and of the assurances of the proper officer of the United States that the claim was valid to that extent by virtue of those confirmations; and, accordingly, on the 13th September, 1825, the recorder of land titles at St. Louis issued and delivered to the claimant the final patent certificate for the league square, of 7,056 arpents or 6,002.50 acres, which is herewith shown to the Senate.

By the letter of the existing laws the confirmee is entitled to his patent, unless it shall appear that the patent certificate was not fairly obtained. There is no unfairness pretended in the case on the part of the grantee or his assignee. The mistake in confirming six thousand acres instead of six thousand arpents was the sole act of the officer of the United States, the recorder. That act was afterwards confirmed by the act of Congress of 1816; and the present claimant seems to have purchased in good faith, confiding that this confirmation of Congress, upon a review of the proceedings of the recorder, was irrevocable.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office deems it his duty to withhold the patent for the present on account of the mistake in the first confirmation, and has presented the case to Congress for their consideration and decision.

The committee are disposed to consider the present claimant as an innocent purchaser, confiding in the acts of the government itself, and that it is of more importance that such confidence should be realized, and such titles settled and quieted, than that the United States should gain a few acres of land.

The committee, therefore, report a bill directing a patent to be issued in this case.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 788. [1ST SESSION.

CLAIM TO LAND IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 20, 1830.

Mr. BURNET, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs and devisees of Andrew Turnbull, deceased, reported:

The petitioners, who claim to be heirs and devisees of Andrew Turnbull, deceased, represent that the said Andrew and some of his younger children were seized of several tracts of land in the province of East Florida, amounting to upwards of seventy thousand acres, granted to them by the British government, while that province was subject to Great Britain; that during the revolutionary war the said Andrew joined the Americans, and became an American citizen, in consequence of which neither him nor his children received any compensation from the British government for the said lands. They further state that when the commissioners appointed under the act of 1822 met at St. Augustine, the petitioners sent an agent to that place, by whom their claim to the said lands was presented to the commissioners. That the commissioners were satisfied, and so reported, that the said lands had been regularly granted, and that no compensation had been received therefor from the British government. The prayer of the petitioners is, that whatever claim the United States have, or appear to have in the premises, may be remitted and released to them according to their respective rights.

With a view of ascertaining the grounds on which the claim of the petitioners rests, the committee have examined the treaty of 1783, by which Great Britain ceded the provinces of East and West Florida to Spain, and the proceedings of the Spanish government subsequent thereto. The fifth article of that treaty is in these words: "His Catholic Majesty agrees that the British inhabitants, or others, who may have been subjects of the King of Great Britain in the said countries, may retire in full security and liberty where they shall think proper, and may sell their estates and remove their effects, as well as their persons, without being restrained in their emigration under any pretence whatever, except on account of debts or criminal prosecutions. The term limited for this emigration being fixed to the space of eighteen months, to be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty; but if from the value of the possessions of the English proprietors they should not be able to dispose of them within the said term, then his Catholic Majesty shall grant them a prolongation proportioned to that end."

On the 7th of February, 1785, the following royal order was published by the Spanish government: "In consequence of what I have intimated to your excellency in the letter of the 24th of January last, the King has been pleased to prolong, by four months, the eighteen months stipulated in the definitive article of peace for the emigration of the English subjects who may be in West Florida."

In the attestation of Juan de Entralgo, notary of government, attached to the certificate of the foregoing order, it is recited that process had been instituted in the year 1790, upon the sale of houses and lands which were abandoned and returned into the royal patrimony in consequence of their English owners having emigrated.

The fourth article of the "Edict of Good Government" is in the following words: "The King our lord, by royal order of the 5th of April, 1786, grants to all the foreigners who may have been inhabitants of this province at the time of the English authority, that they remain in it, protected in the possession of their lands and effects, under the indispensable conditions of taking the oaths of fidelity, of not augmenting the said lands, not transferring them themselves to any others; consequently, all those who have not conformed and do not conform to the said conditions in thirty days, positively, by proceeding to show me their dispositions in person, or if absent by letters, to do what is proper, shall depart from this province aforesaid."

The treaty of 1819, by which the Floridas were ceded by Spain to the United States, provides, in the eighth article, "that all the grants of land made before the 24th of January, 1818, by his Catholic Majesty, or by his lawful authorities in the said territories ceded by his Majesty to the United States, shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of the lands, to the same extent that the said grants would be valid if the territories had remained under the dominion of his Catholic Majesty."

After the United States had received possession of the ceded territory, Congress passed an act on the 8th of May, 1822, for ascertaining claims and titles to land within the Territory of Florida. The fourth section of that act provides "that every person, or the heirs or representatives of such person, claiming title to lands under any patent, grant, concession, or order of survey, dated previous to the 24th of January, 1818, which were valid under the Spanish government or by the law of nations, and which are now rejected by the treaty ceding the territory of East and West Florida to the United States, shall file before the commissioners his, her, or their claim, setting forth," &c. The fifth section authorizes the commissioners to inquire into the justice and validity of the claims filed with them, and prohibits them from confirming any claim, or part thereof, where the amount claimed is undefined in quantity, or shall exceed one thousand acres. The last proviso in the same section directs "that the commissioners shall not act on or take into consideration any British grant, patent, warrant, or order of survey, but those which are bona fide claimed and owned by citizens of the United States, and which have never been compensated for by the British government."

On the 3d March, 1823, an amendatory act was passed creating separate boards for the two Floridas, and granting some additional facilities to actual settlers at the time of the cession.

On the 24th of February, 1824, an act was passed extending the time limited for the settlement of private land claims in the Territory of Florida.

On the 8th of February, 1827, an act passed to provide for the confirmation and settlement of private land claims in East Florida, and for other purposes, but which does not appear to have any bearing on the claims in question.

On the 23d of May, 1828, another act was passed, supplementary to the acts before mentioned, but equally inapplicable to the case under consideration.

The facts relating to the claim, as far as they are known to the committee, appear to be these: Andrew Turnbull, under whom the petitioners claim, and also his children, to some of whom separate grants had been made, left the province of East Florida about the commencement of the revolutionary war, and it does not appear that the said Andrew returned to the province, for the purpose of claiming these lands, during the time the country continued under the dominion of Great Britain or of Spain; nor was the said Andrew, or the petitioners, or any other person for them, in the occupancy of any of the said lands at the time Florida was ceded to Spain, or at any time thereafter prior to the transfer by Spain to the United States; nor is there any evidence to show that the petitioners or their ancestors have been in possession of any part of the property now claimed at any time within the last fifty years; nor does it appear that any attempt was made to reclaim or dispose of the said property within the period allowed by the treaty of 1783. But notwithstanding the staleness of the claim, the committee have deliberately examined it with a disposition to relieve the petitioners.

The attention of the committee has been directed by the claimants to the law of 1812. That law, however, does not appear to have any reference to the subject. It relates altogether to the territory claimed by the United States as a part of Louisiana, and cannot affect or apply to grants in East Florida, which was not ceded to the United States until about seven years after the law of 1812 had been passed.

The petitioners seem to rely, also, on the last proviso in the fifth section of the act of 1822, which prohibits the commissioners from taking into consideration any British grants but such as belong to American citizens, and which have not been compensated for by the British government. It is understood that the petitioners are American citizens, and that they have not been compensated by the British government, and that therefore the commissioners were not prohibited from examining their claims; but most surely it does not follow because the board had power to examine any description of claims, that therefore those claims were to be confirmed, as a matter of course. Had such been the intention of Congress, instead of authorizing an examination after proof of citizenship, and that no compensation had been received, they would have directed a confirmation at once. The true construction of that proviso seems to be, that British grants, although they may be in all other respects such as the law recognizes to be valid, shall, notwithstanding, be rejected, unless they come, also, within the description contained in the proviso. The fact, therefore, of citizenship and want of compensation decides nothing. The question is still open, whether the grants be of such a character in other respects as entitles them to confirmation? This inquiry must be solved by a reference to the fourth section of the same act, which enumerates and describes the claims that may be filed before the commissioners. By that section the commissioners were authorized to receive only such claims as were valid under the Spanish government or by the law of nations. They were not permitted to receive or to place on their files claims of any other description, and consequently could neither examine nor allow any others. The true construction of the statute, therefore, must be that such British grants, and such only, as were valid under the Spanish government or by the law of nations, and belonged to American citizens, who had not received remuneration for them, might be received and decided by the commissioners. To bring the case within the law, therefore, the petitioners must do more than show that they are American citizens and have not received compensation for their lands from the British government. They must establish the previous proposition, that their grants were valid under the Spanish government or by the law of nations.

Some weight seems to be attached by the petitioners to the circumstance that Mr. Turnbull joined the Americans at the commencement of the revolution. It is not perceived how this fact can change the merits of the claim, because it did not in any degree affect his privilege under the treaty of 1783 of selling his lands, which is expressly secured, not only to British subjects, but to others who may have been subjects of the King of Great Britain in the said countries. Mr. Turnbull had been a subject of Great Britain in East Florida, and was therefore within the provision. Nor is it perceived how the claim, in a legal point of view, is strengthened by the fact that he has not been remunerated by the British government, inasmuch as the remuneration made by that government was purely gratuitous, and not in consequence of any existing right. They were therefore at liberty to withhold it altogether, or to grant it to whom they pleased. It can be viewed in no other light than that of a bounty, voluntarily given, which the donor had a perfect right to distribute to whom he pleased and as he pleased. The petitioners, therefore, were not wronged by its being withheld from them, for the obvious reason that they had no right to demand it. The liberality of the British government might, perhaps, be cited as an example worthy of imitation; but it cannot be referred to as evidence of injustice to the petitioners, much less does it authorize them to demand remuneration, as a matter of right, from the American government.

The claims now under consideration were presented to the commissioners in East Florida, and not confirmed, on the ground that they were not valid under the Spanish government or by the law of nations, and consequently not embraced in the statute of 1822. It is very evident that Spain never did admit these claims, and it is equally evident that she was not bound to do so. The only provision in favor of proprietors holding under British grants is contained in the fifth article of the treaty of 1783 and in the royal order of February 7, 1785, prolonging the time named in the treaty by an addition of four months; at the expiration of that time all British grants not disposed of were forfeited to the crown. An omission to sell was a voluntary abandonment of title, by the operation of the fifth article, which evidently implies that Spain, after the expiration of the stipulated period, should be vested with all the rights acquired over a conquered country ceded to the conqueror by a subsequent treaty; and it is very evident, from the course pursued by Spain, that she claimed those rights. On the 30th of August, 1785, less than two months after the expiration of the additional term of four months allowed by the King to British claimants to dispose of their possessions, a decree was published at St. Augustine virtually forfeiting all British grants to persons who had left the province without disposing of them, or who had remained in the province and had not taken the oath of fidelity to the King of Spain; and in justification of that measure, the decree refers to an article in the treaty of cession from Spain to England in 1763 of the same character, under which Great Britain claimed, as absolutely forfeited to her, all Spanish grants that had not been disposed of at the expiration of the term allowed for that purpose. The rule adopted by Great Britain, and applied to Spanish subjects, is cited as a precedent justifying the adoption and application of the same rule to British subjects. That Spain determined to assert her treaty rights against British proprietors who had left the province may be inferred from the edict of April 5, 1786, before quoted, which permitted foreigners who inhabited the province at the time of English authority to remain, and by which they were protected in the possession of their lands and effects, on the indispensable condition of taking the oath of fidelity and obedience, and by which all those who had not, and who should not in thirty days, take that oath, were ordered to depart the province.

But the determination of the Spanish government to avail itself of the rights acquired by conquest, and by the treaty of 1783, is still more clearly expressed in the decree published at St. Augustine on the 30th of August, 1785, which contains this explicit declaration: "The property of Don Thomas Nixon cannot be exempted from sharing the same fate as that of several other British subjects who have abandoned their immovable property without taking measures to sell it; and the same happened to several Spaniards when, in the year 1763, this province was ceded to Great Britain, the abandoned possessions falling then to the King of England in the same manner as they now devolve to the King, my master; the primitive term of eighteen months, and the succeeding prolongation of four months, stipulated for in the last definitive treaty of peace, having ended on the 19th of June last."

It also appears, from a recital in the protest of F. M. Arredondo, that the houses and grounds which reverted to the royal patrimony at the time the English evacuated the province, by their owners having left them, pro derelicto, had been sold under the authority of the crown.

These edicts and proceedings afford satisfactory evidence that Spain has not admitted, but on the contrary has disavowed the grants under which the petitioners claim, and they also show that the treaty authorizes her to do so. From this view of the subject the conclusion seems to follow that the grants to Mr. Turnbull were not valid under the Spanish government. It remains to inquire if they were supported by the law of nations. Vattel, b. 2, c. 14, sec. 207, states "that the governor of a place, and the general who lays siege to it, have the power of agreeing about the capitulation, and that everything they thus conclude within the terms of their commission is obligatory on the state or sovereign who has committed to them the power."

The same author, b. 3, c. 13, sec. 197, says "immovables, lands, towns, provinces, &c., pass under the power of the enemy who makes himself master of them; but it is only by the treaty of peace, or the entire submission or extinction of the state to whom these towns and provinces belonged, that the acquisition is completed, and the property becomes stable and perfect."

And again, in b. 2, c. 8, sec. 114, he says "every state has the liberty of granting or refusing foreigners the power of possessing lands or other immovable goods within its territory. If the sovereign does not permit aliens to possess immovables, nobody has a right to complain of it, for he may have very good reasons for acting in this manner; and strangers, not being able to claim any right in his territories, they ought not to take it ill that he makes use of his power and of his rights in the manner which he thinks most for the advantage of the state; and as the sovereign may refuse strangers the power of possessing immovables, he is doubtless at liberty to grant it only on certain conditions." In b. 3, c. 14, sec. 212, he maintains the doctrine "that when a surrendered town is retaken it becomes restored to its former rights, and receives its immovable possessions from the hands of those who were precipitate in purchasing them; but if this town has been ceded to the enemy by a treaty of peace, or was absolutely fallen into his power by the submission of the whole state, it has no claim to the right post liminium, and the alienation of any of its possessions by the conqueror is valid and irretrievable." It was no doubt in consequence of this principle of international law that the fifth article was inserted in the treaty of 1783, and that a similar one was introduced into the preceding treaty of 1763.

Spain, having conquered the province, and received a confirmation of her right by the treaty of peace, was at liberty to sell her acquisition, as she did do, to the United States, unencumbered by the right post liminium. All parties were bound by the proceeding, and Mr. Turnbull, in common with others, must submit. The only right he retained was the one secured by the treaty of 1783, of disposing of his possessions within a limited period. They were not disposed of, consequently they vested in the King of Spain, and have passed from him to the United States by the treaty of 1819.

If the proposition be established that the grants in question were not valid under the Spanish government or by the law of nations, it must follow that they were not embraced in the law of 1822, which is the only statute in the knowledge of the committee providing for the confirmation of British grants in the province of East Florida. If the claim be not sustained by that statute, the committee do not discover any ground on which it can be urged as a matter of right, nor do they perceive any obligation on the United States to indemnify the petitioners for a loss which has evidently resulted from the negligence of their ancestor. The lands in question became forfeited to the crown of Spain in the year 1785, thirty-four years before the province was transferred to the United States. Spain had acquired a perfect right to these lands by conquest, by treaty, and by a voluntary dereliction, long before she ceded them to the United States; and the United States, by that cession, succeeded to all the rights of Spain, subject only to the reservations and stipulations in her own treaty. Among those stipulations we do not discover any in favor of British grants, for this obvious reason, that by the treaty of 1783, no British proprietor was allowed to retain his real estate unless he remained in the province, continued to occupy it, and received a confirmation from Spain which would give to it the character of a Spanish grant, and thereby entitle it to protection. It is worthy of remark that, by the eighth article of our treaty with Spain, grants made by his Catholic Majesty are to be ratified and confirmed only to persons in actual possession, and to the same extent that they would have been if the country had remained under the dominion of Spain. It does not appear that the petitioners, or any other person for them, were in possession, or that their claims, or any part of them, would have been valid if Spain had retained the country. The reverse of the proposition seems to be true; for, by the construction of the treaty of 1783, acquiesced in by Great Britain, British claimants were not allowed to remain in the province except on the condition of becoming Spanish subjects; and all British grants held by emigrants, and not sold within the period allowed by the treaty, were considered as being relinquished to the crown, and were disposed of accordingly. The petitioners and their ancestors were emigrants, and continued to be so during the occupancy of Spain. They did not sell their lands, they were not in possession, and, as a matter of course, their grants would not have been valid had Spain continued to occupy the province.

The petitioners place some reliance on the fact that their ancestor joined the Americans at the beginning of the revolutionary war. Although that course entitles him to the most favorable consideration, it does not affect the merits of the present claim, inasmuch as the loss of his lands was not in the smallest degree occasioned by that act, because the treaty of 1783 embraced his case, and enabled him, at the close of the revolutionary war, to reclaim and dispose of his property. The fact that he had joined the Americans formed no objection to his right, which was lost, not because he had become an American citizen, but because he voluntarily chose to neglect and abandon it.

After a careful examination of the subject referred to them, the committee are of opinion that the petitioners have not sustained their claim, and report to the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

CLAIM TO LAND IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 27, 1830.

Mr. Gurley, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of Alexander Love, of West Florida, reported:

That petitioner claims, in the Territory of Florida, 2,000 arpents of land, as having been granted by the Spanish government in 1817 to Nairo Balderas, and by him conveyed to Eugenio Lavalle, and by the said Lavalle to petitioner. He further represents that the said claim was duly entered and recorded with the commissioners of land titles, in the district in which it is situated, in pages 280 and 281; but that they omitted to report thereon. It is in evidence that the grant or concession was made as before stated, and immediately possessed and cultivated; that the land was conveyed to Lavalle, and by him to petitioner. It further appears, by an examination of the report of the commissioners of land titles, that no report on this claim was made, although there is no evidence that it was entered with them. This fact is alleged by petitioner, but not proven.

Your committee are, however, satisfied that this omission should not prejudice his claim, if just in itself, and such as under the law would have entitled him to a favorable report, if it had been so entered, especially as this case furnishes strong presumption that his title was recorded as is by him alleged.

From a view of the whole case, your committee are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to the land claimed, and therefore report a bill relinquishing to him the title of the United States.

PROPOSITION TO SELL THE PUBLIC LANDS IN OHIO TO THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 28, 1830.

Mr. Irwin, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the House instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of selling to the State of Ohio, on equitable terms, the unsold land belonging to the United States situated in said State, reported:

That the State of Ohio contains 24,810,100 acres of land, of which the following quantities have been appropriated:

	Acres.
The Ohio Company's purchase	892,900
Donation to the Ohio Company	100,000
Two townships for a college to the same company	46,080
The western Connecticut reserve	3,267,910
The Virginia military district	3,709,484
The United States military district	1,461,666
John C. Symmes's purchase	272,000
The perch grant	25,200
The refugee grant	103,000
Grant to Arnold H. Dohrman	20,480
Three sections to Ebenezer Zane	1,920
To the United Brethren	12,000
Deduct these appropriations from the whole quantity, and there will be left	15,897,460
To this ought to be added that portion of the United States military district which remained unlocated	36,827
	15,934,287

The whole quantity of land heretofore sold at the respective land offices in that State amounts to 9,432,185 acres, and for which the United States have received the sum of $16,102,505, which is at the rate of about one dollar and seven cents per acre, for the whole amount of the public land within that State, without deducting therefrom any of the grants made for common schools, colleges, roads, or canals. If these grants were deducted, the government has received at the rate of about one dollar and twenty cents per acre for the residue.

There is yet unsold, of the public land in that State, 4,802,162 acres, which was offered for sale at the following periods, and have been in market ever since, to wit: at the land offices at Steubenville, Marietta, Chilicothe, and Cincinnati, in the years 1800 and 1801; at the land office at Zanesville in 1803; at Canton in 1808, and at Delaware and Piqua in 1820, 1821, and 1822. A very considerable quantity of the unsold land has been in market between twenty-five and thirty years, and is believed by the committee to be generally of inferior quality; and that which remains unsold in the districts of Delaware and Piqua, after deducting therefrom the part located for the Ohio and Indiana canals, is believed also to be low, wet, and of little value, when compared to what might be termed lands of the first quality. The committee, however, cannot pretend to set a price on these lands, or say what sum they are worth, or would bring in market, if offered to the highest bidder. Until further information is procured on this subject, they would not advise a reduction of the price for which the public lands have heretofore been sold in that State.

In 1825 that State engaged in the construction of two canals: one from Dayton to Cincinnati, in the western part of the State, about sixty or seventy miles in length; the other from Cleveland, on Lake Erie, to Portsmouth, on the Ohio river, a distance of about three hundred and nine miles. The canal from Dayton to Cincinnati has been completed for some time, and is now in successful operation. That portion of the main canal from Cleveland to the Licking Summit, a distance of one hundred and ninety miles, is finished, with the exception of a few small jobs, and will be ready for navigation the ensuing spring. The balance of the canal, from the Licking Summit to Portsmouth, on the Ohio river, a distance of 119 miles, is all under contract, and by those contracts is to be completed prior to June 1, 1831.

In the construction of these canals, the State has contracted a debt of about four millions of dollars, which it will have to pay from direct taxation and the profits of the canals. The exemption of a large portion of the landed property within the State from taxation has ever embarrassed its fiscal concerns, but in the present emergency is more severely felt, in consequence of the increased taxation which has become necessary to meet the engagements of the State.

The benefits arising from the accomplishment of this great work will not be confined to the State by which it was achieved. By its completion an unbroken chain of inland navigation will be secured from the city of New York to the Gulf of Mexico, and to every portion of that vast extent of country lying on the east and west of the Mississippi, as far as its waters are navigable. In times of peace it will afford commercial advantages to a great extent; and in time of war it will furnish to the government immense facilities in the transportation of its troops and munitions of war.

As the committee are disposed to view this as a work of national concern, they think it not unreasonable that the United States should relieve that State of a part of its public debt, by becoming the purchaser of a portion of its canal stock. This can be effected by selling and conveying to that State the residue of the public lands within its limits, upon condition that the State, by its legislative act, will agree to sell those lands for cash only, and at such price and in such quantities as Congress may from time to time direct; and will faithfully apply the net proceeds to the purchase of its canal stock, at par, as fast as practicable; and will forever guaranty the payment of interest thereon, not exceeding four, and never less than three per cent. To carry into effect this equitable arrangement, the committee herewith report a bill.

CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 28, 1830.

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Irwin, junior, of Green Bay, in the Territory of Michigan, reported:

The petitioner sets out in his petition that, in the year 1820, he purchased of one Joseph Ducharm a lot of land designated on the plat of private land claims at Green Bay, in Michigan, as lot number seventeen, on the east side of Fox river; that he so arranged his buildings thereon that when the surveys under the direction of the government of the United States in the year 1828 came to be made, it was discovered that a portion of his buildings fell within the lines of lot number eighteen, adjoining to his on the south. He asks Congress to convey to him, or permit him to purchase at a fair value, that part of the said lot, number eighteen, upon which his buildings have been erected. It appears, and the fact is admitted by the petitioner, that lot number eighteen has, by an arrangement with the government, been assigned to the Protestant Episcopal Church for missionary purposes, and thereby become private property. Your committee know of no authority vested in Congress to wrest property from the hand of one individual proprietor, to place it in that of another. It is therefore resolved that the petitioner is not entitled to any relief upon his petition.

21st Congress.] No. 792. [1st Session.

DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS IN TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 29, 1830.

Mr. Crockett, from the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the most equitable manner of disposing of the refuse public lands lying south and west of the congressional reservation line in the State of Tennessee, reported:

That, by reference to a report made at the present session of Congress by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, accompanied by an official communication from the secretary of state of Tennessee, it appears that the whole quantity of land in the State of Tennessee, lying west and south of the line, commonly called the congressional reservation, is six millions eight hundred and sixty-four thousand acres; of which there has been appropriated for the satisfaction of North Carolina military warrants, and of warrants issued by that State to defray the expenses of the revolutionary war, four millions five hundred and ten thousand one hundred and seventy-six acres; leaving the quantity of two millions three hundred and fifty-three thousand eight hundred and twenty-four acres of unappropriated lands subject to the disposition of the government. It appears to the committee that the lands which have been thus appropriated for the satisfaction of warrants in this district of country have been entered by selection at the option of the claimants; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his report, says: "There can be no doubt that very nearly all the lands of the best quality have been appropriated, and that a very small portion of the residue could be sold at the minimum price of the United States, until further progress shall have been made in the settlement and improvement of the country, and a greater demand thereby created for the inferior lands." By an inspection of the general plan or map of this district, and the letter of the secretary of state of Tennessee, accompanying this report, it will appear that the lands yet vacant are refuse lands; that they lie in small bodies and detached parcels; and the secretary of state of Tennessee states that it is probable that one-twentieth part of the vacant land would be entered at twelve and a half cents per acre, and one-fifth of the residue at one cent.

The committee would refer the House to a report made by a committee of the House of Representatives at the first session of the last Congress, containing a minute statement of the situation and real value of the vacant lands in the country in question, and to various laws of North Carolina and Tennessee, by which the North Carolina land warrants have been entered and granted. By an act of Congress passed April 18, 1806, Tennessee was authorized to satisfy the North Carolina claims. In it is this provision: "And the State of Tennessee shall moreover, in issuing grants and perfecting titles, locate six hundred and forty acres to every six miles square in the territory hereby ceded, where existing claims will allow the same, which shall be appropriated for the use of schools for the instruction of children forever." It appears that the existing claims of North Carolina turned out to be so numerous that they exhausted all the valuable lands north and east of the line established in said act, so that very few school tracts were laid off. South and west of the line no school tracts have been laid off; and upon this latter point the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his report already referred to, says: "By the act of Congress approved April 18, 1806, provision was made for the reservation of lands for the use of schools from that portion of lands thereby ceded to the State of Tennessee; and whatever disposition may be made of the unappropriated lands south and west of the congressional boundary line, the uniform practice of the government would require that a quantity of land equal to one thirty-sixth part of the whole district should be appropriated for the use of schools."

It appears to the committee that there are now settled upon these vacant spots of land, where they are of any value, a number of poor persons, with their families; who, in the opinion of the committee, should be entitled to a right of pre-emption, at a small price, to the places they occupy. In considering the proper disposition to be made of these lands, the committee are of opinion that a number of acres ought to be granted to the State, equal in quantity to the number of acres which the State would have had if one section in each township, or one thirty-sixth part, had been laid off for the use of common schools, agreeably to the requirements of the act of 1806; and that it should be a condition of the grant that the State, in disposing of the same, shall give a right of pre-emption to the settlers upon it at a reduced price. The committee are aware that this will fall very far short in value of what the State would have had if the school tracts had been laid off on the good lands before they were taken by warrants, a privilege secured by the act of 1806, and which also had been granted to all the other new States. The legislature of the State of Tennessee pray in their memorial for a relinquishment of all the remaining vacant lands south and west of the line, and allege that the whole would not be sufficient in value to make up the deficiency in the school lands; and the committee are of this opinion, but are induced not to recommend this because of the objections made by some, that a cession might operate injuriously as a precedent in other quarters of the Union.

The main objects proposed to be effected by the bill which the committee report, are: 1st. That the occupant settlers may be secured in their homes at a low rate, and thereby become freeholders in the country. 2d. That the lands granted may be subject to taxation; and lastly, that justice may to some extent, in regard to common schools, be done to Tennessee, although not so great as that which has been extended to all the other new States where the government has owned lands. The committee therefore report a bill in accordance with the principles herein set forth.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS AND LEGAL OPINIONS ON LAND CLAIMS IN ARKANSAS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 1, 1830.

Office of the Attorney General of the U. S., January 29, 1830.

Sir: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 26th instant, I have the honor herewith to transmit copies of a correspondence, or of so much thereof as can be found on the files and records of this office, between the attorney of the United States for the Territory of Arkansas and the Attorney General of the United States, in relation to the subject matter of that resolution, and to state that no other information connected therewith is to be found in this office.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

JNO. MACPHERSON BERRIEN.

Hon. Andrew Stevenson, Speaker of the House of Representatives, U. S.

---

1. The attorney of the United States for Arkansas Territory to the Attorney General of the United States, referred to in letters of the Attorney General of the United States, dated September 22, 1826, and October 31, 1828. Dated August 8, 1826. (Not found.)
2. The Attorney General to the United States attorney for Arkansas, dated September 22, 1826.
3. The attorney of the United States for Arkansas to the Attorney General, dated December 27, 1826.
4. The Attorney General to the United States attorney for Arkansas, dated December 8, 1827.
. The attorney of the United States for Arkansas to the Attorney General, dated January 10, 1828.

6. Same to same. Referred to in letter of the Attorney General of the United States, dated October 31, 1828. Dated February 8, 1828. (Not found.)
7. Same to same, dated May 7, 1828.
8. Same to same. Referred to in letter of the Attorney General of the United States, dated October 31, 1828. Dated July 30, 1828. (Not found.)
9. The Attorney General to the United States attorney for Arkansas, dated October 31, 1828.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE U. S., September 22, 1826.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 8th of August last, accompanied by four transcripts of cases decided by the superior court of the Territory of Arkansas, under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 26, 1824. If you will have the goodness to advert to the 9th section of that act, you will perceive that it requires the district attorney, in the case which has occurred, of a decision against the United States, to make out and transmit to the Attorney General "a statement containing the facts of the case, and the points of law on which the same was decided;" and this, in order that the Attorney General may decide whether the interest of the United States requires that an appeal should be taken. The transcripts now sent are by no means a substitute for the statement required by the act of Congress; for that transcript contains no statement of the points of law on which the cases were decided, and the statement of facts presented by the transcript is too meagre to enable the Attorney General to collect what the points in dispute were. The commissioners must have had some ground for the rejection of the claims in the first instance. Would not the cases have been better prepared for the revision of the Supreme Court if that rejection, and the ground of it, had been exhibited with the answer of the district attorney? I await your explanation, and remain with respect, your obedient servant,

WM. WIRT.

SAMUEL C. ROANE, Esq.,
United States attorney, Little Rock, Arkansas Territory,

LITTLE ROCK, December 27, 1826.

SIR: Your letter of the 22d September, ult., in reply to mine of August 8, has been duly received. In answer to which I have to inform you that probably the construction which I give the 9th section of the act of Congress of May 26, 1824, providing for the adjudication of unconfirmed French and Spanish land claims, was incorrect. I had supposed that an entire transcript of all the proceedings had in the several cases would have been equivalent to a statement of the facts of the cases, and the points of law upon which the same were decided. In those cases which have been forwarded the facts and the points of law are the same with all the cases now pending in this court—in fact, the general principles are the same in all the cases as yet filed, viz:

1. That the petitioner or claimant produced to the court a petition addressed to the then post-commandant, praying for a concession of certain land described in said petition, in the margin of which the commandant indorsed the concession of the lands prayed for.
2. Proof that the petition and concession were genuine, and the act of the Spanish officer who purported to have signed the same.
3. When the concession purported to be made to a person then resident in the country, proof of such residence.
4. When conditions were added to a concession, proof that these conditions were complied with by the grantee, so far as was in his power previous to the change of government.

The only points of law arising in the cases were, whether the claim came within the provisions of the first section of the act of May 26, 1824, providing for the adjudication of those claims? And if so, under what treaty, law, or ordinance, the claim is protected to the claimant, as provided to be stated in the decree of confirmation by the 2d section of the aforesaid act?

On the subject of those claims having been referred to the former board of commissioners and rejected, I have been unable to ascertain the grounds of their rejection. The reports of those commissioners, as forwarded to me by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, merely state the name of the claimant, the number of acres claimed, its situation, the name of the Spanish officer making the concession, and the date of that concession. The decisions of the board are uniformly in these words: "It is the opinion of the board that this claim ought not to be confirmed." I conjecture that those claims were rejected by the former board of commissioners for want of the proof now adduced in their support. As these commissioners held their sittings at St. Louis, near five hundred miles from the post of Arkansas, where most of the present claimants then lived, or from an ignorance in the claimants, what proof, if any, would be required?

I now enclose to you the transcript of two other cases. The facts and points of law will be found to correspond with the statement made in this letter.

If any other or further statement or explanation should be necessary, please prescribe such forms, or state such requisites as you may deem necessary, and I will endeavor to forward them to you with all convenient despatch.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most humble and obedient servant,

SAM. C. ROANE, U. S. District Attorney for Arkansas Territory.

WM. WIRT, Esq., Attorney General of the United States, Washington City.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE U. S., December 8, 1827.

SIR: I am sorry to differ with you in your construction of the 9th section of the act of May 26, 1824, concerning the claims to lands in Missouri and Arkansas.

The language of that section is, that it shall be the duty of the district attorney to make out and transmit to the Attorney General a statement containing the facts of the case, and the points of law on which the same was decided; this you construe to mean to send the Attorney General a copy of the record; but if this had been the intention of Congress, how easy would it have been to say so at once, without using a periphrasis so ill calculated to convey that simple idea, and so well calculated to convey another. Congress was perfectly aware that these titles depended on the peculiar local usages and regulations of Spain and France, which, however familiar in those provinces, formed no part of the library of the general lawyer, and could not be supposed to be known in advance, either to the Attorney General or the Supreme Court. The district attorney, residing on the spot, would naturally be presumed to be professionally well acquainted with the foundation of the land titles in the district; and being called by his duty to examine the laws, regulations, and evidence in every particular case on which the claim of the petitioner rested, to take part in the discussion himself, and to hear the principles on which the court rested the decision, he would be in a condition to perform, with ease to himself, the duty required of him by the law, which I consider to be, to make a statement of all the circumstances necessary to a clear apprehension of the controversy, to state the precise point in dispute, with a precise reference to the particular law, ordinance, or regulation on which these points arose, and to state with equal clearness and distinctness the principles on which the court rested the decision. To the fulfilment of the object which this particular provision of the act of Congress had in view, a general reference to the Spanish and French law is not enough; the reference ought to be specific and precise to the particular regulation or provision on which the case turns; and I think that this particular regulation or provision ought, in some form or other, to be incorporated in the record as part of the case. Foreign laws are not matters of fact, and are to be proved as such, unless admitted; and though these Spanish and French regulations have, to a certain extent, been domesticated by our treaties, still they belong to a foreign code, and ought to be proved or admitted, and spread upon the record, as foreign laws which govern, pro hac vice, the decisions of domestic courts of admiralty, are proved or admitted, and form part of the case. The cases which you have heretofore sent me, (if the records in these be full,) seem to me too defective for a final decision. You will, therefore, please to take appeals in them according to the ninth section of the act, and send on complete records, to be docketed in the Supreme Court, with the allowance of the appeal annexed. It will be desirable to have the course of decision and practice under this act settled by the authority of the Supreme Court. Meantime, please forward to me a specific and precise reference to the regulations under which these cases were decided, and if to be had, a full copy of the system of regulations on which the land titles depend; and be pleased to consider the opinion which I have expressed as to the construction of the act of Congress as the guide in future.

I remain, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. WIRT.

SAMUEL C. ROANE, Little Rock, Arkansas.

LITTLE ROCK, January 10, 1828.

SIR: Enclosed you will receive a transcript of the record in the case of François Degne vs. The United States, for the confirmation of three thousand two hundred arpents of land. I have deemed it more expedient to forward to you the entire case, with all the evidence, than the report that would seem to be contemplated by the act of Congress; the entire record shows all the points of law, together with the evidence on which the case was decided. I would remark that there are a considerable number of cases now pending on the docket in this court, in all respects situated as this one is; and for my government in those cases which are yet pendant, I would earnestly request of you an answer respecting the cases now forwarded at as early a period as practicable. As to the amount of land confirmed in this case, you will perceive from the decree that there is only one-half the quantity confirmed that the complainant, Degne, claims; this arises from the doubtful language used in the petition. Asking for a concession of forty arpents on both sides of the river, with the ordinary depth, (forty arpents,) the petitioner claims the ordinary depth on each side of the river; the court in their decree have applied the term ordinary depth to the whole tract, and not to each side of the river, as prayed for in the bill filed in this case. I would further draw your attention to the section of the law that provides for the payment of costs in these cases, as there appears to be some doubt with the court what amount of fee to tax to the United States attorney in each case, and consequently the court, heretofore, have refused to tax any costs to the United States attorney. Your opinion on this point will relieve the court from much embarrassment; my own opinion is that the United States attorney is entitled to the same fees, to be paid by the complainant, as would be taxed to an attorney in the supreme court of the State of Missouri in a suit in chancery.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

SAM'L C. ROANE, United States Attorney, Arkansas Territory.

WILLIAM WIRT, Esq., Attorney General of the United States, Washington City.

LITTLE ROCK, May 7, 1828.

SIR: Herewith you will receive the record, with an allowance of an appeal, in the case of François Degne, and also a certificate of the clerk of the motions made by myself in all the other cases of confirmation of land claims under the act of Congress of May 26, 1824, where the claims were over five hundred acres, which motions were overruled by the court, under the provisions of the second section of said act—the court here, on argument, having solemnly decided that an appeal will not lie from their decisions unless ordered by the Attorney General within one year after the adjudication by the court. Your letter instructing me to send up the appeals bears date December 8, 1827; all the cases except the case of François Degne, herewith transmitted, were adjudicated more than one year previous to that time; whether the opinion of the court was correct or not will be for you to judge. I doubt the correctness of the decision in overruling my applications for those appeals; but unless, from additional instructions by you, the court should be ordered to change their opinion, I shall be wholly unable to procure the necessary transcripts and allowances of the appeals in those cases required by you.

I take the liberty of informing you that there are now pending in this court upwards of one hundred petitions for confirmation, all, or nearly all, of which are for small tracts under five hundred acres. From the unexpected number of those small claims, and other circumstances attending them, I am induced to believe that many of them are fraudulent, although they are proven by witnesses brought here from Louisiana, whose credibility, with all the exertions I have been able to make in this country, I am unable successfully to arraign. My object in giving you this information relative to the cases yet pending in our court is to ascertain from you, by way of instruction or otherwise, whether it be my duty, or would the government allow my necessary expenditures in going to Louisiana, or elsewhere, to procure testimony. Whether I should succeed or not is doubtful; those persons who know most about claims are interested in their confirmation. The court here have refused to allow me any fees or compensation whatever for my defending, on the part of the government, except a per diem pay of five dollars while actually in attendance on the court in session; with this limited means it is impracticable for me to make the exertions to procure testimony which I deem the interest of the government requires. I have succeeded in getting all the cases now pending in court continued until October next; in the meantime be pleased to inform me of the course to pursue in these cases. There has been no adjudication since December last.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

SAM'L C. ROANE, United States Attorney, Arkansas Territory.

WM. WIRT, Esq.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, October 31, 1828.

SIR: Your letter of the 30th of July reached this place during my necessary absence on an excursion to the north for the health of one of my family, and it is only a few days back that it has met my view. I am sorry to learn by that letter that we have lost the benefit of an appeal in the several cases stated in the list enclosed in that letter, and which were decided at the April term of 1826, and that of April, 1827, because not prayed for within twelve months from the rendition of the decrees. I am by no means satisfied with these decisions, and should have been extremely glad to have had them submitted to the revision of the Supreme Court; but I was without the statement required by the ninth section of the act of April 26, 1824; and I am still without such a statement in any of the cases, and therefore I had not the means which Congress intended I should have to enable me to judge whether justice to the individual claimant on the one hand, and the United States on the other, rendered it expedient that an appeal should be taken.

At the time of the passage of that act, the organization of the Spanish government in the provinces, the relative sphere of powers of the several officers—the governors, the intendants, and the commandants of posts—whether derived from royal commissions, edicts, orders, or proclamations; the regulations proceeding from the several Spanish governors and intendants, and the practice of the Spanish colonial government in carrying those regulations into effect, were necessarily unknown to me. There had been no perfect collection of these laws, ordinances, and regulations, and the practice under them printed, so that we were necessarily in the dark here on the whole subject, and could expect to derive light from no other quarter but the territories in which these land regulations had been carried into effect during their provincial connexion with Spain. It was in reference to this state of things, no doubt, that the ninth section was introduced into the law. It was naturally to have been expected that whenever a claim of one of these petitioners came to be discussed before the courts, either of Missouri or Arkansas, the petitioner would be required to show not only the grant, concession, or order of survey under which he claimed, but the power of the person who granted such concession, &c., to make such grant; that in doing this he would be required to deduce the power of such officer from the Spanish sovereign, through the governors of the provinces, and bring before the court, not merely the whole body of regulations, but lay his finger on the specific provisions in these regulations which made his title good, and show a compliance with these regulations in every particular, such as settling and making the partial clearing and cultivation, which seem to be required by all these regulations, (all, at least, that I have seen,) within a limited time, and show that he was in the peculiar predicament as to the number of family, of head of horses, cattle, &c., which entitled him to a grant under these regulations. It was also naturally to have been expected that the officers maintaining the rights of the United States would have demanded that the powers of the officer making the grant should be clearly shown; that he would have laid his finger on those articles of the regulations which seem to confine the power of making grants to the governors and intendants, and on those clauses, also, which seem to indicate that grants could be made only to persons in a peculiar predicament, and which declare that even a grant made shall be avoided, unless followed by settlement, clearing, and cultivation in a limited time, as within three years, and demanded proof that the party was in these predicaments; that he would have required proof of the process verbal which these regulations seem to require to accompany the survey, in order to inform the governor whether a grant could be safely made, and without which the party would not be in the situation to complete his title under the Spanish law, which the act of Congress makes the test of confirmation by the court. In such a discussion it was to have been expected that all the laws, ordinances, and regulations relative to the grants of lands by Spanish authorities would have been brought to light; and when these were doubtful, that the practical exposition of these laws, ordinances, and regulations would have been established by the full proof of several enlightened and respectable witnesses—competent, from their situation, to speak intelligently and satisfactorily on the subject of such continued and uniform practice, and its recognition by the higher Spanish authorities. In short, it was to have been expected that the collision would have struck out all the lights which properly belonged to the subject, and that this dark, perplexed, and unknown branch of the local law of provincial Spain would be fully and clearly developed, so as to have enabled a legal mind to come to a just conclusion on every title. It was not, indeed, to be expected that the record would contain all these discussions; but it was to have been expected that they would have taken place at the bar on the trial of the cause, and, consequently, that the district attorney would be enabled to furnish to the Attorney General that full and at the same time minutely-detailed information, together with such specific references to the articles of the several regulations on which the questions arose as would place him in a situation to judge whether the interest of the United States required an appeal. Congress well knew that a knowledge of the laws of Spain, and still less a knowledge of the Spanish local laws in granting lands in her provinces, did not belong to the science of law in the United States. Congress well knew that these local laws were locked up in royal orders, decrees, manifestoes, proclamations, commissions, and in the regulations issued from time to time by the Spanish governors and intendants, many of which had never been published, but lay scattered over the different provinces in the bureaus of private individuals; and, consequently, that there was no general published collection of these laws and regulations to which the Attorney General could have access. They knew that these sources of the powers of the several officers of Spain, and the authentic practical exposition of them, were only to be brought to light by the controversies which were authorized by the act of 1824, and, consequently, that the Attorney General must, of necessity, depend on the full and at the same time minutely-detailed reports and specific expositions which should be furnished to him by the district attorney for the means of forming an opinion whether it would be advisable to appeal or not. Such a statement as this, you are aware, I have not been furnished with to this day from Arkansas. The short records, in the cases referred to in your letter of the 30th July, gave me no such information, but left me as entirely in the dark as I was before. Had these cases been determined on the laws of the United States, or the common law of England, the record would have been sufficient. But appealing, as they do, to the obscure and complicated provincial laws and regulations, which are terra incognita to the most enlightened lawyer, and even to the most enlightened judge on the bench of the Supreme Court, it was certainly to have been expected that something more than a short and meagre record would have been furnished under the requisitions of the ninth section of the act of 1824. I can well conceive that you, sir, as well as the judges of Arkansas, must have been placed at great disadvantage in the earlier decisions on this subject by the causes which I have mentioned. But I beg permission to refer you to the opinion of Judge Peck, in the case of James G. Soulard vs. The United States, pronounced so soon after the passage of the act of Congress as to have been published in the Mississippi Republican of the 30th March, 1826, and to the printed argument of Mr. John B. C. Lucas, on the part of the United States in that cause, printed and published at St. Louis in 1826, for the purpose of showing the array of lights and the range of investigation of which this subject, so unknown here, was susceptible there, from the mere local advantage of having been tried in the country in which the Spanish laws had been so recently operating. Arkansas possessing, I presume, from the same causes, something of the same advantages, it was to have been expected that a discussion of the same character would have been had on the claims in this latter Territory, and that the district attorney would have been, consequently, in a condition to have furnished the statement contemplated by the act of Congress of 1824. Such a statement not having been furnished, and the Spanish regulations and the practice under them not having been within my reach, I have never been in a condition to advise you, in these cases, whether appeals should be taken or not. Your first communication to me, under the act of Congress, was by your letter of August 8, 1826, in which you merely forwarded to me four transcripts of the records in four cases, decided in the preceding April. This communication reached me in September; and, by my letter to you of the 22d of that month, I had the honor to request that you would forward me the statements called for by the ninth section of the act of Congress. About the last of January, or beginning of February, 1827, I was honored with your letter of December 27, 1826, in which you give a general view of the grounds of the claims, but this still was not, in my estimation, the statement with which it was the intention of Congress that the Attorney General should be furnished; not only because it was general, but because it took no notice of the important legal questions arising under the only Spanish regulations then within my knowledge, to wit: 1st. The power of the commandants of posts to issue grants, concessions, or orders of survey. 2d. If they had the power to institute an incipient title in the form of orders of survey, whether an actual survey and the process required by the regulations to the Spanish governor or intendant had been made. 3d. Whether the conditions of settlement, clearing, and cultivation, annexed by the published regulations themselves to all grants, and required to be made within a limited time, say three years, had been made. 4th. If they had not, since the omission to make them had been declared by these regulations sufficient to vacate even a perfect and consummated grant, how could a mere incipient order of survey, never executed, subsist in spite of these omissions? 5th. Were the parties in the predicament which authorized them to call for grants, according to the published regulations of the Spanish governors and intendants? Seeing no notice taken of these points, and others which belonged to the subject, so far as any of the regulations of the Spanish governors or intendants had met my view, I was led to suppose, either that there were other regulations or official explanations of past regulations which I had never seen, or some established or well-known practice, subsequently recognized by the high authority of the governor and intendants, by the issue of grants founded on that practice, which removed the objections apparently arising on the only public regulations which I had seen, and justified the court in confirming these incipient titles. On these heads I waited your further explanations, but finding that you continued to send me records without any such statement as seemed indispensable to the enlightened performance of my duty under the act, I took the liberty to write you again, on December 8, 1827, giving you my ideas, in a few words, on the character of the statement which the act of Congress authorized me to expect. In your letter of February 8, 1828, you acknowledge the receipt of my letter, and say: "I am sorry that my construction of the act of Congress of May 26, 1824, was incorrect, and will endeavor to be governed in future by your instructions on that subject. The course heretofore pursued was in consequence of the suggestions of the judges of the superior court of the Territory, believing it would give a more general view of the cases, with the evidence and reasons of the decree." But a general view is exactly that which I do not want; I wanted a particular and detailed statement, both of the facts and the points in controversy, with a reference to the particular articles of the particular land regulations of the Spanish authorities by which these points were to be determined, or, if the decision rested on usage, a statement of the evidence on which such usage had been set up, in the face of the promulgated regulations of the Spanish governors or intendants. Without such a statement, it was impossible for me, as I have already remarked, to understand a question turning on the unpublished local laws and usages of the Spanish authorities. But since your letter of February 8, 1828, I have never received a single statement of any kind from you, general or particular. I incline to think some of your letters must have miscarried. In your letter of last July you refer to a letter of May 7 preceding, which I have no recollection of having ever received, and which is not now to be found. It is, therefore, possible that you may have forwarded statements which I have never seen. Meantime I am by no means satisfied with the course of decision in Arkansas, on the lights which I do possess, possibly because these lights are not perfect. They are certainly at variance with the principles on which Judge Peck decided the case of Soulard; and I do not understand that there is any difference in the Spanish laws as applicable to Missouri and Arkansas. If Judge Peck is right, the decisions in Arkansas are wrong; and in all future cases I must beg you to consider the decision of Judge Peck as right, until it shall be reversed by the Supreme Court, and, in resisting these claims, to take all the grounds applicable to them on which he has rested; and to appeal in every case susceptible of appeal, in which the judges of Arkansas shall decide against the principles assumed by Judge Peck. It would be well, too, to frame your answer in such a way as to raise all the questions applicable to each case which he has discussed and decided. I would call your attention particularly to the great questions ———— by the regulations now published in the new edition of the Land Laws, as those of O'Reilly, Gayoso, and Morales, to wit: first, whether the grantee was within the description, as to the number of family and amount of property, of persons entitled to grants of lands; second, whether any but the governor or intendant could issue either a grant, concession, or order of survey, more particularly, whether the commandants of posts could do this; third, if they could, whether these incipient stages of title were not imperfect till confirmed by the governor or intendant, on the report of the surveyor and others called for by these regulations, and whether the grant at least, meaning hereby the patent of the governor or intendant, being his confirmation of such incipient title, was not necessary to carry the title into effect; fourth, whether (as it would seem by these regulations that even a title consummated by the grant of the governor might be declared void for the non-settlement, clearing, and cultivation of a portion of the lands within three years) an incipient title could be held in suspense, at the pleasure of the persons to whom granted, for any length of time he chose, or whether, under the Spanish law, he would not be considered as having abandoned the land after a failure of three years to perfect his title and comply with the conditions aforesaid; and here I must beg you to distinguish between the conditions which the commandant of a post may have chosen to annex to a grant, and those conditions which the published regulations annex to all grants; and, unless there be something in these cases more than I am aware of, I would insist that the commandants of posts had no authority to annex any other conditions than those which had been annexed by the public promulgated regulations of the governors and intendants; fifth, whether a usage of the commandants of posts to issue grants, concessions, or orders, can be set up as proof of their lawful authority to do so, in the face of the published regulations; and this more especially, on the very slight and loose proof of such usage which seems to have been offered in these cases, or whether such usage be not in legal contemplation a nullity without the exhibition of a written authority; sixth, (and to this I invite your particular attention,) whether, inasmuch as the act of Congress authorizes the confirmation of such titles only as could have been perfected under the Spanish government, the petitioner must not prove before the court all the facts, and a compliance in due time with all the formalities and conditions, the proof of which would have been necessary, under the Spanish government, to authorize him to call upon the governor or intendant to confirm his title.

These instructions flow from a perusal of the published regulations of O'Reilly, Gayoso, and Morales, as they stand before me in the last edition of the Land Laws, and from a careful perusal of the decision of Judge Peck, to which I beg leave to invite your attention. If there be any other authentic regulations than these, I should be glad to be informed of them and to be furnished with copies. I have adverted in a former letter to the legal rule of evidence, that foreign laws must be proved as matters of fact; but to the proof of a foreign law some other qualification is expected of a witness than such as would enable him to speak of an ordinary fact. When a foreign law is to be proved, it is expected that the witness called to prove it shall have been engaged in pursuits which qualify him to speak on the subject; that is to say, that he shall have been a lawyer or a judge, or in some way so officially or professionally connected with the administration of the law as to command the respect and confidence of the tribunal before which he is called to say what the law is; and where usage is attempted to be set up over the promulgated law of a foreign country, it is not a single, obscure, unenlightened, and perhaps corrupted plebeian whose evidence shall be permitted to establish such usage; but the fact should be established by the concurrent testimony of several enlightened and respectable men, and it should be shown to have been constantly recognized by the high authorities whose printed regulations it seeks to impugn. How far the very meagre and loose proceedings you have sent me are from conforming with these views of the subject I need not tell you. I am under the impression that great injustice has been done to the United States in these decisions, and that claims have been confirmed which the petitioners would never have dared to present to the Spanish authorities had these authorities continued. That the judges have discharged their duty with the most perfect purity of principle, motive, and intention, I entertain no doubt; but that they have erred in judgment, to the prejudice of the United States, in their anxiety to do justice to the individual claimants, I feel myself constrained to apprehend from a view of the Spanish regulations which lie before me. In the cases in which they have refused appeals the mischief is now done, and, I fear, irrevocably; though it is my purpose to raise the question before the next Supreme Court, whether the limitation in the right of appeal, after the year, applies to the United States. Meantime, unfurnished as I yet am with the statements required by the ninth section of the law, I have to request that appeals may be asked immediately in all the cases which have been decided, (except those in which they have been already refused,) by presenting petitions of appeal to the judges who compose the court, out of court time, and not waiting for the recurrence of the next term, lest more of the appeals should be barred by the limitation of time. If the judges refuse the appeal in the vacation, on the ground that it can be granted only in term time, let them note on the back of the petitions the time of the application and the rejection, and let notice be immediately made to the clerk, in writing, that the United States appeal in these cases; though in vacation he can enter the application for the appeals and the time at which it was made. My own opinion is, that, under the act of Congress, the appeal is a matter of right at any time within the twelve months, whether the court be sitting or not, and that neither clerk nor court can refuse it. If refused, therefore, in the manner I have supposed, let the certificates of refusal, both by the court and clerk, be forwarded to me, and I will move the Supreme Court for a mandamus, or to consider the appeals as regularly taken by the application to the clerk or the judges, unless, indeed, the judges will consider the application, though out of term, sufficient to bar the limitation and make the order of appeal at the first day of the following term. These directions, of course, will be unnecessary if this letter should reach you while the court is in session, because you can then move for the appeals in open court. I must further request you to enter appeals at once in all future decisions against the United States capable of appeals under the law, so as to save the right of appeal and give me an opportunity of considering whether the appeal shall be prosecuted. If it cannot, I can retract the appeal and enable the successful claimant to proceed on his decree with the least possible delay.

I have received records in all the cases on the list of rejected appeals except two, to wit: the second case of Francis Vaugine vs. The United States, and Francis Degere vs. The United States. You will know whether these are all that you have sent me.

Are there any cases in which appeals have been allowed? My letter of December, 1827, was intended to direct a motion for appeals in all past cases. I should be glad to be informed, as soon as possible, what appeals shall be allowed on the motion now directed, and what refused.

It is rumored here that the claimants, in order to avoid an appeal, are reducing their claims below five hundred acres, and that claims of this character, to a great amount, have been made and sustained by the court. I should be glad to know the truth of these rumors.

I am sorry to have given you the trouble of this long letter, but it seemed to me to be called for by my official duties, and I was anxious to put you in full possession of my views on the entire subject.

I remain, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. WIRT.

SAMUEL C. ROANE, Esq.,
District Attorney United States, Little Rock, Arkansas.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 794. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR LAND FOR FEMALE ACADEMIES IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 1, 1830.

A JOINT MEMORIAL, requesting a grant of lands by the Congress of the United States for the use of a female academy in each county of this State.

The senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama, in general assembly convened, respectfully represent to the Congress of the United States: That your memorialists have witnessed with great pleasure the munificence and liberality of your honorable body in the promotion of education, by the grant of sixteenth sections for the use of common schools in every township, and of other lands for the advancement of an asylum for the use of the deaf and dumb, and for the establishment and maintenance of a university; and whilst they have been greatly benefited and much pleased with such liberality in the promotion of objects so intimately and essentially interwoven with the moral and political prospects of the country, they respectfully suggest that another subject of equal or superior claims upon your liberality and munificence has not received the attention due to the importance which properly attaches to it, either from our own citizens or their representatives in the national legislature, to wit: the proper and necessary education of the females of this free and happy republic. Your memorialists beg the indulgence of your honorable body in remarking that the ornaments of this and every other country, so far as relates to talents, learning, and virtue, rest their claims mainly on the early impressions made by mothers; that it seldom happens that impressions derived from this source are calculated to sap the foundation of morality, or to injure in the smallest degree the best interest of society; but, on the contrary, the education, information, and examples drawn from them, exalt and ennoble our characters, and constitute the foundation and prop of our most estimable virtues and consequent prosperity in life. Your memorialists derive much pleasure from the reflection that the people of this State have aroused from their lethargy upon this all-important subject, and are now making exertions to compensate in some measure for their former apathy by laudable attempts on their part to promote female education; but your memorialists would here remark that the common schools are not places at which females can receive more than the first rudiments of education, and the importance of institutions exclusively for the use of female education must be admitted by all. Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully request that your honorable body will grant to the State of Alabama as much as two sections of land for each county in this State, to be selected and sold by the respective counties, and to be exclusively applied to the erection and support of an academy in each county in this State for the education of females. Your memorialists sincerely believe that by the selection of the best unappropriated lands, and prudent management of the same, no portion of the public land has been heretofore, or will be hereafter, applied in a manner to accomplish more good.

Therefore be it resolved, That our senators be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to obtain the object of this memorial. And be it further resolved, That it shall be the duty of the governor to transmit, as early as may be, a copy of this memorial to each of our senators and representatives in Congress, and one to the President of the United States.

JOHN GAYLE, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved January 13, 1830. GABRIEL MOORE.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR GRANTS OF LANDS TO ENCOURAGE SETTLERS FOR THE DEFENCE OF THE FRONTIERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 1, 1830.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas respectfully represents, that the exposed situation of our western frontier calls loudly for protection. Adjacent to an Indian population and an Indian country, the property of our citizens and their lives are frequently lost and endangered. The bold and fearless savage knows no law but that of force: vindictive in his feelings, the slightest insult is appeased only by human blood. He commits his depredations and his murders and escapes with impunity into his wild and native forest. Nothing can relieve us from these bold and fearless incursions but a dense population or the removal of the Indians from their present habitations. Every hope of their removal is extinguished by the determined policy of the general government to settle on our western frontier the Indians of the east. Your garrisons afford, if any, but little protection. Our limits have been so curtailed as to bring a number of us immediately within the Indian vicinity, and nothing but a dense population will secure to us peace and safety. With these views we submit to your consideration the propriety of granting to every man who may settle within twenty-four miles of our western frontier a donation of one-quarter section of land, after a residence of five years within such boundary. Hold out this inducement to emigration, and doubtless the frontier will soon be settled. A barrier of bold and hardy pioneers will be established—a barrier which will go further to protect our settlements than any other plan which is attended with little expense. With these observations we submit to the better judgment of your honorable body, with a firm reliance on its sympathy, the soundness of its policy, and its liberality.

LAND CLAIMS IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 3, 1830.

General Land Office, February 2, 1830.

Sir: On the 17th February, 1829, I had the honor to submit to the Senate copies of the reports of the register and receiver of the land office for the district of Jackson Court-House, under the provisions of the act of the 24th May, 1828, supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Mississippi, (see No. 685, p. 328,) and I now submit a copy of an additional report of the same officers on six claims in virtue of settlements, with a copy of their letter, dated the 24th of December last, explanatory of the reasons why those claims were not embraced in their previous reports.

With great respect, your most obedient servant,

GEO. GRAHAM.

The Hon. Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

Land Office at Augusta,
District of Jackson County, Mississippi, December 24, 1829.

Sir: We herewith forward a report on six claims received too late to be incorporated in our reports. The evidence in support of those claims appears to have been regularly taken before the magistrate, and placed in the post office before the 1st day of January, 1829. In proof of that fact, we forward a copy of the letter of the magistrate before whom the testimony was taken, and, although those claims did not come to hand until after the 1st day of January, 1829, we have deemed it not improper to submit them, with the circumstances of the case, to the consideration of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

WM. HOWZE, Register.
G. B. DAMERON, Receiver.

Geo. Graham, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington City.

Pearl River, December 23, 1828.

To the register and receiver:

Gentlemen: Enclosed I must trouble you with a few entries. It is out of my power to go to the post office with them; therefore, please pay the expenses of postage, and charge the same to me, and confer a favor on your most humble servant.

With sincere respect,

CALVIN MERRILL.

G. B. Dameron, Esq.

REPORT No. 7.

A further list of actual settlers within that part of the land district of Jackson Court-House, in the State of Mississippi, lying below the thirty-first degree of north latitude, (formerly Louisiana,) who have no claims derived from either the French, British, or Spanish governments.

REMARKS.—The above claims were received too late to be incorporated in our reports of claims registered under the provisions of the act of Congress passed on the 24th of May, 1828, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts providing for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Mississippi." Claimants were allowed by the provisions of the aforesaid act until the first day of January, 1829, to file the evidence, &c., of their claims. It appears that the testimony in support of those was regularly taken before the first day of January, 1829; and although the claims were not filed with the commissioners until after that day, we are of opinion they ought to be confirmed to the same extent of claims of the same description in our reports Nos. 5 and 6.—(See No. 685, p. 538.)

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR RELIEF TO HOLDERS OF CERTIFICATES OF FORFEITED LANDS FOR NON-PAYMENT, &c.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 4, 1830.

A MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States for the benefit of certificate holders of forfeited lands within the State of Indiana.

The general assembly of the State of Indiana view with grateful recollections the repeated relief bestowed upon various classes of her citizens from time to time by the general government, in giving indulgence to the purchasers of public lands; but we have still a class of sufferers whose case is not provided for by any of the laws in force, to wit, those persons who hold certificates for forfeited lands, a part of which lands may have been sold in November last. To such justice and the liberal policy hitherto pursued demands that the alternative should be tendered of paying for the land which their certificates may cover (if the same has not been sold) at the usual discount of thirty-seven and a half per cent., or of receiving negotiable scrip for the amount paid into the land office; and where the same has been sold the like scrip be authorized to issue.

It is only necessary here to reiterate former opinions that it is wholly inconsistent with our national character to retain in the common treasury of the Union, for any cause whatever or any pretence, the money of the citizen who has failed from misfortune or indigency to accomplish the laudable purpose of becoming a freeholder in the country without any compensation therefor.

Resolved, therefore, by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to procure the passage of a law, if possible, which will allow all holders of land certificates, on or before the 4th of July, 1831, the privilege, where the lands have not been sold, of possessing themselves with the land which said certificates call for at a discount; or of transferable scrip, receivable in any of the land offices in this State, for the actual amount received by the United States; and in cases where any of the lands aforesaid shall have been sold by the United States, that the certificate holders be entitled to negotiable scrip as aforesaid for the amount which may have been paid thereon.

Be it further resolved, That the governor transmit a copy of this memorial and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

ON THE APPLICATION OF OHIO TO BE ALLOWED TO APPLY THE LANDS GRANTED FOR CANALS TO RAILROADS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 8, 1830.

Mr. Barton, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the expediency of modifying the act to aid the State of Ohio in completing the Miama Canal from Dayton to Lake Erie, and for other purposes, reported:

That it appears from the last annual report of the Ohio canal commissioners that 180 miles of the Eastern Canal, in that State, will be opened for navigation early in the ensuing spring; and that the residue, being 130 miles, is under contract, to be finished in the year 1831. It also appears that $759,666 have been expended on the Western or Miami Canal.

The enterprise and zeal manifested by the State in carrying on her arduous undertaking, and the great progress already made towards its accomplishment, justifies a belief that the State will progress with the work, and will complete it as soon as her ability will permit, without the ungracious penalty imposed by the law in question.

It appears that the land granted by Congress to the State of Ohio to aid in the construction of the Miami Canal has not been located, and that the proceeds of it will constitute but a comparatively small portion of the entire sum required to complete the work. From the best estimate that can now be made, the completion of that canal will require a disbursement of more than a million of dollars in addition to the grant of the government and the sum already expended by the State. This consideration, in connexion with the fact that the State has already incurred a debt in the construction of her canals exceeding three millions and a half of dollars, renders it imprudent for her to encounter the risk of becoming a debtor to the United States in consequence of contingencies or accidents, which cannot be foreseen or guarded against. The committee are of opinion that in this case, as in every other of a similar character, the State ought to be bound to a faithful application of the proceeds of the land to the object designated, and to refund the money to the United States in case of a misapplication; but they do not consider it just to require her to refund it after it has been appropriated in good faith to the object intended; nor do they believe it to be good policy to legislate with a view of creating debts against the States. They consider it equally exceptionable to annex to grants, made for purposes of public improvement, such conditions as may be calculated to defeat their object. The condition and the penalty in the law referred to are of that character, and in the opinion of the committee ought to be so modified as to be placed on the same ground with a similar provision in the law of the same session, granting lands to the State of Alabama.

It appears from the statement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the entire sum received by the United States on the sale of public lands is $37,597,615; and that there has been paid of that sum by purchasers within the State of Ohio $16,410,115; the principal part of which was paid while the minimum price of land was $2 per acre; from which it appears that the purchasers in that State have paid to government about $6,000,000 more than they now ask for the same quantity of land in other States.

In addition to these sales it will be recollected that from the lands within the limits of Ohio the United States have satisfied the Virginia military land warrants, the military land warrants granted by Congress to the officers and soldiers of the army of the revolution, the lands promised by Congress to the refugees from Canada and Nova Scotia, and the claim of the State of Connecticut for her relinquishment of right to western lands alleged to be within her charter. These appropriations of land, amounting in the whole to about nine millions of acres, were in satisfaction of just and legal claims on the government, and are therefore equivalent to a sale of the same quantity of land for cash. This statement presents to the Senate at a single view the extent to which the government has availed herself of that portion of her domain which lies within the State of Ohio.

It will be recollected that when the emigrants from the old States commenced their settlements in the Northwestern Territory the country was a wilderness, in the possession of numerous and powerful tribes of Indians, who claimed the soil, and opposed the occupancy of it by citizens of the United States with all the violence belonging to their character. The consequence was that those adventurers who were the pioneers of the country northwest of the Ohio, and opened the way to the interior of the public domain, were subjected to the calamities and cruelties of a seven years' war, which terminated in the defeat of the savages, gave the undisturbed possession of the country to the government, and insured comparative safety to subsequent adventurers.

Taking into consideration the quantity of land disposed of in Ohio, the price at which it was sold, the amount of money paid by her citizens to the government, and the privations and distresses which were endured in effecting the settlement of the country, it would seem that Ohio is entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress, and to have the grant in question put on as easy a footing as any of those which have been made to other States.

The improvements and experiments recently made in the construction and use of railroads has produced a favorable impression on the public mind, and the more intelligent part of the community seem to be adopting the opinion that they are in many, if not in all, respects preferable to canals. On that account the committee think it advisable to authorize the legislature either to continue the Miami Canal or to apply the proceeds of the canal in the construction of a railroad, as may be judged most advantageous.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 11, 1830.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles Comb or Cohm, reported:

That from the evidence accompanying said petition it appears that, about thirty-one or two years ago, one Louis Dozi and his wife Margaret settled on a certain tract of land in the Attakapas country, now embraced in the State of Louisiana; that they continued to reside on and cultivate said land for eight or nine years, when said Louis Dozi died, leaving (as the committee are informed) no children; that said Margaret remained on said land about a year, when she intermarried with the petitioner; that the petitioner and his said wife resided on and cultivated the tract of land aforesaid for about eleven years, when she died, having had by said last marriage three children; and that the petitioner has remained on and continued to cultivate said land ever since. It further appears that the land when settled by Dozi was public property, and that the failure to have it entered and claimed as provided by the acts of Congress arose from the total ignorance of the parties of the existence of those acts.

The committee have no hesitation in recommending that the claim for this land should be confirmed, but to whom is a question they have some difficulty in determining. They cannot consent to make the petitioner the sole heir of both his wife and her first husband. Under all the circumstances, and particularly as Dozi left no children, your committee have concluded that the claims of justice and charity would be better satisfied by confirming the title to this property to the children of the said Margaret, who doubtless shared in the toils and labor incident to the settlement and cultivation which are the foundation of the claim; and for this purpose they report a bill.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 800. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR A FURTHER GRANT OF LAND FOR INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 12, 1830.

Mr. MCKINLEY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the legislature of the State of Alabama asking a grant of land for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Coosa river, and to connect its waters with the waters of the Tennessee river, reported:

That there has been granted to the State of Alabama, by act of Congress, four hundred thousand acres of land for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Tennessee river, and the surplus, if any, to be applied to the improvement of the navigation of other rivers in said State; the Coosa, being next in importance to the Tennessee, would have been entitled to such surplus. By this act of Congress the State of Alabama was restrained from selling the land thus granted for less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. An act of the legislature of that State to provide for the sale of said land, among other things authorized the appointment of twelve commissioners to select the four hundred thousand acres of land out of the relinquished lands, in the counties designated in the act of Congress, and to fix a value on each tract. These commissioners, acting under the obligation of an oath, proceeded to the performance of the duties assigned them; and, from their report, it appears that there are but two hundred and sixty-one or two thousand acres of the land thus appropriated, worth one dollar and twenty-five cents an acre, and upwards, leaving a deficiency of one hundred and thirty-eight or nine thousand acres of the quantity intended to have been granted. The quantity selected and valued by said commissioners amounts to about $620,000, a sum entirely inadequate to the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee river, in the manner directed by the act of Congress, and, of course, leaving no surplus for the improvement of any other river, or for connecting the waters of the Tennessee and Coosa rivers. The canal for connecting these waters is a work of great importance to Alabama, East Tennessee, and the western parts of Virginia, in a commercial point of view, and would be of immense importance to the nation in time of war, as it would afford great facilities for the transportation of troops, provisions, and munitions of war, from the interior to the sea-coast. It is believed by the memorialists that three hundred and fifty thousand dollars would effect the improvement of the navigation of the Coosa river, and construct the canal for the connexion of its waters with those of the Tennessee river. The land on the east bank of the Coosa river, extending to the Georgia line, is very fertile, and is now in the possession of the Creek and Cherokee Indians, and amounts to more than a million of acres. When these titles are extinguished the lands will be greatly enhanced in value by the proposed improvement, probably to an amount more than double its cost. The committee therefore recommend a grant of three hundred thousand acres of land, to be selected by the State of Alabama anywhere within its limits, excluding all lands heretofore sold or granted, and all that may be granted to individuals by acts to be passed at the present session of Congress, for the relief of purchasers of the public lands and actual settlers; and inasmuch as the State of Alabama has been subjected to much difficulty, and even to censure, in consequence of the mode adopted by it for the sale of said four hundred thousand acres of land, it is deemed proper that the land now granted should be sold at public auction for ready money, and for the best price that can be obtained by that mode of sale; and that the surplus over and above the sum of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars be applied to the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee river, in aid of the sum already granted. The committee would by no means wish it to be understood that any censure is intended to be cast upon the State of Alabama by the recommendation of an auction sale of the land proposed to be granted. On the contrary, they have seen the report of the committee of investigation of the conduct of the said commissioners, raised by both houses of the legislature of Alabama, which acquits the preceding legislature and said commissioners of all blame in the whole transaction; which report they beg leave to submit herewith. They also report a bill.

Report of the joint committee of both houses of the general assembly of Alabama, elected to investigate the conduct of the late land commissioners.

The joint committee appointed by the two houses of the general assembly of the State of Alabama for the purpose of investigating the conduct of the late land commissioners, chosen in conformity to an act passed at the session of the last legislature, to select, class, and value, four hundred thousand acres of land, granted by the Congress of the United States to this State, as a means of opening and constructing a canal navigable for steamboats around or through the Muscle shoals, obstructing and otherwise impeding the free navigation of the Tennessee river, and for other purposes, with authority to send for, and bring before them, persons and papers, report that they have performed the duty assigned them.

Your committee first attempted to learn whether the conduct of the commissioners had been improper; in doing which it was necessary, as far as practicable, to ascertain the actual conduct and procedure of the commissioners. The evidence adduced shows that a majority of the board of commissioners assembled at Courtland and agreed to make a short tour of observation, in order, by an examination of the different classes of land, and a pricing of the same, to establish a standard of value so as to produce as great a degree of uniformity as possible in their valuation after such observation. About twelve dollars per acre was partially agreed upon as the highest price of the first or best class of relinquished land, unless some local cause might raise particular tracts above that value. The commissioners then separated themselves into four companies, and assigned to each specified bounds as their sphere of action.

As appears by the memorial of Messrs. King & Terrel, the company who acted in Madison and Morgan had completed their examination in Madison before they were apprised that the companies generally were not acting up to the common rule established, as before stated, by the majority of the board. The apparent want of uniformity is in this way accounted for. The reason of the departure from such rule by the company that examined the lands in Limestone county is explained by the evidence of John D. Carrol, and is, that after their separation from the other commissioners, upon reflection they came to the conclusion that each company was bound to act in accordance with the opinion entertained by themselves as to their course of duty, and their own construction of the statute under which they acted, and particular observation and belief of the true value of the lands they selected, and that the commissioners had no right to establish rules for any other company than their own.

The commissioners, when the majority of them were together, as already observed, determined, as a general rule, that all settlers, or who were such before the passage of the act of the legislature establishing the board of commissioners, were entitled to preferences under the act, and that floating claims might be laid upon improved lands. The evidence shows that Mr. King, of Madison, and Mr. G. K. Hubbard were not at this general meeting, and that Mr. Hubbard dissented from the opinion in relation to preferences, but submitted to obey the decision of the board, although he did not believe that that decision as to preferences was correct. The evidence likewise shows that in Lawrence county the commissioners did act conformably to the instruction of the board in reference to the claim of occupants, and did allow floats to cover improved lands. We have no evidence that such was the rule of action with any other company of commissioners, as it respects preferences and floating claims, unless in the case of floats from the river, which might cover any lands to which another person had not a preference. As to the fact of the preference right claimed by G. K. Hubbard the testimony throughout proves it to be just, and the entire transaction correct and honorable.

The evidence submitted, with but little exception, will prove, as far as the evidence of numbers, virtue, and intelligence is capable of proving, that the lands in the four lower counties are generally valued correctly, or as nearly so as the same quantity of land could well be, and will also establish the fact that no land in the Tennessee valley, for the mere purpose of cultivation in cotton or corn, is worth more than ten dollars per acre, and further proves that no blame attaches to the commissioners or any of them. It is true that, in the opinion of your committee, the act or construction of the majority of the board of commissioners in relation to the allowance of preference rights and the location of floats was a misconstruction of the statute; nevertheless your committee are satisfied that the intention of the board in these respects was the honest dictate of their better judgment, and that a statute so complicated as the one under which the commissioners acted was well calculated to produce a difficulty of construction, not easy of solution to plain, unpretending agriculturists, unskilled in the abstruseness of jurisprudence, and even not devoid of difficulty to jurists themselves.

The fact that a reduction was made of the prices first assessed by the Lawrence board of commissioners upon many tracts, to the amount of about five thousand six hundred and seventy-one dollars, is, as your committee believe, explained and accounted for in a satisfactory manner by the testimony; by which it appears that the commissioners in such reduction, after they had examined all the land assigned to their board, and were better able to determine what was the true value of the land, made the reduction with the intention and for the purpose of placing upon the said tracts of land a just price; which act of the commissioners, for the purpose aforesaid, your committee, or at least a majority of them, believe was legal and just, and correct in the discharge of their duty.

Your committee further submit, that owing to the little observance paid to the standard of value affixed upon the lands and established by the majority of the board of commissioners in the four lower counties, and the strict regard to such standard of value by the board for Madison and Morgan, the failure of uniformity in value has in a great measure been produced. Your committee believe that the majority of the board of commissioners could not legally establish a standard of value or rule of action for the several companies, and that it was the duty of each board, under the provisions of the act, to perform, according to their own observation and to the terms of the statute, the duties assigned them. Yet your committee are of opinion that the company assigned to Madison and Morgan acted with good and perfect faith; but that by the standard of value affixed by the board as aforesaid, and probably by the more exalted estimate in which those lands had been theretofore held by the inhabitants of those counties, they were induced, and in consequence did value the lands in the counties of Morgan and Madison at a rate of between twenty-five and fifty per cent. too high. Your committee therefore respectfully recommend to the legislature to pursue such measures as they may deem just and proper to produce uniformity in the valuation of said lands, in such manner as shall be equitable, that equal justice may be measured out to the occupants and purchasers, and the interest of the State protected.

Your committee are of opinion that the commissioners, under the provisions of the act, were bound to arrange the lands in three classes, and that all lands of less value than three dollars should be placed in the inferior or lowest class; yet as the commissioners were sworn to assess the true value when they believed the land was of less value than the minimum, it appears difficult to say how they could have assessed any other sum than that which they believed the true value; the committee, notwithstanding, think that the law denominated the class to which such as were valued below the minimum of the third class belonged.

Your committee believe that this was more the error of the legislature than the commissioners, and may be accounted for in this way: the legislature acted upon the belief that, from the alleged value of the land, the quantity granted would certainly be found which was worth the minimum, and more than that sum.

The committee are of opinion that the lands, as assessed by the commissioners, will command a greater sum of money than would have been produced under the auction system of the United States; for, that combinations would have been formed, and every means resorted to for the purpose of reducing the lands to a low price, which could hardly have failed in their effect, and that whatever complaint may in justice lie against the last legislature, or the commissioners, on account of injustice done to the citizens resident in the section of country where the lands lie, yet no just and veritable complaint can be made by the United States, or other States interested in the improvement contemplated to be made.

Your committee will now proceed to expose the true cause, in their opinion, as derived from the evidence, of the disappointment of all in the real value of the lands, which they conceive to be the following: First, the variable quality of the soil throughout the country, there being scarcely a quarter section of what is termed valuable land in the Tennessee valley that does not present almost every quality of soil, and it rarely occurring that, of a relinquished quarter section of land, three-fourths of it should be valuable, so far as it relates to mere soil; and the circumstance of the mode in which lands have been relinquished, a great portion of the valuable lands being retained under the eight-years' credit system, and either paid for or forfeited in July last; the relinquished lands also having been relinquished in such manner as to be compassed about by patented lands, or lands retained under the credit of eight years. Much of the relinquished land, besides, by a ruinous method of cultivation, was exhausted and rendered usually of little value to any person other than the occupant of adjoining land, or who owned the whole or some part of the land adjacent. Upon the relinquished lands the timber was in general felled, wasted, and destroyed. In the county of Lawrence, at its first settlement, the good lands were so scarce of timber as to have scarcely more than enough to enclose them once.

To these prominent and important causes may be added others of no inconsiderable weight: The unproductive crops made for many years in the valley of the Tennessee river; the low price of the staple commodity of the country, cotton, it bearing at times a price not greater than six or seven cents per pound; the great quantity of land to be had in the western district of Tennessee and in the State of Mississippi, at reduced prices, compared even with the assessed prices of the selected lands, eligibly situated in regard to commerce, and equally well adapted to the culture of cotton.

Another cause your committee will allude to: The former high prices of lands had awakened the people to a sense of sober reflection upon the subject, and convinced them that they estimated their lands far beyond a prudent, reasonable, or fair value. This induced a nearer approach to the true value, and must continue to bring about a decline in price, even actually below their real value—lands in this section of the country, as your honorable body by adverting to the evidence will perceive, having, within the course of the last twelve or eighteen months, been reduced and diminished in value from twenty-five to fifty per cent. The large quantity of land included in the donation, being brought at once into the market, has had indisputably a material effect in subtracting from the value of lands in North Alabama; so, too, the impression prevalent in some counties that the commissioners had fixed a very low valuation upon them.

Your committee deem it necessary to report the causes which, in their estimation, led to this investigation; they are the following: The magnitude and importance of the work in its national character, its utility and importance to the people of several of the States of this Union, more especially to those of North Alabama and Tennessee, together with the munificence and liberality of the grant, had induced almost every person to place a high and exaggerated estimate of value upon the lands granted. Added to this, the former enhanced and mistaken estimate of the value of land in the cotton-growing States, and the high price at which the relinquished lands have been purchased, contributed to cause even the more moderate to account the worth of the lands granted at from one to two millions of dollars. And when the valuation of the commissioners had reduced more than one third of the whole quantity of land below the minimum price of the United States, and that graduation was compared with the prices formerly given, and the fact was developed that the entirety of the land was worth only about six hundred and eighty-six thousand dollars; and, furthermore, when it appeared that the best of the land, which had been, anterior to this, purchased at prices varying from five to seventy dollars in four of the counties, were now valued at prices not exceeding ten dollars per acre, and the best lands in the other counties, also, out of which the selections were made, at prices below fifteen dollars per acre, most persons were exceedingly astonished and disappointed.

In this state of surprise, charges were made against the character and conduct of the commissioners and against the legislature, who had resorted to that method of ascertaining the value of the lands, and disposing of them. These charges were widely circulated in newspapers, probably from credence in their truth; suspicion in the minds of many was confirmed, from an impression that lands of the same class, in the different counties, under the same local circumstances, were of like value; and that, between the counties of Madison and Morgan, and the other four counties, viz: Limestone, Lawrence, Lauderdale, and Franklin, there was great disparity in point of price affixed and valuation. Besides this, after more than one hundred and twenty thousand acres of the land had been examined, selected, and valued by the board of commissioners assigned to the county of Lawrence, Judge King, one of the commissioners, resigned, and another being appointed, the new commissioner, together with the two others, reduced in price some thirty-eight or nine tracts of the land, in the valuation of which the said King, prior to his resignation, had been engaged and assisted; which reduction varied from four dollars to seventy-five cents per acre. When Judge King received intelligence of this procedure, he communicated the information to the governor. The governor thus informed, and also advised that more than one-third of the selected lands was not classed; apprised, too, probably, of the contentions between occupants about preferences, or rather the right of pre-emption, which contests had been partially settled by the commissioners, by which settlement many of the citizens conceived that their rights had suffered, communicated to both branches of the legislature the failure of compliance on the part of the commissioners with the spirit and letter of the statute; and though his excellency did not for an instant entertain the suspicion of the existence of corruption, yet he considered it his duty, and incumbent on him, to recommend an investigation.

An investigation was, in fact, due to the State, to the United States, and to the gentlemen commissioners whose characters were so deeply implicated. And if investigation was to be had at all, it behooved it to be as full, free, and unrestrained as the good name of the State and reputation of the commissioners, the importance of the work and value of the donation, required. Hence an investigation was ordered, and your committee, by each house of this honorable legislature, appointed to prosecute the inquiry, which they have done, or endeavored to do, with a zealous and impartial view to the end designed, and with as careful an observance of economy as the measure would allow.

The result of their investigation is to be gathered from a book, submitted herewith as a part of this report, containing all the facts they have been able to collect, and which they feel a pleasure in saying, in their opinion, relieves the State and the commissioners from all manner of blame, and must satisfy all of the true causes which led to the dissatisfaction which has existed, it having, for the most part, arisen from the misconstruction of the law (as before adverted to in this report) in allowing floats on cultivated lands, in allowing preferences to settlers after the 1st of June, 1828, and in the inequality of valuation; all of which, if errors, were certainly involuntary and unpremeditated ones. Your committee suppose that in the adjustment of so many subjects of controversy as were brought before the commissioners by occupants, error in decision might have occasionally occurred, as from the fallibility of human discernment might have been expected and inferred; and although this may be the case; yet your committee are filled with the conviction that your honorable body are endowed with no power to make correction; and as to the allowance of preferences after the period as designated in the act, that has certainly had no tendency to create injury to the State. A further result of the investigation has been a disclosure of the true causes which led to the placing so improper and exaggerated an estimate on the value of the donation or grant; and, what is yet more, it will, as your committee believe, evince, besides the accomplishment of two objects by no means of light import, the substantiation of our good faith, by a manifesting of the fair and just price of the lands granted, and the protection of the occupant. And your committee believe that if good faith has been observed by the legislature of the State, and by the commissioners, the deputed agents of the State, the many highly colored statements which have gone abroad, which rumor, with her falsifying tongue, has amplified and disseminated, without the stable basement of truth whereon to found them, will no longer be suffered to rest over and tarnish the fame, or clothe with the dark vestment of suspicion the fair reputation, of any individual concerned.

All of which, for your consideration, is respectfully submitted.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR RELIEF OF PURCHASERS OF PUBLIC LANDS THAT HAVE BEEN FORFEITED FOR NON-PAYMENT, &c.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1830.

MEMORIAL of the general assembly of the State of Alabama to the Congress of the United States in relation to forfeited lands within the State, and now advertised for sale by the proclamation of the President.

Your memorialists respectfully represent, that the sale of the forfeited lands in Alabama, as ordered by the President, without making provision for those who occupy and cultivate them, is an act of the government of the United States more vitally affecting the happiness and prosperity of the citizens of Alabama than any other measure of government which has been adopted since our existence as a State. The magnitude and importance of the subject, as it respects the people of Alabama, will engage, it is hoped, the earliest attention of your honorable body; and in behalf of the people we represent, your memorialists submit for your consideration the true condition of our people. In the years 1818, 1819, and 1820, our best lands were sold out by the general government to the highest bidder, at public auction, on long credits; and from causes well known to your honorable body, competition for Alabama lands was then without a parallel. Sales were made at prices so far above the true value of the lands, or above that value at which they had been estimated by reasonable men, that the people of the surrounding country, not engaged in the transactions of the day, attributed it to a frenzy among the bidders. Good lands were then bid off at prices varying from thirty to eighty dollars per acre, when lands of the like quality, equally productive and suitable for cultivation, could be purchased in the neighboring States for at or about one-fourth part of what it was agreed to be paid for them in Alabama; and inferior lands were sold at prices proportionably high. When the sales had terminated and purchasers had moved upon their lands, and bought provisions for the support of their families, they had not only drained their purses, but many of them found themselves greatly in debt. They then became convinced of their folly; and as their prospects of making future payments at such exorbitant prices was hopeless, all classes of our citizens petitioned your honorable body for relief. The justice of Congress was appealed to, and a relief, partial in its operations, was granted. Holders of certificates were authorized to relinquish them in payment of other lands; but the relief extended mostly to the large land dealers, who, after selling all that could be sold to the cultivators of the soil, were, by the acts of Congress, enabled to relinquish their hard bargains, or sell to others their certificates for relinquishment. This, however, extended no relief to a large class of our useful citizens, whose utmost exertions only enabled them to make payment on perhaps a single tract, at probably from thirty to sixty dollars per acre. Those persons have already, on the first instalment, paid in cash more than the lands are now actually worth, or could be sold for; yet, by the several acts for their relief, they were unable to relinquish and make final payment on any part of their purchase, and the enormous amount at which the lands were first bid off made it equally impossible with them to pay the remaining instalments due the government. They have, therefore, been compelled to forfeit to the government not only the lands, but all the improvements made upon them; their houses and fields, their orchards and gardens—all the comforts which years of industrious toil had enabled them to provide for their families—are now to be offered for sale to the highest bidder, at public auction, whilst the wealthy and large purchasers have, by relinquishing part of their purchases upon other parts, retained for themselves a home. Your memorialists request that your honorable body will examine the attitude in which the government of the United States must present itself to this large and useful class of our citizens. When the country was invaded from abroad; when the savage had raised the war club over the heads of the defenceless frontier, your councils weakened from apprehension of danger, your rulers trembling for the safety of the nation, and the very walls in which you are now assembled had become the scene of hostile conflagration, these people stepped forward as champions of their country and the avengers of its wrongs. Aroused by the liveliest feelings of patriotism, they traversed the inhospitable wilderness in search of the prowling savage, or lay in swamps and ditches to guard and protect against the more formidable foe. No sooner is invasion repelled, our government protected, and peace restored, than the whole scene is changed. Those citizen soldiers, so lately relied upon as the bulwark of their country's defence, and who had breasted the storm of war, are left by that very government to shift and take care of themselves. With their families, they repair to the wilderness and settle upon lands then so recently acquired by their valor; by their labor they give value to the soil; their habitations are the homes of the traveller; the lands are increased in value by their industry, when the very government for whose protection they but a short time before had made every sacrifice makes merchandise of their homes by exposing them to sale, and then bring them into competition with the wealth and avarice of the country. In this contest gain is the object, and principle and justice is trampled under foot; and many were driven from their improvements to renew their toil and give value to more land, again to be taken from them, whilst those who were enabled to bear the contest are forced to give such extravagant prices that but few were able to pay the first instalment on more than a single tract. The contest proved ruinous to all the parties concerned, and all united in their prayer to the government for relief. Those who purchased largely have been relieved either by the power given to relinquish part, or having paid the one-twentieth, and forfeited, are relieved by the issuing stock in their favor, with which they can buy other lands; whilst those who were unable to purchase more than one or two quarter sections, after having paid to government more money than the lands are intrinsically worth, are told in a proclamation, "Your homes are again at auction!" What, let it be asked, must be the feelings of our people, after such acts of unkindness on the part of their government? This question is submitted to your honorable body. It is no picture of fancy, but a correct chart of the condition and feeling of a large portion of our people, which none but a selfish and calculating policy can disregard—a policy which strikes at the root of our government, based, as it professedly is, upon the affections of the people. It cannot long expect to retain that affection if their feelings and sufferings are disregarded, and when it is also known that ours is the only government upon earth which speculates upon its people in the sale of their homes. In conclusion, your memorialists ask your honorable body to look for a moment upon the millions of acres of the public lands within the States, and then behold, in Alabama alone, near forty thousand heads of families without even an acre to cultivate or the means to purchase it. See them driven from place to place, losing their little stock at every move; or if they should think it derogating from the spirit of freemen to be the tenants of others, see them going upon lands of their government to make improvements, and as soon as their labor has enhanced the value to the amount of the cost of the land, and long before the poor occupant can raise the sum required in payment, see the lands entered over them, their labor given to others, and they with their families again driven upon the world's common, to rent or improve land which can never be their own! Your memorialists have, in behalf of the people they represent, shown to your honorable body their true condition. They have paid for their lands their full and fair value, and more than the people of any other State ever paid for the fee-simple title to the same quantity of lands. They therefore hope and believe that substantial relief by your honorable body will be given—such relief as is due from a government to its people. A government whose magnanimity in behalf of our red brethren, the Creeks and Cherokees, pays for their improvements, and assigns them a country in the wilderness, with assurance of protection, cannot, will not, take from its own citizens, who have paid the full value of their lands, the amount which they have already paid, together with their improvements, and cast them with their families upon the world without house or home.

Resolved, therefore, by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, That the executive be requested to cause a copy of the foregoing memorial to be forwarded to the executives of the several States holding public lands within their territory, and also a copy to our senators and representatives in Congress, with a request that they wait upon the President of the United States and ask a suspension of the sales of forfeited and relinquished lands within the State until Congress shall act finally on this subject; and if no means of permanent relief can be adopted by your honorable body, that the land sales will at least be postponed to a day certain, not less than twelve months from the times they are now advertised to take place.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR A LAND OFFICE AT MONTICELLO, IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1830.

MEMORIAL of the general assembly of the State of Alabama to the Congress of the United States to procure the establishment of a land office at Monticello, in Pike county.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, respectfully represents: That the public lands of the United States in the counties of Pike, Henry, and Dale, in the State of Alabama, are situated at great distance from the present land office at Sparta, Alabama, in which land district they are included, whereby great inconveniences, hardships, and expenses are experienced and incurred by those wishing to enter said land, in being compelled to travel from one hundred to one hundred and fifty miles to the aforesaid land office at Sparta, when, on the contrary, if an office was established at Monticello, many of the citizens in the aforesaid counties would be but little more than half the distance from that office. Your memorialists would further represent, that the establishment of this office would, in a particular degree, benefit those settlers in said counties of Henry and Dale, for the reasons aforesaid. Your memorialists would further represent, that the Indian lands adjacent to the town of Monticello, when purchased and brought into market, would be conveniently disposed of at that place. Therefore—

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, That the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to pass a law to establish a land office at Monticello, in Pike county, Alabama, and that our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best endeavors to procure the passage of said law; and that his excellency the governor be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the President and Vice-President of the United States, and each of our senators and representatives in Congress, with a copy of the above memorial.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Buhler, of Louisiana, reported:

The petitioner sets out in his petition, that on the 8th of March last he became the purchaser, at probate sale, of a tract of land belonging to the estate of Stephen Hackney, deceased; that Hackney became possessed of it by a deed of transfer from Mary Berryman; that it would seem that Berryman became possessed of it by a deed of transfer from the heirs and representatives of Jeremiah Kelsey; that he finds that no entry has ever been made of it at the land office at St. Helena, and that the original titles, dated August 28, 1801, are lost, and cannot be found: wherefore he prays that he may be confirmed in his title to the premises by virtue of the settlement, habitation, and cultivation of Balam Berryman and Mary, his wife.

The affidavit of Joshua Alexander, a resident in the said parish, and who, it appears, joins lands with the premises, shows that the said Balam Berryman and Mary, his wife, settled on the said land in the beginning of the year 1809 or 1810, and that they inhabited and cultivated it, raising annual crops of corn and cotton, until the said Balam died; that the widow of Berryman continued to reside on the land until she died, having previously made a title to Stephen Hackney. The title deed of Mary Berryman accompanies the papers and appears in due form and to have been regularly enrolled in the appropriate office. It is acknowledged before Charles Tessier, the parish judge of probate for the parish of East Baton Rouge, and specifies that "for the love and affection which she (Mary Berryman) bears to the said Stephen Hackney, she transfers, assigns, and sets over to him (Stephen Hackney) the plantation whereon she now resides, containing five hundred and twenty-two acres, agreeably to a plat of the same made for Jeremiah Kelsey, of the date of August, 1801, and signed by Christopher Bollings." Phil. Thomas swears that Balam Berryman and Mary, his wife, settled on the land in the year 1809 or 1810; that they inhabited and cultivated until they both died, which was for six or eight years. John Perney, sr., swears to nearly the same facts. They all describe the land as lying on the east side of the Mississippi river, adjoining lands on its upper line belonging to the heirs of John C. Faulkner, and on the lower by lands claimed by Joshua Alexander, and on the east by lands confirmed by Congress to John Cooper. The certificate of the above-named Charles Tessier, the parish judge of probate, under his official seal, shows that the sale and tranfer to the petitioner was regular and in due form. There is little doubt as to the continued habitation and cultivation from the year 1810 until the death of Stephen Hackney. The committee think that no great reliance can be placed upon the transfer supposed to be made by Christopher Bollings to Jeremiah Kelsey, nor indeed does the petitioner himself seem to rely upon it, but asks a confirmation upon the ground of the cultivation and habitation of Berryman and his wife and Stephen Hackney. The sale of the land, under and by the order of a competent tribunal having jurisdiction of the case, and the purchase by the petitioner for a valuable consideration at a public sale, being the highest bidder, seems to the committee to be conclusive evidence of the fairness of the transaction on his part. Under such circumstances the petitioner can, with much plausibility, if not justice, allege his ignorance of the fact that no entry had ever been made with the commissioners for examining such titles, or with the register of the land office in that district. The only question, then, for the committee to determine is, whether, from the facts stated in relation to the habitation of the former occupants, he is entitled to a confirmation of title to the premises. The statute of the 3d of March, 1819, seems to recognize as good and valid all titles to land in that part of the country in which these are situated, founded upon habitation and cultivation prior to the 15th day of April, 1813. That statute declares "that every person, or his or her legal representative, whose claim is comprised in the lis's or registers of claims reported by the commissioners, and the persons embraced in the lists of actual settlers, or their legal representatives, not having any written evidence of claim reported as aforesaid, shall, when it appears by the said reports, or by the said lists, that the land claimed or settled on had been actually inhabited or cultivated by such person or persons in whose right he claims, on or before the 15th day of April, 1813, be entitled to a grant for the land so claimed or settled on as a donation: provided, that not more than one tract shall be thus granted to any one person, and the same shall not contain more than six hundred and forty acres." The statute of the 8th of May, 1822, is a literal transcript of the foregoing, except that it embraces the lists of the registers and receivers of the land offices in the St. Helena and Jackson Court-House districts, instead of the commissioners who were appointed to examine titles in that part of the country.—(See Land Laws, pages 759 and 823.)

If the principle established by those acts extends to all the lands in the St. Helena and Jackson districts, (and that it does there can be little doubt,) the committee cannot avoid the conclusion that the petitioner has brought himself fairly within their equity, and is therefore entitled to relief under them. They therefore report a bill.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Susanna McHugh, reported:

The petitioner sets out in her petition that she and her husband, John McHugh, settled on and improved a piece of land in East Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana, in the month of March, 1813; that they resided thereon until December, 1814; that then her husband joined the militia under General Jackson to aid in the defence of New Orleans, where he died in consequence of great exposure and the severe duties he had to perform, leaving the petitioner and an infant son poor and destitute, who were thrown upon the bounty of her parents, indigent like herself, and she was compelled, in consequence, to abandon her improvement; that at the time she settled on the land she thought it was private property, but the claim was rejected, or at least not sustained by Congress, and that the land now belongs to the United States: wherefore she prays that she may be confirmed in her settlement right as a donation to aid in supporting herself and infant son. The facts are incontestably proved by William Shaw and Jeremiah McHugh, who are certified by the judge taking their affidavits to be old inhabitants and residents in the parish aforesaid. They likewise swear that the land is situate on White's bayou, in the said parish; and notwithstanding there have been two adverse reports previously made in this case, a majority of the committee think the petitioner, from the peculiarity of her situation, is entitled to favor; wherefore, without intending the present decision to operate as a precedent in future, they report a bill for her relief.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Dorothy Wells, reported:

The petitioner sets out in her petition that, in the year 1805, she cleared and cultivated a tract of vacant land in the parish of West Feliciana, near the town of St. Francisville; that she kept the said land in actual possession and cultivation, &c.; that her son was draughted into the service of the United States (being her only son) in the month of August or September, 1814; and that he died in the service, after continuing therein until the month of January, 1815; that he never received any compensation for his services; that she is his heir-at-law: wherefore she prays Congress to grant her as a donation the land which she has thus settled and cultivated. Mathew Bethany swears that she did clear and improve a tract of land situate in West Feliciana, and State of Louisiana, near to the town of St. Francisville, bounded on the north by land granted to William Williams; on the east by land granted to Gilbert Miles; on the south by lands unknown; and on the west by the river Mississippi. That in the year 1805 the said Dorothy Barnhill (now Dorothy Wells) built a house on the land, and in the spring following she planted corn upon it, and continued to cultivate it for three years, and that she never claimed any other land by settlement right; and that she married Benjamin Wells some time in the year 1809 or 1810.

Parson Carter swears substantially to the same facts as the previous deponent; and further, that she had the land in possession and actual cultivation from the year 1806 until the year 1811; and he further swears that all the material facts stated by Mathew Bethany, the above-named deponent, are true. The foregoing is the principal evidence before the committee. The committee are aware that the case has been unskilfully managed on the part of the petitioner; but, notwithstanding the looseness and unskilfulness with which the petition and affidavits are drawn, the committee think they present such a case as demands relief. They therefore report a bill.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Eugene Borell, of Louisiana, reported:

The petitioner states that, by himself and others under him, he has inhabited and cultivated before and ever since December 20, 1803, a certain tract of land containing six hundred and forty acres, situate in the county of Attakapas, at a place called Sheepeck, and lying upon the west side of the bayou "Cypre-mort," and which he says was not confirmed to him in consequence of his not having it registered within the time allowed by law, and gives his total ignorance of the law as a reason for his neglect in that particular, and prays that the land may be confirmed to him The affidavit of Jean Baptiste Bourgeois shows the settlement and cultivation of the claimant, that the land is vacant, and describes it to be on the bayou "Cypre-mort," and on the west side thereof, and as a part of a tract of twenty-four acres, fronting on the said bayou, by forty back, bounded northwardly by lands of the heirs of Joseph Sorrel, (or Sowel,) southerly by other lands of the said heirs, and westwardly at the depth of forty arpents by public lands. He further swears that he has continued to improve the land ever since his settlement; that he made in the beginning a very small improvement, and had a few cattle upon the land, but that he has gradually increased the improvements ever since; and that there is now twenty-four acres under good fence, (or was at the time of making the affidavit,) besides a dwelling-house, kitchen, cabins, and out-houses.

Francis Borrell swears that, from his own knowledge, all the matters contained in the affidavit of Jean Baptiste Bourgeois are true; that he himself was born in the parish of St. Mary's, is now forty-four years old, has always resided there, and is well acquainted with all the facts stated in the preceding affidavit. The honorable William L. Brent, the former representative from that part of Louisiana, certifies that the justice before whom the affidavits were taken was duly qualified to take them; that he is acquainted with the witnesses, and believes them to be honest men and entitled to credit.

The act of March 2, 1805, Land Laws, p. 518, clearly recognizes the principle of allowing to actual settlers, prior to December 20, 1803, a donation of six hundred and forty acres of land, where they have inhabited and cultivated the same. The claim seems to the committee clearly within not only the spirit, but the letter of that act. The circumstance of the claimant not having made his claim within the time and in the manner prescribed by the various statutes in those cases made and provided, your committee think ought not to be permitted to preponderate against the justice of the claim, as they have no doubt of the truth of his affirmation, that it was his ignorance of the necessity of doing so which caused him to omit it. If the principle of granting such donations be sound, the omission to make the claim at a particular time, or in a particular manner, cannot affect the abstract intrinsic justice of the proposition. The committee therefore report a bill for his relief.

APPLICATION FOR LAND ON ACCOUNT OF SERVICES OF A CANADIAN REFUGEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Wilcox, reported:

The petitioner states that he is the natural son of a Joseph Wilcox, who, he says, resided in Canada previous to the war, and left it for fear of the persecutions of enemies, and joined the United States; that he was a colonel in the army of the United States, and that he was killed in a sortie at or near Fort

Erie; that the deceased left considerable estate, which was wasted by the administrator; that he petitioned the legislature of New York to have the administrator and his securities sued on their bond for the due administration of the effects of the deceased; that before anything could be made by the suit the administrator and his securities left the State and moved to Indiana; that although the legislature of New York passed an act authorizing the attorney general to collect the money due from the said administrator and his securities, and to pay it to his mother for his use, yet he has not been able to realize any part of the said estate. He further states that he understands that his father or his legal representative is entitled to military bounty land for his services in the war, and that there is no heir or other person entitled except himself.

The committee cannot see upon what ground his father could claim bounty land, except it be as a Canadian volunteer; and if that be the ground, the statutes allowing bounties in land to that class of persons have all become obsolete, and it is very questionable whether, under any circumstances, it would comport with justice or sound policy to revive them; but in this instance the petitioner does not bring himself within any of the acts of Congress upon that subject. Therefore—

Resolved, That the petitioner is not entitled to relief.

ON AN APPLICATION FOR A GRANT OF LAND ON ACCOUNT OF POVERTY AND A NUMEROUS FAMILY OF CHILDREN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 18, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George Raymond, of the State of Ohio, reported:

The petitioner states that he had a family of eight small children when he came to the State of Ohio; that since his arrival there his wife has had three at a birth; that he is in indigent circumstances, and finds it hard to maintain his family: wherefore he prays that a tract of land may be granted to him or to his children.

If poverty, and the having of a numerous family of children, constituted a claim for a grant of land, the petitioner's would seem equal to any which could be presented; but Congress have never adopted the policy of granting lands to settlers and heads of families, and the committee do not feel disposed to change the course of policy in this respect at this time. Therefore—

Resolved, That the petitioner is not entitled to relief upon his petition.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR LAND IN LIEU OF A SIXTEENTH SECTION INTENDED FOR SCHOOLS AND PATENTED TO AN INDIVIDUAL.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 22, 1830.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi respectfully represents: That whereas it appears from representations made to this legislature that the law of the Congress of the United States appropriating the sixteenth section of land in each township for the benefit of schools in each and every county in this State has been inoperative as regards one section of land in the county of Lawrence; that a private individual (William Whitehead) located himself on the sixteenth section, near the town of Monticello, in Lawrence county, it is presumed without his being apprised of the fact; that some years after Mr. Whitehead discovered the situation in which he was placed, and drew a petition to the surveyor general, setting forth his embarrassment, and representing as a grievance the great loss and injury he must sustain by removing, and praying that the sixteenth section might be located elsewhere. Under these circumstances, it seems he was allowed to enter the sixteenth section, on which he had settled, and for which he obtained a patent. The heirs of Mr. Whitehead have continued to remain in peaceable possession of the aforesaid sixteenth section of land under the faith and guarantee of a patent from the federal government, and no wish or expectation is entertained that they can or should be dispossessed of their just and equitable claim; and whereas it further appears that no location of land has been made in lieu of the same, thereby depriving the citizens of the county of Lawrence of the benefits that might result from application of the proceeds as contemplated by the act of the Congress of the United States: wherefore your memorialists respectfully request that your honorable bodies pass a special act authorizing the location of a section of land, in lieu of the land above specified, for the benefit of the school fund in the county of Lawrence, in this State, or appropriate in money the amount which the government of the United States received for the land aforesaid, to be applied to the county and purposes named above, whenever you, in your wisdom, may think proper.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, &c.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to have the objects of the above memorial granted; and that his excellency the governor of this State be requested to forward a copy of this memorial and resolution to our senators and representatives in Congress.

ON AN APPLICATION TO CHANGE AN ENTRY MADE AT THE LAND OFFICE WEST OF PEARL RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 22, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Burris, of Mississippi, reported:

The petitioner sets forth in his petition that on or about the year 1819 one Edmund Andrews, as his friend and agent, entered for him the northwest quarter of section 21, township 3, and range 6 east, in the district of lands west of Pearl river. Not supposing that any mistake had happened, he went on to complete the payment for the northeast half of said quarter; that when he received his patent he found the lands he had purchased were worthless, barren, and useless; wherefore he prays that he may be permitted to withdraw his entry, and transfer the money to other lands. Edmund Andrews swears that he entered the land described by the petitioner as his friend and agent; that his intention was to have entered the northeast quarter of the said section instead of the northwest, and he really believes he told the register of the land office so; but, he says, it now appears that he was mistaken, or misunderstood by the register, for that the money appears to have been paid on the northwest quarter instead of the northeast.

The committee think it would be rather a dangerous precedent set were they to grant the relief prayed for by the petitioner. There appears to have been a number of cases in which persons have been allowed to withdraw their entries in consequence of mistakes; but there appear to be none like the present. It cannot but excite surprise how the petitioner could have so long remained ignorant of the mistake, or, if sooner discovered, that he did not sooner make his application to have it rectified. To grant relief in this case would be to establish this principle: that a person might enter any quantity of land, retain it in his possession, and prevent the government from selling it for ten years, and at the end of that time, (perhaps, too, after some better lands in the neighborhood should be brought into market,) if he could procure some witness to say there was a mistake in the entry, and the land not good, he might withdraw his entry, or rather surrender his patent, (for it appears in this case he has received his patent,) and receive in lieu thereof other lands. Our surprise is still further excited that such a mistake could happen, or remain so long undiscovered, when, by the act of February 24, 1810, it is made incumbent upon the applicant for the purchase of a piece of land at private sale to produce to the register a memorandum in writing, describing the tract he proposes to enter by the proper number of the section, half section, or quarter, (as the case may be,) and of the township and range, with his name subscribed thereto; and which memorandum the register is, by the said act, in duty bound to file away and preserve, and more especially as it appears from the evidence in the case, by an inference obvious and irresistible, that the petitioner, before he obtained his patent, had relinquished one-half of the quarter and retained the other; for it is clear he had in the first place entered the whole quarter. It should seem, indeed, that after the passage of the act of February 24, 1810, requiring the purchaser to present a memorandum in writing, describing the land he enters, with his name subscribed thereto, and that of the act of May 24, 1824, which provides for rectifying such mistakes, the necessity of legislation upon this subject was almost, if not entirely, precluded, and that where an irremediable mistake should happen on the part of the purchaser himself, it must be through a grossness of negligence that deserves to be punished with the inconvenience it produces. Therefore—

Resolved, That the petitioner ought not to have relief upon his petition.

ON MEMORIALS OF SUNDRY INSTITUTIONS FOR THE EDUCATION OF THE DEAF AND DUMB FOR GRANTS OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 23, 1830.

Mr. GOODENOW, from the Select Committee to whom was referred the resolution of the assembly of Ohio, and the memorials of the institutions for the education of the deaf and dumb in New York, Pennsylvania, and North Carolina, reported:

That, by estimation from the best data before us, there are in the United States between 5,000 and 6,000 deaf and dumb persons, a large proportion of whom are probably in indigent circumstances, and must, in great numbers, in despite of public and private munificence, live and die without enjoying any of the benefits derived from the use of letters, or even partaking of the greatest blessings of social intercourse.

Your committee feel that they need not expatiate upon the unfortunate, the miserable condition of these their benighted fellow-beings, or upon the claims, the undeniable claims, which their melancholy state presents to an enlightened and munificent legislature; nor need we descant upon the insurmountable obstacles which stand in the way of the efficient exercise of private beneficence, in a matter of such general import and consequence as that under consideration, when unaided and unprotected by public patronage and protection. The committee, therefore, rest satisfied that they need only present to the House the following statement:

That there are institutions already established, on firm and liberal bases, in Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, and North Carolina, for the education of the deaf and dumb, in whose hands the bounty of the nation may be securely placed, without the fear of being improvidently applied, or fraudulently diverted from its intended purpose.

