The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi respectfully showeth: That Amos Moore, a descendant of one of the early and adventurous pioneers of the wilderness of this country, has besought your memorialists to represent to your honorable bodies the necessities of his condition and the incidents of his birth and life, that would seem to recommend him to the charitable munificence of his government. With this view your memorialists would respectfully show that his father was one of those adventurous and enterprising men who, having spent the youth and manhood of his life in advancing the boundaries and protecting the improvements of civilization, was at length afflicted with age and decrepitude, without having provided for the subsistence of a numerous and helpless family. In the early settlement of Tennessee, and when that country was a wilderness, infested with fierce and savage barbarians, he was among the foremost of those hardy adventurers who extended the settlement and repelled the appalling dangers which were in that country, the only impediments to the advancement of civilization. After the establishment of security and peace in Tennessee, the course of his life was characterized by the same useful spirit of adventure; he penetrated deeper into the wilderness, until about twenty-years ago he settled with his family on the margin of the Mississippi, where he has terminated a life of toil and danger and public usefulness. The general usefulness of such men may be discerned in the cultivated appearance and the enhanced value of the country which they have subjected to the dominion of arts and civilization. If a life thus spent communicates a claim to the favor of public munificence, your memorialists would represent the claim of their petitioner, in whose behalf this memorial is addressed, as one of peculiar character, and entitled to unusual attention. At the age of four years he became blind and helpless, and is now dependent for subsistence on the exertions of his mother, who is aged and poor, and not more than able to procure a competent subsistence for herself. Your memorialists would state the said Amos Moore is now residing near Lake Bolivar, in Washington county, where he has resided for the last twenty years. The general assembly would represent that the lands at and contiguous to the residence of said Amos Moore have been appropriated and disposed of under the laws of the general government. They would therefore humbly pray the Congress of the United States to grant to the said Amos Moore a donation of one section of land, or such other quantity as the claims of the petitioner may entitle him to, to be located on any unappropriated lands in our State belonging to the United States.

Your memorialists believe said Amos Moore a suitable object of the charity and munificence of the general government, from the reasons herein set forth. They therefore pray your honorable bodies to take into consideration the claims of said Amos Moore, and to grant to him the relief herein prayed for.

RELATIVE TO THE QUANTITY, SITUATION, AND VALUE OF PUBLIC LAND NOT DISPOSED OF IN THE UNITED STATES MILITARY LAND DISTRICT IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 20, 1832.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 18, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 31st December, 1830, requesting information as to the quantity, situation, and probable value of the public land undisposed of in the United States military district and Virginia military reservation in Ohio, I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

By this it appears that there are thus undisposed of, in the United States military district, 32,724 acres and 25 hundredths, estimated by the Commissioner at an average value of fifty cents an acre; and in the Virginia military reservation 317,000 acres, estimated by the Commissioner at an average value of fifty cents an acre, but by the principal surveyor of the reservation at various lower rates, averaging about four cents an acre.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 16, 1832.

SIR: In pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of the United States, bearing date 31st December, 1830, in the words following, viz: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to lay before the Senate, at the next session of Congress, a statement showing the quantity, situation, and probable value of the public land which remains undisposed of in the United States military district and in the Virginia military reservation, in the State of Ohio," and which was referred to this office, I have the honor to report that it became necessary to refer that portion of the resolution relating to the Virginia military reservation to the principal surveyor of that reservation, residing at Chilicothe, Ohio, copies of whose letter and statement on the subject (papers marked A and B) are herewith transmitted, and to which I beg leave to refer as containing part of the information desired by the resolution.

The paper marked C affords the only information in this office in relation to the quantity, location, and probable value of the unlocated land in the United States military district.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. LOUIS MCLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

P. S.—I do not concur in Mr. Latham's estimate of the value of the unlocated lands in the Virginia military reservation. I estimate the average value of those lands at fifty cents per acre.

ON APPLICATION OF THE PENNSYLVANIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB FOR A GRANT OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 20, 1832.

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, praying a grant of land or other aid, reported:

That grants have been made for similar purposes to like institutions in Connecticut and Kentucky, but to extend them further seems to the committee neither necessary nor politic. It seems difficult to distinguish grants for this purpose from those for education or any other benevolent object. To extend them throughout the States and Territories for purposes of public good, at the discretion of Congress, would lead to extravagant expenditure or invidious discrimination. This application, moreover, comes from a State abundant in its resources and liberal in its views of public utility, and where aid to this institution can be easily obtained. The committee therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petition ought not to be granted.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 978. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 20, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Wyatt Singleton and James Andrews, reported:

That the petitioners claim settlement rights in that section of Louisiana lying between the river Sabine and the Rio Hondo, usually known by the name of the "neutral territory," and prove that they settled on the same in 1818, made improvements, and cultivated them that year, and that possession and cultivation have been ever since continued. They say they did not file their claims before the commissioners because they were ignorant of the law and necessity of so doing.

By an act of Congress passed March 3, 1823, the section of the country between the Sabine and Rio Hondo is attached to the land district south of Red river, and the register and receiver are directed "to receive and record all written evidences of claim to land in said tract of country derived from and issued by the Spanish government of Texas prior to December 20, 1803;" and also to "receive and record all evidences of claim founded on occupation, habitation, and cultivation," designating "the time and manner in which each tract was occupied, inhabited, and cultivated prior to and on the 22d February, 1819, and the continuance thereof subsequent to that time;" and the register and receiver were further directed to transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury a report of all applications to him under four distinct heads:

1. All complete titles from Spanish government.
2. All claims founded on written evidence, but not completed.
3. All claims founded on habitation, occupation, or cultivation previous to the 22d February, 1819.
4. All the claims which, in their opinion, ought to be rejected.

In pursuance of the report made by the register and receiver to the Secretary of the Treasury, agreeably to the provisions of the preceding act, all persons claiming title by virtue of settlement, occupation, or cultivation prior to the 22d of February, 1819, were confirmed in their claims to a tract of 640 acres each by an act of Congress passed on the 16th day of May, 1826.

The committee are of opinion that the present applicants would have been entitled to their settlement claims if the same had been presented to the register and receiver of the land office while acting under the act of 1823, and that the same would have been allowed them; and they do not think that their right should be forfeited from this omission to do so, whether the same originated in ignorance or neglect; and they therefore report a bill for their relief.

ON RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION TO A QUARTER SECTION OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 20, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James L. Stokes, reported:

That the petitioner, and those from whom he derives title, had acquired a right of pre-emption in a quarter section of land in the land district north of Red river, in the State of Louisiana, by virtue of the act of Congress of April 12, 1814. That he and those whose original right he holds have been in possession and cultivation of the land claimed by him since the year 1807. It appears that, by a survey made about eighteen months since, the quarter section on which the improvements were made has been designated as part of number sixteen, which is reserved by law for the use of schools. It was obviously impossible for the settler to foresee this result, and besides, it is understood that in surveying these fractional townships on water courses, the surveying department have not pursued any general rule. The committee, under the peculiar hardship of the case, are of opinion that the claimant ought to be permitted to complete his purchase, and that other lands be selected for the use of schools.

22D CONGRESS.] No 980. [1ST SESSION.

IN FAVOR OF THE CORRECTION OF ERROR IN THE ENTRY OF A QUARTER SECTION OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 24, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Hugh Beard, reported:

That said petitioner alleges that he entered at the land office at Brookville, in Indiana, on the 25th of November, 1822, the east half of the northeast quarter section one, in township No. 16, of range 4 east, containing seventy-four acres and eighteen poles, for which a patent has issued to him, and that the same was entered by mistake, the said petitioner intending to enter the west half of the northwest quarter of said section; and that he did not know of said mistake until after the patent issued, when he went to examine the land. He also alleges that the land which he intended to enter has been entered by another. He now complains that the land which he entered by mistake is wholly unfit for cultivation; the land which he intended to enter was a valuable piece of land. He says he is poor and illiterate, and greatly injured by the mistake, and swears to the facts as stated, and proves them by Robert Warren, who showed him the land, and advised him to enter it, and was present with him when the entry was made, and knows that it was a mistake. Several respectable citizens of Indianapolis certify that the applicant is a man of good character, integrity, and honesty. The petitioner asks of Congress to permit him to enter as much land elsewhere in Indiana, or to refund to him the purchase money. The committee think his request reasonable, and report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS] No. 981. [1ST SESSION.

IN RELATION TO A CESSION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS IN TENNESSEE TO THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 24, 1832.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, from the Committee on Public Lands, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of ceding to the State of Tennessee "the refuse lands south and west of the congressional reservation line in said State," reported:

The State of North Carolina, in the month of December, 1789, by an act of her legislature, and by her deed of cession of February, 1790, ceded to the United States the territory now constituting the State of Tennessee, making in said deed certain reservations, among which are the following:

1st. The right to the officers and soldiers of the State of North Carolina to lay off any lands they were entitled to within the limits that had been allotted them; and that if within the boundaries prescribed for the officers and soldiers of the State line on continental establishment there was not a sufficiency of lands fit for cultivation, such deficiency to be made up out of any other lands thereby ceded.

2d. The right to all entries or grants of land made agreeably to law, and the rights of occupancy and pre-emption, and every other right reserved by law to persons settled on or occupying lands within the limits ceded.

3d. The right to remove entries made in the office of John Armstrong, and which interfered with prior entries, and locate the same on any other lands ceded, (see Laws United States, vol. 2, pages 104 and 567.) By virtue of these reservations the whole ceded territory is made subject to the satisfaction of the military land warrants issued, or to be issued, by the State of North Carolina to her officers and soldiers of the revolution. These warrants were to be issued by the State authorities of North Carolina, without any right on the part of the United States to control their number or regulate the mode or manner of their location. Much of the ceded territory had been appropriated by entries, surveys, and grants prior to the act of cession.

The process of issuing warrants, making entries, &c., within the limits of what is now Tennessee, continued during the territorial government over said district.

Upon the 1st day of June, 1796, the State of Tennessee was, by the Congress of the United States, admitted into the Union, and "declared to be one of the United States of America, on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever." Nothing is said in this act of Congress upon the subject of the right of soil to the vacant and unappropriated lands within said State.

The State of Tennessee, soon after the admission into the Union, asserted claim to the vacant and unappropriated lands within her limits, contending that with the sovereignty the right of soil passed by the act of her admission into the Union, there being no reservation by Congress of that right in said acts.

An adjustment of the dispute took place in the year 1806, the principles of which are contained in the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the State of Tennessee to issue grants and perfect titles to certain lands therein described, and to settle the claims to the vacant and unappropriated lands within the same," approved April 4, 1806.—(4th vol. Laws United States, 29; Land Laws, 527.)

The first section of this act divides the State into two sections, by what has since been called the "congressional reservation line."

The State of Tennessee relinquished all claim which she then had to all the land lying south and west of this line; renounced all right to tax the same while it remained the property of the United States, and for five years after the same shall have been granted. The United States ceded to the State of Tennessee all right and claim which they had to the land lying east and north of the said land, subject to the same conditions as are contained in the act of the general assembly of the State of North Carolina, entitled "An act for the purpose of ceding to the United States of America certain western lands therein described." A part of these conditions have been before enumerated.

These further conditions were imposed upon the State of Tennessee:

1st. That all entries, rights of locations, and warrants of surveys, and all interfering locations which might be removed under the laws of North Carolina, and which were not located west and south of the line aforesaid established, shall be located, and the titles thereto perfected, within the territory thereby ceded to the State of Tennessee.

2d. The State of Tennessee was to reserve 100,000 acres, in one body, within the limits of the lands reserved to the Cherokee Indians by an act of the State of North Carolina, for the use of two colleges, the one in the east, the other to be in the western division of Tennessee.

3d. One hundred thousand acres were to be reserved within the same limits for the use of academies in each county in said State.

4th. The State was required, in issuing grants and perfecting titles, to locate 640 acres to every six miles square in the territory ceded, where existing claims will allow the same, which were to be appropriated for the use of schools for the instruction of children forever.

By the third section of the aforesaid act it was provided that if the country ceded to Tennessee shall not contain a sufficient quantity of good land fit for cultivation, according to the true intent and meaning of the original act of cession, to perfect all existing legal claims charged therein, by the conditions contained in the act of Congress above mentioned, Congress shall provide by law for perfecting such as cannot be located in the territory aforesaid out of the lands lying west and south of the line before described.

In 1818 it was ascertained that the territory east and north of the congressional reservation line aforesaid did not contain a sufficient quantity of good land fit for cultivation, according to the true intent and meaning of the original act of cession by North Carolina, to perfect all existing legal claims charged therein by the conditions contained in the act of Congress of April 4, 1806. Consequently, an act of Congress was passed authorizing the satisfaction of such claims west and south of this reservation line.—(See Land Laws, page 725.)

Many entries, surveys, and grants had been made under the authority of North Carolina west and south of this line, prior to the act of cession to the United States. Since 1818 the whole country west and south of that line has been subject to appropriation, under and by virtue of military warrants issued by the State of North Carolina.

That even the amount of acres due to the officers and soldiers of the State of North Carolina, subject to be located within the limits of the State of Tennessee, or the amount which has been located, the committee have no certain means of ascertaining. The whole country was made subject to appropriation by warrants issued, and to be issued, by the State of North Carolina, without any control or check on the part of the United States.

The committee are satisfied that the whole of the "good lands fit for cultivation" on the east and north of the line aforesaid, have long since been exhausted by appropriations under North Carolina warrants.

They are also satisfied that all the valuable lands west and south of this line have been located and appropriated under warrants issued by North Carolina, and they are induced to believe there are warrants and claims to locations which have not yet been entered, surveyed, or patented, but to what amount the committee are not informed.

To determine the propriety of ceding the land west and south of this line to the State of Tennessee, involves the consideration of the three questions:

1st. Could such cession be made and preserve the rights of the officers and soldiers secured by the acts of cession on the part of North Carolina to the United States?

2d. What claim has Tennessee upon the United States to the whole or any part of the land south and west of said line?

3d. The probable value of these lands, not to Tennessee, but to the United States, in their present situation?

The committee have had no difficulty in determining the first of these questions. At present the authorities of the State of Tennessee exercise the powers of determining what claims are valid within the meaning of the act of cession, and of perfecting the title. Under the proposed cession the State will be required in good faith to execute her present powers, and to satisfy all the just claims which were intended to be provided for by the act of cession and the act of Congress of 1806.

The second inquiry is one which will require more investigation.

If the question be considered as one of mere abstract right on the part of Tennessee, the committee do not perceive any obligation on the part of the United States to accord to the State the claim to these lands.

There are circumstances, however, connected with the subject which address themselves forcibly to the justice and liberality of the federal government.

By the act of cession and the subsequent act of Congress providing for the territorial government, the inhabitants of Tennessee were to enjoy all the advantages and immunities of the citizens of the Northwestern Territory, now the State of Ohio.

One of these advantages, the rich fruits of which Ohio has enjoyed, was the direction of one thirty-sixth part of the public domain within her limits by the general government to the purposes of common schools. This wise and just disposition of one thirty-sixth part of the public lands has obtained in each new State and Territory, and it was the intention of Congress, as clearly manifested by the act of 1806, that the inhabitants of the State of Tennessee should enjoy the same advantages; hence the grant to, or rather the injunction that, the State of Tennessee, in the disposition of the public lands east and north of the reservation line, should reserve and set apart six hundred and forty acres for every six miles square, for the purposes of education.

This condition in the act of compromise was inserted under the belief entertained by both of the contracting parties, that there would be more than a sufficiency of good land to satisfy the military warrants of North Carolina, east and north of the reservation line. The land south and west of this line was reserved for the future disposition of Congress. On the south and west of this line, however, military warrants of North Carolina have been located to the amount of 3,253,824 acres, prior to August 28, 1829.

In this section of the State no reservations have been made for school lands.

The whole number of acres on both sides of this line have been estimated at 24,000,000. One thirty-sixth part of which is 666,666 acres, to which the State of Tennessee would have been entitled under the provisions of the act of 1806, and according to the policy pursued by the general government upon this subject toward the other new States, provided there had been a sufficiency of good land beside to satisfy the just claims of the officers and soldiers of North Carolina.

The whole amount which the State has been enabled to appropriate under the act of 1806, exclusive of the grant for the two colleges, does not exceed 24,000 acres.

It is true that east and north of the reservation line there still remain vacant and unappropriated lands of no value, and which may be appropriated at the will of any one who will pay the fees of office for surveying the same.

The committee may fairly assume that there is due to the State of Tennessee 642,666 acres for school lands, to satisfy which claim she asks the United States to cede the vacant lands south and west of the congressional reservation line.

What is the value of these lands to the United States, and would they repay to the United States the expense of surveying them and bringing them into the market as other public lands? is the next subject of inquiry.

According to the statements contained in the letter of the late Commissioner of the Land Office, George Graham, esq., the whole number of acres south and west of this line is estimated to be 8,000,000.

Daniel Graham, the late secretary of the State of Tennessee, in his communication of August 20, 1829, to the then Commissioner of the Land Office, estimated the number of acres at....		6,864,000
The quantity granted by North Carolina before the cession to the United States, at	942,375
Adjudicated by Tennessee up to January 1, 1820.....	2,550,413
Adjudicated between January 1, 1820, and August 28, 1829.....	17,388
Leaving a probable balance of.....		3,353,824

The committee refer to the letters of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of January 18, 1828, and of the Secretary of the Treasury of January 6, 1830, appended to this report, for a more detailed and minute history and description of this land. They also refer to a map which has been prepared, in order to give to the House some idea of the manner in which the lands under the warrants issued by the State of North Carolina have been surveyed.

The proprietors of these warrants, which varied in size from one acre to 5,000 acres, in making their locations were restricted to no particular boundary lines or courses, but had the right to select the lands where they pleased; always selecting, of course, the best spots. What remains is land of very inferior quality, most of it wholly unfit for cultivation.

The value of this land is variously estimated. Some of the persons whose opinions have been taken heretofore upon this subject, do not estimate it at more than twelve and a half cents per acre, others estimate it of less value. The statements of persons acquainted with this land are appended to this report and numbered from one to eight, inclusive.

In addition to this the committee addressed a letter to the senators and representatives of the State of Tennessee. Some of them are well acquainted with this district of country, and all of them possessing more or less information as to the value of the vacant lands situate south and west of this line, which letter and answer thereto is marked A and B.

Taking into consideration the difficulty and expense which must necessarily attend any effort the United States may make to bring these lands into market, (according to that system which they have adopted, and which system the committee think ought never to be abandoned,) the quality and value of these lands, the just claims which Tennessee has upon any public domain within her limits to make up her proportion of school lands, and the meritorious purposes to which she will stand pledged to devote any avails which she may derive therefrom, viz: to purposes of education, the committee are unanimously of opinion that it would be just, fair, and equitable, on the part of the United States, to surrender to the State for the purposes of education any claim which the United States have to said land, subject always to the fair and just claims of the officers and soldiers of the State of North Carolina, which claims are to be adjudicated upon and carried into grants according to the laws now in force upon that subject; and therefore report a bill.

A.

WASHINGTON, December 29, 1831.

GENTLEMEN: The Committee on Public Lands has been instructed to inquire into the expediency of the United States relinquishing to the State of Tennessee all claim to the unappropriated lands lying in said State, for certain purposes.

When lands have never been surveyed by the United States, there is, in the department, believed to be no evidence as to the quantity, quality, or particular situation of the public domain embraced by the resolution.

The committee would like to have your opinions, and any information which you may have on the following points:

1. What is the probable quantity of unappropriated lands?

2. What is its condition and shape in reference to individual claims derived from the State of North Carolina?

3. Are there any, if any, what is the probable amount of unsatisfied outstanding warrants issued by the State of North Carolina?

4. Would the land by its sale, after satisfying the whole of the military warrants of North Carolina, pay the expenses of surveying the land by the general government in such manner as to bring the vacant land into market?

Any information which you can furnish us upon these points may conduce to facilitate the efforts of the committee to come to a correct conclusion upon the subject committed to their investigation.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. A. WICKLIFFE,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands.

The SENATORS and REPRESENTATIVES of the State of Tennessee.

B.

WASHINGTON CITY, January 4, 1832.

SIR: In answer to the several inquiries contained in your letter of the 29th ultimo, addressed to us by you as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, we state:

1st. In relation to the "probable quantity of unappropriated lands" lying south and west of the congressional reservation line in the State of Tennessee, as established by the act of Congress of April 18, 1806, we beg leave to refer the committee to an official communication from Daniel Graham, esq., late secretary of state of Tennessee, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated August 20, 1829, as containing the most satisfactory and authentic information in our possession upon this point. Since the date of that communication, we would remark that the legislature of Tennessee have made further provision for the adjudication and satisfaction of North Carolina military warrants; and, in pursuance of such provision, warrants to a considerable amount (but the precise number of acres we do not know) have been satisfied, thus diminishing the quantity of unappropriated lands by the amount of the warrants which have been satisfied since the date of Mr. Graham's report.

2d. In relation to "its condition and shape in reference to individual claims derived from the State of North Carolina," we would beg leave to refer the committee to a map or plat of the district taken from actual survey, furnished by Mr. Graham, and which accompanied his report of August 20, 1829, from an inspection of which the committee will be enabled readily to perceive the "condition and shape" of the remaining unappropriated lands. Upon this point we will further remark that previous to the cession of the western domain, made by North Carolina in 1789, that State had authorized her soldiers and others holding military warrants to make numerous locations and entries of her western lands, then unsurveyed and but imperfectly explored. After the cession by the compact of the ——— of ———, 1804, (Scott's Revisal, 831,) entered into between the States of North Carolina and Tennessee, and the United States, Tennessee was invested with power to open affairs and make provision for the satisfaction of the remaining claims of North Carolina. In executing this trust her land system was very different from that of the United States. The claimant or holders of warrants were not required to take up the land by sections, quarter sections, or in any other regular form of surveying, adjoining section or range lines, and so as to include a portion of the poor with the rich land; but each claimant explored the country for himself, or by his agent, and made his own location, selecting, of course, the best land within his knowledge, and so making his survey as to exclude, as far as practicable, the sterile and to include the fertile lands. The North Carolina claimants were promised land fit for cultivation, and to enable them to obtain it, a division of warrants was authorized by law; the consequence of which has been that locations and entries upon warrants of all sizes, from one to 5,000 acres, have been made upon the land in question, and in surveys of every imaginable shape—surveys even of small tracts of land having, in many instances, a dozen or more offsets and corners. From this view it is apparent, and the fact is so, that the unappropriated lands lie in detached parcels of various sizes and irregular shape, and that they are the refuse or sterile lands of the country.

3d. In answer to the third interrogatory, to wit, whether "there are any, and if any, what is the probable amount of unsatisfied outstanding warrants issued by the State of North Carolina?" we state that we have no accurate means of knowing. Much of the larger portion of them have been satisfied. Doubtless, however, there may be some still remaining, arising from interfering locations, or in the hands of heirs or other persons, who, from ignorance of their rights, or from some other cause, have not heretofore availed themselves of the provision made for their satisfaction. But the quantity of outstanding unsatisfied claims, be they what they may, cannot be material, as affecting the question of relinquishment to the State of these lands; for the State does not ask the relinquishment, except upon condition that she will first satisfy, out of the lands, all the remaining claims of North Carolina which shall be adjudicated to be just and valid, and which are properly chargeable upon the lands.

4th. In answer to the fourth interrogatory, to wit, "would the land by its sale, after satisfying the whole of the military warrants of North Carolina, pay the expenses of surveying the land by the general government in such manner as to bring the vacant land into market?" we state that, in our opinion, any sale which could be made by the United States would not defray the expenses of such survey and sale; and we beg leave to assign the following reasons as going to sustain that opinion: the United States never having surveyed the country or caused it to be run off into townships, ranges, and sections, there are but two modes which she could adopt were she now to attempt to bring these remaining refuse lands into market, to wit, first, by establishing a land office in the country and causing it to be run off into townships, sections, and quarter sections, according to the present land system of the United States. Suppose this heavy expense to be incurred, and the country to be thus surveyed by the United States, the committee will perceive, from our answer to the second interrogatory, how impossible it would be, even then, to ascertain and bring into market these detached remnants, lying as they would do on both sides of range and section lines, and in every variety of size and shape. Secondly, the only remaining mode by which the United States could attempt to bring these lands into market, would be by making an actual survey, if indeed that be practicable, of these remnants of land, lying as they do in many instances, in very small bodies between the lines of appropriated tracts, and surrounded by them, and in the irregular and various shapes before described. When the bodies of unappropriated land are larger they are invariably of the poorest land; much the greater part of which would not be worth appropriating at any price, not even at one cent per acre.

Upon this point also, as well as upon some of the other points contained in the interrogatories propounded, we beg leave to call the attention of the committee to the several official statements herewith furnished, made by the several surveyors south and west of the congressional reservation line, and heretofore presented to Congress, from which it will be seen that the opinions we have intended here to express are amply sustained.

We are of opinion that the estimate of value made by Mr. Graham, late secretary of state of Tennessee, is even larger than could now be realized from the lands by the State, and especially considering that since the date of his report some North Carolina warrants have been located upon the best of the land, which was unappropriated at the date of his report.

In conclusion, we state that the State of Tennessee, having her land offices already established in the country, could, as she has done north and east of the congressional reservation line, without incurring any additional expenses of surveying, permit these vacant lands to be entered at some very low rate, and that in doing so she would derive some small profit, which the United States, never having surveyed the country, and having no land offices in it, could not.

General Hall, one of my colleagues, had the politeness to present me this day, January 5, 1832, with the letter of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, requesting information on certain points touching the public domain of the United States lying south and west of the congressional reservation line, in the State of Tennessee. He also presented the foregoing responses to the several questions contained in the letter of the chairman, above alluded to, which had been signed by all the members of Congress from Tennessee except myself. My concurrence was requested. I have only to say, I know nothing of the facts stated in the foregoing answers to the interrogatories propounded by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I am not in the habit of subscribing to statements of others as facts unless I know them to be so myself.

With much deference to my colleagues, however, I will make free to express a hope that if the committee should deem it proper to legislate on the subject of these lands that they will remember the poor occupants, who have no other means of subsistence but what they derive from the cultivation of these lands.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS D. ARNOLD.

Hon. CHAS. A. WICKLIFFE,
Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives.

MIDDLEBURG, January 26, 1828.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 24th ultimo has been received and is now before me, in which you request from me some opinion as to the probable value of the unappropriated land in the western district. To this subject my mind has been turned for a considerable time past, and in particular for the last summer and fall. During that period I have travelled in almost every direction through the district, and from the strictest observation, as well as the opinions of various gentlemen of respectability and information, I am irresistibly brought to the conclusion that if a relinquishment should be made to the State (at the price she will be able to sell these lands) she will not realize 12½ cents per acre on an average for one half the land; and even in making this calculation I take into view considerable quantities of land which could not be sold for that sum, but in consequence of their being situate so convenient to many small tracts as to afford outlet, timber, &c. But, sir, if the whole amount of unappropriated land could be sold for 12½ cents per acre it would still fall very far short of making up the deficit in the common school fund contemplated to be given to Tennessee by the act of Congress of 1806.

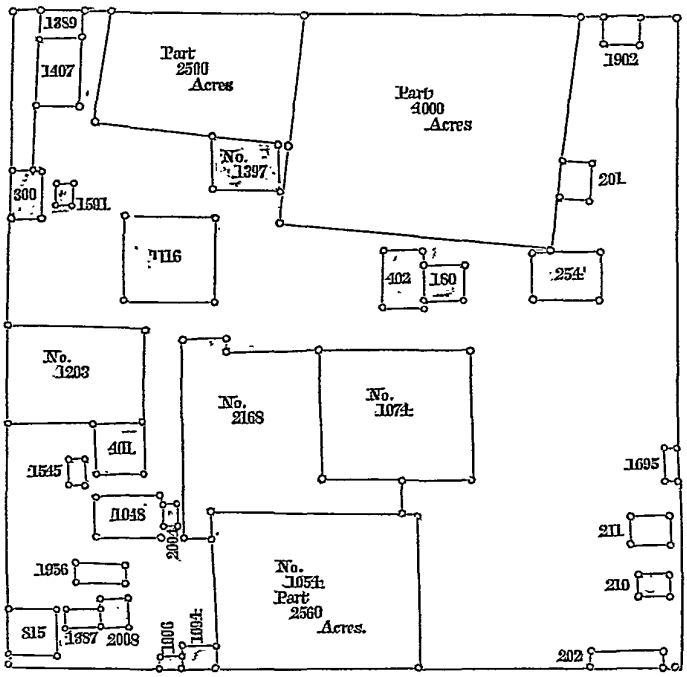
I am not at all surprised at the great difficulty that exists in the minds of many of the eastern gentlemen on the subject of our lands, the manner in which we do and have heretofore obtained our titles being so widely different from the practice of the general government in the disposition of the public lands, which are sectioned off and numbered, and entered by sections or quarter sections, leaving no remnants or scraps, as is and has been the practice with us from the commencement under the law which authorized any person holding a warrant issued by the State of North Carolina, be its size what it might, (say from one to five thousand,) to select any spot unappropriated, and there settle his warrant without any respect to what might be the quality or quantity of the remnant left between him and any other claimant; and thus it is that the most valuable land has been selected and the inferior quality left yet unappropriated. It would be useless for me to say further on this subject, as I am well aware of your thorough knowledge of the matter, as well as your zeal for the promotion of education. Placing full faith and confidence in the intelligence and liberality of Congress in making donations for so laudable an object as the encouragement of common schools, I entertain no doubts as to the result, so soon as they are convinced of the real value and true situation of the land thus asked as a donation.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ADAM R. ALEXANDER.

Hon. JAMES K. POLK.

R. E. C. Dougherty, surveyor of 12th district, as to quantity and quality of land in this district.



MARCH 15, 1828.

DEAR SIR: I received your favor of the 24th of December, 1827, on the 12th instant, and hasten to give you as much information on the subject as I am able. The section represented above contains more vacant land than an average one does. There is, I think, about four or five hundred acres of vacant land in this district, and it is my honest opinion that if this State had a right to the vacant land she could not in fifteen years make it average ten cents per acre. There are not more than three or four thousand acres that could be sold for fifty cents per acre, and the balance, in time, people might enter at the present prices of entering land east and north of the reservation line, which is one cent per acre; but for the United States or the State of Tennessee to undertake to bring this land into market in the common way that the United States make their lands ready for market, I am certain the amount of sales would not half pay the expenses of making the lands ready for market, as the vacant land lies in such detached parcels, and that part that is most valuable is in the smallest bodies; where there are three hundred acres in one body that is so compact as to justify any person to settle on it, it is not worth anything. All the lands in this district that appear to me to be fit for cultivation are lying in narrow strips, from ten to sixty acres, and from ten to seventy or eighty poles wide. Wherever you find a body of land in the western district vacant, you will universally find it not worth the taxes.

I am, dear sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. C. DOUGHERTY,
P. Surveyor of the 12th Surveyor's District, Tennessee.

INSTRUCTIONS RELATIVE TO THE PROOF TO BE RECEIVED IN SUPPORT OF DONATION CLAIMS IN ARKANSAS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 24, 1832.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 23, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 11th instant, "directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House, for the use of the Committee on Public Lands, with a copy of all the instructions given by said department to the register and receiver of public moneys in the Territory of Arkansas, of a date subsequent to October 17, 1828, respecting the proof to be received by said officers in support of donations to land granted to sundry citizens of Arkansas, by an act of Congress of May 24, 1828," I have the honor to transmit a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which contains the information requested by the resolution.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives of the United States.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 23, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with your directions, on referring to me a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 11th instant, "that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish this House, for the use of the Committee on Public Lands, with a copy of all the instructions given by said department to the register and receiver of public moneys in the Territory of Arkansas, of a date subsequent to October 17, 1828, respecting the proof to be received by said officers in support of donations to land granted to sundry citizens of Arkansas, by an act of Congress of May 24, 1828," I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of the following documents, numbered one to four, inclusive, as comprising all the instructions required by said resolution, which the records of this office afford, viz:

No. 1. Letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the register and receiver at Batesville, dated March 23, 1829.

No. 2. Letter from same to same, dated May 8, 1829.

No. 3. Letter from same to receiver at Batesville, June 11, 1829.

No. 4. Letter from same to same, dated July 22, 1829.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 23, 1829.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 8th of December last, from some cause, was not received by me until within a few days. This I very much regret, as, on examining the cases of Wm. Bean, No. 2, and of Nancy Meeks, No. 9, I am of opinion that they are not admissible under your instructions. The evidence clearly shows that neither of them were heads of families. The law requires no property qualification, and their possession of such could not give any right to a donation which every separate member of a family over twenty-one years of age would not have. If the parent and child, over twenty-one years of age, have a joint interest in the settlement, they would be entitled to a joint interest in the donation, and the law does not contemplate more than one for each family.

The case of Josiah Jenkins would seem to be a fair and legal one. You do not say whether you have required of the applicant a detailed statement, on oath, of the grounds of his claim; this I think important.

My communications to you of the 26th and 27th of August last, the latter enclosing the correspondence with the War Department, were considered as sufficiently indicating the course you were to pursue, both as to the commencement of your adjudications and as to the period within which the settlers were to remove from the ceded lands, in order to entitle them to a donation. The acting governor, I understand, has issued the proclamation referred to in those communications.

Colonel Brearly, in corroboration of some of the facts stated in the communications forwarded to you, has informed me that several persons who travelled through Lovely's purchase with him, had sold their right of donation for fifty dollars, and some of them had indeed made a second sale for a less sum. The persons who purchase, must of course have some expectation of establishing a claim to a donation.

Mr. Ingham having been requested, I believe by Mr. Sevier, to re-examine the decision of the Attorney General, communicated to you on the 19th of January, has concurred in the correctness of that opinion.

Very respectfully, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

The REGISTER and RECEIVER at Batesville, A. T.

No. 2.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 8, 1829.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 31st of March has been received to-day, and also a list of 256 claims which have been confirmed by you under the provisions of the act approved May 24, 1828.

By a letter from the register and receiver at Little Rock, dated the 3d of April, I am informed that 79 claims have been confirmed at that office, under the provisions of the act referred to, making, altogether, 345 claims confirmed up to the 1st of April. This number exceeds the number of families which, from the information received from the Indian agent, I had any reason to believe were settled within the territory ceded to the Indians at the date of the act of May 24, 1828.

I am informed by the land officers at Little Rock that you had dispensed with the personal attendance of the settler claiming this donation. This will have been so entirely at variance with your instructions, that I cannot doubt but that they have been misinformed on that subject. My letter of the 23d of March will have advised you that the principle on which you had admitted the claim of Mr. Wm. Beans and that of Nancy Meeks, was considered as inadmissible. I have therefore to request that you will forward a list of all the cases where you have admitted the right of donation under similar circumstances, or where the party was not at the head of a family. It is presumed that no cases of this description will have been acted upon by you after the receipt of my letter of the 23d of March last.

No patents for donation claims will be issued on the certificates forwarded by you, until the list above required shall have been received, and until it shall have been distinctly known whether or not you have dispensed with the personal attendance and examination, on oath, of the person to whom a donation has been granted. If, unfortunately, you should in any cases have dispensed with such attendance and examination of the claimant, on oath, you will transmit a list also of such claims, and you will suspend the issuing of certificates for any of the claims included in either of the lists required until further directions. The parties may, however, designate the lands they wish to enter, with an understanding that the certificate will issue for that particular tract of land, should the claim be ultimately decided to be valid.

Your claim for compensation for services rendered under the act of May 24, 1828, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Very respectfully, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 11, 1829.

SIR: Your letter of the 5th of May, in answer to one from this office of the 23d of March, has been received, and submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who does not consider the reasons assigned by you for deviating from the principles of the law and the instructions from this office, as satisfactory, and has therefore directed "that the locations be suspended until the land officers have revised the proceedings that are not substantially in conformity to the instructions."

I submit for your information the following extract from my report to the Secretary of the Treasury: "As to the first reason assigned, I can only say that all the original laws granting pre-emptions expressly require that the claimants should file a written statement; and as these acts give to the persons authorized to receive such statements the power to administer oaths, it is to be presumed that they would have required the sanction of an oath, at least in doubtful cases.—(See Land Laws, new edition, pages 383, 484, 485, and 631.")

Very respectfully, &c.,

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 22, 1829.

SIR: Your letters of the 6th of May and 6th of June having been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, I am instructed to inform you that he deems it necessary that the original instructions should have been adhered to, and that the personal attendance and statement of the case, rendered under oath of the claimant, cannot be dispensed with. You will therefore give notice to the parties that a re-examination of each case, where application has been made at your office for donation rights, will take place before any patent can issue.

With great respect, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 25, 1832.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Antoine Cruzat, reported:

That petitioner claims about three acres of land by virtue of a settlement right; that the land is situated in the parish of East Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana. The proof shows that the petitioner actually inhabited and cultivated the said tract of land from the year 1805 until the year 1812, since which time the said land has not been in the possession of the petitioner. The committee called upon the Commissioner of the United States General Land Office to state whether the petitioner's claim, as made out by the evidence, brought his claim within the provisions of the acts of Congress passed, granting donations to actual settlers in the State of Louisiana, on or before the 15th of April, 1813, and received for answer that, agreeably to the construction of the law in question at that department, his claim was embraced by the laws alluded to. The committee therefore report a bill.

ON CLAIM FOR REVOLUTIONARY BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 25, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Woodcock or Woodstock, reported:

The petitioner sets forth that he enlisted in the army of the United States in the year 1775, in Captain Knapp's company, in Colonel Reed's regiment, in the Massachusetts line, for eight months, and afterwards in the same company and regiment for one year, and in the month of July, 1777, enlisted for during the war in the company of Captain Joseph Allen Wright, in Colonel Philip B. Bradley's regiment, in General Huntington's brigade; he further states that he was at the taking of Cornwallis, after he returned to the Connecticut line, in the 2d regiment, and he was discharged on the 31st day of December, 1782, for which service he claims bounty lands. It is proven by Samuel Waugh that he served in the same company with the said Woodcock or Woodstock for nearly three years. The petitioner produces a certified copy of his discharge, given him by George Washington, commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States, who certifies that he, said petitioner, is entitled to the provision made by Congress for invalids of the army by the resolve of the 23d of April, 1782, which resolve is, that all such sick and wounded soldiers of the armies of the United States who shall be in future reported by the inspector general, or the inspector of a separate department, and approved by the commander-in-chief or commanding officer of a separate department, as unfit for further duty, either in the field or in the garrison, and who shall apply for a discharge in preference to being placed or continued in the corps of invalids, shall be discharged, and be entitled to receive as a pension five dollars per month in lieu of all pay and emoluments. The committee have not been able to find any law which entitles the petitioner to bounty lands. The committee, therefore, ask to be discharged.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 985. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN THE MISSISSIPPI TERRITORY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 25, 1832.

Mr. DAVIS, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of David Shaver, senior, David Shaver, junior, Thomas Majors, George C. Cowan, and James S. Mays, reported:

These claims are predicated on a grant from the State of Georgia to Zachariah Cox and Mathias Maher, and other associates, called the Tennessee Company, issued by virtue of an act of the legislature of that State, passed on the 24th day of January, 1795, and form a part of what are usually called "the Yazoo claims." The legislature of Georgia, at a subsequent session, to wit, on the 13th of February, 1796, passed another act declaring null and void that of January 24, 1795, because, as was therein alleged, the same was made without constitutional authority, and fraudulently obtained, and ordered it to be expunged from the public records. The last-mentioned act further declared all grants, rights, claims, &c., &c., issued, deduced, or derived from the act of January 24, 1795, null and void.

By the articles of agreement and cession, between the United States and the State of Georgia, entered into on the 24th day of April, 1802, ceding and relinquishing to the United States the lands within the same, south of the State of Tennessee and west of the Chattahoochie, it was provided that all the lands so ceded, after satisfying a payment contracted to be made to the State of Georgia, of ($1,250,000) one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and certain grants made by the British government of Florida and the government of Spain, should be considered as a common fund for the benefit of the United States, except a portion of the said lands not exceeding five millions of acres, the proceeds of which were to be set apart and reserved for the purpose of satisfying, quieting, or compensating any claims which might be made to any part thereof.

On March 31, 1814, Congress passed a law allowing persons claiming lands under grants issued by virtue of the act of the legislature of Georgia, of January 24, 1795, to exhibit and record such claims, and on their being approved in the manner specified, to receive certificates of stock, payable without interest, out of the moneys arising from the sales of the public lands in the Mississippi Territory; and by the ninth section of this law it is provided, that if any person claiming lands under the act of Georgia, of January 24, 1795, shall neglect or refuse to compromise and make settlement of such claim in conformity with the provisions of this act, the United States shall be exonerated and discharged from all such claim or claims, and the same shall be forever barred; and no evidence of any such claim shall be admitted to be pleaded or allowed to be given in evidence in any court against any grant derived from the United States.

The petitioners claim under deeds of conveyance from Samuel May, and all of them bearing date within the last six or seven years. Samuel May derived his title from the original grantees, Zachariah Cox and Mathias Maher, by a deed dated the 18th day of August, 1797, being eighteen months after the enactment of the law of Georgia, of February 13, 1796, declaring the grant to Cox and Maher fraudulent and void.

The committee are induced to believe, from this brief legal history of the claims submitted, that the petitioners are not entitled to relief from Congress; because,

1st. They, as well as Samuel May, from whom they claim, were, (or must be presumed to be,) purchasers with notice of the fraudulent nature and character of the claim.

2d. Because the petitioners have neglected or refused to comply with the provisions of the act of Congress, passed March 31, 1814, entitled "An act providing for the indemnification of certain claimants of public lands in the Mississippi Territory."

ON CLAIM FOR MILITARY BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 27, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Abraham Forbes, reported:

That said Forbes was a citizen of the United States, and removed to Upper Canada prior to the last war; that he joined the troops of the United States, and was employed as a spy, and had the entire confidence of the officers of the United States, and performed many valuable and important services to the United States in that character; that he had been promised a handsome remuneration by Colonel Christie, whose premature death, perhaps, prevented any communication to the government in behalf of said Forbes; that he acted with the United States troops until the close of the war, and was honorably discharged. It further appears that before the war he was independent in his circumstances, and that when his family was sent to the United States there were sent over a few boxes of his goods of but little value; and he alleges that his other property was confiscated, but of this fact no evidence is furnished the committee. The committee are of opinion that the important and faithful services rendered the United States by Forbes entitles him to greater liberality from the government than the provision made by the act of 1816 for the benefit of Canadian volunteers, and that he ought to be placed on an equal footing by the government with Westbrooke, for whom provision has been heretofore made, and with Dr. Crosby, in whose behalf a bill has been introduced during the present session of Congress. They therefore introduce a bill allowing 640 acres of land.

ON APPLICATION OF THE RECEIVER AT DETROIT FOR EXTRA COMPENSATION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 30, 1832.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of J. Kearsley, receiver of public moneys at Detroit, reported:

That by an act of Congress passed the 2d of March, 1821, purchasers of public lands were authorized to relinquish, by legal subdivisions, any portion of the lands held by them and transfer the amount paid on such relinquished lands to other lands by them held; and it was made the duty of the registers and receivers to carry this act into execution in such manner as might be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, allowing them as compensation for the labor thus imposed on them the sum of fifty cents for each tract relinquished, to be paid by the person relinquishing. It subsequently appearing to the satisfaction of Congress that the compensation allowed by the above-recited act was not sufficient to remunerate these officers for the extra labor performed by them, on the 22d of May, 1826, an act was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the President, to make such further compensation as, in his opinion, should be reasonable and just, not to exceed the amount expended for clerk hire, and one-half of one per cent. upon payments made by relinquishments, with a proviso that in no case should the amount paid to these officers exceed in one year the sum of three thousand dollars. Under this act the petitioner was paid the one-half of one per cent. on the payments by relinquishments, estimating the land at $2 the acre, in addition to the half dollar paid by the individual availing himself of the advantages of the law on each tract relinquished. The committee are of opinion that this alone would have been sufficient compensation for any extra duty performed by these officers, the compensation increasing with the increased labor; and the statement of the petitioner, that he could not avail himself of the provisions of the law of 1826 as respects clerk hire, cannot, in the opinion of the committee, vary the case; they therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 990. [1ST SESSION.

ON APPLICATION FOR A CHOCTAW RESERVATION UNDER THE TREATY OF DANCING RABBIT CREEK, OF SEPTEMBER 27, 1830.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 30, 1832.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred sundry petitions of the chiefs, headmen, and principal warriors of the Choctaw nation, reported:

It appears from the representation of the petitioners and other satisfactory evidence adduced before the committee, that Joseph Dukes, a native Choctaw, was a resident and citizen of the Choctaw nation, in the State of Mississippi, at the time of the treaty entered into and concluded between the United States and the Mingoes, chiefs, captains, and warriors of the said nation, at Dancing Rabbit creek, on the twenty-seventh day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty, has a small family, and, in the language of the treaty, was at that time a "Choctaw head of a family." That he was, while an infant, left a poor and destitute orphan, and was taken into the missionary family at Mahew, where he and his wife (who is also a Choctaw) have received good English educations, and where they resided at the time of the treaty. Dukes is about twenty-one years of age; both he and his wife have sustained good moral characters, and are calculated to make useful members of society. He has for the last three years devoted his time and attention to the improvement of the condition of his red brethren, by acting in the capacity of an interpreter and translator of the Choctaw language for the mission, which has prevented him from accumulating any property for the support of his family. By the provisions of the fourteenth article of the treaty before referred to, each Choctaw head of a family is entitled to a reservation of six hundred and forty acres of land; each unmarried child of the family over ten years of age, to one-half that quantity; and each child under ten years of age, to one hundred and sixty acres, on condition of their intending to become citizens, and residing on the same for five years; which reservation was, by the stipulations of the treaty, to include their then present improvement, or a portion of it. In consequence of Dukes's residing in the missionary family, he could not be considered as having any improvements of his own, and therefore did not come within the provisions of the fourteenth article of the treaty. For the same reasons he did not come within the purview and meaning of the nineteenth article, nor was his case provided for by any general or special provisions contained in the treaty. The petitioners, therefore, pray Congress to grant unto the said Joseph Dukes a section or six hundred and forty acres of land, to be located on any of the unappropriated and uncultivated lands within the limits of that section of country to which the Indian title was extinguished by the aforesaid treaty. The committee are aware that the reservations already granted are so large and numerous as to be prejudicial to the interests of the United States, as well as to the State of Mississippi and her citizens, but cannot pass unnoticed the high claims of so meritorious an individual as Dukes. If the committee understood the object and policy of the government in granting reservations to the Indians, the grants were not considered in payment or part payment for relinquishing their title to the lands, because the payment was otherwise provided for; but the reservations under the fourteenth article of the treaty were for the purpose of securing to those who were desirous to remain and become citizens of the States a home on the land which they inherited from their ancestors, who had occupied the same from time immemorial. The object of the government was not to drive them forcibly from the place of their nativity and compel them to seek an asylum in the western wilds, but only to provide in that distant land for those who chose voluntarily to go, and also to guarantee a freehold interest in the soil to those who chose to remain and become amenable to our laws. The question, therefore, before the committee is not whether we shall give to this humble individual a tract of land to induce him to remain among us, but whether the general government will deprive him of a home and drive him from the land of his fathers, merely because he has devoted his time and attention to the amelioration of the condition of his countrymen, instead of cultivating the soil for his own benefit and accumulating property, when other less meritorious individuals are permitted to take reserves, remain among us, and enjoy all the rights, immunities, and privileges of citizens. The committee do not hesitate to recommend the granting of the prayer of the petitioners, and therefore report a "bill for the relief of Joseph Dukes."

22D CONGRESS.] No. 991. [1ST SESSION.

IN RELATION TO ISSUING SCRIP FOR UNLOCATED VIRGINIA MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 31, 1832.

Mr. IRVIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the House directing them to inquire into the expediency of issuing scrip for the unlocated warrants granted by the State of Virginia to her officers and soldiers in the revolutionary war, on State or continental establishment, reported:

That, during the revolutionary war, the State of Virginia furnished fifteen regiments to the army on continental establishment, and, during the same period, kept up a military force more immediately for the protection of the State, consisting of infantry, artillery, cavalry, sailors, and marines. The extent of this force the committee has been unable to ascertain, but it is believed to have been very considerable.

On October 3, 1779, an act was passed by the legislature of Virginia ascertaining the proportions or quantity of land to be granted at the end of the war to the officers and soldiers of the line of that State on State and continental establishment, and to the officers and seamen of the navy who should serve to the end of the war, or in case of soldiers and seamen who should enlist for and serve the period of three years.

On October 5, 1780, another act was passed by the legislature of that State ascertaining the quantity of land to be given to the general officers on continental establishment, and increasing the land bounty given by the act of 1779 to the officers on State and continental establishment one-third.

Under the provisions of these acts the following land bounties were promised to the officers, soldiers, seamen, and marines of that State, to wit:

	Acres.
To a major general	15,000
To a brigadier general	10,000
To a colonel	6,666⅔
To a lieutenant colonel	6,000
To a major	5,666⅔
To a captain	4,000

	Acres.
To a subaltern	2,666⅔
To every non-commissioned officer who enlisted for and served to the end of the war	400
To every soldier and seaman under like circumstances	200
To every non-commissioned officer who enlisted for and served three years	200
To every soldier and seaman under like circumstances	100

To every officer of the navy the same quantity of land was allowed as to an officer of equal rank in the army.

Other acts were passed by the legislature of that State on the subject of bounty lands, but they are deemed unimportant to the present inquiry.

By the act of October 3, 1779, a district of country lying west of the Alleghany mountains and south of Green river was set apart to satisfy the military bounty land warrants issued by the State of Virginia. The lands lying within this district were subject to be located up to the —— day of ——, 1792, when the State of Kentucky became an independent State and was admitted into the Union. After that period no further locations were made within the limits of that State, which embraces the district of country set apart for that purpose.

On March 1, 1784, the State of Virginia ceded to the United States the lands of that State lying northwest of the Ohio river. In the deed of cession it was provided that in case the quantity of good land on the southeast side of the Ohio, upon the waters of the Cumberland river and between the Green river and Tennessee river, which had been reserved by law for the Virginia troops on continental establishment, should, from the North Carolina line bearing in further upon the Cumberland than was expected, prove insufficient for their legal bounties, the deficiency should be made up to the said troops in good lands, to be laid off between the rivers Scioto and Little Miami, on the northwest side of the Ohio, in such proportions as had been engaged to them by the laws of Virginia. In the same deed 150,000 acres were reserved for General George Rogers Clark and the officers and soldiers of his regiment who marched with him when the posts of Kaskaskias and St. Vincent's were reduced, and to the officers and soldiers who thereafter incorporated themselves into that regiment. The district reserved, between the Scioto and Little Miami rivers, is estimated to contain about 3,700,000 acres.

From a statement herewith exhibited from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and marked A, it appears that warrants have been issued by the State of Virginia for 6,046,147 acres of land. Of these warrants about 1,800,000 or 2,000,000 of acres were located in the State of Kentucky previous to 1792; 3,233,123 have been located in the district reserved for that purpose in the State of Ohio; and 150,000 acres of resolution warrants are supposed to have been located in the States of Kentucky and Ohio, which, estimating the quantity located in Kentucky at 1,900,000 acres, will leave unlocated 763,026 acres of warrants already issued.

By an act of Congress of May 30, 1830, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to issue scrip, at the rate of $1 25 per acre, for 260,000 acres of warrants of the State line, and for 50,000 acres of warrants for services rendered by the officers and soldiers in the continental army. These quantities have been satisfied by scrip, which leaves unprovided for warrants to the amount of 453,000 acres. To satisfy these warrants with scrip would require the sum of $566,000, which, so far as the government is concerned, is equal to the payment of the amount in money, with the exception of interest that might accrue between the issuing of the scrip and the time of its return through the land offices to the treasury. Some few instances may have occurred in which the holders of scrip have applied it to the entry of lands; but the general mode of disposing of it has been to take it to the land offices, and there, by giving a small premium, exchange it with individuals for their money, who come to enter lands.

In the month of November last there was no return to the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the quantity of warrants issued in that month; but in the month of December following warrants were issued for 39,333 acres. As yet only 7,120 warrants have been granted, embracing more than 6,000,000 of acres; but how many more will hereafter be granted the committee would not venture a conjecture. Under these circumstances the committee are of opinion that it would be highly inexpedient to issue scrip for these unsatisfied military claims. But as the State of Virginia, by a liberal cession of her lands to the United States, has placed it out of her power to redeem her promises made to her officers and soldiers for services rendered, not for the benefit of that State alone, but for the Union, the committee are of opinion that it is nothing more than justice to permit these warrants to be located on a part of the public lands; and for that purpose herewith report a bill.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 25, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 23d instant, I have the honor to state that the number of warrants issued by the State of Virginia for services rendered in the Virginia line on continental establishment, and in the State line and navy; also warrants issued in conformity to resolutions of the general assembly of that State, amounted to 7,120 on the 1st instant. The number issued up to the 30th October last amounted to 6,998, containing a quantity of 6,046,147 acres.

The quantity which has been granted to the officers and soldiers of each line, as well as by resolutions, is given in the statement, marked A, herewith.

The copy of the statement marked B contains the quantity, situation, and value of the unlocated lands in the Virginia military reservation received from the surveyor, but the estimate of the value I conceive to be entirely too low, and am of opinion that the land is worth on an average fifty cents per acre.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. WM. W. IRVIN, House of Representatives.

CHILICOTHE, November 30, 1831.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 27, 1831.

SIR: Agreeably to your verbal request on Saturday last, I have endeavored to form an estimate, from the best sources of information within reach, of the quantity of the unsatisfied outstanding warrants, and of warrants to be issued by Virginia for services in the continental and State lines during the revolutionary war, but have to remark that such estimate must, from the nature of the case, be imperfect, from the fact that we do not know, with certainty, the amount of warrants located in Kentucky for State-line services. The result of the estimate is as follows:

	Acres.
For the continental line.....	226,000
For the State line.....	250,000
For resolution warrants.....	60,000
Aggregate.....	536,000

With sentiments of great respect, your most obedient servant,

JNO. M. MOORE, Chief Clerk.

Hon. C. A. WICKLIFFE.

WASHINGTON CITY, January 23, 1832.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, asking a statement of the number of the battalions or regiments furnished by the Commonwealth of Virginia on continental and State establishment, and of the persons in her naval service during the war of the revolution, for the information of the Committee on Public Lands.

I regret that there are no documents existing in the public offices of the United States or Virginia which enable me to furnish the information desired. The State raised and placed on continental establishment, in pursuance of the requisitions of the continental Congress, fifteen regiments. Of these, nine, which were first raised, consisted of ten companies each, of sixty-eight men rank and file. It is believed that they were filled, though there is no doubt that many of the officers and men left the service before the passage of the first of the acts by which Virginia promised land bounties to those engaging in her military service. Of what number the other six regiments consisted I have been unable to ascertain.

For the number of the corps on State establishment, I respectfully refer the committee to the memorial of Thomas W. Gilmer, esq., commissioner on behalf of Virginia, presented to the House of Representatives on the 19th December ultimo.

Besides these, there were raised the celebrated legion commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Lee, and two southern expedition regiments, which were with the continental forces in the southern campaigns; but it is impossible to form more than a conjectural estimate of those officers and soldiers who were entitled to a fulfilment of the solemn engagements of the State entered into at a time of great public emergency. I regret that it is not in my power to give more efficient aid to the committee in the prosecution of this inquiry, which, it appears to me, does not affect the rights of the officers and soldiers or the obligations of the government.

I find that the executive of Virginia have issued seven thousand one hundred and twenty military bounty land warrants, granting about six millions of acres of land. Of these, many claims have been divided, so that the number of warrants does not show precisely the number of persons whose just demand on their country have been satisfied. From the high average, however, I think we are justified in arriving at the conclusion that the unsatisfied claims are principally those of common soldiers. The difficulties which now attend the successful prosecution of these claims, and which are daily increasing, leave no doubt that few more can be established, according to the requisitions of law, which are, and have ever been, faithfully observed by the executive of Virginia.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. MASON.

Hon. WM. W. IRVIN.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 992. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO A MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 1, 1832.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Amos W. Brown, reported:

That the petitioner states he is a natural-born citizen of the United States; that about four years before the declaration of the late war between the United States and Great Britain he removed to the province of Upper Canada, and from and after the declaration of war he returned from Canada to the United States, and voluntarily joined the army, and in April, 1813, received a lieutenant's commission, under Colonel Daniel Dana, in the 31st regiment, and that he served as such lieutenant in said regiment, serving part of the time as adjutant of said regiment until the close of the war, in virtue of which service he claims the benefit of the act of Congress of March 5, 1816, entitled "An act granting bounties in land and extra pay to certain Canadian volunteers," which act was amended by an act of March, 1817, both of which said acts expired by limitation on the 3d of March, 1818. The petitioner further showeth that in July, 1815, after the close of the war, and before the passage of the first aforesaid act, he returned to his former residence in Canada, where he remained until the year 1819, and until after the expiration of said acts, when he returned to the town of Pottsdam, in the county of St. Lawrence and State of New York, where he has ever since resided; that in consequence of which absence in Canada he did not avail himself of the benefits of said acts. The averments, as set forth by said petitioner, are clearly proven by Colonel Daniel Dana, to whose regiment he belonged, as also by the affidavit of Henry H. Brown.

S. Cooper, assistant adjutant general, states that the records show that Amos W. Brown was appointed second lieutenant in the 31st regiment of infantry on the 30th of April, 1813, and promoted to first lieutenant 11th of January, the year 1814, and disbanded in June, 1815.

William Gordon, an officer in the Bounty Land Office, War Department, states that the records in said office do not show that land bounty was ever granted to the said Amos W. Brown. The committee therefore report a bill granting the said Amos W. Brown three hundred and twenty acres of land.

22D CONGRESS.] No 993. [1ST SESSION.

IN RELATION TO PROVISION FOR THE MORE SPEEDY ISSUING OF PATENTS AFTER SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE BY THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS FEBRUARY 2, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 23, 1832.

SIR: In consequence of my own feeble health, and the sickness of several of my clerks, and previous calls of committees of Congress on this office for information and reports, I have been unable sooner to reply to your favor of the 12th instant, enclosing a resolution of the Senate of the 9th, on the subject of revising the act of the 25th of April, 1812, so as to provide for the more speedy issuing of patents for lands sold.

Two propositions are presented for consideration by your letter and the resolution: first, the best mode by which patents for lands can be issued without requiring the signature of the President; and, second, what further legislation is necessary to provide for the more speedy issuing of patents after the sales of the public lands.

In answer to the first proposition, I have the honor to communicate herewith a copy of a correspondence on that subject between the Hon. Jonathan Hunt, of the Committee on Public Lands in the House of Representatives, and this office, marked A, B, C, to which, on mature reflection, I have nothing to add.

The second proposition, of equal importance to the public service, has been occasioned by the magnitude of arrears of business in this office, which had for a long time been accumulating before it became my duty to administer its concerns, and the great increase of sales of the national domain during the last two years, creating embarrassments and impediments to the discharge of its current duties which the diminished force of this office was incompetent and unable to surmount. To me, personally, it is a source of constant and poignant regret that I am not furnished the means of discharging my official duties with that promptness which the public service requires and the interest and convenience of individuals imperiously demand. Whatever may be the pleasures of official station to others, to me its highest qualification consists in a prompt, vigilant, active, and faithful discharge of duty, with fidelity to the government, and with the approbation and satisfaction of parties interested. This it has been physically impossible for me to accomplish with all the personal industry and exertion in my power and that of the clerks with which I have been provided during my administration of the affairs of the General Land Office. These matters have been truly exposed in the two annual reports of the operations of this office which it has been my duty to make to the government. To remedy these evils, and to secure to individuals their just claims upon the government, which have been delayed from the causes above mentioned, I would respectfully propose the passage of the enclosed project of a bill, marked D, which, in my opinion, would accomplish every object contemplated in the second proposition which you have been pleased to submit to my consideration.

In the bill submitted providing for clerks in this office it will be seen that one clerk is contemplated at $1,700 per annum. This is intended for the chief clerk, and the compensation named is that which has been heretofore allowed for that situation. I would respectfully recommend that it be increased to two thousand dollars, to be in proportion to others whose duties are much less and whose labor is not half as great as that required of the same situation in the Land Office. My chief clerk, in addition to other qualifications, must have a particular knowledge of the laws and parts of laws having any relation to or connection with the land system of the United States, including private land claims of every description, the variety of military bounty lands, all reservations contained in Indian treaties, and donations to States, corporations, and individuals, and the manner and form in which these laws are executed. He is also required to possess a knowledge of all the details of office duty, through all the ramifications of its multiplied concerns, and, under the Commissioner, has a general superintendence over all the clerks in the department, and the books and files of papers which constitute its archives. In addition to which, among other duties, he is charged with the immense miscellaneous correspondence of the office, frequently requiring a very laborious examination of the laws, circulars of instructions, previous decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury on the same subject, and the rules and principles settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. To accomplish this arduous duty the time allotted for office business is not sufficient, and he is often compelled to devote his mornings and evenings, before and after office hours, to the public service, without any additional compensation therefor. For these reasons and many others which I could enumerate, I am well convinced that the talents, labor, and industry necessary to the discharge of these duties are greater than are required of any other chief clerk under the executive department of the government, and I know of no good reason why he should not receive equal compensation. I have great pleasure in stating that the present chief clerk in this office merits my entire approbation, and the suggestion herein made to increase his salary is not only without his request and solicitation, but without his knowledge, and is considered an act of justice on the part of the government to a faithful, laborious, and meritorious public servant.

I propose to have one clerk at fifteen hundred dollars per annum, who, it is designed, shall have charge of all the fiscal operations of the office, a general superintendence of the posting and records of entries of lands sold at the several land offices, the preparation of the tract books, and to be charged with all the correspondence with the registers and receivers in relation to their duties connected with the sales of the public lands, and their monthly and quarterly returns therefor. As the accounts of all the land officers, and of the public surveys, are audited by the Commissioner, and transmitted directly to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, without being submitted to the examination of any other bureau, this clerk will be required to possess all the qualifications of the First Auditor of the Treasury Department; and in addition thereto an intimate and familiar acquaintance with all the land laws of the United States for the sale and disposition of the public domain, and with all the details of business connected therewith. A person thus competent cannot be procured for a less sum than the one suggested. This office and individuals interested in its operations have greatly suffered for the want of such an officer.

The bill contemplates seven clerks at $1,400 each; one of which it is intended shall act as an assistant of the chief clerk; one to be placed at the head of the bureau of military bounty lands, including the issuing of scrip therefor; one at the head of private land claims; one to have charge of the accounts of the several receivers of public moneys, to test their accuracy and detect all errors therein; one to be placed at the head of the posting accounts of lands sold, by whom the accuracy of the proceedings of the registers are to be tested, their errors detected, and the mode by which such errors, under the laws of Congress, are to be corrected, to be stated for the examination and consideration of the Commissioner; one to superintend the issuing of exemplification of records, and the copy of title papers on which patents are founded, to supply the loss or destruction of the originals, and in cases where the original documents are not permitted to be taken from the files of the office, and copies are necessary to be used in the administration of justice; (this has now become a very heavy business for the office, as daily requisitions are made for such authenticated documents, in addition to those required in the administration of justice and in the settlement of intestate estates, by persons interested, and to whom they are indispensable for the security of private rights;) and one to be placed at the head of the board of examiners, whose duty it is to compare the title papers with the patents, and the record of the patents, before the signature of the President is requested, or the seal of the office, or signature of the Commissioner, is permitted to be affixed.

Twelve clerks at $1,150 are proposed: one of these will be required all the time with the chief clerk, three in the bureau of bounty lands, one in the bureau of private land claims, two to prepare the indexes of lands sold and of the patents therefor, and five in posting the entries of lands sold, and in stating and adjusting the accounts of the receivers therefor.

Of the ten clerks at $1,000, two will be employed as examiners; two for miscellaneous services in the office of copying and recording, which do not come under any of the heads above mentioned, but which are of daily requisition, and very important to the public service; and six to be employed in writing and recording patents.

I have recommended, as will appear from the proposed bill, the employment of one draughtsman at $1,500 per annum, and two assistant draughtsmen at $1,150 each per annum. Heretofore the office has had one draughtsman at $1,150, and one assistant, paid out of the contingent fund, at $1,000. It is my duty to state to you that this branch of the public service is now greatly in arrears, and that I have no person who is competent to superintend and take charge of its duties. The talents and acquirements necessary for this service cannot be procured for the compensation allowed by law. I have tendered the situation to several whom I believed to be competent, who have declined its acceptance on the ground that the pay was inadequate. But I can procure a gentleman every way qualified for $1,500 per year. Under these circumstances, I deem it indispensably necessary for Congress to make the provision proposed, to secure to the government and to the rights of individuals the prompt and correct discharge of this part of public duty.

The messenger and two assistant messengers named in the bill are already employed in the office, though one of the assistants is paid out of its contingent fund.

I have also proposed a special appropriation of $5,000 to assist in bringing up the arrears of the office, and in writing patents out of the office. Without this appropriation the injury which must inevitably result to individuals and to the public service will become a subject of reproach throughout the valley of the Mississippi, and of future vexation and embarrassment to all subsequent operations of this office. And it should be remembered in the consideration of this subject that, on the first of this month, one item of the arrears of this office consisted of thirty-five thousand patents for lands sold, and that, without this appropriation, it will be augmented to more than sixty thousand by the first day of January next.

It should be remembered that the duties of the clerks in the General Land Office, with few exceptions, are of a peculiar character, demanding a high degree of talent and a greater labor of investigation than are necessary for the other executive departments of the government. Comparatively, there is very little that is merely mechanical, except the writing and recording of patents for lands sold; and when it is considered that the land titles of nearly three millions of people depend upon the accuracy with which the business of this office is conducted, the importance of the subject will be forcibly presented to every impartial mind, and to the justice and decision of Congress.

There are now forty-four land offices, with a register and receiver for each, and six surveyors general, whose operations are all to be examined, and the accuracy of whose proceedings are to be tested and ascertained by the General Land Office before the government can definitively act thereon. To accomplish all this, with the other duties, and to protect the government from frauds, and from the negligence, heedlessness, and errors of its numerous subordinate agents, is an immense labor of the highest importance and greatest responsibility.

With this view of the subject, and impressed with the reflection that this department of the government is now paying into the treasury three millions of dollars per annum, I respectfully submit this communication to your particular examination, and candid and impartial consideration.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. WILLIAM R. KING, United States Senate.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 2, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Luther L. Smith, reported:

That the petitioner claims title to a tract of land containing two hundred and seventy-nine arpents of land, situate in the parish of West Feliciana, in the State of Louisiana, by virtue of a grant executed, originally, in favor of Vicente Sebastian Pintado by Morales, the intendant general of West Florida, and bearing date of May 22, 1810. The territory in which the land was situated had been previously ceded to the United States as a part of Louisiana, as has been uniformly contended by the American government, and consequently the grant has no intrinsic validity; but according to the several acts of Congress relative to land titles in that part of the country, the claimant would have been entitled to a confirmation of his title, with proof of cultivation, on or before April 15, 1813. There is no such evidence before the committee; but it appears that the petitioner purchased in good faith, has been in possession since about the year 1818, and has made very valuable improvements; that he is still in possession; and that his claim was pending before Congress when the pre-emption law of May 29, 1830, was passed. Under these circumstances, the committee are disposed to allow the petitioner to purchase the land of the United States at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and report a bill to that effect.

22D CONGRESS.] No 995. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN ILLINOIS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of D. D. Robert, which has been regularly presented at every session since 1817, reported:

The petitioners claim various tracts of land near Kaskaskias, in Illinois. The same tracts of land were claimed by them before the commissioners under the act of Congress of March 26, 1804, for the adjustment of land claims in the district of Kaskaskia, and rejected for want of proof of actual improvement and cultivation before March 3, 1791. The original claim was in the name of various persons; and no evidence of any grant is offered to the committee, except for one in the name of Henry Brawney. On September 17, 1783, Brawney presents a petition to the commandant, at that time acting under the authority of the State of Virginia, praying for a grant of land. The commandant answers "that, not knowing the intentions of the State concerning the concession of lands, yet willing, as much as depends on him, to facilitate all the good citizens of the country, and willing to follow the traces of his predecessors, he accords to the petitioner the three arpents of land solicited." He annexes the condition that the petitioner shall conform to any law to be afterwards enacted by the State, and that he shall, within a year and a day, improve or work on the same land; on failure whereof the land shall revert to the State.

The authority of the commandant is shown in that character; but the letter of Patrick Henry, at that time governor of Virginia, does not confer the authority to grant lands.

The excuse for not having made a settlement before 1791 is the continued hostility of the Indians. But they show no effort to settle and cultivate the lands. If, after the cessation of Indian hostilities, the claimants had gone into possession, they would have presented themselves with some show of equity.

The committee are of opinion that the claimants show no right to the land whatever, either in law or equity, and recommend that the claim be rejected.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 996. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Garriques Flaujac, reported:

That the petitioner had a valid Spanish grant for three thousand two hundred arpents of land on the Bayou Grosse Tête, in Louisiana, which was confirmed by act of Congress; that the land was sold by authority of the United States; instead of prosecuting suits against the purchasers, the petitioner applied to Congress for relief. On May 20, 1826, an act of Congress passed, and was approved, authorizing the petitioner to locate the same quantity of land on any unappropriated lands in the southwestern district of Louisiana in one body, so far as should be practicable. In pursuance of this act of Congress, the surveying department proceeded to locate the claim, and it has been done in a manner of which the petitioner now complains. In consequence of the great number of private claims in that section of the country, which are scattered over the whole face of the country, it was found impossible to locate the tract in question literally in one body, and render anything like justice to the claimant. The officer charged with the survey thought himself bound, as far as possible, to comply with the terms of the act of Congress, and has, in the opinion of the committee, done injustice to the claimant. The committee have seen a copy of the survey, and think that the land is run out in such a way as to be in a manner useless to the party claiming. The intention of Congress undoubtedly was to make the claimant an adequate compensation for the land which was sold while it was his acknowledged property. This does not seem to have been accomplished, and the committee report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 997. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO THE CONFIRMATION OF A LAND TITLE IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1832.

Mr. MARSHALL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Reynolds, reported:

That the petitioner prays for a donation of 640 acres of land, situated at Point Hazard, on Bell's river, now in the county of Nassau, in the Territory of Florida. He alleges that there was a Spanish grant for the land to Spicer Christopher, deceased, which, however, is not produced, nor its loss proved or accounted for. That Spicer Christopher devised the same land to his son, William G. Christopher, who inhabited and cultivated it for some years, and died in 1815, leaving his family upon the land. That in 1817 the petitioner intermarried with Eliza Christopher, the widow of William G., the resident on the same tract, and removed to it himself, and continued to occupy it until 1826, since which time it has been in the possession of his tenants. He claims the donation on the ground that he was in the actual possession and cultivation of the land on the 22d day of February, 1819, being then the head of a family, and upwards of 21 years of age. All these facts are sufficiently sustained by proof, except the existence of a Spanish grant for the land; with regard to which, one witness states that he paid for several royal grants of land given by Spicer Christopher to his children, and thinks one of them was for the land in question. The will of Spicer Christopher, dated in February, 1806, devises this land as testator's plantation, called Point Hazard; and it is probable, from the evidence, that the devisee, William G. Christopher, took possession in 1806. If, from these circumstances, a grant is to be presumed, the committee is clearly of opinion that the confirmation should be for the benefit of the heirs of William G. Christopher; and, if there was no grant, it is equally clear that the meritorious consideration for a donation of the land, on account of inhabitancy and cultivation, proceeded from, and should enure to the benefit of the Christophers, and ought not to be transferred to a stranger, because, having married the widow of William G. Christopher, the natural guardian of his children, he happened to be upon the land with them on the 22d day of February, 1819. The omission to have this claim presented to the commissioners for confirmation is, in the opinion of the committee, sufficiently accounted for, it appearing that Reynolds, supposing a grant for the land to be among the papers of the estate, had directed it to be laid before the commissioners, and was led to believe that it had been before them and was confirmed, but discovered, after the adjournment of the commissioners, that another grant to Spicer Christopher, for land devised to another of his sons, had been presented and confirmed instead of a grant for this land. And the committee is further of opinion that, in a claim like the present, of infants, founded upon a possession commencing in 1806 and continued to the present time, a total omission on the part of those who might have acted for them ought not to bar their rights nor to prevent them from experiencing the same liberality which the government has extended to others. Under these views of the subject they report a bill for the benefit of the legal representatives of William G. Christopher.

ON APPLICATION FOR RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION TO LANDS GRANTED FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE CULTIVATION OF THE VINE AND OLIVE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1832.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of sundry citizens of Alabama, asking an amendment of a law of Congress, passed February 19, 1831, so as to permit the memorialists to pay for certain lands described in said memorial, reported:

That the petitioners allege that they are a small portion of the individuals represented by Charles Villar, in a contract made with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States on the 8th day of January, 1819, for a tract of country, say four townships of land, situated in the State of Alabama; said lands granted to the memorialists and their associates for the encouragement of the cultivation of the vine and olive; that, for reasons and misfortunes heretofore stated to Congress, the memorialists and their associates failed to comply with their part of the contract entered into with the government; and the government in its generosity not being disposed to take advantage of the delinquency of the petitioners and their associates, in their liberality passed several laws for the relief of the memorialists and their associates: the last of which acts was passed February 19, 1831, by the provisions of which no person was permitted to pay for his land unless he was actually occupying and cultivating the tract of land at the time of the passage of the law; and although the said law enabled the greater portion of the grantees to perfect their titles to their lands, yet the memorialists were not embraced. The petitioners state, as a reason why they were not enabled to avail themselves of the provisions of the law alluded to, that many of them were mechanics; that the lands were heavy timbered and they weak-handed, and pressed by their necessities to pursue that branch of industry best calculated to procure for their families a subsistence; others had, just previous to the passage of the law, built houses upon their lands, and commenced improving them by cutting down the timber and fencing in their grounds; but as cultivation was required by the law of 1831, memorialists were excluded from the benefits of the law. Another portion of the petitioners state, that some short time after the original grant was made their ancestors died, and that they, the legal heirs, were unable to settle their deceased fathers' portions until recently. Petitioners state that they are few in number; that but a small portion of the original grant remains undisposed of, and pray that they may be permitted, as their associates have heretofore been, by the government to pay one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre for their lands, and receive patents for the same; all of which statements have been fully examined into by the committee, and they are unanimous in the opinion that the prayer of the memorialists should be granted, and have reported a bill accordingly.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned on behalf of themselves and others, persons interested in the lands sold to the Tombeckee Association, by a contract made between Charles Villar, their agent, and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, on the 8th of January, 1819, under the provisions of the act of Congress passed the 3d March, 1817, entitled "An act to set apart and dispose of certain public lands for the encouragement of the cultivation of the vine and olive," and being entitled to lands under said contract, beg leave, while they avail themselves of this opporunity of expressing their gratitude for the favors heretofore received, to address your honorable body for the purpose of praying that the relief heretofore extended to them in certain classes of cases under said contract may be made more general, so as to extend to and comprehend all those cases not heretofore provided for.

Your memorialists would respectfully represent that, under the provisions of said law and contract, one class of the allottees have entitled themselves to patents for their tracts, by reason of their compliance with the conditions imposed; that this class comprehends the greater portion of the allottees, and, as might be expected, the most valuable tracts of the lands granted. For this class no further legislation would be necessary to insure them a title. That another class of cases existed, where, by a failure to comply, the allottees forfeited their right by the strict terms of said contract, but who were relieved against the uncertainty of their titles by the liberal provisions of the act amendatory of the original act, passed the 19th of February, 1831 But your memorialists would respectfully suggest that there is a third class of cases, where the allottees (inasmuch as they do not fall within the strict terms of the contract, and cannot avail themselves under the particular terms and technical constructions which will necessarily be given by the proper department to the said act of 1831) are, strictly speaking, not entitled to patents, and are yet subject to the uncertainty of their titles; and although those cases may not be very numerous, and notwithstanding that in general they comprehend the least valuable tracts of land, yet, among them, on investigation, there will be found to exist many cases of great hardship, and such as would evidently entitle each to relief in the liberal spirit of your honorable body.

Your memorialists will not undertake to enter into a detail of all the reasons which have prevented a strict compliance with the contract, they being as multifarious as the cases themselves; the mind, however, will readily suggest a great number of causes sufficient to have prevented it. In the first place, no one could ever suppose that, on upwards of four hundred allotments granted to so many different persons, each would be enabled, in fact, to make a settlement on his portion. Human affairs are too uncertain, and the intentions of men too liable to be frustrated by accidents and unforseen events to admit of such an idea. Upon many of the tracts a number of farms have been opened instead of one, while others are without any. Many, having allotments of their own, have preferred for reasons of interest or convenience to purchase and settle on parts of those of their neighbors, and upon the whole there is, in fact, a much greater quantity of land cleared and in cultivation than is required by the contract, and probably more settlements made than were necessarily required. Again, it is not to be supposed by any one having the slightest acquaintance with lands, that a large body of lands, howsoever fertile or advantageously located, can be divided into upwards of four hundred allotments, so that each one should be found fit for cultivation of any kind, much less that of particular foreign plants, requiring particular soils; some tracts are fit for one purpose, and some for another, and many tracts will find their particular use in the course of time, when the country will be further improved, and which are not now in use. No wilderness was ever, in 14 years, converted into a country so densely, uniformly, and regularly settled all over its face as this contract requires; some tracts are naked prairies without any timber; some too poor for cultivation, but heavily timbered; some hilly, some overflowed, &c., yet each having its present or future use or value. Those tracts have been considered as property in the hands of the holders; they have been bought and sold, divided out among children, acquired by marriages, divided and subdivided, given in payment of debts, some in part only, some entire, and credits have been given on the faith of them; they have been the subjects of a multitude of contracts of various kinds. Cases could be presented where, strictly speaking, the contract has not been complied with, and which are not embraced within the relief granted, and yet where the allotments have been purchased for particular purposes, where large sums of money have been paid for them, and which are of great value to the holders, and the loss of which would be of serious injury, such as where one owning a small tract of rich land, without timber or water, has purchased an adjoining one, so as to procure those advantages to his farm, yet which he has not actually cultivated; or where a piece of swamp land has been purchased for the timber only, or of land for pasture, or to obtain access to a road, or creek, or river, or to extend his clearing when time would permit, or even to make the shape of his tract more regular, or the farm more valuable or convenient. There are cases where the lands have been in controversy between different claimants, and where neither party could risk expensive improvements till the decision of lengthy law suits; also, some where lands have been sold at public sale by order of the orphans' courts to pay debts, after lengthy legal proceedings between the heirs and creditors, during the pendency of which there was no one entitled properly. Some cases where holders have died, and where much time has elapsed before absent heirs or creditors were informed of their rights and could find it convenient to assert them. Some holders have found themselves too poor to establish farms, and have pursued other occuptions in the country till they became able to settle at home. There are some cases where allotments had been purchased and lands cleared and prepared for cultivation, but which, when the act of 1831 was passed, were not in cultivation, that is, planted, and therefore not within that act. By the report of Mr. Adams, it will be seen that there are many cases where the conditions are reported as being complied with in part, such as where settlements were made, not within, but after the first three years as required by the contract; some, where vines were imported and planted, but died on account of having arrived too late in the season; some, where the vines were lost at sea, and other cases where matter of excuse is shown to account for the non-compliance. There are some cases where allottees or persons who purchased of them came to the country expressly to settle their tracts, and who, upon examining them, found them, at the time, not worth settling upon, owing to the then new state of the country, for want of roads, water, or other cause, but which now, on account of the further improvement of the country, have become worthy of settlement, by means of which the owners may be now enabled to repair their losses heretofore sustained. During many years a large portion of the prairie lands were considered worthless for the want of water, for the mode of obtaining water on those lands by boring is a late discovery. Many who were unable to effect their settlements within the first three years would afterwards have done it, but after that failure were never safe in doing so, and were expecting that Congress would make some provision whereby they would be relieved from the doubt and uncertainty they labored under; but when the act of 1831 passed, it provided only for those who had gone on to settle, risking the uncertainty, but did not embrace those who would have been willing to do so, had they known it would have been available. Had the provisions of that act fixed a limited time within which they would be allowed to make their settlements, then, being relieved from the forfeiture and being made safe in so doing, they would cheerfully have made improvements. The state of improvement of the grant would have been very different, had those doubts and uncertainties not existed.

The last act will be found to embrace, by its letter, those only who occupy and cultivate; therefore a mill, a storehouse, dwelling house, or other improvement, howsoever valuable or costly, would not bring its owner within that act. By it cultivation is indispensable.

Your memorialists also beg leave further to state, as an inducement to the granting of their request, that, by the enactment of a general law embracing all cases, your honorable body will be relieved from a multiplicity of petitions and memorials of various individuals, who will each come before your honorable body with their grievances, each representing the hardship of his particular case; the investigation and consideration of all of which would consume a great portion of the time of your honorable body, which otherwise would be employed on subjects of much greater national importance, and worth more than the whole subject of their applications. And your memorialists will here take occasion to repeat that the remaining class of allottees, for whose benefit such relief is prayed, is inconsiderable in number, and consists of that portion of the lands, in general, the least valuable; and they can, they think, most positively, and without fear of contradiction, say that no injury would result to the government; but, on the contrary, a benefit, a saving of expenses. For, should those remaining tracts be declared forfeited and exposed to public sale, the government would never obtain for them more than $1 25 per acre, immaterial what their real value might be. Your memorialists boldly say this, because experience proves it; and, by referring to the lists of sales of the public lands made in July last at public auction, and which are immediately adjoining, it will be seen that none go over $1 25; the remaining value, if any, goes into the hands of the speculators, but not to the government. The expenses to the government would be greater, and no benefit realized; whereas, on the other hand, many individuals would be seriously injured and disappointed. Another benefit would be to avoid the great difficulties, controversies, and confusion which must arise between the claimants and the officers of the government, land officers or commissioners, whose duty it will be to investigate the various cases laid before them, and the difficulty of discriminating and deciding who are entitled and who are not. Those investigations will be tedious and multifarious, and will lead to difficulties, will create trouble, expense, lawsuits, and more legislation than the extent of the subject deserves. For all which reasons, and many others too tedious to mention, your memorialists pray that an act may be passed by which all those who hold allotments may become entitled to patents for them by making settlements thereon on or before the —— of ———, 183 , and paying therefor $1 25 per acre.

Your memorialists would, with due respect, further remark that the term fixed for the payment of the lands granted under said act of Congress is near at hand, and that, on the 3d March, 1833, a very large sum of money is required to be paid into the land office for them. In this state, by reason of the low price of cotton for several years back, the newness of the country, the great expenses necessary to open the wilderness, and the immense drains occasioned by reason of all the ready money being absorbed by the land officers, your memorialists feel that it would be extremely difficult to raise such a sum of money in their settlement. Many would be obliged to sacrifice their property, greatly to their injury, to obtain a sufficiency of money to pay for their lots. For the reasons before stated, many are only in the commencement of the improvement of their farms, and all the expenses are heavily bearing upon them. In consideration of all which, your petitioners pray that, in the spirit of liberality which has been so greatly manifested of late towards the purchasers and settlers of public lands, you may be pleased to grant an extension of the same by allowing payments to be made for all those lands in five annual instalments, from and after March 3, 1833; and, as in duty bound, your memorialists will every pray, &c.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1832.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Bradford, reported:

That on the 23d of May, 1804, a patent was issued by the Spanish government to P. R. Delogny for 427 arpents of land in the parish of West Feliciana, fronting on the Mississippi, three-fourths of a mile below the mouth of Bayou Sarah. That on the 30th of September, 1807, the said P. R. Delogny gave notice, by advertisement, of his title, and called on all who made claim to assert it. That on the 19th of May, 1810, the said Delogny caused the said tract of land to be surveyed and divided into three lots, by the surveyor general. That on the 20th of May, 1810, the said lots were sold at auction, and John Murdoch became the purchaser. That in 1813 or 1814 the said Murdoch filed with the commissioner of land claims the notice of his claim. That Murdoch died intestate, and the land was sold by the court of probates of the parish in which it was situate, and Alexander Murdoch became the purchaser, who subsequently sold the same to the petitioner. That the title to the said tract of land does not appear to have been confirmed either to the original possessor or any intermediate holder, and that no conflicting claim appears to be asserted to the said piece of land. It also appears that the said land has been occupied and cultivated previous to the year 1813.

The committee report that, under the circumstances, the title of the United States, if any, ought to be released, and therefore report a bill for his relief.

APPLICATION OF THE TERRITORY OF ARKANSAS FOR A GRANT OF LAND FOR A PENITENTIARY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1832.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, respectfully represent: That from the infancy of the colony, the remoteness of its situation, and the allurements which all new countries present to refugees from the rigor of the laws of other countries, and the still greater rigor and marked disapprobation of society, and the many facilities it presents for the perpetration of almost every species of crime known to the law, and the conviction of your memorialists of the justice and propriety of graduating punishment in a ratio with the magnitude or enormity of the crimes committed, humbly and respectfully solicit your honorable body to grant, for the purposes of a penitentiary, to be erected at the seat of government for the Territory, any quantity of land that, in your wisdom, you may deem adequate to the purposes mentioned, to wit: such lands as have been returned by the surveyors as unfit for cultivation in this Territory.

These lands, it appears to your memorialists, are, under existing circumstances, of no benefit to the general government, nor to the Territory. But if our memorial should receive that respectful consideration which its importance would seem to demand from your honorable body, and grant the donation prayed for, to be selected and disposed of by an act of the legislature of the Territory, your memorialists believe that a small quantity of arable lands, say from fifty to one or two hundred acres in each township thus returned as unfit for cultivation, might be obtained and sold for the minimum price of the government land of the United States.

Your memorialists further believe that from the lands thus returned a sufficient quantity could be selected for the purpose aforesaid, and that a penitentiary in Arkansas would tend greatly to ameliorate the condition of its citizens, by confining offenders against the laws of the country, and directing their labors in such vocations as would enhance the territorial revenue, and at the same time be a more appropriate expiation for all offences, less than capital, against the dignity and laws of our Territory. All these your memorialists respectfully ask, and, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

APPLICATION OF THE TERRITORY OF ARKANSAS FOR INDEMNITY TO SETTLERS WHO LOST THEIR IMPROVEMENTS BY THE TREATY OF 1817 WITH CHEROKEE INDIANS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 6, 1832.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas humbly represent to your honorable body: That in the year 1815 a number of bold enterprising men settled on lands then belonging to the United States, lying between the waters of White river and Arkansas. At the time their settlement was made it was supposed that this land would never be ceded away, but, much to their detriment, a treaty was concluded in the year 1817, between the United States and the Cherokee nation of Indians, by which this section of country was given to that nation. The relentless Cherokees, fond of wreaking their vengeance upon the white man, precipitately drove from their homes these hardy and worthy adventurers. Added to the bold demands of the savages was the order from the War Department of that government which owed them protection, and for whose independence many of their forefathers had bled and died; there was no alternative left but the immediate abandonment of their homes, rendered doubly dear by the protection which they afforded them from the dangers of the wilderness. Driven again into the forest, without food and almost without raiment, the loss of their homes and their stock reduced them to a chilling poverty, from which the most unremitting perseverance and industry have barely released them. The reacquisition of the land by the United States was their only hope for remuneration; but when this took place the improvements of which they had been dispossessed, and which ought naturally to have reverted to them, were completely devastated by the unrelenting savages. Having settled after the expiration of the preemption law of 1814, their losses were remediless. When we reflect upon the course which has been pursued towards other citizens of the Territory who have been deprived of their homes and possessions by Indian treaties, it becomes a matter of astonishment that these bold adventurers and worthy citizens should be so long neglected. A claim so strong rarely ever existed, and the magnanimity of this great government will certainly permit it no longer to slumber.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 7, 1832.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George McDougall, reported:

The petitioner prays Congress to confirm to him a tract of sixty acres of land situated in the Miami reservation, in the State of Ohio, assigned to him by St. Michael and Loranger, to which the commissioners appointed to adjust land claims in the district of Detroit decided that the said St. Michael and Loranger had a pre-emption right. The committee have carefully examined the memorial, the evidence, and the documents in the land office relating to this claim: by act of April 25, 1808, entitled "An act supplemental to an act regulating the grants of land in the Territory of Michigan," every head of a family who, prior to the 26th of March, 1804, and at the passage of the act, inhabited and cultivated a tract of land in said Territory not claimed under a legal French or British grant, or under the act to which this is a supplement, should be entitled to the pre-emption on becoming a purchaser of the United States of such tract, not exceeding one section, at the rate which other public lands in the Territory are ordered to be sold, viz: two dollars per acre. Under this law, St. Michael and Loranger presented to the commissioners for the Detroit district a pre-emption claim to sixty acres of land, which was allowed by them, and a certificate issued accordingly. The original grantees paid in part consideration for this tract of land two instalments of thirty dollars each; the first on the 31st of December, 1808, and the second December 26, 1810. It is satisfactorily proven by a number of witnesses, that the land in question was at the time of entry considered by the commissioners and the neighborhood generally to be within the Territory of Michigan, and it was not until after the payment of the second instalment that it was ascertained to be in the State of Ohio. So soon as the mistake was discovered in the land office the holder of the certificate was notified that no patent would be granted for the land. The petitioner bought the land from St. Michael and Loranger, after the second payment had been made; for what sum does not appear. After petitioner bought the claim he tendered the residue of the purchase money, which was refused by the register and receiver upon the ground that the land was in the State of Ohio and not in Michigan Territory, and consequently out of the jurisdiction of the commissioners appointed to settle land claims in the Territory of Michigan. The committee cannot resist the conviction that St. Michael and Loranger must, from the facts in this case, have known that the land had already been disposed of, or rather reserved from sale by the government, as it was situated in, and formed a part of, the great Miami reserve. It seems, from an examination of the several acts of Congress confirming land claims in the Territory of Michigan, that Congress was apprised that the commissioners for the Detroit district had transcended their powers, as the act provides that the lands confirmed shall lie in the Michigan Territory. In several other cases, similarly situated, the purchasers have received their money back; the land claimed was sold by the United States some years since, part at $32 per acre and the residue at $2 per acre. It does not appear whether petitioner has expended anything in the improvement of the land or not. The country had not been surveyed at the time the commissioners sat for the Detroit district, they therefore could not know the locality of any tract of land; and as the purchasers must have known that the land was not subject to entry, therefore the committee are of the opinion that St. Michael and Loranger attempted a fraud upon the government and cannot now claim any advantage by the contract made by the government. The petitioner has the right to apply and receive his purchase money back under existing laws; no legislation is necessary. The committee report that, in their opinion, the claim is unjust and ought not to be granted.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1003. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 7, 1832.

Mr. PRENTISS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Nathaniel A. Ware, reported:

The Spanish government, by a patent dated June 22, 1791, granted to Alexander Moore a tract of land containing 2,364 arpents, equal to 2,000 acres; which tract, according to the map of the survey thereof, annexed to the patent, lies east of, and contiguous to, the Mississippi river, and is embraced in township No. 14, of range No. 2, in the land district west of Pearl river. The tract of land so granted to Alexander Moore was subsequently conveyed by him to James Moore; and James Moore having regularly entered his claim for the same, the board of commissioners west of Pearl river, on the 5th of September, 1805, confirmed his title thereto. James Moore having deceased, it appears that his executors, on the 16th of February, 1831, by virtue of a power given them in and by the last will and testament of the said James, for the consideration of $8,000, expressed in the deed, conveyed to the petitioner all the right and title which the said James, in his lifetime, had in or to the tract of land so confirmed to him in the manner above mentioned. It is shown by the certificate of the surveyor of public lands south of Tennessee that two attempts have been made by experienced surveyors, under his instructions, to make a survey and location of said tract of land, according to the original grant; but owing to the changes made by the river upon the natural objects referred to in the original survey, and to the imperfect manner in which the original lines were marked, it has been found impracticable, after the most diligent search and examination, to identify or ascertain the original boundaries so as to make the survey. It further appears that there is no doubt whatever in relation to the spot where the original survey and location were made, and that a considerable portion of the land lying in that place, and, of course, embraced in the original grant, has been sold by the United States to different individuals, who are now in actual possession of the same.

Upon these facts, the committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted; and they accordingly report a bill for his relief.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR A DONATION OF LAND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE RIVERS OF THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 7, 1832.

A MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States of America.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Mississippi would most respectfully represent: That whereas, by a treaty recently ratified with the Choctaw tribe of Indians, and the probable formation of a be thrown open to settlement by the citizens of the United States, when this State will have accomplished similar one, at a period not far distant, with the Chickasaws, an extensive tract of country will shortly that which has been and must be to every new State so grand a desideratum, and to which this State has been so long looking, with the most pleasing and gratifying anticipations, as the only medium through which she might be enabled to arrive at that political importance and consequence in the Union which, from her extent and numerous local advantages, she is destined at some time to occupy, from the exchange of her present unfortunate and degraded population of red men for a numerous, hardy, and industrious one of free white men, and her consequent municipal government throughout her chartered limits, she is very naturally directed to the development of some of her many advantages and natural resources through the medium of internal improvements.

Your memorialists would therefore most respectfully represent to your honorable body that, from the very great extent of waste and unappropriated lands within the limits of this State, amounting to sixteen millions of acres or thereabouts, and the state of comparative infancy and vassalage in which she has so long been confined, and the many disadvantages and inconveniences under which she has been compelled to labor, consequent upon the occupancy of those lands by the Indians, together with the munificent and liberal policy heretofore pursued by the general government towards the other new States of this confederacy similarly situated, she cannot but indulge the hope that an equal degree of liberality and munificence will be extended towards her for the purposes of internal improvement above adverted to. Your memorialists would further represent to your honorable body, that from the great number of navigable streams, and others that are susceptible of being made so, that intersect in various directions the public domain which is hereafter to be disposed of by the general government, the same would be very much enhanced in value were the navigation of those streams improved, or a liberal donation of land made to this State for that purpose, so that their future improvement would be rendered certain. The increased value given to those lands, and the consequent invitation given to competition for them when brought into market, would in all probability secure to the general government an amount of money not much diminished by such donation; and taking into consideration the great diminution of the national debt, and its certain extinguishment at no distant date, under the ordinary operations of the government, without the aid of those lands, together with their great extent, amounting to near three-fifths of the whole State, and the embarrassments and obstructions heretofore presented by the quantity of those lands and the manner in which they have been occupied, have always presented, to anything like internal improvement in this State, and a development of her natural advantages by limiting her population to not much more than a large county, your memorialists are the more encouraged to hope that the above premises will receive a favorable consideration by your honorable body.

The expediency of a government disposing of her public domain in the manner heretofore pursued by ours is, to say the least of it, doubtful. A retrospect of the policy pursued by most other governments on this subject, (of which history furnishes many examples,) shows that ours is almost, if not quite, without a parallel in relation to her public lands. The ownership of the soil by the government, and the consequent host of tenantry incident to such a state of things, cannot, under any aspect of the subject in which it may be viewed, be favorable to our republican institutions, and to that attachment of the people to the government, and interest in its prosperity and perpetuity, which is necessary to its stability and successful progress. It may be said that our government is peculiarly situated in respect to her public lands, and such is conceded to be the fact. Extensive tracts of waste and unappropriated lands were donated, and in other ways granted to the general government by many of the States, on the achievement of our national independence, no doubt for the purpose of paying off the debt of the nation, so laudably incurred in our glorious struggle for emancipation; and were the discharge of this debt not so nearly accomplished, and the capability of the government speedily and entirely to extinguish it under its ordinary operations, without the aid of those lands, made clearly manifest, then would it be more proper and reasonable that they should be husbanded and vigilantly guarded by the general government as an indispensable treasure, to be disbursed alone for the purposes for which they seem in part to have been originally confided to the general government. But as this state of things does not now exist, or at least but in a very small degree, it would seem to your memorialists that they should be disposed of on terms the most favorable to individuals and to the new States in which they may be situated, for the purpose of relieving them from that unimproved state of nature and backwardness in the scale of improvement to which the circumstances of their former occupancy has necessarily confined them.

Your memorialists, on reviewing the many and extensive grants of land made to several of the States of this union similarly situated to our own, cannot refrain from indulging the hope that the prayer of the foregoing memorial will receive a favorable consideration by your honorable body.

Your memorialists would therefore most respectfully pray your honorable body to grant to this State one million of acres of land out of the many millions contained within its limits, for the purposes of improving the navigable streams in this State; and your memorialists will, as in duty bound, ever, &c.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor of this State be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution to each of our senators and to our representative in Congress.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representative be requested, to use their best exertions to carry into effect the provisions of the foregoing memorial.

JNO. L. IRWIN, Speaker pro tem. of the House of Representatives.
A. M. SCOTT, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 7, 1832.

Mr. C. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Weatherhead, reported:

The petitioner states that he became the purchaser of a part of a tract of land in Lafayette county, Missouri, patented by the United States to John Block, for 640 acres, on a New Madrid certificate, lying in north range 25, township 51, west of the fifth principal meridian line, and section 30; and that, in laying down said tract of land by metes and bounds, the surveyor or locator stopped short of the east sectional line or boundary of section No. 30, leaving on the east boundary of said section a strip of land about 30 poles wide, and the whole length of said sectional line, and asks permission to purchase the same, for the convenience and advantage of the tract of land purchased by him, and upon which he resides. The committee do not see any impropriety in permitting said Weatherhead to purchase at the minimum price said tract of land, and report a bill accordingly.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1006. [1ST SESSION.

ON CONDITION OF THE OFFICE OF THE SURVEYOR OF THE PUBLIC LANDS SOUTH OF TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 9, 1832.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Miss., November 9, 1831.

SIR: I think it a duty which I owe to myself, to you, and to the people of this State, to give you some information as to the state of the office of "surveyor of the lands of the United States south of the State of Tennessee." I have the more confidence in addressing you on this subject, because you are acquainted with the general history of the office from its organization. It is known to you that the first surveyor general, Mr. Briggs, had not the advantage of a practical knowledge of surveying, nor of conducting such business, though he was a fine scholar and a great theorist. He had charge of the office from some time in 1803 to the latter part of 1806, when he resigned, and Seth Pease, esq., succeeded him.

To show you the state of the business when Mr. Pease took charge of the office, I beg leave to enclose a part of Mr. Pease's communication on the subject to Mr. Gallatin, then Secretary of the Treasury, dated at this place, December 16, 1807, as found on record in his letter book, page 169.

You will perceive that Mr. Briggs had, from the beginning, given the surveying of nearly or quite all the settled part of the State west of Pearl river to Charles Defrance and George Davis, who were authorized by Mr. Briggs to appoint as many sub-deputies as they might think proper to assist them, but the returns to this office were to be made in the names of Messrs. Defrance and Davis, respectively; that Mr. Briggs, through a mistaken opinion, advised them that they might charge four dollars per mile on the boundaries of each private claim, where the owner was subject to the expense, which was equal to eight dollars per mile on all lines which were common to two or more claims; and a considerable number of the claims and some public land, I believe, was surveyed under these circumstances. Mr. Gallatin gave it as his opinion that the charge was improper, and the mode of charging was changed to two dollars per mile to each claimant in lines dividing their claims, making four dollars per mile for the lines actually measured and marked as the law provides. During this term of three or four years large advances were made by Mr. Briggs to Messrs. Defrance and Davis, who were also inexperienced in practical surveying, and in the management of such a complicated difficult business. A number of sub-deputies were employed, many of whom had no practical experience in surveying, and some, it is believed, were unqualified for want of education. All this, with the aid of some dishonest surveyors, threw the work into derangement from the very origin of it, and it has never been, nor ever will be, got into the order it should have been.

Mr. Pease, in his letter, remarks that posts only were set at the corners, and no trees marked to aid in perpetuating such corners, so that they were soon lost, as the most durable wood, even of large size, in this country will last but a few years as posts, "but, the work being credited on the books, he thought it best for the public good in many instances to dispense with scrupulous nicety; the alternative would have been attended with great expense to the public and delay of the sales." After Mr. Pease had passed this mass of irreclaimable work, Mr. Freeman, in a few of the last years he held the office, became intemperate in his habits, careless in many instances, and overbearing, and perhaps partial, in others; made a great many alterations for the worse, it is believed, in many instances; and there are, I believe, about eighty township maps of the settled part of the State sent back for corrections before patents will be issued, which maps are now lying in this office for that purpose. Having applied to the register, Mr. Benjamin L. C. Wailes, for information, he reports to me in writing that there were about 1,427 claims confirmed in this State west of Pearl river by the board of commissioners, for which 787 plats had been returned to this office, leaving 664 plats of private claims yet to be prepared perhaps for that office. In the years 1828 and 1829 it appears to have been the object of the then surveyor general, Mr. Turner, perhaps in compliance with unceasing demands from Louisiana, to almost cover the country with surveyors, many of whom had but little experience in the business, where the surveying was of the most costly nature to the government and exceedingly intricate to perform. The two offices of principal and deputy surveyors for the eastern part of Louisiana have suffered, it is believed, from inexperienced and sometimes incompetent persons having charge of them, and the very frequent changes which have taken place in them. There seems to have been no settled system for proceeding, no forms to keep the field-notes nor make return of them, and, in some instances, not the necessary understanding of the proper forms to make the surveys themselves and number the tracts, so as to prevent confusion. I believe that no appropriation for surveying was made by Congress in 1830, by which a vast mass of business has been accumulated in this office at this time in the examination of surveys made within the last two years.

The accounts known of, and those supposed to exist, and contracts not yet completed, are believed to amount to nearly sixty thousand dollars at this time. This is, perhaps, three or four times as much as any surveyor general in this office ever had on his hands at one time, and that of the most intricate tedious nature to adjust. On examining the office, it is found that there remain of the old surveys of this State the field-notes of about 326 full townships and 133 fractional townships, equal to about 66 full ones, making 392 townships yet to be recorded. It is understood from the clerks which have been engaged in this kind of business that to record the field-notes of three of these townships per week would be as much as could be done. This work alone, then, will require one clerk constantly employed 131 weeks, equal to about two years and seven months. It would require another competent clerk about as long to record the maps and put them in good order. Most of the township maps which have been considered as recorded in this office were copied on a copying glass, on thin paper, and stuck by wafers or paste in the record books among the field-notes, which makes them difficult of access, and not sufficiently substantial for the purposes intended. The maps are much oftener referred to than the field-notes, and should be placed in a book or books to themselves in such order as to take one range entire through the district to which they belong, and then the next range entire, in numerical order, so that a label on the back of the book would show what particular maps were recorded within.

The records of field-notes should be in the same order, by districts. The maps and notes which are recorded are so intermixed in the few record books, without any regard to the district they belong to, and whether east or west, north or south of the basis lines from which they are numbered, that it is a very tedious business to find them. The maps, in most instances, have had erasures and alterations, and plats of private claims inserted in them, which claims were not known of at first, till many of them are not now fit for records, and ought to be renewed entire. Many of the maps are not signed, and even the district they belong to omitted, and we have only to take it for granted that they are official because they are in the office. The field-notes returned by the deputy surveyors in many instances, I believe, are not signed. There are notes of surveys of different districts, and indeed of different States, mixed in the same small books, or sheets of paper tacked together, of different dates, without the slightest reference on the outside as to the townships. My knowledge of the names of water-courses, or the handwriting of the persons, &c., may enable me to make some use of these loose scraps and perishable materials, but without record books to arrange and record them, and clerks to do it, they will soon be perfectly useless. Washington county, that was once in this State, has been nearly all included in Alabama State, yet there is a small part of it left, but it has lost its name; still the field-notes and maps bear that name, without, in some instances, distinguishing the district to which they belong as "east of Pearl river," and north or south of the thirty-first degree of latitude. There is now another Washington county in this State, and persons may have the handling of the books and papers of this office in time who may make great mistakes from these names. There is a propriety and necessity of arranging all the books and papers, and adding notes of explanation to some and renewing others. The sooner this business is done the better. There are two large record books here which I think were ordered by Mr. Davis, then surveyor general. They are full, however, and should be laid by, like monuments, to be looked at, but not handled. I think Mr. Davis once told me it was for the sake of economy they were made. This sort of mistaken economy, which dispensed with record books and clerk hire, has, I think, been carried to that extent here that will finally economize the government out of some thousands of dollars to regain the information which might have been had and preserved by a few hundred dollars in record books and clerk hire.

You will probably begin to think that the bad state of the business of the office is entirely owing to a want of due exertions, management, and care of those who had charge of the office. There has been a most extraordinary want of system and care as to forms and plans of carrying on the work; a want of care in designating the districts on the respective field books, as well as particular townships, whether north, south, east or west of the respective basis lines from which they are numbered, without which the returns, in fact, are useless. There has been a most extraordinary want of a suitable uniform mode of taking field-notes in the woods and signing them with the proper names of the deputies, the chain-carriers, and the approval or disapproval of the surveyor general; also in arranging the field books in such order that all the notes relating to any one township could have been put together and kept so without being interspersed in many loose pieces of paper, and scattered in many parcels. The notes and maps of about twenty-four townships east of Pearl river, the surveys of which were paid for from 1821 to 1824, are not found in this office nor at the General Land Office. It is expected, however, that they may be with the late principal deputy surveyor for the district east of the island of New Orleans. The principal deputy surveyors have, in some measure, I believe, been treated as officers independent of this office, and accounts made by them were paid without requiring the return of field-notes and maps from them.

The government, or the representatives from this State, I think, have been blameable in the following respects: It has been a constant complaint against the government since my acquaintance with the business, which has been since the year 1804, that a sufficient number of clerks were not provided for to keep up the records; that the necessary books, stationery, and contingent expenses were not allowed. The several boards of commissioners for adjusting claims in this State and Louisiana, as well as the registers and receivers, when acting in that business, were complaining on these grounds as related to themselves. The mass of business in all these offices has exceeded previous expectations, yet sufficient relief was not afforded. A few hundred dollars in due time in these matters might have been of more service than as many thousands when it is too late. The government did furnish this office with some books and stationery, but the offices of the principal deputy surveyors of Louisiana, which were constituted by law as branches of this office, were not furnished with the necessary stationery. After complaining about two years, as principal deputy surveyor of the southwestern district of Louisiana, I was allowed to procure record books for field-notes and the township maps, but had to pay out of my private funds for paper and all other materials for the office. The paper and other stationery at the first outset cost me $110; the transportation then to Opelousas cost about $50. There were many surveyors to instruct as to the mode of surveying and other duties, which I could not get time to do in writing, and therefore made general instructions, as far as practicable, which I caused to be printed, and which cost $50. This expense, too, was refused by the government, and I paid it. No office rent, nor office furniture, I believe, was ever allowed me, or very little. By these means it has happened, in a great measure, that there was nowhere suitable houses procured, and the necessary furniture, as desks and cases for the safe-keeping of the papers and books. It is yet so; there is not half sufficient furniture here for the safe-keeping of the papers. The mice, roaches, and crickets, all have free access to them; and the mice may and do make beds out of old field-notes. Roaches are very destructive to papers, and cannot be kept out without close cases. Office rent must come out of the salary of the officer; his firewood and office furniture, and many other expenses, are considerable in this country. A small house, therefore, must be put up with, and, to get room, the papers are thrown into old boxes and put out of the way; the roof leaks, perhaps, and injures the books and papers, and at last the government is the loser for too much economy. For an office requiring so much room, and of so much importance to individuals as well as the general government, as are all the offices of the surveyors general, rent to a moderate and reasonable amount, say ten dollars per month, at least, should be paid by the government. It would not be complained of by the nation, but applauded. I have often heard persons express their surprise at the penurious, mistaken economy of the government in relation to public offices.

I beg leave to draw your attention, especially, to the manner of obtaining the information necessary for this office from the two registers' offices east and west of Pearl river. It is known to you that the claimants were required by law to file with the registers all their title papers; the papers were recorded there, or such as were necessary for deciding on and adjusting the claims. The titles of this State were, many of them, in the Spanish language; a translator was appointed for the use of the commissioners, but not for the surveying department; nor has there been any provisions that I know of for this State to enable the surveying department to get the proper information from the registers' offices. It is impracticable to procure the information from the claimants, because of their absence from home, their engagements in business, and sometimes their want of willingness to attend to it, or to have the matter investigated, and refusal to pay the expense of a survey or resurvey. The titles of minors, too, cannot always be come at. It is therefore necessary that application should be made to the registers. If there is no law requiring them to give the information, they may put it off until it will suit their convenience; besides, it is grating to the feelings of public officers to be always begging favors of other public officers, without paying them for what is considered extra duty. In this respect, it appears the representatives from Louisiana have been much more attentive to the interest of their State than those of Mississippi. There was an act of Congress passed on the 18th April, 1814, entitled "An act concerning certificates of confirmation of claims to lands in the State of Louisiana, requiring the respective registers to furnish the principal deputy surveyors of their district with a list of all confirmed claims, whether reported and confirmed by act of Congress or otherwise, together with the proper descriptions of the tracts to be surveyed, wherein the quantity, locality, and connexion, when practicable, with each other, &c.; which tracts were to be surveyed, or resurveyed, if necessary, at the expense of the government, and not, as was generally the case in this State, at the expense of the claimant. This very judicious and equitable course enabled the surveyors in that State to progress in the most speedy and correct manner with the surveys, both public and private; and the attention of the surveyor general at this office has been several years principally drawn to that State. It is absolutely necessary that the deputy surveyor should have all proper information from the title papers, and sometimes oral testimony, to enable him to make correct surveys or resurveys; and like information is indispensably necessary to enable the head of the department to judge of its correctness when done. It is, therefore, surprising that this information has never been put into the power of the surveying department of this State, except by driblets, at the pleasure of the claimants, or as the surveyors might beg it from the registers. It is indispensable, too, that the Spanish language, relative to the locality, quantity, and boundaries, should be translated for the surveyor, and a true copy of every Spanish plat, or other plat, filed in the register's office, should be furnished to the surveying department. The register should be authorized to employ a translator to assist him, and he should be paid, as well as the translator, a reasonable extra compensation for that service. It would not now be necessary, I presume, to get out a great many extracts and copies; but for all claims not yet properly surveyed and laid down in the township maps, these extracts and copies should be required, as well as the adjoining claims, in cases where it was necessary for proper connexion. Until this course is taken, the surveys of this State will remain uncertain and unsettled, and now and then a piece of land, sold by the United States as public property, and perhaps well improved by the purchaser, may be taken by confirmed claims.

The surveying department has no means of knowing how many claims have been confirmed, nor where they are situated. For want of the proper information from the register's office, a good many surveys, it is believed, have been returned in the names of the occupants, and not, as they should have been, in the name of the person to whom they were confirmed; and consequently the patents cannot be issued, though the survey itself may be correct. An entire list of all confirmed claims should now be furnished, with their proper numbers, and the names of the original claimant, as well as that of the confirmee, that we may ascertain which has been surveyed and which has not. From the register's own account, furnished to me in writing, it would seem that not many more than half the surveys of claims have been returned to this office. It is certainly time that some investigation should be had in this business, before patents can safely be issued for confirmed claims or lands sold by the government as public land.

I beg leave now to suggest to you the absolute necessity of appropriating a reasonable sum for at least two or three competent clerks, in addition to the two now allowed by law in this office. In the present deranged chaos state of the papers in the office, and the recording being several years in arrears, it would be folly to think of doing anything with it without the necessary assistance. I take it for granted that the people of this State will urge the immediate surveying of the county lately acquired from the Choctaws. There will be more than ample employment for myself and the two clerks now allowed to examine and prepare the returns of surveys which will probably be made in that district. If the government should comply with the wishes of the people, it will be best to allow a sufficient number of clerks to record the surveys and keep the business up. There is no advantage in delay in that matter. I can superintend and force the work to great advantage to the government by having proper aid. It is worse than useless to delay it from year to year for want of a few hundred dollars in clerk hire, with the necessary record books. If the work is pressed on me, as has been the case very generally heretofore with my predecessors, too fast for proper examination, it must then, from necessity, pass, as they passed it, with a slight superficial examination, and the recording must be laid aside. I dread this state of things in the office.

I enclose a map representing the townships in the three districts which have been laid out in this State, and have colored those townships of which the field-notes have been recorded; you may, therefore, at one view, see what is yet to be recorded to bring up the business. The President has shown every disposition to hasten the settlement of the country by his active and liberal measures in treating with the Indians, and aiding them to remove. The present Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Hayward, has shown his zeal in forwarding these views, and his desire to see the land titles of this State upon a safe and unchangeable foundation, by sending a competent agent from the General Land Office to investigate the state of this office and to ascertain the reason why patents cannot be safely issued. Mr. King, the agent, has examined the office thoroughly, overhauling the old tattered papers which have, perhaps for years, lain quiet in old drawers and boxes, and will, I believe, on your application, give you a full and fair account of the state of the business; he will aid you all in his power, with the influence of Mr. Hayward, to put the office on a proper footing. I beg leave to suggest to you the propriety of communicating with Mr. Hayward and his agent, Mr. King, on this subject. There has uniformly been too much business pressed on this office for the number of clerks employed.

You will be pleased to present this for the information of your honorable colleague, Judge Ellis, who, I believe, on being made acquainted with what is necessary, will give you his active support for the benefit of the State and general government. I send a copy for the Hon. Mr. Plummer.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

GIDEON FITZ, Surveyor of United States lands south of Tennessee.

Hon. GEORGE POINDEXTER, Senator in Congress.

NOTE.—The communication from Mr. Pease to Mr. Gallatin, above referred to, is withheld on account of its length.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1007. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN ALABAMA UNDER A GRANT FROM GEORGIA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 9, 1832.

Mr. DAVIS, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of John Rhea, reported:

This is another Yazoo case. The petitioner claims, under a grant from the State of Georgia to Zachariah Cox and Matthias Maher, between twenty and thirty thousand acres of land in the now State of Alabama, which claims were regularly relinquished to the United States under the act of 1814, entitled "An act providing for the indemnification of certain claimants of public lands in the Mississippi Territory." The claim of the petitioner is embraced in the second class of cases, so designated and decided on by the board of commissioners; and, as the committee fully concur with the board on the grounds on which the same was adjudged and determined, they subjoin the decision for the information of the House. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the claim.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 7, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with your request, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I am directed by the Secretary to communicate, for the use of the committee, the papers on file in relation to the claim of John

Rhea, on account of the Yazoo lands. These papers are numbered, in red ink, from 1 to 17 inclusive, and the committee will please to return them to this department, to be restored to the files, the claim having been surrendered to the United States agreeably to the terms of the law providing for their settlement.

Accompanying the papers is the decision of the commissioners in relation to the class of claims to which, it is believed, that of Mr. Rhea belongs.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL BRENT.

WARREN R. DAVIS, Esq., Chairman Judiciary Committee.

YAZOO CLAIMS.

Decision of the commissioners respecting certain classes of claims.

The board of commissioners, having taken into consideration the claims under and in the name of the Tennessee Company, has finally adjudged and determined thereon. Abundant time has been allowed to all interested parties to produce competent evidence, and no benefit can be expected to result from any further delay in pronouncing its decision.

The claims under this company consist of two classes. The first class comprises those claims that are founded on the scrip originally issued by the grantees from Georgia, Z. Cox and M. Maher, and under the deeds which were substituted for the scrip on the payment of the consideration money.

Secondly. The second class consists of those claimants who claim under certain deeds executed by Z. Cox of portions of the territory designated by metes and boundaries.

It is the judgment of the board that the right of the first class of claimants to indemnification has been fully established. The grant of the State of Georgia to Z. Cox and M. Maher and their associates, in fee simple, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; the division of the property of the company into four hundred and twenty shares; the issue of scrip to that amount to their several associates, whereby the members of the company were identified; and that the execution of deeds to those scrip-holders who had paid up the consideration money, entitling each of the grantees to 1-420th part of the territory, fully substantiate the right of this class of claimants to indemnification, and the board would have decided at an earlier period on their case if it had not wished to allow every opportunity to the second class of claimants to collect all possible evidence in their behalf.

It is, however, the opinion of the board that the second class of claimants, under deeds executed by Z. Cox, is not entitled to indemnification. No evidence has been exhibited that Z. Cox was ever authorized, as original or special agent of the company, to execute such conveyances. Even if Cox and Maher, the grantees named, had been authorized to execute such conveyances, it has not appeared that Z. Cox was ever authorized alone. The only authority that has been produced in his justification is a power of attorney from M. Maher to Z. Cox, A. Harper, and A. Jackson, whereby two of the attorneys were required to join in all acts performed on his behalf. These attorneys never united with Cox in the execution of these deeds, and never sanctioned them by any act, even if the power from M. Maher had been strictly pursued. It is the opinion of the board the claim of the grantees, by metes and bounds, would not have been supported unless evidence had been produced that Z. Cox and M. Maher were duly authorized by the company to make such conveyances. The mere circumstance of their names being mentioned in the act of Georgia, and in the sale, cannot be construed to be such a power as would have authorized them, after the grants made to their associates, which was the performance of their trust, to annul or invalidate their own conveyances by subsequent grants to others.

The board does not think there is any foundation for the argument of the counsel of these claimants that the members of the Tennessee Company are to be regarded as partners according to the law merchant, and the territory granted as the stock and effects of their trade. That, therefore, the act of Z. Cox, one of the partners, in conveying portions of the territory, must bind his copartners. It is the misfortune of this argument, even if it were sound, that there is no evidence that Cox was a partner or held a single share in the company at the time he made these conveyances; but, on the contrary, his conduct affords the strongest presumption that he had parted with all his legal claims before he executed these deeds. But the board is decidedly of opinion that the position of the counsel is intrinsically unsound. No authority or precedent can be produced that real property was ever considered in law or equity so far like chattel or stock in trade that one shareholder, whether a joint tenant or tenant in common, could convey the whole. Such a position directly conflicts with every principle of law on which the title to real estates in this country is founded.

The fair, obvious construction of the grant from Georgia, and the deed between the parties, also invalidate the position taken by the counsel, and fully prove that the members of the company themselves never considered their property in the territory as subject to this principle of the commercial law. All the title papers make them tenants in common, and provision is made in the deeds (which were issued in lieu of the certificates) for a division of the territory into 420 parts, in order that it might be distributed by ballot among the members. The argument of the counsel would go to show that any one member of the company who held a 420th part could convey the whole of the territory as well as his own share. The same argument would make the deed of any one member equally binding with the deed of Z. Cox.

In consideration, however, of the respectability of the claimants under the deeds from Z. Cox, and the apparent adequacy of the consideration and honesty of the views of the grantees, time was given by the board to enable these claimants, by metes and bounds, to raise an equity in their favor which would be binding on the claims of the other class of claimants. But the board is of opinion that no such equity has been established in their favor.

It was presumed that proof might be exhibited that Cox, or Cox and Maher, had been fully authorized, as agents of the company, to make such particular conveyances, but no such evidence has been, or can be, exhibited; and even if they had been jointly authorized to do so by the company, it does not appear that M. Maher ever constituted Z. Cox an attorney to make such conveyances alone.

It was also presumed that it would appear that Z. Cox had not disposed of all the certificates he originally held in the company at the time he fraudulently executed these. No evidence, however, has been produced that he held these certificates at the date of these conveyances. On the contrary, it may be justly presumed that, as Cox's sole view in making such sales was to raise money, he would not have resorted to these sales for that purpose, (while he could by fair means have obtained his end;) that he would not have executed such defective conveyances while he had any legal titles to dispose of.

It was also expected that it might appear that these sales were made for the purpose of discharging debts and expenses which Cox had contracted on good grounds for the interest of the company; and with this view the board heard all the allegations of Cox (not as evidence, but as the means of obtaining further information by inquiry) in behalf of these claimants, by metes and bounds. But he has exhibited no accounts to the board to show that such necessary disbursements were made by him for the concern, or that the proceeds of these sales were appropriated to the service of the company. Therefore, on a full view of the subject, the board is compelled to regard the act of Cox in executing these conveyances in the same light in which they regard his withdrawal of ——— dollars from the treasury of Georgia after he had parted with all his title in the company; and they lament the necessity which compels them to decide against the many meritorious claimants under such defective titles.

On the subject of the amount of the indemnification to be allowed to the claimants, a question arose whether a deduction ought not to be made for the 50,000 acres reserved by the —— section of the act of Georgia, as a compensation to the commissioners appointed by the State of Georgia for the purpose of examining the quantity and quality of the land on the Great Bend of the Tennessee river. But the board is of opinion, after a full investigation of the question, that such a deduction ought not to be made. The terms of the act of March 31, 1815, give the indemnification "to the persons claiming" in the name of, and under the Tennessee Company. But the claim of the commissioners to the reserved land is not derived from the Tennessee Company, but is founded on the —— section of the act of Georgia. The patent from Georgia also reserves this land from the grant made to the Tennessee Company. The settlement of this claim must, therefore, be provided for by subsequent act of legislation.

It is therefore adjudged by the board that each of the claimants of the first class is entitled for each scrip, or each deed substituted for scrip, that has been released to the United States, to one 420th part of the indemnification.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 10, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Louis Pellerin, deceased, reported:

That it is shown to their satisfaction, by legal evidence, that, in the year 1764, the governor of Louisiana, Dabbadie, granted, in the usual form, the land claimed to the ancestors of the petitioners, Louis Pellerin, to wit: a prairie, called the Prairie Basse, having a front of sixty-three arpents, by a depth of one hundred and twenty-six, equal to a superficies of seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-eight arpents. It appears, by evidence taken before the commissioners at Opelousas, that this land is occupied; but whether by those deriving title from the petitioners does not appear.

The grant being, in the opinion of the committee, a valid one, it ought to be confirmed; and the committee report a bill to that effect.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR A DISCRETIONARY POWER TO DISPOSE OF THE LANDS GRANTED TO THAT STATE FOR CANALS, ETC.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 13, 1832.

A MEMORIAL AND JOINT RESOLUTION relative to a survey of the Maumee river, and asking of Congress, in favor of Indiana, discretionary powers as to the disposition of our canal lands lying in the State of Ohio.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The general assembly of the State of Indiana respectfully represent that, influenced by the general welfare and stimulated by the grant of land made to this State by the act of Congress of March 2, 1827, of an extent correspondent with the whole length of a canal to connect the waters of the Wabash with Lake Erie, this State has embarked in the disposal of a part of said lands for the purpose of commencing the construction of a portion of said canal lying within her boundaries, trusting that the donation of lands and her mutual interests would equally insure the concurrent action of the State of Ohio in constructing a part of said canal, which must extend through her limits to accomplish the object first contemplated; but owing probably to her engagement in other works of improvement, or for other reasons, the State of Ohio has not thus far ratified a negotiation entered into a year since, under the authority of the legislatures of the respective States by their commissioners by which Indiana offered a relinquishment of the land donated within the boundaries of Ohio to construct that portion of said canal.

Wherefore to enable this State, if it be necessary, under her own authority to effect the extension of the connexion aforesaid with the waters of Lake Erie, which is essential to render the construction of the part of the canal in Indiana of proper avail, this general assembly respectfully solicit that an examination of the Maumee river be forthwith made to ascertain the practicability of effecting a steamboat slackwater navigation to connect the line of canal in this State with Lake Erie, either by a corps of engineers under the authority of the United States or under authority to be given to this State; and that the lands thereupon accruing to this State for the prosecution of said canal, as heretofore provided, through the State of Ohio may be conditionally changed, and the terms of the said grant so modified, and the power of Indiana so far extended that she may at her discretion appropriate the same to the improvement of the Maumee river (a reserved public highway of the United States) as may make its navigation east of the boundary line of this State a sufficient extension of the contemplated connexion of the waters of the Wabash with those of Lake Erie. Therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use due efforts to obtain an accurate examination of the Maumee river, from the bay of Lake Erie to our State line, by a corps of United States engineers, at as early a period as possible, or authority to this State to employ an engineer and effect the same; also to procure such a change in the land donated for the extension of the Wabash and Erie canal, through the State of Ohio, as will enable this State at her discretion to devote the proceeds of said land to the improvement of the river aforesaid.

Resolved, That the governor transmit a copy of the foregoing to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

H. H. MOORE, Speaker of House of Representatives.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA TO REDUCE PRICE AND CHANGE THE MODE OF DISPOSING OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 14, 1832.

MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States in relation to the public lands.

The general assembly of the State of Alabama would respectfully represent to the Congress of the United States that the most of the public lands now within the limits of this State are of that class which has been offered and not sold. The best lands have all been disposed of through government sales, and it is believed that the present minimum price far exceeds the intrinsic value of the lands now remaining unsold. Your memorialists would, therefore, respectfully suggest the propriety of reducing the price on this class of public lands, and of permitting them to be entered in subdivisions of forty acres, giving to the occupant, for a limited period, a preference in the purchase. This measure, it is believed, would be of essential benefit to our community generally, and particularly to that class of our citizens who have hitherto been unable to contend with the capitalist and the speculator in the market for the best lands. We deem it unnecessary to attempt to illustrate, by argument, the benefits which we think would result, both to our citizens and the government, by the measure here proposed; and we respectfully submit these crude suggestions to the justice and liberality of the national legislature.

Your memorialists would again press upon the consideration of Congress the propriety of abandoning the present mode of disposing of the public lands at auction. This system is believed not to be beneficial to the government, and, in practice, is found to operate injuriously and oppressively upon the purchasers. We again suggest the policy of disposing of the lands, by entry, in tracts of from the lowest subdivision upwards to one quarter section, giving to actual settlers a preference for a reasonable time, and to reduce the price at fixed periods until sold. This system, it is believed, would encourage emigration, hold forth additional inducements to purchase, and accelerate the settlement and cultivation of the public lands, and, by limiting the quantity to one quarter section, it would thwart the cupidity of speculating monopolies. Your memorialists again beg leave to present to your consideration the propriety of authorizing the holders of certificates of lands on which one-fourth of the purchase money has been paid, and the land reverted to the government, to obtain certificates of scrip, receivable in payment for other lands; and also to authorize those purchasers of lands, who have relinquished under the provisions of any of the acts of Congress for the relief of the purchasers of public lands, and who by relinquishment have paid, by certificate, an amount over and above the amount for the lands so paid for, to obtain certificates of scrip to the amount of such overpayment, which may be receivable in payment for other lands. These last-mentioned purchasers, it is believed, have an equitable claim upon the justice of government.

Your memorialists respectfully submit the foregoing suggestions to the justice and liberality of the representatives of the nation, with a full confidence that they will receive that consideration to which they are justly entitled, &c.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their endeavors to procure the passage of a law embracing the objects of the foregoing memorial.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

Approved January 21, 1832.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR A DONATION OF LAND TO AID IN MAKING ROADS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 14, 1832.

A MEMORIAL of the legislature of the State of Mississippi.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Mississippi would most respectfully represent: That roads have recently been surveyed and laid out at the expense of this State, leading from the town of Rankin, in Yazoo county, in this State, across the Chickasaw and Choctaw nations, to the town of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee; and another leading across said nations, from Doak's Old Stand, in the county of Madison, to Athens, in the county of Monroe; and said roads pass through the most fertile and valuable lands owned by the United States within the limits of this State; and as the completion of said roads are objects not only advantageous to the interests of this State, but would be of immense value to the United States, opening, as it would, a direct communication between the most flourishing sections of this and the surrounding States of Tennessee and Alabama; and as the resources of this State are necessarily limited, but few of the lands sold by the United States, as yet, yielding any revenue to the State, your memorialists, unable of themselves to complete said roads, would urge before your honorable body the importance, necessity, and justice of aiding them in effecting those very desirable objects.

Your memorialists would further add, that they feel conscious of asking no more than has been previously conceded to other States, when even the benefits directly resulting therefrom to the United States were not as palpable. The States of Alabama and Tennessee have received at your hands appropriations for the purposes of internal improvements; therefore your memorialists are emboldened to hope that you will not overlook their interests, but grant them two townships of land—one for each of the roads above designated—to enable them to complete the same. And your memorialists will, as in duty bound, ever pray, &c.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi in general assembly convened, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their best exertions to have the objects of the above memorial granted. And his excellency the governor be, and he is hereby, requested to forward a copy of this memorial and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, That this general assembly approve of the suggestions made by the Secretary of the Treasury proposing, on the part of the United States, to sell the public lands to the States in which they are situated.

And be it further resolved, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their exertions to procure the passage of an act in pursuance of the suggestions made in the foregoing resolution.

ON CLAIM TO A LOT IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 15, 1832.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the representatives and heirs of William Pollard, deceased, reported:

That the petitioners allege that on the 12th of December, 1809, the Spanish commandant of Mobile and West Florida made a grant of a lot of ground lying in the city of Mobile, and bounded on the north by what was, at the time of the grant, called John Forbes's canal, on the west by Water street, on the south by the King's wharf, and on the east by the channel of the river, to their father, William Pollard, deceased; that their father died in 1815, leaving them infants, unable to prosecute their claim; that under an act passed May 26, 1824, granting certain lots of ground to the corporation of the city of Mobile, and to certain individuals in said city, they conceive their aforesaid claim to have been confirmed, and filed the same before the board of commissioners organized under the act of Congress of March 3, 1827, for the adjustment of land titles in Alabama; that their claim was rejected by the board of commissioners upon the sole ground that no improvements had been made on said lots prior to December 20, 1803, as required by the act of March 3, 1819, and the act of May 8, 1822. And the petitioners insist that their claim to the lot in Mobile is secured to them by the act of 1824, and does not fall within the operation of the acts of 1819 and 1822. A Spanish concession is produced, bearing date December 12, 1809, for the lot, signed by Cayetano Penz, the then commandant at Mobile. From all of which the committee are of the opinion that Congress did intend to embrace petitions by the act of 1824. They are further of the opinion that the petitioners' claim to the lot of ground is founded in equity, and that justice demands that Congress should confirm to the petitioners their title in said lot, and therefore report a bill for that purpose.

ON CLAIMS OF THE SETTLERS AT THE OLD MINES, IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 17, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of certain citizens residing in Washington county, Missouri, in a part of it called the Old Mines, reported:

That the said petitioners, being thirty-one in number, state that before the transfer of Louisiana to the United States they had obtained a concession from the Spanish government authorizing them to make settlements in that part of Washington county called the Old Mines; and that, in pursuance of such permission, they actually settled on and cultivated the lands more than two years, when they were informed that the concession to them had been mislaid or lost from the archives of St. Genevieve, where they had been deposited for safe-keeping; and that on the 25th of May, 1803, they presented a petition to the King's lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana praying for a concession of the lands upon which they had settled, and to allow them four hundred arpents each; and that on the 4th of June, 1803, the concession was granted in one body, directing the mode of partition; and that shortly thereafter the same was surveyed and partitioned. Copies of said partition and plat accompanies said petition, specifying the allotment to each individual; and that their claim and plat was filed with the recorder of land titles in the district of Upper Louisiana.

They also allege that their claim was not confirmed because the lands had been reported by the United States surveyor as mineral lands; and they also allege that, for any purposes of mining, the said section of the country is wholly useless. A copy of an incomplete Spanish grant, and a translation of it, are furnished to the committee—the grant bearing date the 4th June, 1803, and signed by "Carlos Dehault Delassus," granting the lands claimed by the petitioners, and reciting substantially the facts alleged by the petitioners. The papers produced are proven to be copies, and the signature of the several officers are proven to be in the proper handwriting of the several officers. It is also proven that the petitioners were in the actual occupancy and possession of their lands prior to the change of government and ever since, and that the lands are now actually occupied and cultivated by them. The committee are also informed by General Ashley that the lands now claimed by the petitioners are not of any value or importance in consequence of the mineral supposed to be in that region, other mines having been discovered so much more valuable that the mines in that section of the country would be no consideration in the sale of the land.

The committee are of opinion, upon the preceding statement of facts, that the inhabitants of the Old Mines ought to be confirmed in their claims to the several tracts of land as allotted to them by the Spanish authorities in 1803, prior to the change of government, under the provisions of an act of Congress passed the 12th of April, 1814, and 13th June, 1812, sec. 3, (see Land Laws, page 651,) and therefore report a bill for their relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1015. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO A PRE-EMPTION RIGHT IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 17, 1832.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of Josiah Hedges, reported:

That in August, 1821, Josiah Hedges purchased at public sale, at the land office at Delaware, in Ohio, the fractional part of section 19, lying east of and adjoining to the Sandusky river, in township 2 north, and in range 15 east of the first meridian. Between the north end of this fraction and the Sandusky river there is a small strip or fraction of land, estimated to contain forty-three hundredths of an acre, which was not thought to be of sufficient importance, by the surveyor, to ascertain or report its contents to the surveyor general. At the public sales it was not, nor has it since been, exposed to sale.

In the fore part of the year 1823 Mr. Hedges contemplated the building of a mill on the land he had purchased, and, on an examination of his boundary lines, discovered the small strip of land above described, through which the tail-race of the mill, if erected, must necessarily pass. Finding this to be the case, he shortly thereafter applied to the officers of the land office aforesaid to enter said strip of land, who decided that it then belonged to the tract he had purchased; and of that opinion was the surveyor general, who was consulted on the occasion by the register of the land office. Under these assurances Mr. Hedges constructed a valuable mill, and put it in operation in the beginning of the year 1825, the tail-race of which passes through said strip of land to the Sandusky river.

In March, 1831, Jacob Stem notified the Commissioner of the General Land Office that he had become the purchaser of the southwest fractional quarter section No. 17, in township 2 north, and range 15, to which, he claimed, the strip of land aforesaid was attached, and requested that a patent therefor should not be granted to said Hedges. The Commissioner of the General Land Office had previously determined, as the strip of land aforesaid had not been offered publicly for sale, that it was not subject to private entry; and that Hedges, as he had been in the quiet possession thereof from 1825, and had cut a race through it, was, under the act of Congress of the 24th of April, 1830, entitled to the pre-emption of said strip of land upon making the necessary proofs and application therefor. Under the provisions of that act, an application was made to the register and receiver of said land office to enter said strip of land, and proofs of the occupancy, in manner aforesaid, were presented to said officers, who decided that the digging of a race through, and the occupancy of, said strip of land did not entitle said Hedges to pre-emption, and refused to permit him to enter the same.

It is the opinion of the committee, under all the circumstances, that Josiah Hedges ought to be permitted to enter said strip of land, and, for that purpose, herewith report a bill.

ON APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR A GRANT OF LAND FOR THE EDUCATION OF THE DEAF AND DUMB.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 17, 1832.

Mr. IRVIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the legislature of the State of Ohio, asking a grant of land to assist in the education of deaf and dumb persons in that State, reported:

That several acts have been passed by the legislature of that State to establish an asylum for the education of deaf mutes. Under the provisions of these acts an asylum has been established at Columbus, the seat of government for said State. In this institution there are now three well qualified teachers, and nearly thirty pupils; and there is reason to believe that the number of pupils may be doubled as soon as suitable accommodations can be provided. In Ohio lands improved or unimproved are taxed, and the revenue for the support of the State government is principally derived from that quarter. As the United States is a large landholder in that State, exceeding four million of acres, and are exempted from the payment of taxes thereon, the committee are of opinion that they ought, in some manner, to contribute to the amelioration of the condition of this unfortunate description of people; and, for that purpose, herewith report a bill.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the State of Ohio respectfully represents: That the general assembly of the State of Ohio having represented to the last Congress their desire that a suitable portion of the unsold lands of the United States should be appropriated for the support of schools for the education of the deaf and dumb; and having particularly requested that a township should be granted to the State of Ohio for this purpose, it is deemed proper to ask the attention of the present Congress to this subject. And although the bill reported to this effect failed, it is believed, chiefly, if not entirely, for want of time, and the pressure of other business, it will not be deemed presumptuous to express a hope that the present session of Congress will not pass away without definitive action on this interesting subject, so as to provide, from the common property of the nation, for the education of that unfortunate class among our fellow citizens.

The system of instruction now adopted has been so fully tested by experience that there remains, it is believed, no reasonable doubt of its entire sufficiency and complete success. Many of those who were deprived of the advantages of the ordinary modes of communication and instruction, have been taught and enlightened, and restored to themselves and to the community, in the enjoyment of the blessings and in the performance of the duties of the social state, as intelligent beings.

And should it even be conceded that the system may possibly be yet so much improved that the education of deaf mutes may be more extensively diffused, and conducted at much less expense, still it would be unwise to suspend our efforts on such a contingency, especially as generations may pass away before any material improvement can be made, and it is only by practical efforts that such improvements, if at all possible, can be effected.

If there are in the United States, as we conclude from the last census, (which is obviously defective in the return of the number of deaf mutes,) not less than five thousand of this class, it is plainly a subject of serious moment, worthy of the attention of an honorable, benevolent, and high-minded legislature, to provide for their instruction. Nor can it be supposed the pecuniary value of that portion of the public property which may be necessary for this use will be brought into view with any unfavorable influence upon the decision of the question whether the aid which is sought shall be given. Only two inquiries need be determined in relation to wise legislation on this point: 1st. Is the public aid needed? 2d. Is it proper that this aid should come from the common funds of the nation? As to the first, it is sufficient to say that the expense attending the education of deaf mutes is much greater than the expense of common schools, and that their parents and friends are generally able to defray but a small portion, if any, of this expense. The pupils must be collected from a large tract of country; must be boarded, clothed, and taught at a great cost, or nearly as great cost as at colleges.

Buildings must be erected, apparatus and furniture must be provided, and teachers must be supported; and it is safe to affirm that fifteen or twenty thousand dollars must be invested in property, and an annual income of nearly ten thousand dollars from all sources must be obtained, in order to establish and sustain an asylum for deaf mutes, which shall constantly afford instruction to one hundred pupils, so as to send forth annually twenty-five pupils, thoroughly instructed. One such institution should be established for every two million of our population, in order to afford, to all who are capable of receiving, the opportunity of being educated.

That this expense be defrayed by the pupils or their friends, even with all the aid that can be obtained from voluntary benevolence, will not be supposed by any one, when it is certainly known that nine-tenths of the deaf are found among the poorer classes of society.

If all the States possessed domains of their own unappropriated to other objects, it might be reasonably alleged that they ought to make full provision for the instruction of their deaf mutes from their several funds. But such is the case with very few, if any, of the States; and they can do nothing for this purpose without drawing from the revenue obtained by direct taxation for other objects. That this measure would be impolitic, and ought to be avoided, if possible, every one will admit. It may be justly deemed quite sufficient to provide in this way for the necessary support of all their indigent pupils. And may it not be regarded as being a wise and useful disposition of a small part of the public lands to apply them, so far as they may be needed, to the education of an unfortunate class of our youth, whose case excites commiseration, and has strong claims on public benevolence?

The State of Ohio has established an asylum for the education of deaf mutes, which has been in successful operation for more than two years. There are in the institution three well qualified teachers and nearly thirty pupils, and there is reason to expect that the number of pupils may be doubled as soon as suitable accommodations can be provided. Anxious to place the institution on a solid foundation, with full means to afford its advantages to all who may desire them, the general assembly earnestly request the Congress of the United States to grant to this asylum such aid, by a donation of land, as may meet its wants and comport with the public interests; to be located in one body, on any of the lands of the United States, or in small tracts, in the State of Ohio: Therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That his excellency the governor be requested to forward a copy of the foregoing memorial, as soon as may be convenient, to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States; also, to each of the senators and representatives in Congress from the State of Ohio.

WILLIAM B. HUBBARD, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WILLIAM DOHERTY, Speaker of the Senate

JANUARY 5, 1832.

AN ACT to amend the act to establish an asylum for the education of the deaf and dumb, and for other purposes.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That there shall be twelve trustees of the Ohio asylum, to be appointed by a joint resolution of both houses, in the manner following: Four shall be appointed at the present session, to hold their offices for one year; four for two years; and four for three years; and in like manner, at every succeeding session, four shall be appointed to hold their offices for the term of three years; and the governor, for the time being, shall be a member and president of the board.

SEC. 2. That the sum of one thousand dollars be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the salary of the principal of the asylum and such other teachers as may be necessarily employed therein, to defray the contingent expenses thereof, and to enable the trustees to give such aid as they may think necessary to such pupils as may not be able to defray the whole expenses of obtaining an education in the asylum, to be paid on the order of the president of the board.

SEC. 3. That one indigent pupil from each judicial district shall be supported in the asylum at the expense of the State, to be selected by the board from amongst those persons who shall be recommended by the associate judges of the counties in which they reside, respectively, as being suitable persons, and in indigent circumstances: Provided, That the sum expended for the support of each pupil shall in no case exceed seventy-five dollars per annum; and said sum is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be paid on the order of the president of the board, accompanied by the certificate of the secretary thereof, stating the name and circumstances of the pupil for the benefit of whom the order is drawn.

SEC. 4. That so much of the act to establish the Ohio asylum for the education of the deaf and dumb, and of any other act, as comes within the purview of this act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

ON CLAIMS TO SETTLERS BETWEEN THE WHITE AND ARKANSAS RIVERS FOR INDEMNITY FOR IMPROVEMENTS MADE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 21, 1832.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the legislative council of the Territory of Arkansas, asking for indemnity for certain settlers between White river and the Arkansas prior to 1817, reported:

The memorial sets forth "that in 1815 a number of bold and enterprising men, the ancestors of many of whom had bled and died in the revolutionary war and struggle for freedom," had settled upon the public lands between White river and the Arkansas, and made lasting and valuable improvements; that in 1817 the United States, by treaty, ceded this land to the Cherokee Indians, and they were compelled to surrender their improvements to the "relentless Cherokees, who, fond of wreaking their vengeance upon the white man, precipitately drove from their homes these hardy and worthy adventurers upon the public lands."

The memorial asks, in behalf of these men, indemnity for the losses which they sustained.

The committee are not informed what number of persons would come within the purview of the prayer of the memorial, and they are admonished, by the hasty legislation in 1828 upon a similar subject, that it would be unwise to legislate in the dark upon this. Reference is made to the provision of the act of Congress which granted to each head of a family, who resided within the boundary ceded to the Indians by a treaty of 1828, (granting to the Indians certain lands within the Territory of Arkansas,) 320 acres of land, with a right to select it anywhere in the said Territory, as an indemnity for the losses sustained by the said settlers on account of their improvements. Under this law upwards of six townships of land have been granted, and much of it under circumstances creating suspicion as to the fairness of the claims. Congress is now asked to indemnify men, not named or numbered, for improvements, not valued or known, made upon the public lands against law. The furthest Congress has ever gone to protect the actual settler upon the public lands, except in the case above, (and in some sections of the country where the settlers were peculiarly circumstanced,) has been to grant them a pre-emption of purchase.

In the instance stated by the memorial, if there was proof of the claimants and the value of the improvements, the committee could not recommend indemnity, and therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer in the memorial ought not to be granted.

ON CORRECTION OF A MISTAKE IN THE ENTRY OF A QUARTER SECTION OF LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 21, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Slaughbough, reported:

That said petitioner represents that on the 26th of September, 1827, he entered a tract of land at Zanesville, Ohio, and that a mistake was made, and his entry was made upon a tract of land not intended to have been entered. That he intended to enter the southwest quarter of section number twenty-three, township number nine, range number six, in the Zanesville district, but that the entry was made on the northwest quarter of said section. The petitioner states that he is a German, and cannot read or speak the English language; and that he commenced making improvements on the quarter section he intended to enter, and never knew of the mistake until the spring of 1831. He also represents that the quarter section entered by him is of little or no value, and that the half he intended to enter has been taken up since by one Michael Kline, and that a patent has issued to him. He prays to be permitted to enter the same quantity of land in some other part of the same district. The committee are satisfied, from the evidence produced, that the mistake was made as alleged by the petitioner, and therefore present a bill for his relief.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 23, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Vallery, reported:

That it is shown by the depositions of several witnesses that Jean Baptiste Vallery, in his lifetime, made a settlement and improvement, previously to the cession of Louisiana to the United States, and with the presumed permission of the Spanish government, on a tract of land situated on the right bank of Red river, about twenty-one miles above the town of Alexandria. It appears that after the death of the husband, his wife (the petitioner) and family continued to occupy and cultivate said land. If this claim, supported by the evidence before the committee, had been presented to the commissioners for the adjustment of land titles in that part of the country, they would have been authorized by law to confirm the claim as a settlement right, to the extent of six hundred and forty acres. The committee are of opinion that the neglect of the claimant to furnish the evidence to the commissioners should not be considered as a forfeiture of the right; they therefore report a bill for her relief.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 23, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John L. Lobdell, reported:

That on the 12th of December, 1798, Don Manuel Layoso de Lemos, at that time governor of Louisiana, granted by patent, in due form, to Stephen Watts seven hundred superficial arpents of land on the Mississippi, in the district of Baton Rouge, about fifteen miles above the fort, on the west bank of the river, and bounded on all sides by vacant lands. It appears that, by various conveyances and transfers, the said tract of land has become the property of the petitioner, but that heretofore it has not been confirmed either by the commissioners or by special act of Congress, but is liable to be sold as public land. Possession has accompanied the title, which is a patent according to the regulations of the Spanish government, and the property, in the opinion of the committee, is guaranteed to the claimant by the treaty of cession; they therefore report a bill for his relief.

ON CLAIM FOR LAND OF THE HEIRS OF AN OFFICER OF THE REVOLUTION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 23, 1832.