The Ohio Asylum for educating the Deaf and Dumb was incorporated by act of the general assembly in 1827, and has received from that State several appropriations of money for erecting buildings, purchasing lots, &c.; and the asylum is now rising in estimation and consequence, and requires only pecuniary aid to become a respectable and efficient institution.

The New York Institution for the instruction of the Deaf and Dumb was incorporated by an act of the legislature of that State in 1817, and has, for many years, been in efficient operation, under the direction of a highly respectable and intelligent board of directors. The State of New York has cherished this institution with a munificent and enlightened spirit, having, in one instance, appropriated $10,000 to aid in the erection of its buildings, which are now completed at an expense exceeding $30,000. The institution is now prepared to accommodate from one hundred and fifty to two hundred MUTES, thirty-two of whom are to be of the poor and indigent, by the special limitation of the patronage of the State.

The Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb was incorporated by the legislature of that State some years since, and has been for several years in successful operation. "This institution contained, at the recent report of the board of directors to the legislature of Pennsylvania, seventy-nine pupils, forty-three males, and thirty-six females; of these thirty-four are supported by the State of Pennsylvania, fourteen by the State of Maryland, and six by New Jersey; fourteen are maintained by their respective parents and friends, and eleven are dependent, in whole or in part, upon the private funds of the corporation, arising from charitable subscriptions or donations." It is perhaps enough to say of this institution, "it is known by its fruits."

"The North Carolina Institution for the instruction of Deaf and Dumb" was incorporated in the year 1828 by an act of the general assembly of that State. This institution, although in its infancy, promises much in the great and benevolent design of imparting intelligence, and the power of interchanging thought, to those to whom nature has denied the high prerogative of speech, and only needs public patronage to give it efficiency and usefulness.

Your committee are further advised that other States in the Union have made liberal appropriations for the instruction of indigent deaf and dumb persons; and some of them have established and endowed institutions for the purpose upon ample and permanent bases, and have already received donations from this government, while others, possessing comparatively few in numbers of such persons, or from their situation or limited resources, have joined with neighboring States in the support and patronage of the institutions therein established. Such is the case, especially with New Jersey and Maryland, who send their deaf and dumb to New York and Pennsylvania for instruction, but would, as well as other States of the Union who have not already experienced the munificence of the general government, be equally entitled to the consideration of the national legislature whenever they should present an institution to the public prepared to receive and give effect to the patronage and bounty of this government.

Your committee would further remark that they conceive the disposition heretofore made of the public lands, especially for literary, scientific, and charitable purposes, accords with the most enlightened and noble policy of a great, free, and affluent people. The soil we tread, which daily yields to man his subsistence, is not of his own creation; it is the gift of the same Providence which has sealed the lips and closed the ears of the MUTE, who beckons at your door for relief.

In the year 1819 Congress granted to "the Connecticut Asylum for teaching the Deaf and Dumb" a township of land, or tract of land equal thereto; and, in the year 1826, a like grant was made to "the Kentucky Asylum for teaching the Deaf and Dumb;" and your committee unanimously recommend the same liberality to the four institutions in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and North Carolina, as above described, and report herewith a bill for that purpose.

CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 24, 1830.

Mr. Pettis, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Matthews Flournoy and R. J. Ward, reported:

That in 1825 the petitioners settled on and improved a tract of land on Lake Washington, in the State of Mississippi, clearing about 300 acres; that the public lands in this section of the country had not at that time been surveyed, but had been returned as unfit for cultivation. A number of persons settling in that country, the government, in 1827, caused these lands to be surveyed; and the tract of land thus improved fell within the 16th section, and was therefore reserved from sale for the use of schools within the township. The inhabitants of the township now join in the petition that section 11, in that township, be taken in lieu of section No. 16, so that the said last mentioned section may be sold by the government. The government, at the request of the inhabitants, has reserved from sale No. 11, in the expectation, it would seem, that Congress would allow the exchange.

The committee, believing the petition reasonable, and that the goverment will lose nothing, report a bill.

ON AN APPLICATION FOR A RENEWAL OF LOST CERTIFICATES FOR MONEYS PAID AND FORFEITED TO THE UNITED STATES IN THE PURCHASE OF LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 25, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Watson and George Hoppas, reported:

The petitioners state that they were entitled to two several certificates for moneys paid and forfeited to the United States on two certain lots of land, upon which they had taken the benefit of the act of May 23, 1828, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers of the public lands that have reverted for non-payment of the purchase money," to wit: one to Samuel Watson for sixteen dollars, paid and forfeited, on the southeast quarter of section No. 36, in township 6, and range 16, in the Chilicothe district, purchased the 17th February, 1820; and one other certificate, in the name of George Hoppas, for the sum of seventy-nine dollars and twelve cents, for that sum, paid and forfeited, on the northwest quarter of section No. 12, in the same township and range. That they had employed one Samuel R. Holcomb to go to the said land office, to transact the business for them, and procure the certificates aforesaid, which he did. But their said agent casually lost the certificates, and never afterwards could find them; and they pray that Congress may pass an act authorizing the register of the land office to reissue the certificates, that they may reap the benefit of them, agreeably to the act aforesaid. Samuel R. Holcomb, their agent, swears to the fact of his having taken out the certificates and lost them. No reasonable doubt exists in the mind of the committee as to the truth of the statement contained in the petition, nor can they see any danger or inconvenience to the government to be apprehended from granting the prayer of the petitioners. They therefore report a bill for their relief.

ON CLAIM OF INDEMNITY FOR EXPENSES INCURRED IN DEFENDING A TITLE TO LAND DERIVED FROM THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 25, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the widow and heirs of Joseph Hulse, deceased, reported:

The decedent, who died some time in the year 1825, was a purchaser of the United States of lands in Ohio, situated between Roberts's and Ludlow's lines. A transcript of a part of the record of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Ohio, certified by the clerk, shows that he was evicted by the judgment of the court at their January term in 1819, and that he had, on that occasion, to pay twenty-three dollars and twenty-five cents cost; upon which sum, if interest be allowed for eleven years, the aggregate sum will be thirty-seven dollars and ninety-three and a half cents, which the committee have allowed, believing that the present is a claim differing in principle from those in which interest has been refused by the government. The land which the decedent was evicted from appears to be a tract of two hundred and thirty-five acres, which, among a number of others, situated in the same way, have been valued by persons duly authorized, and for the loss of which the petitioners will be indemnified by the bill from the Senate, reported to the House by this committee some time ago, and which has not yet been acted upon. The justice of the claim appears from the documents exhibited with the petition; the committee therefore report a bill.

ON CLAIM OF INDEMNITY FOR LAND PATENTED WHICH WAS TAKEN BY AN OLDER PATENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 26, 1830.

Mr. Clay, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Timothy Risley, reported:

The petitioner claims to be indemnified for the defective title to a quantity of land, estimated to be one hundred acres, patented to him on the 8th September, 1814, as the assignee of Zachariah Sherwood, a revolutionary soldier, and located in Licking county, Ohio, on the ground that the United States, before granting his patent, had granted the same land, on the 12th January, 1801, to another person. This was not known to the petitioner till 1826; prior to which time he had paid the taxes, and been at other expenses on account of said land, and defending what he conceived to be his title to the same, amounting in all, including what he paid for the warrant, to the sum of $346, besides his time spent in the business.

These facts are satisfactorily proved to the committee; and, inasmuch as they are further satisfied that this land, which has been taken from him under a previous grant, is now worth much more than it was when the United States patented it to him, and the residue of the military lands on which any new warrant must be satisfied are now of a very inferior quality, the best selections having been already made, the committee are of opinion that he ought to receive a new warrant for double the quantity contained in the defective patent aforesaid as an indemnity for the loss he has sustained; and therefore report a bill for his relief.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR OTHER LANDS IN LIEU OF ALTERNATE SECTIONS GRANTED FOR CANALS, WHICH HAVE BEEN TAKEN BY INDIAN RESERVATIONS AND GRANTS TO INDIVIDUALS LOCATED THEREON.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 1, 1830.

A JOINT RESOLUTION on the subject of canal lands donated to Indiana by Congress.

Whereas the board of canal commissioners of Indiana represent, in their report of this year, to this general assembly, that, by a division and selection of the alternate sections of land on the margin of the Wabash and Erie canal route within our boundaries, in conformity to an act of Congress approved March 2, 1827, and it has become known that eleven thousand four hundred and seventy-eight acres and seventy-eight hundredths have been sold, and fourteen thousand six hundred and ninety acres have been permanently reserved by treaty to individuals, and three thousand three hundred and sixty acres have been located by individual grants since the passage of said act granting the alternate sections as aforesaid to this State, and that one hundred and forty-three sections of the land donated by said act is found within Indian reservations whose claim is not yet extinguished—all of which would have otherwise become State lands: Therefore—

Be it resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to procure the passage of a law to vest in this State a quantity of land equal to the quantity sold and disposed of as aforesaid, to be selected by our canal commissioners from the alternate sections reserved to the United States in the division made under the act of Congress before the said reserved lands be offered for sale, and to adopt such measures in regard to the donated sections, now in the Miami reservations, as may be deemed most advisable to secure to us the use and possession of the same at as early a period as possible.

Be it further resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR LAND IN LIEU OF A SIXTEENTH SECTION INTENDED FOR SCHOOLS, AND LOCATED UPON BY AN INDIVIDUAL.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 1, 1830.

MEMORIAL of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi respectfully represents: That whereas it appears from representations made to this legislature that the law of the Congress of the United States appropriating the sixteenth section of land in each township for the benefit of schools in each and every county in this State has been inoperative as regards one section of land in the county of Lawrence; that a private individual (William Whitehead) located himself on the sixteenth section near the town of Monticello, in Lawrence county, it is presumed without his being apprised of the fact; that some years after Mr. Whitehead discovered the situation in which he was placed, and drew a petition to the surveyor general, setting forth his embarrassment, and representing as a grievance the great loss and injury he must sustain by removing, and praying that the sixteenth section might be located elsewhere. Under these circumstances, it seems he was allowed to enter the sixteenth section on which he had settled, and for which he obtained a patent. The heirs of Mr. Whitehead have continued to remain in peaceable possession of the aforesaid sixteenth section of land under the faith and guarantee of a patent from the federal government, and no wish or expectation is entertained that they can or should be dispossessed of their just and equitable claim; and whereas it further appears that no location of land has been made in lieu of the same, thereby depriving the citizens of the county of Lawrence of the benefits that might result from the application of the proceeds as contemplated by the act of the Congress of the United States: wherefore your memorialists respectfully request that your honorable bodies pass a special act authorizing the location of a section of land in lieu of the land above specified, for the benefit of the school fund in the county of Lawrence, in this State, or appropriate in money the amount which the government of the United States received for the land aforesaid, to be applied to the county and purposes named above, whichever you, in your wisdom, may think proper. And your memorialists, as in duty bound, &c.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representative requested, to use their best exertions to have the objects of the above memorial granted; and that his excellency the governor of this State be requested to forward a copy of this memorial and resolution to our senators and representative in Congress.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA TO BE ALLOWED TO SELL THE SALINES IN THAT STATE, AND TO DISPOSE OF THE PROCEEDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 2, 1830.

MEMORIAL of the general assembly of the State of Indiana to the Congress of the United States on the subject of saline reserves.

The legislature of the State of Indiana would respectfully call the attention of Congress to the situation of some of the saline lands for working salt springs in this State, set apart for that purpose by an act of Congress of April 19, 1816, and which were not embraced in a former memorial of the last session of the general assembly, approved January 23, 1829, to wit: Section 15, township 2 north, and section 28, township 3 north, of range 4 east, in the Jeffersonville land district; and also the west half and northeast quarter of section 30, township 6, range 1, west of a meridian line drawn from the mouth of the great Miami river, in the Cincinnati land district, together with all other lands reserved for similar purposes. As these lands have failed to answer the end designed by the United States in granting the same to the State, and are rapidly deteriorating in value on account of the numerous trespasses and waste committed upon them without accountability; and as the soil is desired for cultivation, and as the proceeds (if said lands were sold) might be appropriated to some useful end, we, therefore, would respectfully request Congress to authorize the sale of the same by the State, and the application of the proceeds thereof for some useful purpose. Therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their exertions to procure the passage of a law authorizing the State of Indiana to sell said lands, and to use the proceeds at pleasure.

Resolved further, That the governor transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial to each of our members in Congress.

ON APPLICATION FOR BOUNTY LAND BY A SOLDIER WHO HAD OBTAINED A SUBSTITUTE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 2, 1830.

Mr. Nuckolls, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ambrose Hudgins, of Alabama, reported:

That the petitioner represents himself to have been a private soldier in the regular army in the late war, and prays Congress to grant him a small tract of land set forth in his petition in consideration of his services.

It appears from the petitioner's own showing that, before the expiration of the first four years of his term of enlistment, he employed a substitute, who, before he had served out the term for which his principal had undertaken to serve, deserted and left the army.

The committee are of opinion that this case presents no ground for the favorable consideration of Congress. The principal, Hudgins, in employing a substitute, became fully responsible for all his actions so far as pay, bounty, or emoluments were concerned, and must therefore, in these respects, abide the consequences of his desertion. To establish a different rule, would be productive of insubordination, desertion, and other evils materially affecting the discipline and well-being of the army. They therefore recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be not granted.

CLAIMS TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 2, 1830.

Mr. Nuckolls, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of John F. Girod, of Louisiana, reported:

That the petitioner sets forth that, in the year 1804, he removed to and settled in the parish of Ouachita, in the State of Louisiana, and, by purchase from different individuals claiming under the Spanish government, acquired title to, settled on, and commenced cultivating a tract of land in said parish, represented on the accompanying map by the letters A and B B, and that he has continued to reside on and cultivate the same from his settlement in 1804 to the present time. He further sets forth that the United States commissioners for settlement of land claims in Louisiana gave him certificates of confirmation for the part of said tract marked A, having a front of 19 arpents by 60 deep. He now claims the part B B, on the grounds, 1st, that by the Spanish law the front B B belonged to the tract A, as indemnity for the low and untillable land usually to be met with in running 40 arpents back; and 2d, that the said part B B was conceded by the Spanish government to Louis Radius, under whom he claims, in 1798, and had been in possession by said Radius up to 1804, and of the petitioner, who claims under him, ever since.

In support of the first ground is the affidavit of one A. Briard, who is proven by the official certificate of the parish judge to be well known to him, who, besides other facts, swears that such was the Spanish law on that subject.

In support of the second ground, the said Briard, who was syndic for the parish, swears that, when he removed to the parish in 1799, he found Louis Radius, under whom petitioner claims, in possession of a point of land, which the commandant told him (Briard) had been given to Radius, on condition of his making a bridge, road, and levee on that point to prevent dangerous inundations of the Ouachita river; and that, in 1801 or 1802, the commandant ordered him, (Briard) as syndic to see if the levees in his district were made; and on the report of the syndic, that they were not in order, Radius was compelled to comply with the conditions annexed to the gift or concession.

Mr. H. Bry, register and receiver of public moneys at Ouachita, also certifies that, in 1803, he saw Radius in possession of the land, and understood that he held it as a grant from the Spanish government on condition of making a road and levee as above set forth. He further says that, in 1804, one Choll, and Girod, the petitioner, bought this land from Radius; that Choll died, leaving Girod, the petitioner, sole owner of this land, which he has continued to occupy and cultivate ever since.

Three fractional quarter sections, containing 260.71 acres of this land, was sold as public land, in 1829, in consequence of Girod not presenting his claim, and the evidence in support of it, to the commissioners for settlement and confirmation, whereby it appeared to be public land, and subject to sale. The land thus sold was bought by one Hemkin, (agent for Girod,) who, at the time of the sale, claimed it as the land of his principal, and reserved the privilege of showing cause why the money paid for said land should not be returned to Girod.

The committee, entertaining the opinion that, if the evidence now presented to them had been before the commissioners for settlement of land claims in Louisiana, they could not have refused a certificate of confirmation for the part B B, which petitioner now asks, and that the money paid by Hemkin, as agent, cannot honestly be retained, nor that due collected without oppression on the part of the government, respectfully report a bill for petitioner's relief.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 2, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jean Frugé, claiming one thousand arpents of land in Opelousas, in Louisiana, reported:

That they have examined his case with much diligence, and with a view to do him the most ample justice. He states in his petition that he is in possession of a piece of land in the county of Opelousas, in Louisiana, situate in Mallet's woods, in the prairie of Bayou des Cannes, containing one thousand superficial arpents of land; that the same has been inhabited and cultivated by himself since 1800 or 1801, and previously by his vendor since 1798 or 1799; that he filed his notice under the act of February 27, 1813, with the register of the land office at Opelousas, to be laid before the commissioners for examining into private land claims in that part of the country; that notwithstanding he proved to the said commissioners the occupancy and cultivation beyond all reasonable doubt, yet they rejected his claim, on the ground that the transfer was not made to him in due form by the original occupant, Honaquine; and he asks Congress to confirm him in the title. On examining the report of the commissioners in the case, it appears that there was no exception taken to the evidence, and which the committee, indeed, believe to be unexceptionable. They say "it appears by the evidence of William Hay, taken November 1, 1815, that the land had been inhabited and cultivated for sixteen consecutive years preceding that date, first by Honaquine, who sold it to the present claimant about fourteen years previous thereto, but did not pass a sale (except by private deed) until within four or five years before that time." The commissioners, in rejecting the claim, give the following reasons for so doing: they say "he ought to have produced an authentic deed of sale from the previous occupant; that it does not follow that because a person occupied a tract of land in time to entitle him to a donation, but abandons his claim thereto, that another person has a right to avail himself of that settlement, and claim the land in consequence thereof, without showing a legal transfer from the original occupant." The committee have no doubt of the correctness of the commissioners' reasoning, but they do not think it applies to the present case. The transfer appears to be honestly and fairly made from Honaquine to the petitioner, as evidenced by a private deed of sale, (as they call it,) which, although not strictly amounting to a legal title, yet very clearly shows an equitable one, and such an one as the committee think would have entitled him to a confirmation of a donation, especially, too, as the claimant and his vendor had been in actual possession, inhabiting, and cultivating the premises for sixteen consecutive years previous to 1815, or, in other words, by his vendor as far back as 1799, and the petitioner himself from 1803 or 1804. And the petitioner, in order to strengthen his claim, now produces a regular deed of the premises from the original occupant to himself, duly acknowledged and recorded by the judge of the parish in which the land lies. But another question is raised by the claimant in this case. He claims a thousand superficial arpents of land, and relies solely for his title upon his vendors and his own habitation and cultivation. The committee have looked into not only the acts of Congress, but the Spanish regulations, and they cannot find in any case where the mere habitation and cultivation by an individual have ever entitled him to a donation for more than eight hundred arpents, which is equal to six hundred and eighty acres and a half only; if he claimed any additional quantity, he ought to show some record evidence to support it. But none such appearing, the act of Congress restricting the donation to six hundred and forty acres, and the committee not discovering anything in the case to induce them to depart from the usual course, are disposed to grant him a donation for the quantity of land allowed by the acts of Congress They therefore report a bill confirming to him a title for six hundred and forty acres.

21st Congress.] No. 822. [1st Session.

ON AN APPLICATION FOR COMPENSATION FOR DEFICIENCY IN THE QUANTITY OF LAND PURCHASED OF THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 2, 1830.

Mr. Irvin, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the House to inquire into the expediency of making compensation to William Henry for the deficiency in the quantity of a tract of land by him purchased of the United States at the land office at Jeffersonville, in the State of Indiana, reported:

That, on the 19th day of October, 1820, William Henry purchased of the United States, at the Jeffersonville land office, for one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, the south half of fractional section six, in township seven north, of range eight east, containing 235 acres and fifteen hundredths of an acre, and received a patent therefor dated the 17th day of December, 1821. Mr. Henry now alleges that this tract of land contains only 197 acres and one rod, and claims compensation for the deficiency.

To prove this deficiency, a survey made by the county surveyor of Jennings county, in Indiana, supported by his affidavit, is relied upon by the petitioner. The surveyor makes the contents of the half section to be 197 acres and one rod.

By a comparison of this survey with the records of the original survey, the committee are satisfied that the survey made by the county surveyor is incorrect. The fractional section, of which Henry's land was a part, was caused by what is called the old boundary line. The northeast corner of this half section, by the original survey, is six chains and seventy-seven links north of the old boundary line. The county surveyor placed this corner on the old boundary line, thereby actually taking from the north part of the half section six chains and seventy-seven links, which, if a like mistake was made at the northwest corner, shows that the half section contains more than the quantity expressed in the patent.

The act of Congress of May 18, 1796, for the sale of the lands northwest of the river Ohio and above the mouth of the Kentucky river, made it the duty of the deputy surveyors to cause to be marked on a tree, near each corner and within the section, the number of the section and township; and they were also required to note in their field-books the names of the corner trees marked. By an act of February 11, 1805, concerning the mode of surveying the public lands of the United States, it is provided that the boundaries and contents of the several sections, half sections, and quarter sections, shall be ascertained in conformity with the following principles:

1st. All the corners marked in the surveys returned by the surveyor general shall be established as the proper corners of sections and subdivisions of sections, which they were intended to designate; and the corners of half and quarter sections not marked in said surveys shall be placed as nearly as possible equidistant from those two corners which stand on the same line.

2d. The boundary lines actually run and marked in the surveys returned shall be established as the proper boundary lines of the sections or subdivisions for which they were intended; and the length of such lines as returned by the surveyor general shall be held and considered as the true length thereof; and the boundary lines which shall not have been actually run and marked as aforesaid shall be ascertained by running straight lines from the established corners to the opposite corresponding corners.

3d. Each section or subdivision of section, the contents whereof shall have been returned by the surveyor general, shall be held and considered as containing the exact quantity expressed in the return; and the half sections and quarter sections, the contents whereof shall not have been thus returned, shall be held and considered as containing the one-half, or the one-fourth, respectively, of the returned contents of the section of which they make part.

It is the opinion of the committee that the corners made by deputy surveyors, and noted in their respective field-books, became fixed boundaries, and cannot be changed, if an inequality is thereby produced in sections, half sections, or quarter sections. In the instance before the committee, the difficulty has been produced by a departure from this rule.

The sales of the public lands have been made with a knowledge of existing laws by the purchasers, and it was universally understood that the purchaser had no claim on the government if the tract purchased did not contain the quantity expressed in the return to the surveyor general. The chance of getting more or less was equal, and he ran the risk. Heretofore little or no discontent has prevailed on this subject; but if the door is once opened, and a compensation made for a deficiency, it is difficult to tell when or where it will end. The committee would be unwilling, if the deficiency did exist, to comply with the request of the petitioner, as it would be the means of producing discontent, and of innumerable applications to Congress for a like compensation; they therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

21st Congress.] No. 823. [1st Session.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA RESPECTING SCHOOL LANDS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 3, 1830.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Indiana, respectfully represent: That in many instances the inhabitants of military districts, reserved townships, and such fractional townships as have the sixteenth section destroyed by water-courses running through them, are deprived of the advantages of a section for school purposes, to which they would otherwise be entitled.

Your memorialists are aware that under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain townships and fractional townships not before provided for," approved May 20, 1826, it is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall select lands, in lieu of those to which such townships or fractional townships were entitled, out of any unappropriated public lands within the land district where the township for which any tract is solicited may be situated; but this provision, your memorialists humbly conceive, is of but little advantage to the inhabitants interested. Your memorialists would remind your honorable body that the land districts out of which it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to select the tracts intended for the benefit of the destitute townships have generally been in the market for ten or fifteen years past, and that all the good lands within their boundaries have long since been taken up by purchasers at the United States land offices.

Your memorialists therefore pray that Congress will pass an act authorizing the registers of the land offices in the several land districts in this State where any district, township, or fractional township of land shall be situated, and shall be destitute of the sixteenth section aforesaid, to issue scrip to the inhabitants of such district or township, at the rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents for each acre of land, to which by the laws of Congress they are entitled, and also that the same provisions may be extended to each and every township in our State where the sixteenth section will not sell for one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best endeavors to procure the passage of the act aforesaid; and that his excellency the governor be requested to forward to each of our senators and representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing memorial.

ROSS SMILEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved January 25, 1830.

ON GRANTING LAND TO A CANADIAN REFUGEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 3, 1830.

Mr. Sterigere, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition of Dr. Eliakim Crosby, and the accompanying documents, reported:

That they have carefully examined the testimony in this case, which is of the most ample and respectable character, and find that it is conclusively proven that the petitioner emigrated from Litchfield, Connecticut, in 1804, to the province of Upper Canada, and settled in London district, in said province. That he had been extensively engaged in the line of his profession and in agricultural and mercantile pursuits until the breaking out of the war of 1812 between the United States and Great Britain, when he had accumulated real estate of various kinds of more than $10,000 in value, besides personal property of perhaps an equal amount, and had sustained the most unblemished reputation. He was known to be attached to the institutions, government, and people of the United States, and, after the war, became an object of suspicion to the British agents in the province. He knew that the oath of allegiance to Great Britain would be tendered to him, and that a refusal to take it would subject his property to confiscation, and himself to imprisonment, and his family to distress. Under these circumstances, his native country could not have looked for the sacrifices he made. If he had permitted no regard for his native country to influence him, he might have remained with his family in affluence and comfort; but, influenced by the most patriotic motives, and relying on the protection of his country, which he conceived was held out to him by General Hull's proclamation, he determined to abandon his home and his valuable property and espouse the American cause; and, accordingly, with his family in a destitute condition, having nothing but their clothing and a little bedding, crossed the lines and joined the American army early in the year 1814. He was soon after appointed a surgeon to a corps of Canadian volunteers, in which he served to the end of the war. When he left Canada he was largely engaged in his profession and in mercantile business, was the owner of several tracts of land with improvements, of a valuable distillery, two taverns, and three-fourth parts of a very valuable flour-mill and saw-mill on Patterson creek, seven or eight miles from Lake Erie, and other real and personal estate, all of which, on his going to the United States, was taken possession of by the agent of the British government and confiscated, pursuant to the 84th George III, and himself declared a traitor for having joined the American army. The flour-mill was in the possession of a British force, and principally supplied the British army in that quarter with flour till November, 1814, when it was destroyed by the order of General McArthur (who was then on an expedition through Canada) to deprive the enemy of the means of carrying on their expedition against Detroit. The Hon. Thomas P. Macon was present at the destruction of the mill. Dr. Crosby has been much harassed by his creditors from Canada since peace, and has been compelled to pay the debts due to them with considerable costs, whilst he has been unable to collect any debts due him in Canada. He has no legal claim on the government of the United States for these losses the committee admit; but his claims address themselves strongly to the justice of Congress, and are sustained by the spirit of the act of 1816 for the relief of the Canadian refugees, which, it is believed, does not, in terms, embrace his case. If, however, it did, the committee are of opinion it does not afford any relief commensurate with the sacrifices, sufferings, and services he endured for the American cause.

The petitioner's claim and case very much resemble that of Andrew Westbrook, which has passed the House without objection, and embraces the very same principle; and, as Crosby has shown an equal devotion to the interests of his native country, the committee recommend he should receive the same relief that was granted to Westbrook. They therefore report a bill granting him warrants for two sections of land, to be located on any lands of the United States which are now subject to location by the existing laws.

CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 5, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles E. Coctlogon, of the kingdom of France, reported:

The petitioner claims two tracts of lands near Natchez, in the State of Mississippi, of four leagues square each, amounting in the whole to upwards of one hundred and eighty-four thousand acres. To support his claim he shows a copy of an article of agreement between his ancestor (with many others) on the one part, and the West India Company on the other part, purporting to be executed at Paris, in the kingdom of France, on the 14th September, 1719, in which that company proposes, upon certain conditions, to grant them (the ancestor and others) a freehold of the above description, to be chosen by the managers of their society when they shall arrive at the place. Without examining very minutely into the history of those times, of the grant to Sieur Anthony Crozat by the crown of France, in 1712, of the country of Louisiana; his surrender of it in 1717; the regranting thereof to the West India (or Western) Company in the same year; the surrender of their charter again to the crown of France in 1730; the subsequent dispersion of the colonists therefrom by the savages shortly afterwards; the transfer of the country by that government to Great Britain in 1763, and the cession of Great Britain to the United States in 1783, the committee think that every hope of success in prosecuting such a claim must vanish at the bare suggestion of its staleness. One hundred years and upwards has been permitted to sleep, and the only plausible excuse rendered by the claimant for this unaccountable delay is the successive minority in his ancestry and himself. A claim for so large a body of land could not be expected to meet with any great favor, trammelled with so many adverse circumstances as the present, being unattended with the evidence of an original legal transfer, without livery of seizen, a survey of the land has never been made, as appears to the committee. The country in which it lies has since been the subject of various conquests, conventions, and stipulations, and in all these conquests, conventions, and stipulations not a whisper has been heard favorable to this claim, to the knowledge of the committee. We are therefore irresistibly drawn to the conclusion that it cannot rest upon any very solid basis, or its magnitude and importance, before the lapse of a hundred years, would have attracted the attention of some one among the many persons interested. Therefore—

Resolved, That the petitioner is not entitled to relief in this case.

AMOUNT OF MONEY FOR PUBLIC LANDS SOLD IN 1828 AND 1829, AND THE EXPENSES OF EACH LAND OFFICE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 10, 1830.

Treasury Department, March 6, 1830.

Sir: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, directing the Secretary of the Treasury "to report to the Senate the amount of moneys received since the first day of January, 1828, for lands sold in each land district, and also the expenses of each land office," I have the honor to transmit the enclosed statements of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, marked Nos. 1 and 3, giving the desired information by land districts; and Nos. 2 and 4, arranging the same by States for the same period.

I have the honor to be, with high respect, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. the President of the Senate of the United States.

21st Congress.] No. 827. [1st Session.

ON CLAIM TO LAND DERIVED FROM GEORGIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 15, 1830.

Mr. Barton, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John Reily, reported:

That by an act of the State of Georgia, passed February 25, 1784, any citizen of Georgia, or of the United States, was authorized to obtain a warrant of survey for any quantity of unlocated land not exceeding one thousand acres, by paying therefor the sum of three shillings per annum in gold or silver, computing Spanish milled dollars at four shillings and sixpence, and half johannes at thirty-seven shillings and four pence.

It appears that under that law a land warrant was issued on the 22d of December, 1785, for one thousand acres of land to Abraham Lefavour, who, for a valuable consideration, sold and assigned the said warrant on the 18th of December, 1786, to the petitioner, John Reily. It further appears that, for some years after the petitioner became the owner of the warrant, the Indians were so hostile as to render it impossible, or at least extremely dangerous, to proceed with the survey or settlement of the said land.

In 1802 the district, including the land on which the warrant in question was to have been located, was ceded to the United States by the State of Georgia.

The committee are satisfied that the warrant in question was legally obtained by the original holder for a valuable consideration paid to the State, and that it has been assigned to the present holder for a consideration equally valuable. They are also convinced that neither the original holder nor the present owner of the warrant has received any land or other equivalent for the same.

The committee believe that, by a fair and equitable construction of the second condition in the articles of agreement and cession between the United States and Georgia, of the 24th April, 1802, claims of the character of the one now under consideration were intended to be secured. They draw the same inference from the seventh section of the act of May 10, 1800, for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, which expressly acknowledges the rights of individual claimants, and which, among other things, provides that it shall not in any respect impair the rights of any person or persons to the soil of the said territory, but that all such rights shall be as firm and available as if the law had not passed.

From the best information in the power of the committee, they are led to the conclusion that the State of Georgia sold the land claimed by the petitioner for a fair and valuable consideration. That the land thus sold was included in the transfer afterwards made by the State of Georgia to the United States, and that neither the petitioner nor Lefavour, of whom he purchased, has received any compensation therefor.

It being the opinion of the committee that the petitioner ought to be relieved, they report a bill for that purpose.

ON AN APPLICATION TO CORRECT AN ERRONEOUS LOCATION OF A NEW MADRID CERTIFICATE FOR LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Coleman Fisher, reported:

The petitioner sets forth that he employed one William H. Ashley to locate for him a New Madrid certificate of location for six hundred and forty acres of land; that the said Ashley, as his agent, surveyed and made a plat of the six hundred and forty acres in the county of St. Louis and State of Missouri, and returned the same into the surveyor's office, it bearing date April 20, 1819; that he always rested satisfied that he should be able to obtain a certificate of the register at any time when called for, not doubting but that the land, upon which the said agent fixed as a location, was vacant and unoccupied; but, to his great surprise, when he called for his certificate, in order to obtain a patent, he was told by the surveyor of the public lands that his location interfered with lands belonging to the citizens of the town of Carondelet as a commons, and for that reason refused to grant him a certificate. The petitioner further states that he was the more surprised at such refusal, because he says he had frequently recovered at law, against the citizens of the village, for trespasses upon the lands which he held under his said survey; and he prays Congress to secure him in his possession of the same. The committee are informed by the agent of the petitioner, however, that he shall be satisfied to withdraw his location and certificate, and take other lands in lieu thereof, rather than contend with the citizens of the said village concerning doubtful rights, and requests that he may have liberty to do so; and which request (the facts being proved) the committee think is but reasonable. They therefore report a bill for his relief.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Bradford, of Louisiana, reported:

The petitioner claims two tracts of land in West Feliciana, in the State of Louisiana, one for four hundred and twenty-seven arpents, and one of nine hundred and thirteen arpents. In relation to the first, he shows a purchase from the Spanish government in 1804, by Peter Robin Delogny, for a valuable consideration. That, in 1810, and on the 20th of May, the land was sold by the said Delogny at public auction, and John Murdock became the purchaser, the said Delogny having previously obtained a patent for the same from the Spanish government; that, after the death of John Murdock, the same tract of land was sold under the direction of the probate judge of West Feliciana, and Alexander Murdock became the purchaser, of whom the petitioner purchased, together with the tract of nine hundred and thirteen arpents. The petitioner shows a regular chain of title for the smaller tract, but the larger he can only claim upon the ground of habitation and cultivation, which would entitle him to no more than six hundred and forty acres as a donation; but he does not show habitation and cultivation ever since the year 1813. He is therefore entitled only to the first tract of four hundred and twenty-seven arpents by virtue of an original purchase and patent, and for which the committee report a bill.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Nicholas Girod, of Louisiana, reported:

The petitioner sets out in his petition that he claims three several tracts of land by purchase, lying in the State of Louisiana, containing an indefinite, though very great amount of land. In support of his claim he produces three several requêtes and orders of survey, issued by the Spanish government, to three several persons named therein; but shows no transfer from the original claimants to himself. Therefore,

Resolved, That the petitioner is not entitled to relief in this case.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1830.

Mr. Test, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the legal representatives of Dawson Hull and of John Hull, of Louisiana, reported:

That, from the documents accompanying the petition, it appears that the name of George Hook should be substituted as petitioner in place of John Hull, as the testimony is confined to claims in favor of Dawson Hull and George Hook; and, as the petition is not signed by the petitioners, but appears to be drawn for them by another person, they will perceive the error, and report accordingly.

Petitioners claim, in right of their respective ancestors, two tracts of land of two hundred and forty arpents each, and in virtue of habitation and cultivation. In support of these claims is produced the testimony of Jonas or James Segars, (believed to be the same person,) contained in certified copies of the notice and evidence of said claims on file in the land office at Opelousas, in Louisiana, and signed by Valentine King, register, under date of the 1st of June and the 6th of August, 1824, together with a letter from the said register, stating that it did not appear from the records of his office whether the said claims had been confirmed or not, but expressing an opinion favorable to their confirmation. Had your committee no other evidence than the foregoing, which accompanied the petition, they should consider the petitioners entitled to relief.

But, from extracts from the report of the register and receiver of the land office under date of the 30th December, 1815, and which your committee have procured from the General Land Office, it appears that these claims were entered in class No. 2, comprising claims for land founded on documents of title suspected to be counterfeit or fraudulently obtained, as well as claims founded on evidence of occupancy, and discredited by the register and receiver; and in a note, to which they refer, they say "all the claims in which Jonas Segars has sworn to the settlement have been entered in this class, his evidence being rendered questionable from the testimony of John Hughes, esq., and John Hebert." In proof of this they refer to report No. 1233.

In referring to No. 1233 it will be found to be the claim of Louis Hebert, and supported by the evidence of Joseph Segars, (which, from the report of the register and receiver, appears to be the same person as testified to the claims of petitioners by the name of Jonas Segars,) as they refer to his evidence given in No. 1233.

The witness swears that claimant has inhabited and cultivated the land for 16 or 17 years.

John Hughes and John Hebert declare that they are well acquainted with the claimant, Louis Hebert, who came to the district of Washita about thirteen years ago, and he never did reside on bayou Toupar, where Segars swears the land is situated, but has for several years resided sixty miles below, on Washita river, on land belonging to Louis Surrey. The facts sworn to by Segars in the case of Hebert, No. 1233, being contradicted by two witnesses, the former of whom is known to a member of this committee to be a gentleman of great respectability, and whose reputation for truth and veracity cannot be doubted, irresistibly leads your committee to arrive at the same conclusion as did the register and receiver who first examined these claims, and to say with them that the evidence of the witness has been rendered at best highly questionable, and that the claims should be rejected. Your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

21st Congress.] No. 832. [1st Session.

ON GRANTING LAND TO A UNIVERSITY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 17, 1830.

Mr. Clarke, from the select committee, to whom was referred the petition of the trustees of Transylvania University, reported:

The petitioners state that the principal college edifice belonging to said institution was recently destroyed by fire; that, at the same time, her valuable law library, containing about six hundred volumes, together with a considerable portion of her miscellaneous library and a part of her philosophical apparatus, were consumed; that the edifice destroyed had been erected a few years ago at an expense of about $30,000, and the other property destroyed is estimated at about $5,000; and the consequence of this heavy calamity is, that the university is at this time destitute of a building suitable for the purposes of education. Having no means to repair this loss, and feeling in other respects the necessity of aid, she applies for relief to the national legislature.

The committee have considered the petition under the conviction, common to themselves and their fellow-citizens of the United States, that the cause of literature and science is closely connected with the permanence of our free institutions and the elevation of our national character. When these important interests can be aided by the representatives of the people, consistently with other duties, there is, in the opinion of the committee, a manifest propriety that the aid should be afforded, and they are gratified at perceiving in the past legislation of Congress a sanction to this opinion.

Among the examples of the views of Congress on this subject, the committee will now barely refer to the act granting additional land, equivalent to a township, to the citizens of the State of Indiana for the use of schools, and the grant made to the trustees of the Lafayette Academy, in Alabama, for the benefit of said academy, and to the act granting a township of land to Connecticut, to aid in instructing the deaf and dumb, and also the grant heretofore made to Kentucky for the same purpose.

The committee cannot imagine a stronger case for a similar grant than that which is presented by the petition of Transylvania University. This institution, after struggling during infancy, like the region in which it is located, with hardships and difficulty, has grown with the growth of the West. Her beneficent agency has been extended in dispensing knowledge throughout that extensive and interesting country; and it is believed that, in every State which has been added to the old thirteen members of the confederacy, some of her alumni are found occupying a distinguished rank on the bench, in the legislative hall, or in the paths of the learned professions. This honorable evidence of her usefulness, though most striking, is, perhaps, less important than the stock of information which has been carried from her walls to the pursuits of ordinary life, meliorating and enriching the general mind, and fitting the citizen for the discharge of his duties as a man, and for justly estimating his political rights.

If the whole Union is interested in the social advancement of every portion of it, an institution which has, by great and disinterested efforts, diffused the blessings of education through a large region, deserves the favorable notice of Congress. She comes before it at a moment when her prospects of conferring future advantages on the public are clouded by a dire and unforeseen misfortune, and when the past exertions of the wise, the good, and the liberal, to render her the continuing source of national blessings, are menaced with disappointment. Regarding the petition with the consideration due to past services in the great cause of education, to present calamity, and to the faculty of communicating yet higher benefits to their fellow citizens, the committee report the accompanying bill.

21st Congress.] No. 833. [1st Session.

ON DISTRIBUTING THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AMONG THE STATES AND TERRITORIES FOR EDUCATION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 18, 1830.

Mr. Hunt, from the select committee appointed on the 19th of January last to inquire into the expediency of appropriating the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands among the several States and Territories for the purposes of education, in proportion to the representation of each in the House of Representatives, reported:

The title of the United States to the public lands is derived from four sources: 1st, treaties with foreign powers; 2d, cessions from individual States to the United States on the recommendation of Congress under the old confederation; 3d, compact with Georgia; 4th, treaties with Indian tribes.

By the treaty of peace concluded with Great Britain in 1783, all the claim of the English crown to the government propriety and territorial rights within the boundaries of this new empire were relinquished to the United States.

The French republic, in 1802, by the treaty of Paris, ceded to this government that immense region of country which was then called the colony or province of Louisiana; and in 1819 the King of Spain conveyed to the United States East and West Florida, with the adjacent islands dependent upon the same.

In 1802 the State of Georgia, by articles of agreement and cession, ceded to the United States all her right and title to the lands which now compose almost the entire States of Mississippi and Alabama.

For a particular statement of the contents of each State and Territory, of the donations and sales of the public lands, and other statistical information, reference may be had to the report of a select committee made upon this subject at the last session of Congress.

Within the limits of the new States and the three Territories that have been formed upon the public domain, 300,000,000 acres, including the land to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, now belong, as common property, to the United States. Beyond these limits, and comprehending all the region of country from the Gulf of Mexico through the whole width of the continent to the Pacific ocean, there is the immense amount of 800,000,000 acres more.

The treaty with Great Britain which acknowledged our independence was the result of war, undertaken in self-defence and carried to a successful termination by a countless expenditure of treasure, of which the funded revolutionary debt of $80,000,000 composed but a part, and by toils, sacrifices, and blood, too great to admit of computation. The expenditures on account of the public lands since the organization of our present government are as follows:

Purchase of Louisiana	$15,000,000
Purchase of Florida	5,000,000
Contract with Georgia, and paid for the Yazoo claims	6,200,000
Purchases of the Indian tribes	5,811,191
Incidental expenses of the sales	1,578,339
	36,029,191

Soon after the Declaration of Independence, an important question was agitated in reference to that portion of the United States, then wild and unappropriated, called the western country. Some few of the States claimed it as their own separate property. Others denied the existence of such exclusive rights, and contended that the vacant lands of the west that might fall from the crown by the united efforts of the people ought to be regarded as the common property of all the States. They were then considered as a great fund, out of which the debts of the revolution would be principally paid; and it was declared to be unjust that certain particular States should engross the whole to "replace, in a short time, their expenditures," while the others, contributing equally to the acquisition of this property and the prosecution of the war, "would be left to sink under the pressure of enormous debts." Influenced by a sense of common justice, and in pursuance of the resolution of the old Congress passed in 1780, the States of Virginia, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New York, whose claims comprehended the whole territory northwest of the Ohio river, after making some few reservations, ceded the same to the United States.

In 1787 South Carolina conveyed to the United States all her interest in the lands beyond her present boundary.

Since the adoption of the present Constitution, North Carolina, in 1790, ceded to the Union all that territory beyond the Alleghany mountains which now forms the State of Tennessee, subject, however, to so many extensive claims, previously derived from that State, that the government has realized no benefit from sales.

All the cessions conveyed to the United States the right of soil as well as jurisdiction to the territory granted, and declared, in terms similar to the language made use of in the cession of Virginia, whose title assumed to cover the whole northwestern territory, that "the land so ceded shall be considered a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the confederation, or federal alliance of said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and no other."

The domain thus vested in the United States was upon no contingency or event to revert back to the States making the cessions, or to become the separate property of individual States. It was expressly made a common fund, and a trust and authority were reposed in Congress for two general purposes:

First. The formation of new States upon the territory ceded, and their admission into the Union.

Second. The sale and disposal of the lands by Congress for the general use and benefit of all the States.

The territories purchased of France and Spain by the money drawn from the public treasury are equally the common property of the nation, although they are not held upon such express trust or condition as is contained in the cessions. Whether acquired in one way or the other, the Constitution of the United States is applicable to the whole, and the general legislation over them has ever been the same.

It has been asserted by some individuals, especially of late years, that the admission of new States into the Union extinguishes the right of the general government to the public domain within their limits, and exposes the land to immediate seizure by the individual States as their own exclusive property. This extraordinary doctrine, which goes at once to destroy the long-established title of the United States to their most valuable territory, is, in the opinion of the committee, so manifestly unjust and groundless as to require no general discussion or elaborate argument to refute it; and they will, therefore, merely take occasion to refer to a single section of the Constitution and to one of the compacts entered into by the States.

As fast as the population would admit, new States have been created upon the public domain, both within and out of the Northwestern Territory, with all the political rights of the original States; and upon their admission into the Union, they have agreed, by express compacts, that their legislatures should never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil, nor with any regulation Congress might find necessary for securing the title in such soil to the bona fide purchasers.

The Constitution, in article 4, section 3, authorizes Congress "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." The authority here given is over territory as well as all other kinds of property. No difference is made between them. If the property, whether land or personal chattles, belongs to the United States, they must necessarily have the power as proprietor to hold and possess it. And having this power without any limitation, their territorial rights, equally with their rights to the public moneys or other property, may as well exist within as beyond the boundaries of the States. The subsequent part of the above article asserts that "nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claim of the United States or any particular State." The claim or right of the United States to hold and dispose of land in particular States had been previously declared, especially in the ordinance of 1787, and is here in the most explicit manner not only confirmed, but all construction or argument drawn from the Constitution prejudicial to such right is expressly excluded.

In the exercise of the trust and authority to dispose of the public domain, Congress has directed extensive surveys, to be made into townships, sections, and subdivisions, of the most convenient form, exceeding at this time 150,000,000 acres. The whole quantity that has been sold to the 1st of January, 1830, amounts in round numbers to 22,500,000 acres, for which the sum of $37,145,876 has been received and paid towards the redemption of the national debt.

Besides this appropriation, which is for the common benefit of every State, Congress has granted one entire section of land, equal to 640 acres, in each township of six miles square, in all the States upon the national territory, amounting in the whole to upwards of 5,000,000 acres, to be enjoyed forever by the inhabitants of such township for the use of schools. It has also granted to the same States the salt springs, and one-twentieth part of the money arising from the sales of land, for the construction of roads and canals. In addition to these general grants, extensive donations have been made by particular acts of Congress for colleges, academies, numerous individuals, canals, the improvement of navigable rivers, and for other objects of local as well as national concern. Gratuities of the public land were formerly made with much caution and with a sparing hand. Of late, however, a greater liberality has been manifested, and in the years 1827 and 1828 the donations for internal improvements alone exceeded the amount of sales. Although most of those grants may be for the advancement of useful or national objects, yet, from the nature of the appropriations, they will often be partial in their operation, and confer privileges upon some sections of the country not equally imparted to others. If the whole of the public domain should be disposed of by special acts of Congress, a great increase of difficult legislation would be incurred, and with the most patient industry and purest intention, it would be impossible for Congress to make the apportionments to the different parts of the Union so as to render equal justice and give general satisfaction. The committee, however, would not be understood to imply any opinion against the policy or right of making donations when objects of great interest or of national importance are presented. On the contrary, they admit the power, and approve the policy of making such grants. In recommending an equal distribution of the money that may hereafter arise from the sales of land, it is not the wish or expectation of the committee to prevent future donations, or diminish the right and privileges of the new States, abridge the power of Congress, or restrain the exercise of any legislation in reference to the public domain. The distribution, as contemplated, will amount to no more than a mere transfer of the proceeds of sales now appropriated to redeem the public debt, when no longer required for that purpose, directly to the individual States for their common use and benefit, still leaving to Congress the same power and discretion of making grants and donations which it has ever before exercised.

In regulating the sales of the public land, the price has ever been regarded as a subject of great delicacy and importance. Whether it is now too high or too low, or should be graduated in future, the committee would not undertake to express any opinion. Some sentiments have been advanced that a liberal policy should induce Congress to reduce the price to a very low rate for the benefit of the new States, and even to grant the lands without any consideration to all who might be induced to take possession, for the purpose of cultivation. The committee are fully of the opinion that the public domain ought not to be regarded as a source of great revenue; yet it cannot be given away to individuals, nor even in any partial manner, without violating the vested rights of the States and the trust that is reposed in the general government. The price ought never to be so high as to obstruct emigration and cramp the vigorous growth of the West, or reduced so low as to encourage speculation, or depress materially the value of land heretofore purchased, or the general agricultural interests of the country, but fixed at that moderate standard which shall render the acquisition of farms easy to all persons of small means and common industry, and secure the settlement of the new lands as fast as the increase of population will admit.

The following statement will show that for the last seven years the uniform and rapid increase of sales has equalled, and probably surpassed, the progress of population, although large donations have been made within the same period. It will also appear that the average amount paid for the lands, including the auction as well as private sales, has exceeded but a mere trifle the lowest government price of $1 25 per acre:

Years.	Acres of land sold.	Purchase money.	Incidental expenses of the sale.
1823	653,319	$850,136	$71,812
1824	749,323	953,799	74,621
1825	893,461	1,205,068	72,892
1826	847,996	1,127,500	111,212
1827	926,727	1,318,006	121,281
1828	965,606	1,221,357	95,765
1829	1,240,820	1.556,122	95,127

Estimating the sales of the land for the year 1831 at the moderate quantity of 1,100,000 acres, at the minimum price, and the representative numbers of the United States at 12,000,000, the result will give upwards of $10,000 to each 100,000 inhabitants, and, judging from the operations of the past, we have confidence in the belief that for many years and perhaps centuries to come the public territory will yield an income, increasing with the growth of population, and allow of the customary grants to new States, and liberal donations to objects of general interest and importance.

A great inequality exists between the resources of the individual States and of the general government. As the latter possesses the exclusive right of indirect taxation by duties upon imports, its treasury may always be abundant, while the means of the former, depending almost entirely upon direct taxation, will be small and limited. If the separate States should realize the proceeds of the future sales, for the purposes indicated in the resolution, a sensible relief would be afforded to their burdens, and a new interest created, flowing from the diffusion of intelligence to strengthen the bonds for the preservation of the Union.

The numerous donations of public land for the purpose of education, and the appropriations of the road and canal fund to the new States, being a part of the proceeds of sales, have long been considered by different administrations as the exercise of power authorized by the Constitution. If Congress can make direct grants of land to literary institutions or to individual States, the power of granting the money arising from the sales would seem to be necessarily implied. The present resolution calls for no power of Congress which has not always been exercised, neither does it involve the right and policy of raising money by taxation, and transmitting the same to the States, but merely requires the equitable distribution of the proceeds of a common fund already belonging to the people. The Constitution, which authorizes Congress to dispose of the territory belonging to the United States, gives an express power over the public domain, and implies the power to sell and to receive the purchase money, and the consequent power to grant and appropriate the same for all purposes authorized by the Constitution.

Opinions have been expressed by some that the lands are pledged for the payment of the national debt, and that therefore the proceeds cannot be applied to other objects till the whole of that debt is extinguished. By a reference to the laws upon this subject, it will be found that it is the faith of the government, and not the land or other specific property, which is pledged for the redemption of this debt. If the land itself had been pledged, how could the millions of acres have been granted for military bounties and for other purposes without violating the rights of public creditors, which it is presumed has never been done? The provision that is made for the discharge of the public debt, called the "sinking fund," consists of nothing but the mere appropriations of money derived from different sources of revenue, and is founded entirely upon acts of Congress which may at any time be modified or repealed, and a new fund, arising from other sources of revenue, be substituted; and so long as any provision is made sufficient to fulfil the engagements of government, the plighted faith of the nation will remain inviolate. By the act of the 4th of August, 1790, the public land itself is not pledged, but the proceeds of the sales are appropriated towards sinking and discharging the debts of the United States. In like manner the duties on stills and distilled spirits, among other things, were appropriated towards effecting the same object; yet in 1802, and while a large portion of the debt was in existence, those duties were repealed. By the act of the 3d of March, 1817, all former laws of Congress making appropriations for the reimbursement of the principal or payment of the interest of the public debt were expressly abolished, and a new sinking fund, amounting to not less than $10,000,000 per annum, was created. The appropriations for this new fund were from "the proceeds of the duties on merchandise imported, on the tonnage of vessels, from the proceeds of the internal duties, and of the sales of the western lands," and also from surpluses of revenue. At the next session of Congress succeeding this act one of the sources of revenue was entirely extinguished by the act abolishing the internal duties; and cannot the same power abolish either of the other sources of revenue, or, if policy require, direct the income arising from the same to purposes other than that to which it is now appropriated?

The national debt, however, has become so reduced that the whole of the sinking fund will not be necessary, beyond the present year, for its redemption. The real amount of the funded debt on the 1st of January, 1830, was $41,522,869 00

From this may be deducted the debt, consisting of stock bearing an interest of only three per cent., redeemable at the pleasure of the government, the market value of which is now so high that it cannot be purchased at the rate limited by the existing law, consisting of 13,296,249 00

Balance 28,226,620 00

Of this balance there will be due and redeemable in 1830 only $8,017,695 00
1831 ..... 6,018,900 00
1832 ..... 2,227,364 00
1833 ..... 2,227,364 00
1834 ..... 4,735,297 00

The amount of the sinking fund which was applied to the payment of the public debt in 1829 was $12,405,005.

Under the continuance of the present system of duties, it may be safely estimated that it will not hereafter be less than $12,000,000 per annum. From a mere inspection of these facts, it is manifest that the fund will soon accumulate, and a large proportion remain idle in the treasury unless the revenue is reduced, or, in part, appropriated to new objects.

As the proceeds of the sales can be required but a short time longer for the redemption of the public debt, and may even now be dispensed with, some provision becomes necessary for their disposal hereafter. Before any appropriation was made for the national debt, the lands in the western country belonged to the individual States. Their interest still continues, and Congress, now holding their property in trust, is bound in good faith to dispose of it for their common use and benefit.

The cessions from all the States, except Virginia and North Carolina, declare generally, that the territory granted shall be for the use and benefit of the United States, and such States as may become members of the federal alliance, and for no other purpose whatever. The cessions of Virginia and North Carolina further direct that the land conveyed shall be for the use and benefit of the States, according to their several respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure. At the time of these cessions, which were made under the old confederation, except that of North Carolina, Congress possessed no power of raising a revenue by taxation, but merely made requisitions upon the different States for their respective proportions of the general charge and expense. By the 8th article of the confederation, these proportions were to be determined by the value of land, thereafter to be estimated. No valuation, however, was ever taken, and Congress was obliged to make arbitrary apportionments, founded, as must be presumed, upon the best estimate of property and the persons capable of rendering assistance to the country. In 1783 a resolution was passed recommending that the proportion of charge and expense should be determined by the number of inhabitants, including those bound to servitude for a term of years, and three-fifths of all other persons, except Indians not paying taxes. This is the precise rule which was afterwards incorporated into the Constitution for the apportionment of direct taxes and representatives among the States. In the year succeeding this resolution Virginia made her cession; and after the adoption of the Constitution, in 1790, North Carolina did the same. It may be presumed that these States had reference to the above principle for ascertaining the respective proportions of charge and expense; and, of course, the interest in the land ceded to which each State was entitled. The committee believe that such was the expectation of the parties, and that when the distribution of the proceeds is made it should be upon that principle. The rule may be applied with equal justice and propriety to the whole of the public domain. It is founded upon the basis of taxation and population; is in accordance with the Constitution; and, if the money is applied to the promotion of education, it will distribute the same to the different States and Territories, according to the number of persons to be educated and the general expense of instruction.

The adoption of the population upon which representation is founded, instead of the number of representatives in this House, as the guide of distribution, is perfectly consistent with the principle of the resolution, and will prevent any loss or inequality in the different States, particularly the small ones, that may result from fractions in the representative numbers.

The committee propose that the general distribution be founded upon the next census to be taken; that it go into operation on the 1st of July, 1831, and be regulated thereafter by every decennial enumeration. As the relative increase of population in the new States upon the public domain will be more rapid than in the old ones, they recommend that, for their benefit, an enumeration be taken at the end of five years succeeding each general census.

In relation to the application of the money arising from the public lands, the committee are well satisfied that if it be limited to any single object, the permanent and general diffusion of intelligence being so important, not only to the prosperity and honor of the country, but essential to the very existence and preservation of our republican institutions, that it presents the first and strongest claim to the attention and patronage of government. The promotion of other objects, however, is of so great and general importance, that it is worthy of consideration whether some latitude of discretion should not be intrusted to the legislatures of the different States, to select objects interesting to themselves, to which their portion of the revenue might, in whole or in part, be applied. As the resolution is limited to education only, the committee recommend the accompanying bill for that purpose.

21st Congress.] No. 834. [1st Session.

ON AN APPLICATION FOR INDEMNITY OR RETROCESSION OF LAND OCCUPIED BY THE UNITED STATES AS A GARRISON.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 19, 1830.

Mr. Baylor, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of the heirs of Jeremiah Buckley, deceased, reported:

That George Musser, Sarah Musser, John Smith and Margaret Smith, James G. Ennis and Catharine Ennis, the petitioners, represent that about June 11, 1796, Jeremiah Buckley, of the State of Pennsylvania, purchased of one T. Dubois, then of the territory northwest of the river Ohio, a tract of land containing one hundred acres, situate on the Wabash river, about three miles above the town of Vincennes, for the consideration of one hundred and forty dollars, which sum appears to have been paid, from a receipt filed among the papers, and shortly thereafter returned to Pennsylvania, and deceased, leaving the said Sarah, Margaret, Catharine, and one son, namely, Thomas Buckley, his infant heirs, of tender years; that afterwards the said Sarah intermarried with George Musser, Margaret with John Smith, and Catharine with James G. Ennis, all living now and citizens of Warren county, State of Kentucky; that the said Thomas Buckley has sold and transferred his interest in the same to the said John Smith; that the said Dubois, subsequently to the sale and contract, as above stated, to the said Buckley, viz: about the 11th of June, 1803, conveyed one hundred arpents of the said land, equal to eighty-five acres, to the United States for the purpose of erecting a garrison, &c., and made a deed of conveyance accordingly, from which it appears that the said Dubois recognized the conveyance previously made to the said Buckley, and provided therein for indemnity from the United States, in case the heirs of the said Buckley should ever call on him or his heirs for the land. The petitioners affirm that Dubois sold to the said Buckley one hundred acres, and not one hundred arpents, as represented by the deed to the United States. They now ask a retrocession of the land, and compensation for the destruction of timber, &c., during the time it was occupied by the troops of the United States. The material facts, as set forth relative to the contract by Dubois to Buckley, and the deed subsequently made by Dubois to the United States, are satisfactorily proven by documentary evidence; it is also proven, by the affidavit of three persons certified by a magistrate to be respectable citizens of Knox county, Indiana, that the United States kept possession of the said land from 1803 to about 1813; that during this time the timber was destroyed or made use of for building the garrison, &c., and that its value might be estimated at something like four hundred dollars. The committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners, as relates to the retrocession of the land, is reasonable and just, and report the bill heretofore reported by this committee at a former session of Congress for that purpose; but as respects the amount demanded for the timber and the use of the land, they propose to give a reasonable compensation, which is also provided for in the bill herewith reported.

LOCATION OF REVOLUTIONARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 22, 1830.

General Land Office, March 3, 1830.

Sir: Your letter of the 25th ultimo, covering a resolution of the House of Representatives, as to the expediency of authorizing the holders of revolutionary land warrants to locate the same on any of the public lands that have been offered for sale, was duly received, and in reply I have to state that, from information received from the Department of War, it appears that four hundred and twenty-nine warrants for land bounty for revolutionary services have been issued from January 1, 1826, to February 28, 1830. The quantity of land embraced in these warrants is sixty-two thousand eight hundred acres. Of the lands originally appropriated to satisfy the warrants issued for services in the revolutionary war, only thirty-five thousand six hundred and twenty-seven acres remained subject to location on the 1st of the present month; and it is believed that the warrants which have been issued and are yet unlocated will require a greater quantity of land to satisfy them. The lands now subject to location, although well situated in a populous country, are of very inferior quality.

It would therefore seem expedient that some further provision should be made for satisfying this description of land warrants.

The resolution enclosed by you proposes to allow the holders of this description of warrants the privilege of entering any of the public lands subject to entry at private sale. To this provision I perceive no decisive objection. I would, however, take the liberty to propose, in lieu of this provision:

That in all cases where the original claimant shall surrender the land warrant issued to him to the Commissioner of the Land Office, a certificate of stock shall be issued for the same at the rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, for the quantity of land embraced by said warrant, which certificate of stock shall be signed by the Secretary of the Treasury and countersigned by the Commissioner of the Land Office, and which certificate of stock shall be receivable in payment for any of the public lands.

This would enable the original claimant either to locate lands that were subject to entry, or to purchase lands at public sale, or to obtain money for the stock; and it would very much relieve the land officers, who would have no criterion by which they could decide on the genuineness of a land warrant, but who, from their knowledge of the handwriting of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of the Land Office, and from other precautions that would be taken, would rarely, if ever, be deceived as to the genuineness of the certificates for stock. The lands in Ohio which remain unlocated would be entirely adequate to satisfy all the warrants that have been or may be assigned by the original claimants, and should be reserved for that purpose. These provisions would effectually check speculation in this description of land warrants.

With great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

ON AN APPLICATION OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS OF LAND OFFICES FOR INCREASE OF COMPENSATION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 22, 1830.

Mr. Hunt, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of C. Downing, register of the land office at St. Augustine, in East Florida, and of W. H. Allen, receiver of public moneys, reported:

The petitioners represent that since the first establishment of the land offices the officers have furnished, at their own expense, both offices and fuel, not only for their own use, but also for the accommodation of those who have business with them. They consider that this expense is unjust, and pray that some relief may be afforded them.

By the act of April 20, 1818, the registers receive an annual salary of five hundred dollars and a commission of one per centum on all the moneys expressed in the receipts for lands sold. The receivers are entitled to the same annual salary, and also to one per centum on all the moneys received. In addition to the above salaries and commissions, they are allowed pay for certain extra services; but the amount which each one may receive in any one year for commission and salary is limited to $3,000. The committee are of the opinion that the compensation now allowed by law is sufficient, and that no addition should be made for offices and fuel, and therefore recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

The petition of the undersigned, who now do or who have heretofore held appointments under the government of the United States in the land offices in the Territory of Florida, respectfully represent that, in their opinion, the compensation that has been heretofore received is less than that paid to any of the other officers under the government, in proportion to the services rendered and the expenses incurred; that since the first establishment of the land offices the officers have furnished, at their own expense, both offices and fuel, not only for their own, but for the accommodation of those who had business with them. Though this practice has prevailed for a number of years, and apparently acquiesced in by some, yet all have believed it unjust that they should have been compelled to encounter this expense in addition to others incident to the business they were required to perform. Your petitioners feel confident that this supposed acquiescence on their part will not prevent your honorable body from granting them relief if the justice of the case requires it; and they hope this application may be taken into consideration, and such relief granted as the merits of their case may require. And, as in duty bound, they will pray.

ON AN APPLICATION FOR COMPENSATION FOR LOCATING TWO TOWNSHIPS OF LAND FOR A SEMINARY OF LEARNING IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 23, 1830.

Mr. Hunt, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the 25th of February last, directing them to inquire into the expediency of making compensation to Richard C. Allen, esq., for locating two townships of land for a seminary of learning, under the provisions of an act of Congress, in the Territory of Florida, reported:

The nature of the above claim, and the material facts in relation to it, may be seen in the following resolutions of the legislative council of Florida, marked A, and the subjoined letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, marked B:

A.

"Whereas by an act of Congress it is provided that the two townships of land reserved for a seminary of learning in the Territory of Florida shall be located in sections, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and whereas, also, it appears by the correspondence between the Secretary and his excellency Governor Duval, that the latter was authorized to locate said lands, and that the governor, in pursuance of said authority, employed R. C. Allen, esq., to locate the same, who rendered important services in making said selection, in consequence of which the last legislative council adopted a resolution giving to the said R. C. Allen two entire sections of said land for his services and expenses in locating the same: Now, it is the opinion of this legislative council that their predecessors had no right or power over the land granted.

"1. Because they have given that which they had no property or fee-simple in, and therefore the grant is a nullity in itself as respects the title to said land.

"2. Because the only effect which such a gift can have is to create an indefinite debt against the Territory, for which she has received as yet no equivalent, as the lands are reserved for a specific purpose, to be given to the State or Territory when and under what restrictions the government of the United States may please.

"3. Because it is believed that the government never intended that either the territory or the land so reserved should pay the expense of location. Therefore—"Be it resolved, That it is the opinion of this council that the said R. C. Allen should apply to the government, or the proper authority, for compensation for his services and expenses in locating said land.

"Be it further resolved, That our delegate in Congress be requested to report to the next legislative council whether the government will pay for the location of said land; and

"Be it further resolved, That the clerk be, and he is hereby, directed to forward a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions to our delegate in Congress, and that he also furnish the said R. C. Allen with a copy thereof."

Adopted November 20, 1829.

THOMAS MUNROE,
Clerk of the Legislative Council of Florida.

B.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 18, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to return the resolution of the legislative council of Florida which you transmitted to me, respecting the claim of R. C. Allen for compensation for his services in selecting, under the direction of the governor of Florida, the two townships of land reserved for a seminary of learning in that Territory. And in answer to your note, which accompanied it, I have to inform you that the law by which authority was given to the Secretary of the Treasury to locate those lands provided no compensation for selecting them, that no appropriation for that purpose has otherwise been made, and that in no instance has any allowance either for services or expenses been made by the treasury for any such selection.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. J. M. WHITE, of Florida, House of Representatives.

The committee will not undertake to express any opinion of the right and power of the legislative council of Florida to grant the aforesaid two sections of land to the said Richard C. Allen, esq., or give any advice in relation to the proper course for him to pursue in obtaining pay for his services and expense; but merely state that, in their opinion, he has no just or equitable claim for compensation against the United States, and recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to allow the above claim.

TALLAHASSEE, Florida, January 12, 1829.

DEAR SIR: By a resolution of the last legislative council a resolution passed at a previous session, for my benefit, is referred to you, and, through you, to Congress. That you may understand something more of the merits of the claim than you can do from the resolutions themselves, I beg leave to present for your consideration a few observations.

The resolutions referred to you have seen. You will recollect, also, that the first act of Congress granted for a "seminary," &c., two entire townships, to be located under the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury, one in the western and the other in the eastern land district. The selection of these townships was referred to Governor Duval, by Mr. Rush, in the fall of 1825. The governor, being desirous that the selections should be made at an early time and to the greatest advantage, urged Major Lewis and myself to undertake it, supposing from our observation and experience in these matters, our knowledge of the situation of the fine lands, &c., that we could do more justice to the Territory than any other persons here. After much hesitation on our part, and after being much importuned, I very reluctantly undertook the locations, and immediately proceeded to the business. In the winter of 1825-'26, Lewis and myself proceeded to the Chippola country, where we remained six weeks, industriously employed in traversing that country, a labor of the most arduous and unpleasant description. This examination resulted in the selection of a township which is admitted by all to embrace a greater proportion of fine lands than any other in that section of country. By acting promptly I was enabled to select this township before the township granted to the deaf and dumb asylum was located, which prevented the agent going into it for any share of his township. The pre-emption law extracted a large portion of the township referred to. Subsequently you procured the passage of a law authorizing the location of the remaining township, and the quantity extracted by pre-emption claims from the first to be made in sections. The country was extensive and but little known, being entirely unsettled, except in those parts where pre-emption claims covered the good lands, or at least left vacant but few tracts of a section, in a square form, that could be esteemed valuable or of good quality. These circumstances could not have been anticipated by me, but they added greatly to the labor and to the expenses of the undertaking. I was aware that the trust was a responsible one, and now I discovered the expenses and labor would greatly exceed what I had at first supposed, and that my only reward would probably be the ill will, sometimes abuse, of persons who wished to purchase lands which I thought it my duty to select, besides seriously affecting my interest in other respects. Often have I repented most heartily the engagement, but was urged to continue. I have frequently gone, with a party of hands employed and paid by myself, with pack horses, provisions, and camp equipments, prepared to remain several weeks for the purpose of making selections for the seminary. My expenses were necessarily very considerable. I can, at any time, convince any impartial mind that I will be greatly loser by the business if the two sections are secured to me, as contemplated by the first resolution. To convince you of the correctness of this statement, it will be sufficient to remark that many tracts have been selected and reserved by me which I could have purchased without competition and sold again, almost immediately, at from four to six dollars per acre. Many instances have occurred in which it would have been attended with no difficulty. Your knowledge of this country, and the dispersed manner in which the fine lands are scattered over its face, the labor and difficulty attending a close and minute examination so as to obtain the best lands, will enable you to appreciate my services.

I believe that it is conceded by every one that the lands reserved are the very best that could have been obtained, and that probably no other person in the country could have done the Territory more justice. Nor is it objected that the two sections is an extravagant allowance, but the idea is that the land itself ought not to be appropriated in this manner, and that the government of the United States ought to pay all expenses of location, because the law directs that the locations shall be made under the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury. I cannot believe, however, that Congress can be persuaded that the government is properly chargeable with such expenses. It appears to me that the expense of selecting, &c., is justly and fairly chargeable against the land itself. The government granted, for a specified object, two townships of land, to be "located," &c., upon any lands not otherwise appropriated, &c. Now, until these lands are selected, in pursuance of the act, the grant is not complete; it nowhere attaches; it is not available. To perfect the grant, an after act is necessary, the performance of which will be attended with necessary and unavoidable expenses. There is no provision by the grantee for the payment of such expenses. Certainly, under such circumstances, the property, when obtained, should be charged therewith. All the States which have received similar grants have paid for locating, &c.

The case is simply this: a very laborious, troublesome, and expensive service has been performed, to the entire satisfaction of those who held the supervision and direction thereof, and of all others who have taken the trouble to examine for themselves. Indeed, none have complained. These services were performed and these expenses incurred to perfect or render complete that which was before imperfect and incomplete. By them it is admitted that it has been done in an advantageous and satisfactory manner. What, then, is more equitable and just than that the same grant should be charged with all necessary expenses, and a fair compensation for services by which it has been greatly increased in value; and what could be more unjust than to detain from me a just and equitable allowance for services and a restoration of moneys necessarily expended in the performance of that service. I put it to your unbiased judgment whether, upon every principle of justice, I have not a right to demand of the grant, or property itself, such compensation. Then, as to the reasonableness of the allowance made in the first resolution, I will remark that none of the members thought the allowance too great. Several of them have informed me that they would give me a statement to that effect, and that they were fully convinced that the two sections would be quite moderate enough. Their value has been greatly exaggerated in a piece signed Junius, which I suppose you have seen. I would say the value, as he gives it, is at least double that which could be obtained in any reasonable time, if ever. Major Adair has been here and witnessed the progress of this business, and to him I beg leave to refer you for the correctness of matters of fact stated above. Should you concur in the view of the matter taken above, I hope you will interest yourself for me, and obtain the act of Congress contemplated by the first resolution. I hope you will excuse this; it was written in much haste.

With much respect, your obedient servant,

R. C. ALLEN.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 23, 1830.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the claims of James Vieux, Amable Carboneux, Paul Vieux, Pieriche Carboneux, jr., James Vieux, jr., and Joseph Vieux, for lands in the Territory of Michigan, reported:

That they have examined the evidence submitted by the claimants, together with the acts of Congress applicable to cases of this kind. It does not appear that these claims ever were submitted to the tribunal instituted to receive and examine them. Nor do the petitioners state any reason why such application was not made, or if made, why not confirmed. Nor does it appear to the committee but that these claimants may have had other lands confirmed to them. With these deficiencies in the evidence, the committee are of opinion that the petitioners are not entitled to a confirmation of their titles to the lands by them respectively claimed.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 23, 1830.

Mr. Foster, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Pierre Barnevellon, Alexander Lanclot, Louis Esteven, and Gregoire Attachos, reported:

That they have examined the evidence submitted in support of the claims of the three petitioners first named, (there being no testimony relative to the claim of Attachos,) and also an extract of the report of the register and receiver, to whom these claims were submitted in 1815. In that report said claims are embraced in class No. 7. This class of claims the register and receiver conceived ought not to be confirmed, for the reasons set forth in their report, an extract of which accompanies this report. And when the committee advert to the superior opportunity which the register and receiver had of investigating these claims, as well as of ascertaining the character of the witnesses by which they are supported, they see no sufficient reason for reversing the decision, particularly after a lapse of fifteen years.

The committee therefore recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners are not entitled to a confirmation of their titles to the lands by them respectively claimed.

ON CLAIM TO A LOT OF GROUND IN MOBILE, ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 25, 1830.

Mr. Pettis, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joshua Kennedy, praying to be confirmed in his title to a certain lot of ground in the town of Mobile, reported:

That the claim is for 20.28 arpents of land, situated in the suburbs of the town of Mobile, granted by the proper Spanish authorities before the change of government in that country.

This claim was laid before the board of commissioners for the adjustment of land claims in that section of country under the act of March 3, 1827. The commissioners report that the grant was actually made by the proper Spanish authorities, but proceed to say, that "it appearing from the boundaries that the tract claimed approaches within thirty feet of the old works of Fort Charlotte, and includes part of the parade ground, they are induced to believe that it never could have been the intention of the Spanish authorities to have made the grant," and thereupon they reject the claim.

From the testimony adduced, your committee believe that the commissioners were greatly mistaken in their supposed location of the claim. The testimony of a public surveyor, and of divers other respectable individuals, shows this misapprehension. The claim does not cover a part of the parade ground as supposed; and instead of being within thirty feet of the fort, it is 130 feet west and 100 feet south. But be this as it may, the grant was made, and it is not considered competent for us now to decide that the Spanish government should not have made a grant so near the fort. The committee therefore report a bill.

PROPOSITION TO LAY OFF A TOWN AT CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AND ANOTHER AT ST. MARK'S, FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 25, 1830.

General Land Office, March 22, 1830.

Sir: I take the liberty to enclose you a diagram exhibiting the survey of the public lands lying on Lake Michigan, at the mouth of Chicago creek, and would recommend that an act be passed authorizing the President to lay off a town at this point. Section 9 has been allotted to the State of Illinois, under the act granting to her certain lands for the purpose of making a canal.

Should the United States establish a town at the mouth of the creek, the State would probably derive much benefit by extending the lots into section 9, as Chicago creek affords a good harbor through the whole of this section.

It is understood that the waters of Lake Michigan may be drawn into the Illinois river, by a thorough cut of moderate length, and not more than seventeen feet deep at the summit; when this is effected, and the bar on the outside of the mouth of Chicago creek is so deepened as to admit into the harbor with facility vessels of the largest class navigating the lakes, Chicago must inevitably become one of the most important depots and thoroughfares on the lakes.

The government is about bringing into market a vast extent of country between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi river, which, as to the advantages of local position, fertility of soil, healthfulness of climate and mineral resources, is not perhaps excelled by any other tract of country of equal extent in the United States. The deepening of the inlet of the harbor of Chicago would essentially facilitate the sale of these lands, and promote the settlement of the country.

I would also recommend that the President be authorized to lay off a town at St. Mark's, at the junction of the Wawculla and St. Mark's rivers. These waters drain a country of no great extent, but very valuable. On this subject I refer you to the enclosed copy of a letter from General Call, the receiver of the land office at Tallahassee, and a diagram furnished by Colonel Butler.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Hon W. KANE, Senate.

WASHINGTON, March 13, 1829.

SIR: During the last session of Congress a memorial of the inhabitants of the middle district of Florida was sent to the delegate, praying that a portion of the public ground at or near the fortress of St. Mark's might be laid off in town lots and exposed for sale at public auction. What attention was paid to this memorial I am uninformed; but believing that the land department is vested with ample power to carry this plan into execution, if approved, and knowing the deep interest which is felt on this subject by the people of Florida, I am induced to present it to your consideration.

St. Mark's is the commercial depot of middle Florida. The imports and exports to and from this point are already considerable, and are increasing with great rapidity. The right to this property yet remaining in the government, individuals are prevented from making the improvements necessary for the convenience of commerce. If a few acres of land were laid off in town lots, and exposed in market at the approaching land sales, they would bring a considerable sum of money, and would contribute greatly to the convenience and prosperity of our country. Allow me to solicit your attention to this interesting subject.

Yours respectfully,

R. K. CALL.

Mr. GEORGE GRAHAM, Commissioner of General Land Office.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 26, 1830.

Mr. PETTIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joel Thomas, of Michigan, reported:

The petitioner claims a tract of 640 acres of land, on the ground of settlement and cultivation, from 1796 to 1807, under an act of Congress of the latter date.

The committee find that during the period mentioned an improvement was made on the land by another individual, (not the claimant,) and that the claimant was afterwards in possession of said tract of land, but that the time they were both in possession does not, in the opinion of the committee, bring the case within the act of Congress referred to. There in a space of three or four years, from 1796 to 1807, when this tract of land was not cultivated or improved by any person. The claimant has produced a deed from the first settler, transferring his right, but this deed was executed about the time the claim was presented to the board of commissioners, and there is no evidence to show that the petitioner went into possession under the first settler. The committee are of opinion that the claim is neither within the letter nor spirit of the act of Congress, and therefore they recommend that the claim be rejected.

ON THE APPLICATION OF MICHIGAN FOR A SECTION OF LAND TO ERECT A COURT-HOUSE AND JAIL IN EACH COUNTY THEREIN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 29, 1830.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the legislative council of the Territory of Michigan, asking for a grant of a section of land in each county for the purpose of erecting a court-house and jail therein, reported:

The memorial represents that the Territory has no funds from which it can afford any aid to the several counties in erecting their necessary public buildings. That the Territory now contains twenty-six counties; of these, fourteen are organized, and but three only have permanent buildings to serve as court-houses and jails. The memorial requests a donation of one section of land, to be located in quarter sections in the several counties, and sold under the direction of the governor, and the avails laid out in building a court-house and jail in each of said counties.

By the act of the 26th of May, 1824, a pre-emption right of one quarter section is granted to the several counties of each State and Territory where there are public lands at the minimum price, for the purpose of erecting the public buildings. The Territory of Michigan may avail itself of the above law; and as the committee perceive no good reason for extending to Michigan greater privileges than are allowed to the other Territories and the States situated upon the public domain, they deem it inexpedient to make the donation of lands as stated in the memorial, and recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the memorial ought not to be granted.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 30, 1830.

Mr. PETTIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John H. Thomas, reported:

The petitioner claims a tract of land in the western district of Louisiana, containing 1,200 arpents, under and by virtue of a concession and order of survey made by the Spanish government to one Antoine Patin. The date of the concession or order of survey cannot be precisely ascertained, but the evidence shows its existence previous to the year 1789, and shows also that it has been lost.

The evidence of several witnesses, who are represented as credible men, shows that Patin, from the year 1789 to 1803 or 1804, occupied said tract as a vacherie, and that his negroes inhabited and cultivated the land in question.

The claim was presented to the board of commissioners for the adjustment of land claims in that section of country, and was rejected on the ground that the occupation of land as a vacherie did not authorize the confirmation of the claim.

The Committee on Private Land Claims, in 1827, made an unfavorable report also on this claim, adopting the view in part of the commissioners, but intimating a contrary opinion if it were shown that Patin had no other grant of land from the Spanish government.

The register of the land office in that district proves that there is no record of any other grant to said Patin as original proprietor. The evidence is clear that this tract has been inhabited and cultivated since the year 1789, with the exception of a year or two.

The committee, however, are not satisfied to confirm the title to the whole tract, but they are of opinion that the claimant should be confirmed in his title to 640 acres of the tract under the act of Congress of March 2, 1805, and that of April 21, 1806, providing for the adjustment of land titles in the district of Louisiana. They therefore report a bill.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 845. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM OF NEW ORLEANS TO LOTS OF GROUND OR QUAYS IN THAT CITY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 5, 1830.

Mr. BURNET, from the Committee to whom was referred the memorial of the mayor, aldermen, and inhabitants of New Orleans, reported:

That it appears from the memorial that, in laying out the city of New Orleans, a number of lots or pieces of ground, called quays, were left contiguous to the Mississippi river for the convenience of the inhabitants, and that these quays have continued open and unoccupied until the present time. It appears, further, that the authorities of the city have recently undertaken to sell and dispose of them for the benefit of the corporation.

The district attorney, believing that the legal title to those lots had not been disposed of either by the French or Spanish governments before the country was transferred to the United States, and that the treaty of cession, among other things, passed it to the American government, filed a bill in the district court setting out the facts, and obtained an injunction restraining the said mayor, aldermen, and inhabitants from proceeding with their proposed sale till the title to the premises should be investigated and decided; which injunction is still pending.

The memorial prays that the injunction may be dissolved, or that a law may be passed relinquishing the right of the United States, if any they have, to the said lands, and permitting the city to dispose of the same for their benefit.

The committee are of opinion that it is not expedient at this time to enter into an investigation of the title to the premises in question, or to take any decisive step in relation to the subject-matter of the memorial until the opinion and decision of the court shall be known. They are also of opinion that Congress cannot at this time safely or prudently give to the corporation an unqualified power to sell all the said grounds without distinction, and to place them under the exclusive control of individuals, inasmuch as they cannot ascertain what effect such a measure would produce on the commerce and business of the city, or how far or in what manner the interest and convenience of individuals and of the public at large may be affected thereby.

If the ground in question, as the committee incline to believe, was set apart by the authority of the crown for the common use and convenience of the inhabitants, and if individuals have been induced thereby to purchase, settle, and improve the city lots, it is at least questionable whether the government of the United States, having succeeded to the trusts as well as the rights of the crown, would not be guilty of a violation of the public faith were they to dispose of the property for other purposes and uses than those originally intended and declared without the consent of the parties interested.

The committee therefore report to the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is not expedient at this time to grant the prayer of the memorial.

ON APPLICATION OF INDIVIDUALS FOR A GRANT OF LAND TO RAISE FOREST TIMBER ON THE PRAIRIES OF MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 21, 1830.

Mr. Barton, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the application of N. B. Tucker esq., on behalf of several citizens of Saline county, in Missouri, for a grant of a township of prairie land west of La Mine and south of the Missouri river, not containing salt or mineral, for the purpose of making an experiment of raising forest timber in the prairies, reported:

1st. That they deem the grant unnecessary for the proposed object, because it is only necessary to keep out the fire to cover those prairies with timber by the operations of nature.

2d. That the government plan of disposing of the public lands in small quantities, and thereby multiplying the freeholders interested in keeping the fires under, is, in the opinion of the committee, better calculated to attain the proposed object than to place large quantities of the lands in the hands of one or a few owners: Therefore, the committee submit the following:

Resolved, That the prayer of the applicant is unreasonable, and ought not to be granted.

ON THE PROPOSITION OF JOHN SMITH T., TO COMPROMISE WITH THE UNITED STATES ON ACCOUNT OF LANDS DERIVED FROM THE STATE OF GEORGIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 22, 1830.

Mr. McKinley, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of John Smith T., by his attorney in fact, William Kelly, proposing to release to the United States his claim to a large tract of land in the State of Alabama for the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, reported:

That the State of Georgia, by an act of its legislature bearing date January 7, 1795, sold to Zachariah Cox and Matthias Maher, and their associates, called the Tennessee Company, "all that tract of land, including islands, situate, lying, and being within the following boundary lines: beginning at the mouth of Bear creek, on the south side of the Tennessee river; thence, up said creek, to the most southern source thereof; thence, due south, to the latitude of thirty-four degrees and ten minutes north of the equator; thence, a due east course, one hundred and twenty miles; thence, a due north course, to the Great Tennessee river; thence, up the middle of the said river, to the northern boundary line of this State, (Georgia;) thence, a due west course, along the said line to where it intersects the Great Tennessee river below the Muscle shoals; thence, up the said river, to the place of beginning." And upon the payment of the sum of sixty thousand dollars, as directed by the act, the governor of said State was directed to issue a grant to said Zachariah Cox and Matthias Maher, and their associates, called the Tennessee Company, and to their heirs and assigns forever, in fee simple, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants.

Three days after the passage of this act Cox and Maher divided the whole purchase into four hundred and twenty shares, and distributed them among their associates, including themselves, according to their respective proportions in the purchase, by issuing a certificate of purchase to each person entitled, containing a promise to execute a deed in lieu of the certificate upon the payment of the one four hundred and twentieth part of the original purchase money. The memorialist appears to have been one of the association, and received his proportion of the certificates. Fourteen days after this distribution among the purchasers the governor of Georgia issued a grant to Zachariah Cox and Matthias Maher, and their associates, as tenants in common, according to the act of the legislature.

On February 8, 1798, Zachariah Cox executed an instrument of writing, by which, among other things, he gave full power to William Cox, his brother, to manage and transact "all his business as a proprietor of the Tennessee purchase," with full power to convey the same or any part thereof. In this instrument provision is made that, in the event of the death of said Zachariah Cox, the said William Cox is appointed his executor, with directions to distribute his estate as therein directed, and to pay over to the said John Smith T. one-tenth part of the entire estate of said Zachariah. To this instrument the memorialist was a subscribing witness, and on April 4, 1798, proved its execution. Under this authority William Cox surrendered up to the State of Georgia all the titles and evidences of title then belonging to or in the power and control of said Zachariah Cox, and, for and in the name of said Zachariah Cox, relinquished and renounced all claim to said purchase to the State of Georgia, and received back two thousand dollars at the treasury of Georgia, according to law, in part of the purchase money paid by said Zachariah Cox, reserving to said Zachariah Cox the right of drawing any further or future sum that might thereafter appear to be due to him. This release and receipt was sworn to and executed by the said William Cox, attorney in fact for said Zachariah Cox, at the treasury of Georgia on September 30, 1799. On March 2, 1801, the said Zachariah Cox applied, in person, at the treasury of the State of Georgia for and received the further sum of twenty-one thousand and eighty dollars sixty-one and one-third cents, the remaining part of the purchase money paid by him, as he states in his affidavit and release, then made and executed by him at the said treasury.

Previous to this last transaction, to wit: on January 16, 1800, the said Zachariah Cox conveyed "to the said John Smith T. all the lands not theretofore conveyed by the said Zachariah Cox, lying and being within the following tract of country, viz: "beginning on the Tennessee river at the mouth of Bear creek, running with the Tennessee Company's line to the source of said creek; thence along the Tennessee Company's boundary line due south until it intersects the thirty-fourth degree and ten minutes north latitude; thence, due east, to a point where a direct north course will intersect the mouth of Elk river; running thence, up Elk river, to the northern boundary line of the Tennessee Company's purchase; thence, a due west course, to the Great Tennessee river; thence, up the same, to the place of beginning."

The commissioners appointed under the act of Congress, "supplementary to the act entitled an act providing for the indemnification of certain claimants of public lands in the Mississippi Territory," had before them all the claims of the Tennessee Company for adjudication in which releases had been executed under the above-recited act. And it appears by their final decree that there were many deeds executed by Zachariah Cox such as that under which the memorialist now claims title, and many of them probably held by innocent and meritorious claimants, as between them and Cox. But in their decree the commissioners exclude all deeds executed by Zachariah Cox, and determine that those who held the certificates issued by Cox and Maher under the law of Georgia, and those holding deeds made in conformity with those certificates, were to be preferred to all other classes of claimants.

This decision the committee consider correct in principle and just in its operation, because no one could claim under a deed from Zachariah Cox alone, to be a fair purchaser, without notice of the claims of other members of the association designated by the statute creating the original right, and emphatically styled the Tennessee Company, including the grantees named in the act and grant. But the committee consider the memorialist in a worse condition than a bona fide purchaser, chargeable with constructive notice only. He was one of the original Tennessee Company, and received his portion of the certificates issued according to the spirit and intention of the act of the legislature and the grant issued thereon, and had, therefore, express notice that Zachariah Cox could not grant or convey the land included in the deed he received from him five years after the distribution under the grant to which they were both parties. He was a witness to the power, and proved its execution, under which all the claims of Zachariah Cox was released to the State of Georgia; and had, therefore, express notice of that transaction, with the powerful inducement of an interest in one-tenth part of the estate of Zachariah Cox, bequeathed to him in the same instrument, calculated to rivet it more firmly in his memory. Under all these circumstances he accepted from Zachariah Cox a deed, expressing upon its face to be for a valuable consideration, conveying nothing but the lands not theretofore conveyed by Cox within the boundaries expressed in the deed. The committee believe that the memorialist acquired no title by the deed from Zachariah Cox to the land included in it, and therefore recommend the rejection of the proposition of compromise proposed in the memorial.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The subscriber, William Kelly, of Alabama, begs leave to represent that he has a power of attorney from Colonel John Smith T., of Missouri, to represent him in disposing of his claim to lands in Alabama, or compromising with the United States.

That this claim is derived from the State of Georgia, under a grant to Zachariah Cox and Matthias Maher, and their associates, called the Tennessee Company, issued in pursuance of an act of the legislature of that State on the 24th day of January, 1795; and a deed of conveyance from Zachariah Cox, one of the grantees, to him executed, on the 16th of January, 1800, for all the lands not theretofore conveyed, in the following bounds: beginning on the south side of Tennessee, at the mouth of Bear creek; thence, up said creek, with the Tennessee Company's boundary line, to the most southern source thereof; thence, due south, to latitude thirty-four degrees and ten minutes north; thence, due east, to a point due south from the mouth of Elk river; thence due north, to the mouth of Elk; thence, up the same, to the northern boundary of the Tennessee Company's grant, (the line between Alabama and Tennessee,) thence, west with said line, to Tennessee river; thence, up the same, to the beginning.

Large grants were made by Georgia, in the same year, to three other companies. The Supreme Court of the United States have decided, in the case of Fletcher vs. Peck, that one of the grants vested a title in the grantees; that the State of Georgia had a right to make the grant, and that the possessory title of the Indians did not affect the validity of the grant. The grant then under consideration was, in all respects, similar to the one under which Colonel Smith derives his title. The court decided, also, that the State had no right to resume the title thus vested, and, consequently, that the rescinding act of 1796 was void.

The grant and deed are of record in the Department of State of the United States in pursuance of the act of Congress of 1803.

The deed was acknowledged by the maker, on the 23d day of January, 1800, before Judge Roane, of Tennessee, and recorded in the department of state of that State.

Two suits have been brought on the title of Colonel Smith, in the district court of the United States for the northern district of Alabama, and have been tried there and decided against him, and brought up by writ of error, and are now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. In the first, the deed of conveyance from Cox was excluded from the jury, because its execution was not proved, otherwise than by the certificate of Judge Roane, which the judge held to be insufficient to admit the deed to record in Alabama; and, although in fact recorded, it was, as before remarked, excluded from the jury. Exception was taken, and the cause brought up on that point. Another suit was then brought against other persons, and the execution of the deed regularly proven by the deposition of Washington Darden, the only subscribing witness then living; and, on that proof, the court allowed the deed to be read, and the jury found a special verdict, establishing the facts as contended for by the plaintiff, and submitted the law to the court. Whereupon the district judge decided that the grant from Georgia to Cox and Maher vested a legal title in them to the land it covered, as tenants in common; and that the deed from Cox to Smith would operate to the extent of Cox's legal interest in the grant, and was consequently good for an undivided moiety of the land it covered.

That this title so vested in Smith was superior to the title of the United States, under the cession of 1802; but that the defendants, so far as they held patented land, were to be considered as purchasers without notice, and to that extent the deed was inoperative:

That, as to the lands not patented, or held by certificate of further credit, he would give judgment for the plaintiff, but for the influence of a statute of limitations, passed on the 13th of December, 1816, in these words: "No person or persons, body politic or corporate, who now have, or shall or may hereafter have, any estate, right, title, claim, or demand, by virtue of any title which has not been confirmed by either of the boards of commissioners of the United States, appointed for settling and adjusting land claims in the Mississippi Territory, and not recognized or confirmed by any act of Congress, in or to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments in this Territory, shall, after the expiration of three years from and after the passing of this act, have, prosecute, or maintain any action or suit at law for the recovery thereof in any court in this Territory." This act, although not intended to prejudice these Georgia claims, but, as the judge remarked, was designed to operate on certain British claims near Natchez, was still broad enough in its enactment to cover the plaintiff's claim, and therefore he must give judgment for the defendants. That cause is also brought up to the Supreme Court, and is now pending.

After this exposition of the law by the district court, it was deemed important and prudent to take such measures as would prevent the acquisition of further titles, without accurate notice, as there was but little patented lands in the bounds of the claim. Notice was therefore published in the newspapers and in handbills, and, in many instances, given personally. It was also deemed prudent and lawful to adopt such measures as would avoid what was considered a statute of limitations, by connecting the title of Colonel Smith with the cultivation of the soil; and, for that purpose, provisional contracts have been made with such of the inhabitants as chose to do so, ascertaining the price to be given for the land they occupy, in the event of Colonel Smith's title being adjudged valid by the Supreme Court of the United States.

These contracts interpose no difficulty in the way of a compromise with the United States, as they depend entirely on the success of the title in court.

It is not designed to argue the question of title, but barely to state the points relied on.

1. A title vested under the grant and deed.—(See Fletcher vs. Peck, 6 Cr.)

2. The title so vested was a legal and not an equitable one.—(See Brown and Gilman, 4 Wh.)

3. The doctrine of notice does not apply to purchasers from the government, because the government is supposed to be incapable of committing a fraud, and every citizen is bound to know the title of his government to its public domain; and hence, in all government grants, the elder patent prevails, without regard to the fact of notice to the junior patentee.

Again, constructive notice is given to all the world, by recording a title according to law. The deed in this case was recorded according to the act of Congress of 1803, and, consequently, notice to all the world.

Again, the question of notice can only apply to purchasers from the same person: want of notice of a link in a chain of an adverse title can avail nothing; if the root be known, it is sufficient.

It is due to candor to say that the questions of notice and limitation were not argued in the district court, the argument being confined to the original question of title, without regard to these modifications. On the statute a few remarks were submitted to show that its language did not include the case; that it could only apply to such claims as might have been presented to a board of commissioners, and had not been; that this claim, being evidenced by a patent, required no confirmation; and being for more than 5,000 acres, no board had jurisdiction of it.

The law passed in December, 1816; the country had been acquired by treaty, in the fall of that year, from the Chickasaws; none of it was sold until the fall of 1818; so that there was no adverse possession until two-thirds of the time had elapsed. The law, however, does not relate to adverse possession and protect a defendant who has had three years' possession; but the time begins to run from the passage of the act. Now, it is plain there can be no suit until there is an adverse possession. The act, then, is not one of limitation, but an act pro tanto, abolishing, after three years, the judicial department of the government, and is therefore unconstitutional. It is not from any fear of the result of the controversy in the Supreme Court, but to avoid the litigation that must ensue, that the subscriber proposes terms of settlement. The United States have sold the land for high prices; for one township, including court land, upwards of $120,000 have been paid.

The contracts of the country have been made upon the idea that the United States were the legal owners of the soil, and great confusion might and certainly would ensue should a recovery be had by a paramount title. As to notice, the United States have no interest. If, as Judge Crawford decided, the title of Colonel Smith was better than theirs, and these patentees hold the land for want of notice, the United States will be as much bound to Colonel Smith for the money received, as they would be to restore it to their grantees, in the event of his recovery. If the land was not theirs, the money obtained for it cannot be. It may be well to remark, that Colonel Smith never relinquished his claim to the United States under the acts of Congress of 1814 and 1815, for compromising such claims, and of course is not bound by the decision of the board, unless the principle of that decision can be sustained by reason and authority. This, it is believed, cannot be done. The board awarded compensation to the holders of the certificates of stock in the company. These certificates were signed by Cox and Maher, the grantees, and certified that the holder of each share had paid the 420th part of the purchase money, and was consequently entitled to that proportion of the proceeds, or to the land, if it remained unsold. These certificates were not inconsistent with the right vested by the grant in Cox and Maher to sell the land, and consequently a purchaser, even with notice of them, would acquire a legal title, and the holder of stock be only entitled to his share of the proceeds.

The board considered that all those titles were equitable only, and on that assumption adjudged the compensation to the oldest equity, without considering the effect of a title legal and equitable both, contrasted with one equitable only.

Between equitable titles, it may be conceded that the elder should prevail; but if the junior equity has also a legal title, acquired without fraud upon the elder, then the legal title will prevail.

That these titles were legal so far as evidenced by grants and deeds of conveyance, (and not merely equitable, as supposed by the board,) has been ruled by the Supreme Court in the case of Brown and Gilman, in 4 Wheaton. In that case, the court settled the law on another point different from the board; and Congress have, it is believed, relieved the New England Mississippi Land Company, in part, from the effects of that mistake, although they were parties to the decision.

It may be well to state that Cox had not withdrawn his purchase money from the treasury when he made the deed to Colonel Smith on January 16, 1800. On March 2, however, 1801, he did withdraw $21,000, and upwards, as the part of the purchase money paid in by him. This could not affect the prior deed.

The subscriber is ready to submit his letter of attorney, and also the title papers on which he relies, to such committee as may have the subject under consideration, and proposes to execute a deed of relinquishment to the United States, if the sum of $100,000 shall be paid in cash or land.

All which is respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM KELLY,
Attorney in fact for John Smith T.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF ALLOWING ILLINOIS TO RELINQUISH LAND GRANTED FOR A CANAL, AND TO ISSUE SCRIP FOR AN EQUAL QUANTITY OF LAND IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 22, 1830.

Mr. Duncan, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 4th of February last, instructing the said committee to inquire into the expediency of permitting the State of Illinois to relinquish to the United States a part of the land granted to the said State to assist in the construction of a canal between Lake Michigan and the Illinois river, and of giving scrip for an equal quantity, to be receivable at any of the land offices in said State, reported:

That Congress, by an act of March 2, 1827, granted to the State of Illinois about 300,000 acres of land, being one-half of all the lands five miles wide on each side of a canal from Lake Michigan to the head of steamboat navigation on the Illinois river, (to be taken in alternate sections.) That, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 20, 1822, granting to said State the right to construct this canal, &c., the State had previously caused an accurate survey to be made by skilful engineers; an estimate of the cost was also made by them, amounting to about $700,000; that in 1829 the President of the United States sent a corps of engineers to resurvey and locate said canal, as well as to make an estimate of its cost. Under these instructions, Doctor Howard and his assistants commenced their operations at Chicago, on Lake Michigan, and progressed in the direction of the Illinois river until they were arrested by an early and unusual fall of snow.

In the progress of said survey, so far as made, which extended from the river Desplaine to the waters of the Illinois river, a distance of 32 miles, they ascertained the fact that the summit level of the country dividing the waters of Lake Michigan from those of the Mississippi river was only twelve feet nine inches above the surface of the lake; and that it only required a cut of ten feet on an average, for three miles, to turn the waters of the lake into the Illinois river; and that, after leaving the lake about fourteen miles, the remainder of the canal to the Illinois river would require nothing more than an excavation of the common soil of a depth necessary for the passage of boats.

It is believed that the original estimate, at $700,000, will fall short of the actual cost, in consequence of its having been ascertained, by the late survey, that a bed of limestone rock is found on the summit level, about four feet below the surface, which, it is thought, will increase the cost of excavation.

By the act of March 2, 1827, the said grant of land was made to the State of Illinois, with full power to sell or dispose of the same without limitation as to time or price, on the condition, however, that the said State, in case of failure to complete the canal within the time stipulated, should repay to the United States the amount of moneys received on sale of said lands.

Under the provisions of this grant, the legislature of the State of Illinois have authorized the sale of these lands, and a portion of them are now advertised for sale.

The committee are satisfied that a sale of these lands, in their present unimproved condition, and before the commencement of the canal, (although they are known to be of a quality equal to any other portion of the State of the same extent,) must result in a great sacrifice, which may defeat the primary object of the grant; and to prevent these injurious consequences, and to carry into effect the object of Congress in making the grant, your committee have reported a bill to change the mode of disposing of said lands, calculated, in their opinion, as well to protect the United States as to accomplish the original design of assisting the State in the construction of this great national work.

The bill requires said State to relinquish to the United States all its right and title to the lands in the said grant, except the privilege of retaining one-sixteenth part, and such parts as may have been sold, and to receive in lieu thereof scrip, which shall be receivable at any of the land offices in payment for lands within said State, the scrip to be issued at the rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, to be delivered to the State in the following manner, to wit: fifty thousand dollars after the passage of the act of relinquishment; and, on the exhibition of evidence to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that said sum has been duly applied towards the construction of the canal, fifty thousand dollars more, and so on until the whole sum shall be issued.

By this regulation the United States secure to themselves the faithful application of the moneys as well as the control of the sale of the lands, neither of which objects were provided for in the original grant.

In viewing this canal your committee are deeply impressed with its great national interest Leaving out of view the important fact that it passes exclusively through the lands of the United States, which, for many miles on both sides, have never been offered for sale, they beg to state that it is the shortest and most important link of connexion between the great northern lakes and the Mississippi.

It is a well-known fact that during a portion of the year, owing to low water, other communications are difficult and often impracticable, but at this point no such obstruction is found; for the Mississippi and Illinois rivers are at all times navigable for steamboats, except when obstructed by ice, making an entire and safe communication between the Gulf of Mexico, by way of the lakes, to New York and Quebec.

In time of war this canal will not only be a great convenience, and afford every facility in the defence of the country, but be a certain means of commercial intercourse between the northern and southern States; and when your committee are aware how easily the coastwise trade may be intercepted by any maritime power with whom we may be at war, they cannot forbear to urge the necessity of affording the most efficient aid of the general government for making an internal communication which shall insure an uninterrupted intercouse between the several States, who depend so much for comfort, convenience, defence, and subsistence on each other.

Your committee would not enter into a detailed statement of the whole commercial transactions which might take place, but will only remark that the sugar, rice, cotton, tobacco, and many other commodities of the south would be exchanged for the manufactures and products of the north; and through this channel the States of Illinois, Missouri, and other adjacent States and Territories will at all times be enabled to transmit their inexhaustible stores of minerals, together with their agricultural products, peltry, furs, stone, coal, &c., (the latter article, that is, coal, being found in great abundance on the route of the canal, and on the whole extent of the Illinois river,) to a market.

In concluding this report your committee would remark that, if the United States could be actuated by any such motive as gain in this exchange, the plan proposed by the bill reported is calculated to effect that object; for every fact in the history of canals goes to prove the great improvement in price of all lands through which they pass; and, as the United States will be under no necessity to sell, they will receive the increased value which is inevitable whenever the canal shall be completed.

LANDS IN FLORIDA PURCHASED BY LAND OFFICERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MAY 5, 1830.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 4, 1830.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 26th of March, instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to "inform the Senate whether any of the land lately sold in Florida was returned on the survey as swamp land; and whether any of the same has been since ascertained not to be so; and whether the surveyor general or any of his deputies, or other land officers, became the purchasers of any land so returned as swamp, and was not so," I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office containing all the information in the possession of the department.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, General Land Office, April 30, 1830.

SIR: In reply to the resolution of the Senate of the United States, bearing date the 26th ultimo, in the words following, to wit: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the Senate whether any of the land lately sold in Florida was returned on the survey as swamp land; and whether any of the same has been since ascertained not to be so; and whether the surveyor general or any of his deputies, or other land officers, became the purchasers of any land so returned as swamp, and was not so," which you have referred to this office, I have the honor to report, that some of the public lands offered for sale at Tallahassee, in February last, have been reported in the surveys as swamp land; this office, however, possesses no evidence that any of the land thus reported was not swamp land. The statement marked A shows that, at the sale alluded to, there were two tracts of land bid off, one by a deputy surveyor, and the other by a clerk in the office of the surveyor general; which tracts appear from the surveys to be low, wet, and marshy; but the office possesses no evidence that the land is not such as is represented.

At the public sale alluded to, it does not appear that the surveyor general made any purchases, nor does it appear that the officers of the land office bid off any lands that the surveys indicate to be swamp land.

With great respect, I have the honor to be, sir, your very obedient servant,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Hon. SAMUEL D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 850. [1ST SESSION.

ON AN APPLICATION FOR THE CORRECTION OF AN ERROR IN THE SURVEY OF A TRACT OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 5, 1830.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Green Prior, reported:

The petitioner states that in July, 1818, he purchased for himself and Peter Prior, now deceased, a certain tract of land in the State of Mississippi, Claiborne county, fractional section 2, township 14, range 5 east, which was said to contain 440 acres, from a Mr. Isham Arther, who had entered the same at two dollars per acre, and had paid one-fourth of the money, when the petitioner, as he represents, purchased Arther's right at an advance of $1,200. In 1822 he completed the payment to the government for 440 acres, and prays that a patent may be issued to him and the heirs of Peter Prior, deceased, of fractional section No. 2, be the quantity more or less.

When the aforesaid Isham Arther made his purchase in 1816, there had been either no survey of the above-mentioned land, or a false survey. There was, however, a plat purporting to represent a survey by which fractional section No. 2 is falsely represented to be bounded north upon the traverse of Big Black river; and according to the line upon that plat representing the traverse of the river, No. 2 contains the full quantity of land supposed to have been purchased, to wit, 440 acres. But by a true survey made since the purchase, it is ascertained that the river is much further north of the line as laid down upon the above-mentioned plat; and that if fractional section No. 2, which contains 689.50 acres according to that survey, should be extended to the river, it would contain 1,145 acres, and include the whole of section No. 12.

The diagram marked B will exhibit the false plat and the true survey. The papers marked A, C, D, and E, will explain the case at large, and show upon what grounds a patent has been offered to the petitioner.

The committee are of opinion that the petitioner is not entitled to the whole section No. 2, which has been surveyed and laid off since his purchase, by virtue of the payments already made, because neither he nor Isham Arther bought under that survey. If he claims under the above-mentioned plat of survey, which was in existence at the time of his purchase, justice will be done to him if he receives a patent of all the land in No. 2 south of the line upon said plat, representing the Big Black river, and which contains the full quantity of 440 acres, as originally represented.

The committee recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

FOR PROTECTION TO THE SURVEYORS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 13, 1830.

To the House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: The enclosed documents will present to Congress the necessity of some legislative provision by which to prevent the offences to which they refer. At present it appears that there is no law existing for the punishment of persons guilty of interrupting the public surveyors when engaged in the performance of the trusts confided to them. I suggest, therefore, for your consideration, the propriety of adopting some provision with adequate penalties to meet the case.

ANDREW JACKSON.

MAY 13, 1830.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Miss., April 16, 1830.

SIR: Your letter of the — ultimo, accompanied by my official bond, returned in consequence of not being witnessed, has been received. The omission has been supplied and the bond handed to Mr. Tichenor, as directed, which I presume will be immediately forwarded to you.

A treasury draft for $20,000, enclosed, was delivered to me by the cashier of the bank at Natchez, about one-half the amount of which is already disbursed, and, from the best information I am able to obtain, it will require an additional remittance to meet the demands on this department for surveying now nearly completed, and which is expected shortly to be returned to this office.

Mr. Turner has remained in the office, performing the duties of principal clerk, and will continue only a short time to come. I am under great obligations to him for his assistance and information in relation to the business of the office. Indeed I could not have done well without his aid, in consequence of the great quantity of business that has been executed, and when he leaves I apprehend I shall experience a good deal of embarrassment.

I foresee great difficulties in completing the surveys in the southeastern district. Resistance has already been offered by the Bowies and their accomplices to the public surveyors, as you will perceive by the accompanying extract of a letter from the principal deputy surveyor in that district; and unless some decisive measure is taken by the government to awe or punish those individuals their efforts will become more formidable, and may retard the completion of the surveys for a long time. I consider it of great importance, not only to the general government, but to the people and State of Louisiana, that the public surveys should be completed (in that district particularly) as soon as possible. The spirit for the cultivation of the sugar cane seems now to prevail extensively, and I have no doubt that lands adapted to that culture will find ready sale when brought into market. The season for surveying is now drawing to a close, and before it commences again I hope such aid will be afforded by the government as will enable the surveying to progress without molestation.

I have just received a letter from Mr. Gurley on the subject of some late confirmations of British claims by the register and receiver at St. Helena, in the district east of the island of New Orleans, a copy of which I herewith enclose to you, and have instructed the principal deputy surveyor at Baton Rouge to suspend or decline surveying any of these claims until the matter shall have been submitted for your decision. While on the subject of British claims, I beg leave to ask your attention to the situation of several in this State that come under the denomination of "reported British claims" which were confirmed to citizens of the United States by an act of Congress of July 5, 1812. In the public surveying, all the claims of this description were respected, but I am induced to believe there are many of the claimants who were not citizens of the United States at the proper date, if at any time, and consequently not entitled to the benefits of that act. Those that occur to my recollection at present are five or six claims of Augustine Provost, and one of the legal representatives of Thomas Durham. They have not taken possession of the land claimed, and there is no mode prescribed by law to test their citizenship. The only one that suggests itself to me is to survey and sell as public land such portions of their claims as have not been regranted.