Mr. CRANE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Thomas Wallace, deceased, reported:

The petitioners allege that their father, Thomas Wallace, was a lieutenant in the Virginia line on continental establishment; that he continued in the service of the United States until the end of the revolutionary war, and they ask the commutation of five years' full pay. The commission of Thomas Wallace, as a lieutenant in the eighth Virginia regiment, in the army of the United States, is produced as evidence in support of this claim. It is dated on the 23d day of November, 1779, signed by Samuel Huntington, President of Congress, and countersigned by Benjamin Stoddert, Secretary of the Board of War. In 1781 Lieutenant Wallace was ordered to take command of a company belonging to his regiment, then equipped and under marching orders to the southern army, as appears by a letter dated November 19 of that year, addressed to him as a lieutenant in the eighth Virginia regiment, by Christian Febiger, colonel commandant. On the 28th day of March, 1807, a patent for 366⅔ acres, in the Virginia military reservation, was granted by the United States to Thomas Wallace, in consideration of military services performed by him, as lieutenant for three years, to the United States, in the Virginia line on continental establishment.

The records in the Third Auditor's office do not show that Lieutenant Thomas Wallace served to the end of the war, when he entered or left the service, nor that he received commutation, or was entitled thereto, though his name appears in the account books of the army. Yet, notwithstanding this deficiency of record evidence, the committee think that the presumption is very strong that Lieutenant Wallace continued in service until the end of the war; the patent for his bounty land recognizes him as a lieutenant for three years, and that fact must have been satisfactorily established before the issuing of the land warrant. Three years from the date of his commission will bring the time of his service to November, 1782, at which period the war was virtually at an end. A bill for the relief of his heirs is therefore reported.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 24, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 23, 1832.

SIR: The act of Congress, approved on the 20th of April, 1818, entitled "An act for the relief of James Mackay, of the Missouri Territory," provides that the recorder of land titles shall make a report on the claim of the said Mackay, to be laid before Congress by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and it not appearing from the records of this office that the report required by that act was ever received and submitted, I now have the honor to enclose an extract of a letter from the present recorder of land titles, dated the 31st ultimo, together with a copy of the report of the late recorder, Frederick Bates, upon the claim of Mr. Mackay.

I am, with very great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

The PRESIDENT of the Senate.

Extract of a letter from F. R. Conway, recorder of land titles at St. Louis, Missouri, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated January 31, 1832.

"SIR: Your letter of the 3d instant was received on the 27th. In compliance therewith I forward to you a certified copy of a special report of the recorder of land titles in relation to the claim of Mackay, under McDaniel, for 1,800 arpents of land, which was made under the act of April 20, 1818. No copy of the documents referred to therein as accompanying the report is transmitted, as none of them are on file in this office, except the letter of Colonel Hammond."

OFFICE OF THE RECORDER OF LAND TITLES FOR THE TERRITORY OF MISSOURI.

On the 2d day of June, 1818, James Mackay, by his attorney, as authorized by act of Congress of 20th April last, filed in this office a writing purporting to be a warrant of survey or concession from Zenon Trudeau, lieutenant governor of the late Spanish province of Upper Louisiana, called western part of Illinois, bearing date the 1st day of February, 1798, for 1,800 arpents of land, granted to James McDaniel, in the following words and figures, to wit: "To Dr. Zenon Trudeau," &c.—(See document A.)

NOTE.—A sworn translation, substituted by me in place of the original, in French and Spanish.

Afterwards, to wit, on the 15th day of June, 1818, being the day assigned for the presentation of subordinate evidence, both written and oral, the said James Mackay appeared personally, accompanied by his attorney, and presented, in support of the claim, a writing purporting to be a plat and field-notes of the survey of said land, on the river Desperes, in the following words and figures, to wit: "Upper Louisiana," &c.—(See document B.)

NOTE.—A sworn translation, substituted as above.

Also, a writing purporting to be a receipt of James L. Donaldson, late recorder of land titles, for sundry papers in relation to the claims of said James Mackay, in which receipt there is found enumerated the said concession or paper, purporting to be a concession to said James McDaniel.

Also, a paper or writing, purporting to be a deed from said McDaniel to said Mackay, recorded by the said James L. Donaldson, book B, page 433, together with the above-mentioned plat of survey; a translation of which deed is in the following words, to wit.—(See document C.)

Bernard Pratte, being duly sworn, says (after examining the concession to McDaniel, as above stated) that the body of the said concession, to wit, the petition and the decree, is in the handwriting of Antoine Soulard, and that the signature to the decree is in the proper handwriting of Zenon Trudeau, late lieutenant governor.

Antoine Soulard, being duly sworn, says that the requette or petition was written by himself, (the witness,) and that he (the witness) saw the late lieutenant governor, Zenon Trudeau, subscribe his own proper name to the decree or order of survey. Witness further states, that more than one year past, walking the street with James Mackay, when near the tavern of Peebles, the said Mackay observed that he would go in and inquire for letters which he expected to receive from his son. On coming out he held in his hand a letter, which, when opened in presence of witness, was found to be without a name, and to enclose the concession to James McDaniel for 1,800 arpents of land; and which concession has always been said to have been mislaid by the late recorder of land titles, or stolen from his office, in the year 1806; which letter is now presented by witness, and is in the following words, to wit: "Captain Mackay: The enclosed has been taken out of the recorder's office from motives not necessary to be mentioned. Better motives induce me to return it. Make no inquiry on the subject, for it will be useless."

On the 13th October, 1818, there was presented at the recorder's office a writing from Colonel Hammond, in the following words, to wit: "Gabriel Long informed S. Hammond that," &c.—(See document D.) Whereupon the recorder addressed a letter to Gabriel Long, as nearly resembling a summons as his powers permitted, desiring his attendance on the 27th of that month, which letter is in the following words, to wit, &c.—(See document E.)

NOTE.—The recorder has never been able to procure the regular attendance of the said witness.

Remarks and opinions.

1st. There is no Spanish registry of the order of survey, and it is only in cases as to which no distrusts have been entertained that government has forborne to demand authentic evidence.

2d. The plat of survey is in the name of Mackay, and not McDaniel; the deed of conveyance is dated January 3, 1802; the survey certified March 15, 1803. McDaniel, then, never had a legal possession, and according to the principles which have governed the decisions of this office was not competent to convey.

He has, himself, never made an entry of claim, and indeed he could have no valid pretensions, as the possession of Mackay could avail neither one nor the other. On this ground the claim of Rutgers under Dunn, and a great number of others, to the amount of 50,000 arpents, have been rejected. The act of Congress places this claimant as favorably as he could have stood. If my predecessor had recorded his papers in the year 1806, and judging of the case without reference to the loss or recovery of those papers, it is my opinion that the claim ought not to be confirmed.

Respectfully submitted.

FREDERICK BATES.

Admitting the genuineness of the order or concession, the survey is itself void for want of authority. The surveyor is ordered to put one man into possession under special circumstances, and he surveys for and puts another into possession.

Hon. JOSIAH MEIGS, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

RECORDER'S OFFICE, St. Louis, Mo., January 31, 1832.

I certify the foregoing (comprising three pages) to be a true copy of an instrument of writing on file in this office, with the following indorsement, to wit: "Mackay under McDaniel, statement, remarks, and opinion."

ON THE CLAIM OF A WHITE MAN, AS THE HUSBAND OF A CHEROKEE WOMAN, FOR A RESERVATION OF LAND UNDER THE TREATY OF 1830.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 24, 1832.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the memorials of John T Harlan and of Captain Tuckaloona, and others of the Choctaw nation, reported:

The memorialists represent that John T. Harlan, a citizen of the Choctaw nation, in the State of Mississippi, intermarried many years ago with a Cherokee woman, and, in the year 1821, removed with his family into the Choctaw nation, where he has ever since resided. They settled among the Choctaws, by the permission of the authorities of the nation, and were, according to the forms, ceremonies, usages, and customs of the Choctaws, soon afterwards adopted into, and made members of the Choctaw family or tribe; and, by virtue of such adoption, were entitled to, did enjoy, and have ever since continued to enjoy, all of the rights, immunities, and privileges of native citizens of the Choctaw tribe of Indians. The children of said Harlan, nine in number, were, by the Choctaw authorities, recognized as Choctaws from the time of their adoption as aforesaid, and admitted into the missionary schools on an equal footing with the children of the most favored Choctaw families. He is represented as an honest, honorable, but poor man. He settled on a tract of land on Honey island, in Little river, not far from its junction with the Yazoo, where he has, ever since the year 1821 or 1822, continued to live and cultivate a little farm; and by his industry, in a reputable manner, has supported and educated a numerous family, consisting of a wife and nine children, who were dependent on the sweat of his brow for a livelihood. Within six months after the ratification of the treaty made and entered into between the United States and the mingoes, chiefs, captains, and warriors of the Choctaw nation, at Dancing Rabbit creek, on the 27th day of September, 1830, Harlan, on behalf of himself, his wife, and children, signified to Colonel William Ward, the United States agent for the Choctaws, their intention of remaining and continuing citizens of the United States, for the purpose of obtaining a reservation of land for himself and children, under and by virtue of the fourteenth article of the aforesaid treaty. But it seems that the agent rejected the application, and refused to register their names for a reservation. It does not appear on what ground the agent predicated his refusal; but it is more than probable that he rejected the application because he did not consider Mr. Harlan, in the language of the treaty, as a "Choctaw head of a family." It is true that there is among the papers accompanying the memorial a certificate signed by several persons, charging the agent with being "actuated solely by personal and private feelings of enmity towards said Harlan;" but the known integrity of Colonel Ward as an officer, to one of the committee, is sufficient to repel the charge, and forbid the idea of his being actuated by improper motives. It is also stated that Harlan was one of those who aided our country in the war with the Creek nation of Indians. The memorialists ask Congress to pass a law extending to the said John Harlan the same rights and privileges guaranteed by the article of the treaty before mentioned to native Choctaws, and to those who have intermarried with native Choctaws.

The committee do not deem it necessary to enter into an investigation of the tribal laws, usages, or customs of the Choctaws, in relation to the right of the mingoes, chiefs, or captains of the nation, to admit into their territory, on a footing with the natives, a citizen of any other tribe; nor to enter into a repetition of the arguments contained in the report made by the same committee to the House, in favor of Joseph Dukes.—(See report No. 990, January 30, 1832.) It is sufficient for the committee, in the present inquiry, that Harlan, on principles of equity and justice, as well as sound policy, is entitled to the same privileges extended by the 14th article of the treaty to those who were adopted by the authorities of the nation, and intermarried with native Choctaws. The facts set forth in this report, which is nothing more than a simple abstract of the case, gathered from the evidence adduced by the petitioners, are by the committee submitted to the consideration of the House without comment. If Harlan had married a Choctaw, instead of a Cherokee, he would have been entitled to a reservation, under the treaty, of six hundred and forty acres of land for himself, to three hundred and twenty acres for each unmarried child over ten years of age, and to one hundred and sixty acres for each child under ten years of age. The same reasons which induced the government to grant to the head of each Choctaw family and his children conditional reservations of land, agreeably to the provisions of the 14th article of the treaty above referred to, are, in the opinion of the committee, sufficient for them to recommend the granting of the prayer of the petitioners. The committee therefore report a bill, to be entitled "An act for the relief of John T. Harlan."

ON CLAIM FOR LAYING OUT A PUBLIC ROAD IN MICHIGAN THROUGH THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 24, 1832.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition and accompanying documents of Orin White, Seeley Neale, and J. F. Stratton, reported:

The petitioners represent that they were appointed commissioners under and by virtue of the provisions of an act of the legislative council of the Territory of Michigan, approved November 4, 1829, to lay out and establish a road through the Territory of Michigan, known as and called St. Joseph's road, commencing on the Chicago road, at or near the inn of Timothy S. Sheldon, in the township of Plymouth, in the county of Wayne; thence west, on the most direct and eligible route, &c., to the mouth of St. Joseph's river, on lake Michigan. The commissioners have discharged the duty required of them by the act above named, and marked and laid out the road from the waters of lake Erie on the eastern to the waters of lake Michigan, on the western boundary of the peninsula, a distance of one hundred and fifty miles, through the most fertile and desirable part of the Territory, facilitating the means of transportation between Detroit and the most important point on the eastern bank of lake Michigan, and continuing the national thoroughfare by way of the grand canal and lake Erie, connecting the Atlantic and the great commercial emporium of the Union with the western section of the country. The road runs through the counties of Wayne, Washtenaw, Jackson, Calhoun, Kalamazoo, Van Buren, and Berrien, through some of which a public road was never before constructed, and over a tract of country where nature has thrown fewer obstacles in the way of constructing a road than can be found within the same distance in almost any other section of the Union. The opening of the road in the heart of a fine rich country has been the means of bringing into notice the most desirable portion of the lands of the government, exhibiting to public view the fertility, beauty, and worth of the soil, developing its resources, inviting emigrants, and thereby enhancing the value of the public domain. The commissioners were engaged in surveying the road, and making out a plat of the same, a copy of which accompanies the petition, about seventy days each. The act authorizing the laying out of the road did not provide for the payment of the expense of surveying and opening the same, but expressly stipulated "that the expenses or damages of laying out and establishing said road shall not be charged upon or paid out of the territorial treasury;" the commissioners were therefore compelled to resort to individual contributions for the purpose of defraying the expense of making the survey. The road has been partially opened by the enterprising citizens, and was passable during the last season for stages and wagons. The petitioners have received nothing for their services. They, therefore, in consideration of the services by them rendered the government and the community, in laying out and opening this great national road, ask permission of Congress to locate one section of the unappropriated lands belonging to the general government, to be located in separate parcels, divided among them in proportion to the services by them respectively rendered.

A majority of the committee are opposed to the granting of the prayer of the petitioners, because it is establishing a dangerous precedent, and one that is not warranted by the former customs and usages of our government. In the opinion of a minority of the committee, who beg leave to make a few suggestions, the facts of the case are in themselves strong arguments in favor of the granting of the prayer of the petitioners. Reason and justice seem to be on their side. The road was opened through the land of the government, therefore unknown to the community only from a geographical knowledge of the country. It cannot be denied but the services of these enterprising individuals have, by surveying and partially opening this road, and the description they have given of the soil and natural growth of the land through which the road passes, enhanced the value of the public domain to ten times the amount of compensation they ask. In short, the information given of the country in the copy of the field-notes of the surveyor, among the papers referred to the committee, is a valuable document, and ought to be highly prized, and considered of more value to the government, by bringing the land into notice, and on account of the information which it contains, than a whole township of land. It is not, in the opinion of a minority of the committee, a sufficient argument against granting to the petitioners the quantity of land prayed for that they rendered the services and performed the labor voluntarily, without any hope or promise of reward from the United States; but it is a strong argument in their favor, and Congress ought to be the more ready to reward them for their disinterested and patriotic services. They did not act as government leeches, gorging themselves on treasury pap, under the pay of the United States; but they devoted their time, expended their money, and sacrificed their private interests for the good of the community.

Our government, by the high duties on imports, encourages the manufacturer; thousands of dollars have been paid out of the public coffers for the construction of roads and the improvement of the country within the limits of individual States; donations of land have been made in almost every State in the Union for charitable purposes; the mechanic arts have been encouraged by extending to artisans exclusive privileges; meritorious and enterprising individuals have received large donations of land, as rewards for their merit and enterprise; and there is no good reason why the same liberality should not be extended to the citizens of a Territory, who are under the especial care and guardianship of the general government, which has been extended to the citizens of a sovereign State; nor is there any good reason why the unassuming backwoodsman should not be rewarded for services actually rendered the country by making surveys as well as the literary and scientific engineer. Important information obtained in relation to our country is as valuable to the government coming from an honest farmer of Michigan as from a graduate of West Point. A national road, constructed by practical men, who have no interests separate and distinct from the good of their country, is of as much importance as one constructed by the aid of the scholastic theories of salaried or per diem officers. There is scarcely a page on our statute book which does not present a precedent more dangerous than the granting of the humble request of the petitioners. Can it be said that it is a dangerous precedent to grant to these individuals six hundred and forty acres of land, worth, by estimate, $800, for services actually rendered by them of much greater value? It will be recollected that our government has millions of acres of land which has heretofore been considered as pledged for the payment of the national debt. That debt is considered as discharged; and the public domain ought, in the opinion of a minority of the committee, no longer to be considered as a source of revenue, to the injury of those hardy emigrants who have been the pioneers of the wilderness. Other governments have rewarded the enterprise and public services of their citizens, and encouraged the settlement and improvement of the frontier borders of their country, by making liberal donations of land. If there has been any good reason heretofore for the pernicious policy pursued by our government in relation to the public lands, that reason has ceased with the extinguishment of the public debt. But these arguments may be considered as irrelevant, inasmuch as the claim of the petitioners is founded on services by them rendered for the benefit of the general government. A minority of the committee, therefore, with due deference to the opinion of the majority, respectfully recommend the granting of the prayer of the petitioners.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA THAT THE PUBLIC LANDS MAY BE SOLD IN FORTY ACRE LOTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 27, 1832.

A JOINT RESOLUTION relative to the public lands.

Whereas, in the opinion of this general assembly, it is the interest of the general government, as well as of this State, that the public lands within her limits should be disposed of as soon as practicable, as tending to produce the speedy settlement of the same, and to multiply the resources of the country; and whereas a large number of the emigrants to the western States and Territories, as well as the citizens thereof, are, from their poverty, unable to purchase the smallest tracts of land now authorized to be sold at the land offices, but who would be able, by the purchase of smaller tracts, to secure to themselves the blessings of domestic comfort and independence, and thereby create that additional incentive to, and claim upon, their gratitude and attachment towards their beloved country and its free institutions which an interest in its soil can alone produce; therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of a law authorizing the sale of tracts of the public lands of forty acres each, by a line running east and west, equally dividing the half quarter sections, and also by a similar division of fractions of greater amount than eighty acres, where practicable.

A JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly concerning the public lands.

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to obtain by an act of that body a cession from the United States of all the right, title, and interest of the general government to the unappropriated and unsold public lands within our boundaries, upon the most favorable terms to the State that can be obtained, subject to the ratification or rejection of the general assembly of this State, with provision that the proceeds of such remaining public lands, to be sold under the authority of this State, shall be exclusively devoted to the objects of internal improvements and education by the general assembly of this State; reserving to this State a right to donate to poor persons such portions of the land as may remain undisposed of after being in the market, under our direction, for the period of ten years.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR A DONATION OF LAND FOR A CANAL TO CONNECT THE WABASH WITH THE WHITE RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 27, 1832.

A MEMORIAL AND JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly of the State of Indiana to procure means for the construction of a canal to connect White river with the Wabash, at the town of Vincennes.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Indiana, respectfully represent that a connexion of White river with the Wabash at Vincennes would be of great public utility, and would open a most desirable facility to trade, for which a deep solicitude is manifested. The connexion can be formed below the junction of the two forks of White river, at a much less expense than would be required to clean the channel of the Wabash to the confluence of White river, and it is thought the length of the connecting canal will not exceed fifteen miles. It is also believed that the aid of the national government could be afforded to no similar work of the like extent from which more benefit would be derived, not only in the immediate vicinity of the contemplated connexion, but throughout the upper Wabash country, including all interested in the commerce of the Wabash valley. In Knox county, through which this canal would pass, there is a considerable quantity of unappropriated waste lands, which have been about thirty years in market, and which can only, in the event of an improvement of this kind, be useful: Therefore—

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to procure a grant of land sufficient to accomplish the object proposed, from the unappropriated land in Knox county, a large proportion of which, now unfit for agricultural purposes, will be redeemed and rendered beneficial by the construction of said canal.

Resolved, That the governor transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial and joint resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

N. NOBLE.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1029. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR A DONATION OF LAND FOR A ROAD FROM THE SOUTH BEND OF THE ST. JOSEPH'S RIVER TO LIBERTY, IN UNION COUNTY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 27, 1832.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Indiana, respectfully represent that between the southern bend of the St. Joseph's river and the State line of Indiana, in the direction of Hamilton, situate on the Miami canal, in Ohio, there is a vast tract of territory uninhabited, intersected by no navigable streams, and without roads or other facilities of communication; that the territory belongs chiefly to the general government, and unless the means of intercourse are furnished must remain the property of the United States for many years to come, to the great detriment of the State of Indiana; for your memorialists are impressed with the belief that Indiana is no less interested in the sales of the public lands lying within her limits than is the general government, because while the treasury of the one is increased the wealth of the other is equally advanced; our population will be swelled in numbers, and the burden of taxation diminished. Your memorialists would advert to another fact which all experience verifies, that property in the vicinity of roads or navigable streams is much more valuable and commands a greater number of purchasers than property more remote; that for this reason it would be an act not only of profit but expediency on the part of the general government to give a part of the public lands to enable this State to constitute such roads through them as would create a market for the remainder. Your memorialists are also of opinion that a road from the southern bend of the St. Joseph's river to New Castle, in Henry county, thence to Milton, in Wayne county, and from thence through Waterloo, in Fayette county, Brownsville and Liberty, in Union county, to intersect the Hamilton and Oxford turnpike road (now in progress) at the State line between Ohio and Indiana, at or near the northwest corner of Oxford College township, would be eminently calculated to produce the favorable results we have been pointing out. It would enable emigrants to find their way through the wilderness, and be the means of procuring a sale of thousands of acres of land which otherwise may remain without a purchaser for half a century. In addition, also, your memorialists would state that this road would become a great mail route between the northern and eastern parts of the State of Indiana, for which reasons your memorialists would respectfully ask that a quantity of the public lands might be donated to the State of Indiana, equal to each alternate section, two miles in depth on each side of said road where it may run through lands belonging to the government of the United States, to aid in constructing said road.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to forward a copy of the foregoing memorial to each of our senators and representatives in Congress, with a special request that they use their best exertions in procuring the donation contemplated in the preceding memorial.

H. P. THORNTON, Speaker pro tem. of the House of Representatives.

ON CONFIRMING A SALE MADE OF AN INDIAN RESERVATION IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 28, 1832.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Caulfield, reported:

That on the 20th of April, 1818, an act of the Congress of the United States was approved by the President, granting to Peggy Bailey, sister of Dixon Bailey, a Creek Indian of the half blood, who was slain in the service of the United States at the capture of Fort Mims, the right to enter with the register of the land office, without payment, three hundred and twenty acres of land, so as to include the settlement and improvement of the said Dixon Bailey in the Alabama territory. That Peggy Bailey continued in the actual or constructive possession of said tract of land until the 23d of September, 1828, when the said Peggy Bailey, having determined to migrate to the country west of the Mississippi, did, in conjunction with one Richard Robison, who married the said Peggy Bailey, the only other person interested in said tract of land, through their attorney in fact, Benjamin Hawkins, duly authorized, for and in consideration of the sum of one thousand dollars, sell and convey to the petitioner the said three hundred acres of land. By the laws regulating Indian reservations the petitioner was informed at the proper land office that said land was forfeited to the United States so soon as the said Peggy Bailey abandoned the possession, of which law the petitioner swears he was ignorant at the time of the purchase, and the committee believe such to be the fact from the adequate consideration given by the petitioner for said land. At the ensuing session of Congress a law was passed authorizing friendly Indians holding reservations to sell the same in fee simple upon condition of their removal west of the Mississippi. Peggy Bailey having removed west of the Mississippi, and the petitioner having paid her, in the estimation of the committee, an adequate price for said land, it is believed by said committee that the petitioner comes under the equity of the law now in force as regards all other Indian reservations, and have therefore reported a bill authorizing the petitioner to enter said land at government price.

DOCUMENTS RELATING TO SCRIP ISSUED TO SATISFY VIRGINIA MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 28, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 14, 1832.

SIR: I transmit herewith a statement, marked A, containing in part claims for lost entries on Virginia continental warrants, and which have been satisfied by scrip, with explanatory remarks. Many other claims which are not embraced in the statement are similar in character.

In addition to the same, I also transmit copies of letters from my predecessor, marked B and C, to the surveyor of the Virginia military reservation in Ohio, a copy of the act of Congress approved May 20, 1826, marked D, which has an important bearing on the whole, and several copies of certificates from the surveyor accompanying those claims, which are underlined in red in the statement, the whole of which, I trust, will answer your purpose.

With great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. CHARLES A. WICKLIFFE, House of Representatives.

A.

Statement showing several cases where scrip has been issued on lost patents or entries on Virginia continental warrants, the number of the warrant, the quantity, to whom issued, the amount for which scrip has been issued, to whom issued, and the date of the last assignment.

No. of the warrant.	Quantity in warrant.	Name of the person to whom the warrant has been issued.	Quantity for which scrip has been issued.	Name of the person to whom scrip has been issued.	Date of the last assignment.	Remarks.
6160	1,000	J. & M. Hobson, assignee	125			The quantity of 742 acres, for which scrip has been issued to the devisee, was surveyed and patented to Henry Massy in 1826; the survey, however, interfered with a previous entry made in 1787. A certificate of the fact, as required by instructions, (marked B and C,) was furnished by the surveyor; and the authority on which that officer acted in this case is the proviso in the third section of the act of May 30, 1826. (See act herewith.) The certificate is in all respects in conformity to the instructions.
5963	666⅔	....do....	118
5545	5,333⅓	John Moss	50	Helen Massey, devisee.
5606	1,333⅓	Wm. Aylett	338
5473	500	Callohill Minnis	111
6150	200	William Collins	200	William Collins		This is a similar case to the one preceding, and the scrip was issued to the original warrantee.
6623	2,000	D. Kirkpatrick	500	Thomas Green		This warrant was assigned to Nath. Sawyer, who assigned 1,000 acres to Thos. Green, the whole of which was entered; but 500 acres were lost by prior entries, and declared null and void by the act of 20th May, 1826.
6660	2,000	C. Harrison	500	C. Wallace	Feb., 1831	This quantity was entered on lands west of Ludlow's line, on lands surveyed by the United States, and also declared void by the act of May, 1826.
6661	2,000	....do....	500
6666	2,666⅔	John Evans	1,737	C. Wallace		Of the quantity for which scrip has issued, 1,132 acres were entered on lands west of Ludlow's line, and interfering with United States surveys; the balance of 605 acres were patented to M. Bonner, and lost to him by a decision of the court of common pleas for Madison county, Ohio. In this case the lessee of M. Bonner was plaintiff, and Peter Buffenberg, defendant, (in April, 1830.)
2896	200	James Barbour	500	C. Wallace, last assignee.		The whole quantity was patented to S. Gibson; the patent was declared void, and the grantee evicted by a decision of the supreme court of Highland county, Ohio, at the suit of the lessee of Massy's heirs against the patentee; was then re-entered, and again lost by prior entries, and declared void by the act of 1826.
3890	100	Robt. Rankin
3891	100	Robt. Dallis
3892	100	N. Preston
6475	1,266⅔	William Woolfolk	1,233⅓	Amos Kendall & others, executors of the will of Wm. Woolfolk.		Declared void under the act of May, 1826.
6440	3,585	Mary Stephenson	95	Allen Latham	1824	The quantity for which scrip was issued, was heretofore patented to L. Anderson, and lost by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in a writ of error: Jackson, ex dem. of Anderson, plaintiff, vs. Clark & Ellison, defendants in error, &c.
2085	100	Henry Small	100
6480	200	M. Cummings	200
6625	2,000	A. Alexander	1,860	Allen Latham	Mar., 1830	Lost by a prior survey patented; declared void by the act of May, 1826; and the surveyor, in his certificate, says that the principle is so decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the preceding case.
2608	2,666⅔	G. Hite	495	Heirs of Benj. Stephenson.		This claim was admitted, the claimants having been evicted by virtue of a prior grant. (See act of Congress, approved May 7, 1822.
6401	2,000	Allen McLane	2,000	Louis McLane, devisee.		The warrants (each of which is for 250 acres) were entered on lands already surveyed; then withdrawn and satisfied by the issuing of scrip.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 19, 1832.

B.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 2, 1830.

SIR: Apprehending that many applications will be made to withdraw all entries that have been made on Virginia military warrants (on which patents have not been issued) for the purpose of obtaining scrip, I request that you will not permit the withdrawal of any entries that may have been made, except in cases where entries may be found to interfere with lands previously entered. I also request from you immediate advice whether or not your office is in possession of the records of the surveys made in Kentucky for the continental line, and whether copies of them have been deposited with the register of the land office at Frankfort, Kentucky.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

ALLEN LATHAM, Esq., Surveyor, Chilicothe, Ohio.

C.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 10, 1830.

SIR: Enclosed you have a copy of the act of Congress approved on the 30th of May last respecting Virginia military claims.

The Secretary of the Treasury having decided that it is indispensably necessary that the certificates required by the third section of that act shall be produced by the applicants previously to the issuing of the scrip, and the provisions of the seventh section of the act making it necessary that you should give a certificate in relation to the warrants issued to the officers and soldiers of the continental line similar to that required of the surveyor of the Virginia State line; I have, therefore, to request that that certificate may be made out in the following manner, to wit:

"I hereby certify that warrant No. ——, granted to ———— as a ———— in the continental line, has been satisfied in whole or in part by the following entries: Entry No. —— for —— acres. Entry No. —— for —— acres, of which —— acres have been surveyed, and that there yet remains —— acres thereof to be located."

This certificate is required by the law to be under the seal of your office; and it must extend as well to the warrants entered in Kentucky, if you have the records of those entries and surveys, as to those entered in the State of Ohio.

In all cases where there may be an application to withdraw an entry in consequence of the loss by a prior or better claim, you will, of course, make a very thorough investigation before you grant a certificate of the loss of the land, and will grant no certificate in any doubtful case except on actual eviction, and you will particularly state in that certificate the No. of the warrant, and the date of the better and prior entry, and the date also of the junior entry.

As there are some cases where through mistake warrants granted for services performed in the State line have been entered wholly or in part in Ohio, I have to request that you will make out a particular list, so far as you possibly can, of all such cases, and forward it to this office with as little delay as possible.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

ALLEN LATHAM, Esq., Surveyor at Chilicothe, Ohio.

An act to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line, on the continental establishment, their heirs or assigns, entitled to bounty lands within the tract of country reserved by the State of Virginia, between the Little Miami and Sciota rivers, shall be allowed until the first day of June, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, to obtain warrants, and until the first day of June, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, to complete their locations, and until the first day of June, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, to return their surveys and warrants, or certified copies thereof, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to obtain patents: Provided, That no location shall be made by virtue of any warrant obtained after the first day of June, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, and no patent shall issue in consequence of any location made after the first day of June, eighteen hundred and thirty-two: And provided also, That no patent shall be obtained on any such warrant unless there be produced to the Secretary of War satisfactory evidence that such warrant was granted for services which, by the laws of Virginia, passed prior to the cession of the northwestern Territory, would have entitled such officer or soldier, his heirs or assigns, to bounty lands; and also a certificate of the register of the land office of Virginia, that no warrant has issued from the said land office for the same services.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That no patent shall be issued, by virtue of the preceding section, for a greater quantity of land than the rank or term of service of the officer or soldier to whom or to whose heirs or assigns such warrant has been granted would have entitled him to under the aforesaid laws of Virginia; and whenever it appears to the Secretary of War that the survey made by virtue of any of the aforesaid warrants is for a greater quantity of land than the officer or soldier is entitled to for his services, the Secretary of War shall certify, on each survey, the amount of such surplus quantity, and the officer or soldier, his heirs or assigns, shall have leave to withdraw his survey from the office of the Secretary of War and resurvey his location, excluding such surplus quantity in one body from any part of his resurvey, and a patent shall issue upon such resurvey as in other cases.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no holder of any warrant which has been or may be located shall be permitted to withdraw or remove the same and locate it on any other land except in cases of eviction, in consequence of a legal judgment first obtained, from the whole or a part of the located land, or unless it be found to interfere with a prior location or survey; nor shall any lands heretofore sold by the United States within the boundaries of said reservation be subject to location by the holder of any such unlocated warrant: Provided, That no location shall, after the passage of this act, be made on lands for which patents had previously issued, or which had been previously surveyed, nor shall any location be made on lands lying west of Ludlow's line, and any patent which, nevertheless, may be obtained contrary to the provisions of this section shall be null and void.

Approved May 20, 1826.

Notice to applicants for patents under the above act.

The Secretary of War has decided that there shall be furnished, from the records of the State of Virginia, such information as will enable him to certify, in the words of the act, that there has been produced "satisfactory evidence that such warrant was granted for services, which, by the laws of Virginia, passed prior to the cession of the northwestern Territory, would have entitled such officer or soldier, his heirs or assigns, to bounty lands."

The information should be regularly certified by the Governor of Virginia.

The law also requires that before a patent can be issued there must be produced "a certificate of the register of the land office of Virginia that no [other] warrant has issued from the said land office for the same service."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, General Land Office.

To the honorable Secretary of the Treasury of the United States:

I, Allen Latham, surveyor of the land set apart for the officers and soldiers of the Commonwealth of Virginia, on continental establishment, do hereby certify that the within patent is wholly lost by interference with William Washington's survey of 2,000 acres, No. 1388, made on warrant No. 2263, on an entry bearing date August 17, 1787, and being, by act of Congress of May 20, 1826, and prior laws, declared void, has been withdrawn. There yet remains to be located 742 acres of said warrants, in the following proportions:

On Captain Thomas Ray's warrant, No. 6160	125 acres.
On Lieutenant Barbs. Arthur's warrant, No. 5963	118 "
On Major John Moss's warrant, No. 5545	50 "
On Colonel Wm. Aylett's warrant, No. 5606	338 "
On Captain C. Minnis's warrant, No. 5743	111 "
	742

Given under my hand and seal of office at Chilicothe, August 20, 1830, and fifty-fifth year of the independence of the United States.

ALLEN LATHAM. [L. S.]

No. 6660.

To the honorable Secretary of the Treasury:

I, Allen Latham, surveyor of the land set apart for the officers and soldiers of the Commonwealth of Virginia on continental establishment, do certify (from a strict and careful examination of the original documents and records of the surveyor's office for said continental line) that on the 22d of December, 1824, a warrant, No. 6660, issued by the register of the land office of Virginia to Cuthbert Harrison, his heirs or assigns, for 2,000 acres of land, due unto the said warrantee in part consideration of his services for the war as a captain in the Virginia continental line, dated December 3, 1824, was filed in this office, and that there yet remains 500 acres thereof of said warrant to be located; said warrant has been satisfied in part by the following entries, viz: No. 13067, for 300 acres; No. 13068, for 200 acres; No. 13088, for 750 acres; No. 12562, for 150 acres; No. 12564, for 100 acres; all which have been surveyed.

I do further certify that an entry, No. 13172, for 500 acres, was made in this office on said warrant on the 7th day of June, 1830, which said entry is lost by interference with the surveys of the United States west of Ludlow's line, and being, by act of Congress of May 20, 1826, declared void, has been withdrawn, and that 500 acres of said warrant, No. 6660, remains unappropriated.

Given under my hand and seal this 18th August, 1830, and fifty-fifth year of the independence of the United States.

ALLEN LATHAM. [L. S.]

No. 6661.

To the honorable Secretary of the Treasury of the United States:

I, Allen Latham, surveyor of the lands set apart for the officers and soldiers of the Commonwealth of Virginia, on continental establishment, do certify (from a strict and careful examination of the original documents and records of the surveyor's office for said continental line) that on the 22d day of December, A. D. 1824, a warrant, No. 6661, issued by the register of the land office of Virginia, to Cuthbert Harrison, his heirs or assigns, for 2,000 acres of land due unto the said warrantee, in full, in consideration of his services for the war as a captain in the Virginia continental line, dated third day of December, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, was filed in this office, and that there yet remain 500 acres thereof of said warrant to be located. Said warrant has been satisfied, in part, by the following entries, to wit: No. 13168, for 400 acres; No. 13066, for 100 acres; No. 12560, for 200 acres; No. 12557, for 800 acres; all of them surveyed.

I do further certify that 500 acres of said warrant were entered in this office on the 7th June, 1830, in entry No. 13172, which said entry is lost by interference with the surveys of the United States west of Ludlow's line, and being, by act of Congress of May 20, 1826, declared void, has been withdrawn; said 500 acres remain unappropriated.

Given under my hand and seal of office, at Chilicothe, this 18th day of August, 1830, and fifty-fifth year of the independence of the United States.

ALLEN LATHAM. [L. S.]

No. 6666

To the honorable Secretary of the Treasury of the United States:

I, Allen Latham, surveyor of the land set apart for the officers and soldiers of the Commonwealth of Virginia, on continental establishment, do certify (from a strict and careful examination of the original documents and records of the surveyor's office for said continental line) that on the 31st day of December, A. D. 1824, a warrant, No. 6666, issued by the register of the land office of Virginia to John Evans, assignee of James Carson, heir-at-law of James Carson, deceased, for 2,666⅔ acres of land, due unto the said warrantee in consideration of said James Carson's services for the war as a lieutenant in the Virginia continental line, dated ninth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, was filed in this office, and that there yet remain 1,737⅔ acres thereof of said warrant to be located. Said warrant has been satisfied, in part, by the following entries, to wit: No. 12852, for 33⅓ acres; No. 12796, for 30 acres; Nos. 12799, 12827, and 12853, for 100 acres; No. 12795, for 175 acres; No. 12797, for 85 acres; No. 12798, for 25 acres; No. 12846, for 40 acres; No. 12768, for 115 acres; No. 12767, for 60 acres; No. 12766, for 80 acres—all of which have been surveyed; and No. 12849, for 77 acres; No. 12854, for 36 acres, and No. 12855, for 73 acres—the last three not surveyed.

I do further certify that, on the 7th day of July, 1829, an entry of 605 acres was made on said warrant No. 12850, which was surveyed and patented to Matthew Bonner on the 24th of July, 1829, which entry and patent has been lost by interference with David Stephenson's survey, No. 5593, for 360 acres, founded on an entry dated March 14, 1808, and on warrant No. 347, as determined by the court of common pleas of Madison county, in the State of Ohio, at the April term of said court, in the case wherein the lessee of said Bonner was plaintiff and Peter Buffenburg was defendant. The said lessee claiming title under patent, and the said entry and patent, being determined void, has been withdrawn. I do further certify that, on the 7th June, 1830, 1,132½ acres of said warrant were entered in No. 13172, which entry is lost by interference with the surveys of the United States west of Ludlow's line, and being, by act of Congress of May 20, 1826, declared void, has been withdrawn, which leaves one thousand seven hundred and thirty-seven and one-third acres of said warrant No. 6666 unappropriated.

Given under my hand and seal of office, at Chilicothe, this 18th day of August, 1830, and fifty-fifth year of the independence of the United States.

ALLEN LATHAM. [L. S.]

No. 6440.

To the honorable Secretary of the Treasury:

I, Allen Latham, surveyor of the land set apart for the officers and soldiers of the Commonwealth of Virginia, or continental establishment, do certify (from a strict and careful examination of the original documents and records of the surveyor's office for said continental line) that on the 31st day of May, 1821, a warrant, No. 6440, issued by the register of the land office of Virginia to Mary Stephenson, widow and devisee of John Stephenson, her heirs and assigns, for 3,555⅓ acres of land, due unto the said warrantee in consideration of said John Stephenson's services for the war as a major in the Virginia continental line, dated April 20, 1821, was filed in this office, and that there yet remain 95 acres thereof of said warrant to be located. Said warrant has been satisfied, in part, by the following entries, viz: No. 10884, for 217 acres; No. 10701, for 150 acres; No. 11089, for 72 acres; Nos. 1070, 12134-'5-'6-'7-'8, for 400 acres; No. 12124, for 728 acres; No. 10698, for 450 acres; Nos. 12144 and 12145, for 1,005 acres; and No. 10861, for 438 acres; in all, 3,460 acres, which said entries have been surveyed.

I do further certify that 95 acres of said warrant were entered in this office in an entry of 395 acres, No. 12468, on the 10th of June, 1824, surveyed and patented to Larcy Anderson on the 9th November, 1824, and lost by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, by a survey of 553 acres in the name of Nath. Massie, made on two warrants that had been previously satisfied, Nos. 3398 and 1950, admitted to record by mistake; said survey is founded on an entry, No. 2744, made July 19, 1796. Said ninety-five acres so lost have been withdrawn and remain unappropriated.

Given under my hand and seal of office, &c., August 17, 1830.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1032. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 29, 1832.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Bills, reported:

That John Bills, of the parish of East Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana, sets forth in his petition that he settled upon a tract of land in said parish in the year 1813 containing two hundred and fifty-seven acres; that so soon as the land office was established at St. Helena, and commissioners appointed to grant certificates to actual settlers, he made application, and adduced evidence to said commissioners of his settlement on said land, for the purpose of obtaining a donation for the quantity of six hundred and forty acres, or a less quantity in the event that there did not exist at that time vacant land sufficient to complete said donation; that his title and evidence of settlement were left with said commissioners by him, and were by said commissioners lost or destroyed, thereby preventing him from applying to the successors of said commissioners for a certificate. Petitioner further states that he afterwards applied for and obtained a pre-emption right for one hundred and sixty acres only; that upon actual survey of said pre-emption, the lines divide his improvement, and cut off his gin house and other buildings. Said petitioner prays that the lines may be so run as to secure to him his improvements, or so as to include the balance of the tract of two hundred and fifty-seven acres, for which he is willing to pay the minimum price. It was proven by General Thomas, of the House of Representatives, that the facts set forth in said petition, as relates to the settlement and survey, are correct; and, further, that said petitioner has deposited in the proper office the sum required by law to purchase the said one hundred and sixty acres of land. The committee therefore report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1033. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE EXPEDIENCY OF DIVIDING THE DISTRICT OF THE SURVEYOR GENERAL FOR MISSOURI, ILLINOIS, AND ARKANSAS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 2, 1832.

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of February 9, 1832, I have received the accompanying report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, "on the extent and amount of business of the surveyor general's district for Missouri, Illinois, and Arkansas, and the expediency of dividing the said district," which is respectfully submitted to the Senate.

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 29, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate requesting the President of the United States "to cause a report to be made to the Senate on the extent and amount of business of the surveyor general's district for Missouri, Illinois, and Arkansas, and the expediency of dividing said district," which you have been pleased to refer to this office to report thereon, I have the honor to state that the duties of that surveying district have relation to about thirty-seven millions of acres of unsurveyed lands, now the property of the United States, to wit: sixteen millions in Missouri, four millions in Illinois, and seventeen millions in Arkansas.

Since the year 1826 there have been surveyed in that district, of which this office has been advised, two million six hundred and seventy-five thousand acres, exclusive of private claims not connected with the public lands. Of these surveys no township plats have been returned to this office for one million one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres, in consequence of the insufficient aid furnished by the government. There also remains a large amount of unfinished business in that office, which accrued prior to the period when the present incumbent entered upon its duties, and which has retarded the progress and delayed the returns of the public surveys. The character and amount of arrears prior to the year 1826 are stated in a letter from Colonel McRee to my predecessor, dated May 2, 1826, an extract of which is hereunto annexed, marked A.

In the early part of the year 1827 the present surveyor general reported to this office in detail the amount of labor which would devolve on him during that year, exclusive of the unfinished business which had accrued prior to the year 1825, with copious remarks and explanations showing the difficulties he then had to encounter and the impossibility of discharging all the duties required of him with the means provided for his assistance, as will appear from the documents marked B, C, and D, herewith transmitted.

This office is not in possession of such authentic or official information as to enable me at this time to estimate with probable accuracy the amount and extent of business in that surveying department—the surveyor general, after repeated requests for that purpose within the last three years, having entirely neglected to furnish it—but sufficient, however, is known on the subject to induce the belief that there is now as great a quantity requiring immediate attention as at any former period since the year 1826, and that the amount of arrears and unfinished business of the office are at the present time as great and as embarrassing as they have ever been.

From the quantity of public lands remaining unsurveyed, and the numerous private claims which are required to be surveyed in connexion with the surveys of the public lands in Missouri and Arkansas, and the increasing amount of unfinished business of the office, I entertain no doubt of the expediency of dividing that district, as a measure called for by the interests of the government and the necessities of the people.

If such should be the opinion of Congress, I would respectfully suggest the propriety of making the Territory of Arkansas a surveying district, and of annexing Illinois to the district now composed of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, which would limit the present district to the State of Missouri.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

A.

Extract from a letter from Colonel McRee to George Graham, esq., dated St. Louis, May 2, 1826.

"I find it necessary to state, for the information of the department at Washington, that this office, as now organized, is wholly inadequate to the correct performance of a fourth part of the duties that have devolved upon it and are required of it by the express terms of the law, independent of those which are incidental, including a large portion of the requisitions of the General Land Office.

"Your letter of the 2d of June last, directing the worn out plats of the different land offices to be renewed with all possible despatch, has not been complied with, except in one instance. I found it impossible to execute those instructions, and, after the first effort, gave up the attempt as hopeless. Most, if not all, the plats sent to the several land offices will require to be renewed within a very few years; a great number of them require to be renewed now. The register of the land office at Kaskaskia reported that all the plats in his office came within the description given in your circular of May 31, 1825, and demanded the renewal of the whole number. There are near four thousand wanting in this office under an express injunction of the law—that is to say, several hundred which, from various causes, ought to be renewed, and an entire new set (to be of record, besides those which are now kept, in compliance with another enactment,) for the use and inspection of the public And your letter of the 14th of October last contemplates a future demand of some three thousand three hundred, for the use of the General Land Office at Washington. But these are mere items; there is near ten years' arrearage of other work on hand, which must be performed before either accuracy or promptness can characterize the operations of this office. Until then, I am working in the dark, and the correctness of my intentions affords no guarantee to the government for that of my performance.

"The current duties of conducting the annual surveys of the public lands, &c., and keeping a record of them, are fully equal to the constant employment of all the means at the disposal of the surveyor. It is apparent, therefore, that the labor bestowed on work of a former period is so much taken from that of the time being, which must be postponed and neglected in consequence.

"I might also mention another class of duties which demands some labor, and obstructs a great deal more. I mean the surveys, &c., of private claims, and from which there is no escape. In relation to all these duties, and to others not enumerated, the law is positive in its injunctions, while it withholds the means of executing them, and is at once imperative and impossible to obey."

B.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, January 25, 1827.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith an estimate of the several descriptions and quantity of work (so far as it can be stated with exactness) which ought to be performed in this office during the present year, exclusive of the unfinished office business prior to the year 1825.

The work specified in the estimate will require two thousand three hundred and seventy-one days' labor (of one person) to perform it in; and much the larger portion of it cannot be postponed without great detriment to the public interest and to that of the community here. Many items are omitted, (which will command the attention of the office, to the exclusion of some that are embraced in the estimate,) because it was impossible to anticipate or make any reasonable calculation of their extent and the labor they will occasion. I am obliged to suspend for the present making several explanatory remarks which ought to accompany the estimate, in order to forward it by to-day's mail, which leaves this within the hour.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

W. McREE.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington.

C.

Estimate of the quantity of work to be performed in the surveyor's office in St. Louis during the year 1827, and of the probable time that will be occupied in performing each description specified.

	Days.	Total.
FIRST.—To examining surveys, resurveys, and corrections, to complete the plats and descriptions, and to finish the examination of the same, of townships and fractional townships surveyed under contract of 1825 and one of 1823, and to make out additional plats and descriptions that will be required for a part of said townships and fractional townships:
1st. To complete the calculation of the areas and to finish the plats of 34 townships and fractional townships, the surveys of which are complete and no part suspended, will require	8
2d. To complete the examination of the same will occupy two persons three days, equal to one person	6
3d. To make triplicate plats of two of ditto, one plain and one river township, and to compare, correct, and certify same, will occupy	8
4th. To complete the description of said 34 townships and fractional townships, and to finish examination of the same, will require	29
5th. To complete the calculations of the areas of the fractional sections, and to finish the plats of 21 townships and fractional townships heretofore returned and suspended, will require	34
6th. To complete the examination of the plats of ditto will occupy two persons six days, one person	12
7th. To complete the descriptions of ditto, and finish the examination of the same, will occupy two persons 15 days, one person	30
8th. To complete the calculation of the areas of the fractional sections, and to finish the plats of 39 townships and fractional townships, the surveys of which are suspended in part, will occupy	50
9th. To complete the examination of the plats of ditto will occupy two persons six days, one person	12
10th. To complete the descriptions of ditto, and finish the examination of the same, will occupy two persons 20 days, one person	40
11th. To examine the resurveys and corrections of ditto will occupy	26
12th. To make out and examine one additional plat of each of ditto will occupy	39
13th. To make out and examine one additional description of each of ditto will occupy nearly	35
Total number of days' work to complete the reception of surveys, &c., under contracts of 1825 and 1823	.....	329
SECOND.—Examining surveys (exclusive of resurveys, &c.,) of public land that will be returned during the present year under contract of 1826; making out and examining the necessary plats and descriptions thereof, viz:
44 plain townships, (see statement A, herewith.)
1st. Collating the copies with the original field-notes, and correcting the copies, at the rate of six townships per diem, by two persons, is seven days—equal to	14
2d. Making out four plats of each township will occupy one person three days nearly; (see statement B, herewith,) 44 townships, at three days each, is or nearly	132
3d. Making out three descriptions of each township will occupy one person (statement B)	102
4th. Examining, correcting, and certifying the plats: 176 plats will occupy two persons, at the rate of ten per diem, 17½ days—equal to	35
5th. Examining and correcting the descriptions: 132 descriptions will occupy two persons, at the rate of ten per diem, 13 days—equal to	26
13 river townships, containing an average of ten miles of meanders in each:
1st. Collating the copies with the original field-notes, and correcting the copies, at the rate of 4½ townships per diem, by two persons, is three days nearly—equal to	6
2d. Making out four plats of each township, 52 plats, will occupy one person 83 days, including the calculating and protracting of ten miles, or 85 courses of meanders in each township, (see statement A)	83
3d. Making three descriptions of each township, in all, 39 descriptions, will occupy one person (statement A)	32
4th. Examining, correcting, and certifying the plats: 52 plats will occupy two persons, at the rate of eight per diem, 6½ days—equal to	13
5th. Examining and correcting the descriptions: 39 descriptions will occupy two persons, at the rate of nine per diem, about four days—equal to	8
48 fractional river townships, averaging in size about the half of a whole township, and containing an average of 5½ miles, or 47 courses of meanders in each:
1st. Collating the copies with the original field-notes, and correcting the copies, will occupy two persons, at the rate of about nine townships per diem, five days—equal to	10
2d. Making out four plats of each fractional township, including the calculations and protracting of 5½ miles of meanders, or 47 courses in each. 192 of those plats will occupy one person (statement B)	162

3d. Making out three descriptions of said townships will occupy one person (statement B)	66
4th. Examining, correcting, and certifying the plats: 192 plats will occupy two persons, at the rate of about 15 per diem, 13 days nearly—equal to.	26
5th. Examining and correcting the descriptions: 144 descriptions will occupy two persons, at the rate of 16 per diem, nine days—equal to	18
2,546 miles of townships, exterior boundaries:
1st. Comparing the copies with the original field-notes, and correcting the copies, will occupy two persons seven days nearly—equal to	14
2d. Making out duplicate general plats of seven districts, comprising 2,394 miles of said exterior boundaries, 14 general plats of exteriors will occupy one person	25
3d. Comparing and correcting the 14 plats will occupy two persons three days—equal to	6
Total number of days' work on the survey of 105 townships, and 2,546 miles of exterior boundaries		778
THIRD.—Examining resurveys and surveys, to complete those of townships heretofore surveyed in part (and which will be returned during the present year) under contract, and instructions of 1826; making out and examining the necessary plats and descriptions thereof, viz:
7 river townships, containing an average of 12 miles of meanders in each, viz:
1st. Collating the copies with the original field-notes of the resurveys, estimated at	2
2d. Making out four new plats of each township, including the calculation and protracting of 12 miles, or 102 courses of meanders in each; 28 plats will occupy one person 47 days, including the calculation and protracting of 102 courses of meanders in each township, (see statement B)	47
3d. Making out three new descriptions of each township will occupy one person, (statement B)	17
4th. Examining, correcting, and certifying the plats: 28 plats will occupy two persons, at the rate of eight plats per diem, 3½ days—equal to	7
5th. Examining and correcting the descriptions: 21 descriptions will occupy two persons, at the rate of nine per diem, 2⅓ days—equal to	5
Resurveys and partial surveys in 70 fractional river townships, averaging in size one-half of a whole township, and containing an average of about eight miles, or sixty-eight courses of meanders in each, viz:
1st. Collating the copies with the original field-notes of the resurveys, &c., in the 70 townships, estimated to occupy two persons four days—equal to	8
2d. Making out four new plats of each of said townships, including the calculations and protracting of eight miles meanders each: 280 plats will occupy one person, (see statement B)	266
3d. Making out three new descriptions of each township: 210 descriptions will occupy one person	96
4th. Examining, correcting, and certifying the plats: 280 plats will occupy two persons, at the rate of 15 per diem, about 18½ days—equal to	37
5th. Examining and correcting the descriptions: 210 descriptions will occupy two persons, at the rate of about 16 per diem, 11 days—equal to	22
Total number of days' work occasioned by resurveys, &c., in 77 river and fractional townships		507
FOURTH.—Collating and correcting plats and descriptions of 20 townships and fractional townships which have been advertised for sale, the plats and descriptions whereof have been made, but not heretofore been sent to the land office, will occupy		15
FIFTH.—Making out instructions for connecting the section lines with the east boundary of Illinois, (north of Wabash,) and making out new plats and descriptions of the townships through which said line runs:
1st. Preparing and copying letters of instructions and making, for the use of the surveyor, a plat and descriptions of each of the townships, 16 to 27 north, range 10 west of second principal meridian, through which said line runs (12 townships) will occupy	13
2d. To make four new plats and three new descriptions of each of said townships, after the section lines are connecting with the State boundaries, will occupy	42
3d. To examine the notes of said connexions, and the new plats and descriptions, will occupy two persons six days—equal to one person	12
4th. To calculate the areas of the sections made fractional by said line will occupy	3
Total number of days' work to make out instructions for connecting the section lines with the east body of Illinois, and making new plats, &c.		70
SIXTH.—To make out contracts and instructions for surveying and resurveying out boundaries of the commons, common fields, and towns or villages, and for surveying the town or village lots, out lots, and common field lots, in, adjoining, or belonging to the several towns or villages of Portage des Sioux, St. Charles, St. Ferdinand, Vil-

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, January 25, 1827.

"SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, January 30, 1827.

"SIR: I had the honor of transmitting to you on the 25th instant an estimate of so much of the current business of this office (exclusive of the old unfinished work) as could be ascertained and stated with precision. I was obliged, however, to defer making some explanations which ought to have accompanied it, and which I now beg leave to offer.

"The first circumstance that will probably excite your attention, on looking over the estimate, is the great amount of labor that is required, compared with the amount of surveys to be executed and returned, the former being stated at two thousand three hundred and seventy-one days' work, which (allowing three hundred and twelve working days to the year) would, therefore, occupy eight persons almost a whole year, and for the most part in performing the duties incident to directing, and to the reception of a less amount of surveys than has frequently been received in the office in one year, with the assistance of only three clerks. It is, notwithstanding, evident that there is no description of work introduced into the estimate except such as the law directs shall be performed in this office; that the greater part is of urgent necessity, and that none of it can be postponed without inconvenience to the service. And (although from the nature of the work it is impossible that the labor necessary to accomplish it can be determined with much accuracy) it might perhaps be sufficient to add that the rate of performance has not been gratuitously assumed, but regulated and scaled with care by actual and recent experience; but a more direct and satisfactory explanation may be given. The estimate includes the making out of eight hundred and nine township plats and six hundred and twenty-one descriptions, in consequence of surveys and resurveys that will be executed under previous contracts, and returned in the course of the present year; and heretofore the plats and descriptions of all original surveys have been made or furnished by the deputy surveyors. This procedure, however, was not the result of choice, but grew out of the excessive disproportion between the duties required of the office and the comparatively trifling means that were assigned to it for their performance. It was physically impossible for the principal surveyor of this district to comply with all the requisitions of the law, and, indeed, there was no alternative left to him but to suspend the public surveys or to exact the necessary plats and descriptions of the contracting deputies. The latter was adopted, and I need not point out the consequences that ensued, or remind you of its having been disapproved of and pronounced to be irregular, if not illegal. I have, therefore, not required either plats or descriptions of any deputy surveyor in the contracts of last year, and the labor of making out those documents exceeds, as you will perceive, that of all the other items enumerated in the estimate.

"The estimate also includes four plats of each township in lieu of three that were heretofore furnished by the deputy surveyors: two of the former are intended for the use of this office—one of them to be placed on record, and the other to be kept for the inspection of the public, agreeably to an act of Congress. Daily experience shows the advantages that would be derived from this measure, independent of the propriety of complying with a provision of the act referred to. The township plats that are used in common by the public and by the office finally became so worn or mutilated as to be unfit to copy from; and to reconstruct a plat from the field-notes will frequently occupy more than twice the time that is required to make out a mere copy. Besides, a correct set of plats placed on record and properly preserved would, in a great measure, prevent the mutilation and loss of portions of the field-notes to which they are now exposed, in consequence of being obliged to use them on every occasion requiring a new plat, where the one on file happens to be either inaccurate or much injured. The fourth township plat is, notwithstanding, among the least essential of the several objects comprised in the estimate, and, together with the duplicates of the general plats of township exteriors and the four connected plats of land districts, (amounting in all to about three hundred days' work,) may be dispensed with or postponed with less inconvenience than any other. I have already intimated that in some respects the estimate is necessarily inaccurate. The following considerations will make it apparent that its errors (in rating the labor) are not those of excess: The time that may be occupied in the reception, &c., of any given amount of surveys depends essentially on the character of the work. The number, nature, and extent of the errors that may have been committed on the ground or in the returns of the deputy surveyor, influence, on every step in the progress of the examination, making out the plats and descriptions, memoranda of the parts that are erroneous, instructions for their resurvey or correction, &c.; the simplest operations may be rendered laborious by the repetitions and various delays that are unavoidable where the work to be received is badly executed and the returns carelessly made. At the same time, it is nearly impossible to make any reasonable calculation whatever concerning these contingencies. It may be objected, perhaps, that the public surveys ought not to be of the description that here is alluded to, and that it would be improper for the United States to provide beforehand for expenses which can only be incurred through the negligence or disobedience of its agents. The estimate is made in conformity with these views; it is throughout supposed that none of the surveys will be seriously objectionable, and hence a very probable cause of its inaccuracy and of its calculations falling below the truth, notwithstanding the precautions that have been taken to insure a faithful and correct execution of the surveys under last year's contracts.

"I will now proceed to give some account of those portions of work which were omitted in the estimate, in consequence either of the difficulty of ascertaining their amount or of their being looked upon as less urgent than the rest.

"First. Recording the field-notes of the surveys of public lands that will be returned under contracts of the last year. The labor of recording these notes might have been stated with as much accuracy as that of any item in the estimate; but, however useful and requisite the performance of this work may be in other respects, it was not considered necessary at this time to the despatch of the ordinary and more pressing business of the office. It is properly a part of much greater undertaking, and may be delayed until the whole body of the field-notes shall be recorded.

"Second. Examining and making out plats and descriptions of surveys of public land that may be executed and returned under contracts of the present year.

"Third. Repairing or making out plats and descriptions (not heretofore furnished to the Land Office) of townships that have been surveyed, and which may be advertised for sale during the present year. There are about six hundred and fifty-one townships that have been surveyed, but not advertised for sale, exclusive of those surveyed under contracts of 1825 and 1826, and exclusive of those embraced in Mr. Messinger's contract in the Illinois military bounty tract; of the above six hundred and fifty-one townships, there are six hundred and nineteen of which duplicate plats are on file in this office, but the plats of only seventy-seven are authenticated; and there are thirty-two townships of which only one plat of each is on file, and of these only eight that are authenticated, so that there are thirty-two townships of which new plats must be made, twenty-four of them perhaps in duplicate, and five hundred and forty-two townships, the duplicate plats of which must be examined and corrected or made out anew from the field-notes, as may be found necessary, whenever they shall be called for "Fourth. Resurveys of private claims, in addition to those referred to in the estimate, and correcting and making out new township plats and descriptions that may be required in consequence of such additional resurveys. The decision of the Attorney General in the case of Musich and in that of Henington opens a wide field for similar demands on the part of other land claimants. In surveying private claims, this office had heretofore been governed by the terms of the confirmations that were furnished to it by the several boards of commissioners and the recorder of land titles; and consequently, when a claim was confirmed for a specific quantity, the survey was made to include that quantity, and no more—the excess of the old Spanish survey being thrown off from any one of its sides, at the option of the claimants, or the deficiency, if any, made good in the same manner. But according to the decision of the Attorney General, it appears that in certain cases the claimant is entitled to hold agreeably to the original Spanish survey, without reference to the quantity specified in the confirmation. The surveys formerly made by this office are therefore void in all such cases, and require to be corrected; and to resurvey them at this time must be necessarily attended with great difficulty. The side of a former survey, on which an excess had been cut off, may have subsequently become the boundary to the survey of another claim; and in every instance of the resurvey of a claim so circumstanced, it is evident that the re-establishment of the old Spanish boundary line must push the resurvey on the adjoining claim, and the latter may, in turn, be made to encroach on one or more of those which may happen to bind on it. The errors in the several lists of confirmations furnished to this office, and the very inadequate descriptions given to the claims, have occasioned erroneous surveys to be made, which it will also be necessary to correct, or resurvey on application of the claimants; and in proof of this, I might cite several cases that have already occurred within your own knowledge, and others that have not yet been brought before you by the parties concerned.

"Fifth. Making out township plats for the land offices, to replace those that are worn out and useless, agreeably to the instructions received from the General Land Office of June 2, 1825. Several other registers have already applied for new plats. The register at Kaskaskia reports the whole of those in his office to be unfit for use. A considerable number might, therefore, have been included in the estimate; but it was believed to be less important to renew the plats of townships that had been many years in market, and probably contained but very little land unsold for which there existed any present demand, than to complete those of townships that were about being offered for sale, or which might be brought into market before the close of the year.

"Sixth. Miscellaneous work of various descriptions, including such as may be occasioned by unforeseen requisitions of the General Land Office; furnishing information and copies of surveys, &c., to private individuals, and the correspondence of the office. There is a great deal of time that is either occupied or lost by attending to business which may properly be considered as miscellaneous. The law makes the certificate of the principal surveyor, in relation to all surveys executed by the office, receivable as evidence in the courts, and it also directs a set of plats of the public surveys to be kept open for the inspection of the public; of both these provisions the community avails itself without stint, to the interruption and great delay of other work. Almost every man that has, or thinks he has, any business with the office commands its attention, tells his own story in his own way, but too frequently making it necessary to cross-question him before the state of his case can be learned, and possibly, after all, it may result that his affairs have no concern with the surveyor's office.

"Under the six foregoing heads is comprised a body of work that cannot be brought within the limits of any probable calculation; but however uncertain the amount, a part of it will be indispensable to perform in preference to much that is included in the estimate. Before closing these remarks I would observe, that such is the character of the business of the office and of its present situation, that whatever may be the description or quantity of current work to be done in it in any one year, the means allowed for its performance should always exceed the estimated labor; there would be no more danger then than now of losing any time; for if the ordinary business should be accomplished with more ease than had been anticipated, the recording of the field-notes and making out plats of about three thousand townships of the old surveys would alone furnish objects enough to occupy every individual in the office, and its operations might be conducted with some regularity. The distribution of labor might be so arranged as to secure greater despatch and much more accuracy than can be hoped for at present. Many errors that are now overlooked, many that are committed, would be detected or avoided. In short, all the consequences of being continually in arrears in the performance of ordinary duties, and of having a mass of constantly accumulating unfinished business on hand, would necessarily cease."

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1034. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 6, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James W. Branan, Charles Hughes, and Nathaniel Ford, reported:

That they have carefully examined the report heretofore made by the Committee on Private Land Claims to the House, and the House to the same, (for a statement of the facts of the cases submitted to them, see No. 853, page 184,) with this additional statement, that it appears from the answer of Branan, filed in the district court of Missouri, and which constitutes a part of the record submitted to them by the applicant, that shortly after the sale to Branan, in 1821, by Trammel, the said Branan learned that doubts were entertained as to the validity of Trammel's title, and that the same had been fraudulently obtained from the United States, and that in 1825 he executed to said Trammel a relinquishment of all claims upon his covenant of warranty upon Trammel's agreeing to surrender one-third of the consideration money originally agreed to be given for the land; and it further appears that said Hughes and Ford both received conveyances from said Trammel without any covenant of warranty as to title, and that they both knew that a suit had been instituted in the State courts of Missouri by a man named Taylor Bery, probably claiming title under Collins, the real owner of the New Madrid certificate, though there is no proof as to the title he claimed; from these facts, the committee are not inclined to believe that the said purchasers from Trammel are brought to be regarded as innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, although there is much other testimony of a negative character binding to show they were innocent purchasers.

The committee are of opinion that the suit instituted in Missouri in the name of the United States was properly commenced, and that it ought to be prosecuted, and that the patent, if fraudulently obtained from the United States by Trammel, ought to be rescinded or repealed; and that the questions arising in behalf of the purchasers from Trammel have been made by them before the court, the proper tribunal for their determination, where they can and will be better investigated and more justice done than it would be possible for a committee of Congress, upon the ex-parte statements and evidences submitted to them.

The committee therefore recommend a rejection of the claim of the petitioners.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1035. [1ST SESSION.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES AT THE SEVERAL LAND OFFICES OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE YEAR 1831.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 10, 1832.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 9, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 23d ultimo, "instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the House the amount of money paid to each register and receiver of the land offices for the last twelve months, including their salary, distinguishing for what paid, also the amount of public moneys received at each land office during the same time," I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which contains the information required.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 8, 1832.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 23d ultimo, in the words following, to wit: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to this House the amount of money paid to each register and receiver of the land offices for the last twelve months, including their salary, distinguishing for what paid, also the amount of public moneys received at each land office during the same time," and which you have referred to this office, I have the honor to transmit the accompanying statement, furnishing the information desired.

The period embraced by the statement is the year ending the 31st December last, as the accounts are rendered for the quarter year ending on that day, the returns for the month of January not having been all received.

The act of April 20, 1818, entitled "An act for changing the compensation of receivers and registers of the land offices," allows to each officer an annual salary of $500, and a commission of one per cent. on moneys received to a maximum of $2,500, in any one year, for commissions. The register receives his commission on the moneys entered in his office during the quarter. The receiver receives credit for the amount of his commission, as he accounts to the treasury for the money from quarter to quarter. Hence the amount of the register's and receiver's commission, for any given period, will not correspond, except in cases where the receiver accounts within such period for the precise amount of moneys received during the same, and for no previous balance.

The allowance for transporting public money is made under the provisions of the act to that effect, of May 22, 1826.

The allowance for superintending public sales is made under the provisions of the act of April 24, 1820, entitled "An act making further provision for the sale of the public lands."

As the quarterly accounts of the receivers of public money are not yet adjusted for the whole period embraced by the accompanying statement, I deem it necessary to remark that, in such cases, the statement exhibits the allowances which, after a short examination, it is believed will be admitted on the official adjustment. This explanation is considered proper, in case there should be any variance discovered between this statement and the allowances made after the official adjustment of the accounts at this office, and the subsequent revision thereof by the First Comptroller of the Treasury.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

Statement of the amount of money paid to each register and receiver of the land offices for the year ending December 31, 1831, including their salary, distinguishing for what paid; also the amount of public moneys received at each land office during the same time, rendered in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives of February 23, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 8, 1832.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1036. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 12, 1832.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the petitions of James Porlier, Alexander Gardipier, John B. Vine, and Joseph Jourdain, reported:

By an act of Congress approved the 21st of February, 1823, it was declared "that every person who, on the 1st day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twelve, was a resident of Green Bay, Prairie du Chien, or within the county of Michilimackinac, and who on said day occupied and cultivated, or occupied a tract of land which had previously been cultivated by said occupant, lying within either of said settlements, and who has continued to submit to the authority of the United States, or to the legal representatives of every such person, shall be confirmed in the tract so occupied and cultivated; provided, however, that no person shall be confirmed in a greater quantity than six hundred and forty acres." Commissioners were authorized to adjudicate on claims arising under the act, and the time limited for the exercise of their powers was the first of November then next ensuing.

James Porlier alleges that in 1811 he purchased of Nicholas Vieux a lot of land for a valuable consideration, situate on the east side of Fox river, designated as lot number eighteen on the plat; and that from 1810 to the present time he has continued in the possession of and cultivated the same; and that late in the fall of 1823 he forwarded to the commissioners at Detroit, appointed under the act of Congress of 1823, a notice of his claim, together with the necessary and proper testimony to support it, which testimony he believes was lost or mislaid, in consequence of which the said commissioner did not confirm the said tract of land.

To support his claim the said James Porlier produces the testimony of Brisque Hoytt and Joseph Ducharme, who say that he did purchase said lot of land of said Nicholas Vieux; that on the said first of July, 1812, he did occupy, improve, and cultivate the same, and that since that time he has submitted himself to the authority of the United States.

The other petitioners represent that they have individually occupied, improved, and cultivated each a tract of land at said Green Bay since the year 1809 till the present time. That by reason of their absence, and that of their witnesses, they were unable to prepare and forward to the commissioners at Detroit, in season, the necessary proof of their title; and that late in the fall there was no communication open between Green Bay and Detroit, and pray that their respective claims may now be confirmed.

Alexander Gardipier supports his claim by the testimony of Perish Grinon, who declares that said Gardipier from the year 1808 to the present time occupied, improved, and had the possession of his certain tract of land, particularly described in his claim, at Green Bay, and that he has submitted to the authority of the United States.

Joseph Jourdain produces the testimony of Alexander Gardipier and Perish Grinon, which shows that the said Jourdain from the year 1809 to the present time has occupied, improved, and had the possession of a certain tract of land at Green Bay, particularly described in his claim, and that he has submitted to the authority of the United States, and is a citizen thereof.

John B. Vine supports his claim by the testimony of Joseph Jourdain and Alexander Gardipier, who say that in the year 1810, and from that time to the present, said Vine has improved, occupied, and had the possession of a certain tract of land, particularly described in his claim, in the township of Green Bay, and that he has submitted to the authority of the United States.

These claims were rejected by the last Congress upon the above mentioned evidence. The testimony to show that the petitioners continued to submit to the authority of the United States was deemed ambiguous and defective.

By the subjoined letter and memorandum of the Commissioner of the General Land Office it appears that the petitioners, excepting John B. Vine, have, either from a want of knowledge or design, misstated certain material facts, or have not sufficiently explained them, in relation to the exhibition and proof of their claims before the commissioners, under the act of 1823. As said Vine has joined with Alexander Gardipier and Joseph Jourdain in making the representations above mentioned, and referred to in said letter and memorandum, the committee do not consider it expedient to separate his claim, and report against the prayer of all the petitioners.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1037. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 12, 1832.

Mr. HUNT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Paul Ducharme, reported:

In the year 1793 Dominique Ducharme took possession of certain lands upon the Fox river, in the township of Green Bay, which he describes as follows, to wit: Lot number 69, on the west side of Fox river, described on the plat transmitted to Congress by the claimants to land in said township, bounded in front on said river, and on the south by a tract now occupied by Augustin Grinon, being twenty-seven chains and forty-seven links in width, more or less, and eighty arpents in depth, situate at the foot of the Grand Kakalin. Lot number 70, on the west side of said Fox river, bounded in front by the said Grand Kakalin, and on the north or lower side by the lot owned or occupied by the said Augustin Grinon, being eighty chains in width and eighty in depth on the shortest line, containing, by estimation, 640 acres. Also lot number 87, situate directly opposite to the portage around the Grand Kakalin, on the east side of said Fox river, bounded in front on said river, and being thirty chains in width, more or less, and eighty arpents in depth.

The evidence adduced by the petitioner shows that, upon the above described lands, without designating the lots, the said Dominique Ducharme erected a dwelling house, a store, and out buildings, and occupied and cultivated the lots until the year 1800. After he had taken possession of the lands, certain Indian chiefs, then residing there, ceded to him the above premises, by their deed bearing date the ——— day of ———, 1793, and which were afterwards confirmed by other Indians in the years 1796, 1797, 1798, and 1799.

On the 8th of July, 1800, the said Dominique sold and delivered the above mentioned lands to the petitioner, Paul Ducharme, who had then resided there with his brother Dominique Ducharme several years previously to the sale; and upon the purchase took the possession of the same lands, and cultivated them to some extent, though not definitely described, till the year 1813, being the second year of the war, when he was driven off by the Indians hostile to the United States, who burnt his buildings, destroyed his property, and compelled him to flee to Green Bay, eighteen miles distant, for protection. Under the act approved the 11th of May, 1820, for the purpose of ascertaining the rights, and confirming the titles of certain settlers at Green Bay and Prairie du Chien, the petitioner gave notice of his claim, and exhibited to the agent of the commissioners the evidence of his title; but he represents that the commissioners then considered the settlements of Green Bay did not extend to the land upon the Grand Kakalin, and therefore his title was not examined for confirmation. When the act of the 21st of February, 1823, was in operation for reviving the powers of the commissioners, the petitioner was out of the United States, and, as he states, had no notice of the act, or opportunity of presenting his claim. On the 8th of July, 1824, he returned and resumed his residence at Green Bay, where he still continues. He is now 67 years of age, is infirm, dependent entirely upon his own labor for subsistence, and the committee are informed has ever been friendly to the United States.

In addition to the above facts the committee would advert to the second article of the treaty concluded with Great Britain in 1794, which declares that "all settlers and traders within the precincts or jurisdiction of said posts [relinquished to the United States,] shall continue to enjoy unmolested all their property of every kind, and shall be protected therein. They shall be at full liberty to remain there, or to remove, with all or any part of their effects; and it shall also be free to them to sell their lands, houses, or effects, or to retain them at their discretion." As the aforesaid Dominique Ducharme was a settler, in the possession of the above described lands and buildings at the time of the treaty, it would seem that his claim, as well as the title which the petitioner derived from him, should be protected by the express direction of the above article.

By an examination of the records of the General Land Office, and the letter of the Commissioner, which is here subjoined, it appears that the petitioner was under a mistake in representing that the commissioners under the act of 1820, as above referred to, did not consider and examine his claims; for it is there shown that two lots of land at the Grand Kakalin, on Fox river, presumed to be the two lots first above described, and containing 640 acres each, were confirmed to the petitioner; and that another claim made by him, presumed to be for the third lot, as above described, was rejected by the commissioners. It therefore appears that the claims of the petitioner have once been investigated by a competent board; and as the committee are induced to believe that justice has already been done to him, they submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner be not granted.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 21, 1832.

SIR: I return the petition and papers of Paul Ducharme, enclosed in your letter of the 17th instant.

Under the provisions of the act of 11th May, 1820, (Land Laws, p. 776,) Paul Ducharme claimed three tracts of land at the Kakalin, or great rapids of Fox river; and two of those tracts, situated on the west side of the river, were recommended by the commissioners, and confirmed to him by the third section of the act of the 21st February, 1823, (Land Laws, p. 831). At the same time his claim to the tract east of the river was rejected by the commissioners. Under the same law Augustus Grignon claimed, as the assignee of Ducharme, a tract situated between the tracts claimed by and confirmed to Ducharme, which the commissioners recommended for confirmation. and which was therefore confirmed by the act of 1823. Grignon also claimed the lots which were confirmed to Ducharme, but his claims to these tracts were rejected. A copy of so much of the report of the commissioners, and of the accompanying map, as relates to the claims of Ducharme, is enclosed; and by comparing the testimony adduced in support thereof, with the provisions of the second section of the act of 3d March, 1807, (Land Laws, p. 546,) you will be enabled to form an opinion as to the correctness of the decisions of the commissioners.

I also enclose a copy of a correspondence in 1825 between the office of Indian Affairs and this office, respecting the claim of Ducharme on the east side of Fox river, by which it will be seen that the New York Indians also claim the land in question.

By reference to pages 43, 45, and 47 of the document printed as report No. 42, House of Representatives, 1st session 20th Congress, it will be seen that three tracts at the Kakalin, there called the portage of the Big Cockalin, were claimed by Nancy Macrey and Augustine Grignon, whose claims being recommended, but "not to interfere with any confirmations heretofore made," were confirmed by the act of April, 1828. How far these claims may interfere with the previously confirmed claims of Ducharme, if at all, I have not the means of ascertaining.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1832.

Mr. MARSHALL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Isaac Thomas and William M. Wilson, reported:

That the petitioners pray a confirmation of their title to six hundred and forty acres of land in the parish of Rapides, on Red river, at the mouth of Bayou Darro, in the State of Louisiana, which land they claim by virtue of the settlement and occupancy of the same by ——— Palmer and ——— Ratliff, with the permission of the Spanish authorities, prior to the cession of Louisiana to the United States. The petitioners claim as assignees of Palmer and Ratliff through various mesne transfers. It appears satisfactorily, from the evidence filed with the petition, that Palmer and Ratliff settled and occupied the land prior to the cession, and that James and Edward McGlaughlin, to whom they transferred it, also occupied it before and for several years after the cession, and that it has since been occupied by their assignees. The committee are therefore of opinion that the title of the present assignees should be confirmed, and for that purpose report a bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1039. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIMS OF CERTAIN SETTLERS IN LOUISIANA FOR INDEMNITY FOR THE LOSS OF RIGHTS OBTAINED FROM THE SPANISH GOVERNMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Eloy Segura and others, reported:

That the petitioners are the surviving descendants of a colony of Spaniards who, at a very early period, were invited from Spain, and settled in Louisiana. They were placed on small tracts of land, which were assigned them by the King of Spain, at a place called New Iberia, and their lands fronted on Lake Peigniers, since called the Spanish lake. The King of Spain furnished them some aid in leaving Malaga, their native country, and seemed solicitous to place them at ease in their new abode. It is a matter not only of historical notoriety but of legal proof before the committee that allotments of land were made to the emigrants, and that they were put in possession by the King's surveyor where the petitioners yet live. But as the lands assigned them were entirely destitute of timber, being an open prairie, and they could not build houses nor cultivate their lands without wood, the Spanish government gave them, collectively, the usufruct, or the privilege of cutting timber and firewood in a cypress swamp, and on a tract of woodland in the neighborhood, called the Trois isles.

The little colony continued in the undisturbed enjoyment of that privilege, to them indispensable, until long since the change of government by the cession of Louisiana to the United States. This privilege of the Spanish emigrants not being of such a nature as would authorize the commissioners for the adjustment of land titles in that district to recognize it as a title to land, no steps were taken to obtain the continuance of it from the American government. Still it might be considered as a species of property, which seems to have been guarantied by the treaty of cession to the ancient inhabitants of the ceded country. Ultimately, about the year 1821, the wood lands within which that privilege had so long been exercised were sold by the United States, and the Spanish families left entirely destitute of timber. Not supposing it possible that their right could be questioned, they attempted to continue the practice of supplying themselves from the same source, were prosecuted at law for a trespass on the purchasers from the United States, and condemned to pay heavy damages.

These facts exhibit certainly a hard case, and in the opinion of the committee entitle the petitioners to the favorable consideration of Congress. The committee therefore report a bill, giving to each of the petitioners a quarter section of land out of the public domain.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Josiah Barker, reported:

That the petitioner has exhibited two patents or complete titles emanating from the Spanish government for lands situated on the Mississippi, near Manchac. One of them was granted originally to Zachariah Norton, on February 14, 1786, for three hundred and twenty-one arpents and three hundred toises, having a front of four arpents and six toises on the river. The other was granted originally to John Fitzpatrick, on the same day, for six hundred and eighty arpents, superficial, adjoining the first named, and having a front of nine arpents on the river. Both these grants are perfect in form, and conferred title of the highest dignity known to the Spanish law. The petitioner is the undoubted owner, and the lands have always been occupied and cultivated conformably to the title.

The committee therefore report a bill confirming the title.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 16, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of J. C. Boudrean, reported:

That as early as 1783 Louis Delahoussaye, having a title to a tract of land on the Vermilion, in Louisiana, of one hundred arpents front, sold the same to Pierre Rousseau, who afterwards conveyed forty-four arpents of the same to Réné Leblanc, fifty arpents to one Dupare, and six arpents front were exchanged with Joseph Frahan, who sold the same to the father of the petitioner. All except these six arpents front appear to have been confirmed by the commissioners for adjusting land titles in that district. The petitioner, and those under whom he claims, have been in possession since long before the change of government, have regularly paid the taxes, and cultivated the land. If this proof had been laid before the commissioners by the claimant the title would undoubtedly have been confirmed The committee therefore think it ought now to be confirmed, and report a bill to that effect.

ON CLAIM OF INDEMNITY FOR A DEFECT IN THE TITLE TO LAND DERIVED FROM THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 17, 1832.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Hartwell W. Vick, reported:

That Hartwell W. Vick, a citizen of Warren county, Mississippi, on the 23d day of May, 1818, purchased of the United States, at the land office at Washington, Mississippi, in the land district west of Pearl river, fractional section No. 20, in township No. 18, of range 4 east, under and by virtue of the provisions of an act of Congress passed on the 3d of March, 1803, entitled "An act regulating the grants of lands, and providing for the disposal of the lands of the United States south of the State of Tennessee." The fractional section contained 225.70 acres, which, at the price of $2 per acre, amounted to the sum of $451 40. One fourth part of the purchase money, amounting to $112 85, was advanced for the land, and, according to the stipulations of the act above referred to, another fourth part was to have been paid within two years, another fourth part within three years, and the remaining fourth part within four years from the day of sale. Interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum was chargeable on the three last payments from the day of sale. The land, if not completely paid for within one year after the last payment became due, was to be offered for sale again to the highest bidder; and if it did not sell for the amount due thereon, and interest, the same was to revert to the United States.

On April 18, 1823, Mr. Vick availed himself of the provisions of an act of Congress, passed March 2, 1821, entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers of public lands prior to July 1, 1820," and took a certificate of further credit, payable in eight equal annual instalments, the first instalment due on March 31, 1822, and the last on March 31, 1829. The entry by Vick was made according to the plat of the United States surveyor, received and approved by the surveyor general, and deposited in the office. In 1828 (and before the last payment became due) a resurvey of the private claims in that township was had, under the authority of the government, by which it was ascertained that the tract of land purchased by Mr. Vick was covered by the private claim of Elihu H. Bay, previously located, and that the sale to Vick was consequently void.

The tract of land which the petitioner entered, as before described, is situated within about half a mile of the town of Vicksburg, on the Mississippi river, a place, in point of commercial importance, second to none on the river above Natchez and below the mouth of the Ohio; which, taken in connexion with the known fertility of the soil in that section of the State, makes the land of great value. The petitioner represents the land to be worth $10 per acre; present value of land $2,257, which would enable him to purchase 1,800 acres of the richest and most fertile of the uncultivated lands at the minimum government price.

One of the committee is acquainted with the lands in the vicinity of Vicksburg, and from his knowledge of their value does not think the before described tract of land overrated by the petitioner. The petitioner also represents, that in consequence of the inability of the general government to comply with her part of the contract by perfecting his titles, he has been deprived of a home for his family, and the means of supporting a wife and children who are dependent on his exertions alone for the means of a sustenance and education. He therefore prays Congress to grant unto him, as an indemnity for the injury he has sustained in consequence of the inability of the United States to comply with her part of the contract, made by the petitioner with the United States on the faith and credit of her public records and officers, two sections of land, to be located on any of the unappropriated lands belonging to the United States within the State of Mississippi.

The bill before the committee, which has been referred to them, authorizes the government to refund to the petitioner the amount of money by him advanced on said tract of land, and interest on the same at the rate of six per centum per annum. If that is all the relief to which the petitioner is entitled, after the government has had the use of his money fourteen years, and in effect turned him and his family out of house and home by the misfeasance of one of her officers, there is no necessity for any legislation on the subject. The purchase money can be refunded to him under the existing laws. If the petitioner is to be deprived of property to the amount of $2,200 by the act of his government, making no other compensation than the little pittance of $112, and interest thereon, he might with propriety doubt the truth of the assertion that the government of the United States is administered "upon principles of equity and justice." The committee deem it inexpedient to grant to the petitioner a donation of land as a compensation for the loss he has sustained, but think it no more than reasonable that the money he has paid, together with interest at the same rate as that exacted from him on the last payments by the government, should be refunded in scrip or land stock, and that he should have the pre-emption right of entering one section of any of the unappropriated lands of the United States within the State of Mississippi.

The committee, therefore, report the bill, with an amendment to that effect.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1043. [1ST SESSION.

ON A PROPOSITION TO ESTABLISH A LAND OFFICE AT COLUMBUS, MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 17, 1832.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a land office at Columbus, in the State of Mississippi, reported:

From the knowledge the committee have of the geographical situation of the country, it is, in their opinion, highly important to the interests of the people residing in the northern section of the State of Mississippi, that a land office should be established in that part of the State. A portion of the citizens are now compelled to travel from one hundred and fifty to two hundred miles to a land office. This is a grievance to all classes of society, and an evil which ought to be remedied. It operates peculiarly hard on a poor man and laborer, whose pecuniary circumstances will not admit of his purchasing more than one-eighth of land, to be compelled to leave his business for six or eight days, and expend one-eighth of the price of the land, to deposit his money in the office. The citizens of the counties of Lowndes and Monroe, situated in that isolated portion of Mississippi between the Tombigbee river and the State of Alabama, have heretofore labored under many inconveniences for the want of a land office in that part of the country, which they were compelled to forego in consequence of there not being a sufficient quantity of land in market to justify the expense of a separate land district for these two counties.

The extinguishment of the Indian title to the adjacent lands acquired from the Choctaws by the treaty of Dancing Rabbit creek will, in the opinion of the committee, as soon as they are ready for market, justify the expense of a land office in that section of the State.

Columbus being situated on the border of the Choctaw lands, on the great highway leading from Tennessee and Alabama to the interior of the newly acquired territory, and a point which a great portion of the "land hunters" and emigrants will be compelled to pass in search of land and homes for their families, is, in the opinion of the committee, the most eligible situation to locate the office for that district of the new purchase, to which the counties of Lowndes and Monroe, from their situation, must necessarily be attached. The committee have before them the following communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the subject, addressed to one of their number, which they beg leave to submit as a part of their report:

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 3, 1832.

"SIR: In reply to your note of the 1st instant, requesting me to give to you, in writing, my opinion, as expressed a few days since, as to the expediency of establishing any land offices in that section of country recently acquired from the Choctaws, I have to state that at the time of our conversation it was my belief, as it is now, that it was not expedient to establish land districts for these lands until a good portion of them should be surveyed, and the plats examined and certified by the surveyor general, and duplicates of the plats prepared for this and the land offices proposed to be created; and that these surveys could not be made and returned in time to make it advisable to create any such land offices at this session of Congress.

"With great respect, your obedient servant,

"ELIJAH HAYWARD.

"Hon. F. E. PLUMMER, House of Representatives."

The committee agree with the commissioner in opinion that it is inexpedient to establish by law a land office at Columbus during this session of Congress, and therefore offer for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the further consideration of the subject be postponed to the next session of Congress.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1044. [1ST SESSION.

ON REMISSION OF FORFEITURES FOR NON-PAYMENT BY PURCHASERS OF PUBLIC LANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 17, 1832.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Sinclair D. Gervais, reported:

That Edward Cook, of Warren county, Mississippi, on December 27, in the year of our Lord 1817, became the purchaser of fractional section twenty-five, in township fifteen, of range four east, in the land district west of Pearl river, containing, by estimate, four hundred and sixty-two acres and eighty-seven hundredths of an acre, at the rate of two dollars per acre—whole amount of purchase money nine hundred and twenty-five dollars and seventy-four cents. He paid one-fourth part of the purchase money or first instalment, amounting to two hundred and thirty-one dollars and forty-three cents, at the time of the purchase, and took a credit on the residue according to the provisions of the statute in such case made and provided. On September 19, 1821, George Arnold, assignee of the said Edward Cook, signed and filed in the register's office of the district of lands offered for sale at Washington, Mississippi, his declaration, in writing, and obtained a certificate of further credit on the balance due, under and by virtue of the provisions of the act of Congress, passed March 2, 1821, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers of public lands prior to July 1, 1820." On July 3, 1829, the said tract of land became forfeited, and reverted to the United States for non-payment of the balance of the purchase money, under and by virtue of the provisions of the act aforesaid. The petitioner represents that the said George Arnold assigned the certificate of further credit to Seth A. Griffith, under whom the said Sinclair D. Gervais claimed title to said tract of land, by a purchase made at an advanced price, previous to the reversion of the land to the United States, as aforesaid. The petitioner also represents that by a resurvey of the lands in township No. 15, in which the fractional section before described is situated, by order of the surveyor general, and subsequent to the time of the purchase made by him from Griffith, he found, by the running of the lines, the land not to be so valuable as he had anticipated.

The petitioner therefore prays Congress to pass a special law authorizing the register of the land office at Washington, where the purchase was made, to issue to him a certificate for the sum of $231 74, it being the amount of money advanced for said tract of land by the original purchaser; and that the said certificate, when so issued as aforesaid, may be received and credited as cash in payment of any public lands which have heretofore or may hereafter be sold by the United States. All of the allegations herein stated and set forth are, in the opinion of the committee, supported by competent and satisfactory evidence, excepting the statement of the transfer of the certificate of further credit by Arnold to Griffith, and the purchase of the petitioner from the said Griffith. By the provisions of an act of Congress, passed May 23, 1828, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers of the public lands that have reverted for non-payment of the purchase money," the relief prayed for by the petitioner in this case was granted to all purchasers of public lands on which a further credit had not been taken, under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1821, before referred to. And the committee know of no good reason why the same relief granted to that class of purchasers, by the act of 1828, should not be extended to those purchasers who availed themselves of the further credit granted by the act of 1821.

The Committee on Public Lands have reported a general bill granting relief to all persons similarly situated with the petitioner, which, in the opinion of the committee, renders it inexpedient to report a special bill in this case.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1045. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM OF INDEMNITY FOR A DEFECT IN THE TITLE TO LAND DERIVED FROM THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 17, 1832.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of Jesse Bell, of Mississippi, reported:

The memorialist represents that on the seventh day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, his father, William Bell, purchased of the United States, at the land office at Washington, Mississippi, a tract of land situate in the county of Wilkinson and State aforesaid, known and designated on the map as surveyed and returned to the register's office of that land district by the surveyor in the employ of the government as fractional section number fifteen, in township number two, of range number four west, in the land district west of Pearl river, containing, by estimate, five hundred and fifty-five acres, and paid therefor the sum of eight hundred and thirty-six dollars and eighty-four cents, the full amount of the purchase money for said tract of land, at two dollars per acre, exclusive of the discount allowed by law. The last payment was made on the 12th of January, 1829, and the register of the land office at Washington issued a final certificate for said tract of land, and transmitted the same to the General Land Office on the 22d of April following. William Bell, since deceased, by his last will and testament devised said tract of land to the memorialist, Jesse Bell, and his brother, Thomas Bell. On the 24th day of January, 1832, the said Thomas Bell, one of the devisees, assigned and transferred, by a deed of conveyance of that date, all of his right, title, and interest in and to said tract of land to the memorialist, who, by the will and transfer as aforesaid, has become, and is, entitled to all the legal and equitable interest in and to said tract of land which was vested in said William Bell during his lifetime. By a resurvey of the lands in that township, made by authority of the surveyor general of the "public lands south of Tennessee," in February, 1831, it was found that the tract of land purchased by the said William Bell, and now claimed by the memorialist, was covered by the confirmed claims of John Collins, Charles Percy, and Thomas Wilkins, who held under and by virtue of previously located Spanish grants. There is before the committee, duly certified, record evidence sufficient to convince them of the truth of the statements. The memorialist also states (and has adduced in support of his statement the affidavit of Peter Smith, a respectable citizen of Wilkinson county, Mississippi, taken before a notary public) that he has made valuable improvements on the land, and that the said tract of land, in its improved condition, is worth at this time the sum of two thousand six hundred and twenty dollars. The memorialist therefore prays Congress to pass a special law authorizing him to surrender his certificate to said tract of land, so purchased by his father in his lifetime and claimed by other persons as aforesaid, and to locate in lieu thereof one section of any of the unappropriated lands belonging to the United States within the State of Mississippi. The committee deem it unnecessary to enter into any argument in support of the equitable and legal right which the memorialist has to claim, at the hands of the general government, a remuneration for the injury which he has sustained by the sale of a tract of land to his testator, made by the officers of government, to which the United States had, at the time, no legal or equitable title. The facts speak for themselves. The mistake was not occasioned by the error or negligence of the memorialist or his testator, but by the erroneous survey and plat of the township returned to the office by the surveyor in the employ of the United States. The purchase was made on the faith of the public maps, records, and officers, with full confidence in the ability of the government to perfect the titles; and the government is bound, by every principle of law and justice, to make satisfaction to the grantee in as full and ample a manner as though he had been a private individual, and had transferred the land by a deed of conveyance, warranting the title. The section of land which the memorialist asks as an indemnity for the incapacity on the part of the United States to perfect the titles, is worth, at the minimum price, $800. The amount of money paid for the land, as before stated, $836 24, exclusive of interest and the discount allowed by law, which, taken in connexion with the enhanced value of the land by reason of the improvements made thereon, renders, in the opinion of the committee, the granting of the prayer of the memorialist no more than an act of justice on the part of the general government. Therefore the committee report a bill for the relief of Jesse Bell.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1046. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 20, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Ovington and others, reported:

The petitioner, William Ovington, represents that sometime in the year 1817 Joseph F. Rattenbury, then a resident of East Florida, obtained from the Spanish authorities a grant or cession of 50,000 acres of land, on condition that the same or a portion of it should be settled and cultivated within two years; and that grants in the usual form were executed on February 26, 1818; and that the delay in the execution of the grant occurred in consequence of a desire on the part of the governor of East Florida to have his authority to make such a large grant examined into and confirmed by the King of Spain; that immediately after, Rattenbury left Florida for the purpose of complying with the conditions of the grant; that upon his arrival in Philadelphia a bargain was made, October 16, 1818, between said Rattenbury and James Alexander, by which one moiety of the grant was conveyed to Alexander, he agreeing to comply with the conditions of the grant; and that in the fall of 1818 said Alexander proceeded from New York to East Florida, taking with him men, live stock, and such necessary supplies as were required to insure success to the settlement; that upon his arrival at St. Augustine he procured orders of survey from the proper authorities and land surveys of different tracts of land to be made in East Florida to the amount of fifty thousand acres, which were duly registered in the proper offices in East Florida; and that Mr. Alexander immediately took possession and commenced improvements, and obtained from the Spanish authorities official documents recognizing the performance of the conditions of the grant; and that Alexander died in Florida in 1820; and that since that time the agents of the said Alexander and the petitioners have continued in the possession of the lands, although the improvements on the land have made but little progress, from an apprehension that their title might not be confirmed under the treaty with Spain in 1818.

The petitioner urges upon the statement of facts, that the 8th article of the treaty of 1818, which declares all grants void made after the 24th January, 1818, did not intend to embrace such a case as that of the petitioner, whose grant was made in good faith, and the conditions of it complied with, without any knowledge of the existence; and that the 8th article of the treaty was intended to apply to the grants issued by Spain to the Duke of Alegon, to Count Punver Rosteo, and to De Vargas; and refers to the correspondence between Mr. Adams and Don Onis, and the Count De Neuville, and also to the correspondence between Mr. Forsyth and the Spanish government, and also to the President's message of the 7th December, 1819. The claim was also filed with the board of commissioners, who declined acting, as their powers were limited to the confirmation of grants made before the treaty. Petitioner also alleges that Alexander expended six thousand six hundred and twenty dollars, and that four thousand one hundred and sixty dollars was advanced to him by the petitioner.

Petitioner also alleges that said Alexander died, leaving a last will and testament, devising his real and personal estate to the wife of the petitioner, his sister; that she has since died, leaving four children, Henry A. Ovington, James A. Ovington, Susan Benedict, wife of Samuel W. Benedict, and Anna J. Taylor, wife of John N. Taylor; and that the petitioner is the only surviving executor of Alexander, and asks a confirmation of the title to one-half of the lands surveyed to his children, the heirs as well as devisees of Alexander.

The petitioner exhibits to the committee a paper, in the Spanish language, purporting to be a copy of the grant for the land, and certified to be a copy by ——— ———, who purports to have had the control of the Spanish records before the transfer of Florida to the United States. The paper produced is, in the first place, a memorial of Rattenbury to the Spanish governor, bearing date February 18, 1818, setting forth that it was his object "to introduce into the province of East Florida, agreeably to the ordinances and regulations of his Catholic Majesty, for the purpose of augmenting the population, a number of settlers, with their families, from Great Britain, Ireland, and elsewhere, and also negroes from Africa, for the purpose of cultivating the land and other objects." He therefore asks a grant of one hundred thousand acres, and three years time to fulfil the conditions. And on the 26th of February, 1818, the Spanish governor decreed, after reciting his powers and the object of the Spanish government, "I grant unto him fifty thousand acres of land, half of the one hundred thousand which he solicits, in the situation he points out, without prejudice to third persons, but upon the express condition that he shall effect the introduction which he offers in the space of two years from this date; but if at the expiration of two years he has not complied with his offer, in whole or in part, this concession shall be held of no value or effect. At the same time it is provided that he shall not sell or cede to any one the land which is granted unto him, unless preceded by the knowledge and consent of this government, who will confirm the concession as often as it shall be necessary for the proposed objects; and for his confirmation and security, and for the promotion of the same, the secretary shall give him such certified copies as may be necessary of this memorial and decree.

"COPPINGER."

The petitioner presents another document, in the Spanish language, purporting to be a certified copy from the records of St. Augustine, of a power of attorney from Rattenbury to Alexander, authorizing him to manage his affairs in Florida, and also a transfer of one-half of the interest in the fifty thousand acres, both bearing date the 16th of October, 1818.

The petitioner also produces a paper purporting to be an original agreement between Alexander and four men, to wit: William Hacy, Thomas Byrne, Bernard Lawless, and Daniel Maines, by which it is agreed that Alexander was to pay their passage from New York to East Florida, and pay them twelve dollars a month and their board and lodging; they agree on their part "to obey the orders and be subject to any employment towards the promotion of said settlement, or otherwise, which the said James Alexander may direct. We also hereby agree to continue with and under the employ, orders, and directions of said James Alexander for the period of six months from the date hereof;" and a power is reserved to said Alexander to dismiss all or any of them within the six months, upon his providing a passage back to New York, if any of them desired to go, and paying all wages due to them, and an addition of six dollars, one half month's pay, for their passage back. And on the said paper purports to be the receipt of Daniel Maines, Thomas Byrne, and Bernard Lawless, dated the 4th December, (I presume 1818,) in full satisfaction of all their services, and also the receipt of William Hacy, dated the 20th November, 1819, for his pay. There is no evidence presented to the committee of the execution of the contract, or the receipts on the back of it.

There is also a paper in the Spanish language presented, purporting to be a copy of the records of St. Augustine, showing that Mr. Alexander became a Spanish subject, according to their law, on the —— day of ————, 1818.

There is also a document presented in the Spanish language, purporting to be a copy from the records at St. Augustine, of the application by Mr. Alexander to have the lands granted to Rattenbury surveyed. The memorial presented by him as the attorney, in fact, of Rattenbury, asks for the survey of 10,000 acres of said land, upon which he proposed commencing his operations, bearing date December 15, 1818, and on the same day, the governor directs that it be done as demanded, "agreeably to the terms expressed in the decree of the 26th of February last, for which the lands mentioned were granted, and conformable with the formalities of the same, and the citation of the colonial authorities."

A second memorial, dated March 13, 1819, is presented to the governor, asking a survey of the balance of the land, alleging that it is "expedient to hold the surveys of all the land, and to form the corresponding plans projected by his principal, and to carry into effect his project of uniting the families he proposes; and in such case it will be necessary to know the precise boundaries of the land which he ought to settle, that he may avoid all disputes," &c. And on March 17, 1819, the governor directs its reference to some inferior officer to report to him; and on the 20th of March a favorable report is made on the application; and on the same day the governor granted the request, "subject to the conditions in the grant which this government made to Joseph Freeman Rattenbury, of the 50,000 acres of land." And the said ten thousand acres of land was surveyed August 7, 1819, and the plat accompanies the document.

Another memorial is presented by Alexander, dated the 20th of February, 1820, accompanied by the survey of the 10,000 acres, in which he sets out that many difficulties had occurred to prevent the execution of the conditions of the grant, and which produced great expense, and had determined him to take possession of the 10,000 acres, surveyed as aforesaid, upon which he had settled more than fifty negroes under the direction and care of white men, and had constructed habitations for them, and had prepared for a permanent settlement before the expiration of the two years, and asks to have the proofs of the past performance of the condition recorded; and on the 3d of March, 1820, the governor grants the demand, and "under the precise obligation of presenting the documents which prove the possession of the negroes referred to and introduction of the same into the province;" and on the 8th of March, 1820, depositions of three witnesses are taken, which prove that Alexander had settled about fifty negroes on the 10,000 acres as early as June or July, 1819, and made considerable improvements, and had various species of stock, evidencing a permanent settlement.

On the 20th January, 1821, Henry Alexander Ovington presented a memorial to the Spanish governor, on behalf of the heirs of James Alexander, deceased, in which he says "that whereas it is expedient that the annexed despatch should justify the possession, which was taken by the deceased, of ten thousand acres of land to the west of the river St. John's, and be enrolled in the office of the present notary; and that it be decreed from the evidences produced, being ready to pay the whole duty;" upon which the governor decrees on the same day, "that it may not subject the same to sequestration for not having concluded the process, nor impeach the justification which was directed by the decree of the 3d of March, 1820, enrolled the title to the extent which has taken place, and give to the party the proof which he demands."

The petitioner also presents the affidavit of Horatio Dealer, sworn to before the notary public of the city of New York; he swears that he agreed to unite with Alexander in effecting the conditions of the grant, by making settlements, cultivation, &c.; and he accordingly commenced with Alexander a settlement upon a tract at Volusia of 4,000 acres, and another tract at Alexander Springs of 11,558 acres. And on the first tract he cleared 157 acres, which was principally planted in sugar-cane; that he caused 49 buildings to be put up for the slaves, and other buildings for manufacturing sugar; and that he caused orchards of various tropical fruits to be planted, and vineyards, all of which was done shortly after his arrival in December, 1819; and that 70 hands had been employed at one time on the tract. That on the Vibilia tract he caused about 27 acres to be cleared, which was planted in corn, rice, and potatoes, and three dwelling-houses built. That lands had been opened for an orange grove, and a nursery planted three years ago. He also states that he caused three frame buildings to be put up on the Alexander Spring tract, which are occupied by the keepers of his stock. That no more lands have been opened than enough to provision the hands and stock, and for a young orange grove. That he has continued the possession ever since, under the agreement, acting as the agent of Alexander. That Alexander died in the summer of 1820. That sundry other tracts were surveyed under the grant to Rattenbury, and that he had a general superintendence and care over them, for the preservation of the land and timber growing thereon; exercised acts of ownership, as the agent of Alexander and his representatives. The petitioner also alleges that Alexander had expended between six and seven thousand dollars in the management of said land, and of that sum he advanced about four thousand dollars.

The various documents presented to the committee in the Spanish language, and which have been above referred to and used as correct copies of the originals, have not been authenticated in any mode which would justify their being used as evidence; and no reasons have been assigned to the committee for the absence of the original grants and concessions under which the petitioners claim; and to most of the Spanish documents an English translation is appended, without any information to the committee as to the individual who made it, and without any verification. Notwithstanding these exceptions might properly be taken to the species of evidence presented to the committee, they have examined the case upon its merits, as the same is detailed to them in the documents referred to by them. The committee could not but be struck with the looseness of the phraseology used in the memorials to the governor of East Florida, and in the decrees made by him in relation to the land claimed by the present applicant.

In the first memorial presented by Rattenbury he sets forth his object to introduce, "for the purpose of augmenting the population, a number of settlers, with their families, from Great Britain, Ireland, and elsewhere, and also negroes from Africa, for the purpose of cultivating the land and other objects," without any specification as to the number of individuals or families which he intended to introduce, or any certain quantity of the land to be put in cultivation; and the decree of the governor founded thereon is equally indefinite and more uncertain, by the introduction of the sentence in the condition, "if the same is not complied with, in whole or in part," within two years, the same to be void. And this uncertainty as to what was to be done is kept up in the various memorials and decrees in relation to the subject, and induced the committee to examine as far as they could into the mode and manner of transacting such business by the Spanish governors, under the hope of finding some satisfactory explanation for the use of such general and ambiguous phrases in the acts of the Spanish officers.

In the various ordinances and regulations of the Spanish government and officers for granting land in East Florida, as published in the appendix to the volume containing the land laws, in the opinion of the committee, may be found a satisfactory explanation of the difficulties arising from the phraseology in the memorials and grants. It was well understood from the ordinances of the King and the various regulations of the Spanish governors, the precise quantity of land that each head of a family, and each individual in the family, both white and black, were entitled to when they became settlers in East Florida.

And the committee suppose that the conditional concession of 50,000 acres was made, in the first place, with a view to the introduction of such a number of actual settlers as would bear some proportion between the number of settlers and quantity of land granted, as was customary in the Spanish provinces, reserving to the governor the right to determine when the terms and spirit of the contract had been complied with. The subsequent acts of the memorialists, as well as the Spanish governor, in ordering surveys of the land, the recording of evidence, and granting copies, seems rather designed by the parties as facilities afforded to the claimant whereby he might the more readily induce emigrants to settle in that part of the country and enable him to comply with the conditions in the grant, than any confirmation of title or acknowledgment of the performance of the conditions of the grant, so far as they even apply to the ten thousand acres upon which the plantation is situated.

The committee cannot believe that the removal to that section of the country of Mr. Alexander, with fifty or sixty negroes and a few overseers, and locating himself in one or more of the tracts of land surveyed, was a compliance in whole or in part with the terms, or spirit, or meaning of the original contract, but seems rather an effort to evade the spirit and meaning of the contract and bring himself within the terms of the condition contained in the first concession of Governor Coppinger, in which he states, if the condition is not complied with, "in whole or in part," within two years, the same to be void. And it is evident from the last decree of the governor upon this subject, made in 1821, upon the application of Henry A. Ovington, that neither party considered the condition of the original grant as having been complied with.

The committee are, therefore, decidedly of opinion that Mr. Rattenbury, or any persons claiming under him, under the grant of Governor Coppinger, have no claim for a confirmation of said title, either in law or equity. They have no evidence before them of the assent of the Spanish government to the sale or transfer made by Rattenbury to Alexander, which was necessary, by the conditions in the grant, as well as the regulations of the Spanish officers in East Florida. But if the committee should err in this view of the case, the 8th article of the treaty with Spain, making void all grants made subsequent to the 24th of January, 1818, is too clear to admit of a doubt. It is not believed that any law, general in its provisions, plain and clear, and indisputable in its phraseology, has ever yet been limited in its construction to two or three individual cases, which probably caused the introduction of such general provision.

In the view of the committee, the petitioners are recommended to the consideration of Congress alone as settlers upon the public domain, and as such provision would have been made for them, similar to the provision made in all other cases, and perhaps with more liberality, in consequence of the expenditures made by them, if they had testimony before them which would enable them to act. Mr. Dexter, whose affidavit is presented, and gives detailed information upon the subject, appears to the committee rather in the character of a partner than a disinterested witness. The said Dexter says, in his deposition, "that sometime in the month of December, 1819, this deponent entered into an arrangement with Mr. James Alexander," "by which this deponent agreed with said James Alexander to unite with him in effecting the conditions of the said grant by making settlements in the lands embraced in said grant, and previously surveyed, by putting them in a state of cultivation and improvement;" from which the committee are induced to believe that he is too much interested in whatever may be done to be an admissible witness.

The committee, therefore, recommend a rejection of the application of the petitioner.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1047. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI AND OF THE TRUSTEES OF JEFFERSON COLLEGE FOR A DONATION OF LAND TO THAT COLLEGE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 20, 1832.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the trustees of Jefferson College, in the State of Mississippi, respectfully represents: That the institution under their charge was incorporated in the year 1802, and endowed by Congress with a township of land, which was located by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 5th of October, 1812, on the Tombigbee river, in a position nearly central to the then limits of the Mississippi Territory; that the division of the Territory and the formation of the States of Alabama and Mississippi has thrown this land into the State of Alabama, whilst the site of the college is on the western margin of the State of Mississippi. This land, therefore, is remote, inconvenient, and of little value to the institution.

The memorialists state that they feel assured that Congress, in its munificence, designed this as well as all similar grants to other literary institutions as a means of active and efficient support in its wise and cherished policy of diffusing information and learning, and maintaining that intelligence in the community in which the free and happy institutions of our government had their origin and must ever subsist. It is doubtless the desire of Congress that the grant of land to Jefferson College should be a source of immediate revenue and be usefully and efficiently applied to the laudable purpose for which it was designed.

Impressed with this belief, the board of trustees deem it their duty to apprise you that the land in question, independent of its unfavorable position, is composed chiefly of sterile pine barrens, and of land subject to inundation, and that they find it impracticable to make any disposition of it for the advantage of the institution under their charge.

The memorialists therefore pray that they may be permitted to relinquish the land granted for the use of Jefferson College, being part of township No. 10, of ranges Nos. 1 and 2 west, in the district of lands offered for sale at St. Stephen's, or so much thereof as may be found advisable, and to locate in lieu thereof a quantity of land equal to that which they may relinquish, to be selected under the direction of the trustees, out of any unappropriated land in the State of Mississippi or within the limits of the country lately ceded by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to the United States, to be taken either before or after such lands may have been offered at public sale, being governed in such locations by the legal subdivisions of such lands in the surveys made or to be made under the authority of the United States. And also that they may be permitted and authorized to sell the land which may be so located or entered, and to convey a fee-simple title thereto, otherwise it might and probably would remain unproductive and valueless to the college for half a century. In the meantime the institution would languish and decline for want of aid.

The memorialists beg leave to remind your honorable body that so soon as the late treaties with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians take effect, there will be in the State of Mississippi alone more than twenty million of acres of land which will be obtainable from the United States at the low rate of one dollar and a quarter per acre; and when persons can become purchasers on such favorable terms, it is obvious that leases will be impracticable, or that few if any will be found willing under existing circumstances to improve land held by such a tenure; and it may be remarked that although leases of those lands may be impracticable, yet the sum which they would yield, if sold, might be readily and securely invested at an annual interest of from six to ten per cent., thus furnishing a convenient and certain revenue; sufficient, in the opinion of the memorialists, to meet the exigencies of the institution.

In conclusion, the memorialists are persuaded that if the privileges prayed for are extended to them, they will be enabled to realize a fund which, being judiciously invested, will yield a permanent income and enable the trustees to keep the institution in useful operation. In support of the prayer of the petitioners they beg leave to refer to the subjoined memorial of the general assembly of Mississippi. And the memorialists will, as in duty bound, ever pray, &c.

DECEMBER 23, 1831.

A MEMORIAL.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Mississippi respectfully represents: That on the third March, eighteen hundred and three, an act of Congress granted for the use of Jefferson College, an infant institution in the then Mississippi Territory, a township of land, to be located by the Secretary of the Treasury. A location was accordingly made, in the year eighteen hundred and fifteen, of thirty-six sections of land, in a position nearly central with regard to the then existing territorial limits, all of which are comprised in township No. 10, of ranges Nos. 1 and 2 west, in the district of lands offered for sale at St. Stephen's, Alabama. The subsequent division of the Territory and the formation of the States of Alabama and Mississippi has thrown this location entirely without the limits of the latter State and upon the frontiers of the former, in a situation by no means eligible and too remote from the college to subserve any valuable purpose.

Your memorialists would further represent to your honorable body that the location itself was originally injudicious, having been made on sterile, unproductive pine barrens, subject to the periodical inundations of the Tombigbee river.

Your memorialists would represent to your honorable body that the institution of learning, to which this donation was made, after having struggled long with its embarrassments, and after having repeatedly made unavailing efforts to dispose of its lands, is just emerging into usefulness, and promises to be highly advantageous to this and the adjacent States, but it is still oppressed with encumbrances from which it cannot be extricated without an act of national liberality on the part of your honorable body.

The patronage of letters is so essentially a prerogative of your honorable body, and the dissemination of knowledge is so intimately connected with human liberty and human happiness, that your honorable body will not require a stronger consideration to induce an acquiescence in the prayer of your memorialists. Your memorialists therefore unite with the trustees of Jefferson College in praying your honorable body that an act may pass authorizing the aforesaid trustees to surrender the township of land in Alabama, (or so much of it as may be conducive to the interests of Jefferson College,) and enter an equal quantity within this State, to be selected out of any unappropriated land of the United States previous to its being exposed to public sale.

M. F. DE GRAFFENREID, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved December 16, 1830.

GERARD C. BRANDON.

SECRETARY OF STATE'S OFFICE, Jackson, Mississippi, December 17, 1831.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct transcript of the original roll on file in my office.

JOHN A. GRIMBALL, Secretary of State.

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, Jackson, December 17, 1831.

I hereby certify that John A. Grimball is on this day an acting secretary of state in and for the State aforesaid, and that due faith and credit should be given to all his acts as such.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at the town of Jackson, this seventeenth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one, and independence of the United States the fifty-sixth.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1048. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE ADJUSTMENT OF THE CLAIMS OF THE HEIRS OF ELISHA WINTER AND SONS TO LAND IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MARCH 22, 1832.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the petition and accompanying documents of the heirs of Elisha Winter and sons, reported:

The committee are of opinion that the rights of the claimants to the land in question depend entirely on questions of law, constructions of treaties, the customs and usages of the Spanish government, and the testimony of witnesses; that an examination by Congress would be attended with difficulties and delay, and that it ought to be referred to a judicial tribunal for investigation. A majority of the committee cannot assent to all of the positions assumed, and inferences drawn from those positions, which are held by some members of the committee, and which are embodied in the form of a report in this case, and which accompanies this report; but, to prevent further delay, and with a view of adjusting the claim on fair and equitable principles, the committee unanimously report a bill for that purpose.

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the petition and accompanying documents of the heirs of Elisha Winter and sons, having, by a unanimous vote, directed a bill to be reported to provide for a legal adjudication of the claim mentioned in the petition, Mr. Plummer, on behalf of the minority of that committee, mentioned in the foregoing report, submitted the following as their views of the claims of the petitioners:

"On the twenty-seventh day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven, the Baron de Carondelet, knight of the religious order of St. John, field martial of the royal armies, governor general, and vice patron of the provinces of Louisiana and West Florida, inspector of the troops of the same, &c., granted, by a deed of concession of that date, unto Elisha Winter, one thousand arpents square of land, and to William Winter and Gabriel Winter, sons of Elisha, each five hundred arpents square of land, situate in the territory or district of Arkansas, in consideration, as expressed in the deed of concession, "of the good information given of their excellent conduct, and for the purpose of promoting the agriculture and increasing the population of his Majesty's dominions; and also for the purpose of forming a settlement in the wilderness on the frontiers of the province of Louisiana for the cultivation of flax, wheat, and hemp, upon no other condition than that the grantees should occupy the lands within one year from the date of the concession."

There was no other condition precedent to be performed on the part of the Messrs. Winter to vest in them, and each of them, fee-simple titles to the said lands, and to entitle them, and each one of them, in the language of the deed of concession, to "his title deed in form." The commandant of the district was charged with the execution of the necessary surveys, the giving of possession to the claimants, and, in all respects, with the execution of the designs of the Spanish government in relation to the land granted to them.

The claimants were legally, and according to the accustomed forms of the Spanish government, put into possession of their respective tracts of land by Don Carlos de Villemont, commandant of the district, within the time stipulated in the deed of concession, to wit: William Winter was put into possession of his tract immediately after the date of the concession, and Elisha Winter and Gabriel Winter were put into possession of their respective tracts in the spring of the year 1798. The several tracts of land were surveyed or designated in the presence and by the direction of the said Don Carlos de Villemont, captain commandant, &c., of the district of Arkansas, in the following manner, to wit: Elisha Winter, the father, designated the tract of land allotted to him by planting a large stone which he took with him from Kentucky for that purpose; the sons, William Winter and Gabriel Winter, designated their respective tracts by marking each a tree, (there being no public surveyor in the district at that time,) and a plat thereof was deposited among the records in the archives of the government, as appears from a certificate of Charles Trudeau, recorder of the city of Orleans.

There is evidence before the committee sufficient to satisfy them beyond doubt that the condition required by the deed of concession to be performed on the part of the claimants, in order to perfect their title to said tracts of lands, was not only performed by them in good faith to the government within the time stipulated, but the evidence is sufficient to satisfy them that the object and expectations which the government had in view in making the grants were realized to the fullest extent.

In consideration of the good information given to the Spanish governor of the excellent deportment and good principles of the claimants, who were well known to the Spanish authorities, the Baron de Carondelet was induced, according to the statements contained in the deed of concession, for the objects and purposes therein mentioned, to make the grant to the claimants. Another and primary object of the government in making the grant, as expressed in the deed of concession, was to promote the population of the country, and form a settlement at the post of Arkansas for the purposes of agriculture and the improvement of the country. There is before the committee evidence taken before the board of commissioners for the Territory of Louisiana, proving to them satisfactorily that Elisha Winter settled on the tract of land granted to him in March, 1798, and cultivated during that year several acres of the land granted to him; that William Winter settled on the tract of land granted to him in June or July, 1797, and cultivated a part thereof during the following year; that the said Elisha and William took with them slaves, horses, cattle, sheep, provisions, farming utensils, household and kitchen furniture, and a variety of other articles necessary for making a large farming establishment; that the said Elisha and William made improvements to a considerable extent, built dwellings and outhouses. William Winter continued to reside with his family on and cultivate his tract of land, from the time of settlement to the year 1806, about which time he left that part of the country, but left a tenant, his brother-in-law, on the premises.

Elisha Winter, it seems, built a dwelling-house, and resided with his family on the tract of land granted to William until the year 1806; but he had a farmer, by the name of Joseph Mason, on the tract of land granted to him from the spring of the year 1798—the time when the possession, as before mentioned, was delivered—who, by the express permission of Don Carlos de Villemont, commandant of the district, continued to reside on and cultivate the same until the year 1808, as such farmer, for the said Elisha, and under his control.

Gabriel Winter, it seems, was at the time a minor, under the guardianship and protection of his father, Elisha, with whom he resided, and consequently there is no evidence of his having occupied the tract granted to him.

It seems that Elisha Winter, about the year 1791 or 1792, at the solicitation and by the permission of the Spanish authorities, erected an expensive rope-walk in the city of New Orleans, on a lot of ground granted to him by the Spanish government. The rope-walk which Winter established was subsequently destroyed by fire.

Although it is not stated in the grant, it is in the evidence before the committee, that an additional object which the government had in making so large grants was, in some degree, to indemnify him for the loss he had sustained in the destruction of his rope-walk. It is also in evidence that Mr. Winter was a great favorite with the Spanish officers, and occupied a high station in the confidence of the government. From a thorough examination of all the facts which have presented themselves to the committee in the investigation of this case, as well as an attentive examination of the legal questions which necessarily arise as to the right of the claimants to the lands granted to them by the government of Spain, they are compelled to admit, that if the governor general was clothed with power and authority to make the grants, the act of signing, sealing, and delivering of the deed of concession to the claimants by the Baron de Carondelet; the act of formally putting the claimants in possession of their respective tracts by Don Carlos de Villemont, commandant of the district; the execution of the surveys, and the return thereof to the proper officer by the commandant aforesaid, who was specially charged with the execution of all the necessary requisitions and formalities required in such cases by the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government; the immediate report of his proceedings to the governor general, and the occupation, settlement, and cultivation of the grants by the claimants within the time stipulated in the deed of concession, vested in Elisha Winter and William Winter a bona fide right and fee simple titles to the respective tracts of land granted to them as aforesaid, and now claimed by virtue of such grant. The only question that arises in the case which, in the opinion of the committee, admits of even an argument is, whether the governor general was authorized to make the grants. On this subject the committee are unable to find any express laws of the Spanish government, royal orders, decrees, or other written regulations, by which the authority and powers of the governor general of Louisiana and West Florida are defined or restricted in relation to the granting of lands in that part of the province within the district of Arkansas. They are therefore compelled to rely for information on the well known and established customs and usages of the Spanish government—the source from whence the several boards of commissioners established by acts of Congress for ascertaining claims and titles to lands have been compelled to derive their information. There is before the committee the evidence of persons who had been for many years officers under the Spanish government in the province of Louisiana, and who were necessarily well acquainted with the rules, regulations, customs, and usages of that government, and the powers vested in the governors of the provinces of his Christian Majesty on the continent of America for making grants of uncultivated lands in the respective provinces under their command. From the testimony adduced, there is not, in the opinion of the committee, any ground on which to rest a doubt of the power and authority vested in the governor general of Louisiana to make to one individual a grant of land of 1,000 arpents square. It is true that it was unusual for the governor general to make so large grants as the concessions to the Messrs. Winter, but it was at that time the policy of the Spanish government to encourage emigration to the frontiers; and, in the language of one of the witnesses, "its generosity and benevolence surpassed the usual method established in other possessions of the Spanish government." It will also be recollected that the land in the district of Arkansas at that time, being situated in a remote and wilderness part of the country on the frontiers of the province, was estimated at little value. "In fact," says one of the witnesses, "lands were held at so little value, that they were scarcely thought worth accepting of on paying the fees of the commandant for writing the concession or requit." As to the customs and usages of the Spanish government on this subject, the committee beg leave to refer to the report (Clark's Land Laws, 1039; 1 Rob. Am., 124; 2 Rob. Am, 136, 139, 140) of the register and receiver of the land district south of Red river, in Louisiana, not in the same province, but the powers vested in the governor to make grants of land are presumed to be the same.

From the earliest period of the history of Spanish jurisprudence with respect to the possessions of Spain on the western continent, it is a well known and established fact that the absolute title to all of the newly-discovered regions of country by that government vested in the crown. The title to that extensive tract of country which composed the viceroyalties of New Spain, Peru, and Santa Fe de Bogota, was maintained by the crown of Spain, under the authority of the bull of Pope Alexander the Sixth. The viceroys were clothed with supreme power and authority, and exercised all the royal prerogatives of their King. They had the appointment of all of the sub-governors and audiencies, who were subject to their unlimited control. In 1511 the royal council of the Indies was established by a decree of Ferdinand, and in 1524 made more perfect and continued by Charles the Fifth. The council was vested with absolute power in relation to the local laws, ordinances, and government of the colonies. Up to this period of the history of Spanish America, and for many years thereafter, lands were considered of no intrinsic value, and the title to the same was not an object of any considerable importance with the government. The policy of the government seemed to be to acquire population and encourage the settlement of the country. The laws and ordinances of the Spanish government prior to the year 1735, as relates to the organization of the tribunals, the powers of the different officers of government, and the grants of public lands, are to be found in the "Recopilacion de las leyes de las reynos de las Indios," from which the committee beg leave to make some extracts.

Lib. iv, tit. 2, law 1, vol 2, p. 39.—"In order to promote the zeal of our subjects in the discovery and settlement of the Indies, and that they may live in the ease and comfort which we desire them to enjoy, it is our will that there be distributed among them lands which shall be designated to them by the governor."

Lib. iii, tit. 3, law 2, vol. 1, p. 543—After enumerating the powers and duties of the viceroys of Peru and New Spain, and conferring on them unlimited authority, provides that "In all cases, things, and affairs that shall come before them, they shall do all that to them may appear fit and necessary, and provide and order all that we could do and provide, of whatever sort or nature it may be, within the provinces under their charge, if such provinces were governed by ourselves in person, in all matters that are not expressly prohibited by law." Again, in the same book and title, law 5th: "It is our will, and we command, that the viceroys of Peru and New Spain be governors of the provinces under their authority, and that they rule and govern the same in our name; that they grant such rewards, favors, and compensation as to them may seem fit; and that they fill the offices of government and justice established by custom, and not prohibited by our laws and orders; and all our subordinate audiencies, judges, and justices, and all our subjects and vassals, shall consider and obey them as governors, and shall allow them freely to enjoy and exercise such offices, giving and granting them all the aid and assistance which they may ask and want." On the 24th November, 1735, the King of Spain issued a royal decree revoking the powers vested in the viceroys, and reserving to his royal person the right of completing and confirming the titles to lands granted and given by the provincial officers in his transatlantic dominions. In 1754 Ferdinand VI, by a royal ordinance given at San Lorezo el Real, for the purpose of relieving his subjects from the trouble, expense, and necessity of making application to his court for the confirmation of their titles; for the purpose of promoting commerce, agriculture, and the raising of cattle, by furnishing greater facilities in the acquisition of the titles to land; and, among other things, for the purpose of augmenting the royal treasury by the sales of lands, granted to the viceroys and presidents of the royal audiencies the exclusive right and privilege of making grants to lands; which power had been, by the decree of 1735, taken from them and vested alone in the King. This ordinance, in the opinion of the commissioners for ascertaining claims and titles to lands within the district of West Florida, as contained in their report of November 12, 1824, (Clark's Land Laws, page 1046,) seems to form the basis of all regulations on the subject of lands belonging to the crown of Spain on the continent of America. There is nothing in this ordinance restricting the viceroys or governors in making grants of land to specific quantities, but all of the power and authority which was vested in the crown of Spain was, by this decree, given to the governors. After the Spanish government took possession of Louisiana, about the year 1769, in conformity with the stipulations of the secret treaty of 1763, by which all of the possessions of France in North America were ceded to Spain, the first rules established by the government for the granting of lands in the province of Louisiana, previous to the date of the deed of concession to the Messrs. Winter, were the regulations of Don Alexandro O'Reilly, governor and captain general of Louisiana, made at New Orleans on the 18th of February, 1770, and approved by an official despatch of the King given at Ildefonso on the 24th of August in the same year. On a reference to the royal despatch, it will be seen that the governor and his successors "have the sole power of distributing the royal lands," and "that henceforth the governor alone be authorized by his Majesty to make such grants." It is true that the regulations of O'Reilly restricted the grants to each newly-arrived family, who chose to settle on the borders of the Mississippi river, "to six or eight arpents in front by forty arpents in depth;" but these regulations had reference to lands on the Mississippi river, within the districts of Opelousas, Attakapas, and Natchitoches, where there was a dense population, whose safety, tranquillity, and happiness, in the opinion of the government, required new regulations in relation to the extent of the grants of lands thereafter to be made, as well as in relation to the local laws for the government of the inhabitants, and did not refer to the frontiers of the province at the post of Arkansas, where there were no settlements. The reasons which induced the government to adopt the twelve articles contained in the regulations of O'Reilly for the government of those three districts did not exist in the district of Arkansas. But the committee deem it unnecessary to enter into an argument to establish the position assumed, that these regulations were confined to the districts where the lands were valuable and the country numerously inhabited, and did not apply to an unsettled part of the province, where the lands were considered of little or no value; but for the truth of the position, refer to the strict letter and language of the regulations themselves. By the 8th article it is stipulated that "no grant in the Opelousas, Attakapas, and Natchitoches shall exceed one league in front by one league in depth," thereby admitting that grants in Arkansas may exceed that quantity. By the 9th article certain requisitions were necessary to obtain grants of a particular extent in the Opelousas, Attakapas, and Natchitoches, in consequence of the great demand for the land and its value in those districts, which evidently were not necessary to obtain grants in a section of the province where there were no settlements and no demand for the land. On reference to the regulations and despatch, it will be seen that the committee have taken a correct view of the subject. The next rules and regulations, established by the government for the allotment of lands in Louisiana, are the instructions of Governor Don Gayoso de Lemos, given at New Orleans on the 9th of September, 1797, subsequent to the date of the deed of concession made to the claimants, and consequently cannot affect this claim. The committee beg leave to refer to the general regulations and instructions of Don John Bonaventure Morales, intendant, &c., for conceding lands, dated at New Orleans, July 17, 1799, made in conformity with the royal order addressed to him, and given at San Lorenzo on the 22d of October, 1798, which, in the opinion of the committee, contain some provisions having an important bearing on the case now under investigation, although it bears date near two years posterior to the concession to the Messrs. Winter. In the preamble to the thirty-eight articles contained in these regulations, the previous regulations are referred to, the evils existing under them are pointed out, and the remedy is provided for in the subsequent articles. One of the objects, as stated in the preamble, is, "that those who are in possession, without the necessary titles, may know the steps they ought to take to come to an adjustment."

Article nine renounces the right of the King to all lands previously conceded. In the 19th article it is stipulated that "all those who possess lands, in virtue of formal titles given by their excellencies the governors of this province since the epoch when it became under the power of the Spanish, and those who possessed them in the time when it belonged to France, so far from being interrupted, shall, on the contrary, be protected and maintained in their possessions." This article is, to all intents and purposes, a confirmation of Winter's claim; the deed of concession is evidently a formal title. There was no condition precedent to be performed on the part of the claimants; the moment they received the deed of concession and were put into possession, they acquired a title to the land. The government stipulated a condition to be performed, which was to deliver a more formal deed, or, in the language of the concession, "there shall be delivered to each one his title deed, in form, as soon as they shall have settled themselves on their respective surveys." Each claimant, as soon as he settled himself on his respective survey, had a right to demand and receive a separate title deed for the particular tract of land conceded to him. The grant could not be considered, under any circumstances, as void, ab initio, but only voidable, by way of proviso, in case the lands were not occupied within one year. It did not require a separate title deed, in form, to vest in the Messrs. Winter fee simple titles to the lands. By the 20th article, "all those who, without title or possession mentioned in the preceding article, are found occupying lands, shall be driven therefrom, as from property belonging to the crown." It may be asked why the Messrs. Winters were not driven from the land, in conformity with the provisions of this article? The answer is obvious: because they were not occupying the lands, without either "title or possession," but had both formal titles and possession; had possessed the lands for more than one year anterior, and continued to possess and occupy them until the cession of the country to the United States, and for many years thereafter. The foregoing extracts show clearly that the policy of Spain, from its early history, was to make grants of land to meritorious and worthy persons, at the discretion of the governors of provinces, and that the powers of the governors were not limited in the extent of the grants, but that they were authorized to make grants and concessions to any extent, and to do all other matters and things that were "not expressly prohibited by law." In the absence, then, of any express provisions, it is to be presumed that the grant of one thousand arpents square was within the pale of their authority. It is also clearly established beyond contradiction that the concession was made in conformity with the settled and established customs and usages of the Spanish nation. The institutes of the civil laws of Spain (Lib. 4, tit. 2, part 1, and lib. 5, tit. 2, part 1,) established this principle, that "custom is the law or rule which is not written; that it receives its authority from the express or tacit consent of the King; that once introduced, it has the force of a law." It was decided in the case of Fernando M. Arredondo, before cited, that a court of justice has no judicial right to disregard the settled usages of a nation, or to overturn a fundamental principle on which the property of its citizens rests.—(8 Wheat., 591.) The same principle is applicable to the legislative department of the government, so far as relates to the rights of private individuals who hold under these usages. It would seem that the committee might with propriety rest the case of the petitioners here, under the confident expectation that they would have no difficulty in obtaining that speedy relief which the justice of their case demands; but, in consequence of the denial of the power of the Spanish governors to make grants of the extent of those made to the Messrs. Winter, and other technical objections raised by some of the members of the committee, this report has been extended to a much greater length than was originally intended, and the committee beg leave to take another view of the subject, which must satisfy every unprejudiced mind that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted.

By a reference to the royal order of Don Carlos, given at Barcelona on the 15th of October, made in conformity with the treaty of San Ildefonso, and the proclamation of Don Manuel Salcedo and Don Sebastian Calvo, commissioners of his Catholic Majesty for the delivery of Louisiana to the French republic, dated 18th of May, 1803, it will be seen that his Catholic Majesty, among other things, stipulated "that the inhabitants shall be maintained and protected in the peaceful possession of their property; that all grants and property, of whatever description, derived from the governors of these provinces, shall be confirmed to them, although not confirmed by his Majesty." If, then, it is proven satisfactorily, as the committee contend it is, that the governor of Louisiana and West Florida did, in the year 1797, grant to Elisha Winter and William Winter the tracts of land claimed by them, by a deed of concession executed with all of the formalities and solemnities required by the Spanish government, and that the said Elisha and William performed all of the conditions required of them by the deed to be performed, it follows, as a necessary consequence, according to the stipulations contained in the treaty of San Ildefonso between France and Spain, the royal order of Don Carlos, and the proclamation of the commissioners, that they were entitled to a confirmation of their grants, "although not confirmed by his Majesty" previous to the treaty and delivery of the country to France.

It may here be inquired, what induced the Spanish government to provide, in the treaty of San Ildefonso, for the confirmation of all grants, although not confirmed by his Majesty? Was it to confirm grants already perfected, or those only that were inchoate?

There was no necessity for a confirmation of the former. The French republic was bound to protect the inhabitants in the peaceful possession of their property, to which they had already obtained a legal title, without any confirmation. That clause of the treaty must have meant, and, if it is construed according to the letter, does mean, grants of land, of "whatever description, derived from the governors." No one, however prejudiced he may be against the claim, can have the hardihood to say that the concession to the claimants was not a grant derived from the governor of the province. If, then, the agents or ministers of the governments of the two contracting parties were empowered to make the treaty, and that treaty was afterwards ratified, the grant to the Messrs. Winter was, by the ratification of the same, confirmed to them, although not previously confirmed by the Spanish government. The government of the United States, when she acquired possession, was bound, not only by every tie of honor and moral obligation, by the laws of God and of nations, to respect the rights of private individuals, but she was bound by compact, by a solemn treaty made and entered into between the ministers plenipotentiary of the United States and the French republic, at Paris, on the 30th of April, 1803, to respect the rights of individuals, and protect the citizens of the ceded territory in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property.

The third article of the treaty stipulates that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of the citizens of the United States, and, in the meantime, they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess."

Laying the treaty aside, and admitting that no clause had been inserted in the same guaranteeing and securing to the inhabitants of the ceded territory the rights of private property, they would have been secured by the laws of nations. It is universally admitted that, by the settled and well understood principles of international law, the lands of individuals are secured to them when a change of government in a particular section of country takes place by conquest, during the existence of a war between two nations.—(Vattel, 452.) It is difficult, then, to understand by what principle an amicable cession or transfer can destroy private rights. The obligation on the part of the United States to respect and protect the rights of the inhabitants of the ceded territory in the quiet enjoyment of their property, independent of the treaty, cannot be denied. An examination into the laws of nations, as relates to the rights of the proprietors of lands in Louisiana, is not, in the opinion of the committee, called for in this particular case, where there is an express treaty stipulation protecting the inhabitants in the enjoyment of their property. The government of the United States had other and more laudable objects in view in acquiring that country than the sordid desire of becoming the landlord of the soil, at the expense of disturbing the citizens in the peaceful and quiet possession of their homes. In conformity with the 3d article of the treaty, Congress, by an act passed March 2, 1805, (Land Laws, 518,) provided that "any person or persons, and the legal representatives of any person or persons, who, on the 1st of October, in the year 1800, were resident within the territories ceded by the French republic to the United States, by the treaty of 30th of April, 1803, and who had, prior to the said 1st day of October, 1800, obtained from the French or Spanish governments, respectively, during the time either of said governments had the actual possession of said territories, any duly registered warrant, or order of survey, for lands lying within the said territories, to which the Indian title had been extinguished, and which were, on that day, actually inhabited and cultivated by such person or persons, or for his or their use, shall be confirmed in their claims to such lands, in the same manner as if their titles had been completed: Provided, however, That no such incomplete title shall be confirmed, unless the person in whose name such warrant or order of survey had been granted, was, at the time of its date, either the head of a family, or above the age of twenty-one years, (Land Laws, 548,) nor unless the conditions and terms, on which the completion of the grant depends, shall have been fulfilled."

The claimants, as has already been proven, both resided on the lands granted to them on the 1st of October, 1800, within the ceded territory; the deed of concession, which contained in itself an order of survey, was obtained from the governor general, while Spain had actual possession, and was duly registered; the Indian title had been extinguished; the condition and terms of the grant had been fulfilled. Here is another pledge, on the part of the government, to confirm their titles. By the same act it is further provided, "that to every person, or to the legal representative or representatives of every person, who, being either the head of a family, or twenty-one years of age, had, prior to the 20th day of December, 1803, with the permission of the proper Spanish officer, and in conformity with the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government, made an actual settlement on a tract of land within the said territories, not claimed by virtue of the preceding section, or of any Spanish or French grant made and completed before the 1st day of October, 1800, and during the time the government which made such grant had the actual possession of the said territories, and who did, on the said 20th day of December, 1803, actually inhabit and cultivate the said tract of land, the tract of land thus inhabited and cultivated shall be granted."

The claimants come within the provisions of both of these clauses. The board of commissioners was vested with ample power to ascertain the rights of persons claiming under any French or Spanish grant, and to hear and decide, in a summary way all matters respecting the claims of the citizens to lands in the ceded territory; or, in other words, it was vested with ample power and authority to redeem the pledge which the government had made by the treaty with the French republic in relation to the rights of the citizens; but it was further enacted, by way of proviso, "that not more than one tract shall be thus granted to any one person, and the same shall not contain more than one mile square, together with such other and further quantity as heretofore has been allowed for the wife and family of such actual settler, agreeably to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government: Provided, also, That this donation shall not be made to any person who claims any other tract of land in the said territory by virtue of any French or Spanish grant."

In consequence of the commissioners being confined in their jurisdiction to one mile square, they could not take cognizance of the claim of the Messrs. Winter. By an act of Congress, passed April 21, 1806, (Land Laws, 532,) supplementary to the act of 1805, "every person who, claiming a tract of land by virtue of the act of 1805, and who had commenced an actual settlement on such tract prior to the 1st day of October, 1800, and had continued actually to inhabit and cultivate the same during the term of three years from the time when such actual settlement had commenced and prior to the 20th of December, 1803, shall be considered as having made such settlement with the permission of the proper Spanish officer, although it may not be in the power of such person to produce sufficient evidence of such permission." The only reason why the claimants could not avail themselves of the provisions of the acts of Congress here granted and referred to, is, as before stated, because their claim exceeded one league square the limits prescribed by Congress in the confirmation of claims. If the claimants had relinquished a part of their legal rights, and brought themselves within the arbitrary rules prescribed by Congress, they would have had no greater difficulty in obtaining a confirmation of one league square than other individuals claiming by virtue of grants from the same source. It is generally admitted, and sanctioned by numerous acts of Congress, that the governors of the Spanish provinces had power and authority to make grants of the extent before mentioned, and to that extent numerous confirmations have been made by law. In addition to what has already been said on the subject, there are reports of Congress affirming the existence of good and valid grants over a league square. What right has the United States to restrict the claimants to land, under and by virtue of grants from the Spanish government, to one league square, and from whence is the power derived? It is not in the treaty of Paris, by which the United States acquired the territory. It is not in the treaty of San Ildefonso, by which France acquired the right to cede the same to our government. It is not to be found in any of the laws, ordinances, or decrees of the crown of Spain for the government of the Indies, or any of her transatlantic provinces. In none of those laws, ordinances, or decrees, is there to be found any authority to the governors to grant a league square, and a prohibition against exceeding that quantity. The committee are, therefore, led to conclude that the right does not exist; that the United States have not the right, under our Constitution and republican form of government, to do that which the monarchical government of Spain, in the plenitude of her unrestrained power, could not have done—deprive her citizens of their rights; but that she is bound to redeem the pledge made to the French republic by protecting the claimants in "the free enjoyment of their property."

In the year 1816 Gabriel Winter, in behalf of himself and the heirs of Elisha and William Winter, petitioned Congress for a confirmation of their claims. On the 30th of September, 1817, the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom the subject had been previously referred, reported, unanimously, a bill in favor of the confirmation of the claim, and used, as a reason for making a favorable report, the emphatic language, "that the heirs of Elisha Winter and William Winter cannot be deprived of those lands, belonging to their ancestors, without a violation of that treaty which is declared by the Constitution to be the supreme law of the land."—(See No. 261, page 256.) At the first session of the 16th Congress the claimants petitioned Congress again for a confirmation of their titles. The subject was referred to the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate, who reported favorably on the 14th of March, 1820.—(See No. 315, page 378.) The committee in their report truly remarked that "the testimony is derived from the most respectable sources; from foreign surveyors; from surveyors general of the United States, and other public officers." "Indeed," say the committee, "the documents and testimony presented, whether in relation to the authenticity of the grant, their compliance by actual settlement with its conditions, or in support of their interpretation of the words expressive of the quantity of land, have been collected with uncommon diligence and care, assume a persuasive appearance of candor and good faith, are entitled to the most candid consideration, and authorize a strong presumption in favor of the claim."

The memorialists represent that a portion of the lands have been surveyed and disposed of to other individuals by the government, notwithstanding the claimants entered and filed their protest against it in the General Land Office. The memorialists ask Congress either to confirm their titles to the lands conceded to their ancestors, or to pass a special law authorizing them to investigate their claim before a judicial tribunal. If Congress should decline deciding on the merits of the claim, and refer the adjudication thereof to a court of justice, they represent that in consequence of the lapse of time, the long delay of the government in passing on their claim, and the death of many of the witnesses, they will be unable at this time to adduce competent testimony in support of their rights. They, therefore, pray Congress to pass a special act authorizing them to give in evidence such testimony as has been taken before officers legally authorized to administer oaths, where the witnesses are dead or beyond the court's process.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists represent to your honorable body that on the 29th of June, 1797, the governor general of the provinces of Louisiana and East Florida, (then in possession of the government of Spain,) conceded to Elisha Winter one thousand arpents of land square; to William Winter and Gabriel Winter, sons of Elisha Winter, each five hundred arpents square, in the district of Arkansas, as by a deed of concession of that date; that Elisha Winter resided in New Orleans, and, previous to that time, at the solicitation of the Spanish government, had erected in New Orleans a certain rope-walk; that Elisha Winter and sons were required, by the terms of the concession, as a condition precedent to the completion of their title to the lands thus conceded, to make settlement upon their respective tracts within the period of one year from the date of their concessions; that the said Elisha Winter and sons were put into the possession of their respective tracts, a short time after the concession was made, by the commandant of the district of Arkansas, who was charged by the governor general with the execution of the designs of the Spanish government in this respect.

Your memorialists allege that the conditions of settlement have been complied with by Elisha Winter and William Winter, who made an actual settlement on their respective tracts, agreeably to the terms of the concession, and continued to occupy and cultivate the land thus settled, from the time of the settlement, and long time after the country was ceded and taken possession of by the United States.

Your memorialists further show that the provisions of the law respecting land titles in that section of country have been complied with by Elisha Winter and sons, and their title papers and other evidences have been taken, filed, and recorded in the proper office.

Your memorialists further represent that the concession to Elisha Winter and sons (they being favorites of the Spanish government) were, in some measure, to compensate Elisha, the father, for losses of his rope-walk, which was destroyed by fire; and they further allege that, had the Spanish government retained the possession of the country, the titles of the Messrs. Winter would have been consummated by a complete grant.

And your memorialists insist that the titles of Elisha Winter and William Winter are secured and guaranteed under the third article of the treaty of Paris of April 30, 1803, which secures to the inhabitants of Louisiana the "free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion they profess;" and we appeal to your honorable body at once to redeem the nation's pledge.

Near a quarter of a century has elapsed since the cession; petitions were laid before Congress in the years 1816, 1817, and 1820. The House of Representatives reported on the petition of 1816–'17, and the Senate on that of 1820; all which reports, and the evidence laid before Congress, your memorialists beg leave to refer to, and make them a part of this their memorial.

That should your honorable body decline deciding on the claim of your memorialists, and refer it to a judicial determination, it cannot but be apparent that the lapse of time, the long delays of Congress in respect to this claim, although so often pressed on their consideration by the claimants, that death hath taken many of the witnesses who have testified; and that the testimony taken cannot be read without a special act of Congress, making the testimony taken competent; and if a reference is made, justice requires this to be done; otherwise, delays of Congress have put in jeopardy rights which the nation is pledged by treaty to protect.

Your memorialists further state that it is with surprise and regret that they learn that the United States has surveyed and disposed of a part of the lands granted to Elisha Winter and sons, in payment to the soldiers of the late war; and is proceeding to lay off and dispose of the balance at public sales, notwithstanding a protest was entered and filed against it in the General Land Office; thereby embarrassing your memorialists, by multiplying lawsuits, and violating the third article of the treaty of Paris made for the benefit of the inhabitants of Louisiana.

And your memorialists humbly submit to the consideration of your honorable body the justice of their claim, and the reasonableness of their demand for rights too long withheld.

Your memorialists annex hereto the list of claimants who hold title under Elisha Winter and sons.