When I came into office I found that Mr. Turner had previously contracted for the surveying of all the remainder of the Choctaw district lying between the Mississippi and Yazoo rivers and the Indian boundary line. The surveying has progressed until lately, but is now suspended in consequence of high water. The work of several townships has been returned to this office which contain a large proportion of first rate land not subject to inundation. Land in that part of the district is eagerly sought after, and is, as I am informed, rapidly settling by squatters. No doubt it will readily sell when prepared and brought into market.

The surveying in the southwestern district is progressing, but has not advanced as rapidly as was desirable; however, some of the difficulties which heretofore retarded the work have been removed, and it may be expected that it will progress more actively. A few townships in the district north of Red River are under contract with Mr. Turner, and I have contracted for the surveying of six or seven townships in that district, said to contain private claims; one of them embraces salt springs which have been worked eighteen years or more, and which are claimed by several individuals. These claims will not be recognized, except to represent them on the township map by dotted lines.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

JO. DUNBAR, Surveyor of Public Lands south of Tennessee.

Hon. GEORGE GRAHAM, Commissioner of General Land Office, Washington City.

Extract of a letter from A. F. Rightor, principal deputy surveyor of the southeastern district, Louisiana, to J. Dunbar, surveyor, &c., Washington, dated March 29, 1830.

"SIR: In obedience to an order from H. B. Cenas, the register of this district, I proceeded to survey the claim confirmed to the heirs of Louis de Lahoussaye, but was stopped by Stephen Bowie, saying that he would forcibly prevent the survey. I have been stopped before by James Bowie. I supposed that I could call in the assistance of the marshal to protect the surveyor, and with this expectation I went to New Orleans, and called on the marshal; but, on examination, we found there was no law to authorize him to protect the surveyor. This being the case, the surveys must now stop. The persons holding land under Bowie will never allow the survey of those lands to be made in a manner different from their wishes."

BATON ROUGE, April 6, 1830.

SIR: The register and receiver of land titles at St. Helena have issued some seventy or eighty certificates of confirmation of British claims, none of which have ever been considered by their predecessors or by the government of the United States as having been confirmed.

The certificates refer for their confirmation to the act of the 3d of March, 1819; but it will appear by that law that none were recognized as valid, as it was necessary that it should appear by the report (J. O. Corly's) that they had been sold under the provisions of the treaty of 1783, or actually inhabited and cultivated at its date. This was not the case. It is difficult to imagine a more palpable violation of the act of 1819 than the issuing of these certificates; but as they have been issued, the next step will be to have them surveyed: any attempt of this kind I should exceedingly regret at this time. These claims, it is well known, were confiscated by Spain, under the provisions of the treaty of 1783, and applications for their confirmations to Congress have been repeatedly rejected. Much sensation will be, and is already, felt on this subject, and any attempt to survey them would but increase its violence.

Measures are taking to arrest the evil, and my object in addressing you is to apprise you of the fact, and under a confident belief that you possess the power, and, if so, that you will exercise it, to arrest the surveys, unless evidence should be exhibited that they have been sold under the treaty of 1783, or inhabited and cultivated at its date.

My only motive is to do an act of justice to my fellow-citizens on the one hand, and to prevent, if possible, gross injustice on the other.

I shall be happy to hear from you on this interesting subject.

Yours, most respectfully,

H. H. GURLEY.

JOSEPH DUNBAR, Esq.

WASHINGTON, May 13, 1830.

SIR: In conformity with the wishes expressed in your note of the 11th, I have carefully examined the laws of the United States, and cannot find that any provision is made to punish aggressions upon the surveyors of the public lands while in the execution of their duty. The urgency of the case demands immediate action; and I would respectfully suggest, that if the case were made the subject of a special message, it would be more promptly attended to than if the law were introduced by a member.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

EDWARD LIVINGSTON.

CLAIMS FOR VIRGINIA MILITARY BOUNTY LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 13, 1830.

Documents accompanying the bill from the Senate entitled "An act for the relief of certain officers and soldiers of the Virginia State line during the revolutionary war."

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 5, 1830.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the justice and expediency of authorizing those persons, their heirs or devisees, whose claims to military bounty land, under the acts and resolves of the Virginia legislature, for services rendered during the revolutionary war, remain unsatisfied by reason of the reservations made by Virginia in her compacts with Kentucky and the United States, having proved deficient, to enter their claims on the public lands lying within the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, which may have heretofore been brought into market and remain unsold, or of making such other provision as reason and equity may seem to require.

Attest: WALTER LOWRIE, Secretary.

Resolution of the assembly of Virginia of the 2d of January, 1781, ceding to Congress lands on the northwest side of the Ohio river, under certain conditions and restrictions.

IN THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES, Tuesday, January 2, 1781.

The general assembly of Virginia being well satisfied that the happiness, strength, and safety of the United States depend, under Providence, upon the ratification of the articles of the Federal Union between the United States, heretofore proposed by Congress for the consideration of the said States, and preferring the good of their country to every object of smaller importance, do Resolve, That this Commonwealth will yield to the Congress of the United States for the benefit of the said United States all right, title, and claim that the said Commonwealth hath to the lands northwest of the river Ohio, upon the following conditions to wit: That the territory so ceded shall be laid out and formed into States containing a suitable extent of territory, and shall not be less than one hundred nor more than one hundred and fifty miles square, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit; that the States so formed shall be distinct republican States, and be admitted members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States; that Virginia shall be allowed and fully reimbursed by the United States her actual expenses in reducing the British posts at the Kaskaskias and St. Vincent's, the expense of maintaining garrisons and supporting civil government there since the reduction of the said posts, and, in general, all the charge she has incurred on account of the country on the northwest side of the Ohio river since the commencement of the present war; that the French and Canadian inhabitants, and other settlers at the Kaskaskias, St. Vincent's, and the neighboring villages, who have professed themselves citizens of Virginia, shall have their possessions and titles confirmed to them, and shall be protected in the enjoyment of their rights and liberty; for which purpose troops shall be stationed there, at the charge of the United States, to protect them from the encroachments of the British forces at Detroit or elsewhere, unless the events of war shall render it impracticable.

As Colonel George Rogers Clarke planned and executed the secret expedition by which the British posts were reduced, and was promised, if the enterprise succeeded, a liberal gratuity in lands in that country for the officers and soldiers who first marched thither with him, that a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand acres be allowed and granted to the said officers and soldiers and the other officers and soldiers that have been since incorporated into the said regiment, to be laid off in one tract, the length of which not to exceed double the breadth, in such place on the northwest side of the Ohio as the majority of the officers shall choose, and to be afterwards divided among the said officers and soldiers in due proportion according to the laws of Virginia.

That in case the quantity of good lands of the southeast side of the Ohio, upon the waters of Cumberland river, and between the Green river and the Tennessee river, which have been reserved by law for Virginia troops upon continental establishment, and upon their own State establishment, should (from the North Carolina line bearing in further upon the Cumberland lands than was expected) prove insufficient for their legal bounties, the deficiency shall be made up to the said troops in good lands, to be laid off between the rivers Scioto and Little Miami, on the northwest side of the river Ohio, in such proportions as have been engaged to them by the laws of Virginia. That all the lands within the territory so ceded to the United States and not reserved for or appropriated to any of the herein before-mentioned purposes or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American army, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United American States as have become or shall become members of the confederation or federal alliance of the said States, (Virginia inclusive,) according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose and for no other use or purpose whatsoever; and therefore that all purchases and deeds from any Indian or Indians, or from any Indian nation or nations, for any lands within any part of the said territory which have been or shall be made for the use or benefit of any private person or persons whatsoever, and royal grants within the ceded territory inconsistent with the chartered rights, laws, and customs of Virginia, shall be deemed and declared absolutely void and of no effect in the same manner as if the said territory had still remained subject to and part of the Commonwealth of Virginia

That all the remaining territory of Virginia, included between the Atlantic ocean and the southeast side of the river Ohio, and the Maryland, Pennsylvania, and North Carolina boundaries, shall be guarantied to the Commonwealth of Virginia by the said United States.

That the above cession of territory by Virginia to the United States shall be void and of none effect, unless all the States in the American Union shall ratify the articles of confederation heretofore transmitted by Congress for the consideration of the said States.

Virginia having thus, for the sake of the general good, proposed to cede a great extent of valuable territory to the continent, it is expected in return that every other State in the Union, under similar circumstances as to vacant territory, will make similar cessions of the same to the United States for the general emolument.

Teste: JOHN BECKLEY, C. H. D.

The foregoing is a true copy of the original resolution filed in this office.

GEORGE W. MUNFORD, C. H. D.

JANUARY 12, 1830.

REGISTER'S OFFICE, February 2, 1822.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the house of delegates of the 22d ultimo requiring the register of the land office to furnish to that house "a statement of the whole amount of acres of land warrants dated before the 1st day of May, 1792, issued for military or naval service upon the State establishment, and also the amount of acres of warrants dated before the 1st day of May, 1792, issued for services in the Virginia line upon continental establishment, and the amount of acres of land warrants dated since the 1st day of May, 1792, issued for service in the Virginia line upon continental establishment, distinguishing the amount of each description," I have the honor to submit the two statements hereto annexed, marked A and B, which furnish the information required as accurately as the records and documents of this office enable me to give it. The statement A embraces the warrants issued prior to the 1st day of May, 1792; and the statement B embraces the warrants issued from the 1st day of May, 1792, inclusive, to the present time; distinguishing the amount of each description of warrants. In some instances warrants have issued in consideration of military services generally, without distinguishing the line in which the service was performed, and I am not enabled from any document in this office to ascertain in what line such service was rendered. The amount of warrants issued in relation to which this uncertainty as to the line exists will be found distinguished from others in the statements referred to.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WM. G. PENDLETON.

CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 24, 1830.

Mr. PETTIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petitions of James W. Brannin, Nathaniel Ford, and Charles Hughes, reported:

That it appears from the evidence accompanying the petitions the Spanish government, while they held the Territory of Louisiana, granted to one John Collins six hundred and forty acres of land as a settlement right; that the claim of Collins was confirmed by the United States commissioners; and that, under the act of Congress of 1815, for the relief of the sufferers by earthquakes in New Madrid county, one John Collins, (who is supposed not to be the original grantee of the tract of land mentioned,) through the agency of Philip Trammell and George C. Hart, procured a certificate from the recorder of land titles authorizing a location of other lands. The location was made in Howard county; and after a patent had been issued by the United States, a deed for the lands was regularly executed by the said John Collins to Philip Trammell. Afterwards, in November, 1821, Trammell sold three hundred acres of said tract for $1,500 to James W. Brannin. Brannin alleges and swears that he had no knowledge or suspicion that there was any fraud in procuring the said certificate and patent, the legal chain of title being completed. In August, 1827, Trammell sold to Charles Hughes one hundred and eighty acres of the original tract; and on the 29th of the same month he, Trammell, sold the remaining one hundred and sixty acres to Nathaniel Ford—both for a valuable consideration.

A bill has been lately filed by the United States in the district court of Missouri against Trammell, Brannin, Hughes, and Ford, alleging that the certificate and patent were fraudulently obtained by Trammell and Hart, in the name of Collins; alleging also that the John Collins who obtained the certificate and patent was not the John Collins to whom the original grant had been made, and praying a repeal of the patent. The defendants all answer separately, under oath, and deny all knowledge of the fraud, if there was any; and the present petitioners swear positively that they purchased of Trammell without any knowledge or notice of any such fraud.

To show the probability of their purchasing without notice of the fraud, the petitioners have exhibited the affidavits of a great number of the most respectable citizens in the neighborhood of the lands, proving that it was generally believed that Trammell's title was good; that there was no suspicion against the title. To corroborate this, evidence is exhibited showing that a suit was instituted against Trammell by some person in the name of John Collins for the same tract of land, on the ground that the Collins who obtained the certificate was not the original grantee, and that he had personated the real owner of the lands. This suit was decided in favor of Trammell, which, the petitioners allege, confirmed them in the belief that the title was good.

The committee are of opinion that the John Collins who obtained the certificate and patent was not the original grantee under the Spanish government. They believe that the petitioners purchased without knowledge of the fraud; and they think that as the officer of the government, by granting the certificate upon which a patent issued, enabled the said Collins to make sale of the lands to the petitioners, it would now be inequitable and unjust for the government to repeal the patent and destroy the title of the petitioners, especially when they have, under the faith of the title made by the government, purchased these lands at a high price, and made improvements on them of equal value with the lands.

It is the opinion also of a part of the committee that, although it may appear to the court that the petitioners did purchase without notice, still, if there was fraud in thus obtaining the certificate and patent, the court would be compelled to decree that the patent should be repealed.

Believing that it would be unjust and oppressive for the government to take advantage of its own act and the act of its officer, by which the petitioners were deceived and induced to make the purchase, thus to deprive them of their lands, they recommend that the United States relinquish their title to the petitioners. This appears the more reasonable when it is borne in mind that Trammell is insolvent and Collins made a quit-claim deed only, leaving the petitioners without any redress. The committee therefore report a bill.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 854. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN RESERVATIONS OF LAND IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 24, 1830.

Mr. IRVIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the House to inquire into the title of sections eight, eleven, twenty-six, and twenty-nine, in the thirteenth township and seventh range, in the Steubenville district, so called, in Ohio, and also into the expediency of making a donation of said sections for the use of common schools in the vicinity, or otherwise disposing of the same, reported:

That, by an ordinance of Congress for ascertaining the mode of disposing of lands in the Western Territory, passed the 20th May, 1785, the four lots or sections numbered 8, 11, 26, 29 are reserved out of every township for the United States, and out of every fractional part of a township so many lots of the same numbers as shall be found thereon for future sale. Lot numbered sixteen of every township was reserved also for the maintenance of public schools within the township.

By a resolution passed the 1st of October, 1787, Congress gave one complete and entire township of land to Arnold Henry Dohrman, subject "to the reservations as in the other townships, agreeably to the ordinance of the 20th of May, 1785, out of the three last ranges surveyed in the Western Territory of the United States," to be selected by the said Dohrman.

By an act of Congress passed the 27th February, 1801, the President of the United States was authorized to issue a patent for the thirteenth township, in the seventh range, to Arnold Henry Dohrman, or his legal representatives, agreeably to a resolution of Congress of the first day of October, in the year 1787. By virtue of the provisions of this act a patent was issued on the 15th day of May, 1801, to William Bayard and William Constable for the above-described township of land, in trust, for the uses and purposes expressed in a deed between the grantees and the said Dohrman. In the patent it is expressly declared that the grant is subject to the reservations provided in and by the act and resolution of Congress above recited.

It is the opinion of the committee that these reserved sections now belong to the United States, and that they ought to be surveyed and sold for the benefit of the government.

The committee are not aware of any good reason why these reserved sections should be given for the use of common schools in their vicinity. If they should be granted for that purpose, other places would have an equal claim on the bounty of the government, and would feel neglected if their requests of a similar character were not complied with.

As it is entirely within the power of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to have these lands surveyed and sold without any new enactment on the subject, the committee therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

RELATING TO SETTLEMENTS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 26, 1830.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 25, 1830.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to communicate to the House "copies of any letters or communications to, or papers or documents in, the Land Office, relating to settlements on the public lands, or relating to the proceedings thereon, respecting the settlement or purchase of public lands, or extracts therefrom, which, in his opinion, may with propriety be communicated; also a copy of the communication of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the President of the United States, dated March 5, 1830, relating to a bill then pending before the Senate," I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the paper requested.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. A. STEVENSON, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, General Land Office, May 25, 1830.

SIR: In obedience to the enclosed resolution of the House of Representatives of this date, in the words following, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to this House copies of any letters or communications to, or papers or documents in, the Land Office, relating to settlements on the public lands, or relating to the proceedings of the settlers thereon, respecting the settlement or purchase of the public lands, or extracts therefrom, which, in his opinion, may with propriety be communicated; also a copy of the communication of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the President of the United States, dated March 5, 1830, relating to a bill then pending before the Senate," which you have referred to this office, I have the honor herewith to communicate a copy of the letter of the 5th March last alluded to, together with copies of three letters, one of which was referred from the War Department, now on the files of this office, having reference to the conduct of the settlers on certain public lands in Alabama, papers marked A, B, C, and D, which furnish all the information the records and files of the office afford on the subject of the resolution.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Hon. SAMUEL D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

A.

Copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the President of the United States, on the subject of the bill "to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands," dated March 5, 1830.

I now submit, in compliance with your request, those observations in relation to a bill passed by the Senate and now pending in the House of Representatives "to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands" which were heretofore verbally communicated to you.

The 1st section of this act grants to every occupant of the public lands now in possession, and who cultivated any part of it in 1829, any number of acres, not more than 320, to be taken by legal subdivisions. An amendment proposed in the House of Representatives reduces the quantity to 160 acres.

The 3d section of the bill declares that the act shall remain in force for one year from and after its passage. A substitute for this section has been proposed in the House of Representatives, which does away all limitations as to the continuance of the act, and provides only for the mode in which the settlement and improvement shall be proved. These provisions of the act extend to all the public lands, as well those which have not been proclaimed for sale as those which have, and are now subject to entry at the minimum price. With respect to the first description of lands, the effect of the act will be to prevent the Executive from proclaiming for sale, during the continuance of the act, any of the public lands. There being no limitation as to the time when the lands to which the right of pre-emption may accrue shall be paid for, it is to be presumed that Congress intend that payment may be made at any time within the period for which the law may be in force; and again, as the bill authorizes a selection of the land to be made at the option of the occupant in four legal subdivisions, as passed by the Senate, and in two of such subdivisions as proposed by the amendment in the House, it results that the occupant, taking his improvement as a centre, would have the privilege of making his selections, in the first instance, from 49 of such legal subdivisions, equal to 3,920 acres; and in the second instance, from nine of such legal subdivisions, equal to 720 acres. The practical difficulty, therefore, of bringing those lands into market until the pre-emption rights shall have been adjusted, would be such as to deter the Executive from the attempt, independent of that respect which would be due to the presumed intentions of the legislature. In fact, the sale of the public lands, proclaimed previous to the introduction of this bill, has been postponed in consequence of its passage by the Senate.

With respect to the second description of lands, viz: those which have been offered at public sale, and are now subject to entry at the minimum price, the settlers on which are very numerous, the effect of the provisions of the bill, if it become a law, will necessarily be to produce embarrassment, and prevent to a great extent the purchase of the public lands at private entry by those emigrants who are able and would be willing to buy; because, as the right of selection in each occupant, in 1829, would extend to a tract embracing 720, or, perhaps, 3,920 acres, lying in every direction around his improvement, it would be unsafe for a purchaser to enter any portion of this land until the occupant had entered and paid for his pre-emption. Agreeably to the 3d section of the bill, as proposed to be amended in the House, this period for payment is unlimited; by the bill as passed in the Senate, it is necessarily limited to twelve months after the passage of the act. It is, however, probable that but few of the present occupants of this description of lands will make payment under the act within the period last referred to. So far as these occupants have the means of purchasing, they can now enter the land occupied at the minimum price; to the wealthy occupant it is presumed Congress have no desire to extend gratuitous favors. If the poorer occupants have not the present means of paying for 80 acres of land, it is not to be expected that in twelve months they would, generally, have the means of paying for one hundred and sixty or three hundred and twenty acres, as the case may be; but, encouraged by the provisions of the proposed act, they will aspire to the purchase, ultimately, of the maximum quantity allowed by the law, and being unable to make payment within the time limited, will petition for a further indulgence as to time, and will consider themselves as debtors to the government for the amount of the purchase money of the maximum quantity of land to which the pre-emption right may extend; thus the credit system, which has been abolished with the general consent of the nation, (and a debt incurred by individuals of sixteen or seventeen millions of dollars has been liquidated by allowances for discounts and the relinquishment of a portion of the lands purchased,) will again be revived, and under more unfavorable circumstances than it originally existed.

The real effects of the provisions of this bill, if matured into a law, will probably extend very much beyond its present limitations.

The emigrant to the States and Territories in which the public lands lie, possessing the disposition and the means to purchase, but embarrassed in his selection by the privileges granted to those persons claiming pre-emptions by mere rights of occupancy in 1829; and perceiving no possible reason why the individual who took possession of the public lands in 1829, should have a better claim on the indulgence of the government than he who should settle on the public lands in 1830, will of course defer his purchase, settle down on the public lands, and petition Congress for all those rights, privileges, and indulgences, which had or might be extended to the settler on the public lands in 1829. It does not require the spirit of prophecy to foretell that a system for the disposition of the public domain, founded on the principles embraced in the bill above referred to, would in a short period arrest the regular sales of the public lands, and throw those lands into the hands of the occupants who would pay for them only when covenient, if at all.

All which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE GRAHAM.

B.

STATE OF ALABAMA, April 14, 1830.

SIR: I take the liberty to inform you of an outrage that is perpetrated in this county against the laws of the United States and the peaceable and good citizens thereof. There are five valuable townships of public land in this (the Cahaba) district that are now offered for sale by the President's proclamation on the fourth Monday in May. This land is thickly populated by farmers, as wealthy, in the general, as any part of South Alabama. The citizens occupying this land, together with a few others, have held a meeting or convention, and entered into written and solemn resolutions to prevent all, and every person whatsoever, from viewing or exploring the land previous to the day of sale. They have pledged themselves to do this by force of arms. They have further resolved, for one individual in each township to bid off the whole of the land that they or any of their body may wish to buy, and the balance of their company to be armed with their rifles and muskets before the land office door, and shoot instantly any man that may bid for any land that they want.

In pursuance of these resolutions, a number of men who wish to buy farms of this land have been met by companies of armed men and driven from the townships. They have surrounded a house (where three men had put up) at the hour of twelve at night, and compelled the landlord to drive them off.

In consequence of the large body that is united, and their determined violence, they have, and will keep every individual from examining or buying the land, and, unless the public authority interpose, a man will not, unless he joins their mob, be safe in entering any land after the sale. They have resolved, that inasmuch as Congress has refused to give them pre-emption rights at the minimum price, to obtain those rights by the force of arms. As public sentiment in Alabama is so strong in favor of pre-emption rights, I do not believe that this proceeding will be noticed by public authority, inasmuch as it is to the interest of the State for the land to sell at a low price.

These five townships constitute what is known in Alabama by the Big Cane Brake; it is the best body of land by far in South Alabama, and would sell in a fair market at from $5 to $10 per acre.

I make this statement to you, sir, and if you conceive the matter to be an object that should be noticed by you or the government, it can and will be vouched for by hundreds of individuals of as good standing as any in Alabama.

Your humble and most obedient servant,

JABEZ CURRY.

Hon. JOHN H. EATON, Secretary of War.

C.

ALABAMA, April 22, 1830.

SIR: I feel it my duty to inform you, and through you the President, if you may deem it necessary, of a transaction that has taken place on the public land, in the Cahaba district, that is now advertised for sale. The five townships that are advertised to be sold at Cahaba on the fourth Monday in May constitute a body of as rich and as valuable land as any in the southern part of the State. This land is mostly all occupied, and by men, in the general, as wealthy as in the adjoining townships. These men, or a large majority of them, have held meetings, and entered into written resolutions, the object of which is to obtain the land at the minimum price by putting down competition by the force of arms. They have resolved to prohibit every person, except the present occupants, from viewing the land or taking the numbers; they have elected a man in each township to bid off the land, and the rest are pledged to be at the register's office at the sale armed, and shoot any man that may bid against them.

They have raised a fund, by subscription, to defray any expenses that they may incur in thus violating the law. They set forth that the government has refused to answer their prayers by giving them pre-emption rights, and that they are now determined to have the land at $1 25 per acre, or sacrifice their lives. Under these resolutions they have, by the force of arms, driven every man off from the land that had attempted to examine it; a number of men who wish to obtain settlements in these townships are kept from getting the numbers of the land by their threats. Three men who had gone on the land in the morning, and examined it during the day, put up at a private house at night; about midnight a company of thirty or more armed men surrounded the house for the purpose of taking their numbers from them, and driving them off from the public land; the landlord did or could not protect them; they were compelled, at that hour of the night, to leave the place, or have their lives taken.

The general opinion is, sir, that these men will murder any man or set of men who bid for this land against their body.

I have ridden through this body of land in two directions, and from what I have seen, and its general character, I believe it would sell in a fair market at from four to seven dollars per acre generally.

Your obedient servant,

EDWARD HARPER.

Hon. GEORGE GRAHAM.

D.

STATE OF ALABAMA, April 9, 1830.

SIR: I take the liberty to inform you of a transaction that has taken place on the five townships of land in the Cahaba district that is advertised for sale on the fourth Monday in May. These townships are densely populated, and by farmers, in the general, as wealthy as any section in South Alabama. They have held a meeting or convention, and entered into written and solemn resolutions to prevent, by the force of arms, every person from viewing or examining the land that they or any of their body may wish to buy. They have nominated an individual in each township to bid off the whole of the land. At the same time the rest of their body are to be armed, and shoot any man that may bid or attempt to bid for any land they may wish to buy. In pursuance of these resolutions, a number of individuals, myself among the number, who wish to buy farms in these townships, have been, by the force of arms, driven off from examining the land. The state of excitement now is such that any man who would attempt to follow the section lines would be immediately shot. More than a hundred men are combined in this company. Unless some means are taken to restrain these men they will effect their object. As the State authorities are so clamorous about settlers' claims, I doubt whether they will interfere. These statements can be vouched for by hundreds of individuals.

Your obedient servant,

JABEZ CURRY.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 856. [1ST SESSION.

ON SALE OF CERTAIN TOWN AND VILLAGE LOTS IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 27, 1830.

Mr. PETTIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the trustees of the city of St. Louis, reported:

It appears from the act of Congress of the 13th June, 1812, entitled "An act making further provisions for settling the claims to land in the Territory of Missouri," it was provided that "all town or village lots, out lots, or common field lots, not rightfully owned or claimed by some individuals, or held as commons of certain villages, should be reserved for the support of schools in said towns or villages respectively." It appears also, from the petition of the trustees of the city of St. Louis, that there are various lots of ground in said city coming within the provisions of the act of Congress; and that the said trustees are, by a law of the late Territory of Missouri, intrusted with the management of said lots for the support of schools. The said trustees represent that these lots of land are wholly unavailable, because no authority exists for making sales of said lots. They ask that this power may be conferred by act of Congress.

Your committee are of opinion that a sale should be authorized, because unimproved lots cannot readily be leased; but they are of opinion that the title should be vested in the State of Missouri, for the purposes of the grant. They think this the proper course, inasmuch as the city of St. Louis has been regularly incorporated, and to grant the title to the trustees might produce some difficulties with the city authorities. They therefore report a bill transferring the legal title in these lots to the State to be sold and managed in such mode as the laws of the State may direct.

21st Congress.] No. 857. [1st Session.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 27, 1830.

Mr. Pettis, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Obediah Dickerson, and other citizens of Missouri, reported:

The petitioner asks to be confirmed in his title to a tract of four hundred acres of land, surveyed and located by virtue of a New Madrid certificate.

It appears that by virtue of the act of Congress of February 17, 1815, entitled "An act for the relief of the inhabitants of the late county of New Madrid, in the Territory of Missouri, who suffered by earthquakes," the recorder of land titles, an officer of the United States government, granted to Rezin Bowrie a certificate for four hundred acres of land. This certificate was transferred to one Charles Lucas, the land by him located and surveyed, and afterwards sold to the said Dickerson; and the said Dickerson has caused a town to be laid off on said tract, and has sold out a great number of lots, which have been improved, the citizens of the town believing, no doubt, that the title was good. The said Dickerson, it is believed, had every reason to suppose that the title was good. The Commissioner of the General Land Office refuses to issue a patent for said tract of land on the alleged ground that the said Charles Lucas had received patents under said act of Congress for five hundred and ten acres, and issues a patent for only one hundred and thirty acres. The committee apprehend that there is a mistake on the part of the Commissioner, and that unless it should appear that Rezin Bowrie, or those claiming under him, had already received the quantity of six hundred and forty acres of land, that a patent should issue on this certificate for four hundred acres, or so much as may still remain to be confirmed to the said Rezin Bowrie of the quantity of six hundred and forty acres to which the said Bowrie was entitled under the said recited act of Congress. The committee have no hesitation in saying that, under said act, the said Bowrie, who relinquished his lands in New Madrid, was and is entitled to six hundred and forty acres of land, and that unless it appear that said Bowrie, or those claiming under him, has already received the said quantity of six hundred and forty acres, which the committee understand he has not, the patent should issue for this tract. The committee consider the government bound by the act of its own officer, unless fraud should exist, or unless that officer exceeded his authority. Neither of these grounds is pretended. They think it immaterial whether the said Lucas has or has not received patents for the quantity of lands mentioned, unless it should appear that he claimed for those patented under the said Bowrie. They therefore report a bill.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Washington, May 29, 1830.

Treasury Department, May 28, 1830.

Sir: In the fulfilment of your directions, under a resolution of the Senate of the 3d of March, 1829, requesting "the President of the United States to cause to be laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next session of Congress a detailed statement of the whole quantity of the public lands appropriated by Congress to the several States, with the objects of such appropriations; and also a detailed statement of the amount of disbursements made by the United States within the several States; and also the amount of exports (as nearly as the same can be ascertained) from the commencement of the government to the year 1828," I have the honor to submit the accompanying report and statements, marked A, B, and C;* the former prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the others by the Register of the Treasury.

The cause which has prevented an earlier report on this subject is stated in the letter of the Register.

I have the honor to remain, with the highest respect, your obedient servant,

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 859. [2d SESSION.

OPERATIONS OF THE LAND SYSTEM AND THE NUMBER OF MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS ISSUED DURING THE LAST YEAR.

COMMUNICATED TO CONGRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES DECEMBER 7, 1830.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 3, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before you a report, in duplicate, from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

I have the honor to remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 30, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to submit to your examination, and for the consideration of the government, the following report of the operations of this office during the last year. The periods to which the quarterly accounts of the several receivers of public moneys have been returned and adjusted, with the balances remaining in the hands of each at the respective dates of their last monthly returns, will appear from the statement hereunto annexed, marked A. The accompanying document, marked B, exhibits the quantity of land sold; the amount of purchase money received under the cash and credit systems, respectively; the aggregate of receipts, and the amount in forfeited land stock, together with the amount of cash paid into the treasury by the receivers, after deducting the incidental expenses during the year 1829, and for the first two quarters of the year 1830. A schedule of forfeited land stock issued and received at the several land offices under the provisions of the acts of May 23, 1828, and March 31, 1830, is also appended, marked C, showing the amount issued and received at each office in the years 1828, 1829, and the first two quarters of 1830, with their respective totals.

The annexed statement, marked D, has been prepared to show the progressive increase of sales of public lands under the cash system from its commencement, on the 1st of July, 1820, to the end of the year 1829. It exhibits the quantity sold at the several land offices in each year, with the aggregate amount at each office during that period, as also the whole amount sold in each year in the several States and Territories, together with the total amount in each year, the total amount in each State and Territory, with the grand total.

The surveys of the public lands during the present year have not advanced to the extent desired, in consequence of no appropriation having been made for that purpose at the last session of Congress. At the commencement of the year there remained on hand the sum of eighty-four thousand dollars of previous appropriations, a considerable portion of which was required to meet the balances due for surveys in the year 1829. To meet the expenses of surveys made in the present year, and those which will be required for 1831, an appropriation of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars is respectfully recommended.

While the surveys of all those lands in Indiana to which the Indian title has been extinguished have been completed, with the exception of about forty townships situate in the northeast angle of the State, which will soon be put under contract, those in Michigan have progressed as rapidly as the means furnished by the government would admit. All south of Grand river, together with about sixty townships north of that stream, will be surveyed in the course of the next spring, embracing that section of country to which the tide of emigration has recently tended. The extinguishment of the Indian title to the remainder of the territory north of Grand river, and to that portion of Indiana yet in possession of the Indians, in all about 12,000,000 acres, would increase the inducements to emigration and settlement, and materially advance the growth and prosperity of that State and Territory.

In the States of Illinois and Missouri, and the Territory of Arkansas, surveys have been made to an extent equal to the present demand. Those in Louisiana have hitherto been much retarded by the interference of numerous private claims to some of the most valuable portions of the State which must be surveyed in connexion with the public lands. Great efforts have been made to overcome these embarrassments, and it is expected that the surveying department will direct its first attention to those sections of the country where the demand for public lands is the greatest. In the State of Mississippi there remain to be surveyed about 460,000 acres of the lands acquired of the Choctaws by the treaty of the 18th of October, 1820, and forty-six townships south of the 31st degree of north latitude.

The surveys in Alabama have progressed as rapidly as the public interest required, while those of Florida are advancing from the Suwannee and south of St. Mary's river to the Atlantic, and will progress southwardly down the peninsula. Public considerations seem to require that the surveys in that Territory should be prosecuted with unremitting energy, that its resources may be more fully developed and the public lands exposed to sale and opened to private entry.

To accommodate the purchasers of public lands, and to promote the settlement of those sections of the country to which great numbers of emigrants have been directed by that adventurous spirit of enterprise peculiar to those who first open the wilderness and form the frontier settlements, a new land district is required in Indiana to embrace the territory included in the following limits, to wit: commencing at that point on the Tippecanoe river where the boundary line established by the treaty of the Wabash, October 16, 1826, intersects that river; thence, with said boundary, to its intersection with the range line dividing ranges seven and eight east; thence north to the northern boundary of the State; thence west, with the line of that northern boundary, to the northeast corner of Illinois; thence south to a point due west of the first call; and thence due east to the place of beginning; and that the land office therein be located at some eligible and convenient point by the President. A modification of the districts in Michigan is also required by the same policy, so as to form the Territory into two districts, eastern and western, by the principal meridian; the land office of the western district to be located by the President on Pigeon prairie, or at some other more eligible point on the Saint Joseph's of Lake Michigan. That tract of country acquired under the treaty with the Pottawatomies concluded on the 20th of September, 1828, called the Elkheart country, having been surveyed, has not yet been attached to any land district, and cannot therefore be brought into market. If no new land district should be organized in Indiana, as above proposed, it is respectfully recommended that the Elkheart country situate in that State be annexed to the district of Fort Wayne.

It is also recommended, on public considerations equally important, that so much of the State of Illinois as lies between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, bounded on the south by the base line, on the north by the northern boundary of that State, and on the extreme east by the third principal meridian, be formed into a separate land district, the office of which to be located where it will best accommodate purchasers and others, by the President; and that another district be also formed in that State, on the north of the dividing line between townships twenty-one and twenty-two, north of the base line, and east of the third principal meridian, including all that part of the State to its northern boundary; the office for which to be located by the President, where the public interest and the convenience of purchasers may require. An annual increase of the sale of public lands of sixteen thousand acres, at the interest of six per cent., will defray the expenses of a new office; and it is believed that the three additional offices herein proposed will add to the yearly sales more than one hundred thousand acres, and probably more than double that quantity. When settlers are compelled to travel more than one hundred miles to enter lands, they will appeal to Congress for pre-emption rights rather than incur the fatigue and expense of a journey to that extent through a trackless wilderness.

The most valuable of these lands, appropriated in Ohio to satisfy warrants issued by the United States for services during the revolutionary war, have long since been located, leaving about thirty thousand acres of very inferior quality—an amount greatly inadequate to satisfy the outstanding warrants. The act of the 30th May last, authorizing scrip to issue in satisfaction of such unlocated warrants, supersedes the necessity of any longer holding those lands in reserve for such purpose, as very few, if any, warrants will hereafter be located in that district. Complaints have often been made to this office, by those who hold lands there under patent, that their own lands have been greatly lessened in value in consequence of vast quantities of timber having been cut and removed from those vacant and unlocated. This evil will probably continue to exist so long as these lands remain subject to location under military warrants. It is, therefore, respectfully submitted that the time has now arrived when the government can, with propriety, close all locations in that district, without any injury to those for whose benefit it was originally reserved, and subject the vacant lands therein to sale and private entry.

The execution of the act of the 29th May, 1830, granting pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands, has been attended with considerable difficulty, and some embarrassment to this office and at the several land offices. As the registers could not officially know who would claim the privilege granted by the law until it was asserted with the requisite proofs, there was no alternative between a suspension of the ordinary private entries and sales during the period limited for the operation of that act, and permitting the sales to progress, at the risk of interfering with the rights of the occupant. As the law did not contemplate a suspension of the public sales, it was believed not to be intended so to operate as to prevent private entries; and instructions were accordingly given to continue the latter, under such precautionary regulations as were calculated to prevent any improper interference with the rights of pre-emption. The expediency of granting such privileges may well be questioned, when it leads to a course of speculations founded exclusively upon the gracious liberality of the government, inconsistent with the public interest. In numerous cases, the occupants dispose of the advantages thus acquired by law to less fortunate individuals, at a profitable advance, with a view of making a settlement elsewhere, in anticipation of another similar speculation at a future day. It is, therefore, respectfully suggested, as the better policy, to progress with the public surveys, in all the States and organized Territories in which the unsurveyed public domain is situated, as rapidly as can be done with propriety and accuracy, and bring the lands into market as soon as convenience will permit; leaving intruders and trespassers to the local tribunals of justice for such relief as they may be entitled to on any principle of legal right or equitable jurisdiction.

In submitting this annual report, I deem it proper, as a public duty, to advise the government of the present condition of the office, its arrears of business, the embarrassments under which it labors, and the improvements and provisions which are considered necessary to its proper and efficient organization, and which are believed to be indispensable to the prompt and faithful discharge of its duties.

In the year 1827 the number of clerks was reduced from twenty-four to eighteen, including the draughtsman, under an erroneous impression that the latter number was sufficient for the public service. Since that time the business of the office has greatly increased and accumulated, until, with its diminished assistance, its arrears have become a serious impediment to the facilities of its operation, and of considerable injury, by delay, to the private interests of individuals. The numerous legislative enactments in relation to the public lands, and to private claims thereto, since the year 1820, and especially the several relief laws of 1821, 1822, 1823, 1824, 1826, 1828, and 1830, some of them of complicated provisions, have required for their execution an increased annual amount of labor in this office, equal to that of any previous year since its first organization. As most of those laws were limited in their duration, the rights intended to be secured, and the privileges granted by them, would have been unavailing to the parties interested, without an immediate attention to their execution and administration. To enable the purchasers of public lands, and others, therefore, to realize the benefits contemplated by those laws, it became necessary for this office to neglect, for the time, much of its ordinary business, to discharge the more pressing duties which were thereby imposed upon it. A land debt which, on the passage of the first relief law, in March, 1821, amounted to nearly twenty-two millions of dollars, has been liquidated, and the heavy embarrassments which it created have ceased to impede the growth and prosperity of those sections of the country where it originated. To accomplish this object, so desirable and important to the western and southwestern States and Territories, a considerable portion of the regular current business of the office was superseded, and, from necessity, has been suffered to accumulate, undisposed of, to the present time. These arrears may be classed under the respective heads of private land claims, military bounty lands, and public lands.

1. PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

There are at this time more than five hundred private land claims, the papers and documents of which have not been collated and prepared for decision; and which, even if they should all be found admissible, will require the labor of fifteen months of the present force of the office assigned for that service to examine with that fidelity and impartiality which the circumstances of each case may merit, and to write and record the patents for the same. This number, it is expected, will increase as the public surveys progress. More than fifteen thousand of these claims, which have been confirmed, have not yet been presented for patents; and of this number, from three thousand to four thousand may be expected to come in in the course of the ensuing year.—(See document marked E, hereto annexed.) The total number reported to this office exceeds twenty-eight thousand. The indexing of the names of original claimants being wholly in arrears, together with the names of about fifteen thousand present claimants, the labor necessary to perform this duty will occupy the time of a competent person, acquainted with the subject, nearly three years. For a more detailed view of these arrears, reference is made to the annexed schedule, marked F

Many of the original reports of the Commissioners confirming private land claims are much worn and injured by daily reference and use, and it will soon be necessary to have them accurately transcribed, to preserve the original documents of so much importance to the security of land titles, and to prevent a recourse to them on ordinary occasions. The time which would be necessarily employed by one person in transcribing these reports would be about four years.

2. MILITARY BOUNTY LANDS.

More than four hundred cases of surveys under Virginia military warrants are now on file in the office to be examined or re-examined, and patented, if the papers should be found sufficient, requiring the labor of eighteen months of all the force heretofore detailed for such service. A large portion of these cases were suspended under the provisions of the law of May 20, 1826, and will probably be entitled to patent under the recent act of April 23, 1830; in addition to which, information has lately been received that surveys under such warrants, at this time remaining of record in the surveyor's office at Chilicothe, which will soon be presented for patent, exceed one thousand. The labor of examination, and of writing and recording the patents in such cases, has greatly increased within a few years by reason of the fractions of warrants on which the surveys are founded, the numerous calls and courses and distances recited in the surveys, and the consequent tedious investigation of title. Many of the patents occupy a close written sheet of thirty by fifteen inches, and some of them both sides of the same.

The old war office registry of warrants and surveys patented, a book which was transferred to this office in the year 1812, has been in constant use between thirty and forty years, and is now so much worn and defaced as to render a renewal necessary as soon as practicable; which, from the labor of examining papers on file, would occupy the time of one person, with the aid of such information as can be supplied from the principal surveyor at Chilicothe, nearly two years.

This office has no alphabetical index of the names of persons to whom land warrants have been issued by the United States for revolutionary services, and patents granted therefor. A suitable book was provided for that purpose many years ago, but the work has not been executed for want of sufficient aid. The information which such an index would readily afford is now obtained by an examination both tedious and laborious, and not unfrequently requiring three or four hours in particular cases. An industrious, competent person would make it out in eight months. A general index of the names of warrantees of bounty lands for services during the late war is now necessary, and will soon become indispensable. Six months' time for one person will be required to perform that service.

3. PUBLIC LANDS.

The arrears under this head have accumulated to such an extent as to become a source of great public inconvenience, and occasion such delays as in many instances to produce private injury. The arrears of patents to be issued at this time exceed twenty-six thousand, and the number is constantly increasing, as the monthly returns of certificates of purchase and the receivers' receipts exceed the ability of the office, with the usual force detailed for that duty, to supply with patents. At a moderate estimate, the annual demand for patents for sales of the public lands will not be less than 15,000, while not more than 10,000 can be written, recorded, and compared with the documents on which they are founded, and issued from the office, with the means now furnished for that service. To bring up these arrears would require the constant employment of five clerks for more than two and one-half years.

The indexing of the names of patentees of purchased lands, in consequence of more pressing duties, has been suspended for the last nine years, and in numerous cases is the cause of much delay in transacting this branch of the current business of the office. It is estimated that the labor of four clerks for one year would be required to complete it. The indexes of assignments of purchased lands have also been neglected since the year 1824, as the exigencies of other duties would not admit of their being continued. It is not considered of much importance to the government that these last-named indexes should be completed, but the frequent calls for transcripts of records and copies of papers in these cases, to be used in the investigation of legal titles in courts of justice, if such requisitions are to be complied with, render it necessary. Should it be deemed expedient to complete these indexes, one clerk would be industriously employed three years to finish the work, as the very numerous files of title papers, surrendered under the several relief laws which have been passed since 1820, would have to be carefully examined.

It may be also stated, as a source of embarrassment to the prompt discharge of the ordinary duties of the office, that, in addition to these arrears, and others not enumerated, the deficiency of the necessary indexes, and a very voluminous correspondence, arising from the daily applications for information not strictly connected with the public business, requisitions are constantly made for exemplifications of records and copies of title papers on which patents have been issued, either to supply the loss of the orignals or to be used as evidence in the due administration of justice. The promptness with which these documents are required to be furnished, and in most cases the necessity of an immediate compliance with the demand, occasions a serious interruption of the regular routine of office duty, and frequently produces delays inconvenient if not injurious to the public service. So numerous are these applications, that it has now become a matter of strong necessity, under the present organization of the office, to appropriate the time and services of one clerk at least to the performance of that duty.

To bring up these arrears as speedily as convenience will admit, and at the same time keep up the current business of the office, is of the most pressing importance, and manifestly indispensable. From a particular examination of the subject, it is estimated that with ten additional clerks this object cannot be accomplished in less time than three years, even if no new and additional duties should be required by congressional legislation, at the close of which period, it is believed, the ordinary current duties will have increased to an extent equal to, if not beyond, the ability of the office to execute. With this accession of aid there may be advantageously assigned to four clerks the business of private land claims; to four, that of military bounty lands; to seven, keeping and adjusting the accounts and registering the sales of public lands; to eight, writing, recording, comparing, and issuing patents for public lands; leaving the chief clerk, with two assistants, as recorders, to discharge the various other and miscellaneous duties not included under any of the heads above named.

With such an organization of the office and assignment of its duties, the bureau of the chief clerk would be charged, under the direction of the Commissioner, with a general review and superintendence of the others; with recording and transmitting all commissions to land officers, surveyors, and others who may receive subordinate appointments, and the registry of their bonds; the preparing and recording all proclamations of sales of public lands, and all orders and instructions in relation thereto and connected therewith; with preparing the blank forms of the office, and the instructions accompanying the same, with the explanations thereof; with superintending the printing for the office, and the purchasing of parchments and other stationery therefor; with preparing and recording the correspondence with the several land officers and surveyors in relation to their respective duties, and the miscellaneous correspondence, and generally with all the other duties not specifically assigned to the other branches.

The bureau of private land claims would be required to collate and examine the title papers on which those claims are founded, and to compare them with the private surveys and township plats; to write, record, and compare with the original papers, and issue the patents therefor; to issue certificates of title to lands reserved to Indians, and patents for the same when sold under the sanction of the President; to prepare and register the incidental correspondence; to complete and continue the indexes to the several books of record, and as fast as practicable to bring up the arrears of this branch of the office.

It would be the duty of those charged with the business of military bounty lands to examine the title papers in all cases under warrants and surveys of Virginia military lands, of the continental line, and under warrants issued by the United States for revolutionary services and for services during the late war; all cases of exchanged military bounty lands of the late war, and to write, record, and compare with the evidence of title, and issue the patents therefor; to examine and prepare the papers in all cases of military bounty lands for which scrip is required to be issued; to prepare and record the incidental correspondence connected therewith; to complete and continue the indexes to the several books of record, and to bring up the present arrears.

The bureau of accounts and the registry of sales of public lands would be charged with keeping the accounts of all the fiscal operations of the office connected with the sales of the public lands; adjusting (auditing) the quarterly accounts of the receivers of public moneys and surveyors, and reporting the same to the First Comptroller of the Treasury; recording all sales, and preparing the certificates of purchase for patent, and comparing the same with the entries on the tract books and township plats, the whole embracing a range of duties, although not precisely the same, yet in magnitude of labor nearly equal to those of the registers and receivers of the forty-two land offices; with continuing the numerical indexes of lands subject to private entry; preparing and registering the incidental correspondence, and with bringing up this branch of the present arrears.

Those having charge of the office of patents would be required to write, record, and compare with the certificates of purchase all patents for public lands sold; to prepare and record lists of patents forwarded to the several land offices, and attend to the transmission of the same; complete and continue the indexes to the records of patents, and, as time and opportunity permit, to bring up the arrears which have accumulated.

Besides the duties above enumerated, there are others common to all these branches, such as making out exemplifications of records and copies of title papers and other documents; preparing statements of the annual operations of the office and others, in compliance with the requisitions of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, and on the calls of Congress and their respective committees.

It is believed that the annual demand for the public lands by actual settlers, commencing with the year 1831, may be estimated at one and one-half million of acres, and that this demand will increase with the population of the valley of the Mississippi to fifty per cent. at the close of the next ten years. The experience of the last seven years has proved that the demand for such purpose has increased with the permanent population of that extensive region, and the forests have been opened and the settlements advanced with a rapidity equal to the facilities afforded by the government, and with the progressive improvements and enterprise of the age. If, then, it is no longer a question of temporary expediency, but a matter of settled policy, to promote the sales of the national domain, and afford such aid to its actual settlement as shall accelerate the accomplishment of that object, the wisdom of Congress may be appealed to for all necessary assistance to those who are charged with the general superintendence of this department of the public service for more ample means to complete the surveys, and for the establishment of such other offices for the entry and sales of the public lands as are required by the course of emigration and the necessities and convenience of actual settlers. Liberal measures, restricted only to such limits as will secure an annual increase of this branch of the revenue, will afford additional inducements to the enterprise and persevering industry of that portion of our population who are daily seeking a residence in the extensive forests of the west. While economy should be regarded as a cardinal virtue in the expenditures of every department of the government, it is no less essential to its due administration, and to the attainment of those objects for which it was instituted, that the public service should be well done and promptly done.

All which is respectfully submitted.

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. SAMUEL D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

Estimate of the private land claims confirmed by the laws of the United States.

LOUISIANA.—Southeastern district.

There have been confirmed in this district about 2,040 claims. No patent certificates have been received at this office, and consequently no patents have been issued. Some of the township plats have been received during this year; the surveying is progressing, and we may reasonable expect that patents will be demanded for many claims before long.

LOUISIANA.—Southwestern and northern districts.

In these districts there have been confirmed about 3,270 claims. Eighty cases have been patented, and about 400 certificates received during this year are now in the office for patenting. The greater portion of these districts has been surveyed, and the certificates for most of the claims must be expected in a short time.

LOUISIANA.—St. Helena district.

There have been confirmed in this district about 3,100 claims. Nearly the whole of this district has been surveyed and plats returned; and this office has been informed that the land officers have commenced making out their patent certificates. It is reasonable to suppose that upwards of 2,000 may be forwarded in less than one year from this time.

MISSISSIPPI.—Washington district.

The claims confirmed in this district amount to 1,100; of this number between 50 and 60 have been patented. The whole were surveyed many years ago, but a part of the district is now resurveying to correct former errors. What prevents the claimants from forwarding the certificates for patents is not known.

MISSISSIPPI, ALABAMA, ST. STEPHEN'S, AND AUGUSTA DISTRICTS.

Within these districts there have been confirmed about 700 claims. Not more that 15 or 20 have been patented; but, as a great part of the surveying has been executed, most of the certificates may be expected during the next year.

FLORIDA.

In this Territory there have been confirmed upwards of 1,300 claims. No patent certificates have been forwarded. Many of the claims have been surveyed, for which the certificates should have been transmitted ere this. The surveying of the rest is progressing, and we must calculate upon receiving many demands for patents during the next year. In Missouri and Arkansas upwards of 3,500 claims have been confirmed, exclusive of the 80,000 acres confirmed by the Arkansas court on forged papers. Rather more than 500 claims have been patented; and, as there is every probability that the surveys of the whole may be completed this season or early next year, the certificates can shortly be granted for all these claims. It is known that at least 900 patent certificates have been issued by the recorder which have not been presented for patents in consequence of the inattention of the parties interested.

There have been confirmed in this district about 900 claims, of which about forty have been patented; and as they are all surveyed, nothing but the negligence of the parties prevents the issuing of patent certificates for all these claims.

Of the claims confirmed in Illinois and Michigan, it would be difficult to say what number have been confirmed. A large portion of them have, however, been patented; but as they have all been surveyed, patents can at any time be demanded for those not patented, which must amount to several hundred in number.

INDIAN CLAIMS.

Many of these claims have been patented, others have been lately located, and require certificates to be issued, while there are some yet unlocated. The total number of reservations made by the several treaties has not been ascertained, but they amount to several hundreds, and especially in cases of transfer, &c., involve more labor than the ordinary cases of private claims. By reference to a published abstract of the late Choctaw treaty, it will be seen that provision is made for granting about 1,700 reserves, exclusive of those to be granted to such Indians as may cultivate a certain number of acres for a few years, and to the several members of their families.

F.

Statement in relation to the indexing of the private land claims.

Indexes in favor of the present claimants have been made out in the following cases:

	Claims.
St. Helena district	3,655
Jackson Court-House district	1,013
Missouri and Arkansas	3,640
In Louisiana districts	2,766
In Florida	2,116
Total number indexed to the present claimants	13,190

Claims not indexed.

Michigan claims	1,247
Indiana claims	1,408
Illinois claims	3,022
Missouri and Arkansas claims	3,119
Mississippi, (Washington district)	1,863
Louisiana districts	4,641
St. Stephen's district	363
Total number to be indexed to the present claimants	15,663
Total number of names of original claimants to be indexed	28,853

To enable the office to give the information respecting private claims which is often required, it is necessary that the above claims should also be indexed to the original claimants.

It is also very important, where a claim once rejected has been subsequently revived and confirmed, or again rejected, that references should be made on the reports to all the other proceedings respecting that claim.

The labor that will be required in making these references will be very great, but cannot be correctly estimated.

21ST CONGRESS.] No 860. [2D SESSION.

LEGAL ARGUMENT ON CLAIM OF ANTOINE SOULARD TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 22, 1830.

Substance of an argument delivered before the district court of the United States, at the first session thereof, held at St. Louis on the fourth Monday in November, 1824, pursuant to an act of Congress entitled "An act enabling claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," by L. E. Lawless, counsellor-at-law.

PREFACE.

The argument, of which the following pages contain an accurate outline, was delivered at the first session of the district court of the United States, held on the fourth Monday of November, 1824, for the adjudication of claims to land situated within the limits of the State of Missouri, founded on concessions, warrants, or orders of survey made by the Spanish or French authorities previous to the 10th of March, 1804.

Inasmuch as the subject is one of very general interest, not only in the State of Missouri, but in the Territory of Arkansas, where similar claims are to be adjudicated, it is believed that the publication of this argument may not be without its use. The subject has hitherto been involved in considerable obscurity, and has never, even in Congress, been completely developed. During the twenty years which have elapsed since the occupation of Upper Louisiana by the United States the claimants to land under French and Spanish grants have had to contend, not with fair and open argument, but with secret slanders or ignorant misrepresentation. Now that these claims are to be investigated in a court of justice, they can no longer suffer from these unworthy causes. If, as they believe, their titles are protected by the principles of municipal and international law, those titles will be confirmed, and, though late, (too late for many of them,) their long withheld property will be restored to them. If, on the other hand, these claims shall be rejected, they will, at least, have the satisfaction to reflect that no sinister means have succeeded in defeating them; and that if error has been committed, it will have been that inevitable error to which the best of human tribunals is more or less subject.

The circumstances of the claim in which the following argument was delivered are in some respects peculiar, but the doctrines and principles which it was the counsel's object to establish are applicable to the great majority of French and Spanish land titles in Upper Louisiana, and it is believed should govern the decision of the court upon them.

It was at the suggestion and request of the judge of the district court that this note of argument has been written and submitted to him. The considerations already mentioned have induced the friends of the claims to believe that it should, through the medium of the press, be laid before the public. The claimants do not fear discussion or investigation, but, on the contrary, invite both. If the argument here offered be sound it ought to have its due effect; if it be fallacious, by publishing it all hope is extinguished of its errors escaping detection.

We have subjoined to this report a few documents translated from the original Spanish, which, as far as we know, have not before been published in the English language, and which sustain or illustrate some of our principal positions.

Note of argument on claim of Antoine Soulard, before the district court of the United States, to confirmation of a concession and survey of ten thousand arpents.

On the 20th April, 1796, Zenon Trudeau, lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, granted to Antoine Soulard and his heirs ten thousand arpents, to be located on vacant land belonging to the royal domain.

On the 20th February, 1804, by virtue of and pursuant to said concessions said grant was located and surveyed on Cuivre river, within the present limits of the State of Missouri.

On the 8th of March, 1804, said survey was duly certified and recorded by the surveyor general of the then province of Louisiana.

Between the 8th March, 1804, and the 1st March, 1806, the said original concession and certificate of survey were destroyed by accident amongst other papers belonging to the grantee, who, in consequence of that loss and in ignorance of his rights and misconception of the law, omitted to file notice of his claim with the recorder under the law of Congress of 2d March, 1805, which required notices of claims founded on titles therein mentioned to be filed with the recorder before the 1st March, 1806.

Under the same erroneous impressions Mr. Soulard omitted to avail himself of the provisions of the act of 3d March, 1807, which extended the time for filing claims to 1st July, 1808.

As soon as Mr. Soulard became aware of his mistake he presented a petition to Congress, praying a confirmation of his claim; which petition was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, February 27, 1818.

In consequence of a general law having been reported, which would necessarily have embraced the claim, no special report was made by the committee.

On the above state of facts two main questions arise:

1st. Supposing the original concession to have been good, can the claimant, upon proof of its destruction, avail himself of the title which it conferred?

2d. Supposing that, notwithstanding its destruction, he can, upon proper proof of its existence and execution by the lieutenant governor, use it as a ground of claim, is the concession and survey such a title as ought now to be confirmed by this court under the act of Congress?

Upon the first question no argument will be here offered, as it is supposed that if the proof of the execution and contents of the concession be given, upon no principle of law or equity can the affirmative of the proposition be disputed.

But the proof of the execution and contents of the concession is complete, viz:

1st. The declaration and admission of Zenon Trudeau, made at different times during his command in Upper Louisiana.

2d. The oath of a credible witness, Colonel C. D. Delassus, who saw the concession in the hands of grantee.

3d. The proof of its existence resulting from the record of survey made before its loss, and in which it is recited and referred to.

It may, however, be proper to observe that the omission to file the claim under the act of 1805 or 1807 cannot effect Mr. Soulard's rights under this particular concession, because—

1st. The law of 1805 only requires those claims to be filed which were founded on incomplete titles subsequent in date to October 1, 1800, and therefore does not affect the present claim, which is by virtue of a concession made on the 20th of April, 1796.

2d. The act of 1807, which extends the time for filing to 1st July, 1808, has no more extensive operation as to claims excluded than the act of 1805.

The act of Congress of last session lets in every claim, no matter whether filed or not with the recorder, and no matter what is the date of the incomplete title on which it is founded, provided it be not subsequent to the 10th March, 1804.

To demonstrate the affirmative of the second proposition, namely, that the concession and survey in this case constitute such a title as should be confirmed under the late act of Congress, let us first examine that act.

By section 1st, every French or Spanish grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey, legally made, granted, or issued, before the 10th day of March, 1804, by the proper authorities, to any person or persons resident in the province of Louisiana at the date thereof, or on or before the 10th day of March, 1804, and which was protected or secured by the treaty between the United States and the French republic of the 30th of April, 1803, and which might have been perfected into a complete title under and in conformity to the laws, usages, and customs of the government under which the same originated, had not the sovereignty of the country been transferred to the United States, is declared to be entitled to confirmation.

By section 2d this court is, by a final decree, to settle and determine the validity of the title, according to the law of nations, the stipulations of any treaty and proceedings under the same, the several acts of Congress in relation thereto, and the laws and ordinances of the government from which it is alleged to have been derived, and all other questions properly arising between the claimants and the United States; which decree shall, in all cases, refer to the treaty, law, or ordinance under which it is confirmed or decreed against.

It is contended that the present claim is entitled to confirmation, because,

1st. The concession was made to a person residing in Louisiana at the time it was made.

2d The concession was legally made before the 10th day of March, 1804.

3d. The concession was made by the proper authority.

4th. It was protected by the treaty of cession, April 30, 1803.

5th. It might have been perfected into a complete title conformably to the laws and usages of former government.

6th. It is protected by the law of nations.

7th, and lastly, because it is recognized and protected as entitled to confirmation, at least to the extent of a league square, by the laws of Congress heretofore made on the subject of such titles.

The fact of the concession having been made to a person residing in Louisiana at the date, is matter not merely of ordinary proof, but is an historical and recorded fact within the knowledge of the court.

The second and third grounds of its claim to confirmation will be considered together, inasmuch as they are convertible propositions. It is considered that the concession was legally made prior to the 10th of March, 1804, and made by the proper authority, because,

1st. The date and execution are proved.

2d. The concession was made by the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana.

It is contended that the lieutenant governor had power to make such a grant, and that his power is demonstrated by,

1st. The uniform practice and usage of lieutenant governors in Upper Louisiana, from the first establishment of a government in that province.

2d. The laws and ordinances of the Spanish sovereigns.

The usage and practice of the lieutenant governors may be ascertained by reference to the history of Upper Louisiana, from the year 1770, when Spain took possession of that province, down to the 10th of March, 1804, when it was delivered up to the United States. During the whole of that period it is demonstrated by the records and archives, as they have been transferred to the officers under the government of the United States, that it was the uniform usage and practice of the lieutenant governor to make those concessions.

There exists not a single instance in which the power of the lieutenant governor in Upper Louisiana to grant any quantity of land has been questioned or denied by the superior authority.

Each lieutenant governor followed the usage of his predecessor, which certainly it is not to be presumed that he would have done if that usage had not been recognized as legal by the government which appointed him.

The perfect security with which the inhabitants of Louisiana acted on those concessions—bought, sold, transferred, and disposed of them by act inter vivos, or by last will and testament—demonstrates the existence of the usage, and the general impression that those concessions were legally made, and by the proper authority.

Judicial sales of intestates' estates, including incomplete titles of this description, have been made not only under the sanction of the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, but have been ratified by the supreme authority at New Orleans.

There is no instance on record of any one of these sales having been rescinded on the ground that those concessions were nullities and not susceptible of sale for valuable consideration, as they certainly would be if the lieutenant governor had not authority to make them.

The practice and usage have been recognized in a variety of instances by the governors general of Louisiana.

The following complete titles, within the knowledge of the undersigned, have been granted by governors general of Louisiana upon concessions made by the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana:

1st. A complete title to Gratiot, on a concession by Cruzat, previous to 1790, of 7,056 arpents for the whole of that quantity.

2d. A complete title issued by the governor general, Baron de Carondelet, on the 2d April, 1797, on two concessions of 2,160 superficial arpents—the one made by Don Manuel Perez, lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, dated May 26, 1790, the other by Zenon Trudeau, lieutenant governor, dated September 11, 1796.

3d. A complete title by Governor General Don Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, dated March 1, 1798, on a concession of 1,480 arpents made by Zenon Trudeau, lieutenant governor, dated November 19, 1796.

In those complete titles, which are ready to be produced for the inspection of this court, the governors general specifically refer to the concession, and recognize the power of the lieutenant governor to make it. No new condition is imposed other than that of complying with the "reglamento del asunto," that is to say, the general regulation of the government touching lands granted.

Not only have the governors general thus ratified and recognized the power to grant of the lieutenant governors of Upper Louisiana, but the intendant general has also done so, to whom (as shall be hereafter noticed) was delegated by the King the power of issuing complete titles, after it had been taken away from the governors general.

The following complete titles, issued by the intendant general, Don Juan Ventura Morales, and which are ready to be produced to the court, demonstrate this proposition:

1st. A complete title for 900 arpents, on a concession issued on the 6th December, 1798, by Zenon Trudeau, lieutenant governor, in favor of Don Santiago Delassus de St. Vrain. This complete title bears date April 28, 1802.

2d. A complete title for 1,042 arpents, on concession by Zenon Trudeau to Antoine Soulard and his heirs, dated April 28, 1802.

3d. A complete title, dated June 5, 1802, for 8,000 arpents, on a concession and order of survey by Zenon Trudeau, dated January 18, 1798.

In those complete titles the intendant general specifically refers to and recognizes the concession obtained from the lieutenant governor. The terms used in the title issued in favor of Antoine Soulard are these: "Por quanto habiendose presentado en este tribunal Don Antonio Soulard, representando que habia obtenido del teniente gobernador de Sn. Luis de Illinois, Dn. Zenon Trudeau, la concession de mil y quarenta y dos arpanes de tierra," which, translated into English, are as follows: "Inasmuch as Don Antonio Soulard has presented himself to this tribunal, submitting that he has obtained from the lieutenant governor of St. Louis of the Illinois, Don Zenon Trudeau, the grant (or concession) of 1,042 arpents of land."

The language of the other two complete titles made by the intendant general is of the same import, and leaves no doubt as to the ratification of the act of the lieutenant governor, and of the usage and practice of granting such original concessions.

It has been already observed that original concessions, and the land granted by them, before any complete title had been issued thereon, were objects of sale and transfer inter vivos, and of distribution and sale as property of testators or intestates.

In support of these propositions, we refer to the records in the office of the clerk of the circuit court for the county of St. Louis.

Amongst a number of others, we find the following sales and transfers recorded:

1st. February 18, 1775, public sale, sanctioned by Pedro Piernas, lieutenant governor, of 2½ arpents by 40, belonging to the estate of Guillaume Bizet, purchased by Charles Bizet.

2d. October 2, 1774, public sale of a tract of land of 5 arpents by 40, at the place called Belle Fontaine, under the decree of the lieutenant governor, Pedro Piernas, for sale of same, at request and demand of Mr. John Bte. Sarpy, attorney in fact of Louis Chamart; said land purchased by P. Perrault, No. 42.

3d. November 13, 1774, public sale of land, the property of J. B. Martigny, containing 4 arpents in breadth by the depth from the Mississippi to the hill, purchased by Charles Bizet, No. 148.

4th. July 4, 1799, public sale of the property of the deceased Laclede Liguest, to wit: a tract of 6 by 40 arpents of land in Big Prairie, bought by Madame Chouteau, No. 264, by virtue of the decree of Fernando de Leyba, lieutenant governor.

5th. July 4, 1799, public sale of the mill and dependencies belonging to the estate of Laclede Liguest, deceased, bought by Auguste Choteau; sold by virtue of decree, F. de Leyba, lieutenant governor, No. 265.*

* This sale has been sanctioned by decree of the supreme authority at New Orleans; and the land on which said mill stands has been since confirmed to Auguste Chouteau, as representative of Laclede Liguest, deceased, the original grantee, by the board of commissioners.

6th. June 12, 1801, public sale after the failure of Hyacinthe St. Cyr, (merchant,) made at the request of the creditors, and by virtue of a decree of Charles D. Delassus, lieutenant governor, 919 arpents, situate on Crevecœur, county of St. Louis, purchased by James Richardson, No. 1500; on same day, as part of same estate, 573 arpents at St. Ferdinand; on same day, ditto, 12 arpents by 40, No. 1500. [The No. is that which the document bears in the index to the Spanish and French records in the clerk's office.]

7th. April 14, 1802, deed of partition before Lieutenant Governor Delassus, between the heirs of Madame Cerre, of divers tracts held under incomplete titles, No. 1500.

It is submitted that the concession at present under consideration is equally legal with all those above referred to, and which have been recognized as such by the supreme Spanish authority; and is equally legal, and equally the subject of sale, transfer, and distribution, as any of those recorded in the office of the clerk of the circuit court for the county of St. Louis.

2dly. The lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana was authorized to make this concession by the laws and ordinances of the Spanish sovereigns.

In support of this proposition, we refer to the "royal ordinance" dated October 15, 1754.

This royal ordinance was republished in 1786, with an additional ordinance or law, vesting in the intendants and sub-delegates of the kingdom of New Spain the power of granting lands, which power had heretofore been vested in the viceroys, presidents of audiences, and sub-delegates appointed by said viceroys or presidents.

This ordinance, as published in 1786, is now in the office of the Department of State in Washington city; and those articles of it which are applicable to the questions arising on the Missouri land claims have been copied from it, and, with correct translations, are ready to be submitted to the court.

By the appendix to ordinance of 1754, (No. 10 in that of 1786,) after reciting the evils resulting from the royal order of November 24, 1735, whereby the claimant of land was obliged to apply to the King himself for complete title, the King ordains as follows: "I have resolved that, in the gifts, (mercedes,) sales, (ventas,) and arrangements, (composiciones,) of royal lands, (realengos,) places, (sitios,) and uncultivated grounds, (valdios,) now made, or which hereafter shall be made, there shall be observed and practiced precisely what is contained in this instruction, &c:

"First. That, from the date of this my royal resolution, henceforward remains exclusively to the office (alcargo) of the viceroys and presidents of my royal audiences of those kingdoms, the faculty of appointing the sub-delegate ministers, (ministros sub-delegados,) who are to exercise and make sale and arrangement (ventas y composiciones) of the lands and uncultivated grounds (de las tierras y valdios) which belong to me in said dominion, expediting to them, the sub-delegates, the nomination (nombramiento) or title, respectively, with an authentic copy of this instruction. [The instruction then points out the mode of informing the Secretary of State of those nominations, and authorizes the sub-delegates to commission others, distant from the place of their residences, as was before done, (como antes se excecutaba,) and excludes the council of the Indies from the direction and management of this branch of the royal finances.]

The 5th article ordains that all titles originated by the sub-delegates since 1700, and confirmed by the King, shall remain good; or if they were confirmed by the viceroys and audiences, while that power was vested in them, (that is, previous to the ordinance of 1735,) they shall also remain valid; also that those who possessed lands without such confirmation shall solicit confirmation from the audiences of their district, and the other ministers to whom the faculty of confirmation is given by this instruction, which audiences and ministers shall examine the title originated by the sub-delegate, and if no fraud or collusion exist, and on proof being given that there has been paid into the royal chest the price of the sale or arrangement, (venta o composiciones,) and the tax called media annata, and adding, besides, a corresponding pecuniary donation, (y hacienda de nuevo aquel servicio pecuniario que parecea correspondiente,) they shall despatch, in the royal name, the confirmation of the titles, &c.

The 9th article of the above ordinance of 1754 ordains, in substance, that the respective audiences, by provinces, shall despatch, in the royal name, the confirmation without any other judicial expense to the parties than the fees appertaining to the said provinces as fixed by law, for which purpose the sub-delegate is to transmit the proceedings had respecting the sales or arrangements of which the confirmation is demanded, and they may agree on the pecuniary service which they ought to pay for this new favor.

The 10th article ordains, in substance, that, to avoid costs and delay, if the audiences should direct new proceedings, the sub-delegates in each case are to transmit the original acts, in order that, if no objection presents itself, they may be returned (to the sub-delegate) and title delivered, or in order that what is necessary may be done (by party or sub-delegate) as pointed out, and thus to expedite the despatch of royal confirmations without the duplication of a new title.

Article 11th ordains, in substance, that the audiences are to entertain appeals from sub-delegates without putting the parties to the expense of an appeal to the council.

Article the 12th, (of the above ordinance of 1754,) the translation of which is here given in extenso, ordains—

"That in those provinces distant from the seat of the audiences, or where the seas may intervene, as Caraccas, Carthagena, Buenos Ayres, Panama, Yucatan, Cumana, Margarita, Porto Rico, and others in "equal circumstances," (de iguales circumstancies,) the confirmation shall be despatched by their governors, in unison with the royal officers and the lieutenant judge general, where there is one; and that the same ministers shall also determine the appeals which may be made from the sub-delegate who shall have been appointed, or may be appointed, in each of the aforesaid provinces and islands, without referring to the audience or chancery court of the district, except in case of the two sentences not being conformable, and this of duty, and in the form of a consult, (porvia de consulta,) in order to avoid the expenses of applications for relief by appeal; and wherever there shall exist two royal ministers, the most modern shall perform the duty of defender of the royal finances in these causes, and the senior that of assistant judge to the governor, consulting where there is no auditor or lieutenant judge of the governor, and the doubt which may arise is matter of law with any other lawyer within or without the district; and in those places where there is but one royal minister, he shall name as defender of the royal finances any intelligent person resident in the place; it being likewise the duty of the governors, with their assistant judges, to examine into the compositions (composiciones) of the sub-delegate, the same way as is expressed with respect to the audiences."

At the date and promulgation of the above ordinance of 1754, the province of Louisiana belonged to France, and was governed, not by any Spanish custom, usage, or law, but by the custom of Paris, and the ordinances of the French sovereign. It is, however, submitted that, from the treaty of Fontainebleau, November 3, 1762, or, at least, from the date of the actual occupation of Louisiana, under that treaty, by Spain, the Spanish laws and ordinances were in force, and became applicable to the province of Louisiana as far as related to the original grant and final confirmation of lands belonging to the royal domain. It is therefore contended that, by virtue of the above-cited 12th article of the ordinance of 1754, the governors general and sub-delegates of Louisiana became vested with all the powers by that article given to the governors and sub-delegates of Caraccas, and the other places therein mentioned. It is manifest that if Louisiana had been, at the date of that ordinance, a province belonging to Spain, and had not been specifically mentioned, it nevertheless would have been included in its protection by the comprehensive words, "and others in equal circumstances" Louisiana was, perhaps, more than any other province, or would have been, within the purview of the ordinance. It was separated by the sea on the one side, and by a vast extent of uninhabited or savage region on the other, from the seats of the viceroys or audiences. The communication was rare and difficult at that time between Louisiana and Spain, or any of its South American dominions. At the date of the treaty of 1762, or of the actual occupation of Louisiana by Spain in 1769, the circumstances of the province were the same. Its communication with South America had not been increased or facilitated since 1754; and, in a political, commercial, or geographical point of view, it was more separated and detached than any of those places mentioned in the 12th section of the ordinance cited.

The usage and practice which have already been shown to exist in Louisiana demonstrate that such was the construction put on this twelfth article by the Spanish authorities in that province; but, besides this uniform usage, the proclamation of Governor General O'Reilly in 1769, whereby he announces to the people of Louisiana that the Spanish laws are thenceforward to have force, specifically applies the ordinance of 1754 to the colony of which he had so recently assumed the government.

Assuming, then, as sound doctrine that at least from the year 1769 the ordinance of 1754 was law in Louisiana, it manifestly follows that the concession in the present case was made in conformity with the provisions of that ordinance.

Here it may be proper to observe that in Upper Louisiana the lieutenant governor was clothed with both civil and military power. He was not only commander-in-chief of the troops, but he was also the highest judicial authority. It was in his civil capacity that he granted or sold the lands belonging to the royal domain. In this concession he acted in his capacity of sub-delegate minister, (ministro sub-delegado,) as he is described and contemplated by the first section of the ordinance of 1754, above recited.

In divers public acts the lieutenant governor is styled sub-delegate; which, however, was not absolutely necessary, as the character of sub-delegate was included in the title of lieutenant governor. This is sufficiently shown by the complete titles already mentioned, in which the supreme confirming authorities recognize the concession to have been made by the lieutenant governor, (teniente gobernador de San Luis Ilinoa.)

Having thus demonstrated the power of the lieutenant governor to make original concessions, we proceed to show that the concession in question was protected by the treaty of cession of April 30, 1803.

By the third article of the treaty, "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the union of the United States, admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens, and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess.

The questions, therefore, with reference to this article, as regards the concession before the court, are—

1st. Did this concession, at the date of the treaty, vest a right in Antoine Soulard?

2d. Did this concession constitute property in the grantee?

If those questions be decided in the affirmative, the proposition is true that the treaty protects the concession. From what has been shown it is manifest that those questions must be so decided, because,

1st. The concession was made by the proper authority.

2d. At the moment it was made it became the subject-matter of sale, of distribution, of descent.

3d. The grantee might at any time have applied for a confirmation of it to the superior authority.

4th. The lieutenant governor who made it, (nor his successors,) could not have rescinded, of his own mere motion, the grant so made. To do this, it was necessary that by a formal decree, for cause shown, the land granted should be reunited to the domain, or should be abandoned or relinquished by the act of the grantee; neither of which, in this present case, appears to have been done.

If Mr. Soulard had died before the treaty of cession, this grant, and the land it included, would have devolved upon his widow and children; or if he had the power so to do, unfettered by any marriage or other contract, it would have followed the disposition of his last will and testament, if he had made one.

His widow, or heir, or devisee, might apply for confirmation, or might sell it before confirmation. It follows, therefore, that Mr. Soulard had a vested right in this concession, and a property as real and defined as any other that could be contemplated by the treaty of cession.

We shall now proceed to demonstrate the fifth position, namely, "that the concession and survey before the court might have been perfected into a complete title, conformably to the laws and usages of the government under which the same originated."

In demonstrating this proposition, the petitioner might, it is believed, rely with confidence on what has been already shown, and call on the United States to rebut the prima facie case made.

It has been demonstrated—

1st. That the concession has been made to a subject of the King of Spain during the existence of the government in Louisiana, and a resident of that province at the date of the concession.

2d. That the concession has been made by lawful and competent authority.

3d. That the concession and survey vested a right and a property in the grantee.

Upon these grounds, it is submitted that, upon the ordinary principles of law and equity, a presumption arises in favor of the claim to confirmation, which should stand until the contrary be proven by the adverse party.

Between private litigants, this certainly cannot be denied; and we can see no reason why the United States, or those claiming under them, should not be bound by the same principles.

Where one private individual succeeds to the rights and liabilities of another, either as purchaser, heir, devisee, or personal representative, the contracts of the person under whom he claims, if legally made, are valid against him, and would, if necessary, be decreed to be specifically executed by a court of equity.

By the treaty of cession the United States became vested with all the rights, and subject to all the legal and equitable liabilities of the former government, as related to the province of Louisiana; and this, it is contended, would have been the consequence of a mere cession, without any specific stipulation in favor of the rights and property of the Louisianians.

It follows, then, that the concessions made by the officers of the former government, duly thereto authorized, are as obligatory on that government, and on its successor and representative, the United States, as those private contracts above mentioned would be binding in a court of law or equity; and that to get rid of those concessions it is necessary, not merely to reject them, but to show some good cause of rejection.

For, although it be true that the Spanish King might, without assigning a reason, have, in the plenitude of his power, cancelled this concession, it is equally true that the United States have not succeeded to this attribute of despotism, and that the only power vested in them as regards the present question is that which the treaty of cession and the Constitution of the United States have recognized or created

But it would be in truth an injustice to the government of Spain to suppose that any other than the principles relied on could have governed the confirmation or rejection of this concession For, whatever might have been the tyranny exercised on political or religious questions, it is a known historical truth that between the crown of Spain and the subject, as related to rights and property the most equal justice was distributed, and in Louisiana, in particular, the mildness and liberality of the Spanish rule was proverbial.

We therefore repeat that, even before a Spanish intendant general, we have made a case for confirmation which would stand until rebutted. We consider it important here to press upon the consideration of this court that the claimant is not a petitioner to this tribunal for the grant of an original right, but merely for the recognition of a right already existing, and of a property of which the United States on the 10th of March, 1804, found him in quiet possession. He petitions not for a grant of any part of the public land, but that he may be quieted in his ancient title to his own by a disclaimer on the part of the United States of a pretension totally unfounded.

The confirmation by the Spanish authority would have amounted to no more; for, as it has been demonstrated, the concession and survey gave an immediate right, and vested an estate in the grantee from the date and by the operation of the incomplete title; and therefore the Spanish confirming powers would not by any means have granted, although it might have annulled a grant and divested an estate already vested.

We will proceed, however, as far as is practicable, to show that in this case the Spanish confirming authority would not have annulled the concession or divested the estate created.

If the supreme Spanish authority would have refused to confirm this concession, it must necessarily have been upon one or more of the following grounds:

1st. For want of power in the officer who made the concession.

2d. For informality in the grant.

3d. For some disqualification in the grantee.

4th. For non-compliance on part of grantee with some condition expressed or implied in the grant; or,

5th, and lastly, for fraud or collusion in the obtaining of the concession.

On the first point, viz: the power of the granting officer, the arguments and facts already submitted might be deemed conclusive; but inasmuch as none of the complete titles cited, and in which the power of the lieutenant governor to grant is recognized, include so large a quantity as 10,000 arpents, (the amount of the present concession,) some observations will now be made to show that the power of the lieutenant governor in Upper Louisiana was unlimited as to quantity.

To demonstrate this we may again refer to the uniform usage and practice of the lieutenant governors from the year 1770 down to the date of the treaty of cession.

We have seen that the grant for a league square made previous to the year 1790 was confirmed to Gratiot and his heirs by Governor General Gayoso; that a grant of 8,000 arpents, made 18th January, 1798, was confirmed by the intendant general, Morales, to Louis Labeaume, the original grantee, on the 5th of June, 1802. Here is the usage recognized by the supreme authority, in express terms, as far as 8,000 arpents; and we cannot discover why the same recognition would not have been made if the grant to Labeaume had been for 10,000 arpents. The addition of two thousand arpents certainly impugns no principle on which the confirmation of 8,000 arpents could have been grounded.

Besides this express recognition, we rely also on the tacit assent to the usage and practice of the lieutenant governor by the superior authority at New Orleans. A great number of concessions were made by the different lieutenant governors exceeding 8,000 arpents; and in no one instance has the superior authority disapproved in any manner the act of the sub-delegate.

It is not to be supposed that the lieutenant governors of Upper Louisiana would have dared to usurp a power which the law did not give them, or that if they had so usurped it, the superior authority at New Orleans would have in silence assented to it.

The character of the individuals who have successively filled those high offices under the Spanish monarchs forbids this supposition. It would be absurd to suppose that the lieutenant governor, without any motive of interest, would so act; and it would be calumnious to assert that any motive of self interest did impel him so to act.

When we look back upon the terms of the ordinance that has been cited, we will see that the power of the sub-delegate was unlimited as to quantity as far as related to Upper Louisiana, at all times and in every part of the province of Louisiana, until certain modifications were adopted by O'Reilly, Gayoso, and particularly by the intendant general, Morales, all of which, as will be hereafter shown, were applicable either to new settlers or to the land in Lower Louisiana exclusively.

By the 1st section of the ordinance of 1754, already cited, it is decreed that the viceroys and presidents of the royal audiences shall thenceforward have the faculty of appointing the sub-delegate ministers, "who are to make the sale and arrangements of the lands and uncultivated grounds belonging to the King." There is no limitation as to quantity whatever.

In looking back to the 5th article of the ordinance, we see that the viceroys and audiences are thereby directed to confirm when no "fraud or collusion exists, and on proof of payment when a price has been stipulated." Here is no limitation as to quantity.

By the 12th article, (the translation of which has been given in extenso,) by which the confirming power is vested in the governor general, the act or grants of the respective sub-delegates are to be examined and confirmed "in the same way as is expressed" with respect to the audiences.

It may be proper to observe that the condition of payment of a price can be only applicable to the sales or arrangements in the nature of sales; but that in the case of mere donations or graces (mercedes) no such condition could be deemed applicable, and nothing more could be exacted than the fees usually paid to the officers of the confirming tribunal.

The preamble to the ordinance of 1754 and the introductory decretal part show that the King, in the case of gifts (mercedes) as well as of sales, intended that the power of the sub-delegates should be the same and subject to the same control on the part of the confirming authority.

The extent of those gratuitous grants, rewards, or "mercedes," is not limited, and was left, as well as that of sales, to depend upon the discretion, under all circumstances of the case, of the granting power.

In the present case the circumstances are all in favor of the grant.

1st. The fact of the grant creates a presumption that the grantee deserved the favor.

2d. The fact of his being a meritorious officer, and that the grant was intended as a recompense for services rendered, is in proof before the court.

3d. At the time the grant was made he had already been a considerable time in the service, and had received no compensation or pay until that grant was made to him.

It seems, then, to be demonstrated, as far as the matter is susceptible of demonstration, that, taking into view the complete titles theretofore made, and the merits of the grantee in the present case, the confirmation of this concession would not have been refused by the Spanish governor general or intendant, merely on the ground that too great a quantity was included in it.

We come now to the second possible objection, viz: "informality in the grant."

On this head we shall merely refer to all the concessions, not only those which remain unconfirmed, but those on which complete titles have been granted by the Spanish government, and confirmations made by the Congress of the United States. The concession under consideration was in the same terms as those, and clothed with the same formalities: if the one be good in point of form, the other must be equally so, and in that respect equally entitled to confirmation.

Here we shall notice an argument against the claim which may be, perhaps, drawn from the supposed want, in this case, of registry of the concession, and shall meet the objection by either of the two following propositions:

1st. Registry was not necessary, under the Spanish or French government in Upper Louisiana, to give validity to an original concession, warrant, or order of survey.

2d. Supposing registry to have been necessary, such registry has been made in this case as was required, according to the usage and practice in Upper Louisiana.

On the first point we will observe, that neither by the ordinance of 1754, or that of 1786, of the King of Spain, nor by any of the regulations of the governors general or intendents, is registry of an original concession, warrant, or order of survey, required. As far as regards written law, our position, therefore, is sustained.

We will admit that there did exist at St. Louis a book, called the Livre Terrien, in which, from the year 1766 down to the year 1797, a considerable number of concessions, orders of survey, and surveys, were entered by the respective commandants and lieutenant governors; but we deny that this book, or registry in it, was required by any law or ordinance, or that it gave validity to a concession, warrant, or order of survey. This book was used in some cases as the depository of the original and only grant, warrant, or order of survey, and in others was used as a mere record of the concession issued. In the latter case the original document was delivered by the granting officer to the party interested, who might, at his option, have the grant entered or copied into the "Livre Terrien." This, in point of fact, was very generally done during the first thirty years after the establishment of the post of St. Louis, the seat of government in Upper Louisiana. The practice, however, declined gradually after that period, and we find but one concession in the year 1796 entered on the Livre Terrien. This book remained in the custody of the commandant or lieutenant governor for the time being, until the appointment, by Governor General Baron de Carondelet, of Mr. Antoine Soulard (the claimant) as surveyor general of Louisiana, in the month of February, 1795. Previous to his nomination there was no surveyor of Upper Louisiana, appointed by the superior authority at New Orleans; and the few surveys theretofore made were executed by individuals authorized for the occasion by the lieutenant governor, or employed and paid by the grantee or his representative. The surveys so made by them were generally registered in the "Livre Terrien;" and here we will remark, that a number of those surveys appear to have been made, not for the original grantee, but for his alienee or vendee—a conclusive proof that even at that time unlocated or floating titles were the subject-matter of sale, and therefore had the effect of vesting a property.

The entry or registry of the concession was done at the request of the grantee, to protect him against the inconvenience which might result from the loss or destruction of the original concession before any other record of its existence was made. Many grantees, however, neglected this precaution, and their concessions were not the less valid on that account. This is demonstrated by the complete titles which have been granted by the supreme authority at New Orleans, upon original concessions made by the lieutenant governors and commandants, which have not been registered in the "Livre Terrien," or in any other record book in Upper Louisiana.

It is equally manifest that by no act of Congress has such registry been necessary to the validity of a concession. Under the laws of 1807 and 1814 upwards of twenty claims of a league square each have been confirmed, none of which appear on the "Livre Terrien."

We have said that in February, 1795, Mr. Antoine Soulard was appointed surveyor general of Upper Louisiana. Soon after his appointment the practice of registry in the "Livre Terrien" ceased altogether, and another species of registry, created by the surveyor general, was made use of. When Mr. Soulard was named surveyor he found it necessary to organize his office and adopt such a system as appeared to him most suitable to the duties which he had to perform, and to the interests and circumstances of the inhabitants. He had received no other directions from the supreme authority at New Orleans than those contained in his commission of surveyor general, which is expressed in very general terms, and defines not at all his functions, or the mode in which he is to organize his department or keep its records. Being thus at liberty to adopt any plan which to him might appear the most suitable, he discontinued the registry of concessions and surveys in the "Livre Terrien," and, instead thereof, entered each survey made by him or his subordinate officers in a book kept by him for that express purpose.

In this register was entered—

1st. The plat of survey.

2d. The date of the execution of the survey, and (in general) the name of the person who surveyed.

3d. The date of the warrant, order, or concession, and name of the commandant or lieutenant governor who made it.

4th. The date of the certificate of survey issued by the surveyor general to the person for whom the survey was executed.

This was the uniform practice in every case where a survey was made in pursuance of a superior order, down to the time when Mr. Soulard ceased to be surveyor and delivered up the above register and papers of his office, including the Livre Terrien, to the board of commissioners. The receipt given to Mr. Soulard for these books and papers bears date the 10th July, 1806, and is signed by the clerk of the board of commissioners, J. V. Garnier.

In pursuance of the act of Congress of the 29th February, 1806, section 2, all the plots of surveys and all other papers and documents pertaining to the office of surveyor general under the Spanish government, were delivered to the principal deputy surveyor of the United States; and by the above act it was provided that no plot of survey should be admitted as evidence in any court of justice unless certified by the said principal deputy to be a true copy of the record in his office.

Thus the registry kept by Mr. Soulard has become part of the public records of the United States and its authenticity expressly declared and recognized by the above act of Congress.

The same sanction has been given by other acts of Congress. Most of the confirmations made under the law of April 12, 1814, are based upon surveys made previous to March 10, 1804, and entered by the surveyor general (Soulard) in the above register. Indeed, in no case of confirmation under the act of 1814 does the original concession appear to have been registered, either in the Livre Terrien, or in any other book of record under the Spanish government.

Enough, it is hoped, has been now said to demonstrate the first proposition—namely, that registry was not necessary to the validity of an original concession.

To sustain the second position, viz: "That, supposing registry to have been necessary to give validity to the concession before the court, such registry has been proved," it is only necessary to refer to what has been already stated.

The surveyor general in this case followed the practice adopted by him in every other. Being himself the grantee, he kept, as he had a right to do, his concession among his other title deeds, until he found it convenient to have it located and surveyed. When the survey was made by the proper officer, Mr. Soulard entered it in his registry in the same way and with the same particularity that was observed in every other entry made by him.

By the certified copy from the registry, made evidence by the act of Congress before cited, it appears that the land included in the grant was surveyed in February, 1804, by Santiago Rankin, lieutenant (or deputy) surveyor, by virtue of a decree of concession of the lieutenant governor, Zenon Trudeau, for 10,000 arpents, dated April 20, 1796, and that the certificate of survey was made and dated on March 8, 1804, which was also the date of the entry in the registry.

This survey was made, as has been proved by a respectable witness, about the time that other surveys were made by the same deputy, (Santiago Rankin,) which surveys were registered in the same book and in the same form.

Many of those tracts so surveyed by Santiago Rankin under the acts of Congress of 1807 and 1814, amongst them a tract of 15,000 arpents, 7,056 of which have been confirmed by the recorder. All this has been shown in evidence, and, it is submitted, removes all doubt as to the operation in favor of the present claimant of the survey made for him by the deputy, Santiago Rankin.

Thus, then, if registry be required as an essential ingredient in the present case, this registry has been made—the only one that, by any law of Congress or any Spanish law, usage or practice, has ever been required.

The loss of the certificate of survey in this case cannot affect the question, inasmuch as the entry in the registry contains everything expressed in a certificate, as will appear by an examination of certificates existing and a comparison with the corresponding matter in the record.

The third possible ground of rejection, namely: "Disqualification in the grantee," manifestly does not exist; on the contrary, as has been observed, his quality as an officer of the Spanish government must now create a presumption of his merits. Besides, he was a resident of Louisiana when the grant was made to him, and therefore corresponds with the description in the law of Congress (under which this court sits) of a competent grantee.

The fourth ground of possible objection, namely: the non-compliance with some condition in the concession is equally wanting. There is, in fact, no condition unless that which attended every grant from the King of Spain, namely: that of conforming to the "Reglamento del Asunto," or, in other words, paying the taxes to which the property might by law be subjected, and performing the duties imposed on the proprietors of lands in Louisiana, according to the circumstances and localities of the land granted.

As to the fifth and last possible ground of objection, viz: fraud in the concession, enough has been said to demonstrate the non-existence of it, if, in any case, such proof were necessary. Fraud, however, is to be proved, not presumed; and if the United States rely on it as a ground of rejection they are bound to show it. It is assumed with perfect confidence in this case that such proof is impossible.

Now to the sixth general proposition which we undertook to establish, viz: "That this concession is protected by the law of nations." On this point, after what has been already urged, it must be quite unnecessary to expatiate. In a country conquered by force of arms the law of nations protects private property. For the correctness of this doctrine Vattel and Blackstone are referred to as being familiar to our recollection; but it is believed that every writer on international or even municipal law may be cited in support of it. How much stronger is the claim to protection in the present case, where the sovereignty of the United States over Louisiana was the result of a voluntary compact—of a solemn treaty, which guarantied to the inhabitants of Louisiana not merely their property, but assured to them and their children all the advantages of American citizens! This court, therefore, may well ground the confirmation on the law of nations, which, in truth, includes all the other grounds of confirmation mentioned in the acts of Congress.

The seventh and last proposition, viz: "That this grant is protected by the acts of Congress heretofore passed on the subject of such titles," can, it is believed, be sustained by a reference to those acts.

The first act passed by Congress, of March 26, 1804, while it outrages principle in declaring to be null and void all grants subsequent in date to the treaty of St. Ildefonso, by a proviso saves and respects every bona fide grant within a mile square to an actual settler, even subsequent to the date of that treaty. The silence of this act as to the bona fide grants made previous to the above date, it is submitted, may be well construed into a recognition of them; for certainly, if the framers of that extraordinary law did not consider those grants good and valid as against the United States, they would have declared them to be null and void in the same compendious style in which they attempted to despatch the others. If this tacit recognition be admitted, it must be without limitation as to quantity.

By the first section of the act of March 2, 1805, the validity of every duly registered warrant or order of survey made previous to October 1, 1800, (the date of the treaty of St. Ildefonso,) without any limitation as to quantity, provided the lands granted were inhabited and cultivated by the grantee, or some person for his use, on that day is acknowledged as if a complete title had been vested in the grantee.

By the third section of the act of March 3, 1807, the commissioners were invested with powers to decide according to laws and usages of the French and Spanish governments upon all concessions where the claim was made by any person or persons, or the representative of any person or persons, who were on the 20th of December inhabitants of Louisiana, and to confirm the same within a league square, unless a salt spring or lead mine was included, and which confirmation was to be final against the United States.

It is contended that the above two acts of 1805 and 1807 have established a principle which protects every bona fide grant. Those acts cannot be construed to have conferred any original title on the claimant. They are by no means donative. They only recognize a pre-existing right in the claimant, and upon that ground confirm it. In the law of 1805 every duly registered warrant or order of survey, as therein described, is recognized as valid. In the law of 1807 every concession made according to law and usage, to the extent of a league square, is confirmed. These laws, while they so recognize the concessions and warrants, do not declare that in the one case want of possession shall annul a warrant, or in the other that the concession beyond a league square is null and void, or that it is void because a salt spring or lead mine is included in it. On the contrary, they recognize the warrants and concessions in the abstract, and give effect to them as complete titles, upon certain conditions in the one case, and without any conditions but within a limited extent in the other, provided no salt spring or lead mine be included. (Here may be cited François Tayon's claim of 10,000 arpents, 7,056 arpents of which are confirmed, and various others; also a tract of 15,000 arpents granted to M. P. Leduc, already mentioned in page 21.)

By the same act of 1807 those concessions which are not confirmed, or are only in part confirmed, are reserved for future decision, as appears by the seventh section of that act, which directs the commissioners to report and to classify them as therein mentioned.

It is manifest, therefore,

1st. That if the present concession had been before the board, it ought to have been confirmed under the act of 1807, within a league square.

2d. That the principle established by said act, and by that of 1805, protects it in its whole extent of 10,000 arpents.

The act of April 12, 1814, would still more clearly confirm this claim within a league square if it had been submitted to the recorder and was included in the report of the commissioners, because,

1st. It is an incomplete grant made prior to March 10, 1804, for lands lying within the Territory of Missouri to a person at that date a resident in Louisiana.

2d. It was actually located and surveyed within the Territory of Missouri before March 10, 1804.

It is submitted, also, that the above act furnishes, as well as the acts before referred to, a principle which recognizes the legality of the concession in its whole extent.

In conclusion of our observations in support of the seventh proposition, we can safely assert that the present claim or concession, in its terms and circumstances, is either exactly similar to or exceeds in point of merit the greater number of those which have been confirmed by the board of commissioners and the recorder, under the laws above referred to; and it is therefore to be inferred that if the claim had been submitted to either of these tribunals it would, equally with the rest, have been confirmed.

Having thus endeavored to demonstrate that the claim before the court possesses all the ingredients and fulfils all the conditions which, in the contemplation of the act of Congress, entitle it to confirmation, we should here conclude our argument did we not consider it proper to advert to certain regulations concerning the granting of lands in Louisiana made by the governors general, O'Reilly and Gayoso, and the intendant general, Morales.

To those regulations have been ascribed a bearing and effect on the Missouri land claims to which a very slight examination will prove that they are not at all entitled. Indeed, taking into view the terms of the act under which this court adjudicates, it may well be contended that those regulations are excluded altogether from its consideration. By this act, in its first section, the laws, usages, and customs; in its second section, the laws and ordinances of the government "from which the claim is alleged to be derived," are to be the rule of decision. Now we respectfully contend that the regulations of those officers above mentioned are neither usages, laws, or ordinances, but merely temporary and local regulations, not in any respect binding on the successor of the person who made them, and by that person only occasionally enforced or regarded.

To ascertain the distinction between these regulations and a law or ordinance, we can refer to Morales himself. In the preamble to his famous regulation of July 17, 1799, (a copy of which, in the original Spanish and French, is ready to be produced to the court,) he refers to the laws and ordinances of the King, and immediately after to the regulations of O'Reilly and of Gayoso, which regulations, he observes, he has examined with attention. He mentions the laws and ordinances as absolutely binding on him, while he speaks of the regulations of the governors general as merely entitled to his attention.

Besides this construction of Morales, we rely upon the known and exclusive meaning of the words laws and ordinances (ieyes y ordenanzas) in the Spanish code and under the Spanish government, and we therefore suppose that those words were used in the Spanish acceptation by the Congress of the United States.

But supposing those regulations (particularly those of Morales) to be either laws, ordinances, or simply regulations having the force of law, we submit that, to show their applicability to Upper Louisiana, it must appear that they were published or promulgated in that province. This has not been, nor can be done, for the proof exists to the contrary. We have proved by living witnesses of the first respectability that the regulations of Morales, so far from having been promulgated, were sent back by the lieutenant governor to Morales, with a remonstrance and various written objections to their operation, and that the intendant never replied to those objections, or insisted on enforcing his regulations in Upper Louisiana. And here it may be remarked, as a proof that the regulations of Morales were not known as law in Upper Louisiana at the date of the cession, that, among the laws and regulations of the Spanish government furnished to the commissioners by the government of the United States, the regulations of Morales were never included, nor ever noticed at all by those commissioners.

But supposing those regulations were to have been promulgated in Upper Louisiana, a very slight inspection will show that they cannot affect the present claim.

The regulations of O'Reilly, the first Spanish governor of Louisiana, bear date the 18th February, 1770: at that date the settlement of Upper Louisiana had hardly commenced. It was in the year 1765 that the first cabin was built in St. Louis. The population of Upper Louisiana was then too thin to be the object of such complex regulations, or almost of organized government. Besides, the regulations of O'Reilly, which consist of twelve articles, are, the greater number, specifically restricted in operation to the island of Orleans, Opelousas, Attakapas, and Natchitoches; no mention whatever is made in them of Upper Louisiana. These regulations are noticed in Stoddard's excellent work on Louisiana. In page 252, Stoddard observes that "the regulations of O'Reilly were totally inapplicable to that part of the country, and the Spanish authorities there always conceded land on principles not derived from them." Here we will observe that the authority of Stoddard has been acknowledged by the most enlightened men as deserving of respect; and as a record of sound opinion and historic fact, we feel justified in calling the attention of the court to his work on Louisiana.

The regulations of Gayoso are equally inapplicable, in a great many of their provisions, to Upper Louisiana, and in those which are applicable, are intended to be in force only as to new settlers.

Those instructions are specifically styled by their author, "Instructions to be observed by commandants of posts in this province for the admission of new settlers."

The instructions, translated into English, are to be found in the Appendix to the Land Laws, page 21, No. 13; also in Geyer's Digest, page 438.

To show that the regulations of Gayoso are inapplicable, we shall refer to his own decision as conclusive.

In a former part of this argument we adduced, in proof of the authority of the lieutenant governor to make the concession now under discussion, a complete title made by Gayoso on an original concession by Zenon Trudeau, dated 19th November, 1796, to one Regis Loisel, for 1,480 arpents. In the requête or petition upon which this grant is made, Regis Loisel styles himself "a trader of this town," (negociant de cette ville,) of St. Louis.

Now, the 11th article of those regulations directs that "no lands shall be granted to traders; as they live in towns, they do not want them."—(Vide said regulations as above.)

This authority, it is presumed, precludes the necessity of any further remark on the subject of Gayoso's regulations. We shall therefore proceed to consider those of Morales, which, in fact, are those upon which the stress has been laid in recent discussion on the subject of Spanish land claims.

In the first place it is to be observed that, in the preamble to his regulations, which are dated July 17, 1799, he declares his intention to conform, in the execution of the duties imposed on him, (by the royal order of the 22d October, 1798,) to the 81st article of the ordinance of the intendants of New Spain, the regulations of the year 1754, cited in the said article, and the laws respecting it.

The ordinance relative to the intendants of New Spain was published in 1786, and invested them with the power of selling and distributing the royal lands, "acting in those affairs, as also their sub-delegates and others, in conformity with the royal instructions of the 15th October, 1754." (This ordinance, in the original Spanish, and translated into English, is ready to be produced to the court.)

It will be recollected that by the 12th article, before cited, of the ordinance of 1754, which became applicable, and was declared by royal order (as recited in the preamble to Morales' regulations) of the 24th August, 1770, to be applicable to Louisiana, the power of granting complete titles to lands was vested in the governor general, who was bound to conform to the general directions of the ordinance of 1754.

This power was accordingly exercised by the governors general of Louisiana, (being the same exercised since 1786 in New Spain by the intendants) down to the 22d October, 1798, when it was given to the intendant general, Morales.

It follows, therefore, that no greater power was vested in Morales than the intendants of New Spain possessed, who themselves were bound by the ordinance of 1754.

It is evident from this that no construction should be given, if any other can consist with their terms, to the regulations of Morales, which is inconsistent with the above ordinance.

Keeping this rule in our eye, we shall pass in rapid review those regulations.

It is only necessary to read the 1st, 3d, 4th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 15th, 16th, 34th, 35th, 36th, being 14 out of 28 articles, to be convinced that they never were intended to apply to Louisiana. The local circumstances to which they refer did not exist in that province; and provisions on the subject of applying for titles within the time therein mentioned would be absurd, and as the means of communication between New Orleans then existed, physically impracticable.

In a recent publication, signed Jno. B. C. Lucas, which appeared in the Enquirer newspaper of the 30th of August last, the writer appears to be of opinion that the 15th article of those regulations deprived the lieutenant governor of the power of making original concessions. He observes that "he never has been able to see the letter of office or document from the intendant, authorizing the commandants of posts to issue concessions; on the contrary, the 15th article of the regulations of the intendant provides that 'all concessions shall be given in the name of the King by the intendant general of this province, who shall order the surveyor general or one particularly named by him, to make the survey,'" &c. He then says "that the 2d article of the same regulations specifies that 'if in the posts the commandants shall state that the land asked for is vacant and belongs to the domain, and that the petitioner has obtained permission of the government to establish himself'—and declares himself perfectly at a loss to know how it comes that the commandants of posts have presumed to issue concessions as sub-delegates of the intendant when that power is lodged by the ordinance of St. Lorenzo, solely and exclusively, in the intendant, when he declares expressly that he retains it."

Now it is evident from the above observations that Mr. Lucas had totally lost sight when he wrote them, or was not aware of the ordinance of 1754 and that relating to the intendants of New Spain of 1786, before observed on. If he had ever read those ordinances he would have known that "no letter of office or document from the intendant" was necessary to authorize the lieutenant governors of Upper Louisiana to issue concessions. On the contrary, he would have known that the intendant had no power to deprive the lieutenant governors of the faculty if even he the intendant wished so to do. The power of making those original concessions or warrants of survey was vested, at least since the year 1700, in the sub-delegates, as appears by the 5th article of the ordinance of 1754, which confirms all titles originated by them from that date. By the same ordinance, the power of originating titles is, in express terms, continued to the sub-delegates, (ministros sub-delegados.) The lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana was, virtute officii, sub-delegate, and derived his power, when once appointed, not from any specific permission or authority given by the governor general or intendant, but from the royal ordinances which regulated and defined his functions.

It is evident, therefore, that this 15th article must, consistently with the ordinance of 1754, either refer to New Orleans alone and Lower Louisiana, if it means by concessions original grants, or, what is the more rational construction, it must refer exclusively to complete titles, in which case it very nearly conforms to the ordinance of 1754 and that of 1786.

To explain the meaning of Morales in the 2d regulation, it may be observed that commandants of posts were not necessarily sub-delegates, and that this latter quality alone entitled them to issue concessions. In Upper Louisiana, for instance, the commandant of the post of St. Andre was not a sub-delegate, and he therefore could only report that the land asked for was vacant, and that the demandant was such a person as he represented himself to be, upon which report the lieutenant governor, as sub-delegate, originated the title, or, in other words, made the concession, which, in due course, was to be confirmed at New Orleans. "The commandants of posts," therefore, mentioned in the 2d regulation, and upon which Mr. Lucas relies, must mean commandants simply, and not sub-delegates. In this way Morales is consistent with the ordinances, and in no other.

It may be proper to observe that, from the situation which Mr. Lucas held as commissioner, and the fact that he is now an adverse party to one of the petitions filed in this court, his publications and objections have been deemed worthy of notice. The subject is novel, somewhat involved, and it was feared that plausible objections, coming from such a quarter, might meet with more attention and respect than, when thoroughly examined, they deserve.

The other articles of those regulations appear to have been framed for the sole purpose of drawing money into the coffers of the government, or rather of its officers at New Orleans, and are manifestly in opposition to the spirit and principle upon which the government of Upper Louisiana was theretofore administered. The object of the governors general had been (particularly from the commencement of the administration of the Baron de Carondelet) to facilitate the colonization of Upper Louisiana. For that purpose the greatest encouragement was held out to settlers, and lands were granted to them upon terms the least onerous and expensive possible. The original concession was made, it is believed, without any charge for fees of office or of any other description.

Sales of land by the government of Spain were unknown in Upper Louisiana, and the grants made were universally either as recompenses for services or gifts, (mercedes,) or in consideration of and to encourage agricultural or other industry. It is not, therefore, to be wondered at that those regulations were objected to by the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, or protested against by the cabildo at New Orleans.

But supposing for a moment that those complex and oppressive regulations were seriously intended by Morales to be enforced, it by no means follows that his intentions are binding on this tribunal. If it be manifest that, at any point of time subsequent to the date of the concession, the Spanish government would have confirmed the grant without loading its confirmation with the charges and formalities invented by Morales, this court is bound now to decree confirmation in the same liberal spirit.

Indeed, when we examine the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22d articles of the regulations of Morales, it is manifest that, giving to them at this date the most plenary operation, the claimant would be entitled to a complete title on the ground of compromise to be made with reference to the circumstances of the case. The circumstances, it will be admitted, are all in favor of the claimant. The expenses to which he has been subjected; the deprivation of rights which he has sustained; the delay of justice; the many years that have elapsed since that treaty was made, which ought, if it had been observed, at once to have given to the inhabitants of Louisiana the substantial enjoyment of their property, so solemnly guarantied to them by its third article—all those circumstances, even upon the ground of compromise, to which even Morales's regulations entitle them, it is repeated, bring the claimants within the protection of the act under which this court is to adjudicate.

It is supposed that there can be no great necessity for demonstrating that the regulations of Morales, supposing them to have any value, can be only prospective in their operation, and that they cannot impair the validity of any incomplete title or concession made previous to their date.

To remove all doubt on this point we shall here refer to the authority of Morales himself, as we have already done in a former part of the argument, to demonstrate his recognition of the power of the lieutenant governor to grant.

We therefore call back the attention of the court to the three complete titles made by Morales before cited:

The 1st for 900 arpents, on a concession by Zenon Trudeau.

The 2d for 1,042 arpents, on a concession by same.

The 3d for 8,000 arpents, on a concession by same.

The first two dated April 28, 1802; the third dated June 5, 1802.

The language used by Morales in those complete titles is conclusive to show that he never intended their operation to be retrospective. He says that the grantee, "having complied with all the formalities and obligations required, inasmuch as this concession is anterior in date to the last regulation published by this intendancy," prays for a corresponding complete title, (habiendo cumplido con las formalidades, y obligaciones prevenidos por ser esta concesion anterior a las ultimas disposiciones del reglamento publicado por esta intendencia.) The "last regulations" meant by Morales are those upon which we have been observing; none others, it is believed, have even been published by him.

With this decision of Morales we shall close our remarks on his regulations.

In the argument above submitted we have relied on laws and usages, which, in an ordinary court of justice, deciding on the narrowest grounds, would, we conceive, entitle the claimant to a decree in his favor.

But we, with great respect, submit that this court has a duty to perform which transcends the limits of ordinary jurisdiction—the high duty of expounding and giving operation to international compacts and solemn treaties.

We have already spoken of the treaty of cession of 1803, but we conceive that not only this treaty, but those of 1762 and 1800, between France and Spain, are important to be considered.

The treaty of 1762, by which Louisiana was ceded by France to Spain, has never been published.

The character of this treaty and circumstances attending it are, however, matter of history. It was a species of family compact, which, though it may have answered the purpose of the monarch who transferred his vassals, did by no means please the inhabitants of Louisiana. This was felt by the King of France, and everything was done on his part that could reconcile his subjects to the new yoke to which they were compelled to submit.