Your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1049 [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 5, 1832.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George Gordon, reported:

That the petitioner sets forth that during the Spanish government in Louisiana one Matthew Ramey came from the United States and settled in that country, and obtained from the Spanish authorities at St. Louis a grant for a tract of land of 1,056 arpents, or thereabouts, situated on a branch of the river Despères, ten or twelve miles west of St. Louis; and that he, the said Ramey, settled and cultivated the same as early as the year 1803. A copy of the plat of said tract of land is exhibited, and certified by James McKey, deputy surveyor, who states that he surveyed said tract of land for said Matthew Ramey, at his request. Petitioner states that Ramey presented his claim to the commissioners appointed to adjust land claims at St. Louis for a settlement right, having lost or mislaid his concession or grant for said land, but that the claim was not confirmed—not on account, as petitioner believes, of any defect in the right, but on account of the claimant being ignorant of the proper means of securing his claim. Petitioner further states that said Ramey remained in possession of said land until his death, in 1808, and held the same by regular survey. An instrument of writing, purporting to be a deed, is exhibited, signed by sundry persons who acknowledge themselves to be heirs of said Matthew Ramey, transferring their right to said land to Nathan Ramey, an heir, being in accordance with the wishes of their father, Matthew Ramey, before his death. Petitioner further states that said Nathan Ramey resided on said land until 1829, when he purchased it from him, by deed bearing date March 17, 1829. Petitioner states that he was ignorant of the laws and land titles of the country but knowing the length of time the said Nathan Ramey and his father had been in possession of the land, he had supposed their title to be good; that immediately after purchasing said land he opened a large farm on said land, and all needful buildings necessary for such establishment; he also erected on said tract of land a steam mill for the manufacture of meal and flour. One witness swears that said Matthew Ramey took possession of said land in 1802, by planting out some peach trees; that he raised a crop thereon in the year 1803, and went to reside thereon in the year 1804. Several other witnesses swear that the said Ramey took possession of said land as early as 1803. Petitioner has produced no grant from the Spanish authorities for said land to said Ramey, yet, from the evidence adduced, the committee are of opinion that the heirs and legal representatives of said Matthew Ramey, deceased, ought to be confirmed in their claim to 640 acres of land, this being the quantity of land granted to actual settlers as a settlement right; for which the committee report a bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1050. [1ST SESSION

ON LAND CLAIMS IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 6, 1832.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 6, 1832.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a copy of the report of the register and receiver of the land office for the district of St. Stephen's, prepared in obedience to the 3d section of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1829. Also a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to those officers, dated January 10, 1832, together with a copy of their reply, dated the 7th instant.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 10, 1832.

GENTLEMEN: Upon examining your report, under the 3d section of the act of March 2, 1829, I find you do not, in either case, state the nature of the claim, from what authority it was derived, or the ground of your decision; and, as it is all important that these particulars should be known, I have to request that you furnish me, as soon as practicable, with an abstract of the title papers filed in each case, as the report cannot be submitted to Congress until this information is afforded.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

The REGISTER and RECEIVER of the Land Office, St. Stephen's, Alabama.

LAND OFFICE, St. Stephen's, Alabama, March 7, 1832.

SIR: We have received your letter of the 10th January, upon the subject of our report upon claims, presented to us under the 3d section of the act of March 2, 1829.

We forward with this a report upon the same claims, which we desire you will receive in lieu of the one heretofore made.

We are, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

No. 1.

Abstract of claims to land situated west of the Perdido, east of Pearl river, and below the 31st degree of north latitude, presented to the register and receiver of the land office at St. Stephen's, Alabama, acting as commissioners under the authority of the third section of the act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1829, entitled "An act confirming the report of the register and receiver of the land office for the district of St. Stephen's, in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes."

REMARKS.

CLAIM No. 1.—This grant appears to have been regularly transferred from the original grantee to the present claimant.

The original grantees, or their legal representatives, appear to have been residents of that part of Louisiana situated east of Pearl river, and west of the Perdido, and below the 31° of north latitude, on April 15, 1813, and on that day, and for ten consecutive years previous to that day, to have been in possession of the tracts claimed. The present claims are therefore recommended for confirmation; but if either of the foregoing claimants had a claim to any part of the above-described lands confirmed to him, the quantity heretofore confirmed to be included in and make a part of the quantity now recommended for confirmation. All of which is respectfully submitted.

ON THE APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI AND THE TRUSTEES OF JEFFERSON COLLEGE FOR A DONATION OF LAND FOR SAID COLLEGE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 6, 1832.

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill from the Senate for the relief of Jefferson College, in the State of Mississippi, accompanied by two memorials, one from the board of trustees of said college, and the other from the legislature of Mississippi, reported:

That the trustees of Jefferson College were incorporated in the year 1802 by an act of the legislative council of the Mississippi Territory. The college was located in a healthy and pleasant situation at the town of Washington, in the county of Adams, with no other endowment than such as made by individual enterprise. By the 12th section of an act of Congress, passed on the 3d of March, 1803, entitled "An act regulating the grants of land, and providing for the disposal of the lands of the United States south of the State of Tennessee," thirty-six sections of land in the then Mississippi Territory were reserved for the use of said college; and on the 5th of October, 1812, the land so reserved was located by the Secretary of the Treasury, under and by virtue of the provisions of said act, on the Tombigbee river, in a position nearly central to the then limits of the Mississippi Territory; that the division of the Territory, and the formation of the States of Alabama and Mississippi, has thrown this land into the State of Alabama, whilst the site of the college is on the western margin of the State of Mississippi. The memorialists state that they feel assured that Congress, in its munificence, designed this, as well as all similar grants to other literary institutions, as a means of active and efficient support in its wise and cherished policy of diffusing information and learning, and maintaining that intelligence in the community in which the free and happy institutions of our government had their origin and must ever subsist. It is doubtless the desire of Congress that the grant of land to Jefferson College should be a source of immediate revenue, and be usefully and efficiently applied to the laudable purpose for which it was designed. The memorialists represent that the land in question, independent of its unfavorable position, is composed chiefly of sterile pine barren, and of land subject to inundation, and that they find it impracticable to make any disposition of it for the advantage of the institution under their charge; that it will remain, probably, unproductive and valueless to the college for half a century; in the meantime the institution would languish and decline for want of pecuniary aid. The memorialists further represent that, so soon as the late treaties with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians take effect, there will be in the State of Mississippi alone more than twenty millions of acres of land, which will be obtainable from the United States at the rate of one dollar and a quarter per acre; and when persons can become purchasers on such favorable terms, it is obvious that leases will be impracticable, or that few, if any, will be found willing to improve lands held by such a tenure; and it may be remarked that although leases of those lands may be impracticable, yet the sum which they would yield, if sold, might be readily and securely invested at an annual interest of from six to ten per cent. This would furnish a convenient and certain revenue, sufficient, in the opinion of your memorialists, to meet the exigencies of the institution; and that if they can have the privilege of relinquishing said lands, and of locating the same quantity on any of the unappropriated lands of the United States within the State of Mississippi, and authorized to sell and dispose of the same, the proceeds arising from such sale will enable the trustees to realize a fund which, being judiciously invested, would yield a permanent income sufficient to keep the institution in useful operation. The buildings erected by the trustees with the limited means under their control, though large and commodious, and hitherto sufficient for the wants of the institution, are not extensive enough to carry into complete operation the original designs of its founders. The want of patronage on the part of the citizens, who until recently were in the habit of sending their sons to the northern colleges to complete their educations, and the want of suitable and capable instructors, has kept the institution far behind those of the older States, and prevented the college from commanding that respect due to the State and to the illustrious individual whose name it bears. In the year 1829 it went into operation on the military plan, under its present able and talented faculty. At the last-mentioned period the institution opened with twenty-eight students, since which time the number has increased to one hundred and thirty. The memorialists therefore pray that they may be permitted to relinquish the land granted for the use of Jefferson College, being part of townships No. ten, of ranges Nos. one and two west, in the district of lands offered for sale at St. Stephen's, or so much thereof as may be found advisable, and to locate in lieu thereof a quantity of land equal to that which they may relinquish, to be selected under the direction of the trustees out of any unappropriated land in the State of Mississippi, or within the limits of the country lately ceded by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to the United States, to be taken either before or after such lands may have been offered at public sale, being governed in such locations by the legal subdivisions of such lands in the surveys made or to be made under the authority of the United States, and also that they may be permitted and authorized to sell the land which may be so located or entered, and to convey a fee simple title thereto. The committee deem it unnecessary to enter into any elaborate argument of the advantages of education, the benefits resulting to the community at large from the establishment of seminaries of learning in every part of the Union, and of the propriety of the general government's making liberal donations of lands for the purpose of encouraging education, so vitally important to the safety, protection, and welfare of our government. It is sufficient for the present inquiry to remark that the memorialists only ask for the change of location of land already donated to the institution by the general government, and that the fee simple title to the same may be vested in the trustees.

No one who will make himself acquainted with the facts can oppose the change of location. As an argument in favor of authorizing the trustees to sell and convey fee simple titles to the same so far as precedent is entitled to weight, the committee beg leave to refer to an act of Congress passed in 1826 authorizing Ohio to sell and convey in fee simple all lands reserved by Congress for the use of schools in said State; to an act of Congress passed in 1827, granting the same favor to Alabama; to an act of Congress passed in 1828, granting a similar favor to Indiana; to an act of Congress passed in 1828, authorizing the State of Alabama to make a change of location in a similar case; and to an act of 1831, authorizing Missouri to sell and convey in fee simple all lands reserved and appropriated for the use of a seminary of learning in that State. For the plan and mode in which Jefferson College is conducted, the course of studies pursued, the discipline of the students, and the present condition of the institution, the committee beg leave to refer to the report of the board of visitors at the annual examination in May, 1831, and a letter from President Williston to the governor of Mississippi, accompanying this report.

The committee are of opinion that the prayer of the memorialists is a reasonable one and ought to be granted; and therefore report the bill from the Senate, with sundry amendments, embracing the object of the memorialists.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1052. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE SUBJECT OF THE TITLE OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE ISLAND IN THE DELAWARE RIVER, ON WHICH FORT DELAWARE HAS BEEN ERECTED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 12, 1832.

Mr. MARCY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 130) to authorize the Secretary of War to enter into a compromise to secure to the United States a title in fee to an island in the Delaware, upon which Fort Delaware has been erected, reported:

That, before or during the late war, the State of Delaware claiming title to an island in the Delaware river called the Pea Patch, made a cession of it to the United States, who desired it for the purpose of erecting fortifications thereon. It is represented to the committee that when the United States took possession of this island they dispossessed Joseph Gale, who claimed, and still claims, to be the owner of it, by virtue of a title derived from the State of New Jersey. One or more suits have been instituted against the agent of the United States to recover the possession of this island; and the validity of the title under which the United States hold it has been called into serious question, but no decision has been made against it. The public works on the island have been recently destroyed in part by a fire, and the government is desirous that the title should be settled before large expenditures are made in rebuilding them. The position of the island is advantageous for defensive works, and it is deemed important that the United States should occupy it for that purpose.

The committee have not considered it their duty to come to any definitive opinion as to the title to the island, because the bill does not propose to concede that the United States have not a just and valid claim to it. They are, however, satisfied that considerable doubt hangs over the title, and think it would be unwise to rebuild the fort without having the controversy in relation to it adjusted. It will be perceived by the documents herewith submitted that persons who have been employed to defend the rights of the United States have entertained some doubts of ultimate success; and both the Secretary of War and the solicitor of the treasury express opinions in favor of a compromise. The bill referred to the committee proposes that a sum, not more than $17,000, shall be given to the claimant under the New Jersey grant, provided the Attorney General of the United States, on examination, shall be satisfied that such claimant has a valid title to the premises, on his executing a release of his rights to the premises and all claims against the United States for use and occupation.

If the title of the claimant should be confirmed by a judicial decision, it is not probable that it could be acquired by the government for the sum mentioned in the bill. It is probable a much larger one would be demanded, and the government would ultimately be induced to give it. This consideration is suggested as the main ground of the compromise. There is also another entitled to consideration, which is that there should be no delay in putting the works on the island in a proper state of defence.

The committee have therefore ordered the bill to be reported, with some amendments.

Letter of L. Cass, Secretary of War.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, March 29, 1832.

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 15th instant, concerning the title to the Pea Patch island in the Delaware and the value of the property, I have the honor to observe that the accompanying papers, together with those in possession of the party claiming title under the State of New Jersey, and which will, I presume, be exhibited to the committee, contain all the information upon these subjects which has been laid before this department.

The message of the President to the House of Representatives of February 18, 1831, presented the views of my predecessor; and, under all the circumstances of the case, I concur in the expediency of the arrangement proposed by him. It will be perceived by the papers that different opinions are entertained by the law officers of the validity of the title of the United States to this island. Without undertaking to judge between them, which I do not feel competent to do, it seems to me that prudence requires that a compromise should be effected, if it can be done upon reasonable terms.

The value of the island, independently of the objects for which it is wanted by the United States, I am unable even to conjecture. But its possession is essential to the security of the Delaware river, and large expenditures have been made upon it. It appears to me, therefore, that authority should be given to carry the original arrangement, or some other, into effect.

With much respect, I am, sir, your obedient servant,

LEWIS CASS.

Hon. N. L. MARCY,
Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, U. S. Senate.

Statement in relation to the Pea Patch.

Messrs. Rodney and Read state, in the case they have submitted, that the United States procured the grant of the Pea Patch from the State of Delaware, and expended on the fortifications there large sums of money, "without the slightest notice of an adversary claim."

We are prepared to prove by affidavit that the agents of government offered Dr. Gale, who was then in possession of the island and engaged in improving it, a large sum for ten acres; that the island was forcibly taken possession of by the United States, and property to the amount of $3,500 destroyed by them.

They quote the deed of Charles II to the Duke of York, by which we hold the western boundaries thus described: "To the west side of Delaware bay, together with all the rivers, harbors, &c., to the said premises belonging, or in anywise appertaining." This island is not in the bay, but in the river Delaware; and if this is not a river appertaining, what is? All the islands in the river Delaware, on the Jersey side, have been surveyed and held under proprietors' rights, some of them from time immemorial. The question as to those lying between Jersey and Pennsylvania has never been raised, but the States have held them according to their propriety, and Delaware never claimed the right to any island but this, nor to this until the United States had applied for it for a purpose beneficial to her.

But we are not obliged to rely upon this, even if the river could be proved to be the bay, and this island were past the east side of Delaware bay; for his Majesty grants to the Duke of York, expressly, all royalties appertaining to said tract of country. Now, the right to the soil under tide water is, and always has been, held to be expressly a royalty; and the grant of a large country like this, with all royalties appurtenant, must necessarily carry the usual rights to the waters by which it is bounded and the islands adjacent. All islands appurtenant are also expressly granted; and if this island is not appurtenant to Jersey, what is appurtenant to it? New Jersey is, in fact, almost joined to it by marshes and flats; while the ship channel, wide and deep, is between it and Delaware. The right of fishing, the right of water, and the right of harbor, all of which are expressly granted us, would, either of them, according to the construction and definition of those terms by the English courts, give us a title to the premises in question; but the words, all royalties, and all the right, title, and interest which his Majesty had in the premises, which are also used, are conclusive. The King holds a large tract of country bounded by a navigable stream on one side—what are his rights in that water? If he has any, they are expressly granted to those under whom we hold.

That our grant was so extensive in its powers Messrs. Rodney and Read admit, when they state that Queen Anne accepted the relinquishment of the right of government from the proprietors in 1702, thus recognizing the jus regium, or right of royalty, as having passed by the grant under which they held. This relinquishment is confined to the right of government, and expressly reserves all other rights.

Thus much in regard to the strength of our title; but Messrs. Rodney and Reed claim protection for the weakness of their title under the rule in ejectment, that the possessor cannot be ousted by the weakness of his title, but by the strength of the opposing one, But will this avail them? The reverse, upon examination, will be found to be the case. We prove actual possession for more than thirty years in ourselves, which is prima facie evidence of title in us; they have held possession but seventeen years, which is not evidence of title; and if it were, their taking can be proved tortious, so that we are now, constructively, still in possession. Under these circumstances, is there a court of justice in this country who would refuse to try their title?

But here the case is at an end; for it is admitted by all the attorneys for the United States that there is no grant on record from Charles II to the Duke of York, under whom the State of Delaware holds the premises in question; and the Duke, being a subject, had no more right to grant than a scavenger. The confirmation of this grant was also refused when he afterwards became King.

But an opinion is advanced that Delaware river and bay were never granted by the King to any one, and consequently both grants must fail. Be it so: the bay and river, then, will be divided, according to the law of nations, between Jersey and Delaware, as sovereign States. By actual survey, this island can be shown to lie almost, if not quite, wholly on the Jersey side of a central line, and it is, and always has been, on the Jersey side of the channel of the river. By immemorial usage Jersey has acknowledged the rights of the proprietors to these islands, for we can show the record of the survey under proprietors' warrant of every island of importance on the Jersey side of the Delaware. But in our case we have a deed from the State of Jersey granting expressly all their rights. This was granted on the ground that our rights were indisputable, and a similar grant was refused to the United States on the same ground.

We do not wish any part of our statements to be taken for granted, but stand ready to prove everything by legal evidence.

Deduction of title.

The claimant deduces his title regularly from the proprietors of West Jersey, whose rights are derived from a conveyance to them made by the Duke of York, bearing date A. D. 1680, he holding under grant from King Charles II, dated March 12, 1664.

1743. The council of proprietors, by warrant bearing date November 4, 1743, directed the surveyor general to survey to Sam. Atkinson and wife 600 acres of unappropriated land anywhere in the west division of New Jersey, below the falls at Trenton.

1744. Atkinson and wife conveyed the whole of said warrant, by deed bearing date April 6, 1744, to John Robbins.

1782. The council of proprietors, by warrant bearing date August 7, 1782, directed the surveyor general to survey to Daniel Ellis 5,000 acres of unappropriated land anywhere in the said west division of New Jersey.

1783. Daniel Ellis, by deed bearing date August 8, 1783, conveyed to John Lawrence 600 acres of said warrant.

1784. John Lawrence, by deed bearing date September 1, 1784, conveyed to Clement Hall and Edward Hall 126 acres of said warrant; and Elias Robbins, eldest son and heir-at-law of John Robbins aforesaid, by deed bearing date October 6, 1784, conveyed to Edward Hall 52½ acres and half a tenth of said warrant. By virtue of these warrants and the above mesne conveyances the surveyor general, by his deputy, surveyed and appropriated to Edward Hall and Clement Hall 178 acres of unappropriated land, being an island in the Delaware river, described as follows: "An island in the Delaware called the Pea Patch, situate in the county of Salem, township of Penn's Neck," &c.

1813. The administrators of Clement Hall, by deed bearing date February 27, 1813, conveyed to Henry Gale one-half of the island called the Pea Patch. Edward Hall, and Ann his wife, by deed of the same date, conveyed to Henry Gale the other half of said island.

1831. The State of New Jersey, by legislative act, granted to Henry Gale all its right and title to said premises.—(Act passed 24th November, 1831.)

This last act was obtained by the claimant on account of a dictum of the late Judge Washington, who expressed an opinion that the islands on the Jersey side of the Delaware belonged to the State, and not to the proprietors.

The claimant has evidence to prove undisturbed possession in himself and those under whom he held for more than thirty years, and if the taking of the United States be adjudged tortious, his possession extends to near fifty years.

Opinion of the United States district attorney for Delaware upon the United States claim to the Pea Patch island.

Captain Babcock, of the United States engineers, has submitted to my consideration a communication addressed to him from the engineer department, instructing him to institute an inquiry as to the title to the island in the river Delaware, commonly called the Pea Patch, and has requested me to give him my views in relation to the matter.

My opinion is, that any claim of title not derived from the State of Delaware is entirely groundless. By the deed of feoffment of the Duke of York to William Penn, anno Domini sixteen hundred and eighty-two, "of New Castle and the twelve miles circle," there is granted "all that the town of New Castle, otherwise called Delaware, and all that tract of land lying within the compass or circle of twelve miles about the same, situate, lying, and being upon the river Delaware, in America, and all islands in the said river Delaware, and the said river and soil thereof, lying north of the southernmost part of the said circle of twelve miles about the said town." By this deed are defined the boundaries by which are limited the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the State of Delaware; and according to such limits the State has uniformly asserted and exercised jurisdiction over the river to the low-water mark of the State of Jersey. In conformity to this established right the State of Delaware, by an act of assembly passed May 27, 1813, ceded to the United States the jurisdiction and soil of the island called the Pea Patch, which is about six miles below New Castle, and nearly equidistant from the shores of Delaware and Jersey. No title other than that of the United States is known of, derived from the State of Delaware. A warrant, it is said, was taken out of the land office of the last-mentioned State to survey the island in question, about twenty-five years since, but no return was ever made, or any location effected, that is believed, and the land office was soon after closed, and has ever since so remained. It may be remarked that no cession was asked for except from the State of Delaware previously to the proposed erection of fortifications by the general government, although the commanding general of the military district of which Delaware formed a part was a distinguished citizen of New Jersey, and from the place he occupied in her councils and at her bar must have been well aware of all her rights.

It is not intended to discuss elaborately the validity of a title the grounds of which are not stated, but as it is presumed to be derived under and from a New Jersey patent, it may not be out of place to take a brief view of the grants, &c., under which, if at all, New Jersey could give a title to the island in question.

In 1664 King Charles II made a grant to the Duke of York of a large territory, which included New Jersey, the western boundary of which is made the river Delaware, "all the lands from, &c., to the east side of the Delaware bay." In the same year the Duke granted to Berkely and Carteret the part of the said territory now called New Jersey, and thus describes its western boundary: "and hath upon the west Delaware bay or river."

In 1702 a surrender was made of their rights of government by the then proprietors of East and West Jersey to Queen Anne. This instrument recites the two last-mentioned grants, and surrenders the territorial government according to the boundaries therein mentioned, thus acknowledging those limits to the jurisdiction of Jersey as having been heretofore accepted; and this acknowledgment made too at a period subsequent to that which fixed those of the neighboring government; and what is remarkable, too, the above mentioned grant of Charles, recited in the surrender, grants the river Hudson by name, "together, also, with the said river called the Hudson river," while it merely mentions the Connecticut in marking the eastern, and the Delaware in defining the western boundary.

There was then nothing to prevent the Duke of York granting the river and soil thereof to William Penn, and such a grant entitled the State of Delaware to that complete title which, by cession, is now in the United States of America.

GEO. REED, JR., Attorney United States, Delaware district.

NEW CASTLE, September 7, 1818.

William Wirt, United States Attorney General, to the Secretary of War. His opinion on the United States claim to the Pea Patch island.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, January 8, 1820

SIR: It is only within a few days back that I have been put in possession of copies of all the documents that can be found relative to the title to the is'and in Delaware river called the Pea Patch. Even yet, the grant from the Crown, on which the title of the State of Delaware to that island is founded, has not been procured and forwarded. If such a grant ever existed, (which the district attorney for Delaware doubts,) and its production should hereafter become necessary, it may be, I presume, obtained through our minister at London; but I apprehend it will not be necessary on the trial of the suit which Dr. Gale has instituted against the officers of the United States, because the plaintiff must show a title in himself before the defendant in possession can be required to produce any proof of title, and Dr. Gale, according to the evidence before me, can show no title in himself; and because if he could exhibit proof which would call upon us to show our title we can rest, I think, securely on our length of possession under the title derived from the Duke of York, afterwards King of England.

The territorial title of the State of Jersey, under which Dr. Gale claims, takes for its western boundary, in the most express terms, the east side of the Delaware bay and river. Such is the language of the grant to the Duke of York, and such the language of that Duke's deed to John Lord Berkely and Sir George Carteret. Dr. Gale, by stopping at the east side of the Delaware, will never get to the Pea Patch, and consequently cannot show such a title in himself as to authorize a judgment in his favor.

The State of Delaware (whose title we hold) claims under a deed from the Duke of York to William Penn, conveying to him the town of New Castle, and all that tract of land lying within the compass or circle of twelve miles about the same, situate, &c., upon the river Delaware, and all the islands in the said river, and the said river and soil thereof, lying north of the southernmost part of the said circle of twelve miles about the said town. If any question could exist whether the twelve miles about the town here mentioned indicated a circle, whose radius (and not whose diameter) was twelve miles, it would be removed by reference to the next or supplemental deed from the Duke of York to William Penn, which, designing to convey the residue of the present State of Delaware, takes for its beginning a point on the Delaware river twelve miles south of the town of New Castle; clearly manifesting that the former deed was considered as covering the title to that point. All that part of the river, with all the islands in it, which lies to the north of this point having then been conveyed to William Penn, and the Pea Patch being an island in the river to the north of that point, it seems clear to me that it is included in this deed, and consequently that the United States, who claim under it, have the best, and indeed the only valid title.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM WIRT.

Hon. JOHN C. CALHOUN, Department of War.

C. A. Rodney and George Read, jr., to the Secretary of War in relation to the Pea Patch island.

WILMINGTON, July 2, 1820.

SIR: In compliance with instructions received from the Department of War and from Major Babcock, of the corps of engineers, charged with the erection of works on the island in the Delaware called the Pea Patch, we attended the late term, in April, of the circuit court of the United States for the district of New Jersey, at Trenton, to contribute our aid in the defence of an ejectment brought to recover possession of that island.

On our arrival we found there were several suits on the list of trials prior to that in which the United States were concerned, which would occupy the court during the whole term. The case of the Pea Patch was, of course, continued until the ensuing term in October next. This, however, enabled us to obtain a rule for the trial of the cause by special jury, and it affords us an opportunity of collecting more testimony.

After our return it occurred to us that it might not be unacceptable to yourself or the attorney general, who has been consulted, if we were to prepare a report on the subject of the case so interesting and important to the United States. This we concluded to do as soon as all our courts were over, and they terminated but a few days since.

We have the honor to present you with a paper on the subject, drawn up with some attention, though not with all the care and deliberation perhaps which the magnitude of the case required.

We regret that, separated as we are from the able and eminent counsel concerned for the United States in New Jersey, we could not have the benefit of their aid in the execution of this task. But we acknowledge ourselves indebted to them for important information communicated when we were at Trenton.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

C. A. RODNEY.
GEORGE READ, JR.

Case of the Pea Patch.

The island called the Pea Patch is situated in the river Delaware about six miles below New Castle, and lies nearly equidistant from both shores. Its origin is difficult to trace with certainty at this date.

Colonel McLane says he has known the place ever since the year 1756, when it was a shoal only visible at low water. According to tradition, it arose from the accidental sinking of a shallop loaded with stones, and some peas, perhaps, in this spot, and thus forming the nucleus of a bar or bank, which has since reared its head above the tides and increased to a considerable island.

Its situation and extent rendering it a most important position for the defence of the Delaware, the attention of a provident government was drawn to this eligible spot. A title was procured for the United States from the State of Delaware, within whose known and acknowledged limits it was supposed to lie. Efficient and permanent works are erecting for defence in time of war. Large sums of public money have been judiciously expended without the slightest notice of an adversary claim.

The island has been completely secured by embankments from the highest tides, and the foundations laid of permanent fortifications, on a scale commensurate with the great object of repelling an invading foe, however formidable in numbers or force.

The island having been thus rendered very valuable to the public has excited the attention of private individuals, and is now claimed by Dr. Gale, who sets up a title to it by virtue of an alleged purchase from the heirs or representatives of Edward Hall and Clement Hall, who derived their right from the board or council of proprietors in New Jersey, and not from the State itself.

It may be necessary, in illustration of the subject, to take a brief retrospect of the settlements, conquests, and grants, or charters of New York, New Jersey, and Delaware.

Passing rapidly by the discovery of Hudson, the early emigrations of the Dutch or Swedes to the North river and the Delaware, with their lodgment in New York, New Jersey, and Delaware, and the disputes that arose between them in the latter quarters, where the Dutch finally prevailed, we will proceed to the original charter of Charles II to his brother the Duke of York, afterwards James II, and the conquest of all these countries under his auspices by the royal orders.

This grant bears date March 20, A. D. 1664, and is in the following terms: "Unto James, Duke of York, his heirs and assigns, all that part of the main land of New England beginning at a certain place called or known by the name of St. Croix, near adjoining to New Scotland, in America; from thence extending along the sea coast unto a certain place called Pemaquire, or Pemaquia, and so up the river thereof to the farthest head of the same as it tendeth northward; and extending from thence to the river Kimbequin, and so upwards, by the shortest course, to the river Canada, northwards; and also all that island or islands, commonly called by the several name or names of Motowacks or Long Island, situate and being towards the west of Cape Cod, and the narrow Kiganzetts, abutting on the land between the two rivers, there called or known by the several names of Connecticut and Hudson's river; together, also, with the said river called Hudson's river, and all the land from the west side of Connecticut river to the east side of Delaware bay; together with the rivers, harbors, mines, minerals, quarries, woods, marshes, waters, lakes, fishings, hawking, hunting and fowling, and all other royalties, profits, commodities, and hereditaments, to the said several islands, lands, and premises, belonging or appertaining."

It was made in consequence of a determination by the British government to expel the Dutch from this part of North America, of which they had taken possession.

England was aware of the consequences of permitting a Dutch colony to remain in the undisturbed occupation of territories so important to her, when considered in connexion with her other possessions in this quarter of the continent. She also claimed the right to them, because Hudson, who discovered them, was an English subject.

With this pretext and these views of interest and policy, a fleet and army were despatched, in the same year the patent was granted, to put the Duke of York in possession of the country, (under Sir Robert Cane and Colonel Richard Nichols,) before any formal declaration of war was made. They arrived in the North river the latter end of the year, and taking the Dutch by surprise New York fell an easy prey. The different posts and settlements on the North river and the Delaware were soon conquered. New Castle, with its territories, it must be particularly noticed, surrendered on the 1st of October, 1664, to the British forces embarked on board a squadron detached from the fleet at New York; and thus complete possession was acquired of the country granted to the Duke of York, with its appurtenances or dependencies. All these conquests were formally ceded to England by the treaty of peace concluded with Holland, at Breda, on the 10th of July, 1667.

The Duke of York had, however, on the 23d and 24th days of June, 1664, by his deeds of lease and release, previously granted to Lord Berkely and Sir George Carteret, and their heirs and assigns, New Jersey, which was described in the said instruments in the following terms: "All that tract of land adjacent to New England, and lying and being to the westward of Long Island and Manhattan's island, and bounded on the east part by the main sea and part by Hudson's river, and hath upon the west Delaware bay or river, and extendeth southward to the main ocean as far as Cape May, at the mouth of Delaware bay, and to the northward as far as the northernmost branch of the said bay or river Delaware, which is in forty-one degrees and forty minutes of latitude, and crosseth over thence in a straight line to Hudson's river, in forty-one degrees of latitude; which said tract of land is hereafter to be called Nova Cesarea or New Jersey."

War breaking out again between England and Holland, after numerous emigrants had settled in New Jersey under the Duke of York's title, all the country granted to him was once more subjected to Holland, and retroceded to England by the treaty of peace between the two nations, signed at Westminister on the 9th of February, 1674.

To prevent all disputes about the title of the first purchasers, in consequence of the reconquest of the Dutch, Charles II, on the 29th of June, 1674, by letters patent, regranted to the Duke of York all the countries included in his first patent; and the Duke of York, the same year, reconveyed New Jersey, then divided into east and west New Jersey, to the respective proprietors claiming under his former deeds.

It is unnecessary to detail the various subordinate divisions that subsequently occurred of the territory contained within the limits of New Jersey; but it is important to add that, in the year 1702, in consequence of frequent disputes between the Crown and the proprietors, the latter executed a deed of surrender of all the powers of government to the former, which was accepted by Queen Anne.

In this deed the boundaries of New Jersey are recited according to the original grant, and confined to the "east side of Delaware bay."

Whatever portion of governmental authority or royal prerogative had been claimed by the proprietaries was, by this instrument, relinquished and restored to the Crown, and became thenceforth an undisputed part of the jus regium in these dominions, equally with any other portion of the British realms. We make these remarks now to impress them on your mind, because of their application in the sequel.

The title of the lessor of the plaintiff is founded on an alleged survey made under the authority of the board of proprietors, and not of the State of New Jersey, as we have before stated. Whether all the necessary requisites and usual forms for incepting and completing a title to lands belonging to them have been complied with, we cannot say; or whether any possession was ever taken of the premises claimed, we cannot, upon the facts before us, undertake to determine; nor do we know whether, if possession were at any time had, the grantors were in the actual possession of the island when they made the conveyance to the present claimant. These matters may present important topics of discussion on the trial. But it appears to us that, on his own showing, the claimant can have no title to the premises, and that this may be made the foundation of a motion for a non-suit after he has gone through his evidence and closed his testimony.

Every plaintiff in ejectment must exhibit a good and sufficient title, as he must recover by the strength of his own title, and not by the weakness of his adversary's, who, being in possession, has a title against all the world but the rightful owner. When a plaintiff fails in this respect, it furnishes a legal reason in a court of justice for a nonsuit; so when the defendant shows the title to be in a third person, the plaintiff will be nonsuited. A motion for this purpose, we apprehend, may be sustained on the following grounds, upon each of which the opinion of the court may be distinctly taken in this mode:

1. That the proprietors of New Jersey under whom the plaintiff claims are, by the express and positive terms of the grants to them by the Duke of York, limited and confined to the east side of the Delaware bay or river, which they cannot exceed; and it is the peculiar province of the court to construe written instruments. The proprietors possess none but private rights; the State of New Jersey has succeeded to the sovereign rights surrendered to the Crown.

2. Admitting, at this stage, that the right to "all islands in the river Delaware, and the said river and soil thereof," did not pass to William Penn by the deeds of feoffment of the Duke of York to him of the three lower counties of New Castle, Kent, and Sussex, yet, the title to this island, after the revolution, by the treaty of peace with England, became vested, according to principle and authority, either in the United States or the individual States of Delaware or New Jersey as the riparious possessors. New Jersey claiming as successor of the rights surrendered by the proprietors to the Crown, the Delaware being a navigable water, all the islands formed in it belonged, previously to the revolution, to the Crown of England, unless it had granted away the bed of the river. This is the rule of the common law, which says the right to the soil of all navigable rivers is in the King.

We have, fortunately, the opinions of the attorney general, Robert Raymond, afterwards Lord Raymond, and of the solicitor general, Sir Philip York, afterwards Lord Hardwicke, on this very point, with respect to this same grant of New Jersey, and this identical river. In their opinion, they declare, upon consideration of the charter of New Jersey, that "no part of Delaware river, or the islands lying therein, are comprised within the granting words of the said letters patent." "But they conceived the right to the same still remained in the Crown." This opinion was given to the lords commissioners of trade and plantations in 1721, and is to be found in Chalmer's Collection, volume 1, 59.

Agreeably to this sound doctrine either the United States or the State of Delaware or New Jersey, on the recognition of their independence, succeeded to the rights of the former sovereign, and the title of the King to this island vested in one of them. It is no matter which of them, for it would equally destroy the plaintiff's claim, and defeat his suit.

But if the cause should be permitted to proceed, and the United States be required to show their right, we consider they can produce a perfectly valid title when called on to disclose their testimony.

With such strong grounds of defence as we possess we will not stop to discuss, in this paper, the question whether this ejectment be not a suit against the United States as much as if it were brought to recover possession of the Capitol in which Congress sit, or the house in which the President resides, at Washington; nor whether this suit, involving a question of boundary between independent States, materially affecting not only their territorial but political rights, be proper for the determination of a court of justice. We merely glance at them now because the points may be found to present serious objections to the exercise of the jurisdiction claimed; and the question of jurisdiction is always open at every stage of a cause. They may, therefore, with some other, be futurely dilated on, should the occasion require it. At present, we hasten to the principal ground of defence.

At this period of time, after the lapse of more than a century since the deeds of feoffment to William Penn of the three lower counties of New Castle, Kent, and Sussex, the right of the Duke of York to make such grants would seem to us not to admit of dispute. Within the fair construction of the terms of the extensive charter of Charles II to him, conveying not only all the lands lying within the limits described, but "all the royalties and hereditaments to the said lands and premises belonging or appertaining," the possessions of the British in this quarter simultaneously acquired by conquest may be included. That they were, in fact, embraced, is well attested by all the acts and conduct of the Crown and its officers, as well as of the officers of the Duke of York; by the conquest and surrender of the territory; by the regulations for the government of it; and by the numerous grants of land within it; for these were obtained from the governors of the Duke of York, at the capital, New York, until the deeds of feoffment and delivery of possession to William Penn. All these things are now matters of record or of history; and they abundantly prove that the Duke of York had the same title to the three lower counties as he had to his other possessions; that they formed one government. To use the language of the civilians, Unum constituant civitatem.

This State, it may here be remarked, incidentally, has always exercised jurisdiction over the river Delaware as the proprietary government had also done previously to the revolution.

Whether any other charter was granted by Charles II to the Duke of York for the three lower counties, eo nomine, is perhaps scarcely worthy of minute investigation. The late Chief Justice McKean, who was familiar with such affairs, in his "Calm Appeal" to the people of Delaware, written in 1791, on the subject of the proprietary claims, asserts that there was a patent issued specifically for the three lower counties.

In an opinion given in 1717, upon an application by the Earl of Sutherland for a charter for the three lower counties, it appears that a patent did pass the privy seal, but did not receive the great seal, in consequence of the Duke of York having succeeded to the throne by the death of his brother, Charles II. This opinion concludes that a charter for the territory could not legally be granted by the crown, unless the King's title was previously established, in a formal manner, in the court of chancery, by due course of equity, which was never attempted. The report, of course, was unfavorable to the prayers of the Earl of Sutherland on this point; and it was drawn up by the attorney general, Edward Northey, and the solicitor general, Mr. Thompson. This document is to be also found in Chalmer's Opinions, volume 1, 39.

That part of their report which says that they see no objection to the crown's granting to the Duke of Sutherland its share of the rents which William Penn was to pay, according to the conditions of one of the deeds of feoffment to him by the Duke of York, is equally confirmatory of his title under them to the three lower counties.

But it ought to be remarked that any further patent for this territory could only have been intended en abundanti couldie, and by no means as necessary to complete the original transfer, or to give validity to the deeds of feoffment.

The great principle upon which Lord Hardwicke decided that the title of William Penn to Delaware was sufficient, under the deeds of feoffment, by the Duke of York, appears to us to be conclusive of all dispute on this subject. This principle was determined and settled in the year 1750, in the celebrated case which arose between Penn and Baltimore, relative to the specific execution of certain articles of agreement for establishing a boundary or division line between Delaware and Maryland.

Lord Hardwicke, on that occasion, considered that whether another patent had or had not issued from Charles II to the Duke of York for the three lower counties was immaterial, because, as the Duke of York had actually conveyed the same to William Penn by his deeds of feoffment, and had afterwards ascended the throne, when he became unquestionably entitled to the legal estate in them, he was to be deemed, when King, a royal trustee for William Penn, to whom he had previously granted the premises.

It is remarkable that when this was first come before the court it was directed to stand over, in order that the attorney general might be made a party to the bill, to defend the rights and interests of the Crown. This was accordingly done, and at the hearing he interposed no difficulty on the part of the King. A specific execution was decreed by the court, and a permanent boundary established

A report of this important case, on its first appearance, may be found in Hord ca., (by Ridgeway,) 332, v. 9.; and, on its final hearing, in 1 Ves. Rep. 444 seq., Bell's Sup. to Vesey's Rep. 194.

On either of these grounds it may be safely assumed at this day that the deeds of feoffment to William Penn conveyed a valid title to everything contained within their limits, according to their plain and express terms.

If this position be correct, it is only necessary to recur for a moment, in reference to the ground in dispute, to the Duke of York's deed of feoffment in 1682 to William Penn, of New Castle, and a twelve miles circle, which expressly includes this island in direct and explicit terms.

The language is: "All that town of New Castle, otherwise called Delaware, and all that tract of land lying within the compass or circle of twelve miles about the same, situate, lying, and being on the river Delaware, in America, and all islands in the said river Delaware, and the said river and soil thereof lying north of the southernmost part of the said circle of twelve miles about the said town."

No comment can be necessary on this text.

The title of William Penn, as royal proprietary, to all land within the limits of Delaware not granted to individuals, nor appropriated to the private use of the proprietary, became vested in this State by the revolution and acknowledgment of our independence.

This island was neither granted nor appropriated by the proprietary; and though a warrant was taken out, as it is understood, by a respectable individual, under the State, yet that warrant was never executed. The land office has ever since been closed, and the door shut. The title, then, to this island, in the year 1813, remained in the State, and the legislature, by an act of assembly passed in that year, vested it in the United States. They have been ever since in the actual possession of the island, and thus have acquired the "juris et seioind conjunctio," the union of which constitutes a complete and perfect title at law and in equity.

It becomes unnecessary to speak more particularly of the other deed of feoffment from the Duke of York to William Penn for the territory lying south of that conveyed by the deed we have recited.

We had thought of considering whether any and what papers ought to be procured from England, to be produced or given in evidence on the trial of the cause. But this subject we agreed, on further reflection, it would be more safe and more delicate to leave in the able hands of our learned colleagues in New Jersey, who are conversant with the principles and rules of testimony in their own courts. In Delaware the public documents we possess would be admitted in evidence by our courts.

J. McIlvaine, district attorney for New Jersey, to the Secretary of War.

BURLINGTON, New Jersey, April 20, 1822.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, at the last session of the circuit court of the United States held in New Jersey, the action of ejectment prosecuted by Dr. Henry Gale against Major Babcock, of the engineer corps, to obtain possession of an island in the Delaware river, commonly called the Pea Patch, was discontinued by the plaintiff. It would seem that his counsel have at last become convinced either that he has no pretence of title, or that, such as it is, it can only be maintained by the weight of the State. Some weeks ago a notice was served on me stating that a motion would be made in the circuit court to include the State of New Jersey in the controversy by making it one of the lessors of the plaintiff. The motion, founded on an act your legislature passed some months ago, appropriating $2,000 to defend the jurisdiction of the State, and, on the assent of the governor, to make the State a party to the suit, was made accordingly; but the judges being of opinion that the act was not intended to embrace the case presented to them, and if it was, that it would be improper to let the State into the dispute in the manner proposed, refused the application. The plaintiff immediately discontinued his action, declaring his intention to bring another in the supreme court of the State, in which the State would be made a party. Believing that such an action will be instituted, Mr. Stockton unites with me in recommending an application by the government of the United States to the legislature of New Jersey to pass an act corresponding with that passed by the State of Delaware. There can be no doubt, considering the benefits which New Jersey may, at some future period, derive from the fortifications erecting on the Pea Patch, that the legislature would receive and act on the application in the most friendly manner, not, however, impairing the rights of individuals, but leaving them to stand as they now do. For your information, and to prevent too much confidence in the title derived from the State of Delaware, and to satisfy you that the application to the legislature of New Jersey above recommended would at least be a prudent measure, I take this occasion to mention, within a very narrow compass, the title of Gale of New Jersey, and of the State of Delaware, to the Pea Patch.

1st. Gale's title.

In 1664 Charles the Second granted to James, Duke of York, "all the land from the west side of Connecticut to the east side of Delaware bay;" and, in the same year, the Duke of York conveyed to Lord Berkely and Sir George Carteret all (the now) State of New Jersey, "in as full and ample a manner as the same was granted to him." From these persons Gale derives his title. Now, as the island in question lies west of the east side of Delaware bay, it is manifest that it was not included in the grant from the King to the Duke of York, and that the Duke, and those claiming under him, never had any title to it.

2d. The title of New Jersey. The advocates of the title of New Jersey insist—

1. That the island has been formed within sixty years, and, being nearer to New Jersey than to the State of Delaware, belongs to New Jersey.

2. That whether of ancient or modern formation, the title remained in Charles the Second and his successors until New Jersey became a sovereign and independent State, when it vested and still is in the State.

3. The title of the State of Delaware is one of those claiming under William Penn.

1. It is said that Charles the Second granted to James, Duke of York, all the land that forms the present State of Delaware, with all the river, and all the islands in the river opposite to the shores of that State.

2. That in 1682 the Duke of York made a grant to William Penn, the terms of which are extensive enough to include the Pea Patch, and that Delaware derives title from Penn.

It is true that the grant to William Penn extends to the east side of Delaware bay, and includes the river and all the islands; but on the part of New Jersey, it is objected that the Duke was not authorized to make such a grant, never having received one himself from the King. I have examined all the books and records that can be found relating to this subject, and am satisfied that a grant from Charles to the Duke of York, for the property conveyed by the Duke to William Penn, cannot be found, and in all probability was never made. There is some ground for believing that in 1683 (one year after the grant from the Duke to William Penn) the Duke obtained from his brother a warrant for passing a patent, but there is no evidence that it was ever done, or even of the contents of that warrant. On the whole, it will be found that the islands in the Delaware have never been granted by the sovereign; that in regard to the Pea Patch, Delaware, to say the least, has no better title to it than New Jersey, and that it is a fair subject of negotiation and settlement between the two States. With respect to the islands lying between New Jersey and Pennsylvania, it has always been conceded that they belonged to the two States as sovereigns, and were not transferred by any of the grants of Charles the Second.

At the request of Mr. Stockton I enclose the account for his services in the controversy with Gale. He will be obliged to you to remit the amount as early as convenient. Considering that he has been principally relied on; that he has attended at two or three terms, when the cause has been noticed for trial; and that he argued in opposition to the motion before mentioned, his charge appears to me reasonable. As the title of the State of Delaware was not likely to come in question, I did not think it necessary on that occasion to request the assistance of Messrs. Rodney and Read.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. McILVAINE, Attorney for New Jersey District.

Hon. JOHN C. CALHOUN, Secretary of War.

From the same to the same.

BURLINGTON, N. J., November 26, 1822.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose to you a copy of the report of the committee appointed by the house of assembly of this State, on the application of the United States, for a cession of the Pea Patch, from which you will learn the reasons which have prevented a cession at this time. The legislature met on the 22d of October. From the tenor of Governor Williamson's letter to you I presumed that, without further solicitation, he would, at an early period, present the subject to the legislature for consideration; and, under this impression, I waited until the first of this month, when I thought it best, as nothing appeared to have been done, to call on his excellency, and request that the business might be placed in a course for decision. He assured me that it should be done immediately, and that he had only delayed it that he might have some previous conversation with me relative to objections to a cession at the present time, and, under existing circumstances, which, on a deliberate consideration of the subject, had arisen in his mind, (the same stated in the report,) and which he wished to have removed if possible. This I was unable to do satisfactorily to his mind, and I left him, after receiving an assurance that a communication should be made to the house of assembly the ensuing week. On the 12th November I again went to Trenton to remind him of his promise. He mentioned that he had been continually engaged since our last interview, but that on the following day he would send a message, with all the papers relating to the subject, which he did accordingly. In this message he recommended a cession, provided it could be done without prejudicing New Jersey in her controversy with Delaware. A committee was appointed to investigate the subject, before whom I was heard at full length in support of the application, and from whom I received an assurance that, as they could perceive no reasonable objection, they would make a favorable report. I remained at Trenton until the 18th, expecting their report and for the purpose of furnishing such further explanations as might be required. On that day the dangerous illness of one of my family obliged me to go home. On the 22d I returned to Trenton, and was surprised to find that the committee, instead of reporting as I expected, had reported against a cession for the present. Upon inquiry it appeared possible to have the report rejected, and to procure the passage of a bill granting the island to the United States in the lower house; but at the same time I was convinced that it would be negatived in council, where the governor, who is opposed to any such measure at present, presides, and whose opinion upon the important questions involved in the dispute with Delaware would be received, and justly, too, with great respect and confidence. Under this conviction I declined troubling the legislature further. Neither on the part of the legislature nor of the governor could I discover the least hostility to the measure, except as above stated; and whenever the obstacles stated in the report shall have been removed, the cession can be obtained without the smallest difficulty.

In my last communication to you respecting the Pea Patch, I mentioned that in consequence of a refusal by the United States circuit court to suffer the State of New Jersey to become a party to the first action of ejectment which Gale commenced against Major Babcock, Gale discontinued it, and commenced another in the supreme court of this State, in which New Jersey is made one of the lessors of the plaintiff. With a view to a more impartial decision I took measures for carrying this action into the circuit court of the United States, and, after much opposition on the ground that that court has not jurisdiction of such a case, succeeded in getting the action regularly removed. I am, however, informed that the judges, after a more deliberate view of the subject, have changed their opinions, and will, at the next April term, remand the cause to the supreme court of the State. In this event it will be tried either at the bar of the court, before all the judges, at Trenton, in May, or before a single judge at nisi prius, in June next, in the county of Salem. I shall prefer the former.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. McILVAINE.

Hon. J. C. CALHOUN, Secretary of War.

The committee to whom was referred the communication from his excellency the governor, covering a correspondence with the Secretary of War respecting an island in the Delaware bay called the Pea Patch, respectfully report:

That it appears by the documents submitted to them, and from other information upon which your committee rely, that in the year 1813 the United States having determined to erect fortifications for the defence of the Delaware bay and river, selected the Pea Patch as a position suitable for that purpose. This island lies within the jurisdictional limits of New Jersey, and was at that time in the peaceable occupation of one of our citizens, claiming under a grant of the West Jersey proprietors, made in 1784. No application was, however, made to the authorities of this State on the subject; but military possession was taken by the United States officers, and the occupant dispossessed. The district attorney of the State of Delaware, and other legal characters in that State and Pennsylvania, it seems, were consulted, who were of opinion that the title to the soil and territory was in the State of Delaware.

The legislature of Delaware made a cession, and under that title the United States took possession and commenced constructing a fort. The individual dispossessed instituted a suit against the engineer, which is now pending before the circuit court of the United States. A difference unhappily subsists between New Jersey and Delaware relative to their boundary, and their respective rights in the river and bay of Delaware, and this difference is not limited to the Pea Patch, but embraces other subjects of dispute. In 1820, the legislature of this State, having been made acquainted with the facts above stated and with the circumstance that a suit was pending, actuated by a desire to a speedy and amicable settlement of the controversy, as well in relation to this particular subject as to all other questions growing out of the disputed boundary, passed an act for the appointment of commissioners, to meet commissioners to be appointed on the part of Delaware, with full power to make and conclude an agreement between the two States, defining their respective boundaries, jurisdictions, rights to land, &c., in the river and bay of Delaware. To this overture the State of Delaware did not think proper to concede, nor was any answer ever returned to the proposal.

In the year 1821 the legislature of this State passed an act (among other things) to authorize and empower the governor to appropriate a sum of money, at his discretion, to prosecute or defend to final issue or judgment any suit or suits which he might deem necessary for trying and finally determining the jurisdictional line between the two States. The attempt to effect an amicable settlement having failed, it was believed that the pending suit afforded a favorable opportunity of obtaining the decision of an impartial and enlightened judicial tribunal. The United States claiming under Delaware, and the former occupant under this State, the jurisdictional line will fairly come in question. This must inevitably happen, unless the plaintiff should fail on account of some technical defect in his title. It would therefore be manifestly unsafe to call the question of jurisdiction to be tried and determined by an action brought solely by an individual free from all control and interference of the State. Though the State could not be considered bound by such a trial and decision, yet its rights might be greatly injured by the action being brought to trial without the advantages that might arise from a direct interference, by employing counsel, and taking the management and control of the suit. The Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, now asks for a cession from the State for the purpose of further strengthening the title of the United States, and of enabling them the better to resist the claim of our citizen. Your committee are decidedly of opinion that, were the subject freed from danger of affecting, as well the rights of our citizen, who has been deprived in the manner stated of his possession, as the question of boundary between this State and Delaware, the required cession ought to be unhesitatingly made. The position is deemed by the Secretary of War a very valuable one, not only as it regards the defence of the State of New Jersey, but the country bordering on the Delaware. Whatever opinion we might be disposed to entertain on this point as individuals, it would certainly be yielded to the decision of the distinguished officers composing the board of engineers, approved, as that has been, by the able and enlightened officer at the head of the War Department.

New Jersey has at all times evinced a sincere desire to afford every facility to the measures of the general government, and your committee are well aware that the present is a time when we are particularly called on to encourage, by all proper means, the laudable effort to arrange and complete a well digested system of defence. Your committee, however, are of opinion that, taking into view all the circumstances, it will be most prudent and consist better with the dignity and interest of the State to delay a cession of the island in question. No injury can result from such a course. The works commenced will not be interrupted in their progress, and, in the meantime, the controversy existing between this State and Delaware may be settled by a judicial decision, and the claim of our citizen decided in the same manner. The general government will duly appreciate the motives by which we have been governed, and cannot impute to this State any desire to obstruct or delay the completion of the fortifications now erecting. In the event of a determination adverse to our claim, no cession will be necessary; and should the contrary, as all confidently believe, be the result, we can then, with more propriety, transfer our right in the manner requested, and at the same time protect the interests of the individual claimant. Your committee, therefore, respectfully propose that the documents referred to them be recommended to the consideration of the next legislature.

By order of the committee.

LUCIUS Q. C. ELMER, Chairman.

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY, December 29, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose for your perusal a letter just received from the district attorney of New Jersey, from which it appears that your impression that judgment had been rendered against the United States in the case of Gale vs. Babcock, is incorrect. I am led to believe, however, from information received in this office, that the title of the United States is not good; and if there be any power in the War Department competent to purchase for the government the title of the plaintiffs, if on examination it be found to be valid, it would be the best mode of settling the controversy.

Have the goodness to return the enclosed letter to this office.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

V. MAXCY, Solicitor of the Treasury.

CHARLES GRATIOT, Brigadier General and Chief Engineer, United States Army.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1053. [1ST SESSION.

ON DISTRIBUTING THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 16, 1832.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Manufactures, reported:

The Committee on Manufactures have been instructed by the Senate to inquire into the expediency of reducing the price of public lands, and of ceding them to the several States within which they are situated, on reasonable terms. Far from desiring to assume the duty involved in this important inquiry, it is known to the Senate that a majority of the committee was desirous that the subject should have been referred to some other committee; but as the Senate took a different view of the matter, the Committee on Manufactures have felt bound to acquiesce in its decision; and having bestowed on the whole subject the best consideration in their power, now beg leave to submit to the Senate the result of their inquiries and reflections.

The public lands belonging to the general government are situated: 1st. Within the limits of the United States, as defined by the treaty of peace which terminated the revolutionary war; and, 2dly. Within the boundaries of Louisiana and Florida, as ceded by France and Spain, respectively, to the United States.

1st. At the commencement of the revolutionary war there were, in some of the States, large bodies of waste and unappropriated lands, principally west of the Alleghany mountains, and in the southern or southwestern quarters of the Union, whilst in others, of more circumscribed or better defined limits, no such resource existed. During the progress of that war the question was agitated what should be done with these lands in the event of its successful termination. That question was likely to lead to paralyzing divisions and jealousies. The States not containing any considerable quantity of waste lands contended that, as the war was waged with united means, with equal sacrifices, and at the common expense, the waste lands ought to be considered as a common property, and not be exclusively appropriated to the benefit of the particular States within which they happened to be situated. These, however, resisted the claim, upon the ground that each State was entitled to the whole of the territory, whether waste or cultivated, included within its chartered limits. To check the progress of discontent, and arrest the serious consequences to which the agitation of this question might lead, Congress recommended to the States to make liberal cessions of the waste and unseated lands to the United States; and, on the 10th day of October, 1780, "Resolved, That the unappropriated lands that may be ceded or relinquished to the United States by any particular State, pursuant to the recommendation of Congress of the 6th day of September last, shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States," &c.

In conformity to the recommendation of Congress, the several States containing waste and uncultivated lands made cessions of them to the United States. The declared object having been substantially the same in all of these cessions, it is only necessary to advert to the terms of some of them. The first, in order of time, was that of New York, made on the first day of March, 1781, by its delegation in Congress, in pursuance of an act of the legislature of the State; and the terms of the deed of cession expressly provide, that the ceded lands and territories were to be held "to and for the only use and benefit of such of the States as are or shall become parties to the articles of confederation." That of Virginia was the next in date, but by far the most important of all the cessions made by the different States, both as respects the extent and value of the country ceded. It comprehended the right of that Commonwealth to the vast territory northwest of the river Ohio, embracing but not confined to the limits of the present States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. The deed of cession was executed by the delegation of Virginia in Congress in 1784, agreeably to an act of the legislature passed in 1783; and, among other conditions, the deed expressly declares "that all the lands within the territory so ceded to the United States, and not reserved for or appropriated to any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American army, shall be considered a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the confederation or federal alliance of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever." Passing by the cessions which other States, prompted by a magnanimous spirit of union and patriotism, successively made, we come to the last in the series, that of the State of Georgia in 1802. The articles of agreement and cession entered into between that State and the United States, among various other conditions, contain the unequivocal declaration, "that all the lands ceded by this agreement to the United States shall, after satisfying the above-mentioned payment of one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the State of Georgia and the grants recognized by the preceding conditions, be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of the United States, Georgia included, and shall be faithfully disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatever."

Thus, by the clear and positive terms of these acts of cession, was a great public national trust created and assumed by the general government. It became solemnly bound to hold and administer the lands ceded, as a common fund for the use and benefit of all the States, and for no other use or purpose whatever. To waste or misapply this fund, or to divert it from the common benefit for which it was conveyed, would be a violation of the trust. The general government has no more power, rightfully, to cede the lands thus acquired to one of the new States, without a fair equivalent, than it could retrocede them to the State or States from which they were originally obtained. There would, indeed, be much more equity in the latter than in the former case. Nor is the moral responsibility of the general government at all weakened by the consideration that, if it were so unmindful of its duty as to disregard the sacred character of the trust, there might be no competent power, peacefully applied, which could coerce its faithful execution.

2d. The other sources whence the public lands of the United States have been acquired, are: 1st. The treaty of Louisiana, concluded in 1803; and, 2dly. The treaty of Florida, signed in 1819. By the first, all the country west of the Mississippi, and extending to the Pacific ocean, known as Louisiana, which had successively belonged to France, Spain, and France again, including the island of New Orleans, and stretching east of the Mississippi to the Perdido, was transferred to the United States, in consideration of the sum of fifteen million of dollars, which they stipulated to pay, and have since punctually paid, to France, besides other conditions deemed favorable and important to her interests. By the treaty of Florida, both the provinces of East and West Florida, whether any portion of them was or was not actually comprehended within the true limits of Louisiana, were ceded to the United States in consideration, besides other things, of the payment of five million of dollars, which they agreed to pay, and have since accordingly paid.

The large pecuniary considerations thus paid to these two foreign powers were drawn from the treasury of the people of the United States; and, consequently, the countries for which they formed the equivalents ought to be held and deemed for the common benefit of all the people of the United States. To divert the lands from that general object, to misapply or sacrifice them, to squander or improvidently cast them away, would be alike subversive to the interests of the people of the United States and contrary to the plain dictates of the duty by which the general government stands bound to the States and to the whole people.

Prior to the treaties of Louisiana and Florida, Congress had adopted a system for surveying and selling the public lands, devised with much care and great deliberation, the advantages of which having been fully tested by experience, it was subsequently applied to the countries acquired by those treaties. According to that system all public lands offered for sale are previously accurately surveyed by skilful surveyors, in ranges of townships of six miles square each, which townships are subdivided into thirty-six equal divisions or square miles, called sections, by lines crossing each other at right angles, and generally containing 640 acres. These sections are again divided into quarters, and prior to the year 1820 no person could purchase a less quantity than a quarter. In that year provision was made for the further division of the sections into eighths, thereby allowing a purchaser to buy only eighty acres, if he wished to purchase no more. During the present session of Congress, further to extend accommodation to the purchasers of the public lands, and especially to the poorer classes, the sections have been again divided into sixteenths, admitting a purchase of only forty acres.

This uniform system of surveying and dividing the public lands applies to all the States and Territories within which they are situated. Its great advantages are manifest. It insures perfect security of title and certainty of boundary, and consequently avoids those perplexing land disputes, the worst of all species of litigation, the distressing effects of which have been fatally experienced in some of the western States. But these are not the only advantages, great as they unquestionably are. The system lays the foundation of useful civil institutions, the benefit of which is not confined to the present generation, but will be transmitted to posterity.

Under the operation of the system thus briefly sketched, the progress of the settlement and population of the public domain of the United States has been altogether unexampled. Views which the committee will hereafter present, conclusively demonstrate that, whilst the spirit of free emigration should not be checked or counteracted, it stands in no need of any fresh stimulus.

Before proceeding to perform the specific duty assigned to the committee by the Senate, they had thought it advisable to exhibit some general views of this great national resource. For that purpose a call, through the Senate, for information has been made upon the executive branch of the government. A report has not yet been made; but as the committee are desirous of avoiding any delay not altogether indispensable, they have availed themselves of a report from the Secretary of the Treasury to the House of Representatives, under date of April 6, 1832, hereto annexed, marked A, and of such other information as was accessible to them.

From that report it appears that the aggregate of all sums of money which have been expended by the United States in the acquisition of the public lands, including interest on account of the purchases of Louisiana and Florida, up to the 30th of September, 1831, and including also expenses in their sale and management, is $48,077,551 40; and that the amount of money received at the treasury for proceeds of the sales of the public lands to September 30, 1831, is $37,272,713 31. The government, therefore, has not been reimbursed by $10,804,838 09. According to the same report it appears that the estimated amount of unsold lands, on which the foreign and Indian titles have been extinguished, is 227,293,884 within the limits of the new States and Territories; and that the Indian title remains on 113,577,869 acres within the same limits. That there have been granted to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Alabama, for internal improvements, 2,187,665 acres; for colleges, academies, and universities in the new States and Territories, the quantity of 508,009 acres; for education, being the thirty-sixth part of the public lands appropriated for common schools, the amount of 7,952,538 acres; and for seats of government in some of the new States and Territories, 21,589 acres. By a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, communicated to Congress with the annual message of the President of the United States, in December, 1827, the total quantity of the public lands beyond the boundaries of the new States and Territories was estimated to be 750,000,000. The aggregate, therefore, of all the unsold and unappropriated public lands of the United States, surveyed and unsurveyed, on which the Indian title remains or has been extinguished, lying within and without the boundaries of the new States and Territories, agreeably to the two reports now referred to, is 1,090,871,753 acres. There had been 138,988,224 acres surveyed, and the quantity only of 19,239,412 acres sold up to January 1, 1826. When the information called for shall be received, the subsequent surveys and sales, up to the present period, will be ascertained.

The committee are instructed by the Senate to inquire into the expediency of reducing the price of the public lands, and also of ceding them to the several States in which they are situated on reasonable terms. The committee will proceed to examine these two subjects of inquiry distinctly, beginning first with that which relates to a reduction of price.

I. According to the existing mode of selling the public lands, they are first offered at public auction for what they will bring in a free and fair competition among the purchasers. When the public sales cease, the lands remaining unsold may be bought from time to time at the established rate of one dollar and a quarter per acre. The price was reduced to that sum in 1820, from two dollars per acre, at which it had previously stood from the first establishment of the present system of selling the public lands. A leading consideration with Congress in the reduction of the price was that of substituting cash sales for the credits which had been before allowed, and which, on many accounts, it was deemed expedient to abolish. A further reduction of the price, if called for by the public interests, must be required, either, first, because the government now demands more than a fair price for the public lands, or, second, because the existing price retards injuriously the settlement and population of the new States and Territories. These suggestions deserve separate and serious consideration.

1. The committee possess no means of determining the exact value of all the public lands now in market, nor is it material at the present time that the precise worth of each township or section should be accurately known. It is presumable that a considerable portion of the immense quantity offered to sale or held by the United States would not now command, and may not be intrinsically worth, the minimum price fixed by law; on the other hand, it is certain that a large part is worth more. If there could be a discrimination made, and the government had any motive to hasten the sales beyond the regular demands of the population, it might be proper to establish different rates, according to the classes of land; but the government having no inducement to such acceleration, has hitherto proceeded on the liberal policy of establishing a moderate price, and by subdivisions of the sections so far to accommodate the poorer citizens, has placed the acquisition of a home within the reach of every industrious man. For $100 any one may now purchase eighty acres, or for $50 forty acres, of first rate land, yielding, with a proper cultivation, from fifty to eighty bushels of Indian corn per acre, or other equivalent crops.

There is no more satisfactory criterion of the fairness of the price of an article than that arising from the briskness of sales when it is offered in the market. On applying this rule, the conclusion would seem to be irresistible that the established price is not too high. The amount of the sales in the year 1828 was $1,018,308 75; in 1829, $1,517,175 13; in 1830, $2,329,356 14; and during the year 1831, $3,000,000. And the Secretary of the Treasury observes, in his annual report at the commencement of this session, that "the receipts from the public lands during the present year, it will be perceived, have likewise exceeded the estimates, and indeed have gone beyond all former example. It is believed that, notwithstanding the large amount of scrip and forfeited land stock that may still be absorbed in payment for lands, yet, if the surveys now projected be completed, the receipts from this source of revenue will not fall greatly below those of the present year." And he estimates the receipts during the current year, from this source, at three million of dollars. It is incredible to suppose that the amount of sales would have risen to so large a sum if the price had been unreasonably high. The committee are aware that the annual receipts may be expected to fluctuate as fresh lands, in favorite districts, are brought into market, and according to the activity or sluggishness of emigration in different years.

Against any considerable reduction of the price of the public lands, unless it be necessary to a more rapid population of the new States, which will be hereafter examined, there are weighty, if not decisive considerations.

1. The government is the proprietor of much the largest quantity of the unseated lands of the United States. What it has in market bears a large proportion to the whole of the occupied lands within their limits. If a considerable quantity of any article, land or any commodity whatever, is in market, the price at which it is sold will affect in some degree the value of the whole of that article, whether exposed to sale or not. The influence of a reduction of the price of the public lands would probably be felt throughout the Union, certainly in all the western States, and most in those which contain or are nearest to the public lands. There ought to be the most cogent and conclusive reasons for adopting a measure which might seriously impair the value of the property of the yeomanry of the country. Whilst they are decidedly the most important class in the community, most patient, patriotic, and acquiescent in whatever public policy is pursued, they are unable or unwilling to resort to those means of union and concert which other interests employ to make themselves heard and respected. Government should, therefore, feel itself constantly bound to guard with sedulous care the rights and welfare of the great body of our yeomanry. Would it be just towards those who have heretofore purchased public lands at higher prices, to say nothing as to the residue of the agricultural interest of the United States, to make such a reduction, and thereby impair the value of their property? Ought not any such plan of reduction, if adopted, to be accompanied with compensation for the injury which they would inevitably sustain?

2. A material reduction of price would excite and stimulate the spirit of speculation, now dormant, and probably lead to a transfer of vast quantities of the public domain from the control of government to the hands of the speculator. At the existing price, and with such extensive districts as the public constantly offers in the market, there is no great temptation to speculation. The demand is regular, keeping pace with the progress of emigration, and is supplied on known and moderate terms. If the price were much reduced, the strongest incentives to engrossment of the better lands would be presented to large capitalists, and the emigrant, instead of being able to purchase from his own government upon uniform and established conditions, might be compelled to give much higher and more fluctuating prices to the speculator. An illustration of this effect is afforded by the military bounty lands granted during the last war. Thrown into the market at prices below the government rate, they notoriously became an object of speculation, and have principally fallen into the hands of speculators, retarding the settlement of the districts which include them.

3. The greatest emigration that is believed now to take place from any of the States is from Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. The effects of a material reduction in the price of the public lands would be: 1st, to lessen the value of real estate in those three States; 2d, to diminish their interest in the public domain as a common fund for the benefit of all the States; and, 3d, to offer what would operate as a bounty to further emigration from those States, occasioning more and more lands situated within them to be thrown into the market, thereby not only lessening the value of their lands, but draining them both of their population and currency.

And, lastly, Congress has, within a few years, made large and liberal grants of the public lands to several States. To Ohio, 922,937 acres; to Indiana, 384,728 acres; to Illinois, 480,000 acres; and to Alabama, 400,000 acres; amounting together to 2,187,665 acres. Considerable portions of these lands yet remain unsold. The reduction of the price of the public lands generally, would impair the value of those grants, as well as injuriously affect that of the lands which have been sold in virtue of them.

On the other hand, it is inferred and contended, from the large amount of public land remaining unsold after having been so long exposed to sale, that the price at which it is held is too high. But this apparent tardiness is satisfactorily explained by the immense quantity of public lands which have been put into the market by government. It is well known that the new States have constantly and urgently pressed the extinction of the Indian title upon lands within their respective limits; and, after its extinction, that they should be brought into market as rapidly as practicable. The liberal policy of the general government, coinciding with the wishes of the new States, has prompted it to satisfy the wants of emigrants from every part of the Union, by exhibiting vast districts of land for sale in all the new States and Territories, thus offering every variety of climate and situation to the free choice of settlers. From these causes it has resulted that the power of emigration has been totally incompetent to absorb the immense bodies of waste lands offered in the market. For the capacity to purchase is, after all, limited by the emigration and the progressive increase of population. If the quantity thrown into the market had been quadrupled, the probability is, that there would not have been much more annually sold than actually has been. With such extensive fields for selection before them, purchasers, embarrassed as to the choice which they should make, are sometimes probably influenced by caprice or accidental causes. Whilst the better lands remain, those of secondary value will not be purchased. A judicious farmer or planter would sooner give one dollar and a quarter per acre for first-rate land than receive as a donation land of inferior quality if he were compelled to settle upon it.

It is also contended that the price of the public land is a tax; and that at a period when, in consequence of the payment of the public debt and the financial prosperity of the United States, the government is enabled to dispense with revenue, that tax ought to be reduced, and the revenue arising from the sales be thereby diminished. In the first place, it is to be observed that if, as has been before stated, the reduction of the price of the public lands should stimulate speculation, the consequence would probably be, at least for some years, an augmentation of the revenue from that source. Should it have the effect of speculation supposed, it would probably also retard the settlement of the new States by placing the lands engrossed by speculators, in anticipation of increased value, beyond the reach of emigrants. If it were true that the price demanded by government operated as a tax, the question would still remain whether that price exceeded the fair value of the land which emigrants are in the habit of purchasing; and, if it did not, there would be no just ground for its reduction. And, assuming it to be a tax, it might be proper to inquire who pays the tax? the new or the old States; the States that send out or the States that receive the emigrants? In the next place, regarded as a tax, those who have heretofore made purchases at the higher rate, have already paid the tax, and are as much deserving the equitable consideration of government as those who might hereafter be disposed to purchase at the reduced rate. It is proper to add that by the repeal and reduction contemplated of duties upon articles of foreign import, subsequent purchasers of the public lands, as far as they are consumers of those articles, will share in the general relief, and will consequently be enabled to apply more of their means to the purchase of land.

But in no reasonable sense can the sale of the public lands be considered as the imposition of a tax.

The government, in their disposal, acts as a trustee for the whole people of the United States, and, in that character, holds and offers them in the market. Those who want them buy them, because it is their inclination to buy them. There is no compulsion in the case. The purchase is perfectly voluntary, like that of any other article which is offered in the market. In making it the purchaser looks exclusively to his own interest. The motive of augmenting the public revenue, or any other motive than that of his own advantage, never enters into his consideration. The government, therefore, stands to the purchaser in the relation merely of the vendor of a subject which the purchaser's own welfare prompts him to acquire; and, in this respect, does not vary from the relation which exists between any private vendor of waste lands and the purchaser from him. Nor does the use to which the government may think proper to apply the proceeds of the sale of the public lands give the smallest strength to the idea that the purchase of them is tantamount to the payment of a tax. The government may employ those proceeds as a part of its ordinary revenue, or it may apply them in any other manner, consistent with the Constitution, which it deems proper. Revenue and taxation are not always relative terms. There may be revenue without taxation. There may be taxation without revenue. There may be sources of established revenue which not only do not imply, but which supersede, taxation. Is the consideration paid for land to a private individual to be deemed a tax because that individual may happen to use it as a part of his income?

2. Is the reduction of the price of the public lands necessary to accelerate the settlement and population of the States within which they are situated? Those States are Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana. If their growth has been unreasonably slow and tardy, we may conclude that some fresh impulse, such as that under consideration, is needed. Prior to the treaty of Greenville, concluded in 1795, there were but few settlements within the limits of the present State of Ohio. Principally since that period, that is, within a term of about forty years, that State, from a wilderness, the haunt of savages and wild beasts, has risen into a powerful commonwealth, containing at this time a population of a million of souls, and holding the third or fourth rank among the largest States in the Union. During the greater part of that term the minimum price of the public lands was two dollars per acre; and of the large quantity with which the settlement of that State commenced, there only remain to be sold 5,586,834 acres.

The aggregate population of the United States, exclusive of the Territories, increased from the year 1820 to 1830 from 9,579,873 to 12,716,697. The rate of the increase during the whole term of ten years, including a fraction, may be stated at thirty-three per cent. The principle of population is presumed to have full scope generally in all parts of the United States. Any State, therefore, which has exceeded or fallen short of that rate may be fairly assumed to have gained or lost, by emigration, nearly to the extent of the excess or deficiency. From a table accompanying this report, (marked B,) the Senate will see presented various interesting views of the progress of population in the several States. In that table it will be seen that each of eleven States exceeded, and each of thirteen fell short of, an increase at the average rate of thirty-three per cent. The greatest increase during the term was in the State of Illinois, where it was one hundred and eighty-five per cent., or at the rate of 18½ per cent. per annum; and the least was in Delaware, where it was less than six per cent. The seven States embracing the public lands had a population, in 1820, of 1,207,165, and in 1830, of 2,238,802, exhibiting an average increase of 85 per cent. The seventeen States containing no part of the public lands had a population, in 1820, of 8,372,707, and in 1830, of 10,477,895, presenting an average increase of only 25 per cent. The thirteen States whose increase according to the table was below 33 per cent., contained, in 1820, a population of 5,939,759, and, in 1830, of 6,966,600, exhibiting an average increase of only 17 per cent. The increase of the seven new States upon a capital which, at the commencement of the term, was 1,207,165, has been greater than that of the thirteen, whose capital then was 5,939,759. In three of the eleven States, (Tennessee, Georgia, and Maine,) whose population exceeded the average increase of 33 per cent., there were public lands belonging to those States; and in the fourth (New York) the excess is probably attributable to the rapid growth of the city of New York, to waste lands in the western part of that State, and to the great development of its vast resources by means of extensive internal improvements.

These authentic views of the progress of population in the seven new States, demonstrate that it is most rapid and gratifying; that it needs no such additional stimulus as a further reduction in the price of the public lands; and that, by preserving and persevering in the established system for selling them, the day is near at hand when those States, now respectable, may become great and powerful members of the confederacy.

Complaints exist in the new States that large bodies of lands in their respective territories, being owned by the general government, are exempt from taxation to meet the ordinary expenses of the State governments and other local charges; that this exemption continues for five years after the sale of any particular tract; and that land being the principal source of the revenue of those States, an undue share of the burden of sustaining the expenses of the State governments falls upon the resident population. To all these complaints it may be answered, that by voluntary compacts between the new States, respectively, and the general government, five per cent. of the net proceeds of all the sales of the public lands included within their limits, are appropriated for internal improvements leading to or within those States; that a section of land in each township, or one thirty-sixth part of the whole of the public lands embraced within their respective boundaries, has been reserved for purposes of education; and that the policy of the general government has been uniformly marked by great liberality towards the new States, in making various and some very extensive grants of the public lands for local purposes. But, in accordance with the same spirit of liberality, the committee would recommend an appropriation to each of the seven States referred to, of a furthur sum of ten per cent. on the net proceeds of the sales of that part of the public land which lies within it, for the objects of internal improvement in their respective limits. The tendency of such an appropriation will be not only to benefit those States, but to enhance the value of the public lands remaining to be sold.

II. The committee have now to proceed to the other branch of the inquiry which they were required to make, that of the expediency of ceding the public lands to the several States in which they are situated, on reasonable terms. The inquiry comprehends, in its consequences, a cession of the whole public domain of the United States, whether lying within or beyond the limits of the present States and Territories. For although in the terms of the inquiry it is limited to the new States, cessions to them would certainly be followed by similar cessions to other new States as they may, from time to time, be admitted into the Union. Three of the present Territories have nearly attained the requisite population entitling them to be received as members of the confederacy, and they shortly will be admitted. Congress could not consistently avoid ceding to them the public lands within their limits after having made such cession to the other States. The compact with the State of Ohio formed the model of compacts with all the other new States as they were successively admitted.

Whether the question of a transfer of the public lands be considered in the limited or more extensive view of it which has been stated, it is one of the highest importance, and demanding the most deliberate consideration. From the statements founded on official reports made in the preceding part of this report, it has been seen that the quantity of unsold and unappropriated lands lying within the limits of the new States and Territories is 340,871,753 acres, and the quantity beyond those limits is 750,000,000, presenting an aggregate of 1,090,871,753 acres. It is difficult to conceive a question of greater magnitude than that of relinquishing this immense amount of national property. Estimating its value according to the minimum price, it presents the enormous sum of $1,363,589,691. If it be said that a large portion of it will never command that price, it is to be observed, on the other hand, that as fresh lands are brought into market and exposed to sale at public auction, many of them sell at prices exceeding one dollar and a quarter per acre. Supposing the public lands to be worth, on an average, one-half of the minimum price, they would still present the immense sum of $681,794,845. The least favorable view which can be taken of them is, that of considering them a capital yielding at present an income of $3,000,000 annually. Assuming the ordinary rate of six per cent. interest per annum as the standard to ascertain the amount of that capital, it would be $50,000,000. But this income has been progressively increasing. The average increase during the six last years has been at the rate of twenty-three per cent. per annum. Supposing it to continue in the same ratio, at the end of a little more than four years the income would be doubled, and make the capital $100,000,000. Whilst the population of the United States increases only three per cent. per annum, the increase of the demand for the public lands is at the rate of twenty-three per cent., furnishing another evidence that the progress of emigration and the activity of sales have not been checked by the price demanded by government.

In whatever light, therefore, this great subject is viewed, the transfer of the public lands from the whole people of the United States, for whose benefit they are now held, to the people inhabiting the new States, must be regarded as the most momentous measure ever presented to the consideration of Congress. If such a measure could find any justification, it must arise out of some radical and incurable defect in the construction of the general government properly to administer the public domain. But the existence of any such defect is contradicted by the most successful experience. No branch of the public service has evinced more system, uniformity, and wisdom, or given more general satisfaction, than that of the administration of the public lands.

If the proposed cession to the new States were to be made at a fair price, such as the general government could obtain from individual purchasers under the present system, there would be no motive for it, unless the new States are more competent to dispose of the public lands than the common government. They are now sold under one uniform plan, regulated and controlled by a single legislative authority, and the practical operation is perfectly understood. If they were transferred to the new States, the subsequent disposition would be according to laws emanating from various legislative sources. Competition would probably arise between the new States in the terms which they would offer to purchasers. Each State would be desirous of inviting the greatest number of emigrants, not only for the laudable purpose of populating rapidly its own territories, but with the view to the acquisition of funds to enable it to fulfil its engagements to the general government. Collisions between the States would probably arise, and their injurious consequences may be imagined. A spirit of hazardous speculation would be engendered. Various schemes in the new States would be put afloat to sell or divide the public lands. Companies and combinations would be formed in this country, if not in foreign countries, presenting gigantic and tempting, but delusive projects; and the history of legislation, in some of the States in the Union, admonishes us that a too ready ear is sometimes given by a majority in a legislative assembly to such projects.

A decisive objection to such a transfer for a fair equivalent is, that it would establish a new and dangerous relation between the general government and the new States. In abolishing the credit which had been allowed to purchasers of the public lands prior to the year 1820, Congress was principally governed by the consideration of the inexpediency and hazard of accumulating a large amount of debt in the new States, all bordering on each other. Such an accumulation was deemed unwise and unsafe. It presented a new bond of interest, of sympathy, and of union, partially operating to the possible prejudice of the common bond of the whole Union. But that debt was a debt due from individuals, and it was attended with this encouraging security, that purchasers, as they successively completed the payments for their lands, would naturally be disposed to aid the government in enforcing payment from delinquents. The project which the committee are now considering is, to sell to the States in their sovereign character, and, consequently, to render them public debtors to the general government to an immense amount. This would inevitably create between the debtor States a common feeling and a common interest, distinct from the rest of the Union. These States are all in the western and southwestern quarter of the Union, remotest from the centre of federal power. The debt would be felt as a load from which they would constantly be desirous to relieve themselves; and it would operate as a strong temptation, weakening, if not dangerous, to the existing confederacy. The committee have the most animating hopes and the greatest confidence in the strength and power and durability of our happy Union; and the attachment and warm affection of every member of the confederacy cannot be doubted; but we have authority, higher than human, for the instruction, that it is wise to avoid all temptation.

In the State of Illinois, with a population at the late census of 157,445, there are 31,395,969 acres of public land, including that part on which the Indian title remains to be extinguished. If we suppose it to be worth only half the minimum price, it would amount to $19,622,480. How would that State be able to pay such an enormous debt? How could it pay even the annual interest upon it?

Supposing the debtor States to fail to comply with their engagements, in what mode could they be enforced by the general government? In treaties between independent nations, the ultimate remedy is well known. The apprehension of an appeal to that remedy, seconding the sense of justice and the regard for character which prevails among Christian and civilized nations, constitutes, generally, adequate security for the performance of national compacts; but this last remedy would be totally inadmissible in case of delinquency on the part of the debtor States. The relations between the general government and the members of the confederacy are happily those of peace, friendship, and fraternity, and exclude all idea of force and war. Could the judiciary coerce the debtor States? On what could their process operate? Could the property of innocent citizens, residing within the limits of those States, be justly seized by the general government and held responsible for debts contracted by the States themselves in their sovereign character? If a mortgage upon the lands ceded were retained, that mortgage would prevent or retard subsequent sales by the States; and if individuals bought, subject to the encumbrance, a parental government could never resort to the painful measure of disturbing them in their possessions.

Delinquency on the part of the debtor States would be inevitable, and there would be no effectual remedy for the delinquency. They would come again and again to Congress soliciting time and indulgence, until, finding the weight of the debt intolerable, Congress, wearied by reiterated applications for relief, would finally resolve to sponge the debt; or, if Congress attempted to enforce its payment, another and worse alternative would be embraced.

If the proposed cession be made for a price merely nominal, it would be contrary to the express conditions of the original cessions from primitive States to Congress, and contrary to the obligations which the general government stands under to the whole people of the United States, arising out of the fact that the acquisitions of Louisiana and Florida, and from Georgia, were obtained at a great expense, borne from the common treasure and incurred for the common benefit. Such a gratuitous cession could not be made without a positive violation of a solemn trust, and without manifest injustice to the old States. And its inequality among the new States would be as marked as its injustice to the old would be indefensible. Thus, Missouri, with a population of 140,455, would acquire 38,291,152 acres; and the State of Ohio, with a population of 935,884, would obtain only 5,586,834 acres. Supposing a division of the land among the citizens of those two States, respectively, the citizen of Ohio would obtain less than six acres for his share, and the citizen of Missouri upwards of two hundred and seventy-two acres as his proportion.

Upon full and thorough consideration, the committee have come to the conclusion that it is inexpedient either to reduce the price of the public lands or to cede them to the new States. They believe, on the contrary, that sound policy coincides with the duty which has devolved on the general government to the whole of the States, and the whole of the people of the Union, and enjoins the preservation of the existing system as having been tried and approved after long and triumphant experience. But, in consequence of the extraordinary financial prosperity which the United States enjoy, the question merits examination, whether, whilst the general government steadily retains the control of this great national resource in its own hands, after the payment of the public debt, the proceeds of the sale of the public lands, no longer needed to meet the ordinary expenses of the government, may not be beneficially appropriated to some other objects for a limited time.

Governments, no more than individuals, should be seduced or intoxicated by prosperity, however flattering or great it may be. The country now happily enjoys it in a most unexampled degree. We have abundant reason to be grateful for the blessings of peace and plenty and freedom from debt; but we must be forgetful of all history and experience, if we indulge the delusive hope that we shall always be exempt from calamity and reverses. Seasons of national adversity, of suffering, and of war, will assuredly come. A wise government should expect and provide for them. Instead of wasting or squandering its resources in a period of general prosperity, it should husband and cherish them for those times of trial and difficulty which, in the dispensations of Providence, may be certainly anticipated. Entertaining these views, and as the proceeds of the sales of the public lands are not wanted for ordinary revenue, which will be abundantly supplied from the imposts, the committee respectfully recommend that an appropriation of them be made to some other purpose for a limited time, subject to be resumed in the contingency of war. Should such an event unfortunately occur, the fund may be withdrawn from its peaceful destination and applied in aid of other means—to the vigorous prosecution of the war, and afterwards to the payment of any debt which may be contracted in consequence of its existence; and when peace shall be again restored, and the debt of the new war shall have been extinguished, the fund may be again appropriated to some fit object other than that of the ordinary expenses of government. Thus may this great resource be preserved and rendered subservient, in peace and in war, to the common benefit of all the States composing the Union.

The inquiry remains, what ought to be the specific application of the fund under the restriction stated? After deducting the ten per cent. proposed to be set apart for the new States, a portion of the committee would have preferred that the residue should be applied to the objects of internal improvement, and colonization of the free blacks, under the direction of the general government; but a majority of the committee believe it better, as an alternative for the scheme of cession to the new States, and, as being most likely to give general satisfaction, that the residue be divided among the twenty-four States according to their federal representative population, to be applied to education, internal improvement, or colonization, or to the redemption of any existing debt contracted for internal improvement, as each State, judging for itself, shall deem most conformable with its own interests and policy. Assuming the annual product of the sales of the public lands to be three million of dollars, the table hereto annexed, marked C, shows what each State would be entitled to receive according to the principle of division which has been stated. In order that the propriety of the proposed appropriation should again, at a day not very distant, be brought under the review of Congress, the committee would recommend that it be limited to a period of five years, subject to the condition of war not breaking out in the mean time. By an appropriation so restricted as to time, each State will be enabled to estimate the probable extent of its proportion, and to adapt its measures of education, improvement, or colonization, or extinction of existing debt, accordingly.

In conformity with the views and principles which the committee have now submitted, they beg leave to report the accompanying bill, entitled "An act to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands of the United States."

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports as to the quantity of public lands unsold; the quantity granted for internal improvements, education, and charitable institutions; the amount paid for title to public lands; the expenses incurred in the sale of the public lands, and in settling titles of claimants, and the amount received for land sold.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 6, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with two resolutions of the House of Representatives, passed on the 25th of January last, in the following terms:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish this House with a statement showing the quantity, in acres, of public land unsold at the time of the last quarterly return of sales, and within the limits of the several States and organized Territories, distinguishing that part to which the Indian title had been extinguished; also, the number of acres which have been appropriated for internal improvements, education, or charitable institutions, showing, under separate heads, the quantity of land unsold in each State and Territory, and to what States and Territories, or bodies politic, grants of land have been made, and the quantity to each.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury inform this House what amount of money has been paid by the United States for the title to the public lands, including the payments made under the Louisiana and Florida treaties; the compact with Georgia; the settlement with the Yazoo claimants; the contracts with the several Indian tribes; and the expenditures for compensation to commissioners, clerks, surveyors, and other officers employed by the United States for the management and sale of the western domain; also the gross amount of money received at the public treasury as the proceeds of sales of public lands, and the sum still due from supposed solvent purchasers," I have the honor to transmit a statement from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, (marked A,) containing the information required by the first resolution, and a statement from the Register, (marked B,) containing that required by the second resolution.

In answer to the inquiry respecting "the sum still due from supposed solvent purchasers," I have to remark that, agreeably to law, all lands which had been further credited under the relief laws passed in the years 1821, 1822, and 1823, which were not paid for on the 4th of July, 1829, have reverted to the United States, and the moneys paid thereon are declared to be forfeited. There is therefore, at the present time, no debt due from purchasers of public lands.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Of the eleven States whose ratio of increase is greater in the annexed table than 32.74, the aggregate population was—
In 1820	3,640,114
In 1830	5,749,997
Actual increase	2,109,883
Ratio of increase	57.96
Of these eleven States, the seven containing the public domain had a population of—
In 1820	1,207,165
In 1830	2,238,702
Actual increase	1,031,537
Ratio of increase	85.45
The remaining four of the eleven, viz, Tennessee, Georgia, New York, and Maine, had a population of—
In 1820	2,432,949
In 1830	3,511,295
Actual increase	1,078,346

In 1830	10,477,895
Actual increase	2,105,188
Rate of increase	25.14
The thirteen States whose increase, according to the annexed table, is below 32.74, had a population of—
In 1820	5,939,759
In 1830	6,966,600
Actual increase	1,026,841
Rate of increase	17.28

In 1820 the population of the seven States containing the public lands, viz, Illinois, Alabama, Indiana, Missouri, Mississippi, Ohio, and Louisiana, bore to the whole population of the United States the proportion of 1 to 7.05, or about $\frac{1}{8}$th. In 1830 it was as 1 to 5.23, a little less than 1-5th.

In 1820 the population of the same seven States was to the population of the remaining seventeen States as 1 to 6.94, or about 1-7th. In 1830 it was as 1 to 4.68—more than 1-5th, and nearly 3-10ths.

In 1820 the population of the same seven States was to that of the remaining four of the eleven whose increase is above the common ratio, viz, (Tennessee, Georgia, New York, and Maine,) as 1 to 2.015, or something less than $\frac{1}{2}$. In 1830 it was as 1 to 1.55, or about $\frac{2}{3}$ds.

In 1820 the population of the same seven States was to that of the thirteen States whose increase is below the common ratio as 1 to 4.92, or about 1-5th. In 1830 it was 1 to 3.11, or about $\frac{1}{3}$d.

In 1820 the population of the seven land States was about $\frac{1}{8}$th of the population of all the States. Their increase in ten years is to the whole increase as 1 to 3.04, or about $\frac{1}{3}$d.

In 1820 the population of these seven States was equal to about 1-7th of that of the other seventeen States. The increase of the former in ten years is to that of the latter as 1 to 2.04, about $\frac{1}{2}$.

In 1820 the population of these seven States equalled about $\frac{2}{3}$ds of that of the four other States whose increase is above the common ratio, viz, Tennessee, Georgia, New York, and Maine. The increase of the former in ten years is to that of the latter as 1 to 1.04, or very nearly equal.

In 1820 the population of these seven States was about 1-5th of that of the thirteen States whose increase is below the common ratio. The increase of these former in ten years is to that of the latter as 1 to 0.995, a little more than equal.

22d CONGRESS.] No. 1054. [1st SESSION.

ON THE PROPOSITION TO SELL THE PUBLIC LANDS TO THE STATES IN WHICH THEY LIE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 17, 1832.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred so much of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury as relates to the public lands, reported:

The subject has received by the committee that consideration which its importance deserves.

The recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury upon the subject of the public lands is, that Congress now "decide upon the propriety of disposing of all the public lands, in the aggregate, to those States within whose territorial limits they lie, at a fair price, to be settled in such manner as might be satisfactory to all. The aggregate price of the whole may then be apportioned among the several States of the Union, according to such equitable ratio as may be consistent with the objects of the original cession, and the proportion of each may be paid or secured directly to the others by the respective States purchasing the land."

The committee are of opinion that any such disposition at this time of the public land, and the distribution of the proceeds, as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, would be inexpedient; that it would paralyze the growth and prosperity of the younger States if they could be seduced into the purchase at any price which the older States would deem reasonable.

The reasons urged by the Secretary of the Treasury in favor of this disposition of the public domain are understood to be, 1st. That the amount arising from the sales of the public lands is no longer required in aid of the revenue for the payment of the public debt and the support of government.

2d. That such a disposition of the public lands is well calculated to remove all cause of difficulty with the general government and the States upon the subject of these lands.

The committee are aware that the period has arrived when the public debt may be considered as paid; when the government will no longer need an annual revenue, derived from taxation and the sale of the public lands, equal to the average annual amount collected under the present revenue system.

It becomes the duty of Congress to reduce the receipts into the treasury from all sources to the reasonable demands of the public service, after the payment of the national debt. It is a duty which ought to be performed at the present session of Congress, and its prompt discharge is demanded by the highest consideration of patriotism. It ought not, it cannot be longer deferred, with justice to the country or safety to the government.

In this reduction of the revenue to the wants of the government it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury that the duties upon imports should be so regulated, for the present, at least, as to continue adequate protection to the home industry of the country. In his opinion, after the discharge of the national debt, the expenditures of the government, as now authorized by law, will not exceed $13,000,000. To give the protection necessary to our domestic manufactures, a revenue of $15,000,000 is proposed by the Secretary to be retained, derivable from sources other than the sales of the public lands, and he recommends an augmentation of the expenses of the government to that sum annually; that the whole of this sum shall be collected by impost duty, the sale of the bank stock and of the public lands is recommended.

The committee, in the discharge of the duty assigned them under the resolve of the House, are not called upon to present their reasons for withholding their assent to so much of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury as proposes to augment the ordinary and annual expenditures of the government beyond the $13,000,000.

The sources from which the revenue of the government has been derived are, 1st, imports; 2d, public lands; 3d, bank stock.

It is proposed by the Secretary to withdraw the public lands from the sources of revenue, to sell the bank stock, and to leave the $15,000,000 to be collected upon the imports of the country, and in this mode to afford temporary and permanent protection to the manufacturing interests of the country.

Whilst the immediate benefits resulting from this protection are almost exclusively confined to the northern and eastern sections of the Union, already in the enjoyment of more than a due proportion of the advantages resulting from the expenditures of the public money, it is proposed that the new States shall further contribute to their prosperity and capital by the purchase of the public lands, and by becoming bound to the States, directly and individually, for the payment.

The committee do not assent to such a modification of the revenue of the country, or to such a disposition of its present sources.

The public lands should not be, they have not been, regarded as a profitable source of revenue to the federal government; nor should they be converted into the means of wealth to the several States. They should be fostered and disposed of by the national government in such manner and upon such terms as will be subservient to the building up of great and flourishing communities, whose members, when interested in and attached to the soil, will give physical strength and moral force to the nation.

It is true that our government has attained that condition, unexampled in the history of nations, when it has become the duty of the taxing power to lessen and not to increase public exactions upon the labor of the citizen. The diminution to be made should be extended with impartial justice to all the sources from which revenue is derived, when that can be done without jeoparding any of the great interests of the country. We should exact from each source in proportion to its ability to pay, and take from none more than the demands of the government require.

If, then, the amount of tax imposed upon imports, and the revenue derived from the sales of the public lands, are greater than the just and ordinary expenses of the government demand—and all admit that they are—that amount should be reduced, and reduced by lessening the exactions made from each in a fair and just proportion. The reduction upon the revenue derived from the sales of the public lands, to be effectual and beneficial, must be made in the price at which they are to be sold.

If the amount now received into the treasury be not required for the purposes of the federal government, (and such seems to be a conceded fact,) the committee are of opinion it would be a better mode to rid the national treasury of this unnecessary and dangerous influx of public money, to reduce the price of the public domain, (and thereby render the acquisition of a home easy to all in every condition of life,) than to sell the lands to the younger States, if they were willing to buy and able to pay. A sale to them upon any terms the most reasonable, in the opinion of the older States, must render them tributary to, and dependent upon, their more prosperous and opulent sisters of the confederacy. Their present population would be encumbered with a debt, to be transmitted as a curse to their posterity, the interest of which they would be unable to pay by the sales of the lands which they could effect.

The whole amount of public lands in the States and Territories remaining unsold at this time may be estimated at 340,878,713 acres. The lowest sum per acre at which the United States would be justified in selling, according to the opinions of many who have spoken upon this subject, has been thirty cents per acre; others have fixed fifty cents. A sale at thirty cents per acre would produce a debt upon the new States alone of $54,757,705 50, the annual interest of which, at six per cent., would be $3,285,462 33—a sum greater than the past or future annual average receipts from the sales of the public lands under the present land system of the United States.

If such a disposition of the public lands could be maintained upon principles of sound policy as to the United States, can it be seriously contended by any one that the States in which these lands are situate could be induced to make the purchase, and place themselves under mortgage to the other States for the payment of the principal, when the estate purchased would not yield annually a sum equal to the interest? The committee do not believe that any State in this Union would pursue a policy so suicidal, and therefore deem it wholly useless to propose to the States any terms upon which they may become the purchasers of the public lands within their respective limits.

The second consideration presented by the report, as an argument in favor of a sale of the public lands to the new States is, that it would be well calculated to remove all cause of difficulty with the general government and the States upon the subject of the public lands. What is cause of difficulty, to be removed by adopting the course recommended, is not indicated by the report.

If it be that exhausting operation and consequent embarrassment produced by the constant drain of the circulating medium from the west, the result of the action of the federal government upon the subject of the public lands, to which the Secretary of the Treasury alludes, the remedy proposed will not cure the evil unless it can be demonstrated that the States, separately, will exact less and disburse more money in the purchasing States than the States united.

Whilst the general government shall continue to derive a revenue from the sales of public lands it may be expected, at least it should be hoped for, that in some mode a sum of money equal to the exactions for the public lands will be thrown back by public disbursements in those States so much affected by this constant drain of their circulating medium.

Can it be believed that when the proceeds arising from the sales of the public lands shall become the separate property of the States, according to any ratio of division which will be agreed upon, the amount derived annually from the debtor by the creditor States, either for interest or principal, will be returned into circulation among those States thus made tributary?

This difficulty and complaint of the new States with and against the general goverment will only be transferred to the several States who become the receivers, and instead of peace, concord, and harmony among the States we may expect to witness discontent and discord, bitter and unceasing.

The Secretary of the Treasury may probably have reference to a pretension advanced by some politicians by which the right and title of the United States to the lands within the several States have been denied; if so, this is a question which the committee will not discuss. If the acknowledgment of the right of the United States to these lands by the organic laws of the States in which they are situate does not protect them from the claims set up for some of the States by a few politicians who labor to give to the terms "free and sovereign State" some magical influence, and thence draw strange conclusions, nothing which the committee can say by way of argument can save the public domain from this newly discovered right in the States. It will be time enough to argue this question whenever the States shall attempt to appropriate the public lands. The committee are of opinion that "no cause of difficulty with the general government and the States" ever can arise upon this question; at all events, that it is not expedient to avoid it by disposing of the public lands as recommended.

In connexion with this subject the committee have been called upon to consider the policy (so often the subject of debate in the House of Representatives) of dividing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States. This is a question surrounded by more difficulty and embarrassment, and one upon which the committee were unable to unite in opinion. A majority of the committee, however, believe that any pledge or disposition of the proceeds of the public lands among the States for State purposes, before the money should have reached the Treasury of the United States, would be unwise, and productive of incalculable injury to the States whose growth and prosperity so much depend upon the amelioration of the present system of disposing of the public lands by Congress. Pledge the proceeds to the States for State purposes, and all hope of further relief will be cut off. The new States may then calculate to "pay the penalty of the bond; yea, even the pound of flesh."

The power of the general government to make this distribution may be well questioned. Those who contend for such distribution of the proceeds derive the power from the grants of the several States to the United States, and from the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States. A recurrence to these grants, and an examination into the terms employed and the objects intended by them, may not be unprofitable in conducting the mind to a correct judgment upon this subject.

The committee do not propose to inquire into the right of the Congress of the United States to have demanded, or the obligations imposed upon the States to make a cession of their public domain. The necessities of the confederation seemed to require it, and the enlightened patriotism of the States yielded to that necessity, and surrendered them "for the common good."

The terms employed in the grants by Virginia, North Carolina, and Georgia will only be adverted to. Virginia, in the deed of cession of that vast domain which now encompasses the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, after stipulating for the political existence of its future inhabitants, for the partition of the territory into States, and their admission into the Union, declared "that all the lands within the territory so ceded to the United States, and not reserved for or appropriated to any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American army, shall be considered a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the confederation or federal alliance of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose and for no other use or purpose whatsoever."

In the act of cession by North Carolina the precise language as above is also employed, so far as relates to the purposes to which the domain shall be devoted.

The same language is found in the deed of cession by Georgia and the other States who made deeds purporting to cede lands to the United States.

That clause of the Constitution which relates to the subject of the public lands is in these words: "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," &c.

Is this disposition of the territory to be made for the purposes and objects of the federal government or for the purposes and varied objects of the several State governments? Congress has power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;" but for what purposes and for what objects? The answer is, the legitimate objects of expenditure by the federal government, surely not for distribution among the several States. Congress may dispose of the territory belonging to the United States for objects and purposes legitimately falling within the scope of the powers and authority of the federal government; but the committee doubt the existence of a power to dispose of them for the exclusive benefit and the separate interests of the several States.

If the terms of the grants be resorted to in aid of the clause of the Constitution and taken in connexion therewith, still it is believed the power to make distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands may be fairly questioned.

By the deeds of cession "the lands are to be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of the United States."

The money collected by taxation is regarded as a common fund for the use and benefit of the United States; the money, whether collected by the sale of land or by a tax upon land, is the revenue of the government, and can only be disposed of under the powers with which that government has been vested by the Constitution.

It would be difficult for those who deny the power to Congress to levy imposts and excise for the purposes of collecting money to be distributed among the State governments, to be expended for State purposes under State authority, to establish the power to dispose of the proceeds of the public lands for similar purposes.

If the committee should be mistaken as to the question of constitutional power, (which has been suggested more with a view to invite investigation upon the subject than from a conviction of its correctness,) upon the inexpediency of such a disposition of the proceeds of the public lands they cannot doubt.

Although these lands have been regarded as a source of revenue, the committee are aware that heretofore they have not proved to be a profitable one. Nor do the committee now wish them to be made the means of raising revenue in time of peace, but the instrument in the hands of a liberal and munificent government, by which large communities may be built up, our population increased, and our resources in time of war multiplied.

The general government should dispose of them upon terms accommodated to the wants of the community; and when the unsold lands in the respective States shall become refuse, and no longer worth the expense of federal superintendence and care, a relinquishment of them to the State in which they lie, or to individuals, would be the better policy.

It is not probable that the government will again be placed in a condition when it will become necessary to resort to her public domain, either as the means of raising an army or of borrowing money.

The committee have expressed the opinion that the period is approaching, if it has not already arrived, when it would be sound policy to reduce the price of the public lands. Arguments other than the necessity of ridding the treasury of the revenue derived from sales at the present price in favor of a reduction of the price of the public lands could be advanced if that were the question now under the consideration of the committee. The price was reduced in 1821 from two dollars to one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. Real estate, in common with every other species of property, has decreased in value since that time. The price of labor has lessened. The appreciation in the value of the circulating medium since 1821 has been very considerable, and still the price of public land is the same now as then. It should not be forgotten either that in most of the new States the best and choice lands have been sold.

Should the revenue arising from the sales of public lands be no longer needed for national purposes, and the reduction of the price will not have the effect of preventing a too rapid accumulation of national treasure, would it not be better policy to give to every one of full age or who is the head of a family, who would occupy, cultivate, and improve the same, a tract of land that he may call his own than to sell these lands to the States or to divide the proceeds among them?

So long as Congress shall retain the right and power of legislating over this subject, and the proceeds arising from the public lands shall be regarded as national treasure or revenue and not the individual property of the separate States, it may be hoped that an enlightened and a liberal policy will be pursued; when the States shall each have a vested interest, separate and distinct, that policy which will be calculated to convert these lands into the most money, to increase the annual dividend of the several States, will be pursued, regardless of the wants or condition of the States in which they lie. The representatives in Congress from the old States, constituting a majority, influenced by a desire to make this fund lasting and profitable for State purposes, to enlarge the dividend of their respective States, to exhibit, in bold relief, on their annual or biennial return to their constituents, the countless thousands wrung from the new States for the purpose of lessening the burdens in the old, will stay the progress of surveying the public lands. All that are surveyed must be sold, must be forced upon the emigrant. Public lands will be sold, but they will be of inferior quality. The tide of emigration and the spirit of enterprise will be checked. Donations to the meritorious settlers, to the new States for public improvement, will no longer be made. Pre-emptions in favor of the honest and industrious pioneers of the west will be denied. A cold, calculating, sordid, and selfish policy must and will influence the members of Congress in all future legislation upon this subject.

At a very early period the minimum price of the public lands was fixed at two dollars per acre, and the sales were upon a credit, and, in many instances, the price at public auction greatly exceeded two dollars per acre. The consequence was an accumulation of debt due from the purchasers of the public lands in the west, which they were wholly unable to pay. Relief was asked at the hands of the general government, and although the proceeds of the public lands were pledged for the redemption of the national debt, Congress released the community from a mass of debt of many millions, and reduced the price of land from two dollars to one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Would this have been done if the proceeds of those lands had been devoted, by previous legislation, to distribution among the several States for State purposes? With the local feelings and interests which would inevitably have been excited by such a disposition of the proceeds, can it be believed that the representatives from the several States would have dared to surrender the interest of their constituents or States by releasing this debt, which threatened ruin and destruction to the new States?

A further reduction in the price of the public lands ought to be made. The people in the new States look for it and desire it. A reduction of the revenue of the general government must take place; they regard the price which the government exacts from them for the public lands as a tax, and a heavy tax. They have submitted to it cheerfully, because it was needed to discharge the obligations of their government. When the whole amount now derived from the sales of public land, united with the other revenues of the government which will be collected under any possible modification of the tariff, will not be required for the wants and purposes of the federal government, can it be just that the same shall be exacted from the west by the action of the federal government, to be given to the older and more opulent States, to be expended in those States for education, internal improvement, or general emancipation? Such a policy would be unjust and intolerable.

If, however, it shall not be the pleasure of Congress to lessen the amount of revenue to be derived from the sales of public land by reducing the price, the committee are decidedly of opinion that the present system should not be disturbed. And if there shall be an accumulation of money in the treasury over and above the wants of the government in each year, let that surplus be disposed of by Congress, after it reaches the public coffers, in such mode as shall be consistent with the principles of justice, and in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution; but they are opposed to pledging the proceeds for State purposes, and thereby put it out of the power of Congress so to legislate upon the subject of the public lands as to meet the wants of the community and the condition of the country.

Resolved, therefore, That it is inexpedient to make sale of the public lands to the States in which they respectively are situate.

Resolved, That it is inexpedient at this time to divide the proceeds of the public lands among the several States, to be expended in said States for State purposes.

The committee, however, with a view of eliciting information upon the subject, submit for the consideration of the House a joint resolution, without wishing to be understood as giving their assent in favor of the sale to the States at this time.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to submit to the legislatures of the several States in which any portion of the public lands may be situated, through their respective chief magistrates, propositions for the sale of such portions of the public domain within the limits of each as may remain unsold, and report their several replies to Congress as soon as practicable.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That it shall be the duty of said Secretary in the meantime to obtain the best possible information from the several land offices, surveyors general, and such other sources as he may deem expedient, relative to the quantity, quality, and value of the public lands which remain unsold in each State, and report such information in like manner.

Statement of the total amount abated or relinquished by the United States of the purchase money of the public lands (sold under the credit system) by the operation of the relief laws of 1821, 1822, 1823, 1824, 1826, 1828, 1830, and 1831.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1055. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE IN RELATION TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A CERTAIN NEW LAND DISTRICT IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES APRIL 20, 1832.

Mr. ELLSWORTH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution, upon the motion of the honorable Mr. Wickliffe, on the 17th of March last, in the words following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire and report to this House whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office was officially called upon, on or about the 29th of December, 1831, to designate the boundaries of a new land district proposed to be established in Michigan by a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands, which was printed by order of this House, leaving the boundaries of said district blank, he being furnished with a copy of said bill; what were the reasons assigned for his refusal to obey the call thus officially made upon him, as assigned in two written communications in answer to said call; whether the said Commissioner did not assign as a reason for not complying with the said official request "that he had no information in his office to give, and that, in his opinion, the public interest did not require an additional land district in Michigan," and whether at the same time he had or had not advised the delegate from Michigan that two additional land offices were required in said Territory; what information was it which was "lately received" which, on the 9th of February, 1832, enabled the said Commissioner to comply with the official request made upon him in December, 1831, by giving the boundaries of said district, and which he had declined, because, in his opinion, (as expressed in two communications in writing to the Secretary of the Treasury,) the establishment of a new land office and district in Michigan was inexpedient; whether the first two communications in writing, in answer to the request aforesaid to give the boundaries of said district, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and signed "Elijah Hayward, Commissioner of the General Land Office," "formed a part of the informal correspondence between the Secretary and the said Commissioner on the subject of an additional land district in Michigan;" whether these letters "were unofficial;" whether they have or have not been recorded, and whether copies of the said letters have or have not been denied to a person having a right to demand them of the Commissioner upon the allegation on the part of the Commissioner "that they formed a part of the informal correspondence" between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner, alleging that the originals were destroyed. If said letters were official, and have not been recorded or preserved in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that the said committee also inquire into the expediency of providing by law that all official communications in writing signed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be preserved, by requiring the same to be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose; and that the said committee have leave to send for persons and papers—reported:

That, before proceeding to an examination of the matters contained in said resolution, the committee forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a copy of the resolution, and gave to him and the honorable Mr. Wickliffe notice of the time when the committee would proceed with the examination. The committee received from the Commissioner of the General Land Office a communication directed to them, bearing date April 2, 1832, which accompanies this report.

The committee have endeavored carefully and impartially to discharge the duty imposed upon them. They have examined all such witnesses as were named either by the Commissioner or Mr. Wickliffe, and have obtained such other testimony as the committee deemed important to the case; all which is in writing, and accompanies this report.

The committee find that the Commissioner of the General Land Office was officially called upon, on or about the 29th of December, 1831, to designate the boundaries of a new land district in Michigan, proposed to be established by a bill before that time, reported to the House by the Committee on Public Lands, which bill had been printed, leaving the boundaries blank, and was then forwarded to the Commissioner to be filled up, as appears by the letter of Mr. Wickliffe to the Secretary of the Treasury of the 29th December, 1831, and the two indorsements entered on the same by the chief clerk of the Treasury Department; that the Commissioner declined to fill up the said blank in the manner and for the reasons assigned by him in his two letters, inserted in his answers, dated the 5th and 10th of January, particularly stating therein that a new land district in Michigan was "unnecessary, inexpedient, and injudicious."

The committee refer to the letter of Mr. Wickliffe, and the indorsements thereupon, to show the form of the call upon the Commissioner and the manner and reasons of his refusal.

The Commissioner, as appears from the testimony of the honorable Mr. Wing, delegate from the Territory of Michigan, was called upon by the latter gentleman in relation to the making of a new southeast land district in said Territory, for which said bill was designed, and for which purpose said bill had been reported in blank, to be filled up by the Commissioner. The committee find that the Commissioner did not suggest any objection to the contemplated land district to Mr. Wing, or that there would be any difficulty in making the said district, or that it would be inexpedient, but rather assented to the expediency of the measure, and further remarked that if Congress were about to make one new district, it would be well at the same time to make another in the northwest part of the Territory, to be organized thereafter, when the President of the United States should think it best. The committee do not find that at said interview with Mr. Wing, or at any time, the Commissioner advised Mr. Wing that two additional land districts were then required in said Territory.

The committee find that, after the Commissioner of the General Land Office had written his two letters of the 5th and 10th of January, 1832, to the Secretary of the Treasury, contained in the accompanying answer of the Commissioner, for the purpose of meeting the object of the Committee on Public Lands, the Secretary of the Treasury invited an interview with Mr. Wickliffe, in which interview the Secretary of the Treasury proposed that the committee should receive from him a delineation of the boundaries of the contemplated land district; to this proposal Mr. Wickliffe acceded. The Secretary of the Treasury accordingly procured from Mr. Wing satisfactory information as to the boundaries to be prescribed, and, in a second interview with Mr. Wickliffe, proposed that he should receive from the Commissioner a communication adopting these boundaries as an official reply of the Secretary to Mr. Wickliffe's letter of the 29th of December. To this proposition Mr. Wickliffe also assented, and the Commissioner, on being informed by the Secretary of the Treasury what had taken place between him and Mr. Wickliffe, did consent to adopt the boundaries suggested by Mr. Wing, and accordingly recommended them in an official communication, which was transmitted to Mr. Wickliffe, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

This is all the information which the committee find was obtained by the Commissioner of the General Land Office after the date of his said two letters of the 5th and 10th of January, which enabled the Commissioner to comply with the request of Mr. Wickliffe in his letter of the 29th of December.

The committee further find that the two letters of the Commissioner of the 5th and 10th of January did not form a part of an informal correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of the General Land Office; but that, at the time they were written and sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, they were official, and, as such, recorded in the office of the Commissioner; but that the same were, at a subsequent period, agreed by the Secretary of the Treasury and Mr. Wickliffe to be considered as unofficial, and the originals, being in the hands of the Secretary, were destroyed. The committee find that, on the 7th day of March, 1832, Mr. Wickliffe, by letter of that date, requested of the Commissioner copies of the said two letters, (a copy of which letter of request will be found in the answer of the Commissioner accompanying this report;) and, without expressing any opinion upon the strict right to demand the copies, the committee agree that, according to the practice and custom of the office, Mr. Wickliffe was fully warranted in his request to be furnished with said copies as asked for, and that the same were refused to him upon the alleged ground, as appears from the letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Mr. Wickliffe, dated March 12, 1832, (a copy of which is to be found in the said answer of the Commissioner,) that the same formed a part of the informal correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner, and because the originals were destroyed.

Answer of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

WASHINGTON CITY, April 2, 1832.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, Commissioner of the General Land Office, respectfully submits the following reply, documents, and explanations, as an answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted on the 17th ultimo, and to the several inquiries and parts thereof, which was referred to your consideration:

First. "Whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office was officially called upon, on or about the 29th of December, 1831, to designate the boundaries of a new land district proposed to be established in Michigan by a bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which was printed by order of this House, leaving the boundaries of said district blank, he being furnished with a copy of said bill? What were the reasons assigned for his refusal to obey the call thus officially made upon him, as assigned in two written communications in answer to said call? Whether the said Commissioner did not assign as a reason for not complying with the said official request that he had no information in his office to give; and that, in his opinion, the public interest did not require an additional land district in Michigan? and whether, at the same time, he had or had not advised the delegate from Michigan that two additional land offices were required in said Territory?"

Answer. The undersigned was not officially called upon on the day named, nor at any other time, to designate the boundaries of a new land district in Michigan, although, subsequently to the day named, he was informally called upon in relation thereto.

On the 2d day of January last, when confined to a sick chamber with the prevailing influenza, he received from the Treasury Department the original letter, of which the following is a copy, covering the printed bill alluded to in the resolution:

"REPRESENTATIVES' HALL, December 29.

"SIR: Enclosed is a bill to establish a land office in Michigan. You will please to have the boundaries so adjusted between this new district, which is intended to include Monroe, so as to give the greatest facility to emigrants.

"Respectfully, C. A. WICKLIFFE.

"Hon. LOUIS MCLANE."

On which was indorsed, in the handwriting of the chief clerk of the Treasury Department, but without any signature, the following words and figures, to wit: "Referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who will please report his views on the subject." This informal mode, however, of referring papers and documents, which is adopted for convenience, is as much respected and as implicitly observed as the most formal and official requisition under the signature of the Secretary.

It may be proper here to remark, that Mr. Wickliffe's letter is not, in its terms and character, official. It is not pretended that it was written by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, nor by virtue of his office as chairman of the same, nor even for the information of that committee. Prima facia, it is a private communication from Mr. Wickliffe to the Hon. Louis McLane, it not being addressed to Mr. McLane as Secretary of the Treasury. But the undersigned would not avail himself of any advantage derived from technicalities, nor consent to receive any immunity therefrom. For every purpose connected with his reputation as a public officer, or his official conduct, he is willing the letter of Mr. Wickliffe should be considered as official, and of as grave and high character as if it purported to have been written by the express order of the committee of which he is chairman. It is, however, vague and uncertain in its terms. It directs the Hon. Louis McLane to adjust the boundaries between this new district, without naming or alluding to the opposite object. A person disposed to criticise, would be curious enough to inquire to what the term boundaries applied. But the undersigned has not been, nor is he now, disposed to avail himself of any defects in the letter, which was probably written in haste and amid a pressure of business. It has been considered as simply requesting the designation of boundaries of an additional land district in Michigan, to include the town of Monroe, so as to accommodate purchasers of the public lands therein, rather than "to give the greatest facility to emigrants."

On the 5th of January, 1832, the undersigned returned the letter of Mr. Wickliffe, and its enclosure, to the Secretary of the Treasury, with the following reply:

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 5, 1832.

"SIR: The enclosed letter of Mr. Wickliffe, and the bill for establishing an additional land office in the Territory of Michigan, have been considered. There is no information in this office which shows that any such measure is now necessary or required on any public consideration.

"Attempts to establish new land offices merely for the purpose of private speculation, or to give a temporary advantage to one town or village over another or others, cannot be officially recommended without a dereliction of public duty.

"It is probable that, in two or three years, two new land offices will be required in the peninsula of Michigan, and the present districts were divided at the last session of Congress with a view to such a subsequent subdivision; the principal meridian fixed as the dividing line, and the books of this office, and of the two land offices, have been arranged and prepared accordingly.

"Believing that a new land office in that peninsula at the present time is unnecessary, inexpedient, and injudicious, I cannot recommend it to your favorable consideration, or that of Congress.

"I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ELIJAH HAYWARD."

These papers were all returned to the undersigned the next day, with an additional indorsement on Mr. Wickliffe's letter, also in the handwriting of the chief clerk of the Treasury Department, and without any signature, in the words and figures following, to wit:

"The information particularly desired is as to the proper boundaries of the proposed district, and the Commissioner will be pleased to describe those which he would recommend conformably to Mr. Wickliffe's design.

"JANUARY 6, 1832."

The General Land Office possessing no information at that time which would enable the Commissioner to designate any boundaries of the proposed new district, including the town of Monroe, which would accommodate the purchasers of public lands, or prove beneficial to the government, and not having seen or heard of any request or petition from the people of that Territory, or the land offices therein, on the subject, transmitted the following reply to the second reference of the papers:

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 10, 1832.

"SIR: On the 2d instant I received your enclosure of Mr. Wickliffe's letter, and a printed bill to establish an additional land office in the Territory of Michigan, with a reference indorsed thereon that I should report my views on the subject. On the 5th instant, after giving to it all the consideration in my power, I communicated to you my views of the measure, with objections to the same, as unnecessary, inexpedient, and injudicious at the present time. On the 6th instant the papers were returned to me with an indorsement thereon, that I would describe such boundaries of the contemplated new land district as I would recommend conformably to Mr. Wickliffe's design.

"No design is expressed in Mr. Wickliffe's letter, other than that the new district should include the town of Monroe, so as to give the greatest facility to emigrants, and no particular plan or design can be inferred from the printed bill enclosed. The town of Monroe is only thirty-six miles from Detroit, where the land office is located for the district east of the principal meridian line. It is on the great mail road leading from Cleveland and Sandusky, in Ohio, to the capital of Michigan, on which, by a contract with the Post Office Department, commencing on the 1st instant, four-horse mail coaches pass and repass daily.

"From a careful review and reconsideration of the subject, I do not perceive any public motive for creating a new land district in that Territory, to include the town of Monroe; but, on the contrary, I am of opinion that such a measure would tend to embarrass the operations of this office, delay the sales of the public lands subject to private entry in the contemplated new land district, without any perceptible convenience or advantage to emigrants.

"I am, therefore, compelled to state, as an imperative duty, that I cannot recommend any particular boundaries of a new land district in that Territory to be formed east of the meridian line, and of which the town of Monroe is to form a part.

"I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ELIJAH HAYWARD.

"P. S.—I cannot presume that it is contemplated to annex any portion of the public lands west of the principal meridian to the new district, as that would immediately create embarrassments in this office, and the present land offices in that Territory, from which emigrants would inevitably suffer the inconvenience and expense of delay, without any benefit to the government.

"E. H.

"Hon. LOUIS MCLANE, Secretary of the Treasury."

The undersigned admits that about a week or ten days previous to Mr. Wickliffe's letter being first referred to him, the Hon. Mr. Wing, delegate from the Territory of Michigan, visited him at his house, and questioned him as to the propriety and expediency of creating an additional land office in that Territory at the present session of Congress. The undersigned replied that no necessity was perceived for such a measure at the present time, but that at a future period (perhaps two or three years) it would probably be necessary and proper to establish two, one east and the other west of the principal meridian, the dividing line of the present offices, which was established at the last session of Congress with a view to such subsequent subdivision. It is recollected that Mr. Wing expressed an opinion that a new office might be advantageously created east of the meridian at the present time, and that he could designate such boundaries on the map as would accommodate purchasers; and as the undersigned was then too ill to go out, Mr. Wing was requested to call at the land office and confer with the chief clerk, who would exhibit to him the map, and again to see the undersigned on the subject. But it is not recollected that at that interview any design was expressed by Mr. Wing to include the town of Monroe in the proposed new district, nor was it intimated that the measure was then before Congress or any committee of that body. Mr. Wing did not again confer or communicate with the undersigned on the subject until after the adoption of the resolution now under consideration.

Second. "What information was it which was 'lately received,' which, on the 9th of February, 1832, enabled the said Commissioner to comply with the official request made upon him in December, 1831, by giving the boundaries of said district, and which he had declined, because, in his opinion, (as expressed in two communications in writing to the Secretary of the Treasury,) the establishment of a new land office and district in Michigan was inexpedient?"

Answer. After the undersigned had recovered from his illness, some time between the 15th and 25th of January last, (the particular day is not recollected,) the Secretary of the Treasury informed him that he had read or shown to Mr. Wickliffe the two letters referred to, who expressed a wish or manifested a solicitude that they should be transmitted to him, with the reply of the Secretary to his (Mr. Wickliffe's) letter of the 29th of December, but that he (the Secretary) would not do so if the undersigned had any objections to the same; who answered that he had no objections, but requested the Secretary, in his reply to Mr. Wickliffe, to quote the language of the two several references of that letter to him.

On the morning of the 9th of February last the Secretary of the Treasury informed the undersigned that he had not replied to Mr. Wickliffe's letter of the 29th of December; that he had received a communication from the Hon. Mr. Wing, the delegate from Michigan, on the subject of the boundaries of the contemplated new land district in that Territory, and verbally informed the undersigned that if he would adopt the boundaries recommended by Mr. Wing, Mr. Wickliffe would accept his answer to that effect as the official and satisfactory reply to his letter of the 29th of December, and that the two previous communications on that subject would be considered as informal, and retained or destroyed. The following communication from Mr. Wing was then placed in the hands of the undersigned by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the subjoined reply was made on the same day:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 16, 1832.

"SIR: I have the honor herewith to submit for your consideration a boundary for the land district in Michigan contemplated by a bill now before the House of Representatives. It varies from that which the petitioners ask for; but, from my knowledge of the country, I believe the one which is here given, though smaller than the one contemplated by the petition, will best subserve the interests of the country and the convenience of purchasers.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"A. E. WING.

"Hon. LOUIS MCLANE."

"The most satisfactory boundary will probably be the one contemplated by the amendatory act of May 16, 1826, entitled "An act to alter the lines between the land districts in the Territory of Michigan, and extend the district of the meridian line, as to the boundary line running north and south between ranges six and seven."

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 9, 1832.

"SIR: In compliance with your instructions, on a reference of a letter from the Hon. C. A. Wickliffe of the 29th of December last, requesting information as to the proper boundaries of a new land district in the Territory of Michigan so as to include the town of Monroe, I have the honor to state, without expressing any opinion of the necessity or expediency of the measure, that from information lately received, the following boundaries for a land district to include that town would accommodate purchasers and emigrants better than any other which I can recommend, to wit:

"All that part of the Territory of Michigan lying between the third and fourth ranges of townships south of the base line and east of the principal meridian, except so much thereof as lies north of the river Huron of Lake Erie, and also the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth ranges of townships south of said base line and west of said principal meridian.

"This answer would have been furnished before had the requisite information been previously received.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ELIJAH HAYWARD.

"Hon. LOUIS MCLANE, Secretary of the Treasury."

The undersigned, in further answering, states that the information "lately received," as inquired for in said resolution, was the communication from Mr. Wing to the Secretary of the Treasury, above recited, and none other, and which first came to the knowledge of the undersigned on the day when his letter of the 9th of February was written.

Third. "Whether the first two communications in writing, in answer to the request aforesaid to give the boundaries of said district, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and signed 'Elijah Hayward, Commissioner of the General Land Office,' formed a part of the informal correspondence between the Secretary and the said Commissioner on the subject of an additional land district in Michigan; whether these letters were unofficial?"

Answer. The first two communications above referred to, and which have already been recited, formed a part of the informal correspondence between the Secretary and the undersigned, on the subject of an additional land office in Michigan, and were not official. To have rendered them official documents, under the circumstances, the Secretary must have adopted them as a constituent part of his reply to Mr. Wickliffe's letter. This was not done, and their original character, therefore, remains unchanged.

In the multiplicity of business which is transacted in the executive offices of the government, personal conferences, verbal explanations, and informal written communications, between the head of a department and its subordinate officers, are almost of daily occurrence, as a means of facilitating the discharge of official duty. They are necessary for the purposes of information, advice, and instruction; and are never considered official, unless made so by the action of the Secretary under whose direction this intercourse is ordered and conducted. It is an expedient for convenience, without which it would not be possible for the numerous bureaus of the Treasury Department to discharge their several duties with that promptness which the public interest requires.

Fourth. "Whether they (the two first communications before referred to, from the undersigned to the Secretary of the Treasury) have or have not been recorded; and whether copies of the said letters have or have not been denied to a person having a right to demand them of the Commissioner, upon the allegation, on the part of the Commissioner, that they formed a part of the informal correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner, alleging that the originals were destroyed ?"

Answer. The two communications alluded to in this inquiry were recorded at or about the time they severally purport to have been written ; as are all others, whether official or informal, having any connexion with, relation to, or in anywise pertaining to the public service, and which have received the signature of the Commissioner.

As to the remaining inquiry, the undersigned states that he has not denied copies of the two communications aforesaid to any person who had a right to demand them.

On the 8th of March last he received the following note from Mr. Wickliffe :

"REPRESENTATIVES HALL, March 7, 1832.

"SIR : I am desirous of being possessed of copies of the first two letters, by way of report, written by you to the Secretary of the Treasury, of —— day of ———, in answer to his request to furnish the boundaries of a new land district in Michigan, in obedience to the wishes of the Committee on Public Lands.

"I am, &c.,

"C. A. WICKLIFFE.

"ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of General Land Office."

From the peculiar language of this note, in the individual character of the writer only, and as it contained no request to be furnished with copies of said letters, the undersigned was not certain whether it was the wish of Mr. Wickliffe to procure such copies from the records of the Land Office, or to receive the assent of the undersigned to obtain them from the Secretary of the Treasury. In this doubt he consulted the Secretary as to the proper reply, and transmitted the following:

"WASHINGTON CITY, March 12, 1832.

"SIR: I have received your letter of the 7th instant, in which you say 'I am desirous of being possessed of copies of the first two letters, by way of report, written by you to the Secretary of the Treasury, of —— day of ———, in answer to his request to furnish the boundaries of a new land district in Michigan, in obedience to the wishes of the Committee on Public Lands.'

"I do not know to what letters you allude, unless it be those which formed a part of the informal correspondence between the Secretary and myself on the subject of an additional land district in Michigan. If it is copies of such letters you are desirous of being possessed of, I have to advise you that they were unofficial, and I presume the originals have been destroyed by the Secretary, as is the custom in such cases.

"Respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ELIJAH HAYWARD.

"Hon. C. A. WICKLIFFE, House of Representatives."

The undersigned would respectfully add that, had Mr. Wickliffe demanded or requested of him in express terms copies of these letters, it would then have been his duty to have refused the application, under the rule of the department dated October 20, 1830, which directs "that copies of accounts or other papers on file or of record in the department are to be furnished only to such individuals as may have a personal interest in them, or at their request."—(See document hereunto annexed, marked B.) Mr. Wickliffe's right, therefore, to copies of these letters is no greater than that of each and every member of Congress, and each and every other citizen having no personal interest therein.

The undersigned considers it his duty further to state, in support of his views on the question of establishing an additional land office in Michigan at the present time, so as to include the town of Monroe, that since the 9th of February, and before the 10th of March last, he received a communication on that subject from the land officers at White Pigeon Prairie, dated February 11, 1832, a copy of which is herewith transmitted, and marked A.

A copy of the printed bill alluded to in the resolution is also annexed, marked C.

All which the undersigned respectfully submits to your candid examination and impartial consideration; and has the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. Messrs. DAVIS, ELLSWORTH, WHITE, GORDON, DANIEL, FOSTER, AND BEARDSLEY, Committee on the Judiciary.

LAND OFFICE, W. D., White Pigeon Prairie, February 11, 1832.

SIR: Since the present arrangement of the land offices within this Territory, and more particularly as respects the office under our immediate charge, we have not heard a solitary complaint from those doing business with the office, either as respects its location or from the distance of attending it.

The present location of the office is the best that could have been selected by the President. It is situated on the great western road leading to Chicago, called the Chicago road, and is about midway of the present population west of the principal meridian. The counties of Berrian, Cass, St. Joseph, and Kalamazoo, contain nineteen-twentieths of the population west of the meridian. The settlements in Jackson county are the most remote, and suffer the greatest inconvenience; yet some of her inhabitants during the last season visited this place for provisions, rather than go east for them, where they were equally cheap and plenty. We mention these facts to show that there is no difficulty in the intercourse with those settlements most remote from the office. If the President should think proper, at any future day, to remove the office into one of the northern counties, and to a place more central in the district, it would be, in all reasonable probability, to either the county of Kalamazoo or Calhoun; and, in that event, the inhabitants residing in the counties situated immediately west of the meridian would be as conveniently situated, as respects intercourse with the office, as those counties in the western and southern part of the district.

This communication is called from us, having understood that a bill is now before Congress for reviving the land office at Monroe, and that one of the provisions of the bill proposes to make the township line between ranges six and seven west of the meridian the western boundary of that contemplated land district. If we are correctly informed, we respectfully beg leave to call your attention to the subject, as we are satisfied that a reference to Farmer's map will at once convince you that it would be an improper and unnatural division, and would in part revive the old complaints that the people of St. Joseph's so long complained of, that of travelling over bad roads to the office at Monroe to purchase land.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

A. EDWARDS.
THOMAS C. SHELDON.

Hon. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner General Land Office, Washington.

B.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 20, 1830.

SIR: Numerous applications being made by individuals for copies of accounts, and other papers on file or of record in this department, which it is frequently inconvenient and may sometimes be inexpedient to grant, it is deemed proper to embody in a regulation the general usage of the department in regard to such applications. The rule therefore is, that copies of accounts, or other papers on file or of record in the department, are to be furnished only to such individuals as may have a personal interest in them, or at their request; that if they relate to suits in which the United States are interested, such copies be transmitted to the district attorneys having charge of such suits, subject to the inspection of the parties applying for them; and that, when transmitted to district attorneys, they be sent through the Solicitor of the Treasury, that he may be duly apprised of all facts communicated to the opposite party.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

C.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported the following bill to establish a land office in the Territory of Michigan:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all that part of the Territory of Michigan which is comprehended within the following boundaries shall, from and after the passage of this act, constitute one land district for the sale and entry of the public lands, viz:

and there is hereby established a land office within the same, to be located at such place as the President, in his discretion, shall think proper to designate.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, under the existing laws, a register and receiver in and for said district, whose compensation shall be the same as provided for other registers and receivers.

DECEMBER 23, 1831.

Testimony of the Hon. Louis McLane.

Question 1*st, by Mr. Wickliffe.* Was the letter of C. A. Wickliffe, of the 29th of December, enclosing a private bill, entitled "An act to establish a land office in the Territory of Michigan," requesting to trace the boundaries said district adjusted and designated, directed to you in your official character, read by you as such, and considered by you as an official application emanating from the Committee on Public Lands through their organ?

Answer. Yes; I so considered it.

Question 2*d, by Mr. Wickliffe.* As an official act did you, in the usual mode, refer it to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with a request that he would perform the duty and furnish the information required?

Answer. When the letter was received by me I directed it to be referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which was done by an indorsement in the handwriting of the chief clerk, that being one mode in which such references are usually made.

Question 3*d, by Mr. Wickliffe.* Was the letter of Mr. Hayward, dated the 5th of January, 1832, directed to you in your official character, in answer to your request, received by you as an official paper?

Answer. Yes.

Question 4*th, by Mr. Wickliffe.* What was the objection on your part to the said letter; please to state it, and point it out in your answer; and state also why it was you sent a second request to the Commissioner to describe such boundaries of the contemplated new district as he would recommend conformably to the request contained in the letter of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands?

Answer. I considered the communication from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands as informing the department that the committee had decided upon the expediency of that land office, and requiring of the department only the delineation of such boundaries as would be most convenient for the public service. Mr. Hayward, in the particular terms of his letter, declining to recommend any boundaries, and expressing his opinion in opposition to the establishment of the land office, the subject was again referred to him, with a more particular explanation of the object of the committee.

Question 5*th, by Mr. Wickliffe.* Was this an official act on your part, and was the answer returned by the Commissioner official, or was it a part of an informal and unofficial correspondence between you upon this subject?

Answer. I considered both official at the time the communication was made from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Question 6th, by Mr. Wickliffe. What was the objection on your part to this second letter, and what steps did you take to enable you to furnish the boundaries of the new land district to include the town of Monroe?

Answer. My objection to the second letter was similar to that made to the first, that it declined giving the boundaries. Desirous of meeting what I considered to be the views of the Committee on Public Lands, I invited an interview with Mr. Wickliffe. In that interview I showed him the two letters I had received from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and explained to him my difficulties upon the subject. I asked if it would be agreeable to him and to the committee to receive from me the delineation of boundaries founded upon the best information I could obtain? He said that it would, but requested that the letters from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to me should be transmitted to the committee at the same time. I then determined to take that course, and having obtained from Mr. Wing, the delegate from Michigan, information as to the boundaries, which were satisfactory to me, I prepared a letter to Mr. Wickliffe, recommending those as the proper boundaries. Before sending that letter, I sent for the Commissioner of the Land Office, and informed him that Mr. Wickliffe desired that his letters should be sent to the committee, and the course I intended to pursue. At the same time I read him the draught of my letter to Mr. Wickliffe; he assented without any hesitation to the transmission of the letters, but desired that I would describe in my letter the indorsements in answer to which his letters were written. I directed the alteration to be made accordingly. It occurred to me subsequently that it would be better for the Commissioner of the Land Office and myself that there should be no apparent difference in our views. I therefore invited another interview with Mr. Wickliffe. In this interview I informed him that it would be personally gratifying to me if he would withdraw his request to have the answers sent to the committee; that the communications which had passed between me and the Commissioner of the General Land Office might be treated as informal and unofficial; and that he would agree to receive from me a communication from the Commissioner, adopting the boundaries recommended by Mr. Wing as the official reply from me to his letter of the 29th of December. I understood Mr. Wickliffe to assent to that arrangement, and I then sent for the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and explained to him what had taken place between Mr. Wickliffe and myself. He consented to adopt the boundaries recommended by Mr. Wing, and to make his reply accordingly. From this time I considered the communications made to me by the Commissioner of the General Land Office informal, and destroyed the letters.

Question 7th, by Mr. Wickliffe. Did you between the 15th and 25th of January last, or at any other time, "inform" the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the two letters of the Commissioner, dated the 5th and 10th of January, 1832, to you upon this subject would not be sent to C. A. Wickliffe in answer to his request of the 29th of December, if the said Commissioner had any objections to your doing so?

Answer. I inquired of the Commissioner if he had any objections, and he said he had none; but I have no recollection of having informed the Commissioner at any time that his two letters of the 5th and 10th of January, 1832, would not be sent to Mr. Wickliffe if the said Commissioner had any objections to my doing so. After exhibiting the letters to Mr. Wickliffe, I should not have felt myself at liberty to decline sending them had he insisted upon their transmission.

Question 8th, by Mr. Wickliffe. Are such letters referred to required to be recorded before sent to you, and is that the practice in the Land Office?

Answer. I cannot answer as to the practice of the Land Office.

Question 9th, by Mr. Wickliffe. Has it been the practice in the department, under the rule dated the 20th of October, 1830, marked A, and annexed to the answer of the Commissioner, to furnish members of Congress upon their request with copies of official letters of record touching and concerning business pending before either house of Congress? And did Mr. Wickliffe inform you of his intention to call for copies of said letters before he made the request of the Commissioner?

Answer. It is the practice in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury in ordinary cases to furnish members of Congress upon their request with copies of official letters of record touching and concerning business before either house of Congress. Mr. Wickliffe did inform me of his intention to apply for those papers.

Question 10th, by Mr. Wickliffe. Did the Commissioner consult with you after he had received the letter of Mr. Wickliffe of the 7th of March requesting copies of said letters, in order to ascertain from you whether it was his (Mr. Wickliffe's) "wish to procure copies from the records of the Land Office, and to assent to the assent of the Commissioner to obtain them from the Secretary of the Treasury?" and did you advise him to give the answer to that request contained in the letter of the Commissioner of the 12th of March, 1832?

Answer. The Commissioner did consult with me after he had received Mr. Wickliffe's letter of the 7th of March requesting copies of said letters, and it is probable, though I cannot distinctly state, for the purposes mentioned in his answer. On that occasion I informed the Commissioner that after Mr. Wickliffe's agreement to receive his communication as the official reply in answer to Mr. Wickliffe's first letter, I then considered the previous letters as informal, and forming no part of the records of my office, and had destroyed them. The Commissioner did not on that or upon any other occasion show me any letter or draught of a letter which was afterwards sent, nor did I advise that or any other form of answer.

Question 11th, by Mr. Hayward. Did you not say to me, at the interview in which I assented to the transmission of my two letters to Mr. Wickliffe, that there were two modes of your replying to Mr. Wickliffe's letter: one was to transmit my two letters as a part of your official report; and the other to make a separate reply without those letters; and that I might have my choice of these two modes?

Answer. I have no recollection of saying so.

LOUIS McLANE.

Subscribed and sworn to April 14, 1832, before

R. S. BRISCOE, Justice of the Peace.

Testimony of the Hon. Mr. Wing.

I was charged with the presentation to Congress of several petitions for the establishment of an additional land district in the southeastern part of the Territory of Michigan. On presenting them they were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, who agreed to report a bill in favor of the object. When the bill was printed I perceived that the boundary was left blank, and, on inquiring of the chairman why the boundary was not given in the bill, was informed that application was first to be made to the Treasury Department, or to the General Land Office, (I am not certain which,) to obtain the proper boundary. After waiting some days, and inquiring again of the chairman whether an answer had been received, he informed me it had not been; and perceiving that the bill stood nearly at the head of the calendar of business, and apprehending that if called up before the answer should be received the bill would lose its place on the calendar, I called myself upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office, at his own house, and had a conversation with him upon the subject. On naming the subject to him, he told me that when the land districts in that Territory were last arranged, the Territory had been divided into two districts by a line north and south, with a view to its ultimate subdivision into four districts by a line running east and west; and thought it would be better, whilst Congress was legislating on the subject, at once to create the fourth district. On stating to the Commissioner that I had not been requested to ask for the establishment of a district in the northwestern section of the peninsula, I intimated to him that I should nevertheless think it proper, inasmuch as that part of the country was rapidly settling. He observed that it might be done, leaving it to the discretion of the President to organize it whenever circumstances would justify it; and requested me to call at the office, (he being unable to go to the office,) and request Mr. Moore to examine the plats and maps with a view to the proper divisions. I called accordingly upon Mr. Moore at the office, and with him looked at the plats, &c., and had with him a desultory conversation on the subject, but arrived at no particular result in relation to the matter. Soon after I stated to Mr. Wickliffe, the chairman, the result of my interview with the Commissioner.

First question, by Mr. Daniel. Did you inform the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the committee had reported a bill to establish a land office in the Territory of Michigan; and did you show him the bill?

Answer. I do not recollect that I stated in terms to the Commissioner that a bill had been reported. I did not present him the bill.

Second question of Mr. Daniel. What did he say in approval or disapproval of an additional land office, or upon the subject of its being necessary to be established? And did he or did he not urge the propriety of so amending the bill as to establish two instead of one? Did he say anything upon the subject of the President being authorized to put one in operation at some future day, when the surveys and settlements should be sufficiently advanced to justify it?

Answer. I cannot state the precise words made use of by the Commissioner in relation to the necessity of the land office in the southeastern section of the Territory. He suggested the expediency of a fourth district in the northeast part of the Territory, to be organized at the discretion of the President.

Third question, by Mr. Beardsley. Did he say anything upon the necessity of the land office in the southeast section; if so, what?

Answer. That being the sole object of my call upon the Commissioner, it was the first subject of conversation; but his words I do not recollect. I understood the Commissioner to assent to the expediency of establishing a land district in the southeastern section of the Territory, though I do not recollect that he so stated in express terms.

Fourth question, by Mr. Foster. Was your conclusion that the Commissioner assented to the establishment of an office in the southeast part of the Territory drawn from any particular expressions of the Commissioner, or from his making no objections to it?

Answer. I left the Commissioner's house without a doubt upon my mind that he considered the establishment of the district at this time expedient, both from what I understood him to say of that part of the country generally and from his intimating no objections.

Fifth question, by Mr. Daniel. From the maps and surveys of the public lands then in the General Land Office, could or could not you have described the boundaries of the new district, including Monroe?

Answer I have never examined the maps and surveys in the General Land Office relating to the Territory but once that I can recollect. They appeared to be correct; but were I to be governed in deciding upon a boundary solely upon an examination of the maps and surveys, without any personal knowledge of the country, I might or might not give such a one as would best accommodate the country.

Sixth question, by Mr. Beardsley. Did you inform the Commissioner what tract of country was designed or intended to be embraced in the contemplated district; and if so, what information did you give him upon it?

Answer. I did generally; but not recollecting distinctly the boundaries asked for in the petitions, I think I did not define any precise boundary, except that the district was to be composed principally of the eastern part of the former southern land district of Michigan.

Seventh question, by Mr. Daniel. Had a previous land district been established to include Monroe, and had said district been discontinued; and did you or did you not inform the Commissioner of the General Land Office that it was intended to establish the boundaries of the district which had been discontinued?

Answer. A previous land district had been established, including Monroe, which had been discontinued or altered by act of Congress, and I communicated to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that it was contemplated to re-establish so much of the eastern part of the former district into a separate district as the circumstances of the country might require.

Question 8th, by Mr. Daniel. State at whose instance you prepared and furnished the boundaries which you sent to the Secretary of the Treasury for the land district in your letter of the 16th January last.

Answer. At the instance of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Question 9th, by Mr. Beardsley. Was the Commissioner well or ill when you called upon him as stated by you?

Answer. He stated that he was ill, and appeared to be so.

Question 10th, by Mr. Foster. After your first visit to Mr. Hayward, did you state to Mr. Wickliffe that the Commissioner had assented to the propriety of establishing a land office in the southeast section of the Territory, and his suggestions authorizing the President to establish a fourth one at some future time, and at what time did you make this communication to Mr. Wickliffe?

Answer. I stated to Mr. Wickliffe the result of my interview with the Commissioner soon after the interview took place. The precise time I cannot recollect; I should think it within two or three days.

Question 11th, by Mr. Wickliffe. In the conversation with the Commissioner upon the subject of establishing the land office, to which you have alluded, did the Commissioner reply or say to you "that no necessity was perceived for such a measure at the present time?"

Answer. I recollect no such remark, but supposed him entirely to acquiesce in the expediency of the measure.

Question 12th, by Mr. Wickliffe. In making out the boundaries for the land districts did you or did you not consult and refer to copies of the maps and surveys, the originals of which were in the General Land Office, and accessible to the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Answer. In making out the boundaries furnished to the Secretary of the Treasury I referred to Farmer's map of Michigan, which purports to be based in part upon the surveys returned to the General Land Office, but was governed principally by my own personal knowledge of the country. I presume the Commissioner has access to the original surveys in his office.

Question 13th, by Mr. Beardsley. In your conversation with the Commissioner did he say anything to you whether it might or might not become necessary at some future time to establish two new land districts; and if so, what did he say thereupon?

Answer. I did not understand the Commissioner to suggest the propriety of establishing, at some future time, two new land districts, but of one in the northwestern part of the territory, to be hereafter organized by the President when the circumstances of the country would require it.

Question 14th, by Judge Hayward. Have you a distinct recollection of the conversation between us at the interview you alluded to at my house?

Answer. The precise words used I do not recollect, but have a distinct impression as to the substance.

Question 15th, by Judge Hayward. When you first named to me the proposition of a new land district in the Territory of Michigan, did I not reply to you that I knew of no necessity for such a measure at the present time?

Answer. I do not recollect such a reply, and did not get that impression.

Question 16th, by Judge Hayward. Did you not, during that conversation, express to me the opinion that if you had the map before you you would designate the boundaries of a new district, in the southeastern part of the Territory, that would now be beneficial to the country and accommodate purchasers; and was it not after you had expressed such an opinion that I requested you to call at the Land Office and confer with the chief clerk, who would exhibit to you the map; and did I not request you, after you should have had such conference with the chief clerk and examined the map, to see me again on the subject?

Answer. I believe I did state that if I had the map I could designate a boundary which would accommodate purchasers in the southeastern part of the Territory; and although I do not recollect the precise order of the conversation, yet it is not improbable that it was subsequent to the above conversation that the Commissioner requested me to call at the Land Office and confer with the chief clerk. I had no distinct understanding that the Commissioner expected me to return to see him, but it is quite probable he did, since my personal knowledge of the country would have enabled me to give information which the maps alone would not afford.

Question 17th, by Judge Hayward. At the conversation alluded to did I make use of any language or expression, or state any facts or reasons in favor of a new land district in the southeastern section of Michigan at the present time; and if so, what was that language or expression, or facts stated, or reasons offered?

Answer. The reasons stated by Judge Hayward in favor of any change at all were directed principally to the propriety of including in the same bill a provision for a fourth district in the northwestern part of the Territory; very little was said in relation to the southeastern district then contemplated. As I understood the Commissioner to say that when the districts were last arranged it was under an expectation that a subdivision east and west would soon be required, and no doubt was raised, that I recollect, as to the expediency and necessity of creating the one now asked for.