The letter of the King of France to M. D'Abadie, director general and commandant for his Majesty in Louisiana, demonstrates this, and may well be considered a publication of that part of the treaty of Fontainebleau which immediately concerned the inhabitants of Louisiana, and those rights and interests which, by the operation of the treaty, might have been endangered or affected.

This letter bears date at Versailles, April 21, 1764, and was published at New Orleans in October of the same year. In this letter the King assures the inhabitants "that all the grants made by the governors and directors of the colony shall be holden and taken as confirmed by his Catholic Majesty, even though not yet confirmed by him."—(Vide Appendix to Land Laws of the United States, page 8, No. 2.)

The assurance thus given has been religiously observed by the Spanish authorities in Louisiana, who, no doubt, considered it as a part of the treaty, and equally binding on the conscience and honor of the Spanish monarch.

The observations we have offered on the treaty of Fontainebleau are applicable to that of St. Ildefonso: the same ungracious transfer, the same unceremonious conveyance of territory and people, and therefore the same causes of disgust and mortification to the inhabitants of Louisiana.

The Spanish government in that province had effectually succeeded in effacing all trace of attachment to the ancient French connexion. The mildness and justice of the Spanish rule had entirely reconciled the inhabitants to the domination of Spain, and made them look with the same disgust and apprehension to the retrocession to France as they had felt forty years before for their transfer by France to Spain.

Besides, the population of Louisiana had in that interval been in a great measure recomposed.

In 1762 it was universally French in birth, language, and habits: in 1800 it was comparatively Spanish.

Encouraged by the advantages held out by Spain, a multitude of Spanish subjects of either hemisphere flocked to Louisiana. The public offices were filled by them, and a great portion of the property had passed into their possession. They therefore viewed with all the prejudices of Spaniards the retrocession to France, and naturally preferred the mild sway of the Spanish monarch to what they deemed the military despotism of Napoleon Bonaparte.

This, as in 1763, was foreseen by the contracting parties, and every effort was made to reconcile the people of Louisiana to their new master.

In this point of view the proclamation of Salcedo and Casa Calvo (commissioners of the King of Spain for the delivery of the colony to the French authorities) is analogous to the letter of Louis XV to D'Abadie. It had a similar object and was couched in nearly the same language.

This proclamation (as has been proved in this case) was published with all due solemnity to New Orleans and St. Louis, and was sent to all the commandants of posts in Upper and Lower Louisiana, to be by them communicated to the inhabitants.

The commissioners in this proclamation, in the same terms used by Louis in his letter to M. D'Abadie, assure the people of Louisiana that all their concessions shall remain good and valid, even those not confirmed by the King of Spain.

This proclamation, having been tacitly assented to by the French government, must be taken as an authorized interpretation of the treaty of St. Ildefonso. If, then, Spain felt herself bound by the letter of Louis to his representative, and France assented to the proclamation of the Spanish commissioners, it seems to follow that the United States, who have succeeded the French republic in Louisiana, are bound to respect the Spanish guarantee, and to adopt the construction which has been given to the treaty of St. Ildefonso by the governments who were parties to it.

Inasmuch as the proclamation of Salcedo and Casa Calvo was a public and official act, the United States must be deemed to have had full and timely knowledge of it, and might have protested against it. This was not done, and consequently the inhabitants of Louisiana were justified in supposing that the objection which the proclamation created devolved on the United States when the sovereignty of the country became vested in them.

It would now, therefore, be a breach of faith to declare this assurance to be a nullity. All those inhabitants of Louisiana who, relying on the protection of the treaty of St. Ildefonso as proclaimed by the royal commissioners, elected to become American citizens, would be the victims of this perfidious doctrine. Many of those inhabitants were meritorious servants of the Spanish crown, and had an undoubted right to its future protection. This right, of course, became forfeited by the transfer of their allegiance to the United States, and there then remained to them no other fruit of their allegiance to Spain than the grants already made to them by that government, and which they were justified in supposing were virtually confirmed by the treaty under which they became American citizens.

It is to be regretted that this reliance on the faith of treaties has not been confirmed by the event. Already twenty years have elapsed, and grants made for services rendered are still unconfirmed. A confirmation at this day cannot repair the mischief and injustice of this long delay; for what can compensate twenty years of human existence wasted in disappointed hope and galling penury? The decree may restore to the injured claimant the possession of his lawful property, but it can do no more.

As an additional argument in favor of a liberal construction of titles such as the present, we rely also on the peculiar nature of the present law, and all the former laws of Congress on the same subject. The character of all of them is essentially remedial. When, therefore, in any of those laws a principle of protection is conceded by Congress, it is submitted that the claimant in this court is entitled to the benefit of that principle. In no other rational sense can the provision in the present act be understood, which authorizes the court to frame its decree as well with reference to those laws as to any other law or usage.

It has been contended at the bar on behalf of the United States, that a penal or disqualifying effect should be given to certain of those acts of Congress. This position it has been the duty of the counsel for the claimant to refute in argument, and is here noticed only on account of its self evident error.

In this note of our argument we have omitted a variety of auxiliary topics dwelt on at the bar. This omission will not, however, affect our general reasoning: our object has been to give a concise analysis, rather than a full report of what we have spoken. We are not at present aware that in our anxiety to be brief we have overlooked any part of the question. If, however, some link of argument should still be wanting, we pray that the defect may be pointed out, and we shall endeavor to amend it.

APPENDIX.

Proclamation of the Commissioners of the King of Spain to the people of Louisiana, on the cession of that province to the French Republic.

Don Manuel de Salcedo, brigadier of the royal armies, governor, civil and military, of the provinces of Louisiana and Western Florida, inspector of the troops and militia thereof, vice-patron royal, judge, sub-delegate of the general intendency of ——, &c., and Don Sebastien Calvo de la Puerra y o Farrill, Marquis of Casa Calvo, knight of the order of St. James, brigadier of the royal armies, and colonel of the regiment of infantry of Louisiana, commissioned by his Majesty for the delivery of this province to the French republic—

Make known to all the vassals of our lord the King, of whatever class or condition they may be, that his Majesty has resolved that the retrocession of Louisiana should be made to the reciprocal satisfaction of each power; and, that the same proofs of protection and love which the inhabitants of this province have experieneed should be continued, his Majesty, amongst other things, has been pleased to determine certain points which we believe our duty to cause to be published for the knowledge and disposition of all interested.

First. His Majesty having under his eyes the obligations imposed by the treaties, and being desirous to avoid all dispute which might unexpectedly arise, has resolved that the retrocession of the colony and island of Orleans which is to be made to the general of division, Victor, or other officers lawfully authorized by the government of the French republic, take place in the same form as that in which France has ceded it to his Majesty. In virtue of which the limits of the border of the Mississippi or river St. Louis shall remain as they were fixed by the 7th article of the definitive treaty of peace, concluded in Paris the 10th of February, 1762; and consequently the settlements of the river Manshack, or Iberville, as far as the line which separates the American territory from the King's domain, shall remain under the power of Spain, and annexed to the Western Florida.

Second All individuals who have been in the employ of his Majesty, and who will remain under the domination of the King, will go to the place of Havana or any other places belonging to his Majesty, unless they should prefer to remain in the service of France, which they may freely do; but should any just and well-founded reasons hinder them for the present to comply with this disposition, they may state them through their respective chiefs, to be decided upon accordingly.

Third. The benevolence of his Majesty will not discontinue the pensions granted to the widows and those who have retired from the service, and will acquaint them in what manner they may receive their pensions.

Fourth. His Majesty makes known that by the wishes he entertains for the advantage and peace of the inhabitants of the colony, he expects, from the sincere and close amity and alliance which unites the Spanish government to that of the republic, that the latter will give orders to the governors and other officers employed in its service in the said colony and city of New Orleans, to the end that the churches and other houses of religious worship, served by the curates and missionaries, should continue on the same footing and enjoy the same privileges, prerogatives, and immunities, which were granted to them by the titles of their establishments; that the ordinary judges continue, equally as the tribunals established, to administer justice according to the laws and customs adopted in the colony; that the inhabitants should be maintained and preserved in the peaceable possession of their property; that all concessions or property of any kind soever, given by the governors of these provinces be confirmed, although it had not even been done by his Majesty; hoping, also, that the government of the republic will give to its new subjects the same proofs of love and protection which they have had under the government of his Majesty.

Fifth. In order that all parties interested may take the resolution which they will judge the most conducive to their interest and welfare, we also make known that, in case of doubt, they may have recourse and apply to any of us for more ample information and knowledge, according to the rules and instructions which we have received.

And that it may come to public knowledge, we do ordain that the same be published with all the solemnity required, at the sound of military drum, and posted up in the ordinary places. Given at New Orleans, May 18, 1803.

MANUEL DE SALCEDO.
LE MARQUIS DE CASA CALVO.

By order of their lordships.
CHARLES XIMENES, Secretary of War.

Copy.
ANDRE LOPEZ ARMESTO.

By order of their lordships the commissaries, I have commanded the publication, at the sound of the drum, in this post of St. Louis.

CHARLES DEHAULT DELASSUS.

The Baron de Carondelet, Knight of the Order of the Religion of St. John, Brigadier of the Royal Armies, Governor, Vice-Patron of the Provinces of Louisiana, Western Florida, and Inspector of the troops thereof, &c.

NEW ORLEANS, February 3, 1795.

In order to obviate the many and various difficulties which have happened between the inhabitants of the posts and settlements of Illinois, relative to the boundaries of their lands, the greatest part not yet surveyed for want of an experienced surveyor, and that to avoid disorder, confusion, irregularities, and litigations and lawsuits which may in future take place, being myself informed of the capacity and talents of the captain of the militia of the post of St. Louis, Don Anthony Soulard, I have named him, and by these presents I name and appoint him, surveyor of all the districts of Illinois and New Madrid, so that, conforming himself to the instructions of the surveyor general, the lieutenant of the armies, Don Charles Laveau, with whom he is to correspond directly, he will measure, survey, establish boundaries, and mark the lands which will be conceded by this general government, taking his lawful and accustomary fees. I command all the respective commandants and the lieutenant governor of the establishment of Illinois to render him, and cause to be rendered him, the honors, rights, and privileges which belong and appertain to such surveyor.

Given the present, signed with my hand, sealed with the seal of my arms, and countersigned by the undersigned secretary of this government general for his Majesty.

EL BARON DE CARONDELET.

ANDRES LOPEZ ARMESTO.

NEW ORLEANS, May 30, 1805.

I have received the statement of the artillery, stores, and effects belonging and appertaining to his Majesty, which you have brought away in the boats of the expedition for the evacuation of the domain of Upper Louisiana, and which, agreeably to my orders, were disembarked at Baton Rouge. I have likewise in my possession the inventory of the papers relating to the inhabitants, and other documents and correspondence of the government mentioned in your official letter.

I have likewise been informed of the steps which you have taken to procure the artillery of the fort of Carondelet, in the Osage nation, and which you could not take down, leaving it with the hopes that Don Auguste Chouteau will attend to it, who has undertaken to deliver it at Baton Rouge.

In acknowledging the receipt of your official letter, I cannot do less than to manifest to you, sir, the satisfaction which I feel in observing the particular zeal and love for the service which has distinguished your command in the posts of Upper Louisiana, in which you have, in so distinguished a manner, interested yourself in the welfare of the inhabitants. God preserve you, sir, many years.

EL MARQUES DE CASA CALVO.

Sor. Don CHARLES DEHAULT DELASSUS.

Official letter of C. D. Delassus, lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, to Antoine Soulard, surveyor general of that province, dated May 18, 1808.

[Translated from the original Spanish.]

By letter dated 1st December of the last year, Don Juan Ventura Morales, intendant general of these provinces, tells me as follows:

"On account of the death of the assessor of this intendancy, and there not being in the province a learned man who can supply his place, I have closed the tribunals of affairs and causes relating to grants and compositions of royal lands, as the 81st article of the royal ordinance for the intendants of New Spain provides that, for conducting that tribunal and substantiating its acts, the concurrence of that officer shall be necessary. I make this communication in order that, apprised of this providence, you may not receive, frame, or transmit memorials soliciting lands until further orders."

I transmit you the above for your information, and you may communicate it to those inhabitants whose concessions have been surveyed, and who would solicit their title in form from the intendancy, to the end that they will await the further order above mentioned. In the meantime I understand that they shall continue in secure possession of the said lands.

God preserve, &c. At St. Louis of Illinois, May 18, 1803.

CARLOS DEHAULT DELASSUS.

Don ANTONIO SOULARD.

Official letter of the intendant general of Louisiana, Juan Ventura Morales, dated July 17, 1799, on the subject of his regulations (of same date) concerning the granting of lands, addressed to Charles Dehault Delassus, lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana.

NEW ORLEANS, July 17, 1799.

For the government of this sub-delegation, and the information of the inhabitants of the district and the other persons concerned in the distribution and grant of lands and royal domain, I transmit to you six copies of the regulation that I have framed, and which must be observed until his Majesty shall have otherwise decided. It must be published in the same manner as is usual with respect to other general orders that concern the service of his Majesty, and you, sir, will give me due information of having executed it. God preserve you, sir, many years.

JUAN VENTURA MORALES.

The COMMAND OF ST. LOUIS OF ILLINOIS.

On the margin of the original are written by the lieutenant governor the words and letters—

Ha. Nva. orden sin cumplimiento—until further ordered, not executed.

Letter from the intendant general to the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, relating to the powers and duties of the surveyor of that province.

In my official letter of this date, I say to the Captain Don Henrique Peyroux, sub-delegate of the intendency in the post of New Madrid, as follows:

"Having before me the statement dated 31st of last July, made to me by the surveyor of Upper Louisiana, Don Antonio Soulard, and also the communication dated 22d September last, on the same subject, made to me by the surveyor general of Louisiana, Don Carlos Trudeau, I have to inform you that, considering as surveyor of the post of New Madrid the said Soulard, you must not prevent him from executing the surveys of land that may become necessary in that district, either by himself or by the person whom under his responsibility he shall commission, for this is necessary to the good order which I desire may be established on this subject, and the uniformity and subordination to the surveyor general of this capital, with whom the others must co-operate." I communicate this to you, sir, that you understand and enforce it, informing me of the receipt of this official letter for my own government. God preserve, &c. New Orleans, January 21, 1802.

JUAN VENTURA MORALES.

Soñ. Don CARLOS DEHAULT DELASSUS.

Official letter of the intendant general to the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, in which the intendant recognizes the lieutenant governor and the commandant of the post of New Madrid as sub-delegates respectively, and in such capacity declares them to be independent of each other.

I have seen the instructions which you, sir, (in the belief that as lieutenant governor of the establishments of the Illinois, the officers of the royal treasury of the post of New Madrid, subject by order of the deceased governor, Don Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, to this command (that of New Orleans) must be subordinate to you) have framed for the government of the commandant, Don Roberto Mackay, in his quality of sub-delegate of the intendancy, and of the magazine keeper, Don Juan Lavellee, copies of which instructions you enclosed to me in your official letter of the 30th of June last, No. 59.

In answer, I must say that, it being contrary to law that one sub-delegate should transfer his powers to another, and it being opposed to the regularity of business that that should be certified upon report which is not present, the instructions given by you cannot nor ought not to have effect, and the more so inasmuch as the sub-delegation of the intendancy is local, and that the magazine keeper cannot recognize as his immediate chief any other than those who exercise the sub-delegation. For which reasons, without prejudice to the good understanding which the Commandant Mackay, or he who has succeeded him, shall have with you in civil and military matters, and to their recourse to you for the supplies of provisions and other things of which the post may have need, I inform, by letter of this date, the Captain Don Henrique Peyroux, and the magazine keeper, Don Juan Lavellee, that they are not subordinate to you, the first as sub-delegate of this intendancy, and the second as magazine keeper. The service consequently being to be performed, and the documents to be drawn up in the same form as when you, sir, were commandant of that post independently of the lieutenant governor of the Illinois, and observing the instructions which shall be issued from this royal treasury office, and also the other orders of this intendancy. God preserve, &c. New Orleans, August 26, 1799.

JUAN VENTURA MORALES.

Don CARLOS DEHAULT DELASSUS.

Official certificate by the ministers of the royal treasury at New Orleans, in favor of the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, whereby it appears that the lieutenant governor was vested with the power of sub-delegate.

We, Don Gilberto Leonard, treasurer of the army, and Don Manuel Gonzalez Armires, ministers of the royal treasury, and formerly accountant and treasurer ad interim, respectively, of the province of Louisiana, during the Spanish government, continuing our functions until the entire conclusion of the affairs of said departments do certify that, in pursuance of a decree of the senor intendant general ad interim, the Señor Colonel Charles D. Delassus, formerly commandant of the port of New Madrid and lieutenant governor of St. Louis of the Illinois, with the sub-delegation of the royal treasury in both situations (con la sub-delegacion de real hacienda en ambos destinos) quitted this capital in the beginning of the year 1796, &c., &c.—[The rest of the certificate relates to the right of M. Delassus to certain emoluments in his above official capacities, and has no bearing on the matter of the argument.]—In order that this may authentically appear in favor of the said Colonel Don Carlos Dehault Delassus, and in virtue of the before recited decree, we give the present certificate at New Orleans, June 27, 1805.

APPLICATION OF PURCHASERS OF PUBLIC LANDS IN ALABAMA FOR FURTHER RELIEF.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1830.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, citizens of the State of Alabama, respectfully represent: That they are holders of certificates of purchase and relinquishers of public lands originally sold under $14 per acre, upon which further credit has been taken, or which have been relinquished under the several laws of the United States passed for the relief of purchasers of public lands.

Your petitioners further beg leave respectfully to represent that the law passed March 31, 1830, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers of public lands, and for the suppression of fraudulent practices at the public sales of the lands of the United States," does not afford to them either an adequate or proportionate relief. Your petitioners are far from indulging in invidious feelings at the good fortune of the holders of high priced lands, who are presented with a patent upon surrendering their certificates and paying the fees of office; neither did they experience other than pleasing sensations when informed of the pre-emption rights granted to settlers on public lands; they cannot, however, but view with surprise and regret the fact of their forming an isolated class, apparently excluded from the favors of government. If the object of Congress was to raise a certain amount from land debtors, it seems but just to your petitioners that it should have been drawn in rateable proportions from all. It appears, however, that the heaviest contributions have been levied upon the holders of low priced lands, generally consisting of the poorer classes of society.

Your petitioners are impressed with a belief that higher considerations influenced your honorable bodies than a mere question of revenue, and that the laws of the last session were passed under the conviction of their affording general and ample relief. Your petitioners humbly suggest to your honorable bodies that they do not receive the relief required by them, or anticipated by the framers of the law. The provision giving script for payments made on land, the cost of which does not exceed $2 50 per acre, has not operated as beneficially as was expected by its advocates. The present value of that land arises more from the quantity cleared and the buildings erected on it than from the goodness of the soil. Your petitioners respectfully and earnestly request of your honorable bodies the passage of a law entitling holders of certificates of further credit to a patent upon their paying such sum, in addition to the sum already paid, as will, together, make $1 25 per acre; and, where $1 25 per acre has been already paid, entitling them to a patent upon the surrender of their certificate; and also permitting relinquishers of public lands to re-enter the lands relinquished by them upon the payment of $1 25 per acre. Your petitioners hope your honorable bodies will not consider this request unreasonable, when they reflect that by the bill entitled "An act to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands," those settlers are allowed to select from the lands possessed or cultivated by them a quarter section, upon paying to the United States the minimum price. Your petitioners consider it a fair presumption that those settlers occupy the most fertile tracts of the different countries in which they are located. They consider it equally plain that the lands which sold for upwards of $14 per acre must be the most valuable in the districts in which they are situated, and, as a natural consequence, that the lands held by your petitioners must be the poorest in those districts. Under these circumstances your petitioners are at a loss to discover the justness of that legislative reasoning which exacts from them a sum per acre greater than that required for the best public lands to be offered for sale during the continuance of the pre-emption law. And, as in duty bound, they will ever pray, &c.

A table exhibiting the prices which have been paid by the purchasers of public lands for those which sold under the credit system for prices not exceeding $14 per acre, and have reverted for non-payment of the residue.

For lands sold at $14, the amount paid being one-fourth, is $3 50 per acre.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 24, 1830.

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Walker and Eliza Ann Griffith, formerly Eliza Ann Walker, surviving children and heirs of Peter Walker, deceased, late of the State of Mississippi, praying that an act may pass authorizing the location, on any lands of the United States not otherwise disposed of, at the proper land office in said State, of certain tracts or parcels of land, claimed by the said Peter Walker, deceased, and his two sons John Walker and Peter C. Walker, deceased, of whom the petitioners are also the legal heirs, and also one other tract claimed by the petitioner Joseph Walker, in his own right; all which said claims are founded on titles not legally and fully executed from the Spanish government, which were not confirmed by the board of commissioners sitting west of Pearl river, in the former Mississippi Territory, now State of Mississippi, reported:

That it appears to your committee, from the evidence accompanying the petition, that, on the 1st day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred, one Elijah Bunch conveyed by deed of bargain and sale to Peter Walker, since deceased, a certain tract or parcel of land, situated in said State of Mississippi, on the waters of Beaver creek, containing eight hundred acres, French measure, which deed of conveyance was filed, with a notice of claim, by the heirs of the said Peter Walker, deceased, in the office of the register of the land office west of Pearl river, in the said State of Mississippi, and rejected by the board of commissioners appointed to investigate private claims to land in said district. No grant of any description from the Spanish government to Elijah Bunch, under whom the heirs of the said Peter Walker, deceased, claim, was exhibited to the commissioners, nor does it appear by the evidence before your committee that such grant was ever made to said Bunch. Your committee, therefore, are of opinion, that as the claim of the petitioners is founded on the conveyance from Bunch to their ancestor, the said Peter Walker, deceased, it is essential to the validity of their claim, either in law or equity, to show that a title existed in Bunch before or at the date of said deed. In the absence of any evidence to establish this fact, your committee are of opinion that, as to this particular claim, the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted. It further appears to your committee that warrants or orders of survey, each for five hundred acres of land, French measure, were granted by the Spanish government, in the district of Natchez, to Peter Celestino Walker and John Peter Walker, brothers of the petitioners Joseph Walker and Eliza Ann Griffith, formerly Eliza Ann Walker, and that said grantees have departed this life without issue, by reason of which all the right, title, and interest which said Peter Celestino and John Peter Walker, deceased, held in said lands, in their lifetime, vested in the petitioners as their legal heirs; and it also appears to your committee that a warrant or order of survey was, in like manner, granted to Joseph Walker, one of the petitioners, for five hundred acres of land, French measure, situated in said district of Natchez which said several tracts or parcels of land were actually surveyed under the authority of the Spanish government, prior to the 27th of October, 1795, that being the date of the treaty between the United States and Spain, by which the possession of the country in which these tracts of land are situated was transferred to the United States. These surveys, with a notice of the claims, were filed according to law with the register of the proper land office, and rejected by the commissioners because the claimants did not actually inhabit and cultivate said tract of land at the date of said treaty with Spain, as required by the act of Congress passed on the 3d day of March, 1803, entitled "An act regulating the grants of land, and providing for the disposal of the land of the United States south of the State of Tennessee." In the further investigation of these claims it appears to your committee that, by an act of Congress passed in the year 1808, the register of the land office west of Pearl river was directed to report to the Secretary of the Treasury a list of all claims to land filed in his office founded on warrants or orders of survey granted by the British government of West Florida, or the government of Spain, and which had been rejected by the commissioners, because the land so granted was not inhabited and cultivated by the grantee, or some one to his use, on the said 27th day of October, 1795; which report was accordingly made and submitted to Congress for further legislation, in relation to grants so rejected, as aforesaid.

On the 12th day of June, 1812, Congress passed an act confirming all such warrants or orders of survey which were fairly obtained, and the survey actually made prior to the date of the Spanish treaty, although the claimant did not actually inhabit and cultivate the land, as required by the act of the 3d of March, 1803, and the register of the land office and receiver of public moneys of the district in which the land was situated were required to grant certificates of confirmation to the claimants, on all such claims not exceeding six hundred and forty acres. It further appears to your committee that application was not made to those officers for certificates of confirmation in the warrants and orders of survey to Peter Celestino Walker, John P. Walker, and Joseph Walker, in consequence of the death of the said Peter and John before the passage of the act of 1812, and of the absence of Joseph from the State of Mississippi, who was unaquainted with the necessary steps to be taken to perfect his title; also, that Eliza Ann Griffith, one of the legal representatives of said Peter Celestino Walker and John P. Walker, deceased, was, at the date of said act, an infant under the age of twenty-one years, and not informed of her rights under the aforesaid grants. Those lands have been sold by the United States; and it appears to your committee, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, just and proper to place the legal representatives of Peter Celestino Walker and John P. Walker, deceased, and Joseph Walker, one of the petitioners, on a footing with the claimants whose claims have been confirmed under the act of 1812, which can be done only by authorizing them to locate a like quantity of land on any lands of the United States not otherwise disposed of, lying within said State of Mississippi; for which purpose they beg leave to report a bill.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 24, 1830.

Mr. Patton, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Luther L. Smith, reported:

The petition sets forth that on March 20, 1817, the petitioner bought of Robert Perry, attorney in fact of James Innerarity, of Mobile, a tract of land of two hundred and seventy-nine arpents, situate in the parish of West Feliciana, adjoining the tract of land on which the petitioner resided, for which he paid the said Perry a full and fair price and consideration; that the petitioner in the same year (1817) cleared and cultivated about seventy or eighty acres of the said tract, which he has ever since quietly and undisturbedly cultivated and occupied, having built his negro quarters on the same; that the petitioner was unaware that the commissioner of land claims east of the Mississippi and west of Pearl river had reported unfavorably on this claim in the year 1815, and that the petitioner expected provision would ere this have been made for improvements and settlements made in good faith prior to the year 1819. What report had been made by the commissioner of land claims, James O. Cosley, was not known generally until after the passage of the act of Congress of March 3, 1819; nor was it known to the petitioner that the claim had been reported on unfavorably till 1824; that the petitioner did not present his claim to the commissioners of the land office at St. Helena court-house, because the commissioners, as the petitioner was informed and believed, when they received claims in 1824, received and reported on only such as had been settled prior to April 15, 1813.

The petitioner has exhibited a deed of conveyance of the said land, executed to him by Robert Perry, as attorney for James Innerarity, also a power of attorney executed by Innerarity to Perry, authorizing the latter to sell and convey the land. The petitioner has also exhibited a paper purporting to be a copy of a grant of the said land by the Spanish government to Vincent Sebn. Pentado, but the petitioner has adduced no proof to show that Pentado conveyed the land to Innerarity, nor has the petitioner adduced proof of any other statement set forth in his petition. The committee are of opinion that if every allegation in the petition was proved Congress ought not to grant the prayer of the petitioner; they therefore recommend that his claim be rejected.

21st Congress.] No. 864. [2d Session.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI, DERIVED FROM GEORGIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 24, 1830.

Mr. Sterigere, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Gibson, of Ohio, reported:

That petitioner states that on August 10, 1797, he purchased 1,000 acres of land of M. Montgomery, attorney of Zachariah Cox, for $1,000, and received a deed for the same, describing the land as lying in the great bend of the Tennessee river, in the Tennessee Company's purchase; that he was an innocent purchaser, without any notice of fraud or illegality of the sale made by the State of Georgia to said Z. Cox & Co.; that William Cox, attorney of said Z. Cox, by virtue of a letter of attorney, surrendered this land to the State of Georgia, and renounced to Georgia all the claim of said Zachariah Cox to said tract of land, for which he received upwards of $4,000.

Petitioner does not think that in equity and justice he should be bound by said relinquishment. That the land is worth $40 an acre, and asks Congress to grant him relief.

The statement of the petitioner is not corroborated by any testimony, nor even by his own oath. If, however, all the statements were fully proven, by his own showing he has not suffered any injury or injustice by the United States or any of its officers. The injury he complains of seems to have arisen out of an unlawful and fraudulent speculation, for which, perhaps, he is entitled to no relief from any source. From his own statement, if he can have any claim whatever it is on the State of Georgia, or on Zachariah Cox, his vendor, only. He is certainly not entitled to any relief from Congress on any principle of equity, or law, or usage. The committee recommend that the petition be rejected.

ON CLAIM FOR A RESERVATION UNDER TREATY OF 1814 WITH THE CREEK INDIANS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 3, 1831.

Mr. Sterigere, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of Representatives, directing the committee "to inquire into the expediency of allowing the claim of George Mayfield to six hundred and forty acres of land, reserved to him by the treaty made with the Creek Indians at Fort Jackson in 1814," reported:

That they find, on examination of the treaty made with the Creek Indians at Fort Jackson, in 1814, as ratified by the Senate, that it does not reserve any land to said George Mayfield; and that consequently he cannot be entitled to any land under that treaty. In a written communication submitted to the committee by the Hon. John Bell, of the House of Representatives, it is stated that, at the negotiation of the treaty of Fort Jackson, "a reservation of six hundred and forty acres of land was reserved to him, the said George Mayfield, in the treaty," but that "that part of the treaty which included the reservation was not ratified by the Senate."

Taking these facts for granted, the committee do not think they give Mayfield any claim on the United States. It will not be disputed that the part of the treaty relating to said reservation must have been ratified by the Senate before any right could vest in Mayfield, or that some assent or agreement on the part of the United States should be made to give him an equitable claim to said reservation or tract of land. It appears, however, from Mr. Bell's statement, that the Senate did not only not allow the reservation, but expressly rejected the article of the treaty in which it was contained. The committee are unanimously of opinion that the claim of George Mayfield to six hundred and forty acres of land, mentioned in the resolution referred to them, should not be allowed.

CLAIM OF THE OFFICERS OF THE WAR OF 1812-'15 FOR BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 4, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned officers of the army of the United States during the late war, emphatically called the second of independence, respectfully represents: That the continental Congress, by its resolution of the 16th September, 1776, did provide that the officers and soldiers of the war of independence should receive a bounty in land; that many of the States of the Union, viz: Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina, following the generous impulse, and appreciating alike the services, sacrifices, and sufferings of the officers and soldiers, did from time to time provide liberal bounties in land for their respective State lines in the continental service; that Congress did by a resolution of the 14th August, 1776, promise a bounty in land to those who should leave the armies of his Britannic Majesty in America, and should choose to become members of any of those States; that by resolutions of the 23d April, 1783, and the 7th April, 1798, Congress did provide that refugees from Canada and Nova Scotia should receive a bounty in land, and has by various subsequent acts and regulations carried into effect the said laws so passed by its own body; that by an act of the 24th December, 1811, and the acts supplementary thereto, the same bounty and liberality were extended to the soldiers of the late war, in which the undersigned served; that by the second section of the act of the 6th February, 1812, the heirs of volunteer soldiers who should be killed in battle, or should die in actual service during the war, were each promised one hundred and sixty acres of land; that under the provisions of the act of the 5th March, 1816, citizens of the United States who were inhabitants of Canada at the commencement of the late war, and who during the said war joined the armies of the United States as volunteers, were promised bounty in land in the following proportions, viz: to each colonel 960 acres; to each major 800 acres; to each captain 640 acres; to each subaltern officer 480 acres; and to the medical and other staff according to their pay; and they were authorized to locate their claims in quarter sections on any of the unappropriated lands of the United States.

The undersigned have in vain sought for reasons which should deprive the officers of the second war of independence of the same bounty which was extended by the United States, and several of the individual States, to officers of the first. The officers of the last war held the same stake, exhibited the same valor and love of liberty; and although they may not as a body have suffered as much, yet their zeal was not less, nor their exertions less meritorious or successful. If the soldiers of the late war, and the heirs of volunteers who were killed or died in the service, had claims on the bounty of the nation, why have not the officers whose skill and prowess brought them into the field and drilled them into efficiency, or those who administered to their wants or watched over their health, claims equally strong upon the government which they supported and the nation which they defended?

If citizens who abandoned the enemy of their country, and arrayed themselves in her ranks, have met favor in the halls of the nation, will her representatives be deaf to the appeal of those who sought the enemy on his own soil, foiled the discipline which conquered that first of warriors who sleeps on a distant rock, and who in risking or surrendering their lives have added another plume to the cap of liberty, another leaf to the archives of the nation's fame?

The undersigned presume to answer for your honorable body in the negative. Buoyed up by the justice of their claim, and encouraged by the many precedents in their favor, and the further consideration that the laws did not allow them to share in the munitions of war and other valuable property taken from the enemy, they appeal with confidence to the liberality of Congress and the gratitude of the nation at this auspicious period of their country's history, and therefore pray that lands may be granted to those officers of the late war who served to its close, and to the heirs of those who were killed or died in the service, in proportion at least equal to the quantity allowed to the Canadian volunteers; and that they be permitted to locate their claims on any of the unappropriated lands of the United States, or to file their warrants in payment of any lands which have hitherto been purchased from the United States, and now remain unpaid for, or at their option to receive script at the minimum price, receivable in any land office of the United States.

CLAIMS TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 4, 1831.

General Land Office, January 3, 1831.

Sir: Under the provisions of the act of Congress approved on the 28th of May, 1830, entitled "An act to authorize the register and receiver of the St. Helena land district, in Louisiana, to receive evidence and report upon certain claims to land therein mentioned," I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from those officers, covering the report required by that act, together with copies of the papers therein referred to.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. Andrew Stevenson, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

LAND OFFICE, St. Helena, November 30, 1830.

DEAR SIR: With this you will receive our report and opinion respecting the validity of two claims to lands in this district, owned by John McDonogh, which report is in conformity to an act of the last Congress approved May 28, 1830. By reference to the report it will be seen that the grants for these claims were issued by Governor Miro as early as the year 1787. We have examined the regular transfers or chain of title from the original claimants down to the present, (John McDonogh,) and find them complete, and are of opinion that these claims are valid and ought to be recognized as such by the government of the United States.

We regret that it has not been in our power to furnish this report at the commencement of the present session of Congress, but the delay has been in consequence of the neglect of the claimant and not us, as will appear by reference to his and the letter from the register of the eastern district at New Orleans; the latter having only furnished abstracts in the first instance, instead of sending the regular certified copies of the patents at full length. As our delay has been solely with a view to the ends of justice, we hope we shall find sufficient apology by forwarding the enclosed letters.

With high regard, &c., &c.,

THOMAS GREEN DAVIDSON, Register.
A. G. PENN, Receiver.

Hon. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner, &c.

The above is a register of claims made in conformity with an act of last Congress of the United States, approved May 28, A. D. 1830. In regard to the foregoing claims, the undersigned commissioners beg leave to remark that they have examined all the title papers of each, and find the regular chain of title complete, from the original claimant down to the present, (John McDonogh;) and from the evidence before us it appears that the three first patents were issued as early as the year 1787, by Governor Miro, and that they were occupied as early as 1790. The precise nature of the inhabitation and cultivation has not been proved to us.

The fourth claim, in the name of Domingo Assaretto as original claimant, seems to be a complete patent from Governor Miro for 1,200 arpents, issued February 18, 1783, without the additional proof of occupancy, except the remark in the grant, "that the possession has been given and is recognized." The undersigned further remark, that although the grants for all of these claims refer to the surveys, and to the fact of their having been made, yet the date of the time when they were surveyed is not mentioned in the grants. How far this ought to affect their validity we leave to the consideration of Congress, by subjoining the following remarks: that many claims in this office appear to have been reported upon similar facts, which have been confirmed and recognized by the proper authorities as valid.

LAND OFFICE, St. Helena Court-house, Louisiana, December 4, A. D. 1830.

LAND OFFICE, New Orleans, November 8, 1830.

GENTLEMEN: Some time after I made out the copies of the patents in the names of Wm. Stephen, Carpinter, D. Assaretto, and Wm. and D. Williams, for Mr. McDonogh, I discovered that it had been the invariable custom of the office to fill out the copies of such of the patents which had been abbreviated or curtailed in the registry from the one recorded at length in the beginning of each book and which served as a formula or exemplar. This will account for the difference between the copies of the above patents now furnished and those furnished in August last.

I remain, gentlemen, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HILARY B. CENAS, Register.

The REGISTER and RECEIVER of the Land Office, St. Helena.

NEW ORLEANS, Tuesday, November 16, 1830.

GENTLEMEN: I yesterday put in the post office a packet directed to Mr. Davidson, containing a duplicate of mine to him of the 4th instant, with the four patents in question copied out in full, and I took therefrom his letter to me of the 8th instant. On seeing Mr. McCaleb an hour after having put said packet in the post office, he handed me your favor of the 13th instant, the contents of which I note, and was happy to find you had received mine of the 4th instant. On the patents reaching you I doubt not all will be found satisfactory. As you observe, the plats of survey sometimes accompanied the patents, at other times they did not; they were not recorded in the book of patents. When at your office I pointed out to you on the township plats the situation of those tracts; they are put down there as public lands, (no private claims being on them, as every one knew they were owned by complete title.) Mr. Brown, the principal deputy surveyor at Baton Rouge, promised me to forward you the plats of them. Whether your report is made, gentlemen, a few weeks sooner or later is of no consequence; the object is to do justice, and I know you too well to believe you would make one against me where you were convinced my title was a good one; therefore should my patents from any accident not reach you, I will beg the favor of one of you to cross over here, (as I will with pleasure and gratitude pay your expenses coming and going,) as two minutes passed by you in the land office here will satisfy you on every point.

Excuse the haste with which I address you, and believe me to be, with great respect, gentlemen, your obedient and very humble servant,

JOHN McDONOGH.

ADVERSE TO THE RELOCATION OF A BOUNTY LAND PATENT BY THE ASSIGNEE OF A SOLDIER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 5, 1831.

Mr. Sterigere, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Peter Williams, of Hancock county, Illinois, reported:

That it appears from a statement of the petitioner, and the accompanying testimony, that a patent was granted to William Hall, a soldier of the late war, for the southeast quarter of section number 29, of township number 4 north, of range number 9 west of the fourth principal meridian, as his military bounty land; that said Hall sold and conveyed the same by deed to John T. Doubleday, who sold and conveyed the same by deed to Lyman Tracy, and that Tracy sold and conveyed the same by deed of the 11th November, 1820, to the petitioner, who is still the owner of the said tract or quarter section of land.

The petitioner alleges that he purchased said land without previously ascertaining its actual value, and removed to it in 1823; that he has since found it is subject to annual inundations, and is unfit for cultivation; that he exhausted all his pecuniary means in removing from Ohio to the western country, and has suffered, &c.; and prays Congress to pass a law authorizing him to select and locate an equal quantity of land in the military bounty land tract in the State of Illinois.

By an act of Congress, soldiers who have received patents for bounty land which is unfit for cultivation are authorized to exchange them for other land fit for cultivation, provided they remove to and settle on the same; but there is no such privilege granted to the assignee of a soldier, or even to a soldier, unless he intends settling on the lands; nor is there a single instance in which it has granted to the soldier's assignee, or other owner, such a privilege. This privilege, which is proper with reference to the soldier himself, the committee think should not be extended to his assignee. It would operate generally as an increase to speculation in such lands, already too great, and would benefit the speculator only, and not the soldier, as nearly all the bounty lands granted to the soldiers of the late war are notoriously in the hands of speculators. The committee think Congress ought to be careful not to set an example of this kind, and are of opinion the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

21st Congress.] No. 870. [2d Session.

ADVERSE TO THE CONFIRMATION OF THE SALE OF AN INDIAN RESERVATION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 5, 1831.

Mr. Sterigere, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of James Caulfield, reported:

That by an act of Congress of the 20th of April, 1818, Peggy Bailey (sister of Dixon Bailey, a Creek Indian, who was slain at the capture of Fort Mims) was authorized to enter without payment, at the proper land office, three hundred and twenty acres of land, so as to include the settlement and improvement of said Dixon Bailey, in Alabama: Providing, however, "that neither the said Peggy Bailey nor her heirs shall have power of claiming said land, or any part thereof, in any manner whatever." And in case of the voluntary abandonment of the possession and occupancy of said tract of land by the said Peggy Bailey, or of her heirs hereafter, the said land shall revert to the United States.

The memorialist states that said Peggy Bailey entered 320 acres of land at the land office at Cahaba, agreeably to the act of Congress, took possession thereof, and remained in the possession and occupancy of the same until 23d September, 1828, when she voluntarily abandoned it, and emigrated to the west of the Mississippi river with her husband, Richard Robinson; that a Benjamin Hawkins, agent and attorney in fact of said Richard Robinson and Peggy, in consideration of $1,000, sold and conveyed all their right, title, claim, and interest in said tract of land to the memorialist. He states that at the time he purchased said claim he was not aware of the proviso in the act of Congress, but purchased the same in good faith, and under an expectation he would receive a patent for the same, which he is now informed he cannot, and that it will be necessary to pass an act of Congress on the subject to vest the land in the memorialist. He says, in consequence of the removal of the said Peggy, he is left dependent for indemnity for the amount paid by him on the justice and liberality of Congress. He therefore prays Congress to pass an act vesting in him the title to the said tract of land granted to said Peggy Bailey. The letter of attorney and conveyance alluded to, and a letter from a Mr. Bailey respecting the character of the petitioner, accompany the memorial. But there is no proof of the allegations contained in the memorial, not even the oath of the petitioner himself. The petitioner purchased in the very face of a law prohibiting the sale of the land by Peggy Bailey, and the committee think it scarcely possible that the parties to the said sale and conveyance could have been ignorant of the prohibition to Peggy Bailey to sell said land contained in the act recited, as it is contained in the same act under which she derived her right to occupy the land, to which the purchaser ought to have looked, and to which it is highly improbable he did not look. But this view of the case is not material. If the memorialist was ignorant of the proviso, as he alleges, it is no ground to set up any claim to the land, or for indemnity for the amount he paid. He has no stronger claim on Congress than any other man would have who might purchase land of the squatter on the public lands. If Congress grant the prayer of the petitioner, and thus sanction the principle involved, it will be establishing a precedent, and making an example, going to countenancing and encouraging speculators in their frauds on the government, in buying up pretended titles to the public lands. The committee think Congress should discountenance such traffic by refusing their sanction to any such case as the petitioner's, or any other such speculation.

In this case the petitioner should be left to seek his remedy in the courts of justice, as other citizens. His case has no superior merits; and if he purchased ignorantly, as he alleges, the committee are not aware that he has any stronger claims than any other person who may have purchased lands to which the vender had no title, or had no right to sell. If the claim of the petitioner be allowed, it establishes a principle which gives every individual who will come forward and allege he has been overreached or deceived in a bargain—a speculation for land—or was mistaken in his purchase, or ignorant of the rights and interests of the vender, a right to be indemnified by Congress. Because James Caulfield bought of Peggy Bailey and her husband a tract of land to which they had no title, and no right to sell, it gives him no stronger claim to be indemnified by Congress than if he had bought a tract of land of any other individual to which he had no title or right to sell. To pretend that Congress ought to indemnify all ignorant purchasers for their improvident bargains and losses is an idea too absurd to remark upon The committee think the memorialist has no more claim to the tract of land mentioned than any other portion of the public lands, and that such speculations should be frowned upon. They therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the memorialist ought not to be granted.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 6, 1831.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Hillin, reported:

That the petitioner states that he represents the heir of Nathaniel Hillin; that "Isam Hillin, in 1807, inhabited and cultivated" a certain tract of land in the parish of East Baton Rouge, State of Louisiana, which was afterwards inhabited and cultivated by his brother, Nathaniel Hillin, and subsequently by Peter Bailey in 1815 or 1816, for Nathaniel Hillin's heir, and that the petitioner has kept said land in cultivation ever since for the benefit of said heir. That they had employed an agent to lay the claim before the land commissioners, who neglected to attend to it.

The petitioner prays that the "land commissioners east of the island of Orleans, in the State of Louisiana," may be authorized to receive said land claim, and report thereon, or grant such other relief as may be deemed expedient.

The facts set forth in the petition are not verified even by the petitioner's own oath. There is an affidavit of the petitioner, and also of Peter Bailey and of Alexander Fridge, stating that a certain tract of land situate in East Baton Rouge was improved in 1807 by Isam Hillin, and in 1815 or 1816 inhabited and cultivated by Peter Bailey for said Nathaniel Hillin's heir, and has been in cultivation ever since for said heir.

The testimony in this case is entirely too loose, uncertain, weak, and suspicious to sustain any claim; neither the petitioner nor the deponents give any description of the property, its boundaries, or quantity. The claim has never been entered with any board of land commissioners. The allegation of the petitioner that an agent had been employed, who neglected to attend to this claim, is entitled to no credit in the absence of the testimony of the agent to that statement. At any rate, according to the petitioner's own statements, the claimants have been only trespassers on the public lands. The committee are not aware that this claim is sustained by any law or usage. But, if none of the above objections existed against the claim, the committee think it would be bad policy to open the land offices for the reception and examination of every new claim which may from time to time be gotten up, either honestly or otherwise, to portions of the public land, and in that manner prevent a final settlement of these claims, and the bringing of the public lands into the market. The committee think the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted, and submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petition be rejected.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 872. [2D SESSION.

RELATIVE TO THE THREE PER CENT. FUND FROM THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS AND CANALS IN CERTAIN STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES BY THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS JANUARY 6, 1831.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 6, 1831.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the payment of the balance due to the State of Missouri out of the three per cent. fund has been withheld, as well as those due to the States of Illinois and Alabama, for want of a return of the application of the money previously paid to those States according to law. The returns show that the money has not been applied to the object prescribed by the respective acts of Congress, and the Secretary of the Treasury is consequently required to withhold the payment. The difficulty may be removed by repealing so much of the several acts of Congress as requires the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold payment until a return be made of the application of the moneys previously paid. Should that measure correspond with the views of the committee, it will be proper to comprehend in the provisions of a bill for that purpose all the States to which the three per cent. fund may be payable conditionally, viz: Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Alabama, and Mississippi. They will then be all placed on the same footing, in this respect, as Ohio; and, like that State, they will be required by law to transmit an annual account of the application of the moneys received, but not subject to have the accruing moneys withheld in default of such return being made.

Annexed is a note of the several acts of Congress relating to this subject.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. C. A. WICKLIFFE, Chairman Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives of the United States.

Ohio.—Laws U. S., vol. 3, p. 542, § 2. To be applied in laying out, opening and making roads within said State, and to no other purpose whatever. Annual account of the application of the same to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury. No direction is given for withholding payment in default of such return being made.

Indiana.—Laws U. S., vol. 6, p. 284. Public roads and canals within the State, and to no other purpose whatever.

Illinois.—Laws U. S., vol. 6, p. 547. Encouragement of learning, and to no other purpose.

Missouri, Mississippi, and Alabama.—Laws U. S., vol. 7, p. 46. Public roads and canals, and improving the navigation of rivers, and to no other purpose.

In the five last-mentioned States, the same account of the application of the money is required as in the State of Ohio; and in default of such return being made, the Secretary is required to withhold payment until a return shall be made.

ADVERSE TO ALLOWING TO THE HEIRS OF A REVOLUTIONARY OFFICER A WARRANT FOR LAND WHERE THE OFFICER HIMSELF HAD RECEIVED IT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 7, 1831.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Selby Harney, Arthur Gregory, (for his wife Nancy,) and Thomas Harney, reported:

The memorialists allege that the said Selby Harney, Thomas Harney, and Nancy Gregory are the only surviving heirs of Selby Harney, deceased, a lieutenant colonel in the revolutionary army, who died in the year 1800; that Colonel Harney was entitled to a tract of land for his revolutionary services; that a grant was issued to Colonel Harney for his land, and it was located in the county of Licking, in the State of Ohio, and now held by other persons, without any right in the knowledge of the petitioners; that, until within three or four years, the petitioners were ignorant that their father had been granted a tract of land for his revolutionary services; they allege they do not believe their father, or any of his legal representatives, ever transferred said grant; that, by the lapse of time, they are debarred from receiving the land from the present holders, and pray Congress to make them compensation in other lands belonging to the United States in Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, or Kentucky, which may be a fair equivalent to that granted to their father, Colonel Harney, taking into consideration the present enhanced value of land in Licking county, Ohio. They also state the death of the other heir of said Colonel Harney.

The petitioners have submitted ample proof of their being heirs of Colonel Harney, but no proof of their being the only surviving heirs, or of the death of all the other heirs; but, taking the statement of the petitioners, so far as they are not contradicted by other proof, as true, they are not entitled to have their claim allowed.

It appears Colonel Selby Harney was entitled to 500 acres of land for his revolutionary services, and that a warrant, No. 1093, was granted to Colonel Harney for that quantity; that this warrant was located by the holder, G. W. Steel, on the second section of the fourth township, range twelve, in the United States military tract of Ohio, agreeably to the act of the 1st of June, 1796, which authorized the holders of such warrants to locate them. These facts are shown by the records of the land office. The warrant mentioned, with many others, was destroyed at the time the departments were burned in August, 1814, and many other papers connected with this subject. It is fair to conclude that the land officers would not have permitted this land to have been improperly or illegally located; and the committee have no doubt that the warrant had been legally transferred to Mr. Steel in the absence of all proof, or even presumption, to the contrary; and that there is no foundation whatever for the belief that the present holders, or their vendors, obtained possession of the land by forgery, fraud, or any other illegal means. If the land passed legally and honestly from Colonel Harney, his heirs have no cause of complaint, or any claim on the United States, or anybody else. If the possessors have obtained possession of the land in the manner the petitioners allege, or Colonel Harney has been defrauded of the right, the courts of justice are open, in which, like other citizens, they must seek a remedy for their violated rights. The committee think they should have prosecuted their claims in the courts of justice before they sought relief elsewhere. Whether Colonel Harney or his heirs have been defrauded out of the tract of land mentioned, or have lost it in any other manner, they have clearly no claims on the United States for remuneration. This loss has not been occasioned by any act or neglect on the part of the government. It is admitted by the petitioners, and proved by the records of the land office, that a warrant was issued to Colonel Harney for said tract of land, which was then at his own disposal and under his own control, and the government no longer responsible for it. If Colonel Harney, or his heirs, have, by their acts or negligence, been deprived of the land, they, like other citizens, should submit to the loss, or take the course allowed by law to recover it. There is no shadow of claim on the United States in this case. The committee therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

21ST CONGRESS.] No. 874. [2D SESSION.

LEGAL DECISION ON THE LAND CLAIMS OF THE HEIRS OF MACKAY WHERRY AND OF AUGUSTE CHOUTEAU AND OTHERS IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 7, 1831.

OPINION OF JUDGE PECK.

Court of the United States for the Missouri District.—Special Court.

JOSEPH WHERRY AND OTHERS, HEIRS OF MACKAY WHERRY, vs. THE UNITED STATES.

PECK, Judge.

The ancestor under whom the petitioners claim, in his petition to the lieutenant governor, dated April 15, 1802, upon which the concession in the present case was obtained, alleges that he had been a long time an inhabitant in the country, and that the 400 arpents which had been theretofore granted to him, "his family being much increased, and particularly his animals increased in number considerably, were no longer sufficient for their support, and therefore prays a concession of 1,600 arpents, near the rivers Dardenne and Mississippi, which he will point out at the time the survey thereof shall be made." In answer to this petition the lieutenant governor, after reciting "that the petitioner is an old inhabitant of the country and that his family is sufficiently large to obtain the quantity of land which he solicits," concedes the land solicited by a concession dated April 18, 1802.

On the part of the petitioners the handwriting of the lieutenant governor to the concession is proved and the body of the concession is proved to be in the handwriting of Soûlard. The signature of Mackay Wherry to the petition is likewise proved, and the petition is proved to be in the handwriting of Pierre Provencher. There are so many witnesses who prove the handwriting of Delassus, Soulard, and Provencher, that the court does not doubt of their handwriting.

The witness, Rutgers, on behalf of the petitioners, states that in 1801, as he thinks, Wherry, the ancestor, had a family of several children, (three or four,) a negro woman, some cattle, and, he thinks, a horse. Mrs. Dodge, a witness on behalf of the United States, however, says that two or three years after the said Wherry arrived in this country he married her sister and removed to St. Charles to live; that Joseph Wherry, who was his eldest son, is now but twenty-eight years of age. The deposition of said Wherry, certified from the recorder's office, shows that he arrived here in 1798. Mrs. Dodge further states that he had seven or eight head of cattle and a negro woman, lived in a small house in the town of St. Charles, owned a lot there, and cultivated corn in the common fields of St. Charles; does not know whether he owned a horse or not. Both Mrs. Dodge and said Rutgers agree that when he left St. Charles he removed to Rutgers' farm, where he remained some years and then returned to St. Charles. Mrs. Dodge further states that prior to his intermarriage with her sister, he resided in the town of St. Louis and did business as a merchant in partnership with another gentleman. It further appears in evidence that the tract of 400 arpents was not surveyed until December, 1803. The statement, then, that the petitioner was an old inhabitant at the date of the concession is disproved by his own affidavit, which shows that he arrived in 1798, four years before. The insufficiency of the 400 arpents for the support of his family and cattle is disproved by the evidence on behalf of the petitioners, as well as on behalf of the United States, particularly by the evidence of Mrs. Dodge, which is minute and altogether credible; and is disproved by the circumstance that he never took possession of it, or even had it surveyed, until December, 1803. The period of his arrival, as established by his own affidavit, of his marriage, and the age of his eldest child, as established by Mrs. Dodge, with the other evidence, show that at the date of the last concession his family consisted of a wife, an infant child, and a negro woman. It is remarkable that when his concession for 400 arpents was before the board of commissioners, the testimony of James Mackay should have been introduced to negative the existence of any other concession in his favor than that which was then before the board, which testimony likewise represents that he was the head of a family when the concession for 400 arpents was obtained, and also that witness had known him in the country for ten years anterior to 1806, which would date his arrival in the country and marriage more than a year earlier than do his own affidavit and the evidence of Mrs. Dodge. And it is further remarkable that in 1808, when the present claim for 1,600 arpents was before the commissioners for adjudication the concession was alleged to be lost, and its previous existence established by Pierre Provencher, in whose handwriting the petition is proved to be, who testified before the commissioners "that about 1801, in the spring or summer, when he lived at the house of the lieutenant governor, he had a concession to Wherry for 1,600 arpents in his hand." It did not then occur to the witness, it would appear, that the petition for the concession had been written by himself. Antoine Soulard, also, in support of the same claim before the commissioners, testified, that in 1800 Wherry put into his hands a concession for 600 or 800 arpents, which he gave to one of his deputies that the survey might be made, but that he did not know what had become of it. This witness also omits to state that the concession was in his handwriting. Both of them make the concession earlier than its actual date. This concession having reappeared is not for any particular lands, and was never located until within a few years.

The law of Spain in Louisiana did not authorize gratuitous grants, except for tillage or pasturage, and in the former case but in proportion to the ability and the means of the cultivator, and in the latter but in proportion to the number of his cattle, slaves, &c. The laws authorize gratuitous grants of the first kind, with condition that a certain proportion should be cultivated within a specified time, and do not intend that a second grant should be made to the same person until the conditions of the first shall have been complied with or the first grant relinquished. Here nothing had been done towards compliance with the conditions upon which the grant would have issued upon the first concession. Wherry did not occupy the lands conceded by the first concession. At the date of the first concession he was a merchant, resident in St. Louis. The concession for the 1,600 arpents, under the circumstances of the previous grant and the family and means of the grantee, was certainly unauthorized by the law. The representation which is contained in the petition and concession in relation to the family and cattle of the petitioner and his being an old inhabitant, for the purpose of making the concession appear to have been authorized by law, raises the presumption of an intentional fraud—not confined to the original claimant, but extending to the officer making the concession and implicating Soulard, the surveyor, in whose handwriting the concession is proved to be. The attempt to negative the existence of this concession when the one for 400 arpents was before the board, and afterwards putting in a claim for this as upon a lost concession, and supporting that claim by the testimony of witnesses in the manner which has been mentioned, are all circumstances unfavorable to the fairness of the claim.

On the hearing of the case of the heirs of Mackay, decided some days since, the court believed and now has no doubt but that three of the officers of the former government were concerned in antedating the concession upon which that claim was founded, viz: the lieutenant governor, the surveyor, and the commandant of the post of St. André, in whose favor the concession was made. Under this belief a rule was made upon the party to show cause why the concession in that case should not be impounded. When the lieutenant governor and the surveyor under the former government were believed by the court to be implicated in the fraud of antedating the concession in the case referred to, it felt that it was its duty to avail itself of the evidence which it supposed the offices of the recorder and surveyor of the public lands would afford, by which to test the correctness of that opinion with a view to the rule mentioned, and to detect the possible frauds of those officers if frauds to any great extent had been committed. Accordingly, the court expressed its wish to see particular documents of these offices, and directed the attorney for the government to obtain them. During the hearing of the present case the facts it developed were so remarkable that additional documents to those first required were requested by the court to be procured by the attorney for the government. From such of these documents as were obtained with the oral evidence that had been heard, it would appear that, during the latter period of the government, there had been great departures from the law by the lieutenant governor and his predecessors in making concessions; and that, particularly immediately preceding the transfer of the possession of Upper Louisiana to the United States, there had been a great disregard of authority upon this subject. By the evidence of Mr. Leduc, a witness on behalf of the petitioners who is largely interested in supporting the validity of the acts of the lieutenant governor—his unconfirmed claims amounting to upwards of 20,000 acres—it appears that the lieutenant governor continued to issue concessions down to the time of the occupation of this post by the United States; notwithstanding that, early in the summer of 1803, he had received the order of the intendant, directing that no further petitions should be received for lands;* and notwithstanding the information which had been received here at least as early as November or December of the same year of the transfer of the country to the United States; and that he was in the practice of making concessions which were issued after the receipt of the order mentioned bear date prior to the time of its receipt; that the lieutenant governor should have continued to issue concessions after the receipt of that order from the intendant, from whom alone he derived his authority to do any act having relation to the disposition of the soil, evinces a plain disregard of authority and duty; that he should have antedated such concessions so as to make them appear to have been issued, some in 1799, some in 1800-'1-'2, as stated by the witness Leduc, whose evidence is impliedly supported by the refusal of Soulard and Mackay to answer questions before the late board of commissioners in relation to that subject, as appears by the minutes of that board, shows intentional fraud; that he should have continued to issue concessions after the information of the transfer of the country to the United States had been received, and by them direct the surveyor to put the party into possession, and to survey the lands and deliver him the certificate thereof to enable him to obtain the title in form from the intendant general, to whom belonged the power

* The following is the order referred to:

"On account of the death of the assessor of this intendancy, and there not being in the province a learned man who can supply his place, I have closed the tribunal of affairs and causes relating to grants and compositions of royal lands, as the 81st article of the royal ordinance for the intendants of New Spain provides that, for conducting that tribunal and substantiating its acts, the concurrence of that officer shall be necessary. I make this communication to appraise you of this providence, and that you may not receive or transmit memorials for the grant of lands until further orders. God preserve you, &c.

"NEW ORLEANS, December 1, 1802."

That the decree of concession of the lieutenant governor upon the applicant's memorial was but a mode of conveying information to the intendant, as supposed in the opinion of the court in the case of Chouteau's heirs, is an inference from the terms of this order. The lieutenant governor, by this order, is not to receive or transmit memorials for grants of lands. The decree of the lieutenant governor, therefore, was not to pass title, but to give possession and authorize a survey; and the memorial, after the survey was made, was transmitted through the memorialist to the intendant, from whom the title would issue. The secret reason of this order, it is believed, was the secret treaty of 1800, at which the country had been transferred to France. That the tribunal was closed on this account was proved by Mr. Chouteau in the case of Chouteau's heirs.

to grant lands by royal order, when, at the time of making such concessions, he knew that, as a consequence of the transfer of the country, there could be no intendant to give such formal title and antedate those concessions, so as to make them appear to have been issued prior to the receipt of the order mentioned from the intendant, also evinces intentional fraud; that the surveys are in many instances of a date so much later than the concession, and made upon the eve of the transfer of possession, is a circumstance which attracted the attention of the court. The practice which prevailed of antedating the concessions which were made after the receipt of the order mentioned from the intendant, explains the reason why so many years intervene between the date of the concession and the date of the survey, which is so frequently observable where the surveys were made immediately preceding the change of government. The witness states that he continued to issue concessions after the receipt of the order and information of the transfer in the same proportion that he had done before, but cannot say what proportion so issued were made to bear date prior to the receipt of the order, but thinks about sixty of them were thus antedated. The unwillingness of the witness to give evidence upon this point, his interposing his interest to excuse himself from answering thereto, and the difficulty of extracting from him the extent of that interest, together with his absence from St. Louis during a greater part of the time that the practice of antedating prevailed, are circumstances which do not permit his testimony, in relation to the number of concessions antedated, to be satisfactory to the court. The few which bear date subsequent to the receipt of the order, in comparison with the many which bear date in 1799, 1800-'1-'2, will afford some data from which an opinion may be formed concerning the extent of the frauds of this character. The years 1799, 1800-'1-'2 are those only in which the last lieutenant governor could lawfully make concessions. He succeeded his predecessor in the command in the early part of 1799. The order of the intendant, directing that no further petitions should be received for lands, was made December 1, 1802, and was received, as mentioned, in 1803. Of the intervening period, therefore, were the concessions made to bear date which were issued after the intendant's order, that they might appear to have been legally issued. The number of concessions which were issued during the years 1796 or 1797, and 1802 inclusive, and the quantity of land they embrace in comparison with the number issued during the preceding period of the government in Louisiana, and the quantity of land embraced by these would also furnish data, considered with reference to the increase of population, from which an opinion might be formed in relation to the good or bad faith with which concessions were issued during the period mentioned, and whether the quantity actually issued during the latter period of the government could have been issued with a view exclusively to the cultivation of the soil and herding of cattle.

The practice of the lieutenant governor in giving out petitions, after they had accumulated in number, to some one of the numerous persons which the witness mentions, who were in the habit of writing concessions for him to have them written for his signature, shows that little credit should be given to the statements which might be contained in such concessions, and that, as the deposition of Mackay states, in practice the facts stated in the petition were mere routine.

There is no grant recorded in the Livre Terrien larger than a league square during the whole thirty-one years in which grants were recorded there, and that few grants of that extent appear by the evidence to have been made to wealthy persons. The witness, Leduc, is sure that there are very few concessions which were not recorded prior to the year 1796, and none which were not prior to the year 1792. During the first twenty-five or six years of the former governments here concessions would appear to have been recorded without exception, and during the first twenty-eight or nine years with but little exception. During this period it would appear that the number of settlers was greater than the number of concessions. Lands and lots, says the witness, Leduc, were settled without concessions. This remark of the witness, however, did not refer to one period of the government more than another. It would appear that, about or a little before the period of Gayoso's instructions of 1797, a change in the practice of making concessions took place. After that period it would appear that concessions had not always been made with attention to the ability and forces of the applicant, or with a view to tillage, a neglect in direct violation of the instructions mentioned. With other articles relating to the same subject these may be referred to:

9. "To every settler answering the foregoing description, and married, there shall be granted two hundred arpents of land; fifty arpents shall be added for every child he shall bring with him.

10. "To every emigrant possessing property, and uniting the circumstances before mentioned, who shall arrive with an intention to establish himself, there shall be granted two hundred arpents of land, and in addition, twenty arpents for every negro that he shall bring: Provided, however, that the grant shall never exceed eight hundred arpents to one proprietor. If he has such a number of negroes as would entitle him, at the above rate, to a larger grant, he will also possess the means of purchasing more than that quantity of land if he wants it; and it is necessary by all possible means to prevent speculations in lands."

14. "The new settler to whom lands have been granted shall lose them without recovery if, in the term of one year, he shall not begin to establish himself upon them, or if, in the third year, he shall not have put under labor ten arpents in every hundred.

15. "He shall not possess the right to sell his lands until he shall have produced three crops on the tenth part of his lands, which shall be well cultivated; but, in case of death, he may leave them to his lawful heir, if he has one resident in the country. If he has no heir in the country, they shall in no event go to an heir who is not of the country, unless such heir shall resolve to come and reside in it conformably to the established conditions."

That the lieutenant governor has departed from the previous practice, disregarded the instructions of Gayoso, the regulations of the intendant, Morales, the order of the intendant not to receive further petitions for lands, and the treaty itself which transferred the country, is unquestionable. That he has done so contrary to instructions and against law cannot be doubted. The royal order of 1770 vested the granting power exclusively in the governor general. The decree of 1798 transferred that power to the intendant, with inhibition to other authorities. The lieutenant governor, therefore, must have derived all the authority he had upon the subject from these officers, as they successively exercised the granting power. Those decrees of concession, therefore, made by him, contrary to the negative terms of the authority thus emanating, evince an intentional violation of authority, especially in the cases of the larger grants. The list of unsurveyed claims made in one only of the four districts of the province throughout which he issued concessions has been produced in evidence. The concessions upon which those claims are founded are proved by the witness, Leduc, to have been issued by the lieutenant governor. The list is proved to be extracted from the registry of opinions of the late board of commissioners; and Leduc proves that, as translator to that board during the whole period of its existence, a few weeks excepted, it was his duty to render a verbal translation of all the concessions, and that he is satisfied that no concession was presented to the board which did not bear the genuine signature of him by whom it purported to be issued. In the same manner are the concessions proved to bear the signature of those by whom they purport to be made, which are contained in the list of claims presented by Labeaume, St. Vrain, and Tisson to the late board of commissioners. It cannot be pretended that the concessions, upon which the claims contained in the lists mentioned, were made in pursuance of authority, and with a reference to the family and forces of the applicant, or for the purpose of tillage.

The fifty-one concessions of eight hundred arpents each, surveyed for the assignees of those in whose favor the concessions were made, are attended with many evidences of fraud. Those to whom they issued, with few exceptions, were villagers at the several dates of the concessions, and continued to be so. The lands were surveyed in favor of their assignees in three tracts, by running the out-boundary line of each, one of those tracts containing thirty-five eight hundred arpent tracts. The lines of intersection which would describe each eight hundred arpent tract within the several large tracts were not surveyed, but merely designated upon paper. It would not appear that these concessions were made or surveyed with a view to their settlement. The surveys purport to be made in January, February, and March, 1804; and the concessions are dated some years earlier, in 1799, 1800, 1801, and 1802. The survey of the thirty-five eight hundred arpent tracts is certified to have been made on one day, the 20th of February, by running the out-boundary line which includes these tracts—a distance of something more than twenty-four miles—the lines described as having been minutely marked by notching trees at particular distances, and particularly where the lines of intersection should divide the eight hundred arpent tracts from each other.

The mind of the court cannot dwell upon the three figurative plats which include, and are chequered by those fifty-one tracts, and the certificate of survey which accompanies them, in connection with the circumstances mentioned, and with reference to the law which regulated grants, without being impressed with the opinion that the concessions for these tracts are the result of a confederacy between the lieutenant governor, the surveyor, and the several assignees. The law presumes that an act purporting to be done by an officer at a time when he was authorized to do such act was done at the time it purports to be done. The presumption of law is that an officer has done his duty and has not violated the trust reposed in him. But these presumptions are not conclusive, may be weakened by circumstances, or wholly disproved. The general bad faith of an officer in relation to acts of the nature of that in question, or a practice long persevered in, of repeating or performing such official act at a period when he was unauthorized to perform it, and making such act bear date of a time at which it might have been legally performed by him, are circumstances which must weaken the presumption arising in favor of the legality of the act, and may, therefore, be combined for this purpose with other circumstances of fraud connected with the particular act in question, or for the purpose of explaining appearances connected with the charge of fraud.

Upon the whole evidence, therefore, the court believes the present claim to have been fraudulent in its inception. It does not, therefore, become necessary to consider the grounds upon which it is insisted on the part of the petitioners that this case is to be excepted from the operation of the principles which have been decided by the court, viz: that the tribunal for granting lands having been closed before the grant could have reasonably been applied for in the present case, excuses the omission on the part of the original claimant to obtain a survey of the lands conceded, as the object of such survey was to enable the party to apply for the legal title, which, under the circumstances, became impossible.

The court must decide against the claim.

OPINION OF JUDGE PECK.

Court of the United States for the Missouri district, January term, 1830.—Special Court.

AUGUSTE CHOUTEAU AND OTHERS vs. THE UNITED STATES.

PECK, Judge.

The complainants, by their petition, show that on the 5th of November, 1799, the said Auguste Chouteau, deceased, applied, by petition, to the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana for permission to erect a distillery in the town of St. Louis for the distillation of spirituous liquors from the several kinds of grain raised in the province; representing, in said petition, that the remoteness of the chief city of the province rendered it too expensive to supply, by importation from thence, the quantity of such spirits necessary to supply the demands of the inhabitants; and that said lieutenant governor, in compliance with said petition, on the 3d of January, 1800, granted the permission solicited, reciting, as his reasons for the grant: "that the establishment proposed to be formed by the supplicant would, in his estimation, be useful to the inhabitants and to commerce, inasmuch as there existed no other establishment of the kind, and that liquors would be procured in greater abundance and at a less price, little being imported from New Orleans;" and that, on the fifth day of the month and year last-mentioned, the said Auguste, deceased, presented another petition to the said lieutenant governor, stating that he was "much embarrassed in his progress with the considerable distillery which he had been permitted to erect by his decree of the 5th of November of the preceding year, from the scarcity of timber daily more felt, the lands adjacent to the town having been mostly conceded, and therefore prayed that a concession should be made to him of twelve hundred and eighty-one arpents of land situate on the fourth concession, in depth of the land adjoining this town, bounded on the north by the land of Doctor John Watkins; south and west by the lands of the third concession;" the petition further representing an intention on the part of said petitioner to form an establishment upon the said land; and that upon this petition the lieutenant governor, on the date last-mentioned, decreed as follows:

"Being satisfied that the supplicant has sufficient means to make available, in the term of the regulation of the governor general of this province, the lands which he demands, the surveyor of this Upper Louisiana, Mr. Anthony Soulard, will put him in possession of the twelve hundred and eighty-one arpents of land in the place where he asks it; and afterwards the applicant will have to solicit the formal title of concession of the intendant general of these provinces, to whom belongs, by order of his Majesty, the disposing and conceding every kind of vacant lands of the royal domains."

And that on the 5th day of March, 1801, the said surveyor, in obedience to this decree, surveyed the twelve hundred and eighty-one arpents at the place mentioned in the petition of the said Auguste, and delivered to him the possession thereof; and that the said decrees were made in pursuance of the special instructions given by the governor general of Louisiana, Don Manual Gayoso De Lemos, to the said lieutenant governor, "to favor all the undertakings of the said Auguste, deceased, &c., &c., which instructions were made in answer to an application made by the said Auguste, deceased, to the governor general. And that the said Auguste, deceased, in his lifetime, did, in conformity to the acts of Congress in that case provided, submit his claim to said tract, derived as aforesaid, to the board of commissioners for the adjustment of land claims in Upper Louisiana; and that that board rejected said claim on the sole ground that a tract of a league square had been already confirmed to the said Auguste Choteau, and that they had not therefore power to confirm the claim in question. And that the said Auguste, deceased, has departed this life, having, before his death, in due form of law, by last will and testament, devised the said tract to said petitioners, as tenants in common; and pray that the said title may be inquired into and confirmed.

The answer of the attorney for the government states "that he is uninformed of the matters and things in said petition contained, and prays that the said petitioners may be held and required to prove the same, and all such other matters and things the existence whereof may be deemed necessary to authorize the confirmation of the said claim."

The petition does not allege that any improvement whatever had been made upon the said lands, nor does it contain any statement in relation to the ability or means of the said Auguste, deceased, to improve the same, except that which appears in the decree of the lieutenant governor.

It appears by the evidence on behalf of the petitioners that permission to erect a distillery was obtained from the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana upon the petition of the said Auguste, as stated in the petition; and that previous thereto the governor general of Louisiana addressed a letter from New Orleans to the said Auguste Chouteau, under date of the 20th of May, 1799, in the following words: "My dear friend: Wishing to testify to you my esteem by every opportunity, I merely assure you of my esteem, promising you to answer your letter by the boat that just arrived, and which will leave here next week. In my instructions to Mr. Delassus I recommend him particularly to favor all your undertakings, &c., &c. Adieu," &c. And, also, that a decree of the said lieutenant governor, ordering the surveyor general to put the said Auguste Chouteau in possession of the lands asked for by him, was made upon the petition of the said Auguste, as stated by the petitioners; and that, in pursuance of said decree, the said surveyor put the said Auguste in possession of the said premises and made a survey of the same, as would appear by his report thereof; and that the said Auguste, deceased, from the time of the said decree down to the time of his decease had cut and used wood and wild grass from the said lands, but had made no improvement whatever upon the same. That at the time of the said decree the said Auguste was the owner of a large property, consisting of lands, slaves, horses, cattle, hogs, and sheep, and had a large family of children; that about the date of the last mentioned decree the said Auguste had his said distillery erected and in operation; and from that time until within about ten years past distilled annually in the same from 2,500 to 3,000 gallons of spirituous liquors; and that the claim of the said Auguste to the said land was presented to the board of commisioners for the adjustment of land titles, and by them rejected, for the reasons stated by the petitioners; and that during the present year the said Auguste died, leaving a last will and testament, by which the land in question was devised to the said plaintiffs.

Other evidence was also offered on behalf of the plaintiffs, consisting mostly of complete titles, public documents, &c., which, so far as the same is deemed material, will be adverted to in the course of this opinion.

The first inquiry relates to the laws which, at the date of the inception of the present claim, regulated the disposition and grant of the royal domain in Louisiana. The laws which regulate the disposition and grant of the public domain must be excepted from the general rule that the laws of a ceded country continue in force until changed by the new sovereign. When Louisiana passed to the crown of Spain by the treaty of 1763 the regulations of the French monarch upon that subject would be of no force or authority after the occupation of that country by Spain, no more than were the regulations of the Spanish monarch upon the same subject after the transfer of the same country to the United States. The sale of a country is necessarily a revocation of the authority which the vendor had given to his agents to dispose of it in parcels, and of all instructions or laws relating to the manner of the disposition; nothing is necessary to be done on the part of the new proprietor to abrogate them; and it appertains of right to such proprietor to decide upon the expediency of sales or the manner of the disposition.

Anterior to the occupation of Louisiana by Spain, laws, ordinances, regulations, and instructions had been, from time to time, framed by the Spanish sovereign for the grant and distribution of the royal lands throughout his dominions in America. Would these laws be extended to Louisiana by force of the treaty and occupation mentioned? They could only have been extended there in virtue of the will of the Spanish King, either as expressed in them or in some other legislative act anterior to, at, or after such occupation. Were they so extended there, and when?

In the year 1769, General Alexander O'Riley, with a military force under his command, in pursuance of a special commission from the Spanish monarch empowering him "to establish in the military, the police, and in the administration of justice and his finances, such regulations as should be conducive to his service and the happiness of his subjects" in the colony of Louisiana, took possession of it in the name of his sovereign, under the treaty mentioned. In the execution of his powers, after other changes and acts of legislation, he formed, on the 18th of February, 1770, an instruction, which, being translated, so much of it as relates to the subject under consideration is in these words:

"Don Alexander O'Riley, commander of Benfayon, of the order of Alcantara, inspector general of infantry, appointed by special commission governor and captain general of this province of Louisiana:

"Divers complaints and petitions which have been addressed to us by the inhabitants of Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, and other places of this province, joined to the knowledge we have acquired of the local concerns, culture, and means of the inhabitants, by the visit which we have lately made to the Côte des Allemands, Hyberville, and La Pointe Coupee, with the examination we have made of the reports of the inhabitants assembled by our order in each district, having convinced us that the tranquillity of the said inhabitants and the progress of culture required a new regulation which should fix the extent of the grants of lands which shall hereafter be made, as well as the enclosures, cleared lands, roads, and bridges, which the inhabitants are bound to keep in repair, and to point out the damage by cattle, for which the proprietors shall be responsible; for these causes, and having nothing in view but the public good, and the happiness of every inhabitant, after having advised with persons well informed in these matters, we have regulated all those objects in the following articles:

"1. There shall be granted to each newly arrived family, who may wish to establish themselves upon the borders of the river, six or eight arpents in front (according to the means of the cultivator) by forty arpents in depth, in order that they may have the benefit of the cypress wood, which is as necessary as useful to the inhabitants.

"2. The grantees established upon the borders of the river shall be held bound to make, within the three first years of possession, mounds sufficient for the preservation of the land, and the ditches necessary to carry off the water. They shall, besides, keep the roads in good repair, of the width of at least forty feet between the inner ditch which runs along the mound and the barrier, with bridges of twelve feet over the ditches which may cross the roads. The said grantees shall be held bound, within the said term of three years' possession, to clear the whole front of their land to the depth of two arpents; and in default of fulfilling these conditions, their land shall revert to the King's domain and be granted anew; and the judge of each place shall be responsible to the governor for the superintendence of this object.

"3. The said grants can neither be sold or aliened by the proprietors until after three years' possession, and until the above-mentioned conditions shall have been entirely fulfilled. To guard against every evasion in this respect, the sales of the said lands cannot be made without a written permission from the governor general, who will not grant it until, on strict inquiry, it shall be found that the conditions above explained have been duly executed.

"4. The points formed by the lands on the Mississippi river leaving in some places but little depth, there may be granted, in these cases, twelve arpents of front; and, on a supposition that these points should not be applied for by any inhabitant, they shall be distributed to the settlers nearest thereto, in order that the communication of the roads may not be interrupted.

"5. If a tract belonging to minors should remain uncleared, and the mounds and roads should not be kept in repair, the judge of the quarter shall inquire into the cause thereof. If attributable to the guardians, he shall oblige them to conform promptly to this regulation; but if arising from want of means in the minors, the judge, after having, by a verbal process, attained proof thereof, shall report the same to the governor general, to the end that the said lands may be sold for the benefit of the minors, (a special favor granted to minors only;) but if no purchaser shall, within six months, be found, the said land shall be conceded gratis.

"6. Every inhabitant shall be held bound to enclose, within three years, the whole front of his land which shall be cleared; and for the remainder of his enclosure he will agree with his neighbors in proportion to his cleared land and his means."

"8. No grant in the Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, shall exceed one league in front by one league in depth; but when the land granted shall not have that depth, a league and a half in front by half a league in depth may be granted.

"9. To obtain in the Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, a grant of forty-two arpents in front by forty-two arpents in depth, the applicant must make appear that he is possessed of one hundred head of tame cattle, some horses and sheep, and two slaves to look after them; a proportion of which shall always be observed for the grants to be made of a greater extent than that declared in the preceding article.

"12. All grants shall be made in the name of the King, by the governor general of the province, who will at the same time appoint a surveyor to fix the bounds thereof, both in front and depth, in the presence of the judge ordinary of the district, and of two adjoining settlers, who shall be present at the survey. The above-mentioned four persons shall sign the verbal process which shall be made thereof; and the surveyor shall make three copies of the same, one of which shall be deposited in the office of the scrivener of the government and cabildo, another shall be delivered to the governor general, and the third to the proprietor, to be annexed to the titles of his grant.

"In pursuance of the powers which our lord the King (whom God preserve) has been pleased to confide to us by his patent issued at Aranjuez, April 16, 1769, to establish in the military, the police, and in the administration of justice and his finances, such regulations as should be conducive to his service and the happiness of his subjects in this colony, with the reserve of his Majesty's good pleasure, we order and command the governor, judges, cabildo, and all the inhabitants of this province, to conform punctually to all that is required by this regulation.

"Given at New Orleans February 18, 1770."

This instruction having been transmitted to Spain for the royal approbation, that approbation was duly announced in a royal order of August 24, 1770, addressed to the governor general of Louisiana, which order is thus translated:

"The lieutenant general, Don Alexander O'Riley, in his letter No. 33, written at this place under date of the 1st of March, transmitted to me copies of three instructions, framed for the lieutenant governor, established in the Illioneses, that of the Natchitoches, and the nine particular lieutenants of the partidos (districts) of this province. He states that he repaired in person to Pointe Coupee, (Punta Cortada,) and that he appointed, at the instance of the inhabitants, a surveyor for each partido, (district,) for the purpose of surveying their land, with one-half of the salary heretofore allowed them; he encloses one set of instructions, which explains the mode of proceeding in that behalf, and states that the grants of lands within this province have been intrusted by his Most Christian Majesty to the governor and commissary Ordounateur; and that he considers it expedient that henceforth the governor alone be authorized by his Majesty to make such grants, and that he be directed to conform, in the distribution of the royal lands, to all the provisions contained and published upon this subject.

"The King having been made acquainted with the dispositions of said lieutenant general, and with what he proposes on the subject, has approved the same, and directs that you and your successors in said government have the sole power of distributing the royal lands, conforming, in all respects, as long as his Majesty shall not make any other provisions, to the said instructions, dated from this city on the 18th of February, of this year. All which I communicate to you for your own government, and for its fulfilment; and I pray God to preserve you many years.

"SAN ILDEFONSO, August 24, 1770.

"A true copy.

"A. D. LUIS DE UNZUGA."

If the terms of this order be not necessarily exclusive of all other laws upon the subject to which the instruction relates, they make that instrument the law paramount to the governor general. If it be admitted that they would not be thus exclusive, had the sovereign will been expressed that any other law, in addition to the instruction, should regulate the conduct of the granting officer? A collection of laws having been made for the government of the Spanish possessions in America, a royal order of the year 1682, after reciting the injuries and inconveniences which have been experienced from the imperfect promulgation of many of the laws which had heretofore been enacted, their defects and the disagreement between them, and other evils; and further reciting the expediency "that all which should be provided and determined should be made known to all, in order that they might be made acquainted with the laws by which they were to be governed, and to which they were to conform in matters of justice, war, finance, and others, and with the penalties incurred by offenders against those laws;" proceeds with a historical account of the manner in which the work of the collection mentioned had progressed, and concludes with a "decree and command that the laws contained therein, and formed for the government and administration of justice in our council of the Indies, in our court of contratacion of Seville, of the East and West Indies, islands and continent of the northern and southern oceans, of their navigation, fleets, and vessels, and all our possessions and dependencies which are ruled and governed by ourselves, through our said council, be obeyed, fulfilled, and executed, and that they regulate and determine all suits and differences which may arise in this as well as in the aforesaid kingdoms."

It may be assumed that the country which was present to the mind of the Spanish monarch in the formation of this ordinance consisted of the dominions which were then ruled and governed by him; and that that country, such as it then was, is that in which alone those laws were to have authority, and that Louisiana not then having been acquired, was consequently foreign to his mind, and would remain unaffected by those laws until they should be extended there by his will. This assumption rests upon the terms of the ordinance, upon the policy which is recited in the previous part of it in relation to the expediency that the laws which were to govern should come to the knowledge of all; upon a fundamental law of the kingdom that the promulgation of the law should precede its obligation; upon the principle that the laws of a ceded country continue in force until changed by the new sovereign; and upon all the forcible considerations which establish this principle as an indispensable maxim in the code of nations: an assumption which is also in accordance with the opinion of O'Riley, as evinced by his subsequent introduction of those laws by proclamation. Did the laws which regulated the grant of the royal domain, and which were contained in the collection of laws mentioned, form a part of those which were introduced by this proclamation of O'Riley of the date of the 25th of November, 1769?

The only part of this proclamation which has been accessible to me is thus translated:

"Don Alexander O'Riley, commander of Benfagan, of the order of Alcantara, lieutenant general of the armies of his Majesty, inspector general of the infantry, and, by commission, captain general of the province of Louisiana:

"Whereas the prosecutions which took place in consequence of the rebellion raised in this colony have fully proved the part and the influence the council had therein, by supporting, contrary to their duty, acts of the greatest atrocity, while it was incumbent on them to have used their endeavors to maintain the people in that fidelity and subordination which they owe to their sovereign; for these reasons, and wishing to prevent such evils for the future, it has become indispensable to abolish said council, and to establish in its stead the form of the political government and administration of justice which our wise laws prescribe, and by which all the States of his Majesty in America have ever been maintained in the most perfect tranquility, content and subordination. For these considerations, using the powers which the King our lord (whom may God preserve) has confided to us by a patent issued at Aranjuez the 16th of April of this year, to establish in the army, the police, and in the administration of justice, and of his finances, that form of government, dependence, and subordination which is consonant with his service and the happiness of his subjects in the colony; we do hereby establish, in his royal name, a city council, or cabildo, composed of six perpetual regidors, agreeably to law 2, tit. 10, book 5, of the Recopilacion of the Indies, and among whom shall be distributed the offices of alferez royal, alcalde, mayor provincial, alguazil mayor, depository general, and receiver of the Penas de Camara, or fines accruing to the Fisc; and these shall elect on the first day in every year two judges, who shall be called ordinary alcaldes, a syndic, attorney general, and an administrator of the city rents and taxes, such as they are established by our laws for the good government and administration of justice. And whereas the want of lawyers in this country, and the little information these new subjects have of the laws of Spain, may render their faithful observance very difficult, which would be entirely contrary to the intention of his Majesty, we have thought it useful and even necessary to cause an abstract of these laws to be formed, in order to serve for the instruction of the public, and as elementary rules for the administration of justice and municipal government of this city, until the knowledge of the Spanish language can be introduced, and thereby afford to every one by the reading of these laws the means of extending their information in that matter; and therefore, and under the good pleasure of his Majesty, we do order and command that all judges, cabildoes, and their officers, do comply punctually with that which is prescribed in the following articles."

Concerning the articles here referred to, I am only informed by a note which accompanied the proclamation, that they consisted of an ordinance establishing the several branches of the government of Louisiana, and defining their respective powers. If, among the powers prescribed to the new government established by this ordinance, the power to grant lands was not enumerated it would not be conferred. If among the officers created by the organization of the new government there were none of those whose agency was required in the disposition of the royal lands, the conclusion would follow that this subject and the laws relating thereto were foreign to the mind of the framer of the proclamation, and if not within his words, consequently not within his intention. They are not necessarily referable to any of the departments or branches of the government mentioned in the proclamation. All subjects relating to the police and the administration of justice could be regulated by laws altogether distinct from those which the sovereign might provide for the disposition of his domain. Although provisions upon this subject might have blended with them subjects of police, or even subjects relating to the administration of justice, as particular considerations of policy might suggest, they, in fact, as they existed in New Spain, formed a body in their nature distinct; and however properly they would form a part of the system which was moved in the financial operations of the government, yet they formed a distinct branch which might be stationary in the general operations of the other parts of the system, so distinct as not necessarily to follow the other parts on their introduction into Louisiana.

The terms of the proclamation want perspicuity. They show, however, that an existing system was to be abolished, and another introduced in its stead; and there is no reason to believe that more was to be introduced by the proclamation than was necessary to supply the place of that which it abolished. It has been already shown that this proclamation was not necessary to abrogate the laws regulating the grants of lands, as they existed under the French government—the change of sovereignty having done this. The evils which are recited in the proclamation, as inducements to the change, have relation to results and tendencies of the existing government—to results and tendencies which made it necessary to introduce the "forms of political government, and administration of justice, prescribed by the wise laws of Spain, and by which all the states of his Majesty in America had ever been maintained in the most perfect tranquillity, content, and subordination." The evils recited did not spring from the provisions of the laws which France had provided for the disposition of the soil. Whether, then, we consider the evil, against the recurrence of which it was the intention of the new system of government to provide, or that which would form part of this new system for the accomplishment of the objects declared, we shall incline to the opinion that it was not the intention of the framer of the proclamation to abrogate or to establish any provision relating to the disposition of the soil. His instruction upon this subject of the 18th of February following, and particularly his views in relation thereto, submitted to the King, and recited in the royal order which approves those views and that instruction, evince an impression upon the mind that conceived them, inconsistent with the opinion that the provisions relating to the same subject, contained in the collection of the code of the Indies, had been introduced by the proclamation of the 25th of November of the preceding year. In the despatch which enclosed the instruction, O'Riley recurs to the authorities to which the power to grant lands had been committed under the French government, and recommends a change in this respect. He considers that he is proposing an alteration of what had been the practice under the French government, not an alteration of the Spanish law; and although, in his instruction, he preserves the policy maintained in the laws of the Indies upon the subject of gratuitous grants, he does not preserve it by the same conditions in the grant; a circumstance which he would have adverted to, rather than to the French practice, had he considered the effect of his proposition an alteration of the Spanish law already introduced into Louisiana. It is observable that the grants of land in East Florida, after that country passed under the dominion of Spain, were authorized upon principles differing from those upon which they were authorized in West Florida and Louisiana. It would appear by the collection of laws made by Mr. White, that the Spanish government had varied the laws or instructions upon this subject in various parts of the Spanish dominions, according to circumstances. The royal order under which lands were distributed in East Florida, not having prescribed the conditions of the grant, might afford an argument in favor of the application to grants there of the general provisions in relation to the conditions of the grant which were contained in the collection of the code of the Indies, which does not exist in relation to Louisiana, where the conditions of the grant were prescribed; yet the government in East Florida did not consider those general provisions introduced there, and prescribed other conditions. The correctness, however, of that practice, was afterwards questioned at a late period of that government, in an opinion of the senior auditor. I am, therefore, led to the conclusion, that the laws regulating the disposition of the royal domain, as contained in the code of the Indies, were not introduced into Louisiana as a consequence of its occupation by Spain in 1769, nor by the proclamation of O'Riley of the 25th of November of the same year; but that it was the intention of the royal order of the 24th of August, 1770, that the instruction of O'Riley should exclusively regulate the conduct of the granting officer, until his Majesty should otherwise dispose. It does not appear that any change in the royal disposition, in this respect, took place until October 22, 1798, the date of the King's decree, which transfers the granting power to the intendancy; which decree is thus translated:

"To the Intendant ad interim of Louisiana:

"San Lorenzo, October 22, 1798.

"In a royal order of this date, I communicate the following to the governor of this province: 'The King has been pleased to resolve, after having seen your letter of the 31st of August of last year, (No. 3,) addressed to the Prince of Peace, and another letter from the intendant ad interim of this province, of the 16th of October of the same year, (No. 174,) respecting the power of granting the King's lands in the district under your command, which power was vested in the political and military government since the royal order of August 24, 1770, that, with a view to the good of the service, and for the better fulfilment of what is contained in the 81st article of the royal ordinance, respecting the intendants of New Spain, the power of granting and distributing all kinds of lands be restored to, and made the particular province of, the intendancy of this province, with inhibition to other authorities, in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws; consequently, the power of making such grants, heretofore vested in the government, is repealed and abolished, and shall henceforth reside in the intendancy.' This resolution is communicated to you for your information and its due fulfilment. God preserve you many years.

"SOLER."

This decree announces the revocation of the governor's power to grant lands, but does not announce the abrogation of the instructions of O'Riley; consequently this instruction would continue in force. It cannot be admitted that the power, by this decree, was intended to be conferred upon the intendancy, to be exercised according to the discretion of the intendant, exempt from all limitation or rule, and therefore the decree is not to be understood as restoring, in conformity to the provisions of the laws, the power of granting lands to the intendancy, but is to be understood as intending, "with a view to the good of the service, and the better fulfilment of what is required in the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, that the power of granting all kinds of lands be restored to, and made the particular province of the intendancy, to be exercised according to the provisions of the laws." The power having been transferred with a view to the better fulfilment of what is enjoined in the royal ordinance respecting the intendants, we should lose sight of the inducement to the transfer of the power did we not give effect to the policy of this ordinance, so far as it should be directory to the intendant, in relation to the subject under consideration. Concerning the laws in conformity to which grants were to be made by the intendant under this decree, it would appear that those which were already in force in the province, and those which, in New Spain, according to the provisions of the 81st article of the royal ordinance, before mentioned, formed the rule of his conduct, and those only, would be included. This, it would appear, was the construction made by the intendant, Morales, contemporaneously with the decree. His regulation in relation to gratuitous grants are but an amplification of the principles contained in O'Riley's instruction. Those articles that relate to sales and compositions, and those which denounce penalties, and offer rewards to informers, are, in spirit, but extracts from the royal regulation of 1754, and the laws cited therein; so that these laws and that regulation, as well as the provisions of the 81st article of the royal ordinance mentioned, having been made by the latter the rule of conduct for the intendants in relation to grants of lands, the reference of Morales to these for his rule of conduct is perfectly in accordance with the view here given; so that, in respect to the regulations of Morales, they must be regarded rather as his interpretation of what those laws prescribe, than as laws emanating from him. This observation should be qualified by the remark, that those provisions in the regulations that relate to matters concerning which he had a discretionary power are to be considered declaratory of the manner in which his discretion would be exercised in relation to those powers. Those parts of the regulations which can be considered thus declaratory do not lessen the discretion, or in any way affect its free and full exercise, as authorized by the law, and are consequently not obligatory upon the officer promulgating it; and as to him, is no more than a notice to those to whom the declaration may offer any benefit, however it might be considered in relation to an inferior, to whom it should be addressed. Where the provisions of the laws furnished precise rules, there would be no room for the exercise of discretion—certainly none for legislation—on the part of him who was required to conform to those laws. But in reference to the regulations of Morales, if they be considered as abstracts of the laws which had been prescribed to him, made for the purpose of being promulgated for the information of the inhabitants, while the utility of the work might supply us with a reason for it, one of higher authority is to be found in the requirements of the 3d, 7th, and 8th articles contained in the royal regulation of 1754, concerning the notices and orders which were to be published to the inhabitants. The assumption, however, on the part of Morales, of the right to publish those regulations as laws emanating from him, would, in the absence of the decree under which the right was assumed, mislead the reader in relation to the extent of the powers it conferred. Do the laws, then, as they existed in Louisiana under the King's decree of October 22, 1798, authorize the confirmation of the present claim?

The decree of the lieutenant governor in the present case, which orders the ancestor of the petitioners to be put in possession of the premises in question, is, without doubt, "a warrant" within the intention of the 1st section of the act of Congress under which this claim is preferred to this court. Was it legally made? Was the lieutenant governor authorized, in the particular case, to make it, as connected with the title to be solicited of the intendant? The regulations of Morales, in the 2d article, require that, where lands are applied for in any of the posts, "that the commandant should, at the same time, state that the lands asked for are vacant, and belong to the domain, and that the petitioner has obtained permission of the government to establish himself, and referring to the date of the letter of advice they have received;" and, in the 32d article, further declare that "the granting nor sale of any lands shall not be proceeded in without formal information having been previously received that they are vacant; and to avoid injurious mistakes, we premise that, besides the signature of the commandant or syndic of the district, this information ought to be joined by that of the surveyor and two of the neighbors, well understanding." All the agency which is required of the lieutenant governor or the commandants of posts in originating titles is prescribed by the preceding articles. They were made the medium of the information which it was necessary the intendant should receive before he makes the grant. The form in which this information was conveyed consisted of a petition, generally addressed to the lieutenant governor, in which the matters of fact upon which the applicant relies to obtain what he solicits are usually set forth. The lieutenant governor being the officer from whom the permission to settle would be obtained, the information of which is required by the 2d and 32d articles of the regulations of Morales to accompany the application for a grant, when he is also cognizant of the other facts stated in the petition, the petition would, of course, be presented to him in the first instance for his decree. But when he should not be cognizant of these facts, or of other facts which it is deemed by the applicant necessary or advisable to have attested by the immediate commandant of a nearer post, who may be better informed in relation to them, the petition would probably be presented to such commandant to be accompanied by his remarks, when presented to the lieutenant governor for his decree or order thereupon to the surveyor to put the party in possession; in pursuance of which, a survey would also take place in the presence of the neighbors, who, together with the surveyor, would sign the proces verbal drawn up by him; and in this manner would be joined the information of the surveyor and two of the neighbors to that of the commandant or syndic, as required in the articles recited. The information being thus embodied in formal and official documents, consisting of the petition of the applicant, the decree or order of the lieutenant governor, and the remarks or information of the commandant of the dependent post, (in cases where the petition is first presented or addressed to him,) and the report of the surveyor, accompanied by a plat of the survey and property, the attesting signature of the neighbors joined to that of the surveyor, is put into the possession of the applicant to be presented by him to the intendant, for the purpose of obtaining the title. The information required being contained in these documents and presented in that form to the intendant, it is believed that the legal title would issue thereupon as a matter of course, on the applicant's making it appear that the quantity applied for was in that proportion to the number of his family and his means of tillage which the laws required. If, however, any suggestion by the proper officer was made against the emanation of the title, the objection was duly adjudicated upon, or a formal trial had concerning the matter of fact alleged in opposition to the grant, and the final decision upon the application would abide the result of the trial. In no case was the emanation of the grant to depend upon any previous improvement; but when it issued, it was, by the terms of the law, conditional, and did not give the complete title until the conditions were fulfilled, and all benefit under it was forfeited by an omission to comply with the conditions which the law annexed.

It is important to keep in view that, by the royal order of the 24th of August, 1770, the governor general alone is authorized to grant the royal lands, and is required, in his grants of them, to conform in all things to the instruction of O'Riley; and that this instruction does not invest the lieutenant governor or the commandant of posts with any agency whatever in relation to that subject; and that when this power was transferred to the intendancy by the decree of 1798, it was transferred "with inhibition to other authorities" to reside in the intendancy, and be exercised in conformity to the provisions of the laws. That by this decree the intendancy has the exclusive power to make the grants; but in the performance of this trust, the employment of agents would be convenient, if not indispensable. The law having required the performance of a duty, authorized the employment of the means reasonable and necessary to its performance.

The governor general, therefore, during the time he exercised the granting power, and the intendant on succeeding to that power, not improperly made the commandants of posts their agents, or subdelegates as they were called, to furnish information in relation to particular facts, concerning which they could be relied upon as a channel of communication sufficiently authentic. And it is not improbable that during the time the power of granting lands resided with the governor general, the commandants of posts were invested with a larger authority upon that subject than they were authorized to exercise under the intendant, according to the regulations of Morales. The practice of those officers in making concessions, as well as some of the articles of Gayoso's instructions, would raise the presumption that they were then invested with a discretion or a power of judging of the merits of the application for the purpose of giving possession—a power which might be exercised with great practical convenience to the government and the applicant by the commandants of distant posts; exercised, however, subject to the limitations contained in the law—to what further limitation, down to the time of Gayoso's instructions, no certain rule is afforded.

The practice of judicial officers subdelegating their commissions and powers to others, which is authorized by the laws of Spain, may also be adverted to as affording a ground of presumption that the governor general may have committed to the commandants for the purpose mentioned, and with a view to gratuitous grants, a part of the discretionary powers with which he was so largely invested by the instruction of O'Riley; the powers thus committed being, of course, always exercised subject to his own final judgment thereupon. The term subdelegate having been applied to the officer employed in the sale and grant of lands by the laws of Spain, might, for that reason, have been applied to him to whom somewhat similar duties were committed by the governor general or by the intendant. The regulations of Morales, far from intending to confer upon the commandants of posts the general powers exercised by the subdelegates in virtue of the royal regulation of 1754, specifically define the duties which he requires of them as subdelegates of the intendancy. They are not, therefore, subdelegates as known to the royal regulation mentioned. Their appointment did not proceed from the authority which that regulation required. Their authority had not a higher source than the commands contained in the regulation of Morales, and is thence and only thence derived. If the regulations do not authorize the lieutenant governor, as the subdelegate or agent of the intendancy, to put the applicant into possession of the lands solicited, his powers in the civil and military departments of the government concerning the settlement of the inhabitants and the admission of foreign settlers might be properly combined with the duties required of him by the regulation, and authorize the order usually made that the applicant should be put in possession—an order which is referred to in the 18th article of the regulations of Morales as familiar in practice; for, notwithstanding the transfer of the granting power to the intendant, the civil and military government still retained the power to admit foreign setlers and authorize settlements upon the royal domain, as may be seen by the 1st, 2d, and 32d articles of the regulations last mentioned, which require this permission to accompany the application for the grant. This power would be, of course, delegated to the lieutenant governor as the commandant of a distant post; his order, therefore, that the party be put in possession, contains that permission of the government to the applicant to establish himself, which is required by the 2d and 32d articles of the regulations as necessary to accompany the application to the intendant for a grant.

But the claim is for 1,281 arpents, whereas the 1st article of the regulations of Morales limits grants to 800 arpents; it prescribes that "to each newly arrived family, (a chaque familie nouvelle,) who are possessed of the necessary qualifications to be admitted among the number of cultivators of these provinces, and who have obtained the permission of the government to establish themselves on a place which they have chosen, there shall be granted for once, if it is on the bank of the Mississippi, four, six, or eight arpents in front on the river, by the ordinary depth of forty arpents; and if it is at any other place, the quantity which they shall be judged capable to cultivate, and which shall be deemed necessary for pasture for his beasts, in proportion according to the number of which the family is composed—understanding that the concession is never to exceed 800 arpents in superficies.

And of a similar purport is the 10th article of the instructions of Gayoso, which provides that "to every emigrant possessing property, and uniting the circumstances beforementioned, who shall arrive with an intention to establish himself, there shall be granted 200 arpents of land, and in addition 20 arpents for every negro that he shall bring: provided, however, that the grant shall never exceed 800 arpents to one proprietor. If he has such a number of negroes as would entitle him at the above rate to a larger grant, he will also possess the means of purchasing more than that quantity of land if he wants it; and it is necessary, by all possible means, to prevent speculations in lands." Here it is proper to discriminate that portion of the act of the lieutenant governor in making the order that the party be put in possession, which was done pursuant to the authority conferred by the intendant, from that portion which was done in the exercise of the civil and military powers of the government. The permission to settle upon the royal domain, we have seen, might be given in the exercise of the latter powers, and is, in the present case, included in the decree which ordered the surveyor to put the applicant into possession; but inasmuch as a survey would, in general, be necessary to ascertain whether or not the land solicited were vacant, the whole residue of the act, whether it should order a survey in express terms, or render one necessary as the means of ascertaining the particular land solicited, and whether they be vacant, as well as the acts of the surveyor in obedience to such order, would all seem to follow reasonably in the performance of the duties which the surveyor and commandant are called upon to perform by the 2d and 32d articles of the regulations of Morales. But in the performance of these duties the lieutenant governor or commandant is not made the judge of the party's right, under the law, to the land he solicits, so that the party's whole proceeding in soliciting the lands is at his own risk; if he solicit more or less than by the laws he would be entitled to receive a gratuitous grant for, the commandant would violate no law by giving information that the land he solicited was vacant, and that he had received permission of the government to settle. This information, which it would be the duty of the commandant to furnish, supposes the right still reserved on the part of the intendant to judge of the state of facts upon which the party founded his right to gratuity; which facts are always to be established before the intendant, as necessary to precede the grant, but not necessary to be established before the lieutenant governor or commandant, although, in practice, some of those facts were frequently stated by the lieutenant governor as his reasons for the decree. The object of this decree, then, so far as it was made in pursuance of the authority of the intendant, being to establish the permission of the government to settle, and that the land solicited was royal domain, in the manner necessary to enable the party to apply for the legal title, the court is now to consider of the merits of the claim under the law, as the intendant would have done had the application been made to him for the title. In doing this, it will look beyond the instructions of Gayoso and the regulations of Morales, and to the authority under which they were made. The former were addressed to the commandants of posts as rules for their government in the performance of the duties to which they relate, and were not intended by their author to abrogate or in any way to affect the instruction of O'Riley, but were doubtless made with a view to the better fulfilment, on the part of their author, of the duties he was required to perform by that instruction.

O'Riley's instruction had been made by the royal order of 1770 a law to the governor, until the King should otherwise dispose. There is no such inconsistency between the instruction of Gayoso and that of O'Riley as to authorize an inference that the former had been made in consequence of any alteration in his Majesty's disposition in that respect. They were doubtless intended to be made pursuant to the powers conferred by O'Riley's instruction and the royal order, but not to impart in their full measure the discretion which these invested. These observations apply equally to the regulations of Morales, which could not, more than the regulations of Gayoso, annul the provisions of any antecedent law, or limit the discretion with which the officer making them had been invested. If this discretion, in relation to the extent of the grant, should not, upon a consideration of the law, be limited to any definite number of arpents, it may serve to explain the apparent inconsistency between the larger grants made by the officers last mentioned and the limitations of grants to eight hundred arpents, which they respectively prescribed.

In the 61st section of the 81st article of the royal ordinance, respecting the intendants of New Spain, it is provided that "it shall be an object worthy the special attention of the intendants, not only to encourage and extend through the lands situated within their respective districts which may be calculated for such culture the valuable produce of grana fina, or cochineal, which in former times was much cultivated in many provinces of this empire, but is now confined to that of Oaxaca, by efficiently assisting such Indians as shall apply themselves to that most useful branch of agriculture, in order to enable them freely to dispose of it within the said kingdom, (New Spain,) or, if they choose, to send it to Spain, on their own account, as they are allowed to do by law 21, title 18, lib. 4, but also to take care that the said natives, and other classes of the people, should devote themselves, in preference, to the sowing, raising, and preparing of hemp and flax, conformably to law 20 of the same title and book. And if, in order to attain so important objects, the intendants should find it necessary to make a distribution of the King's lands, or of private domains, I grant them power to do so, giving notice thereof, together with their motives, to the supreme board of the treasury; but this is to be understood, as respects the private property of individuals, as applying only to such as, either from negligence or inability of the owners, shall remain unimproved; and the aforesaid board shall make compensation for the same out of the public treasury; and as respects the royal lands, without prejudice to such commons as by the provisions of the law No. 8 ought to belong to each town or corporation; and the lands of the second class shall be distributed by the said intendants in lots proportioned to the number of Indians married who shall not own any, either in their names or in the names of their wives, with defence to alien the same, in order that their heirs, of both sexes, may succeed to the said lands. For my royal pleasure is, that all said natives may own a competent amount of real property, and that the lands which shall be distributed for the aforesaid objects, whether purchased with public funds or commons or King's domains, may belong to those individuals to whom they shall have been allotted, whether they be Indians or belong to other classes, together with the necessary right of property, retaining always the right reserved to my royal crown and to the public domains, respectively; and our intendants shall see that they are by all improved for their own benefit, by making them understand the advantages which are to accrue to their interests from this beneficent provision of mine. And when any shall not apply themselves to improve in a proper manner the lands which shall have been allotted to them, the same shall be taken from them, (which I command to be done without mercy,) and granted to others who shall fulfil the conditions."

My researches have not enabled me to discover any provision, other than those contained in this section and in the instruction of O'Riley, upon the subject of gratuitous concessions, in force in Louisiana, which can in any way apply to the present case. The royal regulation of 1754, to which, and the laws cited in which, the intendants are referred in the royal ordinance just mentioned for their duties and powers in relation to grants of royal lands, have in view, as their general objects, sales and not gifts, and evince in the provisions regulating those a jealous care and parsimonious frugality. The exceptions to this general object of those regulations are limited to grants of commons to towns and villages, according to their wants; to grants to informers who shall give information of lands held without title by others; and to grants or reservations to Indians, or to communities of Indians. Those cases of exception may, perhaps, be considered in the nature of gifts; but in every other case of a grant it is required to be upon a sale or composition for a consideration in money, the amount of which, in the case of a composition, was to depend upon the estimated value of the land, but, in the case of a sale, was determined by what it would command at public auction.

Neither the 61st section just quoted, nor the regulations of O'Riley, define with precision the extent of the gratuitous grants they intend to authorize; and, by their terms, necessarily invest much discretion in the officer to whom the charge of making these grants is committed. The objects for which they are authorized would direct the manner in which the discretion was to be exercised—the 61st section having enjoined upon the intendants, as objects worthy their special attention, the encouragement of the culture of the valuable produce of cochineal, and the sowing, raising, and preparing of hemp and flax by the natives and others; and, if necessary, for the attainment of objects so desirable, authorizes lands to be distributed for that purpose. Circumstances, therefore, of which the intendant was to judge, must necessarily dictate and control the extent of the grant necessary for the attainment of the object. It might, perhaps, to some extent, be necessary to give land as a bounty to that sort of labor to promote sufficiently the object, and, therefore, to make the extent of the grant exceed the quantity actually cultivated, notwithstanding the subsequent part of the section requires that the lands thus granted shall be taken from those who shall not cultivate them, and granted to others upon the same condition of cultivating them.