Question 18th, by Judge Hayward. When I remarked to you that the two land districts of Michigan were so arranged at the last session of Congress as to admit of a future subdivision into four districts, did I not express to you my opinion in the following language: "If a new land district is to be established in the southeastern part of the Territory at the present session, it would be better at the same time to divide the western district, giving to the President the power to organize the district in the northwestern part of the peninsula whenever he should deem it proper, to prevent the necessity of future legislation on the subject?"

Answer. I think such was the tenor of the remarks made by the Commissioner.

Question 19th, by Judge Hayward. During the conversation between us to which you have alluded, do you or do you not now recollect that I expressed to you the following opinion in the following language: "I do not perceive any necessity for an additional land district in Michigan at the present time, but at a future period (perhaps two or three years) it would be necessary and proper to establish two, one east and the other west of the principal meridian?"

Answer. If Judge Hayward expressed such an opinion, I did not understand him. I certainly left his house with the impression that he assented to the propriety of establishing one or more additional land offices at the present time.

Question 20th, by Judge Hayward. Did you call upon me at the Land Office on the Monday morning immediately following the day when the resolution now under consideration was adopted; and what did you state to me was the object and purpose of your visit?

Answer. I did call at the Commissioner's office a day or two after Mr. Wickliffe's resolution was offered, in relation, I think, to a land warrant or some Indian reservations, and observed to the Commissioner whilst there, that, from the wording of that resolution, it might be inferred that I had some agency in causing the resolution to be introduced; but would take occasion to say that I had had no agency in it, nor had I any feeling on the subject or to that effect.

Question 21st, by Judge Hayward. Did you not at that time state to me that our previous conversation on the subject of a new land district in Michigan did not amount to much, at any rate; that I did not appear to think the measure necessary at the present time, but that two would be necessary at a future period?

Answer. I may have said that we had not much conversation on the subject of the land district now asked for, and may have stated that I had, since our first conversation, understood that he deemed the measure inexpedient at the present time; but could not have said that I originally understood him so. The first conversation which I had with Judge Hayward after the introduction of Mr. Wickliffe's resolution, was not very specific as to our original conversation at his house; and apprehensive that he might, from what passed, misapprehend my understanding of the case, I returned to Judge Hayward's office and stated to him distinctly my understanding of the original conversation, which is expressed in substance in the preceding answer to the 11th interrogatory.

Question 22d, by Mr. Daniel. Could the boundaries furnished by the Commissioner, with which the blank in the bill was filled, have been designated on the map in the Land Office?

Answer. I have no doubt that the boundary furnished by me to the Secretary of the Treasury, and which Judge Hayward afterwards told me was the one furnished in answer to Mr. Wickliffe's call, can be distinctly traced upon the maps in the office.

Question 23d, by Judge Hayward. Could not a variety of other boundaries of a new southeastern district in Michigan be distinctly traced on the map of that Territory?

Answer. No doubt of it.

Question 24th, by Mr. Beardsley. Can you state the language or substance of any remark made by the Commissioner upon the expediency or inexpediency of establishing a new land district in the southeastern part of the Territory? If so, state the same as accurately as possible.

Answer. The words, as I have before said, I do not recollect, but the substance of his remarks as I understood, was an assent to the expediency of establishing, at the present time, a new land district in the southeastern part of the Territory.

A. E. WING.

Sworn before the committee.

Testimony of Henry Jackson, esq.

Question by Elijah Hayward, esq. Were you present at a conversation between the Hon. Mr. Wing, of Michigan, and myself, at the General Land Office, on the Monday morning immediately following the adoption of the resolution now under consideration?

Answer. I was.

Question by Elijah Hayward, esq. Did you or did you not hear Mr. Wing state to me that he had called to assure me that he had no agency, either directly or indirectly, in getting up the said resolution, as he thought, from a part of it, I might suppose that he had some concern in bringing it forward?

Answer. I understood Mr. Wing distinctly to disavow any agency in it whatever; remarking, at the same time, that from the manner in which the resolution read in Gales & Seaton's paper, that the reverse was the fact.

Question by Elijah Hayward, esq. Did you or did you not, at the same time, hear Mr. Wing state to me that the previous conversation he and myself had had on the subject of a new land district in Michigan did not amount to much; that I did not appear to think the measure necessary at the present time; but that I thought two would be necessary at a future period?

Answer. I do not distinctly recollect that Mr. Wing stated that your previous conversation did not amount to much; but I think he admitted in his examination before the committee that he may have said so; but I perfectly recollect that, when the subject of the establishment of a new land district was discussed, your remark was, that at this time you considered it inexpedient, but that at a future day two might be necessary, and that the President of the United States coincided with you in opinion, but I have no recollection that Mr. Wing admitted it.

Question by Elijah Hayward, esq. Did Mr. Wing express any dissent to what I stated on that occasion?

Answer. I do not recollect that he did.

HENRY JACKSON.

Sworn before the committee.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1056. [1ST SESSION.

STATEMENT OF THE QUANTITY AND COST OF THE PUBLIC LANDS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE RECEIPTS FROM THE SALES THEREOF, AND THE OBJECTS TO WHICH THEY HAVE BEEN APPROPRIATED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 23, 1832.

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, containing the information called for by the resolution of the 26th of March last, in which the President is requested to communicate to the Senate—

"1st. The total amount of public lands belonging to the United States which remain unsold, whether the Indian title thereon has been extinguished or not, as far as that amount can be ascertained from surveys actually made or by estimates, and distinguishing the States and Territories, respectively, in which it is situated, and the quantity in each.

"2d. The amount on which the Indian title has been extinguished, and the sums paid for the extinction thereof; and the amount on which the Indian title remains to be extinguished.

"3d. The amount which has been granted by Congress, from time to time, in the several States and Territories, distinguishing between them, and stating the purposes for which the grants were respectively made, and the amount of lands granted or money paid in satisfaction of Virginia land claims.

"4th. The amount which has been heretofore sold by the United States, distinguishing between the States and Territories in which it is situated.

"5th. The amount which has been paid to France, Spain, and Georgia, for the public lands acquired from them respectively, including the amount which has been paid to purchasers from Georgia to quiet, or in satisfaction of their claims, and the amount paid to the Indians to relinquish their title within the limits of Georgia.

"6th. The total expense of administering the public domain since the declaration of independence, including all charges for surveying, for land offices and other disbursements, and exhibiting the net amount which has been realized in the treasury from that source."

ANDREW JACKSON.

WASHINGTON, April 23, 1832.

The President having referred to the Secretary of the Treasury a resolution of the Senate of the 26th of March last, in the following terms:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause the following information to be communicated to the Senate:

"1st. The total amount of public lands belonging to the United States which remain unsold, whether the Indian title thereon has been extinguished or not, as far as that amount can be ascertained from surveys actually made or by estimates, and distinguishing the States and Territories, respectively, in which it is situated, and the quantity in each.

"2d. The amount on which the Indian title has been extinguished, and the sums paid for the extinction thereof; and the amount on which the Indian title remains to be extinguished.

"3d. The amount which has been granted by Congress from time to time to the several States and Territories, distinguishing between them, and stating the purposes for which the grants were respectively made, and the amount of lands granted or money paid in satisfaction of Virginia land claims.

"4th. The amount which has been heretofore sold by the United States, distinguishing between the States and Territories in which it is situated.

"5th. The amount which has been paid to France, Spain, and Georgia, for the public lands acquired from them respectively, including the amount which has been paid to purchasers from Georgia to quiet, or in satisfaction of their claims, and the amount paid to the Indians to relinquish their title within the limits of Georgia.

"6th. The total expense of administering the public domain since the declaration of independence, including all charges for surveying, for land offices and other disbursements, and exhibiting the net amount which has been realized in the treasury from that source."

The Secretary has the honor to submit the accompanying statements from the Register of the Treasury and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, (marked A and B,) containing the information required.

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1057. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA IN RELATION TO SECURING THE RIGHTS OF THAT STATE IN THE SALINE RESERVE IN THE COUNTY OF DEARBORN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE APRIL 27, 1832.

JOINT RESOLUTION relative to the saline reserve in the county of Dearborn.

Whereas it appears that the northeast, northwest, and southwest quarters of section twenty-five, in township six, of range one west, of the principal meridian line drawn from the mouth of the Great Miami river, lying in the county of Dearborn, was, by and under the authority of the United States, reserved for the use of a salt spring, situate upon said section, and in accordance with the second proposition of the sixth section of the act of Congress, "to enable the people of Indiana Territory to form a constitution and State government for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved April 19, 1816, was granted to this State for the use of the people of the same, to be used under such terms, conditions, and regulations as the legislature of said State shall direct, in conformity to which reservation and grant the said State of Indiana has uniformly, since the adoption of her constitution and form of State government, continued to exercise control over the said three quarter sections of land by leasing the same, as provided for in the second proposition of the compact aforesaid, and in particular that on January 4, 1830, the Hon. Miles C. Eggleston, the president judge of the third judicial circuit, in which said saline reserve is situate, did, by indenture in writing, lease the same to David Guard for a term of three years from and after the date thereof, who took possession and placed certain persons as tenants thereon, to wit: Mary Muir, John Davis, and Thomas Branan; and whereas it also appears that the above-named tenants, being advised that they were entitled to a right of entry of said land, as occupants thereof, at the minimum price of United States lands under the pre-emption law, did proceed, some time within the year last past, through the agency of an attorney in fact, to cause an entry to be made of said land, and have procured patents in their own names to be issued from the General Land Office therefor, and have since sold and conveyed the same to third persons, who are now claiming to hold the same in virtue of such sale and conveyance; and whereas it also appears that the above-named agent and attorney in fact of those persons, acting or pretending to act under the power conferred upon him by them, did also proceed to sell and convey the said land to one Levi Millar, who is also now claiming the same in virtue thereof, but that previous to such sale being made by said agent the power of attorney made to him as aforesaid had been publicly revoked through the medium of the newspapers; and that those lands are of great value, and would command, in cash, the sum of eight thousand dollars, and if sold on a short credit would bring ten thousand dollars; and that, being justly and legally the property of the State under and by virtue of the compact aforesaid between the United State and the State of Indiana, the necessary steps should be taken by the State authorities to secure and retain the possession and use of the same to the State for the purposes for which the same was granted: Therefore—

Resolved, That the governor be authorized to open a correspondence with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, either directly or through the medium of our representation in Congress, relative to the existing difficulties concerning the above-described reserve, with a view either to regain the same or to obtain a grant of other lands of equivalent value in lieu thereof; and that he submit to the next general assembly the result of such correspondence, with such other information as may be in his power to obtain; and that he transmit a copy of this resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress, accompanied with a request that they will use their co-operation in effecting the object above contemplated.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1058. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI AND ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 1, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, who have been instructed by a resolution of the House to inquire into the claims of Don Francisco Hemeterio de Hevia to four certain tracts of land on Pearl and Pascagoula rivers, and lots in Mobile, reported:

That the petitioner asks to be confirmed in his title to four several tracts of land, some of them of great extent, and all of them situated west of the Perdido, and within that section of country which was ceded to the United States as a part of Louisiana.

It appears that two months after the treaty of February 22, 1819, by which East Florida was ceded to the United States, the claimant presented a petition at Havana to the intendant of the army, and superintendent of the royal hacienda, in which, after reciting that in the years 1793, 1794, and 1799, he had obtained grants for those four tracts of land, the three first from the Baron de Carondelet, and the last from Don Manuel de Lauzos, commandant of Mobile, he prays that the surveyor general of East Florida, Don Manuel Sebastian Pintado, may be ordered to give him authentic copies of his grants, and other documents connected therewith. In the same petition he prays that the auditor of the royal treasury at Pensacola may be directed to certify whether the originals of the three first grants and an authentic copy of the last, were not, together with all other papers in the office, consumed by fire on the 24th of October, 1811. This petition is referred to the surveyor general, Pintado, and to the contador, Don Juan Miguel Losada. He states as a motive for making this application to the intendant of Cuba, that although those titles would always have been considered as valid under the government of Spain, yet the United States having taken possession of the country, appeared disposed to declare them null and void.

The copies procured from Don Vincente Sebastian Pintado, on this formal application, certified at the Havana, on the 10th of May, 1819, furnish the principal if not the only evidence of title He gives copies of four documents, which he says are contained in a bundle of various grants in his office. It is not pretended that there are any of the original grants in Pintado's office. Indeed, a certificate given by Pintado in 1813, is copied into this new record, and its substance is the following: "That there are in his office four documents, of which Hevia, it seems, had previously obtained copies, to wit: 1st. A copy certified by Don Manuel de Lauzos, former commandant at Mobile, dated March 9, 1793, of a petition of Hevia, with a decree of the Baron de Carondelet, granting him land on Pearl river, including an island. 2d. A copy certified also by Don Manuel de Lauzos, of another petition of Hevia, and decree of the Baron, dated November 3, 1793, granting him an island in Mobile river, with other lands on the opposite bank. 3d. Also a copy, certified by the same person, of a concession made by the Baron de Carondelet to the same Hevia, of the 13th October, 1793, of an extent of land on the river Pascagoula, including also an island. 4th. The fourth document is a grant made by Lauzos himself, to Hevia, in 1799, of certain lots in the town of Mobile. Of all these documents copies are given, and certified by Pintado.

The evidence, therefore, before the committee consists of copies of copies heretofore made by Don Manuel de Lauzos. How have the original title papers or grants signed by the Baron de Carondelet been accounted for? Don Manuel de Lauzos certifies that the originals were remitted to the Baron de Carondelet. Hevia pretends, and endeavors to prove by the certificate of Don Juan Miguel Losada, that these originals and a copy of one of those documents were burned in Pensacalo, in October, 1811. In 1813 he speaks of these originals as having been mislaid and not to be found in the secretaria, and in his petition to the authorities of Cuba, he intimates that they had been deposited in the contaduria, in Pensacola, and burned.*

It appears that the claimant married, in the year 1800, the daughter of Don Manuel Lauzos, by whom all these papers are certified.

In looking critically into these copies, such as they are, to see whether the usual forms were pursued, which might furnish intrinsic evidence of their being genuine or spurious, the committee could not forbear noticing the following particulars, which, to say the least of them, taken in connexion with the relations existing between the claimant and Don Manuel Lauzos, through whose agency these grants were obtained, and the youth of Hevia, at their pretended date, throw a shade of suspicion over the whole transaction. First, that the governor general signed simply "Carondelet," which is without precedent so far as any member of the committee is acquainted with his practice, which was invariably to sign "El Baron de Carondelet," in full. Secondly, that his order or decree does not express the conditions required by the ordinance of O'Reilly, which is believed to have been his invariable practice in these inchoate grants. That he directs Lauzos to put the claimant in possession instead of addressing the order to the surveyor general; and that he directs the original to be returned to him for the information of the surveyor, to be deposited in the secretary's office.

To suppose that these are genuine grants would be to declare that the Baron de Carondelet had granted lands contrary to the express terms of the ordinance of 1770, which was then in force. In these cases not only no survey was ordered, but it does not appear that any was ever made, or that Hevia was ever in possession.

The claims ought, therefore, in the opinion of the committee, to be rejected.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1059. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO RIGHT OF DOWER IN LOTS OF LAND BELONGING TO THE UNITED STATES IN WASHINGTON CITY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MAY 4, 1832.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Rebecca Blodget, reported:

The petitioner claims a further sum from the United States for her right of dower in certain lots of land situated in the city of Washington, on a part of which the general and city post offices are located.

In 1828 a bill was passed in her favor, which ascertained the yearly value of her dower to be the sum of $333 33, and allowed her that sum from the year 1826, when she presented her petition to Congress for the first time.

The committee who reported that bill were satisfied that her claim for dower arose on the death of her husband in 1814; but, from analogy to the strict rule in private cases, confined her allowance to the time of demand.

The present committee are of opinion that the reasons for this limitation on the right of dower, do not exist in this case. The United States have enjoyed the property during all the time since the death of the husband of the petitioner. They have been subjected to no damage or inconvenience by reason of her non-claim, and were not liable to be legally questioned for withholding her dower. Under these circumstances the committee think that it would not become the government to avail itself of a limitation that would be, however useful as a general regulation among individuals, unjust and oppressive here.

Furthermore the committee have ascertained that, soon after the decease of her husband. the petitioner (who then and since has resided in Philadelphia) adopted measures for the purpose of seeking out and establishing her dower rights. She employed, at different periods, several respectable professionable gentlemen to look into her husband's property and titles; and if her claims were not formally presented at an earlier period, it did not arise from the want of vigilance on her part, but from the nature and intricacy of her case, where strangers to her husband could only learn the extent and condition of his property from the public records.

The committee therefore report a bill, allowing the petitioner her arrears of dower from 1814 to 1826, at the rate of the former adjustment, making, in the whole, the sum of $3,999 96.

* If the originals had been sent back to the Baron, they would have been found in New Orleans, of which there is no evidence.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 22, 1828.

Mr. LIVINGSTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Rebecca Blodget, reported:

Rebecca Blodget's petition.

She claims her right of dower in two lots of land, and the buildings erected thereon, under the following circumstances:

On the 18th March, 1793, David Burns conveyed to Samuel Blodget, the husband of the petitioner, lot No. 1, in square No. 430.

On the same day by another deed, Burns conveys to Blodget lot No. 4, in the same square.

Both these deeds were acknowledged the day of their date, but were not recorded until the 29th August, 1794.

On the 8th January, 1794, Blodget conveyed this, together with other property, to Thomas Peter, in trust to secure the payment of the prizes in the hotel lottery, and to indemnify the managers of the said lottery.

The hotel, built partly on No. 4, and having No. 1 annexed to it as an appurtenance, formed the highest prize in the lottery; it was drawn by Robert S. Beckley, who filed a bill in chancery for the conveyance of it, against Blodget and Peter, his trustee: this was decreed accordingly; and,

On the 2d January, 1805, Peter and Blodget conveyed the premises to Beckley, to whom also Munroe, the superintendant of the city, conveyed that part of the land on which the hotel stood that belonged to the city.

On the 21st May, 1810, Beckley, in consideration of $10,000, conveys the whole premises to the United States, excepting from his general warranty any defect of title that may arise from the delay in recording the deed from Burns to Blodget, and expressly declaring that he held under those deeds.

The marriage of the petitioner with Blodget in the year 1790, and his death in 1814, appear to the satisfaction of the committee. But the circumstance that the deeds to Blodget from Burns had not been recorded in the time required by the act of the State of Maryland, (six months,) created a doubt with the Attorney General, (to whom this case has heretofore been referred,) whether there was such a seizen in Blodget as would entitle his widow to claim her dower.

It is understood that at the time of the purchase by Blodget an equitable estate alone in the husband would not entitle the widow to dower, but that, by a law passed since that period, the law in this respect is changed; and that, as the the law of Maryland now stands, such equitable estate in the husband would entitle the widow to her dower. Some of the committee think that this alone would entitle the petitioner to relief, and that whenever there is a clear claim, binding according to good conscience, the public ought to act as a conscientious individual would do under similar circumstances; and that therefore, if Blodget's legal estate, by his neglect to register his deed, had been reduced to a mere equitable right, the United States, who have enjoyed the benefit of that equity, which, joined to a possession of more than twenty years, gives them an indefeasible title, cannot with propriety defeat the claim of the widow by taking advantage of any legal bar.

It is also believed that as Blodget was, during the first six months after the date of Burns's deed to him, undoubtedly seized of a fee in the property, liable to be defeated by not registering his deed within that time, therefore such seizure, although temporary, was sufficient to endow the wife. If Blodget, the day after receiving the deed, and without recording it, had conveyed to another, with a covenant that he was lawfully seized, and the purchaser should have afterwards lost the land by neglecting to register the title, it appears to the committee that no recovery could be had against Blodget on the covenant. If so, then Blodget was lawfully seized; and if he was so seized for a day only the widow is entitled to her dower.

There is another ground on which some of the committee think that the petitioner is entitled. It is this: that the United States hold under Blodget's title; and that, therefore, they are not permitted to get rid of the claim of his widow by denying his title. If she has no title they have none: but they assert a title and enjoy the benefits of it by possession; and there would be absurdity as well as injustice in saying, at the same time, Blodget had a title and he had none; he had a title for our benefit—he had none for that of his wife. That they hold under Blodget appears clearly from the deduction of title.

The Attorney General, by his report, seemed to think negative proof that the petitioner had not released her dower ought to be furnished; this has been done as far as was possible, by the oath of a person who examined the records and found none.

Coming to the conclusion that the petitioner was entitled to her dower, the committee found some difficulty in determining in what mode it should be assigned. The building occupied as the General Post Office covers two lots of fifty feet front each; the most valuable of which, being the corner lot, is No. 4, held under Blodget, and it is proved that he expended $27,949 in the building. As it is incapable of division with any convenience, the only resource was an apportionment of the rent; but the size and construction of the building being such as to make it not well fitted for a dwelling-house, it was difficult to fix upon a sum as the exact yearly value. Some of the witnesses fix on ten per cent. of the cost in building as the usual rate; this would give $2,794, taking the sum expended by Blodget as the rule. Another witness estimates the yearly value as it now stands at two thousand dollars. This does not include No. 1, also a corner lot on which there is no improvement. Supposing, therefore, the rent to be $2,000, and placing the lot No. 1, and the superior value of lot No. 4, as an offset against the sums laid out by the United States, a majority of the committee have fixed upon that as the basis of the allowance, and made their calculations as follows:

Whole yearly rent	$2,000

and have allowed one-third of this sum to the petitioner during her natural life, commencing from February 20, 1826, when she presented her petition—the committee considering that as analogous to the commencement in the ordinary case of a suit at law; for which purpose they present a bill.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 9, 1832.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 4, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, dated the 20th March last, directing the Secretary of the Treasury "to communicate a statement showing what amount of the sales of public land has been paid in the notes and bills of the United States Bank, in each of the States and Territories, respectively, where public land has been sold, in each year, between the 1st of January, 1828, till the 1st of January, 1832; and also what amount of such sales has been paid in the notes of other banks, in scrip, by law made receivable for public land, or in specie, within the same time, in such States and Teritories," I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, accompanied by an exhibit of the amount of scrip received at the land offices in the different States during the period embraced by the resolution, and stating the reasons why the other information asked in the resolution cannot be furnished.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 2, 1832.

SIR: In reference to the resolution of the House of Representatives, passed on the 20th ultimo, in the words following, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House a statement showing what amount of the sales of public lands has been paid in the notes and bills of the United States Bank, in each of the States and Territories, respectively, where public land has been sold, in each year, between the 1st of January, 1828, till the 1st of January, 1832; and also what amount of such sales has been paid in the notes of other banks, in scrip, by law made receiveable for public land, or in specie, within the same time, in such States and Territories," and which you have referred to this office, I have the honor to report that the receivers are required by the Secretary of the Treasury, to make an indorsement on each receipt, showing the various denominations of bank notes, or gold and silver coins, of which each payment is composed. From causes, however, some of which can easily be conjectured, growing out of the hurry of business at the public sales, there are so many interruptions of these indorsements on the receipts, that they do not afford a continuous view of the various denominations of money received in any one of the land districts, so as to admit of furnishing the information required. In case the receivers had invariably made their indorsements, as contemplated by the department, on each receipt, it is to be remarked that the constant giving of change, both in notes and in coins, would so materially vary both the denomination and kinds of notes and coins on hand, which they would actually deposit into bank, that there would be little identity with the denomination and kind of notes and coins indicated by these indorsements, although the value would, of course, remain the same.

It has been ascertained that during the period mentioned in the resolution there were 81,985 receipts issued at the several land offices, and from the foregoing causes it will be perceived that the means do not exist in this office of affording the information required as to the various kinds of notes, bills, and specie, for which those receipts were given.

In compliance with that portion of the resolution which requires a statement of the amount of scrip received in payment at the land offices during the period mentioned, I beg leave to submit the enclosed statement, marked A.

I have the honor to remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 2, 1832.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1061. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 9, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a bill from the Senate (No. 59) making provision for Thomas B. Magruder and wife, reported:

The petitioners allege that Ann Brashears, the mother of Elizabeth Magruder, petitioned Congress, showing that land had been granted to her by the Spanish government, and that the same had been confirmed to her by an act of Congress of 1830, being the residue of a tract of 800 arpents surveyed for her by the Spanish authorities, the other 320 acres having been granted to Foy, and conveyed to Richard Sparks; that said Ann had conveyed the same, since the confirmation, to the petitioners; that the act of 1830, confirming said claim, makes provision that any claim which others may have under the United States is to be excepted therefrom; and also state that, prior to the confirmation, and during the pendency of the same, the government sold the land, and in consequence thereof the petitioners derive no advantage therefrom, and now ask to be permitted to locate the same quantity of land elsewhere.

The petitioners produce the deed of conveyance, as alleged; they also present a plat of the land, certified by the register of the land office, exhibiting the claim of said Ann and the interfering Spanish grant of Foy; and also a statement of the sales of said tract of land, as made by the United States; from which it appears that the land claimed lies in fractional section No. 54, township 12, range No. 3 east of the principal meridian, and lying west of the grant to Foy; and also a part of the land claimed lying in fractional section No. 20, lying east of the claim of Foy; and that the whole of the land in said sections fifty-four and twenty was entered under the laws of the United States, on July 18, 1816, by William Carson; and also that portion of the land claimed lying in section twenty, being 139.98 acres, and lots one, two, three, and four of section fifty-four, containing 324 acres and 11 poles, were relinquished to the United States by those claiming under said Carson, they not having made payment therefor, and retaining lot No. 5 of section fifty-four. And it also appears that said lots one, two, three, and four, of section fifty-four, were sold by the United States to Mary Bullock, at public sale, on the 23d of November, 1827; and that the land lying around the northern end of the grant of Foy was sold to Elias Bridges by the United States in October, 1817, and a small part of it relinquished and resold the 30th of January, 1830, to J. Burnet.

The plat does not show what disposition has been made of the 20th section, lying east of Foy's grant, and which was relinquished by Carson; so that, at the time of the passage of the act of Congress in 1830, the whole of the land had been sold by the United States, except section twenty, and it does not appear whether that has been sold or not. The act of Congress of 1830, confirming the claim of Ann Brashears, is a mere relinquishment of the claim of the United States, and expressly excepting from said confirmation any portion of the same which may have been sold by the United States; and the committee which reported the bill on the 12th February, 1828, expressly negative the idea of any just claim from the Spanish government, and recommend its confirmation as a donation, because the petitioner had long occupied the same, and there was no person claiming the residue of the eight hundred arpents. The committee are not of opinion that the act of 1830 creates any obligation, either in law or equity, on the government of the United States to pay the money arising from said sales to said petitioner, or give other land in lieu thereof, unless there was a good and valid claim for said land to said Ann from the Spanish government, and such as the government of the United States was bound to recognize under the treaty with Spain.

The committee, in consequence of this view of the case, examined all the papers submitted to them accompanying the Senate bill; and they find among the papers now referred to them the original papers submitted to Congress in 1811, accompanied with a copy of the adjudication of the board of commissioners rejecting said claim in 1807, and which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands in 1811. The only title then set up and proven was that she claimed the land by virtue of a survey made of it for her by the Spanish authorities in 1788, by virtue, as they allege, of a warrant from the Spanish government, which is alleged to be lost. A copy of the warrant, or proof of its contents is not made; and it is presumed by the committee that it was nothing more than the ordinary concessions issued by the Spanish government to individuals desirous of settling the public lands, and to be void on condition that no settlement was made in a certain limited time.

From an examination of the records submitted to them it appears that on the 29th of October, 1804, the said Ann Brashears filed a claim for 300 arpents of land before the commissioner of the United States, and which claim was numbered 958, and which was founded on a certificate of survey from the Spanish government, and plat, dated November 11, 1788. And in her behalf a witness, Wm. Thomas, was sworn who deposed that Ann Brashears obtained a warrant from the Spanish government for 800 arpents of land, and that he was deputy surveyor under Vousdan and surveyed the 800 arpents, which included the place of Foy and where he then resided, and that the survey made by him included the 300 arpents now claimed. And another witness, John Gerault, deposed that William Dunbar succeeded Vousdan as the surveyor, and that he, as deputy surveyor, surveyed the 320 arpents for Ben. Foy; that Foy was entitled to 500 arpents, but agreed to take 320 and leave the balance of the 800 arpents for Mrs. Brashears.

The plat filed with the commissioner at the same time is a survey for 300 acres for Ann Brashears, dated the 11th of November, 1788, and signed by Vousdan, the surveyor, who likewise certifies that the same was unoccupied and not claimed by any other. A statement of her claim, accompanied by the preceding papers, is filed with the register. She sets up claim to 300 arpents by virtue of said survey, and by virtue of her being at that time the head of a family, and above twenty-one years of age, and inhabited and cultivated the same on the 27th of October, 1795, which application is signed by Stephen B. Minor, in her behalf, and dated the 22d of March, 1804. This paper is also accompanied by a certificate of said Minor, bearing date the 27th day of October, 1798, in which he certifies that said Ann did petition for 800 acres of land, and that she obtained a grant or order of survey for 500 acres, which he placed in the hands of Vousdan for her, and paid his fees, and also paid him eight dollars to get the grant.

On the 12th of May, 1807, upon the preceding statement of facts, the claim was rejected "for want of proof."

The said Ann Brashears presented her petition to Congress on the 30th of January, 1811, alleging that she had a Spanish warrant and grant, and immediately settled on and cultivated the same, and continued then to do so; and that Foy settled on her land and obtained a grant without the knowledge of the Spanish officers; that it was a part of her claim, and that she agreed to surrender, at the instance of the Spanish governor, 320 arpents to said Foy, upon a promise that she should have the same quantity of land elsewhere; that the surveyor certified the 300 acres by mistake, but how, she did not know. She intrusted the management of it to her father, and that, after his death, her warrant was missing, and nothing to be found but the certificate of survey, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and the same paper was frequently presented afterwards to Congress, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and rejected. On the 2d January, 1827, a new petition is presented by Thomas B. Magruder, who married the daughter of said Ann, in which he alleges that in 1788 a "patent and grant" issued to said Ann for 800 arpents; that she was then, and ever has been since, "a resident in that part of the country;" that the same was surveyed; that she entered on and cultivated the same "by raising several crops of corn," &c., and that she resided on and cultivated the same on the 25th of October, 1795; that she intrusted the patent and order of survey to one Wm. Thomas, who lost the same; that he had procured evidence of their loss, to accompany a former petition, which was handed to the Hon. George Poindexter, the representative of Mississippi, and which was never presented by him, and never returned to her. He then alleges the issuance of the grant and order of survey, in 1788, for 800 arpents, which were placed in the hands of the surveyor, who only surveyed 300 acres by mistake, and returned a plat for the same. He then states the grant and survey to Foy, in 1791, and then compromises as above stated; he then states the application to the commissioners by Minor, in 1804; that, by mistake, he only claimed 300 arpents, supposing the balance to have been granted to Foy; that he neglected to inform said Ann what further evidence was wanted, and the claim for 300 arpents was rejected by the board for the want of proof of the Spanish patent; that no other person has, or sets up, claim to the same; that she paid taxes, &c.; that the same is unoccupied by any other, except the said Ann and said Sparks, claiming under Foy. Said petition was accompanied by no new evidence, except the affidavit of a man named Gipson Clark, who swears he was present when the land was surveyed, and that it was made for said Ann, who was then an inhabitant of the government, and still is an inhabitant of said county; said witness was a resident of the neighborhood at the time of said survey, and continued so when his affidavit was taken, in 1816; that said Ann always claimed the land, "and, has reason to believe, always paid taxes on the same."

Upon the facts thus stated, the Committee on Private Land Claims made a favorable report, allowing the same as a donation, and also in 1830, and the bill passed, as stated in the preceding part of this report.

The committee are satisfied, from the preceding statement of facts, that no Spanish patent or grant, vesting the absolute estate in said Ann, ever was issued by the Spanish government.

Under the act of Congress of the 3d March, 1803, when land was claimed by an incomplete Spanish title, by warrant or order of survey, actual possession, "inhabitation and cultivation," on the part of the claimant, is required on the 27th of October, 1795, and the claimant must have been the head of a family, or twenty-one years of age; and, by the same law, any individual residing on and cultivating a tract of land at the time aforesaid, without title, was entitled to 640 acres as a donation

The committee cannot believe there could have been any difficulty in 1804, when the claim was first filed, in proving the "habitation and cultivation" on the 27th of October, 1795, which was alleged to be true, if the fact had been so, and by which the said claimant would have been more benefitted by the donation from the United States than by the setting up of a complete or incomplete Spanish title for the balance of the 800 arpents, after deducting the grant of Foy. From the want of proof on that point, the committee are constrained to believe that the fact was not so, although so alleged in the various petitions. The committee are confirmed in this opinion from the testimony of G. Clark, taken in 1816, and who resided in the neighborhood from 1788 to 1816. He says he was present at the survey in 1788; that Mrs. Ann Brashears "was then an inhabitant of said government, and still is an inhabitant of the county aforesaid, and has always continued to be from that time." And again, he says: "Said Ann has always claimed the land, and, has reason to believe, she has always paid the taxes thereon." And the committee cannot doubt, if it had been true that said Ann inhabited and cultivated the same, that said witness would have so stated the fact.

Said Magruder states in his petition "that the 800 arpents, so originally granted to Mrs. Ann B., is now, and hitherto has been, unoccupied by any person other than the said Mrs. Ann B." And again, that "no person hath any claim to any part of the residue of said tract of 800 arpents," unless some late entry has been made as land of the United States. And in a letter, bearing date the 6th December, 1826, from Port Gibson, addressed to William Haile, esq., and filed with the papers in this case, the said Magruder says, in conclusion: "I am sorry to trouble you, but as the property is of great value, and is now occupied by those from whom I receive no thanks, I hope you will use your exertions to have the claim settled."

In the opinion of the committee, the claimant never had a complete Spanish title; never had an inchoate title, accompanied by possession, as required by the act of the 3d March, 1803, and that she did not have possession on the 29th of October, 1795, and not, therefore, entitled to a donation, under said act, from the United States; and, consequently, that she had no claim, either legal or equitable, to authorize the passage of the act of 1830, and that the said Ann has now no claim, in consequence of the passage of the act of 1830, against the United States for other land in the place of that claimed by her, or to the money for which the same has been sold; they therefore recommend the rejection of the bill.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1062. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MAY 10, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Gad Humphreys, reported:

That said petitioner alleges that, in the spring of 1825, he purchased one moiety of a tract of land lying in East Florida, of fifteen hundred acres, it being a Spanish grant and confirmed by the commissioners of the United States grant, and that he, being the agent of the Seminole Indians, settled and commenced improving the same, and in "progress of time laid out in buildings of various kinds large sums of money." He also alleges that at the time he settled on it the land lay north of the boundary assigned the Seminole Indians by the United States, "perhaps twenty miles," and that afterwards the boundary of said Indians was extended so far north as to include his plantation, and bring it within the Indian boundary. He states "that he was afterwards removed from the office of agency, and was compelled to remove out of the limits of the said Territory, and consequently all his expenditures in the settlement and improvements aforesaid, together with the premises, have become a total loss, for which he prays remuneration."

A Spanish grant to one Alvarez is produced for 1,500 acres, and a conveyance to Humphreys for one-half in 1825; he produces also the affidavit of Francis Richards, jr., who swears that he acted as overseer for him in 1825, "at the place where the Seminole agency is now established," that he cleared from forty to sixty acres, and that the clearing of the land was worth "twelve dollars per acre at least;" he also produces the affidavit of J. M. Hanson, who swears that he knows the land claimed by Humphreys, "where the territorial Indian agency is at present, and that the cutting and clearing is worth ten dollars per acre." Said Humphreys also produces what purports to have been a valuation of the improvements and the land by Gabriel Prush, Simon Bukham, Thomas Sedwith, and Stephen W. Walton; in which they state that the land is worth five dollars per acre, "and that the improvements for clearing 240 acres of said land are worth four dollars per acre," and that the improvements in building are worth twelve hundred and fifty dollars, and that the loss of said property to the owner would be worth five hundred dollars per annum, which purports to have been sworn to by three of them; he also proves, by John A. Coffee, that he surveyed the 1,500 acres for Humphreys, upon which the Indian agency is now situated, and that it is within the Indian boundary, which was also run by him; he also proves the same fact by one or two other witnesses, and by Alvarez, that he sold him one-half the land, and the deed shows for the sum of sixty-six cents per acre.

This is all the testimony submitted to the committee. Upon examination of the testimony submitted to them, the committee were surprised at the government of the United States establishing an agency on lands owned by individuals, and also with the difference as to the valuation of the clearing of the land; one swearing it worth twelve dollars, and another that it was worth ten, and three others that it was worth only four dollars per acre. One of the members of the committee accidentally became acquainted with the agent who succeeded Colonel Gad Humphreys, and made inquiry of him as to the valuation of the land and the improvements, when, to his surprise, he learnt that the buildings on the tract of land used for residence and council-house were built by the United States, as he had always understood, and were so occupied and used by him as the property of the government. This information caused an inquiry to be made at the War Department, and the information in reply accompanies this report; from which it appears—

First. That Colonel Gad Humphreys was the agent of the Seminoles in 1823, when the treaty was made, and reservation was made to him of one mile square, which was rejected by the Senate of the United States.

Secondly. That on September 20, 1825, he forwarded to the War Department a description of the site selected for the agency, a plan of buildings, and estimated their cost at five thousand dollars, and "that the site was within and bordering on the original boundary line."

Thirdly. That on November 12, 1825, he was informed that the site was approved, but that the cost of buildings must not exceed $2,000.

Fourthly. That he concealed at all times from the department that the public buildings had been erected on his own tract of land.

Fifthly. That on April 13, 1828, he presented his account for the buildings and vouchers, amounting to $1,418 85, which was paid out of the contingent fund of the War Department.

Sixthly. That said Humphreys was removed as agent on March 18, 1830.

Upon the statement of facts above made, it is apparent that the case has not been so prepared and presented by the petitioner as to enable the committee to afford any relief to the petitioner without the hazard of doing very great injustice to the government; they incline to the opinion that the order of the Secretary of War extending the Indian boundary under the treaty of 1823, so as to include the land of the petitioner, which was not of itself an act of the government, divesting the petitioner of his real estate, so as to make the government liable to the same, or to justify the officers of the government in turning him out of possession.

The conduct of the petitioner, as above stated, in locating the agency on his own land, without the consent or knowledge of the government, and expending the public money in making public buildings on the same, whilst acting as an officer of the government, does not entitle the applicant to favorable consideration, and, the committee think, will justify the government in retaining the possession until they are amply indemnified for such improper location of the Indian agency, and such a misapplication of the public funds by the petitioner.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 9, 1832.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1064. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MAY 18, 1832.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures, entitled "A bill to appropriate for a limited time the proceeds of the sales of the public lands of the United States, reported:

That, after a careful and attentive consideration, they are decidedly of opinion that it is founded in error, both in its principles and details.

The principle of the bill rests upon the proposition that no reduction ought to be made in the price of the public lands, and that the moneys hereafter to be received from them should be distributed among the States for purposes of education, internal improvement, payment of State debts incurred for internal improvement, and the colonization of free negroes upon the western coast of Africa. The details of the bill, after assigning ten per centum out of the proceeds of the sales to the States in which they lie, propose to distribute the remainder to all the States in the ratio of their federal representative population, to be applied by each State to the objects above mentioned.

The committee believe the principle of this bill to be erroneous; first, because it refuses to admit the public lands, which are one of the subjects of revenue, into the list of articles on which the reduction of the revenue, consequent upon the extinction of the public debt, is about to be made; and, secondly, because it changes the character of the relationship (and that most injuriously to the new States) between those States and the federal government; substituting an individual pecuniary State interest in the soil, instead of a general congressional superintendence over its disposition, and leaving the power of legislation over this soil in the hands of those who are to divide the money which they can make out of it.

The details of the bill are obviously erroneous, because they make no distinction in the rate of distribution between the States which did or did not cede vacant lands to the federal government; between those which have or have not received grants of land or appropriations of money for objects of internal improvement; and between those which have or have not a black population to be colonized in Africa.

The decisive condemnation which this committee have pronounced upon the bill from the Committee on Manufactures, imposes on them the task of presenting their own views on the subject of the public lands, and of examining the views which have been presented by the Committee on Manufactures; and this task will not be performed.

The public lands of the United States are derived partly from the munificent benefactions of patriotic States and partly from purchases from foreign powers; but in any view which this committee deem it proper to take of the subject, they hold it unnecessary to make any distinction between the lands which were the subject of purchase and those which were acquired by gratuitous grant. They are all equally the property of the United States; equally subject to the disposition of Congress; and equally deserving the same disposition, whatsoever that may be. The fact of the purchase of any part of the federal domain would not have been adverted to by this committee, except for the argument which has been founded upon it in favor of keeping up the price of the public lands. It is said that the lands cost money, and that the federal government must be reimbursed that money, with the interest which has accrued upon it, and all the costs which have attended the administration of the lands. Under this idea of an account between the federal lands on one side and the federal government on the other the sum of $48,077,551 40 is charged upon the lands, the sum of $37,272,713 31 are credited to them, and the sum of $10,804,838 and 9-10ths of a cent is struck as a balance due from the lands to the government.

Admitting the correctness of this account, both in theory and in detail, for argument's sake, and still it would only imply a necessity for such further sales as would cover the balance struck; and by no means would justify a levy to the amount of one billion three hundred and sixty-three millions five hundred and eighty-nine thousand six hundred and ninety-one dollars, which the Committee on Manufactures seem to think is the pecuniary value of the federal domain.

But this committee cannot agree to the correctness of this account, either as stated or as conceived; and they will rapidly point out its leading errors in both particulars.

1st. The account as stated.

1. An error of near three-quarters of a million occurs in the credit allowed to the lands for money paid into the treasury. The exact amount to the 31st of December last is $38,003,869 89, instead of $37,272,713 31, as stated.

2. Another error, exceeding a million of dollars, is committed in failing to credit the lands with the amount of certificates of public debt received in payment from 1785 to 1796, amounting to $1,201,725 68.

3. A third error lies in the omission to credit the lands with interest on the moneys received for them, while charging interest on the moneys paid for them. This error makes a difference of nearly fifteen millions to the prejudice of the lands.

4. Another error of ten millions results from a failure to credit the lands with eight millions of acres of military bounties bestowed upon the soldiers of the late war, and which, at the price assumed by the account as the value of the lands, would amount to ten millions.

5. A fifth error, and the largest of the whole, consists in charging the whole sum of $29,765,241 20, being the purchase money and interest paid for Louisiana and Florida, upon the vacant lands which these provinces contained, when the fact is incontestible that these provinces were purchased, not for their wild lands but for their sovereignty! That the acquisition of jurisdiction over contiguous territory; the acquisition of ports and harbors in the Gulf of Mexico; the acquisition of the mouths of rivers which flowed from our dominions; and the removal of foreign powers from our immediate borders were the real objects of the purchase, and would have been considered as cheaply acquired although not an acre of vacant land had been obtained. These errors, without pursuing the investigation further, are entirely sufficient to relieve the lands from the balance which has been struck against them, and are certainly of sufficient magnitude to merit correction in an account which implies minute accuracy down to the ninth part of a cent.

2dly. As to the theory of this account.

This committee deny its correctness. They condemn the whole plan, idea, and conception of keeping accounts, and striking balances between the federal government and the federal domain. They cannot consent to bring down this government from its lofty station of parental guardianship over the people to the low level of a land speculator. The people are the children of the country. They love, and they defend it. When that country is in danger—when the public foe treads or menaces its soil—they rush to its succor; they pour out their blood like water; they open their purses with both hands; they give life and property for the safety of their country; and it is the duty of this government to credit them with the full value of this generous devotion, and so to execute its guardianship as to increase the number of its people, to amplify their means, and to excite their love of country. The lands ought to be credited with the inhabitants which it maintains; with the products of their industry; with the taxes which they have paid, and can and will pay. In this point of view the idea of an account between the federal government and the federal lands disappears from the scene, and the people, their property, their patriotism, their moral and intellectual worth, stand forward as the true price which the government has received in exchange for the barren title which it held over its lands; and the thirty-eight millions which have been paid, in comparison to such a price, sink below the power of words to express, or figures to ascertain. What language can paint the insignificance? What imagination can conceive the nothingness of the money which has been paid for the lands, (and so much of it instantly squandered,) compared to the number of the people now living upon these lands, their value in the social and political system, their capacity to bear arms, and to pay taxes for their country, and the innumerable posterity which is to flow from them?

The committee venture to suggest that the view which the Committee on Manufactures have taken of the federal domain is fundamentally erroneous; that they have misconceived the true principles of national policy with respect to wild lands; and from this fundamental mistake and radical misconception have resulted the great errors which pervade the whole structure of their report and bill.

The Committee on Manufactures seem to contemplate the federal domain merely as an object of revenue, and to look for that revenue solely from the receivers of the land offices; when the science of political economy has ascertained such a fund to be chiefly, if not exclusively, valuable under the aspect of population and cultivation, and the eventual extraction of revenue from the people in its customary modes of taxes and imposts.

The celebrated Edmund Burke is supposed to have expressed the sum total of political wisdom on this subject in his well-known propositions to convert the forest lands of the British Crown into private property; and this committee, to spare themselves further argument, and to extinguish at once a political fallacy which ought not to have been broached in the nineteenth century, will make a brief quotation from the speech of that eminent man:

"A landed estate is certainly the very worst which the Crown can possess. * * * Lands are of a nature more proper for private management than for public administration. They are fitter for the care of a frugal land steward than of an office in the State. * * * If it be objected that these lands at present will sell at a low market, this is answered by showing that money is at a high price. The one balances the other. Lands sell at the current rate, and nothing can sell for more. But be the price what it may, a great object is always answered whenever any property is transferred from hands which are not fit for that property to hands that are. The buyer and the seller must mutually profit by such a bargain, and, what rarely happens in matters of revenue, the relief of the subject will go hand in hand with the profit of the exchequer. * * * The revenue to be derived from the sale of the forest lands will not be so considerable as many have imagined; and I conceive it would be unwise to screw it up to the utmost, or even to suffer bidders to enhance, according to their eagerness, the purchase of objects wherein the expense of that purchase may weaken the capital to be employed in their cultivation. * * * The principal revenue which I propose to draw from these uncultivated wastes is to spring from the improvement and cultivation of the kingdom, events infinitely more advantageous to the revenues of the Crown than the rents of the best landed estates which it can hold. * * * It is thus that I would dispose of the unprofitable landed estates of the Crown—throw them into the mass of private property, by which they will come, through the course of circulation and through the political secretions of the State, into well regulated revenue. * * * Thus would fall an expensive agency, with all the influence which attends it."

This committee take leave to say that the sentiments here expressed by Mr. Burke are the inspirations of political wisdom; that their truth and justice have been tested in all ages and all countries, and particularly in our own age and in our own country. The history of the public lands of the United States furnish the most instructive lessons of the inutility of sales, the value of cultivation, and the fallacy of large calculations. These lands were expected, at the time they were acquired by the United States, to pay off the public debt immediately, to support the government, and to furnish large surpluses for distribution. Calculations for a thousand millions were made upon them, and a charge of treachery was raised against General Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury, for his report in the year 1791, in which the fallacy of all these visionary calculations was exposed, and the real value of the lands soberly set down at an average of twenty cents per acre. Yet, after an experiment of near fifty years, it is found that the sales of the public lands, so far from paying the public debt, have barely defrayed the expenses of managing the lands, while the revenue derived from cultivation has paid both principal and interest of the debts of two wars, and supported the federal government in a style of expenditure infinitely beyond the conceptions of those who established it. The gross proceeds of the sales are but thirty-eight millions of dollars, from which the large expenses of the system are to be deducted, while the clear receipts from the customs, after paying all expenses of collection, amount to $556,443,830. This immense amount of revenue springs from the use of soil reduced to private property. For the duties are derived from imported goods, the goods are received in exchange for exports, and the exports, with a small deduction for the products of the sea, are the produce of the farm and the forest. This is a striking view, but it is only one-half the picture. The other half must be shown, and will display the cultivation of the soil, in its immense exports, as giving birth to commerce and navigation, and supplying employment to all the trades and professions connected with these two grand branches of national industry, while the business of selling the land is a meagre and barren operation, auxiliary to no useful occupation, injurious to the young States, by exhausting them of their currency, and extending the patronage of the federal government in the complicated machinery of the Land Office Department. Such has been the difference between the revenue received from the sales and from the cultivation of the land; but no powers of calculation can carry out the difference and show what it will be, for while the sale of the land is a single operation and can be performed but once, the extraction of revenue from its cultivation is an annual and perpetual process, increasing in productiveness through all time, with the increase of population, the amelioration of soils, and scientific improvements in the arts of agriculture.

This committee, thus differing fundamentally from the Committee on Manufactures on the primary question of policy with respect to the disposition of the federal domain, have naturally arrived at conclusions wholly opposite to those of that committee. Instead of valuing these lands for themselves as an article of merchandise, they value them for their uses as a means of giving wealth and strength to the country. Instead of holding them up as a prize which cannot be sold high enough, they deem them of very little value for all the net revenue which their sales will ever bring into the federal coffers. Instead of hugging them to the federal bosom as a treasure which cannot be drawn close enough, they consider them rather as an inconvenient burden, which ought to be got rid of without delay. Instead of looking upon the alienations of the soil as so many diminutions of the federal wealth, they consider the profit of the exchequer as only beginning after such transfers. Instead of viewing the lands as "squandered," which are gratuitously bestowed or liberally sold to settlers and cultivators, they deem such lands as sold for a price above all value—a price which Congress itself cannot "squander"—a price which will consist of the heroic and patriotic population which the lands will sustain, and which will be ready to contribute in men and money whenever the voice of their country shall call for aid.

This committee will now condense and briefly exhibit the leading reasons why the price of the public lands should be reduced, the sales of them accelerated, and the federal title speedily extinguished in the new States:

1st. Because the new States have a clear right to participate in the benefits of a reduction of the revenue to the wants of the government, by getting the reduction extended to the article of revenue chiefly used by them.

2d. Because the public debt being now paid, the public lands are entirely released from the pledge they were under to that object, and are free to receive a new and liberal destination for the relief of the States in which they lie.

3d. Because nearly one hundred millions of acres of the land now in market are the refuse of sales and donations through a long series of years, and are of very little actual value, and only fit to be given to settlers or abandoned to the States in which they lie.

4th. Because the speedy extinction of the federal title within their limits is necessary to the independence of the new States; to their equality with the elder States; to the development of their resources; to the subjection of their soil to taxation, cultivation, and settlement; and to the proper enjoyment of their jurisdiction and sovereignty.

5th. Because the ramified machinery of the Land Office Department, and the ownership of so much soil, extends the patronage and authority of the federal government into the heart and corners of the new States, and subjects their policy to the danger of a foreign and powerful influence.

6th. Because the sum of four hundred and twenty-five millions of dollars, proposed to be drawn from the new States and Territories by the sale of their soil, at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, is unconscionable and impracticable—such as never can be paid—and the bare attempt to raise which must drain, exhaust, and impoverish these States, and give birth to the feelings which a sense of injustice and oppression never fails to excite, and the excitement of which should be so carefully avoided in a confederacy of free States.

These reasons, thus summarily stated, and given to the Senate without comment, because their obvious truth and justice supersede the necessity of illustration or commentary, are sufficient to show that the RIGHTS and INTERESTS of the new States require a reduction in the price of the public lands. But reasons which require this reduction and the adoption of other measures for the speedy extinction of the federal title to the territory within these States are not confined to them, but extend to the federal government itself, and are weighty and cogent in favor of putting an end to the anomalous relation which the present condition of the public lands establishes between the federal and the State governments.

The heads of some of these reasons are:

1st. The nature of the duties which attach to the primary disposition of the soil is essentially local, and unfit for the exercise of the federal legislature. Congress cannot continue to charge itself with the local concerns of all the new States in the primary disposition of their soil without neglecting the general concerns of the Union, or neglecting the interests of the new States, or acting upon systems and ideas brought from old States, and inapplicable or injurious to the new ones.

2d. The danger of a multitude of projects—now that the lands are released from their pledge to the public debt—for the application of their proceeds to different objects, or their distribution among the States or the people; projects in which the Constitution of the Union may be disregarded, the rights of the new States sacrificed, the dignity and purity of the legislation endangered, and the lands set up as a prize to be scrambled or bargained for, as interest or ambition may suggest and uncontrollable majorities decide.

3d. The danger of collisions with the new States. It is well known that strong views of present sovereignty over these lands are now entertained in some of these States, and that a reduction of price and speedy extinction of the federal title are demanded in the whole of them. By releasing itself from the management of these lands Congress may avoid all the collisions which may grow out of these views of present sovereignty, or demands for diminished prices and accelerated sales.

4th. The administration of the public lands is an inconvenient agency, an expensive branch, and an unprofitable source of revenue; and a cessation of the agency, and a release from the expense would form a respectable item in that plan of retrenchment which all the friends of economy so much desire.

5th. The federal government has no need for the revenue now derivable from the sales of these lands, but it may have need for more revenue in time to come. Give them, then, the destination which will produce most revenue when really wanted. Pass them from hands that cannot use them into hands that can; and, in times of peril and danger, when the country calls upon her children, a patriotic population, an independent yeomanry, and a vast cultivation, will furnish the men and the money which the exigencies of the State may require.

For these reasons this committee deem it equally desirable and advantageous to both parties—the federal government and the new States—to put an end, with all convenient despatch, to the anomalous relation which the present condition of the public lands establishes between them—a relation of unprofitable authority on one side, and of injurious dependence on the other. The self-evident propriety of such a consummation would vindicate itself, and leave this committee nothing further to say, had it not been for an array of objections to any measures which will promote this event—to any legislation which will either reduce the price of the lands or transfer them to the States, which have recently emanated from one of the Senate's committees. These objections have been brought forward with an emphasis, displayed with a confidence, and diffused with a liberality which must fix the attention of Congress and the people; and this committee cannot overlook an array of argument so adverse to their own conclusions, without seeming to admit an inability which they do not feel, or to affect a delicacy which the occasion forbids, or to grant an impunity to error which it is their duty to detect.

These objections, if this committee may be permitted to collect their substance into a few heads, will be found to reduce themselves to the following topics:

1st. That the present system of the United States is a wise one, and ought not to be impaired.

2d. That a reduction in the price of the public lands will lessen the value of all other lands.

3d. That such reduction will be injurious to former purchasers.

4th. That it will lessen the value of donations made to the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Alabama, for the purposes of internal improvement.

5th. That it will excite speculation and retard the settlement of new States.

6th. That it will operate as a bounty to emigration, and diminish the population in the elder States.

7th. That the new States are growing faster than the old States, and need no incentive to settlers.

8th. That the present price is fair and equitable.

9th. That the federal government will be able to draw an immense revenue from the sale of public lands, and ought not to squander them away.

10th. That this revenue will be paid by the old States, and not by the new ones.

Brief and precise answers will now be submitted by this committee to each of these objections; and,

1st. As to the destruction of the present land system.

This committee will neither repeat nor deny an encomium, of forty years' standing, upon the excellence of this system, but they will take issue upon the fact of its supposed destruction. They have always understood the excellence of this system to lie, not in the price of the public land, which is variable, and has varied at different times, but in the scientific and immutable order of the surveys, and the clear derivation of title from the government itself. The price of the land may be reduced without altering these surveys or affecting the derivation of title, and, consequently, without impairing the excellence of the system. It has been reduced without impairing it. The reductions of 1819–'20, from two dollars to one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, was considered by none as impairing the excellence of the land system. By an immense majority of Congress and the people it was considered as improving it; and, doubtless, a similar reduction at this time would be found equally innocent in its operation on the system, and equally beneficial in its influence upon the people.

2d. As to the diminution in value of other lands.

This committee will not suppose that this objection will apply to the productive capacity or prolific principle of the soil. It can only apply to its market value; and, supposing the objection to have any foundation in that sense, it can only come from sellers and speculators. Buyers and cultivators repel the objection; and these are the classes which it has been the policy of all legislation to favor. But inferior lands are no cheaper at a low price than superior soils are at a high price. In every State of the Union there are now innumerable tracts of land, many of them with improvements upon them, selling for less than the present minimum price of the federal lands, while others command ten or twenty times as much. Land, like everything else offered for sale, finds its value in a free market. The good is higher, the bad is lower. Ten dollars the acre will be given for one tract, and another will not command ten cents. It is, therefore, absurd and contradictory to consider land as a single article, like the stock of the United States Bank, to fall or rise in the same degree, at the same time, and in all places, from the operation of a single cause. It is by no means certain that the reduction of the price of the public lands will operate upon the price of all other lands; and if it did, the operation would be beneficial to the most numerous and the most meritorious classes—the buyers and cultivators. The same objection was made in 1819, but did not prevent Congress from making the reduction, nor bring upon the country the evils which were predicted.

3d. The supposed injury to former purchasers.

This objection, like the preceding one, can only apply to sellers and speculators, not to buyers and cultivators. Former purchasers, who belong to the latter classes, can receive no injury, and may derive a great advantage from the reduction. They will have an equal privilege with others to make purchases at the reduced rates, and may add to the size of their farms, and procure settlements for their children, by availing themselves of the advantage.

4th. The supposed deterioration of certain donations made to States for internal improvement.

This effect, if certain, should have no influence upon the legislation of Congress in the general administration of the public lands. There is no principle which binds the donor to keep up forever the value of his gift, especially when the attempt to keep it up may prevent him from doing justice to others. The gifts in question were made years ago. They have generally been applied to their object; but, whether applied or not, they were selected from the best lands then liable to entry, and will sell according to their quality when brought into market. Besides, three out of four of the States which received these donations are now in favor of reduction; and the three others which received no donation are now applying for it, without any intention of relinquishing the application through fear of a reduction. In a word, this objection lies wholly in the breasts of the new States, and if they waive it, no others have a right to reproduce it.

5th. The supposed excitement to speculation and consequent retardation of settlement.

This committee can see no such evils resulting from the reductions which they will recommend. One dollar per acre for fresh lands and fifty cents per acre for those which have been picked and culled, and many times gleaned over for a series of years, with a right of preference to settlers and occupants, will present no field to the cupidity of speculators. Speculation in wild lands has long proved to be an unprofitable business. The man that indulged in a dream of principalities has frequently waked up to find himself without a home; the expenses of management, the infidelity of agents, the consuming moth of taxation having first devoured his available means, and afterwards delivered his domain to the sheriff or the marshal. Instead of being retarded, the settlement of the new States and Territories has been greatly accelerated by attempts at speculation. Nearly eight millions of acres of military bounty lands in Missouri, Illinois, Arkansas, and Michigan, have passed into the hands of the people at a few cents per acre, while the federal government has sold but five millions of acres in those four States and Territories. Sixty dollars per quarter section, being thirty-seven and a half cents per acre, is stated by the most extensive land agent in this city as the average price at which these bounty lands have been sold to the people for settlement, and the personal knowledge of several members of this committee would even make it less. The opinion of the new States themselves ought to stand for something in this point: and it is evident that they have no fear of speculation and non-settlement from a reduction in the price of the public lands, since six out of seven of those States, namely, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, through their respective legislatures, have memorialized Congress in favor of the reduction. If the opinion of these six States should weigh something, the example of Massachusetts and Maine ought to be conclusive; for these two States have been in the actual sale of their public lands for many years, at all prices, from three and a half cents per acre to sixty cents, and that for new lands never before in market, and under laws expressly enacted to promote the settlement of the country. No. The phantom of speculation is paraded in vain before the eyes of the people. They are not afraid of it. They see too much land, public and private, in market to fear speculators. Monopoly is impossible. From the southern gulf to the northern lakes—from the peninsula of Florida to the peninsula of Michigan—all around, within a circumference of thousands of miles, and over an area of hundreds of millions of acres, they see land for sale. The United States alone, within the limits of the States and Territories, possess 340,000,000 of acres. Individuals in different parts of the Union would sell 100,000,000 more. If the whole capital of the Bank of the United States was laid out in public land, at fifty cents per acre, it would purchase but 70,000,000 of acres, leaving 270,000,000 for individual purchasers, besides the immense amount in the hands of private sellers.

6th. The supposed bounty to emigration.

This objection was first presented to Congress in a report from a late Secretary of the Treasury, (Mr. Rush,) who considered this emigration as an injury to the manufacturers, in depriving them of working people, and proposed some plans of federal legislation for preventing the injury by checking the tendency to emigrate, and rendering the population of the old States more fixed and stationary. The same objection was presented to Congress at the present session, in the memorial of the manufacturers who assembled in convention at New York, in which memorial this evil of emigration is largely insisted upon, and the advantage of inducing the people to remain and work in the factories, instead of going off to clear wild land in the west, is openly maintained. The adoption of the objection in the report made by the Senate's Committee on Manufactures may refer itself to the same motive; and the readiest mode of checking the supposed evil of emigration is to remove the inducement by holding up the lands, and especially the inferior qualities, at a price beyond their value.

This committee will not argue the question how far it is right and proper for Congress to legislate with a view to prevent emigration from the old States to the new ones. They have witnessed with pain the obtrusion of the topic on the federal legislature. They have perused with deep regret the elaborate tables which have been constructed to show that the seven new States populate faster than the seventeen old ones. Such tables can have no other effect than to inflame the jealousy of the old States, and to rouse within their bosoms the most invidious feelings against their younger sisters. They evidently turn upon the idea that these young States are foreign dominions; and thus, while the public lands within them are treated as the property of the Union, the States themselves are rather looked at as out of the Union, and drawing off the population of the Union. Surely the well-being of this confederacy requires the federal legislature to shut its eyes upon such topics and tables. If the new States populate more rapidly than the older ones, it is one of the few advantages of their position, and they ought not to be deprived of it. If people choose to go to the west, it is a right they inherit under our free form of government, and for the exercise of which they are not amenable to federal legislation. This committee will not argue these questions. They take their position upon the clear and broad admission, that a refusal to reduce the price of public land for fear it may injure the manufacturers by inducing emigration to the west, is an authentic declaration that the price must be kept up to prevent such emigration! And they venture to say that such refusal can only be viewed as an act of the severest injustice to the new States. This committee dismiss the whole objection, to them a painful one, with the remark that it stands in direct contradiction to the one last answered. That objection turned upon the supposition that reduced prices of the public lands would excite speculation AND RETARD THE SETTLEMENT OF THE NEW STATES. This upon the supposition that the same reduction will excite emigration and TOO RAPIDLY POPULATE THE NEW STATES AT THE EXPENSE OF THE ELDER ONES.

7th. The rapid population of the new States under the present land system, and the inference that no alteration is necessary.

This objection has been brought forward with a confidence and a plausibility which evinces the great reliance which is placed upon it; but a few authentic facts will dispel the illusion and show that the new States have grown up, not so much by the aid of the present system as in spite of it; that they owe their population not so much to the sales of the federal government as to the bounties of former sovereigns, the liberalities of some of the old States, and the easy sales of individuals. A rapid review of the sales of the public lands and the settlement of the States will confirm this statement and put an end to the objection so imposingly brought forward. These are the facts: The State of Ohio contains 26,000,000 of acres; of this quantity the United States has sold but 7,564,549 acres under the present land system, which is but little more than one-quarter part of the State. Her population and improvements, if only counted to the extent of these sales, would make but an indifferent figure among the great States of the Union. The truth is, Ohio owes at least two-thirds of her present greatness to settlements on Virginia military bounties, on land sold before the adoption of the present system at the easy rate of sixty-six and two-thirds cents per acre, payable in revolutionary certificates; on the western reserve, sold by Connecticut to individuals at a few cents per acre; on donations to settlers, to Nova Scotia and Canadian refugees, and for schools and other purposes; and on the public lands where a multitude of poor people are seated without titles.

Deduct these settlements, and this flourishing State, instead of ranking third or fourth, would be classed with the ninth or tenth States of this Union. The same result is still more aggravated in the other States. Indiana has a superficies of 22,000,000 acres, of which the federal government has sold 5,817,038 acres; Illinois, 39,000,000, and 2,178,012 acres sold; Missouri, 39,000,000, and 1,955,572 acres sold; Alabama, 32,000,000, and 4,335,471 acres sold; Mississippi, 30,000,000, and 1,596,288 acres sold; Louisiana, 30,000,000, and no more than 344,753 acres sold. In all these States the mass of their population are living either upon the lands which were the bounties of foreign sovereigns, or bounties to soldiers of the late or revolutionary war, or upon the present public lands. The number of this latter class is inconceivably great. An official return of the year 1828 placed the non-freeholders of the new States and Territories at 140,000 men; that is to say, in Ohio, 37,286; in Indiana, 13,485; in Illinois, 9,220; in Missouri, 10,118; in Alabama, 39,668; in Mississippi, 5,505; in Louisiana, 3,466; in Florida, 1,906; in Michigan, 985. The entire population of these States and Territories at that time was about 2,100,000; and as the adult male population, in civilized and fertile countries, is in the ratio of one to six in the whole population, (which would give 350,000 men in 2,100,000 souls,) it is thereby demonstrated that upwards of one-third of the inhabitants of the new States are not freeholders!—that more than one-third of a population, in communities almost exclusively agricultural, and where freehold estates are the first objects of every man's ambition, are either tenants to landlords or trespassers on the public domain!—facts which show the impolicy of the present land system, the fallacy of attributing the growth of the new States to it, the necessity of abandoning the idea of revenue from land, and substituting a system of donations to settlers and easy sales to general purchasers.

8th. As to the equity of the present case.

This price is manifestly unjust, because it is the same for all qualities—the same for the refuse as for the first choices. The slightest knowledge of the subject will suggest the necessity of graduated prices adapted to the different varieties of soil. Admitting that the present price might not be excessive for first-rate land and for first choices, yet it is surely too much for the second and third rate, and for the refuse of sales and donations going on for a long series of years. But on this point the Senate is not left to conjecture or to the information of members from the new States; they have official information, as detailed as it is authentic, and obtained under the sanctions of the highest responsibilities. They have the returns of the register and receivers of the land offices drawn up district by district under a resolve of the Senate, and executed under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. These returns describe the quality of the unsold lands in each district, state their average value and quantity, and the length of time they have been in market under the laws of the United States, or were subjected to be given away by foreign sovereigns before they came under the dominion of the United States. The information extends to near 100,000,000 of acres, which is much the largest portion of the lands now in market, and is the part to which the lowest price recommended by this committee will apply.

In Ohio not more than half a million of acres was returned as first-rate land, which has probably since been sold or taken under the donations to the State. The mass consisted of second and third rate soils, with a considerable quantity unfit for cultivation; the whole had been in market from five to thirty years, and the values variable from fifty cents to a dollar. In Indiana one and a half million were returned as first rate, which must have been disposed of before this time; from forty cents to a dollar were the average prices, and the length of time it had been exposed to sale from two to twenty years. In Illinois one district was averaged at fifty cents, another at forty-eight, another at thirty, a fourth at twelve and a half, a fifth at one hundred cents. In Missouri, the St. Louis district, which had been well picked by donations from the French and Spanish crowns before it came under the dominion of the United States, and since gleaned over by sales and settlements rights, the average price was placed at fifteen cents. In the Cape Girardeau district, in which the best lands had also been given away under the French and Spanish governments, the price is twelve and a half cents; the highest average in the State was sixty-two and a half cents. In Alabama, in some parts of which State the Spanish crown had been giving lands to whoever would take them for fifty or one hundred years before they were exhibited to sales under the laws of the United States, the refuse of one district was set down at five cents, others as containing little or no first-rate land, and millions unfit for cultivation. The same remarks apply to the State of Mississippi, where the prices varied from five to forty cents. In Louisiana the valuable lands had been given away under the French and Spanish crowns. The unsold parcels were principally pine barrens, or prairies, or swamps. In the Orleans district "NEARLY ALL" is returned as unfit for cultivation; the same return is made of the St. Helena district; two other districts of Ouachita and Opelousas are returned, respectively, at the average values of twenty-six and fifty cents. The Territories of Arkansas, Florida, and Michigan, come too nearly under the same general remarks which apply to the neighboring States to require particular references to the returns from them. This committee think it right to endeavor to fix the attention of Congress upon these masses of unsold and unsalable lands, which have been so thoroughly picked and culled, and gleaned over, which are really worth so little, and which, nevertheless, are held up at the price of first choices in new and fresh lands. No arts of speech or power of argument can make the people believe that this is just; nor can it be advantageous to the treasury in a revenue point of view, the sales being exceedingly slow among the refuse lands, and the money received principally derived from townships lately brought into market. The interest of every party requires a distinction to be made between the old and the new lands, and this committee will keep that distinction in view in the scale of prices which they will recommend.

9th. As to the immense revenue which the federal government can extract from the sales of the lands.

This ideal revenue is estimated at $425,000,000 for the lands now within the limits of the States and Territories, and at $1,363,589,691 for the whole federal domain. Such chimerical calculations preclude the propriety of argumentative answers. They are best exposed in recurring to that amount against the lands in which they were supposed not to have paid the expenses of their administration, and in contrasting similar splendid calculations, made forty years ago, with the actual amounts of revenue derived. In the year 1791, when General Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury, proposed to sell the public lands at twenty cents an acre, he was accused of treachery and corruption; and calculations were made to show that, by fixing a minimum price of two dollars, and screwing the price up to the highest point at public auctions, money enough might be derived from their sales, not only to pay the public debt and support the federal government, but to leave large surpluses for distribution among the States or the people. Statesmen of the present day, who have lived to see the delusions of the calculations made in General Hamilton's time, should be on their guard against similar fallacies, and should turn their eyes from the sale of the lands to their settlement and cultivation. In the hands of the people they cannot be squandered; in the hands of Congress they may be. This committee will not repeat what they have previously urged in favor of settlement and cultivation as the great, inexhaustible fountains of strength and wealth. They will only present, for the sake of illustration, an existing case in our own country to confirm their policy; it is the case of Alabama. This flourishing young State, though composed almost entirely of public lands, and selling them for the highest prices, has contributed infinitely more through the custom-houses than through the land offices to the supply of the federal exchequer. The sales last year amount to $894,265, her exports to three millions and a quarter, which would not have brought back imports paying less than $1,400,000.

This committee turn with confidence from the land offices to the custom-houses and say, here are the true sources of federal revenue. Give lands to the cultivator, and tell him to keep his money and lay it out in their cultivation.

10th. As to the payment of the land revenue by the old States.

This objection assumes that the two millions and a half of people now in the new States and Territories will not become purchasers of public land; that the 140,000 non-freeholders, returned by the marshals in 1828, will not wish to become freeholders. This committee object to the validity of that assumption. They maintain that the present population, whether freeholders or not, will wish to purchase, and will be the largest purchasers. Those who have freeholds will wish to add to their farms, or procure farms for their children; those who are tenants or occupants without title will wish to reach the security and independence of an indefeasible estate in the soil. Emigrants will undoubtedly purchase, but the amount will be in the ratio of their numbers to the existing population; that is to say, infinitely less. And besides, after a few years' residence, these emigrants become identified with the old settlers, and begin to make money within the State, and to apply it to new purchases of land, so that the amount claimed to be paid by the old States reduces itself to the first purchases of the annual emigration. The revenue, then, will be paid by the new States, and will continue to exhaust them of their current money as long as the sales continue. Other States are now struggling for a reduction of the revenue on the articles which they chiefly use. The new States would be unfaithful to themselves if they did not struggle equally hard to extend the reduction to the great article of revenue chiefly used by their citizens.

These brief answers to the objections to a reduction of the price of the public lands appear to this committee to be conclusive; they will, therefore, pass from that division of the subject, and bestow a few considerations upon the policy of TRANSFERRING them to the States in which they lie.

This policy is recommended by all the topics which have been urged in favor of perfecting the sovereignty of the new States over the soil within their limits, and releasing the federal government from the administration of the public lands. It is opposed upon the grounds—1st. That they are the common property of all the States, and ought not to be ceded gratuitously to a few of them. 2d. That a sale for an adequate consideration would establish the unwise relation of debtor and creditor between the purchasing States and the federal government. 3d. That the new States may be incompetent to the faithful administration of so large a fund.

The answers which suggest themselves to this committee, in reply to these objections, are:

1. That admitting the general community of ownership, it is impossible to admit that the inhabitants of distant States have the same moral claims upon these lands with those who reside upon or among them, whose ancestors have perished in their defence, whose labor has given them value, and who have undergone all the privations and hardships incident to the settlement of new countries. These circumstances give equitable claims to the inhabitants of the new States which political science and public justice cannot disregard. Nor can a gratuitous cession be considered as an injury to a part of the States if the whole are considered as identified in interest, for the growth and prosperity of the new States will be the growth and prosperity of the Union, and their wealth and population will be available in all times of need for the defence and support of the whole.

2. The impolicy of establishing the relation of debtor and creditor between the new States and the federal government is freely admitted. Both parties should endeavor to avoid to any large extent the creation of that unwise relation. A large debt would be an oppressive burden on the new States, and an annual interest would be a devouring moth upon their resources. Eventual collisions and mutual animosity might be the result. The federal government should not wish to load the younger members of the confederacy with the oppressive burden of a heavy debt, nor to consume their resources with the annual exactions of interest. Easy sales, liberal donations to settlers, and a cession of the inferior lands to the States for beneficial and meritorious objects, might accomplish the transfer in a reasonable time without the creation of an embarrassing debt.

3. That the new States might be incompetent to the faithful administration of such a fund is a proposition to which this committee cannot assent, without admitting the incapacity of these States for self-government, and contradicting the evidence of actual experience. To argue the capacity of the new States to manage their own affairs might seem to be indelicate in a committee chiefly coming from such States; but to refer to the example of a new State not subject to the imputation, and now successfully discharging that duty, to which other new States, it is supposed, might prove unequal, must be as unexceptionable as appropriate. The State of Maine is that State. She manages wisely the public lands which she received in division from the State of Massachusetts. Sixty cents per acre was the highest minimum for fresh lands. Actual settlers had an hundred acres each for thirty dollars, one-half payable in work in opening roads in their own township. Timbered lands, unfit for cultivation, were placed at lower minimums, according to their value, and usually less than twenty-five cents per acre. Bog and waste lands were sold for what they would bring, in some instances as low as three and a half cents per acre. These are wise provisions; they correspond with the approved maxims of political economy. They are worthy the imitation of the Congress of the United States, and no doubt would be faithfully copied by other new States if, like Maine, they had the right of the primary disposition of the soil in their own hands.

This committee have said that the bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures, to divide the proceeds of the sales of the public lands among the several States for a limited time, is a bill wholly inadmissible in principle, and essentially erroneous in its details.

They object to the principle of the bill, because it proposes to change, and that most injuriously and fatally for the new States, the character of their relation to the federal government on the subject of the public lands. That relation, at present, imposes on the federal government the character of a trustee, with the power and the duty of disposing of the public lands in a liberal and equitable manner. The principle of the bill proposes to substitute an individual State interest in the lands, and would be perfectly equivalent to a division of the lands among the States; for the power of legislation being left in their hands, with a direct interest in their sales, the old and populous States would necessarily consider the lands as their own, and govern their legislation accordingly. Sales would be forbid or allowed; surveys stopped or advanced; prices raised or lowered; donations given or denied; old French and Spanish claims confirmed or rejected; settlers ousted; emigration stopped, precisely as it suited the interest of the old States; and this interest, in every instance, would be precisely opposite to the interest of the new States. In vain would some just men wish to act equitably by these new States; their generous efforts would expose them to attacks at home. A new head of electioneering would be opened; candidates for Congress would rack their imaginations and exhaust their arithmetic in the invention and display of rival projects for the extraction of gold from the new States; and he that would promise best for promoting the emigration of dollars from the new States, and preventing the emigration of people to them, would be considered the best qualified for federal legislation. If this plan of distribution had been in force heretofore, the price of the public lands would not have been reduced in 1819–'20, nor the relief laws passed, which exonerated the new States from a debt of near twenty millions of dollars. If adopted now, these States may bid adieu to their sovereignty and independence! They will become the feudatory vassals of the paramount States! Their subjection and dependence will be without limit or remedy. The five years mentioned in the bill had as well be fifty or five hundred. The State that would surrender its sovereignty for ten per centum of its own money would eclipse the folly of Esau, and become a proverb in the annals of folly with those who have sold their birthright for "a mess of pottage."

The details of the bill are pregnant with injustice and unsound policy.

1. The rule of distribution among the States makes no distinction between those States which did or did not make cessions of their vacant land to the federal government. Massachusetts and Maine, which are now selling and enjoying their vacant lands in their own right, and Connecticut, which received a deed for two millions of acres from the federal government, and sold them for her own benefit, are put upon an equal footing with Virginia, which ceded the immense domain which lies in the forks of the Ohio and Mississippi, and Georgia, which ceded territory for two States. This is manifestly unjust.

2. The bill proposes benefits to some of the States, which they cannot receive without dishonor nor refuse without pecuniary prejudice. Several States deny the power of the federal government to appropriate the public moneys to objects of internal improvement or to colonization. A refusal to accept their dividends would subject such States to loss; to receive them would imply a sale of their constitutional principles for so much money. Considerations connected with the harmony and perpetuity of our confederacy should forbid any State to be compelled to choose between such alternatives.

3. The public lands in great part were granted to the federal government to pay the debt of the revolutionary war; it is notorious that other objects of revenue, to wit, duties on imported goods, have chiefly paid that debt. It would seem then to be just to the donors of the land, after having taxed them in other ways to pay the debt, that the land should go in relief of their present taxes; and that so long as any revenue may be derived from them it should go into the common treasury, and diminish, by so much, the amount of their annual contributions.

4. The colonization of free people of color on the western coast of Africa is a delicate question for Congress to touch. It connects itself indissolubly with the slave question, and cannot be agitated by the federal legislature without rousing and alarming the apprehensions of all the slaveholding States, and lighting up the fires of the extinguished conflagration which lately blazed in the Missouri question. The harmony of the States and the durability of this confederacy interdict the legislation of the federal legislature upon this subject. The existence of slavery in the United States is local and sectional. It is confined to the southern and middle States. If it is an evil, it is an evil to them, and it is their business to say so. If it is to be removed, it is their business to remove it. Other States put an end to slavery at their own time, and in their own way, and without interference from federal or State legislation, or organized societies. The rights of equality demand for the remaining States the same freedom of thought and immunity of action. Instead of assuming the business of colonization, leave it to the slaveholding States to do as they please, and leave them their resources to carry into effect their resolves. Raise no more money from them than the exigencies of the government require, and then they will have the means, if they feel the inclination, to rid themselves of a burden which is theirs to bear and theirs to remove.

5. The sum proposed for distribution, though nominally to consist of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands, is, in reality, to consist of their gross proceeds. The term net, as applied to revenue from land offices or custom-houses, is quite different. In the latter, its signification corresponds with the fact, and implies a deduction of all the expenses of collection; in the former it has no such implication, for the expenses of the land system are defrayed by appropriations out of the treasury. To make the whole sum received from the land offices a fund for distribution, would be to devolve the heavy expenses of the land system upon the custom-house revenue; in other words, to take so much from the custom-house revenue to be divided among the States. This would be no small item. According to the principles of the account drawn up against the lands, it would embrace—

1. Expenses of the General Land Office.
2. Appropriations for surveying.
3. Expenses for six surveyors general's offices.
4. Expenses of forty-four land offices.
5. Salaries of eighty-eight registers and receivers.
6. Commissions on sales to registers and receivers.
7. Allowance to receivers for depositing money.
8. Interest on money paid for extinguishing Indian titles.
9. Annuities to Indians.
10. Future Indian treaties for extinguishing title.
11. Expenses of annual removal of Indians.

These items exceed a million of dollars. They are on the increase, and will continue to grow at least until the one hundred and thirteen million five hundred and seventy-seven thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine acres of land within the limits of the States and Territories now covered by Indian title shall be released from such title. The reduction of these items, present and to come, from the proposed fund for distribution, must certainly be made to avoid a contradiction between the profession and the practice of the bill; and this reduction might leave little or nothing for division among the distributees. The gross proceeds of the land sales for the last year were large, they exceeded three million of dollars; but they were equally large twelve years ago, and gave birth to some extravagant calculations then, which vanished with a sudden decline of the land revenue to less than one million. The proceeds of 1819 were $3,274,422; those of 1823 were $916,523. The excessive sales twelve years ago resulted from the excessive issue of bank paper, while those of 1831 were produced by the several relief laws passed by Congress. A detached year is no evidence of the product of the sales; an average of a series of years presents the only approximation to correctness; and this average of the last ten years would be about one million and three-quarters. So that, after all expenses are deducted, with the five per centum now payable to the new States, and ten per centum proposed by the bill, there may be nothing worth dividing among the States; certainly nothing worth the alarm and agitation which the assumption of the colonization question must excite among the slaveholding States; nothing worth the danger of compelling the old States, which deny the power of federal internal improvement, to choose between alternatives which involve a sale of their principles on one side, or a loss of their dividends on the other; certainly nothing worth the injury to the new States which must result from the conversion of their territory into the private property of those who are to have the power of legislation over it, and a direct interest in using that power to degrade and impoverish them.

In one particular the bill possesses a feature which, detached from the rest, might indemnify, in a slight degree, the new States for the loss they have incurred in giving up the right of taxing the federal lands for the inadequate consideration of 5 per cent. upon the proceeds of the sales. Every new State is long since satisfied that, in agreeing to this article in the compact, it has sustained an immense loss; the increase of this per centum is then a debt of justice to the new States; and instead of 10, as proposed in the bill from the Committee on Manufactures, it ought to be 15, so as to make the whole per centum 20.

The committee, considering that the public lands are one of the subjects of revenue, and that the Senate, by its vote of March 22, referred the question of reducing the revenue from this source to the Committee on Manufactures, which was then occupied with preparing a bill for the modification of the tariff, and the general adjustment of the revenue system, do recommend, first, that an amendment be offered to the bill reported by that committee, entitled "A bill further to amend the several acts imposing duties or imposts," to reduce the price of fresh lands to a minimum of one dollar per acre, and to fifty cents per acre for lands which shall have been five years or upwards in market; and secondly, that the bill which has been referred to their consideration be amended so as to strike out the whole, except so much as proposes to allow ten per centum to the new States, and to increase that allowance to 15 per cent.

APPENDIX.

No. 1.

Extract from the report of Mr. Rush, Secretary of the Treasury, December, 1827.

"The manner in which the remote lands of the United States are selling and settling, whilst it may possibly tend to increase more quickly the aggregate population of the country, and the mere means of subsistence, does not increase capital in the same proportion. It is a proposition too plain to require elucidation, that the creation of capital is retarded rather than accelerated by the diffusion of a thin population over a great surface of soil. Anything that may serve to hold back this tendency to diffusion from running too far and too long into an extreme can scarcely prove otherwise than salutary.

"It cannot be overlooked that the prices at which fertile bodies of land may be bought of the government under this system operate as a perpetual allurement to their purchase.

"It has served, and still serves, to draw in an annual stream the inhabitants of the majority of the States, including among them a portion, not small, of the western States into the settlement of fresh lands lying still further and further off. If the population of these, not yet redundant in fact, though appearing to be so under this legislative incitement to emigrate, remained fixed in more instances, as it probably would be by extending the motives to manufacturing labor, it is believed that the nation would gain in two ways: first, by the more rapid accumulation of capital; and next, by the gradual reduction of the excess of its agricultural population over that engaged in other vocations. It is not imagined that it would ever be practicable, even if it were desirable, to turn this stream of emigration aside; but resources opened through the influence of the laws, in new fields of industry, to the inhabitants of the States already sufficiently peopled to enter upon them, might operate to lessen in some degree, and usefully lessen, its absorbing force. Agriculture itself would be essentially benefited; the price of lands in all the existing States would soon become enhanced, as well as the produce from them, by a policy that would in anywise tend to render portions of their population more stationary by supplying new and adequate motives to their becoming so."

No. 2.

Extract from the memorial of the tariff convention, presented to Congress March 26, 1832.

"The last advantage which your memorialists propose to mention, as resulting from the establishment of domestic manufactures, is their effect in restraining emigration from the settled to the unsettled parts of the country. It is true, as a general principle, that manufactures add to the wealth and population of a country the whole amount of the capital and labor to which they give employment; but, in the particular case of the United States, where large tracts of good unoccupied land are continually for sale at low prices, it is probable, as your memorialists have already remarked, that some of the persons who, under the influence of the protecting policy, invest their capital and labor in manufactures, would, if this field of employment had not been opened to them at home, have emigrated to some of the unsettled parts of the country, and been occupied in clearing land. But when an individual can obtain a profitable market for his labor at his own door, in the midst of his friends and kindred, and of objects that are connected with the agreeable associations of his early years, he will hardly be tempted to go in search of it to a distant, unexplored wilderness. The increase of population which thus takes place in the manufacturing States, by creating an increased demand for provisions and materials, renders it in turn more advantageous for the agricultural States to extend their industry at home than to send off continually new colonies. In this way the tide of emigration, without being wholly dammed up, is considerably checked throughout all the settled parts of the Union, and the population of all begins to put on a more consolidated shape.

"An inhabitant of one of our Atlantic States, who, before the adoption of the protecting policy, was prevented, by the fear of foreign competition, from investing his capital in manufactures, may have employed it in carrying coffee from Batavia to Antwerp, or in clearing wild lands on the banks of the Missouri; and in so doing may have given it the direction which was at that time, under all the circumstances, the most judicious. But it does not thence follow that it was the best which he could possibly have given it had he been at liberty to choose, or that it is not his policy and duty, as a member of the community, to concur in so regulating the circumstances under which he acts, as that he shall be able to employ his capital at the place of his residence, rather than in the opposite side of the globe."

No. 3.

Extracts from the laws of the State of Maine for the sale and settlement of her public lands.

"That such townships of land belonging to the State as may be suitable for settlement and cultivation shall be surveyed and divided into lots of 100 acres each, as nearly as may be; and the land so surveyed and allotted shall be sold to such persons only as may wish to become actual settlers in any township, shall have each a lot of 100 acres, wherever he may wish to make a selection of land not contracted for, at 30 cents per acre, one half to be paid in money at the time of contracting, and the other half to be paid in labor in making roads in said township under the direction of the agent."—(Act of 1824, sec. 1.)

"That whenever, in any township, contracts shall have been made for 40 settlers, the residue of such township shall be sold at 60 cents per acre, until otherwise ordered by the legislature."—(Same act, sec. 3.)

"That such lands as may be unfit for settlement and cultivation, and properly falling under the denomination of timber land, shall be laid out in lots and sold for its just value, not exceeding 500 acres to any one person."—(Same act, sec. 4.)

"That in every case where any person has commenced a settlement on any of the lands belonging to this State, prior to the passage of this act, such person shall be entitled to a prior right of purchase."—(Same act, sec. 8.)

"That the same agent be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell, in lots of one mile square, any meadow, bog, or waste land, which does not fall under the denomination of settling, or timber land, either at auction or private sale, as, in his opinion, shall best promote the interest of the State."—(Act of 1825, sec. 2.)

"That the said agent is hereby authorized to sell timber on the public lands, where the same is decaying, and, in his opinion, it is for the public interest to do so."—(Same act, sec. 3.)

"That it shall be his duty to sell at public auction, or private sale, all grass growing on the public land from year to year; to take suitable measures for the preservation of timber and grass standing and growing thereon; and to prosecute, in behalf of the State, for all trespasses which have been or may be committed on the same, and seize and to sell at public auction all kinds of lumber and grass cut by trespassers," &c.—(Act of 1828, sec. 1.)

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MAY 26, 1832.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 25, 1832.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a copy of a report numbered 2, of the register and receiver of the land office for the district of St. Stephen's, prepared in obedience to the third section of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1829.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. PRESIDENT of the Senate.

LAND OFFICE, St. Stephen's, Alabama, May 3, 1832.

SIR: We have forwarded with this report, No. 2, upon claims presented to us under the third section of the act of Congress of March 2, 1829.

We are, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

JOHN B. HAZARD, Register.
J. H. OWEN, Receiver.

No. 2.

Abstract of claims to lands situated west of the Perdido, east of Pearl river, and below the 31st degree of north latitude, presented to the register and receiver of the land office at St. Stephen's, Alabama, acting as commissioners under the authority of the third section of the act of Congress of March 2, 1829, entitled "An act confirming the report of the register and receiver of the land office for the district of St. Stephen's, in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes."

REMARKS.

Claims No. 1 and 2 appear to have been regularly transferred from the original grantees to the present claimants.

The original grantees, or their legal representatives, appear to have been residents of that part of Louisiana situated east of Pearl river, west of the Perdido, and below the 31st degree of north latitude, on the 15th day of April, 1813, and on that day, and for ten consecutive years previous to that day, to have been in possession of the tracts claimed. The present claims are therefore recommended for confirmation; but if either of the foregoing claimants had a claim to any part of the above-described lands heretofore confirmed to him, the quantity heretofore confirmed to be included in and make a part of the quantity now recommended for confirmation. All of which is respectfully submitted.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MAY 30, 1832.

Mr. KANE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Sarah Milligan, widow of Lawrence Milligan, deceased, and of Mary Liddle and Catharine Bien, daughters of L. Milligan, reported:

That a tract of land was granted by the Spanish government, in 1802, to Lawrence Milligan, having a front of twenty arpents, by the depth of forty, containing 800 arpents superficial measure, on the Bayou Bœuf, in the western district of Louisiana, which was surveyed and located under that government, and the title acknowledged by the United States, and confirmed by the board of commissioners, and was, therefore, a complete title to the land under a certificate marked B, No. 907. That the said title was duly located pursuant to the certificate in 1824, as will appear by the copy of the said survey. That the land was then occupied by William Hargrove, who held by purchase from the United States, under the act of April 12, 1814. The petitioners then instituted a suit against the said Hargrove, in 1825, for the recovery of the land; the said Hargrove set up a title under the United States, and pleaded a prescription of ten years. The court held the possession under the title of the United States good under the laws of Louisiana. The petitioners pray that, as they had a title under the former government, duly acknowledged by the American government; that as they have lost their land by the illegal act of the government in disposing of the property of individuals, they may be permitted to locate the same quantity on any public land in the said land district.

The committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable and ought to be allowed, and report a bill accordingly.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1068. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE CLAIM OF INDIANA TO CERTAIN LANDS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JUNE 7, 1832.

Mr. TIPTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred a joint resolution of the general assembly of the State of Indiana of the 3d of February last, and a resolution of the Senate of May 3, 1832, with instructions to inquire into and report all the facts and proceedings in relation to a reservation and sale of the northeast, northwest, and southwest quarters of section 25, township 6, of range 1 west of the meridian, drawn from the mouth of the Great Miami river, reported:

That from an examination of the resolution presented to the Senate by the general assembly of Indiana it appears that that State claims the three quarter sections of land above referred to by virtue of the 6th section of the act of Congress of April 19, 1816, which grants to that State all salt springs within its limits, and the land reserved for the same, not exceeding in the whole the quantity contained in thirty-six entire sections, and alleges that ever since the adoption of her constitution she has had undisputed possession of these lands; has, in accordance with the terms of the said grant, leased and exercised other acts of ownership over them; and that, particularly, on the 4th day of January, 1830, these three quarter sections of land were leased by the Hon. M. C. Eggleston, president judge of the third judicial circuit, on behalf of the State, to one David Guard, for a term of three years, who took possession, and placed Mary Muir, John Davis, and Thomas Branan thereon as tenants; and they complain that these tenants, through the agency of an attorney, have been permitted to purchase these lands from the United States, as occupants thereof, under the pre-emption law of May, 1830, at the minimum price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, when, in fact, they were the rightful property of the State of Indiana, and are worth in cash eight thousand dollars.

It is further stated in the resolution that patents have been issued from the General Land Office for this property; and that the holders under the patents have conveyed the same to third persons, who are now claiming to hold the same in virtue of such sale and conveyance, thereby defrauding the State of Indiana of her vested rights therein.

In the investigation of this matter, it would seem to be the duty of the committee to present to the Senate—1st. All the facts going to establish the claim of the State of Indiana to the land in question, by showing that there is or is not a salt spring on section 25, to bring it within the provisions of the acts of Congress of 1796 and of 1816, under which the reservation and grant is claimed by that State; and 2dly. To present the facts in relation to the sale by the officers of the government and the attorney in fact who transacted the business on the part of the claimants under the pre-emption law.

The committee are of opinion that, to effect this object, it will be most plain and intelligible to refer to the general laws, to incorporate all special acts in relation to the section of land in question, and all the correspondence between the late and present Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the land officers at Cincinnati, and with the committee and members of Congress.

incorporation of the special acts of February 24, 1815, the act of April 19, 1816, under which the State claims, and of the act of February 12, 1831, directing these three quarter sections of land to be sold as other public lands are sold.

The correspondence is numbered from 1 to 9, including the petition of David Guard, which is also submitted.

[Extract.]

LAND OFFICE, Cincinnati, February 8, 1826.

In regard to the saline reservation, (section 25, township 6, 1 west,) about which the Hon. Mr. Noble has made inquiry, I have to state that Daniel Perine entered the southeast quarter on the 25th of May, 1815, under an act of the 24th February preceding, (Land Laws, page 135,) the same having been duly examined at the instance of the register and receiver, and found to contain no "salt spring, or springs valuable for the purpose of making salt." No law having since been passed in relation to the remaining three quarters, (unless, indeed, the act of April 24, 1820, may be so construed,) they have not hitherto been offered at public sale, and are not, therefore, considered now open for entry.

The authority under which this tract was originally reserved will be found in the 3d section of the act of May 18, 1796, by turning to page 113 of the last edition of the "Land Laws"

SIR: Enclosed is a copy of a letter from the register of the land office at Cincinnati, Ohio, in relation to what was supposed to be a saline reservation, in section No 25, township 6, range 1 west of meridian line. The entry of the southeast quarter of that section appears to have been made under the authority of a special act to that effect, (vide Land Laws, page 135.) The three remaining quarters, not having yet been exposed to public sale, will be offered for sale, with the relinquished lands under the existing laws.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 14, 1829.

SIR: The Hon. W. Findlay having inquired, in your behalf, to ascertain the time when section 25, township 6, 1 west, in the Cincinnati district, would be offered for sale, I have to inform you that it will be included in the next proclamation directing sales at the land office at Cincinnati, and I have to request that you will in the meantime prevent, as far as in your power, any person from injuring that tract by taking from it either stone or timber.

Very, &c.,

G. GRAHAM.

Mr. DAVID GUARD, Lawrenceburg, Indiana.

No. 6.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your petitioner, David Guard, of the county of Dearborn and State of Indiana, showeth unto your honorable bodies that section 25, township 6, range 1 west of the principal meridian of the lands directed to be sold at Cincinnati, was reserved from public sale, under the impression that said section contained a valuable salt spring; that many years ago, when salt was obtained with great difficulty in the western country, some fruitless attempts were made to procure salt therefrom, but, after much labor and pains, it was found totally impracticable to do so at any reasonable expense, and the spring was accordingly abandoned as useless and worthless; that in the year 1815 a law was passed by Congress authorizing the register and receiver of public moneys at the land office at Cincinnati to permit one Daniel Perine, of Indiana, to enter and become the purchaser at private sale, on the usual terms of sale, of the southeast quarter of the said section, if the said register and receiver should be satisfied that it contained no salt spring valuable for the purpose of making salt; that, after due examination by the said register and receiver, they became satisfied there was no spring upon it valuable for the purpose of making salt, and permitted the said Daniel Perine to enter the said quarter, and purchase the same on the usual terms of sale. Your petitioner would further beg leave to represent that the said remaining three quarters of said section is extremely rough and broken, so much so that it is not susceptible of ordinary tillage, and can be useful for pasture only and the small portion of timber upon it, and even the latter has been so long a subject of depredations by the surrounding inhabitants as to become almost worthless, and, if remaining much longer unoccupied, it will be valueless to the government and useless to individuals. This land joins the lands of your petitioner, in consequence of which he feels desirous to attach it to his farm, believing it will be more advantageous to him than to any other person, and perhaps will indemnify him for the purchase money; wherefore he prays your honorable bodies to permit him to enter the remaining three quarters of the said section, and become the purchaser of the same at private sale, in the same manner and for the usual price of public lands. And he, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Respectfully, yours,

DAVID GUARD.

No. 7.

LAND OFFICE, Cincinnati, June 3, 1831.

SIR: Among the tracts recently claimed by pre-emption rights are the three remaining quarters of the section near Lawrenceburg, commonly known and designated as the "lick section," or "saline reserve," (NE., NW., and SW., 25, 6, 1 W.) But as some doubts arose, on the part of the receiver and myself, whether this section had not been "reserved from sale" in such a manner as to shield it from the operation of the act of May 29, 1830, and more especially as it was expressly ordered to be offered at next August sales by authority of an act of Congress passed after the date of the pre-emption law, with the advice of Judge McLean, we came to the conclusion that it would be most decorous to avoid looking behind the peremptory congressional order to sell for the grounds of a decision, and the applications filed by Mr. Lane were, accordingly, received as conditional only, and subject to the revision and direction of your department.

As Mr. L. was anxious that the papers should be forwarded in time to meet him on his arrival at Washington, I enclose them herewith, and will forward in a few days, with our returns, such additional facts on the subject as the records of the office and further inquiries may develop.

I am, &c.,

PEYTON S. SYMMES.

Hon. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

No. 8.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 10, 1831.

SIR: Your letter of the 3d instant has been received. No evidence can be found in this office going to show that section 25, township 6, range 1 west, or any part thereof, was directed to be reserved from sale by reason of its including a salt spring, or from any other cause.

The act of 24th February, 1815, entitled "An act for the relief of Daniel Perine," authorized the entry by said Perine of the southeast quarter of that section, but does not intimate that the tract was reserved from sale by authority.

Your letter of the 8th February, 1826, represents that the three remaining quarters of that section had not been offered at public sale, but does not state that they were reserved from sale by authority. If your office exhibits no authority for making the reservation, those tracts cannot be regarded as subject to the restriction imposed by the 4th section of the pre-emption law of 29th May, 1830, which is, that the right of pre-emption contemplated by that act "shall not extend to any land which is reserved from sale by act of Congress, or by order of the President, or which may have been appropriated for any purpose whatsoever."

If, therefore, pre-emption claims are established to those three quarter sections under the act of 29th May, 1830, they are valid in law, and the subsequent act, directing them to be exposed to public sale, cannot take effect, inasmuch as in so doing it would interfere with rights vested by a previous act. The papers are returned herewith.

I am, &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

PEYTON S. SYMMES, Esq., Register, &c., Cincinnati, Ohio.

P. S.—In case you should discover any evidence in your office which justified you in reserving those lands from sale, you will be pleased to suspend proceedings and report thereon.

Copy of field-notes.

Exterior lines.—"Generally of the best quality." "Timber: sugar tree, walnut, mulberry, and hickory."

Interior lines.—"Moderate ridges; second-rate land." "Timber: ash, oak, elm, and sugar tree."

By a special act of Congress of February 24, 1815, the sale of the southeast quarter of this same section is authorized, as will appear from the following:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the register and receiver of public moneys for the district of Cincinnati shall permit Daniel Perine, of Indiana Territory, to enter and become the purchaser, at private sale, of the southeast quarter of section numbered twenty-five, of township numbered six, in range numbered one west, in the Cincinnati district, if on due inquiry the said register and receiver shall be satisfied that the said quarter section does not contain any salt spring or springs valuable for the purpose of making salt. And the said Daniel Perine shall be entitled to a grant of the aforesaid quarter section on completing the payments therefor on the terms and conditions provided for the sale of public lands sold at private sale."

That part of the act of April 19, 1816, under which the State of Indiana claims, is the second proposition of the 6th section, and is as follows:

"That all salt springs within said Territory, and the land reserved for the use of the same, together with such other lands as may by the President of the United States be deemed necessary and proper for working the said salt springs, not exceeding in the whole the quantity contained in thirty-six entire sections, shall be granted to the said State, for the use of the people of the said State, the same to be used under such terms, conditions, and regulations as the legislature of the said State shall direct: Provided, The said legislature shall never sell nor lease the same for a longer period than ten years at any one time."

On the 16th day of December, 1831, a bill was introduced on leave into the Senate of the United States granting to David Guard, of Indiana, the right to purchase at private sale the southwest, northwest, and northeast quarters of section 25, township 6, of range 1 west. This bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, who reported it as amended, and it passed in the following words:

"Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to offer at public sale, as soon as may be, the southwest, northwest, and northeast quarters of section numbered twenty-five, of township number six, in range number one west, in the Cincinnati district, under the same rules and regulations that govern the sale of other public lands of the United States."

By the act of 1796 aforesaid the surveyor was required to note in his field book all mines, salt licks, salt springs, and mill seats. The same act reserves from sale all salt springs with one mile square, and such other sections as the President shall designate. From this act to the act of 1816, under which the State claims, all the acts of Congress reserve from sale, by express words, all salt springs and such sections as had been reserved for their use by order of the President.

There being no evidence in the field-notes or in any book, map, or plat in any of the offices, that section 25 ever had upon it a salt spring, or was ever reserved as such, or for the use of a salt spring, or for any other purpose, the committee cannot see by what authority the State claims this section as being embraced in the provisions of the act of 1796 or of 1816.

In 1815 Congress passed a special act authorizing Daniel Perine, of the Indiana Territory, to enter, at private sale, the southeast quarter of this section; and in 1831 an act passed directing the President to cause the three remaining quarters to be sold at public sale. At the time of passing the last-mentioned act the delegation in Congress from the State of Indiana, part of whom were members of the convention that formed her constitution, alive to her interest, and well acquainted with her rights, would surely have claimed this land if they had considered it a reservation belonging to that State. It appears to the committee, from the above documents and proceedings, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the register at Cincinnati acted with great caution in the sale of the three quarter sections of land mentioned in the resolution; and if there has been fraud practiced by the attorney in fact for the purchasers, or by any other person, the committee have not been able to detect it. They therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the legislature of Indiana and the resolution of the Senate of the 3d of May, 1832.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1069. [1ST SESSION.

RELATIVE TO MAKING PROVISION FOR ADJUSTING CERTAIN PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS DERIVED FROM THE SPANISH GOVERNMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JUNE 14, 1832.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 12, 1832.

The Secretary of State, to whom, on the 22d instant, was referred the resolution of the House of Representatives of February 7, 1832, on the expediency of providing by law for the final adjustment of all the claims to land derived from the former government of Spain and its local authorities in that part of West Florida between the Mississippi and Perdido rivers, from the date of the Louisiana treaty of 1803 to the proclamation of President Madison, in 1810, either by a confirmation of the titles or a reference of them to the judiciary, with directions to report to the House of Representatives the recent correspondence between the Spanish minister and the Secretary of State, with the opinion of the latter upon the justice and validity of these claims, has the honor to report:

That the government of the United States having by several acts asserted their right to all the territory between the Mississippi and the Perdido, under the treaty of 1803, it would be improper to contradict that asserted right, and unnecessary to support it. Assuming, therefore, as the groundwork of this report, that the construction which the United States have put on the treaty of cession is in this respect the true construction, and that by it they acquired a right to all the land referred to in the resolution of the House, it is equally true that the Spanish government, from the time the transfer of Louisiana took place, put a different construction upon it, maintained that it did not include any part of the Floridas, refused to deliver the possession of this territory when the rest of the ceded country was transferred to the French, held it when we received the country from France, and kept the whole until the year 1810, when a part of it was wrested from them by an insurrection, and the residue until 1813, when it was forcibly taken by the troops of the United States; and that during all this period they exercised an undisturbed jurisdiction over this territory, and disposed by sale of sundry tracts of land, as well to citizens of the United States as to Spanish subjects. For these sales the proper officer of the crown received a consideration in money, caused the lands to be surveyed, and gave to the purchasers titles in form.

After West Florida became incorporated into the Union, either as part of the State of Louisiana or of the then Territory of Mississippi, a board of commissioners was constituted to receive the evidence of title from the claimants to the lands between the Mississippi and the Perdido and to report the same to the General Land Office, declaring that those who neglected to record their titles should never after receive a confirmation thereof, and that no title not recorded should be received in evidence.

But by the act of Congress entitled "An act for erecting Louisiana into two Territories, and providing for the temporary government thereof," it was enacted that all grants for lands ceded by the French republic to the United States by the treaty of April 30, 1803, the title to which was in the government of Spain at the date of the treaty of St. Ildefonso, and every proceeding towards obtaining any claim to such lands made subsequent thereto, should be null and void, with an exception in favor of actual settlers prior to December 20, 1803, who had obtained a right under the laws and usages of Spain; but these were to be entitled to not more than six hundred and forty acres of land.

This law precluded the commissioners from allowing any claim under the Spanish grants made in virtue of the sales above mentioned, as they were, all of them, after the date of the treaty of St. Ildefonso, which was made in the year 1801.

Many of the purchasers under the Spanish government filed their claims; others, deterred by the provisions of the law of 1804, made after most of the purchases had been completed, neglected to do so, knowing that their claims would be rejected, and evinced a disposition to demand from the Spanish government the reimbursement of the purchase money they had paid.

Things remained in this situation until negotiations were opened, in the year 1818, for the cession of the Floridas to the United States. The first formal and written proposition came from Spain, through their minister, in a note enclosed in his letter of the 14th of October of that year, preceded, no doubt, by verbal communications. The part of the note immediately bearing on this subject is in the following words: "His Catholic Majesty, to give an eminent proof of his generosity, and of the desire which animates him to strengthen the ties of friendship and good understanding with the United States, and to put an end to the differences which now exist between the two governments, cedes to them in full property and sovereignty the provinces of East and West Florida, with all their towns and forts, such as they were ceded by Britain in 1783, and with the limits which designated them in the treaty of limits and navigation concluded between Spain and the United States on the 27th of October, 1795. The donations or sales of land made by the government of his Majesty, or by legal authority, until this time are, nevertheless, to be recognized as valid."

To this part of the proposition Mr. Adams answers, in his letter of October 31, 1818: "Neither can the United States recognize as valid ALL the grants of land UNTIL THIS TIME, and at the same time renounce all their claims, and those of their citizens, &c. * * * * * * *

It is well known to you, sir, that notice has been given by our minister in Spain to your government that all the grants of land LATELY alleged to have been made [alleged to have been lately made] by your government within those territories must be cancelled, unless your government should provide some other adequate fund from which the claims above referred to may be satisfied. From the answers of Don J. Pizarro to this notice, we have reason to expect that you will be sensible of this necessity, and that some time must be agreed upon, subsequent to which no grant of land, WITHIN THE TERRITORIES in question, shall be considered as valid."

In the reply of the Spanish minister he adverts to the sale of the lands "in the two Floridas, ceded by his Catholic Majesty," as the means by which the United States would be enabled to pay the sums due to their citizens.

When the treaty was nearly concluded, the Chevalier de Onis was prevented by indisposition from meeting Mr. Adams; and Mr. Hyde de Neuville, then minister of France, seems to have been admitted, informally, as a mediator between the negotiators. In one of his notes on the subject of the confirmation he uses the following observation, which seems to be addressed to the Chevalier de Onis, in order to explain to him the views of Mr. Adams: "The Secretary of State observed to me, that certainly it could never be the intent of the federal government to disturb the individuals in the enjoyment of property acquired legally or bona fide; but that a treaty ought not to be made to cover frauds, and that nothing more could be demanded of the United States than the King could offer; that they put themselves precisely in his place, and that they would fulfil all his engagements, but most certainly it could never be understood that they should do more. The Secretary of State proposes even, if Mr. Onis desire it, that the article shall be inserted in the treaty such as Mr. Onis has proposed, on condition that the explanation above stated" [that all grants not annulled by this convention are valid to the extent that they are binding on his Catholic Majesty] "shall be given in a note." The article as proposed by Mr. Onis, to which Mr. Adams is said by Mr. Neuville to have consented with the above modification, is in these terms: "All the grants of land made by his Catholic Majesty, or by his authorities, in the aforesaid territories of the two Floridas, and others which his Majesty cedes to the United States, shall be confirmed and acknowledged as valid, excepting these grants which may have been made after the 24th day of January last year, the date of the first proposals which were made for the cession of those provinces, which shall be held null, in consideration of the grantees not having complied with the conditions of the cession."

In all this negotiation not an objection seems to have been raised to the confirmation of all the Spanish bona fide grants, excepting only certain extravagant concessions, covering nearly the whole of the ceded country, made subsequent to the first offer of the cession of the country. The idea of disturbing any such titles is expressly disavowed by Mr. Adams, and the treaty was finally concluded on the 22d February, 1819, in the same spirit that prevailed during the negotiation, the 8th article stipulating in these terms:

"All the grants of land made before the 24th of January, 1818, by his Catholic Majesty, or by his lawful authorities, in the said territories ceded by his Majesty to the United States, shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of the lands to the same extent that the same grants would be valid if the territories had remained under the dominion of his Catholic Majesty. But the owners in possession of such lands who, by reason of the recent circumstances of the Spanish nation and the revolutions in Europe, have been prevented from fulfilling all the conditions of their grants, shall complete them within the terms limited in the same, respectively, from the date of this treaty; in default of which, the said grants shall be null and void. All grants made since the said 24th of January, 1818, when the first proposal, on the part of his Catholic Majesty, for the cession of the Floridas, was made, are hereby declared, and agreed to be, null and void."

Subsequent, however, to the signature of the treaty, doubts arose whether the large grants intended to be cancelled had really been executed before or after the date fixed by the treaty (January 24, 1818.) This led to a warm correspondence between the agents of the two governments, during the whole of which not a doubt respecting the operation of the treaty, as confirming all the grants prior to 1818, is raised. And, finally, the treaty is ratified with an explanatory article, by which the date in the 8th article is stated to be one fixed "for the confirmation of the grants of lands made by the King in the Floridas," excepting specially the large grants.

From these statements the House of Representatives will be the better able to decide on the true intent of the 8th article, so far as it relates to the concessions or grants of land mentioned and described in their resolution. These were all long anterior to the date fixed by the article, (January 24, 1818,) they were completed in their form, made by the proper officer, and for a valuable consideration. The lands lie in that territory which, when in the possession of Spain, was by them called West Florida, and are situated to the east of the river Mississippi. They came, therefore, in every point, within the stipulations of the 8th article, that they "shall be ratified and confirmed to the same extent that the said grants would be valid if the territories had remained under the dominion of his Catholic Majesty."

Two objections seem to have been raised against this construction by the Supreme Court, in a cause in which the validity of one of these concessions was brought in question. In that case the principal ground of decision against the confirmation was drawn from the language of the article, which declares that the concessions shall be ratified and confirmed; which the court say is an act not done by the treaty itself, but made obligatory upon another branch of the government to do, which branch is the legislature, not the judiciary; that the legislature had not yet performed this obligation, created by the treaty; and that until it should be done, the court could not declare the treaty to be valid, inasmuch as the sales were made subsequent to the date of the treaty of St. Ildefonso, and therefore void, unless they were confirmed by the treaty of 1819. But they add, if the language of the article had been different, if the treaty had declared by words, in presente, that the grants are confirmed, then the treaty would have been a law obligatory on the court, and, by its paramount force, would have operated a repeal of the 14th section of the act of 1804, above quoted and referred to, and have induced a different decision.

If this part of the decision shall be found to be based on just principles, then there is a clear obligation upon the legislature to pass a law confirming those grants and repeal the law of 1804, which prevented their confirmation by the commissioners before the treaty.

In a late case decided in the Supreme Court reference is made to the language used in the Spanish version of the 8th article, to which their attention was not drawn in the case of Foster and Elam vs. Nelson. They there, with great strength of reasoning, demonstrate that the language of the 8th article in the Spanish original is that which is used by the party who grants, and contains, in his own words, the condition on which he cedes; that therefore this language must govern; and, as words expressing a present confirmation of the grants are used, not a future obligation on the other party to confirm them, that the concessions made before the 24th January, 1818, in the language of the article, "quedan," remained confirmed and ratified, and that therefore no act of legislation was necessary, but that the prior concessions were, ipso facto, confirmed. This part of the decision is important, and it is therefore given in the words of the court:

"It became, then, all important to ascertain what was granted by what was excepted. The King of Spain was the grantor; the treaty was his deed; the exception was made by him; and its nature and effect depended on his intention, expressed by his words in reference to the thing granted and the thing refused, and excepted in and by the grant. The Spanish version was in his words, and expressed his intention; and though the American version showed the intention of this government to be different, we cannot adopt it as the rule by which to decide what was granted, what excepted, and what reserved: the rules of law are too clear to be mistaken, and too imperative to be disregarded by this court. We must be governed by the clearly expressed and manifest intention of the grantor, and not the grantee in private, à fortiori, in public grants. That we might not be mistaken in the intention or in the true meaning of Spanish words, two dictionaries were consulted, one of them printed in Madrid; and two translations were made of the 8th article, each by competent judges of Spanish, and both agreeing with each other, and the translation of each agreeing with the definition of the dictionaries. 'Quedaran,' in Spanish, correctly translated, means 'shall remain;' the verb 'quedar,' in French, 'rester;' Latin, 'manere,' 'remanere;' and English, 'remain,' in the present tense. In the English original, the words are 'shall be,' words in the future. The difference is all important as to all Spanish grants. If the words of the treaty were that all the grants of land 'shall remain confirmed,' then the United States, by accepting the cession, could assert no claim to these lands thus expressly excepted. The proprietors could bring suits to recover them without any action of Congress, and any question arising would be purely a judicial one. 'Shall be ratified,' makes it necessary that there should be a law ratifying them, or authorizing a suit to be brought, otherwise the question would be a political one, not cognizable by this court, as was decided in Foster and Elam vs. Nelson.

"But, aside from this consideration, we find the words used in the Spanish sense as to the grants made after January 24, 1818, which are, by the same article, in English, 'hereby declared, and agreed to be, null and void.' The ratification is in Spanish and English. The Spanish words in the Spanish version are, 'quedado' and 'quedan' in reference to the annulled grants; the English are, 'have remained,' 'do remain.' The principles of justice, and the rules of both law and equity, are too obvious not to require that, in deciding on the effect and legal operation of this article of the treaty by the declared and manifested intention of the King, the meaning of Spanish words should be the same in confirming as in annulling grants. A regard to the honor and justice of a great republic alike forbids the imputation of a desire that its legislation should be so construed, and its law so administered, that the same word should refer to the future as to confirming, and to the present in annulling grants in the same article of the same treaty.

"For these reasons, and in this connexion, we consider that the grants were confirmed and annulled, respectively, simultaneously with the ratification and confirmation of the treaty; and that when the territory was ceded the United States had no right in any of the lands embraced in the confirmed grants."

Had the decision stopped here, the undersigned would have been of opinion that the case was open for relief to the persons claiming under the grants described in the resolution which has been referred to him. But after this explicit declaration that the Spanish version is to govern; that under it the early grants are, ipso facto, by the treaty confirmed; and that no further legislation is required, the court, "to avoid (as it says) all possible misapprehension," declare that they give validity to the grant which they were then considering by virtue of laws which empowered them "to decide according to the stipulation of any treaty," but that should they be called on to decide on the validity of a title acquired by any Spanish grant not embraced by these laws they would feel bound to follow the course pursued in Foster and Elam vs. Nelson, in relation the stipulation in the 8th article of the Florida treaty, "that the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for this court."

This conclusion, so contrary to that which the undersigned would have drawn from the premises, has continued the difficulty which he had hitherto found to answer what he considers the just complaint of the Spanish government in the letters which, by the resolution of the House, he has been directed to report. Convinced in his own mind that the claims which were urged by the minister of Spain were well founded, he was in hopes, first, that the legislature, by passing a law to do that which the court had declared, in the case of Foster and Elam vs. Nelson, to be an obligation created by the treaty upon the legislative, not the judiciary, branch of the government, would have enabled him to answer the Spanish minister that justice had been done to the claimants; and when, by the failure of their petition presented to Congress for that purpose, he lost that hope, he encouraged the one that has now equally proved vain, that the discovery which he made and pointed out of a difference between the Spanish and English version of the treaty, would have induced the court to decide that their opinion in the case of Foster and Elam vs. Nelson was erroneous, as being based only on the English version. They did, as has been shown, most explicitly decide that that version should govern; that it imports a present confirmation, not a promise to confirm in future. But yet, as they give formal notice that they will persevere in a decision given expressly on the assumption that the English version is to govern, the undersigned is bound to believe that they have been governed by some good reasons which have not occurred to him from the view, probably an erroneous one, he has taken of the case. However this may be, the declaration is explicit, and imposes on the undersigned the necessity of a strong appeal to the legislature to relieve him, should they deem his reasoning correct, from the embarrassments he is under in making a proper reply to the claim of the minister of Spain in behalf of his government. While the suits of the grantees were pending his answer was easy: "The judiciary will decide, and their decision will be satisfactory, because it will be just. If they decide against the claim you must submit, because they are the proper judges of the legal right. If they allow the claim, it is all you ask." But they have decided, not against the claim, nor yet have they allowed it; but, while they acknowledge that the treaty intended to protect the right of the claimants, they say it created an obligation on the legislature to do a preliminary act, which act they have not done. Following this out, it will at once be seen that the hard task would be imposed on the Secretary of State of saying to a foreign minister, my government has, by treaty, engaged to do an act of justice to the grantees of your sovereign, which they have hitherto refused to perform, although a co-ordinate branch has acknowledged the obligation by a solemn decision. It can scarcely be alleged, as a sufficient answer to this, that the legislature substantially fulfilled this obligation by the appointment of a board of commissioners to decide on the validity of the Spanish grants, and to report for confirmation such as they deemed valid: first, because the commissioners could confirm no grant exceeding 640 acres; but, conclusively, because they were expressly bound by law not to confirm any of them, the law of 1804 expressly inhibiting the confirmation of any grant made subsequent to the treaty of St. Ildefonso. But these grants were all made two and three years subsequent to that treaty, and were rejected on that ground, as appears by the certificates of the commissioners of the land offices, hereunto annexed.

It has also sometimes, and by some of the judges, in their opinions, been argued that the lands west of the Perdido having been decided by the government of the United States to be included in the purchase of Louisiana, the stipulations of the treaty of 1819 could not apply to them, and that the grants agreed to be confirmed by the 8th article of that treaty were such only as were made in East Florida and that part of West Florida which lies east of the Perdido, and they reason thus: "The 8th article confirms the grants of land in the 'territories ceded by his Majesty to the United States.' What lands were ceded? For this we must look to the 2d article, where we find that his Majesty cedes to the United States, in full property and sovereignty, all the territories which belong to him situated to the eastward of the Mississippi, known by the name of East and West Florida. Now, the territories to the west of the Perdido did not belong to him; they had been incorporated into the Union under the Louisiana treaty. Therefore the grants made in that region cannot come within the purview of the 8th article, which contemplates only the territories belonging to the King of Spain."

The error of this reasoning consists in discarding that rule of construing an agreement which directs that the intent of the parties is to govern, and that this intent is to be sought as well in the avowed object of the agreement as in the language used to carry it into effect, and that for this purpose such construction of doubtful words should be adopted as will reconcile them where they apparently differ from each other.

The object of this treaty was, as is expressed in the preamble, "to consolidate on a permanent basis the friendship and good correspondence which happily prevails between the two parties, and to settle and terminate all their differences and pretensions by a treaty," &c.

Now, what were those differences? Spain, when she executed the treaty for ceding Louisiana, insisted that, except the island of New Orleans, no part of it lay to the east of the Mississippi; that all the rest of her dominions in that quarter were included in the provinces of East and West Florida. She kept possession of them for some years after the country was ceded to the United States, when they were wrested from her by force. During the early part of that period, she made the sales and concessions now in question, and ever since protested against the occupation by the United States. One of the differences to be settled was, then, this very one of the right to that part of West Florida which lies west of the Perdido. How was this to be effected? Precisely in the way that was devised by our able negotiator, Mr. Adams, by using such language as would end the dispute without the mortifying acknowledgment by either party that it had been wrong. We claimed that Louisiana extended eastward to the Perdido; the Spaniards that, with the exception of New Orleans, it was bounded by the Mississippi. To the country east of the Perdido we had no claim; but Spain, for a proper consideration, agrees to cede it to us. Now, if the second and eighth articles relate solely to the territories purchased by that treaty, what would have been the description? Certainly different from that actually used. The Perdido, and not the Mississippi, would have been assumed as the western boundary. But, although this would have designated the territory which, according to the argument, was all that is intended by the two articles, it would have left undetermined one of the principal causes of dispute. How was this to be avoided? By taking the Mississippi as the western boundary, and thus including in the cession all the disputed territory. It cannot be doubted that this was one of the great objects of the treaty; but, whatever may be our opinions on this point, it will be conceded that, to give effect to this intent, the written language of the treaty must be such as will justify it.

Let us examine it with that view:

"His Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States all the territories which belong to him, situated to the eastward of the Mississippi, known by the name of East and West Florida." Here are two designations of the territory ceded: all the territories east of the Mississippi which belong to him, and those territories are further described as those known by the name of East and West Florida. Now, it never was doubted that the designation of West Florida, while that country was possessed by Great Britain, and after it was ceded to Spain, was applied to the territory bounded by the Mississippi. The whole of the description, then, will apply to the lands in question as it was understood by one of the parties; and as this description was given in the very act by which the whole of the Spanish claim was relinquished to the United States, it was a matter of little moment to this latter power what words were used by Spain to avoid a confession which, in a compromise, they never could be called on to make; that their previous pretensions were unjust, provided the same precautionary language were observed with respect to the United States. The treaty was a compromise. Spain undoubtedly had a claim, founded on at least a color of right, to the territory between the Perdido and the Mississippi, a claim they had always asserted. In delivering possession of Louisiana, to which we contended this was an appendage, they refused to deliver this territory. Our commissioners did not demand it, nor did those of France when the province was transferred. The Crown of Spain remained in peaceable possession until an insurrection deprived them of the possession of a part, and an invasion by our troops some time after, of the rest. Spain had made these sales and grants to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, while they were in this peaceable possession. How, therefore, could Spain be supposed to consent to any arrangement that should formally acknowledge that she had unjustly refused to deliver possession of what she had ceded, and had sold lands to which she had no title; nor could the United States, with propriety, acknowledge that they had unjustly taken and retained the possession. The cession of the territories east of the Perdido afforded an opportunity of using language that would effect the purpose of both powers without committing the dignity of either. By describing the country ceded as lying to the east of the Mississippi, and known by the name of East and West Florida, it included as well that part of West Florida formerly in dispute as the territory then first ceded by that treaty; and by agreeing that the bona fide concessions in the territory ceded should be confirmed to the possessors, the United States did an act of justice which equity would seem to have demanded, even had there been no stipulations. For let it always be remembered that Spain was the sovereign de facto of the disputed territory at the time the grants in question were made, and continued in the undisturbed possession of it for many years after.

It seems also worthy of remark, that these grants having been made for a pecuniary consideration paid into the treasury of Spain; not only justice to her grantees, but a strong actual interest, must have induced her, in any treaty, to have stipulated for a confirmation of these grants, the annulling of which would have created a just claim for a large amount upon the treasury of that country.

It must be clear, therefore, from the language of the negotiators, both before and after the signature of the treaty, which has been quoted in the beginning of this report, corroborated by what was called for both by the interest and honor of Spain, that the confirmation of these grants was an object of high importance to that power, and that she thought this object was attained by the treaty. If, therefore, the language is at all doubtful, according to the just reasoning of the Supreme Court, hereinbefore quoted, the words of the condition on which the cession was made must be construed in the sense in which it is understood by Spain, and honor and justice require that the condition should be fulfilled.

If the opinion of the undersigned had been called for before the decision of the Supreme Court, in the case of Foster and Elam vs. Nelson, he would have said that the words, "shall be ratified and confirmed," even taking the English version for the text, as used in the treaty, import an actual, not a future confirmation; because, when such words are used by the body having the power to do the act, and the words are not coupled with any condition or limitation as to time, they then operate in presenti, and take effect at once. Here there is no doubt that the President and Senate had a right by treaty to confirm the grants; the Supreme Court have said so, when they declare, that if the words had been are confirmed, that they would have repealed the law of 1804, which annulled those grants; but, since that decision, and the other in the case of Arredondo, the undersigned is bound to consider the eighth article in the treaty as an obligation upon the faith of the country, which can only be fulfilled by an act confirming the bona fide grants in question.

It may not be improper to add, as coming within the spirit of the resolution, that, on many of the tracts in question, settlements were made subsequent to the dates of the grants, and that the settlers have received donations of their lands from the United States. The confirmation of the grants, therefore, to the original grantees would create great distress and confusion by disturbing the possessions of the settlers; to avoid which the grantees, it is understood, would willingly agree to relinquish their claim to all such settlements as may have been made on their tracts, respectively, on receiving a confirmation of their title to the residue, and an equivalent in lands of the United States, in the State of Louisiana, for the lands of which they may have been deprived by the confirmation of settlement rights.

The letter of Mr. Tacon, the minister of Spain, dated the 24th of October, 1829, annexed to this report, will show to the House of Representatives the light in which the question of these grants is viewed by the Spanish government. The list to which that letter refers was, before the undersigned came into the department, transmitted to an agent who was then despatched to Cuba to obtain the originals, and cannot now be furnished; but the annexed list of the claims filed before the commissioners for the land office west of Pearl river, it is supposed, will give an idea of the quantity of land that may be claimed under these grants. There were also several Spanish grants and confirmations made after 1803, east of Pearl river and west of the Perdido, the number of which cannot be ascertained, but they are not supposed to be considerable. No formal answer having been given by the late Secretary of State to this letter of the Spanish minister, application has frequently been renewed to the undersigned who, in an informal manner, has urged the necessity of delay until the legislature should definitely have acted on the case. For this delay the pendency of the suits above mentioned, and of the application of the claimants to Congress, afforded a motive that seems to have been deemed satisfactory; but now the undersigned cannot much longer avoid giving an official answer, the character whereof must depend on the proceedings of Congress, which he has no doubt will be consistent with justice and a faithful regard to national engagements.

The undersigned, Secretary of State, most respectfully offers to the consideration of the House the draught of a bill which would effect the purpose of satisfying the claimants under the Spanish grants, and quieting the possessions of those who may hold under donations, confirmations, or sales, made by the United States, of lands comprehended in the said Spanish grants.

All which is respectfully submitted, with the expression of a decided opinion that the eighth article of the treaty between the United States and Spain, if it did not confirm the grants and sales in question, at least created an express obligation upon the former power to confirm them; that this obligation has not been fulfilled, and that its performance ought no longer to be delayed. The scrupulous regard we have hitherto paid to our engagements with foreign powers has not only established our character for fidelity and honor, but is indispensable when we wish to enforce our claims upon other nations. To suffer it to be sullied by a reasonable doubt would be a serious injury at all times, and in the present instance would operate injuriously on the negotiations in which the Executive is now engaged to procure indemnity for injuries that have been inflicted on our commerce.

"All these grants have been made by the Spanish government since the right of Spain to Louisiana has ceased to exist, and are therefore void. Nor are they entitled to the benefit of the proviso contained in the 14th section of the act of Congress, passed on the 26th of March, 1804, in favor of settlers, because the grantee was not a settler at the date of the grant, nor has been since, except in No. 2, which cannot be confirmed, because the quantity exceeds that allowed by law, and the claimant has other claims coming within the proviso of the law. Some of these grants refer to ancient grants or concessions, and purport to be made in consideration thereof. No. 1 refers to a grant said to have been made by the French government, and destroyed at the time of the conquest of the Floridas by the Spaniards. These claims cannot derive any validity from the grants or concessions said to have been anciently made, because they do not appear; nor from the subsequent confirmation, because at the time of confirmation Spain had no right to Louisiana; nor can the subsequent grant be any evidence of a former grant or concession, because the evidence adduced, if any, to prove that there was a former grant, was before a tribunal which had no cognizance of the case.

"It is certainly remarkable that Spain should not have confirmed, until the year 1807, a grant said to have been destroyed at the conquest of the Floridas, after a rightful possession of the country for twenty years. If any reference in a grant, void in itself, were sufficient to render it valid, the whole of Louisiana might have been granted by Spain after she had transferred her right even without the control of the true proprietor.

"No. 1. A grant from the Spanish government, issued the 20th of June, 1804, by John V. Morales. This grant is void under the fourteenth section of the act of March 26, 1804, which enacts that all grants for lands within the territories ceded by the French republic to the United States by the treaty of April 30, 1803, the title whereof was, at the date of the treaty of St. Ildefonso, in the Crown, government, or nation of Spain, and every act and proceeding subsequent thereto, of whatsoever nature, towards the obtaining any grant, title, or claim to such lands, and under whatsoever authority transacted or pretended, 'should be, and the same were thereby declared to be, and to have been from the beginning, null, void, and of no effect in law or equity.' Nor can it derive any relief from the equity of the provisoes contained in the said section which require, first, that the grantee should be an actual settler upon the lands so granted; second, that such grant should not secure to the grantee more than one mile square of land, together with such other and further quantity as heretofore had been allowed for the wife and family of such actual settler agreeably to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government. It is further to be remarked in relation to the merits of this claim—first, that, from the date of the application for the purchase, the Spanish authorities, in Louisiana, must have been apprised of the cession of the province by France to the United States, and could not in good faith make grants of lands, and especially such excessive sales, after such knowledge; secondly, the title in form was not issued until the 20th of June, 1804—more than fourteen months after the cession of the province, and six months after its actual delivery to the United States."

"REGISTER C.—The claims embraced in register C are such as, in the opinion of the Commissioner, ought not to be confirmed by the government of the United States. This opinion is founded upon the following considerations: 1st. The government of the United States claim an absolute property in all that country comprehended within the boundaries of Louisiana in virtue of her treaty with France. 2d. It is believed that the Spanish government herself considered that treaty as divesting her of all right, title, and interest in the soil. That such was the understanding of that government is inferred from the following fact: The course which she pursued in the distribution of her unappropriated territory posterior to her treaty with France was materially and essentially different from what it had been prior to that time. In all her grants made anterior to that epoch the number of arpents given was apportioned to the situation and circumstances of the applicant. Patents for large extent of country had been issued; but they were granted for specific purposes, and were defeasible upon a non-compliance with certain prescribed conditions. So far as comes within the knowledge of the Commissioner, sales of land were never made in the above-mentioned country by that government until after she had ceased to be the legal owner of the soil. This departure from her known laws, usages, and customs previously adopted and invariably observed warrants the inference that that government was sensible of the illegality of her claim, and had a view only to her own emolument. The fact, also, that the King of Spain, by a special royal order in 1805, ratified and confirmed the sales made by Morales, enjoining him to make that branch of his business as profitable as possible to the coffers of the royal treasury, is an additional evidence in support of this inference. By a reference to the register it will be discovered that the patents for lands purchased from the royal treasury, at a price of estimation, generally refer to orders of survey given in the latter part of 1803, and specify the valuation per arpent. The payment of the whole amount is uniformly acknowledged in the patents. Admitting the claim of the United States to the country above mentioned to be unquestionable, (and I see no reason to doubt it,) the question then arises, how far the possession of that country by the Spanish government, after the right of the United States accrued, ought to affect those claims which were granted by the former government during the time which intervened between the purchase and the time when possession was taken by the United States. If the United States had taken possession of West Florida at the same time that they did of Louisiana west of the Mississippi, many serious injuries to individuals might have been prevented. As this was not the case, it becomes an inquiry of interest and importance whether the government is not morally bound, both by considerations of equity and policy, to make them a compensation commensurate to the injuries they may have sustained. This could be done by making them donations of any quantity of land which the government may deem just; particularly that class of claimants who have improved and cultivated their lands. They are not numerous, and, with few exceptions, their claims are moderate. It may not be impertinent also to remark that, generally speaking, they were such persons as were most liable to be deceived by the Spanish officers.

"In relation to that class of claimants who have not inhabited or cultivated their lands, which is generally the case with those who hold large claims, it appears to the commissioner that the government of the United States is not legally bound to confirm them. Nevertheless, from a variety of considerations which will doubtless enter into the decision of this question, the government may deem it politic either to confirm their claims to a certain extent or in some other way to effect a compromise with them. Their unlimited confirmation would, in the opinion of your commissioner, seriously injure many individuals, some of whom probably resided on the lands before they were surveyed for the patentees."

Mr. Tacon to Mr. Van Buren.

PHILADELPHIA, October 24, 1829.

SIR: The colonel of infantry in the armies of my august sovereign, Don Manuel Garcia Muñiz, now a resident of New Orleans, has informed me, under date of the 14th of September last, that, by decrees of the President of this Union of June 13 and July 16, of the present year, orders had been issued to offer for sale, at public vendue, certain lands in Florida as property of the United States, which comprehended a tract of fifteen thousand acres belonging to the colonel above named, and situated within the jurisdiction of St. Helena, New Feliciana, within the district of Baton Rouge; and that he had been obliged to enter the protest contained in the document hereunto annexed.

This important innovation, which would seem to affect many other individnals in the same situation with the claimant, places me under the necessity of calling the attention of the President to the serious injury which will accrue from the above-mentioned decrees to the vassals of the King, my master, and other proprietors of land granted by the legitimate authorities of his Majesty, as set forth in detail in the statement which I had the honor of addressing to you on April 11, of this year, in order that his excellency may have the goodness to take into his consideration a subject of so much importance, and to take such measures as he may think proper to cause such grants to be respected, according to the stipulations of the eighth article of the treaty of February 22, 1819.

I avail myself of this opportunity to offer you the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

God preserve you many years.

AN ACT for giving effect to the 8th article of the treaty with Spain.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all the sales, grants, and confirmations of land made by the Spanish government bona fide prior to the —— day of ———, in the year 1810, for lands lying west of the river Perdido, east of the Mississippi and south of the 31st degree of latitude, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed: Provided, That such sales, grants, or confirmations would have been valid against the King of Spain, if he had remained sovereign of the said country: And provided, also, That if the whole or any part of the lands contained in such sale, grant, or confirmation shall have been given by the United States as a donation or settlement right, or sold as public land to any other person, the sale, grant, or confirmation by the United States shall be valid, and the claimant under the Spanish sale or concession shall receive as a compensation an equal quantity of land, to be located in any of the tracts of the public land surveyed for sale in the State of Louisiana in the manner hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That no claimant shall receive the benefit of this act but those whose title was perfected during the time that Spain was in possession of the territory in which the lands lie according to the usual forms for making such titles.

* These interlineations have not been noticed in making the copy.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if the whole or any part of the lands contained in any Spanish grant herein confirmed shall have been sold, granted, or in any other manner alienated by the United States before the passage of this act, the claimant under such Spanish grant may apply to the surveyor general of the district in which the lands are situated, and, on obtaining a certificate from him of the quantity of land lying within such claimant's Spanish grant that has been so sold, granted, or alienated by the United States, countersigned by the register and receiver of the land office for such district, he shall be entitled to locate an equal quantity on any of the lands of the United States in the State of Louisiana which shall then have been surveyed for sale, and shall be entitled to a patent in the usual form for the lands so located.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1070. [1ST SESSION.

STATEMENT OF THE NUMBER AND COST OF PATENTS PREPARED AT THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE WHICH HAVE NOT BEEN SIGNED BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JUNE 21, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 19, 1832.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 11th instant in the following words: "Resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what number of patents for the public lands are now in his office which have not received the signature of the President, and what is the cost of each patent prepared for such signature," I have the honor to state that there are now in this office ten thousand five hundred and ninety patents, which have been written and recorded, and which have not yet received the signature of the President; and that the cost of each patent prepared in this office for such signature is fifty-three cents. Those prepared by persons employed out of the office cost each thirty-nine cents. The parchment, printing the same, and record for each, cost twenty-one cents; the cost of writing and recording each patent in the office is twenty-nine cents; the cost of examining the title papers, with the patent and the record, is three cents; making fifty-three cents for each patent prepared in the office.

The cost of writing, recording, and examining each patent in the office, is calculated upon the allowance of $1,000 per annum to each person engaged in that business.

It has been the practice to allow to those employed out of the office fifteen cents for writing and recording each patent; that sum, added to the cost of skin, &c., &c., as above stated, makes the whole cost thirty-nine cents for each patent written by those employed out of the office.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. JOHN C. CALHOUN, President of the Senate.

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 9, 1832.

On motion by Mr. ELLIS:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of revising the act of Congress of the 25th of April, 1812, entitled "An act for the establishment of a general land office in the department of the Treasury," so as to provide for the more speedy issuing of patents after the sales of the public lands.

Attest: WALTER LOWRIE, Secretary.

WASHINGTON, December 23, 1831.

SIR: I introduced a resolution the other day instructing the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into the expediency of so modifying the law relating to the issuing of patents from the General Land Office as not to require the signature of the President to said patents. I should be pleased to know whether, in your opinion, there would be any serious objection to dispense with the signature of the President, and if you should think he might be relieved from this onerous duty with safety to the public as well as private rights; whether any other mode or form of execution would be necessary than the signature of the Commissioner and the seal of the General Land Office. Would it be advisable to have the patents bear the teste of the President?

I should like to be informed whether patents have often been forged, and whether, under the present system of registering, there is much danger of forgery, and whether the omission of the President's signature would afford much or any greater inducement to commit this offence?

I would also beg the favor to be informed of the number of patents that are issued yearly from the office requiring the President's signature, and whether he is able to sign the patents as fast as they are required, and if not, what are the inconveniences that are experienced?

I am, sir, &c., &c.,

JONATHAN HUNT.

Hon. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner of General Land Office.

P. S.—If agreeable, I should like to have you draw the form of a bill to accomplish my object if you think favorably of it.

J. HUNT.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 27, 1831.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant has been received, and I reply to it as soon as feeble health and an unusual press of business would permit. The subject is one on which I had previously bestowed much reflection and consideration, as it is important both in magnitude and character. The necessity of some legislative action upon it arises from the great increase of sales of the public lands, and the physical impossibility of the President signing all the patents which the public service demands, if he devotes due attention to the other important duties of his office. The number of patents which will be required to be issued in the year 1832 for lands sold, will exceed forty thousand; and if no material change in the disposition of the national domain should be made by Congress, the annual demand therefor, after the next year, will be about thirty thousand, covering the sales of two million four hundred thousand acres. It is probable the sales will exceed this estimate, as experience has proved that they increase with the population of the valley of the Mississippi.

I have not been able to perceive any serious objections to dispensing with the signature of the President to patents for lands, nor any inconvenience to the public or to individuals by relieving him from that laborious duty. This office has not been advised of any forgeries of patents since the commencement of the government, although a few have been detected in the title papers on which patents are founded. The present system of recording or registering patents may be considered a perfect check to any such forgeries and furnishing the most ample means of detection.

The subject of your letter was brought to the attention of this office by a resolution of the Senate at the close of the last session of Congress. No time was then afforded for consideration previous to the adjournment of that body sine die. But the subject was afterwards presented to the late Secretary of the Treasury, with the proposition to supersede the signature of the President with that of that officer. This was objected to by Mr. Ingham on the ground that the duties of his office were then as laborious as sound health and persevering industry would accomplish. Soon after the present Secretary of the Treasury entered upon the duties of his department I brought the subject to his consideration, when he suggested the expedient of requiring of the Secretary of State the duty of signing patents instead of the President. On making known this view of the subject, and the proposition of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the Secretary of State, I received for answer that he would perform any duty which might be imposed upon him, but that the labors which were then required of him personally were sufficient to occupy all his time and attention, and that he could not perform such additional service without neglecting some of his appropriate and important duties. On presenting the subject to the President he declined expressing any wish or opinion thereon, but declared his intention of performing all the duties which might be required of him under the Constitution or by the laws of Congress.

The plan proposed in the enclosed bill, which has been drawn at your request, presents to my mind the simplest and most effectual mode of patenting the public lands, by which the President will be relieved from the arduous duty of affixing his signature, and, at the same time, guarding the rights of the public as effectually and securing those of individuals as perfectly as the practice heretofore adopted. The additional expense to the government will be only three hundred and fifty dollars per annum, as the recorder (as is now the practice of the Commissioner) will affix his signature to nearly all the patents before and after office hours, devoting the time allotted to public business to other duties. This arrangement will secure to the parties interested the possession of their patents with the least possible delay, and to the public a more prompt discharge of the duties of the land office.

I am, &c.,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. JONATHAN HUNT, House of Representatives.

ON CLAIMS OF SETTLERS AT THE OLD MINES IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JULY 2, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 27, 1832.

SIR: I have the honor to return the bill for the relief of the thirty-one inhabitants of the Old Mines, enclosed in your letter of the 23d instant, together with an extract from the reports of the board of commissioners upon their claims, by which you will perceive that there is a considerable discrepancy between the names of the claimants as given in the bill from those mentioned by the commissioners.

As the land is claimed under but one concession and survey of the whole tract, I would think it advisable in making the survey and issuing the patent, to recognize it as but one claim, leaving it to the parties interested to make the subdivision of it according to their several interests, and thus relieve this office from the responsibility of investigating and deciding upon the separate interests of the grantees, their representatives, and assignees, those being points which ought always to be left to the judicial tribunals of the country for settlement. I therefore enclose the draught of a bill which will, I think, meet the views of the committee and of the claimants, as well as those of this office.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND BETWEEN THE MISSISSIPPI AND PERDIDO RIVERS, DERIVED FROM THE SPANISH GOVERNMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JULY 11, 1832.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the report of the Secretary of State of the 12th of June, (see No. 1071, page 505,) in answer to the resolution of this House of February 7, 1832, upon the subject of the final adjustment of all claims to land derived from the former government of Spain and its local authorities in that part of West Florida between the Mississippi and Perdido rivers, from the date of the Louisiana treaty of 1803 to the proclamation of President Madison in 1810, &c., reported:

That no sufficient reason is perceived why the resolution itself was referred to the State Department, or why that department, for the first time within the recollection of the committee, was called upon to give its opinion upon the subject of the public lands, over which it has no control and which, by the laws of the land, are submitted to the care and superintendence of the Treasury Department.

The language of the resolution is in itself somewhat peculiar; it calls upon the Secretary of State for his opinion of the expediency of providing by law for the final adjustment of all claims to land derived from the former government of Spain and its local authorities in that part of West Florida between the Mississippi and Perdido rivers, from the date of the Louisiana treaty of 1803.

The resolution assumes that to be a geographical fact which is not true. The government of the United States has always, from the date of the treaty with France in 1803, by which Louisiana as then claimed and held by France was transferred to the United States, contended that the country between the Mississippi and the Perdido formed a part of Louisiana, and as such was acquired by said treaty with France.

Can it be the interest of the United States, at this day, by her legislative resolves and enactments, to sanction the absurd pretensions of Spain, by which she sets up claim to this territory in violation of her treaty of retrocession to France of Louisiana? Is it now contemplated by any one that we shall retrace our steps and acknowledge that by the treaty with France in 1803 the United States did not acquire the territory between these rivers, and that all the acts of the government of the United States in expelling the Spanish power from it were acts of lawless usurpation upon the rights of Spain?

The Secretary of State, in his report, admits "that the government of the United States having, by several acts, asserted their right to all the territory between the Mississippi and Perdido rivers, from the date of the treaty of 1803, it would be improper to contradict the asserted right, and unnecessary to support it."

The committee concur with the Secretary of State in the first member of the sentence but dissent from the last. They admit "that it would be improper to contradict that asserted right," but that it is highly necessary, to preserve the honor of the government of the United States and to protect its public domain against unjust and fraudulent speculation, that this asserted right should be maintained; for if it cannot be maintained, then, indeed, has this government been guilty of a most wanton outrage upon the rights of Spain, and grossly violated the public faith.

The committee have not time now to go into the arguments by which to prove that all the territory between the Mississippi and Perdido rivers formed a part of Louisiana, and as such was transferred or retroceded by Spain to France by the treaty of St. Ildefonso, and by France ceded to the United States in 1803. This question has been discussed by abler pens, and the action of the government of the United States has been predicated upon its truth and correctness ever since the date of the treaty with France.

Assuming the above to be true, the Secretary of State proceeds to say: "It is equally true that the Spanish government, from the time the transfer of Louisiana took place, put a different construction upon it; maintained that it did not include any part of the Floridas; refused to deliver the possession of this territory when the rest of the ceded country was transferred to the French; held it when we received the country from France, and kept the whole until 1810, when a part of it was wrested from them by an insurrection, and the residue until 1813, when it was forcibly taken by the troops of the United States; and that, during all that period, she exercised an undisturbed jurisdiction over this territory, and disposed, by sale, of sundry tracts of land, as well to citizens of the United States as to Spanish subjects. For these sales the proper officer of the crown received a consideration in money, caused the lands to be surveyed, and gave to the purchasers titles in form"

These facts, as here stated, and upon full investigation they will be found to be true, establish upon the Spanish government bad faith in withholding and attempting wrongfully to dispose of a part of the territory which, by the treaty of St. Ildefonso, had been by her ceded to France. Upon this wrongful act of Spain are based the grants of land to individuals, which the Secretary of State, in this, his report, calls upon the Congress of the United States to confirm, upon the ground that the 8th article of the treaty between the United States and Spain, of 1819, by which the United States acquired East and West Florida, "if it did not confirm the grants and sales in question, at least created an express obligation upon the former power to confirm them;" that this obligation has not been fulfilled, and that its performance ought no longer to be delayed. The scrupulous regard we have hitherto paid to our engagements with foreign powers has not only established our character for fidelity and honor, but is indispensable when we wish to enforce our claims upon other nations. To suffer it to be sullied by a reasonable doubt would be a serious injury at all times, and in the present instance would operate injuriously on the negotiations in which the Executive is now engaged, to procure indemnity for injuries that have been inflicted upon our commerce.

Is this charge of bad faith, of a failure to fulfil our obligations with Spain in reference to these land claims, true? The Committee on Public Lands believe it is not well founded, and it was a desire that the legislature of the nation might have an opportunity of expressing its opinion and of relieving itself from this charge of want of fidelity to Spain in this particular, that the Committee on Public Lands desired that the report of the Secretary of State might be referred.

What is this question when stripped of its diplomacy? The government of the United States has always contended that Spain violated the treaty and wrongfully withheld this territory, rightfully the property of the United States. This is a position conceded by the Secretary of State. While Spain was thus in the wrongful possession, in bad faith, she sold the lands of the United States to whomsoever would purchase and at any price she could obtain. And, forsooth, because the United States have not confirmed these claims, fraudulently obtained against treaty stipulations, she is charged by her own minister with having failed to fulfil her obligations to Spain, entered into by the treaty of 1819, which treaty, with all due respect to the opinion of the honorable Secretary of State, the Committee on Public Lands undertake to say has no relation or connexion with these claims, does not, by its terms, confirm them or impose an obligation of confirmation; nor was it within the intention of the high contracting parties to that treaty that they should be confirmed.

Are we to be told, at this time of day, that our title to the territory between the Mississippi and Perdido was not valid until the treaty of 1819? And that by that treaty we purchased that part of Louisiana by the name of "all the territories which belong to him (his Catholic Majesty) situated to the eastward of the Mississippi, known by the name of East and West Florida?"

What was "East and West Florida" in 1819? Did it include any part of the territory between the Mississippi and the Perdido? Had not the United States, under and by virtue of the treaty between France and Spain, and between the United States and France, long prior to 1819, taken possession of the same by expelling the Spanish power therefrom? And who doubted, in 1819, her right both of jurisdiction and soil? And who, till now, ever supposed that the United States, by treaty of 1819, imposed upon herself the obligation to confirm these grants made by Spain in violation of her solemn treaty stipulations?

To show the sense of the American government upon this subject, it will be sufficient to refer to the 14th section of an act of Congress, entitled "An act for erecting Louisiana into two territories, and providing for the temporary government thereof," approved.—(See Land Laws, page 503.) By this act it is declared "that all grants of lands within the territories ceded by the French republic to the United States by the treaty of April 30, 1803, the title whereof was, at the date of the treaty of St. Ildefonso, (October 1, 1800,) in the crown, government, or nation of Spain. And every act and proceeding subsequent thereto, of whatsoever nature, towards the obtaining any grant, title, or claim to such lands, and under whatsoever authority transacted or pretended, be and the same are hereby declared null and void and of no effect in law or equity: Provided, nevertheless, That anything in this section shall not be construed to make null and void any bona fide grant made, agreeably to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government, to an actual settler on the lands so granted for himself, his wife and family, or to make null and void any act or proceeding done by an actual settler, agreeably to the laws, usages, or the customs of the Spanish government, to obtain a grant for lands actually settled on by the person or persons claiming title thereto, if such settlement in either case was actually made prior to December 20, 1803: And provided further, That such grant shall not secure to such grantee or his assigns more than one mile square of land, together with such other and further quantity as heretofore hath been allowed to the wife and family of such actual settler, agreeably to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government," &c.

In the face of this law, and in violation of its provisions, citizens of the United States and others continued to make purchases of the local authorities of West Florida of tracts of land between the river Perdido and the river Mississippi, up to the year 1810. The size of the claims vary from 60 arpents to 120,000 arpents, (or acres,) a list of which is appended to the report of the Secretary of State, and amount to near 600,000 arpents.

It is because the Congress of the United States has not recognized the validity of these claims, granted without authority and purchased against law, that we are now informed by the officer having charge of the foreign affairs of this government, that the United States have not fulfilled her treaty stipulations with Spain, and a longer delay to confirm their void claims will operate injuriously on the negotiations, in which the Executive is now engaged, to procure indemnity for injuries that have been inflicted upon our commerce.

The committee would regret that any circumstance should operate injuriously upon any pending negotiations with Spain; nevertheless, they can but believe that it would be more injurious both to the honor and the interest of the United States to acknowledge the validity of their claims under the pretence that such an obligation is imposed by the treaty of 1819, and thereby admit that, by the treaty of 1803, we did not acquire this territory, and that all the subsequent acts of the United States were violations of the rights of Spain, than to fail in any negotiation for indemnity for commercial spoliations, for the reasons apprehended by the Secretary of State.

If we shall fail to obtain the indemnity sought, for the reasons alleged, it will only be a refusal on the part of Spain to do justice upon a false pretence; while to confirm these grants for the reasons alleged, would be an admission on the part of the government of the United States of an outrage committed upon the government and rights of Spain for which no indemnity had ever been rendered and for which no just apology can be made.

The committee cannot, upon any principle, recommend a confirmation of these grants. No obligation to do so is imposed by the treaty of 1803 or 1819, by the laws of nations, or by any legislation of Congress.

Can it be pretended that these claims are better understood at this day than in 1804? Have the public functionaries at this time more accurate information upon the questions involved than had those who were engaged in the purchase of Louisiana in 1803? Or will it be contended that the lapse of time has stripped these claims of their illegality, and purified the fraud with which they were originally tainted?

The reasoning of the Secretary of State, drawn from the correspondence between the minister of the Spanish government and the then Secretary of State, and from the peculiar language employed in the Spanish version of the treaty, may or may not be sound when applied to the case of a Spanish grant for land lying and being within the limits of the territory acquired by the treaty of 1819. No doubt is entertained by the committee but that an obligation is imposed by that treaty upon the United States to confirm "all the grants of land made before January 24, 1818, by his Catholic Majesty, or by his lawful authorities, in said territories ceded by his Majesty to the United States," "to the persons in possession of the lands, to the same extent that the same grants would be valid if the territories had remained under the dominion of his Catholic Majesty." What territories? East and West Florida. Not the territory ceded by Spain to France, and by France to the United States in 1803, and of which the United States were then, (viz., 1819,) and had for years prior been, in possession, exercising all the attributes of undisputed sovereignty.

The Secretary of State is of opinion that, inasmuch as these grants between the Perdido and the Mississippi were all dated anterior to the 24th January, 1818, were completed in their form, made by the proper officer, and for a valuable consideration, and lie in that territory which, when in the possession of Spain, was by them called West Florida, and are situated to the east of the Mississippi, they come, therefore, in every point, within the stipulations of the eighth article of the treaty of 1819. The committee do not concur with the Secretary in this opinion, because it involves an abandonment of the rights of the United States to the territory between the Mississippi and the Perdido, as acquired by the treaty of 1803 with France, and admits that one of the objects of the treaty of 1819 between Spain and the United States was to obtain from Spain a cession of territory to which she had then no right, and a part of which, at that day, constituted a portion of one of the sovereign States of this Union. This conclusion is at war with the assumption with which the Secretary of State set out in the first part of his report, viz: that the government of the United States having, by several acts, asserted their right to all the territory between the Mississippi and the Perdido, under the treaty of 1803, it would be improper to contradict that asserted right.

The committee do not feel themselves called upon to discuss the question whether the United States is the more or less bound by the English or the Spanish version of the treaty of 1819, inasmuch as they are of opinion that that treaty, by its objects, purposes, or its words, does not embrace the country between the Perdido and the Mississippi. Had the distinguished statesman who negotiated that treaty on the part of the United States been told that he was engaged in a negotiation with the government of Spain for a part of the then State of Lousiana, it is not difficult to conjecture what would have been his answer.

The committee will not do the then administration so much injustice as to suppose they would negotiate a treaty with Spain for the avowed purpose of the acquisition of East and West Florida, in terms designed to conceal the important fact from the Congress of the United States, that by said treaty they were bound to confirm claims to near 600,000 acres of land which had, by an act of solemn legislation, been declared null and void, and which originated in a violation of the treaty of St. Ildefonso, and of that with France in 1803.

The Committee on Public Lands, inasmuch as the Secretary of State has intimated that the nature of the answer which he is to give to the official note of the Spanish minister of February 22, 1829, complaining of a proclamation issued by the President of the United States ordering into market, by public sale, certain lands in Florida as "an important innovation," will depend upon the proceedings of Congress, have deemed it their duty to reassert the claim of the United States so long acquiesced in, viz: that no part of the territory between the Mississippi and the Perdido lies within Florida, and that the "important innovation" complained of by the Spanish minister does not in fact exist. They therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the United States are not bound by the treaty to confirm the titles to any lands between the Perdido and the Mississippi rivers other than such claims as are or may be excepted from the operation of the 14th section of the act of Congress entitled "An act erecting Louisiana into two Territories, and providing for the temporary government thereof."

Resolved, That the 8th article of the treaty with Spain of 1819 has no reference or binding effect upon grants of land made by the Spanish authorities after December 20, 1803, lying between the Mississippi and the Perdido rivers, and that these claims must depend upon the provisions of the treaty of 1803 between the United States and France, and the legislation of Congress for their confirmation or rejection.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1073. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE MANNER OF CALCULATING THE NET PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JULY 12, 1832.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 10, 1832.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a report from the Comptroller of the Treasury, dated the 9th instant, containing the information required by a resolution of the Senate of the 6th instant, relative to the deduction of certain expenditures in calculating the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. PRESIDENT of the Senate of the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Comptroller's Office, July 9, 1832.

SIR: I have received the resolution of the Senate referred by you to this office, in which the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to inform that body "whether, in calculating the net proceeds of the sales of public lands, the annual expenditures for the following objects, or either of them, will be deducted from the gross amount of sales:

"1st. For surveying the public lands.

"2d. For the salaries of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, his clerks, messenger, and all the expenses accruing at his office.

"3d. Salaries of surveyors general and their clerks.

"4th. Salaries, commissions, and per diem allowance to registers and receivers.

"5th. For examining land offices.

"6th. For agents, managers, &c., of live-oak plantations.

"7th. For courts and commissions adjudicating land titles.

"8th. For recorders of land titles.

"9th. For Indian annuities, schools, &c., in consideration of lands purchased from Indians.

"10th. For holding treaties with Indians to extinguish their title.

"11th. For removing Indians from the lands sold to the United States."

As regards these inquiries, I have the honor to state that the act of May 3, 1822, entitled "An act to provide for paying to the State of Missouri three per cent. of the net proceeds arising from the sale of the public lands within the same," directs the Secretary of the Treasury, from time to time, and whenever the quarterly accounts of public moneys of the several land offices in said State be settled, "to pay three per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of lands of the United States lying within the State of Missouri, which, since the first day of January, 1821, have been, or hereafter may be, sold by the United States, after deducting all expenses incidental to the same," &c.

This law contains the purport of the several laws authorizing the payment of the three and five per cent. funds for roads, canals, levees, &c.

In ascertaining the net proceeds of lands sold, none of the expenses embraced in the specifications above noted have been considered as incident to their sale, and of course have not been deducted from the aggregate amount of sales, except those stated in the 4th and 5th specifications, viz: "salaries, commissions, and per diem allowance to registers and receivers, and payments for examining land offices."

It may, however, be proper to state, that in addition to these expenses there have been deducted from the gross amount of sales, payments made for stationery, printing, book-cases, transportation of moneys, criers and clerks at the public sales, &c.; in short, all expenses necessarily incident to the sale of the lands, "receiving, safe-keeping, and transmitting the money to the treasury of the United States."

The expense of examining land offices, mentioned in the fifth specification, has for some time been discontinued.

The resolution is herewith returned.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

JOS. ANDERSON, Comptroller.

Hon. LOUIS MCLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

OPERATIONS OF THE LAND SYSTEM DURING THE LAST YEAR.

COMMUNICATED TO CONGRESS, WITH THE REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON THE FINANCES, DECEMBER 6, 1832.

REPORT FROM THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 3, 1832.

SIR: In presenting for your examination and the consideration of the government a review of the operations of this office for the last year, I have to state that the sales of the public lands have not been equal to those of the preceding annual period. This deficiency was not anticipated, and has resulted from causes over which the officers charged with this branch of the public service, with the most active vigilance and industry, could have no control. The inadequacy of the means afforded to the surveyors general to supply the returns of surveys and the township plats in every surveying district of the United States, with the exception of that of Alabama, together with the Indian war on the northern frontier of Illinois and the western part of the Territory of Michigan, and the general prevalence of the Asiatic cholera in those places to which emigration tended, and from which it usually emanates, has not only interrupted the land sales entirely in some districts for a portion of the year, but has materially retarded those in others. These unexpected impediments could not have been foreseen at the date of my last report, nor prevented by any efforts within the competency of any officers charged with the superintendence of the sales of the public domain.

The annexed statement, marked A, exhibits the periods to which the monthly accounts of the registers and receivers have been rendered, with the admitted balances of cash in the hands of the several receivers at the date of their last monthly accounts, and the periods to which their last quarterly accounts have been rendered.

The accompanying statement, marked B, shows the quantity of lands sold, the amount of purchase money, designating such portion as has been received for sales made prior to July 1, 1820, the amount received in cash, in forfeited land stock, in military land scrip, the aggregate amount of receipts, and the amount paid into the United States treasury in each State and Territory during the year 1831, and the half year and third quarter of 1832.

The embarrassments and impediments which have prevented the several surveying departments from performing all the duties required by law, and which were stated in my last annual communication, still continue, to the great injury of the public service and to many individuals interested in the prompt discharge of official duty. Until some further provision shall be made by law to enable the surveyors general to prepare and make returns of the surveys in their respective districts, and the township plats to the proper registers of land offices, and to this office, these evils will accumulate with increased injury to all concerned. Surveys of nearly four hundred townships have been made, the township plats of which have not been returned to this office, and a greater number not furnished the land offices. I would therefore again recommend that such additional provisions be made by Congress for the surveyors' offices as may be sufficient to admit a prompt discharge of public duty. It should also be remarked that by the provisions of the act of the 5th of April last, permitting entries, in certain cases, of quarter sections, the office duty of the respective surveyors has been greatly increased. The continued illness of the surveyor general of Florida, and the sickness of the clerks in his office, have prevented almost entirely any surveys in that Territory during the past year.

In connexion with the subject of the public surveys I would recommend that some provision be made for the survey of the public domain, and the resurvey thereof where gross errors have been committed; for the survey of the principal meridian and base lines, and for private land claims in all cases where the compensation allowed by law therefor is sufficient to meet the expenses of the same. This office has already been advised that many such cases now exist, and, in consequence thereof, the surveys of the same have been suspended. It is also respectfully submitted to the wisdom of Congress to require the several surveyor's offices, and the records and documents belonging thereto, to be kept in fire-proof buildings. Of the necessity of which, and of the importance of carefully preserving the records of the public surveys, and the papers and documents connected therewith, no reasonable doubt can exist. They form the basis of all the subsequent operations of this office, and of the respective land offices, not only as to the sales and disposition of the public lands, but also of private land claims.

In September last a circular letter was addressed to the several surveyors general, requesting them to report to this office the amount of arrears in their respective offices, and an estimate of the amount of labor and expense, to bring the same up to the period of current duties; a reply to which has not been transmitted by all, but so soon as received will be made the subject of a future report.

The act of the last session of Congress providing for the issuing of scrip to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia continental and State lines and navy of the revolutionary war, to the amount of three hundred thousand acres, has been executed as promptly as the means of this office would admit, and to the neglect of other duties. Warrants covering about forty thousand acres only remain to be satisfied, and these await the production of the necessary title papers, proofs of heirship, and other documentary evidence from the parties interested. In the two preceding reports which I have had the honor of presenting to the Treasury Department, I have faithfully stated the arrears of this office, and the physical impossibility of discharging all the duties required of it by law without additional assistance provided for by the legislative power. The appropriations of the last session of Congress for extra clerk hire have been of great service and benefit, but have only enabled me to perform the current duties. The arrears yet remain, and have increased with the increased labor thrown upon the office by the numerous acts of the last session. To what crisis it may approach without the necessary aid for the discharge of public duty it is not difficult to conjecture. More than three million of people are interested in the most prompt attention, the vigilant action, and the accurate operations of this office. It is in the will of Congress whether so large a portion of the United States shall be deprived of that justice which by law they are entitled to.

All which is respectfully submitted.

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. LOUIS MCLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, General Land Office, November 30, 1832.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1076. [2D SESSION.

IN RELATION TO THE REMOVAL OF THE OFFICE OF THE SURVEYOR GENERAL OF PUBLIC LANDS SOUTH OF TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 20, 1832.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Mississippi, November 13, 1832.

SIR: It is proper, I think, that I should mention that I have understood that a few days before the time expired for the late principal deputy surveyors of Louisiana to act as such, (April 30, 1831,) some of them extended the time to one or two years longer, for the deputies to complete their contracts which had expired, or had been delayed from various causes. Other deputies had entirely failed to comply with their contracts, and others have returns at this office, which have been examined and found too defective to be approved.

Several have not yet presented their returns, but say they have accounts to be settled. Some of the surveys were made as far back as 1823, 1826, and so on. The settled accounts have been transferred to the surveyor's office of Louisiana, with all the sketches and connected plans, and, indeed, all the means necessary to a proper investigation of these surveys. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that there is no obligation on this office to continue these examinations. It may continue for years in this way; and while I am examining and paying them here, the surveyor general of Louisiana may be at the same thing, or ordering the same townships to be surveyed. The returns in many cases have not been presented to either office, or if to one, it cannot be known at the other, because there are but few regular written contracts filed in either office. There may be written contracts in some instances, but the time for completing the work has long ago expired.

I therefore respectfully suggest the question of propriety of passing an act immediately requiring that all accounts for surveys in Louisiana, which have not been approved at this office by the 1st of January next, shall be presented with the field-notes and plats to the office of the surveyor general of Louisiana for settlement.

This arrangement would be most convenient for the parties concerned, and is necessary for the safety of the government.

With great respect,

GIDEON FITZ, Surveyor of Public Lands south of Tennessee.

Hon. JUDGE BLACK, Senator in Congress, Washington City.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 9, 1833.

SIR: Agreeably to the request contained in your letter of the 7th instant, I have the honor to present to the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate my views respecting the enclosed "bill to remove the office of the surveyor general of public lands south of Tennessee, and directing the returns of surveys of land in the State of Louisiana to be made to the office of the surveyor general of public lands for that State."

The removal of the surveyor's office is very inexpedient at this time, for the following reasons:

The only difficulties now existing in respect to the surveys in Mississippi arise from the erroneous surveys in the Washington district. This district comprises the great mass of the old foreign claims and donations recognized by the United States. In their survey numerous errors have been committed; indeed, so little dependence can be placed upon the existing plats, that the office has been compelled for many years to suspend almost entirely the issuing of patents for the purchased tracts interspersed among the confirmed claims: and before these claims can be recognized as accurate, it is necessary that the surveyor general should make a critical comparison of those plats with the field-notes in his office, and with the original papers and records of the board of commissioners who adjudicated these private claims; these records and papers are by law placed in the custody of the register of the land office for the district whose office is kept within one hundred and fifty yards of the surveyor's office, and the surveyor general can at any moment examine any of the papers. The old Spanish archives of that section of the country, to which also it is very probable that frequent reference will have to be made, are kept in the city of Natchez, only six miles from the surveyor's office. In making this examination of the township plats, it is also necessary that the surveyor general should at any moment have the means of ascertaining the particular tracts of public lands which have been sold by the United States; and unless the surveyor general have the power of making these comparisons with the documents in the register's office, it will be utterly impracticable for him either to know how far the existing work is incorrect, or the nature of the corrections required, or to ascertain the accuracy of any resurveys which he may order. Should the surveyor's office be removed from Washington before this work of examination and correction is completed, it will occasion great delay in its execution, and in a great measure deprive the surveyor general of the use of those papers which it is all important should be referred to during its progress. The necessity of the removal of the surveyor's office at this time is not apparent; the work to be performed in the new cession is simple in its character, there not being a single private claim in that section of country, and the necessary instructions can be as easily given from Washington as from Jackson. The place where the deputies receive their payments for the checks of the surveyor general is now only six miles from his office, and it is at this place (Natchez) that the surveyors will most generally make their equipments for the field. And as there is nothing in the law establishing the surveyor's office for Mississippi which requires it to be kept at Washington, it is in the power of the President, whenever he thinks the public interests require its removal, to direct it to be kept at such other place as he may direct.

An additional reason for continuing the surveyor's office in its present location is found in the fact that the register of the land office at Washington has been directed by the Secretary of the Treasury to make a revision and comparison of his books with the township plats, in order to the preparation of an entire new set of plats, which are indispensable to the public service, and this duty requires the most frequent intercourse between his office and that of the surveyor.

In reference to the 2d section of the bill, I have to remark that, on the creation of the State of Louisiana into a separate surveying district, by the act of March 3, 1831, the department made it the duty of the surveyor of Mississippi to continue to attend to the settlement of all accounts for public surveys in Louisiana, contracted for, either by him or his predecessors, and remaining to be paid for—a course which was suggested by every consideration of expediency and propriety. The great mass of the accounts have been so settled. Accounts amounting to about $10,000 remain to be produced and settled. The surveyor intimates, in the accompanying letter to Judge Black, that he has transferred all the means necessary to the settlement of the outstanding accounts to the surveyor of Louisiana. This should not have been done, as it was not contemplated by the instructions from the department, which required that the surveyor should transfer only such evidences as were connected with the settled accounts.

Under all the circumstances, I am of opinion that it will not now be expedient to make it the duty of the surveyor of Louisiana to settle the outstanding accounts, as contemplated by the second section of the bill. And I would beg leave to suggest to the committee that, whenever the department shall deem it expedient to cause the transfer to be made, it can be effected without any further legislative act.

The bill and accompanying papers are herewith returned.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 22, 1832.

Mr. ASHLEY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jean François Hertzog, reported:

That, according to the statements of the petitioner, corroborated by the affidavits of two respectable witnesses, he, prior to the 20th December, 1803, settled upon and cultivated a certain tract of unappropriated land, situate in the parish of Natchitoches, Louisiana, on the left bank of Little river; that he has uninterruptedly continued to occupy and cultivate the same up to the date of his petition; that, in the year 1812 or 1813 he, the petitioner, filed with the register of the public lands and the receiver of public moneys, acting as a board of commissioners at Opelousas, a notice of his claim, but not having been well informed in the routine of land business, he omitted to furnish all the proof necessary to obtain from the commissioners a favorable report in his case.

The foregoing facts being established to the satisfaction of the committee, a bill is herewith reported for the relief of the claimant.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1078. [2D SESSION.

RELATIVE TO THE CREATION OF ADDITIONAL LAND OFFICES IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 25, 1832.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 25, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 13th instant, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, was duly received, with a copy of a bill, reported to the Senate on the 10th instant, for the creation of new land offices in the late Choctaw purchase, and for the more convenient organization of the land districts in the State of Mississippi.

In consequence of the illness of the Commissioner, the duty of replying to your communication has devolved on myself.

I have the honor to remark that, since the introduction of the bill into the Senate, it has been understood at this office that the provisions of the late treaty with the Chickasaw tribe of Indians in Mississippi stipulate that the proceeds arising from the sale of the lands are to be paid over to that nation of Indians. This provision of that treaty has suggested to the department the propriety and expediency of preserving the entireness of that cession, with a view to simplifying the operations of the government under the treaty, and to make them more intelligible to the parties interested in the proceeds of the sales.

With these views, it is respectfully proposed that the boundaries of the "Northwestern district" proposed in the bill be modified as follows, viz: to include such portion of the land ceded to the United States by the treaties made and concluded with the Choctaw tribe of Indians, near Doak's Stand, on the 18th day of October, 1820, and at Dancing Rabbit creek, on the 27th day of September, 1830, as is situated north of the line dividing townships nineteen and twenty, and west of the line dividing ranges ten and eleven east.

In a report from the department respecting the boundaries of the proposed districts, made at the late session of Congress, it was proposed to square off the zig-zag boundary of the old Choctaw district, by making it include on the north all the land up to the dividing line between townships nineteen and twenty, and making the line between ranges six and seven east its eastern boundary. These views were approved by the Senate's bill. Since then, the surveys of the new cession have been made, and it has been reported by the surveyor general that the new surveys do not close, as it was expected they would, on the old lines, and that there are fractional sections bearing the same numbers in the same fractional township on either side of the old line; hence, if the lands on both sides of the line are made salable at one and the same office, there will be a constant liability to commit errors in the designating of tracts.

From these considerations, it is now respectfully recommended that the eastern line of the Choctaw cession, at Doak's Stand, remain the boundary of the old Choctaw district, east of the basis meridian, and that west of the basis meridian its northern boundary be squared off by the boundary line between townships nineteen and twenty.

Herewith is furnished a sketch of the State of Mississippi, showing the boundaries of the land districts, as proposed by the bill No. 635 of the House of Representatives, reported by Mr. Wickliffe on the 21st instant. On this sketch are delineated the boundaries of the "Northwestern" and "Choctaw" districts, as designated in that bill, and which has been respectfully recommended to your favorable consideration in the foregoing part of this communication. This sketch also indicates the boundaries of the "Northeastern" and "Augusta" districts, as indicated by the bill of Mr. Wickliffe, the dividing line between which is designated as the boundary between the townships ten and eleven.

The sales hitherto in the Augusta district have been so small that, during many years, they have not paid expenses. It is indispensably necessary, however, that the land office should be kept in existence; and it is desirable that, if possible, the district might (as far as legislation can make it) be made more productive. But it is respectfully urged that the boundary between the "Northeastern" and the "Augusta" districts, as proposed by the bill of the House of Representatives, which adds upwards of one hundred townships to the Augusta district, will make it too large and disproportionate in size to the other districts in the State. It is, therefore, suggested that the boundary be the township line between townships five and six.

It is also proposed that a section be incorporated into the bill, making an appropriation of fifteen hundred dollars, (to be paid out of any moneys unappropriated in the treasury,) for procuring books and blanks necessary to put into operation the proposed new offices in Mississippi, and also those created in Arkansas and Alabama during the last session, being in all six offices, which sum would allow for the office of each of the registers and receivers, one hundred and twenty-five dollars.

Enclosed herewith is a copy of the bill of the House of Representatives, and also a communication from the Hon. Mr. Plummer, exhibiting his views in relation to the subject, all of which are conceived to be just and correct, with the exception of the boundary between the Northeastern and Augusta districts, to which the foregoing objections have been stated.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JNO. M. MOORE, Acting Commissioner.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1079. [2D SESSION.

RELATIVE TO AMENDMENT OF THE ACT OF JULY 9, 1832, FOR THE FINAL ADJUSTMENT OF LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 28, 1832.

RECORDER'S OFFICE, St. Louis, Missouri, November 19, 1832.

SIR: In the course of the examination which the undersigned have already made into the subject, upon which it will be their duty to report to you under the act passed at the last session of Congress for the final adjustment of land claims in Missouri, they have been duly impressed with the belief that, to give that act a full and satisfactory effect, it ought to be amended.

The amendment, we beg leave to submit, should, in our opinion, consist, first, of an extension of the power or jurisdiction of the recorder and commissioners to the cases of claims founded on written grants, concessions, warrants, or orders of survey, that have not heretofore been filed in the office of the recorder, according to law, but which might, notwithstanding, have been submitted to the district court of the United States for Missouri, under the act of Congress of the 26th May, 1824, and the act supplementary thereto. Secondly, of an extension of the powers of the recorder and commissioners to the cases of claims based upon mere settlement and cultivation, with the permission, verbal or implied, of the Spanish or French authorities, and which claims have already been submitted to the commissioners or recorder under former acts of Congress, and decided upon unfavorably to the claimants.

As to the first class of claims, to wit, those based on written incomplete titles, which have not been filed heretofore, they are, we believe, few in number; and we feel justified in stating that some of them are equal, if not superior, in merit, not only to those which have been heretofore filed, but to some of those which have been confirmed. It seems to us that it must have been in contemplation of the merits of this class of claims that the act of 1824 was made to embrace them. We do not believe that the act of the last session was intended to be less liberal, just, and satisfactory, than the act of 1824, to those who invoke the treaty of cession. We are further of opinion that, in order to render the late act a means of "final adjustment of land claims in the State of Missouri," it should be made to embrace the second class of claims to which we have referred. By including in its purview the claims we have indicated, the report of the recorder and commissioners would perhaps enable Congress to make a final disposition of all the claims that possibly could be brought forward under French or Spanish titles, written or unwritten, in Missouri. By way of exemplification of the propriety and justice of including settlement rights heretofore submitted, and not favorably decided upon, we would refer, amongst others, to the claims of Peter Boyer, Peter Abar, and Abraham Brinker; each of those claims have been rejected by the former board of commissioners, and afterwards by the recorder. By the former no reason is assigned for the rejection, nor can we discover any cause for rejection on their minutes or records. By the latter, the decision in each case is made in the following words: "This tract probably contains lead, otherwise it ought to be confirmed." On reference to the minutes, we have not been able to discover any proof of the fact that those tracts contained lead ore. We are induced to believe that the probable existence of lead on those tracts was inferred from their vicinity to the known lead mines; be that fact, however, as it may, it would seem that, at this day, it alone should not constitute a fatal objection. On those tracts valuable improvements have been made, and possession continued uninterruptedly for more than thirty years since the first settlement made on them. As the law now stands, the occupiers or owners of those tracts are exposed to the possible loss of their lands and improvements as soon as they shall be offered for sale by the United States, which, according to the tenor of the present act, may take place as soon as the present board have finally reported. This class of claims, therefore, it would seem, should be entitled at least to be taken into consideration by this board, and ultimately passed upon by Congress.

We have thought it our duty to submit the above views, in order that they may be communicated to the Executive, if, under all the circumstances, it shall seem expedient to you to make such communication.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servants,

L. F. LINN.
F. R. CONWAY.

Hon. COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office.

ON APPLICATION TO HAVE THE PURCHASE MONEY FOR A TRACT OF LAND REFUNDED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1832.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Guedry, Edward Lambert, Michael Lebœuf, and John Vavasseur, reported:

The petitioners were severally proprietors of a small tract of land fronting on the Mississippi, and situate in the old settled part of Louisiana. Their respective tracts not having been confirmed by the United States, they, fearful lest they might be exposed to public sale by government, availed themselves of the pre-emption law of 1830, and entered their own lands. They now pray to have the price which they paid refunded.

The evidence shows an uninterrupted possession of more than forty years—such a possession as, by the laws of the United States, creates a presumption of title under the former government of that country.

The committee think the purchase money ought to be refunded. It is in accordance with the provisions of the fourth section of the act approved July 4, 1832, entitled "An act for the final adjustment of the claims to lands in the southeastern district of the State of Louisiana," with this difference only, that the said fourth section refers to persons similarly situated who had bought their own lands at public sale. The committee find the equity to be the same in the present instance, and they accordingly report a bill.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Sarah Walthers, claiming confirmation of her claim to a tract of land as a settlement right, reported:

That the evidence furnished by the petitioner consists of the deposition of a single witness. He swears that he knew Sarah Walthers, and believes, from every circumstance, that she did make an improvement on a piece of land in the parish of Natchitoches about the year 1803, or previous to that time; that he saw the improvements between the years 1806 and 1810, and that then she and her brother were in possession, and claimed the improvement. This evidence is, in the opinion of the committee, too vague. The witness does not swear to his knowledge of any cultivation before December 20, 1803, but only to his belief, from circumstances which subsequently came to his knowledge, that the petitioner or her brother had made an improvement and settlement about that year or before. The committee, therefore, recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be rejected.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 29, 1832.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Cochran, reported:

That the petitioner prays confirmation of a title to a tract of land, containing one thousand arpents, in the parish of East Feliciana. The evidence of title exhibited by the petitioner is a grant by the intendant, Morales, dated June 9, 1804, in favor of Santiago Brannon. This grant purports on the face of it to be in the nature of a sale, at the rate of one real and a half per arpent, executed at New Orleans at the above-mentioned date, about six months after the actual surrender of that city to the United States. The date of the grant being subsequent to that of the treaty of cession under which the American government has always claimed and possessed that part of the present State of Louisiana, the committee cannot regard it as conveying in itself any title independently of possession and cultivation during the period that the Spanish authorities retained possession and exercised authority de facto in that part of West Florida. There is no evidence before the committee of any occupation or cultivation at any time.

They therefore are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

RELATIVE TO THE SALE OF THE RANGE OF LANDS THROUGH WHICH THE LINE DIVIDING THE STATES OF INDIANA AND ILLINOIS RUNS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 2, 1833.

Mr. TIPTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate instructing them to inquire whether further legislation was necessary to enable the President of the United States to cause the public lands in range ten west of the second meridian, in the State of Indiana, to be brought into market, reported:

That the line dividing the States of Indiana and Illinois, as designated and established under the joint sanction of these States, from a point on the Wabash, due north, to Lake Michigan, passes through range ten west; that, in establishing the State line, no notice was taken of the surveys of the public lands nor was the intersection of these public surveys with the State line noted, so as to show the correct fractions and subdivisions of the public lands on each side of the State line. It also appears, by a correspondence between the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the surveyors general of Cincinnati and St. Louis, which has been examined by your committee, that in November, 1827, instructions were issued to the surveyor general in Ohio, directing him to connect the surveys of the sections caused to be made fractional, on each side of the State line, with the line itself. This order not having been complied with, similar instructions were issued in December, 1828, to the surveyor general at St. Louis, who replied, in 1829, that he had made application to several surveyors to do this work, and that no one could be found for the price allowed by law, of three dollars per mile to retrace the old line and to connect the public surveys with the State line. Consequently these lands could not be offered for sale; and the committee report a bill.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 4, 1833.

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Calvin Smith, a citizen of the State of Mississippi, praying to be confirmed in his title to a tract of land, containing the quantity of thirteen hundred and twenty acres of land, lying and being in the district of Baton Rouge and State of Louisiana, or to be allowed to locate a like quantity of land on any public land subject to entry at private sale, reported:

That it appears that the petitioner purchased, for a valuable consideration, of an actual settler, his right of occupancy to the tract of land mentioned in the petition, and that, subsequent to said purchase, he obtained from the Spanish governor, Don Charles De Grand Pre, a warrant or order of survey, bearing date the 27th day of August, 1806, directing the deputy surveyor of said district of Baton Rouge to survey and mark the boundaries of said tract of land, in the name and for the benefit of said Calvin Smith, the petitioner; that the survey was accordingly made and certified on the 20th day of October, 1806, and the land actually occupied and cultivated by the petitioner and his tenants from the date of said survey until the year 1813; that the claim was regularly filed with the register of the land office at St. Helena, in said district, and proof of settlement and occupancy of the tract made but not confirmed by the register and receiver, acting as land commissioners, because the petitioner had received a grant from the Spanish government for a small tract of three hundred and fifty acres of land in said district. In all other respects the commissioners admit the claim to have been proven according to law. Your committee are of opinion that, inasmuch as the warrant or order of survey for the tract of thirteen hundred and twenty arpents was founded on a purchase made by the petitioner of a settlement right recognized by the Spanish government, he ought not, in equity and justice, to be deprived of the benefit of his contract, which was held to be valid by the Spanish authorities, and which was carried into effect by the order of survey of Governor De Grand Pre, on the ground of the inconsiderable grant made to him prior to that time, on his own right. The claim appears to your committee to be in all respects fair and equitable, and they therefore report a bill in conformity with the prayer of the petitioner.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1085. [2D SESSION.

CORRESPONDENCE AND INSTRUCTIONS RELATIVE TO SURVEYS OF PRIVATE CONFIRMED LAND CLAIMS IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 4, 1833.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury upon the subject of private confirmed land claims in Florida, rendered in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th ultimo.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 4, 1833.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, prepared in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives dated the 17th ultimo, accompanied by copies of the correspondence on the subjects embraced in the resolution.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 2, 1833.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, to whom has been referred the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th ultimo, which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to inform that House "what causes have prevented the survey of the private confirmed land claims in Florida; and whether any errors were made in the surveys in West Florida which caused their return to the surveyor general; and whether any instructions were given for the resurvey, or proceedings instituted against the deputies; and whether the United States have been, or are to be, charged with the resurvey out of the public treasury; and that he communicate the instructions given to the surveyor general on the subject of the survey of the private claims," has the honor to submit herewith copies of all the correspondence between the General Land Office and the surveyor of the public lands in Florida in relation to the survey of the private claims in that Territory, and the correction of certain errors in the surveys bordering on the river Escambia.

From this correspondence it will be seen that the early attention of this office was drawn to the surveys of the private claims in Florida, and that every endeavor has been made by it to insure the progress of that branch of the work with all the rapidity and accuracy possible. It is apparent, from an inspection of the township plats, that under these instructions a great many of the claims have been surveyed; but that there may be some claims in those townships which have not been surveyed is also probable, as, notwithstanding every exertion has been made by the department to induce the claimants to afford that information to the deputy respecting the localities and boundaries of their claims, which could be furnished by themselves alone, it is apparent, from the representations of the surveyor general and his deputies, that in many cases the claimants would not afford that information by which the surveyor would have to be guided in the performance of his duty, and that he has been left entirely unassisted by the parties individually interested in his endeavors to survey their lands correctly; and it is very probable that some of the claims may not have been surveyed, in consequence of the compensation allowed by law being totally inadequate to the services required. This is the case in relation to Key West, and to many claims in Louisiana.

Part of the country between the Suwannee river and the Atlantic ocean, in which there are private claims, is believed not to have yet been surveyed; and as the private claims have to be surveyed and numbered in connexion with the public lands, there doubtless are claims there which have not been reported as surveyed, and plats of which cannot be returned to the proper land office until the survey of the township in which they are included shall have been examined and approved by the surveyor general.

That the delay in issuing patents for the private claims in Florida is, in a great measure, to be attributed to causes over which the surveyor general has not a control, is apparent from his letter of January 14, 1831, in which he says: "In the report you were kind enough to send, I find a remark, under the head of Florida, that many private claims have been surveyed, but no certificates have been forwarded, which ought to have been received long since. I hope the delinquency was not intended to be applied to this office, as I claim to have complied with the act of Congress on that subject, and under which the register is required to forward certificates for data to govern the issuing of the patents," and from the fact of the register of the land office at Tallahassee having forwarded to this office about one hundred certificates for those claims, but which, in consequence of the defects therein, I had to return to him during the last winter for correction. They have not been reforwarded to this office.

Some of the surveying of the swamps on the Escambia river proving erroneous, the plats were returned to the surveyor general for correction; but in consequence of the nature of the ground, of high waters, and of the sickness of the deputies employed in that work, it was not until April 11, 1832, that the surveyor general was enabled to report the work as having been performed, although the plats have not yet reached this office. All the correspondence on this subject will be found among the papers herewith transmitted.

In cases of errors in surveying, the deputies who executed the work, where it is not fully and satisfactorily proved that those errors have arisen from causes which they could not control, are required to make the requisite corrections without any compensation therefor; and as, by the letter of October 26, 1825, from the surveyor general, it appears that in all cases he has taken bonds from his deputies, with good and sufficient security in the sum of $10,000 for the correct and faithful execution of their contracts, any expense which may be incurred in correcting their work will be reimbursed by legal proceedings under those bonds. From an examination of the accounts of the surveyor general, which have been rendered to the 30th of September last, it does not appear that any charge is made therein for resurveys or corrections.

Part of the delay which occurred in reporting the surveys to this office has doubtless been occasioned by the long-continued illness of the surveyor general and of the clerks employed in his office; and, at the date of the last letter from the surveyor general, he was so sick as to prevent his attention to business.

All which is respectfuly submitted.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner.

* And enclosures.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Robert Butler, esq., surveyor general, dated August 20, 1825.

By surveying and sectioning large quantities of land in Louisiana and Mississippi before the private claims were finally acted upon, and including much barren piney land, the government and individuals have been put to great inconvenience, and much money has been unnecessarily expended. Your instructions were given with a view to prevent the recurrence of the same errors. The object of the government is, for the present, to bring into market the lands in Florida which are entirely exempt from private claims, and which may be most in demand for the accommodation of actual settlers. You will therefore take care to have no township sectioned in which there are private claims.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Robert Butler, esq., dated September 15, 1825.

It is desirable that all the township lines in West Florida should be completed, so that the private claims may be laid off whenever they shall be confirmed by Congress; but it will not be necessary to section off more lands than will be equal to fifty complete townships annually, hereafter, in West Florida.

It is desirable that the lands in East Florida, between the Suwannee and the Atlantic and adjacent to the Georgia line, should be surveyed into townships, and that twenty townships of the best of these lands which may be clear of private claims and the most demanded by purchasers should be prepared for sale previous to December, 1826. As it is probable that the surveying of the private claims in West Florida may be commenced as soon in the autumn of 1826 as the surveyors can venture to survey, it will be proper for you to make some estimate of the expenses for surveying on that account. You will, with as little delay as possible, forward the township plats of the surveying executed and charged in your accounts, as those accounts cannot be settled until they are forwarded.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Robert Butler, esq., dated October 7, 1825.

I wish you, as soon as possible after your return to Tallahassee, to furnish me with an estimate founded on the amount of surveying required by my letter of the 15th September last, to wit: All the township lines yet to be run in West Florida, and the sectioning of a portion thereof equal to fifty townships, and the township lines in East Florida, between the Suwannee and the Atlantic, and the sectioning of twenty townships thereof. The township lines to be estimated for in East Florida may be extended south to the north boundary line of the tract reserved for the Indians, and to such points on the St. John's and the Gulf of Mexico as you may deem expedient, and also for the probable expense of surveying the private claims within such townships.

The object in wishing to have the township lines run is to obtain a general knowledge of the country, and, when Congress shall have acted finally on the private claims, then to direct the whole force of your department to the surveying of the confirmed claims, connecting them with the township lines, giving them their proper numbers, so that they may be patented, and preparing for sale the residue of the public land in each township containing private claims that may be required for sale.

In all cases where the lines to be run cannot be specially described in the contract, the deputy should state in his field-notes the particular contract under which he acted, and the date of the contract should be inserted in the township plats. Without this precaution you would find it difficult hereafter to compel the contractor, under the form of contract adopted by you, to pay for the correction of incorrect surveying.

The repetition of my instructions relative to townships containing private claims, in my letter of the 20th of August last, was not intended to convey the idea that there had been any deviation from my previous instructions, as I had no information or suspicion of any such deviation.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 2, 1826.

SIR: I have to state that it is discovered your deputy surveyors have charged for surveying the line run by General Coffee as the south boundary of Alabama, in some instances where said line forms the north boundary of the adjacent townships in Florida. The same is the case with those surveys east of the Chattahootchin, bounded by the line run by you between Georgia and Florida. As it is to be supposed that the Alabama and Georgia lines were marked with sufficient distinctness, I can see no necessity for any resurvey of such portions of them as form the north boundary of the townships adjacent. There may, however, for ought I know, be special instances where a resurvey of some portions of these lines might be actually necessary. If such instances were found to be, the deputy surveyor will have to advise you of the particular facts in order that you may certify them officially. Meantime I have to advise you that none of the charges can be admitted until the First Auditor of the Treasury can be certified that the resurveys were actually necessary. Your explanation should therefore be made as soon as practicable.

I am, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

ROBERT BUTLER, Esq., Surveyor, &c., Tallahassee, Florida.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Robert Butler, esq., dated the 24th of April, 1826.

A bill is preparing, and which, if passed before Congress rises, will enable you to commence the surveying of the private claims in Florida as early in the autumn as the climate will admit, and under the provisions of which I have no doubt that you will execute the whole of the public and private surveys in Florida at a much earlier period than those in Louisiana will be closed, although they have been nearly twenty years in progress.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 1, 1826.

SIR: An act to provide for the surveying of private claims in Florida was passed by the House of Representatives, but I very much regret that it was laid over in the Senate for want of time to act upon it.

As it is probable that this bill will be acted upon, and become a law, at a very early period of the next session of Congress, and as little or no progress can be made in surveying the private claims until November next, and it being somewhat doubtful how far the provisions of the 13th section of the act of 1823 repeals those of the 6th section of the act of the 8th May, 1822, it may be advisable to suspend all contracts for the survey of private claims for the present. If, however, individuals insist upon having their claims surveyed and connected with the township lines at their own expense, you may cause such surveys to be made, provided they be within the township lines that have been run.

I enclose for your information a copy of the bill above referred to as it was amended and passed the House of Representatives. Under the provisions of this act, I have no doubt that you would, in a very short period, be enabled to complete the whole of the surveys of the private claims in Florida.

With great respect, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

As no advances can be made on account of the surveying of private claims, I presume the amount forwarded will be sufficient to meet the demands on you for surveying actually executed for 1826.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 16, 1826.

SIR: I some time since forwarded to you a copy of a bill reported at the last session of Congress, relative to the surveying of private claims. The principle of the bill was that all confirmed claims which had heretofore been actually surveyed under the Spanish government should be resurveyed at the public expense. You will much oblige me by furnishing an estimate of the expense which the public would incur in making such resurveys in Florida, and what portion of it would be required for the year 1827. This bill not having been acted upon, your surveying for the winter of 1827 will necessarily be very much curtailed. You have already more township lines surveyed than will be required, or which can be sectioned off for two years. You will find much embarrassment arising from surveying so many township lines run previous to sectioning of them off, particularly if the sectioning of them is delayed for any length of time. My instructions to run off the township lines were given in consequence of the peculiar situation and extent of the private claims, and from a firm belief that an act relative to the surveying the private claims would have been passed at the last session of Congress. That act having been deferred from the want of time to act upon it, it becomes necessary and proper to curtail our surveying operations until next fall, when I hope much may and will be done. The lands which I think it now most desirable to have surveyed are those lying south of the St. John's river, and between that river and the Atlantic, as far south as Smyrna; and as this section of the country is principally covered by private claims, many of which have not yet been confirmed, I should think it better to suspend the contracts until the claims are finally acted upon, when the contracts can be made for the complete surveying of the townships. The only surveying, therefore, which I think you would be authorized to contract for, at present, for the year 1827, would be for the sectioning of such townships the lines of which had been run, which are of good quality, and which were certainly known to contain no private claim. If there be any of this description between the Suwannee and the Atlantic, they should be surveyed this winter, so as to bring them into market as soon as possible. If an act pass at the ensuing session of Congress authorizing the survey of the private claims at the public expense, it will embrace an appropriation for that purpose; and the surveying of the private claims at the public expense may commence as soon as practicable next autumn. It would, however, be prudent to make contracts in anticipation.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, Tallahassee, Florida.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 26, 1827.

SIR: I have now the satisfaction to transmit a paper containing a copy of the act to provide for the confirmation and settlement of private land claims in East Florida, and for other purposes. You will perceive that the seventh and subsequent sections of this bill provides for the surveying and connecting with the township lines the private confirmed claims, and for designating on the township plats the unconfirmed claims, over 3,500 acres, which have been filed with the commissioners. The seventh section of this act has invested you with extensive powers and very responsible duties, both executive and judicial, and for the due execution of which it will be indispensably necessary that you commit the surveying and laying down of the private claims only to your most experienced and judicious deputies, in the fidelity and judgment of whom you have the most implicit confidence.

My letter addressed to you on the 9th of July, 1824, with the diagrams accompanying it, will have anticipated the necessity of any further instructions as it respects the mode of connecting the private surveys with the township lines, and giving to them and the public lands in each township the proper sectional number. The commission for deciding on the private claims in East Florida being still open, it will be unnecessary to take any immediate measures for surveying the claims in that district which have heretofore been confirmed. Your labors at present will therefore be exclusively directed to the survey of the private confirmed claims in West Florida; and as these are not very numerous, and I believe generally well defined and well known, I trust that you will be able to have them completed in a reasonable time and without much difficulty. For this purpose I would recommend that you divide West Florida into such number of districts as you may deem expedient by natural boundaries; that you assign a particular deputy to each of those districts, whose duty it shall be to survey the private claims, and connect them with the township lines; that you give public notice of the name, residence, and time that such deputy will attend in each particular section of the country for the purpose of surveying the private claims; which notice should include a copy of the seventh and twelfth sections of the act now forwarded.

The eighth section provides for the return of the surveys to the register and receiver. This of course cannot be done until the township plats be completed. The public lands, therefore, in each township should be surveyed at the same time that the private claims within the same are surveyed, if the land be of that quality which it is deemed expedient to section off; and on this subject your deputies must be instructed by you. The ninth section requires those claims which you may think improperly located, or invalid from any cause arising out of fraud or otherwise, to be designated on your plat in the same manner and bearing the same sectional numbers as if they had been approved.

The tenth section provides that the expense of surveying shall be paid by the public. There will be an appropriation of ten thousand dollars applicable to this particular object, and which I presume will be sufficient to meet all demands for the present year. But should your expenditure necessarily exceed that amount, you will stipulate for the excess to be paid from the appropriation for 1828. The lines actually run between one private claim and another, or between a private claim and the public lands, should be but once charged, unless it be indispensably necessary to remeasure the same line twice. Your account for surveying private claims will be kept separate and distinct from that for surveying the public lands, and where a line is common to both one half of the expense must be charged to each.

The 11th section provides that no patents shall issue for interfering claims, until there shall have been a legal decision. In all cases therefore of interference between private claims, where there may be any doubt as to the priority of title, it will be prudent to run out all the lines of each, but in cases where there is no doubt, or where the parties agree, it may be proper to designate the interference of the weaker claim only by dotted lines on the plat. Under the provisions of the 12th section you will take care to designate in the township plats the claims referred to, so far as you are furnished with, or can procure the means of doing so.

A remittance of five thousand dollars will be made you immediately after the appropriation is passed, for surveying the private claims as referred to above.

I would recommend that you proceed immediately to the survey of the private claims in the town, neighborhood of Pensacola, the Barancas, and those on the opposite side of the bay; and complete also the townships and fractional townships to which they may extend, that the public land within them may be brought into market, and the private confirmed claims patented.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 8, 1827.

SIR: Under a belief that you will be enabled immediately to proceed in the survey of the private claims on and adjacent to the Bay of Pensacola, I have requested that a remittance of $5,000 on account of surveying the private claims should be made to you, and also a remittance of the same amount on account of surveying the public lands; this is done to enable you to have surveyed the residue of the lands in those townships particularly covered by private claims, where such lands are fit for cultivation. Additional funds will be forwarded as you may require them.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

ROBERT BUTLER, Esq., Surveyor, &c., Tallahassee.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated March 31, 1827, to Robert Butler, esq.

As the private confirmed claims in West Florida are not very numerous, and lying principally around the bay of Pensacola, I flatter myself that you will be able to have them completed and returned early in the ensuing winter.

It will not be advisable to enter upon the surveying of the private claims in East Florida until the final report is made by the commissioners, which will not be until next winter.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Robert Butler, esq., dated April 19, 1827.

Yours of the 21st of March is received, and I enclose a copy of mine of the 8th of March last, lest the original may have miscarried. My wish is to get all the private claims in West Florida surveyed and returned in the course of this year and the ensuing winter. It would not, I think, be expedient to commence the surveying of these private claims, or to extend the surveying of the public lands in East Florida, until the final confirmation by Congress of the reports of the commissioners, which will, I presume, be had at the next session.

Should the surveying of the private claims in West Florida exceed $10,000, the excess must be paid from the appropriation of 1828.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 26, 1827.

SIR: Yours of the 10th instant has been received. Presuming that you either have or can obtain a correct plan of the town of Pensacola, as enlarged and extended under the Spanish authorities, I should think that it would be unnecessary to resurvey the same. The confirmation by the commissioners having designated the number of the lot and its dimensions, it will be only necessary to furnish to this office and to the register of the land office a certified copy of the plan of the town, exhibiting, in different colors, the lots confirmed to individuals, the public squares and property reserved for the use of the town, and the lots, if any, which are now subject to be sold by the United States. Such a plan will be sufficient to enable the register to issue his certificate, and this office to make out the patent. We have a copy of the English plan of the town of Pensacola, which, as it may possibly be of some use to you, shall be forwarded. I forward by this mail a printed copy of the report of the commissioners, which should have been forwarded at an earlier period, but from the belief that you were in possession of a copy. You will be particular in laying down the public lands reserved for the ports and navy yard. The lots in the village of St. Charles de Barancas I do not consider as confirmed; the occupants must remain at the will of the government.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

ROBERT BUTLER, Esq., Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 28, 1827.

SIR: I have sent you by this day's mail a plan of the town of Pensacola.

Very respectfully, &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

ROBERT BUTLER, Esq., Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 7, 1827.

SIR: I enclose a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, accompanied by a plat of the lands reserved for the Pensacola navy yard, and have to request that you will designate the lands thus reserved on your township plats, and that you take care that the surveys of confirmed claims do not interfere with them.

The engineer department has not been able to designate the lands reserved for military purposes; your deputies should be requested to call upon the officers at the Barancas, and on the engineers now in Florida, to make designations.

I am, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

ROBERT BUTLER, Esq., Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 1, 1827.

SIR: Your favor of the 15th of May has been received. Charles Downing, esq., is the register of the land office at St. Augustine. I am pleased to hear that you will be enabled immediately to commence the surveying of the private claims in West Florida, and hope that you will be enabled to make complete returns of all of them in the course of this winter. So soon as you can make out a plat of a township containing private claims you will forward it to this office, to enable us to give such additional instructions as may be necessary.

The tables of contents will exhibit the private claims and the public lands separately, that for the public lands will, in all cases, be added up and exhibit the total quantity.

As the private claims will sometimes cross the township lines, the totals in that table cannot be always accurately stated. The subdivisions of the sections made fractional by the private claims should be exhibited on the township plats in the same manner as those made fractional by other causes.

It is altogether at the request of the War Department that the Indian claims are reserved from sale.

I will thank you to state, as nearly as practicable, what amount of money will be required by you to pay for surveying to be executed in 1827. I should think that you have township lines enough already run out. It may necessarily be late in the spring of 1828 before you can commence the surveys of the private claims in East Florida; but when you do commence you should be prepared to proceed rapidly with them. In the meantime such townships in West Florida as contain private claims, and those not heretofore sectioned, so far as they embrace lands of good quality and desirable to be brought into market, ought to be progressing.

I am, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, Tallahassee, Florida.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 20, 1827.

SIR: Your favor of the 3d instant has been received, and the amount of funds stated will be remitted as required.

I do not perceive the necessity of running the township lines through Forbes's claim at present; that claim has not been confirmed, and will, of course, be subject to much litigation; and it will be advisable to postpone these surveys until they become absolutely necessary.

I am much surprised that no regular plat of the city of Pensacola is to be had, as the commissioners in making their confirmations refer to the number of each lot. I am pleased, however, to find that your deputy will be able to make out a correct plan of the town.

The call of about such a distance, or about such a course will generally be controlled and explained by some other call or circumstance more specific, but where a location is entirely dependent on the call of about north-northeast or northeast, the courts have decided that the line be run north-northeast or northeast, or the particular course called for, without reference to the word about.

I am, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, August 18, 1827.

SIR: Your favor of the 24th ultimo, covering a letter from your deputy, Mr. Exum, complaining of the difficulty of surveying private claims in consequence of the refusal of the claimants to show, or aid in showing their boundaries, has been received. The act passed at the last session of Congress relative to the surveying of private claims varies materially from that originally drafted, and is defective in several respects; yet no provision was made in the act as drafted against the particular difficulty your deputy complains of, to wit: that the claimants will not show their boundaries. It is difficult, if not impracticable, to make any legal provisions to which the owner of a claim confirmed on a survey or grant could be compelled to show their boundaries. The advantages, however, of obtaining a resurvey and procuring a title immediately from the United States are such as, it was presumed, would have made every claimant anxious to obtain such resurvey and title. The object of a resurvey on the part of the United States is to ascertain the vacant and public lands. The claimant has obtained, it is true, a legal right under the confirmation, but in cases of controversy as to title, he must be able to show in a court of justice that his survey was legally made under the Spanish government, and must prove his boundaries; whereas by a resurvey and title derived from the United States he is relieved from all difficulty. These advantages ought to induce all honest bona fide claimants to give every possible facility and information by which their claims could be resurveyed, and a different course can be accounted for only from ignorance or fraudulent intentions; when the refusal arises from the first cause, every possible precaution should be taken to satisfy the party of its evil consequences, and every exertion should be made to survey his claim correctly, but the attempts of the latter should not be permitted to arrest the progress of public surveying.

Under the provisions of the seventh section of the act of the last session, your surveyors should be furnished with as accurate a description of each claim confirmed as the records will afford; with this description, which is all important, and such documents and information as he can procure from the claimant, he is to make the survey; but if he cannot ascertain the location from the description thus obtained, and the claimant refuses or declines to furnish the necessary information, then the law cannot be carried into effect in relation to such claim, and the surveyor will proceed to survey the residuary lands in the township as public lands, leaving the claimant to establish his claim in a court of justice, in case of controversy with other confirmed claims or with purchasers under direct title from the United States.

Every precaution should be taken to give notice to claimants of the time when the district of country in which their claims are situated will be surveyed; and in the public notice which you were, in my letter of the ——— last, requested to give, you should state distinctly the course that will be pursued when the boundaries of a claim cannot be ascertained from the documents furnished by the keeper of the archives, or those in the possession of the claimant.

It is proper to observe that the law presumes that the information to be derived from the records will enable the deputy to locate and resurvey the claim; but if this information does not enable him to make the survey, and he is obliged to depend upon the information of the claimant, he should make to you a particular statement of the facts to enable you to exercise the power with which you are invested by the last clause of the seventh section of the act of February last. If marked trees are shown by the claimant, the deputy will generally be able, with tolerable accuracy, to ascertain whether the age of the marks correspond with the date of the survey.

The act of the last session (1826) is altogether silent as to the mode of surveying the few claims in West Florida, which were confirmed on account of occupation or cultivation previous to 1819. If, therefore, the commissioner's certificate of confirmation does not designate the manner in which they are to be surveyed, these lands must be surveyed as other public lands, designating the section in which each claim, respectively, may lie, and particularly noting whether the improvements extend to more than one section, and whether there be two different improvements in the same section. With this information the claims may be located in entire sections, or by eighths of sections, in as compact a form as possible, so that the actual improvements do not interfere.

As the survey of the private claims will be attended with some difficulty, your deputies may be unwilling to enter into contracts to survey them, or may fail to execute those which they have undertaken, you should, therefore, let them distinctly understand that no other surveying will be contracted for until the private claims are surveyed, and that such deputies who contract and execute their contracts for private claims will have the preference in obtaining contracts for the surveying; and in all cases where a deputy fails to execute a contract for surveying private claims no other should be granted to him.

Being thus possessed of the views of this office, and having before you the laws and the reports of the commissioners, it is hoped and believed that you will be able, by a careful investigation of the subject, to give such particular instructions to your deputies as will insure the survey of private claims in West Florida. The survey of them in East Florida will, probably, be attended with more difficulty and embarrassment. It is desirable, therefore, that you should suggest such amendments of the act of the last session as experience may point out as necessary, and I will submit them to the Land Committee.

I am, &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 22, 1828.

SIR: Your account for the fourth quarter of 1827, for surveying private claims, and your salary account for the same quarter, have been received.

I had hoped that greater progress would have been made in the surveying of the private claims.

You will please furnish an estimate of the sums that you will probably require quarterly for the surveying of the public lands and the private claims in Florida.

I am very anxious that all the private claims in West Florida should be immediately surveyed, and such of the public lands sectioned off as may be fit for cultivation. A bill now pending in Congress (which I have no doubt will pass) for extending the time for deciding on private claims filed with the register and receiver of East Florida, will probably make it inexpedient to survey any private claims in East Florida during the present year.

With, &c., &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, S. G., Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 27, 1828.

SIR: Your letters of the 11th instant have been received, and I am gratified that your deputies have made returns, generally, of the surveys of private claims in West Florida.

I have requested the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit you $6,000 on account of the survey of the public lands. The townships made fractional by the Escambia river must be designated as fractional townships No. —, east or west of the Escambia. The corner post having been marked, the numbers of sections cannot now be altered.

I perceive no objection to your issuing certificates in the case of interfering claims, provided you endorse thereon the fact and the extent of the interference.

Claims founded and confirmed by the commissioners on grants and surveys should, as a general rule, be surveyed in conformity to their calls, notwithstanding the quantities may vary. There may be cases where the excess is very great, or where there has been evident error in recapitulating distances, that may require correction.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEO. GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, S. G., Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 14, 1828.

SIR: The township plats and field-notes which were received with your letter of the 25th ultimo are hereby returned, in consequence of errors and imperfections, some of which are herein pointed out.

The north boundary of township 1, south of range 28 west, having been surveyed, should be platted a black line. (See my letter of May 4, 1827.)

The surveys of private claims should exhibit on the plats all the courses and distances, together with their connecting distances with the public land surveys, some of which have been omitted.

Townships made fractional into one or more fractions, east or west, north or south, of large rivers or bays, should be titled "the fractional part of township —, of range —, west of — bay;" and, provided there are no private claims in such township made fractional, it should maintain its regular sectional numbers without regard to the numbering of other fractions of the same township. (See the pencilling of the fractional part of township 1, south of range 28 west, east of the bay of St. Mary's, herewith returned.)

In township 3, south of range 31 west, section 16 appears as containing 1,192 acres, and does not appear to have been surveyed in the usual order. The meridian line of section 1 should have been continued to the private claim No. 17; this can now be done, leaving section 16 with one additional section. The protracting of the same township in connexion with 2 south, of range 31 west, is discovered upon a glance of the eye to be erroneously platted. On placing the scale of 40 to the inch on lines, it is perceived that there are numerous errors in the distances. (See pencilling on townships 2 and 3, range 31 and 1, range 28 south and west, for some of them.)

When the private claims are exhibited on the township plats, all the section lines must be perfectly protracted. (See my letter of instructions of 9th July, 1824.)

Township plats returned incomplete by reason of the land not being fit for cultivation, being inundated, low, marsh, or other cause, should be accompanied by explanations, either by letter or marginal notes on the township plats, for the information of this office.

The field-notes, hereby returned, do not appear to have been made out agreeable to my letter of instructions of July 9, 1824; these are, however, returned for your certificate of examination.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 6, 1828.

SIR: I enclose the copy of an act supplementary to the several acts providing for the settlement and confirmation of private land claims in Florida, and also a copy of the report of the register and receiver of the land office at St. Augustine, acting as commissioners, and referred to in the 2d section of the act.

You will perceive that the first section of the act confirms specifically three claims in West Florida, and such claims in East Florida as have been recommended for confirmation by the commissioners, or by the register and receiver acting as commissioners, on the conditions and to the extent particularly stated in the act.

These claims correspond very nearly, if not precisely, with those referred to in the 12th section of the act approved the 8th of February, 1827, and it is therefore necessary that, under the provisions of that section, they be accurately laid down on the township plats returned to the land offices and to this office.

If the three claims in West Florida, confirmed by this act, have not been laid down on your plats, you will cause them to be so laid down as soon as practicable. I understand that the claimant of No. 10 is disposed to avail himself of the conditions of the act.

The 4th section of the act having prolonged the time for the adjudicating on the private land claims in East Florida, I am apprehensive that a further delay of the public surveys will be unavoidable; if, however, on advising with, and obtaining the necessary information from the register and receiver at St. Augustine, you may be of opinion that you can, with propriety, extend your surveys in East Florida, you will proceed to do so as early as practicable in the ensuing autumn.

The 6th section of the act provides for a judicial decision of all the claims under the treaty with Spain not settled by the provisions of this act, and which have not been reported as antedated or otherwise fraudulent, and which contain a greater quantity of land than the commissioners were authorized to decide, as it would be unavailable for the government to proceed to the sale of the land that may be thus claimed.

It will be necessary for you to lay down on the township plats the claims of this description, so far as it can be done from the information filed with the commissioners, or that obtained from other sources, with the view of withholding the lands from sale until there be a judicial decision, or the claimants shall have failed to avail themselves of the provisions of this act.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 17, 1828.

SIR: I enclose, for your information, an extract of a letter addressed to me on the 15th instant, by the Hon. Mr. White, in relation to the surveying of some confirmed claims in Florida. The 3d section of the act of the 22d of April, 1826, having confirmed the Spanish claims contained in the special reports, numbered 1 to 30, alluded to by Mr. White, it is presumed that you have, prior to this, directed them to be surveyed. I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, &c., &c., Tallahassee.

Extract of a letter from the honorable Joseph M. White to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated June 15, 1828.

"I will also respectfully suggest that in the commissioner's reports of West Florida, numbered from one to thirty, the act of Congress for confirming that report confirmed all the Spanish conflicting claims, to the exclusion of the British, and among them was one of Francisco Bonal, for an island in the Escambia river, of 7,000 arpents, that, I learn, has not been surveyed, although confirmed in the first act; and it may be that the thirty are in the same condition. Some instructions may be necessary on that point. I would also take it as a favor if orders were given to the surveyor general to have all the claims confirmed surveyed, as directed by the act of Congress. I understand that the deputy informed Colonel Searcy, the draughtsman, that an island owned by me had increased lately, and the same deputy wrote to my agent that he did not survey it because he had no one to show it to him. It seems that he could not find it, and yet knew it had increased in size. This island was granted as an island, "poco mas o menos," more or less, and has not increased. It never was surveyed, but a plat was made, which has been furnished, and was granted to a Spanish officer, for his public services, as containing 800 arpents, more or less. It probably contains double the quantity, and did when it was granted. It is difficult to be surveyed, but that is no reason for its postponement. When the law directs a public officer to do an act, and he is also instructed to by the head of his department, and fails, I know the legal remedy; but I have no desire to resort to it, if the surveyor or his deputies do not neglect it intentionally. I have, as yet, no other reason than the fact above to suppose that the excuse of the deputy was a good one, and request that he be again instructed to make the survey; and if I am informed when they are there, or my agent, we will send to show him that island, the enlargement of which only he has discovered."

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 25, 1828.

SIR: Your favor of the 1st July has been received, and I regret to find that the surveying of the private claims has progressed so tardily.

I enclose, for your information, copies of letters from Mr. Ward, Mr. Mason, and Mr. Washington.

It is desirable that the township lines of all the lands in West Florida should be run, and such of them subdivided as contain saleable lands. As little or no surveying can be done in East Florida until the next year, the surveys, both private and public, in West Florida ought to be entirely completed by July next.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Col. R. BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

TALLAHASSEE, June 9, 1828.

DEAR SIR: The lands lying south and east, which have been surveyed and offered at the sales in May, 1825, and May, 1827, are now settled for forty or fifty miles eastward from Tallahassee, and some of our most promising settlements are in that direction, and a knowledge of the sea-shore country opposite is to them a matter of high interest. They are remote from St. Mark's, which is the only well-known inlet. The Oscilla, the Estahatchee, and some smaller rivers, empty into the Gulf between the St. Mark's and the Suwannee, and there are so many large old roads leading from the Tallahassee section of the country in a direction toward the mouths of these rivers, that it leads to an opinion that there has formerly been a seaport somewhere there. These roads are lost in the flat pine woods and swamps, and, as yet, (with the exception of a very few spots,) this sea-shore tract of country is unexplored, and will most likely remain so, and certainly will remain unsettled until these ranges are all completed and offered. All of range five, in which there is known to be good land, is unsurveyed. You will readily conceive the advantages, in many respects, of having this sea-shore country settled as speedily as possible. Emigrants confine their examinations to lands that are subject to entry. The earlier settlers have procured lands, and are busily engaged on them, and the field has become too sterile for speculators, and I have known of no instance of squatters since the pre-emption law; so that, until this coast is surveyed and offered, it must remain in its unexplored wilderness condition. There are several beautiful little islands lying near shore on this part of the coast, which will readily sell, and should also be surveyed.

I was urged by several gentlemen from these eastern settlements to make a representation of these facts to you, which I did some months past, and the surveyor general received your instructions. The two surveyors employed went out not long since to the unfinished surveys south and east, but returned immediately, I suppose finding it either impracticable or unprofitable, and are now surveying on Black-water river, in West Florida. Since these gentlemen (Mr. Clements and Mr. Exum) returned from south and east, and all prospect of getting those lands surveyed immediately had ceased, I have been again urged to represent to you the necessity for it. There are several of the former deputy surveyors here, and unemployed in that way, one of whom said to me (very lately) that he would be very glad to get the work, and that he would do it in October and November. This was Mr. Thomas, who surveyed some of these ranges, as far as was then practicable, and is acquainted with the country. Besides him, there is Mr. Washington, Colonel Allen, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Downey, all good surveyors; so that the surveyor general will be at no loss to get this work done in October and November next. There is said to be a fine body of good land lying on the Suwannee river, at the Suwannee old towns—Colonel Gadsden thinks five or six thousand acres. This, I believe, is surveyed; and if it is as has been represented, would sell very well for sugar plantations, and be settled immediately; also some islands there. I believe it would be beneficial to Florida if the whole of the government lands were offered and subject to entry; but I would consider it of great consequence to this portion of the country, whether in peace or war, to remove all obstacles, and let this seacoast (S and E.) be settled; and this would be effected very speedily if the surveys were completed and the lands offered. I have made these suggestions at the request of others; but they are in full accordance with my own observations and opinions, and are respectfully submitted.

Yours, &c,

G. W. WARD.

P. S. Mr. Gaines called my attention to the want of a connected map of the surveys in my office. I have never been furnished with one yet, and Colonel Searcy (the draughtsman in the surveyor general's office) is not of opinion that my office is to be furnished with one. My instructions direct me to mark the lands sold on the connected plat as well as the plats of township, from which it is inferable that I should be furnished with one.

Respectfully,

G. W. WARD.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

TALLAHASSEE, Florida, June 16, 1828.

SIR: Understanding that the surveying of range five south and east, as well as some other work on the coast south and east, remains to be finished, I take the liberty of offering my services to the government for the completion of the same without delay. The country in general would be much benefitted by an immediate survey of these townships, as there are many persons anxious to purchase lands in that quarter, it being held in high estimation. The advantages to the country by an immediate survey and sale of these lands would be obvious.

I have been very unprofitably employed in the surveying department hitherto, having had the worst part of Florida to survey, in a country reported impracticable by other surveyors. Although the country which I now propose to survey is in many parts very swampy, yet I am willing to embark in it, believing that with perseverance and rigid economy I can, in some degree, indemnify myself for the great sacrifices which I have made in the surveying department of Florida. As I am accustomed to surveying, and, withal, fond of the life, when things are fairly conducted, I would most willingly undertake a large contract, if in a good country, at a lower rate than that fixed by law, and for the faithful performance thereof will enter into ample security with the government.

I am, &c., &c.,

HENRY WASHINGTON.

Hon. GEORGE GRAHAM.

TALLAHASSEE, June 16, 1828.

DEAR SIR: My friend, Mr. Henry Washington, is desirous to embark in surveying the lands south and east on the waters of the Oscilla and the coast of the Gulf, which is deemed of considerable importance to the adjacent country. Having located myself in that section of the Territory I feel a deep interest in the completion of the work, and have taken the liberty of writing to you on the subject, and should feel highly gratified if Mr. Washington could succeed in obtaining the appointment, as he informs me he has been very unprofitably employed on former occasions, and this would contribute to reimburse his previous losses and privations which he has had to encounter. Your aid in promoting his views will be gratifying to his friends here, and will, I assure you, confer an obligation on your obedient servant,

THOMPSON MASON.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner, &c., &c.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, August 1, 1828.

SIR: Your letter of the 15th ultimo, covering one to Mr. White, has been received. I am not certain as to Mr. White's present direction; I have, however, sent the letter under cover to the postmaster at New York, with directions that if he does not call for it in all this month that it be returned to this office.

I very much regret the delays which have occurred in laying down the private claims in West Florida, which you state to have arisen from the defects in describing the claims, so that the surveyors are unable to locate and survey them from the information derived from the abstracts of decisions, and from the neglect of the claimants to come forward and give the necessary information by which they may be ascertained and surveyed.

Before the lands are subdivided for sale, I wish another effort to be made this autumn to survey all the private claims confirmed; and it would be advisable to give early and due notice in the paper published in Pensacola of the time that your deputies will attend there for the purpose. This notice should be accompanied with a list of all the claims the description of which is so defective that they cannot be located and surveyed from the information derived from the public archives, and the claimants informed that if they do not attend or furnish the necessary information the lands will be surveyed as public land, without respect to such claims; and the lands should be so subdivided where they are salable, and your township plats closed and returned.

I regret that the surveyor did not himself examine the island or islands claimed by Mr. White, so as to make a more special report as to the causes which prevented the survey of either or all of them.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Colonel Robert Butler, surveyor general, Tallahassee, dated August 29, 1828.

"Your letter of the 12th instant is received, accompanied by two packets containing township maps and descriptions, agreeably to the statement therein.

"It is desirable that, in your future returns of maps, the table of contents of the private claims should exhibit the number of sections, and have the same reference to the confirmation as is exhibited on the survey as laid down."

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 13, 1828.

SIR: The enclosed township plats, 6 north, of ranges 29 and 30 west, are returned in consequence of the want of coincidence in the survey.

In your former return of the fraction of township 6 north, range 30 west, you exhibit the Escambia river as running through section 33. In these returns you will perceive that the Escambia, in range 30, and the Conecuh, in range 29 west, come into such interference as to prevent the possibility of connecting them upon the map.

The Alabama survey represents the Escambia as entering Florida about five miles west of the Conecuh, which is about the position represented in your first return, through section 33, township 6, range 30.

I have to request you will be pleased to have these corrected or explained, and return them to this office.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 23, 1828.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, I have to state that I do not perceive any necessity for extending for the present the township line through the tracts claimed by Forbes & Co.

I am well aware of the embarrassments experienced by the deputy surveyors arising out of the negligence of the claimants to come forward and designate such claims as are not so distinctly described in the records on which they were confirmed as to enable the deputy to find and survey them without the aid of the claimant, and I very much regret that there has been an omission in all the laws confirming private claims to make provisions for compelling the claimants to have their lands surveyed within a given period. There is a necessity on the part of the government for surveying those claims, in order to ascertain the public lands subject to sale. The 7th section of the act passed the 8th of February, 1827, directs the manner in which this shall be done, and all that can be expected of the executive officers is, that they procure all the information which the public archives contain of the locality and description of each claim, and use due diligence and precaution in carrying into effect the instructions given under the provisions of that section. When these means will not enable you to lay down a private claim, the lands must be surveyed as public lands, and the parties left to establish the locality of their claim in a court of justice. But as this latter course will necessarily produce embarrassment to the government as well as to the claimant, you will perceive the expediency and necessity of using such precautions in having the claims surveyed as will take from the claimant any just cause of complaint, and that will exempt your department from censure.

The papers enclosed in my letter of the 25th July were submitted as the opinions of respectable gentlemen, and that, upon reinquiry, you might take such measures for the survey and subdivision of any of these lands that you might deem necessary; and I place entire confidence in your judgment and discretion as to the practicability of running the township lines, and subdividing such of them as are salable.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 31, 1828.

SIR: Your letter of the 14th instant is received, accompanied by townships of fractional township 6 north, of ranges 29 and 30 west, which were transmitted you for examination and correction on the 13th of September last. I herewith return you the above maps, and have to request you will be pleased to connect the section 31, of township 6 north, of range 29 west, (which is now platted upon the map of fractional township 6 north, of range 30 west,) with the fraction now exhibited on the above township 6 north, of range 29 west.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 20, 1829.

SIR: Your letter of the 1st ultimo, in answer to mine of the 31st October, with its accompanying papers, is received.

I herewith enclose you a connexion of the right and left bank of the Conecuh river, which is agreeable to your returns of fractional townships 5 and 6 north, of ranges 29 and 30 west. I have also directed to be laid down the private claim of Edgely and Taunecs, agreeably to the courses and distances designated on the lines of the claim, which I submit for your investigation.

You will perceive by the diagram, if you maintain your courses and distances in protracting the private claim, that the sectional connecting distances are erroneous.

From these apparent discrepancies, there can be no doubt but the surveys have been erroneously made, both as regards the meanders of the Conecuh river and survey of the private claim. If so, a correction or examination of the survey ought to be made at the expense of the contractor.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Colonel Robert Butler, surveyor general, Tallahassee, dated February 10, 1829.

"I beg leave to refer you to my letters of 14th April and 20th January last, and would suggest the necessity of a critical examination of the surveys returned to your office, in comparison with the field-notes, before payments are made for such surveys."

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 5, 1829.

SIR: I herewith return you the township maps 2 north, of range 27 west, and 1 and 2 north, of range 28 west, with the request that you will connect Blackwater river on the township boundaries, and transmit them again for this office.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 26, 1829.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 5th instant, and submitted it to the President, who very much regrets the indisposition of Mr. Searcy, but does not feel himself authorized to grant a compensation to any person who may be employed in the place of Mr. Searcy during his absence, which may add to the sum appropriated by law for clerk hire for your office. Of that sum you will make such application as circumstances and the exigencies of the office may require.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, August 28, 1829.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, and accompanying papers, and am pleased to find that Mr. White is satisfied with the survey of his claim under Noreaga.

On referring to No. 9, in abstract C, of the reports made by Messrs. Overton, White, and Luckett, in 1824, you will find that Thomas English, under Millan de la Carrera, was confirmed to 800 arpents on the Perdido river; but as you only give the claimant's name, it is impossible to say whether this is the claim to which you allude. On an examination of the reports, I do not find any confirmation in the name of Andrew Mitchell.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 9, 1829.

SIR: Herewith is enclosed a diagram of the township north of the base line in ranges 30 and 31 west. By it you will preceive an evident discrepancy in the conjunction of the surveys east and west of the Escambia river, and that either the surveying or platting must be erroneous.

I have to request your immediate examination of the surveys, as the vouchers charging them will be suspended in your accounts until corrections shall be made, or such explanation as may prove the surveys to have been correctly executed.

The connected sections, which I forwarded to you on the 20th January last, continue this diagram to the southern boundry of the surveys of General Coffee, in Alabama.

I would suggest that the crossing of the Escambia bay of the base parallel may have been erroneous; in which case a correct connexion of the surveys east and west of the river would be impossible, without some other crossing at a point north, say at the northwest corner of townships 23 and 24 north, in range 30 west, to connect with.

I also return you the map of the fraction of township 2 south, of range 25 west, it being of no use in this office without a table of contents. By platting the meanders of St. Rosa bay between the section lines, the quantity may be estimated with sufficient accuracy, provided the survey should be correct.

I am, &c., &c.

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 26, 1829.

SIR: I have to urge your particular attention to my communication of the 9th of September last, requiring some explanations of surveys on the waters of the Escambia river. The charges for these surveys being made in the first quarter of 1828, your subsequent accounts cannot be sent to the auditor for settlement until that account is certified and transmitted.

I am, &c., &c.

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 11, 1829.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th ultimo, together with maps of fractions of township 1 north, of ranges 29 and 30 west, is received.

The fraction of township 1 north, of range 30, does not connect in a satisfactory manner with the fraction of the same township lying west of the Escambia river, which is on file in this office I have, therefore, to request that you will in future return all surveys of townships made fractional by rivers, bays, or other causes, entire, on one sheet, so far as the surveys may have been made.

Whenever circumstances intervene to prevent a completion of the survey of a township, such as swamps, inundations, poor land, &c., they should be represented and explained upon the map.

You will please return the fractional townships in ranges 29, 30, and 31 west, lying north of the base line, agreeable to the foregoing directions, with the least possible delay, as your accounts must remain unadjusted until this office is in receipt of them, exhibiting correct connexions on the Escambia and Conecuh rivers.

I am, &c., &c.

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 11, 1829.

SIR: It appearing from a letter received from honorable Mr. White that some of the claims confirmed, in part, by the first section of the act of 1828, have not been laid down on the township plats, I have this day advised him of the necessity of the claimants having such original grants immediately surveyed at their own expense, under the twelfth section of the act of 1827, and of furnishing you with such evidence of the surveys as will enable you to have them laid down on the plats in the register's office previous to the coming sales in February next; and I have to request that you will, upon receiving such evidence, have the original boundaries of the grants exhibited on the plats in the land office at Tallahassee, and furnish such a sketch as will enable us to lay them down upon our plats.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, &c., &c., Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 3, 1830.

SIR: Your letter of the 5th ultimo is received, by which (together with yours of the 20th December last) I perceive that you admit the correctness of the suggestions in my letter of September 9, 1829. The proper course to be pursued, therefore, I conceive to be fully expressed in that letter, to which I beg leave to refer you, and also to that of the 11th of December last. When the connexions required of you by those letters are received, I shall be enabled to judge of the correctness of the survey.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 18, 1830.

SIR: Your several communications on the subject of the surveys binding on the Escambia river (particularly that of the 26th ultimo, with explanations) leave me conclusively to believe that great error has been made in these surveys, or that they have not been platted correctly from the field-notes; I have therefore to observe that the incongruities in relation to them must be in some manner reconciled. The fractional townships on each side of the Escambia must be laid down, in connexion with that river, in conformity to the present marks and bounds, whatever may be their relative position on each side of the river. Although always desirable, yet it is not indispensably necessary that the township corners and lines on the east of the river should correspond with those on the west, but it is essentially necessary that the surveys should be exhibited on the plats precisely as they have been executed on the ground, exhibiting all their discrepancies, if there be any. If the lines have been actually and accurately run, and the townships platted from the field-notes, there can be no difficulty in doing this, and making a proper connexion of the surveys with the river and with each other; but if the work upon the ground has been improperly executed, or if the platting has not been accurately made from correct field-notes, then the necessity of correcting the error, wherever it may be, is evident.

If there should be more land to be sectioned between the two opposite surveys, they should bear a following number to the highest in the township to which they may be attached; and should errors be discovered in the surveys already existing, they should be corrected without altering the sectional numbers as originally marked and called for on the ground.

I beg leave to refer you to my several letters on the subject of these surveys.

I shall transmit your accounts to the First Auditor of the Treasury Department for settlement; those vouchers charging doubtful surveys will be suspended, agreeably to my communication of the 9th of September last.

I am, &c., &c,

GEORGE GRAHAM.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 10, 1830.

SIR: I enclose you a printed copy of an act to provide for the final settlement of the land claims in Florida, together with a printed copy of the report of the register and receiver.

Although further time has been given by the act for deciding upon a portion of these claims, yet I do not think that this ought to prevent our commencing the surveys in East Florida in the month of November next.

Your surveys should commence by subdividing those townships which have been already run out south of the St. Mary's and east of the Suwannee, and including Amelia and the other islands along the coast. The instructions heretofore given to you respecting the surveying of the public lands and private claims are so particular that nothing further suggests itself to me on those points at present, except to call your attention to the animadversions of the register and receiver in their report on the surveys made by Mr. Clarke, which correspond with the views of this office as heretofore communicated to you; and the surveys of Mr. Clarke cannot be considered as valid, except where they may be established by their intrinsic calls, or where they may stand the test of blocking out, as heretofore suggested to you. I would also suggest the necessity of your requiring the deputies to be particularly accurate in connecting their surveys on the large water-courses, so that those water-courses may be correctly exhibited on our maps. I am aware that the St. John's river will present much difficulty in this respect, but it is indispensably necessary that we should be enabled to lay it down accurately from the returns of the surveyors.

With respect to the claims for which royal titles were obtained subsequent to February 24, 1818, and which have to be reported by the register and receiver to the next session of Congress, I think it advisable, as some of these claims may be confirmed hereafter, that, although the lines of the public surveys will have to run through them, yet that the lines of the claims themselves should also be run out, and so connected with the public lines as to enable you, in the event of the confirmation of any one of them, to have it accurately laid down on the plat, and the contents of the adjacent fractions correctly known, without being at the trouble and expense of sending a deputy to make a survey of that particular claim.

The extent of the private claims, and the inherent difficulties incident to the surveying of them, and the extent of the discretionary powers necessarily vested in the deputies, imposes upon you the responsibility of employing only such deputies as possess a thorough knowledge of their business, and whose integrity and honesty are unquestionable. It is, however, desirable that as many deputies of this description as can be procured should be employed, and the surveying not confined to a very few individuals.

You will observe that the 7th and 8th sections have changed the law relative to the location and selection of some of the private claims heretofore surveyed, and to which sections I beg leave to call your attention. Although I regret this change in the law, it will in some measure facilitate the surveys and selections to be made, and will enable you to survey the islands covered by private claims without difficulty.

The claimant of the island of Key West has been exceedingly anxious to have that island surveyed, and as the present law removes all difficulty on the subject, I have to request that you will have it surveyed as soon as practicable. With respect to the islands on the eastern coast of Florida, I presume that there will be little difficulty in connecting them with the township, and in giving the surveys their sectional numbers; but it is apprehended that this will not be the case in relation to Key West and those islands and keys which extend southwest from the point of Florida. In relation to them, your surveyors must exercise a sound discretion; they should, however, be so particularized and designated on a connected plat as to enable us to patent them with facility and certainty; the bearings and distances of one island from the others should be particularly stated.

I am, &c., &c.,

GEORGE GRAHAM

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 26, 1830.

SIR: The instructions heretofore given in relation to the survey of the island of Key West may be executed as soon as circumstances will admit.

There is nothing in the law which need delay or prevent the execution of that survey; and as neither the interest of individuals nor that of the government can be affected injuriously by the fact of the survey being made, I would call your early attention to the subject.

The island is merely to be meandered along its coast, with a view to ascertain its true contents. The discrimination between the portion thereof that will remain to the public, and the portion that will accrue to the claimant under the law, will not be ascertained until the provisions of the law requiring a relinquishment of title to the United States of all the quantity claimed over one league square shall have been duly complied with.

If the island should have a bluff coast, the survey will be simple and easy. If parts of it, however, should more or less be affected by the tides, the survey is to be ordered as to exhibit the area at ordinary low tides; and it is further desired that you will report, as nearly as can be estimated, the difference between the area of the island at ordinary low and ordinary high tide, and indicate the same by some particular color on the plat of survey.

You will be advised in a few days respecting other subjects connected with your letter of the 21st ultimo.

I am, &c., &c.,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 26, 1830.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 21st ultimo, I have to inform you that there are $8,000 remaining of the appropriation for the survey of private land claims, of which such portion may be applied to the survey of those claims as will fall within the limits of the townships to be surveyed this winter and the ensuing spring.

As to the funds that can be appropriated for the surveying of the public lands in Florida during the present year, I do not believe that, of the remaining balance of the general fund, (there having been no appropriation for surveys made by Congress at the last session,) more than $10,000 can be spared for your department. This fact, however, need not interfere with your surveying operations, inasmuch as the appropriation for the year 1831 will have been made before the surveys will be returned to your office.

You will, therefore, proceed to act agreeably to the instructions of my predecessor in his letter, bearing date July 10, 1830.

I would call your special attention to the imperious necessity of urging on your deputies the observance of every possible accuracy and care in every branch of their duty. The difficulties and embarrassments resulting from the want of skill, or inattention, in the making of a survey, cause endless trouble to your office and to the department.

I would therefore take occasion to refer you to the letter of my predecessor of 10th July last, and to state, in addition thereto, that your deputy surveyors should be made expressly to understand that whenever the private claims cannot be made to protract from the courses and distances exhibited in the field-notes, and whenever they are found not to connect with the public land in the same or the adjoining township, it is prima facie evidence that error exists in the field, which error must necessarily be corrected at the expense of the deputy surveyor.

As a further means of obviating errors, I would suggest the recurrence to the standard chain, and comparison therewith of the chains used by the deputies as often as practicable, and always before entering on the survey under a new contract.

It is expected at this office that the township plats will indicate, both by letters and by distinctive colors, all swamps and ponds, and the extent of them; and also indicate the existence of every natural object which may either tend to gratify the curiosity of the public or to afford useful official information as to the topography of the country. With these views, I would request that your instructions to your deputies may be drawn up with special minuteness.

In cases where the surveyors meet with townships which, by reason of sterility, are not worth subdividing, the exterior township lines only are to be run, with the view to maintain the connexion of the public surveys; and in all cases where a part only of a township can be surveyed, the cause or causes which rendered it inexpedient or impracticable to survey the residue are to be particularly indicated on the township plat; and any deputy surveyor who shall be found to omit completing the survey of a township from no other cause than that it did not meet his convenience so to do, should not hereafter be employed.

You state the necessity of your being furnished with ten or twelve copies of the reports on Florida land claims for the use of your deputies; a copy of each report has heretofore been transmitted to your office, and there remain no copies at the disposal of this office.

As the claims are to be surveyed by law on the evidence to be furnished by the keeper of the archives, it is not believed that the reports, if in their possession, would furnish any facilities to the deputies in the execution of their duties.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 16, 1830.

SIR: The enclosed papers respecting the land confirmed to Alexander Love by the act for his relief passed on the 29th May last have been presented to this office by the honorable Mr. White, with a request that they be forwarded to you.

I am, &c. &c.

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

Extract of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Colonel Robert Butler, surveyor general, at Tallahassee, dated February 8, 1831.

"Your letters of the 31st December last and January 1st, accompanying your disbursement accounts of the fourth quarter of 1830, and maps of surveys in township 1 north, of range 5 east, and township 2 north, ranges 5 and 6 east, are received.

"Were not some of the lines, or parts of them, which are charged in the above account, voucher No. 1, by Paul McCormick, paid to McNeil and Boyd, or one of them, in the first quarter of 1825? If so, that portion will be disallowed or suspended in your account. If the former or first survey was informal, erroneous, or defective, the parties who received payment for such surveys should be required to refund the amount, which, when collected, should be applied to the payment of those lines disallowed, which appear to be a resurvey.

"In future charges cannot be allowed for such surveys as do not form a connexion, or close in such manner as to enable you to cast the contents of a section or fractional section, and to enable this department, from the return of the survey, to make a proper examination. Whenever meanders are charged you will be pleased to transmit a copy of the field-notes, together with the maps and descriptions."

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, August 23, 1831.

SIR: I have requested the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be remitted to you eight thousand dollars, as requested by you on 29th June last.

I shall send you a copy of the report of the board of commissioners for the year 1826 so soon as it can be procured. Had it been required at the time, it could have been readily supplied.

I shall make the island of Key West the subject of a future letter.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, August 29, 1831.

SIR: Having succeeded in obtaining from the Clerk of the House of Representatives a copy of the report on land claims in East Florida, communicated to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 21st February, 1826, I transmit the same to you, document No. 115, 1st session 19th Congress, H. R.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 17, 1831.

SIR: Mr. Searcy's letter of the 8th ultimo, communicating the fact of your indisposition, and transmitting, agreeably to your request, a copy of your letter of 17th March last, has been received. Mr. Searcy states that you had not received the funds required by that letter. I apprehend that he has misunderstood your meaning, as, on inquiry at the office of the Treasurer of the United States, I learn that two remittances have been made since March last, one for $10,000, which was paid on 28th May last, and the other for $8,000, paid on the 1st instant.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee, Florida.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 30, 1832.

SIR: I enclose a copy of a letter, dated 25th instant, from the Hon. Joseph M. White, respecting the survey of the confirmed claim of Joseph Noreaga to an island in the Escambia river, (township —, No. ranges 29 and 30 west,) with a copy of the map therein enclosed.

By the township maps examined by you in May, 1829, Noreaga's claim is represented as covering the part now claimed by Mr. White, and marked by him with the letters A A; but, by the plat of township 1, range 30, examined in November, 1829, the claim is represented as bounded by the creek through which I have run the red line marked B B; and the part southeast of that creek is represented as public lands. I will, therefore, thank you to examine the ———, and inform me if the creek B B is a permanent water-course through which the water of the river has a passage at all times, or whether the water which divides at the head of the island unite by the channel marked C C with those which descend by the branch of the river which forms the northern boundary of the island. Any other information in your possession, which goes to show the land contemplated to be given to Noreaga by the Spanish government, should also be forwarded.

I am, &c., &c.

E. HAYWARD.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 13, 1832.

SIR: I have to urge the transmission to this office, as soon as possible, of all the returns of surveys due from your office, with a statement showing each township surveyed, the plat of which has not been furnished.

If the information as to the township surveyed can as readily be furnished by a diagram, that mode would be preferred.

You are also requested to designate the townships under contract, if any there be, the returns of which are not yet made to your office.

You are also requested to explain the cause of the delay in the transmission of said returns.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 4, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 8th ultimo, requesting funds to the amount of $2,500 to pay for certain surveys on the Escambia river, has been received.

On the 23d ultimo the Secretary of the Treasury was requested to remit to you that amount.

I have also to acknowledge the receipt of your two letters of the 11th ultimo; one of which is in reply to Patton Anderson, the other transmitting a diagram showing the state of the returns due from your office.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 29, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 18th ultimo, covering several papers in relation to the survey of the island in the Escambia, confirmed to Joseph Noreaga and now claimed by Colonel White, has been received.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 5, 1832.

SIR: Enclosed you have a duly certified copy of the decree and order of the Supreme Court of the United States, made at the last term of said court, by which the Arredondo claim to 289,645 5-7 acres is confirmed, and the manner of making the surveys prescribed. You will, therefore, take the necessary steps to have this claim surveyed, in strict conformity to the order of the court, and return a copy of the plat and field-notes to this office. The lines of this claim should be accurately connected with the lines of public surveys so far as they may have been run.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OEFICE, August 23, 1832.

SIR: Enclosed you have an extract of a letter dated 13th instant, from the Hon. Joseph M. White, respecting certain claims in Florida, and I will thank you to inform me whether they have been surveyed, and if not, of the causes which have prevented the execution of that work.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 27, 1832.

SIR: Your several letters of the 24th ultimo, and of the 15th and 16th instant, have been received. I very much regret your indisposition, and that the circumstances connected with the duties of your office, which have grown out of congressional legislation, should be found among the reasons which have induced Mr. Searcy to tender his resignation as chief clerk in your office.

Mr. Searcy states, in his letter, that after the returns due to this office had been completed, the late law of Congress will cause them to be of no use. He must allude to the act of 5th April last, and the necessity of minute subdivisions of fractional sections. The necessity for throwing aside those returns and making out new plats is not apparent without further explanations. Why may not the necessary subdivisions be shown on those plats? With regard to the subdivisions of fractional sections in former surveys the case is different; subdivisional plats will be necessary under those circumstances, and the labor of preparing them will be great.

On the 13th instant you were written to respecting the arrears of your office, and were requested to make a report of the different duties to be performed, with an estimate of the number of clerks, &c., which would be required to bring up the work in a given time.

I would now suggest that the circumstances set forth in your communication of the 24th August last be made to constitute a part of your report, which will be submitted to Congress at an early period of the approaching session, when I indulge a confident hope that the embarrassments existing in the several surveying districts, and the injury which results to the public service for want of adequate means to execute the requirements of law, will be fully and fairly investigated, and an adequate relief provided. Meanwhile I trust that Mr. Searcy may be induced to continue to perform the duties of the office as usual, and as far as his health will permit, until the result of the intended application to Congress for relief shall have been ascertained.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

P. S.—In the midst of the constant pressure of details of business, the omission to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 23d May last, and the accompanying papers, was not noticed until your letter of 24th ultimo mentioned the circumstance.

E. H.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 19, 1832.

SIR: I will thank you for information whether you have among the records of your office a plan of the city of St. Augustine, showing the public and private lots and commons within the corporate limits of the city, and on which are designated those which have been reserved or granted for corporate purposes by the laws of Spain or Congress, and those which have been confirmed to individuals. If you have such plan, I will thank you to furnish a copy as soon as practicable.

I will also thank you to furnish a copy of your letter of 11th August, 1829, which accompanied a plan of the city of Pensacola, the original having been mislaid.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 28, 1832.

SIR: The Secretary of the Treasury, with a view of carrying into effect the provisions of the act of Congress of the 28th of June last, respecting lots in the cities of St. Augustine and Pensacola, having called upon this office for the surveys of those cities, was furnished with a copy of the small map of Pensacola, received with your letter of August 11, 1829, and informed that this office was not in possession of any resurvey of St. Augustine; and, on the 24th instant, the map of Pensacola was returned in a letter, of which I now enclose you a copy.

I have therefore to request that you will, as soon as practicable, furnish me with another plan of Pensacola, exhibiting, by different colors and suitable references, such lots therein as have been granted for corporate purposes by the laws of Spain and of the United States, respectively; those which have been set apart for churches or burying grounds by the laws aforesaid, or by any ordinance of the corporate authorities of the city, and the dates, when so set apart, as far as practicable; those which have been confirmed to individuals, and those now the property of the United States, with such other information as will enable the Executive to carry the before-mentioned law into full effect.

A similar plan of St. Augustine is required before the Executive can execute the law so far as it respects the lots in that city.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

Colonel ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Tallahassee.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 17, 1832.

SIR: Enclosed is a copy of a letter from the delegate from Florida, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, with a copy of the letter therein referred to, from Peter Mitchell, in relation to the survey of the Arredondo claim.

Your special and immediate attention is requested to the subject-matter of Mr. Mitchell's communication, and it is expected and required that you will report to the department thereon as soon as practicable.

I am, &c., &c.,

E. HAYWARD.

NEAR NASHVILLE, September 15, 1825.

"SIR: You will discover from my general instructions, (a copy of which is herewith accompanied,) that I have uniformly directed that no township shall be sectioned in which private claims may be; and I regret that your letter of August 20 should presuppose that I had deviated from your instructions. Your expression of the object of the government in the last clause of that letter shall be made a part of my instructions to the deputies.

"Unless Congress shall act upon the private claims at the ensuing session, I shall not feel myself authorized to have any work done in 1827, unless specially required by you."

I have, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated October 26, 1825.

"The difficulties suggested in your last letter with regard to compelling the deputies, under the form of contract adopted, to pay for incorrect surveying, permit me to say, does not exist; for the return of surveyors explicitly states the period in which it may be executed, and my individual instructions to each deputy (copies of which are on file) point out, as near as may be, the ground they are to occupy; and the contract itself requires the work to be executed within a given period; and added to all which, I have taken an individual bond of ten thousand dollars, with good security, for the faithful performance of all surveying assigned to each deputy, under all which there can be no possibility of escape. The latter precaution I have adopted, growing out of a circumstance that transpired (as I have been informed) in Freeman's office, where returns under contract were regularly made into the office, well executed on paper, without a chain ever having been stretched in the district assigned."

TALLAHASSEE, July 10, 1826.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours, 1st ultimo, covering a bill providing for the survey of the private claims in Florida, but which, for want of time, was laid over by the Senate.

"I have, &c.,

"R. BUTLER.

"GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office."

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, November 17, 1826.

SIR: I have received your letter of date 18th ultimo, in which you request me to give you an estimate of the amount that will be necessary to resurvey the confirmed claims, which had hitherto been surveyed under the Spanish government, and what portion of it would be required for the year 1827. In answer, I have to remark that I have no data in my possession whatever to found an estimate upon. The suspension of the surveys for the ensuing season I consider a very prudent measure, and from the best information I can obtain at present, I am decidedly of the opinion that there is no land townshipped east of the Suwannee river free from private claims, that is of the character which you have authorized the survey of. I therefore shall decline making any contracts until an appropriation is made for laying down the private claims.

With great respect, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated March 26, 1827.

"I was placed in possession of your letter of instructions of February 26, by the last mail. I have given to them and to the law much attention, and at present see no difficulties in the way of their prompt execution, provided I am placed in possession of the requisite documents by the keeper of the archives at Pensacola in a reasonable time to enable me to commence operations. I shall, in strict accordance with your instructions, confide this work to those of my deputies in whom I have every confidence."

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, April 10, 1827.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th ultimo, by the last mail. The information therein afforded supersedes the necessity of a reply to my letter of the 26th ultimo.

If I can immediately obtain some information to enable me to district the country, I shall commence the execution of your instructions without delay. The Secretary of the Treasury has placed at my disposal the funds enumerated in your letter above acknowledged. In the last clause of your letter of instructions, bearing date February 26, you mention the survey of the private claims in the town and neighborhood of Pensacola. Will you have the goodness to inform me if it is meant that a survey of the town is to be made entire, or have you instructions bearing only on such claims as may be presented to the deputy for designation?

I hope to effect the execution of your instructions at an early period, to enable you to bring into market the public lands, and have the private claims patented, which have been confirmed, without unnecessary delay.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated May 15, 1827.

"I have received, on the 7th instant, the acts passed at the second session of the nineteenth Congress, and by last mail a book of State papers relating to the private land claims in Florida, which will enable me to commence at an early day the contemplated surveys; and I trust I shall be enabled to report them in sufficient time to meet your wishes."

TALLAHASSEE, May 22, 1827.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by yesterday's mail of your several letters, (3,) bearing date 26th, (1,) 28th, (1,) May 1st instant, together with the plan of Pensacola; also extracts from the instructions of Colonel McRee and the location of the lands given to Doyle and Hambley, all of which shall have due attention. The deputy surveyor, who has made the above location, is at present absent, and on his return, which will not be for some weeks, you shall hear from me touching that matter.

I shall endeavor to obtain an official plan (as extended by the Spanish government) of the city of Pensacola, agreeably to your suggestions; and I agree with you entirely in the belief that there is no necessity for a survey of the city, unless it is the exterior lines, to enable this office to form a correct connexion of the adjacent lands.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated June 6, 1827.

"I have received your letter of the 7th ultimo, accompanied with a plan of the navy yard near Pensacola. I am about to despatch one deputy surveyor to Pensacola with a view to commence the work, and shall have two more in the early part of August. The season will be a dangerous one, and my deputies act with much reluctance, believing their lives jeopardized by the attempt. Colonel Exum, who will survey immediately in the vicinity of Pensacola and Barrancas, will do ample justice to the service."

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated July 3, 1827.

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your several letters bearing date the 1st and 2d of June. I shall comply with your wishes, as early as practicable, in forwarding a township plat containing private claims for your approval. I have just received a letter from my deputy, Colonel J. W. Exum, at Pensacola; the following is extracted for your information:

"'On my arrival, I made application to the mayor, his clerk, and several of the aldermen of the city, as also the keeper of the archives and city surveyor, for the plan of the city. I was unable to obtain one; therefore, by the assistance of the city surveyor and keeper of the archives, I have been employed ever since I reached this place in measuring, and I believe I have, or will have in a few days, a correct plan. I did at first find some difficulty in measuring after leaving the English plan—the measurement being in perches or arpents of Paris measure; that difficulty is surmounted, but that is not the worst I fear. I find some claims commence at picket ½, 5, 10, 15, and as far as 25 miles from a defined point. The word about appears to be a common commencement, and running about N.NE. (or some other mariner's point) to a picket, so many Parisian perches, &c., but never closes.'

"The foregoing will give you some idea of the manner in which the surveys of private claims have been executed, and prepares my mind at once for a continued scene of vague and clashing interests. The surveyors, however, who have been selected for this important duty, I have the most implicit confidence will perform it in a masterly manner; and, when the surveys shall have passed the ordeal of this office, I trust will be found to meet with your entire approbation."

TALLAHASSEE, July 24, 1827.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose you a copy of Colonel Exum's letter, which is submitted with a hope that you will suggest some course whereby the surveyors can proceed in the execution of their duties and the provisions of law complied with.

Unless the claimants designate their land, the grand object of a check in the surveyor general's certificate is totally lost.

I hope to hear from you upon this subject as early as your convenience will permit, as two other surveyors will be engaged in ten days more.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq.

PENSACOLA, July 10, 1827.

DEAR COLONEL: I have just received your favor of the 3d instant; observe the remarks, &c.; must further state to you that you have no idea of the difficulty I have to encounter with. I continued in Pensacola until the 5th of July. I received one plat of survey, as also one plat and certificate of title; the plat alone was encompassed by the navy yard; the plat and certificate was one sold by the marshal sometime since, and the purchaser knows not where it is. All those who have claims say they shall not trouble themselves to go to the sun to show the corner; if the general government wants to connect the surveys, they may send and get copies of their claims from the keeper of the archives, and pay for it, for they will not; and they will not deliver their original to any person even by order of the general government; and they will not copy them themselves. In consequence of which, with the assistance of the keeper of the archives, I obtained a sketch of the location of claims, &c., in my district, and have closed some surveys; and shall commence to-morrow in township No. 1, range 29 south and west, in which there are several claims, but no person living on it can give or will give any information whatever. There are corners marked all through the country, many of which are not sanctioned; therefore, when I find a corner appearing to answer a grant, I then make a trial; if it fits the call, I consider it right, otherwise I search again. There being no lines marked, I have simply to search for corners alone.

JAMES W. EXUM.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, September 15, 1827.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your very interesting letter of instructions of the 18th ultimo, and tender you my thanks for the particular manner in which you have complied with my request of the 24th of July.

The instructions given to my deputies, together with their patient forbearance and solicitation, have overcome the difficulties pretty generally, and I have every reason to believe that they will happily succeed in the execution of their contracts.

Enclosed you will receive a diagram exhibiting the manner in which the private claims are laid down and the residuary lands connected. The corners, under my instructions, are marked with the claimant's name, and U. S. fronting the public lands, independent of the usual marks. To enable me to render perfect my return, I request you will have the goodness to direct this office to be furnished with a copy of the field-notes of a township having private claims therein which are approved, and suggest any alterations you may deem necessary in the draught now forwarded.

I shall take occasion to examine the subject of improvement on the present law relating to private claims, and will furnish such suggestions, in time for the meeting of Congress, as my reflections produce.

If you should determine on having any surveying done this winter, other than what is in progress, I would suggest that the season most appropriate is near at hand.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

TALLAHASSEE, October 3, 1827.

The surveying of private land claims in West Florida has been suspended for the present, owing to misfortunes that could not be obviated, and circumstances not at first anticipated. Pensacola has unhappily been visited this season with the yellow fever, which has extended its ravages into the country, and my surveyors in that neighborhood have suffered severely. Several of their men having died, and others being sick, it has been impossible for them to progress in business.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

TALLAHASSEE, October 15, 1827.

I informed you that the surveying in the neighborhood of Pensacola was necessarily suspended, owing to the prevalence of the yellow fever, which seems was not confined to the city. Some of the hands employed by my deputies fell victims to this disease. Colonel Exum has arrived and is making returns to this office of the work completed, and we will commence the duties growing out of his return immediately.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated December 6, 1827.

"Advices from the deputies engaged in laying down the private claims in the west, induce a belief that they will soon complete their labors; and I regret to say that they will not even save themselves under their contract.

"I have informed them that I am authorized to extend their contracts, as some remuneration for the difficulties encountered, and shall, in pursuance of your instructions, proceed to have executed the surveys intimated in a former communication. The receipt of your last instructions will enable me to make my returns to your office in a manner I hope entirely satisfactory.

"From a careful examination of the law of the last session of Congress relating to private claims, I am not able to recommend any additional provisions that would have a salutary effect, unless it can be amended so as to give an additional compensation to the surveyor, which, from experience, proves inadequate to the duties.

"The additional labors imposed upon my office, without any compensation attached thereto, must be submitted to under a hope that time will be allotted for their execution corresponding with the duties to be performed. To induce private claimants to give the necessary information to the surveyors, it will only be necessary, I apprehend, to give timely notice informing them that, when they fail to attend or furnish the necessary evidence, the lands will be connected and surveyed as public lands for sale."

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, March 11, 1828.

It appears from your letter that you anticipated greater progress in the survey of the private claims in West Florida. Colonel Exum and Major Clements have recently completed their returns to this office, and Mr. Donelson is here making out his returns. The sickness that prevailed last fall, and the delay occasioned by the claimants not showing their lands, the difficulties in other respects, the badness of the country and impassable swamps, must be the apology for delay. I had anticipated forwarding some part of this work by this mail, but find it impossible, owing to the private claims running into different townships, which renders the comparison of them necessary before they are forwarded. As soon as I can complete some that are disconnected with others, you shall have them.

Many difficulties arise in these surveys, such as the impracticability of closing many private claims, from marshes and quagmires impassable. Numbers have never been surveyed, other than beginnings established, or calls depending upon each. The amount of land seldom corresponds with the grants when run to the calls thereof; and many claims interfere with each other. Some of the claims have so indefinite beginning, that to identify them would be impossible; others can never be surveyed, owing to the location being impracticable.

At the close of the quarter ending the 31st instant, there will appear a deficit, on account of public lands surveyed, of about $1,300; and a sum sufficient on hand for the completion, as I believe, of all the private claims in West Florida that can be surveyed or found, and to which object the attention of a surveyor will be directed next month.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, March 11, 1828.

SIR: In designating the districts for the surveyors west, the Escambia river was made the boundary between two of them. It has resulted in causing returns by those surveyors of parts of townships which embraced that river, each giving sectional numbers, beginning with No. 1; and their certificates of private claims may have the same number, or, at any event, there are two numbers the same in a greater part of the township.

Will a return of these townships made separate, designating one east the other west of the river, answer; or must the returns be connected and the sectional numbers altered throughout from what the deputies have given, and the certificates from this office be made to correspond therewith?

The deputies not having made their returns at the same time, the difficulty was not perceived in them to remedy it.

I would also inquire whether I am to grant certificates for those claims that interfere with each other before a legal decision is had between the parties; and whether a tract of land, when surveyed agreeably to the calls of grant or survey, shall exceed or fall short of the amount expressed by the commissioners, in their confirmations, to an amount considerable in itself, yet evidently the land intended ought to receive my sanction? My wish to perform the duties assigned me in a manner unexceptionable, gives rise to my troubling you.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Washington, D. C.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, April 15, 1828.

In the progress of my examination of the private claims which have been surveyed, I find the absence of the report of the register and receiver of claims which appears to have received the sanction of Congress in the fifth section of an act approved April 22, 1826.

I have written to Mr. Cairo for a copy, but, fearful that he may not be in possession of it, will be obliged to you to direct a copy to be sent to this office. Several township plats, otherwise ready to be forwarded to your office, must be withheld on that account.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

TALLAHASSEE, May 13, 1828.

I have despatched, a few weeks since, my surveyors south and east for the completion of the work contemplated in my estimate, but they returned immediately, owing to a fall of rain having inundated the country so as to render it impassable. I have therefore despatched them, with instructions to complete the remaining private claims that can be found, and all and every unfinished work that may be practicable and which ought to be surveyed.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, July 1, 1828.

Your letters of the 6th and 12th ultimo, together with the enclosures referred to, have been duly received and will meet my early attention.

Congress having extended the period for adjudicating private claims east, I am persuaded that endless difficulties will accrue in prosecuting the surveys in that quarter at the present time. I will, however, communicate with the register and receiver at your request, and apprise you of what I may ultimately determine upon.

My deputy surveyors have just arrived from the west—have been driven out of the country by the extreme heat of the weather. The claimants have not in one single instance availed themselves of this opportunity to have their claims run out, although notified through the paper at Pensacola, and the deputies remaining at that city for four days under very heavy expenses. I am appehensive that large portions of those claims are so poor as to induce the owners to permit their survey and sale, with a hope of future indemnity by the United States. This opinion, however, is wholly my own, without any information on the subject from others.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office, Washington.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, July 15, 1828.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th ultimo, with the enclosed extract of a letter from the Hon. Mr. White, on the subject of the duties appertaining to this office. I have also received a letter from Mr. White on the subject of some private claims in West Florida.

The accompanying documents, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, will apprise you of the steps taken to have the private claims surveyed; and under your letter of instructions of date the 18th August, 1827, I feel justified in saying that all has been done by this department that can be required of it. If the surveys which have been executed are to remain open for additional surveys, they cannot be completed until the ensuing year, and will tend to accumulate difficulty on difficulty in this office. On this subject I must await your instructions. Enclosed you will find my answer to Mr. White, subject to your perusal, and I must ask the favor to have it sealed and forwarded to his address. I would barely remark that the deputy surveyor alluded to by Colonel White was in his company at Pensacola on several occasions during his stay there under my instructions, and that Colonel White gave him as a reason for not going with him to show him his lands the delicate health of his lady; yet why did not the colonel send some person, or why did his agent subsequently fail to attend to Colonel White's business?

I trust, sir, that you will have no other than a just regard for the fulfilment of the laws in this matter, and that my deputy surveyor and myself will not be held subject to the will of any person who may choose to call for surveys when their leisure and inclination prompts them.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

No. 1.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, April 25, 1828.

Owing to the country south and east being so much inundated with the late rains as to render surveying impracticable in that quarter at this time, you will proceed next and take up all unfinished work above the parallel, except where it may interfere with Forbes' and Innerarity's large claims, completing the same as far as practicable under your general instructions.

You will be furnished with a list of private claims which have been sanctioned and yet remain to be surveyed. Your attention is particularly called to the completion thereof, so far as you can identify them.

Should there not be found a sufficient quantity of surveying to complete your contracts, or the season too far advanced before you complete, you are authorized to desist work, provided you deem it hazardous to continue the same; in the former event you will have assigned you sufficient work to complete your contract, so soon as the fall season sets in, to enable you again to take the field; you will also take up any unfinished work south of the parallel and west of Choctawhatchee.

It is extremely desirable that your visit to the west may supersede in future the necessity of again sending any surveyors in that quarter.

Respectfully,

ROBERT BUTLER.

Messrs. CLEMENTS and EXUM, Deputy Surveyors.

No. 2.

TALLAHASSEE, July 10, 1828.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your instructions, bearing date June, 1827, directing me to the west for the purpose of taking up the surveys of the private claims east of the Escambia river and north of the basis parallel, together with the public lands, &c.

You also instructed me to be, and attend, in the town of Pensacola, from the 5th until the 10th of August, for the purpose of receiving from the different claimants such information as might be necessary to enable me to find the different tracts of land, &c. Sir, in compliance of which I arrived at the town of Pensacola, either on the 3d or 4th of August, and remained there until the 12th or 13th of said month, without being able to obtain but little information of advantage to me from the claimants, some of them appeared to be willing to afford any information, others were indifferent, and some were not to be seen.

I proceeded to the woods on the east side of Escambia bay, near the head of the same, above the basis parallel, and commenced work about the 27th or 28th of August; my young men with me were taken sick, in consequence of which, together with the death of my son, and one other young man in my employ, I was under the necessity of leaving the country for a few weeks for safety. I returned again early in November, and took up my work. I went again to Pensacola, about the 22d November, for the purpose of seeing some of the claimants to induce them to send some person, or come themselves, and show me their lands. Some did so, and had their lands surveyed, others would not come; all of which I surveyed that I could by any means find, and some with the utmost difficulty. In relation to the island in the Escambia river, I was at no time able to procure any person to show me the land. Colonel White told me that a Mr. Williams would be with me for the purpose of showing me something about it, but he failed to do so; and, as I was informed, there are many sloughs that run through the islands, which make it difficult for a stranger to make any particular designation. There was a package of papers sent to me, being directed to James R. Donelson or myself, said to belong to Colonel White, with a letter of instructions, but of no service to me without a pilot. The letter, I believe, I left with A. Gordon, esq., of Pensacola, and the other papers sent back to the post office, I believe, from which they came. With much difficulty, I assure you, it was that I got to survey as many private claims as I did. I believed it to be my duty to survey all I could find, and was at the trouble and expense of obtaining from the keeper of the public archives a list of all the claims that he knew anything about in the section of country I was directed to work in, but, for the want of the necessary information, I have no doubt there are a few yet unsurveyed; but if the necessary information can be obtained, I am ready at any convenient period to complete the surveys agreeably to your instructions, &c.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJ'N CLEMENTS, Deputy Surveyor.

Colonel BUTLER.

No. 3.

TALLAHASSEE, July 10, 1828.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your instructions, bearing date April 25, 1828, directing us to the west to take up all the unfinished work west of the Choctawhatchee river authorized to be done, together with all private claims, if any, which have not been surveyed.

Sir, for the purpose of procuring information relative to the private claims authorized to be surveyed, we went to the town of Pensacola May 20, 1828, and remained there until the 23d, at great expense; saw some of the claimants, but were not able to procure any information whatever. We also got the favor of the editor of the Pensacola Gazette to notice in his paper that we were there in the country, ready to attend at any time to the survey of any private claims, with the necessary information thereto, and none being furnished us we were not able to make any survey of the same. The season being so far advanced and the weather being so very hot, and recollecting what we underwent the last season, we thought it advisable to desist from the work for the present, being authorized from your instructions to do so if we believed it hazardous. As such we have not been able to complete all the surveys of public lands; but, sir, we hold ourselves in readiness at all convenient periods to complete the same, in compliance with any instructions you may think proper to give.

We are, very respectfully,

BENJ'N CLEMENTS,
JAMES W. EXUM,
Deputy Surveyors.

Colonel BUTLER.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, August 12, 1828.

SIR: I have this day enclosed to your address two packets containing the township plats enumerated in the enclosed memorandum, accompanied with their respective field-notes.

I hope they will be found entirely unexceptionable. The donation of A. Pringle, in section No. 19, township 5, range 30 north and west, could not be surveyed, owing to the claim of Charles Baron interfering.

The manner of giving sectional numbers in many cases to these private claims has been made necessary from the circumstance of the land having been previously run out, and owing to the inattention of the claimants in not furnishing the surveyors in proper time with a knowledge of their claims; but the identity afforded these claims, as well from the T plats as the certificates, will, I apprehend, come entirely within the meaning of the law.

The keeper of the archives of West Florida reported a donation in favor of Thomas English, which has been surveyed; but no other evidence exists in this office that he is entitled thereto. Andrew Mitchell has a tract surveyed, which interferes with Turner Stark; also claims a donation, but no evidence whatever exists in the reports of the commissioners and keepers of the archives that he is entitled to either. I therefore presume that there may yet be a report of the commission, which has not been furnished this office, or the surveyor has been imposed on.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Colonel Robert Butler, surveyor general, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated September 1, 1828.

"The instructions contained in your letter of the 1st August, 1828, received by the last mail, and which relate to surveying of private claims in West Florida shall be immediately attended to. The duties incident to laying down those claims when the lands have been run out, will be particularly distressing and ruinous to the deputies employed, as I have no doubt a large portion of the claimants will pay no attention to their interest; and the claims are so imperfect in their locations and landmarks that it is impossible for the surveyors to proceed without the claimants identifying them in person.

"These continued efforts on the part of the government to induce claimants to have their rights secured, is certainly praiseworthy; but on the other hand, how distressing to the persons employed in the execution of these duties, and withal, what an extension of duties, and rendered more difficult, involve upon this office. I hope and trust that when the surveys to the east are to be executed, that I shall be authorized to give timely notice and to finally close the surveys (as the deputies progress) under the provisions of the laws."

Extract of a letter from Colonel Robert Butler, surveyor general, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated October 14, 1828.

"I have the honor to return the township plats enclosed with your letter of the 13th ultimo, and to remark in explanation, that the Escambia river was not laid down, owing to an oversight of the draughtsman, and escaped an observation in the general examination.

"You will observe a difference in the appearance of the Conecuh river on the township plats, arising from the fact of having a meridian run on the west, which differs in a small degree from the parallels of the survey east, they having been extended under many difficulties of swamps, water-courses, and bad ground. The necessity for this course was made manifest by the representations of the deputy surveyor, that in many places the connexion could not be made across that river, and therefore the survey was connected with its margin, giving rise to the small difference observable.

"I have just had the pleasure to receive your letter of 23d ultimo, and herewith enclose you the publication which I have deemed proper to make on the subject of the private claims, and shall, in furtherance of your views on that subject, give the deputy surveyors such instructions as will secure my department from censure."

NOTICE.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, September 15, 1828.

Those persons having claims to land in West Florida, as represented in the annexed schedule, are hereby notified that deputy surveyors will attend in Pensacola, from the 10th to the 13th of November next, for the third and last time, to complete the survey of those claims, when it is expected that claimants will attend and make the necessary arrangements with the deputies to identify their beginning corners, which are too indefinite to be found; and on failure to do so, they are informed that instructions have been received to survey the residuary lands as public domain, and the surveys to be finally closed and reported to the General Land Office. It is earnestly desired on my part that every facility be afforded to the claimants to have their lands run out and patented, and that the present opportunity will not be lost on their part to effect that object.

Those claimants to three large tracts of land in West Florida, contained in the reports of the commissioners, and numbered "four," "eight," and "ten," if disposed to avail themselves of the provisions of the first section of the act of Congress approved the 23d May, 1828, are requested to comply with the provisions of the twelfth section of the act of Congress approved the 8th February, 1827, without delay, so that their claims may be laid down on the township plats accurately, to enable them subsequently to locate the sections within the same, as authorized by the act of May, 1828.

ROBERT BUTLER.

Conflicting claims.

No. 1.—To a tract of land containing seven thousand arpents, situated on the eastern side of Escambia river, sometimes called an island, about twenty-six miles from Pensacola, in the district of West Florida, claimed in part by titles emanating from the British government, and in toto by a claim emanating from the Spanish government, viz:

The claim of Theodore Galliard, Cornelia his wife, formerly Cornelia Marshall, and Jane Marshall, citizens of the United States, to two hundred acres of land derived from the British government.

Also the claim of Theodore Galliard, Cornelia his wife, formerly Cornelia Marshall, and Jane Marshall, citizens of the United States, to two tracts of land of five hundred acres each.

Also the claim of Theodore Galliard, Cornelia his wife, formerly Cornelia Marshall, and Jane Marshall, citizens of the United States, to two hundred and sixty acres of land.

The claim of Francisco Bonal, derived from the Spanish government, to an island circumscribed by the river Escambia, fronting the bluff called "Durand's Bluff," containing seven thousand arpents, situated about fifteen miles from the mouth of said river.

No. 2.—Of claims to a tract of land containing eight hundred arpents, situated forty-seven perches to the south of the suburb of Pensacola, bounded with Galvez spring, in the district of West Florida, claimed, in part, by titles emanating from the British government, and in toto by a claim emanating from the Spanish government, viz:

The claim of Theodore Galliard, Cornelia his wife, formerly Cornelia Marshall, and Jane Marshall, citizens of the United States, to two hundred and fifty acres of land derived from the British government.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, December 1, 1828.

SIR: Your letter of the 31st of October, transmitting township plats six north, ranges twenty-nine and thirty, has been received. I have the honor to transmit herewith those township plats, together with a fractional township six, north of range twenty-nine, north and west, and west of the Conecuh river, which is the main branch of the Escambia; and this fractional township is thus made by, and in conformity with, your letter of instructions of March 27, 1828.

Referring you to the explanations in my letter of the 14th October last, with the accompanying maps, I hope they will be found entirely satisfactory.

I have taken the precaution to send the plan of Pensacola to the corporate body of that city, requesting their examination and approval thereof, with a view of having it rendered perfect, should any errors exist, and the deputy who made the plan will be ready to make all the corrections necessary on the spot.

I am, &c., &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., General Land Office.

TALLAHASSEE, December 15, 1829.

SIR: I have been expecting the arrival of Colonel Exum for some time, to give you a draft of the range which includes the Escambia river, to which the necessary explanations will be attached, to account for the seeming irregularity of the surveys east and west of that river. The colonel has been prevented by sickness and business, but will probably be here about the first of the coming year; and possibly Mr. Searcy may reach me by that time, as the latest advice from him informs me that he was recovering strength, and would set out as soon as he could bear the journey. The deputy surveyor who done the work east of that river will also be here about the same time, and I must therefore claim your indulgence until I can act satisfactorily on this subject.

I hope to forward, about the last of this month, a plan of a town in the vicinity of Fort St. Mark's, to be laid before Congress for their consideration.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, December 20, 1829.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ultimo, post-marked 28th, and received by last mail. The reasons for not furnishing you with the information required by your letter of the 9th of September, without any delay, you will find given in my last, of the 15th instant. I regret extremely that there should even be supposed an infraction of the act of January 31, 1823, on my part; and I feel at a loss to know in what manner it applies to me, as I have regularly transmitted my accounts; and the surveys upon which they are based have been also returned as soon as it was practicable, under the order from your department to continue the surveys of the private claims from year to year. I was led to believe from your letter that the surveys in question would be suspended, and my accounts proceed in their regular train of settlement; and being anxious to place full and accurate information before you, I have been waiting the arrival of two deputy surveyors, who are interested in these surveys, when my report would have been made for your decision.

By reference to the surveys on the Escambia, it will be found that the parallel of the townships on the east are south of those on the west, and the range itself somewhat narrowed on the north, which arises from the following causes, viz: In running the parallel in 1824–'25, the waters were extremely high and the season inclement; the distance across Black Water and Escambia bays about six and a half miles on the parallel and nothing but marsh, in which the surveyors and hands were frequently obliged to help each other out of the mud; the observations taken across these bays by means of flags, in all probability, were imperfect, and a variation north from the true line might have been the consequence.

When the surveys were ordered to be executed in that quarter the swamps of the Escambia were impracticable, owing to high waters, in consequence of which, I directed a meridian to be run from the first township corner west of said river, and the surveys to proceed west. When the range in question come to be run out subsequently, the facts above stated developed themselves, yet I am persuaded that the surveys on the river are correctly made. That this range should have narrowed on the north will readily occur to you as a matter not to be controlled; from the circumstance of several surveyors being engaged in running the ranges from Tallahassee to the point on the east, and a new meridian extended on the west of said river, it would have been a miracle to have fitted them exactly.

With these explanations, and a reference to the returns forwarded you, I am in hopes they will prove satisfactory.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated February 17, 1829.

"Your letter of the 20th ultimo, covering a diagram on the Escambia and Conecuh, has been received. I am looking hourly for the surveyor who made this survey, and on his arrival shall take the necessary steps to have the same corrected."

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, March 16, 1829.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th ultimo by last mail, and in connexion therewith have received the Treasurer's draft for the amount specified.

You inform me that my accounts still remain in your office, waiting the transmission of the work upon which the payments have been made. I am aware of this circumstance, and regret most sincerely that the reiterated orders from the department for the surveys of the private claims west have rendered this delay indispensably necessary, of which I informed you when I received your last letter of instructions on that subject. To have made out and transmitted the work before the surveys were closed would have subjected this office the second time to the formation of a large portion of it, which I never for a moment apprehended was the wish of the department, more particularly as I informed you that the third survey would prevent me from reporting the previous work until a final return should be received in the office; this is about to be effected in a few days, and you shall be put in possession of the entire work as soon as practicable.

On the subject of examinations of surveys, in comparison with the field-notes, before payments are made, such has been the uniform practice of this office heretofore, and they shall meet with a most critical examination hereafter.

The surveyor who executed the work referred to in the diagram enclosed in yours of the 20th January ultimo is now here, and will be despatched for the correction of said work as soon as he completes the return of his late surveys.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to George Graham, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated May 5, 1829.

I shall commence next week to forward the work from my office, and continue from time to time until it shall be entirely completed. I regret that the arduous duties of Mr. Searcy in his department of my office has impaired his health in so great a degree that I entertain fears of his inability to complete the work, and his physician recommends absence from this climate and relaxation from business for a time as necessary to his restoration. May I consider myself authorized, under such a contingency, to employ another clerk during his necessary absence?

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, July 28, 1829.

SIR: I have this day forwarded to your address the township plats and field-notes enumerated in the enclosed schedule, and by the succeeding mail shall forward the residue of the work which has been executed by this department up to the present date. Indisposition has prevented their completion on the part of Mr. Williams for a few days past, added to the necessary absence of my other clerk.

I most sincerely hope some congressional provisions will be had before entering on the surveys east that will compel the claimants to show their lands and enable the surveyors to progress regularly with their work, and not produce such a scene of difficulty and almost ruin which the surveys west have imposed upon them and accumulated labor to this office. I am persuaded that time will ultimately be gained by the delay which may arise in waiting the decision of Congress on the private claims, and the passing a declaratory act compelling the claimants to show their lands, after due notice from this office, or otherwise the land to be surveyed as public domain. Under such a course a system of instructions can be made for the government of the deputies as will enable them to perform their duties correctly and speedily, without vexatious delays, and to the entire fulfillment of the laws and instructions from your department. Those surveys, which have been executed under all the difficulties which have been presented will, I trust, meet your entire approbation, but I regret to say have yielded nothing but labor to the deputies who executed them.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEO. GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, January 5, 1830.

SIR: I have before me your letter of the 11th December, relating to the fractional townships north, in ranges 29, 30, and 31 west, on the subject of which I addressed you on the 15th and 20th ultimo. I have this day addressed a letter to the deputy surveyor requiring of him such information as he may be in possession of.

I shall endeavor to forward by next mail a diagram of the surveys, provided the information be such as by doing so any additional light can be thrown upon the subject. A thorough examination of the traverse on the east of the Conecuh river having been made, a small error has been discovered, but trifling in its nature.

It will readily appear to your mind that under existing circumstances no connected maps of those surveys can be made, as the surveys never were connected, from the reasons given in mine of the 20th ultimo; and should the information I may be furnished with give no new light on the subject, and be still unsatisfactory to you, the only course to be adopted will be that of a resurvey. If there is any town plats in your office that have not marginal notes accounting for their non-completion, I will thank you to have their numbers given me, that the deficiency may be supplied, as on this subject I have been very particular.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEO. GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, January 5, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 11th ultimo, on the subject of some claims confirmed by the first section of the act of 1828, and to which your attention has been drawn by a letter from the Hon. Mr. White. The claimants have been notified in due time, and called upon to conform to the provisions of the twelfth section of the act of 1827, but have not conformed by furnishing the evidence required, of which Colonel White was informed a short time previous to his leaving Tallahassee. The colonel was of opinion that it became my duty to have the confirmed claims surveyed, and my decision was given him in writing, conforming to that now contained in your letter.

I shall, however, on the evidence being furnished, lay down the claims on the plats, as requested, if presented in sufficient time.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEO. GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, January 26, 1830.

SIR: Your letter of the 6th instant I have the honor to acknowledge, in which I am referred to your letter of December 11, requiring a connected set of township maps in the fractions of ranges 29, 30, and 31 west, and lying north of the base line. On the 5th instant I addressed you an answer to that letter, and have now the honor to enclose a diagram, accompanied with such explanations as the subject affords, within my reach.

If it shall be found necessary, under all the circumstances, to resurvey this work, it must be done as soon as the waters and season will permit, although it will be ruinous to the deputies, for I am persuaded that never was a worse section of work to be executed in the United States. I stated the impracticability of making connected plats of those fractional townships in my letter of the 5th instant, because the surveys never were connected, as heretofore explained.

I was in hopes to have forwarded the plan of a town near the fortress of St. Mark's by this day's mail, but the examination of the surveys above alluded to has prevented its completion. I am in hopes to forward it by the succeeding mail.

I am, &c., &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEO. GRAHAM, Esq.

The reason why the surveys east and west of the Escambia bay and river do not connect may be, and probably is, owing to some of the following causes:

The surveys westwardly from the first meridian from Tallahassee were continued to the Escambia river, without a new meridian, and a small error in any of the township lines, which could not be discovered, would necessarily throw the line north or south of the true point, where the same would strike on the opposite side from the meridian G, and the parallels runs from it to the river east.

In taking the distance, or extending the parallel across the bay, the surveyor may have, and no doubt has, northed or southed a little from the true point, which would render the connexion impossible.

In running a range north, a small variation of a few minutes, or sometimes more, would necessarily take place to effect a close, which it was thought unnecessary to put down on the township plats, from the range lines next the river and bay. It is very probable the lines parallel, or east and west lines, were run at right angles with the true meridian at Tallahassee, which would, of course, produce a discrepancy.

In extending the meridian north from G, the Perdido river interfered; another small error may have taken place, in itself of no importance, but, in connexion with the whole, would aid in producing the result of the river crossing itself on the plats.

Small errors, of but little importance in fractional sections, on the river would create the same difficulty, when, in fact, there would be but a small excess or deficiency in the area, not worthy of notice.

The very bad swamps, quagmires, and various other difficulties, may, and no doubt have, presented themselves—such as where two surveyors surveyed the same township and made separate returns, gave different variations, &c, would, with the whole, create the discrepancy.

In running a line that distance, without occasionally taking observations and correcting, a considerable error would be, and no doubt was, made in the parallel. This was not the case in the ranges of townships carried on which were or should have been six miles square, which would certainly have a tendency to create its share in the result.

In running the meridian north from G, no doubt the surveyor bore a little to the river, believing it would be better to have a narrow range than to have a slip between two ranges; this would produce a discrepancy, provided the parallels running from it were run at right angles from said meridian.

It never was contemplated to connect the surveys on the river when the work was done; now it is impossible, as there are the same numbers in the fractional sections on each side of the river in the same township—sometimes public, and others private land—for instance, see fractional township No. 1, range No. 30, north and west.

It appears that, in crossing the Escambia bay, owing to the great width and bad ground, there was a mistake made of about half a mile, from A to B, making the twenty-ninth range about that much too narrow; when the range line was run north from A to C six miles, then west six miles to D, then south to the bay at F, that point was about half a mile west of the point B.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, March 16, 1830.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter bearing date 18th ultimo, and have read it with much interest and attention. With a view to comply with these instructions, I have directed an examination of the general points in the ranges referred to, and, as soon as I am placed in possession of the facts, I shall be enabled to determine accurately whether a resurvey will be necessary or not. I have only to claim your indulgence as to time, promising you that no delay shall be permitted, but by uncontrolable circumstances; and I am determined that the subject shall have a thorough investigation before I leave it. If it shall be determined on to proceed with the surveys east of the Suwannee this fall, you will oblige by giving me early information on the subject, as I wish to prepare a new set of instructions for the government of my deputy surveyors, with a view to insure a more perfect execution of their duties in laying down the private claims and connecting the public domain, and also to give timely notice to the claimants, leaving them without cause of complaint, if they neglect their own interest.

I am, &c., &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, July 12, 1830.

SIR: The deputy surveyor despatched for the examination of the work done in ranges 30 and 31, and a small part of 29, embracing the Escambia swamps, has recently returned, and it has been ascertained that a resurvey of that work is absolutely necessary; I shall therefore despatch two deputy surveyors for the execution of this work on or about the 1st of September next, being the earliest period deemed practicable and safe for its complete execution. If you have any surplus copies of the books containing the report of the commissioners west it would greatly facilitate the faithful execution of that work, by furnishing the deputy surveyors with copies, even should you require their return after the surveys shall have been executed. The surveys required to be executed under the act of the late session of Congress, together with a few private claims not heretofore found, can be executed whilst the deputies are west, and perhaps some scrap work of public land if deemed sufficiently valuable.

Accompanied you will receive my accounts for the quarter ending the 30th ultimo, corrected, agreeably to the adjustment of the Comptroller, up to March 31, 1830.

I am, &c., &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

LAKE JACKSON, August 1, 1830.

SIR: Owing to severe indisposition of one of my children I address you from my residence, acknowledging the receipt by last mail of your letter of instructions, bearing date 10th ultimo, and accompanying documents. I shall make the necessary arrangements without delay for their execution.

Will you have the goodness to apprise me of the amount of funds set apart for surveying in Florida, that I may thereby regulate the number of surveyors to be employed.

The transmission of ten or twelve copies of the document containing the reported land claims acted on during the last session would greatly facilitate the surveyors in the execution of their duties, and I solicit the favor of you to direct them to be sent to me. I shall despatch a surveyor to run out Key West and those islands adjacent as soon as the season arrives at which a work of that description can be executed without imminent hazard of the lives of all employed.

I hope your health is re-established.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to J. M. Moore, esq., acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated October 8, 1830.

Herewith accompanied you have my accounts for the third quarter of the present year, showing a balance against me, as adjusted by the Comptroller of the Treasury, of $3,825 19, of which amount the sum of $2,836 49 is for suspended items for discrepancies on the Escambia river, and all of which will be accounted for when the resurvey is made, which will commence on the 1st of November next, being the earliest period deemed safe for the surveyors to approach those swamps. The amount actually on hand is $988 70.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to Elijah Hayward, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated January 14, 1831.

By last mail your letters of the 16th and 17th ultimo were received, and the case of Alexander Love put in train for survey. The contents of your letter of the 17th shall be fully met at the close of the present month, at which period I expect to have seven or eight deputies in the east, three of whom are now engaged.

In the report you were kind enough to send me I find a remark, under the head of "Florida," that many private claims have been surveyed, but no certificates have been forwarded, which ought to have been received long since. I hope that the delinquency was not intended to be applied to this office, as I claim to have complied with the act of Congress on that subject, and under which the register is required to forward certificates for data to govern the issuing of the patents.

I anticipate that the connexion of the surveys heretofore made on the Escambia river (and which have been suspended) will be completed by the deputies by the close of the next month, including scrap work, and a few private claims not surveyed previously.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to Elijah Hayward, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated February 3, 1831.

It is with extreme regret that I inform you of advices received from one of the deputy surveyors ordered to correct the meanders of the river Escambia that the low grounds are entirely inundated by rains, so as to render, at present, all attempts to do that work entirely useless. I made an attempt during the summer, but my surveyor was taken sick, and was absolutely carried out of the swamp insensible. I shall avail myself of the earliest moment practicable to have that work completed, as I feel unpleasant under a suspension of such a heavy item in my accounts, when the work to be corrected is comparatively nothing. The surveys of the private claims, and connecting therewith the public lands in the west, have nearly ruined two of my valuable deputies.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to Elijah Hayward, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated March 3, 1831.

In answer to your inquiry whether Paul McCormick has not been paid for lines run by Boyd or McNeil in 1825, I have made the necessary examination, and assure you that no payment has been made of the kind alluded to. When the accounts of Mr. McCormick were presented I carefully checked the same, having reference to the former surveys, and the present examination results in proof of its correctness. I have long since established the rule of withholding payment for all parts of lines where connexion is not formed to enable this office to cast the contents, and the present case was of that character, having small pieces of lines unconnected, and which have been run entire by the late survey.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to Elijah Hayward, esq., dated March 17, 1831.

Since writing you on the 3d instant I have been unwell with the influenza, which prevented me from sending by last mail the enclosed township plat, township one, range five north and east, corrected as promised.

The contracts remaining to be forwarded for all the work under contract you will receive herewith, which, with those previously sent, amount to 6,150 miles, at $4 per mile, is $24,600; to pay which I have on hand the sum of $834 10, and the Treasurer's check for $8,000, alluded to in my letter of the 3d instant, not yet taken up in my accounts, the residue apparent on the face of my account being suspended items for work on the Escambia river, which I have made three attempts to have executed, and my surveyors, in every instance, have been driven out of the swamp by high water. Those deputies are under standing orders to avail themselves of the first opportunity of low water to complete the corrections of that work.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, June 29, 1831.

SIR: I have been informed that a petition was about being sent to you with a view to have the sale suspended of township eight, of range eighteen south and east, alleging that the lines have not been run.

I deem it necessary to enclose you a statement of Major Joshua A. Coffee, showing that he has examined the said township, and find it correctly run, marked, and measured.

I am, &c., &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

JUNE 29, 1831.

SIR: I am informed that a petition has been forwarded to the General Land Office at Washington to suspend the land sales of township eight, in range eighteen, Alachua county. I have to state that when in that quarter I tested the lines of that township, and found them correct, both in their course and measurement.

I am, &c.,

Extract of a letter from Colonel Robert Butler, surveyor general, dated Tallahassee, July 29, 1831, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

"I have again to report the entire impracticability of having the fractional surveys on the Escambia river completed, owing to high waters, which have been up for twelve months past. I again repeat that there are two deputy surveyors under standing orders to complete these surveys, with some others unfinished, whenever the waters shall recede so far as to permit their execution.

"From a minute examination it appears that the report of the board of commissioners for East Florida for the year 1826 have never been furnished this office; they are indispensable to the execution of my duties, and hope you will have the goodness to have them sent."

Extract of a letter from Colonel Robert Butler, surveyor general, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated at Lake Jackson, September 21, 1831.

"I have been confined for better than two months by indisposition, and am now getting some strength, and hope a few days more will enable me to get about."

LAKE JACKSON, October 12, 1831.

SIR: Two days elapsed after my last to you when I was again taken down, and became so low as to require help in and out of my bed. I am once more on my legs, able to ride a mile or two, and gaining strength daily.

I am, &c., &c.,

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, December 1, 1831.

SIR: Your several letters, bearing date September 23 and October 17 and 31, have been received by the surveyor general. He is still too unwell either to read or to write an answer to them, owing to a nervous attack that has affected his whole system. He is now convalescent, and I flatter myself that he will soon be able to resume the duties of his office.

I am, &c., &c.,

ISHAM GREEN SEARCY, Clerk in the Surveyor's office.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, April 11, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 13th ultimo has been received "urging the transmission of all the returns due from this office; also a diagram of such surveys as have been made, and to designate the townships under contract that have not been returned to this office; and also to explain the cause of the delay in the transmission of the returns due from your office."

The enclosed diagram exhibits the true situation of the state of the returns due from this office. Nearly one hundred townships and fractional townships are now ready to be forwarded to the General Land Office and the registers' offices; there are remaining about twelve townships yet to be finished, all under the last contract. Copies of all the last contracts have been furnished your office.

The resurveys on the Escambia and its vicinity have not yet been returned to this office, but will be in a short time. After a laborious resurvey of near five months by three experienced and persevering surveyors those surveys will require much labor and time to prepare them for the General Land Office and the register's office, but will be completed and forwarded as soon as practicable for it to be done.

There have been no new contracts entered into since the last furnished you, as the surveyors considered it a ruinous business to take contracts under your last instructions, bearing date September 23, 1831, but it is probable that some contracts may be taken under your modified instructions of the 24th of October, 1831, received at this office on the 27th of February, 1832.

The cause of my not forwarding sooner to the General Land Office the surveys made under the last contracts furnished you was owing to a severe and protracting illness that had confined me to my room since the 14th day of July last, together with the occasional indisposition of both of my clerks. Yesterday was the first day I have been able to go to my office in nearly nine months, and I am now so feeble I am unable to do business, and both the clerks in my office are sick at this time. Mr. Williams is very much indisposed indeed. Several of the deputies were likewise sick, which kept the returns out of the office much longer than was expected. Thus you will see that causes beyond my control, or others, have retarded the progress of business in every branch of this department.

You may rest assured that so soon as circumstances within my control will justify the completion of the surveys due the General Land Office they will be forwarded without delay.

I am, &c., &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

[Here follows a plat, for which see original.]

The yellow squares represent the townships and fractional townships that have been completed in the surveyor general's office and are ready to be forwarded to the General Land Office and to the registers' offices in the eastern and western district.

The squares with yellow borders alone represent the township surveyed under last contract and not sectioned.

The blue squares east of the meridian represent townships that have been sectioned and recently returned to the office which have not been made out for the General Land and register's offices, but will be completed as soon as practicable.

The blue squares west of the meridian represent townships which have heretofore been surveyed on the Escambia river and in its vicinity, and have been forwarded to the General Land and register's offices, but owing to some inaccuracies in the deputies, and various new surveys of private claims in those townships, had to be resurveyed, and will be again returned into the surveyor general's office in a short time, and will be made out and forwarded to the General Land and register's offices as soon as practicable.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE AT TALLAHASSEE, April 18, 1832.

SIR: I have taken the first opportunity since my convalescence to investigate the subject of your letter of the 30th January last, and to place the matter fully before you, have sent herewith copies of all the documents in my possession in relation to the claim of Joseph Noreaga.

You will perceive by the enclosed diagram, which is a copy of the original plat of survey made by the Spanish government and forwarded to my office by the keeper of the archives at Pensacola, that the form and figure corresponds with the survey which I had ordered to be made, to be bounded south by the channel BB, as represented in the diagram enclosed in your communications.

The papers Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, contain the correspondence between the late commissioner and myself, and between the deputy surveyor and myself.

It may be proper to remark, that upon exhibiting the original plat of survey to Colonel White, he at once admitted the correctness of my decision in regard to the survey, and disclaimed any right to the island below the channel BB.

I am still extremely feeble and debilitated.

I am, &c., ROBERT BUTLER.

HON. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner General Land Office, Washington.

PAPER NO. 1.

Extract of a letter from the surveyor general of Florida (Colonel Butler) to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated August 11, 1829.

"In the case of Joseph Noreaga (claimed by Colonel J. M. White) I have been governed in withholding my certificate from the fact that the island on which the improvement was made ought to be confirmed to that part north of a branch of the Escambia laid down by actual survey, and which contains about the quantity of land called for, and also conforms in shape to the original plat of survey returned by Mr. Cairo, keeper of public archives, to this office. The residue, south of said branch of the river, I consider as public domain; and should my opinion be sustained, the deputy surveyor can be required to return the survey as public land, which has been made south of that stream in which the sectional lines have been run.

"Enclosed you have a plat of the whole, as claimed by Colonel White, with the stream delineated, by which I consider the island bounded, as granted to Colonel Noreaga.

"Colonel White has just stepped in, and I have read the foregoing to him and explained the survey; and I am authorized by HIM to say that he is satisfied with my decision. I will, therefore, require the return of the deputy, and have the certificate made out agreeably, and the alteration made on the township plats."

[Here follow the plats; for which, see originals.]

PAPER NO. 2.

See letter from General Land Office, dated the 28th August, 1829.

PAPER NO. 3.

Copy of a letter from Benjamin Clements and James W. Exum, deputy surveyors, to Robert Butler, surveyor general, &c.

SIR: Your communication, with that of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to yourself, with a copy of a letter from Colonel Joseph M. White to the Commissioner, also a map of an island or islands in the Escambia river, is received.

In reply to your inquiries and those of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, we can simply state that during our surveying in that part of the Territory alluded to, we were unable to get any information respecting the island granted to Joseph Noreaga, except from a copy of the grant; however, we took the precaution to survey all the islands as public and private property, as it might be determined by the surveyor general. On our arrival at Tallahassee, to prepare our notes and township plats for the surveyor's office, we met with Colonel Joseph M. White, who informed us he claimed the island, and claimed to the slough marked CC; we made our plat and certificate of survey accordingly.