The instruction of O'Riley authorizes grants upon a scale more liberal; is less limited in the objects of the grant, and, in reference to its extent, affords nothing more than rules to be applied in each particular case with a view to those objects. It directs that grants upon the borders of the river shall be six or eight arpents in front, according to the means of the cultivator, by forty in depth. It contains, in relation to the extent of the grant, no other direction which can be applied to grants that may be made elsewhere than upon the borders of the river, except those which will be adverted to hereafter, and which are authorized with a view to the breeding of cattle. The articles which immediately follow the first article, and which require within a specified time an enclosure and cultivation to a defined extent, and also the making and keeping in repair of roads, bridges, ditches, and mounds, as therein directed, under the penalty of forfeiting the lands granted, show the objects of the grants authorized by the first article, and in a good degree disclose the considerations which were to determine the grant in each particular case. It was not intended by the direction in the first article that grants upon the river should, in every instance, be either six or eight arpents in front, neither more nor less; but the reference to these numbers, qualified as it is by the further reference to the means of the cultivator, show that the grant might be more or less than six or eight arpents in front, and that the means of the cultivator were mainly to be regarded in determining the extent of the grant. The proportion which the grant should bear to the means of the cultivator, and the rule by which the latter would determine the extent of the former, is to be extracted from the conditions of the grant; and the chief thing, I apprehend, to be considered in fixing the extent of the grant, was the ability of the applicant to fulfil the conditions of it—that is to say, his ability to enclose and clear within the time specified the whole front, by two arpents in depth, which, the grant being forty arpents in depth, makes the proportion required to be cultivated equal to five acres for every hundred which should be granted; and also, within the same time, to make the roads, bridges, ditches, and mounds, which, according to the situation of the grant, might be necessary. He, for example, who should not have such means as would enable him to enclose and put in cultivation sixteen arpents within the time required by the regulations, in addition to the other improvements necessary on making a new settlement, and also in addition to the labor necessary in making the mounds, ditches, roads, and bridges, would not be entitled to a grant of eight arpents in front; but would be entitled to one of less front, and which, by diminishing the labor necessary in making the mounds, &c., would enable him to direct more of it to the cultivation of the soil, and a compliance with the conditions of the grant in that respect. But if the applicant had the means of cultivating extensively, his means would be regarded in making the grant, and the scale before laid down would be applied to determine the extent of the front, which might, in this case, exceed eight arpents in pursuance of the spirit of the rule; and the same scale of proportions between the grant and the means of the cultivator would be applied, without doubt, to the grants which should be made remote from the river as to those which should be made upon its border, with this distinction: that, in grants remote from the river, and where roads, &c., were unnecessary, the labor of the settler being directed more exclusively to the cultivation of the soil, the grant might be in the same degree enlarged in the proportion it should bear to his means, and he still be enabled to comply with the conditions annexed to the grant, which, in this case, would be that of only cultivating and enclosing the proportion required. According to this mode of considering these articles, and this application of the rule, which they are supposed to supply, a large grant of lands would be made to him who had large means to cultivate them. The practical result of this construction would be to direct the labor of the province to tillage; to stimulate industry by a grant of a hundred arpents for every five which should be put in cultivation. The conditions of the grant would require industry, as necessary to their performance, to prevent a forfeiture of title. The larger the grant should be in its proportion, in reference to the means of the cultivator, the greater industry would be required on his part to cultivate the quantity prescribed to prevent the forfeiture. Thus this system of conditional grants, offering a bounty to the cultivation of the soil, would be well adapted to the advancement of agriculture, one of the declared objects of the instruction.

To apply these principles to the present case, had the ancestor of the claimants, at the date of the order of the lieutenant governor, the ability and force which would, within the three years, enable him to cultivate the proportion of five arpents for every hundred of the tract solicited? There is no question but that his ability greatly exceeded this, and that what the lieutenant governor has vouched upon this subject in his order was fully justified, viz: "Being satisfied that the supplicant has sufficient means to make available, in the terms of the regulation of the governor general of this province, the lands which he demands the surveyor will put him in possession," &c. These words of the lieutenant governor show his understanding that, in the grant to be made, the means of the applicant to comply with the regulations was to be the ground of the grant. This view, therefore, of O'Riley's instruction would lead me to the conclusion that it would have authorized the grant of the lands claimed in the present case; but the argument which arrives at this conclusion is resisted by that used by the claimant's counsel, who insist that the instruction of O'Riley applies exclusively to the Lower Mississippi, and to settlers who may arrive from abroad, as distinguished from the inhabitants then in the colony. The construction which restrains that instrument to an application so limited, particularly as it relates to territory, is entitled to consideration, not only as it is concurred in alike by the counsel for the claimant and the attorney for the government, and is supported by the authority of Stoddard in his Views of Louisiana, and is that which would not improbably result from a hasty examination of the question; but, which is more important than all, is that which would destroy the validity of all the gratuitous grants made by the Spanish government elsewhere than in the places to which it would restrict the application of the instrument.

The error into which the mind is betrayed by reading particular articles of the instruction will be corrected by considering those articles with reference to other parts of the instrument, and to the recital contained in the royal order by which it is approved, and to the extended range which must be allowed to the acts of its framer in the performance of the powers which had been committed to him. These powers were, to take possession of the country; to receive the surrender of the sovereignty of the crown of France in every part of it, and to establish in its stead that of the Spanish monarch; and also "to establish such regulations in the army, the police, and the administration of justice and of his finances as should be conducive to his service and the happiness of his subjects in the colony." These powers appear to comprehend all that would be necessary to be exerted under any circumstances that could attend the change of sovereignty, and would require in their execution that the mind should be directed to every part of the province. He to whom they had been committed having, as we have seen, proceeded far in the execution of them, formed the present instruction. The royal order which approves it mentions that copies of three other instructions which he had framed had been also enclosed in the same letter with it, and that one of these three had been framed for the lieutenant governor of Illinois.* This order, therefore, shows that in the performance of his duties his attention had been directed to Upper Louisiana before the date of the despatch which enclosed the instruction. In the preamble to his instruction he adverts to the circumstances which had called his attention to the subject, and his means of information in relation thereto, and expresses his conviction that the tranquillity of the inhabitants and the progress of culture required it, and declares its objects to be to "fix the extent of the grants of lands which should thereafter be made, as well as the enclosures, cleared lands, roads, and bridges, which the inhabitants are bound to keep in repair, and to point out the damage by cattle, for which the proprietors shall be responsible; for these causes, and having nothing in view but the public good, and the happiness of every inhabitant," &c.

The sixth article of the instruction is equally general in its terms. It declares that "every inhabitant shall be held bound to enclose within three years the whole front of his land which shall be cleared, and for the remainder of his enclosure he will agree with his neighbors, in proportion to his cleared land and his means;" and in the same spirit are those which relate to cattle, and also the order with which the instruction concludes, "commanding the governor, judges, cabildo, and all the inhabitants of this province," &c. The fifth section has not an exclusive application to grants upon the river, and would relate to those belonging to minors, which should remain uncleared in every part of the province equally. The second section, while it prescribes duties to the grantees upon the borders of the river, supposes that there may be grantees elsewhere than upon the borders of the river. But if the instruction did not authorize grants elsewhere, there could, of course, be no grantees elsewhere, inasmuch as the instruction was the only authority in pursuance of which grants were to be made. O'Riley having stated in his letter to the King, as the royal order recites, that he considers it "expedient that henceforth the governor alone be authorized by his Majesty to make such grants, and that he be directed to conform, in the distribution of the royal lands, to all the provisions contained and published upon this subject. The King having been made acquainted with the dispositions of the said lieutenant general, and with what he proposes on the subject, has approved the same, and directs that you and your successors in said government have the sole power of distributing the royal lands, conforming in all respects, as long as his Majesty shall not make any other provisions, to the said instruction dated from this city on February 18 of this year; all which I communicate to you for your own government, and for its fulfilment."

"The provisions contained and published upon this subject," to which O'Riley considered it expedient the governor should conform in the distribution of the royal lands, are those which formed his instruction, and which had been previously mentioned in the royal order as that which explained the mode of proceeding in relation to surveys, and which, in the concluding part of the order, is referred to by its date. There is no question, therefore, that the instruction referred to in the royal order is the one whose provisions we have been considering. The three instructions mentioned in the previous part of the order, copies of which had been sent by O'Riley, are mentioned perhaps for the purpose of identifying the despatch, and as acts which had received the royal approbation; but certainly not as acts which had relation to the disposition of the royal domain."

The purpose of the grants authorized by the eighth and ninth articles in Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, was for the pasturage of cattle, as disclosed by those articles themselves. A rule is given by which the quantity of arpents to be granted is to be ascertained by the number of cattle the applicant may possess. "To obtain in the Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches a grant of forty-two arpents in front by forty-two arpents in depth, the applicant must make it appear that he is possessor of one hundred head of tame cattle, some horses and sheep, and two slaves to look after them; a proportion which shall always be observed for the grants to be made of greater extent than that declared in the preceding article." The grants authorized by these articles are not subject to the condition of cultivation. If the applicant had the cattle and slaves required to entitle him to a grant of forty-two arpents by forty-two, although he possessed no other property to enable him to cultivate so extensive a front, he was entitled to the grant. In these grants the cattle, and the slaves to look after them, are the inducement to and the consideration of the grant. These articles encourage the breeding of cattle, by conferring a premium upon their possessor. The previous articles encouraged agriculture by a premium upon the cultivation of the soil. If the progress of culture and the tranquillity of the inhabitants, as declared in the preamble, required a new regulation on the subject of grants, the provisions of such regulations should be executed in a manner which should be calculated to advance the progress of culture. If the causes which threatened to disturb the tranquillity of the inhabitants had reference to the means of subsistence, or to any deficiency in this respect, to which the country at that early day might have been exposed, the probable influence of the system which this construction would introduce would offer a better security against the continuance of such a cause of complaint than would be afforded by any other. If the encouragement of tillage was the object of the framer of the instruction in the grants he intended to authorize, the intention to limit them to the borders of the river is so inconsistent with that object that it is not to be supposed. This reflection acquires increased force when it is considered that all the arguments, as drawn from the articles themselves, or from any other source, in favor of an exclusive application of the instruction to the borders of the river, equally restrict its application to those points, or that extent of country upon the borders of the river where mounds are necessary for the preservation of the land, and to that narrow border which a single line of grants of forty arpents in depth would occupy. Is it then to be believed, without some invincible necessity, induced by the terms of the instrument, that its author intended to encourage agriculture by thus limiting grants, and consequently settlements and the improvement of the soil, to so inconsiderable a proportion of a vast region which lay before him, and which was everywhere inviting the husbandman; or that he could hope to tranquillize the inhabitants by his proclamation of such an intention? The general words and articles of the instrument before adverted to, and the mode of considering the instrument which has already been submitted, relieve us from this invincible necessity. Neither is it to be supposed that the inhabitants, assembled in each district by his order, in their reports, which appear to have exercised an influence upon the framer of the instruction, had recommended the limitation of grants to a strip of land so confined, or called for the adoption of a policy so little to be reconciled with their interests or the improvement of the country; or that there could have existed a reason for the desire on their part that none but foreign settlers should receive grants. Yet such are the unreasonable suppositions which must encumber the limited application contended for at the bar. For as this instruction was the only authority, if it were to be applied exclusively to a particular section and to particular persons, the authority to grant elsewhere and to other persons is necessarily denied. The power to grant being derivative, could not be exercised without a positive authority from the crown. Consequently, all grants which were made by the Spanish government during the twenty-eight years preceding the decree of 1798—no other authority having existed during all this period—elsewhere than in the places, and to the persons, to which this argument would restrict the application of the instrument, would be void for want of authority.

The force of this conclusion cannot be eluded by any sound construction of the royal order of 1770, or of the instruction of O'Riley, or by any presumption authorized by the practice of the Spanish government, or by any aid to be derived from the laws contained in the collection of the code of the Indies. That the royal order is on a paper distinct from the instruction does not afford ground for an opinion that the power of the governor is either enlarged or diminished by that circumstance, or is any other than it would have been, had the instruction itself been the act of the King, and the power to grant solely derived from the twelfth article; for the order made with the knowledge of the instruction pursues precisely the recommendation of O'Riley—the object of which recommendation was, that the governor should grant the land in conformity with the instruction.

If, from the terms used in the instruction, it was doubtful whether its framer intended to confer a general power to grant throughout the province, and that the particular articles applicable to grants on the borders of the river, and to Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, were intended to be the only restraints upon the general power, which elsewhere was to be exercised without control of law or limitation of quantity, the general policy of the Spanish monarch, as adopted in other parts of his dominions, not so dissimilarly situated as to require a different policy in relation to the same subject, might be adverted to as affording the system, the policy, the general mode of thinking, which had a probable influence upon the mind of the framer of the instrument, to induce us to prefer one rather than another construction. It is not to be presumed that the King had conferred upon his governors in the several provinces of his extensive dominions in America an unlimited power to make gratuitous grants of his domains, as the consequences of conferring such a power would be to deprive him of a valuable source of revenue—to diminish his power, his influence, his patronage, and the dependence of the subject upon him, throughout those dominions; and in the same degree to increase the power, the influence, and the patronage of the governors, and the dependence of his subjects upon them. The collection of laws made by Mr. White furnishes no example of a discretion unlimited having been committed by the crown to governors in any of his provinces to make gratuitous grants. They, on the contrary, afford us a general view of a practice, which, according to the statement of one of the counsel for the complainants, who represents the dates of some of those laws, as examined by him, to be of the fifteenth century, has been so long persevered in, of authorizing those grants to be made with a view to their habitation and cultivation, and of prescribed dimensions—not prescribed in every instance by referring to a given quantity or numbers, or in a manner to prevent the exercise of some discretion with a view to particular objects—that it is not presumable that a practice so long persevered in was wholly lost sight of in framing the instruction. Those laws do not contemplate that the governors, as a matter of course, were to exercise ex officio, or to be invested with the exercise by special authority from the crown, of the power of granting the royal lands. This power was, perhaps, as often elsewhere reposed. The earlier laws, which were made with a view to the settlement and exploration of the Spanish dominions in America, and were gratuitous grants of lands, were intended to be the inducements held out to adventurers to make new discoveries and settlements, do not authorize those grants otherwise than in limited quantities, and upon the condition of settlement and residence for a term of years.

When, by the settlement of the country, lands had acquired value, the policy of sales with a view to revenue took the place of gratuities; in passing from more remote to more recent times, and where the advancement of the settlement would justify it, the latter policy gained upon the former. In the royal regulation of 1754, it would appear to have superseded it, with but little exception; which exception is extended by the sixty-first section of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants—extended, however, with a view to the advancement of tillage. The acquisition of Louisiana by Spain again presented an occasion for authorizing gratuitous grants as inducements to the settlement of that country. The King, therefore, may have been disposed to authorize such grants in Louisiana in 1770, upon terms more liberal than he had been in the other provinces of his American dominions in 1754, the date of his royal regulation, or in 1782, the date of his royal ordinance respecting the intendants. But when, in 1798, the settlements in Louisiana had so far advanced that sales of lands might be effected with a view to revenue, the system established for that purpose by the royal regulation, and the eighty-first article of the royal ordinance, which have been just mentioned, was introduced; it was not until then that sales of lands were authorized in Louisiana. Prior to that time grants had been gratuitous, and are not then proposed to be discontinued.

The abstract of the laws prepared by Morales, composing his regulations, so far as they contemplate gratuitous grants, is little more than a transcript, in a more amplified form, of O'Riley's instruction, and is in conformity with the practice under it, which, it is believed, before that time had prevailed, with the exception of the limitation of eight hundred arpents; which, as already remarked, was rather a declaration of the principle upon which he meant to make gratuitous grants than a law restrictive of the discretion which might rightfully be exercised under the instruction of O'Riley; and perhaps this restriction might be considered an innovation upon the previous practice under O'Riley's instruction, wisely and properly induced by the eighty-first article of the royal ordinance, which authorizes sales as necessary to give effect to the King's intention to derive revenue therefrom, since that which could be obtained without price would not be purchased from the crown on the part of the subject; whilst, on the other hand, the crown would be disposed to withhold the gratuity where there existed a motive to purchase. This policy on the part of the crown is forcibly illustrated in those articles of the regulations which apply to those who were in possession of lands under the first decree of the lieutenant governor, and who would be likely to purchase the lands they had improved rather than incur the penalty of an expulsion from them, as from lands of the crown, notwithstanding they had originally entered upon them with the understanding that they would be given, subject to the usual conditions—a policy inculcated by the royal regulation of 1754, in a form not less unacceptable to the subject.

The strange medley of gifts, sales, and compositions which the provisions of the regulations of Morales exhibit—the natural consequence of the collection into one body of substances drawn from materials so incongruous as those which formed the laws under the King's decree of 1798, might not, nevertheless, be wholly inconsistent with some degree of utility and practical harmony, under a system skilfully directed, which should give the preference to sales, and which should deny gratuities where motives and the means to purchase should concur.

Whilst a comparison of those articles of the regulations of Morales which authorize gratuitous grants with those provisions of O'Riley's instructions upon the same subject will show that the latter are in everything substantially retained in the former, and authorize the inference that Morales understood that the provisions of that instruction were included among those to which he is referred by the decree of 1798, and in conformity to which he is to distribute the royal lands—authorize equally the inference that it was also the opinion of Morales that the instruction of O'Riley applied to every part of the province—to Upper as well as Lower Louisiana. If, in the opinion of Morales, the instruction of O'Riley did not apply to Upper Louisiana, he could not have applied its provisions there. He might have made gratuitous grants there, under the authority of the sixty-first section before recited; but the conditions of such grants would have been that of cultivating and continuing to cultivate the land, and without the power of alienation, in default of which it was directed to be retaken and granted to others. Or if he had considered that the other laws in the collection of the code of the Indies, on the subject of gratuitous grants, had been extended to Louisiana, either anterior to or in virtue of the decree of 1798, the condition of the grant would have been a settlement, cultivation, and residence of four years, and not of three, as he has prescribed.

It was an error which imputed to the governor general of the province of Louisiana a general power of legislation. In the case of Soulard's heirs, that was an inference which the court had drawn from the exercise of this power by O'Riley, and from its supposed exercise by Gayoso, in the formation of his instructions—an inference the correctness of which was, perhaps, less examined, in consequence of the opinion of Stoddard, in his Views of Louisiana, to that effect. The inference was made without discriminating between the powers usually committed to the governors of provinces, which powers were regulated by established laws emanating from the King, and those more extensive powers which had been conferred upon O'Riley by a special commission, without any reference to existing laws; which powers, among others, comprehended that of giving laws to the province and form to its government, as, in his discretion, he should consider the good of the service of the King and the happiness of his subjects might require.

It is a fundamental principle of the Spanish monarchy that all laws emanate from the King, and that if laws be made by his authority his approbation is necessary to give them force, except the contrary be expressed by him in the authority.

The laws which had long prevailed in his American dominions were a collection made by his order, and which afterward derived their authority from a royal ordinance. Those were as obligatory upon the governors of provinces as upon the humblest subject. When, therefore, O'Riley, in the exercise of the extraordinary powers which had been committed to him, had established laws and the political form of government, these were unalterable by the governor general, and as binding upon him as upon any other subject, and were addressed to him as an inferior, in the same manner that they were addressed to all others. The order of O'Riley, with which the instruction concludes, is in this manner addressed to the governor, the judges, the cabildo, and to every inhabitant. The powers of the governor general, therefore, would depend upon the laws and the political form of government which O'Riley should establish; and these might have been established without the creation of such an officer, if, in the exercise of the discretion invested, this had been deemed expedient. To ascertain the powers of the governor general, therefore, we must advert to the laws and the political form of government established by O'Riley; but to ascertain the powers of O'Riley as the governor and captain general of Louisiana, by special commission, with a view to the exercise of extraordinary powers, we must advert to the terms of that commission in reference to its objects. To confound, therefore, the powers of the governor general with those of O'Riley must lead to error, the extent and official existence of the former having been but accidents attending the due exercise of the latter.

Entertaining these views in relation to the policy of the Spanish monarch in the distribution and grant of the royal lands in the other parts of his dominions, and the powers of the governor general; when O'Riley has declared, in the preamble to his instruction, that one among the objects of that instruction was to fix the extent of the grants which should thereafter be made; and when, by the practice of former times, this had never been omitted, and when the interest of the King required that the instruction should do this, the instrument should be construed consistently with this object, if its terms will authorize it; not that such a provision was necessary to restrain the exercise of a power previously existing, and which, without such restraint, might have been exercised at discretion; for, it being a principle of the Spanish monarchy that all lands within its dominions, which are not the property of the subject, belong to the King, as well those which have never been granted as those which, having been abandoned or become derelict, fall to him by escheat, can only be granted away by him or by his authority, the governors of provinces could no more make grants of land without such authority than they could make laws for the kingdom without the assent of the crown. But the intention of gratuitous grants being to invite settlements, and to populate new regions, in prescribing the manner in which the distribution should be made, it would reasonably be one among the objects of the instruction to supply rules which should determine the dimensions of the grants, which rules would of course prescribe those dimensions which should be necessary for the attainment of the end, permitting no great excess beyond this, inasmuch as it would not be the interest of the King to divest himself by gratuitous grant of more than was necessary to induce settlements, increase the number of his subjects, enhance the value of the undisposed part of his domain, which would eventually redound to the benefit of the treasury. Such being the object of gratuitous grants, the quantity authorized to be granted would reasonably bear a proportion to the number of the settlers, and their means to cultivate. Whilst, therefore, this view offers reasons for so construing the instrument as to limit the power of the governor as to the extent of the grant, it offers reasons equally strong against the construction which would confine the power to grant to the borders of the river, and to Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, or which would confine his power to grant to none but foreign settlers. The direction in the twelfth article of O'Riley's instruction, in relation to the manner in which surveys should be made and boundaries established, contemplates contiguous grants, grants in the vicinity of settlements where there are neighbors, and a syndic acquainted with the boundaries of the previous grants, a direction inconsistent with an intention to authorize large or unlimited grants, or grants without a view to settlement.

The intendant's letter of April 3, 1800, in reply to a proposition of the commandant at New Madrid concerning the sale of lands, may be referred to as enforcing the same doctrine. It states that "it was never the intention of the King to dispose of the lands in such large quantities and under such circumstances as are stated in your letter of the 9th of February last, No. 9, and the petition of the inhabitants accompanying it."

It is true that in the new regulation there are provisions made for the sale of lands in the manner referred to; but it is only under the previous formalities there specified, and with a reference to the ability and forces of the persons desirous of purchasing, because it would not be just, that for a small consideration one or more speculators should make themselves masters of a great extent of lands, to the prejudice of others coming to settle, and who, consequently, find themselves driven to purchase those lands which they might otherwise have obtained free of expense.

"For these reasons I cannot at present accede to the before-mentioned proposal, which you will make known to the parties concerned. God preserve you, &c." This letter shows that so soon as the door was supposed to be open, by the provisions contained in the regulations of Morales authorizing the sale of lands, in a manner to permit it, the attempt was made to obtain them in large quantities through means of a sale for a small consideration. May it not be inferred that before this authority to sell, they were not to be obtained in such quantities as gratuities? If they were not to be sold except with a reference to the ability and force of the purchaser, much less could this reference be dispensed with when they were to be granted gratuitously.

The inference which is drawn from the prohibitive terms of the eighth article of the instruction, that "no grant in the Opelousas, Attacapas, and Natchitoches, shall exceed one league in front by one league in depth," implies that without this prohibition larger grants might have been made, and that they might, elsewhere than in the prohibited places, be made, cannot prevail against the evidence which stands opposed to it. That mode of expression may have been suggested as a reply necessary to be made to the petitions from those districts which are mentioned in the preamble, and which were before O'Riley when he framed the instruction, and which may have solicited in those districts, for the purpose of herding cattle thereon, grants to a greater extent than a league square; or the form of expression may have been deemed necessary in consequence of a possible previous practice under the French government of granting in those districts, for the same purpose, tracts larger than a league square. But if the inference were warranted, would it imply that they were not to be for the same bucolic purposes, or for the purpose of tillage, the one or the other, and subject to the rules prescribed as it should be for either?

The court has been forcibly impressed with the difficulty of construing the instruction. That O'Riley was a soldier, may have imparted to this instrument something of the Spartan brevity by which it is characterized; that his illustrations of the rule which was to be observed by the governor in making grants may have been suggested more particularly by the situation and localities of the country over which he had travelled during the tour mentioned in his preamble, is a conjecture probable.

The court has endeavored to consider the instruction as it is induced to believe the Spanish governor general must have considered it, at the period at which he was first required to execute its provisions. He, acquainted, as he is supposed to have been, with the policy of the crown in authorizing gratuitous grants, and with full information of the local circumstances, would probably have little difficulty in understanding those provisions which are now the occasion of so much perplexity It is not probable that he would consider that the legislator for the province intended to limit settlements to the borders of the river, or the districts referred to in the instruction; or that he intended to limit gratuitous grants to foreign settlers; or that he intended to require a cultivation of a certain proportion of the lands which should be granted upon the borders of the river, under pain of forfeiting the lands granted, and exempt grantees elsewhere from the operation of this penalty; for such exemption would offer a motive to applicants for grants to ask for them elsewhere than upon the river, while it was the manifest policy to offer the greater inducements to applicants for grants upon the river, as such grants were the means by which the mounds and roads necessary there were to be maintained in the condition which the country required. He would understand that the reason of requiring the narrow fronts upon the river was peculiar to grants there, and mainly connected with the mounds and roads required; and as a rule, would be calculated to distribute the good and the bad lands equally. He would understand that the King was to be benefited, as well as the subject, by the gratuitous grants; and that the settlement and cultivation were required as the benefit to accrue to the King, as this benefit had been required as the condition of gratuitous grants in the other parts of his dominion; he would therefore apply the rule which had been given upon the subject, whenever, according to the intention of the lawgiver, there existed a reason for the application; he would, therefore, apply the injunction contained in the fifth and sixth articles to grants which should be made elsewhere than upon the rivers, and would, for the same reasons, consider the provisions contained in the eighth and ninth articles an authority to make grants to the possessors of cattle, subject to the rule there laid down, not confined to the districts mentioned, but extending to other parts of the province adapted to the objects of those grants; but he would not understand that Louisiana, in its whole extent, the places referred to in the instruction only excepted, was at his disposal, without limitation or rule.

The means of information which the governor general would possess, and which are now lost, besides his knowledge of the Spanish policy, would enable him to penetrate with so much more certainty into the intention of the framer of the instruction than this court can pretend to do, that it is disposed to regard his contemporaneous construction as entitled to great authority, were it admissible on the part of the United States, under the circumstances of a change of sovereignty, to question that construction, and thereby render invalid the majority of the grants made by the Spanish government It is believed that the construction now given is in accordance with that contemporaneous construction; that the grants which were made by the governor generals, as well as those made by Morales, are consistent with this construction, and cannot be supported upon any other; that the authority for these grants cannot be derived from any other source than the instruction of O'Riley; and that the larger grants which have been adduced to the court are not so disproportionate to the number of which the family of the grantee in each case was composed, and to his means of cultivation and property, including cattle, as to authorize the court to say that the rule which the instruction supplies has been wholly disregarded. One of those grants appears to be for pasturage, and of lands unfit for tillage. In looking to those grants, the court cannot say what proportion of each of them may have been given in consideration of the grantee's cattle, and what with a view to the number of his family and means of tillage; nor can it say that the spirit of the instruction does not authorize these combined circumstances to be considered in determining the quantity of land to which the applicant was entitled. Each of those grants was conditional, as appears by its face. Those made by Morales refer to the particular articles of his regulations by their numbers for the conditions which are to be performed by the grantees. Those made by the governors refer, for the conditions to be performed by the grantees, to the regulations upon that subject more generally. That reference, it is believed, cannot be to any other than the provisions contained in the instruction of O'Riley; there is no record of any other provision made with reference to Louisiana to which they could refer; the memory of no witness suggests any other; the royal order of 1770 makes that instruction the rule, so long as his Majesty shall not otherwise dispose; the preamble of the regulations of Morales refers to it and to the instruction of Gayoso in terms to induce a belief that none other existed; and the provisions of the instruction of O'Riley, being embodied in their true spirit in the regulations of Morales, form a combination of circumstances all tending to establish the negative of the possible existence of any other law; and, as a corollary, that the grants made must have been made under the instruction of O'Riley, and in pursuance of a construction not inconsistent with that now adopted. Would, then, the introduction of the eighty-first article of the royal ordinance, respecting the intendants of New Spain, into Louisiana, and consequently the royal regulation of 1754 and the laws cited therein, which it would draw after it, in any degree limit or control the power which might have been exercised under the instruction of O'Riley? The disposition to sell, and to wring from the hands of the subject rather than give, which pervades these laws, evinces that their introduction carries with it an intention that sales of land and economy should to some extent take the place of gratuities, while the previous instruction, which authorized gratuities, not having been revoked, leaves it to be inferred that the policy which first required these was not to be abandoned. Thus were two systems theoretically opposite brought together and united in the same hands, and to be applied to the same tract of country, without prescribing the cases in which the one or the other should be applied. The regulations of Morales may be cited to show that this was his opinion. They authorize gratuities and sales, without discriminating the cases in which the one or the other of these would be made; they discriminate those where compositions would be allowed. The duties of the intendant, such as they must have been under the regulations of Morales, are precisely such as the two systems of laws thus brought together would impose, and involve necessarily the power to determine the circumstances which would authorize a gratuity, and of the circumstances which would require a sale. But in forming this judgment his mind would be directed to the object of the authority to make gratuities, viz: tillage, the settlement of the country, the extension of settlements, or the formation of new establishments; the reasons that might exist for the advancement of either or all of these, and how far those reasons should yield to the new intention concerning sales; or whether the objects of the latter would be affected by the former in the particular case; for, while the improved condition of one part of the country might render it expedient, under the two systems, that that of sales should supersede in a great degree that of gratuities, a less improved part of the country, or one not at all improved, might still make it expedient to offer, as necessary to its settlement, the inducements of gratuities, under the least restriction imposed by the instruction of O'Riley. So that the introduction of the system of sales, to be applied conjointly with that of gratuities, would not necessarily impose the defined limit of eight hundred arpents to grants of the latter character, but might impose more or less, according to circumstances, localities, &c., to be judged of by the intendant with a view to the objects of both systems. That limit, therefore, not being a matter of law, or the necessary result of the provisions of the law, would not have restrained the discretion which Morales might have exercised.

None of the circumstances from which the intendant might have formed an opinion concerning the probable benefit which the treasury might derive from the sale of lands in the district where those are situated, and the prejudice to tillage which might thence follow, having been adduced in evidence, nor those from which, on the contrary, he might form an opinion that the interests of tillage did not still demand the benefit of his more enlarged discretion in relation to gratuities, so as to enable the court to say that the grant of the lands claimed would have prejudiced the claims of the treasury, contrary to the royal regulation as it was intended to be exercised consistent with the system of gratuities in Louisiana; the court will proceed to consider the claim as though it might have been granted under and in conformity to the laws of the Spanish government at the date of the decree of the lieutenant governor had the then claimant proceeded in due time to apply for such grant. For although the limitation of gratuitous grants to eight hundred arpents by Morales, and previously by Gayoso, might raise the presumption that in their opinion the interests of tillage did not require larger gratuities as a general rule, yet larger grants were made in this district by both those officers; this, together with what the court has taken as true, that sales in pursuance of the royal regulation of 1754, and the laws cited therein and as prescribed by Morales, were never effected in Upper Louisiana to any extent, if at all, induces the belief that the intendant would have considered, as the court has, that he was at liberty to look to the interests of tillage, and to the labor which the gratuity would direct to its advancement. Then considering that the lands claimed in the present case might have been granted by the intendant, under and in conformity to the provisions of the laws, had the original claimant in due time presented his documents for that purpose, and had shown, as he has here shown, that his means to cultivate them were proportionate to the quantity asked for, how stood the claim at the date of the transfer of the sovereignty to the United States? We have seen that the intendant, by the King's decree of 1798, had the exclusive power to grant; and to the end that the inhabitants might be informed of the information which it would be proper that every applicant for a gratuitous grant should present, he specified this information among other rules and directions, and, to avoid injurious mistakes, prescribes that the information required should come under the hands of the persons mentioned in the second and thirty-second articles of the regulations of Morales, already cited. We have also seen that he who intends to apply for a grant for the purpose of obtaining this information, presents his petition to the commandant who may be able to afford it; which petition and the proceedings thereupon take the course which has already been described. When the decree of the lieutenant governor has been obtained upon it, it is delivered to the party, who, when he is so disposed, obtains a survey and the possession of the premises, as a matter of course, upon showing the decree to the surveyor and paying his fees; the certificate of which survey, with the attesting signature of the neighbors, (the last of which, in practice, so far as the court has been informed, has been more frequently dispensed with, the surveyor's report showing, as in the present case, that the survey had been made in the presence of the adjoining settlers,) is delivered to the party, with the original petition and decree, that he may, in the terms of the decree of the lieutenant governor in the present case, "solicit the formal title of concession of the intendant general of these provinces, to whom belongs, by order of his Majesty, the disposing and conceding every kind of vacant lands of the royal domains." The order or decree of the lieutenant governor, therefore, and the surveyor's certificate, are to afford the information that the lands are vacant, and that the party has permission to settle, which is prescribed by the second and the thirty-second articles as necessary to accompany the application for the grant. When, therefore, the petition is presented to the lieutenant governor with a view to a compliance with what had been prescribed by the intendant, and with a view to obtain possession of the lands, the order of the lieutenant governor under which the applicant obtains the survey and possession of the lands is made, with the legal understanding that he will apply for the grant, and proceed to enclose and cultivate the lands according to the provisions of the laws upon the subject of gratuities. To suppose that he does not in good faith, and according to the import of the whole proceeding, intend to apply for the title, or to improve the land as the law requires in cases of gifts, but intends to use the proceedings as a means to get possession, or to enjoy the use of the land or timber to the exclusion of others or to the injury of the King, supposes a fraudulent use of the proceeding—a perversion of it contrary to the intention of the law. But if in good faith he intends to apply for a grant, and in pursuance of such intention, and with a view to obtain the information which was required to accompany his application, he presented his petition to the lieutenant governor and obtained possession of the land under the usual order, and afterwards neglected, no matter from what cause, to apply for the grant, yet, in pursuance of his original intention, he makes the improvement which would have been necessary under the grant, had it issued, to comply with the conditions which the law would have annexed to it, without abandoning his intention to apply for the grant, which would be supposed from his continuing possession, his neglect to apply for the grant would be excused without compelling him to show any reason therefor, and the court would look to the improvement which had been made as that which formed on his part the substance of the undertaking—that in the performance of which the King had an interest—that which in fact would have been the object of the grant, and to that, therefore, which, being performed, would raise an equity which would authorize him to claim the title if he could show any legitimate excuse for his omission to apply for it when he should have done so and might have obtained it; the obligation of showing which excuse it must be the intention of the act of Congress to dispense with, and justly so, because the application for the title was not that in which the King could have any beneficial interest, except as it might be connected with necessary municipal regulations, to the enforcement of which, considering them as foreign relations, it would not be incumbent on this court to attend in contravention of an equitable claim. The court would, therefore, in such a case, by its decree, confer the legal title—place the party in the condition in which he would have been placed had he not been guilty of the negligence to apply for the title which is thus excused; or if a party being put in possession of lands under the usual decree of the lieutenant governor, obtained with a view to apply for the legal title, neglects for any cause to make the application, but in the meantime proceeds to improve the land, which, however, he is prevented from improving to the extent which the condition of the grant according to the law would have required within that term of time which the law would have fixed as a part of the condition of the grant had it issued upon an application made in due and reasonable course, such party, having afterwards made the improvement which the condition of the grant would have required, would be at liberty to show the cause which prevented him from making the improvement within the time required, or that he had prosecuted his intention of making the required improvement in good faith until its final fulfilment without having abandoned it. In such case, besides excusing his neglect to apply for the grant, the court might also, according to the circumstances, excuse the lateness of the period beyond the legal term at which the conditions on his part were performed, the performance of which was the ground upon which his equity would be raised to demand the legal title, and might consequently confer upon such a claimant the legal title. But if a party, after obtaining the first decree of the lieutenant governor, abandons the prosecution of his original intention to apply for the legal title, and does not even procure a survey or obtain possession of the lands he intended to apply for, the decree thus obtained would afford no ground of claim, nor would it in a case where the intention had been further prosecuted, or where possession had been obtained and a survey made, where the party not having made the required improvement nor applied for the legal title abandons the lands without the animo revertendi. In neither of these cases has the claimant performed what was necessary to be performed to give the complete title; in neither has he performed that which it would have been the object of the grant to secure the performance of; in neither, therefore, would there be any equity to support a claim. These are rather cases where the party may have intended to apply for a grant and to perform what was necessary to secure the complete title and afterwards relinquished that intention. Whether this intention should have been relinquished before or after the first decree of the lieutenant governor, or before or after the delivery of possession to him, would be immaterial to the King if he should not proceed to improve the land. But if he proceeded to improve it, and was prevented from fulfilling his intention to comply with the law in this respect from any cause which would authorize a court of equity to assist him, such a case would merit a different consideration.

With this exposition of the laws which apply to the present subject of inquiry, what are the legal merits of the present claim—what the equitable merits upon which the interference of this court can be claimed? The claim is supposed to derive merit from an alleged instruction of the governor general to the lieutenant governor, to favor all the undertakings of the original claimant; and is supposed to derive merit also from the alleged connexion of the order of the lieutenant governor under which possession of the premises was obtained with the distillery which the claimant had been permitted to erect. If the instruction of the governor general had any influence in producing the order of the lieutenant governor, it would add nothing to the virtue or force of that order; because the acts of the latter, so far as they are designed to afford facilities to the applicant to obtain the title, derive their merit from the authority which is given them by the intendancy, or from their having been required by that authority, and because the royal order of 1798 transfers to the intendancy the exclusive right to grant, &c., with inhibition to other authorities. The influence, therefore, which is imputed to the instructions of the governor general would subtract from, rather than add to, the virtue of the act, as an interference contrary to the spirit of the inhibition of the royal order—an interference not to be presumed, and which is not established by the letter of the governor general, relied upon for that purpose. This letter bears date the 20th of May, 1799. What was the precise application to which this letter is in part an answer, and which induced the instructions of the governor general, does not appear. The answer which this letter promises would be written "by the boat just arrived" might probably have shown the nature of the application, and the object of the instructions. In the absence, therefore, of this better evidence, and of those instructions, the court will not presume an improper interference on the part of the governor general with the disposition of the royal domain; and all that the letter permits the court to say in reference to the object of the claimant's application to the governor general, to which his instructions were an answer, is that it may have been the permission to erect the distillery which was afterwards obtained from the lieutenant governor. If this was its object, the inference is that permission was deemed necessary. So the application to the lieutenant governor for this permission, and his decree which grants it, imply that such permission was necessary to the lawful exercise of the right. For what cause the permission was deemed necessary, or that the interference of the governor general to obtain the permission was necessary, if such interference had been solicited, the court does not inquire. It cannot perceive, however, how an art or business which the policy of the government or the law prevented the exercise of without a special permission, is for that cause to be deemed of greater general utility to the public than if such permission was not necessary to its exercise. The restriction upon the exercise of the right implies that a higher object was to be subserved thereby, or that the unrestricted exercise of the right was deemed injurious. But if it were admitted that the distillation of spirits in Upper Louisiana was desirable as a public advantage, and conducive to the interest of the King, the grant of lands had not been authorized to advance any such object; the distillery had not been erected upon the faith of any promise of a grant; and therefore there is no pretence of equity upon the ground of expenditure incurred with a view to the grant. Nor does the claim connect itself with the distillery otherwise than as it is referred to in the original petition of the claimant as affording a reason why the timber upon the lands solicited was an object of importance to him; which reason, it is to be remarked, the lieutenant governor does not advert to, or appear in anywise to regard, in his decree under which possession was delivered to the claimant, but places that decree upon the ground that the claimant had "the means to make available, within the term of the regulation of the governor general of this province, the lands which he demands." The claimant having solicited the land upon two grounds—first, as important to him in consequence of his distillery, and, secondly, that it was his intention "to establish the lands," meaning, doubtless, to cultivate them—the order is made upon the merit of the application, as it is founded upon the last-mentioned ground. The claim, therefore, derives no merit from the circumstance of the distillery, or the reference to it. Then the title of the claimants, in point of law, is, that at the time the original complainant presented his petition to the lieutenant governor he possessed the means which would have enabled him to comply with the conditions which the law would have annexed to the grant, and the means which, under the law, would have authorized the grant of the lands he solicited; and that he either intended to apply for the title, and to fulfil the conditions as necessary to perfect it, or that he intended to avail himself of the order of the lieutenant governor for the purpose of obtaining possession of the lands, and the temporary use of the timber; but the qualifications to obtain the legal title, and the intention to apply for it, would not vest any title at law; nor could the prosecution of that intention, as in the present case, so far as to incur the surveying fees necessary to obtain possession, vest any title either at law or in equity; for here the party having done nothing under the law which was beneficial to the King—having voluntarily declined to proceed further to obtain his title, or delayed the further steps necessary, contrary to his legal undertaking at the time he obtained the order for possession, until, by the change of sovereignty, or a change in the circumstances or policy of the government, the opportunity to obtain the title was withdrawn, the claimant, in the meantime, and down to the present time, having been in the enjoyment of the use of the timber, and omitted to improve the lands. But if, as has been done in the cases in which this court had decreed the title to the claimants, the party had made the settlement and improvement which the law required to perfect the legal title, he, by so doing, would have rendered the benefit to the King which it would have been the object of the grant to secure; that which was to be the consideration of the grant being thus rendered, and the negligence to apply for the title excused, his title in equity would authorize him to claim the interference of this court, and the exercise of its powers, for the purpose of giving him at law the benefit of all that he was entitled to in equity.

That the court has correctly interpreted the object of the application to the lieutenant governor, and the authority of his act under the regulation of Morales, it does not doubt. His acts could not tend to confer or assure the title otherwise than as they were authorized by the intendancy, with whom resided the exclusive power in relation to that subject. It may be that the object of the intendant in making the permission of the government to settle a prerequisite to the issue of the grant had relation more particularly to foreign settlers; and it is probable that any statement of the lieutenant governor which might accompany his authorized act, or be offered as the ground of it, might be of advantage to the claimant before the intendant, or might be considered by the intendant sufficient to establish the fact which it assumes to establish. That certain facts were required to be authenticated in a particular form, or by particular persons, would not prevent those persons from establishing other facts necessary to be established on the part of the claimant. The object of the forms prescribed being to prevent mistakes and imposition, an adherence to them would not be insisted upon under circumstances where the evidence produced was a sufficient security against either. The official survey, therefore, of the surveyor, in the presence of the neighbors, as a mode of ascertaining that the lands solicited were vacant, may have been received by the intendant as affording sufficient security against any mistake in that respect. The practice of addressing, by petition, the officer whose agency was first required, was, it is believed, the familiar mode of proceeding under the Spanish government, and might be adopted by the applicant, not only as more familiar generally, and one which had been long practiced in the times when the governors made grants, but as more formal than the simple mode prescribed, and as enlisting in his behalf higher authority; while it also gave him the immediate possession of the premises he solicited, and the advantage of a formal survey, by a reference to which the grant might be made—advantages of no little importance to the applicant in Upper Louisiana, the distance of the office of the intendant from that part of the province being considered. That this practice was continued after the regulations of Morales does not, for these reasons, appear to authorize the opinion that it was continued in virtue of any other authority than that contained in the second and thirty-second articles of the regulations of Morales. The lieutenant governor does not assume to pass the title; nor does his order—the survey made in pursuance thereof—possess any more efficacy for this purpose than would the simple statement of the syndic or commandant of a post, that permission to settle had been given by the government, and his further statement, united with that of the surveyor and two of the neighbors, having knowledge of such fact, that the lands solicited were vacant.

The grant of the intendant, which, under the royal order of 1798, is necessary to pass the legal title, and the settlement and improvement which by law is necessary to perfect that legal title, being both of them in the present case wanting, the laws of Spain afford to the complainants no ground to ask for the assistance of the court. That the settlement and improvement would be necessary to perfect the title, after the emanation of the grant, and must be shown as a ground of equity in the absence of the legal title, is a doctrine which results so forcibly from the provisions of the laws which authorize gratuities that the court cannot escape from it; and in this view would consider it immaterial whether the intendancy had or had not committed to the lieutenant governor a discretion—a power to decide in relation to the merits of any application beyond what this opinion has allowed to him. The fourth article of the regulations of Morales prescribes that "the new settlers who have obtained lands shall be equally obliged to clear and put in cultivation, in the precise time of three years, all the front of their concessions, of the depth of at least two arpents, on the penalty of having the lands granted reunited to the domain if this condition is not complied with. The commandants and syndics will watch that what is enjoined in this and the preceding article be strictly observed, and occasionally inform the intendant what they may have remarked, well understanding that in case of default they will be responsible to his Majesty." What this article prescribes had been required substantially by the second and sixth articles of the instruction of O'Riley. The quantity which is required to be put in cultivation, according to the spirit of the rule, is ascertained by the depth of the grant, as directed in the first article of the regulations of Morales, and the first article of the instructions. The sixth article of Morales is connected with the object of the fourth, and is also taken from the third article of the instruction of O'Riley. It prescribes that "during the said term of three years no person shall sell or dispose of the land which has been granted to him, nor shall he ever after the term, if he has failed to comply with the conditions contained in the preceding article; and to avoid abuses and surprise in this respect, we declare that all sales made without the consent of the intendancy, in writing, shall be null and of no effect; which consent shall not be granted until they have examined, with a scrupulous attention, if the conditions have or have not been fulfilled." The fifth article of Morales is a further illustration of the intention of the regulations upon this subject. It directs that "if a tract of land belonging to minors remain without being cleared, or as much of it as the regulations require, and that the bank, the road, the ditches, and the bridges are not made, the commandant or syndic of the district will certify from whom the fault has arisen; if it is in the guardian, he will urge him to put it in order; and if he fails, he shall give an account of it; but if the fault arises from the want of means of the minor to defray the expense, the commandant or syndic shall address a statement of it to the intendancy, to the end that sale of it may be ordered for the benefit of the minor, to whom alone this privilege is allowed, if in the space of six months any purchaser presents; if not, it shall be granted gratis to any person asking it, or sold for the benefit of the treasury." This article is also taken from the fifth in the instruction of O'Riley. If the four first articles of the instruction of O'Riley have a particular relation to grants upon the borders of the river, the sixth article, and also that part of the fifth which requires clearing, has not that exclusive relation. The regulations of Morales preserve the same distinction between sales and gratuities which had been maintained by the previous laws of Spain, and particularly those introduced into Louisiana. By the twenty-sixth article purchasers are onerated with the keeping up of mounds and roads, but not under the penalty of a forfeiture, as in the case of gratuities; and it is an implication from this article that no forfeiture is incurred by a purchaser for an omission to cultivate. So the fourth article of the royal regulation of 1754, which allows proof of long possession to give a title by prescription, subjects the claimant by such a title to lose his lands, if he shall not, within three months, or within a reasonable time, cultivate them, and requires that they be given to others who may inform thereof, upon the same condition of cultivating them. So the sixty-first section of the eighty-first article of the royal ordinance for the establishment of the intendants, which authorizes grants as an inducement to the natives and others to devote themselves to the sowing, raising, and preparing of hemp and flax, commands that the lands thus granted shall be taken from those who shall not cultivate them, and granted to others upon the same condition of cultivating them. So the earlier laws which authorize gratuities, but which are believed not to have been in force in Louisiana, require a cultivation and residence of a longer period to give the legal title. Law 1, tit. 12, lib. 4, of the collection of the laws of the Indies, page 38 of White's collection, declares that, "in order to promote the zeal of our subjects in the discovery and settlement of the Indies, and that they may live in that ease and comfort which we desire them to enjoy, it is our will that there be distributed among them houses, lots, lands, caballerias and peonias, to all those who shall repair to settle on new lands in the villages and places which shall be designated to them by the governor of the new settlement, making a distinction between gentlemen or esquires, (escuderos,) and laborers, (peones,) and those of inferior grade and merit, and graduating such grants according to their qualifications and services, in order that they may attend to working the said land and the breeding of stock; and when the said settlers shall have lived and labored in said settlements during the space of four years, they are hereby empowered, from the expiration of said term, to sell the same, and freely to dispose of them at their will, as their own property; and the governor, or whoever shall be thereto authorized by ourselves, shall, in the distribution which he shall make of the Indians, and according to the merit and rank of said settlers, grant them said Indians, so that they may enjoy the profits arising from their possession, according to the established rates and the enactments in that behalf." Law 2d of the same title and book, page 39, White's collection, also declares that "it shall not be lawful to give or distribute lands in a settlement to such persons as already possess some in another settlement, unless they shall leave their former residence and remove themselves to the new place to be settled, except where they shall have resided in the first settlement during the four years necessary to entitle them to fee-simple right, or unless they shall relinquish their title to the same for not having fulfilled their obligation; and we declare as null any distribution which may be made contrary to the provisions of this our law; and we condemn those who may make such distribution to suffer our displeasure, and to be fined ten thousand maravedis for the benefit of our chamber, (camera.") The 3d law of the same title and book, page 39, White's collection, declares that "the persons who shall accept grants of caballerias or peonias shall enter into an obligation to build upon the lots, and to occupy the houses, to divide and clear the arable lands, and to work and plant them, and to stock with cattle those which are destined for pasture, within a limited time, divided into terms, and declaring what is to be done in each, under the penalty of forfeiting their grants of lands and lots, and, besides, a certain number of maravedis for the republic; which obligation shall be in due form, with good and sufficient sureties." In a similar spirit are the early laws upon the subject of gratuities. Under these laws neither the legal nor equitable title could be acquired without a settlement and cultivation for four years.

The act of Congress directs that the claim, to authorize the court to take jurisdiction of it, must be such as might have been perfected into a complete title under and in conformity to the laws, usages, and customs of the government, had not the sovereignty of the country been transferred to the United States. This phraseology, I apprehend, was adopted without adverting to the intervening sovereignty of France, between the origin of the titles under the Spanish government and the transfer of the sovereignty to the United States. After the transfer of the sovereignty to the United States the claimant of a title derived from the Spanish government could have no proceeding under and in conformity to the laws of that government for the purpose of perfecting his title; nor could he, after the transfer of the sovereignty from Spain to France, have the benefit of such proceeding. The laws of Spain which authorized this proceeding were as entirely abrogated by this transfer as they could have been by the transfer to the United States; so that, after the transfer of the sovereignty from Spain to France, whether there had or had not been any transfer of it to the United States, no claim which originated under the Spanish government could have been perfected into a complete title under and in conformity to the laws of that government; and, consequently, no claim so originating would fall within the description of those of which the court is authorized to take jurisdiction, the literal construction of the act being adhered to. But a construction which would defeat the act is not to be adopted, and the intention, doubtless, was not to exclude the jurisdiction where the claim was such as might have been perfected into a complete title under and in conformity to the laws of the government from which the same originated, had no change of sovereignty taken place, if it was also attended with the other circumstances required, of being in virtue of a grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey, legally made before the date specified in the act, and to a person resident in the province at or before that date, and protected by the treaty. A claim by virtue of a warrant from the lieutenant governor, by a person who, from his property or family, was qualified according to the laws to receive a grant of what is claimed, might have been perfected into a complete title under and in conformity to the laws, i. e. if the claimant had done everything which the law required for that purpose. But that it might have been perfected into a complete title will not authorize a decree in favor of the party, unless he has performed all that the law required to be performed on his part. It is the performance of this which would constitute his equity, and which would authorize the interference of the court in this, as in all other cases. The act requires the court to hear and determine the claim "in conformity with the principles of justice, and according to the laws and ordinances of the government under which it originated." According to these laws and ordinances, where there was no grant, neither the legal nor equitable title could be acquired without the settlement and improvement prescribed, which not having been made in the present case, the court cannot, in conformity with the principles of justice, decree in favor of the claimant.

The act further directs that the court shall, "by a final decree, settle and determine the question of the validity of the title according to the law of nations, the stipulations of any treaty, and proceedings under the same, the several acts of Congress in relation thereto, and the laws and ordinances of the government under which the same originated." Here the court is required to settle and determine the question of the validity of the title according to the several laws enumerated. As, according to these laws and ordinances of the government under which the present claim originated, there is neither a legal nor equitable title in the petitioners, the court must determine the title to be invalid, unless it be rendered valid by the law of nations, the stipulations of some treaty, or proceedings under the same, or the several acts of Congress relating thereto.

The third article of the treaty by which Louisiana was acquired provides that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and admitted, as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States; and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess." This article guarantees, first, the incorporation of the inhabitants into the Union; secondly, their admission as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to all the rights, &c.; and, thirdly, protection in the meantime. It was doubtless the understanding of the parties to this treaty that the admission into the Union could not take place immediately, and, as to part of the inhabitants, might not until a remote period; but that the same reasons which might postpone their admission into the Union need not postpone the extension to them of the benefit of all the principles of the Federal Constitution which might be enjoyed under a territorial form of government; and the spirit of the stipulation would appear to require the extension of this benefit to them as soon as possible. But so soon as they should be admitted to the free enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, they would not need any other guarantee of protection than that which the Constitution would afford. But during the intervening period between the treaty and such admission, the guarantee of protection might be beneficial; and to this period do the terms of the stipulation limit it. The admission of Missouri into the Union having secured to her inhabitants the higher guarantee of protection which is contained in the Constitution of the United States, they no longer have or need that contained in the treaty. But this was no more than that they should be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their property, &c. Property involves the idea of a right; all rights, therefore, relating to property, the inhabitants were to be protected in—rights such as they were at the date of the treaty, and under the laws then in force in the country. According to these laws, there was no right to the premises in question, either legal or equitable, in the ancestor under whom the present petitioners claim to be protected.

But it is insisted that the present claim, and all others which, like it, are founded upon the first decree of the lieutenant governor, were confirmed by the treaty of St. Ildefonso, by which Louisiana was retroceded by Spain to France; that the proclamation to the inhabitants made by the Spanish commissioners appointed to deliver the possession of the country under that treaty, contains the evidence of that confirmation. It is also insisted that they are confirmed by the proclamation itself.

It would not be presumed that it was an object to the parties to this treaty to confirm indiscriminately all such claims. The King having authorized the governor general exclusively to make grants of his domain, may not have been apprised that this officer had required the agency of the lieutenant governor in connexion with that duty; but if he had been so advised, he could not have been informed of the number or extent of the grants which the inhabitants might have intended to solicit of the governor general, and which had been so far put in a train of preparation for that purpose as to have passed through the hands of the lieutenant governor; inasmuch as no memorial of the claims so prepared had been preserved by this officer during the latter period of the government, which embraced the larger grants—the registry of the claims in the Livre Terrien, upon which he had acted, having been discontinued, or nearly so, after the year 1795, the registry of but a very few appearing of a later date, according to the evidence upon this subject—the original papers in each case having been put into the possession of the party, as that upon which the title was to be solicited of the governor general. But if he had been informed of all the acts of the lieutenant governor which had relation to the disposition of the domain, it would not be presumed that he intended to confirm to those who, during any period of the Spanish government, may have intended to solicit land of the governor general, and who may or may not have proceeded so far in the prosecution of that intention as to obtain possession of such lands by the order of the lieutenant governor, and who afterwards did not do anything upon them, or wholly abandoned them, as well as all intention to solicit them; for such persons would still remain in possession of the original orders of the lieutenant governor, and their claims be as much within the alleged confirmatory force of the treaty or proclamation as any other which had its origin with the lieutenant governor.

That the practice of noting in the Livre Terrien the decrees of the lieutenant governor had been discontinued, as mentioned; that no direct communication was ever made by the lieutenant governor to the governor general on the subject of those decrees, as appears by the evidence of the late lieutenant governor; that no means were provided which might serve as a check upon possible frauds or forgeries in relation to such decrees, would also induce the opinion that a greater degree of solemnity or efficacy, for the purpose of establishing a title as against the King, had not been attached to them than has been imputed to them by the court. The proclamation was made by commissioners appointed to deliver possession of the country under the treaty, not by commissioners appointed to confirm titles. It was no part of the object of the proclamation, more than it formed a part of the duty of the commissioners to make such confirmation. But as an authorized declaration of the effect of the treaty, or of the rights and obligations which that had secured, it is entitled to consideration. It does not represent the confirmations as an effect of the treaty, or as a thing which had been stipulated in it, but makes known that "his Majesty, in expressing the hopes he entertains for the welfare and tranquillity of the inhabitants of the colony, promises to himself, from the sincere amity and close alliance which unite the Spanish government and that of the republic, that the latter will give orders to the governor and other officers in its service in order that all grants and property of whatever description derived from the governors of those provinces shall be confirmed to them, although not confirmed by his Majesty." The understanding from this proclamation would be, not that the treaty had confirmed them, but that the order for this purpose was to proceed from the French republic. The grounds upon which the King had promised to himself the issue of this order were the sincere amity and close alliance which united the two governments, not a treaty stipulation. Other matters mentioned in the proclamation relating to the administration of justice being continued by the ordinary judges and the established tribunals, &c., concerning which he makes the same promise to himself, in favor of which it is not to be supposed that there could have been a stipulation, may be adverted to as a further illustration of the intention of the proclamation.

But if the proclamation could be so construed, as an exposition of the treaty, as to convey the idea that the grants it refers to had been confirmed, that reference is to the grants derived from the governors of the province, to grants derived from those who alone by the royal order of 1770 were authorized to make them, and is not to be understood to be a reference to acts of less dignity than grants, or than was necessary to confer property, performed by an officer inferior to the governor of the province, and upon whom his Majesty had not conferred the power of making grants. The order of the King to the commissioners, in pursuance of which the proclamation was made, excludes all ground of controversy upon this subject. After enumerating the several matters concerning which particular orders are made, it proceeds: "Meanwhile we hope that for the tranquillity of the inhabitants of said colony—and we promise ourselves, from the sincere amity and close alliance which unite us to the government of the republic, that said government will issue orders to the governor and other officers employed in its service, &c.—that all the grants or property of whatever denomination made by my governors may be confirmed, although not confirmed by myself." In addition to the reasons mentioned, upon which it is believed that the reference here made by the King is to the grants which had been made by the governors who had successively administered the government, and upon whom alone he had conferred the power of making grants, it may be added that the decrees of the lieutenant governor were not acts which were to be confirmed by the King, nor acts which were to be confirmed by the governors. The grants made by the governors are original acts, and do not assume to be but confirmations of a previous title, although in those grants the previous act of the lieutenant governor, as well as of the surveyor, is referred to.

That in fact and in practice, as it is believed, there was no such thing as a confirmation by the governors of any title which had been given by the lieutenant governor; but the confirmation which the King promises to himself would be made was to be of the grants made by the governors—for these were the only grants which, from the authority he had conferred, he can be supposed to have referred to—the only grants which in fact existed in the province, and the grants which, of course, would be referred to him for confirmation, if his confirmation was necessary to complete the title. Whether his confirmation was or was not necessary would appear to be immaterial in regard to its effect upon the decision of the questions which have been considered, and immaterial as it regards its effect upon the interests of those who claim under such titles, they having been confirmed by acts of Congress. But that the King's confirmation of the grants made by his governors was, in his opinion, requisite to perfect the titles is a necessary inference from the terms of his order, and is material to show that he had not considered the royal regulation of 1754 in force in Louisiana whilst the power to grant resided in the governors, as by that regulation the power of confirmation had been conferred upon the governors or the audiencias, the one or the other, according to the country over which it extended. That it had not been the practice of the governors to confirm the acts of the lieutenant governors, as contemplated by the 12th article of that regulation; that the governors made the original grants, and not confirmations, contrary to what is contemplated in that article; that the lieutenant governors did not make grants, as the sub-delegates had done under the royal regulation—all concur to show the understanding of the government of Spain, from the throne down to the lieutenant governor, that the royal regulation had not been extended to Louisiana prior to the decree of 1798—an understanding which prevailed from the commencement of the government of Spain there to the final transfer of the country to France, as evinced by the instruction of O'Riley, the royal order of 1770, the order for the delivery of possession to France, and the practice adverted to, which obtained during the intervening period, to which might be added the circumstance that sales of lands, which is evinced by almost every article of the royal regulation to be its object, had not been directed in Louisiana prior to the regulations of Morales.

That confirmations should follow the grants as necessary to perfect titles is an opinion which the general system of laws relating to the disposition of the King's domain would appear strongly to support. This power of confirmation would reside with the King—with him from whom the power to grant had proceeded, as a matter of course, unless he had placed it elsewhere; when he did place it elsewhere, the power to grant and the power to confirm were reposed in different hands. Prior to the royal regulation of 1754 the grants made by the sub-delegates required the confirmation of the King. By that regulation the power of confirmation was conferred upon the audiencias or governors, the one or the other, according to the circumstance of place. By the royal ordinance for the establishment of the intendants the power to grant was conferred upon the intendants, the power to confirm upon the superior junta. At an earlier period the power to confirm had been committed to the viceroys and presidents. When, therefore, a power to grant lands was conferred, the grants made in pursuance of such power, no other provision being made in relation to the confirmation of such grants, would not be binding as against the King until confirmed by him. This opinion derives strength from its analogy to the principle before referred to in relation to the laws made pursuant to an authority from the King, but which are not binding until they receive his approbation, except the contrary be expressed in the authority.

The imperfect promulgation of the law, which has been complained of, cannot, as it relates to the present case, affect the questions which have been decided. If ignorance of the law existed, however it might be a subject of regret that the opportunity of deriving the advantages which its terms would have afforded had been lost from such a cause, it would not be a ground of relief or of complaint, where, as in the present case, there had been neither labor nor money expended; or if the money expended for surveying fees, under a mistake of the law, could in any case be a ground of complaint, it would not in the present one, where the use of the timber is presumed to have been a full remuneration for this expenditure. The laws authorizing gratuitous grants require no obedience, prescribe no penalties which do not relate to the gratuity. They concern not him who does not wish to avail himself of the advantages they offer; and as to him who might have been disposed to avail himself of that advantage, had he known of their existence, they cannot be considered unjust. If this ignorance was a consequence of an imperfect publication, it can only be said that the monarch did not adopt means to extend sufficiently the information of the advantageous terms he proposed to his subjects to allow them to be acceded to universally. But if, from ignorance of the terms of the law, consequent upon its insufficient publication, or perhaps as arising from the want of a spirit of inquiry, labor had been expended in good faith with a view to the grant, but not sufficient to comply with the terms of the law, the claimant, under such circumstances, might merit the favor of the government. Whether in any such case he could claim the interposition of the court under the existing provisions of the act of Congress, it is not now necessary to determine.

With the aid of the new materials with which the court has been supplied by the researches of Mr. White, it has corrected with pleasure all that, upon more mature reflection, it believed to be errors in its former opinions, and reflects with satisfaction that those errors were not of a character to be prejudicial either to the claimants or to the United States. A decree must therefore go against the validity of the claim and the title of the petitioners.

LEDUC'S DEPOSITION.

Unconfirmed land claims.

ST. LOUIS, February 20, 1830.

MESSRS. CHARLESS & PASCHALL: In your valuable paper of the 16th instant, No. 413, is inserted a piece under the following title: "Legal opinion—court of the United States for the Missouri district—special court. Joseph Wherry and others, heirs of Mackey Wherry, vs. The United States. Peck, judge."

For the information of those who feel in anywise interested about the division of land claims in Missouri, and in order that a larger view of those cases may be laid before your readers, you will be pleased, in addition to said "legal opinion," to insert the testimony of M. P. Leduc, as reduced to writing during the trial above mentioned, a certified copy of which is hereto annexed.

MISSOURI DISTRICT, ss:

Be it remembered, that heretofore, to wit: at the January session in the year 1830, of the United States court for the Missouri district, under an act of Congress entitled "An act enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," Mary P. Leduc was offered as a witness on behalf of the petitioners, on the trial of the cause of the heirs of Mackey Wherry, deceased, vs. The United States; and the testimony of said Mary P. Leduc on said trial was recorded by the court in the words and figures following, to wit:

Mary P. Leduc, a witness offered on behalf of the petitioners, states that he was well acquainted with the handwriting of Antoine Soulard, late surveyor of Upper Louisiana, and also with the handwriting of Charles Dehault Delassus, late lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana; and that the handwriting in the body of the concession offered in evidence in this case is the handwriting of the said Soulard, and that the signature thereto is that of the said Delassus; and that he is also well acquainted with the handwriting of Peter Provenchere; and that the petition which appears above the signature of Mackey Wherry, and addressed to the said lieutenant governor, in reply to which the said concession is made, is the handwriting of the said Provenchere. Said witness also states that he arrived here in the year 1799, and that he found said Mackey Wherry in this country.

Mary P. Leduc being further examined in the case, says that he acted as translator to the board of commissioners for the adjustment of land titles during all the time that the said board sat as such commissioners, with the exception of about six weeks; that the concessions which were presented to said board were in the handwriting, some of Zenon Trudeau, some of Louis Labeaume, some of David Delanney, some of Pierre Provenchere, some of Charles Dehault Delassus, some of Jacques Clamorgan, some of said witness, and some of Antoine Soulard; but the greatest part of those seen by witness were in the handwriting of said Soulard; there were some others in the handwriting of persons not now recollected. That said witness was very well acquainted with the handwriting of said Louis Labeaume, David Delanney, Pierre Provenchere, Charles Dehault Delassus, Jacques Clamorgan, and Antoine Soulard, having frequently seen them all write; that he never saw Zenon Trudeau write, but knows his signature, having often seen it signed to his official acts. The concessions to which witness refers are subsequent to the year 1796, and inclusive of a part of that year; believes that there were some concessions made anterior to the year 1796 which are not recorded in the Livre Terrien, but is not certain; is sure that there cannot be many; and if there were any that were not recorded in Livre Terrien, they were made in the time of Zenon Trudeau, subsequent to the year 1792, inclusive. That witness is familiar with the records in the office of the recorder of land titles, having assisted Mr. Bates, the recorder, in discharging the duties of that office for many years, commencing with the year 1809, until the books and papers were delivered to the present recorder, about the year 1824. That witness himself transcribed the books of Livre Terrien, commencing in the year 1766, and ending in the year 1796 or 1797, except some few grants that had been already recorded; that he recorded them for Mr. Bates, the recorder. That witness was the private secretary of Lieutenant Governor Delassus as early as November, 1799, and continued to be so during the continuance of the Spanish government here; that during the same time Antoine Soulard was the surveyor of Upper Louisiana and after the change of government, continued to discharge the duties of said office down to the year 1806, under an appointment from General Wilkinson, as witness believes. That the Livre Terrien, of which witness has spoken, is the book in which the concessions were recorded verbatim, and signed by the lieutenant governors severally when they issued the same; and, as witness believes, who has compared a few of the concessions with those recorded in the books mentioned, that the concessions recorded are all recorded in full. That the Livre Terrien consists of books from No. 1 to No. 6, inclusive, and were formed of quires of paper sewed separately into a distinct book, each book being formed of about one quire; thinks the book of plats in the surveyor's office was formed pretty much in the same way; the books of the Livre Terrien were covered with pasteboard, and numbered on the back by said Soulard. Witness says that Lieutenant Governor Delassus continued to make concessions until the transfer of possession to the United States, in March, 1804; that he knows of but one concession made since that time, and that was made to Adam House for four hundred arpents, and was made to bear date before the transfer, and has been confirmed. That Mr. Delassus, after the change of government, continued in St. Louis about eight months, during which time applications were made to him for concessions, and sums of money offered to obtain them, and the applications rejected with indignation within the knowledge of witness. That said Delassus, after the time mentioned, left this for New Orleans, and that place for Pensacola, and from that place for Baton Rouge, where he exercised the office of governor; in which office he remained until that country was taken possession of by the Americans. That the said concession was made to Adam House in consequence of the recommendation of Zenon Trudeau, which recommendation and petition had been mislaid and not found until after the transfer, and is positive that none other was made after the transfer. Says that the said lieutenant governor continued to issue concessions after the notice of the intendant of the death of the assessor in the year 1802, and his order not to receive further petitions for lands down to the change of government, and down to this period continued to issue them about in the same proportion that he had issued them before the said notice. Cannot say what proportion of the concessions made after the said notice of the intendant were made to bear date anterior to the said notice, and in the years 1799, 1800, 1801, and 1802, but believes that about sixty were made to bear date during those years. Witness was absent from this place from May to December in the year 1803, and does not know that more concessions were issued towards the close of the Spanish government here than had been at any time before; that when petitions for lands were presented to the lieutenant governor he would file them, where they would generally remain for a considerable time, and they would then be given out to Mr. Soulard, or somebody else, to write the decrees of concession; and when he would sign them he would make them bear date at the times at which the petitions were presented, and would tell the applicants their best title was their axes and their hoes, and to go and cultivate. Says that the concessions in the sixth book of the Livre Terrien are principally surveys of town lots; that the fifth book of Livre Terrien contains concessions of a later date than the sixth, and includes, as witness believes, grants made during the period of Zenon Trudeau, that is to say, between the years of 1792 and 1797, inclusive, of which record appears to have been made; and that the concessions in said book are mostly in the handwriting of Clamorgan, and signed by the said Lieutenant Governor Trudeau. That said Clamorgan, Louis Labeaume, Charles Gratiòt, and Gabriel Cerre, who appear by the list of claims extracted from the Livre Terrien to have received large concessions, were men of very considerable wealth when witness arrived in this country, and all men with families, except Clamorgan; that Benito Vasquez, who by the said list appears also to have had a large concession, was a captain in the pay of the King, commanded this post in the absence of the lieutenant governor, and had a large family. Witness says that he is interested in the confirmation of a claim of a league square decreed against by this court at the present term, which was originally conceded to De Luzieres; that his interest is derived through Delassus, the late lieutenant governor;* that he is also interested in the confirmation of a claim of fifteen thousand arpents, conceded to him in his own name, of which a league square has been confirmed; that he had no family until the year 1802. States that Lieutenant Governor Trudeau when he left here went to Lower Louisiana, where he lived several years, and until he died. Witness further states, that on March 10, 1804, he was appointed by Captain Stoddard syndic of the town and vicinity of St. Louis, within four miles thereof; that on October 1, 1804, he was appointed by Governor Harrison judge of probate, recorder, and notary public of the city of St. Louis. On December 14, 1805, he was appointed translator of the board of commissioners. In the year 1807 he was appointed by Frederick Bates, acting governor of the Territory, ensign and adjutant of the 1st regiment of St. Louis, and quartermaster of the same; a justice of the peace and notary public in the same year; in 1810, by said Bates, to administer oaths of office. That commissions as justice of the peace, judge of probate, notary public, recorder and register of boatmen, were renewed by said Bates in the year 1812. That in the year 1812 he was appointed clerk of the court of common pleas. In 1815 he was appointed clerk of the county court. In February, 1815, was appointed clerk of the circuit court, which he resigned in 1818, and received from the judge presiding a note expressive of the great satisfaction with which the duties of said office had been discharged. That in the year 1818 the witness was elected a member of the assembly. In 1820, when Missouri became a State, he was also a member of the assembly. In 1822 he was again elected a member of the same body, and resigned. That in 1825 he was commissioned judge of probate for the county of St. Louis, by Frederick Bates, governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate. The court of probate being abolished, and the county court created, he was appointed the presiding justice of that court, and is now the presiding justice of said court.

Said witness further states that the distance between the Mississippi and the road to Prairie Catalan, mentioned in the said list extracted from the Livre Terrien, is about seven or eight arpents. Says that as translator to the board of commissioners it was his duty to read the concessions which were in the Spanish language, and the petitions which were in the French language, and that all the concessions which were presented to the board were read by him, and that he is satisfied that all those which were presented to the said board, and bore the signature of said Delassus and said Trudeau, did bear their genuine signature. Said witness further states that he recollects of the receipt by the lieutenant governor of the letter of the intendant of the 1st of December, 1802, announcing the death of the assessor, and that no further memorials for lands might be received and transmitted, but cannot state the time at which it was received, but thinks, from the mode of communication at that time, that the said letter could not reach this place in less than seven or eight months after its date. Neither knows of nor has heard of any sales of land having been made in Upper Louisiana by the Spanish government.

Said witness further states that the Livre Terrien contains one hundred and seventy-six concessions for tracts of land, surveys of eighty-five common field lots for the town of St. Louis, one hundred and thirty-three concessions for town lots in St. Louis and Carondelet—perhaps a few elsewhere, and surveys of town lots in St. Ferdinand thirty-five, and in Marais des Liard thirteen. That town lots and common field lots were generally occupied without any concessions; and that he neither knows of nor has heard of any concession in any other town or village, a dependency of the post of St. Louis, except perhaps a very few in Ste. Genevieve, and a concession for Portage de Sioux. That tracts of land were frequently occupied and improved without any concession; that the said Livre Terrien shows a continuation of grants from the year 1766 to 1797, without the intermission of any one year. Said witness further states that he arrived in Upper Louisiana, at New Madrid, in February, 1793, which continued to be his place of residence, occasional absence excepted, until he removed to St. Louis. Says that the jurisdiction of the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana for the purpose of conceding lands comprehended the posts of St. Louis, Ste. Genevieve, Cape Girardeau, and St. Charles. That there were also other posts in the said districts, and petitions were frequently presented to the commandants of those several districts, or to the commandants of the posts within them, but most generally the application was made to the lieutenant governor himself; when to the former, they were transmitted with their recommendations to the lieutenant governor at St. Louis, who made the concessions; and that the post of New Madrid was a distinct post for the purpose of making concessions. Says that he was acquainted with most of the persons whose names appear on three several plats of tracts of land, of which Louis Labeaume, Jacques de St. Vrain, and Albert Tison appear to be the assignees of the said persons; said plats being marked into tracts of 800 arpents, and making in all fifty-one tracts of eight hundred arpents each. That about the year 1800, and before and since, said assignors were generally villagers, with the exception of about six, and that many of them cultivated in the common field lots; says that some of the excepted numbers were farmers; that since some of those villagers have removed to their common field lots, particularly those of St. Ferdinand. Witness knew of but one person by the name of Pierre Provenchere, nor but one of Mackey Wherry, nor but one of Antoine Soulard, nor but one of James Mackey; all of whom have deceased. Witness says that he has an interest in the confirmation of the claim of Charles Dehault Delassus for thirty thousand arpents, said interest comprehending one-third of the whole claim.* Said witness Leduc being further examined on behalf of the United States, says that he was absent from St. Louis for six or seven months prior to the month of December, 1803, and that on his return he first heard of the treaty of concession to the United States.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR THE EXTENSION OF THE PRE-EMPTION LAW IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1831.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Illinois respectfully represents: That but a small number of the citizens of Illinois who settled on land claimed by the United States within this State prior to May 29, 1830, and who occupied and cultivated the same in the year 1829, have been able to avail themselves of any benefit under the provisions of an act passed on the 29th May, 1830, entitled "An act to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on public lands," because the plats and surveys of most of the land lying in the State, not heretofore offered for sale, have not been filed in any land office in the State, and because by the construction given to the act of Congress citizens residing in those districts of the country wherein the land had not been offered for sale previous to the passage of the law are required to avail themselves of its provisions previous to the day appointed for the commencement of the sale of lands in the district, including those on which the right of pre-emption is claimed, and not permitted to claim their right, however just, after that day. And those residing on lands which had not been offered for sale previous to the passage of the law cannot avail themselves of its provisions for the want of the plats and surveys. It is confidently believed that Congress intended by the passage of the law referred to to confer some benefit upon a numerous and respectable class of citizens of Illinois, yet it will be seen by the foregoing statement of facts that the beneficent designs of the government have been defeated without the fault of those citizens. It is confidently believed that there are at least one thousand persons residing in the State intended to have been benefited by the provisions of the law, and who are as much entitled thereto as any other citizens, who cannot avail themselves thereof because the plats and surveys of the lands on which they reside have not been filed, and it is feared that those plats and surveys will not be filed before the law will expire. It is therefore respectfully recommended to your honorable body to extend the provisions of the act of May 29, 1830, to every settler on lands claimed by the government prior to the 1st of January, 1831, who cultivated the same in the year 1830, and continue the law in force for twelve months longer, to the end that all who are or may be entitled to the benefits of the law may have an opportunity of availing themselves of the provisions thereof after the plats and surveys of the lands on which they reside may be filed in the proper office. All which is respectfully submitted.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 12, 1831.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs and legal representatives of Theophilus Collins, deceased, reported:

The petitioners state that said Theophilus Collins, deceased, in 1797, petitioned the Spanish government for a grant of twenty arpents in front, and the ordinary depth of forty arpents, on the Bayou Rapid, and was recommended by the Spanish commandant, which petition was never presented to the board of land commissioners, but casually discovered lately. They also state they have discovered another paper, or title to land, (not presented to the board of land commissioners,) viz: A petition and order of survey to their maternal grandfather, John Leonard, dated April 14, 1778, of twenty arpents in front and forty deep. Each of these claims is for 800 arpents—together, 1,600 arpents. They call on the justice, generosity, and magnanimity of Congress to confirm the above-mentioned claims.

The petitioners pretend to account for not bringing their claims before the board of commissioners for examination, by stating that, at the time the board sat, they were in an orphanage state, and unable to attend to their claims and rights. That their guardians were faithless to their trusts, and grossly neglected their interests, otherwise their claims would have been allowed, and in this manner attempt to make out an equitable claim. Now, this statement seems entirely gratuitous. It is not sustained by facts, but directly contradicted by the records of the land office. It appears that, at the very time they say their interests and rights were grossly neglected, five claims were presented to the board of commissioners in favor of the heirs and legal representatives of Theophilus Collins—three of which were confirmed to them in July, 1811, and the other two embraced in the report of the same commission of April 6, 1815, and confirmed in part, viz: to the extent the law allowed—they being each for a larger quantity than could be confirmed under the act of Congress.

The claim under John Leonard seems also to have received proper attention, for it appears that the commissioners confirmed four other claims in Opelousas to the legal representatives of John Leonard. There can be no doubt that these claims were not brought forward for the reason assigned, but because they were of no avail to the holders.

The petitioners have no shadow of legal claim to the tracts of land they ask to be confirmed. In the first-mentioned case, viz: that of Theophilus Collins, deceased, the only document is his petition. There is not the least evidence that the petition was ever presented to the governor, much less that the land was ever granted. The fact of its being found in the possession of Collins at his death is proof conclusive, for, if it had been presented, this paper would have been in the possession of the governor. It is absurd to talk about an intention to ask a petition for land, even if that were proven, as giving any legal or equitable claim to the land.

In the second case—that of John Leonard, deceased—this petition, and the direction of Galvez to the commandant to put the petitioner into possession, are the only documents produced; but it does not appear he was ever placed in possession, or that he took any subsequent steps to procure a title. This is not even alleged. The remarks in the above case apply equally to this. With regard to both, it should be remarked that there is in the General Land Office "an abstract of all the concessions and patented grants of land appertaining to the western district of the Territory of Orleans, recorded in the register kept by the French and Spanish governments for the province of Louisiana, from July 14, 1757, to June 30, 1803;" but neither of the above-mentioned claims are to be found in that abstract, which seems to the committee a conclusive fact against the said claims.

Supposing these papers genuine, and the facts as stated respecting the claims to be true, the petitioners have no claim under any principle of law, usage, or equity. The committee offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR FURTHER RELIEF TO PURCHASERS OF AND SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 18, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists respectfully represent: That among the settlers in the State of Alabama were a large class of citizens who purchased lands of the United States at the public sales in the years 1818 and 1819 at the extravagant prices at which they then were selling, and settled upon and have continued to cultivate a portion of them ever since. Shortly after those sales took place, cotton, the staple commodity of the country, fell greatly in value, which produced a corresponding depreciation in the value of land. So great was the distress produced by this state of things that Congress, at its session of 1820, passed a law for the relief of purchasers of public lands, giving them the right to relinquish a part and apply the payments made thereon to other parts retained, and to pay the residue of the debt due the government at a discount of thirty-seven and a half per cent., or to take a further credit of six or eight years (without interest) according to the instalments paid. The class of purchasers to whom your memorialists allude, believing that the terms then proposed were the best that ever would be offered by the government, and being desirous of securing their homes, adopted the second alternative and paid the whole price of the land they retained, by relinquishment, or in money at the discount. Since that period, Congress has continued to extend the time of payment to those who took further credit, until the last session of Congress, when a law passed giving to those who had paid three dollars and fifty cents an acre on their lands a patent without further payment, which embraced all lands the original price of which was fourteen dollars and upwards an acre, and for all lands below that price one dollar and twenty-five cents, or less, in addition to the sum already paid. Other classes of purchasers, who had paid one-twentieth or one-fourth of the purchase money, and suffered the land purchased to revert to the United States, have also been relieved by a law of Congress authorizing scrip to issue for the amount paid by them and forfeited to the government. Thus, as it is shown to your honorable body, this class of purchasers of land in this State are left wholly without relief. Nothing is more common than to see two settlers in the same neighborhood occupying lands of equal value, and which cost the same price at the sale, one of whom has paid the government twenty dollars per acre and the other only five, and so in proportion to the various prices at which the land sold. It is the duty of all good governments, and particularly of ours, which is based upon the just principles of equal rights and equal privileges, to hold out every incentive to good faith and punctuality among its citizens; but in the case before us punctuality and good faith, instead of being rewarded as a virtue, has, by the operations of these laws, actually been punished as a vice. Your memorialists cannot believe that this discrepancy in your laws and great injustice in their operation could have been intended by Congress, but that it is the result of accidental circumstances and from inadvertence. A view of all the laws to which we have referred will show that the statements made are incontrovertibly true. Your memorialists therefore pray that a law may be passed placing this class of purchasers upon an equal footing with others who have received such ample and generous relief; and, that the treasury may not be burdened by having to refund this money, your memorialists will be satisfied for this class of purchasers to be put upon the same footing with those who permitted the lands they had purchased to revert to the government, by granting them scrip receivable in payment for other lands which may hereafter be sold by the government. And your memorialists would further represent to your honorable body that much of the public lands of this State, on which individuals are settled, have once been surveyed, but no return of which has been made to the land office; that by the construction given to the act of Congress of 29th of May last, granting pre-emption rights to settlers on public lands, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the above class of citizens are deprived of the benefits contemplated by said act, and which your memorialists are constrained to believe was intended to extend equally to them. To remedy this evil, your memorialists would respectfully request your honorable body to pass a law extending the benefits above asked for; and, as in duty bound, your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their utmost endeavors to carry into effect the measures referred to in the foregoing memorial, and that the governor be requested to furnish our delegation in Congress with copies of the same.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A LAND OFFICE IN THE NORTHERN PART OF THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 24, 1831.

A JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly of the State of Indiana on the subject of a land office to be established in the northern part of said State.

Whereas many citizens in the northern part of this State, and emigrants thereto, labor under many and great disadvantages for want of a land office in their neighborhood; and whereas there is a part of the lands in the northern part of the State which are believed not to be attached to or included within any land district, whereby the first settlers of said district have been deprived of the benefit of the law of Congress granting pre-emption rights to actual settlers of unsold lands: Therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use all reasonable exertions to procure the establishment of a land office at the county seat of St. Joseph county, at or near the south bend of the St. Joseph river of Lake Michigan, or at such other point in the northern part of this State as to Congress shall seem reasonable.

And be it further resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR GRANTS OF LAND TO ESTABLISH ASYLUMS FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB, LUNATICS, AND OTHER OBJECTS OF CHARITY IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 24, 1831.

MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States on the subject of asylums, and for lands to construct them.

The general assembly of the State of Indiana, as your memorialists, desires to lay before your honorable body her views in regard to a subject not less addressed to the interest and humanity of all the States in the confederacy as a common benefaction than emphatically regarded by the constitution of this State as specifically demanding the interposition of her legislature. Though Indiana is bound by her charter to provide farms for asylums for the poor, infirm, and unfortunate within the pales of her jurisdiction, she would, without such injunction, rejoice at every successful effort, at home or abroad, tending to alleviate the distresses of this class of mankind. Under these convictions, she would respectfully submit to the Congress of the United States her requests that an act may be passed granting one section of land for each county in the State, to be selected by her, which, or its proceeds, shall be applied to erect asylums and provide farms, to receive and support all persons found to be objects of charity; and also granting two sections, to be located in like manner, to be applied to the benefit of the deaf and dumb within her entire boundaries; and also granting one section, in like manner, to erect and sustain a State lunatic asylum.

In making this appeal, the State of Indiana repudiates the idea of selfishness, and wishes to be understood as deserving only to take upon herself the responsibility of an agent empowered to minister consolation to all whom casualty or misadventure may render dependent on benevolent protection. This general assembly wishes not to stop at the limits of the request now made, but to express a hope that all the western States, having unsold lands within their jurisdiction, may apply for and succeed in obtaining similar grants to those applied for in this memorial. When this shall take place, the humane institutions they will foster may be considered as much the common property of the whole Union, and must be so in effect, as when they formed a part of the yet claimed general domain. The annual discharges of population from the old States to those recently formed must, in the nature of things, furnish many objects calling for the exertion of the trust estate confided to our own case in such a manner as to display a union of philanthropy. Indeed, when it is considered that the unacclimated are necessarily more exposed to casualties of every description and more liable to fall victims to the assaults of the seasons than the native or old settler, the request herein made may justly be viewed as tending only to induce a provision for ameliorating the condition of the distressed of the whole American family whose necessities require aid.

It is conclusive that the amount of lands asked for by the memorial cannot be more appropriately applied than to the objects referred to, and all the sympathies of our nature advocate the gift.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to obtain the objects of this memorial.

Resolved, That the governor forward copies of the same to each of our senators and representatives.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR AN AMENDMENT TO THE PRE-EMPTION LAWS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 24, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi respectfully represents: That it seems from the provisions of an act which passed your honorable body on the 29th day of May, 1829, entitled "An act to grant pre-emption rights to the settlers on the public lands," that it was the manifest intention of Congress to provide liberal and humane, but, at the same time, most just relief to the meritorious and industrious citizens of our country, whose enterprise and adventure, in exploring the public domains of the Union had led them as pioneers into the unsettled wilds of our vacant country, whereby the value of the public domain was not only developed, but greatly appreciated; yet the present general assembly are satisfied that the phraseology of said act does not provide ample relief for all the cases coming within the spirit of the relief intended, but that many cases of the meritorious character intended to be provided for by said act, under the construction given to said act by the officers of the general government, have been excluded from the beneficial operations of the same.

Your memorialists would further beg leave to present for the consideration of your honorable body the following cases as being fully entitled to the benefits of the aforementioned act, and which, by the officers of the land office in this State, have been declared not to be embraced or included in the provisions of the same, namely, where more than two persons have settled on the same quarter section of land, the said act be so amended as to entitle not only the first two actual settlers to the provisions of the said act, but that the third or fourth, or both, be allowed to locate a quarter section somewhere else in the same land district, on some unimproved and unappropriated land; and also that the aforesaid act be further amended, so as not to require the surveying of the land as a prior condition to proof of pre-emption right, according to the provisions of the aforesaid act.

Your memorialists would respectfully represent to your honorable body that the provisions of the said act, according to its prevailing construction, exclude many persons who, it is believed by your memorialists, were intended by Congress to be entitled to the benefit of the same; and that an amendment by your honorable body, embracing the cases above enumerated, and also to make some provision whereby the heirs or representatives of such persons as resided on and cultivated public domain in the year 1829, but who died prior to the passage of the law of last session of Congress, may obtain the benefits intended by said law, would be the means of affording to many poor and industrious persons a home for themselves and families. The premises considered, your memorialists pray your honorable body to pass a law amending the aforesaid act, so as to provide for the cases above enumerated; and your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representative requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of an act of Congress providing for the evils enumerated in the above memorial.

And be it further resolved, That the governor of this State be, and he is hereby, required to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution to each of our senators and representative in Congress.

A. M. SCOTT, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

RELATIVE TO LOCATIONS OF GRANTS OF LAND TO INDIANA FOR A ROAD FROM LAKE MICHIGAN TO THE OHIO RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 25, 1831.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, General Land Office, January 22, 1831.

SIR: In obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the United States bearing date the 14th instant, in the words following, to wit: "Resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be directed to communicate to the Senate copies of all the proceedings on file in his office relative to the location of lands in Indiana by the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of Indiana and the commissioner or agent appointed by the authority of the United States under the act entitled 'An act to authorize the State of Indiana to locate and make a road therein named;' also copies of all letters addressed to him relating to the subject of the location of the land in question, together with the decision of the late Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office on the subject," I herewith transmit copies of all the proceedings on file in this office relative to the location of the lands alluded to, with copies of all letters addressed to this office on the subject of the location of the land in question, together with the decision of the late Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office on the subject, as required by the resolution. Papers marked A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, and I.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great consideration, your most obedient servant,

LOGANSPORT, Indiana, September 14, 1830.

DEAR SIR: We send enclosed herewith a memorandum of the lands we have selected for the use of the Michigan road.

Very respectfully, &c.,

WILLIAM POLK,
SAMUEL HANNAH,
ABRAM McCLELLAN,
Commissioners of the Michigan Road.

The COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office.

The undersigned commissioners, appointed by an act of the general assembly of the State of Indiana approved January 13, 1830, which act was passed pursuant to the provisions of a treaty between the United States and the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians of the 16th of October, 1826, and of an act of Congress passed 2d of March, 1827, authorizing the general assemby of said State to locate and make a road from Lake Michigan to the Ohio river, and to apply the strip and sections of land by the aforesaid treaty ceded to the United States to making said road, have, by the authority vested in them by the general assembly of said State, selected the following sections and fractions of land for the use of said road:

In the district of lands offered for sale at Fort Wayne, Indiana, the sections and fractional sections numbered as follows, viz:

1st. Sections numbered 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 28, 29, 30, and 36, in township numbered 38 north, of range number 2 east, of the second principal meridian line.

2d. Sections numbered 13, 14, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27; the northeast, southeast, and northwest quarters of section number 1; and the north half of section number 36, in township numbered 37 north, of range No. 2 east, of the second principal meridian line.

3d. The southwest, northeast, and northwest quarters of section number 18; and sections 10, 11, 12, 30, and 31, in township number 37 north, of range number 3 east, of the second principal meridian line.

4th. The northeast, southeast, and southwest quarters of section number 10; and sections number 3, 9, 12, 13, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, in township number 37 north, of range number 4 east, of the second principal meridian line.

5th. Sections and fractional sections number 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, and 34, in township number 28 north, of range 5 east, of the second principal meridian line.

6th. Fractional sections number 35 and 36, in township number 29 north, of range number 5 east, of the second principal meridian line.

7th. Sections numbered 5, 6, 7, and 18, in township number 28 north, of range number 6 east, of the second principal meridian line

8th. Sections and fractional sections numbered 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34, in township number 29 north, of range number 6 east, of the second principal meridian line.

And in the district of lands offered for sale at Crawfordsville, Indiana, the sections numbered as follows, viz:

1st. Sections numbered 2, 3, 4, 10, 11, 20, and 30, in township number 37 north, of range number 1 west, of the second principal meridian line.

2d. Sections numbered 14, 15, 21, 22; the north half of section number 23; section number 25; the southeast quarter of section number 26; section number 28; the southeast, southwest, and northwest quarters of section number 34; and the south half of section 35, in township number 38 north, of range number 1 west, of the second principal meridian line.

3d. Sections numbered 15, 20, 22, 23, 24, 30, and 31, in township number 38 north, of range number 1 east, of the second principal meridian line.

4th. Sections numbered 5, 18, 29, and 32, in township number 37 north, of range number 1 east, of the second principal meridian line.

5th. Sections numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 13, 17, 18; the south half of section number 19; and sections number 24, 25, and 28, in township number 37 north, of range number 2 west, of the second principal meridian line.

6th. Section numbered 36, in township number 38 north, of range number 2 west, of the second principal meridian line.

7th. Sections numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 13, 14; and the west half of section number 24, in township number 37 north, of range number 3 west, of the second principal meridian line.

8th. Sections numbered 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, in township number 38 north, of range number 4 west, of the second principal meridian line.

Given under our hands this 14th day of September, A. D. 1830.

ABRAM McCLELLAN,
WILLIAM POLK,
SAMUEL HANNAH,
Commissioners of the Michigan Road.

Agreeably to instructions from the Department of War of the United States, I accompanied the commissioners of the State of Indiana and fully approve the selections of the above sections of land for the purpose above expressed.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 5, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a sketch exhibiting the several Indian cessions in the northern part of the State of Indiana.

By the first article of the Pottawatomie treaty of the 16th October, 1826, (Land Laws, p. 331,) the tracts colored blue on that sketch were ceded to the United States.

By the second article of the same treaty the Indians "cede to the United States a strip of land commencing at Lake Michigan and running thence to the Wabash river, one hundred feet wide, for a road; and also one section of good land contiguous to the said road for each mile of the same; and also for each mile of a road from the termination thereof, through Indianapolis, to the Ohio river, for the purpose of making a road aforesaid from Lake Michigan, by the way of Indianapolis, to some convenient point on the Ohio river." By the same article it was also provided that the general assembly of Indiana should have the right to locate the road, apply the said sections, or the proceeds thereof, to the making of the same or any part thereof, and that the grant should be at their sole disposal; but by the ratification of this treaty this provision was rejected, although not so noted in the Land Laws.—(See Appendix to Laws of United States, 2d session 19th Congress, p. 52.) By the act of Congress approved on the 2d of March, 1827, (Land Laws, p. 932,) the general assemby of Indiana were authorized to locate and make the road above specified, and apply the strip of land and sections ceded for that purpose, or the proceeds thereof, to the making of the same, and the grant was placed at their sole disposal.

It does appear to this office that the second article was intended to make a cession of lands separate and distinct from those designated in the first article of the same treaty; that the quantity thus ceded is a strip of one hundred feet wide for the length that the road may run through the lands belonging to the Indians, and one section of land for each mile of the road from Lake Michigan, through Indianapolis, to the Ohio river.

Before this quantity can be ascertained, it appears to me that the road must be actually laid out, so as to ascertain its course and length, and the number of sections ceded by the treaty and vested in the State by the act of 1827, that when the road is so laid out the section of land for each mile it may run through the Indian country must be located, agreeably to the words of the treaty, "contiguous to the road," and that the residue of the lands thus ceded must be taken out of the lands belonging to the Indians, and not out of the lands ceded to the United States for another purpose, by the first article of that treaty, or by any other treaty.

It is not known to this office that the road has been laid out and surveyed, and the subject is now brought before the Secretary for his decision in consequence of the receipt of the enclosed communication from the commissioners appointed by the State of Indiana to select the lands granted for the road. I have designated on the sketch by shading the townships in which they propose to make the selections, by which it will be perceived that they do not lay in a direct line from the lake to Indianapolis; that part of the selections are in the tracts ceded by the 1st article of the treaty, and that the residue are embraced by the Chicago cession of 1821.

The list has not been critically compared with the plats in the office, but it is known that there will be objection to the approval of some of the selections, in addition to the general one, which is, that they may include lands liable to entry under the pre-emption law of the 29th of May last.

With great respect,

JOHN M. MOORE, Acting Commissioner.

Hon. S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

C.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 11, 1830.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 14th ultimo, covering a list of the lands selected by you for the road between Lake Michigan and the Ohio river, through Indianapolis, referred to in the second article of the Pottawatomie treaty of the 16th of October, 1826, and the act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1827, was duly received, and submitted to the consideration of the Secretary of the Treasury on the 5th instant, by a letter, of which the paper marked A, herewith enclosed, is a copy; and you will perceive on reference to the answer of the Secretary, dated the 9th instant, of which the paper marked B is a copy, that he approves of the views of this office upon the subject.

From these papers you will perceive that the second article of the treaty is considered as making a separate and distinct cession of lands for the purpose of making the road; that the quantity thus ceded is equal to a strip of one hundred feet wide for the length of the road through the Indian country, and one section of land for every mile of the road, as actually laid out, between the lake and the Ohio river, through Indianapolis; that the selection of one section of every mile through the Indian country must be "contiguous to the road;" that the remainder of the quantity to which the State may be entitled must be taken out of the Indian lands; and that none of the lands ceded to the United States by the first article of that treaty, or by any other treaty, are liable to be located for the use of that road. The selections, therefore, cannot be approved; and the land officers at Fort Wayne and Crawfordsville have been instructed to offer the tracts at the public sales in November next.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

JOHN M. MOORE, Acting Commissioner.

WILLIAM POLK, SAMUEL HANNAH, and ABRAM MCCLELLAN, Esqs.,
Commissioners of the Michigan Road, Logansport, Indiana.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 11, 1830.

GENTLEMEN: The road commissioners of the State of Indiana having forwarded to this office a list of certain tracts situate within the townships to be sold at your office during the next month, which they have selected for the Michigan and Ohio road, I have to inform you that it has been decided that the lands ceded by the second article of the Pottawatomie treaty of 1826, for making that road, form an entirely separate and distinct cession; and that no lands ceded to the United States by the first article of that treaty, or by any other treaty, are liable to be entered under the provisions of that article, or of the act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1827.—(Land Laws, p. 932.) The selections are therefore rejected, and you are advised of the fact in order that you may not withhold them from the public sales in case the commissioners should have furnished you with a list of them and requested their suspension from the sales.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

J. M. MOORE, Acting Commissioner.

INDIAN AGENCY, Eel River, November 8, 1830.

DEAR SIR: I regret that I am compelled, by a sense of my duty to the United States and to the Indians for whom I am agent, to trouble you with a letter at this time; but having been informed that the land department had directed the land officers at Fort Wayne and Crawfordsville to sell certain sections of land that were selected by commissioners of the State of Indiana, under the provisions of a treaty with the Pottawatomie Indians of October 16, 1826, and of an act of Congress of 1827, to be applied by said State to the construction of a road from Lake Michigan to the Ohio river, and have directed other lands to be taken out of that still owned by the Indians, I feel bound to state to you, and through you to the President, that at the time of negotiating this treaty these Indians did not understand that their land, not embraced within the bounds of the tract then ceded, would be required to construct this road, except where the road passed through the country retained by them, and that they understood the sections required to construct the road through the ceded land would be taken therefrom precisely in the manner in which the commissioners have selected it. This was also my understanding of this treaty at the time it was made. Should the United States cause these lands to be sold, and the State of Indiana be authorized to take the best lands now owned by these Indians, it will greatly disappoint and distress them. A large tract of country was purchased from these same Indians in September, 1828. This contemplated road passes through this purchase also, and this last-mentioned purchase greatly diminishes the quantity of land still belonging to the Indians. A portion of this last-mentioned purchase had not been surveyed by the United States, and the State commissioners have surveyed one township, and have selected it. This township is not now offered for sale, and as it has been generally understood that certain sections of land within the townships now offered belong to the State, few, if any, of them will be sold. I would therefore earnestly, but respectfully, request that this matter be examined, and, if practicable, that the State should retain the land thus selected, and not be driven to the necessity of distressing these Indians, many of whom would now consent to sell this country and remove west. Two or at most four years may find Indiana clear of these Pottawatomies, provided a tender course is pursued towards them. I can therefore but express a hope that this will be done.

I am, dear sir, with great respect, &c.,

JOHN TIPTON, Indian Agent.

HON. E. HAYWARD, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

F.

To Andrew Jackson, President of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of the State of Indiana, some of whom are undertakers on the Michigan road, would respectfully represent: That they have reason to fear delay and great injury will be occasioned by instructions from the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office to the land offices at Crawfordsville and Fort Wayne, dated the 11th of October last, and directing those officers to sell certain sections of lands lying within townships now offered for sale, which sections have been selected by commissioners of the State of Indiana, to be applied to the construction of a road from Lake Michigan to the Ohio river, agreeably to the provisions of a treaty between commissioners of the United States and the Pottawatomie Indians of October 16, 1826, and of an act of Congress of March 2, 1827.

Your memorialists admit that the treaty will bear the construction given to it by the Acting Commissioner, but they are assured that these Indians did not so understand it at the time it was negotiated, nor at any time since have they expected that land would be taken from the country retained by them to construct a road beyond their boundary line, but that the land to construct the road through the ceded lands would be taken therefrom. This also appears to be the construction given to the treaty and act of Congress by the State commissioners who have made these selections. These Indians sold a large tract of country to the United States in September, 1828, which greatly diminishes the quantity of good land still retained by them, and we have reason to believe that most or all of the land owned by them within this State could now be purchased, if a treaty were authorized to be held with them, before the State of Indiana is compelled to enter upon and locate their choicest lands for this road, which would greatly distress them, and there is a strong probability that the remaining lands would cost the United States as much or more after as before the selection of those lands.

We understand that the whole number of sections selected within the townships now offered for sale is less than one hundred; and we have heard that at the Crawfordsville sales but few of those sections were sold; and we have reason to expect a similar result at the Fort Wayne sales.

At the last session of the general assembly of Indiana an act was passed appointing a superintendent, who was authorized to sell out contracts for the construction of this road, the undertakers to receive a certificate of the amount due to them for work performed on the road. These certificates or scrip are redeemable after these lands are selected and sold by the State; and as the selections are now made, and will be reported to the legislature in next month, if the lands are sold by the United States, and these contractors compelled to wait another year for their money, the consequences to them will be ruinous.

We therefore earnestly request that the above-mentioned instructions from the acting commissioner may be rescinded, so far as respects the lands remaining unsold, and that a treaty would be authorized with the Pottawatomie Indians as early within the next year as practicable. Should this course be adopted, we entertain no doubt that this land question will be settled advantageously and to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

HORACE BASSETT and 106 others.

INDIANAPOLIS, Indiana, July 8, 1830.

SIR: Being required by an act of the last general assembly of the State of Indiana "to open a correspondence and negotiation with the proper authorities of the general government, and ascertain as nearly as possible when and how the lands donated by treaty and an act of Congress to the State of Indiana to open a road are to be surveyed, and whether they are to be surveyed by the State of Indiana or the general government, and to urge the immediate survey of the same by the general government, and take all such other steps and measures necessary to cause the same to be surveyed and made ready for market on or before the first Monday of December, 1830," I did, in obedience to said laws, address you a letter on the 10th of February, 1830, calling your attention to the aforementioned subject, and requesting a compliance on the part of the United States government with the wishes of the legislature of the State of Indiana relative to the said survey; but, after waiting with impatience for several months for a reply, I am constrained to inform you that none has come to hand.

Supposing that the mail may have miscarried my first communication on its way to Washington city, I have deemed it most proper to address you again.

You will perceive by the above quotation from the act itself, that it is the desire of the State of Indiana that the lands which were granted by the treaty of 1826, by the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians, to make a road from Lake Michigan to the Ohio river, may be surveyed by the authority of the general government. The route of said road has been established, and the State is anxious to procure a survey of the said lands by the United States as soon as practicable, in order that our next legislature may offer them for sale. The facility, despatch, and accuracy with which the United States may survey these lands lead us to hope that the State will be relieved from the burden and trouble of the task. A board of commissioners, whose duty it is to proceed immediately, upon the notification of the governor, to the selection of these lands, is now awaiting the determination of the United States government on this matter. We are now the more solicitous for a speedy adjustment of the subject since the country is already offered for sale by the United States, out of which selections of land will doubtless be made to a great extent by this State, under the authority of said treaty; for it is of much consequence to the State of Indiana that the whole of the aforesaid lands should be surveyed and selected prior to the United States sales ordered the ensuing fall. Should the country which is now offered for sale be actually sold before our treaty lands are surveyed and selected, it may occasion much difficulty between the conflicting claims of the United States, or their purchasers, and those of the State to the same lands. After surveying the lands in question, if the United States government wishes to have any agency in their selection, she can do so by forthwith sending a commissioner or agent to act in concert with the commissioners of Indiana now ready to commence operations; but for the want of the decision of the United States government, whether she will send a surveyor to survey the said lands, or whether they must be surveyed by the State, an early reply will be expected. I may add here, as a reason for the solicitude herein expressed, that contracts will be made in a few days for improving said road, upon the faith that the lands in question will be surveyed this summer, and selected and prepared for sale by the first Monday of December next.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

J. BROWN RAY.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

INDIANAPOLIS, Indiana, November 1, 1830.

SIR: Circumstances make it necessary for me to ask you to inform me whether or not you received two letters from me any time within the past year relative to the surveying and selection of lands in this State, granted by treaty to make a road from Lake Michigan to the Ohio river, and when they were received.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. BROWN RAY.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 28, 1830.

SIR: I take the liberty of enclosing you a letter from a highly respectable gentleman of Indiana. The subject of which it treats is one of considerable interest to many of the citizens of Indiana, and more particularly so to those who have taken contracts on the Michigan road.

I shall be much pleased to have your views on this subject.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

R. BOON.

COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office.

AURORA, December 11, 1830.

SIR: As you are now connected with the administration of the national government, I take the liberty to address you on the subject of the Michigan road lands. This is a subject on which I have heretofore taken much interest, and should much regret that any measure should be adopted that would impede the progress of the work or affect the interest of the contractors. I have just returned from the Wabash country, and was shown the directions of the Treasury Department to the land office at Crawfordsville. It appears to me that the decision of the acting land commissioner is founded in an error, arising from a supposition that the State of Indiana claims the land under the article of the Indian treaty ceding the lands. The State claims the land by virtue of the act of Congress, and not by that treaty, as the article alluded to was rejected by the Senate. Congress could not have intended to donate to the State of Indiana lands of which the government had not the title. The State commissioners selected the land in good faith, in view of the act of Congress, and at the expense of the State. In this view of the subject, should the proper department reverse its order for selling the selected land, all difficulties would be removed, as well as all cause of censure or complaint. The State of Indiana and the road contractors would be reconciled. This I am confident could work no injury to the revenue. The government undoubtedly anticipate a purchase of all the remaining Indian lands, and even all the road lands to be taken from what is now recognized as Indian lands; the balance, I apprehend, would cost the government as much and perhaps more than the whole. The Indians would be irritated and disappointed, and those who are disposed to prevent the views of the government with respect to that class of people within our territories from being carried into effect would take advantage of it.

These suggestions are not made with any unfriendly feelings towards the administration or either department, but from a wish that all possible difficulties might be avoided.

I have lately had an opportunity to learn the present situation of the Indians in this State. They are now prepared to sell all their land, and remove west. I sincerely hope the favorable moment will not be lost. I have written my views on the subject to Colonel Piper. Whoever wishes well to the State of Indiana and the Indians will aid the government in their views of a removal of that degraded people.

Please to accept this as written in the spirit of friendship, from, dear sir, your obedient servant,

HORACE BASSETT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 25, 1831.

A JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly relative to the purchasers of public lands.

Whereas the liberal policy of the general government extending relief to purchasers of the public lands in this and the western and southwestern States has met with the approbation of the several communities interested in such relief, and has probably been attended with no loss to the national treasury:

Believing that a continuance of the same beneficent indulgence is called for by humanity and tenderness towards large numbers of our unfortunate citizens: Therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their exertions to continue for years longer the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers of public lands, and for the suppression of fraudulent practices at the sale of public lands of the United States," approved March 31, 1830.

Resolved, further, That our representatives and senators endeavor to procure the passage of a law authorizing every person indebted to the general government for the purchase of land under the credit system, to relinquish such part of his purchase as will enable the debtor to close his accounts with the United States, and that such debtor be allowed thirty-seven and a half per cent. discount on the original purchase money for the land retained, and be allowed a full credit on the balance due for the amount paid at the time of purchase.

Resolved, That the governor be requested forthwith to cause copies of the preceding resolution to be immediately forwarded to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

ISAAC HOWK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
MILTON STAPP, President of the Senate.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 26, 1831.

Mr. Poindexter, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and accompanying documents of Joseph Vidal, reported:

The petitioner claims three tracts of land, situated in the State of Mississippi, by virtue of orders or warrants of survey, bearing date while the Spanish government existed, in what was called the district of Natchez—one in the name of Margaretta Thompson, for one thousand arpents; one in the name of Jacintha Gallagher, for one thousand arpents; and one in the name of Thomas Thompson, for eight hundred arpents. The petitioner states that at the time the board of commissioners appointed to adjust land titles was in session he and his family were in Europe, which prevented the exhibition of the proofs necessary to authorize a confirmation of his claims; wherefore he now prays the passage of an act for that purpose.

It appears, from a certified copy of the record kept by the board of commissioners, that on the 26th day of March, 1806, Margaretta Thompson claimed one thousand arpents, situated on the waters of the Bayou Pierre, in Claiborne county, by virtue of a Spanish patent dated the 2d day of December, 1797, founded on a warrant or order of survey dated the 15th day of January, 1795.

The representatives of Jacintha Vidal claimed one thousand arpents on the same waters, by virtue of a Spanish patent to Jacintha Gallagher, dated the 2d day of December, 1797, founded on a warrant or order of survey dated the 25th of March, 1794.

About the same time Thomas Thompson claimed eight hundred arpents, situated on the same waters, and produced in support of his claim a Spanish patent dated the 2d day of December, 1797, founded on a warrant or order of survey dated the — day of March, 1795.

The board disallowed these claims for the want of sufficient evidence and on suspicion of their being antedated.

Such documents are on file as are mentioned in minutes from the record of the board of commissioners.