As respects the slough, marked BB, being a permanent water-course, it is like the rest of those sloughs, changing their position; and we have reason to believe the slough originally took its course some twenty or thirty chains above, near the place marked D, but owing to drift, &c., that point has become impassable, and the pass BB is now a channel through which the tide ebbs and flows. We would further state that after entering either of the sloughs there is sufficient depth of water for any craft that can enter the river at any point; the slough CC is considerably the widest, but as to depth they are nearly the same.

PAPER No. 4.

Copy of a letter from Robert Butler to Benjamin Clements and James W. Exum, deputy surveyors.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, February 27, 1832.

GENTLEMEN: I herewith submit, for your inspection, a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of the 30th January, together with a copy of a letter from J. M. White to the Commissioner; also a plat submitted by the Commissioner, exhibiting an island in the Escambia river, surveyed in the name of Joseph Noreaga, being in township No. 1, in ranges 29 and 30 north and west.

You having surveyed said claim and all the land adjoining thereto, and having a perfect knowledge of the stream marked BB in the map, will you please to give me your opinion whether it is a permanent water-course, and if it is now navigable; and if not, whether from appearances it was or was not a navigable stream at the time the grant was made by the Spanish government; also, please to state what you think the depth of water is, and the general width of the stream at this time, and what it was formerly; if there has been a change in the channel, and whether or not the channels generally, at the termination of the Escambia river, have the appearance of having changed their direction or navigation at any time; and any other information that will throw light on the subject in relation to the inquiries made by the Commissioner.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Tallahassee, August 12, 1832.

SIR: Yours of the 5th ultimo, enclosing the decree of the court on the claim of Arredondo for 289,645$\frac{6}{7}$ acres, has been received.

A competent and intelligent surveyor will be despatched early in September, to execute the survey of this claim in strict conformity to the decree of the court.

It would be inexpedient and hazardous to the health of the surveyor to attempt the survey of this claim earlier than the middle or last of September.

I am, &c., &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

Hon. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner General Land Office.

Extract of a letter from Robert Butler, esq., to Elijah Hayward, esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated August 24, 1832.

"Enclosed you have copies of I. G. Searcy's resignation and my answer. You will please submit them to the President for his decision. On the additional duties imposed on my office by the late act of Congress, and the decision thereon by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, the letter of my clerk is sufficiently explicit, without any additional remarks from me in my feeble state. It becomes necessary, however, to inform you that his place has not yet been filled, and my other clerk has been sick for many months, occasionally able only to attend to current business. I have again been down myself, but feel at present nothing but feebleness. I hope for better times soon."

TALLAHASSEE, July 1, 1832.

DEAR SIR: My health is so precarious that it becomes my duty to resign my berth in your office. If the duties were like those in most of the offices in the United States, my health would justify my continuance; for seven years they have been very laborious, for the last twelve months extremely so. Just as a finish had been made of all the returns due from your office the late law of Congress passed, which will cause them to be of no use; in addition thereto, four-fifths of the labor performed during the last seven or eight years in your office will again have to be gone through, which would require the constant attention of at least four or five additional clerks one year, to make the most laborions calculations and make new plats.

Under these circumstances the constitution of no individual can long survive the application necessary to the completion of this most laborious of all occupations and most fatal to the health.

I leave your office with regret; but in doing so, I have one great consolation, that is, that I have discharged my duty to the best of my abilities, and that I have never knowingly given you cause of complaint; if I have, I have never heard a murmur of complaint, nor has there ever existed one unkind word or feeling between us. I shall ever feel grateful for the many favors I have received at your hands, and hope some day to have it in my power to cancel some of the many obligations I am under to you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ISHAM GREEN SEARCY.

Col. ROBERT BUTLER, Surveyor General, Territory of Florida.

LAKE JACKSON, July 2, 1832.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of resignation of yesterday was duly received, and the fact shall be reported immediately to the President of the United States. It is due to you that I should declare that the first painful feeling which you have caused me in better than eight years' service was produced by this letter; and I do think that my feeble state of health ought to have been spared so severe a shock by a previous consultation. The shock occasioned by the separation was almost overpowering. In making this severance, and to enable your successor as well as myself to distinctly understand the true situation of those duties under your immediate guardianship, I have to request that you will have tied up and sealed all township plats which have been returned to the office by the department, and which have not been prepared by you, and also fill up the general plan, leaving no work which has been done in the field undelineated thereon. This little arrangement will enable me to keep order from running into chaos as soon as I can resume my duties. I have further to request, that you will occupy my property for your own convenience and its preservation as long as your avocations will permit.

Wishing you speedy and general restoration to your shattered and enfeebled constitution, (arising from your devotion to your public duties,) I remain your sincere friend,

ROBERT BUTLER.

General Isham G. Searcy.

Surveyor's Office, Tallahassee, September 15, 1832.

Sir: Your letter of the 23d ultimo, covering the copy of a letter from the Hon. Joseph M. White, of the 13th ultimo, has been received. The lands of Boual Pintado and Carera were surveyed during the spring past, and the returns made into my office as soon thereafter as practicable.

Owing to a long and protracted illness I am so debilitated that it has been impossible for me to attend to their adjudication; they will be attended to so soon as my health will permit.

You and Colonel White have both been informed, from time to time heretofore, of the causes why those claims were not surveyed sooner. That your attention may be drawn to the facts, those claims were situated in the townships that were suspended, the completion of which was prevented by high water, sickness, and information necessary for identity.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

Elijah Hayward, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

At Home, September 16, 1832.

Sir: Since I wrote you last I have been again down, and have now entailed upon me a confirmed ague and fever. When I shall be able to attend to business, God only knows. My remaining clerk has been a long time sick, and some doubts have been lately entertained of his recovery. Almost every person has been sick in the country. My bond has been executed some days and certified, and only awaits my going to Tallahassee to be qualified, which I have not strength at present to attend to. Until you have better news from me, I hope you will not make any more requisitions on my office, as I am totally unable to attend to them.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

Elijah Hayward, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

ON CLAIM TO LAND ON THE ISLAND OF KEY BISCAYNE, OFF CAPE FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 7, 1833.

Mr. Bullard, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William G. Davis and Mary Ann, his wife, reported:

That the petitioners state that they became the purchasers of the island of Key Biscayne, off Cape Florida, from Peter Fornell; that the claim was laid before the land commissioners who confirmed their title to one hundred and seventy-five acres. They now ask for the balance of the island, which they represent as of no use to anybody except themselves, and to them only as a means of keeping off intruders.

The grant to Fornell is not shown, nor is it pretended that injustice was done to the petitioners by the report of the land commissioners. There is a certificate of some persons in that vicinity, that there is little or no land on the island fit for cultivation beyond the tract confirmed to the petitioners. They ask the rest of the land as a pure gratuity. Having shown no right nor any circumstances which entitle them to equitable relief, the committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

EXTRACTS FROM SOLORZANO'S POLITICA INDIANA, SHOWING THE POWERS OF THE SPANISH VICEROYS AND GOVERNORS OF THE INDIES IN REFERENCE TO LAND GRANTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 8, 1833.

Extracts from Solorzano's Politica Indiana, a work of approved authority in all Spanish tribunals, and the most celebrated of the Spanish commentators on the laws of the Indies. The translations compared and certified by the translator of foreign languages in the Department of State.

[Translation.]

Book 3, chapter 5, article 31.

Because, as Carolo Pascalio says, and Calisto Ramirez, subjects have no obligation to investigate or know the orders and instructions of a secret nature which are given to the viceroys, in which bounds are put to their power, for if they do not obey them, they are subject to reprehension or punishment; but what they may perform must be sustained, because they are in quality of factors or substitutes for royalty, for whose actions he who named them is accountable, and put them in that charge which is indeed conformable to right.*

Book 3, chapter 9, article 14.

But although this, as I said, proceeds with reference to common law, and it is fit that the viceroys and governors of the Indies never cease to bear it in mind, still, as regards the municipal duty of these, the whole, or almost the whole, is left to their discretion and prudence; because, in the conflict or concurrence of these cédulas (royal provisions) and orders de providende, they have not to attend so much to the dates and orders of these as to that which may appear to them most convenient to execute, as also what the merits and services of those who have presented them ask and require, and the state of things in their countries or provinces, the government of which is committed to them. It is thus recommended to them in the royal cédulas, which I noticed in the beginning of this chapter, and others of the years 1567, 1605, 1610, directed to the viceroys, at that time, of Peru, Toledo, Monterey, Montesclaros.

Book 3, chapter 10, article 25.

This calls us to another question not less frequent and difficult, upon which I have seen some suits adjourned from a discord of opinions; I mean, who is to have the preference of two, of whom one obtained by favor from the court a special encomiènda (Indian tribute) by dispensation made to him by his Majesty, and another obtained the same in the Indies by grant of the viceroys or governors, having there power to do it, without having notice of the other from his Majesty.

I judge we can examine and easily solve this question as respects the right only by informing ourselves, and looking attentively as to the fact of which of these grants of the same object preceded the other; for if we suppose the vacancy to happen in the Indies, and the viceroy or governor, who there is as the King himself, made the appointment lawfully and immediately, and in exercise and use of his faculties, gave the title and possession thereof to some well-deserving person, we must come to the resolution that the grant of this encomiènda, which afterwards may be found to be made by the King in his court, is in itself null and of no value or effect, because there is no vacancy to supply, as we said in chapter five, on account of its being previously occupied, and the grant made in proper time; and the concession made in the name of the King, in virtue of authority sufficient and his own commission, must be and must remain always firm and valid as if himself had made it. Of this we have an express text in speaking about what is done by the procurators of Cæsar, (l. 1. de off. Proc. Cæsar,) and others still more expressive, which decide upon what we are saying upon the subject of gifts.†

Book 5, chapter 12, article 1.

Although it may seem that enough was provided for the maintenance of peace and for justice in the provinces of the Indies by the creation of audiences and magistrates, of which mention has been made in the preceding chapters, still, as those went on peopling and distinguishing themselves so much, it became meet, at least in the principal parts, such as Peru, New Spain, &c., to place governors of greater weight, with the title of viceroys, who should also act as presidents of the audiences there residing, and who should separately have in charge the government of those extensive dominions, and of all the military bodies which might there arrive, as their captain general; and should act, watch, and take care of all which royalty in person would act and take care of if there present; and should be understood to be suitable for the conversion and protection of the Indians, and spreading of the Holy Word, the political administration, and for the peace and tranquillity, and the increase of things spiritual and temporal.

ARTICLE 3. And truly, the provinces of the Indies being, as they are, so distant from those of Spain, it became necessary that in these, more than any other, our powerful Kings should place these images of their own, who should represent them to the life and efficaciously, and should maintain in peace and tranquillity the new colonists and their colonies, and should keep them in check and in proper bounds by such a dignity and authority as the Romans did when they spread theirs over the best part of the globe, dividing the most remote into two kinds, which they called consular and pretorean; the Emperors themselves taking the government of the principal of these in their own hands, and charging the senate with the second; and giving to those who went to govern the first the name of proconsuls and to the others that of presidents, about which we have entire chapters in law, where the commentators speak of this more extensively, and an infinity of authors.

ARTICLE 4. Some of those observe (in terms of which we speak) that to those proconsuls or presidents, may be likened the viceroys of the present day, although this is not agreed to by Pedro Gregorio, who says that the authority and power is greater of the viceroys, and that in France very rarely was such a dignity granted, except to a brother or child of the prince, or one designated as successor to the empire; and I find Bobadilla of the same opinion—afterwards Alciato and others whom he names.—(See references.)

Article 6. But however this may be, (their similitude to other titles,) it is of little importance. What I reckon as certain is, that the person to whom there is the greatest likeness, is to the kings themselves who appoint them and send them out, generally choosing them from titled gentry, and the most worthy in Spain of his chamber counsel, causing them, in the provinces which are intrusted to them, to be looked upon, as I have said, as their own person, to be their substitutes; for this is properly signified in the Latin word proreges or vice-reges, which in the common language we call viceroys; and in Catalonia and other parts they are called alterego, on account of this ubiquity of likeness or representation, which is also treated of in some chapters of common law, and the laws of the Partidas, and which are described extensively by Budeo, Casaneo, and other authors.—(See references.)

Article 7. From which it happens that regularly in the provinces which are intrusted to them, and in every case, and in all things which are not especially excepted, they possess and exercise the same power, authority, and jurisdiction, with the King who names them; and this not so much as a delegation as in the common way, as is proved by the texts, and by the doctors already quoted, and a number of others which are cited by Avendano, Humada, Cordan, Tollada, Bobadilla, Calisto, Remirez, Berarto, and others of the moderns, and in particular Juan Francisco de Ponte and J. M. Novario, who have written especial and copious treatises upon the office and power of the viceroys, and who reprove Fontancla, who, in too general terms, calls it delegated, and to these I add the latest, Marco Zuerio, who, in one of his political emblems, expressed well this representation with the painting of a seal, which the wax, being warm, receives, in which it is stamped or printed, with the addition of the letters for motto, alter et idem; and he applies it to this communication and representation which the Kings make of their Majesty to the viceroys whom they send to govern provinces where themselves cannot be present, they remaining with their power entire, although it be transmitted or transferred from one to others.

Article 8. And, approaching nearer to the municipal right of our Indies, almost everything which relates to this great power and dignity of viceroys will be found in the cédulas which I have already quoted, and in particular that part regarding their representation in one issued at the Escorial, July 19, 1614, from which is inferred "that to the viceroys there is, and must be observed, the same obedience and respect as to the King, without putting the least difficulty, contradiction, or interpretation, under the penalty of those who should contravene, incurring the punishments ordained by law, who do not obey the royal orders, and the others which are there marked and related."—(See references.)

Article 9. And all this is very right, for wherever the representation of another is given, there is the true copy of that other, of which the image is produced or represented agreeably to the understanding of a text, and as Tiraquelo explains at great length, and other authors; and, in general, this representation is more resplendent when the viceroys and magistrates are further rem ved from the masters who influence and communicate it to them, as Plutarch finely expresses it by the example of the moon, which becomes of greater size and splendor in proportion as she removes from the sun, which is the object which gives her that splendor.

Article 10. From all which I infer, in the first place, that this viceroyal power and dignity being of this nature, and so great as has been said, and that it has to be exercised in so many and such arduous affairs and cases as occur generally in the Indies, the prince ought to look well to the persons he chooses and sends upon these employments, since even in those of oidors and other ministers of less note, I demonstrated the necessity of the same caution in other chapters, and as to governors who are sent to new or warlike provinces, this is adverted to in elegant expressions by Cassiodoro.—(See references.)

Article 11. And the Padre Josef de Acosta is not less elegant in treating of the qualities of the viceroys, when he says that if the Romans took so much pains to send to their remote provinces, and such as were lately conquered, men of the first choice, perfect, and experienced, whom they knew, and scarcely trusted others than the very consuls of their own city; much greater pains are required with viceroys for the New World, which is so much farther distant from the eyes of their Kings, and is composed of so many different nations and mixtures of people, and comprehends so many new provinces, in which every day there occurs some new and unthought of affairs; where mutiny and sedition are contemplated; where sudden and dangerous changes are experienced; where municipal laws are not known, or not found sufficient for every case; and if we wish to make use of the Roman code, or the Castilian, these do not square with those of the country, and the very state of the republic is so inconstant, varied, and different in itself every day, that things which yesterday might be judged and considered as very straight and regulated, to-day would become unjust and pernicious.

The first established rule and sentence is, that viceroys can act and despatch in the provinces of their government, in cases which have not been especially excepted, all that the prince who named them might or could do, if he where himself present, and for this reason and cause his jurisdiction and power must be held and judged more as a thing established than delegated.—(See references.)

Article 3. All which is indeed conformable to the purpose for which these honorable and pre-eminent employments were instituted, which was, as it appears, that subjects who live and reside in such remote provinces may not be obliged to go and seek the King, who lives so far off; and that they may have near to them a substitute of his, to whom they can apply, with whom and of whom they can treat; they can ask and obtain all which they might expect from the King himself, or obtain from him even in those things requiring power or especial provision, as, after Andres of Milan and Francisco de Ponte, is explained well by Capiblanco, Mastrillo, Gambacurta, and others who treat of this. And speaking of this, the lawyer, Ulpiano, dares to say, in an absolute style, "that there is no case in the provinces which cannot be despatched by them;" and the same doctrine, with many examples to confirm it, are taught to us by many other texts of law, civil, canonical, and royal.—(See references.)

Article 4. In particular passages relating to viceroys of the Indies, we have an infinite number of cédulas which decide this and assert the same, which can be seen in the first volume of those in print from page 237, and, besides these, another still of a fresher date given at St. Lorenzo, July 19, 1614, which orders, generally, "that the viceroys, as holding the place of the King, can act and decree in the same manner as the royal person, and must be obeyed as one holding his authority, without replying, without interpretation, under the penalties to which are subjected those who do not obey the royal commands, and such laws as may be imposed by them; and that which they ordain and command, the King will hold as firm and valid."—(See references.)

ARTICLE 5. All which is certain, and in such manner that even when they exceed their powers or secret instructions, they must be obeyed like the King himself, although they may transgress and are afterwards punished for it, as I have already said in other chapters; and Mastrillo expresses it at some length, in speaking of the practice of these secret instructions, and the form which must be observed in them. And the reason of this is because we must almost presume in favor of the viceroys, and what they do we must consider as done by the King who appointed them, as is said in many texts and by several authors.—(See references.)

Book 6, chapter 12, page 482, article 13.

And by another cédula in Madrid, October 27, 1535, it is permitted that the ancient conquerors, and other well deserving persons in the Indies, be remunerated and accommodated with lands and possession there, and that amongst these the most worthy should be preferred; which cédula is very just, and now can be enforced by the viceroys without contravening that of 1591, when the merits were worthy of satisfaction, because the interest of Kings is not small to give compliance to it, nor is it new to give a premium to old service, as I have said in other places.

I certify that I have revised the above translation, and compared it with the original, to which it corresponds minutely.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1088. [2D SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO A CHOCTAW RESERVATION IN MISSISSIPPI UNDER THE SECOND ARTICLE OF THE TREATY OF SEPTEMBER 27, 1830.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1833.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Silas D. Fisher, reported:

That by the provisions of the second article of the supplement to the treaty made and entered into between the United States and the Choctaw nation of Indians at Dancing Rabbit creek, on the 27th day of September, A. D. 1830, a reservation of one section of land was granted to Silas D. Fisher, alias Silas D. Fisher the petitioner, to be located so as to include his residence and improvement at the time of the treaty. It appears from the statements of the petitioners, as well as other evidence, that the said Fisher had no permanent residence and improvement within the limits of the Choctaw nation at the date of the treaty, but that he was residing temporarily with his father-in-law near the Choctaw line, without the boundaries of the nation. The petitioner is therefore not only unable to avail himself of the provisions of the treaty in his favor, but in consequence of his peculiar situation is deprived of the provisions of the 14th article of the said treaty, granting to each head of a family a section of land, to include his improvement, on condition of his residing on the same for five years; and also of the provisions of the 19th article, granting to each head of a family a tract of land in proportion to the quantity he might have had in cultivation at the date of the treaty.

Other persons provided for in the same article of the supplement to the treaty, who were similarly situated with Mr. Fisher, and did not reside in the nation, were by a provision in the treaty authorized to locate the reservations granted to them on any of the unimproved and unoccupied lands within that section of country acquired from the Choctaws by the aforesaid treaty. The petitioner was one of the mingoes or captains who signed the treaty. It is therefore evident from the foregoing, and other facts and circumstances, that it did not occur to the commissioners that the petitioner had no residence and improvement in the nation at the time of the execution of the treaty, or he would have been permitted by a clause in the treaty to locate the reservation granted to him on any of the unappropriated lands. The petitioner therefore prays the passage of a law authorizing him to locate the section of land granted to him on any of the unappropriated lands within the limits of that tract of country ceded to the United States by the treaty aforesaid. In the opinion of the committee, equity and justice demand the relief prayed for. The committee will not go into an argument in favor of the petitioner, but refer to the arguments so forcibly set forth in the petition, and the facts stated in the accompanying documents made a part of this report.

The committee report a bill for his relief.

To the honorable the Senators and Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of the undersigned, one of the captains of the northwest district of the Choctaw nation, in the State of Mississippi, respectfully showeth: That the name of your petitioner is contained in the 2d article of the supplement to the late treaty between the United States government and the Choctaw nation, which reads as follows, viz: "Article 2. And to each of the following persons there is allowed a reservation of a section and a half of land, to wit: James L. McDonald, Robert Jones, Noah Wall, James Campbell, G. Nelson, Vaughan Brashears, R. Harris, Little Leader, S. Foster, J. Vaughan, L. Durans, Samuel Long, T. Magaha, Thomas Evnidye, Giles Thompson, Thomas Garland, John Bond, William Leflore, and Turner Brashears. The two first named persons may locate one section each, and one section jointly, on any unimproved and unoccupied land, these not residing in the nation. The others are to include their present residence and improvement. Also one section is allowed to the following persons, to wit: Middleton Mackey, Wesley Trahern, Chodehmo, Moses Foster, D. W. Wall, Charles Scott, Molly Nail, Susan Colbert, who was formerly Susan James, Samuel Garland, Silas Fisher, D. McCurtain, Oaklahoma, and Polly Fillicutchy, to be located in entire sections, to include their present residence and improvement, with the exception of Molly Nail and Susan Colbert, who are authorized to locate theirs on any unimproved and unoccupied land."—(Reference to the supplement to the treaty.) And your petitioner further showeth that his residence at the time of the execution of the treaty was, and, from the time he left his father's house, more than a year previous, had been without the limits of the Choctaw country, and that he never had a separate residence or any improvement in the said Choctaw country.—(Reference to the annexed certificates, and to the return of the agent of government employed to take an account of the Choctaw improvements and residences.) And your petitioner further showeth that the 18th article of the treaty contains the following provision, viz: "And further, it is agreed that in the construction of this treaty where well-founded doubt shall arise, it shall be construed most favorably towards the Choctaws."—(Reference to the treaty.) Your petitioner therefore prays that his case may receive from your honorable bodies a favorable construction, and that in the decision to be made regard may be had to the following considerations, viz: 1st. The intention of government to grant him a section of land as expressed in the words "also one section is allowed to the following persons, &c."

2d. The fact that the two persons first named in the second article of the supplement, which contains the name of your petitioner, having been known to the United States commissioners to reside without the limits of the Choctaw country, were permitted expressly upon that ground to locate their reservations upon any unimproved and unoccupied land.

3d. The nature of the case presented by your petitioner, (there being a grant of land without any residence or improvement to fix its location,) as one involving a well-founded doubt to be construed agreeably to the 18th article of the treaty; and

4th. The fact that your petitioner will remain entirely unprovided for, unless the grant made to him by government shall be constituted a floating reservation.

In view of these considerations your petitioner prays that he may be permitted and authorized to locate the section of land granted to him by a provision in the 2d article of the supplement to the treaty lately concluded between the United States government and the Choctaw people, upon any lands in the northwest district of the country ceded by said treaty, (to which your petitioner was attached,) unimproved and unoccupied at the time of the execution of said treaty. And your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

OCTOBER 15, 1832.

Certificate of Colonel G. Leflore.

I, Greenwood Leflore, chief of the northwest district of the Choctaw nation, in the State of Mississippi, do hereby certify that Silas D. Fisher, named in the 2d article of the supplement to the late treaty between the United States government and the Choctaw people, was, at the time of the execution of said treaty, one of the captains of said district, and, as such, used his influence in favor of the measure and signed the treaty; that in consideration of his merit as a virtuous man and an active officer, he was proposed as one eminently entitled to the gratuity of a section of land, and his name was accordingly inserted in the 2d article of the supplement to the treaty; that the fact of his having no residence or improvement in the Choctaw country did not occur at the time his name was introduced, but that it is well known to me that the said Fisher resided, at the time of the execution of the treaty, with his father-in-law, a white man, without the limits of the Choctaw country, where he had lived from the date of his marriage, a considerable time previous, and that he never had a separate residence or any improvement in said Choctaw country. As, therefore, the article embracing the name of said Fisher is so worded as, in connexion with the facts above stated, may prevent a location of the land granted to him by government, in consequence of which, if a rigid construction is enforced, a poor but highly meritorious man may be deprived of the bounty intended to be bestowed, I would earnestly recommend his case to government as one involving a well-founded doubt as to the location of a claim, which, I hope, may be so construed as to admit of a location upon any lands in the northwest district of said Choctaw country, to which said Fisher was attached, unimproved and unoccupied at the time of the execution of said treaty.

Given under my hand the 15th day of October, 1832.

GREENWOOD LEFLORE.

Certificate of United States agents.

We, the undersigned, agents of government for the Choctaw people, do hereby certify our belief of the facts stated in the foregoing certificate of Chief Greenwood Leflore, and from our knowledge of the character and services of Captain Silas D. Fisher as a man of correct moral deportment and an efficient assistant of the agents of government in the removal of his people, do cheerfully concur in the recommendation of his case to the favorable consideration of the government, believing that his interests can only be protected by a grant of the privilege of locating his claim in the manner stated in the foregoing certificate.

Given under our hands the 15th day of October, 1832.

S. T. CROSS, Agent Creek Removal.
WM. S. COLQUHOUN, Assistant Agent.

N. B.—The foregoing certificate of the agents for the Choctaws would have been signed by Major W. Armstrong, the superintending and only remaining agent of the Choctaw removal, and also by Colonel F. Armstrong, the agent for the Choctaws west and one of the agents for examining the Choctaw improvements, if it had been possible for my friend who assisted me in procuring certificates to have seen them. When I last saw Colonel Armstrong he informed me that he had represented my case to the department and expressed his wish and his confident belief that my claim would be constituted a floating reservation.

WASHINGTON, January 7, 1833.

In answer to your request to be informed what I know of the facts stated by Mr. Silas D. Fisher in his petition to Congress on the subject of his claim to a reservation of land under a provision of the late treaty with the Choctaw tribe of Indians, I have the honor to state that I am personally acquainted with Silas D. Fisher; he was at the time of the treaty a captain in Colonel Greenwood Leflore's district; he had returned from school from Kentucky and married a short time before the treaty. I am confident he had no improvement in the nation. He had not settled, but was at the time staying with his father-in-law, Mr. Kelly.

Yours, &c.,

JOHN BLACK.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1089. [2D SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO A RESERVATION OF LAND UNDER THE TREATY WITH THE CHOCTAW INDIANS OF SEPTEMBER 27, 1830.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1833.

Mr. PLUMMER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Greenwood Leflore and others on behalf of Jacob Thompson, reported:

The petitioners represent that Jacob Thompson is a native and quartroon of the Choctaw tribe of Indians, and that no provisions were made for him to obtain a grant of land by the treaty of Dancing Rabbit creek, made on the 27th day of September, 1830, between the United States and the mingoes, chiefs, &c., of the Choctaw nation. They therefore pray Congress to pass a law extending to said Thompson the provisions of the fourteenth article of said treaty.

There is no evidence before the committee other than the statements of the petitioners, nor is any reason assigned by the petitioners why Thompson does not come within the purview and meaning of said article of the treaty. By the provisions of the above-mentioned article of the treaty aforesaid "each Choctaw head of a family," on signifying his intention to become a citizen of the United States and continuing thereon for five years, is entitled to a reservation of six hundred and forty acres of land for himself, to three hundred and twenty for each child over ten years of age, and to one hundred and sixty for each child under ten years of age. In the absence of any testimony on the subject the committee deem it inexpedient to grant to the said Jacob Thompson the relief prayed for, when the petitioners, by their application to Congress, admit that he cannot legally avail himself of the general provisions contained in the treaty. The committee therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR THE RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION TO ACTUAL SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS WITHIN HER LIMITS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 11, 1833.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States assembled, &c.:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Illinois would respectfully represent: That deeply sensible of the importance to the growth and real prosperity of this State, (of a population of freeholders,) and convinced that the interest of the Union in the public lands so far from being disadvantageously affected will be the more promoted as those lands are in the greater quantity sold, your memorialists propose for your favorable consideration the enactment of a law granting pre-emption rights for two years after its passage, to actual settlers on the public domain, whereby they may enjoy the same privilege as those provided by the act supplementary to the several laws for the sale of the public lands, "approved the 5th day of April, 1832."

Your memorialists respectfully suggest to your honorable bodies that many worthy heads of families are settled upon the lands of the United States, whose most industrious exertions afford them but little more than the means requisite to their support; while holding by a precarious possession the improvements which they have made, they have little or no inducement to greater exertions than that derived from a hope, though distant, that they may, by untiring industry and rigid economy, accumulate the money necessary to secure them freeholds at the minimum price.

This class, embracing, as your memorialists are assured it does, many valuable citizens, is composed of those whose necessities and habits compelled them to cultivate the earth for subsistence; and acting under the expectations entertained by them of the liberality of Congress, they have entered upon the public lands and made openings in the forests, thereby attracting others of more capital and enterprise to the neighborhood, and by reducing the public land to cultivation have furnished inducement to others to vest capital in land, which but for the hardy enterprise of the original settler on the neighboring tracts might have for years escaped the notice of purchasers, and thus have lain profitless to the government. These considerations, your memorialists conceive, weigh much in the scale of policy. But your memorialists would appeal to your justice and liberality on behalf of the adventurous pioneer of the wilderness. He has lived to see privileges now asked for conferred upon others similarly situated with himself, while with unceasing toil he was striving to acquire the means of availing himself of them, whenever, in realization of hopes created by an established policy and course of legislation, an opportunity should be presented under a new enactment of Congress.

He knows that the government has been benefited by his industry in an increased sale of the surrounding lands, and cannot believe that he is to be thrown upon the charity of the merciless speculator in the labors of others—that his hard-wrought improvement is to go to the enjoyment of a stranger without remuneration.

ON APPLICATION FOR RETURN OF MONEY PAID FOR LAND SOLD BY THE GOVERNMENT WITHOUT TITLE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 14, 1833.

Mr. ASHLEY, from the Committee to whom was referred the petition of Baptiste Jeansonne and Joseph Pierre Petre, reported:

That Baptiste Jeansonne and Joseph Pierre Petre, as the legal representatives of Petre Forest, Antoine Dupré, Scolaste Roy, claims seventy-four acres of land which was originally included in their surveys of three several tracts of land granted by the Spanish government, and confirmed by the United States. From the evidence before the committee, it seems that the surveys made under the authority of the United States, by their deputy, James Hazzard, were erroneously executed, varying from the original lines so as to leave out of their boundaries the said seventy-four acres of land, and including the same quantity by running upon a confirmed tract belonging to another individual; thereby the said seventy-four acres were represented as public land and sold accordingly, and the said Jeansonne and Petre became the purchasers at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, amounting to ninety-two dollars and fifty cents. They therefore solicit Congress to pass an act authorizing the return of the money so paid.

The committee, considering the prayer of the petitioners just and reasonable, report a bill for their relief.

RELATIVE TO INCREASED APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE, AND THE CORRECTION OF ABUSES IN THE EXECUTION OF THE SURVEYS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 17, 1833.

Mr. WILDE, from the Committee of Ways and Means, submitted the following resolutions and documents:

Resolved, That the estimates, documents, and correspondence transmitted to the Committee of Ways and Means by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in explanation of the increased appropriations asked for the service of the present year in that department, be printed, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, with instructions to inquire and report—

1. Whether any, and which, of the appropriations now asked, and not heretofore made or authorized, are proper to be hereafter provided for by law; in any and what manner, and for any and what time, and to report the proper bill or bills for that purpose.

2. What have been the causes of the arrearages of business in the General and other Land Offices: and whether any and what part of them have arisen, or are likely to increase from unnecessary precipitation in surveying and bringing into market the public lands; excessive appropriations for that purpose; too large allowances to surveyors or others concerned in that service; too minute a division of the lands; the injudicious survey and subdivision of such as are not worth that expense; or any other and what causes; and what are the appropriate remedies?

3. Whether any and what abuses exist in the survey, sale, or entry of the public lands through defects in the existing laws or otherwise, and what are the appropriate remedies; and especially whether any and what further provisions are necessary to insure fidelity, industry, and punctuality in discharge of the duties of all persons employed in the General and other Land Offices, their clerks and deputies, including the surveyors, their deputies, and the other persons employed by them?

4. Whether any and what further provisions are necessary to prevent registers, receivers, and their clerks and deputies, surveyors, and their deputies and clerks, and all other persons employed in the General or other Land Offices, from engaging, or being directly or indirectly interested or concerned in the purchase, sale, or entry of lands, or any interest therein; and to make void all fraudulent deeds and devices by which the laws in that respect may be evaded; and that the committee have power to send for persons and papers?

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 7, 1833.

SIR: To explain the objects of the following appropriations for the year 1833, for which estimates have been submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, I have the honor, respectfully, to refer the committee to the following accompanying documents, viz:

Paper marked A will serve to show the items composing the aggregate amount of $16,158 40, as contingencies for the year 1833, and to cover the deficit in the appropriation of the last year to meet the expenses of that year. It will be perceived that the single item of blank patents, including the printing, covers $11,858 40, leaving only $4,300 to cover all other expenses, including 200 books.

I have to assure the committee that the expense of the land office increases in a direct ratio with the increase of sales and land offices. There are at present forty-eight land offices in operation; two, at least, if not three, will be created during the present session out of the late Choctaw and Chickasaw cessions, and others are contemplated. The expense of getting these offices into operation bears heavily upon this office. The late law authorizing the subdivision of the public lands into quarter-quarter sections has greatly increased the number of patents (two being required for the same quantity of land that a single patent was formerly granted.) Hence the demands of the contingent fund must necessarily be on the increase. It may, moreover, be satisfactory to the committee to be assured that this office obtains all articles of contingencies on the lowest prices that the market affords. The parchment contract is reduced so low as to have rendered it difficult for a long time to find merchants willing to accede to the terms offered by the office. We pay nineteen cents for parchment and printing: fifteen years ago they cost about three times that amount. Such has been the economy exercised in this office that it is impossible to effect any reduction in the expenses.

In consequence of the deficit of the last year's appropriation, the office has been compelled to obtain from the Branch Bank of the United States an advance of $2,290 on the faith of an appropriation to cover such deficit.

In reference to the item of surveying expenses, I beg leave to refer the committee to the accompanying paper, marked B, and the copy of the surveyor's estimates (so far as received) accompanying the same paper, marked C.

To explain the submissions for the offices of the surveyors general, I beg leave to refer the committee to the circular letter from this office dated 13th of September, 1832, to the several surveyors general, and to their reports in reply thereto, all under the same cover, marked D.

I flatter myself that the surveyors' reports will fully explain the absolute necessity of providing increased means for the surveyors' offices. It has for years past been matter of notoriety in the several surveying districts (of which there are now seven) that the government has failed to accomplish the object of the laws of Congress in having lands brought into market after the surveys have been made, for want of force in the surveyors' offices, by reason of the inadequacy of the appropriation. The public interest and that of individuals equally demand that those surveys be brought into market. Depredations are constantly being committed on the timber, thereby depreciating, in numerous instances, the value of the land.

After the surveys are completed, it is the duty of the surveyors' offices to test the accuracy thereof by protraction. Triplicate plats have then to be made out—one for the district land office, one for the General Land Office, and a third for the record in the surveyor's office; the field-notes have afterwards to be recorded. A late law of Congress authorizing the subdivision of land into quarter-quarter sections has greatly added to the labors of the surveyors' offices. The old subdivisions have to be disturbed, and new subdivisions have to be made; these new subdivisions have also to be made in triplicate.

The timely and judicious application of small sums might, to a great degree, have prevented the existing embarrassments in the surveyors' offices. There are about four hundred townships of land surveyed, which cannot be brought into market for want of more clerks and draughtsmen.

New laws are continually imposing new duties and taking off the attention of the officers from the mass of arrears, and thereby increasing them.

In addition, I have to urge, as a reason for the necessity of increased expenditure, the fact that the surveyors' offices contain all the original evidences of survey. Their offices are anything but fire-proof, and if burnt down, all legal evidences of surveys are lost with them. This was the case in Alabama about five years ago; the surveyor's office was destroyed by fire, and probably one-half the evidences of surveys in that State were consumed. To prevent a similar evil the department is greatly desirous of having authenticated transcripts of the field-notes filed among its own archives; and hence the two objects of bringing up the back work in the surveyors' offices and the commencing a system of transcribing of the old field notes are blended together in the estimate; and the reason for blending them was, that all the reports from the surveyors, under the circular letter of the 13th September last, were not received in due time, and the estimate was necessarily made without them. Now that they are received, (in part only, however,) I do not see any good reason for making any alteration in what has been estimated.

In reference to the submissions for extra clerk hire in this office, I have to remark that the labors of this office are continually increasing. The aid which those estimates call for will not keep up current business. There are now forty-five thousand patents to be issued; before the end of the year there will be forty-five thousand more, and there are already six new land offices which the office has no accountant to supervise.

The best idea that can be given of the wants of the office is the undeniable fact that its concerns with each land and surveying district, to wit: checking the sales of public lands, (that is, keeping an account with each purchaser of public lands;) auditing the accounts of the receivers of public moneys; writing and recording all the various descriptions of patents for public land, private claims, and military bounties; issuing military land scrip; preparing connected maps of the public surveys; the immense amount of correspondence with land agents and individuals, demand at least one clerk to supervise the concerns of each land and surveying district and perform the various duties which are briefly enumerated above. There are at this time fifty-five land and surveying districts, whereas there are only seventeen regular clerks and eleven extras; in all, twenty-eight.

In relation to the nature and amount of the arrears of this office, I would beg leave to refer the committee to my reports accompanying the last three annual reports made by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress.

Being now fully of the opinion that the estimates for extra clerk hire are far short of the exigency of the public service, and as there are now six land districts without a clerk to superintend them, and there being five or six in contemplation this session, I cannot fail to urge on the committee the necessity of increasing the appropriation of $7,000 to $9,000.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

B.

In explanation of the estimate of the expenses of surveying the public lands during the year 1833, submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

1st. The general item of $75,000. This item embraces all the public surveys for which specific objects are not assigned, to wit:

For Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan peninsula, also surveys in Michigan west of the lake	$50,000
For the Territory of Arkansas	20,000
For the Territory of Florida	25,000
For Louisiana	25,000
For Illinois and Missouri	26,000

For Mississippi,* balance due on old surveys	$10,000
For Alabama*	5,000
Aggregate	161,000
Deduct unexpended balance of former appropriations	86,000
Leaves	75,000
In reference to the items for surveying the late Choctaw cession in Mississippi and Alabama..	75,000
For surveying the late Creek cession in Alabama	20,000
For surveying the late Chickasaw cession in Mississippi and Alabama, in case the treaty should be ratified	80,000

The committee are respectfully referred to the accompanying copies of the surveyor's estimates.

C.

Copy of surveyor's estimates for 1833.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Florence, Alabama, November 1, 1832.

SIR: Your letter calling for the usual estimates for surveying the public lands in Alabama for the year 1833 has been received, and, in answer thereto, I make the following estimates, which may not be precisely correct, but are as nearly so as may be. In the Choctaw country last ceded, and within the limits of Alabama, there are 3,447 miles of the lines of the surveys. This work has all been done in this year; but on account of some errors a small part of it has to be surveyed over again, but which will not produce a material difference in the extent of miles; whole amount, at four dollars a mile, is $13,788.

An appropriation was last year made of $80,000, to be applied to paying for the surveying of this country. Out of that appropriation I have received $8,000; the balance of $5,788 is yet due to the surveyors for that work, and probably may be paid out of the former appropriation. This can be ascertained at the proper department of the treasury.

The survey of the Creek lands is now in progress, and will be completed, in all probability, in the course of this year. The precise contents are not yet known, but it may be estimated that the survey will amount to $70,000.

An appropriation was made last year for surveying the Creek lands of $50,000, which will leave a balance of $20,000 to be raised out of next year's appropriation.

By a treaty lately signed between the United States and the Chickasaws, which is not yet ratified, but, if it shall be ratified by the President and Senate, the Chickasaw nation has ceded all their country east of the Mississippi river, estimated to contain 280 townships, equal to 6,451,200 acres, or 20,160 miles of surveying, at four dollars a mile, will be $80,640.

If the treaty is ratified the land will be surveyed in the year 1833; and although the surveys are to be paid for out of the proceeds of the sale of the same lands, yet the government will advance it before the sale can take place, subject to be refunded out of the sales of the lands, as is provided for in the treaty.

Recapitulation.

For surveying the Choctaw lands	$5,788
For surveying the Creek lands	20,000
	25,788

If the Chickasaw treaty is ratified, it is estimated that 20 townships of that country will be in Alabama, and 260 townships in Mississippi—in all, 280, equal to 20,160 miles, at four dollars per mile, $80,640.

I am your obedient servant,

JOHN COFFEE.

T. L. SMITH, Esq., Register of the Treasury.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Donaldsonville, December, 1832.

Estimate of the amount of public lands in the State of Louisiana to be surveyed in the year 1833.

In the southwestern district, 1,500 miles of the public lands, at four dollars per mile	$6,000
In the district north of Red river, 4,000 miles of public lands, at four dollars per mile	16,000
In the southeastern district, 1,500 miles of public lands, at four dollars per mile	6,000
For surveying private confirmed claims in said district	2,000
	30,000

H. B. TRIST, Surveyor General.

* Exclusive of the late Indian cessions.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Mississippi, October 20, 1832.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 11th ultimo, requesting an estimate of the expenditures which may be necessary for this office for the year 1833, I have to state that, for surveying in the late Choctaw cession, there was last session of Congress appropriated $80,000 Of this sum I learn from General Coffee that $13,500 may be required for that part of the late Choctaw cession within Alabama, leaving for Mississippi $66,500.

The contracts for surveying already amount to about $70,500; which contracts were made under the belief that the whole $80,000 were applicable to surveys within Mississippi, as expressed in the law.

This will show a deficit to meet the contracts of	$4,000
Balance to complete the surveys of the late Choctaw cession, over the $70,500 which may be required in the ensuing year	65,500
To complete a few unfinished townships of the Choctaw district, and correct erroneous surveys, and supply defects in the surveys of the districts west of Pearl river	5,000
To settle accounts for surveying in Louisiana, and recording done by one of the late principal deputies, which accounts are not yet adjusted, say	15,000
For salary of the surveyor south of Tennessee	2,000
For salary of two clerks as usual	1,700
For salary of three extra clerks to keep up the recording and gradually bring up that which is several years in arrears, at $800 each	2,400
For record books and other necessary contingent expenses	500
	96,100

If the Chickasaw country should be obtained, and the government desire it, there may be one hundred townships surveyed of that country, which, at four dollars per mile, and allowing for traverse of water-courses, will require three hundred dollars on an average for each township, making $30,000, which added to the above will make the entire sum $126,100.

With great respect,

GIDEON FITZ, Surveyor of Public Lands south of Tennessee.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th of September last was received in due time, and, in compliance therewith, I submit the following estimate of the expenses of this office during the year 1833, viz:

Surveying 7,700 miles of public lands, at $3 per mile	$23,100
Surveying the common field lots and the out-boundaries of the commons of the several towns and villages in Missouri, and for surveying and resurveying confirmed private land claims, say 500 miles, at $3 per mile	1,500
Postage on letters and packages received at and sent from this office on public business	300
Stationery, including platting instruments, and binding books of plats, &c	600
Office rent	180
Fuel	75
Office furniture	100
Salary of the principal surveyor	2,000
Salary of three clerks	2,000

And if the allowance for extra clerks, which has been recommended to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, should receive the sanction of Congress, the following additional appropriation will be required, viz.

Extra clerks	3,900
Additional office rent	120
Additional cost of fuel	75
Additional stationery and platting instruments	800
Additional office furniture	150
Also, if this office is authorized to employ on particular occasions, (as has been recommended,) a deputy surveyor at a per diem allowance, for the execution of such portions of the surveys as cannot be done for the present compensation, there may be required for that purpose	1,500
	36,400

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. T. LANGHAM.

T. L. SMITH, Esq., Register of the United States Treasury, Washington City.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Little Rock, Arkansas Territory, October 20, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th ultimo, requesting estimates for the year 1833, has been received, and I have the honor herewith to transmit said estimates under the heads that follow, viz:

For surveying public lands	$25,000
For salary of surveyor general	1,500
For salary of draughtsman and clerks	1,800

For furniture for surveyor's office, viz: writing-desks and tables, bookcases, chairs, &c.....	$200
For blank books and stationery.....	150
For postage.....	50
For printing.....	100
For house rent and fuel.....	200
For transporting from St. Louis to Little Rock the books, papers, documents, &c., which relate to the surveys in the Territory of Arkansas.....	150
For surveyor general's services or mileage, travelling to and returning from St. Louis, in procuring and having transported to Little Rock, the books, papers, documents, &c., which relate to the surveys in the Territory of Arkansas.....	128
	29, 278

Making an aggregate of twenty-nine thousand two hundred and seventy-eight dollars.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. S. CONWAY.

T. L. SMITH, Esq., Register United States Treasury, Washington City.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, November 7, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th September was duly received, and, in compliance with your request, I herewith have the honor to submit the following estimates for this surveying department for the year 1833:

For surveying the public lands in the Michigan Territory west of Lake Michigan, for contracts now existing.....	$20, 000
For other surveys in Ohio, Indiana, and the peninsula of Michigan.....	5, 000
		$25, 000
For salary of surveyor general.....	2, 000
For salary of three clerks, as heretofore.....	2, 100
For salary of additional clerks required by the state of the office.....	2, 000
		6, 100
For stationery and postage.....		500
		31, 600

Prospective estimates made by this office must necessarily be uncertain, as it cannot be known what surveys the government may order to be made within the next year. If further surveys be ordered to be made within the year 1833 in the Territory west of Lake Michigan, which is probable, an additional sum, to cover such surveys, will be required.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

M. T. WILLIAMS.

THOMAS L. SMITH, Esq., Register of the Treasury.

Copies of reports from the surveyors general in reply to the annexed copy of a circular letter bearing date September 13, 1832, which are furnished to the committee with a view to explain the submissions for increased clerk hire in the surveyors' offices.

CIRCULAR TO SURVEYORS GENERAL.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 13, 1832.

SIR: I have to request that you will furnish to this office, in time to be submitted to Congress at an early period of the ensuing session, a report by land districts, detailing under specific heads, as far as practicable, the nature and amount of arrears of the different work of your office:

1st. The number of townships surveyed the field-notes of which remain to be tested by actual protraction, and the time which will be required to protract the same with your present force.

2d. The arrears in furnishing copies of township plats and descriptive notes, both to this office and the district land offices, with the time required to do the work with your present force.

3d. The arrears in recording plats, with the time required to perform the work with your present force.

4th. The arrears in recording field-notes, with the time required to perform the work with your present force.

5th. The number of clerks which would be requisite to bring up all the arrears in two years, were it practicable for so great a number to be employed at one time.

6th. The number of clerks that could be most usefully employed at one time, with their respective compensations, classed according to the duties to be performed, &c.

7th. The amount of house rent and fuel which would be required (in case Congress should make an appropriation for those objects) in the event of your being authorized to engage as many clerks as you could advantageously employ at one and the same time.

Intending to submit to Congress the propriety of so altering the law regulating the public surveys as to require the surveyors to furnish with the township plats, to this office and to the district land offices, copies of the field-notes instead of the descriptive notes; and also the propriety of transcribing all the field-notes of the public surveys now extant, in order that authenticated copies thereof may be preserved at the seat of government, I will thank you to render a separate estimate of the amount of labor to be performed in order to effect that object, and of the time, number of clerks, and also the amount of expenditure that would have to be incurred in so doing.

I am, &c.,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November 12, 1832.

SIR: In answer to the latter part of your letter of the 13th of September last, I have to inform you that it is estimated to transcribe all the field-notes of the surveys now extant in Illinois and Missouri, to be furnished the General Land Office, would require about 8,500 days' labor; which, allowing 300 working days to the year and an annual compensation of $600 to the clerks employed, would cost $17,000, exclusive of additional office rent, fuel, and stationery, which would perhaps be $1,000, making a total of $18,000. It is, however, recommended that this business should not be commenced until the field-notes are recorded in this office, and properly indexed.

To furnish the General Land Office and the district land offices with copies of the field-notes in lieu of descriptive lists of the townships to be surveyed in future, would require an additional labor proportioned to the quantity of surveys that may be executed in any one year; and as there are but few surveys that will be returned to this office before the latter part of next year, no appropriation will be required for that purpose at the ensuing session of Congress; but if it is intended to furnish the notes of the townships—the plats of which have not yet been sent to the district land offices—three additional clerks, at a compensation of $600 each per annum, will be required.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. T. LANGHAM.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington City.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November 12, 1832.

SIR: I received in due time your letter of the 13th of September, of the present year, and herewith submit the following statements in answer thereto, viz:

1. There are no recent surveys in this office the field-notes of which require to be tested by actual protraction or otherwise; but circumstances which will be developed in an after part of this communication show that, to put the affairs of the office in proper order, this will be no small item in the catalogue of duties to be performed.

2. This office has not sufficient data to answer with precision what are the arrears in furnishing the plats and descriptive notes to the General Land Office and to the registers of the several land offices, as the record evidences thereof commence only with the latter part of the year 1824. It is expected, however, that of the surveys in Illinois and Missouri the plats have mostly been furnished to the General Land Office, and that the arrears to the registers are about four hundred townships and fractional townships, the plats of which on file in this office are unauthenticated, and ought, with few exceptions, to be constructed (or protracted) anew from the field-notes, and examined thereby, before copies are prepared for the land offices, which will require about 800 days' labor; to make and compare a copy of each for the registers will require, say, 400 days' labor; and to complete and compare the descriptive notes will require about 400 days' labor; making a total of 1,600 days' labor to bring up the arrears of this branch of business.

To furnish the registers with copies of the mutilated plats of townships heretofore offered for sale will require about 1,000 days' labor.

3. There has been surveyed in Illinois and Missouri townships and fractional townships equal to about 2,204 whole townships, of which the plats of only ninety townships and thirteen fractional townships have been recorded, (and which record is not authenticated,) leaving townships and fractional townships equal to about 2,108 whole townships of which the plats have not been recorded; and, as but few of those on file are authenticated, it is thought advisable to recommend that an entire new set be constructed, on suitable paper, from the field-notes, and examined and properly authenticated previous to putting them on record, except those in the Kaskaskia district, and some of the old surveys in the Howard and Western districts, of which there are duplicates, and sixty townships in the Shawneetown districts, of each of which there is one copy that has lately been constructed but not examined and authenticated, and excepting also a few others which have of late years been made, in conformity with the present regulations of the department at Washington city. To construct anew from the field-notes such of the plats as it is deemed necessary and proper, exclusive of those townships not yet furnished the registers and already estimated for, and also those which have lately been constructed, as before stated, will require about 4,000 days' labor. To examine the same, and those which have already been constructed, and make the required corrections, will be about 2,000 days' labor. To record the whole of the said plats and examine the record will be about 4,000 days' labor.

4. A small portion of the field-notes in the Kaskaskia, Shawnee, and Danville districts, but none in any of the other land districts, has been recorded. It is recommended that the whole be recorded with as little delay as practicable, for many of the notes of the old surveys are in a perishable condition, being, in numerous instances, nearly illegible on account of the indifference of the ink and paper, which are decaying with evident rapidity, and if much longer delayed will be a serious loss to the public. To record and examine the whole of the field-notes, except those already recorded, to examine the record, and to make proper indexes thereto, it is estimated will require 9,000 days' labor.

5. According to the foregoing estimates, it will require thirty-six clerks to bring up the arrears of the office and place the documents therein in proper order in two years, allowing 300 working days to the year; and although it is practicable, yet it is not thought advisable to employ so great a number at one time.

6. In addition to the clerks allowed by law and now engaged in this office, six others might be usefully employed at one time, viz: three draughtsmen, at $700 each per annum, and three recording clerks, at $600 each.

7. Should Congress make an appropriation for these objects, and allow six additional clerks, the office rent would then be about $300, and the fuel would cost about $150 per annum.

The latter part of your letter, requiring a separate estimate of the amount of labor to be performed in order to furnish the General Land Office with copies of all the field-notes of the public surveys now extant, and to furnish the district land offices and the General Land Office with copies of the field-notes, instead of descriptive lists, will be the subject of another communication by this day's mail.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. T. LANGHAM.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington City.

P. S.—The press of business in conducting the ordinary operations of this office has presented as minute an examination of the papers thereof as is desirable, and as would have been made under different circumstances, but it is confidently believed that the most scrutinizing inspection would vary the general result but little. And it may be proper to remark that, in estimating the time required to perform the different portions of labor, a liberal course was pursued, so as to be sure of not making an under calculation. Therefore, whatever errors may be found will, it is expected, invariably lessen the foregoing estimate, but not to any considerably extent.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Mississippi, October 24, 1832.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 13th ultimo, I have to state that there are about 400 townships in the old land districts of this State, of which the field-notes are not recorded. The clerks here estimate the recording of field-notes of three per week for one clerk as being sufficient, which would require the services of two clerks one year and a half nearly.

The contracts for surveying the late Choctaw cession amount to about $70,000; and allowing that each township on an average may require $300, the number of townships will be, say, 234, which, at three per week, will require one clerk to record the field-notes one year and a half. These two objects will occupy three extra clerks one year and six months.

The two clerks provided for by law, with the surveyor general, then may be able to prepare the township maps, record them, and furnish copies for the General Land Office and land offices, respectively.

It is proper to remark that clerks who are mere copyists would be of but little use in copying or recording the old surveys. The papers will require arranging, and notes for the government of the copyist, which will require the attention of the surveyor general frequently, or a practical experienced surveyor. Under these circumstances, I am induced to recommend the employment of only three extra clerks, at $800 each. If it should be determined to have all the field-notes copied out of the record books, as well as those which have not been recorded for the General Land Office, then two or three more clerks could be employed, as they could copy from the record books without much attention.

The correspondence between this office and the General Land Office should be recorded; as yet there has not been time to spare for this object. The accounts, too, should be recorded in full, rather than put them on file; papers on file are liable to be misplaced and lost. There has always been too much service required from this office by the government to be properly performed by the number of clerks employed.

My estimate furnished to the Register of the Treasury for the year 1833 will show you what surveying is contemplated for the ensuing year with the approbation of the government, and the expenditures to accomplish it. A copy is enclosed, dated the 20th instant.

As to office rent, it may be reasonable to estimate it at $180 per annum, or more; if several clerks should be employed it will require more room than we have at present. The office I now occupy is at a lower rate, but that is because there is very little demand for house room, and it is not large enough for more clerks than are now employed.

As to fuel, I presume that eight cords of wood will be sufficient for one fire-place, and four fire-places would not be too much for the number of persons to be conveniently situated, which, at $3 per cord, would amount to $96 per annum. These expenses should, in justice, be defrayed by the public, and not out of the surveyor's salary. His expenses of living are unavoidably very considerable in a southern country; his services are very laborious and responsible.

The copying of field-notes require, say, at least double the time that copying of descriptive notes of a township would require.

With respect,

GIDEON FITZ, Surveyor of Public Lands south of Tennessee.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Florence, Alabama, November 29, 1832.

SIR: In answer to your circular letter of the 13th of September last, I make the following estimate and report, to wit: That part of the Choctaw country lately ceded to the United States which lies in the State of Alabama has been surveyed and returned to this office. It contains sixty-three townships and fractional townships; thirty-nine of which lie in the St. Stephen's land district, and twenty-four in the Tuscaloosa land district; none of which have as yet been protracted or copied in this office.

That part of the Creek country lately ceded to the United States within the limits of Alabama has, much of it, been surveyed and returned to this office, and the whole survey will be completed and returns made by the last of this year. It is estimated to contain two hundred and seventy-seven townships and fractional townships, to wit: 165 in the Tallapoosa district, and 112 in the Coosa land district, making in the whole, as before stated, 277 townships and fractional townships; none of which have been protracted or copied in this office

Recapitulation.

St. Stephen's land district	39 townships and fractions.
Tuscaloosa.....do	24....do.....do.
Tallapoosa.....do	165....do.....do.
Coosa .....do	112....do.....do.
Total	340 townships and fractional townships;

all of which have to be protracted, and two copies each of the township plats and descriptive notes to be made to the General Land Office and the registers' offices.

With the present force in this office it will require four and a half years, and perhaps five years, to perform the above work, including the various incidental duties of the office.

To bring up all the arrears of work in this office, including the above work, within two years, it will require the aid of four additional clerks, one of which must be a good draughtsman, to work under the directions of the present draughtsman, whose qualifications will enable him to direct and instruct the young draughtsman and perform his own duties also, but who ought to be compensated for such additional service and labor. In the event of thus pressing the business of the office, the labors of the present draughtsman and clerk will become laborious and increased, and therefore, in justice, their salaries should be raised to one thousand dollars each. I would propose an appropriation as follows:

For salary of principal clerk	$1, 000
For salary of principal draughtsman	1, 000
For salary of four clerks, each $625	2, 500
Additional office rent per year	100
Fuel per year	40
Total	4, 640

To make a complete copy of all the field-notes of the surveys in the State, and furnish one copy thereof to the General Land Office and to the register's office, it is presumed would require the labor of the foregoing force two years over and above the time to perform all the duties in the ordinary way, as at present practiced.

I have no correct data from which to make a correct estimate of the time to perform the service, as required in your letter first alluded to, but presume the foregoing is, as near as may be, a reasonable allowance for the labor required.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN COFFEE.

Hon. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner General Land Office.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, November 13, 1832.

Sir: In compliance with the requests of your circular letter of the 13th September last, I have the honor of submitting the following statements. The nature and amount of the different arrears of work in this office, separated by land districts, being fully set forth in my communication to you of October 8, 1831, up to that date, I beg leave to refer you to that communication for an answer to that portion of your inquiries, and to add further:

1. The field notes returned to this office are regularly tested by protraction soon after their reception. Under this head there are no arrears of work in this office, with the exception of the notes of a few townships recently received.

2. There are no arrears in furnishing copies of township plats either to the General Land Office or to the district land offices. There are due to the General Land Office copies of descriptive notes of eighteen townships, (see my letter of the 3d August last;) to the land office at Detroit fourteen townships, and to that at White Pigeon sixty-four townships. These items of arrears have accrued by reason of the subdivision of fractions required by the provisions of the act of the 5th April last.

3. Referring to the amount of arrears up to the present moment, I am of opinion that five additional clerks for two years would be required to bring up the work of the office; but this is too great a number to be advantageously employed at the same time.

4. Two, or at furthest three, additional clerks might be advantageously employed at the same time. Their salaries should be about $700 each for two of them, and $600 for the third.

5. For office rent and fuel there should be about $150 appropriated additional.

6. Upon a careful examination of the subject, I find there are, in Ohio, of surveyed townships and fractional townships, about | 830
In Indiana | 853
Michigan Territory | 500
Total number of surveyed townships | 2, 183

This number is exclusive of the field-notes of private claims. Estimating that to copy and compare the field-notes of one township, including the notes of the exterior lines and the meanders, will require the labor of a clerk one and a half days, it follows that it will require ten years, $\frac{374}{300}$ of a year, for one clerk to make copies of all the field-notes in this office, exclusive of the notes of the private claims.

A clerk competent to make fair and accurate copies of field-notes may be employed for a salary of about $600 per annum.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. T. WILLIAMS.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

LAKE JACKSON, November 26, 1832.

SIR: In reply to your circular of the 13th September last, I beg leave to state that, as far as the feeble state of my health has permitted, I have carefully examined the same.

For the ordinary business of the office the duties should be divided, or classed, into three parts, giving an equal portion to each, as near as may be. First, a person to make calculations, exclusively, of the contents of sections, fractions, and private claims, and to examine the protractions, &c. Secondly, a draughtsman to make out three fair copies of each township plat, three fair copies of each private claim, &c.; and a third clerk to attend to making out three fair copies of the field-notes, making out accounts, &c.; which three are indispensable. The duties of the draughtsman, at this time, far exceed the other duties.

In proportion as the surveys advance to the east, so in proportion will difficulties increase, owing to the intervention of private claims, and the consequent additional labor required on each township plat, more than formerly.

In relation to the eastern land district of Florida, there remain, under the last contract, two townships to be finished, and it will take about six days to complete them. In the western land district there remain, under the last contract, three townships to be completed, and it will take about six days to complete them also.

There remain under old contracts in said districts twenty-three townships that have been suspended, which will take about three months to be completed.

The answers to the second, third, and fourth queries are included in the above.

In answer to the fifth query it will require, exclusive of the three above named, the services of two first-rate calculators for fractions, sections, private claims, and to subdivide and lay down the lots in fractions. Two first-rate draughtsmen to make three fair copies of each township plat and private claim; and two eligible clerks to make copies of all the field-notes heretofore surveyed, to be filed in the General Land Office, making, in all, nine clerks, who could thus be advantageously employed at one and the same time.

Answer to the sixth query. The clerks' salaries, agreeably to the above arrangement, should be as much, if not more, than any in the surveying department in the United States, because their duties are equal to, if not more arduous, than those of any other officer in the United States; but, agreeeable to the present salaries, the seven first named should be allowed a compensation of $1,000 each, and the others $800 or $1,000 each.

Answer to the seventh query. House rent, fuel, tables, instruments, &c., and stationery, would require from $1,000 to $1,200 for the two years.

Recapitulation.

One additional clerk, to perform the ordinary business for two years, from January 1, 1833..	$2,000
Two calculators, to bring up arrears on old surveys.....	4,000
Two draughtsmen, to bring up arrears on old surveys.....	3,200
House-rent, fuel, desks, copying, glasses, &c., &c.....	1,200
Two years' salary of the present two clerks.....	2,000
Two years' salary of the surveyor general.....	4,000
The whole expenditure for salaries, exclusive of surveying.....	20,400
Deduct for salary of the surveyor general and his two clerks, as now allowed by law.....	6,000
This amount required to bring up arrearages in said time.....	14,400

In conclusion I would beg leave further to state that, should those additional duties be imposed on the office, the surveyor general ought, consequently, to be allowed an additional salary of $500 during the above two years alluded to.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 14, 1833.

SIR: Among the reasons urged in my communications to you on the 7th instant, in support of the estimates of the department for increased clerk hire in the offices of the surveyors general, I omitted, in the hurry to bring that communication in due time before the committee, to mention an important item of the duty of the surveyors general, which does not come properly under the denomination of arrears of current duties, but to perform which will necessarily tend greatly to divert their attention from those arrears. It is the constant demands on their time and attention to renew the township plats of the old districts.

On these plats are marked all the indications of sales, forfeitures, relinquishments, and resales of each particular tract of land. The plats are made out on paper, and not on parchment, as would be desirable. The plats of the old credit system districts have all become so defaced as to require renewal; and even in many of the districts which have been put in operation within the last twelve years, a renewal of the plats, wholly or partially, is required. The plats are liable by law to be inspected by each land purchaser, and it may readily be conjectured that the constant handling of them by all descriptions of persons must necessarily mutilate them in a few years. The operation of the late pre-emption laws has, within three years, greatly tended to the injury of those plats by the wear and tear produced by the incessant references.

It is a fact well known to this office that in some districts the land officers cannot with certainty sell land, in consequence of the great difficulty of discriminating between the vacant and sold lands, by reason of the defacement of the plats; and although instructions have been repeatedly given to the surveyors general to remove the difficulty by renewing the plats, yet the department has been unable to accomplish the object for want of means in the surveyors' offices.

From these causes, as may readily be imagined, it frequently occurs that lands are erroneously sold; and the only effectual checks to prevent the erroneous issuing of patents are found in the tract books of this office.

The detection of such errors, and the correspondence necessary to their correction, impose much labor both on this office and that of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is authorized by law to direct the correction of errors made at the land offices.

With great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. G. C. VERPLANCK,
Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1093. [2D SESSION.

ON CLAIM FOR REVOLUTIONARY BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 18, 1833.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Public Lands, who were instructed by a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted on the 3d January, 1833, to inquire into the expediency of allowing to Bernard Valentine a tract of land for his military services during the revolutionary war, reported:

That it appears to the satisfaction of the committee, by the affidavits of Robert King and John Steele, who was an officer in the revolutionary army, that Bernard Valentine enlisted in the 10th Pennsylvania regiment in the spring of the year 1777, to serve during the war; that, after discharging his duties with fidelity in that regiment for some time, he was transferred to Lamb's regiment of artillery. Your committee are satisfied, from the proofs above referred to, that the said Valentine actually served to the end of the war, and is therefore entitled to the bounty land promised to soldiers so enlisting and serving, although his name does not appear on the rolls of the army returned to the War Office, and now in that department. They therefore report a bill for his relief.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1094. [2D SESSION.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR RELIEF TO CERTAIN SETTLERS WHOSE PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS HAVE BEEN DECLARED FORFEITED.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 18, 1833.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Illinois respectfully represents: That the Quincy land district, in the State of Illinois, is bounded on the east by the Illinois river and the third principal meridian; on the north by the northern boundary of the said State; on the west by the Mississippi river, and on the south by the base line of military bounty tract, and embraces in its limits much fertile and valuable land, abounding in natural advantages, and in great demand. The land in this district was surveyed about sixteen years ago from the base line, as far north as to include a part of township 18 north. Three years ago eleven townships at or near the mouth of Rock river were proclaimed for sale, but not more than twelve or fourteen township plats have ever been furnished to the land office, exclusive of the townships thus offered for sale. There have been upwards of five hundred pre-emption rights proven at this land office, under the law of the 5th April last, that the land offices were unable to sell to the pre-emptors for want of the township plats, and which pre-emption claims are now construed by the head of the land office department to be forfeited, which forfeiture has accrued, not from any act or neglect of the pre-emptors, but solely in consequence of the inability of the land officers to discharge the duties imposed on them by law, from the want of the necessary plats of survey.

Your memorialists therefore pray that the provisions of the said law of April 5 be extended so as to embrace the cases above stated, and that the law for the relief of those claimants be so formed as to legalize and render available the proofs of pre-emption rights already made at the office aforesaid, under said law, together with all proceedings already legally had in relation thereto, so that the said claimants may not be put to the great trouble and expense of reiterating their claims, proofs, and other proceedings.

Your memorialists would further respectfully suggest, in relation to the whole of the said land district, that there has probably been no other case in which lands so long surveyed have been withheld for so great a length of time from market. The emigration to this portion of the State of Illinois is now considerable, and is annually and rapidly increasing, and in no portion of our country is the demand for land greater, or the prospect of sale more promising.

It is therefore earnestly requested of your honorable body that such legislative action be had as may require from the proper departments the speedy completion of the necessary plats and surveys, and the placing the whole of the lands in said district in a situation for immediate sale.

ALEXANDER H. JENKINS, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
ZADOK CASEY, Speaker of the Senate.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1095. [2D SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 19, 1833.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill from the Senate (No. 19) for the relief of Elizabeth Magruder, of Mississippi, reported:

The Committee on Public Lands have had referred to them, by the order of the House, the bill from the Senate for the relief of Elizabeth Magruder, of Mississippi, and, after an examination of the evidence, a majority of the committee are of opinion the bill ought not to pass. They refer to the report made by the Committee on Private Land Claims at the last session of Congress as embracing the substance of all the evidence now submitted to this committee, and make the same a part hereof.

The committee are convinced that Ann Brashear was not entitled to a confirmation of the claim now sought to be satisfied, and that the claim was very properly rejected by the board of commissioners. This tract, though it is represented to have been granted by a Spanish officer, is situated north of the 31st degree of north latitude, and wholly without the jurisdiction of the province of Spain.

There was a total failure to prove, before the commissioners, the facts which would have authorized its confirmation. There is no proof of the fact now that Ann Brashear ever lived upon the land or cultivated the same. This fact, though represented in the petition to Congress in 1830, when the bill passed for her relief, to which reference is made, was not proved; and the committee in their report upon the case, in pursuit of the question whether a grant was made by the Spanish governor to Ann Brashear, omit to investigate the most important facts, and without proof of which this claim never ought, under any circumstances, to have been confirmed, to wit: the fact of occupation and cultivation by the said Ann. Under a mistaken view of the facts, in the absence of proof, Congress, in 1830, passed the law by which Ann Brashear was confirmed in her right to 480 acres of land, and the interest of this government was thereby released to her, saving the rights of all other persons. The petitioner, Thomas B. Magruder, at that time represented the land to be in the possession of the said Ann, and that she had ever theretofore occupied it. The following strong language is used by the petitioner: "And your memorialist begs leave further to state, that the residue of the said tract (i. e., the part for which he asked confirmation) of 800 arpents, so originally granted to Mrs. Ann Brashear, is now, and hitherto has been, unoccupied by any person other than the said Mrs. Ann Brashear, and that she has not, for some years, raised a crop or made any improvement upon the said land, solely in consequence of the non-confirmation of said claim, and that no person hath any claim to any part of the residue of 800, deducting the 320 arpents confirmed to Richard Sparks, unless some late entry of a part thereof may have been made as land of the United States."

At this time it turns out to have been the fact that Ann Brashear was not in the possession or cultivation of this land. It does not appear, nor has it at any time been made to appear by proof, either before the commissioners or to Congress, that she ever occupied or cultivated the said tract at any time. At the date of the petition, the land had been sold by the government and was in the occupation of others, of which facts the petitioner must have been fully apprised at the time he presented the petition and obtained the passage of the act of 1830.

Under these circumstances the petitioner now asks Congress to permit him to enter the 480 acres in any part of the State of Mississippi subject to private entry, in lieu of the said 480 acres which he now represents as having been previously sold by the government, and in the adverse possession of others.

A question of some difficulty presents itself to a portion of the committee, growing out of the facts in this case. They are perfectly satisfied that the claim of Ann Brashear ought never to have been confirmed; but Congress, by a solemn act of legislation, superinduced by the false representations made to them, or wholly mistaking the nature of the claim and the obligations of the government in regard to the petitioner, has confirmed it. The petitioner, however, finds the act of confirmation unavailing to him; the title to the land had, by the government, been passed to others, and he asks Congress to permit the land to be entered elsewhere. Ought this Congress, upon this state of fact, to look behind the act of 1830 and refuse to satisfy by other means a demand which, by that act, was admitted to be just, and which demand or claim it was the purpose of that act to satisfy? A majority of the committee were of opinion that this Congress had a right to go behind the act of 1830, and inquire into the equity and justice of the petitioner's original claim; and being of opinion that the claim ought never to have been confirmed by Congress, recommend that the bill be rejected. Should, however, this House be of opinion that any investigation into the merits of this claim is precluded by the former legislation of Congress, then it will be necessary to amend the bill by reducing the number of acres, as it appears that there are 139.98 acres of land the which, though sold by the government prior to the act of 1830, had been relinquished by the purchaser, and by the provisions of said act are vested in said Ann Brashear.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1096. [2D SESSION.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 19, 1833.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petitions of Jean Baptiste, Louis Metoyers, Etienne Lacasses, Barthelemy Rachal, François Roubieu, Julian Rachal, and Pierre S. Compere, reported:

The petitioners, respectively, claim tracts of land lying in the parish of Natchitoches, in the State of Louisiana, on the river Attache, or Little river, a branch of the Red river, by right of occupation and cultivation, by virtue of the several acts of Congress making provision for those in occupation of the lands ceded by France and Spain to the United States. The said petitioners, respectively, prove that they were in the occupation and possession of the several tracts of land claimed by them prior to 1803, and have since occupied and cultivated the same and still are in possession of the same. The proof is made before a justice of the peace of the State of Louisiana, who certifies the same. There is no evidence of his official character accompanying said documents; the committees are satisfied of that fact from the information given them by the Hon. Mr. Bullard, who represents that district, and is acquainted with said justice, and also his handwriting, and the witnesses by whom the facts are proven, and of their credibility. The committee therefore report a bill for the relief of said petitioners.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN WEST FLORIDA, UNDER BRITISH PATENTS PRIOR TO THE TREATY OF 1783.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 19, 1833.

Mr. BULLARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Elihu Hall Bay, reported:

The Committee on Private Land Claims have given to the subject involved in the memorials of Elihu Hall Bay, of the heirs of Gaillard, of the heirs of J. and E. Jones and others, heretofore referred to them, that degree of attention and deliberation which they consider due at the same time to the claimants and to the rights of this government. These claims grow out of certain British patents for lands previously to the treaty of 1783, within that part of West Florida which, at that period, became a Spanish province, and which, by virtue of subsequent treaties, became an integral part of the United States. The lands in question are situated in that section of country east of the Mississippi, south of the 31st degree of north latitude, and west of the Perdido. In order to a full understanding of the case and of the views of the committee, it seems proper to look back into the history of that region and to consider the different treaties upon which its political condition depended at different periods.

At the general pacification in 1763, France was despoiled of all her possessions in North America, stretching through the interior of the continent from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico. Canada, Nova Scotia, and Cape Breton fell to the share of Great Britain. That part of Louisiana situated to the westward of the Mississippi was ceded to Spain, including the island of Orleans. That part of ancient Louisiana lying to the east of the same river, except the island of Orleans, was also ceded by France to Great Britain; Spain at the same time ceded to Great Britain Spanish Florida. At that period, therefore, and up to the commencement of the American revolution, the whole territory to the westward of the Mississippi, with the single exception of the island of Orleans, belonged to Great Britain. In the hands of that power, all the territory to the south of the colony of Georgia was divided into two governments, called East and West Florida, embracing Spanish Florida and that part of ancient Louisiana east of the Mississippi, and of the island of Orleans.

On the breaking out of the revolutionary war, Canada and the Floridas stood aloof from the contest, did not unite in the declaration of independence, and must be regarded, during that war, as alien enemies.

During the period between 1763 and 1783, the grants in question were made by the English governors of West Florida. In the course of the revolutionary war Spain invaded West Florida and conquered it from Great Britain. At the close of the American war Great Britain, by the treaty of 1783 with Spain, ceded to that power in full right "East Florida, as also West Florida." The social condition of the inhabitants of that country, their right to hold the property then possessed by them, and to enjoy other privileges, depend on the stipulations of that treaty. The words used, so far as relates to this matter, are these: "His Catholic majesty agrees that the British inhabitants or others who may have been subjects of the King of Great Britain in the said countries, may retire in full security and liberty where they shall think proper, and may sell their estates and remove their effects." The time limited for this emigration was fixed to the space of eighteen months, but it was further stipulated that, "if, from the value of the possessions of the English proprietors, they should not be able to dispose of them within said terms, then his Catholic majesty shall grant a prolongation proportionate to that end."

It cannot be contended, with any show of reason, that this treaty annulled all preceding grants of land made by British authority. The same expressions are used in the treaty by which France ceded Canada to Great Britain, with the addition that the French inhabitants should enjoy under the British government the right of worship according to the forms of the Catholic church. So far from annulling the titles to lands, the treaty, by permitting the sale, expressly recognizes their existence and validity, so far as the terms of the treaty extend. It never was pretended that the French inhabitants of Canada, who did not choose to sell their possessions and to emigrate, forfeited their estates to the British Crown. The permission allowed by the treaty with Spain to the British inhabitants and subjects to dispose of their estates, by no means implies that those who choose to remain would be obliged to submit to the confiscation of their property, and would not be permitted to become subjects or denizens of Spain. That might depend on the policy of Spain and the general regulations of her colonies.

But it is necessary to inquire to what classes of persons did this stipulation in the treaty of 1783, as well as in the capitulation of Pensacola two years before, apply. The expressions are: "The British inhabitants or others who may have been subjects of Great Britain in the said countries." The committee is not acquainted with any rule of construction by which these expressions, evidently intended as stipulations in favor of the actual inhabitants of a conquered or a ceded province, can be extended to embrace the claims of non-residents not in possession of lands, whether founded on a complete or an inchoate title. If such had been the meaning of the parties they would have entered into some stipulation to that effect. None of the claimants appear ever to have been actual inhabitants and possessed of these lands at the date of the treaty. It therefore appears to the committee that their case is not provided for by the treaty. Nor is it shown that in the long interval of time between the date of that treaty and the cession of the country to the United States, these grants were ever recognized by Spain. That Spain was not bound to recognize them by the treaty is abundantly evident, because no government is bound to permit aliens to hold lands within its dominion, and because the British government insisted on no stipulation to that effect. The British government never made any complaint against Spain on that score; and although the committee has no positive evidence on the subject, it is generally understood that that government made compensation to some, at least, of its own subjects for the sacrifice of their rights in the cession of Florida to Spain.

Considering this, therefore, as a question between the claimants and the government of Spain, it seems to the committee quite clear that Spain was not bound either by the treaty of 1783 nor by the law of nations to recognize these claims as valid; and it is certain they never were so recognized during the existence of the Spanish authorities in Florida. The United States, as the successors of Spain in the sovereignty of that country, are not bound to confirm these claims unless it be either, first, in virtue of subsequent treaties; or, secondly, by the acts of the board of commissioners and the legislation of Congress; or, thirdly, by the law of nations, and particularly, as is contended by the claimants, by the jus post liminii. Let us examine the question in reference to these three grounds.

1. Treaties.—The committee know of only two treaties between the United States and foreign governments which have the slightest bearing on this subject. The first is that of 1803 with France, and the second the treaty of 1819 with Spain. The treaty with France contains no stipulation on the subject of grants of land by any government. It simply stipulates that the inhabitants of the ceded country shall be protected in their property. By the treaty of 1819, it is stipulated in the eighth article that "all the grants of land made before the 24th of January, 1818, by his Catholic Majesty, or by his lawful authorities, shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of the lands," &c. By whichever of these treaties the country in question was ceded to the United States, it is clear that non-resident claimants to land of which they were not possessed as owners at the date of the treaties, respectively, cannot claim the benefit of the stipulation; and in the case of the last named treaty the grant must have been derived from the authority of Spain.

2. Legislation of Congress.—In April, 1812, an act of Congress passed for the purpose of ascertaining the titles and claims to land in that tract of country south of the then Territory of Mississippi, and east of the river Mississippi and the island of New Orleans, and west of the Perdido. Two land districts were laid off, the one west and the other east of Pearl river. For each of these districts it is provided that a commissioner should be appointed: his duties are pointed out by the act. It was made his duty to receive notices and evidences of claims to land within his district. By the fourth section of that act it is provided, "that every person claiming lands in the tract of country aforesaid by virtue of any grant, order of survey, or other evidence of claim whatsoever, derived from the French, British, or Spanish governments, shall deliver to the commissioners for land claims a notice, in writing, stating the nature and extent of his claims, together with a plat (in case a survey shall have been made) of the tract or tracts claimed. The claimant in such cases is further required to deliver, for the purpose of being recorded, every grant, order of survey, deed, conveyance, or other written evidence of claim. It is provided, however, that where lands are claimed by virtue of a complete French, British, or Spanish grant, it shall only be necessary to record the patent, together with the order of survey and the plat, with an abbreviated statement of his chain of conveyances.

It is made the duty of the commissioners, each within his district, to inquire into the justice and validity of the claims filed with them; to ascertain in every case whether the lands claimed have been inhabited and cultivated; at what time such inhabitation and cultivation commenced. They are further required to make out a list of actual settlers who have no written evidence of title. It is made the duty of the commissioners to make abstracts from the record of claims—to arrange them into classes according to their respective merits—which abstracts they are directed to transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him laid before Congress at the next session thereafter "for their determination thereon." By another act approved on the 14th of April, 1814, the time for making a report was further extended, and the district east of Pearl river extended to the east of Tombigbee.

Here let it be remarked, in passing, that the commissioners had no authority to decide between the government and the claimants. Their duty consisted in collecting the evidence on which Congress was to act. In pursuance of this authority, the commissioners made a report which was laid before Congress. On the 3d of March, 1819, an act of Congress was approved which decided on all the cases reported upon by the commissioners. By that act, all complete Spanish grants contained in the reports, and believed to be valid according to the laws and usages of Spain, were declared and recognized as valid and complete titles against any claim on the part of the United States. The next clause in the act relates to the class of claims now under consideration; "and that all claims founded upon British grants, contained in said reports, which have been sold and conveyed, according to the provisions of the treaty of peace between Great Britain and Spain of September 3, 1783, by which that part of Louisiana lying east of the island of Orleans was ceded to Spain under the denomination of West Florida, or which were settled and cultivated by the person having the legal title therein at the date of the treaty, are recognized as valid and complete titles against any claim on the part of the United States or right derived from the United States."

By the same act last mentioned, the authority of the commissioners was superseded by the appointment of a register and a receiver of public moneys at St. Helena court-house and at Jackson, with power to examine the claims recognized, confirmed, or provided to be granted by that act; and to make out to each claimant entitled, in their opinion, thereto, a certificate according to the nature of the case, under such instructions as they might receive from the Commissioner of the General Land Office. On presenting such certificate at the General Land Office, it is declared that if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the certificate has been fairly obtained, according to the true intent and meaning of the act, then and in that case a patent shall issue.

It is unnecessary to detail the reports made by these different registers and receivers, acting as boards for the adjustment of land titles in that section of country, and the several acts of Congress to confirm their proceedings. They appear to have no relation to this subject. It is clear that Congress, in the act of March 3, 1819, adopted, in relation to British patents of a date prior to 1783, precisely the principles which the committee announced at the commencement of this report, and confirmed all such as appeared to have been sold and conveyed by the British grantees, according to the stipulations of the treaty of 1783 between Spain and Great Britain, and also all such as were settled and cultivated by the person having the legal title therein at the date of that treaty. This government has already done all that Spain was bound to do, either by the treaty or the laws of nations. So far from regarding the permission to sell and emigrate allowed by the treaty as annulling the grants, this government has adopted that as full evidence of recognition of title on the part of Spain; and all grantees who did sell are considered as having a complete and valid title. Those who remain in possession retained all their rights, and their titles derived originally from Great Britain have been fully confirmed. Their continuing to reside in the province was considered as proof that they were regarded as subjects or denizens of Spain.

How far the claims of the different memorialists have been provided for may readily be ascertained by application to the General Land Office. There is no evidence before the committee which could induce them to take these cases out of the general rule, and to provide for them by special legislation. They appear to have been acted on by the commissioners, and subsequently by Congress.

There is one transaction, however, connected with these claims, which the committee think themselves bound to notice. The register of the land office and receiver of public moneys, created by the act of 1819, was authorized, as has been remarked above, to examine the claims recognized, confirmed, or provided to be granted by that act, and to make out certificates to be presented for patents to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It appears that, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of January, 1830, the register and receiver, at St. Helena, did issue certificates on seventy-five different claims in favor of various persons, and, among others, of the heirs of T. Gaillard for nine claims, and of E. H. Bay for five claims; in favor of the heirs of E. & J. Jones nine or ten claims, and of numerous other claimants. On the 26th of July, 1830, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by public notice, revoked and annulled these certificates. The committee subjoin a copy of the notice:

"Those persons who obtained on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of January last, from the register and receiver of the land office at St. Helena, in the State of Louisiana, certificates of confirmation of certain British grants of land in the above mentioned district, numbered one to seventy-five, inclusive, and which are particularly designated in the abstract hereto subjoined, are hereby notified that said grants are not recognized by any law of the United States, and that said certificates of confirmation are void and of no effect. By direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

It would appear, therefore, that the claims in question are not provided for by the act of Congress above mentioned, and have been rejected.

But the memorialists press their claims with great earnestness on the principles of the law of nations, and particularly that principle of the Roman civil law, commonly called the jus post liminii. The committee are willing to adopt the definition of that rule of national law from the memorialists. They define the jus post liminii to be that "branch of national law by which States or sovereigns are bound to restore to their citizens or subjects things which were taken possession of by an enemy on the conquest of a country, when it comes under the power or jurisdiction of the State of which the former owners or proprietors are citizens or subjects."

The application of this rule, thus defined, to the case of the claimants appears to the committee to involve an utter confusion of ideas. It supposes that the United States and Great Britain are identical, and that the claimants are, and were, at one and the same time, subjects of Great Britain and citizens of the United States. If Great Britain had recognized Florida, her subjects, who may have suffered by the conquest, would have been at once restored to the full integrity of their rights—such is the rule. But how, and in what sense of the word, are the United States the successor of Great Britain in the sovereignty of Florida? There is no privity between the two governments. We derived our title to the sovereignty of Florida from Spain, and not from Great Britain. The claimants appear, at the date of the grants, to have been British subjects in a colony, which, during the revolutionary war, belonged to the dominions of our enemy. If their sovereign sacrificed their rights to subserve the political interests of his Crown, at what period did the duty of the government of the United States originate to restore them to rights which they claimed originally as British subjects, and not as American citizens? The committee do not mean to insinuate that the claimants are not American citizens; they only mean to say that, in relation to these grants, they appear in the quality of British subjects. By this beautiful fiction of the Roman law an absent and captive citizen, however protracted his captivity, was, on his return, restored at once to the full enjoyment of his suspended rights, and considered as never having been absent. But how can the claimants bring themselves within any such rule in relation to rights in Florida derived from the British Crown, and not from the government of the United States? Upon the whole, in whatever view the committee regard these claims, they cannot resist the conclusion that the government of the United States is under no obligation whatever to take any further steps in relation to this class of claims, and they recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to legislate any further in relation to grants to lands in Florida, derived from the Crown of Great Britain prior to the 3d of September, 1783.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 22, 1833.

Mr. MARDIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Christopher A. Green and Robert Lawson, asking the confirmation of their title to a section of land therein described, to wit: section No. 19, township No. 18, and range No. 3 east, situated in St. Clair county, Alabama, reported:

The committee are, after a thorough investigation of the subject, satisfied that legislation would be useless, as the title exhibited by the petitioners is as full and complete as it could be possibly made by any act of Congress. They therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the report be printed.

ON CLAIM TO CERTAIN RESERVATIONS IN A TOWNSHIP OF LAND GRANTED FOR REVOLUTIONARY SERVICES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 23, 1833.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Arnold Henry Dohrman, reported:

That by an ordinance of the Congress of the United States, passed October 1, 1787, there was granted to said Dohrman "one complete and entire township, subject to reservations as in other townships, agreeably to the ordinance of May 20, 1785, out of the three last ranges surveyed in the western territory of the United States." It also appears that the ordinance of May, 1785, made reservations for the United States in all townships of land in the following words: "There shall be reserved for the United States, out of every township, the four lots being numbered 8, 11, 26, 29, and out of every fractional part of a township so many lots of the same numbers as shall be found thereon, for future sale. There shall be reserved the lot No. 16 of every township for the maintenance of public schools within the said townships; also one-third part of all gold and silver mines, lead and copper mines, to be sold or otherwise disposed of as Congress may direct." In accordance with the preceding resolutions, the said Dohrman selected township No. 13, range 7, of the Steubenville district, in the State of Ohio. The heirs of the said Dohrman now insist that the ordinance granting to their deceased parent the entire township, with the usual reservations made under the ordinance of 1785, intended only to reserve section No. 16 for school purposes, and also the right of the government to any gold or silver, lead or copper mines in said district, and did not intend to reserve sections 8, 11, 26, and 29; and that the resolution was always so understood by their deceased parent, as well as by the government; and, accordingly, said sections Nos. 8, 11, 26, and 29 have never been taken possession of or sold by the government, and now remain either the property of the government or the said heirs or assignees of said Dohrman. The Commissioner of the General Land Office seems inclined to the opinion that the construction placed upon said resolution and ordinance by the heirs of said Dohrman corresponds with the intention and wishes of the Congress that passed the resolution, and therefore recommends its adoption. A portion of the committee consider the same as the proper construction of the said resolution and ordinance, whilst a majority of the committee consider that the said sections Nos. 8, 11, 26, and 29 of said township was reserved to the government. But all the committee concur in the opinion, that as the selection of said township by said Dohrman was upon land of inferior quality, and by no means corresponding in value to the expectations or wishes of the Congress which passed said resolution, and by no means an adequate compensation for the generous, and liberal, and patriotic services of said Dohrman in the cause of the American revolution, in recommending to the House the passage of a bill allowing to the heirs of said Dohrman said sections 8, 11, 26, and 29 in said township.

RELATIVE TO THE CLASS OF MILITARY OFFICERS ENTITLED TO REVOLUTIONARY BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WITH A REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR, JANUARY 23, 1833.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, Bounty Land Office, January 21, 1833.

SIR: So far as information appears to be required from this office by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States of the 10th instant, referred to this office on the 19th instant, to report thereon, I have the honor to state, in reference to the inquiries "whether there was any specific promise of land either to Lee's legion, the corps of engineers, or artificers commanded by Colonel J. Baldwin," that the two first-named being military corps on the continental establishment, the officers attached thereto were embraced in the several resolves of Congress providing bounty lands for such of them as continued in service to the close of the war.

No returns exist in this office of the names of the officers of the corps of artificers commanded by Colonel J. Baldwin, nor does it appear that land warrants have issued to any of the officers of that corps, except to Samuel A. McCoskey, surgeon, and William McCoskey, surgeon's mate; and these issues appear to have been made in virtue of the resolution of Congress of May 3, 1782, as follows: "Resolved, That as the dispersed situation of the corps of artificers commanded by Captain Wyley will no longer require the services of Dr. A. McCoskey and Dr. William McCoskey, his mate, they be considered as reduced and retiring from the service on the 10th instant, and the surgeon be entitled to all the emoluments heretofore allowed to reduced regimental surgeons;" from which it would appear that these officers had been retained in service until May 10, 1782, being a period of more than thirteen months after the corps of artificers commanded by Colonel J. Baldwin had been dissolved under the resolution of Congress of March 29, 1781, by which resolution it is explicitly declared that "all officers of the regiment of artificers not retained by virtue of these resolutions be no longer considered in the service of the United States." The officers retained by the resolution just referred to were, it is believed, incorporated with the reduced corps of artillery artificers and continued in service; the names of some eighteen or twenty of whom are returned on the records of this office as being entitled to, and as having received, bounty lands from the United States.

The officers of the regiment of artillery artificers being attached to the artillery in the field were, it is believed, considered military officers; hence those of them who served to the end of the war were embraced in the resolves of Congress providing bounty lands. The duties of the officers of the corps of artificers being (as it is believed) confined to the superintendence of workshops, laboratories, &c., and to the control and direction of the artisans attached thereto, and not being required to act in the field, were not, it is presumed, considered military officers. Their names were therefore not returned on the list of officers on file in this department among those entitled to land bounties from the United States. Had they been considered military officers, it is presumed that Congress, when, by their resolution of March, 1781, they declared the corps of artificers "dissolved, and no longer in the service of the United States," would at that time have designated them as reduced and supernumerary officers, and as such entitled to all the emoluments in land and half pay. That Congress did not so consider the officers of that corps is manifested by the discrimination made in the cases of the two Doctors McCoskey, before referred to. If the surgeon of that name (surgeons' mates not being entitled to half pay) had been considered at the time of the dissolution of that corps (to which he then belonged) as entitled to "all the emoluments heretofore allowed to regimental surgeons," further legislation in behalf of that officer would have been superfluous.

The records of the War Department, from the earliest period succeeding the war of the revolution, exhibit no grant of bounty land to an officer or private of the corps of artificers, except in the two cases referred to in the aforegoing. This fact indicates the construction applied to the resolutions of Congress in reference to that corps by the individual who first presided over the department, who was himself an officer of the highest grade in the army.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. GORDON.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

RELATIVE TO PROVIDING FOR THE MORE PROMPT DESPATCH OF BUSINESS IN THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE, AND CORRECTING DEFECTS IN THE SYSTEM OF SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 24, 1833.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 21, 1833.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report and statements on the several subjects of inquiry embraced in the resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant, which you have referred to this office for that purpose, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the nature and amount of arrears of business in the General Land Office, and what additional number of clerks will be necessary to bring up such arrears and promptly discharge the current duties imposed by law; and also into the propriety of increasing the compensation of those who have the immediate supervision of the separate and distinct branches of business therein. Also,

"Resolved, That the said committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so modifying the existing laws in relation to the surveying of public lands as to provide for the defects of the system, in all cases where the maximum prices authorized by law have been found so inadequate as to render it impracticable for the department to accomplish surveys alike demanded by the public interest and that of individuals. Also,

"Resolved, That the said committee be instructed to inquire into the nature and amount of the arrears of work in the offices of the several surveyors general, and the propriety of making provisions for bringing up the same as soon as practicable; also into the propriety of causing authenticated transcripts of all the field-notes of the public surveys now lodged in the offices of the surveyors general to be made and deposited among the archives of the General Land Office."

I. THE NATURE AND AMOUNT OF ARREARS OF BUSINESS.

In presenting the state and condition of this office, with its arrears of business, as existing on the first day of the present year, for the information of the committee of the Senate, the appropriate classification thereof will be found under the respective heads of—

1. Private land claims.
2. Military bounty lands.
3. Posting the entries and accounts of the sales of public lands, and auditing the quarterly accounts thereof.
4. Indexes to the records of patents for lands sold, and for military bounty lands for services in the last war.
5. Opening tract books for the entries of lands sold in the several land districts.
6. Writing, recording, examining, and comparing patents for lands sold.
7. Examining and completing the title papers of suspended cases of lands sold, and writing and recording the patents for the same.
8. Issuing certificates under the seal of the office for tracts of land granted to States, Territories, and corporations, for canal, road, and other purposes.
9. Auditing the quarterly accounts of the surveyors general for the surveys of the public lands and private land claims.
10. The draughtsman's department.

1. Private land claims.

About six hundred private land claims are now in the office, the title papers and documents of which have not been collected and prepared for decision and patents.

To examine these documents, and attend to the necessary correspondence and instructions to perfect the titles, with that fidelity and impartiality which the peculiar circumstances and merits of each case may require to secure to bona fide claimants that justice to which they are respectively entitled by law, and writing and recording the patents for the same, would occupy the time of one clerk, aquainted with the duty, one year and six months. The number of cases presented for patent will increase with the progress of the public surveys. More than fifteen thousand of these claims, already confirmed, have not yet been presented for the action of this office; and of this number, from three to four thousand may be expected to come in in the course of the present year, if Congress should provide the necessary means to enable the surveyors general to make returns of the surveys thereof. The total number of cases reported to this office exceeds twenty-eight thousand.

The indexing the names of the original claimants being wholly in arrears, together with the names of more than seven thousand present claimants, the labor of performing this duty would occupy the time of a competent person about two years and six months. To enable the office to give the information often necessary to parties interested, and frequently required, it is of great and increasing importance that these claims should be indexed to original claimants, as also to the present claimants, as soon as possible. It is also equally important that, where claims have been once rejected, and subsequently revived and confirmed, or again rejected, references to all such and other proceedings, affecting the validity of the claims, should be made on the reports. The labor required to make the examinations necessary for such references would be very considerable, but cannot, at this time, be satisfactorily estimated.

Many of the original reports of the commissioners confirming these claims are much worn and injured by daily reference and use, and it is now necessary they should be correctly transcribed to preserve the original document of such importance to the security of land titles, and to prevent a recourse to them on ordinary occasions. One person acquainted with this service would transcribe these reports in four years. Of the propriety and expediency of having this duty immediately performed, no reasonable objections are perceived. For a detailed view of the arrears of this branch of business, reference is made to the annexed statements marked A, B, and C.

2. Military bounty lands.

More than three hundred cases of surveys under Virginia military warrants are now on file in the office to be examined and patented if the title papers should be found perfect. A large portion of these cases were suspended under the provisions of the act of May 20, 1826, but will probably be entitled to patent under the law of April 23, 1830. In addition to which, it is understood that about eight hundred surveys under such warrants remain of record in the surveyor's office at Chilicothe, and are expected to be presented in the course of a year or eighteen months. The labor of examination and of writing and recording the patents in such cases has greatly increased within a few years, by reason of the fractions of warrants on which the surveys are founded, the numerous calls, courses, and distances recited in the surveys, and the consequent tedious investigation of title. Many of the patents occupy a close-written sheet of thirty by fifteen inches, and some of them both sides of the same. The time required to bring up these arrears, for one competent clerk, would be one year and six months.

This office has no alphabetical index of the names of persons to whom warrants have issued by the United States for revolutionary services, and patents granted therefor. A suitable book was provided for that purpose many years ago, but the work has not been executed for want of sufficient aid, and in consequence of the more pressing demand for current duties. The information which such an index would readily afford is now obtained by a laborious examination, and not unfrequently of three or four hours in particular cases. Six months' time for one person would be required for this service.

The old War Office registry of warrants and surveys patented, a book which was transferred to this office in 1812, has been in constant use between thirty and forty years, and is now so much worn and defaced as to render a renewal of it necessary as soon as practicable; which, in consequence of the examination of papers on file in connexion with the subject, would occupy one clerk acquainted with the business about two years.—(See statement marked D.)

3. Posting the entries and accounts of the sales of public lands and auditing the quarterly accounts thereof.

There were about twenty-four thousand certificates of purchase on hand and unposted on the 1st instant, which, on an average of twenty per day for one person, including the incidental correspondence connected with this duty, would require the labor of a competent clerk four years—an estimate of labor which it is believed cannot be performed during the regular office hours. To post these entries accurately, the accountants are required, previous to making the entries in the office books, to compare the certificates of purchase with the receiver's receipt for the same, and these with the monthly returns of sales by the register, and the monthly abstract of receipts by the receiver, and all these documents with each other; and then ascertain from the tract book that the particular tract had not been previously sold, nor reserved from sale, nor the subject of a confirmed private claim, and that it was subject to private entry by remaining unsold after an offer at public sale, or that it was purchased at public sale. In the performance of this duty the strictest accuracy is necessary to detect the errors of the land officers, and to prevent the patents being issued erroneously, either as to the names of the patentees or the tracts described.

To adjust and make out a statement of the quarterly accounts of the several receivers of public moneys, and recording the same, for the above arrears of posting, including the incidental correspondence connected therewith, (amounting to one hundred and eighty-four quarterly accounts, exclusive of the semi-annual statements of the per centum allowed to the States for road purposes,) would occupy the time of one clerk at least one year.—(See statement marked E.)

4. Indexes to the records of patents for lands sold and for military bounty lands for services in the last war.

The indexing of the names of patentees to the records of patents for lands sold, in consequence of more pressing demands upon the time of the office, has been suspended for eleven years, with the exception of a small portion of the work which has been executed within the last six months. To such an extent have these arrears accumulated as to create great embarrassments in the prompt discharge of duty, and has been the cause of much delay and consumption of time to the serious injury of the public service. The almost daily requisitions for exemplifications of the records of patents to supply the loss of the originals, or to be used as evidence in the administration of justice, render it necessary that these indexes should be completed as soon as possible. Including the records of patents now in arrear, separate indexes are required for two hundred and forty-four volumes, and general indexes for three hundred and sixty-three volumes of the cash system; separate indexes for one hundred and fourteen volumes, and a general index for sixty-six volumes of the credit system; besides a general index for twelve volumes of the records of military bounty land patents for services in the last war. It is estimated that, to complete these indexes, the time of thirteen active clerks would be employed one year.

It has also become of great and increasing importance that the indexes of assignments of purchased lands, which have been neglected since the year 1824, should be completed as soon as possible. The numerous applications for transcripts of records, and copies of title papers, and other documents in these cases, to be used in the investigation of legal titles for judicial decision, and in the settlement of intestate estates, and the necessity of a prompt compliance with these demands, requires that every facility should be provided to meet every such call without an injurious interruption of the regular routine of office duty. To complete these indexes, two intelligent and industrious clerks would be profitably employed at least one year, as the numerous files of title papers surrendered under the several relief laws which have been passed since 1820 would have to be carefully examined. For a more particular view of this branch of arrears, see statement marked F.

5. Opening tract books for the entries of lands sold in the several land districts.

There are required to be opened, to enable the accountants to complete the posting of sales to the close of the year 1832, a quantity equal to three hundred and forty-two tract books, of four quires each, for lands already proclaimed for sale, and surveyed and prepared for public sale. The act of the 5th April last, by which entries are permitted in quarter-quarter sections, has rendered double the usual number of tract books necessary, and increased the labors of opening them nearly two-fold for the same quantity of the public domain. It will occupy the time of two clerks one year to bring up the arrears of this branch of business. In truth, I do not believe that two persons can perform this amount of labor, during office hours, within that period.—(See annexed statement, marked G.)

6. Writing, recording, examining, and comparing patents for lands sold.

On the first day of the present year there were more than forty-five thousand patents to be written, recorded, examined, and compared for lands previously sold under the cash system. This arrear of business has been accumulating for many years for want of sufficient aid in the office, until it has become a source of great public inconvenience, and the cause of no inconsiderable private injury, by reason of the delay in furnishing the legal title to purchasers. At least fourteen clerks, for one year, would be employed to perform this duty. The most pressing necessity exists to have this work done with all possible despatch consistent with that careful attention which secures accuracy. After the patents are written and recorded, they are then examined and compared by three persons with the record of the same and the title papers on which they are founded. The average number written and recorded by one person during office hours, per day, does not exceed twelve, and the number examined and compared by three clerks, per day, is about three hundred. If the patents could be promptly issued on receiving the certificates of purchase, much time and expense would be saved to the parties in interest, and to this office, in those cases where the purchasers die before the patents are issued, in proving heirship, furnishing the probate of wills, authentic copies of letters of administration, orders of sale by the local tribunals for the payment of debts, and the subsequent conveyances to purchasers.—(See statement marked H.)

7. Examining and completing the title papers of suspended cases of lands sold under the credit system, and writing and recording the patents for the same.

The number of suspended cases for lands sold, in which the title papers are not complete, amount to two thousand two hundred and seventy-two, nearly all of which are under the credit system, and have been suspended from three to fifteen years. In numerous instances the right to patents in these cases depends on legal evidence of assignments, proofs of heirship, the probate of wills, the regularity and legality of sales by executors or administrators, or on executions founded on final judgments of competent tribunals, not yet furnished to the office for its action thereon. The labor of examining these papers, attending to the necessary correspondence to complete the titles, and writing and recording the patents for the same, would be equal to the services of two clerks one year.—(See statement annexed, marked I.)

8. Issuing certificates, under the seal of the office, for tracts of land granted to States, Territories, and corporations for canal, road, and other purposes.

This branch of office duty is now wholly in arrears. The number of tracts granted to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Alabama, exceeds twenty-nine thousand of eighty acres each, all of which are to be entered on the tract books of this office, and colored on the connected and township maps; transcripts of which entries, to the respective registers of the proper land offices, and certificates of the location thereof, under the several acts making the donations, with the seal of the office affixed, will be transmitted to the several States to whom these grants have been made. This amount of arrears embraces only the large donations, and is exclusive of smaller grants to political and other corporations in these and other States, and also exclusive of donations to the Territories. Time does not admit of the requisite examination to ascertain the amount of the smaller donations and grants to the Territories.—(See statement marked J.)

9. Auditing the quarterly accounts of the surveyors general for the surveys of the public lands and private land claims.

In consequence of the want of sufficient force in some of the surveyors general's offices, and the embarrassments therein occasioned by numerous private land claims, many returns of the township plats have been delayed, without which the accuracy of the charges for surveying cannot be tested, nor the accounts therefor adjusted. Thirty-six quarterly accounts of the surveyors general, up to the close of the third quarter of 1832, now remain to be adjusted for the causes above stated. To make out, state, and record these accounts, and attend to the incidental correspondence connected therewith, will require the time of one clerk, acquainted with the subject, at least one year. For a more particular statement of these arrears, see document hereunto annexed, marked K.

10. The draughtsman's department.

The arrears of this department of the office, with only one draughtsman allowed by law, have been rapidly increasing for many years, as the public surveys have progressed and the returns thereof made; and in consequence of the almost daily interruption of the regular business by demands for copies of plats and surveys of particular tracts, and diagrams of disputed boundaries arising from errors in the early surveys south of Tennessee and in Louisiana, and from the surveys of conflicting private land claims, and for Indian reservations located by treaty. There are now on hand six hundred township plats to be protracted on the connected district maps; to do which, and entering the subdivisions in the bound volumes of plats, made necessary by the act of the 5th of April last and some previous laws of Congress, would require the labor of a competent person one year.

On the 28th of February, 1823, a resolution was adopted by the Senate directing to be prepared and laid before that body at its next session maps of the several States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana, and the Territories of Michigan, Arkansas, and Florida, to contain plats of the public lands therein which had been surveyed previous to the first day of that year; marking thereon those lands to which the Indian title had not been extinguished, and distinguishing by colors on the plats lands granted to the army, lands sold by the United States, lands granted to occupants or confirmed to persons claiming under British, French, or Spanish titles, and also such surveyed lands as remained unsold; the number of acres of each class, and the quantity surrendered to the United States under any law for the relief of purchasers, together with a statement of the amount of debt due the United States from purchasers in the said several States and Territories. No means were provided to comply with this resolution until April, 1824, when three thousand dollars were appropriated for that purpose, and a draughtsman to make the maps, and two persons to color the same, were appointed, and the appropriation expended in the payment of their salaries. But a small portion of the labor required was performed by these persons, and what was done, either from incompetency or negligence, was found to be so very inaccurate as to be useless. Since that period a part of this service has been performed by the regular draughtsman of the office, and by an assistant occasionally employed and paid out of the contingent fund of the department. There is now no appropriation for such object, and the contingent fund of this office for the last two years has been insufficient to meet the ordinary charges upon it. To complete this work would occupy the time of one person, acquainted with the duty, at least six years.—(See annexed documents L and M and statement N.)

Notwithstanding the magnitude of these arrears, being equal to the services of sixty-one clerks for one year, (see annexed summary statement, marked O,) I am convinced, from a very careful and particular examination, that the estimate is rather below than above what will be found necessary to bring up the business of the office to its current duties. No allowance has been made for sickness and other temporary or unavoidable absence from duty. In truth, there are other smaller items of arrears which have not been enumerated nor included in the estimate herein submitted. That they are all of a character greatly embarrassing the operations of the office, and interposing obstacles to the daily performance of its ordinary duties, must be manifest to every person acquainted with the routine of its business.

It may be asked, from what causes have these arrears accumulated? I answer, from the physical impossibility of the office to discharge all the duties required of it by law with the force provided for that purpose; from the unfortunate reduction of the clerks, in 1827, from twenty-two, exclusive of the draughtsman, to sixteen, at a period when many of the arrears existed which have been herein enumerated, and when a considerable portion of the business under the relief system remained either entirely undisposed of or but partially completed; from the rapid increase of the sales of the public lands, and the additional duties imposed by the relief laws and other acts of Congress passed since the year 1826; from the establishment of additional land offices and surveying districts, and the numerous reservations contained in Indian treaties, with the consequent labor of examination and investigation previous to the sales and conveyances of the same under the sanction of the President; from the many grants of public lands for canal, road, and other purposes; and from a great accession of miscellaneous business within the last three or four years, not previously demanded of the office.

The relief laws of March 2, 1821, April 20, 1822, March 3, 1823, May 18, 1824, and May 4, 1826, in the process of their operation liquidated a land debt due to the government of about twenty-two millions of dollars, and required the posting and balancing at least sixty thousand individual accounts of purchasers. The provisions of these laws, with the exception of those of 1826, did not expire until the year 1829, two years after the force of the office had been reduced; and at the time of its reduction there were an immense number of suspended cases of a complicated character, involving, in the course and progress of their examination, a voluminous correspondence with the surveyors, land officers, and the parties interested. The arrears of the bureaus of private land claims and military bounty lands were then equal or greater than at the present period. In addition to the rapid increase of the sales of the public lands since the year 1826, with the great arrear of patents at the close of that year for lands sold under the credit system, it should be remarked that the number of tracts subsequently sold under the cash system exceed by more than eighteen thousand the whole number of patents issued of every class and description to the end of the year 1830, ten weeks after the administration of the office was placed in my hands.—(See annexed statement P.)

Besides the relief laws referred to, three others have been passed since the reduction of the force of the office, to wit, the acts of March 21, 1828, March 31, 1830, and February 25, 1831, in addition to the several pre-emption laws, which have thrown a considerable increase of labor on the office and greatly interfered with its more regular course of duties. It should also be observed that since the year 1826 six additional land offices and two surveying districts have been established, which now increases the business of the office equal to the labor of two clerks. I have not named the scrip laws, which increased the aggregate of duties, because the appropriation of four extra clerks to that service has been nearly equal to the additional labor required to execute them.

The above may be considered as the most prominent causes which have produced the present condition and aggregate of arrears of this office, although others of minor importance might be enumerated which have proportionably contributed thereto.

II. THE ADDITIONAL NUMBER OF CLERKS NECESSARY, AND OF INCREASING THE COMPENSATION OF THOSE AT THE HEADS OF BUREAUS.

In the three annual reports of the operations of this office which it has been my duty to make to the Secretary of the Treasury I have faithfully exposed some of the arrears of business which I found on first entering upon the administration of its concerns and the constant accumulation of new and other duties required by the numerous acts of legislation connected with the disposition of the public domain, and truly stated the necessity of additional aid to bring up the arrears and carry on the current business with that facility which the interest of the government and that of individuals imperiously required. To remedy the existing evils, and secure to individuals their just claims to a prompt discharge of public duty, I would respectfully suggest the propriety of employing in this office, from and after the 30th of June next, one clerk at a compensation of $1,700 per annum, one at $1,500, five at $1,400, ten at $1,150, and thirteen at $1,000—in the whole, thirty regular clerks, which is an addition of fourteen to the present number; also one draughtsman at $1,500 and two assistant draughtsmen at $1,150 each, and one messenger at $700, and two assistant messengers at $350 each.

With this force in the office, the person receiving a compensation of $1,700 per annum will be the chief clerk, who, in addition to his other qualifications, must have a particular knowledge of the laws and parts of laws having any relation to or connexion with the land system of the United States, including private land claims, military bounty lands, all reservations contained in Indian treaties, and donations to States, Territories, corporations, and individuals, and of the manner and form in which these laws are executed. He is also required to possess a knowledge of the details of office duty, through all the ramifications of its multiplied concerns; and, under the Commissioner, has a general superintendence over the other clerks of the office, and the books, records, and files of papers which constitute its archives. In addition to which, among other duties, he is charged with the immense miscellaneous correspondence of the office, frequently requiring an extensive examination of the laws, circulars of instruction, previous decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury on the same subject, and the principles settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. To accomplish this arduous duty, the time allotted for business is insufficient, and he is often compelled to devote his mornings and evenings, before and after office hours, to the public service, without any additional compensation therefor.

The clerk proposed at $1,500 per annum is designed to have charge of all the fiscal operations of the office connected with the sales of public lands; to adjust, make out, and record the quarterly accounts of the receivers of public moneys; to conduct all the correspondence with the registers and receivers in relation to their monthly and quarterly returns; and to have a general supervision over the official conduct of the posters and accountants of the office. As the accounts of all the land officers, as also those of the surveyors general, are audited by the Commissioner, and transmitted directly to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, without being submitted to the examination of any other bureau, this clerk will be required to possess the qualifications of the First Auditor of the Treasury Department, in adjusting accounts, and an intimate and familiar acquaintance with all the laws for the sale of the public domain, and with the details of business connected therewith. A person thus competent, I do not believe can be procured for a compensation less than the one suggested.

I have proposed five clerks, at $1,400 per annum, one of which is intended to be an assistant of the chief clerk; one to have charge of the bureau of private land claims; one, of the bureau of military bounty lands, including the issue of scrip; one, of the bureau of patents, having charge of the records of patents, with their title papers, the superintendence of the patent writers, and the exemplification of the records of patents, and the copies of all title papers and other documents furnished under the seal of the office; and one to have charge of the bureau of examiners, wherein are compared the patents with the records thereof, and the title papers on which they are founded, before the signature of the President is requested, or that of the Commissioner, or the seal of the office is permitted to be affixed. This bureau assorts and files the certificates of purchase, and, when not engaged in its appropriate business, is employed in writing and recording patents, or indexing the records of the same.

Ten clerks are proposed at $1,150 each; eight of which are designed for posters and accountants of lands sold; one to be employed in the bureau of private land claims; and one in the bureau of patents.

The thirteen clerks recommended at $1,000 each are intended to be employed as follows: one with the chief clerk, to record letters and official statements and reports; one in the bureau of private land claims; one in the bureau of military bounty lands; two in the bureau of examiners; and eight in writing and recording patents, and in making copies of such documents as may be required in connexion with the sales of land under the cash system.

A draughtsman is proposed at a salary of $1,500 per annum, and two assistant draughtsmen at $1,150 each. Heretofore the office has had but one draughtsman at $1,150, and occasionally an assistant at $1,000 per annum, paid out of the contingent fund. The arrears of this branch of business are rapidly increasing, and the surveys of more than four hundred townships have already been made, and will be returned as fast as the very limited means of the surveyors general will admit. The auditing of all the surveying accounts properly belongs to this department of the office, in addition to an intimate acquaintance with all the laws in relation to the private land claims and the surveys of the public lands, besides the peculiar skill of a draughtsman and the science of surveying. I have now no person competent to superintend the discharge of all these duties. The talents and acquirements necessary for this service cannot be procured for the compensation now allowed by law. I have tendered the situation to several persons whom I believed to be competent, but who declined the offer on the ground that the pay was inadequate. I deem it indispensably necessary for Congress to make the proposed provision for this service, to secure to the government and to individuals interested their respective rights and the benefits resulting from a correct discharge of duty.

The messenger and two assistants herein recommended are now employed in the office, though one of them is paid out of its contingent fund.

With this additional number of permanent clerks, if the ordinary business should not greatly increase, and with a special appropriation of $5,000, to be expended in writing and recording patents out of the office, it is believed the arrears would be brought up in four years, and the current business performed in the meantime; at the expiration of which period the whole force would be required to discharge its ordinary duties; but it is impossible accurately to estimate the future increase of business, as it will depend much on future legislation. The act of the 5th of April last, by which quarter-quarter sections are permitted to be entered, has increased the labor of posting, of examining the accounts of sales, and of writing, recording, and comparing the patents at least fifty per cent. During the last year the demand for copies of patents was equal to an average of two per day, and for copies of other documents and title papers greatly exceeding that of any previous year. This branch of duty must continue to increase as the sales and the settlements extend in the vast region of the west. And it should be remembered that the calls made by Congress and its committees for information, statements, and reports, employ at least four clerks six weeks during the short and two months during the long session, exclusive of the time occupied in answering the inquiries of members on subjects not of legislative action. I would also remark that the duties of the clerks of this office, with few exceptions, are of a peculiar character, demanding a high degree of talent, and a greater labor of investigation than is necessary for some of the bureaus of the government. Comparatively, there is very little that is merely mechanical, except the writing and recording patents for lands sold. The operations of forty-eight land officers and seven surveying districts are all examined, and the accuracy of their proceedings tested and ascertained by this office before the government can definitely act thereon; and when it is considered that the land titles of nearly three millions of people depend upon the correctness with which the duties of this office are performed, the importance of the subject will be forcibly presented to every impartial mind, and to the justice and decision of Congress.

III. ON THE SUBJECT OF THE EXPEDIENCY OF SO MODIFYING THE LAWS FOR THE SURVEYS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AS ARE REQUIRED BY THE PUBLIC INTEREST AND THAT OF INDIVIDUALS, AND AS TO THE NATURE AND AMOUNT OF THE ARREARS OF THE SEVERAL SURVEYORS GENERAL, AND THE PROPRIETY OF MAKING PROVISION FOR BRINGING UP THE SAME AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE, AND AS TO THE PROPRIETY OF REQUIRING THE FIELD-NOTES TO BE DEPOSITED IN THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

In reference to the second resolution, I have to advise the committee that there are numerous defects in the existing laws relative to surveying the public lands.

1. As the survey of the public lands must exhibit their connexion with the adjacent private claims, the former cannot be completed until the lines of the latter are known to the surveyors. The surveyors cannot compel the claimants to show their lines, and hence the public surveys, however great the demand for them, cannot proceed in consequence of the embarrassments of the private claims.

2. Under the existing laws there is no authority to disregard claims even when there is every reason to believe they were confirmed either by forged or antedated papers.

3. Under the existing laws the maximum prices are such as, under various circumstances, to prevent the government from effecting most important surveys. The running of meridian and base lines cannot be executed in that peculiarly accurate manner that the law intends for anything like the maximum price of ordinary surveying. It is necessary that the meridian and basis parallel lines be doubly chained. The survey of the worst kind of cane-brakes is also a duty too arduous to be effected at the ordinary rates. The department has for years been endeavoring to cause a connexion of the public surveys with the line of demarcation between the States of Illinois and Indiana, (run by agreement between and by the direction and authority of those two States,) but never could accomplish the object by reason of the maximum price being utterly inadequate to effect the desired survey. Important objects of survey, both to the government and to individuals, are not necessarily of sufficient consideration and magnitude for surveyors to undertake at the rate of three dollars or four dollars per mile. The instances are too numerous to undertake to designate minutely.

There is highly valuable property owned by the government in the vicinity of New Orleans, which never can be ascertained at the present prices. The surveyors might not earn laborers' wages on their mileage in ascertaining the boundaries of these lands. Every consideration, both of utility and propriety, therefore suggests that a discretionary power should exist somewhere to accomplish the purposes of the law when the present prices are insufficient.

4. The surveyors general are required by the regulation of the department to take bonds from their deputies. They should be required by positive provision of law to do so, and the law should provide that all defects of survey or omission to fulfil the condition of their bond should be recoverable by legal proceedings.

5. The existing provisions of law require the surveyors general to furnish with the township plats, instead of copies of the field-notes of survey, a document which is called a description of the township, which shows the quality of the lands on the sectional lines and between the corner posts, and also refers to the character of the corner posts or bearing trees. These descriptions, however, answer not the purpose of the field-notes, and no protractions can be made from them. The original field-notes are in the offices of the surveyors general. No copies of them are extant by law, and if the originals should be lost by the burning down of the surveyors offices, or otherwise, there is no record of the survey in existence.

In the year 1827 the surveyor's office at Florence, for the State of Alabama, was consumed by fire, and all the original records were destroyed. It so happened, however, that the surveyor general had rendered to the General Land Office copies of the field-notes, from time to time, instead of the descriptive notes required by law. This office was therefore enabled to supply the loss of those originals, and did supply copies of such as had been furnished. But as the predecessor of the surveyor had furnished descriptive notes, as required by law, and not the field-notes, hence there were no records of those surveys in this office. The loss of the originals is therefore not to be supplied. Hence the records of surveys are lost for a great portion of the State of Alabama.

In order to remedy what are regarded as defects in the existing system, I beg leave to propose to the consideration of the committee the accompanying programme of a bill "for regulating and facilitating the making of public surveys of the lands of the United States, and rendering returns thereof to the General Land Office."—(Document marked Q.)

In reference to the third resolution, I beg leave to submit to the committee a copy of certain documents submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, being as follows:

A letter from the Commissioner to the chairman of said committee, dated January 7, 1833, with accompanying documents to explain the various objects of appropriation for public lands and the surveyors offices, submitted to Congress in the treasury estimates for the year 1833. A copy of a circular letter from this office to the surveyors general on the subject of the arrears of their respective offices, dated September 13, 1832, and copies of such replies as have been received thereto.—(Document marked R.)

I also beg leave to submit to the committee a synopsis (document marked S) of the information contained in the replies from the surveyors, as far as it has been found practicable to arrange and classify the subjects of their replies. I have to remark that there have not yet been received replies from the surveyors general of Louisiana and Arkansas. Neither of these offices can be said yet to have got into operation. The latter office, from recent advices, had not procured from St. Louis all the books, papers, and documents ordered to be transferred to his surveying department by the law of the last session of Congress, in consequence of the great amount of transcribing to be done where the original records of surveys in Arkansas could not be separated from those of Illinois and Missouri.

In reference to these important objects, I beg leave to present to the view of the committee the accompanying programme of "a bill in relation to the arrears of business in the offices of the surveyors general of the United States, and for other purposes," (document marked T,) and to refer to the treasury estimates for the year 1833, for the amounts of which the department, with a due reference to the importance of the ojects set forth, deemed it expedient to propose to be allotted to each surveyor general.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. Louis McLane, Secretary of the Treasury.

A.

Statement showing an estimate of the private claims confirmed by the laws of the United States, with a notice of Indian reservations made by treaty.

There have been confirmed in this district about 2,040 claims, and the land office, under an act of the last session, is now open for the examination of claims not heretofore confirmed.

No patent certificates have been received at this office, and consequently none of the confirmed claims have been patented. Some of the township plats have been received, and the surveys are progressing. It may therefore be reasonably expected that many patents will be demanded before the close of this year.

Louisiana—Southwestern and northern districts.

In these districts about 3,270 claims have been confirmed; one hundred and twenty-one cases have been patented, and about 500 certificates are now in the office for patenting. The greater portions of the districts in which these claims are situated have been surveyed, and the patent certificates for most of them must be expected in a short time.

Louisiana—St. Helena district.

About 3,100 claims have been confirmed in this district, and nearly the whole of the district has been surveyed and the plats returned to this office. With due diligence on the part of the land officers it is reasonable to suppose that upwards of 2,000 certificates may be forwarded for patent in less than one year. None of the claims in this district have been patented, no certificates having been received.

Mississippi—Washington district.

The claims confirmed in this district amount to 1,100. Of this number, although all the certificates have been issued and delivered to the claimants, but about sixty have been patented. The whole of the district was surveyed many years ago, but, in consequence of errors therein, many township plats will have to be re-examined preparatory to making the corrections required. The causes, however, which have prevented the claimants from presenting their certificates for patents are not known to this office.

MISSISSIPPI AND ALABAMA—St. Stephen's and Augusta districts.

Within these districts about 700 claims have been confirmed. Not more than fifteen or twenty certificates have been presented and patented, but, as a great part of the surveys have been executed, most of the certificates may be issued during the next year.

FLORIDA.

In this territory upwards of 1,300 claims have been confirmed. About 100 certificates were received during the last year, but which had to be returned in consequence of informalities. These certificates, with others for the claims already surveyed, should have been received ere this, and the surveys are in progress. Many demands for patents are expected during the present year.

MISSOURI AND ARKANSAS.

In Missouri and Arkansas upwards of 3,500 claims have been confirmed, and a board of commissioners is now in session at St. Louis deciding upon other claims.

Rather more than 500 claims have been patented, and, as the tracts of country in which the claims are situated are almost entirely surveyed, the certificates can shortly be issued for the whole of them. It is known that near 1,000 patent certificates have been issued by the recorder which have not been presented for patents in consequence of the inattention of the parties interested.

There have been confirmed in this district about 900 claims, of which about forty have been patented, and, as they are all surveyed, nothing but the inattention of the parties prevents the issuing of patent certificates for these claims.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN.

It would be difficult to ascertain the number of claims in Illinois and Michigan which have been confirmed. A large portion of them have, however, been patented, but, as they have all been surveyed, patents can at any time be demanded for those remaining, which must amount to several hundred.

INDIAN CLAIMS.

Some of these claims have been patented; others have been lately located, and require certificates to be issued; while there are some yet unlocated. The exact number of reservations made by the several treaties has not been ascertained, but they exceed five hundred, and, especially in cases of transfer, &c., involve more labor than the ordinary cases of private claims. In addition to this number, it appears by the published abstract of the Choctaw treaty of 1830 that provision is made for granting about 1,700 reserves, exclusive of those to be granted to such Indians as may cultivate a certain number of acres for a few years, and to the several members of their families. By the treaty of March last with the Creek Indians numerous reservations are also granted, but this office has not, at present, the means of ascertaining their number.

Q.

A BILL for regulating and facilitating the making of public surveys of the land of the United States, and rendering returns thereof to the General Land Office.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in each and every case in which the holder of any claim to land, under a title recognized by the laws of the United States, after having received due notice, either personal or by advertisement, in some public newspaper in the district in which such claim may be situated, that a deputy surveyor is about to survey the lands including such claim, shall refuse or neglect to furnish such deputy with all the information in the power of such claimant to afford, respecting the true situation and boundaries of the claim, it is hereby made the duty of the deputy surveyor to survey and return the same as public land; and in case the claimant should thereafter establish the position and limits of the claim, the same shall be located under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by taking such legal subdivisions of the public lands as will give to that tract the shape and contents of the original claim as nearly as practicable.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where a surveyor general shall be satisfied that there is good ground to believe that any claim to public lands has been confirmed in consequence of the production of forged or antedated papers or documents, or has been supported by perjury, or that a claim has been located so as to embrace lands not covered by the original grant or settlement, it shall be his duty to represent the claim upon his returns of survey, in such manner as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may direct, and to furnish to the said Commissioner a statement of the facts and circumstances of the case; and if from such statement the Secretary of the Treasury shall be of opinion that fraud has been practiced, either in procuring the confirmation, or in the location of the claim, he shall cause the land covered by such fraudulent claim or location to be offered for sale in the same manner as other public lands in the same district; and upon being advised thereof, it shall not be lawful for the surveyor general, or the land officers, to issue or grant any survey, certificate or paper, or copy of any document tending to show that the claimant had any title to such alleged claim.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if, in the execution of his duties, a surveyor general shall have ascertained that, in consequence of the small amount of the work to be performed, or of the peculiar nature thereof, either on account of its locality or other causes, that it is impracticable to procure any accurate survey to be made by a surveyor competent thereto, at the present rate of compensation, it shall be his duty to report the facts to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be, and hereby is, authorized to make for such work such further and other allowance, in addition to the price now allowed by law for surveying, as he may deem justified by the circumstances of the case.

SEC. 4 And be it further enacted, That it shall be, and hereby is, made the duty of the surveyors general to transmit to the Commissioner of the General Land Office copies of all contracts entered into for surveying; and, at the time of making such contracts, to require from the deputy a bond, with good and sufficient security, conditioned for the correct and faithful execution of the work confided to him, and for the reimbursement of any expenses which the government may be at in having any errors or omissions in the execution of the work ascertained and corrected. And, in all cases in which a surveyor general may doubt the accuracy of any work, he shall take such measures as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe for the purpose of examining and ascertaining the same; and in case it shall be found that the work is erroneous or defective, it shall be the duty of such surveyor general to take the necessary measures to have it corrected or completed, and the expenses in making the examination, correction, or completion, shall be recovered from the deputy surveyor and his securities, by legal proceedings on his bond.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That in case the Commissioner of the General Land Office may deem it advisable for the interests of the United States, it shall be lawful for him to require from the surveyor general the transmission to his office of copies of the field-notes of the public surveys, or the originals thereof, in lieu of the descriptive notes now required by law.

Copy of a letter addressed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the honorable G. C. Verplanck, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and dated January 7, 1833; also copies of the accompanying documents.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 7, 1833.

SIR: To explain the objects of the following appropriations for the year 1833, for which estimates have been submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, I have the honor, respectfully, to refer the committee to the following accompanying documents, viz:

Paper marked A will serve to show the items composing the aggregate amount of $16,158 40 as contingencies for the year 1833, and to cover the deficit in the appropriation of the last year to meet the expenses of that year. It will be perceived that the single item of blank patents, including the printing, covers $11,858 40, leaving only $4,300 to cover all other expenses, including 200 books.

I have to assure the committee that the expenses of the Land Office increase in a direct ratio with the increase of sales and land offices. There are at present 48 land offices in operation. Two, at least, if not three, will be created during the present session out of the late Choctaw and Chickasaw cessions, and others are contemplated. The expense of getting these offices into operation bears heavily on this office. The late law, authorizing the subdivision of the public lands into quarter-quarter sections has greatly increased the number of patents; (two being requisite for the same quantity of land that a single patent was formerly granted.) Hence the demands on the contingent fund must necessarily be on the increase. It may moreover be satisfactory to the committee to be assured that this office obtains all articles of contingencies on the lowest prices that the market affords. The parchment contract is reduced so low as to have rendered it difficult, for a long time, to find merchants willing to accede to the terms offered by the office. We pay 19 cents for one parchment and printing; fifteen years ago they cost about three times that amount. Such has been the economy exercised in this office, that it is impossible to effect any reduction in the expenses.

In consequence of the deficit of last year's appropriation, the office has been compelled to obtain from the branch bank of the United States an advance of $2,290 on the faith of an appropriation to cover such deficit.

In reference to the item of surveying expenses I beg leave to refer the committee to the accompanying paper, marked B, and the copy of the surveyor's estimates (so far as received) accompanying the same paper, marked C.

To explain the submissions for the offices of the surveyors general, I beg leave to refer the committee to the circular letter from this office, dated September 13, 1832, to the several surveyors general, and to their reports in reply thereto; all under the same cover, paper marked D.

I flatter myself that the surveyors' reports will fully explain the absolute necessity of providing increased means for the surveyors' offices. It has, for years past, been matter of notoriety in the several surveying districts (of which there are now seven) that the government has failed to accomplish the object of the laws of Congress, in having lands brought into market after the surveys have been made, for want of force in the surveyors' offices, by reason of the inadequacy of the appropriation. The public interest and that of individuals equally demand that those surveys be brought into market. Depredations are constantly being committed on the timber, thereby depreciating, in numerous instances, the value of the land.

After the surveys are completed it is the duty of the surveyors' offices to test the accuracy thereof by protraction. Triplicate plats have then to be made out, one for the district land office, one for the General Land Office, and a third for the record in the surveyors' offices. The field-notes have afterwards to be recorded. A late law of Congress authorizing the subdivision of land into quarter-quarter sections has greatly added to the labors of the surveyors' offices. The old subdivisions have to be disturbed, and new subdivisions have to be made. These new subdivisions have also to be made in triplicate.

The timely and judicious application of small sums might, to a great degree, have prevented the existing embarrassments in the surveyors' offices. There are about 400 townships of land surveyed, which cannot be brought into market for want of more clerks and draughtsmen. New laws are continually imposing new duties, and taking off the attention of the officers from the mass of arrears, and thereby increasing them.

In addition, I have to urge, as a reason for the necessity of an increased appropriation, the fact that surveyors' offices contain all the original evidences of survey. Their offices are anything but fire-proof, and if burnt down all legal evidences of survey are lost with them. This was the case in Alabama about five years ago. The surveyor's office was destroyed by fire, and probably one-half of the evidences of survey in that State were consumed. To prevent a similar evil, the department is greatly desirous of having authenticated transcripts of the field-notes filed among its own archives; and hence the two objects of bringing up the back work in the surveyors' offices, and the commencing a system of transcribing of the field-notes, are blended together in the estimate; and the reason for blending them was, that the reports from the surveyors, under the circular of 13th September last, were not received in time, and the estimate was necessarily made without them. Now that they are received, (in part only, however,) I do not see any good reason for making an alteration in what has been estimated.

In reference to the submissions for extra clerk hire in this office, I have to remark that the labors of this office are continually increasing. The aid which those estimates call for will not keep up current business. There are now 45,000 patents to be issued, before the end of the year there will be 45,000 more, and there are already six new land offices which the office has no accountant to supervise. The best idea that can be given of the wants of the office is the undeniable fact that its concerns with each land and surveying district, to wit: checking the sales of public lands, (that is, keeping an account with each purchaser of public lands,) auditing the accounts of the receivers of public moneys, writing and recording all the various descriptions of patents for public lands, private claims, and military bounties, issuing military land scrip, preparing connected maps of the public surveys, the immense amount of correspondence with land agents and individuals, demand at least one clerk to supervise the concerns of each land and surveying district, and perform the various duties which are briefly enumerated above. There are at this time fifty-five land and surveying districts, whereas there are only seventeen regular clerks and eleven extras, in all twenty-eight.

In reference to the nature and amount of the arrears of this office, I would beg leave to refer the committee to my reports accompanying the three last annual reports made by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress.

Being now fully of the opinion that the estimates for extra clerk hire are far short of the exigency of the public service, and as there are now six land districts without a clerk to superintend them, and there being five or six more in contemplation this session, I cannot fail to urge on the committee the propriety of increasing the appropriation of $7,000 to $9,000.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

E. HAYWARD.

The committee are respectfully referred to the accompanying copies of the surveyor's estimates.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 14, 1833.

SIR: Among the reasons urged in my communication to you on the 7th instant, in support of the estimates of the department for increased clerk hire in the offices of the surveyors general, I omitted, in the hurry to bring that communication in due time before the committee, to mention an important item of the duty of the surveyors general, which does not come properly under the denomination of arrears of current duties, but to perform which will necessarily tend greatly to divert their attention from those arrears—it is the constant demands on their time and attention to renew the township plats of the old districts.

On these plats are marked all the indications of sales, forfeitures, relinquishments, and resales of each particular tract of land. The plats are made out on paper and not on parchment, as would be desirable.

The plats of the old credit system districts have all become so defaced as to require renewal, and even in many of the districts which have been put in operation within the last twelve years a renewal of the plats, wholly or partially, is required. The plats are liable by law to be inspected by each land purchaser, and it may readily be conjectured that the constant handling of them by all descriptions of persons must necessarily mutilate them in a few years.

The operation of the late pre-emption law has, within three years, greatly tended to the injury of these plats by the wear and tear produced by the incessant references.

It is a fact well known to this office that, in some districts, the land officers cannot with certainty sell land in consequence of the great difficulty of discriminating between the vacant and sold lands by reason of the defacement of the plats; and although instructions have been repeatedly given to the surveyors general to remove the difficulty by renewing the plats, yet the department has been unable to accomplish the object for want of means in the surveyors' offices.

From these causes, as may readily be imagined, it frequently occurs that lands are erroneously sold, and the only effectual checks to prevent the erroneous issuing of patents are found in the tract books of this office.

The detection of such errors, and the correspondence necessary to their correction, impose much labor both on this office and that of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is authorized by law to direct the correction of errors made at the land offices.

I am, &c.,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. G. C. VERPLANCK, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

C.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, November 7, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th September was duly received, and, in compliance with your request, I herewith have the honor to submit the following estimates, for this surveying department, for the year 1833:

For surveying the public lands in the Michigan Territory, west of Lake Michigan, for contracts now existing	$20, 000
For other surveys in Ohio, Indiana, and the peninsula of Michigan	5, 000
		$25, 000

Brought forward		$25,000
For salary of surveyor general	$2,000
For salary of three clerks, as heretofore	2,100
For salary of additional clerks, required by the state of the office	2,000
		6,100
For stationery and postage		500
		31,600

Prospective estimates made by this office must necessarily be uncertain, as it cannot be known what surveys the government may order to be made within the next year. If further surveys be ordered to be made within the year 1833, in the territory west of Lake Michigan, which is probable, an additional sum to cover such surveys will be required.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

M. T. WILLIAMS.

THOMAS L. SMITH, Esq., Register of the Treasury.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th September last was received in due time, and in compliance therewith I submit the following estimate of the expenses of this office during the year 1833, viz:

Surveying 7,700 miles of public land, at $3 per mile	$23,100
Surveying the common field lots and the out boundaries of the commons of the several towns and villages in Missouri, and for surveying and resurveying confirmed private land claims, say 500 miles, at $3 per mile	1,500
Postage on letters and packages received at and sent from this office on public business	300
Stationery, including platting instruments and binding books of plats, &c	600
Office rent	180
Fuel	75
Office furniture	100
Salary of the principal surveyor	2,000
Salary of three clerks	2,000
	29,855

And if the allowance for extra clerks which has been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office should receive the sanction of Congress, the following additional appropriation will be required, viz:

Extra clerks	3,900
Additional office rent	120
Additional costs of fuel	75
Additional stationery and platting instruments	800
Additional office furniture	150
Also, if this office is authorized to employ on particular occasions (as has been recommended) a deputy surveyor, at a per diem allowance for the execution of such portions of the survey as cannot be done for the present compensation, there may be required for that purpose	1,500
Total	36,400

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. T. LANGHAM.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Miss., October 20, 1832.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 11th ultimo, requesting an estimate of the expenditures which may be necessary for this office for the year 1833, I have to state that for surveying in the late Choctaw cession there was in the last session of Congress appropriated $80,000. Of this sum, I learn from General Coffee, that $13,500 may be required for that part of the late Choctaw cession within Alabama, leaving for Mississippi $66,500.

The contracts for surveying already amount to about $70,500, which contracts were made under the belief that the whole $80,000 were applicable to surveys within Mississippi, as expressed in the law.

This will show a deficit to meet contracts of	$4,000
Balance to complete the surveys of the late Choctaw cession over the $70,500 which may be required in the ensuing year	65,500
To complete a few unfinished townships of the Choctaw district, and correct erroneous surveys, and supply defects in the surveys west of Pearl river	5,000
To settle accounts for surveying in Louisiana, and recording done by one of the late principal deputies, which accounts are not yet adjusted, say	15,000
For salary of surveyor south of Tennessee	2,000
For salary of two clerks as usual	1,700
For salary of three extra clerks to keep up the recording, and gradually bring up that which is several years in arrears, at $800 each	2,400
For record books and other necessary contingent expenses	500
	96,100

If the Chickasaw country should be obtained, and the government desire it, there may be one hundred townships surveyed out of that country, which at $4 per mile, and allowing for traverse of watercourses, will require on an average three hundred dollars for each township, making $30,000; which, added to the above, will make the entire sum $126,100.

With great respect,

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Florence, Alabama, November 8, 1832.

SIR: Your letter calling for the usual estimates for surveying the public lands in Alabama for the year 1833, has been received, and in answer thereto I make the following estimates, which may not be precisely correct, but are as nearly so as may be.

In the Choctaw country last ceded, and within the limits of Alabama, there are 3,447 miles of the lines of the surveys. This work has all been done in this year; but on account of some errors a small part of it has to be surveyed over again, but which will not produce a material difference in the extent of miles. Whole amount, at four dollars a mile, is $13,788.

An appropriation was last year made of $80,000, to be applied to paying for the surveying of this country; out of that appropriation I have received $8,000; the balance of $5,788 is yet due to the surveyors for that work, and probably may be paid out of the former appropriation. This can be ascertained at the proper department of the treasury.

The survey of the Creek lands is now in progress, and will be completed, in all probability, in the course of this year. The precise contents are not yet known, but it may be estimated that the survey will amount to $70,000. An appropriation was made last year, for surveying the Creek lands, of $50,000, which will leave a balance of $20,000 to be raised out of next year's appropriation.

By a treaty lately signed between the United States and the Chickasaws, which is not yet ratified, but if it shall be ratified by the President and Senate, the Chickasaw nation has ceded all their country east of the Mississippi river, estimated to contain 280 townships, equal to 6,451,200 acres, or 20,160 miles of surveying, at $4 a mile, will be $80,640. If the treaty is ratified, the land will be surveyed in the year 1833; and although the surveys are to be paid for out of the proceeds of the sale of the same lands, yet the government will advance it before the sale can take place, subject to be refunded out of the sales of the lands, as is provided for in the treaty.

Recapitulation.

For surveying the Choctaw lands	$5, 788
For surveying the Creek lands	20, 000
	25, 788

If the Chickasaw treaty is ratified, it is estimated that 20 townships of that country will lie in Alabama, and 260 townships in Mississippi; in all 280, equal to 20,160 miles, at $4 per mile, $80,640.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN COFFEE.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Donaldsonville, December, 1832.

SIR: I have delayed until this period to transmit the estimates called for in your communication of the 11th September, under the expectation of receiving information which would enable me to judge what portion of the public unsurveyed lands in this State it will be most expedient, with a view to the interest of the United States, as well as the advantage of the settlers, to cause to be surveyed during the course of next year. I have now the honor to forward the estimate herewith enclosed.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

H. B. TRIST, Surveyor General.

T. L. SMITH, Esq., Register.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Donaldsonville, December, 1832.

Estimates of the amount of public lands in the State of Louisiana to be surveyed in the year 1833:

In the southwestern district 1,500 miles of public lands, at $4 per mile	$6, 000
In the district north of Red river 4,000 miles of public lands, at $4 per mile	16, 000
In the southeastern district 1,500 miles of public lands, at $4 per mile	6, 000
For surveying private confirmed claims in said districts	2, 000
	30, 000

H. B. TRIST, Surveyor General.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Little Rock, A. T., October 20, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th ultimo, requesting estimates for the year 1833, has been received, and I have the honor, herewith, to transmit said estimates under the heads that follow, viz:

For surveying public lands	$25,000
For salary of surveyor general	1,500
For draughtsman and clerks	1,800
For furniture for surveyor's office, viz: writing desks and tables, book-cases, chairs, &c	200
For blank books and stationery	150
For postage	50
For printing	100
For house rent and fuel	200
For transporting from St. Louis to Little Rock the books, papers, documents, &c., which relate to the surveys in the Territory of Arkansas	150
For surveyor general's services, or mileage, travelling to and returning from St. Louis; in procuring and having transported to Little Rock the books, papers, documents, &c., which relate to the surveys in the Territory of Arkansas	128
Making an aggregate of	29,278

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. S. CONWAY.

Circular to surveyors general.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 13, 1832.

SIR: I have to request that you will furnish to this office, in time to be submitted to Congress at an early period of the ensuing session, a report, by land districts, detailing under specific heads, as far as practicable, the nature and amount of the different arrears of the work of your office.

1. The number of townships surveyed, the field-notes of which remain to be tested by actual protraction, and the time which will be required to protract the same with your present force.

2. The arrears in furnishing copies of township plats and descriptive notes both to this office and the district land offices, with the time required to do the work with your present force.

3. The arrears in recording plats, with the time required to perform the work with your present force.

4. The arrears in recording field-notes, with the time required to perform the work with your present force.

5. The number of clerks which would be requisite to bring up all the arrears in two years, were it practicable for so great a number to be employed at one time.

6. The number of clerks that could be most usefully employed at one time, with their respective compensations, classed according to the duties to be performed, &c.

7. The amount of house rent and fuel which would be required (in case Congress should make an appropriation for those objects) in the event of your being authorized to engage as many clerks as you could advantageously employ at one and the same time.

Intending to submit to Congress the propriety of so altering the law regulating the public surveys as to require the surveyors to furnish with the township plats to this office and to the district land offices copies of the field-notes instead of descriptive notes, and also the propriety of transcribing all the field-notes of the public surveys now extant, in order that authenticated copies thereof may be preserved at the seat of government, I will thank you to render a separate estimate of the amount of labor to be performed in order to effect that object, and of the time, number of clerks, and also the amount of expenditure that would have to be incurred in so doing.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. HAYWARD.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, November 13, 1832.

SIR: In compliance with the request of your circular letter of the 13th September last, I have the honor of submitting the following statements:

The nature and amount of the different arrears of work in this office, separated by land districts, being fully set forth in my communication to you of October 8, 1831, up to that date, I beg leave to refer you to that communication for an answer to that portion of your inquiries, and to add further—

1. The field-notes returned to this office are regularly tested by protraction soon after their reception. Under this head there are no arrears of work in this office, with the exception of the notes of a few townships recently received.

2. There are no arrears in furnishing copies of township plats either to the General Land Office or to district land offices. There are due to the General Land Office copies of descriptive notes of eighteen townships, (see my letter of the 3d August last,) to the land office at Detroit fourteen townships, and to that at White Pigeon sixty-four townships. These items of arrears have accrued by reason of the subdivision of fractions required by the provisions of the act of the 5th April last.

3. Referring to the amount of arrears up to the present moment, I am of opinion that five additional clerks for two years would be required to bring up the work of the office; but this is too great a number to be advantageously employed at the same time.

4. Two, or at furthest three, additional clerks might be advantageously employed at the same time. Their salaries should be about $700 each for two of them, and $600 for the third.

5. For office rent and fuel there should be about $150 appropriated additional.

6. Upon a careful examination of the subject, I find there are in Ohio of surveyed townships and fractional townships about..... 830
In Indiana..... 853
In Michigan Territory..... 500

Total number of surveyed townships..... 2,183

This number is exclusive of the field-notes of private claims. Estimating that to copy and compare the field-notes of one township, including the notes of the exterior lines and the meanders, will require the labor of a clerk one and a half days, it follows that it will require 10 years and $\frac{274}{300}$ of a year for one clerk to make copies of all the field-notes in this office, exclusive of the notes of the private claims.

A clerk competent to make fair and accurate copies of field-notes may be employed for a salary of about six hundred dollars per annum.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. T. WILLIAMS.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of General Land Office.

* SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, October 8, 1831.

SIR: As an act of justice to the public service, as well as to myself, I deem it a duty to communicate to you, for the information of the department, the state of the records of this office at the time I assumed its responsibilities. The accompanying exhibit thereof is now submitted. It has been prepared after a careful examination of the records and files of each district of the public lands attached to this surveying department, and it is believed to present the actual state of the records as nearly as circumstances will admit.

The period when the surveys in each district were made will indicate the commencement and the progress of the arrears, some portion of which, it will be seen, is of nearly thirty years' standing.

From my limited experience with the duties of the office, I believe it to be impracticable, with the present provision for clerks, to make any progress in bringing up the records. To perform the current duties, and to make full and complete records of the work growing out of the surveys as they progress, is as much as can be performed, if not more, with only three clerks. I therefore respectfully suggest the necessity of provision for at least two additional clerks. It will probably require four years, with this additional assistance, to bring up the records and place the office in a proper condition.

For the causes which have operated to produce the present state of the records of the office, I beg leave to refer you to a communication made on the 27th of December last, by the late surveyor general; and I also beg leave to express my entire concurrence with his views in relation to the just claims of the chief clerk in this office to an increase of compensation.

An additional appropriation of fifteen hundred dollars will enable me to employ two additional clerks, and to make some addition to the salary of the chief clerk.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. T. WILLIAMS.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office, Washington.

MICAJAH T. WILLIAMS, Surveyor General.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, October 8, 1831.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November 12, 1832.

SIR: I received in due time your letter of the 13th of September of the present year, and herewith submit the following statements in answer thereto, viz:

1. There are no recent surveys in this office the field-notes of which require to be tested by actual protraction or otherwise; but circumstances, which will be developed in an after part of this communication, show that to put the affairs of the office in proper order, this will be no small item in the catalogue of duties to be performed.

2. This office has not sufficient data to answer with precision what are the arrears in furnishing the plats and descriptive notes to the General Land Office and to the registers of the several land offices, as the record evidences thereof commences only with the latter part of the year 1824. It is expected, however, that of the surveys in Illinois and Missouri the plats have mostly been furnished to the General Land Office, and that the arrears to the registers are about 400 townships and fractional townships, the plats of which on file in this office are unauthenticated, and ought, with few exceptions, to be constructed (or protracted) anew from the field-notes and examined thereby before copies are prepared for the land offices, which will require about 800 days' labor. To make and compare a copy of each for the registers will require, say 400 days' labor, and to complete and compare the descriptive notes will require about 400 days' labor, making a total of 1,600 days' labor to bring up the arrears of this branch of business.

To furnish the registers with copies of the mutilated plats of townships heretofore offered for sale will require about 1,000 days' labor.

3. There has been surveyed in Illinois and Missouri townships and fractional townships equal to about 2,204 whole townships, of which the plats of only 90 townships and 13 fractional townships have been recorded, (and which record is not authenticated,) leaving townships and fractional townships equal to about 2,108 whole townships of which the plats have not been recorded; and as but few of those on file are authenticated, it is thought advisable to recommend that an entire new set be constructed, on suitable paper, from the field-notes, and examined and properly authenticated previous to putting them on record, except those in the Kaskaskia district and some of the old surveys in the Howard and western districts, of which there are duplicates, and 60 townships in the Shawneetown district, of each of which there is one copy, that have lately been constructed, but not examined and authenticated; and excepting also a few others which have of late years been made in conformity with the present regulations of the department at Washington city. To construct anew from the field-notes such of the plats as it is deemed necessary and proper, exclusive of those townships not yet furnished the registers, and already estimated for, and also those which have lately been constructed, as before stated, will require about 4,000 days' labor. To examine the same and those which have already been constructed, and make the required corrections, will be about 2,000 days' labor. To record the whole of the said plats and examine the record will be about 4,000 days' labor.

4. A small portion of the field-notes in the Kaskaskia, Shawnee, and Danville districts, but none in any of the other land districts, have been recorded. It is recommended that the whole be recorded with as little delay as practicable, for many of the notes of the old surveys are in a perishable condition, being in numerous instances nearly illegible, on account of the indifference of the ink and paper, which are decaying with evident rapidity, and if much longer delayed will be a serious loss to the public. To record and examine the whole of the field-notes, except those already recorded, to examine the record, and to make proper indexes thereto, it is estimated will require 9,000 days' labor.

5. According to the foregoing estimates it will require thirty-six clerks to bring up the arrears of the office and place the documents therein in proper order in two years, allowing 300 working days to the year; and although it is practicable, yet it is not thought advisable to employ so great a number at one time.

6. In addition to the clerks allowed by law, and now engaged in this office, six others might be usefully employed at one time, viz: three draughtsmen, at $700 each per annum, and three recording clerks, at $600 each.

7. Should Congress make an appropriation for those objects, and allow six additional clerks, the office rent would then be about $300 and the fuel would cost about $150 per annum.

The latter part of your letter, requiring a separate estimate of the amount of labor to be performed in order to furnish the General Land Office with copies of all the field-notes of the public surveys now extant, and to furnish the district land offices and the General Land Office with copies of the field-notes instead of descriptive lists, will be the subject of another communication by this day's mail.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. T. LANGHAM.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of General Land Office, Washington City.

P. S.—The press of business in conducting the ordinary operations of this office has prevented as minute an examination of the papers thereof as is desirable, and as would have been made under different circumstances. But it is confidently believed that the most scrutinizing inspection would vary the general result but little; and it may be proper to remark that, in estimating the time required to perform the different portions of labor, a liberal course was pursued, so as to be sure of not making an under calculation. Therefore, whatever errors may be found will, it is expected, invariably lessen the foregoing estimate, but not to any considerable extent.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November 12, 1832.

SIR: In answer to the latter part of your letter of the 13th of September last, I have to inform you that it is estimated to transcribe all the field-notes of surveys now extant in Illinois and Missouri, to be furnished the General Land Office, would require about 8,500 days' labor, which, allowing 300 working days to the year, and an annual compensation of $600 to the clerks employed, would cost $17,000, exclusive of additional office rent, fuel, and stationery, which would perhaps be $1,000, making a total of $18,000. It is, however, recommended that this business should not be commenced until the field-notes are recorded in this office and properly indexed.

To furnish the General Land Office and the district land offices with copies of the field-notes in lieu of descriptive lists of the townships to be surveyed in future, would require an additional labor proportioned to the quantity of surveys that may be executed in any one year. And as there are but few surveys that will be returned to this office before the latter part of next year, no appropriation will be required for that purpose at the ensuing session of Congress; but if it is intended to furnish the notes of the townships the plats of which have not yet been sent to the district land offices, three additional clerks, at a compensation of $600 each per annum, will be required.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. T. LANGHAM.

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of General Land Office, Washington City.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Miss., October 24, 1832.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 13th ultimo, I have to state that there are about 400 townships in the old land districts of this State of which the field-notes are not recorded.

The clerks here estimate the recording of field-notes of three per week, for one clerk, as being sufficient, which would require the services of two clerks one year and a half nearly.

The contracts for surveying the late Choctaw cession amount to about $70,000; and allowing that each township, on an average, may require $300, the number of townships will be, say 234, which, at three per week, will require one clerk, to record the field-notes, one year and a half. These two objects will occupy three extra clerks one year and six months.

The two clerks provided for by law, with the surveyor general, then may be able to prepare the township maps, record them, and furnish copies for the General Land Office and land offices respectively.

It is proper to remark that clerks who are mere copyists would be of but little use in copying or recording the old surveys. The papers will require arranging, and notes for the government of the copyist, which will require the attention of the surveyor general frequently or a practical experienced surveyor. Under these circumstances, I am induced to recommend the employment of only three extra clerks, at $800 each. If it should be determined to have all the field-notes copied out of the record books, as well as those which have not been recorded for the General Land Office, then two or three more clerks could be employed, as they could copy from the record books without much attention.

The correspondence between this office and the General Land Office should be recorded. As yet there has not been time to spare for this object. The accounts, too, should be recorded in full, rather than put them on file. Papers on file are liable to be misplaced and lost. There has always been too much service required from this office by the government to be properly performed by the number of clerks employed.

My estimate furnished to the Register of the Treasury for the year 1833, will show you what surveying is contemplated for the ensuing year with the approbation of the government, and the expenditures to accomplish it. A copy is enclosed, dated 20th instant.

As to office rent, it may be reasonable to estimate it at $180 per annum, or more. If several clerks should be employed it will require more room than we have at present. The office I now occupy is at a lower rate, but that is because there is very little demand for house room, and it is not large enough for more clerks than are now employed.

As to fuel, I presume that eight cords of wood will be sufficient for one fire-place, and four fire-places would not be too much for the number of persons to be conveniently situated, which. at $3 per cord for wood, would amount to $96 per annum. These expenses should, in justice, be defrayed by the public, and not out of the surveyor's salary. His expenses of living are unavoidably very considerable in a southern country. His services are very laborious and responsible.

The copying of field-notes requires, say, at least double the time that copying of descriptive notes of a township would require.

With great respect,

GIDEON FITZ, Surveyor of Public Lands, State of Tennessee

ELIJAH HAYWARD, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Florence, Alabama, November 29, 1832.

SIR: In answer to your circular letter of the 13th September last, I make the following estimate and report, to wit: That part of the Choctaw country lately ceded to the United States, which lies in the State of Alabama, has been surveyed and returned to this office. It contains sixty-three townships and fractional townships, thirty-nine of which lie in the St. Stephen's land district, and twenty-four in the Tuscaloosa land district, none of which have as yet been protracted or copied in this office.

That part of the Creek country lately ceded to the United States, within the limits of Alabama, has much of it been surveyed and returned to this office, and the whole survey will be completed and returns made by the last of this year. It is estimated to contain 277 townships and fractional townships, to wit: 165 in Tallapoosa district, and 112 in the Coosa land district, making in the whole, as before stated, 277 townships and fractional townships, none of which have been protracted or copied in this office.

Recapitulation.

St. Stephen's land district	39	townships and fractions.
Tuscaloosa land district	24	do
Tallapoosa land district	165	do
Coosa land district	112	do
Total	340	townships and fractional townships; all of which have to be protracted, and two copies each of the township plats and descriptive notes to be made for the General Land Office and the registers' offices.

With the present force in this office it will require four and a half years, and perhaps five years, to perform the above work, including the various incidental duties of the office.

To bring up all the arrears of work in this office, including the above work, within two years, it will require the amount of four additional clerks, one of which must be a good draughtsman, to work under the directions of the present draughtsman, whose qualifications will enable him to direct and instruct the young draughtsman and perform his own duties also, but who ought to be compensated for such additional service and labor. In the event of thus pressing the business of this office, the labors of the present draughtsman and clerks will become laborious and increased, and therefore, in justice, their salaries should be raised to one thousand dollars each. I would propose an appropriation, as follows:

For salary of principal clerk	$1,000
For salary of principal draughtsman	1,000
For salary of four clerks, each $625	2,500
Additional office rent per year	100
Fuel per year	40
	4,640

To make a complete copy of all the field-notes of the surveys in this State, and furnish one copy thereof to the General Land Office and to the registers' offices, it is presumed, would require the labor of the foregoing force two years over and above the time to perform all the duties in the ordinary way as at present practiced.

I have no correct data from which to make a correct estimate of the time to perform the service as required in your letter first alluded to, but presume the foregoing is, as near as may be, a reasonable allowance for the labor required.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN COFFEE.

Hon. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

LAKE JACKSON, November 26, 1832.

SIR: In reply to your circular of the 13th September last, I beg leave to state that as far as the feeble state of my health has permitted, I have carefully examined the same.

For the ordinary business of the office the duties should be divided or classed into three parts, giving an equal portion to each, as near as may be: First, a person to make calculations exclusively of the contents of sections, fractions, and private claims, and to examine the protractions, &c. Secondly, a draughtsman to make out three fair plats of each township plat, three fair copies of each private claim, &c.; and a third clerk to attend to making out three fair copies of the field-notes, making out accounts, &c., which three are indispensable. The duties of the draughtsman at this time far exceeds the other duties.

In proportion as the surveys advance to the east, so in proportion will difficulties increase, owing to the intervention of private claims, and the consequent additional labor required in each township plat more than formerly.

In relation to the eastern land district of Florida, there remain, under the last contract, two townships to be finished, and it will take about six days to complete them. In the western land district there remain, under the last contract, three townships to be completed, and it will take about six days to complete them also.

There remain under old contracts, in said districts, twenty-three townships that have been suspended, which will take about three months to be completed.

The answers to the 2d, 3d, and 4th queries, are included in the above.

In answer to the 5th query, it will require, exclusive of the three above named, the services of two first rate calculators for fractions, sections, private claims, and to subdivide and lay down the lots in fractions; two first rate draughtsmen to make three fair copies of each township plat and private claim; and two eligible clerks to take copies of all the field-notes heretofore surveyed, to be filed in the General Land Office; making, in all, nine clerks who could thus be advantageously employed at one and the same time.

Answer to the 6th query: The clerks' salaries, agreeably to the above arrangement, should be as much if not more than any in the surveying department in the United States, because their duties are equal to, if not more arduous than those of, any other officer in the United States; but, agreeably to the present salaries, the seven first named should be allowed a compensation of $1,000 each, and the others $800 or $1,000 each.

Answer to 7th query: House rent, fuel, tables, instruments, &c., and stationery, would require from $1,000 to $1,200 for the two years.

Recapitulation.

One additional clerk to perform the ordinary business for two years from January 1, 1833	$2,000 00
Two calculators to bring up arrears on old surveys	4,000 00
Two draughtsmen ..... do ..... do	3,200 00
House rent, fuel, desks, copying, glasses, &c	1,200 00
Carried forward	10,400 00

Brought forward	$10,400 00
Two years' salary of the present two clerks	4,000 00
Do.....of the surveyor general	4,000 00
The whole expenditure for salaries, exclusive of surveying	18,400 00
Deduct for salary of the surveyor general and his two clerks, as now allowed by law	6,000 00
This amount required to bring up arrearages in said time	12,400 00

In conclusion, I would beg leave further to state that, should those additional duties be imposed on the office, the surveyor general ought consequently to be allowed an additional salary of $500 during the above two years alluded to.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

ROBERT BUTLER.

A BILL in relation to the arrears of business in the offices of the surveyors general of public lands, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and hereby is, authorized to cause the various arrears in the offices of the surveyors general in the preparation of their returns of surveys for the General Land Office and district land offices, and also the arrears in the recording of the township plats, and the field notes thereof, to be brought up and completed as soon as practicable.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be, and hereby is, made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to require the several surveyors general to prepare accurate transcripts of the field-notes of all the public surveys heretofore made in their respective districts; which transcripts shall be duly certified and forwarded to the General Land Office to be filed among the archives of said office.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, in order to effect the objects intended by this act, the following sums are hereby appropriated, to be expended out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury:

For the office of the surveyor general of Ohio, Indiana, and Territory of Michigan.

For the office of the surveyor general of Illinois and Missouri.

For the office of the surveyor general of the State of Mississippi.

For the office of the surveyor general of the State of Louisiana, in addition to the unexpended balance of the last appropriation.

For the office of the surveyor general of the State of Alabama.

For the office of the surveyor general of the Territory of Florida.

For the office of the surveyor general of the Territory of Arkansas.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that the surveyors general hold their offices in buildings that are fire-proof, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to allow to each a sum not exceeding two hundred dollars per annum for office rent and fuel.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 29, 1833.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Asher Morgan and the heirs of Philip Fitzgerald, reported:

That Asher Morgan and the heirs of Philip Fitzgerald resided on and cultivated quarter sections numbers twenty-three and twenty-four, in township twenty-one, and range thirteen east, in the district of lands north of Red river in the State of Louisiana, near Lake Providence, and that they were entitled to the right of pre-emption under the act of Congress passed May 29, 1830; that they applied in due time to purchase said tracts under the provision of said act of Congress, but were refused upon the ground of the said quarter sections having been reserved by the register and receiver for the use of schools. The committee is of opinion that the said applicants are entitled to the right of pre-emption in said quarter sections, and have reported a bill for their relief; and, also, authorizing the selection of two other quarter sections, for the use of schools in said district, by the register and receiver.

22D CONGRESS.] No. 1105. [2D SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 29, 1833.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Isidore Moore, reported:

That on the first day of June, 1797, Don Zenon Trudeau, then lieutenant governor of the country now formed into the State of Missouri, granted Thomas Fenwick, an American emigrant, a tract of 500 arpents of land, French superficial measure, to be located between Apple creek and Cinge Homme's creek, in the present county of Perry, in said State. The land granted lies within a tract of country upon which the Spanish government permitted a remnant of the old Shawnee nation of Indians to settle after their defeat and dispersion by the United States. On the 22d of May, 1813, the petitioner, who appears to be a farmer by occupation, with a large family, purchased the claim from Fenwick, and, in the following spring, by permission, settled upon the land authorized to be occupied by the grant, and has resided thereon ever since. In November, 1827, the petitioner forwarded a former petition to Congress, praying a confirmation to his claim; that in October, 1828, the land upon which said petitioner lives was brought into market by the government of the United States, and that he availed himself of the right of pre-emption, and purchased 240 acres of land named in the petition, and including his improvements; that, on the 26th day of May, 1830, (after the sale aforesaid,) his claim was confirmed by a law of Congress, and authorized the proper surveyor to survey said claim so as to include the improvements of the petitioner, as nearly in the centre of said tract as the situation of the other private claims would permit; and upon presentation of an authentic copy of the survey to the General Land Office a patent should issue to the claimant for the land so surveyed, which act provides that it shall not affect the rights of any other individual to the same grant thereby confirmed; and that if any part of such survey should fall upon the 16th section reserved for township schools, the county court of Perry county might select any other section or part of section in the same township, the sale of which is authorized by law, and enter the same with the register of the proper land office, to be reserved for the use of schools in said township instead of such sixteenth section. The petitioner further states that the land is so entered round and near his purchase that to survey it adjoining, if the law would bear that construction, he could not get more than 160 acres of land that would be worth having; the balance is so stony and full of sinkholes, and deprived of timber by intruders, that it would not sell for 25 cents an acre.

The petitioner prays that a supplement may be added to the law enabling him to locate his claim conformable to the sectional subdivisions, either by quarter sections, half quarter or quarter sections, so as to enable him to enter the whole of the claim in parcels with the register of the land office at Jackson, Missouri, and that the same be certified to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and patents issue as in other cases.

There is no proof before the committee showing that the lands are entered round and near the purchase of the petitioner, as he has alleged. The committee are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to the money which he paid for the two hundred and forty acres of land named in his petition, which was brought into market by the government previous to the confirmation of his claim thereto, and for that purpose report a bill.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR A REDUCTION OF THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS TO ACTUAL SETTLERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 31, 1833.

Whereas the President of the United States, in his late message to Congress, has called the attention of that body to the subject of the future disposition of the public lands, a subject in which the people of Illinois are vitally interested: therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Illinois, That the sentiments expressed by the President of the United States relative to the future disposition of the public lands merit, as they will doubtless receive, the decided approbation of the people of this State.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to procure such a reduction of the price of public land to actual settlers as will meet the liberal and patriotic views of the President

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be forwarded to our senators and representatives in Congress.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 2 AND 4, 1833.

A JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly of Indiana, relative to the public lands.

Whereas the liberal policy of the general government, granting pre-emption rights to settlers upon public lands, has met with the approbation of the people of Indiana and awakened the warmest feelings of gratitude in the mind of the actual settler, without in any way, as is believed, occasioning loss to the national treasury; and believing that a continuance of the same policy is alike called for both by justice and liberality towards many of our industrious but unfortunate citizens: therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their exertions to revive and continue in force for two years longer the provisions of an act of Congress, entitled "An act to grant pre-emption rights to settlers upon public lands," approved July, 1832.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to cause a copy of the preceding resolution to be forwarded to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

N. NOBLE.

A JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly of the State of Indiana to urge the speedy survey and sale of lands recently obtained by a treaty concluded with the Pottawatomie Indians, and the establishment of a new land district and office to dispose of said lands north of the Wabash river.

The general assembly of the State of Indiana, influenced by public opinion and the anxious desire of many of their constituents, most respectfully anticipating the approval of a treaty recently concluded with the Pottawatomie Indians, do represent most earnestly that great general interests would be materially promoted by the immediate survey and sale of public lands within this State procured by said treaty; that many consequent advantages would accrue from the permanent settlement of purchasers in expectancy, who are now eagerly pressing to the northern section of our frontier; and that it seems to be evidently proper and necessary, to facilitate sales and to accommodate each quarter of the country in the same degree, to urge the establishment of a new land district, with a land office, located at some suitable point north of the Wabash river: therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their influence, with proper endeavors to effect a speedy survey and sale of all the public lands within this State to which the Indian claim has been extinguished, and that they reiterate the desire heretofore expressed with becoming solicitude to procure a new land district, to be designated north of the Wabash river, and the establishment of a land office at some central point thereof as soon as may be practicable.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR A REDUCTION OF THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AND THE EXTENSION OF THE RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION TO SETTLERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 9, 1833.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists would respectfully represent to your honorable bodies: That there remain portions of public domain in many of the counties of this State heretofore offered for sale, and which, though subject to entry at the minimum price for many years past, are yet unsold; such has been the situation of some of these lands for the last fourteen years, although located in portions of the State little inferior in population to any others. This fact alone, it appears to your memorialists, is sufficient to establish the proposition that the price now demanded for these lands greatly exceeds their intrinsic value; for the demand for real estate produced by a dense population continually increasing in wealth and resources would necessarily occasion the entry of these lands even at a moderate amount beyond their real value. In such a situation they would be taken by those who had no other motive than that of extending their present possessions. Independent of this, much of this land is tenanted by the poorer, but not less meritorious, class of our citizens, who, after having encountered the difficulties and hardships ever attendant on the settlement of a new country, found themselves incapable of contending with their wealthier neighbors, and were, in consequence, driven from their original homes to seek subsistence on these comparatively sterile tracts. It cannot be believed that men thus situated would not readily exchange their present character of tenants for the more enviable one of freeholder, if their government would permit the change at any moderate sacrifice. In behalf of this class of our citizens, those whose only prospects of a permanent home rest on a change of the policy of the government in relation to the public lands, we appeal to you to abandon or modify the present system. Other considerations may be urged in favor of the policy we recommend. If the government would dispose of these lands at a fair price, it would realize a considerable amount of money from the sale, which can never be the case under the present system, and our State and citizens would receive great benefit from the change produced in the characters of the occupants by the acquisition on their part of a permanent interest in the soil. The State government, too, would derive no inconsiderable benefit from the increased revenue arising from the taxes on these lands were they owned by our citizens. Your memorialists would respectfully inquire whether any future increase in the value of these lands could justify Congress in disregarding the important considerations they have presented, even admitting that such an increase could be reasonably anticipated. But no such future accession to their value can be rationally expected; on the contrary, it is believed that a yearly diminution in their value occurs, arising from causes easily explained. It is a fact of which all may be satisfied on the slightest inquiry, that these islands were chiefly valuable for the timber they afforded; and where they have remained without an occupant, they have been unceasingly pillaged of that portion of the timber valuable for architectural purposes. Again, where they have had an occupant, the mode of cultivation has been destructive to the productiveness. The interest of the occupant has been of too transitory and unstable nature to induce him to foster their resources, and the soil was too sterile originally to admit of slovenly cultivation without producing, in a few years, a state of almost utter exhaustion. Every consideration, then, of policy as well as justice, would seem to demand a reduction in their price.

Your memorialists have not brought to their aid in the examination of this subject the various considerations which have heretofore been urged on Congress, and which they think should have been deemed sufficient to induce the government totally to abandon the present system of disposing of the public domain. The present period (now that the public debt, for the redemption of which it was originally ceded by the States, may be considered as discharged) is so propitious that we can entertain no doubt that speedily this system must at least be greatly modified, if not wholly discarded. One of the first steps in the reformation so earnestly desired, and which seems to be enjoined by every consideration which should influence the action of a wise, just, and benignant government, is, in the opinion of your memorialists, the reduction of the price of those lands which have been offered for sale and remain unsold.

They therefore pray a reduction in the price of said lands to fifty cents per acre, and the prospective annual reduction until the whole shall have been disposed of, allowing to the occupant a pre-emption right to one-eighth of a section.

Resolved, That the governor be, and he is hereby, requested to forward the foregoing memorial to each of our senators and representatives in Congress, with a request to lay said memorial before their respective houses.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR AN EXTENSION OF THE RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION TO SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 13, 1833.

The memorial of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama respectfully represents: That, in addressing your honorable body on the subject of the present memorial, they are aware of urging the claims of a class of citizens who have on more than one occasion received the beneficial aids of the general government. The agriculturists of our country, by far the most numerous portion of our citizens, had for many years labored under the most serious disadvantages of a new country, when the politic scheme of granting pre-emptions at once relieved them. This class, the pioneers of all the prosperity and civilization of the west, are, in the settlement of new countries, subject to difficulties which cannot be appreciated by those who, in older and more improved societies, enjoy the ease and luxury of civilized life. A hardy race who plunge into the forests of a remote country, subject to the dangers of savage warfare, and deprived of all the intercourse and happiness of long-settled communities, should receive all the benefits and protection which the fostering hand of government can bestow, especially when these form so large a class, and when their exertions and their hardships all contribute to the establishment of that wealth and enterprise which have created, from dense uncultivated forests, the prosperous cities of the west. In particular reference to the subject of this memorial, we would call your attention to the large amount of Indian territory, the title to which soon will be extinguished within the chartered limits of this State. This territory, which, from the growing population of our State, is filling up rapidly with the best citizens the country can possess, an industrious yeomanry, will soon be subject to the same difficulties which in every new country keep down its best population, unless the government will interpose the benefits of pre-emption laws. When it is recollected that but a few years past a swarm of land speculators overran the country, blighting the best prospects of the honest farmer, and tearing up the humble settlements which his toil and industry had erected, it will appear just and necessary that your honorable body should take an early opportunity of preventing a like distress. One of the best established principles of natural law gives a species of prior right to the occupant of waste lands; and although your memorialists are sensible that this cannot apply to lands owned by the government, yet we would submit to your honorable body whether it does not furnish some reasons in favor of the citizens who are settled on the lands of the United States. The vast amount of money annually paid by the western people for the soil they cultivate; the few benefits they derive from the general distribution of the government funds; and the extraordinary toil and labor they have exercised in improving and thereby enhancing the value of the lands, all require the immediate security of the people by the passage of laws granting pre-emption rights. Your memorialists would therefore request your honorable body to take into immediate consideration the just claims of our citizens now settled or who may hereafter settle on the Indian territory, and to grant them pre-emption right, with such limitations and restrictions as to your honorable body shall seem just and proper; and for the end that these laws may afford a full relief, your memorialists would suggest the propriety of granting time for the advantages of these pre-emptions up to the day of sale. Therefore—

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, That our senators and representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested to urge upon that body the object contemplated by this memorial, and that the executive of this State be requested to forward a copy of the same to each of our senators and representatives.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR THE SURVEY AND SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS, AND PERMISSION TO EXCHANGE HER SCHOOL LANDS UNFIT FOR CULTIVATION FOR OTHER LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 18, 1833.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Illinois, respectfully represent: That the northern section of this State, including a portion of the mineral district on the upper Mississippi, has been settled to a considerable extent, but has never yet been surveyed or brought into market.

That interesting district of country was little known until the year 1822, and therefore not appreciated; in that year Colonel James Johnson, an enterprising gentleman of Kentucky, obtained permission from the appropriate officer of the United States government to manufacture lead in that mineral region, and he accordingly repaired to the place where Galena now stands, with the requisite number of workmen and laborers for that purpose, and prosecuted his design with various success during that and the succeeding year, during which time many enterprising adventurers were attracted thither in the hope of realizing a fortune in a country which presented such flattering and alluring prospects of enabling them to succeed in so desirable an object.

The general government having thus thrown open a new field for the gratification of industry and enterprise, the country soon became partially settled by a mining population, whose labor was more amply rewarded up to the year 1828 than it could have been in any other country; but lead, the staple commodity of that region, fell during the latter part of that and the two succeeding years to so low a price that its manufacture could not be continued with advantage, from which cause, during those years of adversity, many of the miners (having contracted a partiality for that pursuit) were constrained to relax or abandon their mining operations and betake themselves to agriculture for a livelihood until the price should rise sufficiently high to justify the resumption of their favorite pursuit. In the meantime many hundreds moved their families and all their property to the mining district for the two-fold purpose of mining and farming, until the population of that part of the mining district within this State amounts to the number of seven thousand, most of whom have built houses and made other improvements, which have cost them considerable labor and money, and which, indeed, constitutes the only home they have in the world.

Your memorialists deem it an act of duty on their part to present truly and fairly the condition of that portion of their fellow-citizens, as well as others living on unsurveyed land, to the peculiar consideration of Congress; those people having become acquainted, and cherishing strong attachments for the country from other considerations, are desirous to obtain the fee simple title to their homes, which they have rescued from the wilderness, and for which many of them have fought and bled, so that their condition may be elevated from lessees to freeholders.

Your memorialists invited the attention of Congress to this subject two years ago, but the condition of the citizens of that part of the State remains unaltered; it is hoped, therefore, that Congress will not withhold beyond the end of the present session the relief so much desired by so large a number of meritorious citizens.

Your memorialists therefore pray Congress that an appropriation may be made sufficient to defray the expense of surveying and selling the lands embraced in the section of country referred to herein.

There is also another subject of vital importance to which your memorialists would most respectfully invite your attention. It is the subject of education, than which, in the opinion of your memorialists, nothing can be more important or interesting. The perpetuity of republican governments and free institutions are peculiarly dependent on the virtue and intelligence of that community which is subject to their political action and the obligation of their laws. The mind, in order to appreciate the good and evil effect of any measure of policy, must be sufficiently enlightened to calculate with reasonable certainty the effects it will produce on the community to be affected by its operation; without which intelligence, man becomes a miserable dependent to the high pretensions of aristocracy or the degenerate slave of ambitious aspirants.

Thus deeply impressed with the paramount importance of this subject, your memorialists would earnestly call your solemn attention to the condition of the lands granted by the general government to this State for the use of common schools. By an act of Congress, on the 18th day of April, 1818, for the admission of the Territory of Illinois into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States, it was proposed by Congress, the people of the Territory of Illinois in convention assembled consenting thereto, that section sixteen in every township should be granted to the inhabitants of such township for the use of schools.

The general government required on the part of the people of Illinois, in consideration thereof, that every tract of land sold by the United States after the 1st day of January, 1819, should remain exempt from taxation under any authority of the State for five years; and as a further consideration, that the bounty lands granted for military services, while held by the patentees or their heirs, should not be taxed for three years.

These stipulations have been strictly complied with on the part of the State of Illinois. The federal government having enjoyed and is now enjoying all the contemplated advantages of a more speedy sale of the public lands, by reason of this exemption from taxation operating as a powerful incentive to the purchaser; while on the part of the national government the consideration intended as equivalent to that concession by the State has failed in the proportion of four-fifths, owing to the barrenness and sterility of parts, in many instances the whole, of the said sixteenth section.

It is evident Congress intended this grant of section sixteen as an equivalent for the surrender of the right of taxation, one of the most essential attributes of sovereignty reserved by the States, and that it should be a substantial benefit, which, it was anticipated, would be realized by the inhabitants of each township as a means of educating their children. But the consequence of the contract has produced a direct loss to the State, without imparting to the inhabitants of the townships in the State more than a very small proportion of that benefit intended to be conferred and expected to be received, whereby the spirit, meaning, and intent of the contract on the part of Congress has failed to go into operation, as was originally intended, without its knowledge or intention.

Under this state of facts, would not the general government feel herself bound in good faith to repair the consideration of a contract, designed by the contracting parties for a mutual benefit to both, when it is recollected that a fair and valuable right, the right of taxation, was conceded on our part, and which in fact constitutes such ample consideration?

It cannot be supposed for a moment that the general government intended to give lands for conceded right of so valuable a character that are totally sterile, unavailable, and wholly unfit for cultivation, or that the State intended to receive such. The lands in question would have been competent to the establishment of a complete system of common schools had all these sections been of the quality anticipated; but as they are, they will not yield more than one-fifth part of the sum necessary to carry into effect that invaluable scheme as originally designed by the parties.

The general assembly of the State of Illinois, therefore, in behalf of their constituents, ask Congress to pass a law giving to the State the right to surrender such part or parts, or the whole of the said sixteenth sections, in the different townships, as are unavailable, with leave to select and locate an equivalent number of unappropriated sections elsewhere in the State, to be applied to the same object.

APPLICATION OF MISSOURI IN RELATION TO THE ADOPTION OF A NEW SYSTEM FOR THE PERMANENT DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 22, 1833.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Missouri, would respectfully represent: That in presenting this memorial to your consideration they have been influenced by no other than a solemn regard they owe to themselves, and the lasting prosperity of the State which they have the honor to represent. The subject of the proper disposal of the public lands held by the general government within the limits of our territory is, and will continue to be, one of absorbing interest, until it shall be finally disposed of upon those principles of justice and policy which are the ultimate objects of all just governments. Situated as we are in relation to those lands, it could not be expected that we should remain silent when the question is stirred as to their proper disposal, nor subdue our apprehensions as to its final result. To us it is a subject of vital importance, nor do we magnify when we say that the future destinies, the future hopes of our State, depend in a great degree upon an equitable and satisfactory disposition of these lands. As an integral part of one common country, we have no interests separate from those of our fellow-citizens in other parts of the government. The prosperous and healthful condition of the Union, of the parts with the whole, and of the whole with the parts, is as intimately connected and as deliberately interwoven with one another as the various dependent connexions of the human organization is to the wholesome action of life. With a common government, in the enjoyment of equal laws and equal liberty, whatever contributes to the prosperity of one section of the country cannot but throw its benign influence upon the whole. Let it not be said, then, that we ask that which is partial and confined in effects. The tendency, immediate and remote, of the measures which shall be adopted in relation to the subject-matter of this memorial will contribute not only to quiet the public mind for the future, but will enhance the greatness and glory of our nation. The assumption, therefore, is erroneous, and every deduction from it incorrect, which considers a measure favorable to the views of the States in which these lands lie as beneficial only to them alone. As American citizens we entertain more liberal views than to condemn a policy as partial and unjust because it is more immediately connected with the peculiar interests and condition of a portion of our fellow-citizens. In the firm and fixed attachment which we cherish for the Union, we would scorn to receive a boon which would be injurious to other sections of our country or detract from their claims of justice and right. What is it that constitutes the greatness and glory and happiness of a nation? Is it an overflowing treasury? Is it a people indigent and dependent for the comforts of life, because they want homes for themselves and their families? Is it an extensive public domain, sparsely populated, and held upon such terms as, in a great measure, to prevent its cultivation, and the future rise and improvement of the country? Such an idea is not only behind the dignified march of the enlightened principles of the age, but is against the prospective development of those which are yet in store for the efforts of human genius. It is at war as well with every conception of liberal policy as with the laws of nature herself. We can readily imagine that governments of a despotic character, where the good of the whole forms no part of their system, would make it their interest to adopt such a policy; but that a dignified, a great, and a powerful nation, acting upon principles new in their practice, whose existence and welfare now and hereafter depend alone upon the virtue and lofty independence of the people, should sell at market to her citizens those lands which have been purchased by the common sacrifice of both blood and money, exhibits a strange application of the principles of the government to their practical operations. It seems peculiarly proper in our government that every facility should be afforded which is calculated to promote the comfort and prosperity of the people. Can any policy contribute more to this end than so to adjust the system of our public lands as that every citizen shall be a freeman indeed by the possession of that species of property which makes him a home, and from which spring all those endearing attachments both to country and society? In the cultivation of the soil; in the opening and improving of the wilderness; in the affording of homes to our people, that they may be independent and grow in wealth; that they may be surrounded with the means of raising their children in the paths of virtue and knowledge, consists the true policy which shall elevate us to the proud rank we aspire to, and make us in truth, what we claim to be, the freest and happiest people on the globe. In contemplating the policy of those nations whose governments were conducted upon anything like liberal principles, it is with no feelings of pride that we draw the parallel between the lofty and magnanimous considerations which they attached to the condition of their citizens by making to them voluntary distributions of their public lands, and that system of ours, whatever may have been the cause of its foundation, that seems now to be adhered to upon the cold calculation of dollars and cents, and to set a higher value upon a full treasury than upon the prosperity and comfort of the people. A more benevolent nor more important consideration could not enter the mind nor enlist the feelings of the enlightened statesman than of providing those means which shall make the people prosperous and independent. Such a course is calculated to smooth down those inequalities which are apt to grow up in society, and which are so baneful to the principles of republican government. That the price of the public lands should be raised is an argument that might be readily attributed to the cold dictates of avarice; but that the prices should be so regulated as to restrain emigration, in order that the poor, but not less worthy class of society, should be thrown into manufactories, is a doctrine that indicates a strange conception of the genius and principles of our government, and, at this enlightened period of the world, cannot redound much to the credit of either the heart that cherished or the head that conceived it. Such a doctrine is not only calculated to impede the liberal march of the age, but is wholly inconsistent with those enlarged views of the political economy which at present govern the conduct of liberal and highminded statesmen. Upon the score of revenue alone, it defeats the prospective increase that may be fairly expected to arise from the increase of population, springing from the facilities afforded for such an increase. Revenue arises from duties; duties are paid by consumers; and the more the means of the consumers, the greater will be the amount of duties. But can it be for revenue that the system is adhered to? The revenue of the government greatly exceeds the expenditures. What motive of patriotism, what claims of justice, can therefore prompt the general government still to exact the same prices, and to hold these lands upon the same condition at this time, when the causes which gave birth to such a course no longer exist? Have not the resources of the country increased with the march of the government and kept in advance of its necessary wants? Is more than this necessary for the general welfare, and compatible with the sound maxims of republican institutions? Surely not, unless we fall back into the error of past ages, that the people are the property of the government, and bound to submit to every exaction that may be made, whether actually needed or not. What inducement, then, of either national concern or patriotism, can lead to the continued adherence to a system which has lost the force of its propriety by an entire change of circumstances that led to its adoption? The public debt, we may now say, is extinguished; we have a full and abounding treasury; the resources of the government multiplying and daily developing our strength and greatness; the public mind already disturbed, not as to what plans shall be adopted for the purpose of raising revenue, but what course is best to be adopted as to the disposal of the revenue which is more than necessary for the expenses of the government; and yet the people, at whose sovereign will this government sprang into existence, who nourish and sustain it, are grievously taxed in procuring homes for themselves and families; those homes which are the nurseries of that virtue and patriotism upon which depends the vital existence of our republic. The purposes for which these lands were held by the general government have been accomplished; the public debt is now extinguished; brighter prospects await us; the gloom that obscured the prospective of our career has disappeared; the weakness of infancy has ripened into the maturity of manhood; and the poverty of our beginning has swelled into the magnificence of abounding riches, which so far exceed the wants of the government as to raise the serious question of a proper disposition of the surplus. Why, then, continue this system? The original object has been accomplished; the pledge is redeemed by the payment of the debt; the necessity no longer exists which gave birth to the measure; it has given way to the propitious advancement, the rapid growth, and the abounding resources that have marked the character and developed the strength of our country. These views might have cheered us with the lively prospect of seeing them incorporated in the extended scope of the government, but for the fact that a course very different, indeed, has been pursued by the federal government. The policy hitherto pursued on this subject was sufficient to call forth our disapprobation, but it remained for the last session of Congress to originate a project which has excited our most serious apprehensions. We allude to the bill introduced in the Senate of the United States by the Committee on Manufactures, making a distribution of the public lands, or their proceeds, among the several States, according to their representation. In the name of the sovereignty of the State of Missouri, and of the sacred rights of her people, we solemnly protest against such a measure. We protest against it as impolitic and unjust, and not only as an invasion of the rights of the States, but as a violation of the principles of the government. It is impolitic, because, whether the object be a grant of the lands or a distribution of the proceeds, the inevitable tendency will be the future adoption of such measures as will be the means of raising the most money from the sale of the lands. It is a direct appeal to the avarice, under the plausible pretext of advancing the interest of those concerned, which we trust the magnanimity of our sister States will reject, not only for the suspicion of a yielding virtue which it contains to be overcome by the seductive offer, but for the oppressive character of the measure to the States in which these lands are situated. It will fasten upon them a system which will blight their fairest prospects, and cripple their onward march to future greatness, by giving to the other States, who constitute a majority, the power of acting as self-interest may dictate. The consequence of such a measure cannot fail to impede the growth of the States in which these lands lie, by checking emigration, keeping a great portion of the lands a waste, preventing, in a great measure, the future cultivation of the soil, and depriving the States of the just revenue which they have a right to expect from a tax on the land. It is unjust, because unequal in its bearings. The States in which these lands lie, while they would have to endure all the inconveniences and hardships of the plan, would receive but a very small portion of the spoils. Some States would receive from twenty to forty shares, whilst Missouri, for example, with an equal or greater extent of territory, would receive but two. Well might the inducement of a bonus of twelve per cent. be offered us to silence anticipated complaints against a measure fraught with such injustice and hazardous consequences. No legislation, we conceive, is more dangerous to virtue and liberty than that which invites wrong and oppression by holding out inducements to depart from the great principles of right and justice. It might seem that the portion which the old States were to get from their large representation formed the consideration of their agreeing to the project, whilst the new States were to be taken by the bonus of twelve per cent. over and above that which they were to get according to their representation. Is this consistent with the character and purity of a republican government? Shall the principles which have governed our country be thus subjected to improper influences? Is this the way in which objects of a great and national character are to be carried? No; we do not believe it. Our confidence in the integrity of our sister States, in the justice of their representatives, is too firmly fixed to allow even a supposition that they can be reached by such influence. To their elevated character, their magnanimity and generous bearing, we look for that sense of self-regard and duty to others which are above all other considerations, save those of right and justice. At their hands we feel assured of obtaining justice; from them we expect such measures, not adopted with a view to the present moment, but guided by the known principles of human action, and the acknowledged tendency of correct laws, as will, in the end, contribute to the glory, the prosperity, and happiness of our Union. We do not hesitate to declare it as our belief, maturely made and deliberately expressed, that the best method to be pursued with the public lands is the passing of general pre-emption laws; the granting of donations to the poor and actual settlers; the ceding of those lands which have been in market to the States in which they lie, and the reducing of the prices of those which have been exposed to sale. Was such a system adopted, time would prove the solemn truth which we have already declared, that what is of advantage to a part is for the ultimate good of the whole. The blessings which would flow from it would be co-extensive with the limits of our country and commensurate with the principles of liberal policy and enlightened consideration upon which the government is formed. Therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Missouri, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representative requested, to oppose, by their votes and influence, the passage of the bill alluded to, or any others founded on similar principles.

Resolved, further, That our senators be instructed, and our representative be requested, to use their best exertions to accelerate the extinction of the federal title to the public domain in the western States by a general pre-emption law, by graduating the price to the quality of the land, by granting donations to the poor and actual settlers, and, finally, by ceding the lands to the States in which they may be situated.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions and the memorial to each of our senators and representative in Congress as soon as practicable.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA FOR A CESSION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS WITHIN HER LIMITS FOR THE PURPOSES OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT AND EDUCATION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE FEBRUARY 27, 1833.

A JOINT RESOLUTION of the general assembly concerning the public lands.

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to obtain by an act of that body a cession from the United States of all the right, title, and interest of the general government to the unappropriated and unsold public lands within our boundaries, upon the most favorable terms to the State that can be obtained, subject to the ratification or rejection of the general assembly of this State, with the provision that the proceeds of such remaining public lands to be sold under the authority of this State shall be exclusively devoted to the objects of internal improvements and education by the general assembly of this State, reserving to this State a right to donate to poor persons such portions of the land as may remain undisposed of after being in market, under our direction, for a period of ten years.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit copies of this resolution to each of our members in Congress.

APPLICATION OF PENNSYLVANIA FOR A DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE MARCH 1, 1833.

RESOLUTION relative to the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands of the United States.

Whereas the period is fast approaching when, by means of the revenue arising from bank stock, the duties on imports, and the public lands, the national debt will be extinguished, and there will be a surplus in the national treasury after defraying the ordinary expenses of government; and whereas the United States acquired their title to and jurisdiction over the public lands by the cessions of several of the States, made for the common benefit of the Union, and by purchase out of the funds of the general government, and the said lands thus acquired form a part of the national stock, and furnish an important branch of the public revenues applicable to the relief of the public burdens; and whereas on the extinguishment of the public debt of the United States the revenues drawn from the sale of the public lands will be no longer required for the purposes of the general government, and it is right and proper that they should be distributed among the several States; and whereas the distribution of the surplus proceeds arising from the sale of the public lands involves a question of national property and national policy on which it is proper for the constituted authorities of the State to express an opinion: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in general assembly met, That, in the opinion of this legislature, the proceeds of the public lands of the United States, when no longer required for the payment of the public debt, ought to be distributed among the several States of the Union in just and equitable proportions, and any proper measure calculated to effect this object will meet our cordial approbation.

And be it further resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit the foregoing to our senators and representatives in Congress.

23D CONGRESS.] No. 1119. [1ST SESSION.

VIEWS OF THE PRESIDENT ADVERSE TO THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 5, 1833.

To the Senate of the United States:

At the close of the last session of Congress I received from that body a bill entitled "An act to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands of the United States, and for granting lands to certain States." The brief period then remaining before the rising of Congress, and the extreme pressure of official duties, unavoidable on such occasions, did not leave me sufficient time for that full consideration of the subject which was due to its great importance. Subsequent consideration and reflection have, however, confirmed the objections to the bill which presented themselves to my mind upon its first perusal, and have satisfied me that it ought not to become a law. I felt myself, therefore, constrained to withhold from it my approval, and now return it to the Senate, in which it originated, with the reasons on which my dissent is founded.

I am fully sensible of the importance, as it respects both the harmony and union of the States, of making, as soon as circumstances will allow of it, a proper and final disposition of the whole subject of the public lands; and any measure for that object, providing for the reimbursement to the United States of those expenses with which they are justly chargeable, that may be consistent with my views of the Constitution, sound policy, and the rights of the respective States, will readily receive my co-operation. This bill, however, is not of that character. The arrangement it contemplates is not permanent, but limited to five years only, and in its terms appears to anticipate alterations within that time at the discretion of Congress; and it furnishes no adequate security against those continued agitations of the subject which it should be the principal object of any measure for the disposition of the public lands to avert.

Neither the merits of the bill under consideration, nor the validity of the objections which I have felt it to be my duty to make to its passage, can be correctly appreciated without a full understanding of the manner in which the public lands upon which it is intended to operate were acquired, and the conditions upon which they are now held by the United States. I will therefore precede the statement of those objections by a brief but distinct exposition of these points.

The waste lands within the United States constituted one of the early obstacles to the organization of any government for the protection of their common interests. In October, 1777, while Congress were framing the articles of confederation, a proposition was made to amend them, to the following effect, viz:

"That the United States, in Congress assembled, shall have the sole and exclusive right and power to ascertain and fix the western boundary of such States as claim to the Mississippi or South sea, and lay out the land beyond the boundary so ascertained into separate and independent States, from time to time, as the numbers and circumstances of the people thereof may require."

It was, however, rejected, Maryland only voting for it; and so difficult did the subject appear, that the patriots of that body agreed to waive it in the articles of confederation, and leave it for future settlement.

On the submission of the articles to the several State legislatures for ratification, the most formidable objection was found to be in this subject of the waste lands. Maryland, Rhode Island, and New Jersey instructed their delegates in Congress to move amendments to them, providing that the waste or crown lands should be considered the common property of the United States, but they were rejected. All the States, except Maryland, acceded to the articles, notwithstanding some of them did so with the reservation that their claim to those lands, as common property, was not thereby abandoned.

On the sole ground that no declaration to that effect was contained in the articles, Maryland withheld her assent, and, in May, 1779, embodied her objections in the form of instructions to her delegates, which were entered upon the journals of Congress. The following extracts are from that document, viz:

"Is it possible that those States who are ambitiously grasping at territories to which, in our judgment, they have not the least shadow of exclusive right, will use with greater moderation the increase of wealth and power derived from those territories when acquired than what they have displayed in their endeavors to acquire them?" &c., &c.

"We are convinced policy and justice require that a country unsettled at the commencement of this war, claimed by the British crown, and ceded to it by the treaty of Paris, if wrested from the common enemy by the blood and treasure of the thirteen States, should be considered as a common property, subject to be parcelled out by Congress into free, convenient, and independent governments, in such manner and at such times as the wisdom of that assembly shall hereafter direct," &c., &c.

Virginia proceeded to open a land office for the sale of her western lands, which produced such excitement as to induce Congress, in October, 1779, to interpose, and earnestly recommend to "the said State, and all States similarly circumstanced, to forbear selling or issuing warrants for such unappropriated lands, or granting the same during the continuance of the present war."

In March, 1780, the legislature of New York passed an act tendering a cession to the United States of the claims of that State to the western territory, preceded by a preamble to the following effect, viz:

"Whereas nothing under Divine Providence can more effectually contribute to the tranquillity and safety of the United States of America than a federal alliance on such liberal principles as will give satisfaction to its respective members; and whereas the articles of confederation and perpetual union recommended by the honorable Congress of the United States of America have not proved acceptable to all the States, it having been conceived that a portion of the waste and uncultivated territory within the limits or claims of certain States ought to be appropriated as a common fund for the expenses of the war; and the people of the State of New York being on all occasions disposed to manifest their regard for their sister States, and their earnest desire to promote the general interest and security, and more especially to accelerate the federal alliance by removing, as far as it depends upon them, the before-mentioned impediment to its final accomplishment," &c.

This act of New York, the instructions of Maryland, and a remonstrance of Virginia, were referred to a committee of Congress, who reported a preamble and resolutions thereon which were adopted on the 6th of September, 1780; so much of which as is necessary to elucidate the subject is to the following effect, viz:

"That it appears advisable to press upon those States which can remove the embarrassments respecting the western country, a liberal surrender of a portion of their territorial claims, since they cannot be preserved entire without endangering the stability of the general confederacy; to remind them how indispensably necessary it is to establish the federal Union on a fixed and permanent basis, and on principles acceptable to all its respective members; how essential to public credit and confidence, to the support of our army, to the vigor of our counsels and success of our measures, to our tranquillity at home, our reputation abroad, to our very existence as a free, sovereign, and independent people; that they are fully persuaded the wisdom of the several legislatures will lead them to a full and impartial consideration of a subject so interesting to the United States, and so necessary to the happy establishment of the federal Union; that they are confirmed in these expectations by a review of the before-mentioned act of the legislature of New York, submitted to their consideration," &c.

"Resolved, That copies of the several papers referred to the committee be transmitted, with a copy of the report, to the legislatures of the several States; and that it be earnestly recommended to those States who have claims to the western country to pass such laws and give their delegates in Congress such powers as may effectually remove the only obstacle to a final ratification of the articles of confederation; and that the legislature of Maryland be earnestly requested to authorize their delegates in Congress to subscribe the said articles."

Following up this policy, Congress proceeded, on the 10th of October, 1780, to pass a resolution pledging the United States to the several States as to the manner in which any lands that might be ceded by them should be disposed of, the material parts of which are as follows, viz:

"Resolved, That the unappropriated lands which may be ceded or relinquished to the United States by any particular State, pursuant to the recommendation of Congress of the 6th day of September last, shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States, and be settled and formed into distinct republican States, which shall become members of the federal Union, and have the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States, &c. That the said lands shall be granted or settled at such times and under such regulations as shall hereafter be agreed on by the United States in Congress assembled, or nine or more of them."

In February, 1781, the legislature of Maryland passed an act authorizing their delegates in Congress to sign the articles of confederation. The following are extracts from the preamble and body of the act, viz:

"Whereas it hath been said that the common enemy is encouraged, by this State not acceding to the confederation, to hope that the union of the sister States may be dissolved, and therefore prosecutes the war in expectation of an event so disgraceful to America; and our friends and illustrious ally are impressed with an idea that the common cause would be promoted by our formally acceding to the confederation," &c.

The act of which this is the preamble authorizes the delegates of that State to sign the articles, and proceeds to declare "that, by acceding to the said confederation, this State doth not relinquish, nor intend to relinquish, any right or interest she hath with the other united or confederated States to the back country," &c.

On the 1st of March, 1781, the delegates of Maryland signed the articles of confederation, and the federal Union under that compact was complete. The conflicting claims to the western lands, however, were not disposed of, and continued to give great trouble to Congress. Repeated and urgent calls were made by Congress upon the States claiming them, to make liberal cessions to the United States, and it was not until long after the present Constitution was formed that the grants were completed.

The deed of cession from New York was executed on the 1st of March, 1781, the day the articles of confederation were ratified, and it was accepted by Congress on the 29th of October, 1782. One of the conditions of this cession, thus tendered and accepted, was that the lands ceded to the United States "shall be and inure for the use and benefit of such of the United States as shall become members of the federal alliance of the said States, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever."

The Virginia deed of cession was executed and accepted on the 1st day of March, 1784. One of the conditions of this cession is as follows, viz:

"That all the lands within the territory, as ceded to the United States, and not reserved for or appropriated to any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American army, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become, members of the confederation or federal alliance of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever."

Within the years 1785, 1786, and 1787, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and South Carolina ceded their claims upon similar conditions. The federal government went into operation, under the existing Constitution, on the 4th of March, 1789. The following is the only provision of that Constitution which has a direct bearing on the subject of the public lands, viz:

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State."

Thus the Constitution left all the compacts before made in full force, and the rights of all parties remained the same under the new government as they were under the confederation.

The deed of cession of North Carolina was executed in December, 1789, and accepted by an act of Congress, approved April 2, 1790. The third condition of this cession was in the following words, viz:

"That all the lands intended to be ceded by virtue of this act to the United States of America, and not appropriated as before mentioned, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of the United States of America, North Carolina inclusive, according to their respective and usual proportions of the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatever."

The cession of Georgia was completed on the 16th of June, 1802, and in its leading condition is precisely like that of Virginia and North Carolina. This grant completed the title of the United States to all those lands generally called public lands lying within the original limits of the confederacy. Those which have been acquired by the purchase of Louisiana and Florida, having been paid for out of the common treasure of the United States, are as much the property of the general government, to be disposed of for the common benefit, as those ceded by the several States.

By the facts here collected from the early history of our republic, it appears that the subject of the public lands entered into the elements of its institutions. It was only upon the condition that those lands should be considered as common property, to be disposed of for the benefit of the United States, that some of the States agreed to come into a "perpetual union." The States claiming those lands acceded to those views, and transferred their claims to the United States upon certain conditions, and on those conditions the grants were accepted. These solemn compacts, invited by Congress in a resolution declaring the purposes to which the proceeds of these lands should be applied, originating before the Constitution, and forming the basis on which it was made, bound the United States to a particular course of policy in relation to them, by ties as strong as can be invented to secure the faith of nations.

As early as May, 1785, Congress, in execution of these compacts, passed an ordinance providing for the sales of lands in the western territory, and directing the proceeds to be paid into the treasury of the United States. With the same object, other ordinances were adopted prior to the organization of the present government.

In further execution of these compacts, the Congress of the United States, under the present Constitution, as early as the 4th of August, 1790, in "An act making provision for the debt of the United States," enacted as follows, viz:

"That the proceeds of sales which shall be made of lands in the western territory now belonging, or that may hereafter belong, to the United States, shall be, and are hereby, appropriated towards sinking or discharging the debts for the payment whereof the United States now are, or by virtue of this act may be holden, and shall be applied solely to that use until the said debt shall be fully satisfied."

To secure to the government of the United States forever the power to execute these compacts in good faith, the Congress of the confederation, as early as July 13, 1787, in an ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, prescribed to the people inhabiting the western territory certain conditions, which were declared to be "articles of compact between the original States and the people and States in the said territory," which should "forever remain unalterable unless by common consent." In one of these articles it is declared that—

"The legislatures of those districts, or new States, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil by the United States in Congress assembled, nor with any regulations Congress may find necessary for securing the title in such soil to the bona fide purchasers."

This condition has been exacted from the people of all the new Territories; and, to put its obligation beyond dispute, each new State carved out of the public domain has been required explicitly to recognize it as one of the conditions of admission into the Union. Some of them have declared through their conventions, in separate acts, that their people "forever disclaim all right and title to the waste and unappropriated lands lying within this State, and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States."

With such care have the United States reserved to themselves in all their acts down to this day, in legislating for the Territories and admitting States into the Union, the unshackled power to execute in good faith the compacts of cession made with the original States. From these facts and proceedings it plainly and certainly results:

1. That one of the fundamental principles on which the confederation of the United States was originally based was, that the waste land of the west within their limits should be the common property of the United States.

2. That those lands were ceded to the United States by the States which claimed them, and the cessions were accepted on the express condition that they should be disposed of for the common benefit of the States, according to their respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and for no other purpose whatsoever.

3. That, in execution of these solemn compacts, the Congress of the United States did, under the confederation, proceed to sell these lands and put the avails into the common treasury; and, under the new Constitution, did repeatedly pledge them for the payment of the public debt of the United States, by which pledge each State was expected to profit in proportion to the general charge to be made upon it for that object.

These are the first principles of this whole subject, which I think cannot be contested by any one who examines the proceedings of the revolutionary Congress, the cessions of the several States, and the acts of Congress under the new Constitution. Keeping them deeply impressed upon the mind, let us proceed to examine how far the objects of the cessions have been completed, and see whether those compacts are not still obligatory upon the United States.

The debt for which these lands were pledged by Congress may be considered as paid, and they are consequently released from that lien; but that pledge formed no part of the compacts with the States, or of the conditions upon which the cessions were made. It was a contract between new parties—between the United States and their creditors. Upon payment of the debt the compacts remain in full force, and the obligation of the United States to dispose of the land for the common benefit is neither destroyed nor impaired. As they cannot now be executed in that mode, the only legitimate question which can arise is, in what other way are these lands to be hereafter disposed of for the common benefit of the several States, "according to their respective and usual proportion in the general charge and expenditure?" The cessions of Virginia, North Carolina, and Georgia, in express terms, and all the rest impliedly, not only provide thus specifically the proportion according to which each State shall profit by the proceeds of the land sales, but they proceed to declare that they shall be "faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever." This is the fundamental law of the land at this moment, growing out of compacts which are older than the Constitution, and formed the corner stone on which the Union itself was erected.

In the practice of the government the proceeds of the public lands have not been set apart as a separate fund for the payment of the public debt; but have been and are now paid into the treasury, where they constitute a part of the aggregate of revenue upon which the government draws as well for its current expenditures as for payment of the public debt. In this manner they have heretofore and do now lessen the general charge upon the people of the several States in the exact proportions stipulated in the compacts.

These general charges have been composed not only of the public debt, and the usual expenditures attending the civil and military administration of the government, but of the amounts paid to the States with which these compacts were formed; the amount paid the Indians for their right of possession; the amounts paid for the purchase of Louisiana and Florida; and the amounts paid surveyors, registers, receivers, clerks, &c., employed in preparing for market and selling the western domain. From the origin of the land system down to the 30th of September, 1832, the amount expended for all these purposes has been about $49,701,280, and the amount received from the sales, deducting payments on account of roads, &c., about $38,386,624. The revenue arising from the public lands, therefore, has not been sufficient to meet the general charges on the treasury, which have grown out of them, by about $11,314,656. Yet, in having been applied to lessen those charges, the conditions of the compacts have been thus far fulfilled, and each State has profited according to its usual proportion in the general charge and expenditure. The annual proceeds of land sales have increased, and the charges have diminished; so that at a reduced price those lands would now defray all current charges growing out of them, and save the treasury from further advances on their account. Their original intent and object, therefore, would be accomplished, as fully as it has hitherto been, by reducing the price, and hereafter, as heretofore, bringing the proceeds into the treasury. Indeed, as this is the only mode in which the objects of the original compact can be attained, it may be considered, for all practical purposes, that it is one of their requirements.

The bill before me begins with an entire subversion of every one of the compacts by which the United States became possessed of their western domain, and treats the subject as if they never had existence, and as if the United States were the original and unconditional owners of all the public lands. The first section directs—

"That from and after the 31st day of December, 1832, there shall be allowed and paid to each of the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Mississippi, and Louisiana, over and above what each of the said States is entitled to by the terms of the compacts entered into between them, respectively, upon their admission into the Union, and the United States, the sum of twelve and a half per centum upon the net amount of the sales of the public lands which, subsequent to the day aforesaid, shall be made within the several limits of the said States; which said sum of twelve and a half per centum shall be applied to some object or objects of internal improvement or education within the said States, under the direction of their several legislatures."

This twelve and a half per centum is to be taken out of the net proceeds of the land sales before any apportionment is made; and the same seven States which are first to receive this proportion are also to receive their due proportion of the residue, according to the ratio of general distribution.

Now, waiving all consideration of equity or policy in regard to this provision, what more need be said to demonstrate its objectionable character, than that it is in direct and undisguised violation of the pledge given by Congress to the States before a single cession was made; that it abrogates the condition upon which some of the States came into the Union; and that it sets at nought the terms of cession spread upon the face of every grant under which the title to that portion of the public land is held by the federal government.

In the apportionment of the remaining seven-eighths of the proceeds, this bill, in a manner equally undisguised, violates the conditions upon which the United States acquired title to the ceded lands. Abandoning altogether the ratio of distribution according to the general charge and expenditure provided by the compacts, it adpots that of the federal representative population. Virginia and other States which ceded their lands upon the express condition that they should receive a benefit from their sales in proportion to their part of the general charge, are, by the bill, allowed only a portion of seven-eighths of their proceeds, and that not in the proportion of general charge and expenditure, but in the ratio of their federal representative population.

The Constitution of the United States did not delegate to Congress the power to abrogate these compacts. On the contrary, by declaring that nothing in it "shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State," it virtually provides that these compacts, and the rights they secure, shall remain untouched by the legislative power, which shall only make all "needful rules and regulations" for carrying them into effect. All beyond this would seem to be an assumption of undelegated power.

These ancient compacts are invaluable monuments of an age of virtue, patriotism, and disinterestedness. They exhibit the price that great States which had won liberty were willing to pay for that union, without which, they plainly saw, it could not be preserved. It was not for territory or State power that our revolutionary fathers took up arms—it was for individual liberty and the right of self-government. The expulsion from the continent of British armies and British power was to them a barren conquest, if, through the collisions of the redeemed States, the individual rights for which they fought should become the prey of petty military tyrannies established at home. To avert such consequences, and throw around liberty the shield of union, States whose relative strength at the time gave them a preponderating power, magnanimously sacrified domains which would have made them the rivals of empires, only stipulating that they should be disposed of for the common benefit of themselves and the other confederated States. This enlightened policy produced union, and has secured liberty. It has made our waste lands to swarm with a busy people, and added many powerful States to our confederation. As well for the fruits which these noble works of our ancestors have produced, as for the devotedness in which they originated, we should hesitate before we demolish them.

But there are other principles asserted in the bill which would have impelled me to withhold my signature, had I not seen in it a violation of the compacts by which the United States acquired title to a large portion of the public lands. It reasserts the principle contained in the bill authorizing a subscription to the stock of the Maysville, Washington, Paris, and Lexington Turnpike Road Company, from which I was compelled to withhold my consent for reasons contained in my message of May 27, 1830, to the House of Representatives. The leading principle then asserted was that Congress possesses no constitutional power to appropriate any part of the moneys of the United States for objects of a local character within the States. That principle I cannot be mistaken in supposing has received the unequivocal sanction of the American people, and all subsequent reflection has but satisfied me the more thoroughly that the interests of our people and the purity of our government, if not its existence, depend on its observance. The public lands are the common property of the United States, and the moneys arising from their sales are a part of the public revenue. This bill proposes to raise from, and appropriate a portion of, the public revenue to certain States, providing expressly that it shall "be applied to objects of internal improvement or education within those States," and then proceeds to appropriate the balance to all the States, with the declaration that it shall be applied "to such purposes as the legislatures of the said respective States shall deem proper." The former appropriation is expressly for internal improvements or education, without qualification as to the kind of improvements, and therefore in express violation of the principle maintained in my objections to the turnpike road bill above referred to. The latter appropriation is more broad, and gives the money to be applied to any local purpose whatsoever. It will not be denied that under the provisions of the bill a portion of the money might have been applied to making the very road to which the bill of 1830 had reference, and must of course come within the scope of the same principle. If the money of the United States cannot be applied to local purposes through its own agents, as little can it be permitted to be thus expended through the agency of the State governments.

It has been supposed that, with all the reductions in our revenue which could be speedily effected by Congress without injury to the substantial interests of the country, there might be for some years to come a surplus of moneys in the treasury, and that there was in principle no objection to returning them to the people by whom they were paid. As the literal accomplishment of such an object is obviously impracticable, it was thought admissible, as the nearest approximation to it, to hand them over to the State governments, the more immediate representatives of the people, to be by them applied to the benefit of those to whom they properly belonged. The principle and the object was to return to the people an unavoidable surplus of revenue which might have been paid by them under a system which could not at once be abandoned; but even this resource, which at one time seemed to be almost the only alternative to save the general government from grasping unlimited power over internal improvements, was suggested with doubts of its constitutionality.

But this bill assumes a new principle. Its object is not to return to the people an unavoidable surplus of revenue paid in by them, but to create a surplus for distribution among the States. It seizes the entire proceeds of one source of revenue and sets them apart as a surplus, making it necessary to raise the moneys for supporting the government and meeting the general charges from other sources. It even throws the entire land system upon the customs for its support, and makes the public lands a perpetual charge upon the treasury. It does not return to the people moneys accidentally or unavoidably paid by them to the government, by which they are not wanted, but compels the people to pay moneys into the treasury for the mere purpose of creating a surplus for distribution to their State governments. If this principle be once admitted, it is not difficult to see to what consequences it may lead. Already this bill, by throwing the land system on the revenues from imports for support, virtually distributes among the States a part of those revenues. The proportion may be increased from time to time, without any departure from the principle now asserted, until the State governments shall derive all the funds necessary for their support from the treasury of the United States; or if a sufficient supply should be obtained by some States and not by others, the deficient States might complain, and to put an end to all further difficulty, Congress, without assuming any new principle, need go but one step further, and put the salaries of all the State governors, judges, and other officers, with a sufficient sum for other expenses, in their general appropriation bill.

It appears to me that a more direct road to consolidation cannot be devised. Money is power, and in that government which pays all the public officers of the States will all political power be substantially concentrated. The State governments, if governments they might be called, would lose all their independence and dignity. The economy which now distinguishes them would be converted into a profusion, limited only by the extent of the supply. Being the dependents of the general government, and looking to its treasury as the source of all their emoluments, the State officers, under whatever names they might pass, and by whatever forms their duties might be prescribed, would in effect be the mere stipendiaries and instruments of the central power.

I am quite sure that the intelligent people of our several States will be satisfied, on a little reflection, that it is neither wise nor safe to release the members of their local legislatures from the responsibility of levying the taxes necessary to support their State governments and vest it in Congress, over most of whose members they have no control. They will not think it expedient that Congress shall be the tax-gather and paymaster of all their State governments, thus amalgamating all their officers into one mass of common interest and common feeling. It is too obvious that such a course would subvert our well balanced system of government, and ultimately deprive us of all the blessings now derived from our happy union.

However willing I might be that any unavoidable surplus in the treasury should be returned to the people through their State governments, I cannot assent to the principle that a surplus may be created for the purpose of distribution. Viewing this bill as in effect assuming the right not only to create a surplus for that purpose, but to divide the contents of the treasury among the States without limitation, from whatever source they may be derived, and asserting the power to raise and appropriate money for the support of every State government and institution, as well as for making every local improvement, however trivial, I cannot give it my assent.

It is difficult to perceive what advantages would accrue to the old States or the new from the system of distribution which this bill proposes, if it were otherwise unobjectionable. It requires no argument to prove that if three million of dollars a year, or any other sum, shall be taken out of the treasury by this bill for distribution, it must be replaced by the same sum collected from the people through some other means. The old States will receive annually a sum of money from the treasury, but they will pay in a larger sum, together with the expenses of collection and distribution. It is only their proportion of seven-eighths of the proceeds of land sales which they are to receive, but they must pay their due proportion of the whole. Disguise it as we may, the bill proposes to them a dead loss in the ratio of eight to seven, in addition to expenses and other incidental losses. This assertion is not the less true because it may not at first be palpable. Their receipts will be in large sums, but their payments in small ones. The governments of the States will receive seven dollars, for which the people of the States will pay eight. The large sums received will be palpable to the senses; the small sums paid it requires thought to identify. But a little consideration will satisfy the people that the effect is the same as if seven hundred dollars were given them from the public treasury, for which they were at the same time required to pay in taxes, direct or indirect, eight hundred.

I deceive myself greatly if the new States would find their interests promoted by such a system as this bill proposes. Their true policy consists in the rapid settling and improvement of the waste lands within their limits. As a means of hastening those events, they have long been looking to a reduction in the price of public lands upon the final payment of the national debt. The effect of the proposed system would be to prevent that reduction. It is true the bill reserves to Congress the power to reduce the price; but the effect of its details, as now arranged, would probably be forever to prevent its exercise.

With the just men who inhabit the new States it is a sufficient reason to reject this system, that it is in violation of the fundamental laws of the republic and its Constitution; but if it were a mere question of interest or expediency they would still reject it. They would not sell their bright prospect of increasing wealth and growing power at such a price. They would not place a sum of money to be paid into their treasuries in competition with the settlement of their waste lands and the increase of their population. They would not consider a small or a large annual sum, to be paid to their governments and immediately expended, as an equivalent for that enduring wealth which is composed of flocks and herds and cultivated farms. No temptation will allure them from that object of abiding interest, the settlement of their waste lands and the increase of a hardy race of free citizens—their glory in peace and their defence in war.

On the whole, I adhere to the opinion expressed by me in my annual message of 1832, that it is our true policy that the public lands shall cease, as soon as practicable, to be a source of revenue, except for the payment of those general charges which grow out of the acquisition of the lands—their survey and sale. Although these expenses have not been met by the proceeds of sales heretofore, it is quite certain they will be hereafter, even after a considerable reduction in the price. By meeting in the treasury so much of the general charge as arises from that source, they will hereafter, as they have been heretofore, be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States, according to the compacts of cession. I do not doubt that it is the real interest of each and all the States in the Union, and particularly of the new States, that the price of these lands shall be reduced and graduated, and that, after they have been offered for a certain number of years, the refuse remaining unsold shall be abandoned to the States, and the machinery of our land system entirely withdrawn. It cannot be supposed the compacts intended that the United States should retain forever a title to lands within the States which are of no value, and no doubt is entertained that the general interest would be best promoted by surrendering such lands to the States.

This plan for disposing of the public lands impairs no principle, violates no compact, and deranges no system. Already has the price of those lands been reduced from two dollars per acre to one dollar and a quarter, and upon the will of Congress it depends whether there shall be a further reduction. While the burdens of the cost are diminishing by the reduction of the duties upon imports, it seems but equal justice that the chief burden of the west should be lightened in an equal degree at least. It would be just to the old States and the new, conciliate every interest, disarm the subject of all its dangers, and add another guarantee to the perpetuity of our happy Union.

Sensible, however, of the difficulties which surround this important subject, I can only add to my regrets at finding myself again compelled to disagree with the legislative power, the sincere declaration that any plan which shall promise a final and satisfactory disposition of the question, and be compatible with the Constitution and public faith, shall have my hearty concurrence.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Register's Office, March 1, 1833.

AN ACT to appropriate for a limited time the proceeds of the sales of the public lands of the United States, and for granting land to certain States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the thirty-first day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, there be allowed and paid to each of the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Mississippi, and Louisiana, over and above what each of the said States is entitled to by the terms of the compacts entered into between them respectively upon their admission into the Union, and the United States, the sum of twelve and a half per centum upon the net amount of the sales of the public lands which subsequent to the day aforesaid shall be made within the several limits of the said States, which said sum of twelve and a half per centum shall be applied to some object or objects of internal improvement or education within the said States, under the direction of their respective legislatures: Provided, That said dividend and distribution, or the proportion of any State therein, shall be in nowise affected or diminished on account of any sums which have been heretofore, or shall be hereafter, applied to the construction or continuance of the Cumberland road, but that the same shall remain, as heretofore, chargeable on the two per centum fund provided for by the compacts with the new States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, after deducting the said twelve and a half per centum, and what by the compacts aforesaid has heretofore been allowed to the States aforesaid, the residue of the net proceeds of all the public lands of the United States, wherever situated, which shall be sold subsequent to the said thirty-first day of December, shall be divided among the twenty-four States of the Union, according to their respective federal representative population, as ascertained by the last census, to be applied by the legislatures of the said States to such purposes as the legislatures of the respective States shall deem proper: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to the prejudice of future applications for a reduction of the price of the public lands, or to the prejudice of applications for a transfer of the public lands on reasonable terms to the States within which they lie, nor to impair the power of Congress to make such future disposition of the public lands, or any part thereof, as it may see fit.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said several sums of money shall be paid at the treasury of the United States half yearly to such person or persons as the respective legislatures of the said States may authorize and direct.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue and be in force for the term of five years from the said thirty-first day of December, unless the United States shall become involved in war with any foreign power; in which event, from the commencement of hostilities, this act shall cease and be no longer in force: Provided, nevertheless, That if prior to the expiration of this act any new State or States shall be admitted into the Union, the power is reserved of assigning by law to such new State or States the proportion to which such State or States may be entitled upon the principles of this act, and upon the principles of any of the compacts made as aforesaid with either of the seven States first mentioned.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That, during the period in which the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands shall be distributed among the several States according to the provisions of this act, there shall be annually appropriated for completing the surveys of said lands a sum not less than eighty thousand dollars; and the minimum price at which the public lands are now sold at private sale shall not be increased; and, in case the same shall be increased by law within the period aforesaid, so much of this act as provides that the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands shall be distributed among the several States shall, from and after the increase of the minimum price thereof, cease and become utterly null and of no effect, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever for two successive years it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury that the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within any land district now established, or which may hereafter be established by law, shall not be sufficient to discharge the salaries of the officers employed by the United States within such district, he may discontinue such officers, and the lands contained in such district remaining unsold shall in such case be annexed to the adjoining district.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That there shall be granted to each of the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Missouri the quantity of five hundred thousand acres of land; to the State of Indiana one hundred and fifteen thousand two hundred and seventy-two acres; to the State of Illinois twenty thousand acres; to the State of Alabama one hundred thousand acres of land, lying within the limits of said States respectively, to be selected in such manner as the legislatures thereof shall direct, and located in parcels, conformably to sectional divisions and subdivisions, of not less than three hundred and twenty acres in any one location on any public land subject to entry at private sale, which said locations may be made at any time within five years after the lands of the United States in said States respectively shall have been surveyed and offered at public sale, according to existing laws.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the lands herein granted to the States above named shall not be disposed of at a price less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre until otherwise directed by law; and the net proceeds of the sales of said lands shall be faithfully applied to objects of internal improvement within the States aforesaid respectively, namely, roads, bridges, canals, and improvement of water-courses and draining swamps; and such roads, canals, bridges, and water-courses, when made or improved, shall be free for the transportation of the United States mail and munitions of war, and for the passage of their troops, without the payment of any toll whatever.

23D CONGRESS] No. 1120. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR A DONATION OF LAND TO ACTUAL SETTLERS ON THE WESTERN FRONTIER OF THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 11, 1833.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, would respectfully represent to your honorable body that owing to the sparse and unconnected settlements on the western border of this Territory, the inhabitants are greatly exposed to the depredations of the numerous tribes of Indians who inhabit the country on our west.

Believing, as we do, that a dense population is the most efficient barrier against a savage foe, we will suggest the utility of making a donation of land to actual settlers who have or may remain for the term of five years within a reasonable distance of that frontier. This would be a means of drawing to our border large numbers of the hardy pioneers of the western States, whose experience in Indian warfare would put a speedy termination to all depredations. This would obviate the necessity of keeping up the military posts on our frontier, and would consequently be the means of saving to the government an annual expenditure of thousands of dollars.

The lands on our western frontier are generally poor; the good land is situated in small detached parcels, and the government can never, as your memorialists believe, realize much from the sale thereof. A dense population on our frontier that would be permanent, will greatly enhance the value of the adjacent lands, and, indeed, we believe it would add much to their value throughout the Territory.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR A DONATION OF LAND TO EACH COUNTY TO AID IN THE ERECTION OF COUNTY BUILDINGS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 11, 1833.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, would respectfully represent to your honorable body that the Territory being but thinly settled, and in the main by persons of but moderate circumstances as respects their property, and those settlements being in all portions of the Territory, it has become the duty of the general assembly to divide the Territory into counties for the convenience of the citizens in the administration of the laws of the country. Though this was a policy dictated by the best reasons, yet a consequence resulting therefrom is that in but few counties of the Territory are the citizens provided with court-houses or jails, or have they the means of erecting them. Your memorialists would respectfully ask an appropriation of one section of land to each county to aid in the erection of the public buildings in the several counties of this Territory. We are encouraged to make this appliction to your liberality from the fact that an appropriation has been made by Congress for the building of a court-house and jail in the county of Pulaski, in this Territory. We respectfully ask of your honorable body the passage of a law extending similar donations to each of the counties of this Territory, and to be placed under the control of the legislature of this Territory, and under such restrictions as in your wisdom you shall deem expedient; and the prayer of your memorialists being granted, they, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

OPERATIONS OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE DURING THE YEAR 1833.

COMMUNICATED TO CONGRESS, WITH THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON THE FINANCES, DECEMBER 17, 1833.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, November 30, 1833.

SIR: I have the honor of submitting to your examination, and for the consideration of the government, a report of the operations of this office during the past year, the present condition of the same, with its arrears of business, and the necessary action of Congress to enable it to discharge its various duties with more promptness, and with that justice which is due to the parties interested and to the public service.

The annexed document, marked A, shows the periods to which the quarterly accounts of the receivers have been rendered to this office, as also the monthly abstracts of sales and receipts, and the admitted balances remaining in the hands of the receivers at the respective dates of their last returns. With few exceptions, the land officers have been very prompt in transmitting to this office their monthly and quarterly statements, as required by law and the regulations of the department.

The accompanying statement, marked B, exhibits for the year 1832, and the first three quarters of 1833, the amount of public lands sold in the respective States and Territories, the several amounts received in cash, in forfeited land stock, in military bounty land scrip, and the total amount of purchase money, with the amount paid into the treasury. From which statement it will appear, that the sales of the first three quarters of 1833 have exceeded those of the corresponding quarters of 1832, 532,838 acres, $655,080 of purchase money, and of amount paid into the treasury, the sum of $609,838. This excess can be accounted for in the increasing disposition for emigration which pervades the Atlantic States and many portions of Europe, and in the persevering industry and enterprise of our western and southwestern population. It is not improbable that the sales for the present year will amount to three million of acres, and the money paid into the public treasury exceed three million of dollars. In many of the districts the largest sales frequently occur in the last quarter of the year.

I have caused to be prepared the tabular statement, marked C, which presents at one view the sales of the public lands, under the cash system, from its commencement, on the 1st of July, 1820, to the end of the year 1832. It exhibits the quantity sold at the several land offices in each year, with the aggregate amount at each office during the whole of that period, as also the amount sold in each year in the several States and Territories, together with the total amount in each year, the total amount in each State and Territory, with the grand total. This statement also shows the progressive increase of the ordinary sales, with the exception of the year 1832, which did not equal those of 1831 by 315,514 acres, in consequence, principally, of the general prevalence of the Asiatic cholera in many of those districts to which emigration tended, and from which it usually emanates, and the Indian war which pervaded the northern frontier of Illinois and the western part of Michigan.

A schedule of forfeited land stock issued and received at the several land offices, under the provisions of the acts of Congress of May 23, 1828, March 31, 1830, and July 9, 1832, is herewith appended, marked D. It shows the amount issued and received at each office in each of the years 1828, 1829, 1830, 1831, 1832, and the first three quarters of 1833, the total amount issued and received in each year, the whole amount at each office during that period, with their respective grand totals. The small balance of less than $16,400 of the whole amount issued remained to be received and accounted for at this office on the 30th of September last.

By the act of May 30, 1830, there were appropriated 260,000 acres of land, subject to private entry, in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, to satisfy the unlocated military bounty land warrants of the Virginia State line and navy; 50,000 acres of the Virginia continental line, and an unlimited quantity for the United States military warrants, for services rendered in the revolutionary war; and scrip was authorized to be issued in eighty-acre tracts in lieu of said warrants. The act of July 13, 1832, made an additional appropriation of 300,000 acres for the Virginia continental line and the State line and navy; and by the act of March 2, 1833, the further quantity of 200,000 acres was appropriated for the Virginia warrants, to be located on any of the public lands liable to sale at private entry; making a total for Virginia warrants of 810,000 acres. Of this quantity, scrip had been issued, or prepared to be issued, by the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 15th of November instant, for 772,424 acres, leaving a balance of 37,576 acres, the warrants for which have been filed, and the scrip will be issued thereon as soon as the title papers thereof shall be completed. The schedule hereunto annexed, marked E, exhibits a summary statement of the number of warrants which have been satisfied, of each class or description; the quantity of land for which scrip has been issued; its amount in money, at $1 25 per acre, together with the total number of certificates of scrip issued. Virginia warrants have already been filed for about 10,000 acres, exceeding the amount which can be satisfied with scrip out of the appropriations which have been made. I have no means of ascertaining the amount of outstanding Virginia warrants not yet filed in this office, and it will be for the decision of Congress whether further provisions shall be made to satisfy the same.

The annexed statement, marked F, shows the amount in money of the military land scrip received in payment for public lands, at the several land offices, in the years 1830, 1831, 1832, and the first three quarters of 1833, with the total amount in each year in each State and at each office, with the grand total. It will appear from this statement, that of the whole amount of scrip issued, ($1,063,592,) there had been received at the land offices and accounted for at this office, on the 30th of September last, the sum of $754,827; and that of this sum, more than one-half had been taken at the Zanesville office, in Ohio, and at the office at Indianapolis, in Indiana. It is altogether, in my opinion, irreconcilable with the ordinary course of such business and the usual current of public sales, that so large a portion should have been received at these offices without the connivance or direct agency of the land officers and their clerks, or one or more of them, at each office, by which scrip has been taken in cases where otherwise cash would have been received. Other offices have also received and transmitted an unexpected amount; in consequence of which, measures have been taken to ascertain the facts and circumstances connected with these transactions, and explanations have been required of the officers. Before the close of the present session of Congress, the department will be able to show the causes and agencies which have contributed to throw this species of property so rapidly upon the government.

The appropriation of seven thousand dollars, made at the last session of Congress, for extra clerk hire for this office, has enabled me to progress with its current business to a very considerable extent, and to great advantage to those most interested, and to the government. Out of that appropriation there have been opened twenty-two tract books, containing the entries of the tracts of 504 townships; the posting of about 17,000 entries of lands sold, besides the writing and recording of more than 13,000 patents, and the performance of a large amount of miscellaneous business, equally pressing and important. Yet, notwithstanding the benefits which have resulted from that appropriation, the force of the office, provided by law, has been inadequate to the discharge of its current duties, and leaving, at the close of the present year, a greater aggregate amount of arrears than existed on the 1st of January last.

On the passage of the act of March 2, 1833, providing for the appointment of a secretary to sign patents in the name of the President, there were written and recorded, and prepared for signature, more than twenty thousand patents for lands sold. In consequence of the provisions of that act, it became necessary to alter the date of execution of each patent, and the record thereof, and the indorsement of the certificate on which the same was found. This service was an expense to the office of more than six hundred dollars, requiring, on all the documents, more than sixty thousand alterations or additions, and, in effect, abstracted that sum from the appropriation for the salaries of the permanent clerks. I would, therefore, for the purpose of reimbursing that amount to the office, respectfully recommend a special appropriation of six hundred dollars, to be expended in writing and recording four thousand patents, which would diminish that branch of arrears, without interfering with current duties.

The unfortunate destruction of the Treasury building by fire admonished me of the propriety and absolute necessity of adopting every precautionary measure to secure the safety of the title papers, records, and other important documents, which constitute the archives of this office. On a particular examination, with a view to that object, it was found that about two tons of the papers, embracing a large portion which belong to the credit system of the land sales, were deposited in the attic story of the building, immediately under the roof, in the utmost confusion, in bundles arranged neither in chronological order nor in the order of consecutive numbers. On a representation of these facts to the then Secretary of the Treasury, and by his advice, I have adopted those means which would secure to the government, and to the extensive regions of the Ohio and Mississippi, the safety and security of those documents which are connected with the land titles of more than three million of white population. Portable cases for all papers and documents not of daily use, and fire-bags for each room of the office, have been contracted for, and will be delivered in the course of two or three weeks, while the assortment and arrangement of the title papers are in rapid progress by persons especially employed in that service. The plan adopted, and which, when completed, as it will be in two or three months, will enable twenty able-bodied men, in case of fire, to remove from the office every paper, document, book, and record of the same, to a place of security, in fifteen minutes, without the derangement of either; so that, in case the roof and second story of the building should be in flames, everything belonging to the Land Office, except its furniture, could be saved and removed by the ordinary assistance which is found in the case of fires. The whole expense of these necessary and precautionary measures will amount to about twenty-six hundred dollars, for which a special appropriation is respectfully requested.

One of the most serious causes which have produced the delays and embarrassments to the performance of the ordinary business of this office is the want of the statutes and the reports of the adjudicated decisions of the highest courts of justice in the several States. The daily necessity of a recurrence to such documents, and the difficulty of obtaining access to the same, has been the occasion of vexatious delays, in numerous instances, to the parties immediately interested, and to the prompt discharge of official duty. This can be remedied by a special appropriation for that purpose of about twenty-five hundred dollars, which is respectfully and urgently recommended. It is frequently the case that a resort to these statutes, and the reported decisions thereon, is absolutely necessary to a correct action on questions arising under the law of descent, the jurisdiction of probate matters, the settlement and distribution of intestate estates, the law of judgments and executions, and the lien created thereby, with the law of assurance or conveyances in relation to real estate. Access to these sources of information is often indispensable to the security of individual rights, and important to the pecuniary interests of the government. In many of the States some of the principles of the common law have been declared inapplicable to the peculiar circumstances of the people and the country, and inconsistent with the genius and provisions of our political institutions; and others have been substituted by legislative adoption, compatible with constitutional rights and the immunities of the citizen. Hundreds of questions are presented every year, in the administration of the powers and duties of this office, involving the examination and application of legal principles connected with the subjects above enumerated; and it is a matter of surprise to me that more complaints have not been made against the decisions of the Commissioner in cases where he has been called upon to decide, without the requisite legal information to do so understandingly. In many instances, I have no doubt, they have been submitted to, rather than incur the expense of an appeal to the administration of justice in the United States courts. These evils should no longer prevail, and the excuse for them should cease to exist by the appropriate action of Congress. The small sum necessary to be appropriated cannot come in competition with the resulting benefits to individuals and to the government. There is probably no bureau under the executive departments which requires so frequent recurrence to the statutes and judicial decisions of the several States as that of the General Land Office, and in which they are so necessary to the administration of right and justice. In truth, it has become in practice, from necessity, a court of exchequer, where its decisions are tacitly assented to, from ignorance of the law, or acquiesced in from pecuniary considerations. My duty to the government and to individual rights requires this statement from me, as an act of justice to the parties interested, and as highly proper and important for the legislative action of Congress.

Although the above statements and exhibits show that the duties of this office are annually increasing and rapidly accumulating, it is proper for me to say that they present but a small portion of the items of such increase. Exclusive of the correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to the issue of military bounty land scrip since the 1st of January last, which is equal to the writing and recording of 342 letters, and the letters written to the several land officers, acknowledging the receipt of their monthly and quarterly returns, amounting to 1,150 to the 15th of the present month, there have been written in the office, on other subjects, from the 1st of January last to the 15th instant, including copies of a portion of the same, 4,589 letters, occupying in the record thereof 3,047 large folio pages. During the present year there will have been issued and transmitted from the office more than forty thousand patents, leaving an arrear of patents for lands sold, at the close of the year, in amount exceeding SEVENTY THOUSAND. To this should be added, besides other increasing demands upon the office, the requirements of individuals for copies of title papers, records, correspondence, and other documents, to be used in the administration of justice, the settlement of intestate estates, to supply the loss or destruction of the originals, and for other lawful purposes, which will amount for the present year, at twelve and a half cents per one hundred words, to a sum exceeding three thousand dollars. This class of requisitions upon the time and duties of the office must annually increase with the progress of the sales of the national domain, the opening and clearing the forests, and the extension of the western settlements. Another source of expense to the office, and which is constantly increasing with the accumulation of its arrears, is the issuing, in ignorance of the fact, of patents to purchasers, or to their assigns, after the death of the patentees. To remedy this defect in the system of legal grants for lands sold, which has now become serious and embarrassing, it is necessary for Congress to provide by law that patents issued to persons deceased, the legal title shall inure to the heirs or devisees, to every lawful effect and extent, as if they had been executed and delivered in the lifetime of the same.

The surveys of the public lands have progressed to a very considerable extent, a large portion of which, however, are rendered immediately unavailing, in consequence of the deficiency of aid provided by law in the offices of the surveyors general. At the present time I am not able to make a particular report thereof, but it is expected that statements in detail of the progress of this work, and the condition and necessities of each office on the 1st of January next, will be returned as soon as practicable after that date, by the several surveying departments. When these statements are received they will be communicated in extenso, or in a condensed form, as may be required. It is known, however, that the surveys of about 800 townships have been made and paid for, the plats and descriptive notes of which should be returned to this office, and to the proper land offices, in the course of six or eight months. A large amount of surveys have been made and are in progress, which will be completed and paid for, and the returns thereof made, during the year 1834, if the necessary means should be provided by Congress. I consider it my duty to state, in connexion with this subject, that it is impossible for the public surveys to progress, and the sales and disposition of the national domain to be facilitated and extended with advantage to the government, and without injury to individuals, unless more discretionary power is vested in the Treasury Department to meet unforeseen evils and the defects of legislation, to bring up and prevent the accumulation of arrears, and to secure a prompt and efficient discharge of public duty. I would, therefore, respectfully propose that the Secretary of the Treasury, on a reported statement of facts by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, be authorized and directed by law to cause all the arrears of the surveying departments to be brought up as soon as practicable; to require an authenticated transcript of the records of the field-notes to be transmitted to the General Land Office; to cause renewed township plats to be furnished to the land offices, where the originals have become so defaced and injured, and the entries thereon obliterated by constant use, as to be no longer available in every particular as public documents; and to make reasonable allowance for the surveys of the principal and guide meridians and base lines, and particular sections of the public lands, in cases where they cannot be executed for the prices allowed by law; and that the expense thereof be paid out of the general appropriation for the surveys of the public lands.

In making this annual report I am again required, by a sense of public duty, to present a brief view of the arrears of business in this office, and the means necessary to bring up those arrears, in connexion with a proper discharge of current duty. Under the head of—

1st. Private land claims. The printing and publication of State papers, by Gales & Seaton, and Duff Green, supersede much of the duty previously required by this bureau. The arrears of this branch of business can now be brought up by one competent clerk in one year.

2d. Military bounty lands. The duties now required to be performed under this head would require the time of three clerks for one year.

3d. Posting the entries and sales of public lands, and adjusting the quarterly accounts thereof, would occupy the time, for one year, of six intelligent and industrious clerks.

4th. Indexes to the records of patents, a work of the most pressing necessity, and which is almost entirely in arrears from the commencement of the public land sales, cannot be accomplished in less than one year, by fifteen active and competent clerks.

5th. The opening of tract books for surveys already returned to the office, as rendered necessary by the quarter section subdivision, would require the service of two clerks for one year.

6th. Writing, recording, and examining patents for lands sold. The amount of arrears under this head, for lands sold to the 1st of January next, will exceed SEVENTY-TWO THOUSAND PATENTS. To write, record, and examine the same, would require the service of eighteen diligent clerks for a year.

7th. Suspended cases under the credit system, from the difficulty of completing the title papers, and the great labor of examination, will demand the service of two clerks one year, who are acquainted with this duty.

8th. The draughtsman's bureau. There are now in the office 926 township plats to be protracted on the maps of the proper land districts, besides about 800 other plats, which are expected to be returned in the course of six or eight months; information having been received that the surveys thereof have been made and returned to the respective surveyors general. To make the protractions and connexions, which should be done in the course of the ensuing year, will require the labor of one competent and industrious draughtsman at least twelve months. The lands selected by the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Alabama, under grants for canal purposes, and those selected under grants for other purposes, with the school lands selected in lieu of section 16, have all to be entered and marked on the township plats and maps of the proper districts. To perform this service, as also that of making similar entries under the act of April, 1832, authorizing a subdivision of the fractional sections into forty-acre tracts, would occupy the time of a draughtsman more than one year. If it is contemplated by the government to complete the service as far as practicable, required by a resolution of the Senate of February 28, 1823, the labor of one draughtsman acquainted with the duty would be required for six years. The daily interruption to the proper discharge of public duty, and the expense resulting to the office in consequence of the continuance of these arrears, have become evils of the most serious character, and should be done away immediately.

9th. Miscellaneous arrears, other than those enumerated, would occupy the time of four clerks one year. These arrears, now amounting to the services of fifty-nine clerks for one year, have been accumulating for a long period of time, a large portion of which existed before the administration of the office was committed to my hands. They have arisen from the physical impossibility of the office to discharge all the duties required of it by law, with the force provided for that purpose; from the injudicious and unfortunate reduction of six of its clerks in 1827; from the great increase of business arising under the relief laws since 1826; from the establishment of additional land and surveying districts; from the numerous reservations made in Indian treaties; from the many grants of public lands for canal, road, literary, and other purposes; and from the great increase of miscellaneous business, within the last four or five years, not previously demanded of the office.

To bring up these arrears, I would respectfully recommend that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to cause the same to be done, and the expenses thereof paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to such an extent as, in his judgment, the necessities of the government and justice to individuals may require. And to enable the office to discharge its current duties, I propose the employment therein of one chief clerk at a salary of $1,700 per annum; one clerk at $1,500; five at $1,400; ten at $1,150; and thirteen at $1,000; making, in all, thirty clerks; and also one draughtsman at $1,500, one assistant draughtsman at $1,150, one messenger at $700, and two assistant messengers at $350. For the reasons of this additional aid, and the increase of pay to a portion of the same, I refer you to my report made to the Secretary of the Treasury on the 21st of January last, and which has been printed as number 50 of the Senate documents of last session. If, however, it should not be deemed expedient by Congress to adopt this proposition, an appropriation of $6,000 per year, for the writing and recording of patents for lands sold, and a like appropriation for six extra clerks in the office, would greatly facilitate its business, and very much lessen the embarrassments under which it now labors.

All which is respectfully submitted.

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. R. B. TANEY, Secretary of the Treasury.

23D CONGRESS.] No 1123. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR THE SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS AT REDUCED PRICES IN LIMITED QUANTITIES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 17, 1833.

MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States in relation to the public lands.

The general assembly of the State of Alabama would respectfully represent to the Congress of the United States that the most of the public lands now within the limits of this State are of that class which has been offered and not sold. The best lands have all been disposed of through government sales, and it is believed that the present minimum price far exceeds the intrinsic value of the lands now remaining unsold. Your memorialist would therefore respectfully suggest the propriety of reducing the price on this class of public lands, and of permitting them to be entered in subdivisions of forty acres, giving to the occupant, for a limited period, a preference in the purchase. This measure, it is believed, would be of essential benefit to our community generally, and particularly to that class of our citizens who have hitherto been unable to contend with the capitalist and the speculator in the market for the best land. We deem it unnecessary to attempt to illustrate by argument the benefits which we think would result both to our citizens and the government by the measure here proposed, and we respectfully submit these crude suggestions to the justice and liberality of the national legislature.

Your memorialists would again press upon the consideration of Congress the propriety of abandoning the present mode of disposing of the public lands at auction. This system is believed not to be beneficial to the government, and, in practice, is found to operate injuriously and oppressively upon the purchasers. We again suggest the policy of disposing of the lands by entry in tracts of from the lowest subdivision upwards to one quarter section, giving to actual settlers a preference for a reasonable time, and to reduce the price at fixed periods until sold. This system, it is believed, would encourage emigration ; hold forth additional inducements to purchase, and accelerate the settlement and cultivation of the public lands, and, by limiting the quantity to one quarter section, it would thwart the cupidity of speculating monopolies. Your memorialists again beg leave to present to your consideration the propriety of authorizing the holders of certificates of land on which one-fourth of the purchase money has been paid, and the land reverted to the government, to obtain certificates of scrip receivable in payment for other lands ; and also to authorize those purchasers of lands who have relinquished under the provisions of any of the acts of Congress for the relief of purchasers of public lands, and who, by relinquishment, have paid by certificate an amount over and above the amount for the lands so paid for, to obtain certificates of scrip to the amount of such over payment, which may be receivable in payment for other lands. Those last-mentioned purchasers, it is believed, have an equitable claim upon the justice of government.

Your memorialists respectfully submit the foregoing suggestions to the justice and liberality of the representatives of the nation with a full confidence that they will receive that consideration to which they are justly entitled, &c.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in general assembly convened, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their endeavors to procure the passage of a law embracing the objects of the foregoing memorial.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

Approved January 21, 1832.

I hereby certify that the foregoing memorial is a true copy taken from the original roll on file in this [L. S.] department. In testimony whereof, I hereunto set my hand and affix the seal of the State.

APPLICATION OF MISSOURI FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A GENERAL SYSTEM FOR THE DISPOSITION OF THE UNSURVEYED AND REFUSE LANDS IN THE NEW STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 19, 1833.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Missouri, respectfully represent: That when the public land lying within the boundary of this State was originally surveyed and brought into market, a considerable portion of said land was thought to be of but little value, on account of its being either broken, mountainous, marshy, or so entirely destitute of timber as not to admit of settlement and cultivation. Considerable portions of such land were returned by the surveyors as not worth the expense of surveying, and have never been surveyed or brought into market, but have remained unappropriated, as worthless or condemned land. Your memorialists represent, that although the principal part of the land thus returned is of an inferior quality, yet there are particular parts of it which the industry and enterprise of our citizens might render valuable. This land, being unsettled and uncultivated, is a serious injury and inconvenience to the neighboring settlements. It is believed by your memorialists that it would promote the interest of the State and general government, and of the frontier settlements particularly, to have this land speedily disposed of on any terms, provided it fall into the hands of citizens who have and may settle and reduce it to a state of cultivation. If said land be not worth the expense of surveying, there can be no object for the general government to retain it. Your memorialists believe that many individuals would be glad to obtain grants of small portions of the land that is thus situated, for the purpose of opening farms and obtaining a home for themselves and their families. The general government may thus confer a lasting and substantial favor on many industrious citizens, and promote the public good, without drawing one dollar from the national treasury, or in the least diminishing the resources of the country. They therefore pray that Congress may pass a law authorizing any individual to acquire a title to any portion, not exceeding one quarter section, of the land thus situated: provided he will cause the same to be surveyed and marked at his own expense, and settle and cultivate the same. A copy and plat of the survey should be filed and entered with the register of the land district in which the tract is situated. If this plan should not be considered proper, your memorialists would suggest that all such land should be conveyed to the State of Missouri; or if the government should not be disposed to dispose of them gratuitously, that the same should be speedily surveyed and brought into market at prices proportionate to the quality of the land. Although your memorialists feel more particularly interested in the disposal of that portion of the public land lying within this State, yet, as there is land similarly situated in other States, they request that any law that may pass on the subject shall be general.

Approved January 2, 1833.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN INDIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 19, 1833.

Mr. KINNARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Archibald Small, reported:

That the petitioner, on the 28th day of May, 1831, purchased at the land office at Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, the west half of the southwest quarter of section 33, in township 13 north, of range 5 east, through a mistake; that he intended to have entered the west half of the southeast quarter of the same section; that, in consequence of his not being able to read, he did not detect his error until March last, 1833, at a period too remote for him to get relief by virtue of the acts of Congress which authorize the correction of errors of the like kind. The prayer of the petitioner is to change his entry from the west half of the southwest quarter to the west half of the southeast quarter of section 33, in township No. 13 north, of range 5 east. There is sufficient before the committee to show that the entry was made through mistake, and that the petitioner is entitled to relief; and for that purpose report a bill.

23D CONGRESS.] No. 1126. [1ST SESSION.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR RELIEF TO PURCHASERS OF LAND IN THAT STATE IN THE YEARS 1818 AND 1819.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 23, 1833.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists would respectfully represent to your honorable bodies that many of the earliest and most worthy and valuable citizens of the State of Alabama became purchasers of lands from the United States in the years 1818 and 1819 at the extravagant prices at which they were then selling, and made settlements thereupon. It is a part of the history of this State that at that time cotton, the staple commodity of the country, was selling at a most extravagant price, thereby imparting an unreasonable and unusual value to all other property. Therefore, the purchases of land made under such circumstances, a price greatly exceeding their real value was in most if not in every instance given for them; shortly, however, cotton fell in its price, and produced a corresponding depreciation in the value of all other property. So great and destructive was this state of things that Congress, at its session in the year 1820, passed a law for the relief of land purchasers, and allowing them the privilege of relinquishing a part, and applying the payments made thereon to other parts retained, and of paying the residue of the purchase money at a discount of thirty-seven and a half per cent., or to take a further credit of six or eight years, (without interest,) according to the instalments paid. Believing that the terms offered by this act of Congress were the best that would ever be proposed, the class of purchasers to which your memorialists allude, feeling the great importance of securing homes for their families, paid the whole price of the lands retained, either by relinquishment or in cash at the discount. Since that time, however, Congress has from time to time extended relief to those who took further credit, until the cession of 1829 and 1830, when a law passed giving to those who had paid the amount of three dollars and fifty cents per acre a patent for their lands without further payment, and to those who had paid this amount the privilege of paying one dollar and twenty-five cents, or less, in addition to what they had formerly paid, and receiving a patent for their lands. The first class of persons thus relieved was composed of those who purchased lands at the price of fourteen dollars or upwards, and the second, of those who purchased at a less price. Another class of purchasers, who had only paid one-twentieth part of the purchase money, and permitted their lands to revert, were relieved by granting them scrip to the amount they had paid. Thus it is shown to your honorable bodies that all other classes of land purchasers, except those who were most prompt in paying their money into the public treasury, have been relieved; and your memorialists are entirely unable to see any justice in making this difference to the prejudice of those who had been most prompt in payment. And nothing is more common than to see persons residing in the same neighborhood, and, in fact, adjoining each other, with only an imaginary line between them, occupying lands of equal value, which were bid off at the same price at the sales, one of whom has paid twenty dollars per acre for his land, and the other only five; and so in proportion to the various prices at which the land sold. Such inequality is diametrically opposed to those principles of equal justice which should constitute the foundation of all legislation.

Your memorialists conceive it to be the duty of all governments, and particularly our own, so to legislate that equal rights and equal privileges may be established and preserved among its citizens, and to hold out every inducement to punctuality and good faith. Your memorialists cannot believe that the inequality in the law to which they have alluded was designed by Congress, but that it was the result of inadvertence; for your honorable bodies are not unapprised that the citizens alluded to are as valuable as those who have been relieved, and according to the revenue laws of this State have been compelled for years to pay a larger amount of taxes than those who had only paid a small portion of the purchase money on their lands.

Your memorialists, therefore, pray that a law may be passed placing this class of purchasers upon an equal footing with others who have received such ample and generous relief; and that the treasury may not be burdened by having to refund this money, your memorialists will be satisfied for this class of purchasers to be placed upon the same footing with those who permitted the lands they had purchased to revert to the government, by granting them scrip, receivable in payment for other lands which may hereafter be sold by the government; and in extending the benefits asked for by your memorialists, will, as in duty bound, ever pray, &c.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use every exertion in their power to carry the foregoing measures in the memorial into effect, and that his excellency be requested to furnish each of our delegation in Congress with a copy of the same.

To the Congress of the United States:

23D CONGRESS] No 1128. [1ST SESSION

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR THE RIGHT OF ASSIGNEES OF MILITARY BOUNTY LANDS TO FLOAT THEIR CLAIMS AND LOCATE OTHER LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1833.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas respectfully represents: That a large portion of the Territory of Arkansas, comprising the country between Arkansas and St. Francis rivers, has been surveyed and appropriated, for the satisfaction of military land warrants, granted for services during the late war. Within the limits above designated there is a considerable quantity of poor land unfit for cultivation, and with such a great number of the warrants were satisfied. With a view to benefit the soldier, the government has, from time to time, passed acts permitting the original patentees to relinquish their lands when found to be unfit for cultivation, and to locate others in lieu thereof. Still, the requirements of those acts were such as to render them of but little advantage to the soldier. The location of the bounty land district within the limits of Arkansas has been a serious disadvantage to the settlement and improvement of the country. The reasons are obvious why this is the case. The soldiers were mostly drawn from the eastern States, and but few of them were able to encounter a journey to the far west to examine the land for which they had so bravely fought. Those who were able were generally better situated than they would possibly be by a removal to a country about which they knew but little, and that little was sufficient to deter even the most daring and enterprising. They knew well the fact that their lands were located in a wilderness country, and to most of them, particularly those who had wives and children, the privations and hardships of forming a settlement so far remote from civilized society was truly appalling. The few who made the attempt succeeded but indifferently, and many of them found their land to be poor and entirely useless. From these circumstances this section of country has remained unsettled; and with a view to counteract these circumstances, so disadvantageous to the prosperity of the Territory, the act of Congress was passed giving to the Territory the power to levy a tax upon those lands. This act, designed, as it unquestionably was, for the benefit of the Territory, has had rather a deleterious tendency, because, under the power granted, the legislature of the Territory passed an act for the sale of such lands as were subject to taxation, and upon which the taxes were not paid. In accordance with and by authority of this act a great many of those lands have been sold for the non-payment of taxes. Tax titles in all countries are looked upon with suspicion, and it rarely or never happens that any considerable improvements are made on lands so situated. From this detail of the situation of the country it is certainly manifest that the military land district has been and still continues to be injurious to the settlement of the Territory. If a doubt existed as to the truth of this position, the fact that nearly every other portion of the Territory is rapidly advancing in population while the military land district receives scarcely any accession to its population ought to strike to the mind of even the most sceptical. Your memorialists cannot believe that it is the wish of an enlightened national legislature to continue any longer this incubus upon the Territory. In reflecting upon this subject, it appears to your memorialists that there is but one mode by which relief can be afforded. An act giving to every legal assignee or representative of the original patentee the right to relinquish land unfit for cultivation, on payment of all taxes and arrearages of taxes due on said lands, and to re-locate any other unimproved lands in said military district in lieu thereof, would immediately throw into the territorial treasury a large amount of revenue, and entirely destroy the tax title, because then it would be an object worthy the attention of the assignees and the original patentees, and they would redeem the lands which had been sold for taxes and which had been purchased by the Territory, for want of bidders. Of this class there are several thousands. It is a well-known fact that a large number of the soldiers of the late war yet own their land, and the passage of such an act would enable them to sell their lands, and thereby receive a remuneration for the dangers and the privations which they have undergone to maintain the reputation and liberty of their country. Such a law would add a new impetus to emigration, and enable Arkansas, at a period not far distant, to gain admittance into the Union, and assume a proud rank among independent States. Taking a more enlarged view of this subject, it appears to your memorialists that the public lands, since the payment of the public debt, cannot be better appropriated than by applying them to the discharge of an obligation which that government created, and which they are bound honorably to satisfy. The soldier who enlisted in the late war did not believe, upon taking the bounty, that the promise of the government would be obliterated by giving him a title to land situated in a desert, wild and incomparatively poor and sterile. It matters not, in the opinion of your memorialists, as respects the obligation of the government, whether or not the soldier has transferred his right. If, in making his transfer, he received but little for his land, it was owing to its situation and its sterility. His transfer carried with it all his right, and if he was entitled to good land, no tenable argument can be used why his assignee should not be.

With these suggestions, your memorialists submit this subject to the consideration of your honorable body, believing that their justness is sufficiently manifest to elicit its interposition.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

APPLICATION OF THE STATE OF ARKANSAS FOR A REDUCTION OF THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS, AND FOR A GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR THE USE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 23, 1833.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, your memorialists, beg leave to represent to your honorable bodies that the growth and prosperity of our feeble portion of the republic is greatly and grievously retarded by the present high price of the public lands, and that many and cogent reasons induce us to ask for a reduction in their value to such price as shall be sufficient to pay the expenses of surveying the same. We would urge it upon your consideration that the people whom we represent do not, in effect, while under a territorial government, enjoy those full rights or stand upon that broad footing of equality which is the basis of our Constitution, and which equality every freeman should wear upon his breast as his motto. To present to you the vast disadvantages of our present condition is not our purpose in this memorial; but, looking upon it sorrowfully, as we do, we cannot but say that we regard with dislike and aversion everything which tends to hold us in it, or to hinder and retard the increase of our population. Besides this, we, above all other parts of the republic, are exposed to the hordes of savages upon the frontiers, and our population is thinnest where brave men are most needed. On the one side we have the unprincipled and discontented Mexican, and on the other the wild Indian of the prairie and the revengeful tribes which are every day gathering upon our border. A few troops, brave though they may be, can afford but small defence to our country, wide as it is in extent and thinly peopled. It is only by the increase of the population, by the hardy pioneer of the forest, that the savage can be overawed and our peace and safety insured. To encourage emigration, we would humbly say, is the only true policy which you can pursue; to lower the price of the public lands, the only means by which emigration can be encouraged and increased. Few, very few, men in a new country can, without distressing themselves, obtain money wherewith to purchase a tract of land at the present price, and it argues the most lamentable ignorance of our condition to say that he who cannot is not fit for a citizen. We would likewise represent that much of the good land in this Territory has been taken up by Spanish confirmations and claims of various kinds. Thus almost the only lands which we have remaining to us are those of an inferior quality and of less value, and, in a particular manner, those which are more immediately upon the frontier. This, also, at the present price of the lands, tends to prevent emigration.

We would likewise humbly say that throughout the west there is growing a feeling of dislike to the older States, founded principally upon the obstinacy displayed in keeping up the price of the public lands, and we would ask whether such feelings should be fostered or even permitted to exist without some most powerful and urgent reason. It is conceived to be unjust as well as unnecessary to hold the lands at their present price, since the public debt may now be considered as liquidated, and since we are in possession of an abundant revenue. Nay, the revenue will, in our opinion, be increased by a reduction in the price of the lands, through the increasing emigration which will follow thereupon.

We would likewise humbly represent that large tracts of country in this Territory have been returned unfit for survey, and that though they are so in truth, still they contain some detached portions of good land. We therefore pray you to place these portions of country in the hands of the general assembly of this Territory, for their disposal in such manner and at such prices as to them may seem proper, inasmuch as this will in no way injure the revenue, and will tend greatly to the advancement and growth of the Territory.

For the sake of becoming equal citizens of this great republic; for the sake of increasing a power and influence in ourselves which shall always be applied to the defence of the Union; for the sake of defending ourselves from the fury of the merciless savage; and lastly, for the sake of removing prejudice and ill-will from the minds of the whole west, and of keeping untarnished the legacy of our fathers and the star of the Constitution, we beseech you to consider and grant our petition. And we, your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

APPLICATION OF MISSOURI THAT THE REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICES BE DIRECTED TO TRANSCRIBE THE FIELD-NOTES ON THE BACK OF THE PATENTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 24, 1833.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Missouri, would most respectfully represent: That, under the present regulation of the Land Office department of the United States, patents issue to the purchasers of lands, and it devolves on those purchasers to procure, at their own expense, from the register of the particular land district, the field-notes appertaining to such parcel of land so by him purchased of the government of the United States. Your memorialists will further represent that they cannot discriminate between the duty devolving on a government upon a sale of its property and of an individual in making a sale of his. In the latter the individual affords, at his own expense, a complete description of the land by him sold. Your memorialists would, therefore, most respectfully request (if in your wisdom it shall seem meet) the passage of a law making it the duty of the register of the particular land districts where land may be entered to furnish to the patentee or purchaser of land a copy of the field-notes, to be by said register indorsed in a fair hand on the back of each patent, free of expense to such purchaser; and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will pray, &c.

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Missouri, That the secretary of state is hereby required to forward to each of our senators and representative in Congress a copy of the above memorial.

Approved February 11, 1833.

STATE OF MISSOURI:

The within memorial is a correct copy of the original now on file in the office of the secretary of state State aforesaid.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal the 15th day of November, A. D. 1833.

ON THE APPLICATION OF MISSOURI FOR A GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE DECEMBER 24, 1833.

POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the legislature of the State of Missouri, praying Congress to grant the said State certain portions of the public land within the same, which the memorialists state have not yet been surveyed and brought into market for reasons set forth in their memorial, reported:

That the policy of ceding to the several States within which the public lands are situated such portion of said lands as may have been offered at private sale, and remained unsold for a number of years, has been often heretofore brought under the consideration of both houses of Congress. The same proposition has, in substance, been recommended in the message of the President of the United States, delivered at the commencement of the present session, and will doubtless be acted on finally before its close.

Your committee, without offering any opinion upon the expediency of such cessions of the unsold public lands to the new States, deem it premature and improper to make any partial provision in favor of any one State on this subject until the general question shall be taken up and decided by Congress. Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the memorialists ought not to be granted.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN INDIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 24, 1833.

Mr. CASEY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Richard Nance, reported:

That the petitioner, in June, 1833, purchased of the United States, at private sale, the northwest quarter of section 5, township 18 north, of range 4 east, containing fifty-seven acres and ninety-two hundredths of the lands offered for sale at Indianapolis; and, in consequence of a mistake of the register at said office, the patent has issued to Richard Vance instead of the petitioner. The facts set forth in the petition are fully sustained by the certificate of the register at Indianapolis. Therefore, your committee report a bill authorizing the mistake to be corrected.

ON A FURTHER GRANT OF SCHOOL LANDS IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 24, 1833.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the 27th of December last, concerning a further grant of land for the support of schools in the Connecticut western reserve, in the State of Ohio, reported:

That, by reference to the compact between the United States and the State of Ohio, entered into at the time of the admission of that State into the Union, the committee find it was agreed that the United States should cede to the State of Ohio, for the support of schools, a quantity of land equal to one thirty-sixth part of the lands within said State to which the Indian title had been then extinguished; and also that a like proportion should be granted for the residue upon the extinguishment of the Indian title. At that time the Indian title had been extinguished to that part only of the Connecticut western reserve which lies east of the Cuyahoga river, and it is believed that the appropriation of land then made was made with reference to the part of the reserve to which the Indian title was then extinct; leaving the residue to be provided for when the aboriginal title should be extinguished. The Indian title to the residue was extinguished many years since, but no provision for the support of schools has yet been made. The committee are of opinion that the spirit of the compact and the reason of the case require that this tract of country should be placed upon an equal footing with the rest of the State of Ohio, and, indeed, of all the western States, in the provision that has been made for the support of schools.

ON THE APPLICATION OF CERTAIN STATES FOR A REDUCTION AND GRADUATION OF THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 27, 1833.

Mr. CLAY, of Alabama, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred memorials from the legislatures of the States of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Alabama, asking a reduction and graduation of the price of that portion of the public lands which has been offered at public sale and remains unsold, and also sundry resolutions of the House instructing them to inquire into the expediency of such a measure, reported:

That they have given to the subject the attention and deliberation which seemed to be demanded by its nature and importance. Whether considered in reference to the interest of the general government, the harmony of the Union, or the welfare and prosperity of the new States which embrace the public lands, the question involved is one of more than ordinary magnitude. The committee have felt it their duty to look into the origin of the claim of the United States to the public domain, the better to comprehend the motives and inducements to the various cessions which were made by the States having claims to western lands, and the obligations incurred by the general government under those compacts. It is from this source that the title of the United States to much the larger portion of the public lands is derived.

The inducements to cessions held out by Congress to those States having western territory, were to aid in supplying the means of extinguishing the national debt created by the war of the revolution, and "to promote the harmony of the Union" and "the stability of the general confederacy." On the one hand it seems to have been considered not only desirable to obtain the means of payment, but to gain the confidence of the public creditors by appearing to possess them. On the other, it was no less important to the harmony of the Union to suppress controversies as to territorial claims among the States, to prevent too great inequality of size of the different States, and to keep down the jealousy which would have been inseparable from such disparity.

The public debt no longer presents any obstacle to the exercise of such policy as may, in other respects, be compatible with the terms of the compacts. Before any measure producing an important change can be carried into operation, it will have been entirely extinguished.

It appears, by the terms and conditions on which the several States owning western lands ceded the same, that one if not the chief consideration was the formation and establishment of new States, to be admitted into the Union with equal rights and sovereignty. In the act of the general assembly of Virginia, authorizing the transfer and conveyance of her extensive domain northwest of the river Ohio, the first, and doubtless the leading, inducement is expressed to be "upon condition that the territory so ceded shall be laid out and formed into States containing a suitable extent," &c., "and that the States so formed shall be distinct republican States, and admitted members of the federal Union, having the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence, as the other States."

In like manner, North Carolina expressly stipulated in her act of cession "that the territory so ceded shall be laid out and formed into a State or States, containing a suitable extent of territory," &c.

Georgia, in her articles of agreement and cession, is not less careful in exacting, as a condition of her grant, "that the territory thus ceded shall form a State, and be admitted as such into the Union as soon as it shall contain sixty thousand inhabitants," &c.

And in the third article of the treaty by which Louisiana was acquired is to be found a stipulation on the part of the United States, substantially to the same effect. It is, that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States," &c.

Pursuant to the terms of the several compacts to which reference has been made, the government of the United States has at different periods admitted into the Union seven States, comprising portions of the territory thus acquired. In every instance, it is believed, very small portions of the public lands had been previously sold; and the acts authorizing the admission of new States into the Union have uniformly imposed certain conditions to which the agreement of the people inhabiting said States was indispensable to entitle them to such admission. Among other conditions, the conventions of the respective States have been required to "provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that the people inhabiting said territory do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the waste and unappropriated lands lying within said territory; and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States; and moreover, that each and every tract of land sold by the United States (after the formation of a constitution by the particular State) shall be and remain exempt from any tax laid by the order or under the authority of the State, whether for State, county, township, parish, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the respective days of the sales thereof," &c. "And that no tax shall be imposed on lands the property of the United States," &c.

The committee do not propose a discussion of the question whether, in the language of some of the acts of cession referred to, the new States have been admitted into the Union with "the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence, as the other States;" nor whether there is strict propriety in the declaration to be found in all the acts and resolutions of Congress for the admission of new States, that they are "admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever." It is not now, and we hope it never may be, necessary to inquire how far the want of eminent domain—the power to dispose of or tax soil within her limits is compatible with the "sovereignty" of a State; nor to show that the original States from the time of their independence and at the date of the several compacts had that right. The new States having, as a condition precedent to their admission into the Union, disclaimed all right and title to the waste and unappropriated lands lying within their limits, and also the right to tax them while owned by the United States and for the term of five years after the sale thereof, if not absolutely foreclosed, would doubtless be reluctant to raise the question. But it is in some instances the language, in all the spirit of the compacts under which the public domain was acquired, that new States should be formed and admitted as soon as possible. States cannot be formed without inhabitants. It would not then have been a compliance either with the letter or spirit of those compacts to have fixed so high a minimum on the public lands as to have prevented their sale, and, consequently, their legal settlement; for if it had, it would have been in the power of one of the parties to have defeated the main object which induced the other to enter into them. It seems fair to conclude that the United States were bound to pursue such a policy as would result in the speedy settlement of the public domain, fixing prices bearing some relation to the value of lands in the same quarter of the Union, at which alone they could have been expected to sell.

Nor did the obligations of the United States, as regards the sale of the public lands, cease with the admission of the several States into the Union. Conceding, on this occasion, the right of the general government to exact of the people of the new States a disclaimer of the right of the soil, and the right of taxation, as the price of their admission into the Union, it cannot be maintained that further sales of the public lands could rightfully be arrested altogether; or (which would be equivalent) that they could be held at prices so far above their relative value as not to sell. What would be the difference, in effect, between a law suspending further sales entirely and one requiring four or five times the value to be paid? In either case no land would be sold; no settlements could be made in conformity with law; and the growth and maturity of the State would be most injuriously retarded. Such a policy would not only contravene the spirit of the several acts of cession which have been adverted to, but would be inconsistent with the several compacts between the general government and the new States on their admission. While those compacts in their terms restrain the new States from interfering with the primary disposal of soil, or taxing lands of the United States for the term of five years after their sale, they do not release the United States from the duties imposed by the terms of cession, and, at least, imply an obligation on the part of the general government to sell in a reasonable time. That cannot be done except on reasonable terms. Suppose, on the admission of any one of the new States, the general government had addressed her in this language: "You shall not extend your settlements beyond their present limits; if your population increase, it must be crowded on lands which we have already sold." Would it not have been pronounced on all hands a violation of the compact, and a most revolting breach of good faith on the part of the United States?

If, however, the subject be considered in reference to the financial interest of the general government alone, it is believed that the price of the public lands should be reduced, after having been first offered at public sale, and then remaining a reasonable time subject to private entry at the present minimum. The government of the United States is probably the only vendor, either of land or any other property, that holds the most inferior quality of any article at the same price with the best. If an individual were to maintain that all domestic animals of a given species were of the same value, how inconsistent would he appear! If a merchant were to refuse to sell kerseys at any lower price than he could obtain for superfine broadcloths, his conduct would certainly be deemed utterly absurd. Yet there is not greater absurdity in either of these positions than there is in maintaining that land of every quality is worth, or should command, the same price.

The experience of the last ten years has demonstrated that lands of the greatest fertility, when sold at auction, will only command a very small fraction above $1 25 per acre. To prove this it is only necessary to refer to official documents now on the files of the House. It is not probable that more than one-tenth of the public domain is of the first quality; yet we refuse to let the remaining nine-tenths go at any lower price.

By a report (which is hereto annexed) made by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 22d of January last, in answer to a resolution of the House,* it appears that the quantity of land to which the Indian and foreign titles had then been extinguished was 301,965,600 acres. Of that quantity there had, on the 31st of December, 1831, been offered for sale 130,932,205 acres; and only 26,524,450 acres had then been sold. By the same report the quantity of land subject to private entry, on the same day, (and which, of course, had been offered at public auction and refused at $1 25 per acre,) was 104,407,755 acres. As evidence of the great inferiority of this large quantity of land, it is shown by the same report that the quantity which had been offered and refused at public sale in the several States had been in market and subject to private entry the following periods: that in Ohio had nearly all been in market 20 years, the greater portion from 25 to 30 years; that in Indiana had nearly all been in market from 15 to 20 years; that in Illinois had nearly all been in market for 15 years, and upwards; that in Missouri, an average of about 12 years; that in Alabama from 12 to 22 years, the average period may be said to be 15 years; that in Mississippi from 12 to 20 years; that in Louisiana about 13 years; and that in Michigan about 13 years.

In December, 1828, a statement, compiled from official documents and printed by order of the Senate, showed that 74,358,881 acres were then subject to private entry, having been offered at public sale, and refused, at $1 25 per acre; and that of this quantity 28,247,000 acres (more than one-third) were unfit for cultivation. Taking the same relative proportions of the quantity now subject to private entry as the basis of calculation, and it follows that we now have about 40,000,000 acres, not only inferior, but unfit for cultivation. Yet our system is based on the hypothesis that there is no difference in the quality or value of the public lands.

As an additional proof of the inferior quality of those hundred and odd millions of refuse lands, the fact may be stated, that it is dispersed through the oldest as well as the more recently settled parts of the States and Territories. It is not in such detached bodies and so far removed from the improved and cultivated lands as to impede its settlement and cultivation; on the contrary, were the soil good, its locality would afford unusual facilities in both respects. It is wholly unreasonable to suppose that such land will sell for the same price at which land of the best quality can be purchased. But, if reduced to its fair relative value, much might be sold. Inferior lands lying adjacent to those which are improved and cultivated would be valuable appendages to them, and would be purchased by present land proprietors. Other portions would be purchased by poor men who have been driven from the more fertile tracts by men of large capital, and by speculators. As we have seen, much of this land has already been in market, unsold, for twenty years and upwards; for a period how much longer it may remain on hand it is impossible to determine; but is it not perfectly obvious that it would have been to the interest of the government, regarding money alone, to have sold it at half the price in the first instance? Add interest for twenty years, at six per cent. per annum, on the value of a given quantity of land estimated at fifty cents per acre, and it will be about equal to the price demanded by the government. Yet we have this land still on hand, with its relative value diminished, not only in the ratio in which all other real estate has declined, but by being shorn of much of its valuable timber by those residing in its neighborhood, or by settlers who have no permanent interest in the soil. Besides, we have sustained the expense of keeping up a number of land offices, amounting to thousands of dollars every year, which would have been rendered unnecessary by a speedy sale, if the price had been suitably reduced. The proposed policy would result in the sale of many thousands, if not millions of acres, which otherwise will not be sold, but be deprived of timber, exhausted, and worn out, by those who have no inducement to preserve the soil longer than for merely temporary use; which is not only detrimental to the interest of the United States, but highly injurious to the particular State in which they may happen to lie.

But the amount of money to be realized from the public domain is not the sole, nor even the chief consideration which should influence and determine the policy of a wise and paternal government. In the language of the President, in his annual message of December, 1832, "The wealth and strength of a country are its population, and the best part of that population are the cultivators of the soil. Independent farmers are everywhere the basis of society and true friends of liberty." These sentiments it is hoped will find a cordial response in every bosom. Their truth and justness are attested by all history. It may be asked triumphantly, when did the cultivators of the soil willingly abandon the principles, or knowingly become the enemies of free government? The soundness of the principle laid down is sustained by the most approved doctrines of political economy and sanctioned by practical experience.

The committee also concur in the sentiment expressed in the same message, that it is "our true policy that the public lands shall cease, as soon as practicable, to be a source of revenue, and that they should be sold to settlers, in limited parcels, at a price barely sufficient to reimburse the United States the expense of the present system and the cost arising under our Indian compacts." The new States have, as they manifestly feel, a deep interest in this subject. By their memorials they have urged upon Congress repeatedly within the last ten or twelve years the policy, justice, and necessity of reducing the price of refuse lands. They have represented, and truly represented, as the committee believe, that the existing law in regard to price operates materially and wrongfully to their injury. The high price of land inevitably retards the population of a country, and, taken in connexion with the want of power to tax it, must postpone the maturity of its resources.

In the opinion of the committee it is due to the people of the new States that the existing state of things should be terminated as soon as practicable. It is certainly desirable that every acre of land should, if possible, be rendered productive, and this can never be done till it is in the hands of individual proprietors. Population is emphatically the strength of a State, and to render a people free, prosperous, and happy, they should be the owners of the soil they cultivate.

After a full consideration of the compacts between the general government and the original States which surrendered territory and those with the new States upon their admission into the Union; regarding that good faith with which engagements so grave and important ought to be fulfilled; looking to the interest of the government either as to the amount of money to be realized, or the harmony, strength, and resources of the Union at large; and considering what is due to the tranquillity and resources of the younger members of the confederacy, the committee cannot resist the conclusion that a law should be passed reducing and graduating the price of that portion of the public lands which has been offered at public sale and remains unsold in proportion to the time it may have been in market; and they accordingly report a bill for that purpose.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1833.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Antoine Cruzat, reported:

That petitioner claims about three acres of land by virtue of a settlement right; that the land is situated in the parish of East Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana. The proof shows that the petitioner actually inhabited and cultivated the said tract of land from the year 1805 until the year 1812, since which time the said land has not been in the possession of the petitioner. The committee called upon the Commissioner of the United States General Land Office to state whether the petitioner's claim, as made out by the evidence, brought his claim within the provisions of the acts of Congress passed, granting donations to actual settlers in the State of Louisiana on or before the 15th April, 1813, and received for answer that, agreeably to the construction of the law in question at that department, his claim was embraced by the laws alluded to. The committee therefore report a bill.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1833.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Abram Wrinkle, reported:

That said petitioner alleges that prior to the year 1819 one John Willey occupied and cultivated a farm on the right bank of the Sabine, near the mouth of the Kisatcha, and within the limits of that portion of Louisiana called the Neutral Territory; and that in the autumn of 1819 he purchased the improvement from said Willey, and moved immediately on it, and has resided on it ever since, and that he has no other land nor claims any other.

These facts are proved to the satisfaction of the House, and they therefore report a bill authorizing the petitioner to have 640 acres as a settler on the Spanish domain at the time of the cession by Spain of that portion of Louisiana to the United States.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1833.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Paul Poissot, reported:

That, from the evidence before the committee, he purchased from François Missippe his pre-emption right to a quarter section of land in the sixteenth section, on the southwest bank of Red river, in the parish of Natchitoches, in the Opelousas land district, in the State of Louisiana, about twenty-three miles above the town of Natchitoches, bounded above by the lands occupied by Jean Eloi Rachal and below by lands occupied by Baptiste Landreaux.

There is satisfactory proof before the committee to show that said François Missippe gave notice to the register and receiver of the land office at Opelousas, in the State aforesaid, that he claimed the right of pre-emption to a quarter of said section, as above described, by virtue of the act of Congress approved the 29th of May, 1830. It is proven that he was in possession of the land, and actually cultivated six or seven arpents in corn thereon in the year 1829, and resided on said land on the 29th of May, 1830. There is also before the committee a statement of the register and receiver of the land office aforesaid, allowing to said François Missippe the privilege of the right of pre-emption. There is also proof before the committee that the said François Missippe has made a legal conveyance of his right of pre-emption to the petitioner. The committee therefore are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and for that purpose report a bill.

ON CLAIM FOR BOUNTY LAND ON ACCOUNT OF THE MILITARY SERVICES OF A SLAVE BY HIS OWNER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DECEMBER 31, 1833.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Benjamin Oden, as the representative of William Williams, who is represented to have been a slave, and who served in the late war, reported:

That it appears from the certificate of John B. Martin, formerly a lieutenant in the thirty-eighth regiment of United States infantry, that he enlisted William Williams on the 5th day of April, 1814, who afterwards acknowledged himself to be the slave of Benjamin Oden, of Prince George's county, Maryland, and who is represented to have died in the service.

In this case the representative of William Williams claims a warrant for bounty land from the government for the services rendered by William Williams. The committee cannot grant it.

There is no positive proof before the committee to show that William Williams was the slave of Benjamin Oden; and if there were sufficient proof before the committee to show conclusively that he was the slave and property of said Benjamin Oden, the committee cannot think for a moment that the government has any right to grant to the representative of William Williams bounty land. If he were the slave and property of Benjamin Oden, the owner had a lawful right at any time to release him from his enlistment; the act in itself was illegal, therefore not binding on the slave nor the master. By the law of the land slaves are not permitted to hold title to real estate. Therefore, inasmuch as a slave cannot possess or acquire title to real estate by the laws of the land, in his his own right, no right can be set up by the master as his representative. The committee ask to be discharged, &c.

ON CLAIM FOR LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 2, 1834.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Terence Le Blanc, reported:

That in November, 1830, a public sale of lands was held at the land office in New Orleans, under a proclamation of the President of the United States, dated June 5, 1830.

At that sale John R. Grymes became the purchaser of a tract of land, lot No. 43, in township No. 12, range 19 east, containing an area of $80\frac{46}{100}$ acres, for the price of $249 43. The said tract was sold through inadvertence, inasmuch as it was not the property of the United States, but the property of the petitioner, under a Spanish title, confirmed by Congress on the 28th February, 1823. The petitioner has since paid to John R. Grymes the sum which the latter had advanced for the tract, and now asks to have the same reimbursed by government.

The facts are shown by authentic documents, and the committee deem the equity of the case too plain to admit a doubt; they therefore report a bill for the relief of the petitioner.

23D CONGRESS.] No. 1140. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE MODE OF DISPOSING OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 2, 1834.

Mr. CROCKETT, from the Select Committee to whom was referred the subject of inquiring into and reporting the most equitable and advantageous mode of disposing of that portion of the lands belonging to the United States, situated south and west of the congressional reservation line, within the State of Tennessee, reported:

That, by a reference to a report made at the second session of the twenty-first Congress by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, accompanied by an official communication from the secretary of State of Tennessee, it appears that the whole quantity of land in the State of Tennessee, lying west and south of the line commonly called the congressional reservation, is six million eight hundred and sixty-four thousand acres, of which there have been appropriated, for the satisfaction of North Carolina military warrants, and of warrants issued by that State to defray the expenses of the revolutionary war, three million five hundred and ten thousand one hundred and seventy-six acres, leaving the quantity of three million three hundred and fifty-three thousand eight hundred and twenty-four acres of unappropriated lands subject to the disposition of the government.

It appears to the committee that the lands which have been thus appropriated for the satisfaction of warrants in this district of country have been entered by selection at the option of the claimants; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his report says: "There can be no doubt that very nearly all the lands of the best quality have been appropriated, and that a very small portion of the residue could be sold at the minimum price of the United States until further progress shall have been made in the settlement and improvement of the country, and a greater demand thereby created for the inferior lands."

By an inspection of the general plan or map of this district, and the letter of the secretary of state of Tennessee, accompanying this report, it will appear that the lands yet vacant are refuse lands; that they lie in small bodies and detached parcels; and the secretary of state of Tennessee states that it is probable that one-twentieth part of the vacant land would be entered at 12½ cents per acre, and one-fifth of the residue at one cent.

The committee would refer the House to a report made by a committee of the House of Representatives at the first session of the twentieth Congress, containing a minute statement of the situation and real value of the vacant lands in the country in question, and to various laws of North Carolina and Tennessee, by which the North Carolina land warrants have been entered and granted.

By an act of Congress passed April 18, 1806, Tennessee was authorized to satisfy the North Carolina claims. In it is this provision:

"And the State of Tennessee shall moreover, in issuing grants and perfecting titles, locate six hundred and forty acres to every six miles square, in the territory hereby ceded, where existing claims will allow the same, which shall be appropriated for the use of schools for the instruction of children forever."

It appears that the existing claims of North Carolina turned out to be so numerous that they exhausted all the valuable lands north and east of the line established in said act, so that very few school tracts were laid off.

South and west of the line no school tracts have been laid off; and upon this latter point the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his report already referred to, says: "By the act of Congress, approved April 18, 1806, provision was made for the reservation of lands for the use of schools from that portion of lands thereby ceded to the State of Tennessee; and whatever disposition may be made of the unappropriated lands south and west of the congressional boundary line, the uniform practice of the government would require that a quantity of land, equal to one thirty-sixth part of the whole district, should be appropriated for the use of schools."

It appears to the committee that there are now settled upon these vacant spots of land, where they are of any value, a number of poor persons with their families, who, in the opinion of the committee, should be entitled to a right of pre-emption, at a small price, to the places they occupy. In considering of the proper disposition to be made of these lands, the committee are of opinion that a number of acres ought to be granted to the State equal in quantity to the number of acres which the State would have had if one section in each township, or one thirty-sixth part, had been laid off for the use of common schools agreeably to the requirements of the act of 1806; and that it should be a condition of the grant that the State, in disposing of the same, shall give a right of pre-emption to the settlers upon it at a reduced price. The committee are aware that this may fall short in value of what the State would have had if the school tracts had been laid off on the good lands before they were taken by warrants, a privilege secured by the act of 1806, and which also had been granted to all the other new States. The legislature of the State of Tennessee have prayed in their memorials for a relinquishment of all the remaining vacant lands south and west of the line, and alleged that the whole land would not be sufficient in value to make up the deficiency in the school lands, and the committee cannot say positively that this opinion is erroneous, but are induced not to recommend this, because of the objections made by some that a cession might operate injuriously as a precedent in other quarters of the Union.

The main objects proposed to be effected by the bill which the committee report are—

1st. That the occupant settlers may be secured in their homes at a low rate, and thereby become freeholders in the country.

2d. That the lands granted may be subject to taxation; and lastly, that justice may, to some extent, in regard to common schools, be done to Tennessee, although not, perhaps, as great as that which has been extended to the other new States where the government has owned lands.

The committee therefore report a bill in accordance with the principle herein set forth.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR A DONATION OF LAND TO AID IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN ROADS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 3, 1834.

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Illinois, That our senators and representative in Congress be requested to use their best endeavors to have the road located and improved from Detroit to Chicago, by the general government; extended and continued on from Chicago to Galena, and that the same be located and improved as soon as practicable; and in case the general government shall decline the work, that a grant of land be made, to be selected in some land district in that section of the State, of one hundred sections, to enable the State of Illinois to construct said road; also that a grant of land of forty sections be made to the State, to be selected in the Danville district, to improve the present State road from the west bank of the Wabash river opposite Vincennes to Chicago.

ON CLAIM TO LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 7, 1834.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James S. Douglass, Stephen Douglass, William House, Alfred Douglass, Samuel House, and James Tant, reported:

That the petitioners set forth that they were in possession of certain lots of land, in township number thirteen, of range number thirteen east, within the district of lands offered for sale at Ouachita, in the State of Louisiana, in the year 1829, and cultivated the same in the year aforesaid, and were in the actual possession thereof on the 29th day of May, 1830. Proof, establishing these facts, appears to have been taken at the land office at Ouachita, in the presence of the register thereof, on the 11th day of October, 1830. The petitioners aver that, at the time the proof was made, the money to purchase the lots of land they claimed was tendered to the receiver of public moneys, at the land office aforesaid, but was refused by the officer, alleging that the plats of said land had not been received in the office, and that he did not wish to act definitively in regard to said land claims until the plats were returned to the office. The petitioners state that, by reason of bad roads and high waters, they were prevented making further application until the month of August following: that they then appointed James S. Douglass (one of the petitioners) their agent, who proceeded to the land office, and tendered the money for the payment of the lands claimed, to the receiver aforesaid, who refused to receive it. The receiver states that the township plat number thirteen, of range number thirteen east, was not received until a short time before the 29th of May, 1831, several months after the proof was made. That one or two, or probably three months before the township was offered for sale, James S. Douglass, one of the claimants, and agent for the others, claimed the privilege of paying for the lots claimed, &c., and offered so to do; that his application was refused by the register, and consequently his money by him, because they considered the rights forfeited by not being applied for and the money tendered, prior to the 29th of May, 1831. The receiver certifies that lot No. 24, claimed by one of the petitioners, was sold on the 13th of November, 1831, and that lots Nos. 28, 29, 31, and 32, in township number thirteen, of range number thirteen east, were sold on the 17th day of November, 1831, at the public sale, and that No. 33, same township and range, was proven under the act of 1814, and that the testimony produced by the petitioners is such as had been considered sufficient to procure a right of pre-emption under the act of Congress approved May 29, 1830. A majority of the committee are of opinion that the petitioners are entitled to relief, and for that purpose report a bill.

ON CLAIM TO LANDS IN INDIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 7, 1834.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George K. Jackson, reported:

That the petitioner sets forth that on the 15th day of June, in the year 1830, he entered at the land office at Crawfordsville, in the State of Indiana, the north fraction of the northwest quarter of section four, in township twenty-three north, of range seven west, containing seventy-two and seven-hundredths acres. Petitioner states that the entry was made through mistake; that he designed to enter the north fraction of the northeast quarter of the same section, but was deceived by incorrect information from others. Petitioner states that he is poor, and has to labor for the support of himself and a helpless family; that the land he did enter is entirely worthless, and that which he intended to have entered is valuable. The facts set forth in the petition of the petitioner are satisfactorily proven. The committee therefore report a bill for his relief.

ON CLAIM TO LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 7, 1834.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition and papers of Marguerite Baron, the widow of Jean Pierre Ledoux, reported:

That the petitioner claims title to two tracts of land situate in the parish of West Feliciana, in the State of Louisiana, on the left bank of the Mississippi, at a place called "Isle aux Chats," or Cats' island, one of which tracts contains twenty arpents in front upon the Mississippi by forty arpents in depth, and which appears to have been granted by the Spanish government to Jean Pierre Ledoux, the husband of the petitioner, on the first day of July, 1788. The petitioner avers that, after the death of her husband, in the year 1793, she purchased said tract of land at a sale of the property depending on his estate, and has produced testimony establishing that fact.

The other tract to which she claims is situated at the same place, immediately adjoining the tract above described, and which appears to have been granted by the Spanish government to Pierre or Lasty Ledoux, the son of the petitioner, on the 18th day of December, in the year 1788, and contains twenty arpents in front on the Mississippi, and five arpents in depth. This is all the Spanish grant contains, though the petitioner claims forty arpents in depth.

She states that her son, Pierre or Lasty Ledoux, died without issue, leaving his father, Jean Pierre Ledoux, and the petitioner, his only heirs; and that after the death of her husband, in 1793, she purchased the share of her husband. Proof of the death of the son prior to the death of the father is also before the committee, and that he died without issue; and, further, that she has had peaceable possession of the said tracts of land from the time she acquired them, and from the time they were granted by the Spanish government up to the present time.

The petitioner states that she was ignorant of the law of Congress making it necessary to record land titles, and only learned that it was necessary at the last time that the office for the district in which the lands lie was opened. That thereupon she immediately employed an agent to take her land titles to the office and cause them to be registered; that the agent did so proceed, and arrived at the office just after it had been closed by the expiration of the law. Jean Baptiste Vignes states, under oath, that he was employed by the petitioner, about thirteen years ago, to proceed to the land office above referred to with her titles to the land before described, for the purpose of having them registered; that he did so proceed immediately, and upon his arrival there the office was closed, the term fixed by law for registering land titles having expired. The committee are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and for that purpose report a bill.

23D CONGRESS.] No. 1145. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN TENNESSEE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 7, 1834.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Hunter and C. P. Halley, reported:

That the said applicants claim to be the owners of two military land warrants issued by the State of North Carolina to the heirs of her deceased soldiers, each for six hundred and forty acres, and alleges that there is no land fit for cultivation in the district heretofore assigned for the satisfaction of such claims upon which said warrants can be at this time located, and asks permission to locate said warrants upon that tract of country between the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude, the true southern line of the State of Tennessee, and Winchester's line, which has been heretofore recognized as the southern line of said State, and north of which the land warrants for the services of the soldiers of North Carolina have been located and perhaps confirmed by the legislature of Tennessee.

Winchester's line has been for years supposed the true southern line of Tennessee, and if so, the southern boundary of the tract of country which has been heretofore assigned by Congress for the satisfaction of the military land warrants of North Carolina. The committee has been informed that lately, by some arrangement between the States of Tennessee and Mississippi, the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude has been discovered to be some four or five miles further south than Winchester's line, which was run by General Winchester as the boundary line between the State of Tennessee and the Chickasaw nation of Indians under the treaty of 1818. The committee does not consider it necessary at present to investigate or decide whether that strip between the two lines, and upon which said warrants are sought to be located, belongs to the United States or the Chickasaw Indians, or whether the same lies within the State of Tennessee or the State of Mississippi. Heretofore Congress has not interfered with the location or surveys of the military warrants of North Carolina, but has left the same under the control and management of the legislature of Tennessee; and as the State of Tennessee has heretofore acted upon the subject, and recognized Winchester's line as the true line by limiting her counties and her surveyor's district to that line, the present applicants should not have an advantage given them by Congress over other individuals holding similar claims. When the question is settled as to the true boundary line, should said strip of land fall within the limits of the State of Tennessee, provision will no doubt be made for the location of all claims of that character upon the land in dispute, and all claimants of that character will be placed upon a footing of equality.

The committee therefore recommends the rejection of the application of said petitioners.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 8, 1834.

Mr. CAGE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petitions of Jean Baptiste Lemain, Jean Baptiste Julian Rachal, Jean Baptiste Louis Metoyer, Pierre S. Compere, François Roubieu, Bartholemy Rachal, Etienne Lacasse, Julian Rachal, and Antoine Bartholemy Rachal, reported:

That these claims, or a majority of them at least, appear, from the petitions and the testimony adduced in support of the claims, to be entitled to the equity of Congress. The committee, however, are not satisfied that the testimony in support of the claims is such as ought to be fully relied upon, there being no evidence before the committee in relation to the character of the witnesses for truth and veracity. There is, indeed, in the opinion of the committee, some suspicion thrown over the evidence sustaining the petitioners' claims from the fact that these petitioners seem to have sworn generally for each other. The evidence would seem to convey the idea "if you will swear for me I will swear for you." It is the intention of the committee to prepare and submit a bill authorizing the register and receiver of the land office in the section of country where these lands lie to collect the testimony in these and cases similarly situated and report their opinions with the evidence to Congress. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of these petitions.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 8, 1834.

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William S. Cockerille, reported:

That the petitioner claims a tract of land of six hundred and forty acres, as the assignee by several mesne conveyances of one Pierre Carle, in that part of the parish of Natchitoches, in the State of Louisiana, called "The Neutral Territory."

The evidence accompanying the petition shows that previous to the treaty of limits between the United States and Spain the grantor, from whom the petitioner claims, inhabited, occupied, and cultivated a tract of land on the southwestern side of Red river, about twenty-one miles above the town of Natchitoches, within the limits of the Neutral Territory, as designated by the act of Congress of March 3, 1823, relative to the land titles in that part of Louisiana, and the act supplementary thereto, and that such land has been ever since continued to be cultivated.

The committee are satisfied that the evidence produced before them is entitled to credit by the information they have derived from Judge Bullard, a member of this Congress from the State of Louisiana, and are of opinion that had such evidence been produced before the commissioners under the beforementioned acts of Congress, this claim would have been admitted and confirmed. They therefore report a bill.

ON CLAIM FOR FIVE YEARS' HALF-PAY IN LIEU OF BOUNTY LAND.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 8, 1834.

Mr. CASEY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Lois Robinson, reported:

That the petitioner sets forth that Zadock Robinson, now deceased, enlisted in the service of the United States, as an artificer in a corps of engineers, on the 1st of March, 1813, for during the war, and that he died in the service of the United States on the 22d day of December, 1814. The petitioner prays that Congress may pass an act authorizing her to receive five years' half-pay, in lieu of bounty lands, which the petitioner considers her husband was justly entitled to. By referring to the act of Congress approved December 12, 1812, it will be seen that the act does not entitle the description of corps to which the husband of the petitioner belonged to bounty lands, nor yet five years' half pay; they were provided for otherwise. The monthly pay of an artificer was thirteen dollars per month, while the private soldier who belonged to the regular line, subject to all the rules and regulations of the articles of war, liable to encounter all the difficulties and dangers of a warfaring life, only received eight dollars per month. The committee are of opinion that to grant the prayer of the petitioner would be establishing a precedent well calculated to derange the enactments of Congress heretofore made for the benefit of those who were engaged in the service of their country during the late war with Great Britain.

ON THE SUBJECT OF PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 9, 1834.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the documents from the General Land Office relative to certain pre-emption rights, reported:

That under the pre-emption law of April 5, 1832, and the act of June 15, 1832, granting to proprietors of front lands in Louisiana the right to enter their back lands, a number of persons in the southeastern district of Louisiana entered their claims, made the requisite proofs, and paid the purchase money in the office of the register and receiver at New Orleans, and a report of the same was duly made to the Secretary of the Treasury; that among the persons claiming the benefit of the pre-emption law of April 5, 1832, were divers individuals resident on the Bayou St. Vincent, in sections 110 and 143, in township 13, range 14 east, whose tracts were resurveyed, under the authority of the surveyor general, so as to embrace their several improvements, and a corrected plat thereof transmitted to the General Land Office.