George Overaker swears that he knew Thomas Thompson in the district of Natchez in the year 1793; knows that he resided there until the year 1802 or 1803, when he died; does not doubt he was a resident there on the 27th day of October, 1795. He swears the same in regard to Jacintha Gallagher, except that she died in 1801. He also swears that he knew Margaretta Gallagher, and believes she resided in that district from 1795 until 1801.

Lewis Evans swears that what George Overaker has stated is true, except that Thomas Thompson died in 1804.

John Minor swears that in 1790 or 1791 he was acquainted with Thomas Thompson and Jacintha and Margaretta Gallagher in the district of Natchez, where they continued to live until about the year 1800.

The Hon. T. H. Williams, late of the Senate, who was a member of the board of commissioners, states that the petitioner was in Spain at the time the board was in session, and did not, it is believed, return to the Mississippi Territory until after its dissolution.

Mr. Williams further states that an opinion having prevailed that the Spanish government had issued a number of antedated titles to lands in the Mississippi Territory, Congress by the third section of the act passed the 27th of March, 1804, (see L. L., p. 259,) authorized the commissioners to lay the claimants under a rule to produce other evidence than the grant itself in support of their titles. It must be remembered that, by the act of the 3d of March, 1803, (see L. L., p. 254,) every person on that day occupying a tract of land without title was allowed a right of pre-emption. These squatters, as they are called, frequently settled on lands granted by the Spanish government, and must of course feel interested in defeating them. Vidal's claims were impeached, and it is probable they were persons settled on the lands he claimed. The commissioners in such cases laid the parties under a rule to prove the time the surveys were made. If they refused to comply with this order, (and most of them did refuse or neglect to do so,) the commissioners were "not satisfied" that the grants were genuine.

The first act for adjusting titles to lands in the Mississippi Territory was passed the 3d of March, 1803, (see L. L., p. 254.) The first section was intended to confirm titles to lands inhabited and cultivated on the 27th of October, 1795, and for which the claimant held British or Spanish warrants or orders of survey bearing date prior to that period. The board was not furnished with proof of habitation and cultivation on that day.

By the fourth section of an act passed the 31st of March, 1808, (see L. L., p. 264,) the registers of the land offices east and west of Pearl river were required to report to the Secretary of the Treasury all the claims of certain persons to lands in the Mississippi Territory, founded on British or Spanish warrants or orders of survey granted prior to the 27th of November, 1795, not confirmed by former laws. The reports made in pursuance of this provision were laid before Congress; and on the 30th June, 1812, an act was passed (see L. L., p. 268) confirming to every person, or the legal representative of every person, claiming lands in the Mississippi Territory by virtue of a British or Spanish warrant or order of survey granted prior to the 27th of October, 1795, and who were on that day resident in that district of country. By this act proof of habitation and cultivation of the land claimed is not deemed indispensable; and no person, whatever might have been the extent of his claim, was confirmed in his title to a greater quantity of land than 640 acres.

The proof that the persons under whom the petitioner claims were residents in the district of Natchez on the 27th day of November, 1795, is deemed by the committee satisfactory; nor have they reason to doubt the genuineness of the warrants or orders of survey.

The charge of antedating appears not to be well founded. If a fraud of this kind had been attempted, it is a little extraordinary that an earlier day had not been assumed, particularly in regard to the patents. These bear date subsequent to the treaty, though about the time the surrender of the country took place. It is not contended that the instruments called patents possess complete validity; yet to say the Spanish officers who granted them were actuated by criminal motives would be to intimate a total want of circumspection on their part It would have been just as easy for them to have used a date when their jurisdiction could not be questioned as any other.

Joseph Vidal furnishes no proof of his having any claim to the lands in question. It has been stated he was the husband of Jacintha Vidal, and that he is her legal representative.

A bill is herewith reported for the relief of the legal representatives of the persons in whose right the petitioner claims.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR A GRADUATION OF THE PRICE OF PUBLIC LANDS AND FOR FURTHER RELIEF TO PURCHASERS OF AND SETTLERS THEREON.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 26, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Alabama respectfully showeth: That by the operations of the act of May 29, 1830, entitled an act to grant pre-emption rights to the settlers on public lands, many of the meritorious citizens who had settled on the public lands in this State have been excluded from participating in its benefits. By the second section of this act only two persons who had settled on the same quarter section of land are entitled to the right of pre-emption, and no provision made for other persons who may have settled on the same. A number of cases have occurred where persons have settled on public lands long anterior to the year 1829, and when they had not been surveyed, so that it was impossible to determine whether more than two would be embraced in the same quarter section. Those persons, equally meritorious with any other description of settlers, have been compelled to give up their improvements without any equivalent, and are entirely excluded from all participation in the munificence and liberality designed by the general government, while others, who happened to cultivate in the year 1829, are not so excluded.

Your memorialists, therefore, believe that in justice these individuals ought to be provided for; they humbly desire and request that Congress will pass an act allowing them the right to enter other lands in lieu of those on which they had settled. Your memorialists would further represent that a large and respectable portion of the inhabitants upon the public lands, and particularly those who were on valuable lands, sold out their claims when said lands were advertised for sale for fear they would be unable to purchase and settle upon lands less valuable previous to the passage of the act granting pre-emption privileges, and now both seller and buyer of such claims are barred from the advantages of said act. Cases of this kind your memorialists believe to be extremely hard when they feel assured that it was the intention of the general government to aid and assist all the honest citizens of this State in the acquisition of homes who had located themselves upon the public lands. Your memorialists further represent that in many instances persons who had made settlements before the year 1829 had rented or leased portions of their improvements to recent emigrants or settlers, with a motive to afford them facilities to make permanent locations in the country, and by the construction given by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the pre-emption right is given to the lessee. Your memorialists further represent that it is frequently the case that persons have settled on fractional quarter sections when such fractional quarter sections do not contain much more than half the quantity of a full quarter section. It is also not uncommon for persons to settle on fractions which do not contain near one hundred and sixty acres. Those persons seem not to be provided for. Your memorialists would further represent that where persons had happened to rent out their improvements in the first of the year 1830, by such renting they were not in the actual possession at the passage of the aforesaid act. They have been denied by the register the privilege of pre-emption right. This construction and practice of the officers of the land office your memorialists believe to be contrary to the meaning of the act of Congress. Your memorialists would further represent that there still remains in this State a quantity of lands which will not be disposed of by any of the sales which have been ordered during the present year, and also a considerable quantity which have not yet been surveyed, on which numerous settlements have been made by enterprising and industrious citizens, who it is desired may be protected from the avarice and schemes of a horde of speculators who still infest the country by being permitted to enter their homes at the price fixed by the general government. Your memorialists further represent, for the consideration of your honorable body, that there are many valuable and worthy citizens of Alabama who have relinquished their homes on account of their not being able to pay the government the price now required by law; and unless some relief be granted them their homes will be forfeited by the act of last Congress. They would therefore respectfully ask your honorable body to permit such of those who have relinquished as much as two quarter sections or less to re-enter the same amount, or a less quantity, in any legal subdivision, (provided, in all cases, such persons have retained possession of the same,) at seventy-five cents per acre. Your memorialists would further represent that at the sales of public lands upon which relief has been extended to the purchasers of high priced lands, the poor lands invariably sold at a price as much above the true value thereof as the most valuable lands in the country. The wealthy portion of our citizens generally purchased the rich lands, and those who purchased at the price of fourteen dollars and upwards per acre have been allowed a patent for the sum already paid, while those who purchased at a less price have yet to pay the government a large amount of money before they can become freeholders; many of them are entirely unable to do so, when in fact they have paid as much for their lands, agreeably to the quality of soil and intrinsic value, as those who purchased at fourteen dollars and upwards per acre; and further, your memorialists cannot see why the particular number "fourteen" should be the standard for fixing the price at which patents shall be granted in preference to any other number.

Your memorialists can with safety represent to your honorable body that it is frequently the case that lands have been sold from five to ten dollars per acre, and have since been forfeited, which would not now sell for the minimum price if put up at auction. Under circumstances of this kind your memorialists would humbly request of your honorable body that all holders of certificates should have patents granted them. Your memorialists would further represent, for the consideration of your honorable body, the propriety of graduating the price of public lands which have heretofore been offered, as follows: Say, all lands which have been offered and would not sell for the minimum price twelve months thereafter should be subject to entry at seventy-five cents per acre, two years thereafter at fifty cents per acre, and so in proportion to time, as the wisdom of your honorable body may suggest. And your memorialists would further suggest to your honorable body the expediency of permitting the inhabitants of Alabama to enter the public lands which have heretofore been offered for sale and not sold at the minimum price, by subdividing quarter sections into tracts of forty acres. This last proposition your memorialists believe to be of vital importance to a large portion of citizens in this State. Your memorialists cannot close this application to your honorable body for relief without renewing the request that all persons that have paid the purchase money for lands bought by them and paid for without the deduction of 37½ per cent. on the sum paid, may be allowed the amount overpaid in scrip, which shall be receivable in any of the land offices in this State. And your memorialists would further represent that in this State there are a large number of individuals wholly unable to purchase over forty acres of land at the minimum price, the necessary consequence of which is that such individuals are settled on the poorest kind of land, which, not affording sufficient inducements for any one to purchase, give to them temporary homes. The continuance of this class of individuals in such situation is in opposition to the future prosperity of the country, and must, doubtless, be contrary to that liberal policy which should influence all governments. Your memorialists would therefore suggest to your honorable body the policy of granting to such individuals the right to enter forty acres of any land once offered for sale and now liable to entry without any other expense than the office fees. Your memorialists further pray that the act of Congress passed March 31, 1830, entitled "An act to grant relief to purchasers of public lands, so far as relates to granting scrip on forfeited land stock," may be extended to a longer period, owing to the large number of citizens living in remote sections of the country from the land office being unable to avail themselves of the relief granted by the before recited act. Your memorialists respectfully submit the several foregoing items of relief to the wisdom of your honorable body, and humbly trust that their merits will be thoroughly investigated, and, as in duty bound, they will ever pray.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed and our representatives requested to use their greatest exertions to procure the passage of a law embracing the several provisions contemplated in the foregoing memorial; and that his excellency the governor be requested to transmit to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of our senators and representatives in Congress, a copy of this memorial.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A NEW LAND OFFICE IN THE NORTHERN PART OF THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 31, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Illinois represents: That the country on the Vermilion river in said State is rapidly populating from almost every State in the Union, and great sales of lands have been recently made in that section, in consequence of which a considerable revenue has accrued to government.

The land office at Palestine is situate on the line dividing townships six and seven, thirty-six miles from the base line, the south boundary of said land district, and the lands are now in market as high as the line dividing townships twenty-one and twenty-two, ninety miles on a straight line north of the said land office; and the land is surveyed and run off into sections, ready for sale, as high as the line dividing townships twenty-seven and twenty-eight, one hundred and twenty-eight miles from the present office.

The distance purchasers have to travel from the north to buy land is considered an unreasonable requisition by government, and a subject of serious complaint in that section. When the grievance shall be duly considered, and the fact generally known that so large sums of money have been paid and will continue to be paid for the lands in this section of our State, it is not to be presumed that the same state of things can in justice be continued; and the good citizens of the State and others interested ask government to establish a new land office at or near Danville, in Vermilion county, dividing the Palestine district, or at such other place as may be considered right, to accommodate the northern section of the State.

It must be conceded that should the arrangement take place government would facilitate and greatly increase the sale of those lands; and the additional expenses considered cannot be set up as a sufficient objection.

The subject is respectfully submitted to the consideration of Congress.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 1, 1831.

Mr. Draper, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the widow and heirs of Pedro Guedry, and of Francis Daigre, reported:

That the petitioner Mary Landry, widow of Pedro Guedry, states that in the year 1792 Pedro Guedry, her husband, obtained a complete Spanish title by grant from the Baron de Carondelet, consisting of six arpents and twenty fathoms front on the Mississippi river, by forty arpents in depth, at the distance of about four miles above the mouth of the Manchac; that her husband and herself have occupied the same since 1792 until the present time, and that she was ignorant of the laws requiring the title to be recorded in the land office at St. Helena district court-house; and prays that she may be permitted to enter her claim for four arpents and a half in front and forty arpents in depth, with the register and receiver of the land office at St. Helena court-house, to revive the claim of the petitioner to the said land. The petition of Francis Daigre claims the residue of the said land by purchase; he has not, however, exhibited a regular chain of transfers; but inasmuch as the petitioner Mary Landry only claims four and one-half arpents in front of the said land, and the petitioner Francis Daigre having proved by affidavits his right to the remainder, (the Spanish grant having been produced and continued possession proved,) the committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable; and as they claim parts of the same tract of land, they have reported a bill for their joint relief.

ADVERSE TO CLAIM OF A REVOLUTIONARY OFFICER FOR LAND, A WARRANT FOR WHICH HAD BEEN ISSUED AND LOCATED BY ANOTHER PERSON.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 1, 1831.

Mr. Sterigere, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of B. J. V. Valkenburgh, reported:

That it appears from the statement of the petitioner and the records of the land office, that the petitioner, as an officer and soldier of the revolution, was entitled to two hundred acres of bounty land. It appears from the land office that a warrant, No. 2255, was issued for said two hundred acres of land, and located for the holder, Joseph Hardy, by Jones Stanbury, agreeably to the act of 1796.

The petitioner declares that he never authorized the location of Mr. Joseph Hardy or Mr. Stanbury, and prays for relief. It is utterly impossible at this distance of time to ascertain whether Mr. Hardy or Stanbury properly obtained possession of the above-mentioned warrant. It appears altogether improbable that they could have obtained possession of the warrant without the consent or transfer of the petitioner or his agents. Nor is it probable that the Secretary of the Treasury would have permitted an illegal location of this land. The committee think the petitioner must seek his remedy against Mr. Hardy, Mr. Stanbury, or the holders of this land he claims, in the courts of law. He can have no claim on the government, as it appears the warrant was legally located by the holder. Several applications have been made for relief in like cases, none of which have been granted.

The committee think the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

ON AUTHORIZING THE STATE OF ILLINOIS TO SELL THE SALINE RESERVATIONS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 2, 1831.

Mr. Irvin, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the legislature of the State of Illinois, praying permission to sell the lands reserved for the salt springs on the Vermilion river, reported:

That on the 26th day of March, 1804, an act was passed by Congress for the survey and disposal of the public lands in the Territory of Indiana. By the sixth section of that act the several salt springs in that Territory, together with as many contiguous sections to each as should be deemed necessary by the President of the United States, were reserved for the future disposal of the United States.

By an act of Congress of the 3d of February, 1809, the Territory of Indiana was divided. That part which lay west of the Wabash river, and a line drawn from said river and Port Vincennes due north to the territorial line between the United States and Canada, constituted the Territory of Illinois.

On the 29th April, 1816, an act was passed by Congress authorizing the survey of two millions of acres of land in the Territories of Illinois and Missouri for the purpose of satisfying the bounties of land promised to the non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the late army of the United States. A provision was inserted in the first section of that act reserving to the United States the salt springs and lead mines within the district surveyed, and such quantities of land adjacent thereto as might be reserved for the use of the same by the President of the United States.

By an act of Congress of the 18th of April, 1818, the people of the Territory of Illinois were permitted to form a constitution and State government. The second proposition of the sixth section of that act is in the following words, to wit:

"Second. That all salt springs within such State, and the land reserved for the use of the same, shall be granted to the said State for the use of the said State, and the same to be used under such terms and conditions and regulations as the legislature of the said State shall direct: Provided, The legislature shall never sell nor lease the same for a longer period than ten years at any one time."

On the 22d day of April, 1814, Mr. Meigs, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, directed Leonard White, Willis Hargrave, and P. Tramill to select such lands as might be deemed necessary for the use of the Ohio saline forever. These individuals made their report to the General Land Office on the 2d July, 1814, from which it appears that they set apart for the Ohio saline, in Illinois, about 97,000 acres of land. This reservation was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, but there is no evidence that it received his approbation, and it does not appear ever to have been submitted to the President of the United States for his sanction, in conformity with the provisions of the act of March 26, 1804. The lands selected, however, by the directions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, given on the 28th day of August, 1814, were reserved from sale, and never have been exposed to sale by the United States.

On the 24th day of May, 1828, an act was passed by Congress authorizing the legislature of the State of Illinois to sell thirty thousand acres of the land selected in manner aforesaid, and to apply the proceeds of the sale to such objects as the legislature by law might thereafter direct. The authority to sell was unlimited as respects the price.

From the letter of Mr. Graham, late Commissioner of the General Land Office, it appears that on the 1st day of June, 1820, the register of the land office at Palestine, in Illinois, was directed to make a selection of lands for the use of the salines on Vermilion river, within that State. He made the selection, and on the 21st day of April, 1821, made his report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but as the lands were not then surveyed, he made a subsequent report, designating the lands reserved by sections, which last report was approved by the President of the United States on the 29th March, 1825. By this act of the President thirty-eight sections, equal to twenty-four thousand three hundred and twenty acres, were set apart and reserved for the use of the salines on the Vermilion river.

The grant of those salt springs, with the lands reserved for the use of the same by the President of the United States, with some other concessions, was made to the State of Illinois upon these conditions: that the convention of that State should provide, by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by the United States from and after the 1st day of January, 1819, should remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under any authority of the State, whether for State, county, or township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale; and further, that the bounty lands given for services during the late war should also remain free from taxation for three years from the date of the patents.

When Illinois was admitted as a State into the Union no lands had been reserved by the President of the United States for the use of the salt springs within that State, in conformity to the provisions of the acts of March 26, 1804, and April 29, 1816, and, by a strict construction of the act of admission, subsequent reservations might not be embraced by its terms. If the committee were to give this strict construction to the act, the consequence would be that the State of Illinois was deprived of the power to tax the public lands within its limits, while it is denied, in part, the consideration for which it deprived itself of that important privilege.

An honest fulfilment of the compact between the United States and the State of Illinois requires that there should be reserved for each salt spring within that State, by the President of the United States, a sufficient quantity of land for the use of the same.

The lands reserved by the President of the United States, on the 29th of March, 1825, for the use of the salt springs on the Vermilion river, in the opinion of the committee, belong to the State of Illinois; and a bill is herewith reported authorizing that State to make sale of the same.

RELATIVE TO SELECTIONS OF LAND BY INDIANA FOR A ROAD FROM LAKE MICHIGAN TO THE OHIO RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 3, 1831.

To the Senate of the United States:

I respectfully submit to the Senate, in answer to their legislative resolution of the 20th ultimo, in relation to the sales of land at the Crawfordsville land office in November last, reports from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Concurring with the Secretary of the Treasury in the views he has taken of the treaties and act of Congress touching the subject, I cannot discover that the President is invested with any power under the Constitution or laws to withhold a patent from a purchaser who has given a fair and valuable consideration for land, and thereby acquired a vested right to the same; nor do I perceive that the sole legislative resolution of the Senate can confer such a power, or suspend the right of the citizens to enter the lands that have been offered for sale in said district and remain unsold, so long as the law authorizing the same remains unrepealed. I beg leave, therefore, to present the subject to the reconsideration of the Senate.

ANDREW JACKSON.

FEBRUARY 3, 1831.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 1, 1831.

SIR: A resolution of the Senate, adopted on the 20th of January last, having been referred by the President to the Secretary of the Treasury, whereby the President "is requested to withhold all patents for lands sold at the Crawfordsville land offices in the month of November last, in which the State of Indiana may be concerned, under the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to authorize the State of Indiana to locate and make a road therein named,' the said patents to be withheld until the general assembly of Indiana can be heard on the subject, and the further action of Congress on the same subject, should it be desired or become necessary," I have the honor to lay before the President the correspondence between the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the officer acting in behalf of the State of Indiana in relation to this subject; to which I beg leave to prefix a brief statement of the facts in the case. [For correspondence referred to, see No. 881.]

Certain lands in Indiana were ceded to the United States by the Pottawatomie Indians by a treaty signed at Chicago in 1821.

Other lands in the same State were also ceded by the same tribe by the first article of a treaty dated October 16, 1826.

By the second article of the last-mentioned treaty, a further cession was made of one hundred feet in width for a road from Lake Michigan to the Wabash, and also of one section for each mile of said road from its commencement on Lake Michigan, passing through Indianapolis, to the Ohio river, which sections were to be laid off contiguous thereto.

By the act of Congress of March 2, 1827, the State of Indiana was authorized to locate said road, and the land ceded by the second section of the said treaty of 1826 was vested in the State for that purpose.

The route for the road from Lake Michigan to the Wabash may be so located as to pass a short distance through the lands ceded by the first article of the treaty, or it may be so located (as is believed, in a direct line) as entirely to avoid these and pass through other lands belonging to the Pottawatomies. The continuation of the road from the Wabash through Indianapolis to the Ohio, is through lands previously ceded to the United States in various treaties, a portion of which is surveyed and sold. The governor of the State of Indiana claims the right of selecting the sections for each mile of the road from lands belonging to the United States in the cession of 1821, above referred to, and also in the cession made by the first article of the treaty of 1826. The Treasury Department has acted under the persuasion that neither of these cessions were vested in Indiana by the act of 1827, and that the cession in the second section refers to land still in possession of the Pottawatomies, which must be selected contiguous to said road after it is located. A part of the lands ceded by the first article have been attached to the Crawfordsville district and sold; and these are supposed to be the lands referred to in the resolution of the Senate, on which the President is required to withhold the patents. The purchasers have paid the price and obtained their certificates, which are held to be an inchoate title, liable to be transferred with all the solemnities of right which belong to a patent. These rights being thus vested, it is respectfully submitted for the consideration of the President whether it is competent to the executive power to withhold the patents.

I have the honor to remain, with high respect, your obedient servant,

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 2, 1831.

SIR: A resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted on the 3d of January last, having been referred by the President to the Secretary of the Treasury, whereby the President "is requested to lay before the House any and all correspondence (so far as the same may be done without prejudice to the public interest) by and with either of the departments in relation to locating a cession of lands made, or intended to be made, by the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians, for the benefit of the State of Indiana, by a treaty concluded with them the 16th of October, 1826, to be applied towards making a road from Lake Michigan, by way of Indianapolis, to some convenient point on the Ohio river, and to inform this House whether any decision has been made by the Executive in relation to what lands are subject to the above cession, and if so, where the locations are proposed to be made," I have the honor to lay before the President a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office containing all the correspondence in possession of this department on the subject.—(For this correspondence see antecedent No. 881.)

The facts in this case, as I have before had the honor to state to you, are these:

Certain lands in Indiana were ceded to the United States by the Pottawatomie Indians by a treaty signed at Chicago in 1821.

Other lands in the same State were also ceded, by the same tribe, by the 1st article of a treaty dated 16th October, 1826.

By the 2d article of the last-mentioned treaty a further cession was made of 100 feet in width, for a road from Lake Michigan to the Wabash, and also of one section for each mile of said road from its commencement on Lake Michigan, passing through Indianapolis, to the Ohio river; which sections were to be laid off contiguous thereto.

By the act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1827, the State of Indiana was authorized to locate said road, and the land ceded by the 2d section of the said treaty of 1826 was vested in the State for that purpose.

The route for the road from Lake Michigan to the Wabash may be so located as to pass a short distance through the lands ceded by the first article of the treaty; or it may be so located (as is believed in a direct line) as entirely to avoid these, and pass through other lands belonging to the Pottawatomies. The continuation of the road from the Wabash, through Indianapolis, to the Ohio is through lands previously ceded to the United States in various treaties, a portion of which is surveyed and sold. The governor of the State of Indiana claims the right of selecting the sections for each mile of the road from lands belonging to the United States in the cession of 1821, above referred to, and also in the cession made by the first article of the treaty of 1826. The Treasury Department has acted under the persuasion that neither of those cessions were vested in Indiana by the act of 1827, and that the cession in the 2d section refers to lands still in possession of the Pottawatomies, which must be selected contiguous to said road after it is located.

It is deemed proper to add that a part of the lands ceded by the first article have been attached to the Crawfordsville district and sold.

I have the honor to remain, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR A GRANT OF LAND FOR A ROAD FROM THE OHIO RIVER TO LAKE ERIE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 7, 1831.

MEMORIAL AND RESOLUTIONS.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Ohio respectfully represents: That this general assembly having caused a free turnpike road to be laid out and established from the Ohio river, at Wellsville, in Columbiana county, by way of New Lisbon and Salem, in the same county, and Ravenna, in Portage county, to Lake Erie, at Cleveland, in Cuyahoga county, in this State, a distance of about ninety miles; and believing that the said road may be deemed of sufficient importance, in a national point of view, to warrant a claim upon the justice and liberality of the general government, an appropriation of a part of the public lands lying in this State, for the purpose of completing said road and keeping the same in repair, is respectfully solicited. Although the Ohio canal, when completed, may afford the means, and in a great degree remove the difficulty, of transporting military and other public stores from the interior to our northern frontiers, yet it must be apparent that the water communication by the Ohio river and canal will, from its extent, and the delays and embarrassments incident to such means of transportation, be found of a character too tardy for efficient military operations; and looking to the possible necessity for such operations in this quarter, it is deemed worthy of the consideration of the general government, whether it ought not to grant the aid necessary for the completion and preservation of a road which, (at a moment when expedition in the removal of arms and public stores in this direction may be of the first importance,) it is believed, will afford the utmost facilities for operations of the great national concern, and promote the general prosperity of the country.

Resolved, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their endeavors to procure the passage of a law granting to the State of Ohio a donation of land agreeable to the prayer of the above memorial.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor of this State be requested to forward to each of our senators and representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing memorial.

ON THE APPLICATION OF A CHEROKEE INDIAN WOMAN TO SELL A RESERVATION OF LAND WHICH WAS MADE TO HER HUSBAND, WHO WAS ADJUDGED TO BE A RUNAWAY SLAVE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 8, 1831.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of Sally Johnson, reported:

That the petitioner states in her petition that she is a citizen of the Cherokee nation of Indians, resides in Jackson county, Alabama; that she was considered the wife of Peter Johnson, who was afterwards, by a course of judicial investigation, adjudged to be a runaway slave, and as such reclaimed by his master; that the said Peter, while she was considered his wife, had, as the head of a Cherokee family, in the treaty between the United States and said Cherokee nation, reserved to him by said treaty 640 acres of land, which was afterwards surveyed for him, upon which the petitioner states she then resided, and on which she now resides. She asks Congress to confirm the reservation to her and her children, and that she be permitted to sell the fee simple estate.

The committee are of opinion that it would be impolitic and unwise in Congress to authorize a sale of any or all of the various reservations to Indians by virtue of the various treaties which have been made between the United States and the several Indian tribes. It would open the door to speculation, and excite the cupidity of avarice, and those ignorant reservees would fall a prey to their more wary neighbors. They see no reason for departing from this rule in the present instance, nor do they express any opinion as to the nature of the intent now vested in the petitioner and her children by her supposed husband. Whether the reservation would not inure to the benefit of the persons in remainder as well when the tenant for life is rendered by law incapable of taking or holding the particular estate, as when he takes and holds until his death, is a question which may arise if the United States shall ever assert title to this reservation adverse to the children who were in being at the date of the reservation.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

ON THE CLAIM OF A CANADIAN REFUGEE TO BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 8, 1831.

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Hoffman, reported:

That the petitioner was a citizen of the United States anterior to the late war between the United States and Great Britain; that at the declaration of the war he was a resident of Upper Canada; that during the war he left Canada and enlisted in the service of the United States in the corps of Canadian volunteers, in May, 1814, and served as a soldier faithfully during the war, when he was honorably discharged; that he was entitled to bounty land under the act of March 5, 1816, entitled "An act granting bounty in land and extra pay to certain Canadian volunteers;" that he presented his claim to the War Department, accompanied by all the evidence required by said act, in the year 1816; that the decision on his claim was delayed by the department, without any fault or cause of delay on the part of the petitioner, until September 25, 1817, (after the act of March 3, 1817, was passed, reducing the quantity of bounty land to private soldiers to 160 acres,) when a warrant was issued in his name for 160 acres. He has never received any more bounty land. As the petitioner presented his claim, and all the evidences required by the act of March 5, 1816, to the department before the passage of the act of March 3, 1817, recited, it is the opinion of the officer having the charge of the bounty land office, as well as of this committee, that the petitioner was legally entitled to the quantity of land given by the act of March 5, 1816. As the petitioner employed an agent to get his warrant, he was not aware that a warrant had been issued for only 160 acres until after March 3, 1818, when the law expired. Since when the department has had no authority to act in this matter, or, under the circumstances of his case, he would have no difficulty in obtaining a warrant for another 160 acres. An act of Congress will be necessary to authorize the Secretary of War to issue a warrant for the additional quantity of 160 acres. The committee think he has a legal and equitable right to the quantity of land prayed for, and report a bill for his relief.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 8, 1831.

Mr. DRAPER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Dominique Richard, of Louisiana, reported:

That the petitioner claims a tract of land in the parish of Saint Landry, which Baptiste Dismaret, by a request addressed to Monsieur de Moro, colonel, inspector, and governor of Louisiana, which request was dated March 1, 1788; that the said Baptiste Dismaret entered into and took possession of the said land and retained possession thereof until the year 1794, since which time no person has claimed the same land adversely to the claim of Dismaret; that the said Baptiste Dismaret lately died, and that the petitioner purchased at public sale the land from the heirs and legal representatives of the said Dismaret. The petitioner has offered no evidence of his claim by purchase from the heirs of Dismaret, nor has he offered any evidence to prove a possession of the land either by Dismaret or his heirs. The committee, therefore, recommend that the claim of the petitioner be rejected.

IN FAVOR OF THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE OFFICE OF SURVEYOR GENERAL OF PUBLIC LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 8, 1831.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 7, 1831.

SIR: Your letter of the 3d instant was duly received, requiring my opinion in reference to the propriety of detaching from the surveying department "south of Tennessee" the lands of the State of Louisiana, and requesting information whether the creation of such office would add to the expenses of this department, and also whether it would facilitate the settling and quieting of land claims in Louisiana and Mississippi.

In reply to those several points, I have the honor to inform the committee that the creation of the office of surveyor general of Louisiana is a measure which is called for by every consideration of propriety and expediency.

The office of "surveyor south of Tennessee" has become involved in such complication under the existing system, and duties and responsibilities have become so divided between the surveyor south of Tennessee and his three principal deputies, that, with the confusion and loss of experience resulting from the numerous changes which have taken place during the last seven years in all those offices, I am of the decided opinion that the surveyor's office south of Tennessee is now in such a state that, if a remedy be not speedily applied, the confusion will become inexplicable, and cause great injury to the citizens both of Mississippi and Louisiana. The only remedy is to reorganize and simplify the whole system by the abolition of the offices of principal deputy surveyors, and the creation of a separate and distinct surveyorship, to take jurisdiction over the surveys in Louisiana.

The abolition of the offices of three principal deputy surveyors will save $1,500 a year in salaries; and the abolition of the fees for examining and recording surveys will prove a saving at least to the amount of salaries necessary to be appropriated for draughtsmen and clerks in the office of the surveyor general of Louisiana.

The expenses of this office would not be increased by this measure, which, on the contrary, would afford most essential aid and facilities to this office by the great improvement it would introduce in the execution of the Louisiana surveys, and the numerous impediments it would remove to the performance of the duties which would then remain to the surveyor south of Tennessee.

I would further state that the salutary effects of the proposed new organization of the surveying department would be felt throughout the State of Louisiana, and at the same time be of great benefit to Mississippi, even if the operation of the law were restricted to a period of five years. Time has not admitted of furnishing the committee with a mass of proofs which might be collected in reference to this subject, and which would demonstrate the evils of the existing system. I have, however, deemed it proper to submit herewith a letter from the register of the land office at Opelousas, Louisiana, dated 22d December last, in reference to some of the evils which have grown out of the existing system; and, with this communication, I have taken leave to submit for your consideration a bill containing those provisions which the experience of this officer indicates to be the only legislative remedies that are likely to prove effectual.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

ON THE APPLICATION OF MICHIGAN FOR A GRANT OF LAND TO ENCOURAGE THE PRODUCTION OF SILK.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 11, 1831.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the legislative council of the Territory of Michigan respectfully represents: That your memorialists regard the more general cultivation of silk in the United States as an object of great importance, and deserving the encouragement of the national government. Whether the object be regarded as opening a fair prospect for the encouragement of domestic industry, or as laying the foundation for the production of a rich commodity for national commerce, it is equally entitled to public and private patronage.

In whatever country the culture and manufacture of silk has been successfully carried on the general government has lent its fostering aid to the business, both in its commencement and in its further progress. And there is full evidence of the fact that no nation has ever directed its industry to an object which has so amply paid the laborer for his toil, and the nation for its patronage, as that of the production and manufacture of silk.

It is ascertained by actual experiment that the United States throughout nearly their whole territory are admirably well adapted to the silk culture. A species of the mulberry tree is one of the natural productions of the American forests; and the white mulberry tree has been found to flourish in whatever part of the country it has been planted.

The insects instrumental in producing silk do not, in this climate, require a certain temperature of the atmosphere to be kept up in the houses where they are, by artificial aid, as they do in European countries. In the United States they are produced, and finish their work, in two-thirds of the time required to accomplish the same in other countries. And what is still more remarkable, though in other countries they have had the experience of centuries to perfect their art, yet the production of the silk insect is much finer, and more valuable, and one-third more in quantity, in this country than any other.

These facts, and others regarding the subject of this memorial equally important, are known to your honorable bodies. They have been adverted to merely that they may be remembered.

The measures lately taken by Congress to encourage the cultivation of the mulberry tree, and the production of silk, has drawn the attention of your memorialists to the expediency of introducing that branch of industry into this Territory.

The peninsula of Michigan, on account of its locality, requires that its inhabitants should be engaged in some branch of industry, the products of which will warrant an inland transportation to a very distant market. So distant from this Territory are the great marts of commerce, that the common productions of the agriculturist poorly pay for the labor which they cost after deducting the costs of transportation.

The soil and climate of this Territory are undoubtedly adapted to the culture of silk. The red mulberry tree is indigenous to the soil; and the climate is more mild than that of any of the New England States, or than many parts of the eastern continent where the silk culture flourishes.

The peninsula of Michigan is yet mostly uncultivated. It is now rapidly filling up with an industrious and hardy people, a people mostly who have for years been serving as pioneers to the army of emigrants which has been moving west. No enterprise of industry is too difficult for this people to accomplish; nor need it be feared that any art will retrogade under their superintendence. But they have not capital to vest in an undertaking which does not promise an immediate return of profit. The many wants incident to the first settlement of a new country tax heavily the small incomes of the inhabitants.

Your memorialists, therefore, are induced to ask of your honorable bodies a grant to this Territory of four townships of land within the peninsula of Michigan; which land shall be under the care of the governor and council of this Territory, and appropriated alone to the purposes necessary to promote the cultivation of the mulberry tree and the production of silk.

Lands have been granted in the States of Indiana and Alabama by Congress for the encouragement of particular branches of agriculture. But precedent need not be named to authorize the required grant of land. Were the grant asked for to form itself a precedent for a like grant to all the new States and Territories, your memorialists think it would not be dangerous. The object of the donations would promise full returns to the nation for her liberality. Like donations for like purposes to the different new communities would more closely connect their interests with the interests of the Atlantic States, and bind, as with silken cords, the extremities of the Union to the main body.

Resolved, That the governor of the Territory be requested to transmit copies of the foregoing memorial to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the Senate, and the delegate in Congress from this Territory.

IN FAVOR OF ALLOWING BOUNTY LAND TO THE OWNER OF A SLAVE WHO WAS A SOLDIER IN THE ARMY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 12, 1831.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of December 31, 1830, directing the committee to inquire into the expediency of allowing Archibald Jackson the bounty land due to James Gammons for services in the late war, reported:

That they have had the subject under consideration. It appears that the said James Gammons enlisted as a private soldier in the eleventh regiment of infantry of the United States on June 18, 1812, for the period of five years, and continued in the service from the time of his enlistment till February 19, 1813, when "he died in the service of the United States." The act of Congress under which Gammons was enlisted allows to "the heirs and representatives of non-commissioned officers or soldiers who enlisted for five years, and who died in the service of the United States, three months' extra pay and one hundred and sixty acres of land." At the time of his enlistment and service Gammons was the slave of the said Archibald Jackson, who never consented to the enlistment, but permitted him to remain in the service.

Jackson, as the owner of Gammons, after his death claimed the extra and back pay, amounting to thirty-seven dollars and forty-two cents and the bounty land. The pay was allowed by the War Department and paid to Jackson, but the committee are informed that the department refuse to grant Jackson a warrant for the bounty land due to Gammons, because he was a slave at the time of his enlistment and service. A claim similar to that of Jackson for pay was allowed to the owner of the slave by the department in 1823, but the committee are informed no bounty land was allowed in that case.

It appears to the committee that the services rendered by Gammons were as valuable as those of any other soldier. He performed the same services and duty, and the United States are just as much bound to pay for those services as if rendered by another. And the only question is, who are legally entitled to the pay and bounty land due to Gammons? If Jackson had a legal right to the back and extra pay due to Gammons, (and the committee think he had,) the committee cannot conceive any reason why the bounty land should not, also, be allowed to Jackson. The right to both accrued under the same law, both were due for the same service, and the claim to both rests on the same principles. The owner of the slave is entitled to all his property, and, so far as property is concerned, is the legal representative of the slave. Hence Archibald Jackson, as the legal representative of Gammons, by the words of the law is entitled to the bounty land due to Gammons, as well as the pay due him. The committee, therefore, report a bill directing the Secretary of War to issue a warrant to said Archibald Jackson for said bounty land.

ADVERSE TO THE CORRECTION OF A DEFICIENCY IN QUANTITY OF LAND CALLED FOR IN WARRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 12, 1831.

Mr. Sterigere, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Bever, reported:

That the petitioner states that, as assignee of Isaac Craig, he is the owner of fractional sections numbers 6 and 12, township 5, in range 1, said to contain 618.50 acres, which was sold by the United States, at the sales in Pittsburg, in the year 1796, by the governor of the northwestern territory, for which a patent issued, dated February 22, 1799, for which he paid $2,041 05, which land was sold under the act of May 18, 1796; that he bought at the land office, Steubenville, the fractional lots or sections numbered 17 and 18, in the same township, at two dollars per acre, for which a patent issued August 9, 1806; that the quantity paid for was 839.45 acres; that at the time he purchased these sections he supposed there was no deficiency in the quantity; that he has since ascertained there is a considerable "lackage." He asks a remuneration for deficiency in his fractional sections.

The petitioner has submitted to the committee a draught and calculation of said sections, by which it appears there is a deficiency in quantity of about ninety-six acres.

The committee think the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted; such stale claims ought not to be countenanced. But there are other sufficient reasons for rejecting it. By the act of Congress of February 11, 1805, it is declared that the quantity expressed in the returns of survey shall be held and considered the exact quantity. If these purchases were not made after the said act, the purchasers have acquiesced so long, they may be regarded as bound by its provisions. But, independent of this act, it was for the purchasers to see to the quantity, &c., and to have the returns corrected before the patent issued, if it would even then be allowed. It would not do for the government to consider itself liable to make up deficiencies in lands sold. In practice there would be no reciprocity, for none would inform the government when there was any excess, while every one would come forward who has less than the quantity expressed in the surveys or patents. It would be setting a bad precedent to allow this claim. If the principle is ever established that the purchaser may call on the government for remuneration when his patent may happen to call for too much, it would unavoidably create endless and numberless disputes and litigation about the quantity, and consequently thousands of applications to Congress for relief. The committee think the petitioner has no legal or equitable claim under these circumstances for relief, and offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

ON THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE PLAN OF THE CITY OF DETROIT, IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 12, 1831.

Mr. Strong, from the Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred, on January 24, 1831, the memorial of John R. Williams and others, citizens of Detroit, in the Michigan Territory, reported:

The old town of Detroit was destroyed by fire in 1805. In April, 1806, Congress passed a law appropriating ten thousand acres of land in and adjacent to the old town, and authorized the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan to lay out a new town or city, to adjust the land titles, and dispose of the lands and funds. They were also required to report their proceedings. It does not appear to the committee that this has been fully done.

In May, 1830, an act was passed requiring them to transmit to the Secretary of State a plan of the town of Detroit. This has been complied with. This plan is called a "Plat of the city of Detroit, as laid out by the governor and judges," and is dated January 8, 1831, and certified by John Farmer, by whom it appears to have been made. It is believed not to differ essentially from the "Plan of Detroit by John Mullett, engraved and published by J. O. Lewis, 1830," except in the addition of several water lots in front of those on Mullett's plan. It is to this addition that the principal complaint is made. The memorialists allege that this addition to and extension of the city into the river destroys the value of their water lots, which they purchased in good faith and with the understanding that no lots were to be laid out in front of them. The committee, therefore, think it advisable to approve of "Farmer's plat of the city of Detroit," with the exception of the addition thereto, as mentioned above, saving to all persons all rights previously acquired.

It is due, however, to the governor and judges to say that they disclaim, in their communication to the Secretary of State, all authority or intention to do any act which shall prejudice these lot holders.

The powers which the governor and judges have by the act of 1806 the committee think ought to be taken from them and given to the city. The citizens of Detroit are certainly competent to manage their own affairs. It is fair to presume that they understand their own interests as well as anybody else can, and that they, like the inhabitants of other towns or cities, ought to have the control over them. But as the governor and judges have not as yet rendered a full account of their acts and proceedings, the committee have thought it due to them not at present to recommend the repeal of the act of 1806, and thus leave them accountable to the citizens of Detroit. The committee, however, have no doubt that so much of the act of 1806 as gives power to the governor and judges to lay out the town or city of Detroit ought to be repealed, and the power given to the city corporation; and that the governor and judges ought to be required to transmit to Congress a full and detailed statement of all their acts and proceedings, and of the state of the funds growing out of the trust reposed in them by the act of 1806.

The committee report a bill in conformity with these suggestions.

PLAN OF DETROIT.

Letter from the Secretary of State, accompanied by a plan of the town of Detroit

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 24, 1831.

The Secretary of State, in obedience to the act of Congress of May 28, 1830, entitled "An act relative to the plan of Detroit, in Michigan Territory," requiring the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan, or any three of them, to make a report of the plan of laying out the said town, under and by virtue of an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of titles of land in the town of Detroit and Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes," and further directing that one copy of the said plan shall be "transmitted to the Secretary of State of the United States, to be by him laid before Congress," has the honor herewith to lay before the House of Representatives the "Plat of the city of Detroit, as laid down by the governor and judges," agreeably to the direction of the act first referred to and lately received from them at this department, together with copies of the explanatory papers which have been also received from the said governor and judges.

Respectfully submitted.

M. VAN BUREN.

DETROIT, January 8, 1831.

SIR: Agreeably to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act relative to the plan of Detroit, in Michigan Territory," passed May 28, 1830, we have the honor to forward the accompanying plan and the observations in explanation thereof.

Very respectfully, sir, we have the honor to be your obedient servants,

LEWIS CASS, Governor of Michigan Territory.
WM. WOODBRIDGE, one of the Judges of Michigan Territory.
SOLOMON SIBLEY, Judge.
HENRY CHIPMAN, Judge.

Hon. MARTIN VAN BUREN, Secretary of State.

The governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan, in depositing the accompanying plan of the city of Detroit agreeably to the act of Congress of May 28, 1830, deem it necessary to annex thereto the following observations:

On the destruction of the old town of Detroit, in 1805, an act of Congress was passed authorizing the governor and judges of the Territory to lay out a new town, to adjust the titles, and grant deeds for the lots. In conformity with this authority, a portion of the town was in 1806 laid out, and deeds granted; but the original plan under which this was done is not and never has been in possession of the present board. The papers relating to this subject fell into the possession of the enemy during the late war, and were dispersed, and many of them lost, and great inconvenience has been the consequence. After the plan was first adopted and deeds granted, changes were made, both in the number and form of the lots and in the streets, but we have not the means of ascertaining these changes. In 1807 a plan of that part of the town included in sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8, was permanently established, and certified by the then governor and judges. We are not aware that any changes have been subsequently made in these sections, but as neither of the undersigned was then a member of the board, we cannot speak from our personal knowledge of the subject. In section 3, water lots 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, and 119, and in section 4, water lots 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, and 195, have been subsequently laid out to accommodate the shipping interest of the community, and to enable them to extend wharves to the deep waters of the river.

The military reservations were not placed at the disposal of the governor and judges, and they are not, therefore, subdivided into lots upon this plan. They have since, with the exception of three tracts, been granted to the corporation of the town, and by them laid out upon a different plan, and many of the lots sold. We have reason to suppose that many deeds were granted before the alleys were laid out in sections numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8, as they are now exhibited upon the plan in our possession, and upon that herewith deposited. Many of the lots, as deeded, cover portions of the alleys, and where this fact is known the dotted lines represent the alleys themselves, and the black lines the lots as granted; other dotted lines show the boundaries of certain lots, alleys, and streets, according to the plan adopted in 1807, and certified by the then governor and judges, but which being claimed according to the plan of the old town under their former titles by the proprietors, have been granted to them without reference to the lines of the present city. It will also be observed that three tracts, principally covered with water in section 3, were granted in 1811 in conformity with the lines of the old town, two of which extend further towards the deep water than is shown by the plan previously adopted.

It is impossible, for the reasons stated, that we can be certain of the entire accuracy of this plan. It has been compiled by a surveyor from the best materials in our possession, but it cannot be considered as conclusive evidence in determining the right of parties. The difficulty is confined to sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8; all the others, which have been laid out and established since the war, are believed to be correct. The incipient measures in settling the titles of lots in the old town, in adjusting conflicting claims, and in giving deeds for donations, were taken and principally carried into effect before the war. These extend only to sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8; and if interfering claims should hereafter arise in this portion of the town, they must necessarily be decided by reference to the state of things at the time the rights of the parties accrued.

It may be proper to add that claims have been advanced to lots 112, 113, 115, 116, 117, 118, and 9, in section 3, as appurtenants to property previously purchased, and that the subdivision upon this plan is not intended to prejudice or affect these claims in the slightest degree.

DETROIT, January 11, 1831.

SIR: We have the honor to request that the accompanying explanatory remarks may be received as a part of the report transmitted to you by us on the 8th instant, in the execution of the act of Congress of May 28, 1830, requiring a plan of Detroit to be forwarded to the office of the Secretary of State.

Very respectfully, sir, we have the honor to be your obedient servants,

LEWIS CASS, Governor of Michigan Territory.
WM. WOODBRIDGE, one of the Judges of Michigan Territory.
HENRY CHIPMAN, Judge.

DETROIT, January 11, 1831.

The governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan, in the execution of the act of Congress of May 28, 1830, concerning a plan of the city of Detroit, beg leave to submit, in addition to the explanatory observations accompanying the said plan transmitted the 8th instant, that in transcribing the list of water lots which had been claimed by individuals as appurtenant to property purchased previously to the marking of such lots upon any plan, the lots of this description in section 4 were accidentally omitted. The governor and judges therefore state that the lots marked upon the said plan, and numbered 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, and 195, in section 4, are claimed by individuals as appurtenant to lots purchased before the above numbered lots were laid out, and that, in laying out the same, the rights of the said individuals were not intended to be, nor can they be in the slightest degree impaired or affected. These lots in this section were laid out upon the application of the owners of some of the adjacent property, who wished for a moderate compensation to quiet any doubt in their titles by procuring deeds from this board. And it was thought better to mark all the lots in section 4, between the tracts previously purchased and the channel, that each of the proprietors might procure a deed in the same way if he thought proper; and if he did not, but determined to rely upon his previous claim, this board then disclaimed all right to do anything which should affect his title in the slightest degree, and judged it improper, under the circumstances of the purchase, to transfer their claim, if they had any, to another person.

The undersigned would also remark that lot 114 was accidentally omitted in the list contained in the last paragraph of their explanatory observations before alluded to.

MEMORIAL OF CITIZENS OF DETROIT.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned, citizens of the United States, and inhabitants of the city of Detroit, respectfully showeth: That the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan were authorized by an act of Congress, passed in the year 1806, to lay out a town, &c., &c., and to report their proceedings; and by an act passed during the last session of Congress they are required to transmit to the Secretary of State a plan of said town or city for the approval of Congress.

Your memorialists, feeling a deep interest in the prosperity of the city of Detroit, and particularly in whatever relates to the security of titles to lots within the same, consider it therefore their right and their duty to interpose their claims and their interest to counteract the improper, unjust, and tyrannical acts of the said governor and judges in the premises.

Although our language and remarks may seem bold, yet they are nevertheless founded in truth, as a recapitulation of facts and the result of experience will show.

First. The plan has been altered several times; for example, two or three plans were made by Mr. Thomas Smith at various periods; one plan was drafted by Aaron Greeley, one by Abijah Hull, one by John Mullett, and the last, probably the most exceptionable, was recently drafted by John Farmer.

In each of the foregoing plans there is good reason to believe that alterations were made from the original by altering the numbers of the lots, occasioning thereby great confusion and uncertainty in the titles to the said lots; by altering some of the streets, by selling and giving deeds for streets and parts of streets, rendering their width unequal at several points by projecting at right angles in some parts of the same street; by deeding away several of the alleys, and by giving in numerous instances two, and probaby in some cases three deeds for the same lot; and in the last instance by laying out lots in deep water in the channel of the river Detroit in front of the lots that were sold as the external or outward and front tier of lots, at public auction in the year 1816, which outward or front tier of lots, sold at the period aforesaid, have been docked out and filled up at great expense by private individuals, and buildings erected thereon for the accommodation of commerce. That a plat of the city was exhibited by an order and resolution of the said governor and judges, together with a resolution for the sale of "all the water lots," for several days previous to the public sale in November, 1816; and that the return now on record on their journal is for the sale of all the water lots; and that the lots thus sold by them were purchased by individuals, as the titles witness, agreeably to the plan of the city then exhibited. That your memorialists cannot but consider as an act of injustice, tyranny, and oppression, after such a lapse of time, and after they have respectively expended large sums of money in filling up docks and making ground, and erecting buildings thereon, and in the payment of taxes on said property, to lay out lots beyond and in front of their improvements in deep water, thereby tempting the cupidity of speculators to purchase in front of the improvements of your memorialists, to cut them off from the benefit of navigation, and other their bona fide privileges; or at least involve them in the necessity of expending large sums of money in litigation before the Supreme Court of the United States to secure their absolute, proper, legal, and vested rights to the lots and property in question.

And it is respectfully asked what security will the public or individuals ever have so long as the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan shall have the management of "the Detroit fund," so called by them; that even after the present and recent alteration, that so soon as individuals shall fill up again, or make additional improvements over the navigable waters, that they will not again and again lay out and sell more lots, until they shall even extend beyond the national boundary, in the middle of the river Detroit? Moreover, your memorialists have paid a large amount in taxes on said property, and have otherwise contributed liberally to the improvement of the city of Detroit and the Territory in general.

Your memorialists are fully apprehensive that the seeds and sources of litigation have already been abundantly sowed by the acts of the said governor and judges within the city of Detroit; and that posterity, as well as the present generation, will have abundant cause to appreciate their services and agency in procuring that execrable result.

The ostensible reason which we understand is assigned for such extraordinary conduct is that the said governor and judges want money to pay the debts of the Detroit fund. And why do they want money? Because they have expended several thousand dollars in making alterations, new surveys, new plans, and a variety of other expenditures not authorized by the act of Congress.

It is also alleged that the amount of money or certificates issued by them several years since, and bearing interest, is still considerable; that in case the fund should fall short it is believed that they, by their acts, have made themselves individually liable to redeem said certificates.

Your memorialists are therefore induced to suggest to your honorable body whether it would not be proper to institute an inquiry into the acts and doings of the said governor and judges, and their management of the said fund, especially when it is considered that a period of twenty-five years has elapsed since the trust was confided to them, and that they have never reported or made public their proceedings in the premises. It would therefore seem to be high time that your honorable body should interpose to protect and save the rights of your memorialists and of this community.

Sincerely impressed with the wisdom and justice of the national administration, your memorialists respectfully solicit that such early and prompt attention may be given to the premises as their importance to the interests of this community would justify.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will, &c.

DETROIT, January 1, 1831.

PETITION OF THE CORPORATE AUTHORITIES OF DETROIT RELATIVE TO THE PLAN OF THAT PLACE.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, mayor, recorder, and aldermen of the city of Detroit, in behalf of the freemen of said city, beg leave respectfully to represent to your honorable body, that by an act of Congress approved 21st April, 1806, the governor and judges of Michigan Territory were authorized and empowered "to lay out a town, including the whole of the old town of Detroit, and ten thousand acres adjacent, excepting such parts as the President of the United States shall direct to be reserved for the use of the military department; and shall hear, examine, and finally adjust all claims to lots therein, and give deeds for the same, &c., &c.; and the said governor and judges are required to make a report to Congress, in writing, of their proceedings under this act."

Under the provisions of this act your petitioners believe that the governor and judges, for the time being, have granted many lots of ground in said city, agreeably to various and different plans, whereby much confusion has arisen, and probable insecurity of title to lots. Your petitioners, so far as they have been able to investigate this matter, are of opinion that a plan of said city was made and adopted by the then governor and judges in April, 1807, which should have governed all subsequent grants of lots, and established all streets, lanes, and alleys within said city; but your petitioners have discovered, in attempting to open and improve said streets, lanes, and alleys, that in many instances the grounds covered by them, agreeably to said plan, have been included within the lots subsequently deeded to individuals by the governor and judges, thus rendering it impracticable, in most instances, to open the streets, &c., agreeably to said plan, and consequently excluding many individuals from all access to the rear of their lots, contrary to the original design of said plan. Owing to this variance of plans, the present inhabitants are not only subjected to great inconvenience, such as many of them could not have anticipated at the time when lots were granted to them under the act of Congress, but the corporate authorities find it impossible to sustain that police essential to the health and convenience of the city. The same street is in some places sixty feet wide, in others fifty, and again but forty. Alleys intended by the aforesaid plan to run through a block of lots are, in most instances, interrupted by grants of lots extending so far in depth as to cover them. In short, so many alterations and such variety of plans have been pursued by different boards of governors and judges during the twenty-three years which have elapsed since the passage of the act aforesaid, that your petitioners know of no other method by which the freemen of this city can determine what is the plan of Detroit, or their titles to lots therein, except by praying that a law may be passed, requiring the governor and judges to report, within some limited time, a plan of this city; which plan shall have been recorded previously to its transmission, and shall be thereafter unalterable, unless disapproved by Congress.

DETROIT, November 30, 1829.

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the petition of the mayor, recorder, and aldermen of the city of Detroit, reported:

The petitioners ask for the passage of a law requiring the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan to report, within a limited time, a plan of the city of Detroit, to be adopted as the plan of that city, unless disapproved by Congress. The committee beg leave to refer to the petition itself, and the letter of the mayor of Detroit, for a detailed statement of the facts and reasons upon which the application is founded; and believing in the propriety of legislating on this subject, at present, so far only as to require the governor and judges to report the plan upon which the town of Detroit was laid out under the act of 1806, submit the accompanying bill:

A BILL relative to the plan of Detroit, in Michigan Territory.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan, or any three of them, are hereby required to make a report of the plan of laying out the town of Detroit, under and by virtue of an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of titles of land in the town of Detroit, and Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes," passed 21st April, 1806, one copy of which shall, on or before the first day of January next, be deposited and recorded in the office of the secretary of the Territory of Michigan, and another copy transmitted to the Secretary of State of the United States, to be by him laid before Congress.

To his excellency the governor and the honorable judges of the Territory of Michigan:

From the irregularities which have crept into the survey of the city, it becomes necessary to explain the several causes.

After the conflagration of the old town, in the year 1805, the city was laid off on a new model, and with as much care and accuracy as it was possible. The plan was taken to Boston and Washington, and afterwards deposited in the legislative board of this Territory; but unfortunately the necessary precaution was not taken, and the plan fell into the hands of Mr. Hull, surveyor, who drew from it several other plans, different from the original, and also differing from each other, as well in the measurement as in the numbers of lots. Deeds were issued upon all those plans, and no regular record was kept, so it became impossible to know what lots were granted or ungranted.

Subsequently the original plan fell into the hands of Aaron Greely, surveyor, in whose house it was seen in a broken window, keeping out the weather, and in whose hands it disappeared. After this there was no guide, no index to the original locations, and the old boundaries were also pulled up; so that, after the close of the war in 1815, the confusion was so great that the new board, under the administration of Governor Cass, could not proceed to the granting of any more lots.

In 1816, all deeds and records that could be found were examined; and from the schedule of names thus collected, a new plan was constructed, but not without some degree of uncertainty, although it is presumed that, if it had been followed, it was the only medium by which the board might have evaded the greatest part of the difficulty that has presented.

In the compilement of the plan from collected materials, Hull's book of sections was kept in view; but as there was a standing resolve of the board that "the principle of the plan was not to be deviated from," some difference unavoidably occurred, to wit: 1st. In a corner lot No. —, section —, in the book of sections. 2d. Between the military square and the graveyard, where Mr. Hull violated the plan. 3d. In some of the water lots, where the surveyor, Greely, altered the numbers, courses, and the area of lots. 4th. Two names upon one lot signify two claimants; and where two numbers appear, they were intended to correspond with the title already issued, as well as with the plan; and as to two deeds having issued for the same lot, it is not surprising, when considered that no correct record was kept by the first board, and that the original plan was altered and at last disappeared. Such mistakes were not unexpected, and that continually some old claims would turn up that were not known when the last plan in 1816 was compiled: and latterly it was discovered that boundaries were put down by a short chain, which must have caused insurmountable difficulties, and therefore it would be well that every surveyor should first study the principle of the plan that the base was first laid down, which, upon mathematical principles, governs all subordinate bases, courses, distances, and the areas of lots; and by whatever chain the base was laid down, it is demonstrable that the same measurement must be continued throughout, or no angle will close, no lot will have its true situation and correspondent measurement.

Mr. S. begs leave to suggest to the board, that however injudicious matters were formerly conducted, as well to surveys as records, he cannot see any difficulty but what may be got over. That all locations made by the last plan of 1816 the proprietors cannot resort to any other; and that from casualties it was a medium constructed for the general good.

Mr. S. further states that Mr. Justice Woodward was authorized by the first board, under the administration of Governor Hull, to superintend the survey of the city, and that the original plan was drawn under his inspection. That that plan was rendered plain and practicable, and none of the mistakes which now appear could possibly have happened had it been preserved and strictly adhered to. The numbers began at a right angle, and then progressively round the section. But the by-corners, some inner streets, and the alteration of numbers were afterwards made, and have much disfigured the plan, and were always contrary to Mr. S.'s idea of propriety.

The principle of the plan was a continuation of an equilateral triangle, but the two hundred feet street alone altered its proportions; and after the several changes the plan has undergone, it is a quere now if the word "principle" is applicable to the plan.

To remedy the evils, Mr. S. would propose, where the numbers of the deed are different from the plan, to insert both; and that any section in which the numbers are confused, to be numbered anew, and the same number be inserted in the deed, as well as the old number.

THOMAS SMITH.

DETROIT, May 10, 1821.

To his excellency the governor and the honorable the judges of the Territory of Michigan:

Mr. Smith begs leave to state that the blue plan, which was laid before the board on the 18th instant, appears to be a copy of the original drawn by him in 1805. The plan was correctly laid down by the theodolite, and how it came to be altered is a matter that requires investigation.

It appears that Mr. Hull, the surveyor, made very material alterations, and which is seen by two of his plans now in the board. Secondly, Mr. Greely, another surveyor, also made deviations, and all these deviations were sanctioned, as appears by the book plan, and the titles issued.

In 1816, after the elapse of eleven years, Mr. S. was again requested to make a second plan, and to adjust the difficulties that then presented. But he found it impossible to conform to the many deviations, and at the same time to embrace the exact description of every title that had issued, and particularly as there was no index to many of the locations; yet a second plan was constructed by Mr. S. in the best manner the nature of the case would admit, called the plan of 1816.

Mr. S. is informed that other deviations have been made, and, therefore, in justice to himself, lest at a future day any incorrectness may be imputed to him, he prays the honorable board to be pleased to have the substance of this his declaration entered on record, as well as his former statements; and recommends (as the first plan of 1805, from the several changes, cannot now be referred to as a criterion) that the plan of 1816 be carried into effect, as it may avoid most of the difficulties that the several changes fancy might have occasioned.

Mr. S. further recommends to the consideration of the honorable board to have permanent monuments at the outward angles of every section, and not to extend the plan any further than the limits of the common, leaving the practicability and commodiousness of the scheme to future experience. That the sections be drawn and bound into a book, with the courses, distances, and the names of the grantees; and also another plan, of a convenient size, for a plate, accompanied by a book of reference, by which the original titles may be perpetuated beyond ordinary casualties.

All which Mr. Smith, very respectfully, submits.

MAY 24, 1821.

WASHINGTON CITY, February 3, 1831.

SIR: In settling the subject matter of the plan of the city of Detroit, so as to quiet the titles and establish the rights of the several proprietors of lots, I am aware that a tissue of difficulties seems to be presented at the first view of the subject, some of which may be irremediable to your honorable body, and must, perhaps, remain subject to judicial investigation and settlement. Cases of that description occur in most places, which it is very desirable to guard against and avert, whenever it may be practicable.

In executing the provisions and requisites of the act of Congress of 1806, in the laying out the town, granting titles to lots, and other matters, the history of those transactions affords a picture of capriciousness, instability, carelessness, and casualty, seldom, if ever, excelled in the local settlement and history of any town within the Union. How much of the evils which have and may flow from these sources of inattention and unsystematic conduct on the part of the governor and judges, time alone can fully develop and demonstrate.

Thus it would seem that there is some pretext, clothed at least with plausibility, to offer respecting the transactions antecedent to the war. How far that apology, which, in fact, is based in inattention and carelessness, should cover all the subsequent illegal acts and irregular proceedings of the said governor and judges, is for your honorable body to determine.

Commencing, then, with their proceedings in 1816: they procured their original surveyor, Mr. Thomas Smith, to make a new plan of the town from his own knowledge, and the best materials which he could obtain. In the mean time there was, and there is still extant, in the possession of the governor and judges, an original book plan of the several sections of the town, laid out before the war, dated in 1807, signed by William Hull, governor, and attested by the then secretary. It is presumed that Mr. Smith had also the benefit of this source of information to aid him in completing the plan of 1816. This plat was on a large scale, at least six feet square, and was the one exhibited at all the public sales which took place subsequently. It ought to have been carefully preserved. The last time I saw it was about a year since; it was then still in the possession of the secretary to the goveror and judges, but was much tattered, torn, and, in many parts, almost obliterated.

The governor and judges have repeatedly and reiteratedly been requested to cause that plan to be carefully preserved and engraved, with a view to perpetuate it beyond ordinary casualties.

The engraved copies that are now extant were, however, procured to be done by private subscription; the necessity of which was dictated by motives of protection to the private rights of individuals. The first plan was engraved under the care of the late Mr. Judd, then a surveyor of the Territory; he was believed, by all who knew him, to be well qualified in every particular to execute that trust; and, as far as my own observation has enabled me to judge, the plan which he caused to be engraved was in the main very correct, and liable to very few objections, and those principally relating to alleys that had, in some instances, been deeded away by the governor and judges.

After the grant was made by Congress to the corporation of the city of Detroit of the military reservation, (so called,) a project was started to alter the whole plan of the city, so as to establish it uniformly at right angles. To this project, which would have been in the origin a wise and acceptable one, great objections existed, which became more and more obvious and plain as the subject was examined into. After much individual effort, public meetings, and even legislative enactments by the legislative council, to authorize the corporation to alter the plan of the city, the project was, upon public reflection, abandoned as impracticable. It was, however, deemed a sort of compromise between the proprietors of lots in various parts of the city and the corporation, yielding to the municipality so far as to allow them to lay out the ground which they had acquired from the United States in their own way; which they accordingly laid out at right angles, so far as circumstances would enable them. The corporation, for several years past, have employed Mr. John Mullett, a gentleman both intelligent and well qualified, as the city surveyor. After the new grounds had been laid out, and a considerable proportion thereof purchased by individuals, the public became anxious and desirous to have another plat of the city, with the improvements and alterations made since that published by Mr. Judd. Mr. Mullett was therefore employed, by the unanimous consent of all parties, to prepare and execute that work. The result is the map published in 1830, engraved by J. O. Lewis; five hundred copies were subscribed for by the citizens of Detroit, at one dollar each. As far as my own observation and the information and remarks of others have enabled me to judge, I believe that map of the city to be as authentic and correct as any work of the kind can ordinarily be.

Upon examination of all the maps above and within mentioned, down to that published in 1830, you will perceive that the innovations made, and recently reported to Congress, by the governor and judges, do not appear. This, therefore, establishes the fact that the said governor and judges have taken upon themselves the latitude to make a plan essentially new in some of its parts, and therefore highly objectionable, inasmuch as the parts recently laid down by them interfere materially with private vested rights. Now, to confirm this new plan would evidently be a direct interference, tending to prejudice private rights, which, it is very desirable, should be avoided.

At the first view of the subject after I had the honor of appearing before your committee, from the strong and anxious desire which I entertained to have the matter finally put to rest, that we should have no further innovations nor alterations in the plan of our devoted city, my mind seized upon the first expedient as an alternative, to acquiesce in the opinion suggested of approving the late new plan, with a proviso reserving private rights. That course, in my opinion, would place us (the lot owners) in a worse situation than we would be without the action of Congress on the subject. It would evidently lead to the conclusion that Congress were disposed to sanction even the unauthorized acts of the governor and judges; and particularly the laying out of additional lots in front of those claimed by the proprietors. The reasons assigned by the governor and judges for this last proceeding are merely plausible, but without the color of necessity. There are, also, further objections to their new plat. It may contain many other errors and alterations which it will require time, experience, and careful examination to detect, whereas the plat engraved in 1830 has been in use, and in the hands of the community for which it is designed, for several months past. The corporation of the city (of which I have the honor to be the head) subscribed for twelve copies of this plat, and have since uniformly referred to it on all occasions, without having discovered any errors or objections to it. Under the various circumstances and changes that have been alluded to, it would be hopeless to expect that a plat, perfect in all its parts, and that would meet and obviate all difficulties whatever, could be devised at present. Such a desideratum can only be attained with time, and the observance of great care in the detection and correction of errors and irregularities by the municipal authority of the place.

You will readily have observed, sir, that the difference existing between the governor and judges and the lot owners, particularly since their supplementary explanations, is not material. They have narrowed down their claim, to use their own language, to "a trifling consideration," &c. But the principal point at issue is the principle involved—whether they had a right to lay out more lots, after a lapse of fourteen years, in front of water lots, sold as front lots, bordering the navigable channel? On that subject I had the honor to submit sworn extracts of their resolutions. The testimony of many living witnesses can be adduced to the same effect.

The necessity of these presentments to your honorable committee has not originated with the proprietors. The course adopted by the governor and judges has, nevertheless, placed them under the necessity of self-defence, and the protection of your honorable body, to counteract what was and is still believed to be an unwarrantable violation of private rights.

The undersigned has therefore been induced to subject himself to the expenses and loss of time incident to a journey and sojourn in this capital, principally on account of the foregoing premises. The governor and judges are the agents of the government of the United States whilst acting under the laws of Congress; the wrongs done to individuals by their official acts present at least an equitable claim to the justice of the national government. It is, therefore, respectfully suggested that, to quiet all future controversies, which are always injurious to the prosperity and growth of commercial towns and ruinous to private individuals, the plan of the city of Detroit, published by John Mullet and engraved by J. O. Lewis in 1830, be approved by Congress, reserving to the respective owners of property all private rights which may conflict with said plan; and that the owners of water lots fronting and adjacent to the channel of the river Detroit shall and may be at liberty to dock out, in front of their respective lots, to the navigable channel of said river; and that the power heretofore given to the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan by the acts of Congress passed in the years 1806 and 1830, &c., be revoked, and the said acts repealed; and the settlement of the Detroit fund (so called) be hereafter vested in the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and freemen of the city of Detroit, saving all private rights and claims that have and may accrue against the said fund. All of which is very respectfully submitted.

At the same time permit me, sir, to express, through you, to the members of your honorable committee the grateful sense of feeling which I entertain for the polite and indulgent treatment which I have experienced, for which I ask you, sir, and each member individually, to accept my sincere thanks.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR A GRANT OF LAND FOR A ROAD FROM MADISON TO INDIANOPOLIS, IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 14, 1831.

A JOINT RESOLUTION relative to an appropriation of land to aid in the improvement of the State road leading from Madison to Indianapolis.

Whereas the State road leading from Madison, on the Ohio river, by way of Vernon, Columbus, and Franklin, to Indianapolis has become a mail route of very considerable importance, it being the most direct route from the seat of government of the State of Kentucky to the capital of this State, and—

Whereas a mail stage-coach, last summer and a part of last fall, ran on said State road, but was discontinued in consequence of the bad condition of the same, and—

Whereas the said State road will, in a few years, become one of the most important mail routes in the western country, and one of the principal avenues of communication between the interior of the State and the Ohio river, and—

Whereas the population on and adjacent to said road is so scattering that they are unable to repair the same without aid from some source or other, and—

Whereas there is a great quantity of unappropriated land of an inferior quality lying along and in the vicinity of said road, which has been in market from eleven to twenty years, a small part of which, if appropriated to the repairing said road, would have a tendency to enhance the value of the residue of said land, and be of great advantage to the public by facilitating the transportation of the mail, merchandise, and products of the country: Therefore

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best endeavors to obtain from Congress a donation of twenty-five sections of the said unappropriated land, to be laid out in the improvement of that part of said State road which lies between the north line of Jefferson county and Clifty creek, in Bartholomew county, under the direction and control of the legislature of this State.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing preamble to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

ISAAC HOWK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved December 29, 1830.

21st Congress.] No. 903. [2d Session.

STATEMENT OF ALL LANDS ACQUIRED BY, OR SECURED TO, THE UNITED STATES IN SATISFACTION OF DEBTS, THEIR LOCATION, THE SUMS ALLOWED FOR THEM, AND THEIR VALUE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 14, 1831.

Report from the Secretary of the Treasury, with a statement of all lands acquired by the United States in satisfaction of debts due them, showing where those lands lie, the sums allowed for them, and their probable value, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate.

Treasury Department, February 14, 1831.

Sir: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 20th of May, 1830, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to "report to the Senate at the next session of Congress a statement of all the lands which have been acquired by, or secured to, the United States in satisfaction of debts due to the United States, also where said lands are situated, the sums allowed for them, and their probable value," I have the honor to transmit a report from the Solicitor of the Treasury, which contains the information required, as far as the same is at present known to the department.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. President of the Senate of the United States.

Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, February 11, 1831.

Sir: In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed on the 20th May, 1830, "that the Secretary of the Treasury report to the Senate at the next session of Congress a statement of all the lands which have been acquired by, or secured to, the United States in satisfaction of debts due to the United States, also where such lands are situated, the sums allowed for them, and their probable value," which you referred to this office, I have the honor to lay before you the annexed "statement of lands which have been acquired by, or secured to, the United States in satisfaction of debts due to the United States." The information contained in it has been principally collected from reports to this office, made in answer to a circular issued on the 10th of September last. That circular was addressed to the United States attorneys, marshals, and clerks of the several districts of the United States; to collectors of the customs, of internal duties and direct taxes, and such other persons as it was supposed might probably be trustees or have charge of the property in question. There is no doubt that some persons have been omitted who could give additional information. The statement, however, hereto annexed contains all the information which it has been practicable hitherto to obtain. From this it appears that the aggregate amount of property acquired by, or secured to, the United States in satisfaction of debts, as valued at the time it was set off or secured to them, is $406,418 03. The present value of the property, as estimated by the persons making report of it, is only $236,832 70, showing a probable loss of $169,585 33.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

V. MAXCY, Solicitor of the Treasury.

Hon. Samuel D. Ingham, Secretary of the Treasury.

Statement of lands and other property which have been assigned, set off, or conveyed to the United States, in payment of debts, or conveyed to them in trust for their use, or vested in them by mortgage or other security, for the payment of debts due to the United States.

(a) Ether Shepley, the United States attorney, from whose statement, dated October 7, 1830, this property is entered, says Nos. 1 and 2 may as well be sold for cash; Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 on a credit of six or twelve months; and Nos. 11 and 12 on a credit of six months. No. 10, he says, should be kept as an addition to the lands adjoining Fort Sullivan, and should be included in that lot. No. 13, he says, should be retained for a custom-house and store, and recommends the necessary repairs and alterations to be made for these purposes. The collector at Portland, John Chandler, in his letter dated October 13, 1830, says lot No. 1 is the one-sixth part of a lot of land of 17½ acres, held by the United States in common with others. He recommends that a division should be made of the property so that it may be known how much belongs to the United States, and the boundaries thereof; advises it to be kept for the purpose of building a marine hospital thereon. Lot No. 2, he thinks, would not bring more than $90; is doubtful whether it is best to sell it for what it will now bring; but, if sold, the sale should be for cash. John Mussey, clerk of the United States court, letter dated November 13, 1830, says, respecting Nos. 10, 11, 12, and 13, "if this property is to be sold it should be on a credit, payments semi-annual." The United States attorney, Ether Shepley, says these lands are all in the care of the collectors of the customs of the districts in which they are situate. Lots Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, and 12, ordered by the Solicitor of the Treasury to be sold on the terms recommended by the United States attorney.

(b) Deeded in trust to D. Lane, collector of customs, to secure a judgment against Israel Snow, &c., of Bangor, to be sold, Mr. Lane states, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, at any time after October 23, 1830. The collector, Mr. Lane, states, in his letter of October 1, 1830, the balance due, for which this property was deeded, is about $700. He recommends a sale of it on the best terms he can make, as to credit, provided it can be sold for sufficient to pay the debt. Ordered by the Solicitor to be sold by D. Lane, the collector at Belfast.

(c) Deeded in trust to D. Lane, to secure a judgment against Israel Snow, of Bangor, to be sold, Mr. Lane states, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, at any time after October 28, 1830.

(d) Deeded in trust to D. Lane, collector, by S. Valentine, who was a surety upon duty bonds to the amount of $1,700. Mr. Lane states he has since sold the property, together with a small vessel, for the amount of the debt, $600 of which has been paid. He thinks the balance will be paid sooner, under the present arrangement he has made with respect to the property, than it would be if sold again on a credit.

(e) Deeded in trust to D. Lane, collector, by W. Battie, as security of a debt of $550, assigned to the United States by Huston Bishop, in payment of duty bonds. Mr. Lane thinks it best not to sell this property at present, as he thinks the debt will be paid sooner, under an arrangement he has made with respect to the property, than if it was sold on a credit.

(f) Taken for a duty bond. Thomas McCrate, collector of customs, in his letter dated October 1, 1830, advises sale of this property on the first of December next. One-fourth of the purchase money to be paid in cash, the remainder on a credit of six and twelve months, without interest. Solicitor wrote to Mr. McCrate, November 4, 1830, to sell this property on the terms he proposes.

NOTE.—James W. Ripley, collector of the customs, in his letter of December 23, 1830, recommends the house on lot No. 13, in Eastport, to be kept for a custom-house, store, &c., and that the same be fitted up for that purpose. By direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, January 27, 1831, the Solicitor of the Treasury informed Mr. Ripley that the property would be kept for the purposes he recommends.

(a) Denny McCobb, collector of customs, in his letter dated November 12, 1830, states that this property was set off some years since to the United States, on execution against Thomas, formerly a collector of customs. The land is of inferior quality, in consequence of a fire having run over it and destroyed the timber. Has not been under the care of any agent. The probable value of the property may be $300. Advises a sale on a credit of one, two, and three years. Ordered by the Solicitor to be sold by Denny McCobb, according to his recommendation.

(b) Albert Smith, United States marshal, in his letter dated December 10, 1830, says these lands were taken in October, 1830, on executions in favor of the United States vs. Louis and James Houdelette, and were appraised, according to the laws of the State by three freeholders, at the sum of $2,000. It is said there are incumbrances upon this property, such as prior attachments in suits now pending in the State courts; the value of it cannot, therefore, be ascertained until they are settled; it will, however, fall far short of the appraisement. Is of opinion the land cannot be sold to advantage until the incumbrances are definitively ascertained. When that is done, he is of opinion they should be sold at public auction, on a credit of one and two years.

(c) The collector of the customs, S. A. Morse, in his letter dated November 23, 1830, says these lands were conveyed to the United States by Mr. Ruggles, to satisfy an execution against him for duty bonds. He describes the property thus: "One piece, unimproved, in East Machias, of about six acres, which may be worth $20; one piece in Machiasport of about forty acres, and may be worth $75; and one piece in Machias of fifty acres, which may be worth $5." They being conveyed, he states, by deed with other lands in the district of Passamaquoddy, in which the gross sum is named in the consideration, he cannot state the estimated value of each. Besides these lands he states there is a piece of about one acre situate in Machiasport, being the site of a fort built during the embargo and destroyed by the enemy in 1814, which cost the United States $169, and might now sell for $30. He states that the titles to the above property are clear; and he is of opinion they should be sold for cash. Ordered by the Solicitor of the Treasury to be sold by S. A. Morse, according to his recommendation.

(d) Pierson Cogswell, United States marshal, states in his letter of October 14, 1830, that this is a very small house and store, very much out of repair, and will probably sell for from $500 to $700. Is of the opinion it should be sold for what it will bring; will, agreeably to instructions from the Solicitor the 21st August last, offer it for sale on the 1st of November next.

(e) Conveyed in trust to Timothy Upham, late collector of customs, by Jacob Cutter, for the payment of $1,196 52, the balance due in 1819 on Edward Robert's bond for custom-house duties. Mr. Pickering, the present collector, in his letter dated November 22, 1830, says if this property was sold for cash it would probably sell for not more than $700 or $800. Buildings very much out of repair, and is without a tenant, and has been so ever since Mr. Upham went out of office. Is of the opinion it should not be sold at present, as property will in a few months probably rise in value in Portsmouth, in consequence of the colonial ports being opened, &c. Should, however, it be deemed for the interest of the government to sell now, he thinks it should be sold on a credit of twelve months

(f) Andrew Dunlap, the United States attorney, in his letter of October 5, 1830, states that these lands were levied upon June, 1829, to satisfy thirty executions against William Richie and Ebenezer Dorr, rendered upon certain custom-house bonds. One lot contains about seventy acres, one about seven acres, a piece of meadow land about six and one-half acres, a piece of salt marsh about four acres, and one other lot about three and one-half acres, upon which are the mansion-house, stables, &c. Since the levy Mr. Dorr has remained upon the property, agreeing to pay a reasonable rent for it. He recommends a sale of the property next spring, one-fourth to be paid in cash and the remainder on a credit of three years, payable in equal instalments. Thinks the property would not bring more than $7,000 or $8,000. David Henshaw, collector of the customs, ordered by the Solicitor of the Treasury to sell this property according to the terms recommended by Mr. Dunlap.

(g) The collector of the customs, David Henshaw, in his letter of October 8, 1830, states that a parcel of property was secured to the United States by mortgage, in 1817, by R. & T. Haskins, a portion of which was sold last spring, and towards liquidating their bonds. The balance, viz: 13,000 square feet, was, by authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, in January, 1830, offered for sale, at forty cents per square foot, (the limit;) only thirty cents was bid. He thinks it should be offered again for sale next spring, when it will probably bring thirty-five or forty cents the square foot. Sale ordered accordingly by the Solicitor of the Treasury.

(h) The collector, Samuel Phillips, in his letter dated September 23, 1830, states that this property was set off to the United States, by appraisers duly sworn, at the sum of $3,392 36, to satisfy a debt in part due from Abner Wood on custom-house bond, upon which judgment had been obtained. On one of the lots is a house three stories high, used as a custom-house, for the repairing of which Congress appropriated, at their session of 1827 and 1828, the sum of $300. The other lot is adjoining that on which the custom-house is, and he is of opinion should not be sold so long as the custom-house is used as such by the government, although the lot is at present of very little use. He estimates the whole property as being at present worth about $1,500.

(i) The United States marshal, James Mitchil, in his letter dated October 2, 1830, says this property was taken to secure a large debt ($1,933 89) in the year 1819, due by E. Hotchkiss, &c., on custom-house bonds, at the appraised value of $2,100. Had on it when taken a house, which has since been destroyed by fire. Thinks it would probably bring, if sold now, $450. He recommends a sale of it for cash; in which recommendation Asa Child, the United States attorney, Charles A. Ingersol, the clerk of the court, and William H. Ellis, the collector of the customs, concur. The Solicitor of the Treasury wrote to Mr. Ellis, the collector, November 11, 1830, to sell this property at public auction for cash; which sale, in his letter of December 27, he states has been effected by him, for the sum of $805 cash.

(j) These lots and parcels of land, &c., were mortgaged to the United States February 20, 1825, by Melancthon T. Woolsey, captain of the United States navy, to secure a debt due by him to the United States of $29,459 29, to be paid within one year from the date of the mortgage, with lawful interest; otherwise the property thus mortgaged might thereafter be sold by the United States, as appears from the mortgage, which was filed in the office of the Secretary of the Navy, and transmitted to the Solicitor of the Treasury by the Hon. John Branch, Secretary of the Navy, with a letter from him relative thereto, dated October 5, 1830. The Solicitor of the Treasury, on receiving the above-mentioned mortgage and finding it had never been recorded, wrote to Samuel Beardsley, esq., the United States attorney for the northern district of New York, and enclosed it to him, with a request that he would cause it to be forwarded to the proper office within his district to be recorded, and to give his opinion whether the property mortgaged could now be sold to advantage and on what terms. In Mr. Beardsley's answer, dated November 24, 1830, he says: "The mortgage not having been recorded and most of the lands embraced in it having been sold on judgments against Captain Woolsey, I am inclined to think that the United States will not be able to realise much upon it. On November 24, 1817, a judgment was rendered in the supreme court of New York in favor of the bank of Utica, against said Woolsey, for debt, $16,000, and cost $14 43; real amount to be paid was $8,485 47. The lien of this judgment on the real estate expired at the end of ten years, that is, in 1827; but a large part of the judgment remained unpaid. In February, 1828, I was employed by the bank to revive the judgment by scire facias, and collect the amount due. The judgment was accordingly revived, and the record on the scire facias signed, and the judgment docketed July 9, 1828. Upon these judgments executions were issued to the counties of Jefferson and St. Lawrence. The twelfth and thirteenth parcels of land embraced in the mortgage were sold January 30, 1829, and purchased by the bank; and on May 15, 1830, the time of redemption under the laws of the State having expired, a deed was given to the bank, and which deed was recorded the 17th of said May. On the execution to Jefferson, the seven first parcels mentioned in the mortgage were sold November 24, 1828, and purchased by the bank. The time of redemption having expired, deeds for these lots were executed May 3, 1830, and recorded same day. It appears to me that by these deeds the bank has obtained a title free and clear from the operation of the mortgage. Had the mortgage been recorded it might have been otherwise. I know nothing but what the mortgage may operate on the eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh parcels of land mentioned in it. I do not perceive, however, that it will be of any use to have it recorded in St. Lawrence county. You ask 'whether the property could now be sold to advantage, and on what terms?' The preceding part of this letter disposes of this inquiry in reference to most of the lands; but I apprehend that the United States cannot lawfully sell any part of these lands until the equity of redemption of the mortgager is regularly foreclosed. As to the value of the parcels of land not sold, as above stated, I have written to make inquiries on that subject, and will again address you upon it." In a subsequent letter received from Mr. Beardsley, dated December 30, 1830, on the subject of this property, he says: "In explanation of this letter, I beg leave to refer to that of the 24th ultimo. The 8th parcel of land therein mentioned, (a ten-acre lot,) I learn, is possessed by Captain Woolsey's agent, and that it is now worth $20 per acre. The ninth parcel (Snake and Gull islands) is said to be worth $100; a doubt, however, is suggested as to the title being in Captain Woolsey; probably, however, it is. The tenth parcel (a tract of 143¾ acres) was purchased by contract by Captain Woolsey, March 26, 1816, to be paid for in five years; at what price I have not ascertained. He made considerable payments, but never paid in full. Probably the interest of Captain Woolsey (if he had any at date of mortgage) was worth but little. The pews in the meeting-house at Sackett's harbor are embraced in the tenth parcel; they are worth but a mere trifle. The eleventh parcel, (20 acres, held by contract,) I learn that Elisha Camp now has a deed for this lot; that he bought Captain Woolsey's contract from his agent, Z. Platt; and then, on paying up the contract, received a deed. Thus it seems probable that the mortgage interest dwindles down to Snake and Gull islands, $100, and the ten-acre lot, $200. The mortgage has been recorded in Jefferson county. Please inform me what I shall do with it." The Solicitor of the Treasury, in his letter to Mr. Beardsley, January 4, 1831, directed him to sell all the property he can come at forthwith, in the best way his judgment may suggest; leaving it with himself also to judge of the necessity of foreclosing the mortgage, or otherwise, and to return the mortgage to him, unless he wishes to retain it in the event of a suit.

(a) This property was conveyed in the year 1818, in trust, to Colonel George Bomford, of the Ordnance department, at its then appraised value, by Peter Townsend, liable for the judgment of the United States against him for $54,601 92. Col. Bomford, in his letter, dated November 4, 1830, says this property was conveyed to him, in trust, by Peter Townsend, as security for the faithful performance of his contract with the government for cannon, upon which the above judgment was recovered. At the time the conveyance was made the property was assessed at $5,000, at which price it has consequently since been held; but, though several purchasers have presented themselves subsequently, none have been willing to give that much for it, and it has not been sold. He says the property has been for some time past, in some measure, under the care of Gouverneur Kimble, esq., who resides in the neighborhood, and who has recently advised him there is an applicant for its purchase, and wishes to know the lowest price he is to accept for it. He is in hopes $3,000 may be obtained; but it is much deteriorated from the decay of the buildings, and still growing worse. The Solicitor of the Treasury wrote to Colonel Bomford November 10, 1830, and requested him to inform Mr. Kimble that he might sell the property for that sum, and to cause the money, after deducting expenses, to be deposited in the Branch Bank of the United States to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, on account of the judgment against Mr. Townsend.

(b) This property was mortgaged to the United States by Mr. Swartwout, navy agent at New York, July 3, 1822, to secure a debt due by him to the United States of about $75,000. Garret D. Wall, the United States attorney, in his letter of December 7, 1830, says: "I see no good reason to suppose that any advantage will result to the Utates States from continuing to hold real property in this State, as there is no prospect of its rising in value." Ordered by the Solicitor to be sold.

(c) Mr. Wall, the United States attorney, says this property was mortgaged by Mr. Arnold, March 20, 1830, to secure the payment of a bond for $472 50, with interest thereon, to be paid in one and two years from date of mortgage.*

(d) Mr. Wall, the United States attorney, says this property was mortgaged, March 20, 1830, to secure the payment of a bond for $200, with interest thereon, to be paid in one and two years from date of mortgage.*

(e) Mr. Wall, the United States attorney, says this property was mortgaged by Abraham Bloodgood, March 20, 1830, to secure the payment of two bonds given by him, each for $118 33⅓, with interest, to be paid in one and two years from date of mortgage.*

(f) Mr. Wall, the United States attorney, says this property was mortgaged by Mr. Arnold, September 14, 1830, to secure the payment of a bond of that date for $583 06, payable one year thereafter, with interest.*

(g) Mr. Wall, the United States attorney, says this property was mortgaged by Mr. Kearney, March 20, 1830, to secure the payment of his three bonds, each for $297 83, payable January 1, 1831, 1832, and 1833, with interest.*

(h) Mr. Wall, the United States attorney, says this property was mortgaged by Mr. Arnold, March 20, 1830, to secure the payment of two bonds, each for $2,199 17, payable in one and two years, with interest from date of mortgage.*

* These mortgages were given by the purchasers of Robert Arnold's property at the sale made by the United States marshal, March 10, 1830, in virtue of a warrant of distress issued to him from the Treasury Department, for the payment of which they gave their bonds, as here stated. The bonds, the marshal, Zephaniah Drake, says were for two-thirds of the amount for which the property was purchased in all the cases except that of Jacob Arnold, which was for one-half.

(a) This property was bid off to the United States at a sale of real property of Robert Arnold, late collector of the customs at Perth Amboy, made by the United States marshal on the 10th of March, 1830, in virtue of a warrant of distress issued to him by the Treasury Department. Zephaniah Drake, the United States marshal, says it was bid off to prevent a sacrifice, and is worth more than the sums here stated, at which it was bought. James Parker, the collector, in his letter of October 5, 1830, says, "it would be to the interest of the United States to sell the property, but a sale could not probably be made until next winter or spring. A private sale, it is believed, would be preferable to a sale at vendue, inasmuch as there is little or no demand for it. One-third should be required in cash, on giving possession, and the residue on a credit of one or two years."

(b) Deeded to William H. Crawford, late Secretary of the Treasury, by William L. Young and wife, for the benefit of the United States, to secure a debt due from Young for duty bonds taken in Baltimore, Maryland. John N. Barker, collector of customs, in his letter, dated September 20, 1830, says this property has been sold to a Mr. McAllister, of that city, for $4,050, less expenses, which he is ready to pay on receiving a legal title. On the 15th September, 1830, a letter was received from Nathaniel Williams, esq., enclosing one to the Hon. William H. Crawford, with a deed to be executed by him for this property, which was, on the day following, transmitted to him by the Solicitor of the Treasury. The Solicitor wrote again to Mr. Crawford, December 15, on the subject. Deed returned, and sent to N. Williams by Solicitor, January 17, 1831.

(c) Alexander Brackenridge, United States attorney, in his letter of October 9, 1830, says that the whole of the property was conveyed by deed to the United States in March and April, 1824, in part payment for a debt due from the Uniontown Bank, together with sundry judgments in Fayette county, for the residue of the debt, amounting to $5,022 26, a part of which has been paid. He considers the property (for which he has acted as agent and trustee of the United States) as probably worth the sums he has estimated them at; but as the care and management of it is troublesome and expensive, he advises that the agent be authorized to advertise and offer it for sale; and if two-thirds of its probable value is bid for it, to be paid one-fourth or one-third in hand, the residue in one, two, and three years, with interest, the payments to be secured by mortgage, to sell it. Ordered by the Solicitor to be sold on the terms recommended by the district attorney.

(d) Nathaniel Williams, United States attorney, in his letter dated September 21, 1830, says this property was conveyed to him, December 29, 1824, by Keller and Foreman, sureties of Finley and Vanlear, to secure a debt due by them to the United States of $2,698 30; since which they have paid $1,000, and promise to pay one-half of the balance due on January 1, 1831, and the remaining half in six months thereafter; which he believes they will certainly do. The debt, he states, is perfectly secure.

(e) This property, Mr. Williams says, was assigned to James H. McCulloch, collector of the customs at Baltimore, to secure Jacob Graff's duty bonds; that he has obtained a decree in Baltimore county court for the sale of the property. In his letter of September 21, 1830, he says Mr. John Glenn and himself are the trustees, and that they will advertise the sale of the property "this week."

(f) This property was sold by the United States marshal, under a warrant of distress issued from the Treasury Department, on account of a debt due by Thos. B. Hall, late collector of internal duties and direct taxes, and purchased by Thomas Kennedy, of Hagerstown, agent for the United States. Mr. Kennedy, in his letter of December 4, 1830, says this property has been lately sold by him for the sum of $15,000; of which $10,000 are to be paid soon, the residue to bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid.

(g) Sold by the United States marshal to satisfy two judgments against Ludwell Lee, one for $8,000, and the other for $2,000, with interest from December 1, 1819, on bonds assigned by William C. Nicholas on account of a debt due the United States by Edmund Randolph, and purchased in behalf of the United States, October 11, 1830, for $3,950. Mr. Stanard says, in his letter of October 12, 1830, that he is of the opinion the property is worth double the sum for which it was bid in for the United States.

(h) The collector of the customs, O. Whittle, in his letter dated October 23, 1830, says this property was conveyed in trust by Daniel Stone, the surety of Fortesque Whittle, on a duty bond for $1,322 69, due December 8, 1819, to Alexander Tunstall, of Norfolk, by deed duly recorded, for the purpose of securing the suspension of an execution taken out against him in 1826. The suspension expired in May, 1827. He is of the opinion that the property would realize the amount due on it, over and above the personal responsibility of Mr. Stone, "which is good."

(i) The collector of the customs at Richmond, James Gibbon, in his letter of November 28, 1830, says "there is a piece of property at Bermuda hundred, in this district, which I believe was purchased by Colonel Heth, the then collector, for the use of his office, and paid for by the United States. The property is of little value. The house that was put on it for an office is in a dilapidated State." The deed for this property, he supposes, must have been deposited somewhere in the Treasury Department, so far back, perhaps, as in the time of Mr. Hamilton or Mr. Wolcott, former Secretaries of the Treasury. He recommends a sale of the property.

(j) This property was, by direction of the Solicitor of the Trea-ury, September 3, 1830, to the collector of the customs, Levi Fagan, bid in for the United States for $2,506, under a sale of the property of Mr. Ely, to satisfy several executions against him for duty bonds to the amount of $3,543 67, exclusive of interest. Mr. Fagan states, in his letter dated October 8, 1830, that in ordinary times this property would rent annually for about $300, exclusive of a safe room well adapted for a custom-house. It stands in the centre of a business part of the town, is well built, and will no doubt remain good for many years. Mr. Ely, he says, intends petitioning government for time to redeem it, or to allow him a better price for it. If it is sold, he recommends a credit of one, two, or three years to be given for the purchase money. Mr. Fagan estimates the property to be worth $4,000.

(k) Joseph Owen, the collector of the customs, in his letter dated October 14, 1830, says "these lands were conveyed by John F. Bergwin to General Joseph Swift, by deed, dated September 5, 1820, to satisfy two judgments obtained at the spring term of the circuit court for the district of North Carolina against Benjamin Smith, one for $3,251, with interest from November 28, 1803, the other for $3,251 07, with interest from November 28, 1803. These facts are collected from the deed of trust, as I have no knowledge of them; and the origin of the debt due by Smith is not known here. It is believed that indulgence was granted to Smith by the United States. General Joseph Swift (residence not known) was the United States agent for these lands. Since he left North Carolina, there has been no agent appointed by the United States, or by him. Benjamin Smith has been dead six years. John F. Bergwin removed to Newbern, North Carolina, ten or twelve years ago, and none of the parties to the deed of trust are now living in this section of the State. These lands have been generally sold for the debts of Smith; but the United States attorney for North Carolina has instituted suit for them. It is supposed they will be recovered for the United States; and if so, it would be advisable to sell them. The sale should be on a liberal credit—two or three years at least—to realize the prices at which they are estimated.

(b) John Patterson, the United States marshal, in his letter dated October 13, 1830, says: "On the 15th of May last, Samuel Herrick, then United States attorney, purchased this property, in behalf of the United States, for the sum of $1,590. The two first mentioned lots, with their improvements, have been rented out by him till the 1st of April next at the rate of $80 per annum. The half lot is unimproved and unproductive." He recommends a sale of the property, one-third to be paid in hand; for the residue a credit of one and two years, with interest, to be given. On these terms he thinks it would bring cost. The property was sold under an execution against Peter Wilson, late receiver of public moneys. Ordered by the Solicitor to be sold on the terms recommended by the marshal.

(c) John H. Hanna, clerk of the United States district court, in his letter dated October 14, 1830, enclosing a copy of the deed of trust from Peter Voorhies and wife, dated October 17, 1821, for these tracts of land and lots of ground in the town of Frankfort, also sundry notes of hand, and judgments mentioned therein, to George M. Bibb, Daniel Weisinger, and Alexander J. Mitchell, sureties of said Voorhies, to satisfy the debt due by him to the United States of $27,614 13, for which judgment was obtained in 1822, says: "George M. Bibb, esq , the surviving trustee, is the only person who can give correct information in regard to this property. That at the time Voorhies deeded the property, there was a lien of $1,000 on a farm near Frankfort, which farm was sold by consent of all parties; and that Mr. Bibb, then United States attorney, he understood, purchased it for the benefit of the trust; and when the rents should be sufficient to discharge the $1,000, with interest and such charges as might be incurred in keeping the property in repair, the purchase was to inure to the benefit of the trust. The other property embraced in the deed had been previously mortgaged for more than it was worth, or the title thereto in such difficulty as not to be worth investigating, except, perhaps, 1,000 acres on Salt river may be unincumbered. Judgments have not been obtained against the sureties. Suits still pending. They now believe that they cannot be made liable." The Solicitor of the Treasury wrote to Mr. Bibb, October 25, 1830, for information respecting the property, &c., &c.; no answer received. Mr. Voorhies was formerly United States district paymaster. The Solicitor wrote to Mr Bibb again, February 5, 1831.

(d) James Collingsworth, the United States attorney, in his letter of October 3, 1830, says this property was purchased by him for the United States the 30th of June last, for the sum of $1,300, on account of the debt due from Mr. Anderson as colonel of 24th infantry; that he has acted as the United States agent for the same. He was directed by the agent of the treasury, S. Pleasonton, February 24, 1830, to sell the property; but could not obtain the sum at which it was limited, $3,000. He thinks $2,000 might be had for it on a credit of one, two, and three years. Ordered by the Solicitor to be sold on the terms recommended by the United States attorney.

(e) James Collingsworth, the United States attorney, says this property was sold as the property of Andrew Erwin, on account of a judgment against him of $39,005 15, on account of duty bonds, and purchased by Thomas H. Fletcher, as agent for the United States, November 1, 1828, for the sum of $5,100: but is claimed by James Erwin, who is in possession of it, and against whom an action of ejectment is now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Tennessee; consequently, it cannot be sold or disposed of to advantage until the termination of the suit. He estimates the property to be worth from ten to fifteen thousand dollars.

(f) John A. McKinney, United States attorney, in his letter dated November 18, 1830, says these lots were purchased by him in behalf of the United States, in April, 1830, at a sale by the United States marshal of Richard Mitchell's property, to satisfy a judgment on account of the debt due from him to the United States as late collector of internal duties. The lot in Greenville was purchased for $250, and is estimated by him to be worth from $400 to $500. He is of the opinion it should be sold on a credit of six, twelve, and eighteen months; it is now under rent for $15 per annum. The lot in Rogersville was in like manner purchased by him for $50; the title to it is, however, considered doubtful. There is a suit pending in the chancery court at Rogersville, brought by John Blivins against Mitchell for the property, which is expected to terminate in May next. If it should be determined against Blivins, Mr. McKinney recommends the filing of a bill, on the part of the United States, against Mitchell, to have the title of the United States to the lot completed; and then, he thinks, it would sell for from five hundred to one thousand dollars. The property is under his care; and a mechanic who resides on it has agreed to pay a nominal rent for it.

(g) M. H. McAllister, the United States attorney, in his letter dated December 1, 1830, says this property was mortgaged to secure the payment of three bonds, each for $554 08, bearing interest from July 28, 1823, payable April 29, 1825, 1826, and 1827, which were given by Robert W. Pooler, Caroline M. Frazier, and Rebecca M. Pooler, to secure a debt due to the United States from John Pooler, deceased, late commissioner of loans and agent for paying invalid pensioners of $1,692 24. He does not describe the property, but estimates it to be worth about $2,000. He says that the very low price of real estate in the city of Savannah has delayed a foreclosure of the mortgage. The Solicitor of the Treasury wrote to Mr. McAllister, December 11, 1830, instructing him to bring suit on the bonds, unless payment be made by the parties on their being informed of that instruction.

(h) John Stevens, the collector of the customs at Savannah, says, in his letter dated October 5, 1830, this property was purchased by the United States, and had on it a custom-house and other buildings, which were destroyed by fire in the year 1820.

(i) The collector of the customs at New Orleans, Martin Gordon, in his letter dated November 24, 1830, says, "the government have a just and equitable claim to all the vacant lands situate between the city of New Orleans and the river Mississippi, and in front of the city, which is fully described in a plan which I have now the honor to transmit herewith. This claim comprehends five blocks in front of the city, all of irregular form, and marked number 1 to B on the plan. On the block number 2 is situate the custom-house. The balance is claimed as belonging to the city of New Orleans; and a suit is now pending in the district court of the United States on an injunction obtained by the municipality of this city against the sale of a part of this property." The property in question, he states, "if sold for one-third cash, and a credit of one and two years for the balance, would bring nearly six hundred thousand dollars, if not fully that amount." Further information has been called for by the Solicitor of the Treasury.

(j) The bank transferred to the United States, as collateral security for the payment of the debt due from it, sundry mortgages, notes of hand, and judgments, amounting in the whole to $49,080 59. No specific description of the property has been furnished. An agent is appointed to collect and pay over the proceeds. The district attorney, Samuel Judah, in his letter of October 4, 1830, expresses an opinion, from an examination made by him in the present year, that the debt due to the United States from the bank may be collected without loss to the government.

(a) In 1821 Jesse B. Thomas, an agent for the government, made an arrangement with the Bank of Vincennes, by virtue of which these tracts of land and lots of ground, with other securities, were conveyed to trustees for the benefit of the United States. It appears, however, from a detailed report made the 12th of August, 1830, by Samuel Judah, the United States attorney, in relation to this conveyance, that the title to some of the property has been contested. A suit is pending in the supreme court of Indiana in relation to it, which he is of the opinion will be decided in favor of the United States. He estimates the probable value of the tracts of land and lots of ground to be about $12,340; and in his letter of October 4, 1830, he says that it is clearly his opinion, from a personal examination of all the property, that it should be sold; the terms, one-fourth cash, the balance in three instalments, secured by mortgage.

(b) Joseph Conway, United States marshal, in his letter dated October 26, 1830, says, "these lands were bid off to the United States at marshal's sale, in the year 1828, at the court-house in the town of Edwardsville, by him, at the request of S. Breeze, then United States attorney, for the sum of $698 29, on account of the judgment of the United States against the president, directors, and company of the Bank of Edwardsville, for $53,442 86. Says that he understood, however, after he bid them in, that they had been previously sold for taxes, and were forfeited.

(c) This property was mortgaged to the United States June 17, 1830, by Robertson and Barnwell, to secure the payment of several duty bonds, amounting to $12,014 29, payable at various periods from the 21st June to the 26th October, 1830. Previously, however, to their all becoming due, the United States attorney for the southern district of Alabama, John Elliot, was instructed to give them an indulgence of one, two, and three years, upon their confessing judgment on the bonds as they became due, and securing the payments to the satisfaction of himself and the collector, George W. Owen. The attorney says the probable value of this property, if sold for cash, is from eight to ten thousand dollars.

(d) These lots were mortgaged by George Davis and his wife to John B. Hogan, which mortgage was turned over to the United States by Mr. Hogan as collateral security for the payment of a debt due by him to the United States as a paymaster. The principal and interest on the debt for which the mortgage was given, according to a decree of foreclosure had at the November term, 1829, of the circuit court of Mobile county, is $4,019 69. John Elliot, the United States attorney, says in his letter dated October 11, 1830, this property will be sold under the decree on or before the first Monday in December next, and may possibly bring that sum; but as the sale will be for cash, he is of the opinion it will not command more than two-thirds of it. The proceeds will be applied to the credit of the balance due on Hogan's debt, which is $11,822 79.

(e) These lots were mortgaged by Benjamin Vincent and his wife to John B. Hogan, to secure the payment of a debt of $4,500 due to him by said Vincent. This mortgage, Mr. Elliot says, was not legally assigned to the United States, but was turned over as collateral security by Hogan, under the express understanding that the United States were to have the benefit of it; and his predecessor received on the 15th March, 1828, in part payment thereof, the sum of $1,000. He did not, however, institute legal proceedings for the recovery of the amount yet due on it. The Hon. W. R. King represented to the Solicitor of the Treasury that this property would sell to better advantage on a credit than for cash; upon which the Solicitor instructed the attorney, John Elliot, January 3, 1831, that if he was of that opinion, to sell it on a credit of one, two, and three years, or for one-fourth cash, and the residue on one, two, and three years credit, with interest, the payments to be secured to his entire satisfaction.

(f) The United States attorney for the northern district of Alabama, Byrd Brandon, in his letter, dated October 2, 1830, says, General John Brahan, receiver of public moneys at Huntsville, executed two bonds for $40,981 60 each, dated the 23d October, 1819, payable at nine and eighteen months after date; to secure the payment of which, he at the same time executed a deed of trust to Obadiah Jones, Clement C. Clay, John W. Walker, Le Roy Pope, and John Reed, as trustees for the United States, for a considerable quantity of real and personal property. He is not able to state how much of this property has been converted into funds by Colonel Pope; but believes the land has all been disposed of except 140 acres, which he describes as being part of the northeast quarter of section 2, in township 4, range 1 west. What its probable value may be he does not state.

(g) These lands were mortgaged to the United States by Mr. Strother, June 22, 1826, for the purpose of securing a debt due from him to the United States, as receiver of public moneys, of $32,830 55. The debt has been reduced, by subsequent statements at the Treasury, to $20,631 86. In a letter received from R. A. Ewing, clerk of the United States court for the district of Missouri, dated the 10th October, 1830, in which he gives a full description of this property, he says a bill in chancery was filed in that office by the United States district attorney on the 28th January, 1829, to have this mortgage foreclosed.

(h) George C. Sibley was a surety on certain custom-house bonds; and at a sale of his property, made by the United States marshal to satisfy the debt, these five tracts of land were bid in to the United States, at the prices stated, by Beverly Allen, the former United States agent. The present agent, George Shannon, says, in his letter of the 29th November, 1830, that his information in relation to the property is so vague and uncertain that he can give no satisfactory opinion as to its present value. He does not, however, believe it will bring the sum given for it, $6,680. He thinks, from its local situation, that there is no prospect of its appreciating in value, and that it ought to be sold. Sale ordered accordingly by the Solicitor of the Treasury.

(a) On this lot there are two tenements—one large brick house, rented for $20 per month; and one smaller dwelling, rented for $12 per month.
(b) On this lot there is a brick store and dwelling-house, now rented at $500 per annum.
(c) On this lot is a row of one-story brick buildings, called Jones's row. This property is valuable and productive; but the title of the United States is considered by the agent as worth nothing.
(d) This lot adjoins the one described above as renting for $500 per annum: both lots together constitute a lot of 200 feet deep by 28 feet wide. They are estimated to be worth $8,000; and it is believed that they will command a higher price if sold together than they would if sold separately.
(e) This lot has on it a stone warehouse; but being rather out of the way of business, it remains vacant.
(f) A stone dwelling-house and other improvements on this lot. It has never been in possession of the agent of the United States; and their claim to it under the purchase is supposed to be very doubtful. Mr. Shannon says this property is very valuable.
(g) This lot is said to be vacant; and the title supposed by Mr. Shannon to be not good.
(h) All the interest of the United States in the six lots first described, and all their interest in the four lots, Nos. 9, 10, 11, and 12, had been sold, says Mr. Shannon, by Colonel Strother and other agents appointed for that purpose, previous to the date of his late conveyance to the United States: which fact was not communicated by Col. Strother to the agents, nor was it known to them at the time he made the conveyance to the United States. The title to the tract of land containing 3,000 arpents is considered of no value. The property secondly, thirdly, and fourthly described, (being unimproved, and some of it of equivocal title,) Mr. Shannon says we (the agents) are unable to estimate satisfactorily to ourselves. We concur, however, in the opinion that it should be sold for what it will bring. Sale ordered accordingly by the Solicitor of the Treasury.
(i) This property under rent for $3 a month.
(k) These five tracts together constitute the Langham place, having upon it a frame dwelling-house, stable, two small out-houses, log kitchen, some fruit trees, and about sixty acres of it enclosed. The buildings are all in a state of dilapidation, and the fences so far decayed as to be nearly useless. The rent will not put it and keep it in tolerable repair. It is now rented for $100 per year. John Malanphy holds a mortgage on an arpent and a half wide by twenty arpents deep of it, inconveniently dividing the improved portion of the tract, to secure the payment of a debt more than double the land mortgaged. This portion of the tract may be considered as worse than of no value to the United States, as it will probably injure the sale of the residue. Excluding that portion covered by Malanphy's mortgage, the residue, Mr. Shannon says, may bring some $8 per acre.

NOTE.—The whole of this property, from No. 1 to 9, was purchased by George F. Strother, agent for the United States, at sheriff's sale, and was conveyed to him in trust for the United States, the first parcel in the year 1823, the eighth in the year 1824, and the others in the year 1827, under several executions in favor of the Bank of Missouri, for the benefit of the United States, against the parties whose names are opposite to each number; which property was, by nine deeds signed and acknowledged by Mr. Strother the 16th July, 1830, conveyed to the United States, and were placed in the hands of George Shannon, United States attorney, and Benjamin O. Fallan, to whom the agency heretofore confided to Mr. Strother was, by the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 29th May, 1830, transferred. In their report to the Solicitor of the Treasury, dated November 12, 1830, from which the above entries are made, they say, from various considerations, they are of opinion that the whole of the property should be sold at auction, under certain restrictions, for cash.