In the opinion of the committee the aforesaid pre-emptions were in accordance with the intentions of the acts of Congress, and the ends of justice require they should be approved, and they accordingly report a bill.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Donaldsonville, January 1, 1833.

SIR: I herewith transmit my quarterly accounts for the last quarter of 1832. The disbursement account contains the amount paid T. J. Collins for the survey of private claims in township 1 and 3 east in the St. Helena district. The notes have been examined and approved, the plats protracted, and triplicate separate plats prepared. Before transmitting them, however, I wished to procure the decision of the register and receiver in a case of confliction, which has not yet been obtained. I am bold to say that if the same time and attention which the examination of these surveys has cost had been expended, in proportion, on the examination of all the work in that district, something might have been lost in despatch, but much would have been gained in accuracy.

There is a small balance in my favor in the account for disbursements. The postmaster being absent, I am unable to procure the necessary certificate for the postage account, which is, accordingly, not included in the accounts now transmitted. I have also procured from New Orleans some stationery, &c., for the use of the office, which will be charged in the next account.

I will have the connected map, exhibiting all the surveys which have been returned to this office, made out immediately. I am very sorry not to have been sufficiently aware of the importance of your being furnished with such a map, or it would certainly have been ready before this. You cannot well form an idea of the continual interruptions we have been subjected to for the last six months from visitors and correspondents, and the trouble and loss of time consequent on their inquiries. It is possible that the business of the office might advance with more celerity. I can only say that I do, to the full measure of my faculties, all I can to accelerate its advancement. The best clerical assistance that could be had has been procured; and that I am a good economist of time, will appear from the fact that the office is always open from morning till night, and that the clerks are employed during that time without intermission, except that which is required for their dinner.

I transmit a resurvey of part of township 13, range 14 east, (southeastern district,) which was made for the accommodation of a number of settlers on Bayou St. Vincent, at the earnest request of Mr. White, the representative in Congress from this district. The conditions on which I consented to order the resurvey were, that the expense of making it should be defrayed by the settlers, and that it should be submitted to you for approval. The settlers are honest, hard-working, bona fide cultivators of the soil, and have cleared the land and made the improvements thereon with the labor of their own hands. Upon their securing a full and legal right to the land thus improved depends the moderate share of comfort and independence enjoyed by these worthy people; and if the sectional divisions be adhered to, they will be debarred from purchasing. As the mode of laying out lots on bayous is authorized by law, I presume the resurvey will be approved by you.

The transmission of copies of contracts entered into recently with deputy surveyors has been delayed by discovering an important omission in one of them which rendered it defective. The defect has since been corrected, and they will be forwarded immediately.

A certificate of purchase in favor of the register at Ouachita, accompanied by the duplicate receipt of the receiver, is herewith enclosed. The accounts of Rightor and others are being examined, and the subjects of your recent communications will be attended to as soon as possible.

I am, &c.,

H. B. TRIST, Surveyor General.

JOHN M. MOORE, Esq., Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 7, 1833.

SIR: The act of Congress approved July 4, 1832, entitled "An act for the final adjustment of the claims to lands in the southeastern district of Louisiana," section 4, declares that "the sales of land in the said southeastern district, by public auction or private entry, shall be suspended until after the 1st day of July, 1833."

The act of April 5, 1832, entitled "An act supplementary to the several laws for the sale of public lands," provides that "all actual settlers, being housekeepers, upon the public lands shall have the right of pre-emption to enter, within six months after the passage of this act, not exceeding the quantity of one-half quarter section, under the provisions of this act, to include his or their improvements, under such regulations as have been or may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury," &c.

The act of Congress approved June 15, 1832, entitled "An act to authorize the inhabitants of the State of Louisiana to enter the back lands," grants to the owners of private confirmed claims bordering on any river, creek, bayou, or watercourse, and not exceeeding in depth forty arpents, French measure, the right to a preference in becoming the purchaser of any vacant tract of land adjacent to and back of his own tract, not exceeding forty arpents, French measure, in depth, nor in quantity of land that which is contained in his own tract.

The act of April 5, 1832, ceased to confer the pre-emption privilege on the 6th October following.

The act of July 4, 1832, stayed all public sales and private entries in the southeastern district until after July 1, 1833. Hence all pre-emptions, whether of back tracts or other lands, granted at New Orleans after July 4, 1832, and prior to July 1, 1833, cannot be recegnized under the existing provisions of law.

The following are the cases which have been reported to this office by the register at New Orleans, which cannot be recognized:

Name.	Date of sale.	Tracts.
Pre-emption under act of April 5, 1832.
Joseph Barbier	July 9, 1832	E.½ NE.¼, sec. 55, township 12, range 13 E.
Manuel Acosta	July 17, 1832	W.½ NW.¼, sec. 36, town. 12, range 15 E.
Auguste Roger	Sept. 21, 1832	Lot No. 6, sec. 32, town. 12, range 13 E.
Jno. Chas. Navarre	Sept. 28, 1832	Lots 7 and 8, sec. 110, town. 14, range 16 E.
Francis Barillaud, jr	Oct. 5, 1832	E.½ SE.¼, sec. 12, township 13, range 13 E.
Back pre-emptions.
St. Julian de Tournillon	Oct. 24, 1832	Section 49, township 12, range 14 E.
Henry Johnson	Dec. 1, 1832	Sections 81 & 82, township 14, range 16 E.

In relation to the anomalous survey of the ten tracts on the Bayou St. Vincent, designated on the accompanying plat copied by Mr. Cenas from one furnished to him by the surveyor general, I have to inform you that there is no law under which the department can sanction such survey.

As the situation of those settlers who claim the benefits of the pre-emption law of April 5, 1832, is deemed peculiarly hard, I would have been happy to relieve them had the existing provisions of law vested any discretionary power in such cases.

Under these circumstances I would recommend an application to Congress, at its next session, for the sanction of the anomalous survey, after which sanction the parties can complete their payments and procure their certificates from the register at New Orleans. I would also recommend an application to Congress for the sanction of the pre-emption rights designated in this letter.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. E. D. WHITE.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Donaldsonville, October 3, 1833.

DEAR SIR: I herewith forward you a plat of an anomalous survey of a part of township 13, range 14, made at the urgent request of Mr. E. D. White, who undertakes to have it approved by the Commissioner, or, should the Commissioner object, by the fiat of Congress.

The survey was made in the benevolent view of enabling a number of poor settlers to obtain the land settled, cultivated, and improved by them, but which the necessity of conforming to the sectional divisions prevents them from now entering. The poor people's salvation in this world is at stake, as the loss of their land would bring ruin upon them.

The affidavits made out in conformity with the subdivisions and numbers of the new survey are, I believe, to be left with you; perhaps the money deposited. The sale to be consummated when the survey shall be approved. Mr. Cobb, the bearer of this, is the agent of the settlers in this business.

Very respectfully, your friend and obedient servant,

H. B. TRIST.

H. B. CENAS, Esq., Register, &c., New Orleans.

Extract of a letter from H. B. Cenas, register of the land office at New Orleans, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated November 15, 1832.

"On the 5th of last month, the day upon which the pre-emption privilege accorded by the act of 5th April last expired by limitation, I received a letter from H. B. Trist, esq., surveyor general of this State, transmitting 'a plat of an anomalous survey,' made at the request of Mr. E. D. White, for certain purposes so fully stated by Mr. Trist that I have deemed it best to transmit you a copy of his letter in full, which I herewith accordingly do. The applications of the individuals mentioned, (ten in number,) accompanied by the necessary affidavits, I have filed away, and hold subject to your decision."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 28, 1833.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant, submitting for the approbation of the department the case of a resurvey of part of township 13, range 14, by H. B. Trist, esq., transmitted to the register at New Orleans, is received.

The act of the 11th February, 1805, directs the public lands to be divided into sections, half sections, quarter sections, and fractional sections, and prescribes rules for the establishment of corners and dividing lines thereof. For such of the public lands in Louisiana as are adjacent to rivers, lakes, creeks, bayous, or watercourses, a different rule of survey is authorized by the act of March 7, 1811. Although boundary lines are made by that act to depend on the nature of the country, yet it is directed that the quantity contained in each tract shall be regulated by given dimensions, so far as may be practicable and convenient. By a subsequent act, approved May 24, 1824, another rule is authorized to be observed in the survey of lands thus situated, when, in the opinion of the President, a departure from the ordinary mode would subserve the interests of the public. In this, however, as in the other acts referred to, a due regard is enjoined as to quantity and uniformity in the surveys, and it will be seen that in none of them is there any discretion given to deviate from the subdivision therein authorized. So also in the supplementary act approved April 5, 1832, directing the sale of the public lands in minor subdivisions than were before authorized. It is therein directed that the lines of such subdivision shall run east and west; that the corners and contents thereof shall be ascertained in the manner and on the principles directed by the act of February 11, 1805, and that fractional sections, in like manner, as nearly as may be practicable, be subdivided into quarter sections under regulations to be prescribed by this department.

Viewing the survey transmitted for the approbation of the department as repugnant to the act last referred to, and anomalous in every particular, inasmuch as from the plat thereof, enclosed with your letter, it embraces no more than the half of an entire section and the whole of a fractional section, while it cuts the former into six and the latter into ten subdivisions, varying from three to eighty-three acres in quantity; and moreover, as its confirmation would disturb surveys already made and returned, it cannot, consistently with these views, be approved. The papers received with your letter are returned.

I am, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 4, 1834.

The preceding map of part of township No. 13 of range No. 14 east, in the southeastern district, is strictly conformable to the field-notes of the resurvey thereof, on file in this office, which have been examined and approved. The resurvey was made by William H. Cobb, deputy surveyor, September 29, 1832.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN ARKANSAS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 9, 1834.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of William Enos, reported:

The petitioner was a soldier in the late war. As such there was granted to him the northeast quarter section thirty-six, of township three north, in range two east, in the tracts appropriated for military bounties in the Territory of Arkansas.

The petitioner states in his affidavit that he is still the rightful owner of the said quarter section of land, and that he removed to Arkansas with the intention of settling upon the same; and he furnishes evidence (the certificate of Mr. Strong, the sheriff and collector of taxes, St. Francis county) that in the years 1828 and 1829 he paid the territorial tax on the same. James Standle and John L. McCrery swear that they have been upon the land and found it unfit for cultivation; a very small portion of the same, and that in small detached parcels of from one to two and three acres, and sometimes four, might be cultivated.

The petitioner asks to surrender this quarter section of land to the United States, and tenders a deed relinquishing the same, and to be permitted to enter in lieu thereof, within the military district, a quarter section fit for cultivation.

If the proof is to be credited, (and there is nothing presented to the committee which would authorize them to doubt the evidence,) this is not such land as the government promised to give this soldier when he enlisted in the service of his country. Cases of this description have heretofore been presented to Congress, and in every instance where the applicant was himself the soldier to whom the bounty land was granted, and furnished evidence of his intention to settle in the country where the land lies, (such as asked in this case,) relief has been granted. This land seems to have been sold for taxes, but subsequently redeemed. The committee therefore report a bill for his relief.

ON THE SUBJECT OF MAKING A GRANT OF LAND TO LOUISIANA IN AID OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 9, 1834.

Mr. LEAVITT, from the committee to whom was referred the resolution of the House adopted on the 23d of December, instructing them to inquire "into the expediency and justice of granting to the State of Louisiana, in aid of internal improvements, the same extent of land which has heretofore been granted by Congress to other western States, and particularly to the State of Alabama," reported:

That in the investigation of the subject committed to them by the foregoing resolution they deemed it proper, in the first place, to inquire what grants of land have been made to any of the western States for purposes of internal improvements, and upon what principles, and upon what conditions, such grants have heretofore received the sanction of Congress. This examination has proved that in no instance has Congress authorized a donation of land to a State for the purpose above stated, without a designation of the specific object to which it was to be applied. It is true that liberal grants have been made to the States of Illinois, Indiana, Alabama, and Ohio, but in all of them the principle here indicated has been strictly adhered to, and restrictions and conditions have been imposed to secure the prompt and faithful application of the grants to the specified objects.

By an act of March 2, 1827, a quantity of land equal to one-half of five sections in width on each side of the land, reserving each alternate section to the United States, was granted to the State of Illinois to aid in the construction of a canal to connect the waters of the Illinois river with those of Lake Michigan. This act contains a provision that the canal, when completed, shall forever remain a public highway for the government, without any charge of toll; and, moreover, that the canal shall be commenced within five and be completed within twenty years from the passage of the act.

Simultaneously with the enactment of the foregoing law, another, containing similar provisions and restrictions, was passed, making a grant to the State of Indiana to aid in the construction of a canal to connect the waters of the Wabash with those of Lake Erie.

By an act of May 23, 1828, four hundred thousand acres of the relinquished lands in certain counties in the State of Alabama were granted to that State, to be applied to the improvement of the navigation of the Muscle shoals and Colbert's shoals, in the Tennessee river, and such other parts of said river as the legislature should direct, with a condition that the State should commence said improvements within two years, and complete them within ten years from the passage of the act.

By an act of May 24, 1828, a grant similar to those made to Illinois and Indiana, and with similar conditions and restrictions, was made to the State of Ohio to aid in extending the Miami canal from Dayton to the Miami river. By the fifth section of the same act a further grant of five hundred thousand acres of land was made to the State of Ohio to aid in paying the debts contracted by the State, or which should thereafter be contracted in the construction of her canals then authorized by law, with a proviso that such canals should be completed within seven years from the approval of the act.

In all the instances referred to it is most obvious that Congress had in contemplation the precise object of the grants, and that this had a controlling influence upon their action. In determining upon the expediency of a grant, they rightfully adjudged that its specific object should be presented, to enable them to decide upon the nature and character of the work in the construction of which they were called upon to aid. They have also deemed it judicious and proper to impose conditions having for their object the completion of the works within some reasonable and specified time. And in those cases in which they have granted the alternate sections along the route of a canal, one object of the grant has been obviously to promote the sales and enhance the value of the public lands which did not pass under the grant.

From this review of the past legislation of Congress on this subject it will be apparent that to authorize the grant contemplated by the resolution under consideration, for the general and undefined purpose of internal improvement within the State of Louisiana, would not only be in violation of the principles heretofore sanctioned by Congress, but, in the opinion of the committee, would be unwise and impolitic. The committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is not expedient to authorize the grant contemplated by the foregoing resolution, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 10, 1834.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of William K. Paulling, of Alabama, reported:

The petitioner sets forth that he was entitled to the right of pre-emption of a quarter section of land, to wit, the northeast quarter of section twenty-eight, township eighteen, of range four west, in the Huntsville land district; that some of his neighbors having applied at the Huntsville land office to enter their land and failed, because the register and receiver did not consider them within said district, the petitioner applied to enter said quarter section at the Tuscaloosa land office; that the register of that office being in doubt whether it belonged to the Tuscaloosa district, said he would first write to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for information, and notify petitioner when it was obtained; that the register of said office afterwards wrote to the petitioner that he would receive his application, the time allowed for such entries being about to expire, but when petitioner arrived at Tuscaloosa, he found instructions had just been received from the General Land Office that application must be made to enter said quarter section at the Huntsville land office. The time was then too short to enable him to go to Huntsville, and he lost the benefit of his pre-emption. The said quarter section is yet unsold.

John H. Vincent, esq., register of the land office at Tuscaloosa, certifies "that the facts set forth in the petition are true."

The committee believe the petitioner entitled to relief, and therefore report a bill for that purpose.

RESOLUTIONS OF OHIO ADVERSE TO THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 13, 1834.

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS of the legislature of Ohio relating to the Bank of the United States and the distribution of the public domain.

Whereas there is reason to apprehend that the Bank of the United States will attempt to obtain a renewal of its charter at the present session of Congress; and whereas it is abundantly evident that said bank has exercised powers derogatory to the spirit of our free institutions, and dangerous to the liberties of these United States; and whereas there is just reason to doubt the constitutional power of Congress to grant acts of incorporation for banking purposes out of the District of Columbia; and whereas we believe the proper disposal of the public lands to be of the utmost importance to the people of these United States, and that honor and good faith require their equitable distribution: Therefore—

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That we consider the removal of the public deposits from the Bank of the United States as required by the best interests of our country, and that a proper sense of public duty imperiously demands that that institution should be no longer used as a depository of the public funds.

Resolved, also, That we view with decided disapprobation the renewed attempts in Congress to secure the passage of the bill providing for the disposal of the public domain upon the principles proposed by Mr. Clay, inasmuch as we believe that such a law would be unequal in its operations and unjust in its results.

Resolved, also, That we heartily approve of the principles set forth in the late veto message upon that subject; and,

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their influence to prevent the rechartering of the Bank of the United States; to sustain the administration in its removal of the public deposits; and to oppose the passage of a land bill containing the principles adopted in the act upon that subject passed at the last session of Congress.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit copies of the foregoing preample and resolutions to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A NEW LAND OFFICE AT HELENA, IN THAT TERRITORY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 13, 1834.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, your memorialists, would represent unto your honorable bodies that we labor under great inconvenience and many disadvantages for the want of a land office in the eastern part of the Territory; that the settlement of this fertile section of the country is greatly retarded for the want of the same, and the great inconvenience in going to and from the land offices at Little Rock and Batesville, where all the lands in this section of the Territory are subject to entry or location. A great portion of the lands lie on the Mississippi river, and are of the first quality. Thousands of persons pass up and down this great stream who would become owners of land, provided a land office was located on the bank of the Mississippi, but who are prevented from doing so in consequence of the difficulties that would have to be surmounted, in consequence of the wilderness state of the country, and the scarcity of roads leading to the land offices at Little Rock and Batesville. The extent of country (embracing five counties) that borders the Mississippi is about four hundred miles in length.

Your memorialists would therefore pray your honorable bodies to form and establish a new land district in the eastern part of the Territory, to embrace the counties of St. Francis and Monroe, (which lie immediately in the rear of Phillips and Crittenden counties,) the counties of Mississippi, Crittenden, Phillips, Chicot, and all that portion of Arkansas county which fronts the Mississippi river, and as far back as to White river; thence with said river to the cut-off; thence through the same to the Arkansas river; thence with said river to the line between ranges two and three; and thence with said line to the Louisiana State line. Your memorialists would designate Helena, on the bank of the Mississippi river, as being the most eligible point for the location of the land office for said district, it being equidistant from the extreme points of said land district, and the facilities of approaching the same being greater than at any other point.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

JOHN WILSON, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOHN WILLIAMSON, President of the Legislative Council.

Approved November 8, 1833.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 24, 1834.

SIR: I have the honor to return the memorial of the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, enclosed in your letter of the 16th instant, requesting the establishment of another land district in that Territory, to embrace the whole of the Mississippi front of the Territory.

The act of June, 1832, established two additional land districts in that Territory, and altered the boundaries of the two districts previously existing. Under the present organization, all the lands on and in the rear of the Mississippi, situated north of the mouth of the river St. Francis, are subject to sale at Batesville, and the lands between the mouth of the St. Francis and the northern boundary of Louisiana are subject to sale at Little Rock. The two great means of intercourse between the interior of that Territory and the banks of the Mississippi are the Arkansas river and the road opened by the general government westward from a point opposite to Memphis. The mouth of the Arkansas is about half way between the northeastern and southeastern corners of the district, embracing the lands sold at Little Rock, and that river forms an easy mode of access to that land office; and the road from Memphis to the interior leaves the Mississippi at a point nearly equidistant from the northeast and southeast corners of the district of lands subject to sale at Batesville, and is the course which persons going to the interior from the banks of the Mississippi, above the mouth of the St. Francis, would naturally pursue.

The establishment of the new districts and the alterations in the boundaries of the old districts, as made by the act of 1832, involved a large amount of labor in transcribing and transferring the records and papers of the old offices. That labor has been performed, and all the districts are now in operation; and should the two eastern districts be now altered again, and another district be formed out of the eastern portions of those districts, it will be again necessary to transcribe or transfer such of the books and papers as may relate to the lands within such new district.

The land district proposed in the memorial is stated therein to have a front of about four hundred miles, with a very narrow average width, and for about one-third of this front that width will not exceed ten or twelve miles. The proposed position of the new land office is Helena, a town a few miles below the mouth of the St. Francis, and having, it is believed, no direct intercourse with the other parts of the Territory except by the Mississippi and Arkansas rivers and the Memphis road.

The division of the Territory into the existing districts was made after much deliberation on the subject, and I do not perceive such strong representations in the memorial as would induce me to recommend any present change in their organization. In the course of a year or two it can be satisfactorily ascertained whether the public convenience and the interests of government will be benefited by the establishment of another district, embracing the lands described in the memorial, or whether the desired results could not be obtained by the removal of the land offices now at Batesville and Little Rock to points nearer the Mississippi, and I would therefore think that the establishment of another district at this time would at least be premature.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. JOSEPH DUNCAN, Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

All the lands situate east of the following boundaries, viz: Commencing on the line between Louisiana and Arkansas, where it is intersected by the line between ranges two and three west; thence with said range line to the northwest corner of township four south, range two west; thence east with the dividing line between townships three and four south to the meridian; thence with the meridian line to the northwest corner of township two north, range one east; thence with the dividing line between townships two and three north to the St. Francis river; thence with the St. Francis river to the north boundary of the Territory of Arkansas.

ADVERSE TO A GRANT OF LAND TO THE TOWN OF PERRYSBURG, IN THE STATE OF OHIO, FOR PURPOSES OF EDUCATION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 14, 1834.

Mr. LEAVITT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the town council of the town of Perrysburg, in the State of Ohio, praying "Congress to grant them, for purposes of education, all the lots in said town belonging to the government, and also those lots lying below said town on the river that were reserved at the original sale for military purposes," reported:

That the town of Perrysburg was laid out on land owned by the government, under the authority of an act of Congress passed on the 27th of April, 1816; that after the town was laid out, and in accordance with the provisions of said act, the lots in said town were offered at public sale; that many of said lots were then sold, and those remaining unsold were subject to sale at private entry, as were other lands belonging to the government; that on the 7th of May, 1822, an act of Congress was passed vesting in the commissioners of Wood county the right of the government "to all the unsold town lots and out lots" in said town, on the condition that the county seat for said Wood county should be permanently established at said town of Perrysburg. It also appears that at the date of the act of May 7, 1822, a part of the lots in said town which had been previously sold had been relinquished by the purchasers or forfeited to the United States, and that those lots were again offered for sale by the government, and a part or the whole sold; that after this sale these relinquished and forfeited lots were claimed by the commissioners of Wood county as having passed to the county, under the said act of May 7, 1822; and that the then Commissioner of the General Land Office decided that said lots did vest in the county of Wood in virtue of said act, and that the sales thereof by the government were invalid; and in conformity with that decision, on the 24th of July, 1827, he directed that the moneys arising from such sales should be refunded to the purchasers. It moreover appears that the present Commissioner of the General Land Office has given a construction to the act of May, 1822, opposed to that given to it by his predecessor. The present Commissioner maintains that town lots which at the date of said act had been sold, but had been relinquished by the purchasers, or had been forfeited to the United States, cannot be considered as "unsold" lots within the meaning of said act, and did not therefore pass to the commissioners of Wood county. He has therefore directed the purchasers of said lots to be notified that the sales to them were valid, and that they now have a priority of right to purchase them.

It appears, therefore, that there is an existing controversy between the commissioners of Wood county and the purchasers of the relinquished and forfeited lots, involving the right thereto, which may require for its settlement a judicial adjudication. And, in the opinion of the committee, it is inexpedient for Congress further to interfere in the disposal of said lots until the legal right thereto shall be definitely decided.

Resolved, therefore, That it is inexpedient to grant the prayer of said petitioners, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

ON GRANTING A DUPLICATE LAND WARRANT TO THE REPRESENTATIVES OF AN OFFICER OF THE REVOLUTION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 15, 1834.

Mr. BAYLIES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Rebecca Sampson and Harriet Fish, reported:

That the petitioners represent that Crocker Sampson, late of Kingston, Massachusetts, deceased, was a lieutenant in the Massachusetts line of the revolutionary army, and that during his life he was the holder and owner of a military bounty land warrant, No. 1915, for two hundred acres of land, and that the said warrant has been lost by accident; that the petitioners, together with Lucy Sampson and Rebecca Crocker, (wife of Zenas Crocker,) are the legal heirs of said Crocker Sampson. The petitioners pray that a duplicate warrant may issue for said two hundred acres of land.

It appears that a warrant, as described in the petition, did issue to said Crocker Sampson; and the committee are satisfied from the evidence in the case, viz: the affidavit of the said Rebecca Sampson, and the certificate of T. P. Beal, esq., that the same warrant has been lost or destroyed by accident.

The committee therefore report a bill in conformity to the prayer of the petitioner.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR A REDUCTION OF THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS AND PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS TO SETTLERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 16, 1834.

JOINT MEMORIAL to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled.

The memorial of the general assembly of the State of Alabama respectfully represents: That the policy heretofore commenced, and for a time acted upon by the general government, of granting pre-emption rights to settlers upon the public lands in the purchase of one hundred and sixty acres at the minimum price of the government, has been attended with most beneficial consequences to the settlers, and has not materially diminished the public revenue. The liberal provision heretofore made by Congress for the benefit of actual settlers upon the public lands has enabled a meritorious class of the community to purchase and pay for their homes, and has greatly promoted the improvement of the country and the increase of its wealth and population. The preference granted to the actual occupants and cultivators of the soil had the effect to protect the weak against the strong—to prevent an unequal and ruinous competition between the settler of limited means, who wished to purchase for purpose of cultivation, and the speculator, whose object was not for settlement and cultivation, but with a view to a resale at a high profit. Experience has shown that, at most of the public sales of lands under the auction system, the government has not received the benefit which might be supposed to result from the usual competition among bidders; but, in many instances, extensive tracts of most valuable lands have been purchased, at the minimum price of the government, by combination of wealthy speculators too powerful to be successfully resisted by the settlers, and resold to the cultivators of the soil at high profit. The system of disposing of the public lands at auction would be less objectionable if the common fund of the whole people of the United States, who own the soil, could receive the benefit of the competition which such sales are supposed to induce; but many years' experience has shown the fact that such sales result in a compromise between a few extensive money-holders and the great mass of the settlers, by which the government is not benefited, the settlers are injured, and the speculator receives the benefit. This is the inevitable tendency of the present system of disposing of the public lands, and no laws, however severe their penalties, will have the effect to prevent it.

Your memorialists do not object to any fair and equitable mode of disposing of the public lands which will secure to the government the repayment of their cost and the reasonable expense of surveying and selling, but they feel assured that, in providing for the attainment of this object, your honorable bodies will have a due regard to the interest of those who encountered the hardships and privations incident to the settlement and improvement of a new country. The enterprising and industrious citizen, whose object is to subdue and cultivate the soil, is entitled to a preference over him whose purpose in buying is to speculate; and, as the prosperity of the country and the increase of its wealth and population would be greatly promoted and most effectually secured by an enlarged and extensive cultivation of the soil, your memorialists respectfully ask the passage of a law granting pre-emption rights to actual settlers upon the public lands, in the purchase of one quarter section at the minimum price, to include their improvements.

Your memorialists would also respectfully represent to your honorable bodies that there remain, in different parts of this State, many portions of public domain heretofore offered for sale, and which, though subject to entry at the minimum price for years past, still remain unsold. Much of this sterile and refuse land lies in the most fertile, populous, and wealthy parts of the State, and would doubtless be entered at more than its intrinsic value; other portions are held by the more indigent, though not less meritorious class of citizens, who, in connexion with this refuse, may also be tenants of a small spot of more valuable land which escaped the eye of the avaricious speculator. The minimum price being much too great, is the sole and obvious reason of these barren lands remaining unsold. Your memorialists do believe that if the price were reduced to a reasonable quantum the lands would then be immediately disposed of, and the government treasury, instead of sustaining a loss, would receive greater accession to her funds than otherwise; but even admitting that a reduction of the price would diminish our national revenue, still your memorialists are strongly convinced that there are overwhelming reasons appealing to the wisdom of Congress for a change of policy in the distribution of refuse lands more favorable to the yeomanry of our country. Let such lands be disposed of at their real value, then will it be in the power of every citizen to become a freeholder, our population will become more dense, our strength greater, and the places that are now sterile and barren wastes would soon be the homes of the poor but industrious farmers.

Your memorialists deem it unnecessary to urge any other reasons in favor of the policy which they recommend, as every consideration, both of policy and justice, seem to demand the reduction asked for. They therefore pray a reduction in said lands to fifty cents per acre, and the prospective annual reduction, until the whole shall have been disposed of, allowing the occupant a pre-emption right to one-eighth of a section; and, as in duty bound, &c.

Resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their best exertions to secure the object embraced in the foregoing memorial.

Resolved, further, That the governor be requested to cause a copy of said memorial to be forwarded to each of our senators and representatives in the Congress of the United States.

QUANTITY OF LANDS GRANTED TO THE STATE OF INDIANA FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE WABASH AND ERIE CANAL.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 16, 1834.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 14, 1834.

SIR: In obedience to the resolution of the House of Representatives, dated the 24th ultimo, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to communicate "a statement of the quantity of lands included in the grant made to the State of Indiana, to enable her to construct the Wabash and Erie canal, which have been sold under the proclamation of the President, dated September 3, 1833, or any previous proclamation ordering sales of land at Bucyrus and Wapaghkonetta, in the State of Ohio," and also to accompany said report with "a statement of the amount of money arising from the sale of said canal lands, together with a map of the same, distinctly marking their contiguity to the canal line, and communicating such other information of said lands in his possession as will enable the House to form an estimate of their intrinsic value," I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the subjects embraced in the resolution.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

R. B. TANEY, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 8, 1834.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the copy of the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 24th ultimo, referred by you to this office, which is in the following words:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House a statement of the quantity of lands included in the grant made to the State of Indiana to enable her to construct the Wabash and Erie canal, which have been sold under the proclamation of the President dated September 3, 1833, or any previous proclamation, ordering sales of land at Bucyrus and Wapaghkonetta, in the State of Ohio."

"2d. That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to accompany said report with a statement of the amount of money arising from the sale of said canal lands, together with a map of the same, distinctly marking their contiguity to the canal line, and communicate such other information of said lands in his possession as will enable this House to form an estimate of their intrinsic value."

And I beg leave to report that this office is not in possession of any map or survey of the canal line referred to in those resolutions, nor has the office any official information showing that that line has ever been connected with the lines of the public surveys; and that in consequence of the want of such a map the alternate sections which where granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of that canal have never been designated. It is therefore impracticable for this office to furnish a statement of the quantity of land included in the grant to the State of Indiana which has been sold by the United States, or the amount of moneys arising from the said sales. The same cause renders it impracticable for me to furnish a map distinctly marking the contiguity of the sold lands to the canal line, nor is there any information in the possession of this office which would enable the House of Representatives "to form an estimate of their intrinsic value."

It is proper to state that in November last the land officers at Wapaghkonetta and Bucyrus were instructed to withhold from the public sales directed by the President's proclamation of the 3d of September last all the lands which they supposed to be within five miles of the canal line.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

APPLICATION OF ARKANSAS FOR PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS TO SETTLERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 20, 1834.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general assembly of the Territory of Arkansas respectfully represents: That within the last four years this Territory has nearly doubled its population; that the emigrants are generally poor, and have expended their all in reaching their new homes; that within that period large portions of country have been by them opened and thickly populated, which were previously but an unexplored wilderness; that by their enterprise those lands are now esteemed valuable, and are attracting the speculator and man of wealth; and that some portions of this country having been rapidly surveyed, are expected shortly to be offered for sale before it has been possible for the hardy enterprise of the pioneer to acquire the means of securing his home Your memorialists are fully sensible that a postponement of the land sales would neither conduce to their own interest nor that of the government, but they do indulge a hope that a medium may be found to reconcile those conflicting interests, by the passage of a law which shall secure the actual settler and cultivator in the possession of his improvement for a limited time, say two years after the land shall be offered for sale, provided there be no bidder at the land sale, thus stimulating their enterprise by offering, as a reward to their industry, a home for their families. Should the settler fail in making his entry within the time asked for, the lands of the government will still be increased in value by his industry, and be entered with avidity by those who are daily emigrating or by the speculator; or if the Congress of the United States should decline the passage of a law so humane and just in its provisions, your memorialists would ask for a law securing the settler a just compensation, for two years after the land sale, for his labor, should his home be entered by another without his consent. Your memorialists forbear to enter into a full discussion of this, to them, all-important subject, because they have seen with pleasure enlightened members of Congress, who have from year to year discussed the subject with views liberal and, in the opinion of your memorialists, conclusive, and much more elaborately than could properly be compressed within the limits of a memorial. Your memorialists are pleading the cause of half their constituents, who have sacrificed present comforts to a prospect of future independence, whose brightest hopes must be blasted without some melioration of the present laws. The granting our prayer would fix upon our soil a hardy, enterprising, and industrious population.

We earnestly present our petition, and, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.,

JOHN WILSON, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOHN WILLIAMSON, President of the Legislative Council.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 21, 1834.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee to whom was referred the petition of Eloy Segura and others, reported:

That the petitioners are the surviving descendants of a colony of Spaniards who, at a very early period, were brought from Spain and settled in Louisiana. They were placed on tracts of land which were assigned them by the King of Spain, at a place called New Aberia, and their lands fronted on Lake Peigniers, since called the Spanish lake. The King of Spain furnished them some aid in leaving Malaga. There is proof before the committee that these persons were put into the possession of their respective lots or tracts of land by the King's surveyor, where they yet live; but as those lands which were given them by the Spanish government were destitute of timber, the Spanish government gave them collectively the privilege of cutting timber and fire-wood in a cypress swamp, and on a tract of woodland in the neighborhood called the Trois Isles. They continued in the undisturbed enjoyment of that privilege until long since the change of government by the cession of Louisiana to the United States, which privilege continued for near fifty years. About the year 1821 the woodlands within which that privilege had so long been exercised were sold by the United States, and the Spanish families left destitute of timber. With this they were not content, and continued in the practice of supplying themselves from the same source, and were prosecuted at law for a trespass on the purchasers from the United States, and condemned to pay damages. The petitioners ask remuneration for the losses by them sustained (equal to $15,000) by reason of the sale of the woodlands aforesaid. The committee cannot conceive that the petitioners are entitled to remuneration; they are in the peaceable possession of all the lands which were actually granted by the government of Spain; they enjoyed the privilege of using timber of other lands for near half a century, and until they were purchased by the government of the United States, and until these lands were sold and purchased by other individuals.

ON CLAIM FOR THE RENEWAL OF A BOUNTY LAND WARRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 23, 1834.

Mr. CAVE JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a resolution of the House on the 20th of January, directing them to inquire "into the expediency of renewing a warrant of four hundred acres of land which was granted to Evan Edwards in 1827, and which has been lost, and still remains unsatisfied," reported:

That upon application to the Land Office, it appears that a warrant, No 1205, issued on the 9th day of February, 1827, to "Charles Lee Edwards, the only son (and other heirs, if any there be) of Major Evan Edwards, of the Pennsylvania line, for 400 acres of land," and that the same remains unsatisfied, nor has the same ever been presented to the office for satisfaction; the owner of the warrant alleges that it has been lost. The committee therefore report a bill authorizing the issuance of a duplicate.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 20, 1834.

I hereby certify that warrant No. 1205, granted by the United States on the 9th of February, 1827, to Charles Lee Edwards, the only son (and other heirs, if any there be) of Major Evan Edwards, of the Pennsylvania line, for four hundred acres, remains unsatisfied, nor has the same ever been presented to this office.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 23, 1834.

Mr. CAGE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Francis W. Graham and others, heirs and legal representatives of Wm. Graham, deceased, reported:

That the evidence is satisfactory, conclusively so, that the legal representative and administrator of the succession of William Graham, the ancestor, did, in the year 1830, pay to the receiver of public moneys for the district of lands north of Red river the full amount for a certain lot or quarter section of land, situate on Lake Providence, in the State of Louisiana, being lot No. 16, in township 21, of range 12 east. The petitioners allege the fact, and of which there is satisfactory proof, that this ancestor, and the heirs since his death, occupied and cultivated the land in question from 1814 until the payment was made for it under the pre-emption law of 1830. The lot of land thus occupied, cultivated, and paid for, being lot No. 16, is by law reserved for the use of schools. The petitioners state, and so the committee believe the fact to be, that the receiver of public moneys in the land district north of Red river received the money in payment of lot No. 16, knowing at the time that it was land reserved by law for the use of schools, and, from the peculiar hardship of the case, permitted it to be thus sold, alleging, as the petitioners state, that he would appropriate other lands for the use of schools in lieu of the 16th section. The committee are of opinion that the petitioners are entitled to relief, and report a bill.

That it appears, by the documents accompanying the memorial, that a grant was made by Don Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, governor of the provinces of Florida and Louisiana, dated February 14, 1799, to Jesse Ratcliff, for 240 superficial arpents of land in the district (now parish) of East Baton Rouge, the land mentioned in the memorial; in pursuance of which, a survey and plat was made by Don Vincente Sebastian Pintado on the 11th day of December, 1804. That this title, by sundry mesne conveyances, became vested in the said Samuel Vail, and that the said tract of land was settled by him in 1819, and improved, and resided on by him ever since. APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR LANDS FOR THE SUPPORT OF PRIMARY SCHOOLS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 27, 1834.

A RESOLUTION in relation to the refuse lands in the various counties in the State of Mississippi.

Believing that every true patriot who wishes the prosperity of our common country and perpetuation of enlightened republican institutions feels a deep interest in spreading light and knowledge over our whole population; (this we conceive can be best promoted by the establishment of primary schools in each county in this State, and in each and every State of the Union; being, however, specially concerned as to the importance of educating the youth of this State in elementary principles;) and believing with our sister States that education is the only means of perpetuating a true knowledge of our government and its principles; and believing that the attainment of such desirable ends cannot be a matter of indifference to the general government, and that they will be disposed to harmonize with us in producing results so desirable with little if any sacrifice of the general weal: we therefore pray that the refuse lands in the several counties of our State which have been or will have been offered for sale three years, shall thereafter belong to the respective counties within which they may be situated, and be subject to be disposed of by the county police of each county for the sole and only purpose of establishing and maintaining primary schools in the respective counties. These lands, so long in market and unbought, can never be of much use to the Union; yet, under the prudent management of the police of each county, guarding against trespass and depredation, they may be rendered subservient to the great purposes of education.

Be it therefore resolved, That our senators be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of an act of the federal government for the attainment of the above objects without interfering with such concessions of land to the State as have been granted to our sister States.

Be it further resolved, That the governor of this State be requested to forward a copy of the above preamble and resolution to our senators and representatives in Congress.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI TO EXCHANGE THE SIXTEENTH SECTIONS OF LAND, WHEN VALUELESS, FOR OTHER LANDS, AND THAT TOWNSHIPS IN THE CHICKASAW PURCHASE MAY BE PROVIDED WITH SCHOOL LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 27, 1834.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Mississippi respectfully represents: That a large proportion of the sixteenth sections of land, which by the act of Congress passed the 3d of March, A. D. 1803, were appropriated to the "support of schools within the" several townships of the Mississippi Territory, from sterility or other deficiency in soil have wholly failed to answer the benevolent purpose which we are bound to presume induced their donation. It would certainly be doing injustice to the generous and humane motive which must have actuated your predecessors in the enactment of the law above cited to attribute a design to bestow the benefits therein conferred with a partiality which should give to some townships a profitable school fund and to others nothing. Yet such is the operation of the act referred to. It would be doing equal injustice to suppose the bounty of Congress was conferred with no specific design, but cast upon our citizens with such accidental advantages as result from chances in a lottery of more blanks than prizes. Yet such is the operation of the law referred to. It is a fact which requires but to be stated to command credence with all, that the benefits of this donation are actually received in an inverse ratio to the real necessities of the donees. Where the lands are rich and valuable, there resides the independent planter, who has no concern for the product of the sixteenth section, but where the soil is less productive and of little value, though frequently containing as many white inhabitants as lands of better quality, yet those inhabitants are usually the least wealthy of our population, to whom a valuable school section would be of great utility. But in such regions of country the school land now appointed in the sixteenth section most frequently contributes nothing in promoting the object of its appropriation.

These disadvantages are peculiarly felt in those counties of this State east of Pearl river, and those counties generally which are designated pine woods counties. In many of those the benefits manifestly intended by the sixteenth section system are utterly unavailable, and must ever remain so, unless your honorable bodies shall afford relief.

We would likewise represent that, by the late treaty with the Chickasaw tribe of Indians, the United States have stipulated to sell all the lands obtained from said tribe, and situated in this State, and to pay over the proceeds to the Indians. In this stipulation no reservation is made of the sixteenth section, notwithstanding the several laws of Congress heretofore passed on this subject have been generally relied on as warranting the expectation to the people of this State that the sixteenth section system would be extended throughout our Territory. To remedy these unmerited inequalities, and to promote the avowed object heretofore so favorably considered of by Congress, the legislature would suggest to your honorable bodies the justice and propriety of permitting the heads of families in the townships comprised within the limits of our counties to relinquish all claims to the sixteenth section, and be entitled in lieu thereof to enter in the name of such township another section from any lands subject to entry in the late Choctaw purchase, and that your honorable bodies would likewise provide that some suitable agent be appointed to enter from the like class of lands in the Choctaw or Chickasaw purchase a section for each township now surveyed in the Chickasaw territory where the reserve of the sixteenth section has not been made, which section shall belong to such township, for the same object of education as by the act of 1803 was appointed in reference to the sixteenth section.

Resolved by the legislature of the State of Mississippi, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their best endeavors to procure the passage of a law to carry into effect the object of the foregoing memorial.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of this memorial and resolution to our senators and representatives in Congress.

APPLICATION OF MISSISSIPPI FOR A CHANGE OF THE LOCATION OF THE LAND OFFICE FROM CLINTON TO JACKSON, IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 27, 1834.

A MEMORIAL to Congress to remove the land office from Clinton to the town of Jackson, in Hinds county.

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Mississippi respectfully represents that the land office of the United States at the town of Clinton, in the county of Hinds, is situated ten miles west of the town of Jackson, the seat of government of the State of Mississippi. Therefore be it.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 29, 1834.

Mr. CASEY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Job Bass, reported:

That the petitioner, as he sets forth, did, on the 2d day of November, 1831, purchase at the land office in the district north of Red river, in the State of Louisiana, lots of land Nos. 19, 20, and 21, in township No. 20, range No. 13 east, containing 488.60 acres, for which he paid the sum of $610 75; that immediately after the purchase he went to improving said land, and has made valuable improvements thereon; that, on application to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for a patent, he learned that the lots so purchased had been previously selected as school lands. He now prays the passage of a law authorizing the proper officer to select other school lands in lieu of said lots, and that a patent issue to him for said lots so purchased by him. The facts, as stated by the petitioner, being satisfactorily proved, and the case, in the opinion of the committee, requiring relief, they accordingly report a bill.

AMOUNT OF LANDS SOLD AND THE NET PROCEEDS THEREFOR; AMOUNT SURVEYED AND UNSOLD; AMOUNT GRANTED TO STATES AND TERRITORIES, AND FOR WHAT PURPOSES; AND AMOUNT GRANTED IN BOUNTIES AND DONATIONS AND FOR SCHOOLS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE JANUARY 30, 1834.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 30, 1834.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 19th ultimo, directing the Secretary of the Treasury "to communicate to the Senate—

"1st. The whole amount of public lands belonging to the United States sold since they were ceded to the United States, exhibiting the net proceeds, and distinguishing between those which have been sold within the limits of Louisiana, Florida, and other parts of the United States, respectively, and including the latest returns.

"2d. The whole amount of public lands which have been surveyed and exposed to sale in the several States and Territories, and showing the amount sold, and the amount remaining to be sold, according to the last returns.

"3d. The amount which has been actually patented in bounties to the army during the late war.

"4th. The amount granted to each of the several States and Territories, and for what purposes.

"5th. The amount set apart, or reserved for schools in the several States and Territories.

"6th. The amount granted in donations for the cultivation of the vine and olive, to La Fayette, and for other purposes"—

I have the honor to transmit herewith the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to which officer the subjects of these resolutions were referred.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

R. B. TANEY, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. MARTIN VAN BUREN, Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE January 28, 1834.

SIR: in obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the United States passed on the 19th ultimo in the words following to wit:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate—

"1st. The whole amount of public lands belonging to the United States sold since they were ceded to the United States, exhibiting the net proceeds, and distinguishing between those which have been sold within the limits of Louisiana, Florida, and other parts of the United States, respectively, and including the latest returns.

"5th. The amount set apart or reserved for schools in the several States and Territories.

"6th. The amount granted in donations for the cultivation of the vine and olive, to La Fayette, and for other purposes"—

And which you have referred to this office, I have the honor to submit the two accompanying documents, marked A and B, which afford the information desired.

The document A purports to contain the information required by the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth clauses, arranged in columns in the order called for by the resolution; that marked B purports to contain the information sought for by the sixth clause of the resolution; in reference to which, I have to remark that the lands originally set apart "for the cultivation of the vine and olive," comprising four townships situated in the State of Alabama, were not in the nature of a donation, as implied in the resolution. Those lands were originally required to be paid for at the minimum price of two dollars per acre by the act of March 3, 1817, on an extended term of payment. Subsequent acts, further extending the term of payment, have made those lands subject to the present minimum price of the public lands.

The period of the "latest returns" has been assumed to be September 30, 1833, that being the date to which the last quarterly returns have been rendered, corresponding with the period to which the latest official statements have been completed.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

ON CLAIM FOR BOUNTY LAND BY THE REPRESENTATIVES OF A DECEASED SOLDIER OF THE WAR OF 1812-'15.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 31, 1834.

Mr. C. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a resolution of the House instructing them "to inquire into the expediency of paying Leonard Holly, a soldier of the late war, the bounty in land and money, and any other sum that may be due for his services," reported:

That the facts applicable to this case are, that Leonard Holly enlisted as a soldier for five years, on June 22, 1812, in the 10th regiment of United States infantry, and was continued on the rolls of his regiment until April, 1815, after which no further notice of him was taken upon the muster or pay rolls. From this statement, it satisfactorily appears that Leonard Holly served in the army of the United States during the whole of the late war, and that he would be entitled to his military bounty land, and any pay which might be due to him, were he alive, unless he had deserted, or been deprived of any part of his right by the sentence of a court-martial, of which no evidence exists; but as it appears that he has never been heard of, either by his family or by any person, since April, 1815, the presumption obviously arises that he is dead. The committee, therefore, report a bill for the relief of his legal representatives, the War Department not considering itself authorized to settle with them unless it be furnished with positive proof of the death of the individual through whom they derive their claim.

23D CONGRESS.] No 1170. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 31, 1834.

Mr. CAGE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the resolution, with the accompanying documents, in the case of David Kincaid, reported:

That by a reference to the accompanying documents it appears that David Kincaid did produce to the board of commissioners for confirmation a special permission to settle a concession from Charles Dehault Delassus, lieutenant governor, &c., dated January 14, 1803, for five hundred arpents of land, situate on the forks of the river Chorette, district of St. Charles, and certified to have been surveyed on the 27th of February, 1806. It appears by the testimony taken before the commissioners on the 2d day of April, 1806, that the claimant purchased the right of settlement and concession from one Francis Wood, who had then a cabin on the same; that the claimant did, in the year 1803, proceed to build a house upon the same; that he had then a family, consisting of himself, his wife, and eight children; and that early in the spring of 1804 he moved on said land, and actually inhabited and cultivated it up to the time of testifying. It appears from the opinion of the board of commissioners, given on the 20th November, 1809, that this claim was rejected, and upon the grounds, as the committee suppose, of want of more strict proof of habitation and cultivation under the provisions of the act of the 2d March, 1805. It appears from a document accompanying the resolution from the office of the recorder of land titles at St. Louis, dated December 16, 1817, that a subsequent board of commissioners have recognized the legality of this claim, but that it was omitted to be placed upon the list of granted settlement rights for the county of St. Charles, and the recorder so states in an application to the United States surveyor for Illinois and Missouri in an application to be permitted then to enter it upon the list of granted settlement rights. The recorder's report upon these settlement claims is dated July 2, 1816, and is confirmed by the act of 29th April, 1816, periods anterior to that at which this claim was discovered to be omitted and sought to be placed upon the list of settlement grants. The committee are of opinion that the claimant is within the equity of the statute of the 2d of March, 1805, and if that were doubted the subsequent proceedings in relation to his claim entitled him to relief, and they therefore report a bill.

23D CONGRESS.] No. 1171. [1ST SESSION.

ON CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 31, 1834.

Mr. CARR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Abbott for himself, and in behalf of the other heirs of James Abbott, deceased, for 640 acres of land, reported:

That the petitioner states that about the year 1796 James Abbott, now deceased, was in possession of a certain tract of land situated on the border of the river Detroit, and that Abbott made many improvements thereon in buildings, fencing, setting out an orchard, &c. It appears from the transcript record of the Detroit land office that the claim of Robert Abbot for himself and the other heirs of James Abbott, deceased, was filed in said office as early as the year 1805, and that it was finally acted upon by the board of land commissioners, acting under the provision of the law of the 11th of May, 1820, which provision is as follows:

"And the said commissioners shall also have power to examine and decide according to the laws respecting the same claims which have been filed with the register of the land office, and not heretofore acted on."

It further appears from the decision of the commissioners that they deemed the claim equitable and just, but that they were prevented from confirming it from the circumstance of the land, or at least the greater part of it, having been already sold. The petitioners now ask for a grant of land containing 640 acres, being the amount they would have been entitled to had not the land embraced by the claim been sold. The committee are of opinion that the petitioners are entitled to relief, and for that purpose report a bill.

23D CONGRESS.] No. 1172. [1ST SESSION.

LAND CLAIMS IN THE SOUTHEASTERN LAND DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES JANUARY 31, 1834.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 29, 1834.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit the original report of the register and receiver of the land office at New Orleans, made pursuant to the act of Congress approved July 4, 1832, entitled "An act for the final adjustment of the claims to lands in the southeastern land district of the State of Louisiana."

The second section of the act directs that "the register and receiver shall, at or before the beginning of the next session of Congress thereafter, make to the Secretary of the Treasury a report of the claims which may have been preferred before them, together with the testimony, their opinion of the validity of the claims, and such other information respecting them as may be in their possession; which report shall, by the Secretary of the Treasury, be laid before Congress as soon as practicable, with his opinion touching the validity of the respective claims."

The evidence in support of the several claims not having been forwarded to the department as required by the act, I have not therefore the testimony which would enable me to form an opinion of the validity of the respective claims; moreover, it would require more time to examine them with proper care than could be given to the subject consistently with the other duties of this department during the present session of Congress.

Under these circumstances, as delay may be injurious to the interests of the public as well as the individuals, I have deemed it my duty to communicate to Congress the report of the register and receiver, and to submit to their judgment whether, upon the facts stated in the report, further legislation is now necessary.

I have the honor also to transmit the remarks of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on several of the claims mentioned in the report of the register and receiver.

All which is respectfully submitted.

R. B. TANEY, Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 9, 1834.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the reports of the register and receiver of the land office at New Orleans on private land claims, filed with them for examination under the provisions of the act of Congress approved on the 4th of July, 1832, entitled "An act for the final adjustment of the claims to lands in the southeastern land district of the State of Louisiana," which you referred to this office on the 30th ultimo for examination; and having given to the subject all the attention which the other pressing demands upon my time would admit of, I beg leave to submit the following as the results of such examination, premising, however, that no objection is made, upon any account, to the claims included in that report which are not specially designated in the under mentioned remarks, as they are considered entitled to confirmation under the provisions of the existing laws, and the principles heretofore acted upon in relation to such claims.

Class A is described as "including claims founded upon grants or concessions made and completed in due form by the French or Spanish governments."

Claims Nos. 3, 10, 25, 32, and 38, having no specific depth in arpents mentioned, nor any extent in superfices, has rendered it impracticable for me to ascertain the quantity or the depth in each case, which would be granted by the unqualified confirmation of them by Congress.

Claim No. 45, for 2,669 arpents, is stated to be founded on a complete grant made by the Spanish government on the 9th of August, 1802. The power of the former authorities in Louisianna to make complete titles or grants has ever been considered by the United States as having ceased on the 1st of October, 1800, and no complete grant dated subsequent to that time has been recognized by the United States in consequence of such title alone; and from the report itself, it appears that a former board of commissioners refused to confirm this claim upon that ground. The land officers now include it in their report upon complete grants, because they consider it as duly confirmed by the first section of the act of the 12th of April, 1814.—(Land Laws, page 651.) But by reference to that section of the law it will be seen that it embraces incomplete titles alone, and has no bearing whatever upon the claim in question.

Claim No. 46, of Sosthene Roman, is for about 2,100 arpents, as being all the land embraced in the extension of the lateral lines of a tract owned by him, of eight arpents front, "from the extremity of the first forty arpents, or ordinary depth thereof, back to the Bayou Chevreuil, the first water-course in the rear." The land officers state that they know not of any French or Spanish law or regulation applicable to such cases, and that nearly all the French or Spanish concessions that they have seen are particular in designating and specifying the depth granted. I know of no regulation upon the subject; but as it is believed that this mode of granting lands is a departure from the general principles respecting grants of second or back concessions, which were almost uniformly confined by these governments, as they now are by the United States, to an additional depth of forty arpents, or such other number as would with the front tract make an entire depth of eighty arpents, I think that the words of the grant, under which this extra depth is claimed, might with as much propriety be construed to mean all the depth within the usual limits of forty arpents additional as could be found vacant and unappropriated, as to suppose that they were intended to grant all the land between the front tract and the first water-course in the rear of it, wherever it could be found. Under these circumstances, and not knowing how far the unlimited confirmation of this claim might be considered as recognizing the principle that grants with undefined lines are to be recognized in accordance with the views of the claimants, and thus establish a precedent not to be resisted in other cases, I would respectfully suggest the expediency of assigning in the confirmation some definite depth to the claim, not exceeding eighty arpents, which is believed to be the greatest depth ever granted as an additional concession to the front tract.

The class B includes "claims founded upon incomplete titles, such as orders or warrants of survey, authentic surveys," &c., &c.

In cases No. 26, 28, and 29, the quantity claimed in each case is not stated, nor does the report enable me to ascertain it.

Claim No. 19 is for a tract of land more than fifteen miles long, with a width of less than one-ninth of a mile.

Claim No. 23 is for two tracts of land, one more than fifteen miles, and the other of rather more than three miles in length, with a depth in each case of fifty-eight and one-third chains, or nearly three-fourths of a mile, making the claim embrace about 10,080 superficial arpents.

No. 47 is for a tract nearly eleven miles long, with a width of less than one-ninth of a mile.

Heretofore no claim, whether founded on a complete or incomplete title, has been confirmed to more than a league square, or 7,056 arpents; but in one at least of the above cases this quantity is greatly exceeded, although the act of Congress under which this report is made expressly provides "that no claim shall be therein recommended for confirmation for more than the quantity contained in a league square."

The usual practice of the French and Spanish governments in granting lands was, so far as it is known to this office, to give a narrow front on a water-course in proportion to the depth of the tract; very rarely, indeed, giving a front equal to the side lines in length. By reference, however, to some of these cases, it will be seen that there has been a very wide departure from this general principle; and I should think that the genuineness of the papers under which these lands are claimed, as well as the boundaries of the claims, should be strictly scrutinized and satisfactorily established before they are confirmed to the extent claimed.

Class C includes "claims founded upon possession and cultivation for at least ten consecutive years prior to the 20th day of December, 1803." Claims of this description being recognized by the 2d section of the act of March 3, 1807, (Land Laws, p. 548,) to the extent contained in the ascertained and acknowledged boundaries of the tract claimed, provided it does not exceed two thousand acres.

The first claim in this report, the unqualified confirmation of which cannot be recommended, is that designated as No. 6, being for a front of more than four miles and a half by a depth of less than one-fourth of a mile. The remarks previously made in relation to claims having such extensive fronts in comparison to their depths apply with additional force to this claim, in which the limits claimed are not pretended to have been assigned by any former government, it being generally the practice of this government to make the settlement claim embrace as compact a body of land as practicable, with the improvements in the centre of the tract surveyed, whenever the circumstances will admit of it.

Claims Nos. 40, 176, 177, 178, 179, and 191, do not specify the depth of each claim, or its superficial contents, and I have no means of ascertaining either of these points.

With respect to the claims Nos. 84 and 85 I have to remark that the fact of consecutive possession of ten years prior to December 20, 1803, is not stated in either case, although, in the other cases in this class, the land officers have so worded their statement of facts as to establish that point in each case.

Claim No. 86 is for 3,300 arpents, and No. 186 is for 2,400 arpents, and therefore each case calls for a greater quantity of land than is allowed by the previous laws respecting this description of claim.

No. 251 is a claim set up by the police jury of Point Coupée, in behalf of the inhabitants of that parish, to a tract of 920 arpents, in consequence of their having erected a levee on it, after it was abandoned by the pretended owners many years ago.

There is no law authorizing the insertion of a claim of this character in the report, inasmuch as it is not founded upon any grant or foreign title, nor is it based upon inhabitation and cultivation by the present claimants or any other persons.

So far as is known to this office, no claim of this description has ever been recognized, and I am decidedly of opinion that it ought not to be confirmed. The fact that the inhabitants of this parish found it necessary or expedient to make a levee on the land in question, for their general benefit, does not, in my opinion, give them any stronger claim to the land above mentioned than the other counties and parishes in the different States would have to such vacant lands in their limits as they might see proper to use or improve in any manner for their common benefit. Another important objection arises from the fact that the confirmation of this tract would be justly considered as authorizing all the other parishes in Louisiana, in which the inhabitants have made levees in front of the public lands binding on the rivers and bayous, to claim the same in consequence of their having made such levees, and thus most probably strip the government of every foot of public land upon such bayous and water-courses. The number of claims in which this case, if now confirmed, would be hereafter referred to as a precedent, cannot be known to this office, nor can the injurious effects which its confirmation would have upon the future interests of the government be now estimated.

Class D includes the claims described in the 4th section of the act of July 4, 1832, under which this report is made. If the claims in this class are confirmed, and I perceive no objection to them, provision must be made for refunding to the purchasers of those lands the amounts heretofore paid by them to the United States.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

Hon. R. B. TANEY, Secretary of the Treasury.

P. S.—The public interest requiring that the originals of all the reports upon private land claims should be in possession of this office for future action thereon, I would respectfully request that in case this original should be submitted to Congress provisions should be made for its return to this office.

Reports of the register of the land office and receiver of public moneys in and for the southeastern district of the State of Louisiana, on the claims to land filed in the register's office, in pursuance of an act of Congress approved on the 4th day of July, 1832, and entitled "An act for the final adjustment of the claims to lands in the southeastern land district of the State of Louisiana."

It was thought advisable, for the sake of greater order and convenience, to divide the following reports into four distinct and separate classes, as follows, to wit:

Class A, including claims founded upon grants or concessions made and completed in due form by the French or Spanish governments.

Class B, including claims founded upon incomplete titles, such as orders or warrants of survey, authentic surveys, &c., &c.

Class C, including claims founded upon possession and cultivation for at least ten consecutive years prior to the 20th day of December, 1803, &c.

Class D, including the claims embraced within the provisions of the fourth section of the above mentioned act of July 4, 1832, &c.

CLASS A.

Including claims founded upon complete French and Spanish grants, or patented concessions.

No. 1.—E. B. Dufouchar De Gruy claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west or right bank of the river Mississippi, and about thirty miles below the city of New Orleans, containing ten arpents and four feet front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, bounded above by land of Bonaventure Bailly, and below by other land of the claimant.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract, regularly granted by the French government to Charles Carel, on the 25th day of February, 1765, and is now held by claimant in virtue of regular conveyances under said grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 2.—Jeanne Livet, widow of Joseph Guenard, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the east or left bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-six miles below the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land originally granted to Jacques Livet.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract, regularly granted by the French government to François Livet, the ancestor of claimant, on the 19th day of February, 1765, under which said grantee claimant holds by virtue of inheritance. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 3.—Simon Cucullu, senior, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Bernard, about eight miles below the city of New Orleans, and being a second or additional depth, extending to the lake and lying immediately back of the first and ordinary depth of six arpents front on the river Mississippi, bounded above by land belonging to the heirs of James Villeré, and below by other lands of claimant.

The said tract of land was formerly claimed before the late board of commissioners by Charles Jumonville de Villiers, but was by the said board rejected for want of proper evidence of title; but the present claimant has since discovered, and now produces, à complete grant for said land made by the French government in favor of Robert Gautier de Montreuil, on the 14th day of June, 1767. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 4.—Achille and Laurent Sigur claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and containing twenty-seven arpents front, whereof thirteen arpents have a depth of eighty arpents, and the balance a depth of forty arpents, bounded above by land of Mrs. Baptiste Bergeron, and below by land of W. and J. Montgomery.

The said tract of land is made up and composed of five smaller tracts, originally granted by the Spanish government in due form to the following named persons, viz: 1st, to Anselmo Blanchard, on the 13th day of October, 1797; 2d, to Antonio Blanchard, on the 23d day of January, 1798; 3d, to Anselmo Blanchard, on the 3d of January, 1799; 4th, to Olivier Benoist, on the 5th of July, 1774; and 5th, to Remigio Bodro, on the 5th day of July, 1774; under all of whom claimants hold by virtue of regular conveyances. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 5.—Pierre Latour claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-seven miles below the city of New Orleans, containing six arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of widow Bailly, and below by land of Bonaventure Bailly.

Four arpents front of the said land were granted, in due form, (with a large quantity,) by the French government to Mathieu Santine, on the 19th day of February, 1766; and the balance is claimed in virtue of a regular order of survey issued by Governor Miro in favor of Pedro Barrois, on the 4th of July, 1791, and of continued and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 6.—Joachim Bermudez claims a tract of land situate at a place called "Gentilly," or "Chantilly," in the vicinity of New Orleans, and composed of two tracts, one of which contains six arpents front on the Gentilly high road, by twenty arpents in depth, between parallel lines, and the other fronting on the Bayou St. John, and forming a trapezium, according to a plat of survey produced by claimant, contains one hundred and twenty-one and three-fourths superficial arpents, bounded on one side by land of Alexander Milne, and on the other by land of Messrs. Howe and Martin.

The said tract of land was regularly granted by the Spanish government to M. Maxent, on the 9th day of October, 1772, under which grantee claimant holds by virtue of regular intermediate conveyances. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 7.—François Philippon and Jean Antoine Philippon claim a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Bernard, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about ten miles below the city of New Orleans, containing twenty-one arpents front by an irregular depth extending to Lake Borgne, and bounded by land of M. Guichard, and below by land of widow Beauregard.

The said tract of land is made up of several tracts, all of which are derived from the following original grants, made and completed in due form, to wit: 1st, one made by the French government to François Galary, dit Chamilly, on the 27th of September, 1723; 2d, one, also by the French government, to J. Bte. Leonard on the 3d of January, 1724; 3d, one, also made by the French government, to Sr. Marquis on the 28th of January, 1763; 4th, one by the same government to Jacob Corbin Bachemin on the 23d of March, 1765; 5th, one made by the Spanish government to Don Henrique Despres on the 22d of September, 1773; and 6th, another by the Spanish government to Made. Maria Le Compte, on the 3d of November, 1784; under all of which grantees the said claimants hold by virtue of regular conveyances. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 8.—John Castelin, a free man of color, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-four miles below the city of New Orleans, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above and below by lands of Évariste Blanc.

The said tract of land originally formed the lower moiety of a tract of eight arpents front, granted by the French government, in due form, to George Livet on the 10th day of February, 1765, and regularly surveyed in his favor on the 9th day of December, 1774. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 9.—Louis Souland claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about thirty miles below the city of New Orleans, containing seven arpents front by the usual depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Mrs. Laurent Guenard, and below by land of Noel Frederick.

The said tract of land originally constituted part of a larger tract of twenty arpents front, regularly granted by the French government to Simon Calpha, a free mulatto, on the 2d day of October, 1767; under which said grantee claimant now holds by virtue of conveyances in due form. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 10.—Pierre Gervais Arnoult claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about nine miles above the city of New Orleans, containing six arpents front by a depth extending to Lake Pontchartrain, and bounded above by land of the widow La Barre, and below by land of Mr. Daquin.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of a regular grant made thereof by Governor De Bienville to Joseph Chauvin Delery on the 22d day of October, 1723, from which latter it has descended to claimant by a series of conveyances in due form. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 11.—Antoine Chevalier Doriocourt claims a tract of land situate at a place called "Gentilly," about six miles from the city of New Orleans, containing fifteen arpents front on each side of the Bayou Gentilly, by a depth of twenty arpents, also on each side of said bayou, bounded on one side by the lands of the heirs of Leufroy Dreux and on the other side by those of the heirs of Mr. Bertonniere.

The said tract of land is part of an extensive tract of one hundred and seventy-three and a half arpents front, originally granted by the French government to Matthurin Dreux, on the 8th day of March, 1763; it is now claimed in virtue of said grant and of regular intermediate conveyances under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 12.—Marie Joseph Carel, widow of Ventura Bailly, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, about twenty-seven miles below the city of New Orleans, containing six arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Dufouchar De Gruy and below by land of Pierre Latour.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract of ten arpents front, originally granted by the French government to Mathieu Santine, on the 19th day of February, 1766; it is now claimed in virtue of said grant and of regular conveyances under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 13.—Bonaventure Bailly claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about thirty miles below the city of New Orleans, containing eight arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Pierre Latour and below by land of Dufouchar Du Gruy.

Five arpents front of the said land originally constituted part of a larger tract, regularly granted by the French government to Charles Carel, on the 25th day of February, 1765; and the remaining three arpents front are claimed in virtue of an order of survey issued by the Baron de Carondelet in favor of Carlos Barrois, on the 19th day of December, 1796, and of continued possession and cultivation ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 14.—The widow and heirs of Laurent Guénard claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-seven miles below the city of New Orleans, containing five arpents and seven toises front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Jean Barroi and below by land of Louis Souland.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract regularly granted by the French government to Simon Calpha, a free mulatto, on the 2d day of October, 1767; it is now claimed in virtue of said grant and of a series of conveyances, in due form, under said grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 15.—Louis Menier claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on the upper side by land of Adrien Devé and on the lower by land of Mad. Pierre Lope.

The said tract of land forms part of a larger tract of six arpents five toises and one foot front, originally granted by the Spanish government to Anselmo Belile, on the 5th day of February, 1775, in whose favor it had previously been regularly surveyed, on the 5th day of March, 1772. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 16.—Jean Estevan claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Mrs. Pierre Lope and below by land of Mad. Thomas Estevan.

The said tract of land forms part of the tract originally granted to Anselmo Belile, and mentioned in the foregoing report on the claim of Louis Menier, No. 15, to which we refer. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 17.—The widow of Pierre Lope claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Louis Menier and below by land of Mrs. Thomas Estevan.

The said tract of land constitutes part of the tract originally granted by the Spanish government to Anselmo Belile, and mentioned in our report on the claim of Louis Menier, No. 15, to which we refer. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 18.—Adrien Devé claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent two toises three feet and six inches front, by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Victor Chevalier and below by land of L. Menier.

The said tract of land forms part of the tract originally granted by the Spanish government to Anselmo Belile, and mentioned in our report on the claim of Louis Menier, No. 15, to which we refer. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 19.—Victor Chevalier claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent two toises three feet and six inches front, by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Arthemise and Marie Cassagnol, free persons of color, and below by land of Adrien Devé.

The said tract of land forms part of the tract originally granted to Anselmo Belile, and mentioned in our report on the claim of Louis Menier, No. 15, to which we refer. We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 20.—Arthemise Cassagnol and Marie Cassagnol claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Jean Estevan and below by land of Victor Chevalier.

The said tract of land forms part of the tract originally granted by the Spanish government to Anselmo Belile, and mentioned in our report on the claim of Louis Menier, No. 15, to which we refer. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 21.—E. B. Dufouchar De Gruy claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-seven miles below the city of New Orleans, containing eleven arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Noel Frederick and below by land of the widow Bailly.

Six arpents front of the said land are claimed in virtue of a complete grant made thereof by the French government, to a free negro named Charles, on the 2d day of October, 1767; and the balance is claimed, also, in virtue of a complete grant made thereof, with a larger quantity, by the French government, to Simon Calpha, a free mulatto, on the said 2d day of October, 1767, under which said grantees claimant holds, by virtue of regular conveyances. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 22.—Marcos Coulon de Villiers claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and district of Galveztown, containing five hundred and forty superficial arpents, fronting on the west bank of the river Amite, and bounded on one side by land formerly belonging to Philip Stap, and on the other by land of John Crouse.

The said tract of land was purchased by claimant from Juan Anica, alias Janica, on the 27th day of January, 1795; which latter obtained the same from the Spanish government by virtue of a complete grant, bearing date the 3d of October, 1794. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 23.—Marguerite Nivet, widow of Jean Barrois, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi and about twenty-seven miles below the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Zenon Nivet and below by land of the widow Laurent Guénard.

The said tract of land is the moiety of a larger tract of six arpents front, originally granted by the French government, in due form, to one Jean Baptiste, a free mulatto, on the 2d day of October, 1767; under which said grantee claimant now holds, in virtue of regular conveyances. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 24.—Zenon Nivet claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-seven miles below the city of New Orleans, containing one arpent fifteen toises eleven feet and three inches front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of the heirs of Barrois and below by land of Marguerite Nivet, widow of Jean Barrois.

The said tract of land forms part of a larger tract of six arpents front, originally granted by the French government, in due form, to one Jean Baptiste, a free mulatto, on the 2d day of October, 1767; under which grantee claimant now holds, in virtue of regular successive sales. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 25.—Magloire Guichard claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Bernard, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about nine miles below the city of New Orleans, containing twelve arpents front, by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, with the exception of the upper two arpents front, which have a depth to the lake; bounded above by lands of Celestin La Chiapella, and below by lands of F. & J. A. Philippon.

The said tract of land (with the exception of the extension of depth to the lake, of a part thereof, as above mentioned) is claimed in virtue of a complete grant made thereof, with a larger quantity, by the French government, to Jacob Corbin Bachemin, on the 23d day of March, 1765; and the said extension of depth to the lake is claimed, also, in virtue of a complete grant made by the French government to Jousset de Laloir, on the 2d day of January, 1767; under both of which grantees claimant holds, by virtue of regular successive sales. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 26.—Etienne Grandpré claims a tract of land situate in the parish of West Baton Rouge, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, at the extremity of which the land widens so as to form a front of eight arpents, which last has a depth, also, of forty arpents, making in all an irregular depth of eighty arpents; bounded above by land of Pierre Lafiton, and below by land of ———.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract of twenty-four arpents front, by eighty arpents in depth, regularly surveyed in the year 1798, by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, in favor of Joseph Barques Vahamonde; to which latter a complete grant thereof was made, by Governor J. Ventura Morales, on the 9th day of November, 1802. The portion now claimed is held under the said grantee, by virtue of regular successive sales. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 27.—Pierre Lafiton claims a tract of land situate in the parish of West Baton Rouge, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Dr. A. J. Doussan and below by land of Etienne Grandpré.

The said tract of land forms part of the tract granted by the Spanish government to Joseph Barques Vahamonde, and mentioned in the next preceding report on the claim of Etienne Grandpré, (No. 26,) to which we refer. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 28.—Antoine Joseph Doussan claims a tract of land situate in the parish of West Baton Rouge, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of O. Bernard and below by land of Pierre Lafiton.

The said tract of land forms part of the tract granted by the Spanish government to Joseph Barques Vahamonde, and mentioned in our report on the claim of Etienne Grandpré, (No. 26,) to which we refer. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 29.—The heirs of François Martin claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about thirty-nine miles below the city of New Orleans, containing twenty arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Pedro Cosset and below by land of Jean Denesse.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of a regular and complete grant made thereof, by the French government, to François Martin, (grandfather of the claimants,) on the 7th day of September, 1764. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 30.—John Esteven claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing six arpents five toises three feet and six inches front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of François Siguineau and below by land of François Cassagnol.

The said tract of land was granted in due form, by the Spanish government, to Pedro Le Blanc, on the 5th day of February, 1775; it is now claimed in virtue of said grant, and of regular successive conveyances under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 31.—William W. Montgomery and Jonathan Montgomery claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing twenty-three and one-half arpents front by a depth of eighty arpents, and bounded above by land of Laurent and Achille Sigur and below by other land of claimants, whereof the title has been duly confirmed.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract, formerly the property of Don Anselmo Blanchard, to whom the same was granted by the Spanish government, in due form, by two different concessions, bearing date, the first, the 15th day of October, 1797; and the other, the 3d day of January, 1799; it is now claimed in virtue of said grants, and of regular conveyances under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 32.—Widow François Pascalis Labarre, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about nine miles above the city of New Orleans, containing twenty arpents front by a depth extending back to Lake Pontchartrain, and bounded above by the lands of Norbert Fortier, senior, and below by those of Gervais Arnoult.

It appears that the said tract of land, together with a larger quantity, was anciently the property of M. Lebretton, who obtained from the French government, on the 6th day of October, 1767, a complete grant, by which an extension of depth beyond the first depth of forty arpents was accorded to him as far as Lake Pontchartrain; in which said grant his title to the said first depth is formally recognized. The land, as above described, is now claimed in virtue of said grant, and of continued and uninterrupted possession and cultivation since the date thereof. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 33.—Alexander Milne claims a tract of land situate in the county of Orleans, and on the south side of Lake Pontchartrain, containing forty arpents front on said lake by a depth of eight arpents; beginning at the bayou Cochon, and running eastwardly to the stock farm ("vacherie") of Mr. Duplantier.

The said tract of land was regularly granted by the French government to M. Aubert, on the 19th day of November, 1765; under which grantee claimant holds, in virtue of regular successive sales. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 34.—Joseph Blanchard claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing three arpents fifteen toises and fifteen feet front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Paul Richard and below by other land belonging to claimant.

The said tract of land is part of a tract of seven arpents and five toises front, originally granted by the Spanish government, in due form, to Juan Hiacinto Landry, on the 3d day of January, 1776. It is now claimed in virtue of said grant, and of regular conveyances under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 35.—Anne Robinet, widow of Thomas D'Aquin, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about thirty-three miles below the city of New Orleans, containing forty-three arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of John Joseph Coiron and below by land of Mrs. Zelime Coiron.

The said tract of land is composed of two tracts, to wit: one, of about thirty arpents front, regularly granted by the French government to Jousset Laloir, on the 4th day of April, 1763; and the other of twelve arpents front, originally granted by the Spanish government to Henry Saussier, on the 25th day of November, 1775; under which said grantees claimant now holds, by virtue of regular successive sales. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 36.—Noel Frédéric claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about thirty miles below the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents four feet and nine inches front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Louis Souland and below by land of Jean Nivet.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract, granted by the French government, in due form, to Simon Calpha, a free mulatto, on the 2d day of October, 1767. It is now claimed in virtue of said grant, and of regular successive conveyances under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 37.—Jacques Courtault claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about thirty-nine miles below the city of New Orleans, containing seven arpents and twelve toises front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Jean Marie Cornen and below by land of Genevieve Vinet, widow of Francisco Vinet.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a tract of twenty arpents front, regularly granted by the French government to Louise Buisson, on the 24th day of July, 1766; under which grantee claimant now holds, in virtue of regular successive sales. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 38.—William Gormley, Jacques Encalada, and others, claim a certain tract of land, or island, situate in the parish of Jefferson, and district of Barataria, called the "Island of Chetimachas," but more generally known by the name of "Cheniere Caminada," containing about one hundred and twenty-six arpents front, on the bay of Caminada, with the whole depth, according to the original grant, to the "Bayou of the West."

The said island was granted by the French government, in due and complete form, to Monsieur Du Roullin, on the 6th day of August, 1763, from whom it descended, through a series of regular conveyances, to Alexander Harang; under which latter claimants now hold, also in virtue of regular conveyances. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 39.—David Urquhart claims a tract of land situate at a place called "Gentilly," in the vicinity of the city of New Orleans, containing twelve arpents front on each side of the Bayou Gentilly, by a depth of twenty arpents, also on each side of said bayou; bounded on one side by the lands of Guy Dreux and on the other side by those of François Delery Desilets.

The said tract of land is part of an extensive tract of one hundred and seventy-three and a half arpents front, originally granted by the French government to Mathurin Dreux, on the 8th day of March, 1763. It is now claimed in virtue of said grant and of regular successive conveyances under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 40.—Jean Baptiste Genois claims a lot or parcel of ground situate in the parish of New Orleans, and on the west bank of the Bayou St. John, near Lake Pontchartrain, containing one hundred and twenty feet front on the said bayou by a depth of three arpents; bounded on one side by other land belonging to claimant and on the other side by land of the widow Césaire.

The said lot is part of a tract of land originally granted by the Spanish government, in due form, to Blaise, alias Bellegar, on the 20th day of April, 1771, and is now claimed in virtue of said grant and of regular conveyances under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 41.—Julie Sharp, wife of William Maddox, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing six arpents and eleven toises front, by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of William Maddox and below by land belonging to the heirs of Florentin Landry.

The said tract of land was regularly granted by the Spanish government to Pedro Forest on the 5th day of November, 1774, and is now claimed in virtue of said grant and of regular successive sales, under the grantee. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 42.—Rene Arnous and Constant Viel claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents and ten toises front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Thomasin Blanchard and below by land of Victor Blanchard.

The said tract of land originally formed a part of a larger tract of six arpents nine toises and five feet front, regularly granted by the Spanish government to Anselmo Blanchard on the 5th day of November, 1774; under which said grantee claimant holds in virtue of a series of regular conveyances. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 43.—Thomasin Blanchard claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land originally granted to Paul Chiasson and below by land of Messrs. Arnous and Viel.

The said tract of land forms part of a tract of six arpents nine toises and five feet front, originally granted by the Spanish government to Anselmo Blanchard on the 5th day of November, 1774; under which said grantee claimant holds in virtue of regular successive sales. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 44.—The heirs of Jacques Millon claim a tract of land situate in the parish of New Orleans, and on the left bank (ascending) of the Bayou St. John, containing forty arpents front on the said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by land originally granted to Jean Lavergne.

The father of claimants, (Jacques Millon,) together with his brothers, Jean, Maurice, and Henry Millon, obtained from the French government a complete grant for the said land on the 29th day of June, 1766; which said grant has been regularly vested in the said claimants by inheritance. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 45.—The heirs of Jeanne Delatte, widow of J. B. Bara, claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée, and on the south bank of False river, ("Fausse rivière,") containing two thousand six hundred and sixty-nine superficial arpents, and bounded on one side by lands formerly belonging to J. B. Bara and on the other by lands of José Jansie.

This claim was formerly submitted to the late board of commissioners for this district by the said Jeanne Delatte, but was rejected, or rather no final decision rendered thereon in consequence of the same being founded on a complete grant made by the Spanish government subsequently to the 1st day of October, 1800, to wit, on the 9th day of August, 1802. It is now renewed under the provisions of an act of Congress, approved on the 12th day of April, 1814, and entitled "An act for the final adjustment of land titles in the State of Louisiana and Territory of Missouri;" by the first section of which act it has, in our opinion, been duly confirmed.

No. 46.—Sosthene Roman claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. James, and containing about two thousand one hundred (2,100) superficial arpents, being all the land embraced in the extension of the lateral lines of a tract owned by him of eight arpents front, on the west or right bank of the river Mississippi, from the extremity of the first forty arpents, or ordinary depth thereof, back to the Bayou Chevreuil, the first water-course in the rear.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of a complete grant made by the French government to Audré Neau on the 24th day of September, 1756; by which grant the said Neau obtained "all the depth that could be found beyond the first forty arpents," or ordinary depth of his front tract, which the present claimant construes to mean all the land extending back from said first depth to the first water-course in the rear. Whether this construction is borne out by any French or Spanish law or regulation on the subject, applicable to similar cases, we are at a loss to say, not having been able to find any such; but it strikes us as one, under the circumstances of the case, extremely plausible and well founded. Nearly all the French and Spanish concessions that we have seen are particular in designating and specifying the quantity of depth granted; and where this is not done, as in the above instance, the presumption appears to be a fair one, that it was the intention that the depth accorded should be limited by some natural boundary or barrier, beyond which it could not extend, which, in a country so extensively irrigated in all its parts like this, is generally to be found in some water-course. With this view of the case, we do not hesitate to recommend the said claim for confirmation.

No. 47.—The heirs of Julien Poydras claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée, on the west bank of False river, ("Fausse rivière,") containing sixty-five arpents front on the said river by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by lands belonging to the heirs of Vincent Porche and on the other side by other lands of claimants.

The said tract of land is now claimed in virtue of a complete grant made thereof by the Spanish government to the late Benjamin Farrar, on the 18th day of February, 1790, from whose heirs it was acquired, in due form, by the late Julien Poydras. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

CLASS B.

Including claims founded upon "incomplete titles," such as orders or warrants of survey, authentic surveys, &c., &c.

No. 1.—Samuel Britton Bennett claims a tract of land situate on an island called "Grand Ile," in the parish of Jefferson, and district of Barrataria, containing about fifteen arpents front on the boundary line of an adjoining tract formerly belonging to Etienne Darbonne, and now the property of P. B. Cocke, by a depth of forty arpents, bounded east by the Gulf of Mexico, and west by the bay of Caminada.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of an order of survey, regularly issued by the Spanish government, in favor of Joseph Caillet, on the 6th day of February, 1782, and of continued and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation, from the date thereof down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 2.—Alexander Lesseps, Charles Lesseps, and John B. Lepretre, claim a small island situate in the parish of St. Bernard, and formed by the Bayou Bœuf, Lake Lery, and the river "Aux Chiens," containing about forty arpents front by a depth of one hundred and twenty arpents.

The said island was purchased by the said claimants from the heirs of the late Pierre Denis de Larondé, in favor of which latter a regular order of survey for the same was granted by Estevan Miro, formerly governor of the province of Louisiana, on the 20th day of December, 1788. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 3.—Pleasant Branch Cocke claims a tract of land situate on an island called "Grand Ile," in the parish of Jefferson, and district of Barrataria, containing a front of ten arpents on a line separating it from a small portion of vacant land forming the southwestern extremity of the island, by an irregular depth of forty arpents; bounded east by the Gulf of Mexico, west by the bay of Caminada, and in the rear by land of S. B. Bennett.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of an order of survey issued by Governor Estevan Miro, in favor of Charles Dufresne, on the 17th day of September, 1787; and also of continued possession and cultivation ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 4.—John Emilé Faures claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about two miles above the city of New Orleans, containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of N. B. Le Breton and below by land of Mrs. Euphemia Brown.

The said tract of land is part of an ancient plantation, once the property of J. B. Bienvenu, at whose death, in the year 1790, it was formally adjudicated to his widow, Elena Bellet, in pursuance of a decree of Governor Estevan Miro, bearing date the 8th day of November, 1790; it is now claimed in virtue of said decree, and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, from the date thereof to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 5. Noel Barthelemy Le Breton claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about two miles above the city of New Orleans, containing two arpents and twenty-one toises front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Joseph Lombard, jr., and below by land of J. E. Faures.

The said tract of land originally formed part of an ancient plantation, once the property of J. B. Bienvenu, at whose death, in the year 1790, it was adjudicated to his widow, Elena Bellet, pursuant to a decree of Governor Miro, bearing date the 8th day of November, 1790. The said portion is now claimed in virtue of the said decree, and of continued and uninterrupted possession and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last forty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 6.—George Seicschneydre claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-seven miles below the city of New Orleans, containing ten arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Zenon Nivet and below by land of Charles Barrois.

The said tract of land is composed of two different portions, to wit, one of six arpents front, originally surveyed on the 20th day of December, 1774, by Andry, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, in favor of Jean Domat; and the other of four arpents front, also surveyed by the said Andry, and on the same day, in favor of Eloy Daubard. The whole is now claimed in virtue of said surveys, and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, from the time they were made down to this. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 7.—Juana Truxillo, widow of Joseph Hernandez, claims a tract of land situate on the left bank of the Bayou La Fourche, in the parish of Assumption, and about seven miles from the river Mississippi, containing eight arpents front on the said bayou by the usual depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Messrs. Girod, Brothers, and below by land of Manual Fernandez.

The said tract of land was surveyed in favor of Domingo Acosta, by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the province of Louisiana, on the 20th day of November, 1790, pursuant to an order of survey from Governor Estevan Miro, bearing date the 2d day of October, of the same year. It is now claimed in virtue of said order of survey, and of constant and uninterrupted possession and cultivation ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 8.—François Barthelemy Baptiste and brothers, free men of color, claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about forty-five miles below the city of New Orleans, containing ten arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Jeremiah Treadwig and below by land of Hubert Denesse.

The said tract of land is the half of a tract of twenty arpents front, formerly owned by one Jean Lafrance, who obtained an order of survey therefor from Governor Miro on the 26th day of March, 1789. The said half is now claimed in virtue of said order, and of continued and uninterrupted possession and cultivation since the date thereof. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 9.—François Rigaud claims a tract of land situate on an island called "Grande Ile," in the parish of Jefferson, and district of Barrataria, containing about six arpents front at the northeastern extremity of the island, by an irregular depth of about one hundred and twenty arpents, bounded east by the Gulf of Mexico, west by the bay of Caminada, and in the rear (or southwest) by lands formerly belonging to François Anfrey, alias Le Normand.

The said tract of land was inherited by the present claimant from his late father, Jacques Rigaud, who obtained a regular order of survey therefor on the 2d day of July, 1781, from Don Bernardo de Galvez, formerly governor of the province of Louisiana; it is now claimed in virtue of said order of survey, and of constant and uninterrupted possession and cultivation by claimant and his said late father, from the date thereof down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 10.—Charles Hagan claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Zenon Lecour and below by land of Pierre Goudran.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract of nine arpents front, originally owned by Genevieve Mayeux, widow of John F. Decuir, who obtained a regular order of survey therefor from Governor Bernardo de Galvez on the 24th day of January, 1777. The said portion has, moreover, been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by the said claimant and those under whom he holds, from the date of said order down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 11.—Zenon Nivet claims a tract of land, situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-seven miles below the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of widow Laurent Guénard and below by land of Jacques Robin.

The said tract of land forms the half of a tract of six arpents front, originally occupied by one Barthelemy Garel, who obtained on the 14th day of March, 1764, a formal permission from Monsieur D'Abbadie, then director general of the province of Louisiana, "to form a settlement thereon;" claimant, moreover, proves constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation of the said half by him and those under whom he holds, for the last forty-five years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 12.—Ebenezer Cooley claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée on the Bayou Grosse Tête, and containing twenty arpents front on the said bayou by a depth of forty arpents, the side lines opening to the rear so as to give an area of nine hundred and sixty-nine and seventy-four hundredths superficial arpents, and bounded on the upper side by what are called the "Three Hillocks."

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of an order of survey granted in due form on the 17th day of November, 1787, by Governor Estevan Miro, in favor of George Olivo, under whom claimant holds by virtue of regular successive sales. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 13.—St. Julian de Tournillon claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, immediately in the rear, and forming the second depth of another tract owned by him of five arpents and seven toises front on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, which said back tract contains fifteen hundred and twenty superficial arpents, or twelve hundred and eighty superficial acres.

This claim is founded on a permission to settle, granted by the proper Spanish officer, in the year 1802, to Bernardo de Deva, upon the "requette" or petition of the latter, and was presented to the former board of commissioners for this district by the said De Deva, but was by the said board rejected on the ground that the claimant had produced "no evidence whatever of an actual settlement of the land." The present claimant, who holds under the said De Deva by virtue of regular conveyances, now produces satisfactory proof of the actual settlement and cultivation of the land in question on or before the 20th day of December, 1803. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 14.—Zenon Bourgeat claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by lands belonging to the said parish of Pointe Coupée, and below by land of Zenon Lacour.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract, formerly the property of widow J. F. Decuir, who obtained a regular order of survey therefor from Governor De Galvez, on the 24th day of January, 1777. The said portion is now claimed in virtue of the said order of survey, and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, from the date thereof down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 15.—Zenon Lacour claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Zenon Bourgeat and below by land of Charles Hagan.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract, originally owned by widow J. F. Decuir, who obtained an order of survey for the same from Governor De Galvez, on the 24th day of January, 1774. The said portion is now claimed in virtue of said order, and of continued and uninterrupted possession and cultivation by claimant, and those under whom he holds, from the date thereof down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 16.—Jean Trahan claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, and about four miles from the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front on the said bayou by forty arpents in depth, and bounded above by land of widow Jos. Le Blanc and below by land of François Landry.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract of six arpents seven toises and three feet front, originally owned by one Pedro Le Blanc, in whose favor it was regularly surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the province of Louisiana, on the 21st day of October, 1780; it is now claimed in virtue of said survey, and of constant and uninterrupted possession and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, ever since the date thereof. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 17.—Clotilde Dugas, widow of Joseph Le Blanc, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, and about four miles from the river Mississippi, containing two arpents and three toises front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Valery Le Blanc and below by land of Jean Trahan.

The said tract of land forms part of a larger tract of six arpents seven toises and three feet front, originally owned by Pedro Le Blanc, in whose favor it was surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau on the 21st day of October, 1780. The above portion is now claimed in virtue of said survey, and of constant possession and cultivation since the date thereof. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 18.—Jean Baptiste Landry claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, containing two arpents front on the said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by lands formerly belonging to Joseph Gomez and below by land of the widow Gonzales.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract of seven arpents seven toises and three feet front, formerly owned by one Manuel Ordoñe, in whose favor it was surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau on the 10th day of June, 1800, pursuant to a decree of Governor Estevan Miro, bearing date the 2d day of October, 1799. The said portion is now claimed in virtue of said survey and decree, and of continued and uninterrupted possession and cultivation ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 19.—Jean Lewis Gaston Villars claims a tract of land situate on the Bayou Dupont, in the parish of Jefferson, and district of Barrataria, and about thirteen leagues distant from the city of New Orleans, containing five leagues front on the said bayou, by a depth of three arpents, (being about twelve hundred and thirty-nine superficial arpents,) bounded on one side by the "Rigolets" and on the other by the Bayou St. Denis.

The said tract of land originally belonged to Claude Joseph Villars Dubreuil, at the death of whose wife, in the year 1754, an inventory of all the property belonging to the community which had existed between the latter and her said husband was taken in due form, by the proper authorities, by and with the full sanction of the French government, in which said inventory the above tract is included as part of said community property. It is now claimed in virtue of inheritance, and of continued and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation, for upwards of forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 20.—John M'Donogh claims a tract of land situate on the Bayou "Des Familles," in the parish of Jefferson, and district of Barrataria, containing twenty arpents front on said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by land of N. Domé, and on the other by land of Juan Normand.

The said tract of land originally belonged to one Louis Pelteau, who obtained a regular order of survey therefor from the Baron de Carondelet, on the 3d day of September, 1794. It is now claimed in virtue of said order of survey, and of continued and uninterrupted possession by claimant, and those under whom he holds, from the date thereof to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 21.—John McDonogh claims another tract of land situate on the left bank of the Bayou "Des Familles," in the parish of Jefferson and district of Barrataria, containing twelve arpents front on the said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by land of Louis Pelteau and on the other side by land of Mad. Paon.

The said tract of land is derived by purchase from one Nicholas Domé, who obtained an order of survey for the same from the Baron de Carondelet, on the 21st day of August, 1794. It is now claimed in virtue of said order and of continued and uninterrupted possession by claimant and those under whom he holds ever since. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 22.—Ludger Fortier claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the east bank of the river Mississippi and about seven miles above the city of New Orleans, containing eight arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Volant Labarre and below by land formerly belonging to Barthelemy Macarty.

The said tract of land was purchased by the present claimant from François Pascalis Labarre, on the 31st day of March, 1810, which latter obtained a grant therefor from the Spanish intendant, Juan Ventura Morales, in the month of April, 1802; for a number of years previous to which period, however, it had been inhabited and cultivated as private property. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 23.—Jean Baptiste Degruy claims a tract of land situate on the Bayou Barrataria, in the parish of Jefferson and district of Barrataria, at about six miles from the river Mississippi, containing about five leagues front on the left bank of said bayou, and one league front on the right bank, by a depth of twenty arpents on each side; bounded on one side by lands of Antoine Foucher and on the other by the Bayou "Aux Carpes."

The said tract of land forms part of a tract of considerable extent purchased by the present claimant, on the 8th day of May, 1792, from Don Francisco Bouligny, who obtained two separate orders of survey for the greater part thereof from Governor Estevan Miro, on the 12th day of August, 1789. The said land is now claimed in virtue of said orders and also of constant and uninterrupted possession and occupation thereof by the said claimant and, before him, the said Bouligny, for the last fifty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 24.—The heirs of Guillaume Douet claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi and about twenty-two miles below the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents and three-quarters front by a depth of sixty arpents, and bounded above by land of A. F. & J. J. Guerin and below by land of Joseph Veillon.

The said tract of land forms the lower half of a larger tract of seven and a half arpents front, inherited by the said claimants from their late father, Guillaume Douet, in whose favor it was regularly surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, on the 28th day of March, 1799. The said half is now claimed in virtue of said survey and of constant and uninterrupted possession and cultivation for the last fifty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 25.—Auguste François Guérin and Jean Jules Guérin claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi and about twenty-two miles below the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents and three-fourths front by a depth of sixty arpents, and bounded above by lands of Messrs Guérin Brothers and below by land of the heirs of Guillaume Douet.

The said tract of land is the upper half of a tract of seven and a half arpents front, formerly owned by Guillaume Douet, in whose favor it was surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, on the 28th day of March, 1799. The said half is now claimed in virtue of said survey and also of constant and uninterrupted possession and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last fifty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 26.—Angelique Aury, a free woman of color, claims a tract of land situate on the Bayou Metairie, in the parish of Jefferson and about six miles from the city of New Orleans, containing seventeen arpents front on the north bank of said bayou, with the depth to Lake Pontchartrain, and eight arpents front on the south bank, with a depth running back to the limits of Barthelemy Macarty's plantation, and not exceeding twenty arpents, bounded above by lands of widow Lacastiere Volant and François Dorville, and below by land of the widow Beaulieu.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract of twenty arpents front, formerly owned by Don Andres Almonester y Roxas, who conveyed the same to the late Pierre Langliche, a free colored man, on the 1st day of October, 1787, in favor of which latter it was regularly surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, on the 19th day of March, 1791. It is now claimed in virtue of said survey and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation ever since by claimant and the said Langliche, under whom she holds by inheritance. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 27.—François Dorville claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the south bank of the Bayou Metairie, and about six miles from the city of New Orleans, containing nine arpents front on said bayou, by about eighteen arpents in depth, and bounded above by land of the widow Maxent and below by land of Angelique Aury.

The said tract of land originally formed part of the tract surveyed in the year 1791, by Don Carlos Trudeau, in favor of Pierre Langliche, and mentioned in the next preceding report on the claim of Angelique Aury, (No. 26.) It is now claimed in virtue of the said survey and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, from the date thereof to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed

No. 28.—Marie Joseph Beaulieu, a free woman of color, claims a tract of land situate on the Bayou Metairie, in the parish of Jefferson, and about six miles distant from the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents front on both sides of said bayou, with a depth on the south side of about eighteen arpents, and on the north side to Lake Pontchartrain, bounded above by land of Angelique Aury and below by land formerly belonging to Pedro Demouy.

The said tract of land was regularly surveyed in favor of the said claimant's late husband, Joseph Beaulieu, by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the province of Louisiana, on the 14th day of March, 1796. It is now claimed in virtue of said survey, and also of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation for upwards of fifty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 29.—Jean Louis Beaulieu claims a tract of land situate on the Bayou Metairie, in the parish of Jefferson, and at about five miles from the city of New Orleans, containing two arpents front on both sides of said bayou, by a depth on the north side to Lake Pontchartrain, and on the south side extending back to the limits of the Macarty plantation, and not exceeding eighteen arpents, bounded above by land of Marie Pierre Dumouille and below by land of Hazeur Brothers.

The said tract of land originally formed the upper moiety of a tract formerly owned by Don Mateo de Veau y Ines, in whose favor it was regularly surveyed in the year 1791, by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana. The said moiety has, moreover, been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by the said claimant and those under whom he holds from the date of said survey down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 30.—Hiacinthe Thomas Hazeur, Charles Homère Hazeur, and Jean Baptiste Hazeur, (free men of color,) claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, at about five miles from the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents front on both sides of the public road called the "Metairie road," by a depth of six arpents on the south side of said road, and as far back as Lake Pontchartrain on the north side, bounded above by land of Jean Louis Beaulieu and below by land of the heirs of Demouy.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of ancient and undisputed possession, having been continually inhabited and cultivated by the said claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last fifty years and upwards. It is also in part claimed in virtue of the survey made in the year 1791, in favor of Don Mateo de Veau y Ines, and mentioned in the next preceding report on the claim of Jean Louis Beaulieu, (No. 29,) the two upper arpents front thereof forming the lower half of the tract designated in said survey. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 31.—Pierre Babin and Henry Bonamy claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the east bank of the river Mississippi, containing five arpents front by the usual depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Bernard Comau and below by land of Elie Le Blanc.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract of ten arpents front formerly owned by one Pablo Chiasson, who obtained a regular order of survey for the same from Governor Estevan Miro, on the 1st day of September, 1786. It is now claimed in virtue of the said order, and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 32.—Thomas Mille claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by other lands of claimant and below by land of the widow Robichaud.

The said tract of land is derived by purchase from one Juan Morales, who obtained an order of survey for the same from Governor Estevan Miro, on the 26th day of February, 1791, since which time it has been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by the said claimant and those under whom he holds. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 33.—Etienne Blanchard claims a tract of land situate on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, in the parish of Assumption, at about twelve and a half miles from the river Mississippi, containing three arpents nine toises and one foot front on the said bayou by twenty-three arpents twenty-eight toises and three feet in depth, and bounded above by land of Simon Dugas and below by land of Joseph Hebert.

The said tract of land is derived by purchase from Pedro Hebert, in whose favor it was regularly surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, on the 10th day of January, 1791, from which time down to the present it has been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by the said claimant and those under whom he holds. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 34.—Joseph Guillot claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, and about twelve and a half miles from the river Mississippi, containing three arpents nine toises and one foot front on the said bayou by twenty-six and three-fifths arpents in depth, and bounded above by land of Pedro Hebert and below by land of Prosper Giroire.

The said tract of land is derived by purchase from Joseph Hebert, in whose favor it was regularly surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, on the 10th day of January, 1791, since which time it has been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those under whom he holds. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 35.—The heirs of John Alman claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, and on the right bank of the Bayou Manchac, containing twelve arpents front on said bayou by forty arpents in depth, (or four hundred and eighty superficial arpents,) and bounded below by lands originally granted to James Smith Marbury.

The said tract of land is derived by inheritance from the late John Alman, in whose favor it was surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, on the 10th day of April, 1789, pursuant to a regular order of survey issued by Governor Estevan Miro on the 10th day of February of the same year. We are of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 36.—The heirs of John Alman claim another tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the Bayou St. Bernard, now called the river Amite, containing twenty arpents front on the said river by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, on the right bank below Galveston.

The said tract of land is derived by inheritance from the late John Alman, who obtained a regular order of survey for the same from the Spanish government on the 17th day of September, 1794, and remained in possession thereof until his death, which took place in the month of March, 1805. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 37.—François Dusuau de la Croix claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about nine miles below the city of New Orleans, containing fifty-six arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Marie Constance Larche, a free woman of color, and below by land of the widow Duvergé.

The said tract of land was purchased by the present claimant, conjointly with Marie Etienne de Flechier, from Don Santiago Larche, on the 8th day of May, 1801, and was specially surveyed in their favor, in the same year, by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, for the purpose of establishing the boundaries thereof. It is now claimed in virtue of the said survey, and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last fifty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 38.—Auguste Groleau claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about forty-two miles below the city of New Orleans, containing four and a half arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Marianne Lafrance and below by land of Pierre Covin.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract of six arpents front, originally owned by one Joseph Montané, in whose favor it was regularly surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau on the 13th day of September, 1786, since which time it has been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated as private property. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 39.—The heirs of George Oliveau, jr., claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée, on the Bayou Maringouin, beginning at the mouth thereof, and containing twenty arpents front on the said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents.

The said tract of land is derived by inheritance from the late George Oliveau, jr., who obtained a regular order of survey therefor from the Spanish government on the 17th day of November, 1787, since which time it has continued in the peaceable possession of the said Oliveau, and after his death of his said heirs. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 40.—The widow and heirs of Pierre Robeau claim a tract of land situate in the parish of St. John the Baptist, on the east or left bank of the river Mississippi, and about forty-two miles above the city of New Orleans, containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of J. B. Picou and below by land of George Shoff.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract of six arpents front, formerly owned by Charles Robeau, father of the said late Pierre Robeau, in whose favor it was surveyed by Andry, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, on the 20th day of April, 1776. It is now claimed in virtue of the said survey and of continued possession and cultivation ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 41.—André Pizani claims a tract of land situate on the Bayou Des Allemands, in the parish of St. Charles, and at about forty-five miles distant from the city of New Orleans, containing twelve arpents front on the left bank of said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents.

The said tract of land is derived by inheritance from one Pierre Rayet, alias Raymond, who obtained an order of survey therefor from the Spanish government on the 15th day of February, 1771. It is now claimed in virtue of the said order and also of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation for upwards of forty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 42.—Jean Jacques Haydel claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. John the Baptist, about forty-six miles above the city of New Orleans, and west of the river Mississippi, containing nine arpents front by forty arpents in depth, and being a second depth lying immediately in the rear of and adjacent to a front tract owned by claimant.

The said tract of land is derived by inheritance from the late J. J. Haydel, (father of the said claimant,) who obtained a regular order of survey therefor from Governor Estevan Miro on the 23d day of February, 1786. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 43.—The heirs of Stephen Henry Plauché claim a tract of land situate west of the river Mississippi, in the parish of Plaquemines, and about twenty-one miles below the city of New Orleans, containing fifteen arpents front by forty arpents deep, being a second depth lying immediately in the rear of and adjacent to a front tract now owned by Nicolas Reggio.

The said tract of land is derived by inheritance from the late Stephen Henry Plauché, who obtained a regular order of survey therefor from Governor Estevan Miro on the 29th day of December, 1790. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 44.—The heirs of Pierre Sauvé claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about fifteen miles above the city of New Orleans, containing forty-nine arpents front by a depth of thirty-nine arpents and eighteen toises on the lower line, which separates it from the lands of Soniat Dufossat, brothers, and of eighty-five arpents on the upper line, which separates it from the lands of widow Jacques Fortier.

The major part of the said land, (to wit, about thirty-two arpents front, anciently called "La Providence,") was sold by Monsieur De Salmon, ex-commissioner of the navy and first judge of the superior council of the province of Louisiana, to Mr. Jacques de la Chaise, on the 1st day of February, 1747, having been granted to the said Monsieur De Salmon, (according to a statement of Mr. Andry, surveyor general of the said province, dated August 20, 1874,) by Governor de Bienville, on the 1st day of November, 1738. The balance of the said land is derived from different persons who held under authority of the Spanish government, as is shown by various surveys made by Don Carlos Trudeau, the Spanish surveyor general. The present claimants, moreover, prove constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation of the whole of said land by them and those under whom they hold, for the last fifty-five years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 45.—Antoine Michoud claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson and district of Barrataria, containing eight hundred and twenty superficial arpents, and bounded north by lands now or formerly belonging to Honoré Fortier, east and south by vacant lands, and west by other lands of claimant.

The said tract of land is derived by purchase from Juan Carmanche, who obtained a regular order of survey for the same from Governor Estevan Miro on the 8th day of August, 1785, since which time it has been in the constant possession of claimant and those under whom he holds. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 46.—Jean Pierre Guédry claims a tract of land situate on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, in the parish of La Fourche Interior, containing four arpents on the said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of James Mire and below by land of François Babin, jr.

The said tract of land was regularly surveyed on the 22d day of April, 1803, in favor of Don Alexandre Daspit de St. Amant, by Don Carlos Trudeau, then surveyor general of the province of Louisiana. It is now claimed in virtue of said survey, and also of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation for upwards of forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 47.—François Enoul Livaudais claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson and district of Barrataria, at about thirty-three miles distant from the city of New Orleans, containing about three and a half leagues front on the right bank of "Little Lake," (Petit Lac,) by a depth not exceeding three arpents, bounded on one side by the Bayou "Des Amoureux," and on the other side by a small stream or cut-off, ("raccourci,") leading to the sea.

The said tract of land was granted to the claimant by the Spanish government about forty years ago, but the original papers in relation to said grant have been lost. The fact is, however, proven by the affidavits of two old and respectable inhabitants of the said parish of Jefferson, who also prove the habitation and cultivation of the said land for upwards of forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 48.—The widow of Jean Pierre Dugat claims a tract of land situate on both sides of the Bayou Terre Bonne, in the parish of Terre Bonne, and containing $491\frac{35}{100}$ superficial acres, bounded on one side by lands now or formerly belonging to Jean Naquin, and on the other side by land of Charles Billio.

The said tract of land was purchased by the late husband of claimant from one Charles Naquin, in whose favor a report on the propriety of granting him said land was made by Don Carlos Trudeau, pursuant to a decree of the Baron de Carondelet, dated February 13, 1795, since which time the said tract has been constantly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those under whom she holds. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 49.—Jean Voisin claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing five arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Latour, jr., and below by land of Anselme Arnaud.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of ancient and undisputed possession, having been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last forty years and upwards, three arpents front thereof being derived by purchase from one Jacques Nivet, who obtained an order of survey therefor from the Baron de Carondelet, on the 12th day of December, 1796. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 50.—Jean Voisin claims another tract of land, being a small island situate in the lake of Barrataria (parish of Jefferson) and commonly called l'Ile Congue, containing about six hundred superficial arpents, and fronting on one side another small island called El Vino.

The said island is claimed in virtue of a regular order of survey issued therefor in favor of the said claimant by Governor Estevan Miro, on the 3d day of October, 1788, and of continued occupation and possession thereof ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 51.—Louis François Montault and Gabriel Morière Fazende claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about five miles below the city of New Orleans, containing ten arpents, fourteen toises, and five feet front, by a depth not exceeding forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Messrs. Lacoste and Ducros and below by land of Agenor Bosque.

The said tract of land is derived by purchase from Messrs. Thomas Poré and John B. Blanquet, in whose favor it was surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, on the 18th day of November, 1803, in pursuance of a decree of J. Ventura Morales, intendant general of the province of Louisiana, dated the 26th September, 1803. It is now claimed in virtue of said survey and decree, and, moreover, of constant habitation and cultivation by claimants and those under whom they hold, for the last forty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 52.—Agenor Bosque claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about five miles below the city of New Orleans, containing five arpents, six toises, and two inches front, with the depth thereto belonging, (or ninety-seven superficial arpents,) bounded above by land of Messrs. Montault and Fazende and below by land of Messrs. M. and H. Andry.

The said tract of land is derived by purchase from Francis Corbin, in whose favor it was surveyed by Don Carlos Trudeau, on the 18th day of November, 1803, in pursuance of a decree of J. Ventura Morales, intendant general of the late province of Louisiana, bearing date the 26th day of September, 1803. It is now claimed in virtue of said survey and decree, and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation by the said claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last forty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 53.—The heirs of Simon Aingle claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing twenty-five arpents front by the usual depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by the land of Bastien Frederick and on the other side by that of Louis Colette.

The said tract of land was inherited by the late Simon Aingle from one Joseph Margotier, who obtained a regular order of survey for the same on the 15th day of September, 1787, since which period it has never ceased to be inhabited and cultivated. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

Supplement to B, No. 1.

Samuel B. Bennett, having been deprived of a certain small portion of his land, in consequence of a decision of the supreme court of the State of Louisiana, rendered on the 25th day of March, 1833, in the matter of a controversy between the said Bennett and the proprietors of the tract adjoining on one side, is desirous of having his claim to the said land (presented by him prior to the said decision) so far amended as to correspond with the decree of said court, and to that effect has filed a supplemental notice of claim, accompanied by a figurative plat, setting forth the new lines assigned to his land, and praying that said lines may be adopted in lieu of those contained in his original claim, and that our report be made accordingly.

We have declined making the alteration prayed for, for the following reasons: 1st, because our report, as already made, (B, No. 1,) is based upon the evidence first produced by Mr. Bennett, which fully sets forth the quantity and boundaries claimed under the original order of survey in favor of Joseph Caillet, and any attempt to change those boundaries would lead to an encroachment to the extent of several arpents on the opposite adjoining tract; and, 2d, because the owner of the said adjoining tract (Pleasant B. Coke) has duly filed in this office his claim thereto, (see B, No. 3,) supported by the requisite evidence; and any attempt to interfere with his rights, or wrest from him land lawfully claimed by him, presents, in our opinion, a question of private title over which we have no jurisdiction, and which forms matter for a legal investigation and decision by the proper judicial tribunal.

Class C, including claims founded upon possession and cultivation for at least ten consecutive years prior to December 20, 1803, &c.

No. 1.—Hugues Lavergne claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-one miles below the city of New Orleans, containing nine arpents and a half front by a depth, extending to the Bayou "Ouachas," of about seventy-five arpents, bounded above by land of Jules and Delphin Villeré and below by land of Nicholas Reggio.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract, known under the name of "La Concession," formerly owned by Charles Guy Favre D'Aunoy, who died in the year 1757. It is now claimed in virtue of undisputed possession regularly derived from the heirs of the said D'Aunoy, and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation by claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last fifty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 2.—Felix Martin Forstall and Alexander Gordon claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about eighteen miles below the city of New Orleans, containing twenty-six arpents front by a depth of eighty arpents, and bounded above by land of Messrs. Milligan, Hill & Co., and below by land of Messrs. Urquhart and Milligan.

The said tract of land is composed of two contiguous tracts, to wit: one of sixteen arpents front, and the other of ten arpents front, with the aforesaid depth of eighty arpents; both of which are now claimed in virtue of purchase and of ancient and undisputed possession, having been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by claimants and those under whom they hold since the year 1776. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 3.—Nicholas Reggio claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-one miles below the city of New Orleans, containing twenty arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of H. Lavergne and below by other land of claimant.

The said tract of land is supposed originally to have formed part of a larger tract anciently owned by Governor De Bienville. Claimant, however, proves undisputed possession, and constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation thereof by him and those under whom he holds since the year 1792. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 4.—Edmond Fazende and François Fazende claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about four miles below the city of New Orleans, containing six arpents twenty-six toises five feet and six inches front by the usual depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Louis Bernoudy and below by land of Casimer Lacoste.

Claimants prove peaceable and undisturbed possession of said land by themselves and those under whom they hold, for the last fifty years and upwards, and also constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation thereof during all said time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 5.—Louis Bernoudy claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about four miles below the city of New Orleans, containing four arpents twenty-six toises and three feet front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Thomas Ramos and below by land of E. and F. Fazende.

The said tract of land is now claimed in virtue of purchase and of ancient and undisputed possession, having been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those from whom he derived his title for the last fifty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 6.—Edmond Drouet and Jean Baptiste Drouet claim a tract of land situate on the Bayou Washa or Ouachas, in the parish of Jefferson, at about twenty-four miles distant from the city of New Orleans, containing about one league and a half front on the said bayou, by a depth not exceeding six arpents, and bounded on one side by land of Arnaud Magnon and on the other side by the Bayou Lapointe.

The said tract of land was formerly owned by Mr. Villars Dubreuil, who sold the same, on the 16th day of July, 1776, to one Juan Soquet, from which latter it has descended to the present claimants by virtue of regular successive sales. It has, moreover, been constantly inhabited and cultivated by said claimants and those under whom they hold for the last forty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 7.—Pierre Robin Lacoste claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Bernard, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about six miles below the city of New Orleans, containing sixteen arpents front, whereof six and a half arpents have a depth of one hundred and twenty arpents, and the balance a depth of forty arpents, bounded above by the lands of P. D. De la Ronde, and below by those of the heirs of James Villeré.

The said tract of land is composed of three contiguous portions, acquired by the present claimant at different periods. It is now claimed, as thus composed, in virtue of peaceable and undisturbed possession, and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation by said claimant and those under whom he holds, from the year 1786 and upwards down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 8.—Louise Odille Destrehan, wife of P. A. Roste, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about thirty-two miles above the city of New Orleans, containing sixteen arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of widow Delhomme and below by land of Messrs. Brown & Humphreys.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of ancient and undisputed possession, having been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those under whom she holds, for the last forty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 9.—François Delery claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about eighteen miles below the city of New Orleans, containing ten arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of François Dupuy and below by other land of claimant.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of purchase and of long uninterrupted possession, having been constantly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last fifty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 10.—Aimée Guillet claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, and on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, containing four and a half arpents front on the said bayou by the usual depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Girod Brothers and below by land of Marie Louise, a free woman of color.

The said tract of land was purchased by claimant from Joseph Bourg, who had acquired it in due form from Marie Pitre, widow of Antoine Marine, on the 9th day of January, 1794; since which time it has been constantly and uinterruptedly inhabited and cultivated. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 11.—Pierre Charlet claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, on the left bank of the Bayou La Fourche, containing four arpents front on said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by other land of claimant and below by land of Jacques Barillot.

It appears that the said tract of land is among the oldest settlements on the Bayou La Fourche, and that it has been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated, as private property, by claimant and those under whom he holds, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 12.—Louis Bouligny claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, at about three miles above the city of New Orleans, containing twenty-three and a half arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of François Robert Avart and below by land of widow Louise Avart.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of purchase and of ancient and undisputed possession, having been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those from whom he derives title, for upwards of forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 13.—François Robert Avart claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about three and a half miles above the city of New Orleans, containing eight and a half arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land now or formerly belonging to widow Joseph Marie Ducros and below by land of Louis Bouligny.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of purchase, founded on ancient and uninterrupted possession, having been constantly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those under whom he holds, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 14.—Louis Barthelemy Macarty claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about a mile and a half below the city of New Orleans, containing three arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Martin Duralde and below by land of P. Guesnon.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract formerly owned by Don Lorenzo Wiltz, from whom it was purchased, under authority of the Spanish government, by Louis Chevalier Macarty and wife, (late father and mother of claimant,) on the 11th day of November, 1794. It has, moreover, been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by said claimant and those under whom he holds for the last fifty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 15.—Philip Guesnon claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about one mile and a half below the city of New Orleans, containing one arpent and a half front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of L. B. Macarty and below by land of David Olivier.

The said tract of land is part of a larger tract formerly owned by Don Lorenzo Wiltz, and mentioned in the next preceding report on the claim of L. B. Macarty. The portion now claimed has been constantly inhabited and cultivated by claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last fifty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 16.—David Olivier claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about one mile and a half below the city of New Orleans, containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Philip Guesnon and below by land of Albert Piernas.

The said tract of land forms part of a larger tract, formerly owned by Don Lorenzo Wiltz, and mentioned in our report on the claim of L. B. Macarty, (No. 14.) Claimant proves habitation and cultivation of the portion now claimed for more than fifty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 17.—Martin Duralde claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about one mile and a half below the city of New Orleans, containing two and a half arpents front by the usual depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Mad. Montreuil and below by land of L. B. Macarty.

The said tract of land is part of the tract formerly owned by Don Lorenzo Wiltz, and mentioned in our report on the claim of L. B. Macarty, (No. 14.) Claimant also proves habitation and cultivation of the portion now claimed for the last fifty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 18.—Thomas W. Chinn claims a tract of land situate in the parish of West Baton Rouge, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on both sides by other lands of claimant.

The said tract of land is the half of a larger tract of eight arpents front, formerly owned by one Santiago Labbi, who sold the other half to Simon Babin, whose title thereto was duly confirmed by the late board of commissioners for this district. The portion now claimed was sold by said Labbi to Robin Delogny, under whom claimant holds; having, moreover, been constantly inhabited and cultivated for the last forty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 19.—Peter Rapp and Rosmond Fagot claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-four miles below the city of New Orleans, containing twelve arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Joseph Veillon and below by land of Thomas Cunningham.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of purchase, and of ancient and undisputed possession, having been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated, by claimants and those under whom they hold, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 20.—Michel Bernard Cantrelle claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Saint James, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about sixty miles above the city of New Orleans, containing seven arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of widow Poeyfarré and below by other lands of claimant.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of peaceable possession and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation thereof, by claimant and those under whom he holds, since the year 1782. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 21.—Jean Ursin Jarreau claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing twenty-six arpents four toises and five feet front by a depth not exceeding forty arpents, and bounded above by land now or formerly belonging to the heirs of Nicolas Bara and below by a bayou called "Petit bayou."

The said tract of land forms part of a larger tract owned by the late Jean Baptiste Bara in the year 1782, and prior thereto, and at whose death it passed into the possession of his widow, under whom claimant holds by virtue of regular successive conveyances. The portion now claimed has been, moreover, constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated, by the said claimant and those under whom he holds, from the said year 1782 down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 22.—Michel Aime claims a tract of land situated in the parish of St. Charles, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-four miles above the city of New Orleans, containing twenty arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Stephen Henderson and below by land of Alexander La Branche.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of inheritance, and was acquired by the late François Aime (grandfather of claimant) in three different portions, as follows: 1st. Twelve arpents front, from Colonel Pierre Robert Gerard de Villemont, knight of the royal order of St. Louis, on the 22d day of September, 1768. 2d. Four arpents front from Jean, a free mulatto, on the 28th day of May, 1778; and, 3d. Four and a half arpents front, from Nanett Pacquet, on the 9th day of October, 1797. Claimant, moreover, proves constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation of the whole of said land for upwards of forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that the said claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 23.—Etienne Trepagnier claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Saint John the Baptist, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and containing seven arpents seven toises and four feet front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of widow Anna Buchols and below by land of widow Jacob Leche.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of ancient and undisputed possession and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation, by claimant and those under whom he holds, for more than fifty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 24.—Edmond Fortier claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about twenty-eight miles above the city of New Orleans, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded by other lands of claimant.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of purchase, founded on ancient possession and constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation for upwards for forty years past We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of a settlement made thereon by the said claimant upwards of forty years ago, and of constant possession and cultivation thereof ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 72.—Philibert Justin Taris claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Plaquemines and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing six arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Joseph Ingle and below by land of Antoine Pelat.

The claimant proves uninterrupted possession and constant habitation and cultivation of said land, by himself and those under whom he holds, for more than forty-five years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 73.—Emanuel Landry claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Iberville, on the right bank of the Bayou Jacob, (or upper branch of the Bayou Plaquemines,) and about four miles distant from the river Mississippi, containing ten arpents front on said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Antoine Langlois and below by land of William Shea.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of ancient and undisputed possession, having been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated, by claimant and those under whom he holds, for upwards of forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 74.—Jean Baptiste Guédry claims a tract of land situate in the parish of La Fourche Interior and on the left bank of the Bayou La Fourche, containing two arpents fifteen toises and fifteen feet front on said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Joseph Allan and below by land of Pierre Lefevre.

The claimant proves uninterrupted possession and constant habitation and cultivation of said land, by himself and those under whom he holds, for the last forty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 75.—Pierre Lefevre claims a tract of land situate in the parish of La Fourche Interior and on the left bank of the Bayou La Fourche, containing four and a half arpents front on the said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of J. B. Guédry and below by other land of said claimant.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of uninterrupted possession and constant habitation and cultivation thereof, by claimant and those under whom he holds, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 76.—Sebastian Fernandez claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, on the right bank of the Bayou La Fourche, and about four miles from the river Mississippi, containing three arpents front on said bayou by a depth not exceeding forty arpents, and bounded above by land of widow Pre. Genthil and below by land of Daniel Smith.

The claimant proves uninterrupted possession and constant habitation and cultivation of the said land, by himself and those under whom he holds, for the last forty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 77.—Jeanne Dessalles, wife of Pierre Dulcide Barran, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents five toises and two feet front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of widow Duverge and C. Villeré and below by land of James Villeré and Son.

The said tract of land was upwards of forty years in the peaceable possession of Mr. Demaziliére, under whom claimant holds by regular successive conveyances. It is now claimed in virtue of continued and uninterrupted possession and cultivation ever since. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 78.—Anne Boudraux, widow of John Boudraux, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of La Fourche Interior, on the left bank of the Bayou La Fourche, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpens, and bounded above by land of Valery Prejean and below by land of J. B. Hebert.

The claimant proves uninterrupted possession and constant habitation and cultivation of said land, by herself and those under whom she holds, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 79.—Pierre Soniat Dufossat, Ursin Soniat Dufossat, and Beausejour Boisblanc, claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about fourteen miles above the city of New Orleans, containing ten arpents front with a depth of forty arpents, opening in such manner as to contain twenty arpents on the back line, bounded above by land of the heirs of Pierre Sauvé, below by land of J. Soniat Dufossat, and in the rear by lands of Norbert Fortier.

The said tract of land was owned upwards of forty years ago by Olivier Forcelle, and is now claimed in virtue of continued possession and constant and uninterrupted inhabitation and cultivation, by claimants and those under whom they hold, from said period down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 80.—The widow and heirs of François D'Hebecourt claim a small tract or parcel of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the south bank of the Bayou St. John, and about two miles from the city of New Orleans, which said tract forms an irregular figure, according to a plat thereof produced by said claimants, and whereof the lines measure as follows, to wit: The one running towards the "Metairie road," three hundred and twenty-six feet and four inches; the one running towards the canal of the "Navigation Company," two hundred and thirty-one feet seven inches; and the one separating it from the property of the heirs of the widow Vienne, four hundred and sixty-one feet.

The said parcel of land is proved to be among the most ancient settlements on the said Bayou St. John, and has been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated, by the said claimants and those under whom they immediately hold, for the last forty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 81.—The widow and heirs of François D'Hebecourt claim another tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the south side of the "Metairie road," and near the Bayou St. John, containing twenty-three arpents fourteen toises and three feet front on said road by a depth of fourteen arpents, and bounded on one side by land of Mrs. Jacques Vienne, and on the other by land of Gabriel Jason, a free negro.

The claimants prove uninterrupted possession and constant habitation and cultivation of said tract, by themselves and those under whom they immediately hold, for upwards of forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 82.—Louis Allard claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the left bank of the Bayou St. John, and about three miles from the city of New Orleans, containing four arpents front on the said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land belonging to the heirs of Louis Allard, (late father of claimant,) and below by land formerly belonging to Fanchon Montreuil, a free colored woman.

This said tract of land was purchased by the claimant from François Riano, who had acquired it in due form from Mateo Ostein, in the year 1802, by which latter it had been owned for a number of years previous. It is now claimed in virtue of said possession and of constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation for upwards of forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 83.—The heirs of Louis Allard claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the left bank of the Bayou St. John, and about three miles from the city of New Orleans, containing fourteen arpents front on said bayou by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by land belonging to the heirs of F. D'Hebecourt and on the other side by land of L. Allard.

The claimants prove undisputed possession and constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation of said land, by themselves and those under whom they immediately hold, for the last forty years and upwards. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 84.—John McDonogh claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption, on the left bank of the canal conducting to the Attakapas, containing eighteen arpents front on said canal by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by land of Julien Oslet and on the other side by land of Hypolite Daghert.

The claimant proves that the said land was inhabited and cultivated, as a private settlement, on the 20th day of December, 1803, and for several years previous, by permission of the proper Spanish officer. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 85.—John McDonogh claims another tract of land situate in the parish of Assumption and on the left bank of the canal conducting to the Attakapas, containing six arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by land of Louis Saying and on the other side by land of François Goutreaux.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of purchase, founded on habitation and cultivation thereof on the 20th day of December, 1803, and for several years prior thereto, by permission of the proper Spanish officer. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 86.—John McDonogh claims another tract of land situate on the right bank of the Bayou Ouachas, in the parish of Jefferson and district of Barrataria, containing about thirty acres front on said bayou by a depth of about one hundred and ten arpents.

The said tract of land is now claimed in virtue of uninterrupted possession and cultivation, by claimant and those under whom he holds, for upwards of forty years past. It originally formed part of a larger tract, derived, as there is reason for believing from the evidence produced, from an old French grant. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 87.—Euphemia La Branch, wife of William Brown, claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Jefferson, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and about two and a half miles above the city of New Orleans, containing four arpents and eleven toises front by forty-five arpents in depth, and bounded above by land of J. E. Faures and below by land of P. Robin Delogny.

The claimant proves undisputed possession and constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation of said land, by herself and those under whom she holds, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 88.—François Lorio and Achille Lorio claim a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing three arpents front by forty arpents deep, together with an additional or second depth of forty arpents lying immediately in the rear of and adjacent to said first depth, and having a width or front of twelve arpents, bounded above by land of widow Andre France and below by land of Charles Perret.

The claimants prove uninterrupted possession and constant habitation and cultivation of the first depth of said land, by themselves and those under whom they hold, for more than forty years past; and of the second or additional depth thereof they prove the same uninterrupted possession and undisputed ownership for the same space of time back, the nature and quality of the soil rendering it in a great measure unfit for cultivation. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 89.—The widow and heirs of Andre France claim a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing one-half of an arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Henry Armstrong James and below by land of F. and A. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 241.—The heirs of Julien Poydras claim a tract of land situate in the parish of Point Coupée, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, at a place called "Raccourci," containing six arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above and below by other lands of the claimants.

The said tract of land was sold at the public sale made by the civil and military commandant of said parish on the 25th day of October, 1775, of the property belonging to the succession of Philip Duplechin, and adjudicated to Mr. Sanderneau, by whose agent it was conveyed to the late Julien Poydras on the 25th day of March, 1806. It is now claimed in virtue of said adjudication, and of uninterrupted possession and cultivation since the date thereof. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 242.—The heirs of Julien Poydras claim another tract of land situate in the parish of Point Coupée, on the northwest bank of False river, ("Fausse Rivière,") containing eighty-four arpents front on the said river by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, the side lines closing so as to give twenty-three and one-fourth arpents on the back line; bounded above and below by other lands of the claimants.

The said tract of land was formerly owned by the late Benjamin Farrar, at whose death (which took place in the year 1791) it was sold by his heirs to the late Julien Poydras. It is now claimed in virtue of uninterrupted possession and cultivation from the date of said sale down to the present time. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 243.—Toussaint Mossey claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, and opposite to the city of New Orleans, containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of John McDonogh and below by other land of the claimant.

The said tract of land was purchased by the claimant from Thomas and David Urquhart on the 2d day of April, 1810, and is now claimed in virtue of constant and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation thereof, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 244.—The widow of Pierre Gueno claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, and on the northeast side of the road leading from the city of New Orleans to the Bayou St. John, containing an area of sixty-five arpents eight hundred and sixty-four toises in superfices, and bounded on one side by land of C. L. and P. G. Huchet Kernion, and on the other side by land of ———.

The claimant proves constant and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation of the said tract, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 245.—Guillaume Bellanger claims a small tract or parcel of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the road leading to the Bayou St. John, containing one hundred and thirty-five feet front on said road by a depth of five hundred and forty feet or three arpents, and bounded on one side by land of widow Fleytas and on the other side by land of widow Dumaine.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of purchase founded on uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation thereof, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 246.—Manuel Andry claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Orleans, on the east bank of the river Mississippi, and about two miles below the city of New Orleans, containing two arpents and ten toises front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by lands forming the suburb "Washington" and below by other land of the claimant.

The said tract of land was purchased by the claimant from the heirs of the late Charles Laveau Trudeau, (formerly surveyor general of the province of Louisiana,) and is now claimed in virtue of uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation thereof, for more than fifty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 247.—The widow of Joseph Castanedo claims a small tract or portion of land situate in the parish of Orleans, and on the east side of the road leading to the Bayou St. John, containing seven hundred and thirty feet front on said road by five hundred and forty feet in depth, and bounded on one side by land of François Girod and on the other side by land of Mr. Duchamp.

The claimant proves constant and uninterrupted habitation, and cultivation, and undisputed possession of the said tract by herself and those under whom she holds, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 248.—The widow of Joseph Castanedo claims another portion of land situate in the parish of Orleans, and lying about three arpents back from the road leading to the Bayou St. John, (on the east side,) containing five hundred and six feet front by a depth of fifteen hundred and eight feet on the line separating it from the property of Mr. Duchamp, and of one thousand and ninety-two feet on the line separating it from the property of Mr. Gueno.

The claimant proves constant and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation of the said land, for more than forty years past. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 249.—The congregation of the "Roman Catholic Church" of the parish of Pointe Coupée claim a tract of land situate in the said parish, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing eight arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded on one side by land of John Henry Ludeling and on the other side by land of William Field.

The said tract of land was acquired by the claimants on the 22d day of November, 1815, from François Chessé, who had peaceably enjoyed and possessed it for a number of years previous. Although the possession required by law is not actually proven by the claimants, it may be inferred, we think, from the sale above alluded to from Chessé; which, together with the religious uses to which the land has been consecrated, induces us to recommend this claim for confirmation.

No. 250.—Charles Morgan claims a tract of land situate in the parish of Pointe Coupée, on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing ten arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land now or formerly belonging to François Chessé, and below by other land of the claimant.

The said tract of land is claimed in virtue of purchase founded on uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation thereof by the claimant and those under whom he holds, for the last fifty years. We are therefore of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 251.—The police jury of the parish of Pointe Coupée claim, in behalf of the inhabitants of said parish, a certain tract of land situate on the west bank of the river Mississippi at a place commonly called the Bend or "Anse" of Pointe Coupée, and containing twenty-three arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents.

It appears that, in the year 1815, the said police jury, in order to save the inhabitants of the said parish from an unavoidable inundation from the river, took possession of the said land, which had been abandoned, as they allege, by its pretended owners, and erected on it, at a considerable expense, the necessary works and levees, which said works, they further allege, have proved a vast benefit to other parishes lying west of the Mississippi, preserving them from overflow, and thereby reclaiming large bodies of land These are the facts adduced in support of the above claim, and as they present a case which does not come within the range of the law under which we are acting we most respectfully submit it without comment.

Class D, including claims embraced within the provisions of the 4th section of the act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of the claims to lands in the southeastern land district of the State of Louisiana," approved July 4, 1832.

No. 1.—Thelesphore Champagne claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Elie Champagne and below by land of Joseph Girod.

The said tract of land was among those sold at the public sale which took place at New Orleans on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th June preceding, and is now claimed according to law, in virtue of constant and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation thereof by the claimant and those under whom he holds, for more than forty years past.

No. 2.—Daniel Lambert claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Ant. St. Amand and below by land of Louis and Udger Friloux.

The said tract of land was among those sold at the public sale which took place at New Orleans on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th June preceding. It is now claimed, under the late act, in virtue of constant and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation, for more than forty years past.

No. 3.—André Dorvin claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of widow Frederick Toups and below by land of Edmond Wiltz.

The said tract of land originally formed part of a larger tract, regularly granted by the Spanish government to Antoine Dorvin on the 27th day of January, 1777, under which grantee the claimant holds in virtue of regular successive conveyances. It was among those sold at the public sale which took place at New Orleans on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th June preceding. We are, however, of opinion that this claim is already confirmed by law.

No. 4.—The heirs of François Gabriel Lorio and of Marie Jeanne Lorio claim a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent and a half front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of the widow Lallande and below by land of Gilbert Darensbourg.

The said tract of land having been among those sold at the public sale which took place at New Orleans on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th June preceding, is now claimed in virtue of constant and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation thereof, for more than fifty years past.

No. 5.—The congregation of the Roman Catholic Church of St. John the Baptist claim a tract of land situate in the parish of St. John the Baptist, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front by eighty arpents in depth, and bounded above by land of François Rodriguez and below by land of John Weber.

The first or front depth of the said land was granted by the Spanish governor, O'Reilly, to the inhabitants of the said parish on the 21st day of February, 1770, for the purpose of building a church thereon, &c., and subsequently, to wit, on the 29th of December, 1774, Governor Onzaga issued, in favor of said inhabitants, an order of survey for the second or additional depth of forty arpents. The said land is now claimed under a late act, in virtue of the said grant and order, in consequence of the same having been sold at the public sale which took place in this city on the first Monday of November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th June preceding.

No. 6.—Elie Champagne claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of William Beauvais and below by land of the widow Dorvin.

The said tract of land having been sold at the public sale which took place in this city on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th June preceding, is now claimed under the late act, in virtue of constant and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation, for more than forty years past.

No. 7.—Charles Aimé Darensbourg claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Alphonse Frederick and below by land of Andrè Lorio.

The said tract of land is now claimed according to law, in virtue of purchase founded on constant and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation thereof, for more than forty years past. It was among those sold in this city on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th of June preceding.

No. 8.—The widow and heirs of Frederick Toups claim a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing two arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Pierre Friloux and below by land of Pierre Chenier.

The said tract of land having been sold in this city on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th of June preceding, is now claimed under the late law, in virtue of purchase, founded on constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation thereof by the claimants and those under whom they hold, for more than forty years past.

No. 9.—Widow of Philip De Neufbourg claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. Charles, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by land of Pierre Bauchet and below by land of the heirs of Marie Jeanne Gabrielle Lorio.

The claimant proves, according to law, constant and uninterrupted habitation and cultivation of the said land, for more than forty years past, which said tract was among those sold in this city on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th of June preceding.

No. 10.—Valsin B. Marmillon claims a tract of land situate in the parish of St. John the Baptist, and on the west bank of the river Mississippi, containing four arpents front by the ordinary depth of forty arpents, and bounded above by other land of the claimant and below by land of Messrs. Norbert, Becknel & Co.

The said tract of land having been among those sold at the public sale which took place at New Orleans on the first Monday in November, 1830, under the President's proclamation of the 5th of June preceding, is now claimed under the late law, in virtue of a survey made thereof by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor general of the late province of Louisiana, on the 8th day of May, 1792, and of continued and uninterrupted possession, habitation, and cultivation ever since.

LAND OFFICE, SOUTHEASTERN DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA.

The foregoing reports include all the claims filed and recorded in this office, under the late act of Congress, approved on the 4th day of July, 1832, and entitled "An act for the final adjustment of the claims to lands in the southeastern land district of the State of Louisiana."

In the examination and investigation of the different claims presented to us we have been strictly governed by "the provisions of the laws heretofore enacted for the adjustment of land claims" in this district, and also by the principles of those provisions as we have found them explained and illustrated in the decisions of the board of commissioners for the eastern district of the late Territory of Orleans, and in the reports of the late register and receiver of this office, drawn up and prepared under preceding similar enactments, all of which have been formally recognized and confirmed by Congress, and we are happy to state that in no instance has an atttempt been made to impose upon us a claim which has not been of a character to stand successfully the test of the most rigid scrutiny.

We would observe, in conclusion, that the opportunities held out by the provisions of the late law have not been so generally embraced as it was anticipated. A reason for this, perhaps, may be found in the unparalleled calamities that have befallen the planters and landholders of Louisiana, within the last year. The prevalence of two devastating epidemics, within a short time of each other, has been productive amongst them of consequences so disastrous and of so engrossing a nature as to preclude, at the time, all other considerations but those immediately connected with the dangers which pressed and threatened on all sides. How far this may operate as a reason to induce a renewal and extension of the privileges and indulgencies contained in the law, which has just expired, will, no doubt, be taken into serious consideration by those charged and entrusted with the superintendence of the welfare and prosperity of the country.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

23D CONGRESS.] No. 1173. [1ST SESSION.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN THE STATE OF MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 5, 1834.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 18, 1834.

SIR: The report of the recorder and commissioners, under the provisions of the acts of Congress of the 9th of July, 1832, and March 2, 1833, for the final adjustment of private land claims in Missouri, upon such claims as, in their opinion, are entitled to be placed in the first class, specified by the act of 1832, has been sent to this office, but the voluminous character of the report preventing this office from making copies thereof for the two Houses of Congress within a reasonable time, I have this day transmitted the original report to the Senate, with a request that it may be placed in the possession of the House of Representatives whenever the Senate shall have acted upon the subject.

I have been induced to send the report to the Senate from the fact that one of the commissioners appointed to investigate those claims is now a member of that honorable body.

It being very important that this office should be in possession of the originals of all the reports upon private land claims, I have to request that the report herein mentioned may be returned after the final action of Congress thereon.

With great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIJAH HAYWARD.

The Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

TWENTY-THIRD CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES, June 30, 1834.

On motion of Mr. ASHLEY:

Resolved, That the report of the recorder and commissioners for the adjustment of land titles in Missouri, under the acts of July 9, 1832, and March 2, 1833, be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that he be directed to report his opinion as to the validity of the several claims contained in said report to the next session of Congress, and that said report be printed.

RECORDER'S OFFICE, ST. LOUIS, MO., November 27, 1833.

SIR: In pursuance of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the final adjustment of land claims in Missouri," and of the act supplementary thereto, of March 2, 1833, the undersigned recorder and commissioners beg leave to lay before you, for the decision of Congress, the result of their examination.

In the report now submitted the board have included only such claims as appear to be entitled to confirmation, and to be placed in the first class. They reserved their decision upon those claims which seemed to be destitute of merit, in law or equity, under the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government, for their final report to Congress We were influenced to take this course from the belief that we were authorized, by the terms of the act, which provide that the lands contained in the second class shall not be subject to sale until the final report of the recorder and commissioners shall have been made. This view of the subject was the more readily adopted from the fact that, during the almost entire existence of the board, the cholera has prevailed to such an extent as to prevent, in a great measure, the appearance of the claimants, or their witnesses, before the board. Under such circumstances ordinary justice not only to the claimants, but to the government itself, seemed to require that the greatest indulgence should be given which the law could possibly extend.

Before entering into an examination of the claims the board came to the determination of settling such general principles as might be found to be applicable, and which should be not only their guide in the decisions to be made, but the basis of the report which they are required to submit.

These principles or general propositions will be found embodied in the form of resolutions in the paper marked A, which accompanies this report, and to which you are referred.

The tabular form has been adopted as the most convenient mode of presenting each claim, including the evidence produced in support of it. But, as it is made the duty of the board not only to present the claims as they have been submitted, but also to "state the authority and power under which they were granted, by the French or Spanish governors, commandant, or sub-delegate," they will do so as succinctly as the nature of the case will permit.

For the purpose of arriving at correct conclusions upon the merits of the claims reported, we have availed ourselves of all the sources of information accessible to us. We have consulted not only all the authorities and proofs within our reach on the subject of the French and Spanish laws, usages, and customs, but have also attentively considered the acts of Congress heretofore passed on the subject, and the construction which has been given to them.

By a reference to the various acts of Congress relative to the incomplete French and Spanish claims in Louisiana, it will be seen that the confirmations which have been made of those titles have not been donations or gratuities on the part of our government, but, on the contrary, were predicated upon a right vested in the grantee, or those claiming under him, and founded upon the laws, usages, customs, and practice of the government under which the claims originated. These acts and confirmations might, therefore, have been considered as conclusive, as far as they went, of those laws, usages, customs, and practice; and, consequently, that every claim of a similar character should be confirmed, or placed in the first class, would be the reasonable and natural inference. Without, however, going this length, the board felt it to be their duty, whenever a principle protective of a claim was furnished by those acts, to give it effect, unless some law, usage, or custom of the government which originated the claim should be found to be inconsistent with their provisions.

Among the claims examined we found that many of them have been excluded from confirmation upon grounds which have since been abandoned by Congress; or upon grounds which have been taken by former commissioners to whom the claims were submitted, and from whose decision there was no appeal; or lastly, upon grounds which, although justified perhaps by the letter of those acts, were evidently opposed to their spirit and intention. No claim, by the act of 1807, could be confirmed which contained a lead mine or salt spring; and, consequently, a class of claims whose merits, in every other particular, were admitted, were rejected for that reason. This objection, although at the date of the act considered sound, it seems has long since been abandoned. By the act of 1824, and those subsequent to it, no such exception is made. A meritorious claim, therefore, although containing a lead mine or salt spring, was entitled, intrinsically, to as favorable consideration in 1807 as in 1824, and in justice, it would seem, should never at any time have been excluded from confirmation.

Again, by the act of 1814, it is provided "that in every case where it shall appear by the report of the commissioners, register, or recorder, that the concession, warrant, or order of survey under which the claim is made contains a special location, or had been actually located or surveyed (within the Territory of Missouri) before the 10th day of March, 1804, by a surveyor duly authorized by the government making such grant, the claimants shall be and are hereby confirmed in their claims; provided that no claim adjudged fraudulent, nor a greater quantity than a league square, nor the claim of any person who has received, in his own right, a donation grant from the United States in said Territory, shall be confirmed."

Now, if those claims, coming directly within the provisions of the act just alluded to, were entitled to be confirmed, and were actually confirmed, we would reasonably conclude, from the same views, that the claims now reported, especially such as are within a league square, are entitled to protection from principles established not only by the acts of 1807 and 1814, but by other acts of Congress; for we are not able to perceive the difference in merit or character which has confirmed some and rejected others, which were evidently intended by Congress should be confirmed.

By a parity of reasoning the authority of the Spanish sub-delegate officers in Upper Louisiana to grant lands, not only to the quantity of 7,056 arpents, or a league square, but even to the extent of 27,000 arpents, it would seem, has been established by Congress. In several cases Congress confirmed claims to land exceeding 7,056 arpents, based upon mere permission to occupy given by the lieutenant governor. The case of the Vallés and others for the Mine la Motte tract, believed to contain 27,000 arpents, and that of the Shawnee Indians, who inhabited a considerable tract of country in the former districts of St. Genevieve and Cape Girardeau, who removed from their situation in the United States by invitation of the Spanish government, through their agent, Louis Lorimier, to use them against the aggressions of foreign or domestic enemies in the province of Upper Louisiana, is another and a strong instance illustrating the view here taken on this point.

By several acts of Congress, also, concessions by the lieutenant governor to various individuals have been confirmed to the extent of 7,056 arpents out of a larger quantity of from 15,000 to 20,000 arpents, including the original grant. From this the board would conclude that, in thus ratifying those concessions, Congress has settled the question of the power of the granting officer to make them. Because they would reasonably suppose that, if the authority was not possessed, the grant would have been void in toto, as it would have been a usurpation on the part of the officer, and a flagrant violation of his duty, to make grants to such an extent. Such a concession should be regarded as a whole, and its validity or invalidity settled accordingly.

When we ascend beyond the various acts of Congress passed upon the subject of these claims, and seek for their grounds of confirmation under the laws, usages, customs, and practice of the government and of the authorities at New Orleans acting in obedience to them, as we are required by the law under which we act, we find nothing in those laws, usages, customs, or practice which would justify the idea that Congress, in extending its protection to these claims, has transcended the bounds of propriety and of justice. On the contrary, a close and (as far as we could) a thorough investigation of the subject has brought our minds to the conclusion that, with the exception of the act of 1824, and those acts amendatory of and supplementary to it, the laws of Congress passed in relation to these claims have not been sufficiently comprehensive. Impressed with this belief, we cannot but think that those acts which limit confirmations within a league square, those which exclude claims which contain lead mines or salt springs, and those which require either a special location or a survey previous to March 10, 1804, have not had sufficiently in view the rights of the claimants as founded upon the laws, usages, customs, and practice of the French and Spanish authorities, and as protected by the treaty of cession and the law of nations.

Breckenridge, in his "Views of Louisiana," speaking of these claims, says, page 143: "It is a subject on which the claimants are feelingly alive. This anxiety is a tacit compliment to our government, for, under the former, their claims would scarcely be worth attention. The general complaint is, the want of sufficient liberality in determining on the claims. There is, perhaps, too great a disposition to lean against the larger concessions, some of which are certainly very great; but when we consider the trifling value of lands under the Spanish government, there will appear less reason for this prepossession against them. For many reasons it would not be to the honor of the United States that too much strictness should be required in the proof or formalities of title, particularly of a people who came into their power without any participation on their part, and without having been consulted." In compliance with the provision in the act which requires the commissioners to state the authority and power under which each claim was granted by the French or Spanish governor, commandant, or sub-delegate, we would refer, for proof of the same, to—

1st. The usage and practice of the lieutenant governors and sub-delegates in Upper Louisiana from the earliest period to the last concession granted in that province.

2d. To the usage and practice of the governors general and the intendant general at New Orleans.

3d. To the Spanish laws and royal ordinances on the subject of grants of lands belonging to the royal domain in all its colonial possessions in the western hemisphere.

That the usage and practice have been consistent with the presumption of lawful power in the officers who made grants is, in our opinion, demonstrated and sustained by all the evidence, oral and written, to which we have had access. It is to be observed that the lieutenant governor and the other sub-delegates in Upper Louisiana have almost universally originated the claim or concession. The cases are few in which the original grant emanated from the governor general, and scarcely constitute exceptions to the general practice, since, even in those few cases, the survey was to be made under the immediate sanction of the subordinate provincial authority.