(a) George Shannon, United States attorney, in his letter, dated November 29, 1830, says: "On the 7th day of February, 1823, judgment was obtained against Abraham Gallatin, one of the sureties of John W. Thomson, late collector of internal revenue; the other surety, William C. Carr, was not sued, but he assumed the payment of one-half of the judgment, (which was for $3,000, the penalty of the official bond,) and Gallatin and wife, by their deed, dated January 1, 1825, conveyed this property to Edward Bates, of St. Louis, in trust, to secure to the United States the payment of the other $1,500 of the said judgment. The tract of land of 80 arpents has been sold by Mr. Bates and Mr. Gallatin to Dr. John Young, who resides on it, for $1,000. The sum of $500 of the purchase money has been paid to Mr. Gallatin, and $250 to Mr. Bates; and Dr. Young says he is ready to pay the other $250 so soon as he can obtain a title to the land. This balance, with the two lots in the city of St. Louis, he considers amply sufficient to pay Mr. Gallatin's debt to the government."

(b) The only information obtained in relation to this property is from a statement made by John Winder, the clerk of the United States district court, Missouri, October 7, 1830, furnished by John Leib, United States marshal, viz: "Judgment in favor of the United States, October 10, 1822, vs. James McCloskey, for $3,398 68 January 31, 1824, execution venditioni exponas returned into court without service, by direction of the attorney for the United States, he having been authorized to stay proceedings on defendant's turning over certain property, to wit, lands, which was done, and title made to the United States."

(c) In relation to this property Mr. Winder says: "Judgment in favor of the United States, September 10, 1823, vs. Conant and McCloskey, administrators of Otis Fisher, deceased, for $2,461 86. October 11, 1824, execution returned, 'property set off to plaintiffs at appraisal.' Property sold at auction, by direction of the Treasury Department, for $600, to Col. Josiah Snelling." John Leib, the present marshal, in his letter, dated October 8, 1830, says Thomas Rowland, the former marshal, being absent from home, and not expected to return for some short time, he is unable to give any further information in relation to these cases; but as soon as Mr. Rowland returns, will apply to him for information relative thereto.

(d) Thomas Swann, United States attorney, says, in his letter of October 9, 1830: "The late Franklin Bank of Alexandria, some time in the year 1822, made a transfer to William H. Crawford, then Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, of all their property and debts, to secure the payment of the sum of $48,000, due from that bank to the United States. The terms and conditions upon which this transfer was made will more fully appear in a deposition which I gave to a committee of Congress in the year 1824, a copy of which I here enclose. Since that deposition was given, I have tried the suits at law upon the indorsed notes therein mentioned; and after a full argument of one of the cases, the court gave judgment against the United States, being of opinion that after the dissolution of the bank the blank indorsements upon the notes could not be filled up so as to authorize suits to be brought in the name of the United States. In consequence of this decision I varied my course of proceeding, and instituted a suit in chancery against all the debtors of the bank, as well the stock debtors as the others; which suit is now pending in the Alexandria court. Among the property belonging to this bank were some lots in Alexandria, given to secure the payments of debts due to the bank. I cannot state the extent or value of this property, but I believe its value cannot exceed $2,000. I am not aware of any other real estate in which this bank is interested, except a tract of land in the county of Prince William, in Virginia, about which a suit is now pending in the Fredericksburg court, under the care of Messrs. Barton and Berry." The amount of claims assigned by the bank is stated to be, according to the list filed with the bill in chancery, $136,222.

(e) Tench Ringgold, United States marshal, in his letter, November 9, 1830, says these lots were bid into the United States by Edward Fox, jr., agent, appointed for the United States by William H. Crawford, then Secretary of the Treasury, at public sale, by authority of a writ of fieri facias, issued from the district court of common pleas in the State of South Carolina, at the suit of the United States against Nathaniel Ingraham and Henry Ingraham, in the year 1821, for the sum of $30 29. He says they are at this time of small value, and recommends that they be put under the care of Joseph Elgar, Commissioner of Public Buildings, &c.

(f) This property was assigned to the United States district attorney for Maryland, for the use of the United States, in the year 1818, by Charles L. Kaulkman, to secure the payment of certain duty bonds given by him, and was, by direction of Joseph Anderson, esq., Comptroller of the Treasury, on the 3d of February, 1823, sold by Tench Ringgold, United States marshal, to a certain James Spratt for the sum of $319 61½. He, however, died shortly after he purchased the property, and his widow, who is in the possession of it, has not, as yet, complied with the terms of sale and purchase by paying the purchase money, which, with interest thereon up to the 3d of November, 1830, amounts to the sum of $468 21½. Mr Ringgold, in his letter referred to above, says: "Mrs Spratt has refrained from paying the money because (as she alleges) of a lawsuit existing between her and the heirs of her late husband, which has, however, been lately settled by the Supreme Court. She has, he says, begged indulgence for a few weeks to enable her to consult her counsel, Messrs. Key and Jones, promising him if they advised her to pay the debt to do so very soon."

(g) Thomas Turner, the collector of the customs, says, in his lett-r, dated October 9, 1830, "this property was mortgaged to the United States by John Kurtz, merchant of this place, several years ago, during the lifetime of John Barnes, my predecessor in office, to secure the payment of bonds due by said Kurtz and a certain Washington Bowie to the amount of $1.633 08; that its present value is about $3,000; that the sale of it has been postponed from time to time through applications by Mr. Kurtz to the agent of the treasury, he having regularly paid up the interest on the bonds to the 29th November, 1829; that Mr. Kurtz has been offered lately $3,000 for the property, but he asks $3,400 for it; which sum he expects he will procure very shortly, and will then pay the debt due."

(h) George Brent, the collector of the customs, says this property was conveyed to the United States by Mr. Jackson, but for what consideration is unknown to him. It is subject to a ground rent of $250, and is now under rent for $120 per annum. If it was not subject to ground rent he thinks it would be worth $1,200. The conveyance made by Jackson, he says, is not upon record.

(i) Mr. Brent says this property was conveyed to the United States by William N. Mills and wife, for what consideration is also unknown to him. It is subject to a ground rent of $51 25, and is now under rent at $42 per annum. If it was not subject to ground rent he thinks it would be worth $700.

(k) Mr. Brent says this property was bid in to the United States in 1823 by a former collector of the customs for $150, at a sale of the marshal of this district, but the amount of debt for which it was sold, and against whom the debt was, he does not state. He says it is subject to a ground rent of $16, and is now under rent for $24 per annum. It does not appear, however, he says, that any claim for ground rent has ever been made since the late collector purchased the property. If it was not subject to ground rent he thinks it would be worth $300.

(l) This property was bid in to the United States in 1823 by a former collector of the customs for $660, at a sale of the marshal of this district, on account of the debt (amount not known) due to the United States by A. Lynn Mr. Brent says: "I have been offered $300 cash for this property, which I consider its full value." The Solicitor directed Mr. Brent, October 16, 1830, to sell the property for what he had been offered, which was accordingly done; and a deed therefor has since been given to the purchaser by the Solicitor.

(a) This property was conveyed in trust to Humphrey Peake, late collector of the customs, and Thomas Swann, United States attorney, by Camillus Griffith, who was committed to prison under several executions against him for $102,093 15, due from him to the United States as late contractor for supplying the army in the late war. A schedule of the property was furnished by Mr. Brent, and is filed in the Solicitor's office. The supposed value or amount of property therein not stated.

(b) This property was conveyed in trust to Humphrey Peake, late collector of the customs, and Thomas Swann, United States attorney, for the use of the United States, on account of the debt (amount not stated) due by Mr. Fitzgerald. Mr. Brent says: "This property, I understand, has been sold; part of the money appears, from the records of this office, to have been paid into the treasury; the balance yet remains to be accounted for."

(c) This property, Mr. Brent says, was conveyed to the United States on account of the debt (amount not known) due by Mr. Marsteller. He states it was under the care of Edmund J. Lee, clerk of the United States circuit court, and, from information he has received, believes a part of it has been sold.

(d) Edmund J. Lee, clerk of the United States circuit court, Alexandria, says, in his letter, dated October 18, 1830, "that on the 29th of May, 1830, William H. Dundas, then residing in Baltimore, made a deed, conveying to William H. Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury, and his successors in office, in payment of a debt (amount not stated) due by him to the United States on duty bonds, on which judgments had been rendered in the United States courts in Maryland, and on which executions had issued, and he taken into custody, all his real, personal, and mixed estate, and particularly one-eighth undivided part of the estate of John Dundas, late of Alexandria, and to which he was entitled as one of the children of the said John Dundas; which deed has been duly recorded." He says he is not able to state the amount of the judgments, the situation, or value of the property.

(e) This property was conveyed in mortgage deed to William H. Crawford, then Secretary of the Treasury, in the year 1820, by Luther Rice, to secure the payment of $14,000, due from the said Rice to the United States; and, subsequently, by deed, bearing date October 13, 1828, it was conveyed to the United States by the said Luther Rice, Robert B. Semple, president of the board of trustees, and Enoch Reynolds, treasurer of the Columbia College, in the District of Columbia, for the consideration of the above-mentioned sum of $14,000, for the payment of which it had been mortgaged. This property has since been sold by the district attorney, who had been appointed agent for the purpose, to William A. Davis, of Washington city, by written agreement, dated August 4, 1830, on the following terms and conditions, viz: The said Davis is forthwith to put repairs upon the buildings and premises to the amount of at least $1,000, and is to furnish to the Solicitor of the Treasury the proper and necessary vouchers for the said expenditure; and he is to occupy the said premises from the period of his obtaining possession of the same, for and during the term of two years. At the expiration of the said time of two years, if the said Davis shall then decide to become the purchaser of the said property, he is to have the privilege of making the said purchase at the price of $2,500, to be then paid in cash; and upon the payment being so made, the United States are to convey the said property to the said William A. Davis, in fee. If the said Davis should not, at the expiration of the said two years, decide to become the purchaser, then he is to restore the same to the United States, with such improvements and repairs as he may have made upon the same; it being understood that the improvements and repairs so made shall be received in lieu of the rent of the said premises for the period aforesaid, in case the said William A. Davis should not become the purchaser. It is further understood and agreed that the said Davis is to pay the taxes upon the said premises during the period aforesaid.

(f) The debt in this case is $7,045 12, on sundry custom-house bonds. On February 18, 1829, this property was assigned to Beverly Robertson, to pay, first, incumbrances; second, the debt due to the United States; and third, confidential creditors, &c. On No. 1 there are extensive buildings and machinery for refining sugar, and it yields a net rent of $1,700 a year on a lease, one year of which, from January 1, 1831, has expired. This property is subject to incumbrances to the amount of $14,000. It is estimated by the assignee to be worth $20,000. Several attempts have been made to sell it at auction and at private sale, but owing to the depressed state of that kind of property, no bid was made approaching its value. No. 2 produces an uncertain rent of about $200 a year; the buildings are of little value, and the tenants of the lowest order. The assignee says as this property produces more than interest on the specific incumbrances and is sure to improve in value, it is deemed expedient to delay for the present the sale of it. Mr. Hamilton, the United States attorney, is of opinion that the interests of the United States would be promoted by a sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds. Sale ordered by the Solicitor accordingly.

(g) John R. Murray and William Ogden were indebted to the United States on custom-house bonds, which fell due from February to May, 1817, in the sum of $31,858 92. On July 16, 1816, they became insolvent and stopped payment; and on May 7, 1817, they conveyed or assigned to Thomas L. Ogden and B. W. Rogers, in trust, for the benefit of all their creditors, the property numbered one to seven, inclusive; for a particular description of the metes and bounds of which, see three several deeds in Mr. Hamilton's report, all bearing date May 7, 1817. The said property to be sold and paid over to the creditors ratably and proportionally. On January 28, 1818, Murray and Ogden assigned all the rest of their property to William Baird and Henry Barclay, in trust, for the benefit of their creditors, or all such as should, upon receiving their dividends of the proceeds, execute releases. In July, 1820, they applied for the benefit of the act to abolish imprisonment for debt in certain cases, and in October following were discharged.

Mr. Hamilton says that of the amount due the United States on custom-house bonds, Major and Gillespie, who had signed said bonds, have paid about $27,000, leaving $6,000 still due; that various suits have been brought on these trusts; and that it had been decided that the United States stood only upon a footing of other creditors as respects the lands herein specified, from Nos. 1 to 7; but that out of the funds arising from the second assignment to Bayard and Barclay, the United States must be first paid. The whole is before a master in chancery. He says that the United States may insist that the amount be taken under this decree, or file a new bill, asserting the right of priority, in the courts of the United States.

(a) See note (g) of the preceding page.

(b) This property was conveyed to the United States by H. K. Toler, August 7, 1821. He owed to the United States $16,888 for duty bonds; had been sued to judgment, and committed to prison, and was released by the President. He executed also, on August 8, 1821, a general assignment of all his estate, real, personal, and mixed; to which assignment was appended a schedule or list of persons indebted to him on book account; also, sundry promissory notes, a detailed account of which is given in Mr. Hamilton's report. The two lots are in the suburbs of the city, and supposed by Mr. Hamilton to be worth $300 each. The lot on Ridge street has been sold for taxes for twenty-one years, and the reversion subject to the present estate supposed to be worth about $700. He has written to the clerk of Orange to obtain information in relation to the lot in Newburg, but has not been able to get an account of it.

(c) The debt due to the United States in this case is $62,951 04; to secure which three assignments or deeds of trust were executed on May 3, 1826, by Dominick Lynch, Henry Lynch, and Sarah Lea, the debt being for custom-house bonds, executed by the former as principal, and the two latter as sureties. These deeds of trust embraced sundry houses and lots in the city of New York, sundry goods and chattels and personal property in said city, sundry lots of land in the village of Rome, county of Oneida, New York, and the interest of said Dominick Lynch; for a particular and detailed description of all which reference is made to the said deed of trust. The personal goods and chattels amounted, per inventory, to $31,987, and have been disposed of by an agent of the trustee, who is now dead. Very little has as yet been realized from the personal property, and a suit is pending for a discovery and amount. All the property conveyed by Sarah Lea has been sold, except eight acres of land in the village of Rome; and the net proceeds, amounting to $18,182 42, applied to the payment, in part, of the claim of the United States. The entire estate of Dominick Lynch (the father) is estimated at $115,160. The assignee of Dominick Lynch is entitled to one undivided fourth part of this sum, subject to an annuity of $300 to Mrs. Dominick Lynch, seventy-two years of age, and in good health; and also an annuity of $350 per annum, to be paid to four of the heirs of D. Lynch, deceased, (the United States representing one,) during the life of Louis Sibourd, who is very aged; and subject, also, to the payment of $4,000 to Alexander Lynch, at the death of either the said Sibourd or Mrs. Lynch, whichever shall happen first. The share of Henry Lynch is estimated at about $23.000, subject to the payment of $10,000, with interest, to his father's estate. The amount to which his assignee will be entitled supposed to be about $10,000; it would probably produce, if sold at once, $7,000. The eight acres of land assigned by Sarah Lea and unsold are supposed to be worth $800, and the district attorney says ought to be sold at once. These eight acres ordered to be sold by the Solicitor of the Treasury.

(d) The debt due to the United States in this case is $8,316. on custom-house bonds, falling due from March to June, 1830; to secure the payment of which a deed of trust for this property was executed October 3, 1829. Mr. Hamilton says the property, he supposes, may be worth $2,500 and that the trustees have been called upon to dispose of the trust estate in pursuance of their trust.

21st Congress.] No. 904. [2d Session.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR A GRANT OF LAND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF KASKASKIA RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 15, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The general assembly of the State of Illinois most respectfully represent to your honorable bodies that at the session of the said assembly, in the year 1828–'29, an act was passed directing an examination of the Kaskaskia river, from the seat of government of the State to the confluence of said river with the Mississippi, and also making an appropriation of four thousand dollars to remove the obstructions in said river occasioned by drift-wood, snags, and overhanging timber, and that a board of commissioners was appointed to superintend the work. Your memorialists further represent that said commissioners have caused the river to be carefully examined, and have made considerable progress in removing the obstructions above named; and that it appears from the report of the board of commissioners to this general assembly, dated December 18, 1830, that the river could be made navigable at all seasons of the year by erecting the same into a slackwater navigation by means of dams and locks; and also that there are many excellent sites for the erection of such dams, and for water-works. The commissioners in their report also state that the sale of the water privileges upon the river would produce a fund sufficient to defray the expense of erecting such slackwater navigation, and it is to this particular subject that the attention of your honorable bodies is most respectfully invited.

The estimated length of the river from the seat of government of the State of Illinois to the Mississippi, as appears by the report of the commissioners, is three hundred and fourteen miles, including the meanders of the river, a part of which will not, however, require the aid of the artificial navigation above named. The river passes through a fertile country, one that is susceptible of great improvement, and that will sustain a numerous population. This stream already forms the boundary of, or passes through, eight or nine counties of the State, and if made navigable, as it passes through the centre of a large territory, would immediately benefit the inhabitants of about twelve or fourteen counties, containing at this time a population of thirty or forty thousand, and rapidly increasing. It is, therefore, a matter deeply interesting to the State and a large portion of her citizens that this river, connecting by water communication the seat of government of the State with the Mississippi, should be improved and rendered subservient to the purposes of commerce at all seasons of the year. Nor can it be doubted that the completion of the work would result to the advantage and "common benefit" of the United States, in augmenting and hastening the sales of public land contiguous to the river, and in furnishing additional incentives to emigration, and to the general improvement of the adjacent territory.

Your honorable bodies are aware that a large proportion of the land within the defined limits of Illinois is yet unappropriated and under the control of the United States, and is, therefore, not subject to taxation by which revenue could be derived for the internal improvement of the country; and this consideration greatly heightens the claim on the part of the State, and increases the confidence of your memorialists in making this appeal to the magnanimity and justice of the Congress of the United States. It is under the consideration stated that your memorialists respectfully solicit of your honorable bodies a donation of each alternate section of unappropriated land on each bluff of said river, and one entire section at such place or places where it may be necessary to erect a dam for the purpose of slackwater navigation upon said river, from Shelbyville, situate upon the same, to the confluence of said river with the Mississippi, to be selected and disposed of under the authority of the legislature of the State, for the sole purpose of improving this river in the manner herein stated. Therefore—

Resolved by the people of the State of Illinois, represented in the general assembly, That our delegation in Congress be requested to use their best exertions to procure the passage of an act by Congress making the abovementioned grant of land to the State, and for the objects herein specified.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR A GRANT OF LAND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE EMBARRASS RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 15, 1831.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Illinois, represent to your honorable bodies that the Embarrass river, which empties into the Great Wabash, eight miles below Vincennes, waters a large portion of the eastern section of Illinois, and by the application of a small sum could be made navigable for six months in the year. The length of this stream, from its mouth as high as it is susceptible of improvement for navigation, is about one hundred and fifty miles to Shaw's Mills. The territory watered by it consists, among others, of the counties of Lawrence, Crawford, and Coles, the seats of justice of two of them are immediately adjacent to said river, and those villages will rapidly improve, and should the navigation of the river be improved, will be places of deposit to a considerable extent for the produce of the country.

It is further to be taken into consideration that the Great Wabash, for the distance of two hundred miles above the mouth of the Embarrass river, is navigable for steamboats, and that the improvements of the Embarrass would add to the commercial importance of the section of country already named. The counties bordering on the Embarrass and its vicinity are well adapted to the raising of stock and grain, and an improvement of the river would furnish a means of transportation to foreign markets for the produce of our citizens.

Congress will also observe that a large portion of the territory upon the river still remains under the control of the United States. Your memorialists, therefore, ask of your honorable bodies to pass an act appropriating thirty-six sections of land to be selected upon the river Embarrass, and disposed of under the authority of the State, to be applied solely to the improvement of the Embarrass river.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR THE GRANT OF AN ADDITIONAL SECTION OF LAND IN EACH COUNTY OF THAT STATE FOR SCHOOLS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 21, 1831.

Resolved by the house of representatives, (the senate concurring herein,) That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representative requested, to use their exertions to procure the passage of a law by Congress appropriating one additional section of land in each township for the purpose of education, to be selected by a commissioner to be appointed by the legislature of this State in each county for that purpose.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 23, 1831.

Mr. DENNY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Constant Brean, reported:

That the petitioner sets up a claim for eighteen and a half arpents of land by eighteen arpents front, adjoining to and in the rear of a tract of land already in his possession, eighteen arpents front by forty arpents in depth. In support of this claim, the petitioner produced several papers purporting to be evidence of his title to the land in question. The title to eighteen arpents front by forty in depth was confirmed to said Constant Brean, upon the application of Pierre Brussard, who claimed it in the name of the petitioner, but without his knowledge at the time. Of this fact there is no evidence except the declaration of petitioner. The committee think that as the usual quantity of land claimed as a settlement right was regularly confirmed to and accepted by said Constant Brean, and as no evidence was submitted to them to establish the fact that he did not accept it as his whole legal claim to which he was legally entitled, they see no reason why an additional grant should be made to him under the circumstances, nor that a pre-emption right to the quantity claimed should be given to him, particularly as the committee are not aware that the petitioner cannot make application to the proper land office, and thus secure the land agreeably to acts of Congress.

The committee, therefore, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

STATEMENT OF THE SALES OF CERTAIN LANDS AT THE LAND OFFICE IN NEW ORLEANS IN NOVEMBER, 1830, AND APPLICATION FOR THE POSTPONEMENT OF SAID SALE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 23, 1831.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 22, 1831.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 14th instant, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to "communicate to the House a copy of the correspondence had last year with the representative of the first district of Louisiana relative to the public sales of land which took place at New Orleans in November last, with a copy of the record of the sales," I have the honor to transmit the papers required, marked A, B, and C.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives U. S.

A.

Copy of the letter from Hon. E. D. White to the Secretary of the Treasury, with copies of the papers therewith transmitted.

DONALDSONVILLE, Louisiana, September 18, 1830.

SIR: In consequence of the death of Mr. Graham, Commissioner of the General Land Office, I am induced to use the freedom of addressing immediately to the head of the Treasury Department a communication on a subject of the deepest concernment to the people of Louisiana.

By the proclamation of the President of the United States, of June 5, 1830, nine fractional townships of land are advertised to be sold at the land office at New Orleans, on the 1st Monday of November next, comprising lands lying along the margin of the Mississippi, or contiguous thereto.

In running off those townships the surveyors have returned as vacant all lands the title to which did not appear to have been confirmed by Congress, insomuch that about one-half the tracts to be offered for sale under the proclamation are composed of lands held by individuals under Spanish titles, joined to a possession of half a century or more, and on which are many of the oldest and most valuable improvements of the State. It is true, perhaps, that they have not been registered, and it is to be regretted. But it ceases to be a subject of much surprise when one reflects on the character and customs of the people on their first accession to the government of the United States, to whom American institutions were wholly new, and who, probably, were never apprised of the necessity of entering their claims with the register and receiver whilst those officers kept books open for that purpose; or if, in the quietude of their agricultural pursuits, they ever did vaguely catch the rumor of an office for the perfecting of land titles, they never imagined it applicable to theirs, derived from another government, and supported by an uninterrupted possession, running back beyond the memory of man.

There is another branch of the subject which seems to me to deserve some consideration. By the usages of the French and Spanish governments, lands were generally conceded with a given number of arpents front on the water-courses, and extending back forty arpents. In some instances, when asked by the grantee, a second depth of forty arpents, commonly called the double concession, was granted. In point of fact, the second forty arpents or double concession was considered as an appendage or usufruct to the first tract. Since the right of sovereignty passed to the United States, Congress has, at different times, enacted laws giving to the front proprietor a right of pre-emption for the vacant land adjacent to and back of his front tract, not to exceed in quantity the number of acres contained in the first concession. Wishing to avail themselves of the benefit of those acts, a great number of persons owning front lands applied to the register and receiver, and obtained certificates of purchase for the back lands. At that time no general survey and connected plat of the country had been made, so that it was impossible to designate the number, the metes, and the bounds of the several lots purchased. Successive principal deputy surveyors of the district proceeded to locate for the claimants the back lands thus purchased, and, in so doing, exercised a certain kind of discretion in the mode of location, in order to accommodate, as far as might be, the different contiguous claimants. For those surveys considerable sums of money were paid by the respective individuals, who were furnished with plats made and approved by the principal deputy surveyors of the United States. Latterly the surveyors of the United States, acting under instructions from the General Land Office, have proceeded to resurvey the same back lands, without any regard to former doings, pursuing a wholly different rule and mode of location. The consequence is, that numerous tracts of those back lands, which were bought many years ago from the United States, and located by authority of the United States officers, and which have since changed hands, are now located differently, are lopped and curtailed, and lots are formed and noted as vacant, including portions of the same lands which individuals have been taught to regard as their own, by purchase from government.

Another fact worthy of notice is, that instances are not unfrequent of tracts heretofore bought of the United States that are returned as vacant, because, perhaps, no order of survey had been issued by the register and receiver, or from some other pretermission on the part of the officers of government; whereby those tracts are now brought within the purview of the proclamation of the President, ordering the said townships to be sold on the first Monday of November next.

When I became impressed with the importance of submitting the subject to the consideration of the department, the only means which I could discern of obtaining proof of the facts and circumstances was to address a letter to the principal deputy surveyor of the district, in whose answer, accompanying this communication, the exposition I have made receives full corroboration.

If the sale should take place as contemplated, it is impossible to foresee the extent of the confusion and the injury it may occasion. It would, in fact, almost amount to a subversion of social order in this country.

For these reasons, on behalf of the people of Louisiana, I would respectfully submit the expediency of suspending the sale advertised to take place on the first Monday of November until the subject-matter may have had deliberate consideration, or may have been submitted to the decision of Congress, if needs be.

I humbly opine that such a course would best subserve the intentions of government, which is said to have for its object the welfare and happiness of the people, and at the same time be most permanently advantageous to the national coffers.

I beg leave respectfully to suggest that if, in the opinion of the department, it be practicable to avert the calamity which threatens us, it will be too late for relief unless the subject obtain immediate attention, and prompt instruction be forwarded to the register and receiver at New Orleans.

With the highest consideration, &c.,

E. D. WHITE.

Hon. S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

DONALDSONVILLE, September 16, 1830.

SIR: If there be no perceptible impropriety in the inquiry, I would beg of you to inform me by letter whether it is not a fact within your knowledge that in all or most of the townships of land advertised to be sold at the land office at New Orleans on the first Monday of November next a great number of the tracts returned as vacant are held and occupied by old inhabitants; some under complete Spanish grants, issued long before the change of government, and others under purchase from the United States by virtue of laws of Congress. Have you not seen a great many of those grants which appear to be complete titles? and have you not seen many instances of receipts issued by the United States commissioners for tracts now returned on those township plats as vacant?

Yours, respectfully, &c.,

E. D. WHITE.

Mr. A. F. RIGHTOR, Principal Deputy Surveyor of the Southeastern District of Louisiana

PRINCIPAL DEPUTY SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Donaldsonville, September 16, 1830.

SIR: In answer to your letter of this day, I see no impropriety in stating that, in the course of my operations as principal deputy surveyor of this district, I have had occasion to see original title papers which appear to me to be complete Spanish grants, emanating long before the change of government, for a great many of the tracts of land which have been surveyed and marked on the township plats alluded to by you as vacant land, and which are advertised for sale on the first Monday of November next.

It is my opinion that all, or very nearly all, the tracts situated on the Mississippi or its branches, many of which have been surveyed and marked on the plat as vacant land, have been held by the present claimants or their vendors for a period beginning back far beyond the cession of Louisiana to the United States, and that most of them have either complete or incomplete Spanish grants, the registry of which was neglected whilst the books of the commissioners were open for the purpose. The deputy surveyors who have been employed in surveying these lands have reported to me that in almost every instance the individual holding those tracts exhibited to them either a complete Spanish title or an order of survey and plat made by the Spanish authorities. A statement of these facts I have always transmitted to the surveyor general accompanying each township plat.

With regard to the land situated back of and adjacent to the first forty arpents, I have seen in many instances certificates of purchase from the receiver of public money for tracts now returned as vacant land. From the circumstance of there being no order of survey in this office from the register at New Orleans, it was impossible to know the fact at the time these surveys were made, and consequently these tracts are marked as vacant.

With the greatest respect, I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

A. F. RIGHTOR.

E. D. WHITE, Esq.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 15, 1830.

SIR: Your communication to the Secretary of the Treasury of the 18th ultimo having been referred to this office, I have the honor to inform you that it has been submitted to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the whole proceedings which had been ordered, and that he has decided that the sale cannot be suspended.

With great respect, &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

ESTIMATES OF THE EXPENSE OF SURVEYS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS FOR 1831.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 24, 1831.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 8, 1831.

SIR: In explanation of the item of $150,000 for surveying public lands, submitted to you at the commencement of the present session of Congress, I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of the estimates of the several surveyors general for the year 1831; from which the requirements of each surveyor's department will be found stated as follows:

The estimate of the surveyor south of Tennessee shows an aggregate amount required for surveying in Mississippi and Louisiana of	$52,420
He further estimates for surveying, which may be required under the treaties with the Choctaws and Chickasaws	50,000
He further shows that there remains to be paid $20,000 for surveys executed under contracts with his predecessor, of which sum $10,000 have been since remitted, leaving applicable to the former contracts	10,000
		$112,420
The estimate of the surveyor of the Floridas shows the aggregate sum required for his office of		20,250
The estimate of the surveyor of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, shows an aggregate amount, exclusive of his salary and those of his clerks, of		45,000
The estimate of the surveyor of Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas, shows an aggregate sum, exclusive of salaries, of		24,000
Forming the aggregate of		201,670

This amount is the estimate required for surveying during the year 1831; and, except in the case of the surveying department south of Tennessee, is exclusive of the balances which may remain due on surveys executed during the past year, the precise amount of which cannot at present be stated, as the returns for the fourth quarter of 1830 have not arrived.

The accompanying statement shows the quantity of unsurveyed public lands in the several States and Territories to which the Indian title has been extinguished, amounting to 103,683,994 acres; forming, with the ceded lands west of Lake Michigan and north of Illinois, an aggregate of four thousand six hundred townships, the cost of surveying which is estimated at $1,000,000.

The amount of sales of public lands increase with the growing population of the west and south, and bears a direct proportion to the flowing tide of emigration, which must increase to an extent, which, although now only conjectural, is as certain as the mighty causes for migration to this country which now exist in Europe.

Emigrants from various climes and with various pursuits, while seeking an asylum in these new States and Territories, will naturally desire to locate themselves in those portions of our land most congenial to their constitutions and employments. We have in reserve for them every clime and every soil; it only remains for us to survey and prepare the lands for the market.

It has been thought to be necessary for the convenience of actual settlers to grant pre-emption rights even to the unsurveyed lands. However desirable some may esteem this measure, it is impracticable to adopt any plan that can secure pre-emption rights until the land is surveyed. The better policy is to do away with pre-emptions, survey the lands, and subject them to public sale and private entry with the rapidity necessary to meet the demand

With these views, the estimates of $150,000 for surveying public lands and $8,000 for surveying private land claims in East Florida were submitted; and, although much less than the aggregate estimate of the surveyors, it is believed sufficient to meet the demand for surveys to be executed within the year 1831, covering the deficit which will be found to arise from there having been no appropriation last year, by completing payment for all contracts executed during the year 1830 and not paid for within that year.

While it is to be regretted that this office is not in possession of the information required to ascertain with accuracy the amount due from government, at the close of the year 1830, for surveys then completed, in consequence of not being furnished with copies of the surveying contracts, and no returns having yet been received for the fourth quarter of that year, it is known to be considerable, and may be fairly estimated at $30,000. With an appropriation then of $150,000 for the year 1831, $120,000 only would be left for surveys to be executed within the year, excluding entirely from consideration the country lately purchased of the Choctaws in Mississippi and Alabama, a sum which could be advantageously expended in Louisiana, Florida, and Arkansas. If, however, the bills now before Congress, directing the surveys of the mineral regions in Illinois and Michigan, should become laws during the present session, immediate calls would be made upon this office to cause surveys of those sections of country to be made and the lands prepared for sale; in which event, the proposed appropriation will be found inadequate to the service of the present year, and insufficient to meet all the demands of the surveying department.

Connected with the estimates for the year 1831, I beg leave to represent the embarrassment that the office of the surveyor general, Colonel McRee, labors under for want of force. There was submitted this year, through an oversight in this office, only the ordinary estimate for clerk hire, $2,000. The immense amount of recording remaining to be done in the surveying department of Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas, demands an appropriation of at least $4,000, being an increase of $2,000, as stated in the estimate of Colonel McRee, to which I beg leave to refer you; and the inconvenience resulting from the delay attending the examination of surveys and the laborious office-work at the surveyor's office, preparatory to the transmission of the plats of survey, are seriously felt by this office, and cause delays in proclaiming lands for sale.

The surveyor general of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, in a letter dated 27th ultimo, recently received, shows that an additional recording clerk is necessary in his office, and requests an appropriation of $950 in addition to the ordinary appropriation of $2,100, making a total of $3,050, which, with that of $4,000 for the surveyor of Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas, I beg leave to submit to the committee in lieu of the items of clerk hire heretofore submitted for those two offices.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Miss., October 18, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to submit for the consideration of Congress the estimates for surveying in this district during the ensuing year:

To close the surveying of the Choctaw district, which is desirable, for the purpose of rendering the settlements in this State compact, there are yet about twenty-five townships and fractional townships to be surveyed, equal perhaps to twenty full townships, or 1,440 miles of regular square work; allowing for traversing of water-courses, it may be set down at 1,500 miles, or	$6,000
For correcting surveys in the district west of Peal river, in which it has been found that much of the surveying, and especially in the northern part, which was executed more than twenty years past, has been done in a very defective manner, may require a sum equal to the expense of surveying five full townships, about	1,500
In the district north of Red river, in the State of Louisiana, it is believed about forty townships may be surveyed advantageously, which will require the sum of	11,520
In the southwestern district of the State of Louisiana, including what has heretofore been denominated neutral territory, lying between the Rio Hondo and Sabine river, there will be to survey about fifty full townships, requiring	14,400

*Exclusive of the land ceded lying west of Lake Michigan and north of Illinois State, which is estimated at about one hundred townships.

†Exclusive of the Choctaw treaty of 1830.

The southeastern district of Louisiana, which includes the island of New Orleans, is, for the most part, an alluvial country, very much intersected by bayous and lakes, in which it is said there are considerable bodies of valuable lands which it is desirable to bring into market. The manner directed by law for surveying lands bordering on those water-courses, and the want of an accurate knowledge of their extent, render it difficult to form a probable estimate of the extent of lineal measure which would be made to complete the surveying of that district. The principal deputy surveyor of the district, who has as good means as any other person of forming a correct estimate, is of opinion that 4,000 miles may be profitably surveyed there during the approaching season, requiring the sum of.....	$16,000
The surveying in the district east of the island of New Orleans is nearly brought to a close. It is believed that, to complete it and correct some defective work, may require a sum not exceeding.....	3,000
Making an aggregate sum of.....	52,420

This estimate is considerably augmented from the consideration that the act of Congress "granting pre-emption rights to settlers on public lands," approved the 29th of May, 1830, will render it necessary to survey many townships on which there are such settlements to enable the persons entitled to the benefits of that act to comply with its conditions. This augmentation, however, cannot be objectionable, when it is considered that the purchase money which would be paid on two pre-emption rights of one hundred and sixty acres each, would be more than sufficient to defray the expense of surveying an entire township.

It may be proper here to state that surveying has been executed, under contracts with my predecessor, to the amount of about $20,000, which has not been paid for, and which I have not yet been furnished with the means of paying.

It is rumored that the treaties lately concluded with the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes of Indians, for the purchase of their country, provide that all the reservations and donations are to be located by regular sectional or subdivisional lines, and that the surveying will commence previous to the removal of the Indians. If such be the fact, and the treaties should be ratified, that service will require about $50,000 during the ensuing year.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

JO. DUNBAR, Surveyor of Public Lands south of Tennessee.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November 4, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following estimate of the probable disbursements by this office for the year 1831, inclusive of the sums to be paid on account of surveys that may be contracted for during that year, viz:

For surveying public lands and private land claims, including town lots, village lots, out lots, commons, and common field lots, and also resurveys of claims heretofore surveyed—in all, say eight thousand miles, at three dollars per mile	$24,000
For the salaries of the surveyor of public lands and of three clerks	4,000
For the salaries of three extra clerks	2,000
For contingent office expenses, including stationery and postage	500
Total	30,500

Making in all the sum of thirty thousand five hundred dollars.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

W. McREE.

T. L. SMITH, Esq., Register, Treasury Department.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, December 27, 1830.

SIR: The increase of the business of this office, arising partly from the large amount of the surveys of the public lands which, during the last ten or twelve years, has been executed under the direction of the surveyor general, together with the heavy additional duties assigned to his office, have greatly retarded, and frequently suspended entirely, the business of recording the field-notes, plats, and descriptions of these surveys.

To show more distinctly wherein the amount of labor to be performed in this office has been very considerably increased, permit me to enumerate some of the principal additional duties required of the surveyor general within the last ten years:

1. Of each township and fractional township which is subdivided into sections, triplicate plats and descriptions are made out from the field-notes of the deputy surveyors, and the contents of the fractional sections calculated. From the organization of this office until the year 1824 the deputy surveyors, under an express stipulation in their contracts, made out these triplicate plats and descriptions and calculations themselves, and returned them with their field-notes into this office; but in the year referred to, by direction of the President of the United States, the labor of preparing the plats and descriptions and calculations was transferred from the deputies to the surveyor general; since which time they have been made out in this office.

2. The subdivision (on the township maps) of all fractional sections containing one hundred and sixty acres or upwards into tracts of eighty acres, as near as may be, and the calculation of the area of each separate tract.

3. The platting from the field-notes of the meanders all those small lakes in each township which are too deep to be drained, and subdividing and calculating into tracts, as above, the sections made fractional by such lakes.

4. The entering in tables, on the margin of each township map, the contents of each section and subdivisions of sections therein, and summing up the aggregate contents of each township.

5. The subdivision (on the maps) into tracts of eighty acres, as near as may be, and the calculations thereof, all the unsold, forfeited, reverted, and relinquished fractional sections of one hundred and sixty acres and upwards, in the several land districts in Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan.

The heavy additions thus made to the current business of the office necessarily employs so large a portion of the time that was formerly devoted to the records, that that branch of the business of the office has got so far behind, that, with our present help, so long as the usual amount of surveys are annually continued to be made, it appears to be impracticable to bring up the arrears of recording. Indeed, that part of our work will very probably in this case get still further behind for the same reasons.

From these considerations, and for the interest of the public service in this department thereof, I beg leave through you, respectfully but earnestly, to ask of Congress an appropriation to enable me to employ an additional clerk to aid me in bringing up the records.

My chief clerk has filled that station about sixteen years; has spent the prime of his life in the public service in this office; and, by close application to its business, has sometimes much impaired his health. By removing to this city with the office, the small salary which he receives is greatly reduced by the high rents and increased expenses of living which he is subjected to. On this account, and in consideration of his qualifications and long experience, I think it but just and reasonable that an increase of compensation should be allowed him.

For the purpose, therefore, of enabling me to employ an additional (recording) clerk, and to increase the allowance to my chief clerk, I respectfully ask for an appropriation, in addition to the usual annual allowance, of nine hundred and fifty dollars.

I request that you will be pleased to lay this subject before the Secretary of the Treasury, and ask that the sum named above may be taken into the estimates for this office and the appropriation thereof called for by him.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. LYTLE.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 24, 1831.

SIR: I have received your note of this morning, requesting information as to the amount of appropriation necessary for surveying the lands acquired by the late Choctaw treaty.

In consequence of my not being aware of the provisions of that treaty, I regret that I am unable to form any estimate that is entirely satisfactory to myself, or which will be likely to prove so to you.

Mr. Dunbar estimates the quantity of the lands lately purchased from the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians, lying within the State of Mississippi, at 16,300,000 acres. This quantity is equal to 707 townships, which, at the rate of $200, the ordinary expense of surveying a township, would require for the whole service $141,400.

In estimating in October last for the appropriation required for surveying the lands in Mississippi during the year 1831, Mr. Dunbar remarks as follows, viz: "It is rumored that the treaties lately concluded with the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes of Indians for the purchase of their country provide that all the reservations and donations are to be located by regular sectional and subdivisional lines, and that the surveying will commence previous to the removal of the Indians. If such be the fact, and the treaties should be ratified, that service will require about $50,000 during the ensuing year." This amount was not embraced in the general estimate for surveying for the year 1831 submitted to Congress at the commencement of the present session.

I trust that from your knowledge of the provisions of the treaty you will be enabled, from what has been stated in the foregoing, to make an estimate that will be satisfactory to yourself in case the estimate of $50,000, contingent on the provisions of the treaties, as stated by Mr. Dunbar, should be deemed erroneous.

In connexion with this subject, is the sale of the lands after the surveys shall have been completed.

I have received a communication from Mr. Dunbar, wherein he recommends the laying off of the lands alluded to into three distinct land districts, within which land offices, established at their centres, would be little more remote than fifty miles from the most distant parts of each district.

I have not yet had time to investigate the merits of the proposed plan, and do not presume that if it were now before Congress, time would admit of its being acted on during the present session. If, however, you should deem it important to have a copy of the same, it will be furnished.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. GEORGE POINDEXTER, Senate of the United States.

21st CONGRESS] No 910. [2d SESSION.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA TO BE ALLOWED TO TAX ALL LAND SOLD BY THE UNITED STATES IN THAT STATE FROM THE TIME OF SALE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 25, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Indiana respectfully showeth: That, as your honorable bodies are well apprised, by a compact existing between the United States and this State, which compact is contained in an act of your honorable bodies of April 19, 1816, and an ordinance of the people of this State, made through their representatives in convention at Corydon, June 10, 1816, which compact is irrevocable, unless by consent of both parties, this State is prohibited from laying any kind of tax whatever upon lands sold by the United States within this State, until the expiration of five years from and after the day of sale; which compact has been kept in good faith by this State, whereby she has been and continues to be deprived of one principal source of revenue, so important to her in her infancy, and particularly at the present time.

Your memorialists believe that one principal reason on the part of the United States for wishing the adoption of said restriction was the uncertainty of many of the purchasers ultimately perfecting their titles to lands purchased by them, and the supposed impolicy of compelling them to pay tax upon lands which, in case of non-payment, (which might happen in many instances by causes not within the control of the parties concerned,) might and would revert to the United States. At the time of making the compact referred to, and for some years afterwards, the United States sold their lands on a credit of five years. Such is not the case now. The system is changed, the price reduced, and prompt payment required. The uncertainty of perfecting a title, therefore, no longer exists. Any person purchasing is sure of a title. The above reason for the exemption of taxation, therefore, no longer exists, and your memorialists can see no sufficient reason for its further continuance.

Your memorialists further represent that a tax upon lands is the principal source of revenue of said State; that, like all other new States, she stands in need of all the revenue which a reasonable assessment on legitimate objects of taxation within her limits will afford her, particularly at this time, when she is anxiously laboring for the improvement of her physical and moral condition; that they can see no sufficient reason why persons who have purchased good land at the low price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and are sure of a good title, should be exempt from paying any duty thereon to the government for the long period of five years.

Your memorialists therefore pray your honorable bodies to consent, on the part of the United States, that said article of compact be revoked, so as to allow this State the right of hereafter taxing all lands purchased from the United States under the present system of prompt payment from and after the date of the purchase. And your memorialists, as in duty bound, &c.

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best efforts to procure the passage of an act of Congress releasing this State from the articles of compact mentioned in the foregoing memorial, so as to allow this State the privilege of taxing lands hereafter sold by the United States in this State, in common with other lands, from and after the time of sale.

Resolved, further, That the governor be requested to forward a copy of the above memorial and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 26, 1831.

Mr. STERIGERE, from the Committee on Private Lands, to whom was referred the printed memorial of George McDougall, of seventeen pages, reported:

The petitioner prays Congress to confirm to him a tract of sixty acres of land, situate in the Miami reservation, in the State of Ohio, assigned to him by St. Michel & Loranger, to which the commissioners appointed to adjust the claims to land in the district of Detroit decided that the said St. Michel & Loranger had a pre-emption right. The committee have carefully examined the memorial and the documents and records in the Land Office relating to this claim. It appears that by the act of April 25, 1808, entitled "An act supplemental to an act regulating the grant of land in the Territory of Michigan," every head of a family who, prior to the 26th of March, 1804, and at the passage of the act, inhabited and cultivated a tract of land in said Territory, not claimed under a legal French or British grant or under the act to which this is a supplement, should be entitled to the pre-emption in becoming a purchaser of the United States of such tract not exceeding one section, at the rate at which other public lands in the Territory are ordered to be sold, viz: two dollars per acre. Under this law St. Michel & Loranger presented a pre-emption claim to sixty acres of land to the commissioners appointed to adjust the claims to lands in the district of Detroit, which was allowed by them, and a certificate issued. St. Michel & Loranger paid two instalments of the purchase money of this tract, viz: $30 on the 31st December, 1808, and $30 on the 26th December, 1810. Shortly after this second instalment was paid it was discovered that the tract of land claimed by St. Michel & Loranger, and allowed by the commissioners, was situate in the Miami reserve, in Ohio, and not in the district for which the commissioners were appointed. The holder of the certificate was informed of this, and that no patent would be granted. After these payments the petitioner bought the claim of St. Michel & Loranger, (for what sum it is not stated.) Subsequently the other instalments were offered, but not received, and a patent refused, because the land did not lie in the Detroit district, and the claim not legally allowed. It is true, as the petitioner states, that the act of the 23d April, 1812, directs patents to issue to the persons whose claims to lands had been confirmed in the district of Detroit, provided that the confirmation of the commissioners be according to law. But he fails to prove that in his case the confirmation of the commissioners was "according to law." The fact is, it was clearly illegal; the land did not even lie in the district over which they had jurisdiction, and they consequently had no more authority to act in this case than if the land had been in Louisiana. Besides, this land was within a tract which had been reserved. The committee are of opinion that St. Michel & Loranger were guilty of fraud in bringing this claim before the commissioners, knowing it to lie out of their district; and, even on this ground, would not be entitled to a confirmation. From the act of Congress confirming the claims recommended for confirmation it would seem Congress was aware that the commissioners had acted on cases out of their district; for the phraseology of the law carefully includes only claims in the district. Its terms do not embrace this case, but expressly exclude it.

The committee think the land officers have put the proper construction on the acts relating to these claims, and acted correctly in refusing a patent. Other claims similar to this were decided by the commissioners, and part of the purchase money paid. But on discovering the illegality of the proceedings, patents were refused, and the purchase money which was paid refunded. In this case the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to refund the money paid, and will do it when an application is made by the proper claimant.

Pursuant to an act of Congress this tract of land was sold by the government in 1817; part to Wm. Olliver, for $32 per acre; and part to Francis Tassel, for $2 per acre; therefore the petitioner cannot have it confirmed to him, even if he had an equitable title, which he has not. The committee think St. Michel & Loranger or the petitioner should have the purchase money paid refunded; but this will be done on application, and does not need a special law. If his vendors have defrauded the petitioner, he must look to them for remuneration. The committee offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted; and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

APPLICATION OF MISSOURI THAT THE PUBLIC LANDS MAY BE SOLD IN FORTY-ACRE LOTS, AND THAT QUARTER SECTIONS BE DIVIDED BY EAST AND WEST AS WELL AS BY NORTH AND SOUTH LINES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 28, 1831.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Missouri respectfully showeth: That in many parts of the said State the country is so hilly and broken, and in others water and timber so scarce, that but very small tracts or parcels of lands suitable for farming can be procured in one body; consequently it frequently happens that persons wishing to settle in such places cannot get even a small farm, under the existing laws of the United States, without entering a considerable portion of land of no value. This prevents the purchase and settlement of all such portions of this State. By an act of Congress, heretofore passed, it became lawful to enter the east and west halves of quarter sections, which for a time was of great advantage to the settlement and improvement of this country, as well as to the general government, by the increased sale of public lands; but the advantages which could be derived from that act have already been obtained, as entries have generally been made of the east and west halves of quarter sections where they were considered suitable for farming. Your memorialists respectfully represent that an act of Congress authorizing the entry of the north or south half of any quarter section, or forty acres in any corner thereof, would be of great advantage to this State and to the general government, as many small tracts of land would be entered which otherwise will remain unsold; in all cases giving to the actual settler the preference. It would have a tendency to make the sales of the public lands less scattering, and the settlements, as far as they progressed, more dense. It would cause the sale of much public land now considered refuse and unfit for cultivation; it would give a permanent home and interest in the country to many poor families, who would otherwise remain dependent tenants, or be compelled to remove beyond the limits of the United States. Without the above or similar provisions, large districts of country, in many parts of this State, would remain in the condition of a wilderness.

All which is respectfully submitted to the wisdom, justice, and liberality of Congress.

APPLICATION OF MISSOURI FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A TRIBUNAL TO ADJUST LAND CLAIMS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 28, 1831.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the legislature of Missouri, respectfully represents: That the unconfirmed claims to lands in this State, under grants from the Spanish and French governments, continue to be subjects of great interest to many individuals, and to the State itself. It is now near twenty-eight years since the adoption of the treaty with France, by which these claimants conceive they were guaranteed in their rights to these lands; and yet to this hour claims to an immense amount remain undecided. How does a course of conduct so strangely dilatory comport with those principles of prompt and immutable justice upon which the republic professes to base its policy towards all the world? It is certainly not competent for the legislature of Missouri to undertake to decide upon the validity of these land claims; but surely it is right to ask that they may be speedily and finally adjudicated. If the individual claimants have any just rights, they ought to be confirmed in them; if they have none, the pretence of claim ought to be silenced, and the land brought into market for the benefit of the United States, the State of Missouri, and the neighborhoods in which they lie. The unconfirmed claims in this State which are reserved from sale amount to millions of acres; they lie scattered over the State in unequal proportions, some counties having none in them, whilst others are greatly overspread by them; they generally lie in large bodies, and frequently embrace the best land in the county. The evil which they cause to our citizens and to the State, by preventing continuous settlements, and the erection of mills, &c., upon their streams, by withholding land from cultivation, by interruptions in the roads, by not being subject to taxation, and in a variety of other ways, is too manifest to need recapitulation. In selecting a tribunal for the adjudication of these claims, your memorialist would object to the ordinary courts of law, because their expensive, tedious, and technical modes of proceeding are unsuited to the nature of these claims and to the rights of the claimants; for it might be the case that the major part of the claims should have a good foundation in equity, and yet could not be sustained in a court of law; and it is quite certain that proceedings had in courts of law would superadd to the pecuniary burdens of which these claimants already complain, and would cause much further delay. It is therefore most respectfully recommended that a board of land commissioners may be again created, endowed with equity powers sufficient for the purpose of doing full and final justice between the government and the claimants; and that it shall be provided that this tribunal shall adopt as its rule of action, to confirm every claim which the government of either Spain or France would have confirmed had no transfer of the territory been made.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR A GRANT OF LAND FOR A ROAD FROM CHICAGO TO THE WABASH RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 28, 1831.

The general assembly of the State of Illinois to the Congress of the United States respectfully represent: That they have, at their present session, directed the permanent location of a road, four poles in width, from the west bank of the Wabash river, opposite to Vincennes, to Chicago, on Lake Michigan, and that proper stones shall be placed at the end of every mile upon the way.

The object of this road is the accommodation of travellers, and the facilitating of a commerce which is by nature destined to flow in this direction from the northern lakes to the country situate upon the Wabash river. This road, your memorialists believe, will not only be advantageous to the State of Illinois, but of great importance to the interest of the State of Indiana and the Territory of Michigan. Commerce has already found its way through this channel, and during the last year goods have been transported from the city of New York, by way of the New York canal and the northern lakes, to Chicago, and from thence overland, by the way proposed, to the Wabash river.

This road, your memorialists are induced to believe, is one of importance to the interests of the States of New York, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan Territory, and the State of Illinois, connected, as those States must eventually be, by the ties of commerce. Those advantages may be, it is believed, greatly hastened and facilitated by the measure now proposed; and, with an eye to the interest of the several States, your memorialists cannot but view it of importance to the Union, for the commerce of the States, the transportation of troops, and the munitions of war. This road, in its whole extent about 220 miles, will, it is believed, pass over 150 miles of lands now owned by the United States, a very considerable portion of which has not yet been brought into market, and extensive prairies on the way, which, without some additional incentive for improvement, must long remain unsettled. The State of Illinois, under the present depressed state of its finances, is unable to appropriate any money for the construction of the proposed road, and with its limited means will long be unable to do so. The unsettled state of the country through which the road will pass renders a personal requisition of labor upon the inhabitants sufficient for its construction impracticable.

Your memorialists are therefore induced, in consideration of the importance of the measure, to ask for the assistance of the general government in the construction of said road by an appropriation of the proceeds of the sales of every alternate section of the land owned by the United States through which the said road may pass to aid in its construction.

It is confidently believed by your memorialists that the United States, in a pecuniary point, will be benefited by the measure proposed; that the remaining lands owned by them will be enhanced in value, and their sale accelerated to an amount more beneficial to the general interest than the proceeds of the grant asked for the improvement of said road.

APPLICATION OF DELAWARE FOR A GENERAL DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 1, 1831.

IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, January Session, 1831.

The Committee to whom was referred so much of the governor's message as relates to the distribution of the revenue arising from the sale of the public lands of the Union among the several States for the purpose of education, &c., reported:

That the citizens of this State view with deep solicitude the efforts lately made in the national legislature to deprive the Atlantic States of their just and equitable rights to the public lands of the Union—rights which they claim to hold in common with all the States, and which were asserted by and conceded to them at the laying of the foundation of the Constitution of the Union. It is an inheritance which they claim as the purchase of their treasures and of their blood, and is too highly appreciated by them to be relinquished without an equivalent, and too dearly bought to be wantonly lavished away.

The citizens of Delaware have beheld, with pain and anxiety, attempts which have lately been made in Congress thus to deprive them of a conceded right, and dissipate the revenue derivable from those lands, by forcing sales within a short period of time, and at mere nominal prices. They consider such a scheme as nothing less than a virtual alienation of their right, and a wanton sacrifice of their interest to the cupidity and avarice of speculators, many of whom, it would seem, are as mercenary and unprincipled in their views as they are active and vociferous in their support of them. The people of Delaware look forward to the time when the national debt shall have been liquidated (to the payment of which the revenue accruing from the sales of the public land is pledged) as a suitable and auspicious period, after which the said revenue may be distributed among the several States of the Union for the purpose of extending the means of education, and thereby promoting the general welfare of the Union, strengthening its bands, and perpetuating its blessings. Your committee would, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Delaware in general assembly met, That this legislature views with a jealous eye every attempt to make a partial distribution of the public lands of the Union among the States, whether by direct grant to a State, or by nominal sales at reduced prices to the citizens thereof.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this general assembly, the revenue arising from the sale of the public lands of the Union ought to be distributed among the several States, for the purpose of extending the means of education throughout the republic, as soon as the liquidation of the national debt shall warrant the same.

Resolved, That our senators and our representative in the national legislature be, and they are hereby, requested to exert themselves to procure such an appropriation of the funds available from the sales of those lands as shall foster and promote the cause of education throughout the Union.

Resolved, That this general assembly do approve most heartily the manly and able stand maintained by our representation in the Senate of the United States, in defending and sustaining the right and interest of the State, upon the question of the disposal of the western dominions of the Union.

Resolved, That the foregoing report and resolutions be signed by the speakers of the senate and of the house of representatives respectively, and that a copy be transmitted to each of our senators and to our representative in Congress, and that the executive of each State be furnished with a copy by the governor, and requested to lay the same before their respective legislatures.

ON THE APPLICATION TO GRANT LAND TO OFFICERS DISBANDED FROM THE ARMY AFTER THE WAR OF 1812–'15, AND TO THE HEIRS OF THOSE WHO DIED OR WERE KILLED IN SERVICE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 1, 1831.

Mr. DUNCAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred sundry memorials from the legislatures of States, and of officers of the army of the United States in the late war with Great Britain, and who were disbanded at its termination, praying that lands may be granted to officers who served in that war and were disbanded at its termination, and to the heirs of those who were killed in battle or died in service, reported:

That they have given to the subject that serious and deliberate attention which its importance to the memorialists in a pecuniary point of view, and to the nation in the effects which its decision may have in after times, demands.

Before proceeding to pronounce the result of their deliberations, the committee will take a view of the proceedings which have already been had by the House upon this subject.

At the close of the war with Great Britain a bill was reported to the House fixing the military peace establishment of the United States, and for disbanding a portion of that gallant army which had so successfully carried the country through that war. The sixth section of that bill contained the following clause:

"That there shall, moreover, be allowed and granted to every such officer, [meaning those who should be disbanded,] in consideration of services during the late war, the following donations in land, viz: to a major general, 2,560 acres; to a brigadier general, 1,920 acres; to each colonel and lieutenant colonel, 1,280 acres; to each major, 960 acres; to each captain, 640 acres; to each subaltern, 480; and to the representatives of such officers as shall have fallen or died in service during the late war, the like number of acres, according to the rank they held, respectively, at the time of their decease, to be designated, surveyed, and laid off at the public expense."

On the 27th February, 1815, a few days before the termination of the session, a motion was made by Mr. Cannon, a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Tennessee, to strike out this portion of the bill. The question was taken by ayes and noes, and the motion prevailed by a majority of only four votes.

On the next day, the 28th February, 1815, a motion was made by Mr. Alston to reconsider the vote upon striking out the provision. The vote on reconsideration was also taken by ayes and noes, and prevailed by a majority of fourteen votes.

The question was then again put on striking out the clause, and decided against it. Upon the second vote the ayes and noes were not taken, and the committee have learned that the opposition to it had been almost wholly, if not entirely, withdrawn in the House.

In this form the bill went to the Senate of the United States, in which body it was amended by increasing the amount of force to be retained from six thousand men to fifteen thousand men, and by striking out the bounty land provision.

On the second of March the House of Representatives disagreed to the amendments of the Senate. On the same day the Senate insisted on their amendments. The House also insisted. A conference was proposed and agreed to by the House. The conferees reported a compromise—that the Senate should agree to reduce the army to ten thousand men, and that the House should abandon that portion of the bill which provided grants of land to the disbanded officers.

On the third of March, the last day of the session, and almost at its last hour, the compromise recommended by the conferees came up for consideration; and the question to agree to that portion of it which abandoned grants of land to the officers was taken by ayes and noes, and carried by a bare majority of two votes—ayes 57, noes 55. That part of the compromise which related to the number of men to be retained in service was carried by a very large majority—70 to 38.

Thus it will be perceived that these gallant men, at the only period when their claims came fairly before the House for decision, lost their land by only two votes, and that, too, in consequence of a compromise between the two houses upon the subject of the quantum of force to be retained in the service.

At the succeeding session of Congress (the first of the 14th) the subject was again brought up, and on the 13th of December, 1816, a bill was reported to the House, by its Committee on Military Affairs, authorizing grants of land to the disbanded officers of the late war and the heirs and representatives of those who were killed or died in service.

This bill was permitted to remain without any action or decision thereon until the Congress in which it was reported expired.

On the 9th December, 1817, the following resolution was introduced into the House:

"Resolved, That it is expedient to provide by law for the disbanded and deranged officers of the army of the United States who served in the late war against Great Britain by donations in land, viz: to a major general 1,280 acres, a brigadier general 1,120 acres, a colonel and lieutenant colonel 960 acres each, a major 800 acres, a captain 640 acres, and subalterns 480 acres;" and no further action took place during the session.

Thus the matter remained until the first session of the 19th Congress, when it was again brought before the House by a simultaneous effort of the officers themselves. Their memorials were referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Cook of Illinois, Mr. Garnsey of New York, Mr. Swan of New Jersey, Mr. Bailey of Massachusetts, and Mr. Metcalfe of Kentucky.

This committee, on the 17th March, 1826, made a favorable report, which is herein embodied, viz:

"The select committee to whom was referred the petition of sundry officers of the army of the late war, praying a grant of land in consideration of their sacrifices and services, report:

"That it is deemed by the committee but fair and reasonable that the merits of their claim should be duly investigated and considered by the House. Their severe and arduous services in the momentous struggle in which they were engaged entitle their application to the most liberal consideration that justice and sound policy will allow. With a view, therefore, to bring the subject fairly before the House, and that it may act on the question unencumbered by details, the committee propose to the House the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is expedient to make provision by law for granting to each of the officers of the army who served during the late war a quantity of land, according to their rank, as a remuneration for their sacrifices, sufferings, and faithful services."

The press of business usually attendant on the latter portion of a session of Congress precluded the possibility of a deliberate consideration of this report. It does not appear, from the journals of the House, that it ever came up for final decision.

At three subsequent sessions of Congress, viz: the second of the 19th, the first of the 20th, and the first of the 21st, the subject was again referred to committees; but the multiplicity of more pressing or immediate concerns having so exclusively engrossed their attention as to preclude the possibility of devoting that attention to this subject which its magnitude and importance required, it passed off until the present time.

Thus this subject has, with little intermission, been before Congress from the termination of the late war with Great Britain to the present time.

In the commencement of the war which terminated in establishing the independence of our country, pay and subsistence were the only rewards held out by the government to their officers and soldiers. To their own exertions were they to be indebted for that greater and more inestimable reward—their own liberty and that of their posterity. Yet, notwithstanding the great and inappreciable value of the prize which was to be won or lost, notwithstanding the overflowing patriotism of the country, the love of freedom inherent in man, and the desire to win it for himself and to transmit it to his children, as well as the monthly pay promised the officers by the government, it was found necessary, in order to stimulate the zeal and patriotism, enliven the drooping spirits of the officers of that army, and to induce them to continue in the army, to make them promises of large grants of land. Accordingly Congress, as early as the 16th September, 1776, passed a resolve that the officers and soldiers of its army should receive grants of land. The salutary consequences and the high importance of this promise were seen almost as soon as it was adopted. Many highly meritorious officers whose pecuniary embarrassments or the situation of whose families seemed to render it their duty to retire from the public service to provide for their families, buoyed up with the pleasing anticipation of this ultimate source of profit, abandoned their intentions to retire, and continued in the service until the final triumph of the cause, in which they had acquired a consideration of no mean importance in any hotly-contested war. But in order the more clearly to show the sense entertained by the country of the importance of the services of the officers of the revolutionary army, several of the States of the Union within whose boundaries or jurisdiction there were vacant and unappropriated lands, notwithstanding that the general Congress had already made liberal promises, following the generous impulse thus given, did from time to time provide liberal bounties in land for their respective State lines in the continental service.

Before the commencement of the late war with Great Britain, but after it was perceived that a controversy with that nation was no longer to be avoided without a sacrifice of the independence which had been so nobly won by the army of the revolution, Congress, aware of the vast benefits which had resulted in the resolution from the promise of land to the soldiers, adopted the very same policy of promising grants of land to the privates.

By the act of December 24, 1811, the soldiers whose enlistment that act authorized received one hundred and sixty acres; and subsequently, whilst the war, which soon after followed, was raging in its utmost fury, to encourage enlistments the quantum was increased to three hundred and twenty acres. It was in the army to which bounties were thus given to privates that the memorialists were officers, and gallant officers the history of that war amply proves they were. If the soldiers of that army, and even the heirs of those who volunteered their services for a given and short period, but who were killed or died in service, had such large recognized claims on the bounty of the nation, it is not, in the opinion of the committee, easily to be perceived why their officers who by toil, industry, and sleepless nights, ministered to their wants, watched over their health and safety, drilled them into efficiency, brought them into the field, and fought at their head, have not claims equally strong.

Further, to show the inequality which appeared to have existed in the legislation of that day, a bounty of land was promised to the heirs of volunteers, including their officers, who might be killed or die in service, and regular bounties in land were promised to volunteers from Canada, including, specially, the officers of every grade, from a colonel to a subaltern Many of these volunteer officers, both native and Canadian, fought side by side with the memorialists against the common enemy; and if, by the fortune of war, one of each description sealed his devotion to his country on the battle field by his life, the family of the volunteer would be rewarded by a grant of a large and valuable tract of public domain, to be an asylum and a home for the widow and the children of a gallant father; while the widow and the children of the officer of the regular army, whose claims upon his country, by every process of reasoning, must be admitted to be at least as strong as those of any volunteer of any description whatever, had to bear their loss, with no other reward but the sympathy of their friends and the legacy of his brave and honorable name. But this is not all. There have been instances where officers have lost their lives in battle, or in the discharge of perilous duties, and whose papers at the same time were lost or destroyed, in which the heirs, instead of receiving a reward from the common stock for their irreparable loss, have been called upon to refund money to the public—moneys placed in the hands of their father for distribution, of the faithful application of which, in consequence of the loss of papers, no certain evidence could be produced; and in the recovery of this doubtful debt the home which had been left to the fatherless children has been sold from them, and they have been turned penniless upon the earth. This is no imaginary picture; the fact has occurred in more cases than one, and the memorials on the files of the House, it is believed, will attest it.

But it was not alone to the army of the revolution, the soldiers of the late war with Great Britain, and Canadian volunteers, that the policy of making grants of land has been confined; the principle has extended much further. On August 14, 1776, land was promised to all those who would leave the service of England and become residents of the States, without even requiring them to enter the service of the country. On April 23, 1813, large grants of land were promised to subjects of the King of England who would abandon his provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia and take refuge within the United States; and ample provision has been made, and at different times, recently, too, for giving full and complete effect to these promises.

In referring to these grants to native volunteers and Canadian volunteers in the late war, and to deserters and refugees in the war of the revolution, the committee do not wish to be understood as in any manner condemning the policy which dictated them; on the contrary, they believe it to have been the result of a wise forecast of the future. They have referred to them as an illustration of the singularity of the fact that these descriptions of persons should have been so liberally provided for, while the officers of the regular army, upon whom devolved the great burden of war, should be turned off, after having gloriously accomplished their work, with nothing but scars, broken constitutions, and, in many cases, of ruined fortunes. It is true they had the consolation of knowing they had gloriously sustained the honor and the independence of their country.

The memorialists have themselves eloquently remarked that they have sought in vain for the reasons which should deprive the officers of the second war of independence of the munificence which was extended to those of the first; for although as a body they may not have suffered so much or so long, yet they exhibited the same valor and love of liberty. They did not, like the refugees, flee the realms of oppression in search of liberty in foreign land; they protected the trees their fathers planted at home; and as in the case of the Canadian volunteers, who abandoned the country of their enemy and joined a foreign standard, and then in company with the memorialists fought and foiled the enemy on his own soil, it is hoped that Congress who have been so munificent to one will not remain indifferent to the just claims of the other.

Contrast the case of the officers of the army with that of the officers of the navy in the war, and how great is the difference between them, and how exceedingly disadvantageous to the former. By the regulations of the naval service, the officers and men participated in every capture, great or small, which they might make. If the captured was less in force than the captor, half the amount was divided among the captors; if the opposing forces were equal, or if the captured were superior to the captor, the whole value became the property of the captors. By these wise and salutary regulations an additional impulse was given to the ardent courage and daring enterprise of our naval officers and seamen. It is believed that almost every officer and seaman in that service realized a much larger sum in prize money than is the value of the land which it has been proposed to give to the officers of the army of correlative rank who served in the same war.

How stands the case of the army? If a battle be won, a fortress stormed, a convoy of provisions or munitions of war be intercepted or captured, the soldier has nothing, the officer has nothing, all belongs to the public; no diversion of spirit here as in the other great arm of national defence. It is a well known fact that while many of our gallant naval heroes came out of the war with splendid fortunes, won by their valor and good luck, not a single officer of the army retired from that service a whit the better in worldly goods, although he may have fought as desperately and been as thickly covered with the laurels of victory as his brothers of the navy.

It would, therefore, in this view of the subject, be but an act of common justice to make up this manifest inequality between the officers of the army and the navy by a grant of land to the former.

The late war with Great Britain has been emphatically called the second war of independence; it has been so termed in papers, public, private, and official; it has been so termed in speeches in Congress and out of Congress; it has been so considered at home and abroad; it has been so considered by statesmen and citizens, in and out of office. Why then is it not proper and expedient that a portion at least of the same measure of reward which was meted out to the gallant and glorious band of the revolution should also be meted out to those who in a later period fought so valiantly and so gloriously for the preservation and perpetuation of the blessings won in the first contest? If it is improper or inexpedient to do so, your committee are unable to perceive it. The committee have here used the phrase "a portion of the measure of reward meted out to the gallant band of the revolution."

The reason for using that phrase is to be understood in reference to the many acts of munificence to the officers of that army which have not been, nor is it contemplated ever will be, extended to the officers of the late army. Witness the half pay for life granted to the survivors; the half pay for seven years granted to the widows and orphans of those who were killed or died in service; the subsequent commutation of half pay for life; the full pay for life granted to the survivors by the act of May, 1828; and the bill passed by the House at the present session of Congress, extending the provisions of former acts to all those who by any technicality in said acts had not been brought within their provisions; also over the militia, to say nothing of the vast benefits conferred by the acts of 1818 and 1820.

Surely when all these grants to the heroes of the revolution are considered it cannot be deemed unreasonable to grant the small boon of a tract of waste, unappropriated land to the heroes of the late war.

The more clearly to illustrate the claims of the memorialists to some further compensation for their services, and to show the inequality which has been made to exist between the officers of the late army and the officers of the present army, the committee herewith present an exhibit, showing the difference between the monthly and annual pay and emoluments of the officers of the two armies respectively of correlative rank, and also showing the total amount which that monthly difference would give in three years:

	Difference per month between the pay of officers of the late and present army.	Difference in three years.
Colonel	$69 50	$2,502 00
Lieutenant colonel	73 98	2,663 28
Major	67 81	2,441 16
Captain	64 66½	2,227 94
First lieutenant	54 35	1,956 60
Second lieutenant	54 35	1,956 60

This difference is owing to an increase of rations and contingent allowances made to the present army, and properly made in the opinion of the committee, and is only mentioned for the purpose of showing that the officers in question were not fully compensated.

The committee have not gone through the whole descriptive list of officers of an army, nor have they taken into the account those of the staff who hold commissions in the line. The grades they have omitted bear the same relative portion of difference in pay, &c., as those they have enumerated. With respect to the staff taken from the line, the difference is still greater against the late army, as the additional pay and emoluments of the staff is not only greater now than in 1814, but the number of that description of officers is also much greater in proportion to the strength of the army than it was during the late war, thereby greatly multiplying the chances of increase of pay to the younger officers of the present army.

From this relative view of the pay and emoluments of officers of the army of 1814 and the army of 1831 it would appear that the difference against the officers of the late war, for the average period of three years, is more than double the value of the land which it has been proposed to grant them, and as it respects the inferior officers, it is more than quadrupled. Thus, on the score of even-handed and common justice, it would seem but fair that their claim should be granted were there no striking or peculiar circumstances of difference in the time or manner of their employments. That difference is too great in every respect to be passed over without suggestion. In the first place it is a fact well known that every species of provision and clothing was at least fifty per cent. higher during the late war than at the present period—a fact which your committee humbly conceive of itself sufficient to induce Congress to grant the prayer of the memorialists. The nature of the employment of the officers of the two periods, if also considered, would entitle those in a state of active and desperate warfare with a brave and wily enemy, and who were at the same time constantly subjected to every species of privation and suffering, and to all the dangers, casualties, and vicissitudes of war, to a preference over those who are only engaged in the peace occupations of an army, however faithfully and well the duties of the latter may be discharged.

It is useless to pursue further the parallel between the emoluments of officers of the two periods; in every view in which it may be placed the disadvantage is presented in bolder and bolder relief against the brave and suffering band of the late war.

At all periods in which this subject has undergone the serious and deliberate investigation of committees of the House, it is worthy of remark that it has received a favorable consideration, and that at no period has any unfavorable opinion been expressed, either by the House itself or by either of its committees. The only time in which the subject came fully before the House for discussion, and was discussed after the most serious deliberation, it was passed in the House, and failed only by reason of a compromise between the two houses at the last expiring moments of a laborious and anxious session of Congress, (in which it was indispensably necessary that a portion of the army should be disbanded,) upon a disagreement between the two houses as to the quantum of force to be retained in service—a question in the then deranged state of the finances of the country of paramount importance. The friends of this measure, under all the circumstances of the case, patriotically waived the claims of the suffering officers, but never contemplated their abandonment.

From the course pursued in the war of the revolution it is fair to infer that a like course would have been pursued in the late war had that war continued but a year or two longer. Congress did not, at the commencement of the revolutionary contest, provide for grants of land to their officers. That promise was not made until some years had elapsed—yet it was made. Had the late war continued a year or two longer, there is every reason to believe that a like course would have been pursued. The officers themselves expected it; they conceived it due to them as an expression of the feeling of the government for their sufferings and privations, as well as a reward for their services and sacrifices; and that they still think it due to them is evidenced by the reiteration of their claims.

The present condition of many of these brave and patriotic men requires that they should no longer be neglected or postponed. Some, it is true, may be in easy and flourishing circumstances, but it is believed to be a fact that a majority of those who are in existence are far from being placed in such a situation as to render these grants a matter of indifference or of little or no concern. Many of them have since sought employment and found an honorable grave in a foreign land. Many of them are known to be in needy circumstances, residing on the public lands on that frontier which they so faithfully and gallantly defended, while the widows and orphans of others are in poverty and want; and if the grant were now made it would be esteemed as a boon sent, as it were, from Heaven to relieve their wants and distresses.

The usage of this, as well as of almost all other governments, gave the officers of the late army reason to expect that after the close of their toils, and peace and security had been secured at home and respect had been enforced abroad, they would be recompensed by some flattering and substantial testimonial of their country's gratitude. Without such a feeling as this it is impossible to suppose that officers of inferior grades would have remained so long in the service, as it is notorious that their pay was wholly inadequate to their maintenance in the field, and, however patriotic they may have been, necessity would soon have driven them into retirement. It was because they were buoyed up by this hope that they remained.

The committee have observed that it is the usage of governments to give some additional as well as substantial evidence of the country's gratitude to those who have been its defenders in the hour of peril or calamity. Sound policy has ever dictated this course, and monarchs even, however despotic, have seldom, if ever, been found to neglect it. This government, no more than that of any other country, has no patent right for the preservation of its peace or for its protection against foreign aggression; and should the time again come when it will need the assistance of its citizens in a similar or other controversy, it would find its account in doing, even at this late period, that which it ought to have done years ago, and which is now sought to be done.

It is therefore the opinion of the committee that the officers of the army in the late war with Great Britain have strong claims upon the justice as well as upon the liberality of the country, and that every noble principle of our nature requires us to satisfy them. Under these several views of the subject, and of many others which time does not permit the committee to enumerate, they have come to the conclusion that it is just, politic, and expedient to grant the prayer of the memorialists, and generally to make provision for a grant of land to such officers as were disbanded in the consolidation of regiments during, and who served to the close of, the late war with Great Britain, and were disbanded at its termination, and for the heirs of those who died or were killed in service; and for this purpose the committee herewith report a bill.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 1, 1831.

Mr. Sterigere, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Bernard Marigny, of the city of New Orleans, reported:

That the petitioner, as the assignee or legal representative of Antonio Bonnabel, prays Congress to confirm to him two contiguous tracts of land, situate in the parish of St. Tammany, in the State of Louisiana, one containing 4,020 arpents and the other 774 arpents. A bill has been reported by the committee, confirming the first-mentioned tract of 4,020 arpents, accompanied by a report. It appears that the tract of 774 arpents, bounded on the southwest by the shore of Lake Pontchartrain, and on the south by the first-mentioned tract, as the accompanying plat shows, was granted to Lewis Davis, the 20th of January, 1777, by Peter Chester, British governor at Pensacola. That a decree was passed by Estevan Miro, Spanish governor of the provinces of Florida and Louisiana, confirming this title to Lewis Davis, on the 11th of June, 1788; that regular transfers or conveyances have been made to the petitioner vesting the title in him.

It is proved by the affidavits of Honore Landrau and Jaques Viume that this tract of land has been the property of Antonio Bonnabel and his heirs for many years; that they built a house thereon and cultivated it many years; that the said heirs sold and conveyed the same to Bernard Marigny, the 25th of June, 1829, who now occupies and cultivates it.

This claim was presented to the commissioner at St. Helena Court-House under the act of 1812, in the name of the heirs of Lewis Davis, but no report was ever made on it by the commissioner. This omission seems to be entirely accidental, as no reason has been assigned for not reporting on it. This claim is marked on the plat with the name of Pedro Piquery.

The committee are satisfied that the title to this tract of land was complete and valid in the heirs of Lewis Davis, and that if the transfers and conveyances from the heirs of Lewis Davis, through Antonio Bonnabel, down to Bernard Marigny, are genuine, of which they have no doubt, it should be confirmed to the petitioner. They have therefore reported "a bill for the relief of Bernard Marigny, assignee of the heirs of Antonio Bonnabel."

ON THE SUBJECT OF THE VIRGINIA MILITARY BOUNTY LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 3, 1831.

Mr. Wickliffe, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom the subject had been referred, reported:

The Committee on Public Lands was instructed by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 6th January "to inquire into the expediency of amending the act of Congress passed at the last session entitled 'An act for the relief of certain officers and soldiers of the Virginia line and navy of the continental army during the revolutionary war,' so as to change or alter the first section as not to require evidence as to the line on which the resolution warrant of Virginia issued; also to amend the 3d section so as to embrace cases where warrants have been located, and surveys or patents prohibited by law, by which the land is lost to the locater; also to cases of surveys or patents where, by the highest judicial tribunal of the State or United States, the land has been taken by a prior or better claim; also to provide for the renewal of lost or destroyed certificates or scrip; also to change the maximum quantity of land allowed to be appropriated by the said act to supply the claims embraced by said act; lastly, to make such alterations as the said committee may consider just and equitable."

The committee have deemed it inexpedient to legislate upon any one of the subjects embraced in the said resolution at this time. As to that portion of the resolution which proposes to amend the 3d section of the act of last session, the committee is decidedly of opinion that the act should not be enlarged in its provisions so as to embrace the class of cases indicated.

The act of the last session, as it passed the Senate, had for its object the satisfaction of about 200 acres of land warrants due to and principally owned by the heirs of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia State line, which, in consequence of the mistake in the deed of cession by Virginia to the United States of the land northwest of the Ohio river, had been unprovided for, and which claims addressed themselves forcibly to the justice of Congress. These warrants or claims for bounty lands were principally in the hands of the original proprietors or their heirs, and could not be located upon any land since June, 1792. They had not, therefore, become the objects of speculation or of fair barter and sale to any great extent. The bill was amended in the House of Representatives so as to include the unsatisfied warrants which had been issued or which were due to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line upon continental establishment, and to the officers and soldiers of the line of the continental army, arising under the acts of the revolutionary Congress. It is doubted whether this alteration and amendment of the bill by the House of Representatives was not an act of hasty and unadvised legislation. The effect of it has been to increase in the hands of purchasers of these land warrants, at a cost not exceeding $20 in the hundred acres, the value thereof to $125 the hundred acres. If the amount unsatisfied which has already been presented to the department could have been foreseen, it is confidently believed the amendment of the House of Representatives would not have been obtained. For the satisfaction of these warrants there had been set apart districts of country in the State of Ohio after the deed of cession by Virginia. Prior to 1792 the bounty land warrants due either to the Virginia State troops, or troops of Virginia on the continental line, could have been located in Kentucky. Millions of acres upon the two lines had been there located prior to 1792, and other millions due the Virginia troops upon the continental establishment have been located in the State of Ohio before and since the act of cession by Virginia to the United States. These locations upon both lines were, when made, or since have become, mostly the property of others. In many instances, both in Kentucky and Ohio, the locations and surveys upon military land warrants have been made to interfere. They have been and are yet the subjects of much litigation and speculation. If any locations have not been surveyed, the fault has been that of the proprietors, and not of the government of Kentucky, where the locations were made. In that State ample time has been afforded by the legislature, from time to time, to make the surveys, and to obtain patents from the Commonwealth. It is believed by the committee that, owing to some cause, whether to the ignorance of the warrant holder or a desire knowingly to appropriate land which had been previously located, thousands upon thousands of acres appropriated in virtue of warrants on both lines have been made to interfere, and consequently a loss has been sustained by some one; but it is believed that such loss has seldom fallen upon the soldier or his representatives. Most generally the loss has happened to those who were the purchasers of those warrants or claims for a very inadequate consideration paid the original proprietors.

If the law should be so amended as to embrace cases where patents have not been issued, or where surveys have not been made in Kentucky, or where the land has been lost by the decision of the courts of the State or nation, in consequence of conflicting claims, it would be difficult for the committee to conjecture the amount of land it would take to meet the claims thus described.

The committee believe such an alteration of the law would tend to a continuation of that system of land speculation which those bounty land claims have ever invited, and that no wisdom of legislation would be equal to guard against the frauds which might be perpetrated upon the interests of the government.

There exists no legal claim against the government of the United States in favor of any former or present holder of these bounty land warrants thus situated. No circumstance is presented to the consideration of the committee which favors them, when pressed upon the equity or generosity of Congress. The committee, therefore, recommend for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That legislation upon the subject is inexpedient.

RELATIVE TO A PROPOSED MAP TO EXHIBIT THE VARIOUS QUALITIES AND CLASSIFICATIONS OF THE SURVEYED LANDS OF THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 3, 1831.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 3, 1831.

SIR: The House of Representatives having on the 7th May, 1830, directed "that the Secretary of the Treasury cause to be made out a map or exhibit of the public lands that are surveyed, or may hereafter be surveyed, in each State, and that they be divided into as many classes as may be necessary to show their relative qualities, and that the same be laid before Congress as soon after their next meeting as may be practicable, and at the meeting of each succeeding Congress," the resolution was referred to the Commissioner of the Land Office, and I have now the honor to transmit his report, explaining the causes why the map or exhibit has not been prepared.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives of the United States.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 2, 1831.

SIR: In reference to the resolution of the House of Representatives dated May 7, 1830, in the following words, to wit: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury cause to be made out a map or exhibit of the public lands that are surveyed, or may hereafter be surveyed, in each State, and that they be divided into as many classes as may be necessary to show their relative qualities, and that the same be laid before Congress as soon after their next meeting as may be practicable, and at the meeting of each succeeding Congress," which was referred by you to this office, I have the honor to state that the field-notes of the surveys merely show the general quality of the land on the lines actually run, but do not attempt to describe the quality of the lands in the interior of sections. Hence the means of complying with the resolution are not afforded by the field-notes, and if they were, the force of this office would not be able to furnish the exhibit required for a very considerable period, if wholly applied to the object. The nearest approach towards a compliance with the resolution would be to copy the field-notes of all the public surveys. This course would not, however, show any condensed views of the quality of land, or present any classification, such as appears to be intended, and would cause great labor, and consume incalculable time. The great variety of soil embraced by almost every township would render it impracticable to make any discrimination as to soil, by colors or otherwise, on any map that could be made of the largest convenient size, even if the information derived from the field-notes were assumed as correct data as to the quality of the land in the interior of the sections.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR THE CONFIRMATION OF THE SELECTION OF LANDS BY THE COMMISSIONERS OF THAT STATE, UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE UNITED STATES, FOR A ROAD FROM LAKE MICHIGAN TO THE OHIO RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 3, 1831.

PREAMBLE and JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly of the State of Indiana.

Whereas it seems an incumbent duty on the general assembly of the State of Indiana, in maintaining the rights of the State, to express an opinion as to the diversity of construction given by the authorized departments of the general government and this State, relative to selection of the lands reserved to the State by a treaty entered into October 16, 1826, between Lewis Cass, James B. Ray, and John Tipton, commissioners, on the part of the United States, and the chiefs and warriors of the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians, by which a strip of land, commencing at Lake Michigan and running thence to the Wabash river, one hundred feet wide, for a road, and also one section of good land contiguous to the said road, for each mile of the same, and also for each mile of a road from the termination thereof, through Indianapolis, to the Ohio river, for the purpose of making a road aforesaid, from Lake Michigan, by the way of Indianapolis, to some convenient point on the Ohio river, was ceded to the United States; and in conformity with which, by an act of Congress of the United States, approved March 2, 1827, entitled "An act to authorize the State of Indiana to locate and make a road therein named," authority was given to the general assembly to locate and make the road above contemplated, and to apply the land above ceded to the making of the same: therefore, inasmuch as the location of the said road, as above ceded and authorized, would necessarily be made through the lands purchased by the said treaty by the United States, of the said Pottawatomie tribe, and especially through the ten-mile purchase named in the latter clause of the first article thereof, the southern line of which would otherwise entirely exclude the road from Lake Michigan, this general assembly feel constrained to assert as their right the privilege of locating and making said road, on the most suitable and practicable route from Lake Michigan, by way of Indianapolis, to the Ohio river, and of applying one hundred feet wide of land on which to locate the same, as well as one section of contiguous land, for the construction of the road, selecting the same, as from the location of said road this State would be fully entitled to from the lands so being on the route and lying contiguous thereto, whether the same should have remained as the property of the said tribe of Indians after said treaty, or were by the provisions thereof ceded or sold to the United States, the irrevocable right to the same having fully accrued to this State by the ratification of said treaty, and indubitably by the confirming act of Congress above referred to.

That a cession thus made and confirmed, and rights thus secured, could be in anywise affected by purchases or cessions of lands belonging to said tribe of Indians on the route of and contiguous to the route whereon said road must of necessity be laid, made subsequent to the said treaty of 1826, this general assembly cannot for a moment, or under any consideration, admit; for the points of commencement at Lake Michigan, and of intermediate route via Indianapolis, to the termination, taken in connexion with the known impracticability of constructing the road across the Kankakee ponds or marshes, sufficiently defined to the general government the extent and application of the cession and confirmation of the grant of lands as aforesaid, to this State, and the right thereto, which had fully and inalienably inured to this State accordingly. In conformity with the rights and authority vested in the State, and under its direction by its general assembly, the said road above contemplated was surveyed in a direct line from Lake Michigan, via Logansport, on the Wabash, to Indianapolis; but on account of the ponds and pools of the Kankakee swamp rendering that route entirely impassable, which measured twenty miles from the lake to the Wabash, the design of a location on a direct line was necessarily abandoned, and the nearest and best practicable route was found to be by inclining northeast of the said obstructions, by which direction the road was accordingly and finally located, in the year 1828, by Messrs. John J. Neely, Chester Elliott, and John McDonald, commissioners duly appointed for that purpose by the general assembly of Indiana, measuring from Lake Michigan to the Wabash at Logansport, one hundred and two miles; and which having been sanctioned by this State, has been finally established by the general assembly thereof; its whole length from the lake to Indianapolis being 171 miles 41 chains and 50 links.

While the location thus established determines the right before secured to the State of the land provided for its route, and in its contiguity for its construction, it is gratifying to this general assembly to know that much interest and attraction has been added to a considerable portion of the lands of the United States in the St. Joseph's and Elkhart country, and that the value thereof, in the hands of the general government, has been materially enhanced by the location and the prospect of the construction of the said road as laid.

According to such location the commissioners above named subsequently proceeded, under the authority of this general assembly, to select the lands along the route of said road, and as contiguous thereto as good land, according to said treaty and confirmation secured, could be procured, confiding in the acknowledgment by the United States of the rights in that behalf guaranteed to this State, with the approbation and under the sanction of the general government; and in such selection they were further influenced by the examination and concurrence of General John Tipton, Indian agent of the United States, attended by some of the principal chiefs of the said tribe of Indians, fully authorized on behalf of the United States to that effect. The plat of such selection was duly forwarded to the General Land Office of the United States; and it is with regret this general assembly have received the communication that such location and selection have been entirely disregarded by the officers of that department, and that part of the lands thus selected have been sold by the general government without reference to the vested rights of this State therein—a disregard and injustice which we trust the further reflection of said department or the decision of Congress will disavow.

Therefore, be it resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, forthwith to endeavor to procure from the proper department of the general government, or from the Congress of the United States, an acknowledgment of the right of this State to the lands selected by the commissioners, under her authority, for the route and construction of the said road from Lake Michigan, via Indianapolis, to the Ohio river, and that the proceeds of the portion thereof which has been sold, as above, be paid over to the acting commissioner of this State, Noah Noble, for the adjustments of the contracts entered into by the State for opening said road, on the faith and pledge of those lands, and that the remaining lands so selected, or yet accruing to this State under its vested rights, as above, be made subject to disposal by this State in such way as may leave the manner thereof entirely under the control of this general assembly, as secured to this State by the said treaty of 1826, and by the act of Congress, above referred to, confirmatory thereof, approved March 2, 1827.

Resolved, further, That the governor of this State be requested forthwith to forward a copy of the above preamble and resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

ISAAC HOWK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
MILTON STAPP, President of the Senate.

OPERATIONS OF THE LAND SYSTEM, AND THE NUMBER OF MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS ISSUED DURING THE LAST YEAR.

COMMUNICATED TO CONGRESS BY THE PRESIDENT DECEMBER 7, 1831.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 30, 1831.

SIR: The operations of this office for the last year, a report of which I have now the honor of presenting to your consideration and that of the government, have greatly exceeded previous expectations. An unusual quantity of the public lands have been disposed of, nearly all of which at the minimum price and to actual settlers. The causes which have principally contributed to increase the sales may be found in that active spirit of emigration which prevails in both Europe and America, in the enterprise and industry of the people of the west and southwestern States and Territories, and in the general prosperity of the country.

The statement hereunto annexed, marked A, shows the periods to which the quarterly accounts of the receivers have been rendered to this office, as also the monthly abstracts of sales and receipts, and the admitted balances remaining in the hands of the several receivers at the respective dates of their last returns. The quantity of lands sold, and the amount of purchase money, designating that portion received for sales made prior to July 1, 1820; the several amounts received in cash, forfeited land scrip, military land scrip, and the total amount of receipts, with the amount paid into the treasury in each State and Territory during the year 1830, the first and second quarters of 1831, as also the third quarter of 1831, will appear from the accompanying document marked B. The annexed statement marked C exhibits the transactions under the operation of the act of Congress approved the 31st of March, 1830, entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers of public lands, and for the suppression of fraudulent practices at the sales of the public lands of the United States," and the act supplemental thereto, of the 25th of February, 1831, both of which terminated on the 4th day of July last.

In the last annual report of this office a schedule was furnished showing the quantity of forfeited land stock issued at the several land offices established under the credit system, amounting up to June 30, 1830, to $365,035 32. The amount issued since that period to the 30th of September last is $171,977 49, making a total amount issued at the land offices up to the last-named period of $537,012 81, which, added to $29,782 75, the amount issued at the treasury for lands sold to Edgar and Macomb, at New York, in the year 1787, constitutes an aggregate of forfeited land stock issued to the 30th September, 1831, of $566,795 56.

The appropriations for clerk hire in the several offices of the surveyors general, with one exception, have for many years been inadequate to the due performance of all the duties required of them by law. Arrears in recording the public surveys, in most of the offices, have long been accumulating, and been the cause of much delay and embarrassment in this branch of the public service. The present means provided by Congress have proved insufficient to enable the surveyors general to discharge their current duties, and examine and test the accuracy of the surveys, and prepare the duplicate plats and descriptive notes according to law in time for the government to bring the lands into market within a reasonable period after the surveys have been completed. Many contemplated sales have been postponed during the present year, and the intentions of the government defeated and the expectations of the people disappointed by reason of the insufficiency of the necessary aid in the surveyors' offices. The returns of the public surveys should be examined and their accuracy tested at the surveyor's office as soon as practicable after they are received, in order to the prompt settlement of the accounts of deputies, and to the immediate detection of those errors which must be corrected previous to such settlement. It is of much importance, both to the surveyors and the public service that the duplicate plats be promptly prepared and furnished to the district land offices and to this office, as the surveyor general is not credited with the expenditures charged in his accounts until the plats of surveys are rendered and his vouchers compared therewith; nor can the lands be proclaimed for sale by the President until the receipt of such plats at the General Land Office. At the present time there are due from the several surveyors' offices the returns of at least three hundred townships surveyed which have been detained, and the adjustment of the accounts for which is suspended by reason of the causes above mentioned, which townships ought to have been prepared and offered for public sale and made subject to private entry during the present year. To remedy these evils and prevent future delays of like character, it is respectfully submitted to the wisdom of Congress to make such additional appropriations for the surveyors' offices as will prove adequate to the performance of all their duties.

From such causes and embarrassments I regret that I am unable to present such a report of the operations of the surveying department as could be desired and as the public interest requires. The protracted illness of the surveyors general of Florida, of Mississippi, and of Missouri, Illinois, and Arkansas, should be added to the other causes of delay in preparing such public lands for market as had been previously surveyed in their respective districts, while the difficulty of procuring, until late in the season, a competent surveyor general for Louisiana, under the act of the last session of Congress, who would accept that office, has caused an entire suspension of the surveys in that State.

On the establishment of the office of surveyor general for Louisiana, with a knowledge of the confusion and chaos which for a long time has prevailed in the surveyor's office south of Tennessee, it was deemed expedient and necessary to send a special agent to that section of country who was intimately acquainted with the subject and with the numerous errors, and their character, which had been committed in relation to the surveys of the private land claims, with a view to expedite the transfer of the proper surveys from said office to that of Louisiana, as required by the act of March last, and to examine the surveys, documents, and papers, and take abstracts and memorandums of such of them as it was necessary should be thus transferred. That agent has returned after a very faithful performance of the duty assigned him, and from his full and intelligent report, I am satisfied that the impolitic and irresponsible system which existed in the surveying department under the laws creating the offices of principal deputy surveyors, (which was repealed at the last session of Congress,) has introduced evils, difficulties, and embarrassments, connected with the public surveys in Louisiana, which cannot be overcome but by the patient industry, unceasing vigilance, and competent skill of the surveyor general of that State.

While it is the policy, as it is the interest, of the government to facilitate the sales of the public lands, and accommodate purchasers and promote the settlement of those sections of the country to which emigration tends, I would renew the recommendation for establishing another land office in Indiana, as called for by the necessities and convenience of actual settlers, and as required by considerations equally important to the pecuniary interests of the government, to include the territory described in the following limits, to wit: commencing at that point on the Tippecanoe river where the boundary line established by the treaty of the Wabash, the 16th of October, 1826, intersects that river; thence with said boundary to its intersection with the range line dividing ranges seven and eight east; thence north, to the northern boundary of the State; thence west, with the line of that northern boundary, to the northeast corner of Illinois; thence south, to a point due west of the first call; and thence due east to the place of beginning; and that the land office therein be located at some eligible and convenient place by the President. The section of country above described is rapidly settling with emigrants from other States and from Europe, many of whom are compelled to travel from one hundred to one hundred and eighty miles from their place of residence to enter and pay for their lands, while others, without the means of defraying the expenses of so long a journey, prefer locating themselves upon the public domain, in the hope that some pre-emption or other relief law will be passed for their benefit.

The act of the 30th of May, 1830, "for the relief of certain officers and soldiers of the Virginia line and navy, and of the continental army, during the revolutionary war," has thrown upon this office an amount of labor greatly exceeding that which was anticipated. The appropriation of four thousand dollars for this service, and other objects of duty, was insufficient to accomplish the purposes intended, and others have been occasionally detailed to assist, to the neglect of current duties. Such were the importunities of the claimants, and so ardent and pressing their demands for scrip, and so numerous the difficulties to be encountered, that, with the most persevering industry, the office, with the means in its power, has not been able to satisfy all the claims under the Virginia continental and State lines. Five hundred and twenty warrants (including two hundred and forty-seven of United States military) have been satisfied with scrip, amounting to 183,690 acres of the Virginia State line and navy; 38,901.90 acres of the Virginia continental line, and 34,300 acres of the United States military. Many of these warrants—in fact the largest portion of them—with the title papers connected therewith, have required and have received an examination and investigation of as difficult and complicated a character as those of a laborious and contested suit in chancery, involving an extensive and voluminous correspondence of legal discussion and frequently of perplexing embarrassment. These investigations have imposed upon the commissioner and those gentlemen of the office who were particularly charged with this service a very fatiguing and irksome duty. It would have been greatly preferred, if the peculiar circumstances of many of these cases had justified the delay necessary to an adjudication in the regular administration of justice, that the decision of numerous questions arising under the construction of wills and the conflicting claims of heirs had not devolved upon an executive officer, who could not devote that time and consideration to controverted questions of law which their importance frequently required. From the statement marked D, hereunto annexed, it will appear that up to the 14th instant three thousand five hundred and twenty-eight pieces of scrip had been issued, the record of which, in this office, fills eighteen books of about two hundred pages each.

At the last session of Congress the sum of five thousand dollars was appropriated for the employment of temporary clerks to bring up the arrears of this office. This sum will have been expended on the 1st of January next, and has furnished the means of disposing of an unusual amount of the current business for the year. From the first of January last there have been prepared, examined, and recorded, and will be issued previous to the close of the year, more than twenty-five thousand patents for lands sold, when, with the ordinary force of the office applied to that object, there were less than seven thousand issued in the year 1830. During the same time there have been written and recorded, or registered, more than 5,000 letters, occupying a record exceeding 1,500 large folio pages, and 500 quarto pages, in addition to the performance of other duties which have unremittingly pressed upon the time and attention of the office. But with all the exertions which have been made, and with the aid afforded by the appropriation above mentioned, to such an extent has the current business unexpectedly increased that the arrears on the 1st of January next will be greater than at the date of my last report. The annexed document, marked E, exhibits the several classes of arrears, with the number of clerks required to bring up the business of each in one year, by which it will appear that the labor of fifty-five clerks is necessary to accomplish that object. That statement has been made out from a very particular examination and a careful and moderate estimate of the amount of labor required, without reference to sickness or necessary or unavoidable absence from duty. But it will be impossible to employ so many additional clerks in the rooms allotted to this office, and there are no unoccupied rooms in the public buildings appropriated to the executive administration of the government. However desirable, therefore, it may be, on public considerations, to have all the business of the office brought up to the successive periods of its current duties, no practicable plan can be immediately adopted by which that object can be attained in less time than three or four years. With this view of the subject, I would respectfully recommend the permanent employment of fifteen additional clerks, and a special appropriation of five thousand dollars to defray the expenses of writing and recording patents out of the office in the year 1832. With this additional assistance, if the ordinary business should not greatly increase, it is believed a considerable portion of the arrears would be brought up in four years, at the expiration of which period the whole force then in the office would be required to discharge its current duties. With this additional number of permanent clerks, a reorganization of the bureaus of the office, on the plan mentioned in my last report, could be effected to great advantage, and essentially contribute to the accuracy and despatch of business.

The arrears herein referred to, (one item of which will, on the 1st of January next, consist of more than thirty-five thousand patents for land sold,) although unavoidable with the means furnished to the office, have created delays in its business frequently injurious to persons interested, and sometimes to the public service, and have afforded just cause of complaint from those who were entitled to a prompt discharge of its duties. I make this disclosure with the hope that ample provision will soon be made to enable the department to do away the cause of complaint which now exists, and prevent the recurrence of any such cause in future.

By reference to the last annual report of this office it will be seen that the total amount of sales of the public lands for the year 1829 was 1,244,860 acres, and it was therein estimated that the annual sales to actual settlers, commencing with the year 1831, would amount to one and one-half millions of acres, and that those sales would increase, with the population of the valley of the Mississippi, to fifty per cent. at the close of the next ten years. From the exhibit hereunto annexed, marked B, it appears that the sales for the year 1830 have amounted to more than one million nine hundred thousand, and that for the first three quarters of the present year they have exceeded two millions of acres, and that the money actually paid into the treasury during the last period, from the proceeds of the sales, is nearly two and one-half millions of dollars.

The importance with which these extensive operations are seen and felt by the people of the western and southwestern States and Territories imposes upon the government the highest obligations to promote, by those means within its competency, a prompt discharge of all the duties required of those who have any official agency, either directly or indirectly, in the sales and disposition of the public domain. Those sections of the Union now contain more inhabitants than the entire population of the United States at any period of the revolutionary war. By the returns of the census of 1830, it appears they then contained a free population exceeding three millions, and an aggregate population, within two hundred thousand, equal to all the enumerated inhabitants of the United States and its Territories in the year 1790. There are no sections of the Union where the citizens are more distinguished for active and vigorous pursuits and persevering industry, and where they are compelled to rely more exclusively upon their own resources and individual enterprise for the means of subsistence and the comforts and conveniences of life. The peculiar circumstances which attended their early settlement in the forests produced habits of the first importance to the rapid growth of the country, and which have subsequently enabled them to contribute largely to the public revenues of the nation. It is over the principal part of those vast regions that the operations of this office extend, and where the titles to real property depend upon the accuracy and fidelity with which its official duties are performed.

All which is respectfully submitted.

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 922. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR LAND FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN ROADS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 14, 1831.

A JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly of the State of Indiana relative to certain roads therein named.

Whereas there is a great extent of valuable country destitute of a good passable road between Lawrenceburg, in Dearborn county, on the Ohio river, and the southern bend of the St. Joseph's river of Lake Michigan, and as a great proportion of the lands through which a road from Lawrenceburg to the said southern bend would pass still belongs to the United States, and that a road properly constructed through said section of country would not only open a communication for emigrants to pass to the same, but cause the said lands speedily to sell and be of immense advantage to the State of Indiana and the United States; and whereas the State of Indiana has paid large sums of money into the treasury of the United States by the purchase of lands, and the said road would open a direct communication for the mail between said points, which would be highly useful not only to the State of Indiana, but also to the United States: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use all reasonable exertions to induce Congress to donate one section of land along the route for each mile of said road from Lawrenceburg, on the Ohio river, through Brookville, in Franklin county, Connersville, in Fayette county, Centreville, in Wayne county, Winchester, in Allen county, the county seat of Elkhart county, and from thence to the county seat of St. Joseph's county; and also to donate one section of land for each mile in length of another road, to be located from the Horse-Shoe Bend, on the Ohio river, by the way of Paoli, Bedford, Bloomington, Martinsville, and thence to a point on the Michigan road directly east of the town of Frankfort, in Clinton county, to aid the State of Indiana in constructing said roads, and authorize the State of Indiana to select the lands so to be donated, as aforesaid, anywhere within ten miles of said routes, out of any unsold lands belonging to the United States.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

ISAAC HOWK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved January 6, 1831.

CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1831.

Mr. C. JOHNSON, from the Committee to whom was referred the petition of Bernard Marigny, reported:

The petitioner prays the confirmation of his title to two tracts of land, situate in the State of Louisiana and parish of St. Tammany. One of the said tracts, consisting of four thousand and twenty arpents, was surveyed for Antonio Bonnabel, under whom the petitioner claims, on the 15th January, 1799, by Carlos Trudeau, the royal surveyor of the province of Louisiana, and a patent for the same was issued by Governor Gayoso on the 25th January, 1799.

The other tract claimed, consisting of seven hundred and seventy-four arpents, is contiguous to the one before mentioned. It was granted on the 20th January, 1777, by Peter Chester, British governor at Pensacola, to one Lewis Davis, whose title to the same was afterwards, to wit, on the 11th June, 1788, confirmed by decree of Estevan Miro, Spanish governor of the provinces of Florida and Louisiana.

Habitation and cultivation is shown from in and about the period of the grant up to the present time.

It appears that claims for both these tracts were filed—one in the name of Bonnabel, the other in the name of the heirs of Lewis Davis—with James O. Cosley, the land commissioner at St. Helena Court-House, under the act of 1812. In the report of the said commissioner in 1816, which was adopted by the law of Congress of 3d March, 1819, the said claim of Bonnabel was recommended for confirmation; but, in the opinion of the committee, a clerical error was therein committed by carrying out the quantity in figures as 400 arpents, instead of 4,020, as specified in the grant.

On the other claim of seven hundred and seventy-four arpents, which had been presented in the name of the heirs of Lewis Davis, no report was made by the commissioner, an omission, the committee think, which must have been accidental, seeing that no reason is assigned for it, and that, in their opinion, the title was fully established.

Deeming both the claims valid for the respective quantities called for, the committee report a bill to that end.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR A DONATION OF LAND TO ACTUAL SETTLERS FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE FRONTIERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, respectfully represent: That the western and southern border of the Territory of Arkansas is thinly settled, and, consequently, greatly exposed to the depredations of the Indians who inhabit the country to the west and south. The expense to the general government of keeping troops stationed at the different military posts for their protection is immense. Your memorialists would therefore suggest the expediency of granting to each actual settler, within a reasonable distance of the western frontier, one quarter section of land; this would be the means of drawing to our borders the hardy pioneers of the west in sufficient numbers to operate as a barrier to Indian depredations, and afford ample protection to the interior of our Territory. The lands on our western limits are at present to the government almost valueless, being situated in detached parcels, very little of which has as yet been sold. This, as your memorialists humbly conceive, would greatly enhance the value of the adjoining lands, and give to the country an improved and firm frontier, able by its strength, and impelled by its interest, to resist encroachments from abroad.

WILLIAM TRIMBLE, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CHARLES CALDWELL, President of the Legislative Council.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR COMPENSATION TO AGENTS FOR SELECTING LANDS FOR A UNIVERSITY IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas humbly showeth to your honorable bodies: That by an act of Congress approved the 2d day of March, A. D. 1827, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to set apart and reserve from sale, out of any of the public lands within the Territory of Arkansas to which the Indian title has been or may hereafter be extinguished, and not otherwise appropriated, a quantity of land not exceeding two entire townships for the use and support of a university within the said Territory; and your memorialists represent that, by a letter of instructions from Richard Rush, the then Secretary of the Treasury, to George Izard, the then governor of the Territory of Arkansas, requiring him, as soon as practicable and without unnecessary delay, to select the said two townships of land and set the same apart for the uses and purposes aforesaid; and your memorialists further represent that, in accordance with the said instructions, the governor appointed suitable persons as agents to select the said two townships of land according to the provisions of the above-recited act, and that the said agents have long since performed the duties imposed on them, and that for the services performed by them they have received no compensation whatever, and that your memorialists have no fund under their control out of which they can pay the said agents; your memorialists therefore respectfully ask your honorable bodies to pass an act appropriating a sufficient sum of money for the purpose of paying the said agents for their services rendered in selecting the said two townships of land. And your memorialists further pray that your honorable bodies pass an act giving the legislature of said Territory the power of taking charge of and making such disposition of said lands as you in your deliberation may think best calculated to effect the object for which the aforesaid land was appropriated; and, as in duty bound, your memorialists will ever pray.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS TO BE ALLOWED TO SELL THE SALINES IN SAID TERRITORY, AND APPLY THE PROCEEDS TO EDUCATION OF ORPHANS, ETC

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, respectfully represent: That by the laws of the United States now in force in this Territory, all salt springs and salines are reserved from sale, and that the salt springs and salines aforesaid are generally on lands unsurveyed. Your memorialists also having viewed with sympathy that unfortunate class of our fellow beings who have been left without the fostering hand of a parent, or means to give them that education which is required to fit them for the necessary stations to which they may be called in society—

We therefore pray that your honorable bodies may pass a law relinquishing all the salt springs and salines aforesaid on the public lands, with the lands contiguous thereto to this Territory, to be leased out or disposed of in such manner as you in your wisdom may think most advisable; and that the proceeds thereof be appropriated exclusively to the education of orphans and indigent children of the different counties in this Territory under such regulations as the legislature of this Territory may, from time to time, adopt; and your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR THE EXTENSION AND MODIFICATION OF THE PRE-EMPTION LAWS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, in behalf of the citizens of said Territory, would respectfully represent: That the late pre-emption law passed by your honorable bodies during the session of 1829 was limited in its effects and existence to the twenty-ninth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and thirty one, from causes peculiar to the Territory has fallen far short of producing the salutary results which the government intended by its passage; many of the earliest settlers of the Territory, by whose enterprise and adventure civilization has found its way to the wilderness of Arkansas, have, either from the fact that much of the public land has not been surveyed, or the surveys, if made, are not approved of, been unable to secure to themselves valuable improvements, the proceeds of their own industry for the last ten or fifteen years. The completion of the public surveys has enabled the citizens of almost every other part of the Union to avail themselves of the benefits of the late pre-emption law. In Arkansas it has been otherwise; numbers have been deprived of all participation in its benefits. The third and fourth settler on the same fraction, or quarter section, has also been unprovided for; the act only contemplates two residents on a quarter section; if by casualty a greater number should reside on the same tract, all having equal claims, two only are benefited. The resident on a fractional quarter section of ten, twenty, or thirty acres, is, by the late law, confined to his fraction, and cannot enter more, when his more fortunate neighbor who chances to reside on a full quarter section has a right to enter one hundred and sixty acres. These unequal distributions of the benefits of the law your memorialists would respectfully represent as calling for a renewal of the law on the subject in such form as to give each citizen equal rights.

Your memorialists would further represent that the emigration of the Indian tribes to the western frontier of the Territory will, in a short time, increase the Indian population on our western boundary to an aggregate greatly exceeding the population of the Territory. This fact makes any inducement that is offered to the emigrant to the Territory, and every privilege that is enjoyed by the citizen, a subject of deep interest to the people of the Territory. Numbers and a dense population are the best protection against incursions and disturbances from this powerful and excitable mass of Indian population. And if the lands more immediately contiguous to this increasing and formidable power were vested in the individuals located thereon, it would create a permanent and almost insuperable barrier to the aggressions and inroads to which we are otherwise liable. It would also tend greatly to relieve the government from the charge of protecting this frontier, and curtail the present disbursements for that object.

Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully solicit that the Congress of the United States would take into consideration—

1. The propriety of reviving the late pre-emption law in the Territory of Arkansas.
2. The propriety of extending it to all settlers on public lands prior to their being offered for sale.
3. Of giving those resident on unsurveyed lands, or lands the surveys of which have not been approved, the benefit of the law, and enabling them to perfect the title to the same.
4. The propriety of giving to one or any number of settlers on the same quarter, or fractional quarter, an equal right to enter the like quantity of land elsewhere
5. The expediency of allowing claimants of pre-emption to make proof of their rights under the law before justices of the peace, or the most convenient judicial officer, to save the trouble and expense of making such proof at a great distance from the residence of the claimant.
6. The propriety of reducing the quantity of land to be located or entered to forty acres, and make such enactment, in relation to the premises, as may be considered most conducive to the interests and prosperity of the citizens of this community.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

WILLIAM TRIMBLE, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CHARLES CALDWELL, President of the Legislative Council.

FOR CORRECTION OF A MISTAKE IN ENTERING A QUARTER SECTION OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1831.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Kamber, reported:

That the petitioner alleges a mistake in the entry of a quarter section of land, situated in the St. Stephen's land district, Alabama; that the petitioner is illiterate, and in very indigent circumstances; that he applied to one John G. Skinner to take the numbers of the land for petitioner; that Mr. Skinner made a mistake in the number of the piece of land that petitioner wanted; that the land entered is worth nothing, and that the tract intended to have been entered has been entered by another individual. The petitioner prays that his money may be refunded, or that he be permitted to enter other lands with the same money. Petitioner swears to the facts stated. Other individuals state that the petitioner is highly respectable; from all of which, the committee are of the opinion that the prayer of the petition is reasonable, and ought to be granted, and report a bill for the relief of the petitioner.

APPLICATION OF FLORIDA FOR PERMISSION TO LOCATE OTHER LAND IN LIEU OF SIXTEENTH SECTIONS, NOT WORTH ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS PER ACRE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1831.

Whereas the subject of general education is one of high and vital importance to the people of this Territory, and deserves the especial attention of those who have the enactment of laws for their welfare; and whereas the national government, in furtherance of the important object of affording the means of acquiring knowledge equally to all the people of Florida, has reserved for the use of the inhabitants of each township the sixteenth sections of land; and whereas, by reason of the peculiar character of the lands of this Territory, in their unequal fertility, the donation in many townships has been rendered entirely valueless, and as public munificence should be bestowed as public exactions are levied—equally upon all:

Be it therefore resolved, That our delegate in Congress be, and he is hereby, requested to procure the passage of a law authorizing the appointment by the legislative council of nine commissioners—three from East, three from Middle, and three from West Florida—who, upon the application of the inhabitants of any township in their respective districts, shall examine the sixteenth section thereof, and if the same shall not be considered of the value of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, that the said commissioners may locate for such townships any other section of land in said district, for the purpose originally intended."

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 20, 1831.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Prosper Marigny, reported:

That the tract of land claimed by the petitioner has been in the actual occupancy and cultivation of himself and of those through whom he derives title for more than fifty years; that it was originally granted to De Bienville, one of the earliest French governors of the province of Louisiana, by the company of the Indias, and as early as 1746 was sold by him to the person under whom the petitioner claims; during the existence of the French and Spanish governments in Louisiana, it was always regarded as private property. In common with many other ancient inhabitants of that Territory, the owners at that time, reposing on the stipulations of the treaty of cession that private property would be respected, and not aware of the condition required of them by the American government, or of the regulations of land offices, took no steps to have the claim confirmed by the commissioners. The consequence is that the oldest grants in the country, and this among them, are liable to be brought under the hammer as a part of the public domain. The committee are of opinion that the title of the petitioner should be confirmed, and report a bill accordingly.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 20, 1831.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the claim of John McDonogh, reported:

That John McDonogh claims four tracts of land in the district west of Pearl river, in Louisiana, which are embraced in the report of the register and receiver of the land office at St. Helena court-house, dated the 4th of December, 1830, and which accompanies this report.*

The committee are of opinion that the claimant is entitled to the four tracts of land therein specified, and report a bill for his relief.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS TO BE ALLOWED TO RELINQUISH THE SIXTEENTH SECTIONS THAT ARE UNFIT FOR CULTIVATION, AND TO LOCATE OTHER LANDS IN LIEU THEREOF.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 20, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Illinois respectfully represents: That by an act of Congress, entitled "An act to enable the people of Illinois Territory to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States," passed on the 18th of April, 1818, in consideration that every tract of land sold by the United States from and after the 1st day of January, 1819, should remain exempt from taxation under any authority of the State for five years; and as a further consideration, that the bounty lands granted for military services during the late war, while held by the patentees or their heirs, should not be taxed for three years; that section sixteen in every township should be granted to the inhabitants of such township for the use of schools. The consideration for an exemption from taxation was not limited to section sixteen, but extended to other objects, which are not necessary to be specially noticed in this memorial. These several propositions were submitted to the acceptance of the people of the Territory through their representatives, when convened for the formation of a constitution and the adoption of a State government. By an ordinance which was consequent upon the formation of a State government, the propositions submitted, as well as the conditions annexed to them, were irrevocably acquiesced in, and the State is more immutably bound by that compact than by the constitution itself. These terms seem to have been submitted on the part of Congress for two distinct purposes: 1st. Because an exemption from taxation would enable the government to sell more of the public lands, and with more facility than would exist otherwise, the exemption from taxation operating as an incentive to purchase. 2d. Section sixteen was proposed by Congress, and a specific appropriation asked for it by her, which was acquiesced in by the State. It was not proposed as one of the resources of the State treasury, but as a part of the equivalent for the surrender of the right of taxation, which should be applied exclusively to the use of schools in the townships respectively. It is evident, therefore, that Congress intended the grant as a substantial and practical benefit, which it was anticipated would be realized by the inhabitants of each township as a means of educating their youth. The framers of our constitution, animated by motives of equal benevolence, and deeply interested for the young population that was to follow them, accepted the proposition and secured it as a bounty to their youth, under a guaranty the least of all others subject to the vicissitudes of legislation. If this subject is to be viewed apart from every consideration of munificence, and examined simply as a contract in which the consideration involved is its leading feature, the good faith of the parties is not preserved in fact, notwithstanding the intention was evidently different. It is scarcely necessary to inquire what advantages the government, or the purchasers under the government, have derived from an exemption from taxation. The consequence of the contract is a direct loss to the State, that is annually realized, of a determinate amount. And although the precise extent of that loss annually may not be known, yet the certainty of its existence cannot be questioned, and was fully known at the time of the contract by the parties. Thus the government is constantly realizing the consideration promised on the part of the State, when it is certain that on the part of the government it has failed, as to section sixteen, to four-fifths of the amount originally contemplated by the parties. It never can be supposed that the government meant to give lands (especially under the assumption of a fair and valuable consideration for a conceded right on our part) that were totally sterile, unproductive, or unfit for cultivation, or that the State meant to receive such. Under this state of facts, would not the government feel herself bound to repair the consideration of a contract in which her faith is involved, and which has to so great an extent failed. But your memorialists believe that it is a case in which the cold interpretation of the mere terms of a contract is not required to procure a recognition of this claim or its ratification by Congress. In a government constituted as ours, whose perpetuity depends on the extent and diffusion of useful knowledge among its citizens, every means that is calculated to improve the young mind is alike due to our youth from her benevolence and wisdom; and we have the repeated examples of congressional legislation before us to assure ourselves that these views have long since made a prominent feature of the national policy. It is not for ourselves that we raise this petition; it is in behalf of those who are to live after us, and to whom, in part, the destinies of this great nation are to be committed. Congress seemed to have reasoned thus when she proposed the grant in question; she felt the necessity of making the system of education more diffusive, and therefore fostered it herself where it could not aid or sustain itself. The State fully reciprocates these motives and views; and the legislature, acting as the guardian power of the State over this right mutually secured by Congress and the framers of our Constitution exclusively to our youth, ask Congress to sustain the grant, where it has failed, to the full extent and design of those by whom it was made and by whom it was received. The lands in question would have been equal to the establishment of a complete system of common schools, had all those sections been of the quality anticipated; they would probably have been productive of more than two millions of dollars, but as they are they will not probably yield more than one-fifth part of that amount.

*For this report see No. 868, ante.

Your memorialists, therefore, with the respect becoming the subject, in behalf of their constituents ask Congress to pass a law giving to the State the right to surrender such of sections sixteen in the different townships as are unavailable, with leave to select and locate an equivalent number of unappropriated sections elsewhere in the State.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 933. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1831.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Arnaud Lanaux, of the State of Louisiana, reported:

That the petitioner asks of Congress a confirmation of his claim to a tract of land lying on the left bank of the Mississippi, of eight arpents in front and forty arpents in depth, ten leagues below the city of New Orleans, at a place called the English Turn. It appears to the satisfaction of the committee, from the depositions of Severin Laussier and D. Bouligny, that the claimant, and those under whom he claims, have been in the actual occupancy of the same for the last forty or fifty years, and cultivated the same; and that the land claimed constitutes a part of the sugar plantation now in the possession of the claimant.

It further appears from the certificate of the register of the land office at New Orleans that there is among the papers filed in his office a patent for the land now claimed as the property of the petitioner, bearing date March 5, 1764, to —— Delavergne, which recognizes title to the present claim, under whom the petitioner claims; but there is no regular chain of conveyances produced from the patentee to the present claimant; nor is any reason assigned for the omission to file his claim with the commissioners of the land office, who have been at various times heretofore authorized to act upon such claims and confirm titles, further than the one given by the claimant in his petition, that he was not aware of the necessity of so doing until since the time elapsed in which the commissioners of the United States were authorized to act.

The committee are of opinion that the claim of the United States should be relinquished, and the claimant confirmed in his title to the same; and therefore report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 934. [1ST SESSION.

IN FAVOR OF ALLOWING PAYMENT TO BE COMPLETED ON LAND WHICH HAD REVERTED FOR NON-PAYMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1831.

Mr. MARSHALL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Allen W. Hardie, of the city of New York, reported:

That the petitioner prays to be allowed to complete the payments and obtain patents for two quarter sections of land in the district west of Pearl river, which he claims right to do as assignee of the original certificates of purchase issued in 1818 to Abram Lundy, who in that year purchased the two quarter sections at two dollars per acre for each, and paid one-fourth of the price, the remaining three-fourths being still unpaid. It appears that Nathaniel Kimball, who was the holder by assignment of the said certificates, received in July, 1830, in answer to a letter of inquiry relative to the said two quarter sections, addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a letter from the chief clerk in said office, (during the illness of the Commissioner,) informing him that he could now complete his payments under the act of Congress passed at the previous session, a copy of which was enclosed, and which appears to be the act of March 31, 1830, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers of public lands, and for the suppression of fraudulent practices at the public sales of the lands of the United States;" that Kimball exhibited this letter to the petitioner, who, in full reliance upon, and induced by the information it contained, purchased the two certificates from Kimball for a property consideration equivalent to more than two thousand dollars; but upon afterwards applying to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for information as to the time, manner, and amount of the payments to be made for said land, according to the provisions of the said act of March 31, 1830, he was in substance informed that his case was not embraced by that act; that there was no law under which he could complete the payments, and that the first information had been given under the erroneous impression that there had been a further credit on the lands in question which had reverted to the United States; whereupon the petitioner, stating his readiness, and offering to complete the payments according to the provisions of the above-mentioned act of 1830, prays for a special act permitting him to do so.

The committee have ascertained from the General Land Office that, in consequence of these facts, the lands to which the petition relates have been withheld from sale. Under all the circumstances, they are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted, and to that end report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS. No. 935. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1831.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Soniat Dufossat, reported:

That it appears by the documents accompanying the petition that, on the 7th of June, 1762, J. Desruissaux presented his petition to De Kerlerec, at that time governor of the province of Louisiana, and Faucault, director or ordonnateur of the same, in which he represents that, having some years before established a stock farm on an island in Lake Ponchartrain, on the left of the place called Les Coquilles, two leagues in length, and one and a half in breadth, extending as far as the outlet of the Rigolets; that he had already built a house and placed a considerable stock there, which he states had been done with permission from the governor, to whom the petition is presented; he asks a regular concession of the island.

On the 2d of June, 1762, Louis de Kerlerec, the governor, and Dennis Nicolas Faucault, acting as commissaire ordonnateur, under their seals, grant to the petitioner the island above described, reciting that the establishment already made was by their previous verbal permission. They grant him the island in full property for himself and his heirs, but on condition that he shall continue the establishment already made; and if not, and in default thereof within one year from the date, it shall revert to the domain of the King. They also impose on the grantee the obligation of paying the droits seigneuriaux, if any should be imposed; and reserving besides, for his Majesty, all the timber necessary for the construction of fortifications, magazines, and other works which are or may be ordered, and for the repair of public vessels.

The authenticity of this grant is certified, after the cession of Louisiana to Spain, by the notary of the government, Juan Bautista Garie, whose certificate bears date June 3, 1776; and he further certifies that the grant conforms to the usages of granting lands under the preceding government. It appears that in 1791 a contest arose between the heirs of the grantee and one Rillieux in relation to the ownership of the island, and that a suit was at that period pending between them. The testimony of witnesses, which, according to the usages of Spanish tribunals is reduced to writing, accompanies the petition, and goes to show how far the grantee complied with the conditions by continuing his establishment on the island.

One witness testifies that Desruissaux built a two-story house and lived on the island; another, that he knows that Desruissaux inhabited the island, and never heard that it belonged to any other person. Another witness testifies that for thirty-five years preceding the year 1791 the island had belonged to Desruissaux, he having purchased it of the Biloni Indians; that he built a house and negro cabins, and raised crops on it and kept a stock there. Another witness states that, in 1773, he was on the island, saw a house and orange trees, as well as other fruit trees, and that it belonged to Desruissaux; and some of them state that the island at that time was called Desruissaux's island.

It appears that on the 25th of April, 1791, the parties came to a compromise, by which the heirs of the grantee relinquished their rights to the defendant, Vincent Rillieux, in consideration of one thousand dollars; and thereupon a decree was entered by the lieutenant governor and auditor of war, Don Nicolas Maria Vidal, confirming the title of Rillieux to the land.

From Rillieux to the present claimant the chain of conveyances is complete.

The land claimed by the petitioner and covered by the grant to Desruissaux having been recognized by a court of competent authority, before the cession of Louisiana to the United States, as the private property of Rillieux, appears to the committee to be guarantied to its legitimate owner by the third article of the treaty of cession, by which it is stipulated that the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be ultimately incorporated in the Union; and that "in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess."

But it appears that the patent has not heretofore been recognized by the United States, and the land covered by the patent is liable to be sold and surveyed as a part of the public domain. The committee, therefore, report a bill for the relief of the claimant.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 936. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1831.

Mr. CARR, of Indiana, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John H. Thomas, of St. Martin, in the State of Louisiana, reported:

The petitioner states that he is the owner of twelve hundred arpents of land, which is described in the report of the United States commissioners, No. 1114, in class No. 9. He claims under Antoine Patin, in whose name it was entered with the commissioner for confirmation, at Opelousas, in said State. The evidence of Pierre Moreau, who is represented as a credible man, shows that Patin, from the year 1789 to 1803 or 1804, occupied said tract of land as a vacherie, and that his negroes inhabited and cultivated a part of the land in question. He also swears that he recollects to have seen an order of survey for said land, signed by Miro, governor of Louisiana, in favor of said Patin, but which he has reason to believe was lost. Another witness also swore that he resided on the land for seven or eight years preceding 1813, by Patin's permission, and that about seventeen or eighteen years previous to his occupancy, the negroes of Patin occupied it as a vacherie, and that, from the marks of culture when he took possession, it must have been cultivated. Patin, who is proven to be a man of respectability, swears that, about 45 or 50 years since, he applied to the Spanish government, through the commandant, for a tract of land at Attakapas, which is described in No. 1114 of the claims upon which reports were made to Congress by the commissioners of the land office at Opelousas, which tract is therein designated as entry No. 78, class 9. He states that the said commandant drew his petition and recommended it to his government in his capacity as commandant; and that he obtained an order of survey upon it, signed by Miro, then governor of Louisiana, directing a surveyor to put him in possession of the land so conceded to him, and that he used it as a vacherie for many years previous to the change of government in 1803, by which the country passed to the United States. He states that the concession has been lost; that he has no interest whatever in said land, having long since sold it; and that the petitioner is now the true owner. The register of the land office of the western district of the State of Louisiana proves that there is no other record of any other grant to said Patin as original proprietor. The evidence is clear that said tract of land has been inhabited and cultivated since the year 1789, with the exception of one or two years.

Upon this state of facts, the committee are of opinion that the claimant is entitled to the land claimed by him under the provisions of an act of Congress passed March 2, 1805, and report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 937. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1831.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Celestin Chiapella, reported:

That the petitioner has shown, to the satisfaction of the committee, that he and those under whom he holds have possessed a plantation on the Mississippi, about nine miles below the city of New Orleans, for more than half a century; that it contains, according to a survey made by a deputy surveyor of the United States, to whom the original titles were exhibited, the quantity of three thousand and eighty-seven acres; that a part of it is possessed by virtue of a French grant, dated July 8, 1723, in favor of Joseph Laloire, and another French grant in favor of Joseph Laloire, dated January 2, 1767. Another part is held by virtue of a French grant to Sieur. Chaperon, dated January 23, 1759. The title to the remnant is shown by the recognition of the French governor, as having been the property of Chaperon since the year 1723.

It appears by the certificate of the register of the land office at New Orleans that the French grants above referred to are recorded in his office, and the earliest one mentioned, to wit, that dated July 8, 1723, has been exhibited to him, and is by him pronounced genuine.

It is proved by respectable witnesses that this plantation is one of the oldest on the river; has been cultivated, to the knowledge of the witnesses, since the year 1782, and has always been considered as the private property of Chiapella.

It appears by a certificate of Mr. Phelps that the original French patents were exhibited to him when he made the survey.

The committee is of opinion that if this claim had been presented to the commissioners of the land office, supported by the evidence now offered to the committee, the claimant would have been entitled to a certificate for the quantity of land claimed by him, and that, therefore, the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted, and they accordingly report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 938. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE APPLICATION OF PURCHASERS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS WHO HAVE FORFEITED LANDS FOR NON-PAYMENT FOR FURTHER RELIEF.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1831.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of certain persons in Alabama who were purchasers of the public lands at the sales at Huntsville in 1818, reported:

That the committee are well satisfied that it is true, as represented in said petition, a great inequality exists among the purchasers of the public lands prejudicial to those who bought and paid for their lands at high prices previous to the passage of the relief laws, and favorable to those who omitted to comply with the terms of their contracts, and who have, and under the indulgence of these laws, secured a title at very reduced prices. This inequality, however, which is much to be lamented, arises not from the relief laws, but from other causes which were not foreseen, and over which the government had no control. Without the benefit afforded by these laws, the inequality among the contractors for the public lands would have been more glaring, and the condition of those who have availed themselves of the relief proffered would have been most lamentable and aggravated. Many who had made contracts for land above the government price previous to 1820 were unable, in consequence of the great and unforeseen depreciation of property, to complete their payments, and, without any culpable neglect of theirs, forfeited not only the land purchased but the money that had been paid. To this numerous class of unfortunate purchasers, thus deprived of their all, government has, by several acts of legislation, afforded relief, by opening the right and extending the time of payment, by reducing the price, and by permitting part of the land included in the purchase to be relinquished and the remaining part to be retained. But in no case has the government consented to substitute a new contract upon more favorable terms for one that has been completely executed, or ever refunded any part of the consideration money paid for land, or granted scrip or given other gratuity to the purchasers. The payments made by the petitioners were in pursuance of their own voluntary and express contracts, and the price which they gave was no more than the fair value of the land, as generally estimated, at the time of the contract. The great and unexpected depreciation in price which subsequently occurred was not confined to Alabama, but extended throughout the whole country, and affected almost every description of property.

To comply with the request of the petitioners would introduce a novel principle in our legislation, that would extend to all purchases above the present or any future minimum price, would disturb contracts that have long been closed, open the door to an infinite variety of claims not only from the original purchasers, but their heirs and assigns, create immense expense and embarrassment to the government, without doing equal justice or giving satisfaction to the claimants.

The committee submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to grant the prayer of the petitioners.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 939. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM OF A CANADIAN REFUGEE FOR LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1831.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition of Dr. Eliakim Crosby and the accompanying documents, reported:

That they have carefully examined the testimony in this case, which is of the most ample and respectable character, and find that it is conclusively proven that the petitioner emigrated from Litchfield, Connecticut, in 1804, to the province of Upper Canada, and settled in London district, in said province; that he had been extensively engaged in the line of his profession, and in agricultural and mercantile pursuits, till the breaking out of the war of 1812 between the United States and Great Britain, when he had accumulated real estate of various kinds of more than $10,000 in value, besides personal property of perhaps an equal amount, and had sustained the most unblemished reputation. He was known to be attached to the institutions, government, and people of the United States, and after the war became an object of suspicion to the British agents in the province. He knew that the oath of allegiance to Great Britain would be tendered to him, and that a refusal to take it would subject his property to confiscation, and himself to imprisonment, and his family to distress. Under these circumstances his native country could not have looked for the sacrifices he made. If he had permitted no regard for his native country to influence him he might have remained with his family in affluence and comfort; but, influenced by the most patriotic motives, and relying on the protection of his country, which he conceived was held out to him by General Hull's proclamation, he determined to abandon his home and his valuable property and espouse the American cause; and accordingly, with his family in a destitute condition, having nothing but their clothing and a little bedding, crossed the lines, and joined the American army early in the year 1814. He was soon after appointed a surgeon to a corps of Canadian volunteers, in which he served to the end of the war. When he left Canada he was largely engaged in his profession, and in mercantile business; was the owner of several tracts of land, with buildings and improvements; of a valuble distillery, two taverns, and three-fourth parts of a very valuable flour mill and saw mill, on Patterson creek, seven or eight miles from Lake Erie, and other real and personal estate, all of which, on his going to the United States, was taken possession of by the agent of the British government, and confiscated, pursuant to the 84th George III, and himself declared a traitor, for having joined the American army. The flour mill was in the possession of a British force, and principally supplied the British army in that quarter with flour till November, 1814, when it was destroyed by the order of General McArthur (who was then on an expedition through Canada) to deprive the enemy of the means of carrying on their expedition against Detroit. The Hon. Thomas P. Macon was present at the destruction of this mill. Dr. Crosby has been much harrassed by his creditors from Canada since peace, and has been compelled to pay the debts due to them with considerable costs, whilst he has been unable to collect any debts due him in Canada. He has no legal claim on the government of the United States for these losses the committee admit; but his claims address themselves strongly to the justice of Congress, and are sustained by the spirit of the act of 1816 for the relief of the Canadian refugees, which, it is believed, does not, in terms, embrace his case. If, however, it did, the committee are of opinion it does not afford any relief commensurate with the sacrifices, sufferings, and services he endured for the American cause.

The petitioner's claim and case very much resembles that of Andrew Westbrook, which has passed the House without objection, and embraces the very same principle; and, as Crosby has shown an equal devotion to the interests of his native country, the committee recommend he should receive the same relief that was granted to Westbrook. They therefore report a bill granting him warrants for two sections of land, to be located on any lands of the United States which are now subject to location by the existing laws.

APPLICATION OF CITIZENS OF MISSOURI FOR THE FINAL SETTLEMENT OF LAND CLAIMS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 23, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of the undersigned, citizens of the State of Missouri, respectfully showeth: That your petitioners belong to that numerous class of the inhabitants of the State of Missouri who are interested in unconfirmed French and Spanish land claims; that the Congress of the United States did at different periods, from March 26, 1804, to April 12, 1814, inclusive, pass laws for the adjustment of those claims; that by virtue of those laws many claims were confirmed, and many more, either of precisely the same character or of superior merits to those so confirmed, were, at the expiration of the act of 1814, left unadjusted; that the lands held under titles so remaining unconfirmed have been for several years subject to taxation and liable to be sold under judgment and execution, but for all beneficial purposes have been useless to the owners; that, in consequence of the precarious nature of the title, those lands could not be disposed of at private sale unless at an enormous sacrifice, and for the same reason no permanent settlement or improvement could be made thereon; that numerous individuals, whose only or principal property at the date of the treaty of cession consisted of the above description of titles, have thus, from a situation of comfort and independence been reduced, together with their families, to indigence and distress, and amongst those persons are numbered some of the most distinguished and meritorious officers of the Spanish government in Upper Louisiana; that this state of things in Missouri was not only ruinous to private citizens but injurious to the public weal, inasmuch as it effectually prevented the spread of population in those counties in which the unconfirmed tracts are situate; that the Congress of the United States, taking into view the above grievances, thought proper, on May 26, 1824, to pass an act authorizing the judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Missouri to take cognizance of those claims, and to adjudicate and confirm them "according to the laws of nations, the stipulations of treaties, the proceedings under the same, the several acts of Congress, and the laws and ordinances, customs, and usages of Upper Louisiana;" that the above act has been, by subsequent acts of Congress, continued in force until May 26, 1829. Your petitioners show that the construction which said act of 1824 has received has rendered it rather injurious than remedial to the great majority of the claimants; that said judge having decided that, under the act of 1824 and the acts continuing the same, he has no power to confirm any claim not within the regulations made February 18, 1770, by Count O'Reilly, it is manifest that there must be a decree in almost every case against the claimants. Your petitioners respectfully submit that there does not exist nor never has existed in Upper Louisiana, to their belief or knowledge, one incomplete title, conformable to O'Reilly's regulations; that in consequence of the view so taken by said judge of his power under said act, the great majority of the claimants have withdrawn their petitions from before him, rather than expose themselves to a decree which would compel them, at an expense which the subject matter would not justify, to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; that already an expense has been incurred by the petitioners to the amount of several thousand dollars, for fees, paid by them to the United States district attorney, clerk, and marshal; that heretofore, to wit, at the session of 1827–'28, a petition was presented to Congress setting forth the grievous operation of the act of 1824, and praying that some other mode of adjustment of the claims might be provided; that, at the last session of Congress of 1828–'29, a bill passed the Senate, the object of which was the final adjustment of private land claims in Missouri; which bill after having been reported in the House of Representatives by the Committee on Public Lands, on January 26, 1829, was not afterwards taken up during the session. Wherefore your petitioners respectfully pray that your honorable body will again take into consideration the matters above set forth, and will please to make such provisions in that behalf as to your wisdom and justice shall seem meet, and your petitioners will pray, &c.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 941. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 27, 1831.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of E. Marin and J. Wogin, and other citizens of the parish of St. Bernard, in the State of Louisiana, and the testimony accompanying the same, reported:

That the petitioners claim to be the owners and proprietors of several tracts of land in the parish of St. Bernard, in the State of Louisiana, lying on the Terre aux Bœufs, according to a survey made for themselves by Aug. S. Phelps, the surveyor of the United States in said State, and which accompanies said petition, and contains the names of said petitioners, and a precise statement of the boundaries and the quantity of land claimed by them, respectively, and which was made in the month of May, 1831. Said claimants rely for title upon donations made to them by the King of Spain between the years 1778 and 1783, and a continued occupation and possession and cultivation of said lands ever since. They also allege that they were ignorant of the requirement of the several acts of Congress heretofore passed for the confirmation of their titles, and now ask Congress to protect them in their rights and possessions.

It appears to the committee, from a careful examination of the testimony, that between the years 1778 and 1783 the section of country lying on the Terre aux Bœufs, described in the plat accompanying the petition, was settled by a series of emigrations from the Canary Islands, under the directions of the King of Spain, and through the agency of Galvez, who was at that time the governor of Louisiana; and that Pierre Marigny was appointed the commandant of the colony, in order that he might direct and regulate its formation and establishment; and that he gave to each of the emigrants a portion of land, which was varied in quantity in proportion to the number of individuals in each family, and that the portion assigned each was very small—some two, some three, and others three and a half arpents in front and forty deep; and that said commandant had built, under a contract with the King of Spain, a small house on each of the portions of land assigned to the emigrants, and supplied them with provisions for some time; and that the said emigrants, or their descendants or assigns, had occupied and cultivated the several tracts of land allotted them from that time to the present; and that in the year 1785 a church and parsonage-house had been built for the use of the colony by the government on Terre aux Bœufs, and had been used by them for the purposes of worship from that time to the present.

It is further in proof that Lavau Trudeaux, the royal surveyor general for the province of Louisiana, proceeded in the year 1792, by order of Governor Carondelet, to make a survey of the lands thus assigned the colonists by their former commandant, Marigny, and that he did survey and designate to each individual the boundaries of his respective portion. Witness testifies that Trudeaux so informed him, and that he had seen the plat of the land made by him, and which he supposes to be lost, and which it is probable, from other information given to the committee, was destroyed shortly after by a conflagration of a part of New Orleans, with many other valuable papers of that officer.

It is further in proof that no written evidence of title was given to the colonists either by the King of Spain or his officers in Louisiana; that the said portions of land so parcelled out to the colonists were of but little value at that time and for many years after, and were frequently sold, and the estate passed by parol, and sometimes in writing on small strips of paper, which have not been preserved; and in some instances, as is apparent on the plat exhibited, large estates have been formed, and in other cases divisions and subdivisions of the original settlement claim have been made, either by sales or partition among the descendants of the original emigrants, so that the witnesses are of opinion it would be impossible at the present time to trace the titles back to the original proprietors. Witnesses state that they have examined the plat accompanying the petition, and that the same presents an accurate statement of the settlers, and the quantity of land and boundaries of the respective portions of land claimed by them at the present time, and that the respective tracts, as designated in said plat, have been constantly occupied and cultivated by them, or their descendants or their assigns, from the original settlement to the present time. The preceding facts are satisfactorily proven to the committee, not only by two or three of the original settlers, but also by the testimony of Charles Faggot, who was a Spanish officer, stationed on the Terre aux Bœufs in 1781, and who was appointed parish judge of St. Bernard in 1807, and was a representative in the legislature of Louisiana in 1810, and again appointed parish judge in 1819, which office he yet fills, and is represented to us as a man of honesty and integrity, and his statements are confirmed by the testimony of the Hon. D. Bouligny, late a senator in the Congress of the United States from Louisiana. All the depositions exhibited were taken in the presence of the register of the land office at New Orleans.

Petitioners also produce a certified copy of a paper in the Spanish language, from the register's office in New Orleans, purporting to be a retrocession from Don Pedro Philippe Marigni de Mandeville to the King of Spain of a quantity of land between the Mississippi and the lakes, and which includes the lands on the Terre aux Bœufs, for the purpose of enabling him to colonize the same, and which is dated on the 29th day of April, 1779.

The committee are of opinion that the faithful execution of the treaty by which the government of the United States acquired Louisiana demands the recognition and confirmation of the claims of the petitioners. They are also of opinion that the said petitioners might have secured titles to the respective tracts of land claimed by them under the laws heretofore passed by Congress for securing titles to Spanish claimants in Louisiana, and that the omission to do so, whether from neglect or ignorance, should not produce a forfeiture of their claims. The committee therefore submit a bill for their relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 942. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 27, 1831.

Mr. MARSHALL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Hannah McKimm, reported:

The petitioner states that, pursuant to the provisions of the acts of Congress of the 3d March, 1823, and the 26th of May, 1824, in relation to lands situated between the Rio Hondo and Sabine rivers, in the State of Louisiana, she filed her claim to a tract of land on the main fork of the bayou Provincial, and between the said rivers, with the register and receiver of the land office south of Red river; that the claim of the petitioner was founded upon the habitation and cultivation of the premises at and prior to the 22d February, 1819; that proof of such cultivation and occupation was adduced before the said register and receiver, and that the petitioner felt assured of their favorable report; that she had recently discovered, from an examination of the land office books, that the said register and receiver had rejected the testimony adduced in support of her claim, because the witness produced upon the occasion was the son of the petitioner; that by the laws of Louisiana the descendant is not permitted to testify for the ancestor, or vice versa.

The committee, without deciding whether the commissioners erred or not in not admitting the testimony of the petitioner's son in support of her claim, are of opinion that the additional evidence adduced by her is sufficient to prove the justice of her claim. They therefore report a bill for her relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 943. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 27, 1831.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Bernard Leonard and Jacob Black, reported:

That it appears, to the satisfaction of the committee, that Peter Young, David Durham, Nathaniel Hickman, and Isaiah Hickman severally made improvements and cultivated lands on the south side of Red river, and east of the Sabine, in the tract of country mentioned and designated in the act of Congress approved on the 3d March, 1823, relative to land titles in that part of Louisiana between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine, known as the "neutral territory;" that their settlements were made many years previous to the treaty of limits between Spain and the United States of the 22d February, 1819, and have been kept up ever since. Under the act of Congress passed subsequently to the one above mentioned, confirming the claims reported by the register and receiver for the western district of Louisiana, by which actual settlers previous to the treaty of 1819 were confirmed in their claim to the quantity of six hundred and forty acres each, the claimants would have been clearly entitled to that quantity if their cases had been embraced in the report made by said register and receiver.

The petitioners claim as assignees of the orignal settlers, and the reason why the necessary proof was not made before the commissioners has been sufficiently explained.

The committee, believing their claims to be just, report a bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 944. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 27, 1831.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Benjamin Bullitt, reported:

That the petitioner claims two tracts of land of six hundred and forty acres each; the one in his own right, and the other as assignee of Toussaint Lafleur, in that part of the parish of Natchitoches, in the State of Louisiana, called the "neutral territory."

The evidence accompanying the petition shows that previous to the treaty of limits between the United States and Spain, the claimant, Bullitt, inhabited, occupied, and cultivated a tract of land on the south side of Red river, and east of the Sabine, within the limits of the "neutral territory," as designated by the act of Congress of March 3, 1823, relative to the land titles in that part of Louisiana, and the act supplementary thereto; and that he has ever since continued to cultivate it; that it is situated about twenty-five miles above the town of Natchitoches.

It further appears that Toussaint Lafleur made a similar settlement and improvement within the same territory, which has ever since been occupied by Bullitt as his assignee. The latter claim is described as situated about twenty-three miles above the town of Natchitoches.

The committee are of opinion, that had the proof now furnished them been laid before the commissioners, under the above-mentioned acts of Congress, these claims would have been admitted and confirmed. They therefore report a bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 945. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS THAT THE PURCHASERS OF LANDS UNDER FRENCH AND SPANISH TITLES, AND NOT CONFIRMED, BE PERMITTED TO ENTER THOSE LANDS AT THE MINIMUM PRICE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 27, 1831.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas humbly represents: That the superior court of this Territory, for the adjudication of unconfirmed French and Spanish titles to lands, did, since the year 1825, and principally in the years 1827 and 1828, confirm claims to more than twenty thousand acres of land, but from measures now in progress, most of these confirmations are likely to be rendered void. These claims being transferable by the laws of the United States, were many of them transferred in larger or smaller quantities, and finally, most of these divided and sold in quantities of 160 and 80 acres, but generally in the latter. This last class of purchasers amount to several hundred, and appear destined to be, with little exception, the sole sufferers, unless your honorable body extends relief. They desired to become the owners of land, but had not money to enter it in the land office; they were told by the ablest of the bench, and of the bar, that the decision of the superior court aforesaid by the statutes of the United States was final, and the claims confirmed indisputable. The claims were offered for sale, on a credit, payable in horses and other effects; and many, that they might become the owners of their homes, divested themselves of all they could spare. Of those purchasers who purchased but eighty acres, but little is entered in their own names, but in the name of the persons from whom they purchased.

Your memorialists therefore humbly request your honorable body to pass an act authorizing the issuing of patents to all those purchasers who are actual settlers on the lands purchased by them, whether entered in the land office in their own names, or in the names of those from whom they purchased. Or if your honorable body in your wisdom deem this improper, your petitioners humbly request that an act be passed allowing this class of purchasers five years in which to enter their lands at the minimum price; and your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

WILLIAM TRIMBLE, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CHARLES CALDWELL, President of the Legislative Council.

Approved November 5, 1831.

JOHN POPE.

Mr. ELLSWORTH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the above memorial, made a report thereon as follows:

The persons for whom Congress is asked to legislate in this case claim to be bona fide purchasers of land in the Territory of Arkansas, under certain French and Spanish claims, heretofore confirmed by the court of the United States in said Territory, which confirmation has since been reviewed and pronounced void. The claimants represent that they became purchasers, for consideration, after said grants had been confirmed, and after the expiration of the time allowed by the then existing law of Congress for a review of such confirmation.

The committee think it would be unwise to pass any general law, as asked for, and that there will be less opportunity for fraudulent practices if each individual claimant, so far as he may need the interposition of Congress at all, should present the peculiar facts necessary to show the equity of his own case, and Congress can then relieve him, as his case shall require.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 946. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 28, 1831.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Hillen, reported:

That said petitioner alleges that a certain tract of land lying in the parish of East Baton Rouge was settled and cultivated by Isham Hillen, as early as the year 1807; and that after his death Nathaniel Hillen settled upon the same, and cultivated it; and that the same has been possessed and cultivated for the benefit of the heirs of Nathaniel Hillen, who are minors under the age of twenty-one years; and that the petitioner is their uncle, and petitions for their benefit. He also represents that an agent was employed to file a notice of their claim with the land commissioners, and who omitted to do so, and that he was uninformed as to that fact until lately, and prays a confirmation of title to the heirs of Nathaniel Hillen.

The statements of the petition, as to habitation and cultivation of the land in the year 1807, by Isham Hillen, and afterwards by Nathaniel Hillen, and by Peter Baily in the years 1815 and 1816, for the benefit of the heirs of Nathaniel Hillen, and since that time by Robert Hillen, for the use and benefit of the heirs of Nathaniel Hillen, are substantially proven by the testimony submitted to them.

And the committee are of opinion that the heirs of said Nathaniel Hillen would have been entitled to said land had a claim for and in their behalf been filed with the commissioners of the United States, under the act of 1812, ch. 67, sec. 8; and which said claims, so filed, were afterwards confirmed by the act of 1819, ch. 510, sec. 3; and that the infant heirs of Nathaniel Hillen ought not to be deprived of their right to the land by the inattention, omission, or neglect of their friends; and therefore report a bill for their relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 947. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 28, 1831.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Layton, reported:

That the petitioner claims a tract of land as the legal representative of Charles Parent, deceased. He states that the land claimed is situated in the parish of St. Helena, State of Louisiana. Petitioner states that Parent's title to the land is founded upon a grant from the Spanish government; that the claim which he now wishes confirmed was duly presented for confirmation to the United States commissioners at St. Helena Court-House, but, from some cause, was never reported on by the commissioners. The applicant has produced the grant upon which he claims this tract of land, upon which is a memorandum in substance as follows:

"To James O. Cosley, esq., commissioner of land claims, west of Pearl river: Sir, I claim as a grant for J. Henry Ludeling, testamentary executor of M. B. Plaire, signed the 17th, sixty-five and a half arpents of land in the parish of St. Tammany, in virtue of a Spanish patent, dated July 18, 1805, in favor of Charles Parent; by him sold to claimant July 23, 1805. Also, sixteen hundred arpents in virtue of sale to him thereof, made by Francis Parent, December 30, 1805, also situated in the parish of St. Tammany."

The above sale is the only evidence of the last-mentioned claim which the claimant has in his possession, signed F. Herault, agent. It appears, by reference to the conveyance for the sixteen hundred arpents, that the conveyance was from Francis Parent to one William Lewis Pleinschits, and not to Charles Parent, as stated in the above memorandum. The committee have no evidence that Charles Parent ever held any other claim for lands under the Spanish government other than the one stated in the memorandum here recited. It appears by reference to a letter, on file, from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, enclosing a transcript of a claim confirmed by act of Congress March 3, 1819, in favor of the heirs of Charles Parent, claimed under a Spanish patent granted to him on the 18th of July, 1805, for sixteen hundred arpents surveyed for him by C. Trudeau, May 18, 1804, that the only claim for land held by Charles Parent has been confirmed to his heirs by the act of Congress here recited; and the only difference between the claim confirmed and the patent here presented is as to the quantity of land—a mistake that could have been much more readily made by the commissioners, than that they should, on a naked conveyance, unsupported by any other testimony, between parties entirely different, report dates and facts as pertaining to the claim, none of which exist. Indeed, after a careful examination of the papers and proofs, the committee do not entertain a doubt that the claim submitted has been already confirmed; they therefore ask to recommend its rejection.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 948. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR ADDITIONAL SCHOOL LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1831.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Ohio respectfully represents: That preparatory to the formation of a State government of the territory northwest of the Ohio river, propositions were made by an act of Congress of April 13, 1802, in which it was contemplated that lands equal to section number sixteen, in every township, should be granted to the inhabitants of such township for the use of schools; which act, with the conditions and provisions which it contained, was, by an ordinance of the convention of said Territory, subsequently made in the same year, accepted and agreed to by the people of said Territory, with certain qualifications; and especially, that in addition to the lands equal to section sixteen, a donation, equal to one thirty-sixth part of the quantity of land in the United States military tract, and in the Virginia reservation, should be made for the use of schools; and also that a grant of the same kind, or such other provision as Congress might deem adequate, should be made to the inhabitants of the Western Reserve; and that land equal to one thirty-sixth part of all the lands which might thereafter be purchased of Indian tribes, by the United States, lying in the State of Ohio, should be given as aforesaid for the use of public schools within the same; that by an act of Congress, passed the 3d day of March, 1803, the qualifications provided by the convention aforesaid were acceded to on the part of Congress, and grants made, embracing the full proportion for schools in the United States and Virginia military districts, and also fifty-six thousand acres to the Western Reserve; being equal in quantity to one thirty-sixth of all that part of the Western Reserve to which the Indian title had then been extinguished; that since the time of making the grant, on the part of the general government, of what was then the stipulated proportion, the Western Reserve, by a treaty made between the United States and sundry Indian tribes at Fort Industry, on July 4, 1805, the Indian titles to about one million five hundred and forty thousand acres of land, lying on the west side of Cuyahos river, being the Indian title to all the remaining land in said Western Reserve, was extinguished; one thirty-sixth part of which amounts to about forty-three thousand acres. The design of this memorial, as well as those which have heretofore preceded it, is to solicit from your honorable body the passage of an act, at an early day, making a grant to the State for the use of schools in the said Western Reserve of the land intended to be appropriated to such purpose. Immediate attention in relation to this grant is the more necessary at this period, in consequence that the legislature of Ohio is organizing and carrying into operation a system of school education throughout the State, and the great importance to the welfare and perfection of this system, that the extent of the means in every section of the State should be clearly ascertained.

It is not supposed by your memorialists that the question of right on the part of Ohio is in any way involved in the subject of the appropriation now sought. The laws, ordinances, and propositions alluded to, are no doubt thoroughly understood by Congress; and the hopes and expectations of the people of Ohio duly appreciated; and in inviting the attention of your honorable body to the subject of this grant, your memorialists would respectfully suggest, as heretofore, inasmuch as the appropriation has long been delayed, the propriety of authorizing said lands to be located in sections, out of any lands belonging to the United States within the State of Ohio not otherwise disposed of, in the manner the governor of the State may think it advisable to prescribe.

Resolved, That the foregoing memorial be submitted to Congress, and that the governor be requested to forward to each of the senators and members of the House of Representatives in Congress from the State of Ohio a copy thereof.

EDWARD KING, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
SAMUEL WHEELER, Speaker of the Senate.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 949. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1831.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of N. Girod, reported:

That the petitioner alleges that he is the owner by purchase of three tracts or parcels of land described by him as follows: the first, the island of Lile a Cayon, situated at the mouth of the Bayou Forebaure, containing about three-fourths of a league, dated October 4, 1787, purchased of Joseph and James Miesse; the second is for Lile la Prope, situated on the Lake of Baratana, purchased of John Chafe, dated March 13, 1788; the third, the island of Timballin, situated at the mouth of the Bayou Lafourche, purchased of Bartholemy Lilelia, dated January 26, 1793. The applicant states in his petition that the above claims are founded upon original Spanish grants; that the claims were never presented for enrolment or confirmation to the United States commissioners appointed for the examination of claims in that district of Louisiana; the reason for this neglect is stated by the claimant to be, that he was ignorant of the law. Three old papers, written in the Spanish language, accompanying this application, which are styled by the petitioner to be Spanish grants for the above tracts of land, have been examined and carefully translated by an honorable member of the committee, when, to the astonishment of the committee, instead of Spanish grants, they turned out to be mere petitions to the King of Spain, asking permission to settle upon the above described tracts of land, with a permission from the King to the petitioners to settle, and a promise on his part, should the applicants comply with certain conditions which the King annexes for the actual habitation and improvement of the lands, that his highness would, at the expiration of three years, issue, in favor of the occupants, patents for their respective lands. No patents have ever issued; neither has the committee any testimony that the above named individuals ever did settle upon or occupy the above lands; and further, there is no evidence before the committee that the above lands were ever transferred to the present applicant.

It is true that the certificate of the surveyor general shows that the lands have been surveyed; it is also in evidence that the present applicant has had confirmed to him one league square of land by act of Congress, said land situated in the Cypress swamp. From a careful and attentive examination of all the papers and facts in this case, the committee are unanimous in the opinion that the claim should be rejected.

ON GRANTING BOUNTY LANDS TO A CANADIAN VOLUNTEER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMRER 29, 1831.

Mr. CARR, of Indiana, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Hoffman, reported:

That the petitioner was a citizen of the United States previous to the late war between the United States and Great Britain; that at the time war was declared he was a resident in Upper Canada; that during the war he left Canada and enlisted in the service of the United States in the corps of Canadian volunteers, in the month of May, 1814, and served as a soldier faithfully during the war, when he was honorably discharged; that he was entitled to bounty land under an act of Congress of March 5, 1816, entitled "An act granting bounty in land and extra pay to certain Canadian volunteers." That he presented his claim to the War Department, accompanied by all the evidence required by said act, in the year 1816; the decision on his claim was delayed by the department without any fault or cause of delay on the part of the petitioner, until the 25th of September, 1817, (after the act of March 3, 1817, was passed, reducing the quantity of bounty land to private soldiers to 160 acres,) when a warrant was issued in his name for 160 acres; he has never received any more bounty land. As the petitioner presented his claim and all the evidence required by the act of the 5th March, 1816, to the department before the passage of the act of 3d March, 1817, was passed, recited, it is the opinion of the officer having the charge of the bounty land office, as well as of this committee, that the petitioner was legally entitled to the quantity of land given by the act of March 5, 1816. As the petitioner employed an agent to get his warrant, he was not aware that a warrant had issued for only 160 acres till after the 3d March, 1818, when the law expired, from which time the department has had no authority to act in this matter.

The committee are of opinion that the petitioner has a legal and equitable right to the quantity of land prayed for, and report a bill for his relief.

IN FAVOR OF CONFIRMING A SALE OF AN INDIAN RESERVATION BY THE RESERVEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 30, 1831.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Wm. M. King, of Jackson county, Alabama, reported:

That the petitioner claims title to a tract of land situated in the county and State aforesaid, which was granted to one Thomas Jones, the head of an Indian family, under provisions of the treaties of 1817 and 1819, between the United States and the Cherokee Indians. Said Jones lived on his said reservation till 1820 or 1821, when, the petitioner alleges, the white people who had settled around him became inimical to him, threw down his houses, destroyed his fences, and so abused and maltreated him personally that he was compelled to abandon it for a time. Meanwhile he (Jones) lived with his children in the same county till 1822, when William D. Gaines, the petitioner's father-in-law, bought of and paid him a full and valuable consideration for the said reservation. It further appears that Gaines purchased of Jones's children their interest, they being all of full age, and took their relinquishment; and also purchased and obtained from the wife of Jones her right of dower. The petitioner bought of Gaines about 500 acres of the tract, and has placed on the part purchased by him permanent and valuable improvements, consisting of a good dwelling-house, outhouses, and a tanyard, amounting in value to about one thousand dollars, which he says has exhausted all his capital except his interest in the land. The petitioner further states, and substantially proves, that between three and four hundred acres of the tract by him purchased of Gaines lies in the mountain, and is wholly unfit for cultivation.

The sale from Jones and his wife and children to William D. Gaines appearing by their deed, Mrs. Jones's acknowledgment separate and apart from her husband, and proof of its execution as to her and the other parties, according to the laws of Alabama, copies of which deed and certificates of acknowledgment, probate, and registration are certified by the clerk of the county court of the said county of Jackson, under his private seal, there being no seal of office. The sale from Gaines to the petitioner is proved by the original deed between the parties, with the same clerk's certificate of its acknowledgment by Gaines and its registration. The consideration paid by Gaines to Jones was, according to the proof, about three hundred dollars, besides binding himself to maintain and support Jones during his natural life. The proof further shows, in substance, that Gaines took Jones to live with him and treated him as a member of the family until he went on a visit to his friends and relations in the southern part of Alabama, where he was taken sick and died. The consideration paid by King, the petitioner, to Gaines, was about five hundred and fifty dollars. It also appears, by proof, that the reservation lies between two mountains, one-half or more being in the mountain, and the other lying in a creek swamp and being of little value. The maltreatment of Jones, as stated by the petitioner, and his death on a visit to the southern part of the State, is substantially proved.

The petitioner asks a confirmation of his title under the apprehension that his right might be affected by Jones's temporary removal, or by his death when off the reservation. Under the 8th article of the treaty of 1817, a person to whom a reservation was granted became entitled to a "life estate, with a reversion (remainder) in fee-simple to his children, reserving to the widow her dower," with a proviso "that if any of the heads of families for whom reservations might be made should remove therefrom, then, in that case, the right to revert to the United States."

A removal, to occasion forfeiture, must have been voluntary, and not produced by coercion, threats, or fear, and indicating an intention wholly to abandon the possession and occupancy of the land. Nor could the temporary absence of a person claiming a reservation, on a visit, accompanied by his death while so absent, defeat his right or that of his children. It is, moreover, believed that the wife of Jones, and his children, being of full age, could sell and convey their interest, under circumstances of fairness, for an adequate consideration. In this case there is no appearance of unfairness, and taking into view the inferior quality and value of the land, the consideration given by Gaines seems to have been adequate. The proof shows that since the sale the family of Jones, including his wife and children, have appeared satisfied with its terms, and it does not appear that any discontent on their part has been manifested up to the present time.

The committee therefore beg leave to report herewith a bill for the petitioner's relief.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 30, 1831.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of J. B. Saucier, reported:

That it appears by the testimony of highly respectable witnesses that Saucier, the ancestor of the petitioners, more than forty years ago, made a settlement on the river Aux Chênes, in the parish of Plaquemines, State of Louisiana, about thirty miles from New Orleans; that he cultivated corn and other crops and kept a stock of cattle and hogs on it; that the establishment has always been kept up, and that it was always considered as his property and inventoried as a part of his estate.

The committee are satisfied, from this evidence, that, according to the acts of Congress heretofore passed on the subject of land titles in that part of the country, the claimants are entitled to six hundred and forty acres of land as a settlement right, in virtue of the occupancy and cultivation of their ancestor.

They therefore report a bill for their relief.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 30, 1831.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John Towles, of the State of Louisiana, reported:

From the records and other documentary evidence before the committee, it appears that on the 28th day of April, A. D. 1795, Baron de Carondelet, governor general of the province of Louisiana, then in the possession of Spain, granted an order of survey in favor of Nicholas Lacour, for a tract of land containing twelve hundred superficial arpents, equal to one thousand and fifteen and fifty-three one hundredths American acres, situate on the left bank of the Bayou Rapide, bounded on one side by the land of Valentine Lassard, and on the other by the land of Joseph Le Blanc, with a front of thirty arpents on the bayou, and forty deep.

And on the same day and year the governor general granted another order of survey in favor of the same individual for another tract of land containing six hundred superficial arpents, equal to 507.78 American acres, situate on the same bank of the same bayou, bounded on one side by the land of Zeno Lacour, and on the other by the land of Joseph Le Blanc, with a front of fifteen arpents on the bayou, and forty deep.

And also, on the same day and year, the governor general granted an order of survey in favor of Zeno Lacour for a tract of land containing four hundred superficial arpents, equal to 338.05 American acres, situate on the left bank of the Bayou Rapide, bounded on one side by the land of Nicholas Lacour, and on the other by the land of Cyprian Lacour, with a front of ten arpents on the bayou, and forty deep.

The original grantees, on the 10th day of October, A. D. 1806, transferred, by deeds of conveyance, all of their right, title, and interest to the petitioner, John Towles, who was, on the 11th day of June, 1811, confirmed in his claim to said several tracts of land by the commissioners appointed for the purpose of ascertaining the rights of persons to lands within the district and Territory of Orleans, under and by virtue of the provisions of an act of Congress passed March 3, 1807, entitled "An act respecting the claims to land in the Territory of Orleans and Louisiana." The petitioner states that he has in vain endeavored to cause his claims to be located and surveyed according to the boundaries designated in the grants, and alleges that no such boundaries can be found, and assigns as a reason that the claim of Valentine Lassard—one of the tracts of land by which one of his claims was, by the order of survey, to be bounded—has not been located on the Bayou Rapide, but has been located on the Bayou Roberts, in another part of the county of Rapides. He also states that there is little or no vacant land on the Bayou Rapide, and therefore prays the passage of a law authorizing him to locate his claim on any vacant lands on the Bayou Rapide, or in any part of the western district of Louisiana.

By the petitioner's own statements, and the evidence adduced by him before the committee, it is evident that there would be no difficulty in locating his claims according to the orders of survey. The order of survey to Valentine Lassard, which is before the committee, calls for —— arpents on the left bank of the Bayou Rapide, fronting on the bayou, and commencing at its junction with Red river. It is therefore unimportant, in order to designate the boundaries of the petitioner's claim, whether Lassard's claim is located on the Bayou Rapide, the place designated in the original order of survey, or elsewhere. There is no evidence before the committee that the tracts of land which his orders of survey call for have been sold to or are claimed by any other person; but the contrary appears from his own showing.

It is therefore the opinion of the committee that it is inexpedient to grant the prayer of the petitioner.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 954. [1ST SESSION.

IN RELATION TO UNCONFIRMED LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 3, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 31, 1831.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the United States passed on the 22d instant, in the following words:

"Resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be requested to lay before the Senate any information in his possession showing the present state or condition of the unconfirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, particularly whether the said lands are now subject to sale as lands of the United States; if so, have they been set for sale in pursuance of any order from said Commissioner; what quantities and tracts of said lands have been sold in obedience to said order, and by whom are such lands owned or claimed; under what law are said lands required to be sold, and, further, what quantity remains unsold; what proceedings have taken place under the instructions of said Commissioner requiring the sale of said lands:" I have the honor to report that, from the time of the passage of the act of March 2, 1805, entitled "An act for ascertaining and adjusting the titles and claims to lands within the Territory of Orleans and the district of Louisiana," until January 1, 1814, when the act of March 3, 1813, entitled "An act allowing further time for delivering the evidence in support of claims to land in the Territory of Missouri, and for regulating the donation grants therein," expired, the claimants to lands in the present State of Missouri could have produced their evidences of title and other testimony in support of their claims to the officers appointed for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon them; and that, by the several laws fixing the periods in which the parties interested were required to file their notices of claim, it is expressly provided that all the claims for which notices were not filed should be barred and forever considered as void, and not to be received as evidence in any court of justice against any title derived from the United States. From the reports made by the board of commissioners and the recorder of land titles, it appears that of the claims stated to be founded on written evidence of title, or derived from settlements for which notices were filed, there are 1,438 yet unconfirmed, embracing 2,238,797 acres. The number of unconfirmed claims, or their contents, for which notices were not filed with the commissioners or recorder, this office has no means of ascertaining. By the 9th section of the act of March 3, 1811, "providing for the final adjustment of claims to lands, and for the sale of the public lands in the Territories of Orleans and Louisiana, and to repeal the act passed for the same purpose, and approved February 15, 1811," the land office at St. Louis was established. The 10th section of this act directs the sale of all the lands in this district, with the exception of the school and seminary tracts and of the salt springs and lead mines, and such adjacent tracts as the President might reserve: "provided, however, that till after the decision of Congress thereon no tract of land shall be offered for sale the claim to which has been, in due time and according to law, presented to the recorder of land titles in the district of Louisiana, and filed in this office, for the purpose of being investigated by the commissioners appointed for ascertaining the rights of persons claiming lands in the Territory of Louisiana." No method having been prescribed by law by which the land offices were to ascertain the situation of the lands to be reserved under this law, they have been compelled, in designating them on the maps, to rely solely upon the information and evidence furnished by the claimants, without having the means of accurately ascertaining whether the lands designated by the claimants were those intended to be covered by the claims.

The 3d section of the act of February 17, 1818, "making provision for the establishment of additional land offices in the Territory of Missouri," directs the sale of the lands in those districts, under the same reservations and restrictions as were made by the 10th section of the act of March 3, 1811, above referred to.

Upon the 26th of May, 1824, an act was passed "enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," by the 5th section of which it was enacted "that any claim to lands, tenements, and hereditaments, within the purview of this act, which shall not be brought by petition before the said courts within two years from the passing of this act, or which, after having been brought before the said courts, shall, on account of the neglect or delay of the claimant, not be prosecuted to a final decision within three years, shall be forever barred, both in law and in equity, and no action at common law, or proceeding in equity, shall ever thereafter be sustained in any court whatever in relation to said claims;" and the 7th section of the same act provides "that in each and every case in which any claim tried under the provisions of this act shall be finally decided against the claimant, and in each and every case in which any claim cognizable under the terms of this act shall be barred by virtue of any of the provisions contained therein, the land specified in such claim shall forthwith be held and taken as part of the public lands of the United States, subject to the same disposition as any other public land in the same district." By subsequent legislation the time for filing petitions was extended to May 26, 1829, and for hearing and deciding thereon by the court to May 26, 1830.

From this view of the subject it will be seen that the unconfirmed claims in Missouri may now be divided into the following classes:

1. Those which have never been presented to the board of commissioners, to the recorder of land titles, or to the district court for the purpose of being investigated.

2. Those claims for which notices were filed in due time, and according to law, with the recorder of land titles, but not subsequently brought before the district court by petition, under the act of May 26, 1824.

3. Those claims for which petitions were within due time presented to the district court, but which had not been prosecuted to a final decision.

With respect to the claims embraced in the first class, no provisions have at any time been made to exempt them from sale as public lands, and it is expressly declared that they shall not be admitted in any court of the United States against any claim derived from the United States.

The claims in the second class are effectually barred by the 5th section of the act of May 26, 1824, and the 7th section of the same act, by declaring that the land specified in such claims "shall forthwith be held and taken as part of the public lands of the United States, subject to the same disposition as any other public lands in the same district," must be considered as making the decision upon which the contingent reservation of them, under the acts of March 3, 1811, and February 17, 1818, was to terminate.

With regard to those claims embraced by the third class, it was conceived that the failure of the parties in not prosecuting their claims to a decision, or by the withdrawal of their petitions from the court, under the 5th and 7th sections, forfeited their claims, and the lands embraced thereby forthwith became liable to be sold as any other public lands.

Entertaining these views respecting the unconfirmed claims in Missouri, and a proclamation having been issued on the 25th of March last by the President of the United States for sales at the several land offices in that State, directing that, in addition to certain specified townships, there should "be exposed to public sale, without reserve, all sections or parts of sections subject to be sold by the United States, and situate within the respective limits of the aforesaid land districts, and within any township heretofore offered at public sale, which may not have been heretofore exposed at public sale," I did, after mature consideration, issue the circular to the land officers in Missouri directing the unconfirmed claims to be offered for sale, dated June 25, 1831, of which the paper annexed, marked A, is a copy; but from the letters of those officers, of which the papers marked B, C, D, E, and F are copies, it will be seen that none of them were exposed to public sale or disposed of by the United States under the proclamation of the President above referred to.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

The PRESIDENT of the Senate of the United States.

A.

Circular to the land officers at St. Louis, Franklin, Palmyra, Jackson, and Lexington, Missouri.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 25, 1831.

GENTLEMEN: The question has been asked whether the unconfirmed private claims in Missouri are subject to sale under the proclamation of the President dated 25th March last.

The proviso to the 10th section of the act of March 3, 1811, (Land Laws, page 591,) is in the following words: "Provided, however, that till after the decision of Congress thereon no tract of land shall be offered for sale the claim to which has, in due time and according to law, been presented to the recorder of land titles in the district of Louisiana, and filed in his office, for the purpose of being investigated by the commissioners appointed for ascertaining the rights of persons claiming lands in the Territory of Louisiana."

The 5th section of the act of May 26, 1824, (Land Laws, page 874,) declares that "any claim to lands, tenements, or hereditaments, within the purview of this act, which shall not be brought by petition before the said courts within two years from the passing of this act, or which, after being brought before the said courts, shall, on account of the neglect or delay of the claimant, not be prosecuted to a final decision within three years, shall be forever barred, both in law and in equity; and no other action at common law, or proceeding in equity, shall ever thereafter be sustained in any court whatever in relation to said claims."

The act of May 22, 1826, merely extends the time for filing petitions under the act of May 26, 1824, to May 26, 1828.

The act of May 24, 1828, further extends the term for filing petitions in reference to claims in Missouri to May 26, 1829.

Such unconfirmed claims, therefore, formerly reserved from sale under the act of March 3, 1811, as have not been brought before the courts, or prosecuted to a final decision under any of the acts of Congress above alluded to, are subject to be offered at public sale; and you are hereby directed to offer the same, under the proclamation of the President of the United States above alluded to.

After the close of the sales you will make a special report, specifying the unconfirmed claims which cover lands that have been offered at public sale, designating such sales as may have been made interfering with the unconfirmed claims, and also the interfering legal subdivisions not sold.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. HAYWARD.

B.

Copy of a letter from the register and receiver of the land office at St. Louis, Missouri, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated July 12, 1831.

SIR: Your letter of the 25th of June last, authorizing us to offer at public sale all the unconfirmed private claims within our district, has been received. Having no information in our office as to what claims have been brought before the courts, or prosecuted to a final decision, and having no returns of surveys of many of those claims which are located on the township plats without being sectioned, and not knowing the quantity in the fractional quarters, made such by the confirmation of the village commons, have induced us to withhold from sale all such claims until further instructions shall be received.

We are, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servants,

W. CHRISTY, Register.
B. PRATTE, Receiver.

C.

Extract of a letter from the register of the land office at Franklin, Missouri, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated July 18, 1831.

"I have also received yours of the 25th ultimo, on the subject of the unconfirmed private claims in Missouri. I have written for information concerning them to the clerk of the district court of this district. If I am informed that they have not been prosecuted to a final decision, according to law, I shall have them immediately added to the list already prepared, and sell as instructed."

D.

Copy of a letter from the register of the land office at Franklin, Missouri, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated August 8, 1831.

SIR: In order to comply with your instructions in relation to the unconfirmed private land claims in Missouri, I addressed a letter to the clerk of the United States court for the district of Missouri, requesting him officially to certify to me whether certain claimants in my land district had prosecuted their claims to a final decision, as required by the act of Congress on that subject. Without this information, I conceived that I could not sell them; and you will perceive by the enclosed paper, which the clerk sent me, that he has failed to comply with my request, and that, at so late a day, I am unable, before the sale, to obtain the information from any other source. His paper has neither date nor signature.

I am, with great respect, &c.,

H. L. BOON, Register.

Copy of the paper enclosed in the above letter.

"All the claims that were filed in the district court under the law of Congress of 1824, were, by leave of the court, withdrawn without prejudice immediately after the decree against Soulard's heirs. The heirs of Soulard appealed to the Supreme Court, where that case still remains undetermined. Of the claims filed under the law of 1828, the court decreed against the heirs of Auguste Choteau for 1,281 arpents, and for 7,056 arpents against De Lassus, assignee of De Luzieres; against the heirs of Macky Wherry, and against the heirs of James Mackay. All the other claims were withdrawn without prejudice, by leave of the court, except the claim of J. B. Placet, and one of John Mullanphy, assignee of La Pierre and Aubuchan, which were confirmed. In all the cases decreed against, appeals were taken, and are now waiting the decision of Soulard's claim."

E.

Extract of a letter from the register and receiver of the land office at Jackson, Missouri, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated August 9, 1831.

"By your instruction of June 25, 1831, informing us what unconfirmed private claims are to be sold, under the proclamation of the President of the 25th of March last, we are directed to sell such unconfirmed claims, formerly reserved from sale under the act of March 3, 1811, as have not been brought before the court; or if brought, not prosecuted to a final decision, agreeably to law, under the acts of Congress of May 26, 1824, May 22, 1826, and May 24, 1828. Under the proclamation of the President, we conceive it would have been our duty to offer for sale the land embraced in the proclamation, regardless of its being embraced in unconfirmed claims; but your instruction limits the generality of the proclamation to those claims not presented to the court; or if presented, not prosecuted agreeably to the acts of Congress aforesaid.

"We beg leave to inform you that we have no official information of the claims presented to the court, nor of the failure to prosecute those presented; and, therefore, cannot determine on the claims subject to sale, under your instruction of the 25th of June last. Our private information is too vague and uncertain, and we therefore ask your further instruction on the subject.

"If we are to sell the unconfirmed claims, notwithstanding any proceedings on them under the acts of Congress aforesaid, then there is no difficulty on our part; but if we are to select the claims which are to be sold, as your instruction directs, we have no data by which to make the selection. We cannot suppose you intend the claims confirmed under the acts aforesaid, nor those still prosecuting by appeal in the Supreme Court of the United States—and there are some of both descriptions to be sold; and we cannot discriminate between these and those embraced in your instruction, for want of precise information."

F.

Extract of a letter from the register and receiver of the land office at Palmyra, Missouri, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated August 19, 1831.

"The instructions contained in your letter of the 25th of June, in relation to the selling of the unconfirmed Spanish claims, were not complied with, for the following reason, which we hope will be sufficiently satisfactory to you and exculpatory of our course in violating these instructions. We had no evidence in this office by which we could tell which claims were embraced in your instructions; and the means of getting the evidence in time for the sales was not furnished, and we knew not where to obtain it. Under these circumstances, we hope, sir, that our course may meet your approbation; and we have no hesitation in expressing it as the firm conviction of our best judgment that the interest of the government will be promoted and the convenience of the citizens increased by the course we thought proper to pursue in relation to this subject."

22D CONGRESS.] No. 955. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF THE OFFICERS OF THE ARMY OF THE WAR OF 1812-'15 FOR BOUNTY LAND

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 3, 1832.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned, officers of the second war of independence, for themselves and the other officers who served in the army of the United States during such war, respectfully represents: That on the 30th of January, 1826, a memorial was signed by a committee acting in their behalf; that this memorial and various others, as well as a statement of their claim by their agent, have been presented to your honorable bodies; that on the 17th of May, 1826, a favorable report was made by a select committee which was never acted on; but that on the 1st of March, 1831, the Committee on Public Lands, as if roused by the injustice which delay had done to your petitioners, did make a report, not less distinguished for its research than the accuracy of its views, not less honorable to the committee and the country than just to the officers and acceptable to their widows and children. This able report your petitioners adopt with heartfelt gratitude as a full statement of their claim, and earnestly pray that a prompt decision be made on its merits and the policy which the report indicates. Although the immediate connexion between the officers and soldiers of the second war of independence has been dissolved by the blessings of an honorable peace, yet there is an obligation on the part of the former to extend a guardian care over the interests of the latter, which death alone can destroy. Impressed with this belief, your petitioners would respectfully submit that those soldiers who enlisted after the 11th of December, 1814, received a gratuity of $124 in cash, and 320 acres of land; and that those who enlisted previous to that date received but $16 in cash, and 160 acres of land; and yet the first never performed a march beyond the recruiting rendezvous, nor encountered the toils, or suffered by the exposure of camp duty; much more, they never met an enemy; whilst the last bore the brunt and dangers of the war, and by their valor, their wounds, and their discipline, evinced that freemen who were determined to preserve that independence which their fathers had established were not to be conquered by veteran mercenaries. The services of the one stand in bold contrast with the rewards extended to the other; and still, in the opinion of your petitioners, the soldiers of the late war, generally, have cause to complain that the intention of the laws in their behalf have not been carried into effect, and that by the regulations of the government adverse to such intention many of them have been totally deprived of the land granted in their names. It was the intention of the act of the 6th May, 1812, that they should have a choice of lands by lot in either the Territory of Michigan or the then Territories of Illinois and Louisiana; yet, by a subsequent act, they were deprived of the right so secured, of designating the Territory of Michigan, and have been compelled to take lands in Arkansas, where they were and are not worth one-fourth as much as those in Michigan. The right to designate the Territory was, moreover, rendered nugatory by the Commissioner of the General Land Office drawing the lottery but for one Territory at a time. It was the intention of the law that the soldiers should not be divested of their titles until they came into legal possession of the land by an actual reception of the patent in person, or by their authorized agents; yet the regulation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, allowing members of Congress to designate the Territory, and to receive patents on the mere request of third persons, and without the knowledge of the soldiers, has enabled speculators and others to secure tax titles, and leaves the soldier, who has never applied for his patent, the reward of learning that some ten or thirteen years since his patent was issued, and the consolation that his title has been wrested from him by the operation of local laws, of which he knew as little as he did that he had been constituted a freeholder. Your petitioners will not undertake to suggest the remedy for this manifest injustice, but, relying on the wisdom and justice of your honorable bodies, they commit their own and the soldiers' claim to your consideration, praying that this and all other memorials, reports, and documents which have hitherto been presented, may be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands, and that the War Department be called upon to report and estimate of the value of all munitions of war, provisions, and other property captured or destroyed by the army at New Orleans, Little York, and on the river Thames, during the campaigns of 1812 and 1813, as well as at Forts Bowyer, Malden, Detroit, George, Erie, and elsewhere. And, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 956. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIMS TO PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 3, 1832.

Mr. IRWIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, being instructed to inquire into the expediencey of granting the right of pre-emption to Mary Daws, Robert Bond, James Patridge, and John G. Smith, whose improvements were included in the reservations made by the treaty with the Florida Indians, on the 18th of September, 1823, reported:

That an act was passed by Congress on the 22d of April, 1826, which gave the right of pre-emption to every person, or the legal representatives of any person, who, being the head of a family, or twenty-one years of age, had, previous to the first of January, 1825, actually inhabited and cultivated a tract of land in the Territory of Florida, and had not removed from the said Territory.

From the evidence presented to the committee, it appears that the above-named persons, previous to the 1st of January, 1825, did actually inhabit and cultivate lands in Florida, and for which they would have been entitled to pre-emptions, had not the lands by them cultivated and inhabited been included in the reservations made by the treaty with the Florida Indians.

To three individuals whose improvements were included within the Indian reservations pre-emption rights were granted for other lands in the same district by an act of Congress passed February 8, 1827.

It is the opinion of the committee that the benefits derived by other settlers from the privilege of securing their own improvements, under the provisions of the above-recited act, ought to be extended to the applicants; and for that purpose a bill is herewith reported to the House.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 957. [1ST SESSION.

ADVERSE TO MAKING GOOD A DEFICIENCY IN A FRACTIONAL QUARTER SECTION OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 3, 1832.

Mr. IRWIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the claim of William Wickersham, reported:

That by an act of Congress of the 7th June, 1796, the surveyor general was required to cause to be surveyed into townships of five miles square a tract of country lying in the State of Ohio, commonly called the United States military district. Corners were directed to be fixed in the lines of survey, dividing the townships into quarter townships, or tracts of four thousand acres each. The Secretary of the Treasury, on application, was required to register warrants for military services to the amount of any one or more tracts, for any person holding the same. In this way only, under the above-recited act, could those quarter townships be appropriated.

By an act of February 11, 1800, fifty of the quarter townships that remained unlocated were reserved to satisfy warrants granted to individuals for their military services. These reservations the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to divide into lots of 100 acres each on the respective plats thereof.

In all the surveys made in this district the lines are run to the cardinal points, except the northern boundary, which runs in a northeast and southwest direction. The deviation of this line from the rest produced along the northern boundary a set of fractions, containing, in some instances, a less quantity than 100 acres.

The applicant, who is the assignee of a military warrant for 100 acres, by his agent, Benjamin Haugh, esq., located his warrant on one of those fractions, which contained only 43.15 acres, and procured a patent therefor, in which the lot is said to contain 100 acres. For this deficiency he asks for a remuneration in land or money.

No proof is adduced in support of the claim other than the letter of Mr. Graham, late Commissioner of the General Land Office, in which he states that the lot is noted in the surveys returned to his office as containing 43.15 acres only, and gives it as his opinion that Mr. Haugh knew it, but was induced to make the entry in consequence of the description given of the quality of the land in the field-notes.

The 10th section of the last-recited act is in these words: "That the actual plat and survey, returned by the surveyor general, of quarter townships and fractional parts of quarter townships, contained and described in the act to which this is a supplement, shall be considered as final and conclusive, so far as relates to the quantity of land supposed to be contained in the quarter township and fractions, so that no claim shall hereafter be set up against the United States by any proprietor or holder of warrants for military services, on account of any deficiency in the quantity of land contained in the quarter township, or fractional part of a quarter township, which shall have been located by such proprietor or holder; nor shall any claim hereafter be set up by the United States against such proprietor or holder on account of the excess in the quantity of land contained therein."

It is the opinion of the committee that Mr. Wickersham has no well-founded claim upon the government, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 958. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE APPLICATION OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY FOR A DONATION OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 4, 1832.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Select Committee to whom was referred the petition of the trustees of Transylvania University, reported:

The petitioners state that the principal college edifice belonging to said institution was recently destroyed by fire; that, at the same time, her valuable law library, containing about six hundred volumes, together with a considerable portion of her miscellaneous library, and a part of her philosophical apparatus, were consumed; that the edifice destroyed had been erected a few years ago, at an expense of about $30,000, and the other property destroyed is estimated at about $5,000; and the consequence of this heavy calamity is, that the university is at this time destitute of a building suitable for the purposes of education. Having no means to repair this loss, and feeling in other respects the necessity of aid, she applies for relief to the national legislature.

The committee have considered the petition under the conviction, common to themselves and their fellow-citizens of the United States, that the cause of literature and science is closely connected with the permanence of our free institutions and the elevation of our national character. When these important interests can be aided by the representatives of the people consistently with other duties, there is, in the opinion of the committee, a manifest propriety that the aid should be afforded; and they are gratified at perceiving, in the past legislation of Congress, a sanction to this opinion.

Among the examples of the views of Congress on this subject, the committee will now barely refer to the act granting additional land, equivalent to a township, to the citizens of the State of Indiana for the use of schools; and the grant made to the trustees of the Lafayette Academy, in Alabama, for the benefit of said academy; and to the act granting a township of land to Connecticut, to aid in instructing the deaf and dumb; and also the grant heretofore made to Kentucky for the same purpose.

The committee cannot imagine a stronger case for a similar grant than that which is presented by the petition of Transylvania University. This institution, after struggling during infancy, like the region in which it is located, with hardship and difficulty, has grown with the growth of the west. Her beneficent agency has been extended in dispensing knowledge throughout that extensive and interesting country; and it is believed that, in every State which has been added to the old thirteen members of the confederacy, some of her alumni are found occupying a distinguished rank on the bench, in the legislative hall, or in the paths of the learned professions. This honorable evidence of her usefulness, though most striking, is, perhaps, less important than the stock of information which has been carried from her walls to the pursuits of ordinary life, meliorating and enriching the general mind, and fitting the citizens for the discharge of his duties as a man, and for justly estimating his political rights.

If the whole Union is interested in the social advancement of every portion of it, an institution which has, by great and disinterested efforts, diffused the blessings of education through a large region deserves the favorable notice of Congress. She comes before it at a moment when her prospects of conferring future advantages on the public are clouded by a dire and unforeseen misfortune, and when the past exertions of the wise, the good, and the liberal, to render her the continuing source of national blessings are menaced with disappointment. Regarding the petition with the consideration due to past services in the great cause of education, to present calamity, and to the faculty of communicating yet higher benefits to their fellow-citizens, the committee report the accompanying bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 959. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA THAT SCRIP MAY BE ISSUED FOR LANDS FORFEITED FOR NON-PAYMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 5, 1832.

A MEMORIAL of the general assembly of the State of Indiana to the Congress of the United States for the relief of persons whose lands have been forfeited.

Your memorialists respectfully represent to your honorable body that there are many persons in this State who did not avail themselves of the benefit of the last law of Congress on the subject of extending relief to the purchasers of public lands, which authorized scrip to be issued within nine months from the passage of said law to such as might not be able to make complete payment before the time at which the said lands, by the provisions of the law aforesaid, would be forfeited to the general government; and as there are many persons who did not take advantage of this provision, under impression that they would be able to make payment before the expiration of the time limited in the act aforesaid, your memorialists, therefore, respectfully solicit the passage of a law at the present session of Congress, authorizing the issuing of scrip to all who did not take advantage of the former act.

H. H. MOORE, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved December 21, 1831.

N. NOBLE.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 12, 1832.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 9th instant, wherein you state that the Committee on Public Lands have under consideration the propriety of granting scrip in all cases of forfeiture of the public lands, and requesting information as to what would be the amount of scrip necessary to satisfy all claims that would be made.

To enter into a minute investigation of the accounts in order to satisfy your inquiry with precision would consume more time than would comport with the views of the committee. I therefore would beg leave to state, without resorting to a labored process of investigation, that the amount of moneys paid and forfeited on lands which have reverted to the government, after having been further credited under the relief laws of 1821, 1822, and 1823, and after the operation of the relief laws of March 21, 1830, and February 25, 1831, is estimated to be between $525,000 and $550,000.

There is a description of forfeiture technically termed "excesses forfeited," which are moneys remaining unapplied by the purchaser, after the closing of all his accounts by the transfer thereto of the moneys paid on lands relinquished. The relief law of March 2, 1821, provides that no repayment shall be made in such cases. The aggregate amount of these "excesses forfeited," under the several laws authorizing the closing of accounts by relinquishment, is between $16,000 and $17,000. These excesses are scattered through many thousands of accounts, and consist of every variety of amount, from a few cents to a dollar; and varying from a few dollars to forty, fifty, and in some cases one hundred dollars; and in some instances a greater amount, where there is a great number of tracts relinquished by one individual.

In case, therefore, the committee intend to embrace this description of forfeitures in any general provisions on the subject of issuing scrip for moneys forfeited, not provided for by existing laws, I take leave to suggest the expediency of providing a minimum amount of forfeiture so as to exclude small claims, which give trouble to the agents of the government without a corresponding value to the party.

I am, &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Hon. W. W. IRWIN, House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 19, 1832.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 16th instant, accompanied by a resolution of the Senate and a memorial of the legislature of Indiana, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the issuing of scrip in all cases of forfeited land, wherein the parties did not avail themselves of the benefits of the act of March 31, 1830, by filing their applications for scrip within the term of nine months, as prescribed by that act.

I enclose, for your information on this subject, a copy of a letter recently addressed by me to Mr. Irwin, of the House of Representatives, in reply to an inquiry from him as to the amount of scrip that would be issuable in cases of forfeiture not already provided for by law. This letter will afford such general information on the subject as I hope may be satisfactory to the committee.

You inquire whether cases of forfeitures, like those for which relief is prayed in the accompanying memorial and resolution, are numerous; and whether such relief can be granted by Congress without serious inconvenience to this department. I reply to this inquiry that the forfeitures to which you refer are numerous. The duty of this office, in relation to the issuing of scrip, is to examine the abstracts of scrip, and to compare them with the accounts in the old credit system books of each person claiming scrip; to prepare and transmit to the several land offices the blank forms of the scrip to be by them issued, and to carry on such correspondence with the land officers as may be necessary in reference to any discrepancies found to exist between their books and the books of this office, either as to the party to whom the scrip is issuable, the designation of the tract, or the amount of money to be embraced by the certificate.

Hence it will appear that any additional act authorizing the issuing of scrip must necessarily increase the duties of this office; the duties of at least eight of the clerks in this office will be increased thereby.

With great respect, I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. JOHN TIPTON, Senate of the United States.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 960. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 6, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Cæsar I. Curry, reported:

The petitioner sets forth that he was born under the Spanish government, in the State of Louisiana, in the year 1796, and that in the year 1800 the Spanish government granted to him four hundred arpents of land on the Bayou Rapides; that the claim for the land was presented to the land commissioners in 1811 at Opelousas, and admitted and passed by them as a good and valid claim; he further states that, being an infant, he was not able to prosecute and attend to his claim until all the vacant lands on the bayou were taken up; that he attempted, after he arrived at age, to locate the same on the bayou, but failed; and prays the privilege of locating his land in some other place. Accompanying the petition is a survey and plat made by Carlos Trudeau, the Spanish surveyor, prior to 1800, and is certified to be a true copy by Valentine King, the register of the land office in the Opelousas, in Louisiana; and also a copy of the report of the land commissioners confirming the claim of said petitioner to said four hundred arpents of land, which is also certified by the register of the land office. There is also exhibited to the committee a paper purporting to be the copy of a judgment of the district court of Louisiana at the parish of Rapides, dated April term, 1830, given in a case of Cæsar I. Curry against Bynam and Robertson, in which the court give an opinion in favor of Bynam and Robertson against said Curry, certified by the clerk of the court at Alexandria to be a true copy of the judgment. There is no evidence before the committee showing the nature of the suit between said parties, or upon what principle the case was determined; the committee do not understand that the United States are liable as warrantors or vendors to the individual who held lands under French or Spanish titles, and which have been favorably reported by the commissioners of the land office. But if they were, there is not sufficient evidence exhibited in this case to justify the House in giving the petitioner the relief asked.

They therefore recommend the rejection of the claim.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 961. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1832.

Mr. STANBERRY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joel Thomas, reported:

The petitioner claims a tract of 640 acres of land, on the ground of settlement and cultivation from 1796 to 1807, under an act of Congress of the latter date.

It appears from the evidence that John Reynolds, under whom the petitioner claims, took possession of the land in 1794 or 1795, made an improvement on it and continued in possession until 1798 or 1799, about which time he left the Michigan. It also appears that the petitioner took possession of the land more than twenty-six years ago, and that he has continued in possession ever since, cultivating the same, and claiming the same as his own.

There is a space of three or four years, from 1796 to 1807, where there is no proof that this land was occupied by any person. It was on this ground, principally, that the Committee on Private Land Claims reported against the claim at the first session of the last Congress.

The petitioner has since procured testimony which proves that all the white inhabitants were driven from the land, as well as from the adjoining tracts, by the Indians, and by them kept out of possession for several years. This, in the opinion of the committee, accounts for the land not being occupied during the said time.

The committee are, therefore, of opinion that the title of the petitioner ought to be confirmed, and accordingly report a bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 962. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Archibald Gamble, reported:

That the petitioner claims a tract of land in Missouri, of four hundred and eighty acres, by virtue of a New Madrid certificate issued under the act of 1817, and numbered 333, issued to John B. Thibault; and that the same was located on the southwest fractional quarter of section twenty-two, which is not embraced by Robert Simpson's location dated May 7, 1818; the southeast fractional quarter of the same section, the northwest fractional quarter section twenty-seven, and so much off the north part of the eastern half of the same section as would make the quantity of four hundred and eighty acres in township No. 46, range 6, east of the fifth principal meridian. Petitioner also alleges that at the fall sales in Missouri in 1823 the officers of the United States sold the said lands owing to an omission on the part of the surveyor to designate said claim on the plat returned by him to the recorder and register, and that the same land has been patented by the United States to the second purchaser, and prays for leave to enter the same quantity of land on other public lands of the United States.

The statements in the petition are supported by the letter of the land commissioners, and the certified copy of the entry which accompanies it, and is made a part of this report.

The committee therefore report a bill for his relief.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 9, 1832.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, and return the statement of Mr. Christy therein enclosed.

By the plat of township 46 north, range 6 east, returned to this office by the surveyor general, it appears that the northwest fractional quarter of section twenty-seven and all of the south fractional half of section twenty-two, with the exception of a piece containing 54.35 acres in the northwest corner of that fractional half section, have been located by a New Madrid certificate, numbered 333, in favor of J. B. Thibault; and from the returns of the land officers at St. Louis it appears that the northwest fractional quarter of twenty-seven was sold to Henry Walton on the twenty-sixth of November, 1823, as containing 129.71 acres; and the whole of the south fractional half of section twenty-two was sold on the 4th of November, 1823, to John Walton, as containing 299.62 acres.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. W. H. ASHLEY, House of Representatives.

MAY 16, 1818.

Thomas Hempstead and Charles S. Hempstead, as the legal representatives of John Baptiste Thibault, locate four hundred and eighty acres of land by virtue of a certificate, No. 333, issued by Frederick Bates, esq., dated St. Louis, September 26, 1817, to wit: the southwest fractional quarter of section twenty-two, which is not embraced by Robert Simpson's location, dated the seventh day of this same month; the south-east fractional quarter of the same section, the northwest fractional quarter of section twenty-seven, and so much off from the north part of the eastern half of the same section twenty-seven as will make the quantity; the said sections being in township forty-six, north of the base line, and range six, east of the fifth principal meridian.

JOSEPH C. BROWN,
For THOMAS HEMPSTEAD and
CHARLES S. HEMPSTEAD.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November 24, 1830.

The above is a correct copy of the original notice of location (which is on file in this office) of four hundred and eighty acres of land, under the New Madrid certificate, (No. 333,) in the name of "John B. Thibault," or his legal representatives.

ON CLAIM TO A PRE-EMPTION RIGHT IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1832.

Mr. MARSHALL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William B. Keene and John L. Martin, reported:

That it is satisfactorily shown that the claimants were entitled, under the pre-emption law of the 29th of May, 1830, to a preference in becoming the purchasers of a tract of land on Lake Providence, in the State of Louisiana. On a survey of the fractional township in which the land is situated, long after they had made their improvements, it appears that the part which they had improved was designated as No. 16, which by law is reserved for the use of schools. It further appears that the petitioners had made very valuable improvements by erecting a cotton gin and mill, and other buildings, on the land. The receiver of public moneys in that district refused to permit them to complete their purchase, but earnestly recommended the case as one of great hardship to the favorable attention of the Secretary of the Treasury. It appears that in surveying the township in this case the ordinary mode was deviated from, and those who made the improvement could not have anticipated that it would fall within No. 16.

On application to the department the Commissioner of the General Land Office was inclined to permit the claimants to complete their purchase, and to direct the register and receiver in that land district to select and reserve for the use of schools an equal quantity of lands of the same value in lieu of it in the same or the next adjoining township; but the then Secretary of the Treasury was of opinion that it could not be done consistently with the existing laws. The committee are of opinion that the views of the Commissioner of the General Land Office are equitable, and that the claimants ought to be permitted to complete their purchase, and another tract of equal value be selected for the use of schools. And they report a bill to that effect.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR SALE OF LANDS ACQUIRED FROM THE CHOCTAW INDIANS AT THE MINIMUM PRICE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1832.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas a treaty was made on the 27th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and of the independence of the United States the fifty-fifth, by John H. Eaton and John Coffee, commissioners on the part of the United States, and the chiefs, captains, and headmen of the Choctaw nation, on the part of said nation; and whereas, by the provisions of said treaty, nearly nine hundred sections of the most valuable lands lying in said Choctaw nation, embracing in quality the most fertile spots, have been reserved for said Choctaws, and the same are now rapidly selling off to wealthy capitalists; and whereas your memorialists have much cause to apprehend that, if the remaining bodies of land interposed between these reservations be offered at public sale to the highest bidder, after the same may be surveyed, the natural consequence will follow that the choicest and most fertile spots will be culled by speculators, who can afford to give extravagant prices for the same, while a large portion of these lands, which are extremely poor, must remain for years merely as the usufructuary property of the rich who own good lands adjoining thereto; it must therefore appear evident to your honorable bodies that this course is well calculated to exclude forever the poor pioneers of the wilderness from the hope of securing a fixed and permanent home, and to foster and perpetuate that wandering and fugitive habit which naturally characterizes those who have nothing to lose by change.

Your memorialists would further most respectfully urge that, owing to the physical position of this State in the Union, there are some circumstances which should direct your especial attention to it. We are surrounded by new countries. The great facilities of procuring lands under a neighboring government, whose soil, climate, and opportunities for trade entitle it to much notice, must continue as a permanent drain on our most enterprising and hardy population, whose early adventures in a new country leave them but scanty means for acquiring desirable homes under the course hitherto pursued in disposing of the public lands; therefore, your memorialists would pray that these lands may be thrown open, at the minimum price, in the proportion of one hundred and sixty acres for each head of a family in this State. The effect of this measure, your memorialists feel confident, will tend not only to the immediate prosperity of this State, but will even throw money in the coffers of the United States, as, under the operation of the law proposed, the quantity entered will be seven-fold what it is under the operation of the old law; a general and simultaneous rush for entering will immediately ensue, and whatever deficit there may be in price would be more than compensated for by the increase of entries, and the prosperity of the State obviously advanced by the acquisition of a permanent yeomanry. Thus a two-fold object would be attained, and that preference of the soil given to whom it is morally due. For if a right of pre-emption has been prescriptively given even to the trespasser on your domain, because of improvements they make thereon, the same cannot reasonably be withheld from those citizens who, in violation of no law, have increased the value of this land by surrounding it with substantial and enduring improvements.

These views being placed before your honorable bodies, your memorialists trust will call forth that philanthropy which has so often marked your conduct towards the new States; and your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c. Therefore—

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened, That our senators in Congress are hereby instructed, and our representative requested, to use their exertions to have the object of this memorial effected, and that the governor of this State be requested to forward a copy of this memorial and resolution to our senators and representative in Congress.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1832.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Matthews Flournoy and R. J. Ward, reported:

That in 1825 the petitioners settled on and improved a tract of land on Lake Washington, in the State of Mississippi, clearing about 800 acres; that the public lands in this section of the country had not at that time been surveyed, but had been returned as unfit for cultivation. A number of persons settling in that country, the government, in 1827, caused these lands to be surveyed; and the tract of land thus improved fell within the sixteenth section, and was therefore reserved from sale, for the use of schools within the township. The inhabitants of the township now join in the petition that section eleven, in that township, be taken in lieu of section number sixteen, so that the said last-mentioned section may be sold by the government. The government, at the request of the inhabitants, has reserved from sale number eleven, in the expectation, it would seem, that Congress would allow the exchange.

The committee, believing the petition reasonable, and that the government will lose nothing, report a bill.

IN FAVOR OF GRANTING A DUPLICATE LAND WARRANT WHERE THE ORIGINAL HAS BEEN LOST.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1832.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Lands, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to the heirs of Nicholas Hart a duplicate of land warrant No. 443, reported:

William H. Hart, one of the heirs of the said Nicholas Hart, deceased, by letter, desires the Hon. Mr. Stevenson, of Pennsylvania, to make inquiry at the proper department for the warrant which had issued to his father, as it could not elsewhere be found. The reply from that department is, that on the 27th day of July, 1809, warrant No. 443 issued to the said Nicholas for one hundred acres of land, and that the same had not been located.

As the committee is fully satisfied that such warrant did emanate, has never been located, and is lost, they think relief ought to be granted, and for that purpose report a bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 967. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 12, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Peter McCormock, reported:

That said claimant filed his application for a settlement right before the board of commissioners for the Upper Louisiana, at present the State of Missouri, claiming 624 arpents and 74 perches of land, equalling 534 acres and 9 poles, on the river Platin, and the same was surveyed for him by Thomas Maddin, deputy surveyor for the district of St. Genevieve, on the 8th of February, 1806. And on the 27th of June, 1806, the board of commissioners had the same under consideration, and recite in their record, "Peter McCormock claiming, as aforesaid, 534 arpents 9 perches of land, situated on the river Platin, district aforesaid, and produces a survey of the same dated the 8th and certified the 20th of February, 1806," and received the testimony offered as to settlement, and decide as follows: "The board grant the aforesaid claimant 400 arpents of land, situate as aforesaid, provided so much be found vacant there."

It further appears that on the 5th of December, 1807, the board of commissioners again had said claim under consideration reciting the claim of said McCormock to be for 534 acres and 9 perches, and further testimony is examined as to the permission given the claimant from the Spanish authorities to settle on the land, and the case is then adjourned for further consideration. And on the 30th of September, 1811, the said board "granted to Peter McCormock 450 arpents of land, and ordered that the same be surveyed as nearly in a square as may be, and so as to include his improvements."—(Commissioner's certificate, number 1245.) It is further proven to the committee that, in the list of confirmed claims furnished by the board to the surveyor general, the claim of McCormock was stated as having been confirmed for 624 arpents, and to be surveyed according to the plat of Thomas Maddin, dated February 8, 1806; and on the 13th of October, 1807, the same was resurveyed by Lionel Brown, including 624 arpents, and very nearly corresponding with the lines of the survey of Maddin, made in 1806. And it appears that in 1822 a copy of the survey made by Brown was sent to the recorder for the purpose of obtaining a grant, and that in 1828 the recorder returned said survey, giving the information that it did not correspond with the confirmation, it having been only for 450 arpents. The committee are at a loss to conceive upon what grounds the board of commissioners confirmed the title to said applicant for either 400 or 450 arpents. The act of the 2d of March, 1805, section 2, makes express provision that applicants for settlement rights who had been in possession of the land and cultivated the same prior to the 20th of December, 1803, with the permission of the proper Spanish authorities, that the land "shall be granted" to such applicant, provided the same does not exceed "one mile square." Under that provision of the law the committee conceive that the claim of the applicant should have been confirmed for 624 arpents of land, according to the survey made for him by Thomas Maddin on the 8th of February, 1806, and certified on the 20th of February, 1806, and report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 968. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM OF THE MARQUIS DE MAISON ROUGE TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 12, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Daniel W. Coxe, relative to the title of the Marquis of Maison Rouge to a large tract of land in Louisiana, reported:

That the memorialist represents himself to be part owner of a tract of land situated in the parishes of Ouachita and Catahoula, claimed by the late Marquis of Maison Rouge under a grant from Baron de Carondelet, then governor of the province of Louisiana, and bearing date the 20th of June, 1797.

This grant has long been a subject of contest between the claimants and the government of the United States. The commissioners for adjusting land titles in that part of Louisiana, to whom it was presented for confirmation, reported that, in their opinion, the instrument above referred to is a patent or perfect title, transferring to the Marquis of Maison Rouge the title in as full and ample a manner as lands were usually granted by the Spanish government, subject, however, to the conditions stipulated in his contract with the government, and they state in their letter to the Secretary of the Treasury that the title ought, in their opinion, to be confirmed. Congress has, however, never recognized the title, and from that day to the present the claimants under the Marquis of Maison Rouge have been subjected to all the burdens of ownership, such as the payment of heavy States taxes and of opening roads, without being permitted to sell with any safety to themselves; nor will the government, by selling the lands embraced within the limits of this grant, enable the claimants to contest their title in a court of justice. Last summer a part of it was ordered to be sold as public land, but it was withdrawn before the sales by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and orders were given not to consider any lands as subject to be sold except such as were the undisputed property of the United States, and particularly none within the above-mentioned grant.

The unsettled condition of this and other large grants is justly considered by the people of that section of country as a great evil. A body of valuable lands is kept in a state of nature, and the growth and prosperity of the country are greatly retarded. To the public generally it is a matter of little or no consequence to whom the land belongs, but it is important that it should be brought into market to meet the growing wants of the population.

The committee do not consider themselves bound to investigate this title, but they are of opinion that the claimants have a right at least to ask of the government an opportunity of establishing in a court of justice the validity of the grant in question. If, at the date of the treaty of cession, this tract of land was, according to the laws and usages of Spain, the property of Maison Rouge, it is, by virtue of that treaty, still the property of his representatives. This question, which is strictly judicial, the claimants ask the privilege of contesting judicially with the United States. The request appears to the committee reasonable, and the committee therefore report a bill to that effect.

ON CLAIM FOR A RESERVATION OF LAND UNDER THE TREATY WITH THE CREEK INDIANS OF 1814.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 13, 1832.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Lands, who were instructed to "inquire into the expediency of authorizing a patent to issue to George Mayfield for six hundred and forty acres of land," reported:

That the said George Mayfield, in the year 1789, when he was about ten years of age, was taken prisoner by a party of Creek Indians. His father and elder brother were killed by the same party of Indians. He was adopted into an Indian family, and continued to reside with them in the nation till about the year 1800, when he was prevailed on to make a visit to his family and friends, residing in Tennessee, where he was captured, but without any intention on his part to abandon the Indians. He had during his captivity forgotten his own and acquired the language of the Indians, and had contracted a fondness for their mode of life, but the influence of his friends and the strength of his returning affections for his mother and brethren finally determined him to remain with them. He soon regained some knowledge of his native tongue, has since married, and is now the father of a large family of children.

By the death of his father and elder brother, George and a younger brother inherited a considerable real estate, but his early habits and education among the Indians had taught him to place little value on a separate property in land, and his generous feelings towards his mother and sisters induced him to relinquish to them his whole interest in his father's estate, except about eighty acres. Upon this small tract in the State of Tennessee, and near the spot where his father and brother were murdered, he now resides.

When the disturbances commenced with the Creek Indians, during the late war, the commanding general of the Tennessee troops at once thought of George Mayfield as qualified to be of great service by his knowledge of the enemy's country and language. Expectation was not disappointed; throughout the Creek war he proved himself a faithful and intrepid soldier, and performed the most perilous and essential services as a guide, interpreter, and spy. He was wounded in the right shoulder by a rifle ball in the battle of the Horse-shoe.

Such was the high estimation in which Mayfield was held by the Creeks generally, that at the treaty of Fort Jackson, in the year 1814, notwithstanding the active part he had taken in the war which had just terminated, the chiefs of the war party, as well as those who had remained friendly to the whites, united in a voluntary request that a reservation of six hundred and forty acres of land should be secured to him in the treaty, as a testimony of their respect and affection for him, contracted during his residence among them. That part of the treaty which was intended to grant the reservation was not ratified, probably because it embraced other reservations which were not sustained by services equally meritorious, or on any grounds of public policy. From the evidence before them, the committee do not believe that the proposed reservation was the result of any management or contrivance on the part of Mayfield, but are of opinion that it was the spontaneous offer of the chiefs of the nation, as well in consideration of former attachments, as of services rendered in facilitating negotiations for peace between their nation and the United States. Under this view of the facts, the committee conclude that the claim is well-founded, and accordingly ask leave to report a bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 970. [1ST SESSION.

ON PRE-EMPTION CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 13, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Amos Webb, reported:

That the petitioner states that he is a resident in the county of Opelousas, in the State of Louisiana; that he has erected a saw and grist mill on the Bayou Chicot, in the parish of St. Landry, and that he is desirous of giving to his improvements a more permanent character by the erection of other additional buildings, but is deterred from so doing because he cannot procure a title to the land upon which it is situated, and states that the land belongs to the United States, has not yet been brought into market, and is not likely soon to be offered at public sale; that he was disappointed in procuring a settlement or pre-emption right, in consequence of the construction put upon the law by the commissioners of the United States, they deciding that an actual residence on the land was necessary to entitle the party applying to the same. He states that the land is poor, and only of use on account of the mill seat; that there is much valuable timber in the vicinity, which may be rendered profitable to himself and the citizens in the adjacent country, for the supply of building materials, &c.; and that they have urged him to make still further improvements, so as to enable him to afford them the requisite supply; and prays leave to enter eighty acres of land at the government price.

The committee are not of opinion that the citizens of the country should be encouraged in trespassing upon the public domain that has not yet been brought into market, by granting them the right of pre-emption to selected sections, and such as might be, at a future period, the cause of selling considerable portions of the public land in the vicinity; and, in addition to this reason, an indulgence in such a course of legislation for individual benefit would be prejudicial to the interests of all others desirous of settling in that country, and who are delaying their settlements until the government shall authorize them to do so. This would be rewarding violations of the law, instead of inflicting its penalties. If indulgences of that character must be granted in those sections of the country not yet brought into market, some general law of pre-emption should be passed, that all might derive equal advantages from it.

The committee, therefore, recommend the rejection of the application of the petitioner.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 971. [1ST SESSION.

IN FAVOR OF CONFIRMING THE SALE OF CERTAIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 16, 1832.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of William and Joseph Hardridge, chiefs and warriors of the Creek nation of Indians, reported:

That the said memorialists set forth that they have received certificates for several tracts of lands, as reservations, in the district of lands sold at Sparta, in the State of Alabama. Said memorialists pray that an act may be passed authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue patents, in fee simple, to them for the lands described in the certificates aforesaid. It is proven, to the satisfaction of the committee, that the said William and Joseph Hardridge are men of good judgment, familiar with the usages and customs of the white people, and well calculated to make their own contracts to advantage. The committee, therefore, report a bill authorizing the Commissioner aforesaid to issue patents, in fee simple, to said memorialists for the lands described in the certificates aforesaid.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 972. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR A GRANT OF LAND FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A CERTAIN ROAD IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 16, 1832.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Ohio respectfully represents: That by a resolution of the general assembly of Ohio, passed the 19th day of January, 1828, commissioners were appointed to examine a route for a turnpike road, commencing at Gallipolis, on the Ohio river, by way of Jackson, to Chilicothe, in the county of Ross; in pursuance of which resolution the said commissioners, accompanied by a competent engineer, detailed for that purpose, proceeded to view the route for the proposed road, and have reported their proceedings, together with a report of the engineer, to this general assembly.

It will be seen, from a view of the map of the country through which the contemplated road will pass, that a line of connexion is designed to be formed with Chilicothe and Charleston, on the Great Kanawha river, the western termination of the turnpike road leading from the city of Richmond, in Virginia. From Gallipolis to Charleston, in Virginia, a distance of twenty-five miles intervenes. Little doubt is entertained that, should the proposed road be constructed by the State of Ohio, a branch of the Kanawha turnpike will be made conducting that road to the Virginia bank of the Ohio river; returning to Chilicothe, a continuation, at some future day, of this road will intersect in a direct line at Springfield or Dayton the great national turnpike from Cumberland west. The advantages resulting from this extensive line of communication, now broken, but which will be entire by the extension of the proposed road to Dayton or Springfield, when the means of the State will admit, present themselves forcibly to the view of an enlightened policy. An entire chain of connexion will thus be formed from the great national thoroughfare, the Miami and Ohio canals, through the southern region of the State traversing the valley of the Great Kanawha, thence by the capital of Virginia to the Carolinas; and, in addition, intercourse will thus be opened with a rich and fertile region of Kentucky, by a road already located by the authorities of that State from the mouth of the Great Sandy to Charleston, on the Kanawha. The distance between the two points proposed to be connected at this time, viz: Gallipolis and Chilicothe, is about sixty-one miles; the cost of the contemplated road, including culverts and bridges, is estimated by Thomas B. Adams, esq., the engineer, at $75,513 33. In presenting this subject to the consideration of Congress, with a view to obtaining their assistance, the legislature of Ohio have acted under the entire conviction that the representatives of this extended republic feel the importance of fostering the interests of every part as conducive to the welfare of the whole, and that they will afford such aid as may be justified by a due regard to the general good.

Your memorialists would respectfully suggest that most of the land, important in value, lying within the land district through which the desired road will pass, has been selected and sold. The lands lying immediately on the line of location are thin and unpromising, have been long in the market, and will in all probability remain unsold, unless some event, like that in contemplation, shall give them additional value. They therefore pray your honorable bodies to grant a donation of land to the State of Ohio, to be appropriated under the direction of the legislature to the construction of the proposed road, equal to every alternate section on the line, to be selected out of such lands undisposed of in the Marietta and Chilicothe land districts as the governor of this State may think most conducive to the end proposed. And your memorialists, as in duty bound, &c.

Resolved, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their endeavors to procure the passage of a law granting to the State of Ohio a donation of land agreeably to the prayer of the above memorial.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor of this State be requested to forward to each of our senators and representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution.

THOMAS L. HAMER, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
ROBERT LUCAS, Speaker of the Senate.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 973. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE PRE-EMPTION CLAIM OF THE COUNTY OF PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 17, 1832.

Mr. IRVIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of sundry citizens of the county of Peoria, in the State of Illinois, reported:

It appears from the statement of the memorialists that the legislature of Illinois, in the year ——, located the seat of justice of the county of Peoria on the northeast fractional quarter section of section nine, in township eight north, of range eight east, under and by virtue of an act of Congress, passed May 26, 1824, entitled "An act granting to the counties or parishes of each State and Territory of the United States in which the public lands are situated the right of pre-emption to quarter sections of land for seats of justice within the same."

The commissioners appointed by act of the legislature of Illinois to locate the seat of justice, not only gave notice to the officers of the government of their having located the same on the said tract of land, for the purposes aforesaid, but actually deposited, in the land office at Springfield, a part of the purchase money. It is proven, to the satisfaction of the committee, that the commissioners fixed on the seat of justice previously to a sale of the adjoining lands, according to the requisitions of the act before mentioned.

Subsequently to the location, the giving of notice, and the depositing of the money by the commissioners, a Mr. Latham, having a floating claim or pre-emption right of land, laid the same on the fractional quarter already designated for the seat of justice of Peoria, and obtained from the land office a certificate therefor. No patent, however, has issued to Mr. Latham, in consequence of the representation of the facts of the case, made by the commissioners appointed to locate the seat of justice, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

It is the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as expressed in his letter to Mr. Kane of the 25th January, 1830, which is before the committee, "that, agreeably to the strict letter of the respective acts under which the county commissioners for Peoria and Mr. Latham claim, neither of the parties had a strictly legal right to enter a fractional quarter section as a quarter section;" which is admitted by the memorialists. The commissioners have sold some of the lots, and given a promise of pre-emption to settlers on others.

It also appears that a part of the fractional quarter section located by the commissioners for the seat of justice is, or will be, covered by the claims of the inhabitants of the village of Peoria, granted to them by an act of Congress, passed March 3, 1823, entitled "An act to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois."

The memorialists pray the passage of a law authorizing the county of Peoria to purchase the residue of the fractional quarter section of land, on which the seat of justice is located, after the location of the claims of the inhabitants of the village of Peoria.

From the construction which the committee give to the act of Congress by authority of which the legislature of Illinois located the seat of justice, and the facts of the case, the committee are of the opinion that the county of Peoria has not only an equitable, but a legal pre-emption right to said fractional quarter section of land against all persons whose claims were not located previous to the location of the seat of justice, excepting the claims of the inhabitants of the village of Peoria. The committee, after an examination of all the facts and circumstances of the case, are of opinion that the county of Peoria ought to be permitted to purchase the fractional quarter section of land on which the seat of justice is located, at the minimum prices, saving and reserving to all and every person or persons whatsoever their legal right or rights to the same; and, for that purpose, report a bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 974. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 17, 1832.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John C. Williams, reported:

That the petitioner purchased the settlement right of Fielding Barham and wife at a parish sale; that he paid a valuable consideration for it—say upwards of seven hundred dollars; that the place was settled by deceased in 1809 or 1810, and that it continued in the actual occupancy and cultivation of said Barham and wife up to the time of her death in 1826; that Barham was blind and a cripple some for several years previous to his death, and unable to do his own business; that he employed a man by the name of Bradford to present his claim to the United States commissioners at St. Helena Court-House for confirmation; that the land claimed is situated in the parish of East Feliciana, on Carr's creek, in the State of Louisiana. All the above facts are fully substantiated by the testimony of several witnesses, as also by the production of an exemplification of the parish sale. The committee are, therefore, of the opinion that the neglect of the United States commissioners to report the claim of deceased for confirmation should not prejudice the rights of his representatives, and are unanimous in the opinion that the claim should be confirmed; consequently report a bill.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI THAT A DONATION OF LAND BE MADE TO AMOS MOORE FOR PUBLIC SERVICES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 18, 1832.

A MEMORIAL.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:
