For the respectability of the witnesses above named, as well as those whose depositions are contained in this defence, I refer you to the whole delegation in Congress from Mississippi.

Affidavits and statements, Nos. 44, 45, and 46, are appended, and demonstrate the efficient aid extended by Robert J. Walker to the settlers, and disprove the charge of his introducing fictitious names into the Chocchuma Land Company; on which subject the deposition of Colonel Thomas Coapwood, of Alabama, No. 29, is also referred to.

The Reply of Samuel Gwin, register of the land office for the northwestern district, Mississippi, to the charges contained in the report of the Committee on Lands in the Senate of the United States, at the second session of the twenty-third Congress, (See Senate documents No. 151 and No. 22,) with Remarks on, and an Examination of, the several Depositions impugning his official conduct while register of the Mount Salus and Chocchuma land districts; prepared and submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Before I proceed to an examination of the various matters involved in the report above referred to, I think it proper to state a rule that was adopted a few days after I took charge of the Mount Salus office in 1831, upon a consultation with Mr. Crutcher, the then receiver of public moneys. I had been in the office but a short time before I sold, through mistake, one tract of land twice, which caused the adoption of this rule. It had been the custom of Mr. Fitz, the former register, at a time when there was but little done in the office, to place the letter "A," in pencil, on each tract, as soon as he made out an application for it, and when the receiver's duplicate receipt was received by him he then marked it with the letter "S," in ink. I found a vast number of tracts marked with the letter "A," in pencil, that had never been entered or found in the tract-books, and for the first few days I pursued the same plan, but soon found that I could not distinguish my pencil "A," from those previously made, and that I was at a loss to know what was actually sold, and what was not; and, as the receiver's health was very bad, (and, in fact, he shortly afterward died,) and could not daily furnish me with the duplicate receipts, we, upon reflection, determined to mark with ink the letter "S" on each tract, as soon as the application issued; and, to prevent fraud, and as our offices were in the same building, I handed the application to him with my own hand, which he was to retain; and, if the applicant did not pay the money forthwith, it was returned to me on the same day and destroyed, and the marks taken off of the maps. This rule was found necessary on another account. It frequently occurred that an individual would apply for a tract of land that had been, on the same day, and but a few hours before, applied for by another, and, finding it marked "A," in pencil, he would require a search in the receiver's office to know if the money had been paid on it, which, in the press of business, and Mr. Crutcher's feeble health, was found impracticable. The applicant would thus be compelled to go away dissatisfied, or we required to perform a service, at many times detrimental to the public interest, and all times annoying to us.

I hope this rule will be kept in mind, as it was continued after Mr. Dameron took charge of the receiver's office, in May, 1832, and up to the time when I left it, on 4th March, 1833.

I would also, for your information, state that another rule that Mr. Dameron adopted, at my suggestion, when I left the office. At the decease of Mr. Crutcher, I found much inconvenience to the public, and litigation among applicants, as to who had a preference when two applicants, at different periods, had applied to enter the same land when the office was closed. Not anticipating such a difficulty, I made out applications for all applicants that wished to deposit their money, without making any mark on the map. Many of these applicants lived out of the State, or in remote parts of it, and who, at the time they deposited their money for the land, had no idea that they would be opposed by other applicants, and their agents were not authorized to bid for them in but few, if any, instances. My own opinion then was, and it has not changed since, that the first applicant, who had made a deposit of his money, should be entitled to the land as soon as the office opened. It was not his fault that the office was not open, and he had done all that was required of him by law to complete his purchase. Others might improperly have derived a knowledge of the quality of land from his labor and researches, and might slip in, as soon as the office opened, and by bidding one cent per acre higher for the same land, would obtain it. This, I thought, unjust. On my leaving the office on the 4th March, 1833, I advised Mr. Dameron, during the time the office might remain closed, to pursue a different course. When an individual deposited his money with him, then to mark the letter "S" on the tract, as formerly done, and if another applied to enter it, not to give him any information as to the former application, but let him examine the books, and if, upon such examination, he was willing to risk his money on it, be it so, it should not be by betraying the first applicant. As my books were much behind, I agreed to relieve Mr. Dameron of the trouble of making out applications, so long as my business detained me in the office, although I had formally delivered over to him all the maps, books, and papers, belonging to it on the 5th March, 1833.

With these preliminary remarks, rendered necessary for a full understanding of the subject, I shall proceed now with my answer.

The committee have arranged their charges and specifications under two general heads:

1. The Mount Salus land officers.

"The register and receiver of this land office, Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron, were notoriously engaged in extensive land speculations in the lands of the United States. In order to secure the most valuable tracts of land * * * * they marked every such tract with the letter S; so that if any person wishing to purchase should apply for either of the tracts thus marked, the applicant was informed that the tract was previously entered, and in this manner it remained unsold until they, or either of them, could make a suitable profit by private sale, or found it convenient to pay the minimum price, and obtain a final certificate of purchase. The same practice was likewire adopted to favor particular individuals, who were the friends or favorites of these officers, and who had not the means to make prompt payment." It appears by the evidence of Mr. Sumrall, the present register, "that, at the time he took possession of his office, there were numerous tracts of land marked on the map with the letter S, which had not been sold. * * * * The number of tracts so marked, is stated at about two hundred."

"2. These officers were in the constant habit of selling the public lands to applicants on a credit, exacting from the purchasers a separate note as a bonus, or interest, on the nominal amount of the purchase money, * * * and signed a receipt to the purchaser only when the money and interest were paid, and, in the mean time, the tract thus fraudulently sold was marked with the letter S, to prevent persons from making application to enter it.

"3. These officers appear, on the sale-books, to have become the purchasers of lands in their own names, contrary to the express provisions of law.

"4. They stand charged with gross partiality and favoritism between applicants for the same tract of land, and with other devices highly vexatious to individuals who might incur their displeasure, and injurious to the interest of the government."

Brief of the Report.

1. That Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron were notoriously engaged in extensive land speculations;
That they marked as sold, vast bodies of the most valuable lands that were not sold;
That applicants for the lands thus marked were informed that said tracts were entered;
That they endeavored to sell the tracts thus marked at a "suitable profit by private sale;"
That failing to sell it, they entered it at the minimum price;
That they marked lands as sold for particular friends, who had not the means of prompt payment;
That at the time the present register took charge of the office, numerous tracts (about two hundred) were thus fraudulently marked.

2. That these officers were in the constant habit of selling the lands on a credit, receiving a separate note as a bonus or interest;
That at these sales final receipts were not made out until the purchase money and interest were first paid; and That in the meantime the land was marked as sold.

3. That these officers appear on their sale-books to be purchasers of lands in their own names. And

4. That they stand charged with gross partiality and favoritism, and other devices highly vexatious to individuals.

Alexander McKay's Testimony—(Doc. 151, page 39.)

BRIEF.—That after Samuel Gwin ceased to be register of the Mount Salus office, and before Mr. Sumrall came into office, he, McKay, examined the maps with a view of entering west half of southeast quarter of section 10, township 5, range 2, west, which he found marked as sold; on examining the tract-book, found it was not sold; mentioned it to Gwin, who informed me it was not sold; that he had marked it and wanted it, but said that he, McKay, might have it; told Gwin that he had not the money, but thought he could get it of Wm. S. Jones; Gwin advised him to wait and he would get it for him; Gwin then gave him an application "for said land," which he deposited with Mr. Dameron, not signed, and told him it could lie so for one or two months, and then be saved for him. From his understanding concluded Gwin would pay for the land for him rather than he should lose it, but did not positively say so. At May election Gwin told him he had better enter the land or he might lose it. In a few days after that McKay called at the office, and was informed by Mr. Sumrall that Pitman and Gwin had entered it. Receiver informed him that the land was arranged. After the death of Mr. Dameron, and in November following, learned the land was not entered by Pitman and Gwin, and letter S had been taken off, with one other tract similarly marked; proposed an exchange of lands; Gwin referred him to Pitman, who proposed swapping him other lands in section 15, to wit: east half of northeast quarter and west half of southeast quarter; thinks these tracts were marked sold; this occurred in the summer of 1833, after the death of Mr. Dameron and before Dickson came into office; knows all these tracts were unpaid for, ("two of which Samuel Gwin promised to save for me;") after office opened he, McKay, applied for these four eighths; Pitman and Gwin also applied for the same; matter was then compromised.

REMARKS.—After I left the Mount Salus office, on the 4th March, 1833, I concluded to enter some land between Clinton and Raymond, that lay, as I supposed, on the road, and from my imperfect knowledge of the country, (not having examined the numbers,) believed the west half of southeast quarter of section 10, was the land I had seen and wanted. I took out an application for it, intending to enter it as soon as the new register should take his post. I learned from McKay that the tract I had applied for took part of Mr. Mellon's field; learning this, I was satisfied that it was not the land which I wanted, believing that the one I wanted lay west of the above eighth. I inquired of McKay as to the quality and situation, wishing to discover whether it was or was not the land I had looked at and wished to purchase. Upon McKay's expressing a wish to purchase the land that I had taken out an application for, I withdrew my application for it immediately, as I should have done anyhow, and, at his request, made out one in his name for the very same land; the office was then closed, and he deposited his application for the land with the receiver, but deposited no money. After this I have no recollection of anything that occurred in relation to this land; I had not the slightest claim to, or felt the least interest about it. I had at several times aided McKay in getting money to enter land around his mill, without charging or receiving any compensation for such services. He was at that moment owing a considerable sum of money that had been loaned him, at my request, at only legal interest, to enter lands around him. From these former acts of kindness he might have come to the conclusion that I would pay for the lands for him, but it must have been presuming very strong, as he knew very well that he had not met any of his previous promises punctually, as he was bound to do by his word of honor, and to this day he owes the money that he was most sacredly bound to pay in four weeks. All the subsequent transactions in relation to this land were without my knowledge or participation, as will not only appear by McKay's testimony, but by that of the present register and John B. Pitman.

But what does this prove? Not the slightest impropriety on my part. When McKay applied for the land, did I ask any bonus? Did I make any secret about it? Did I not tell him frankly that I had at one time "wanted the land," but declined taking it, as I was mistaken as to the tract, and without hesitation withdrew my application and made out one for him, not for pay, or to favor a friend? Did I, for one moment, insinuate or intimate, that the land was entered previously? No. He does not say that I attempted to dispose of it at "private sale for a profit," nor does any one else pretend that there was such an attempt. The whole affair, by his own statement, took place after I had ceased to be register, and not the slightest fraud can be imputed to me in relation to it. The moment I gave him an application for it, and withdrew mine, the letter S represented his claim and not mine, to secure the land for him, if he had paid, as he was bound in honor to do, the money for it as soon as the office opened, and not for me or Dameron. He does not say that I ever put up any claim for said land in my individual capacity. To prove that I had no design to defraud the government, or to take any advantage of McKay or any one else, and that I had no individual interest in said land, it is only necessary to examine that part of McKay's testimony where he states that, "at the election in May, he (Gwin) told me I had better come and enter said land." If McKay did not, as soon as the office opened, come in good faith, and pay the money for the land, it was he that was defrauding government, and not me. It was through his default that the marks were retained on the map by the new register, and not mine. It was he that kept his application suspended in the hands of the receiver by not paying his money, and not me. The information that I voluntarily gave McKay, at the May election, is proof that I had not purchased an interest in the steam-mill, or had any knowledge of Pitman's putting in an application for this land; bnt it will appear by Pitman's testimony below, that at the time he first applied for the land, (which was after I left the office,) I had not purchased an interest in said mill. (See document 22, page 47.) "Some time in the early part of the year 1833, (perhaps in April, May, or June,) Samuel Gwin suggested to me, I could make some arrangement with Mr. Dameron, the receiver, for some piece of land that was near a saw-mill in which I was interested. I accordingly mentioned the subject to Mr. Dameron, and he agreed to pay for some two or three eighths of land for me." He further states, "Some time while Mr. Dameron's bad health prevented him from attending to the duties of his office in person, I was informed said land was not in fact entered." I had in this time purchased a share in said mill, and as Pitman represented to me that we must enter some land for timber, he states that "Mr. Sumrall gave me (him) the applications for the land, and I handed them in to the clerk of the receiver's office, and informed him Gwin had money in deposite to pay for the land. The application was laid aside until Mr. Dameron was present, to settle with Gwin; said land was marked sold after I took out the application. It is further proven by this witness, that he, Pitman, failed to pay for said land, and in his (Pitman's) presence the letter S was then scratched off by Mr. Sumrall, the register. Mr. McKay states that in November he examined, and the letter S was scratched off. About the last of August I left the county for Chocchuma, and did not return until the December following. This ought to satisfy the most credulous, that I had not the slightest agency in the contention that arose between Pitman and McKay. But Mr. Sumrall states (doc. 151, page 54) that "there are two or three eighths of land lying in sections 10 and 15, T. 5, R. 2, W., near which I suppose the said steam saw-mill is situate, about which John B. Pitman and Alexander McKay had some contention, a part of which has since been entered by John B. Pitman and Samuel Gwin in copartnership, and a part by Alexander McKay."

But none of this difficulty could have arisen if McKay had, in good faith and as he was in honor bound to do, paid for the land the moment Mr. Sumrall took his post. At that time there was no other applicant for the land, and he, and he alone, is guilty of an attempt to defraud. The information that I gave him in May, at the election, satisfied him of the error in his supposing that I would enter the land for him. Why did he not then pay for the land, or inform the register of his inability to do so, and have the maps corrected?

I will now call your attention to another part of this deposition, which will establish an attempt at subornation of perjury on the part of William S. Jones and Isaac Caldwell, or of the perjury of the witness. It will appear from McKay's deposition, (doc. 151, p. 39,) that he "examined the maps of said office with a view of entering W. half of S. W. quarter, section 10, T. 5, R. 2, W." In page 40 he states that "Samuel Gwin then gave or ordered to be given me an application for said land, (alluding to the above W. half S. W. quarter,) which was left with Mr. Dameron. Gwin then stated it could lie so one or two months, and that the land could then be saved for me. From my understanding of what he said, I thought he intended to pay for said land for me." Without any other allusion to any other promise, as made by me to save any other than the above W. half S.W. quarter, McKay, in the last two lines of his deposition on that page, (40,) states, "I examined the maps again, and found the letter "S" marked on these three eighths (two of which Samuel Gwin promised to save for me.") Again:

McKay admits that when he first applied to enter this W. half S. W. quarter, that it was "after Samuel Gwin had ceased being register of the Mount Salus land office, and before Mr. Sumrall took charge of the office," and yet he states a little further on, that "I told him (Gwin) I thought I could get the money of William S. Jones," to enter the said land. Now it is apparent from these two quotations, first, that the office was closed, and last, that he (McKay) was going to get the money of Jones to enter the land, at a time that he admits the office to be closed, and he could not enter it.

William S. Lindsey.—(Doc. 151, p. 41.)

BRIEF.—That on or about the 31st of December, 1832, he applied to Samuel Gwin, register of the land office at Mount Salus, to enter E. half N. E. quarter-section 20, and W. half N. W. quarter-section 21, T. 7, R. 2, E. He found both tracts marked with "S," and asked Gwin who had entered said land, and let him see the book; but Gwin stated that it was too much trouble, and would not examine the book. Some time in July, 1833, he understood said land was not entered, which Gwin had told him was; that J. Dunbar and D. Hunt entered the same, July 24, 1833.

REMARKS.—It cannot be expected that I can recollect all the conversations that may have taken place in the office while I had charge of it. When pressed with my official duties, I could not answer every idle inquiry that might be put to me, especially when such inquiry required me to consume much time in searching books, at the expense of other applicants who were waiting and pressing to be discharged.

I have an indistinct recollection of having some few words with a very troublesome little man named Lindsey, who wished me to examine where certain individuals had entered land, he not having any numbers of his own, but wanted me to examine the tract-book, so that he might ascertain the section, township, and range, they had entered in, when he would determine whether he would enter or not. It was not my duty to search over my books to find numbers for him to enter by. I asked him if he was then ready to enter any land; he informed me he was not, but would be soon. I have no recollection of his describing any land, in fact I know he did not, for he could not describe it without first knowing where some one had entered that he named, which information, from the press of business, I declined to give. If I had been at leisure, I might have gratified him, but at the expense of other applicants, who had their numbers ready, and were waiting, I would not detain them on his account. I never told him that the land above described was marked as sold, nor were they marked as such at that time, as will appear by Mr. Sumrall's answer to the 9th interrogatory, (doc. 151, page 54:) "I know nothing of said marks, except that I perceive by the books of the office that it was entered by J. Dunbar and D. Hunt, on the 24th July, 1833, at which time George C. Dameron attended to my office in my absence. By whose hand the marks were made I cannot tell." Mr. Sumrall knew my handwriting well, and a few days past I examined these letters, and I now say, without the fear of contradiction, that I never did make them. I am fully satisfied that they were made at the time the land was entered, and not before, as stated by Lindsey. I will here insert Mr. Sumrall's answer to the 7th question in his deposition, hereto appended, No. 1: "I have had numerous instances to occur in which the applicant was mistaken as to the description of the tract wanted, and when there is a press of business, persons frequently go away under the belief that the tract for which they came was entered, when in fact (from their incorrect description of it) it was vacant, and perhaps subsequently entered by another, in which case the register is uniformly blamed." Lindsey never made an entry in the office while I had charge of it, without first referring to other entries previously made. He never pretended to get the numbers from the comers, but entered by other entries. When at leisure, I would gratify him and search the books, but this accommodation he construed into a right to demand of me services not embraced within my duties, which I resisted at times, as above stated, and which accounts for his appearance before the public, with others, maliciously combined to ruin me.

Jacob Williams.—(Doc. 151, page 45.)

BRIEF.—That about the 1st August, 1832, he applied to Samuel Gwin to enter some land for him. Gwin said he would see Mr. Dameron; that they were together; they agreed to enter it. Williams wanted two eighths and two forty-acre tracts; wanted three months to pay it in, if he sold a negro, but if he did not sell wanted longer time; offered to give thirty dollars, and pay in three months. It was agreed to. Gwin drew writings, and agreed to take twenty-five dollars; drew two notes equal, making in all $325, interest not included, in separate notes—notes payable to Gwin and Dameron; memorandum on each note, that if Williams did not pay as agreed upon, it would be optional with them whether he got the land or not. Mr. Dameron agreed to take beef, and credit his note, which he got several times. Williams became suspicious that the land was not entered. Wm. S. Jones had plenty of money to lend. Williams informed Gwin and Dameron that he was going to lift one of the notes; informed them W. S. Jones was going to aid him. Gwin told Williams that he had paid him nothing; stated that he did not like to give up the land till he got some interest; asked $16, to be paid that day. Williams promised to pay the next day; came to the office the same day. Gwin was absent. Dameron knew nothing about the notes. Jones and Williams, when about leaving the office, were told by Dameron to come back in the morning, and he would search for the papers. They returned next morning. Dameron found the papers, and tore up certificates for land, and Jones entered one eighth in his own name, and Williams the forty-acre tract, and transferred it to Jones. Williams again returned to the office, and paid "them" the $16 interest. "Before my crop came in I handed them over twenty dollars." "Young Mr. Dameron paid me, not a great while since, the $20 I had paid his father." In December, 1833, the remaining land was still not entered, when Jones deposited the money on it; that this land was only marked as sold at that time.

REMARKS.—This is one of the few cases where George B. Dameron and myself did agree to enter lands for others, not as described in the above tale, but simply in the following manner:

Williams had importuned me at various times to enter the land on which he lived, and that he would pay me at some short time. He represented himself as being in a destitute situation, with a large and helpless family; that he had during the last war fought bravely for his country, and all that he wanted was a little time, and he would be able to pay for his home. He also stated that he had a neighbor that was attempting to drive him from the neighborhood and his home, and who was then trying to borrow the money to enter his place, and compel him to move away, and unless we did agree to secure his lands for him, he would be ruined. This appeal had been repeatedly made to Mr. Dameron and myself. I at last felt a deep interest in the old man's procuring his home, and named the subject to Mr. Dameron, to know whether he could or could not enter the land for him. Mr. Williams in a few days again called at the office, and made us an offer of some sum of money to enter the land for him, and wait a few months. We then informed him that we would do it, provided the land was good. We would not agree, under any circumstances, to enter the land until we were satisfied that it was of some value, in case he failed to pay us, which we expected. He was fully advised of this determination; and to give us time to ascertain the quality of the land, and be fully satisfied on the subject, we took his note, or notes, for a sum not now recollected, specifying in the body of the note the consideration for which it was given, and also conditioned that if, upon examination or information, the land was not as good as we expected, or as we could get in the country at the same price, then the note was null, and could not be collected of Williams. There was not the slightest mark put on the map indicating that this land was sold; but there was a pencil-mark placed on it, that I might know the land, should it be applied for by any one else; in which case I was confident that I could, by persuasive means, prevent its being entered. He was protected by the pre-emption law on the eighth on which he resided; but, as he represented, the most valuable land was on the other eighths. In the meantime, I took every means in my power to ascertain the quality of the land, so that we might make the entry. I soon ascertained that the land was considered of very inferior quality, and that Williams was entirely unable then, or as was believed, would be, at any future period, to pay for the land; that, instead of his selling a negro to pay for it, he had none to sell. And, in addition to this, we learned that he was a very troublesome man, and had scarcely a friend in his neighborhood. We then determined not to enter the land at all, and I sent him word by several persons to that effect. This soon brought him to Clinton, and I then informed him of at least my determination, and at the same time I handed him his note out of my own hand, and informed him that it was probable that Jones would let him have the money to enter part, and the pre-emption law would, to the 8th October, protect the eighth on which he lived. From that time to the present, I have never had or seen the note, nor has Williams at any time in his life paid me any money, nor has he ever "paid them" (making me one of the persons) any sum in his life, nor have I ever received any sum, through any other person as coming from him. He owed me nothing, and I have received nothing from him. If my memory serves me, he, in a few days, called at the office with William S. Jones, who entered an eighth, and Williams a forty-acre tract. At the time of this entry, I heard Williams and Mr. Dameron have a kind of settlement about beef, and, as I understood them, the amount that was due Williams for beef was paid on the forty-acre entry then made by Williams. Upon Jones and Williams closing the entry, the land for the first time was marked as sold on the maps. The tracts not entered then were not marked, nor do they now appear in my handwriting, as will be seen by Mr. Sumrall's answer to the 8th interrogatory, (doc. 151, page 54:) "The east half of southeast quarter, section 17, and the south half of east half, of southeast quarter, of section 21, T. 7, R. 3 W., were marked sold, I think, before I came into office; but how they came marked I know not. I believe the mark on the east half of southeast quarter of section 17, is in the handwriting of George B. Dameron."

This is a simple narration of all the circumstances connected with this case; in every act of mine in relation to it, there is not, there cannot be the slightest impropriety, or the least intention, or the remotest possibility, to defraud the government. If we had in fact agreed unconditionally to enter the land at one time, and then declined doing so, it was no more than our right, for it is admitted by all, that before Jones and Williams made the entry there were no marks on the maps indicating a sale; how the other tracts became marked off is more than I know. The one marked off by Mr. Dameron, I have no doubt was correctly done, or was through mistake for some other tract sold. It will be seen that the commissioners, in their heated, partisan, and malicious efforts to injure me, have warped this ignorant old man into an indirect contradiction of his own evidence, or perverted his language to suit their own vile purposes. He states that he paid "them the sixteen dollars interest;" in the former part of his evidence he states that I said "you have paid me nothing," &c. * * "you must pay me sixteen dollars to-day." Now, as this part of the evidence is entirely false, the deception is exposed a little farther on, where he states he paid "them the sixteen dollars interest," using the word "them" when as he states the money was coming to me. As before remarked, Williams never did pay me any money, and if I had the power to coerce his attendance to give evidence, I could and would prove the fact by himself; he cannot nor will not say that he ever paid me any money, or any one else for me; it is all a perversion of the truth or a wilful falsehood. Again, this deception is practised by the commissioners in another part of his evidence, where he states that he "handed them over twenty dollars," and he states in regard to it that "young Mr. Dameron paid me not a great while since the twenty dollars I paid his father." In one place he paid "them," (alluding to Mr. Dameron and myself,) and in the next he paid the "father" of young Dameron, all alluding to the same fact. I believe it is all a sheer fabrication of his paying Mr. Dameron any money; I never heard him speak of such payment; if he did, it was included in the payment made by Williams for the forty-acre tract purchased by him. It is an easy matter with certain men to bring charges against the dead; they are not here personally to meet the calumniator face to face; but these poisoned arrows fall harmless on the minds of all who knew Mr. Dameron, as will appear by the characters given the accused and the accusers by their neighbors, which is annexed to this defence.

Burrus Haley.—(Doc. 151, p. 45.)

BRIEF.—About the last of October or first of November, 1832, George B. Dameron and Samuel Gwin agreed to enter two eighths of land for him, and wait till 1st March, 1833, for the money; was to give them $10 for each eighth; gave his note for amount; register gave him the applications and he handed them to Mr. Dameron; applications were filed with the note for the land; refused to issue receipts; land was marked sold on the maps; wanted more land afterward; enclosed them a note for $330, due as above; not hearing about the last-named entries, he came to the office—found that all the eighths had not been marked sold; Gwin then marked the whole sold by putting letter S on each. On 28th February, 1833, called to pay the money; first applications could not be found; new ones taken out and receipts dated that day; inquired if land had been returned sold to government, and was informed by Gwin that it had not, because he was so far behind with his books that he had not come up to it.

REMARKS.—George B. Dameron and myself did agree to enter the lands described by the witness, with the following variation or omission on the part of the witness in his statement. Some time in November, 1832, Mr. Dameron received a letter from Burrus Haley, asking him to enter certain tracts of land for him therein described, (the number of tracts not now recollected,) and that he, Haley, would be down to the office in a short time and pay him for the land, and satisfy him for his trouble. I was not in the office at the moment this letter was received, and when I came in, it was handed to me to make out the applications, which I did, and enclosed them in the letter, and placed them on the receiver's table, for him to issue receipts upon at his leisure and convenience. Some short time after this, Mr. Haley called at the office, and, on examining the maps, found the land that he had applied for marked as sold. He inquired of me who had entered it, and I told him I could not tell, as my books were far behind. He then remarked that he had applied for this land by letter, and I then recollected the circumstance. It was late, and I in a few moments left the office for the evening, leaving Mr. Haley in the receiver's office. Things remained in this situation until another letter was received from him as described, enclosing his note for some amount, not now recollected, (as I never had the note in my hand to my recollection.) This letter was also placed in my hands to issue the other applications on. Not feeling satisfied on the subject, the letter was laid aside without issuing the applications. In a few days Haley came to the office, and after examining the maps, he found the land he desired was not entered for him, as he had expected, and asked me if I had seen his letter to Mr. Dameron; I replied that I had. He then informed me that he and Mr. Dameron had made an arrangement, and he was to enter it for him. I immediately spoke to Mr. Dameron upon the subject, and he remarked that he had concluded to enter the land for Haley. Upon this, I made out the applications, and marked the land on the maps. Soon after Haley left the office, Mr. Dameron informed me that he had agreed to enter the land for Haley. This must have been in the latter part of November or first of December. I told him that the entry had better be made in his name, as I could not, by the instructions, enter in mine. This was done as security, knowing that the land was valuable. The former receipts I think had been made out in Haley's name, and could not then be found conveniently, and it was deferred until he had more time to search for them. In a few days after this, I left the office on a visit, and did not return to it until about December 20. On my return the subject had entirely escaped my memory, and I was only reminded of it by the appearance of Mr. Haley to pay the money. During my absence, as Mr. Dameron afterward informed me, some person had made some inquiry about the land, which determined him again to search for the papers and make the entry, but he could find neither application, note, or letters, nor have they ever been found to my knowledge. Mr. Dameron did not recollect the land or the description of it, which, as he informed me, alone prevented him from entering the land while I was absent. It was this alone that prevented the land from being entered long before it was. I should here remark that, for some time previous to this, Mr. Dameron's health was rapidly declining, as will abundantly appear in the annexed depositions, (Nos. 2 and 3.) While I was absent the business had accumulated so fast in the office that it required all the force that we could employ to carry on the current business, and had frequently to lay by such business as could lie over, to attend to the pressing demands on the office. No doubt, had this not been the case, the subject would have occurred to us, and would as certainly have been disposed of. It was about the 20th December, (or within one or two days after my return,) that the affair of Cox took place, (which will hereafter be explained,) and from the very same causes was neglected, and has been the subject of much speculation and rejoicing among a certain set of men. Could you have seen everything connected with both of these transactions, I should not have written a line. It proves to me that the most innocent transaction of a man's life may be distorted so as to give it the appearance of guilt.

Robert Matthews.—(Doc. 151, page 49.)

BRIEF.—John Matthews applied to enter the east half of the southwest quarter, section 36, township 6, range 2 west; states that Samuel Gwin, register, refused, and would not let him enter it, but offered to bid for it, which he refused, as he only had money to pay for the eighth. Robert Matthews then came to the office and proposed to enter it; Gwin urged him to bid for the land; Matthews stated that the land lay adjoining his, and within two or three hundred yards of where he was building. Gwin still refused; at length Gwin proposed to divide the eighth, and each take a half, which was agreed to, provided Gwin would let him have the half adjoining his former entry; but Gwin refused, and he was compelled to take the other half. Understood afterward it was not entered at that time, but only the word Gwin written across it, but was entered on 10th August, 1833.

REMARKS.—As far as Mr. Matthews has gone, his statement is, in the main, correct; but a further development of the transaction will show it to be fair and blameless.

I purchased of Mr. L. Wilkinson the west half of the northeast quarter, and the east half of the northwest quarter, of section 36, township 6, range 2 west, and had given him what was then considered a high price for the land. The Matthewses had entered previously the southeast quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter of said section; and the only way that I had left to extend my settlement, was by entering this land. Every other adjoining tract was entered. I was prevented, by the instructions from the General Land Office, from entering it in my own name, unless through the surveyor general, whose office was at Washington, one hundred miles distant. This eighth was highly necessary, with the land I had purchased, to make a family residence. The surveyor general, whose family resided in Clinton, was expected at that place, when I intended to enter the land. But before the surveyor general came to Clinton, Mr. Matthews applied to enter the land. I informed him that I had been waiting for Mr. Fitz to come up to Clinton, when I intended to enter this land; that it was the only vacant land that lay adjoining mine, and that I could not do without it. I showed him where he might extend his settlement without taking this, when both could have been served. He kept grumbling about it; that it lay adjoining his, and that he thought he ought to have it. I then told him that it lay adjoining mine, and the only vacant land that did, and that he should not have it without bidding for it, as required by the instructions, and told him that I would give $1 25, and asked him if he would give more; which he declined. As I thought then that he was a worthy man, and as I did not wish to incommode him in the least in his future views, I proposed, for good neighborhood, that we should divide the eighth, although it would, and has, seriously injured my settlement. He agreed to it; but strange to tell, he wished me to take the end that had no connection with my land, and he take the one adjoining me. I replied that I would as soon not have any as to have it detached from my other land. He seemed convinced of the unreasonableness of his request, and agreed to take the other end. All this happened, as I thought, in friendship, without the least heart-burning. As far as I could discover, he was perfectly satisfied at the compromise, and I heard nothing more about it until William S. Jones, Isaac Caldwell, and others, confederated to distort and misrepresent my transactions, with the view of gratifying their own malicious feelings, and subserving the malignant and party purposes of others behind the screen. When we agreed to divide it, I was not bound then to enter it. We had agreed on a certain line between us, beyond which neither was to go. Matthews knew very well that Mr. Fitz, the surveyor general, was the person through whom I was to enter, and he knew very well that he was then at Washington, and that I could not immediately enter the land. In honor he could not at any time after the compromise enter it. The land lay in this situation until after 4th March, 1833. The surveyor general did not visit his family at Clinton, from the above period until after I went out of office, when it was not necessary for me to enter it through him. I then took out an application, and took the oath necessary to enter a forty-acre tract, and handed them to the receiver to issue a receipt upon as soon as the new register should arrive. At the time I took out the application, and took the oath, I marked my name across the tract, first in pencil, and then in red ink. My application for this land, and several others, were laid aside for the above reason. When Mr. Sumrall came in there was such a press on the office by persons from a distance, that all that could wait were required to do so. The receiver's health was very bad; and with all the force he was able to employ (without committing errors) was not sufficient to keep up the current business. Not dreaming that Matthews was anything else but satisfied, or that any one else could or would be injured, and as I was not pressing, I did not take out the receipts until just before I left Clinton and Chocchuma, and then I had to transact my business with Mr. Dameron, at his own house, as he was unable to go to the office from weakness.

If there is anything wrong, improper, or illegal, in this whole transaction, those who discover it must have keener optics than mine; I had as much right to this land as Matthews had, or any one else; my refusing to let him have it without bidding for it was in strict conformity with the law, and this, of course, the committee cannot object to; I violated no trust, deceived no one, and as reckless as my persecutors are, they dare not say that I have attempted to sell it for a "bonus;" Matthews in honor could not enter it, and no one else would have it. This whole farce is the spurious offspring of a few desperate men, who are ever ready, and have, in fact, stopped at nothing to consummate their black designs.

In this, as well as in nearly every other of the depositions taken by the Senate's commissioners, their personal hatred and heated partisan zeal have had a tendency to make them blind to their duty; to distort and misrepresent truth, and in their wanton course to prostrate justice and character. Matthews, in his deposition, is made to say, in regard to dividing the eighth, that he would agree to give "if he (Gwin) would let me have the half joining my former entry, which he refused, but told me I could take the other half;" meaning, of course, the half that did not join his entry. For the entire falsity of this statement I will refer you to deposition No. 1, and the last answer in it. From the diagram laid down by the register at the office, it will appear that this half that Matthews represents under oath as not joining his former entry, does in fact, join both his former entries on the east and on the west.

Joseph D. Peebles.—(Doc. 151, p. 46.)

BRIEF.—Knows that five eighths of land on Mississippi river were marked as sold on the register's maps, when they were not; that Samuel Gwin marked said land off under circumstances that he knew it was not sold, they being entered for his (Peebles's) use, but were subsequently entered by William M. Gwin in the name of Harry Hill; thinks the land was entered in March, 1833; thinks Samuel Gwin was partial to his brother; Peebles applied to Dameron to borrow the money to pay for this land; Dameron at first agreed to lend the money, but afterward declined, and told him to take out applications and deposite them in his strong box; went to New Orleans, and when he returned Dameron told him William M. Gwin had entered the land; also, told him William M. Gwin had applications out for thirty-odd eighths, but that he had $4,500 on deposite to pay for it; Peebles deposited $1,200; and shortly afterward applied to S. Gwin for twenty lots, which his brother had taken out applications for, which were marked sold but not paid for; Peebles at length made Samuel Gwin give him the applications; same occurred to other lands; Samuel Gwin at last "told me (P.) if I would not enter these lands he would burn the receipts for the five lots," which he (P.) agreed to take the three lower lots; Gwin then took out the receipts for these and burned them, and P. entered the land.

REMARKS.—It is with much difficulty that I can restrain my feeling in replying to this witness, and keep within the bounds of that decorum that is due you. Words are used to convey ideas, and if I were to use suitable words to convey my ideas on this case, they would be probably, and perhaps properly, objected to by you. As disagreeable as it is to come in contact with a being so infamous, so corrupt, and so depraved as I know Joseph D. Peebles to be, yet it is my duty to you, to myself, and to the public, to expose his base acts. This, to me, is the more disagreeable from the fact that he has an amiable family and respectable connections. The fault lies not at my door.

This man was well aware that I knew how disgracefully he had acted in regard to this matter, therefore, he flings himself into the arms of Jones and Caldwell to prevent the exposure of his conduct. From the annexed testimony of men of the highest character for veracity and honor, it will be seen that he himself falsely marked this land on the maps. He knows very well that he and myself had a quarrel about it, and but for delicate and restraining circumstances I should have prosecuted him for forgery in falsely marking the official maps. I will give a brief history of the whole transaction.

Peebles and William M. Gwin had been examining land on the river, and each had purchased out some settlers on it, and contemplated the extension of their settlements. In my presence, and to prevent future difficulties between themselves, they mutually fixed a certain section line as the boundary of their future purchases, beyond which neither party was to go. In December, 1832, Peebles again visited the country, and, on his return, he, in a joking way, asked me if I could not mark off some lands for him, and let it remain so until he could get the returns for his cotton from below. Whether serious or not, he soon found my feelings on a proposition of such a nature, and he turned it off as a joke. He did not name the lands he wished me thus to mark. He lived in my house, in the yard of which the office stood, and had been in the habit of having free access to it at all times, and permitted to examine the maps for hours, without the least suspicion on my part. Some time after his visit to the river, I discovered several marks on the maps, indicating sales that I had no knowledge of, and the letter S was in a strange handwriting. I called on Mr. Dameron to know if he had made them, and, upon examination, told me that he had not. Peebles, learning that I was making inquiry as to these marks, came into the office one evening when I was alone, and began to speak about it. He informed me that he had himself made these marks. I became highly incensed at such conduct, and threatened to have him prosecuted. He appeared very sorry at what he had done, and protested that he meant nothing improper in so doing; that he had discovered some men in town, and perhaps in the office, some time before, who, he believed, intended to enter this land—to prevent which, and give him time to procure funds, he did mark it as sold, intending to apprize me of the fact, and would have done so sooner, but that he had been at his plantation for some time. He then went into the receiver's office, and, after some conversation, returned again to my room, and again apologized for what he had done, and informed me that he had gotten the money of Mr. Dameron to enter the land. I informed him that he could not enter it; that I should report the case to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for his action. He then retired to his dwelling-house, and, after remaining there some time, again returned to the office, still expressing great sorrow at any difficulty that might arise between us on this subject, and declaring that he had marked the land as sold himself. After reflecting on the subject some time, and reviewing my domestic situation, I concluded to drop the subject. I then inquired of Mr. Dameron if he was going to advance the money for Peebles, and I understood him to say that he was. In making the applications, I discovered that Peebles was violating his original agreement with Dr. Gwin, and asked him if he was not. He replied that the doctor had consented for him to enter the land he was then applying for on his side of the line, and upon this I gave him the applications. Dr. Gwin was not at that time in the country, and Peebles left immediately for New Orleans. The doctor soon returned, and inquired who had entered the land, (pointing out the land Peebles had, as I thought, entered, on his side of the line,) and, upon my informing him who had, he became very much excited, and abused Peebles for violating their contract. Mr. Dameron, hearing the conversation, came into my office, and informed Dr. Gwin that he had not in fact loaned him the money, and that the land was then subject to entry; that he would not loan Peebles the money under these circumstances. Upon this, Dr. Gwin demanded applications on the same land. I remonstrated with him, knowing that it would create a suspicion of my being partial to my brother; but he persisted, and I gave him the applications, and he paid the money on them, and took out receipts for the same.

On Peebles's return, Mr. Dameron informed him of what had happened, and, without saying anything on the subject, he went off and got drunk, and in the course of the evening returned to my office and began to cry, alleging that the loss of this land would ruin him—that he had looked upon my brother as his best friend—that he was his family physician, and that he would and had trusted his life, and the life of his family, in his hands. After whining for some time, I told him that I had done all that I could to prevent the entry; and I also told him to go to bed and get sober. Dr. Gwin was then absent, and did not expect to return for some time, and an appeal to him could not be made. It was in my presence that this line was fixed upon as the boundary, and Peebles, in bad faith, as is the nature of the man, had first violated this agreement by taking two eighths that he should not, and when Dr. Gwin found the treachery of Peebles, he felt himself absolved from it, and took three that lay on Peebles's side of the line. Peebles came into the office next morning, and took out some eight or ten applications for lands that lay adjoining his, but not, as he falsely swears, for lands that Dr. Gwin had previously entered. After he had taken out his receipts, he again stepped into my room, and asked me if I could assist him in arranging the difficulty with my brother. He acknowledged that he had done wrong, and that the land that he had applied for on Dr. Gwin's side of the line, he intended to have let him have at what it cost him, and begged me to assist him in getting the three eighths that lay on his own side. After reflecting on the subject, I went and consulted with Mr. Dameron, and stated my awkward situation, and the liability I was in of being charged with partiality. Mr. Dameron concurred with me, that, situated as our families were, I might, with safety, confine the parties to their original agreement, and that Dr. Gwin could not, under all the circumstances, object to such a course. I did this from the purest motives, for the harmony of the two families, and believed that I could convince Dr. Gwin that it was an act of justice, and in accordance with their original compact.

Every word of Peebles's statement of his applying for lands then entered by Hill and my brother, is false, and destitute of even the shadow of truth. According to his own evidence, the land was in fact and in truth entered; for he states that Mr. Dameron informed him that Dr. Gwin had "thirty-odd" applications in his hands, and he also had "forty-five hundred dollars on deposit, in his strong box, to pay for it." The reasons why receipts had not in fact issued, are fully given in Mr. Pratt's 8th, 9th, and 10th answers to interrogatories, hereto annexed, (No. 3.) I look upon his remark that he "made" me give him the applications, more in mirth than anger. Joseph D. Peebles make me do a thing that I did not wish!!!—a man that carries the scars on his own person, of his cowardly degradation, in a conflict about some of his other swindling land transactions—a man that stood and took his chastisement without making the slightest resistance; for such a man to say, and that on oath, that he "made" me! He knew it was much easier to swear this than to attempt to enforce it. Instead of menacing, he was in the crying humor.

I will, in conclusion, here extract several answers to interrogatories propounded to some of his neighbors, who know him equally as well as the convenient character-certifiers, Isaac Caldwell, Wm. S. Jones, H. G. Johnson, and J. B. Morgan.

James McLaran states, "I do believe that when J. D. Peebles is intoxicated that he is very desperate and abusive, much more so than common men, and that in that state of derangement he can be, on the slightest causes, excited to almost phrensy; and, at the time, reckless of consequences, of which when sober he would have no recollection, nor retain a single participant feeling of." It has been suggested that Jones and Caldwell watched their opportunity, and caught him when intoxicated, to take his deposition. Of this I know nothing; I am informed that he is almost continually in this state when from home, and that it would be a hard matter to find him sober.

That he falsely marked the maps in the above case, will appear apparent from his own confession. Mr. Sumrall, the present register, states that "Joseph D. Peebles did tell me that he (Peebles) marked the maps falsely, while S. Gwin was register, but whether or not it was by Gwin's consent, I do not recollect." John J. McCaughan states, "I have heard that Joseph D. Peebles did mark maps in said office, and has since boasted of it in his drunken mood." Seneca Pratt states, "I did hear Joseph D. Peebles say that he had marked on the maps of the office lands as sold that were not, without the knowledge of the register, but recollect no particulars, except that he wanted the land and had not the money, at that time, to pay for it."

Rufus K. Powr.—(Doc. 151, p. 46.)

BRIEF.—Applied to Dameron to enter him two forty-acre tracts; Dameron agreed to enter them for $140, payable in six months; took out applications and handed them to Dameron. Gwin, he thinks, wrote the note, payable to Gwin and Dameron. Shortly after note fell due, paid $100 of it, and "told Dameron I would pay him the balance in a few weeks;" never saw Dameron afterward; understood land was only marked as entered when Dickson came into office; he then entered it.

REMARKS.—I am not able to say anything on this case, as I never, to my knowledge, saw Powr in my life, and have not the remotest recollection of any of his statements.

The following answer of Mr. Sumrall to the 6th interrogatory (doc. 151, p. 54) may fling some light on the subject: "The E. half of S. E. quarter and W. half of N. E. quarter, section 12, T. 7, R. 3 W., was marked on the map as sold, when I took charge of said office. The reason why I permitted said land to be entered without waiting to have instructions from the General Land Office is, that G. B. Dameron indicated to me that he had marked it for R. B. Powr, who he expected would enter it, and the said mark on the map does appear to be in the handwriting of G. B. Dameron." Again, David Slay, in 18th and 27th answers, (doc. 151, p. 79,) states, "Geo. B. Dameron, late receiver at Clinton, or Mount Salus, refused to permit me to enter a piece of land, and pointed out a few small dots or spots, made apparently by a pen, and which Mr. Dameron admitted he had made; and further, that said land was not entered at that time, but was entered some few months afterward by a neighbor of mine." "Very shortly after the passage of an act of Congress authorizing individuals to enter tracts of land in forty-acre tracts, I applied for the entry of N. half of W. half of N. E. quarter, section 12, T. 7, R. 3 W.; and Geo B. Dameron, the then receiver of public moneys at Mount Salus (and at whose office the entry was to be made), peremptorily refused to allow me to do so, and said land was afterward entered as stated in the above answer. Further, Mr. Gwin, the register of said office, insisted on giving me an application for said land, and in the presence of Mr. Dameron; but Mr. Dameron still persisting in not letting me enter it, I did not take out an application." Powr states that he "applied to Mr. Dameron to enter me two forty-acre tracts, to wit: N. half of E. half of S. E. quarter, section 12, and S. half of W. half of N. E. quarter of same section, T. 7, R. 3 W." Mr. Slay states that he "applied for the entry of the S. half of W. half of N. E. quarter, section 12, T. 7, R. 3 W., and Geo. B. Dameron peremptorily refused to allow me to do so." Powr states that when he afterward entered both eighths, they were "twice marked on each with the letter S." Mr. Slay states that Mr. Dameron "pointed out a few small dots or spots" as the only marks on said land. This was while I had charge of the office, and, as appears from Mr. Slay's evidence, these "dots or spots" were not considered by me as indications of the sale of the land, for I offered and insisted on Mr. Slay's taking it. Now, if Powr applied to enter only two forty-acre pieces, how came the two eighths marked off? One thing appears plain, that the land was not marked off as sold when I had charge of the office, for Mr. Slay states that it was entered a few months after he applied, and Mr. Sumrall states it was in fact entered on 22d November, 1833, and I left the office on 4th March, 1833, more than eight months before. I will not say that Powr did himself mark this land as sold on the map, for I am informed that he is so ignorant that he would not have sense enough to do such an act; but I do say that I firmly believe that some one of those men (Jones, Caldwell, and others) who have been so active in this matter, did so mark the map. They found him ignorant and liable to be imposed on, and could be used to answer their purposes. The discrepancies between his evidence and Mr. Sumrall's and Slay's may not be the result of corrupt intention on his part, but is the cunning design, the wicked artifice of such men as Jones and Caldwell, and a few others. I would call your attention to another fact in this deposition, that goes to prove that this ignorant witness has been tampered with by the above men. He states that in September, 1832, he applied to Mr. Dameron to enter this land, and gave his note for the money, due in six months; that a few days after this note fell due, he paid $100 of it; that he thought the land was entered until Mr. Sumrall came into office; that when S. W. Dickson took charge of the receiver's office, he again applied for the two eighths. Taking the middle of September, 1832, as the probable time the note was given, it fell due on 15th March, 1833, a few days after which time he paid, as he alleges, the $100; that he then thought the land was entered, until after Mr. Sumrall took charge of the office, who informed him that it was not. Now, Mr. Sumrall commenced business, I think, about the middle of April, 1833, and Mr. Dameron died the last of September. Powr was informed by the register, soon after he came into office, that it was vacant, and yet he did not inquire into it, or what had become of his $100, or apply to enter the land, until after Dickson was receiver, in November of that year. This shows a wanton indifference to his interest, that no man would be guilty of, if he was in his right mind, or it shows that his evidence does not detail the facts, the whole facts of the case. That he should be advised of these things for six months, while Mr. Dameron was living and in the same county, and never inquire into them, or say a word about them, until after he was dead, will be, to the inquirer after truth, a matter of astonishment and doubt. As before remarked, I know nothing of the case from personal recollection or knowledge; and, as I published to the world, in December, 1833, as far as I was concerned, the whole statement of Powr to be false, and, I now repeat, it is false.

Avery Nolen.—(Doc. 151, p. 37.)

BRIEF.—Some time in November or December, 1832, he applied to Mr. Dameron to enter him some land; Dameron could not decide until he saw Gwin; they conversed together; Dameron asked Gwin the amount, was informed that land came to $150, and interest on it, in all, to $225. Gwin told Nolen, "You can pay it on 1st March;" complained of interest; interest was to be curtailed, if sooner paid. Dameron wrote note; applications were folded with note. Short time before Gwin left here, Nolen called upon him "about the land scrape;" Gwin appeared obstinate, and seemed not to know him; was informed that Dameron wanted to close his business. Nolen replied as quick as possible; soon after found land was not entered.

REMARKS.—This, like the last, I have not the slightest recollection of. I never saw Nolen, to my knowledge, in my life; and I am sure that this tale, when first heard of by me, was entirely new in all its details. I had published, in the State-Rights Banner, of Jackson, a notice in December, 1833, that the whole statement was false; that I never saw the man to my knowledge, nor did I ever see or hold a note of his in my life.

To show you how these contemptible men, Jones and Caldwell, have managed to deceive the public, I will here quote the answer of Mr. McLaren to the 20th question, hereto appended, (No. 2:) "A few days after the offensive publication alluded to appeared, I did have a conversation with A. Nolen and his brother John, on the subject, when he denied having any hand in wording, or in any manner authorizing the offensive part alluded to, but stated it was not mentioned while he was with Jones, and that it was made up and added after he left Jones' office, without his knowledge or approbation, and that could he have written it would not have occurred."

I will leave you, and all honorable men, to judge of a man so hardened in iniquity, so callous to moral principle, as to impose upon an ignorant man, unable to write, or to read writing; draw up a statement for him to sign, replete with falsehood, change it after he left his shaving-shop, and palm it off on the public, and on the Senate of the United States, as the free act of this subservient man. This case gives you a glimpse of the means adopted to ruin me, by men proceeding ex parte, under a commission of the United States Senate. The same changes in matter might have been made in other of the numerous false depositions that have been scattered to the four winds of heaven, for purposes too plain to be misunderstood, which all honorable men must deprecate, but which none but its victims can feel.

Ramsey M. Cox.—(Doc. 151, p. 49.)

BRIEF.—Was informed by a gentleman that Dameron and Gwin owned some valuable land near Mr. Harper, and that they had requested him, Harper, to sell it for them. Cox examined the land, and came on to purchase it; asked them if they owned southeast quarter, section 27, and northeast quarter 34, township 10, range 4, east; this was about 15th December, 1832; they told him that they owned the land; asked $700 for it, $150 down, the balance, one half in three, and the remainder in six months. Cox agreed to it, paid them $150 down, took no notes, but gave their joint bonds, signed by both, for a title, with the condition when last payment was made. Cox then told them he wanted to enter a forty-acre tract adjoining, made his affidavit, and asked for his certificate; was informed that it made no difference, and included it in the bond. Cox then paid "them in cash 50 dollars," the government price of said half-eighth. "I (Cox) did not examine the maps, and did not know whether said half-section above described was marked sold upon the maps of the office or not." Cox did not meet the first payment, and when the last was about due sent his note, with endorsers, to be discounted in bank, and received a receipt, signed George C. Dameron. Saw Samuel Gwin, some time afterward, on his way to Chocchuma, who informed him the note was not discounted, and also that George C. Dameron attended to his father's business, with whom he could arrange it. Cox saw George C. Dameron 20th February, 1834, and informed him that he was ready to pay for the land. He (Cox) was then informed that Gwin and Dameron had not, themselves, entered the land, but that he (George C.) had, and was ready to make title, if he, Cox, was ready to pay the money, but that he would have nothing to do with the forty-acre tract; they then examined, and Dameron told him that Thomas Griffin had entered the forty-acre tract. George C. Dameron then deducted $50, and Cox paid the balance. States that the forty-acre tract, represented by George C. Dameron as being entered by Griffin, was only marked sold, and Griffin only deposited the money on it in April, 1834. States that said land did not belong to Dameron and Gwin, when they sold it to him, for George C. Dameron entered said land on the 11th September, 1833.

REMARKS.—The history of this case is, during the year 1832, a Mr. Warren, of Madison county, had received some acts of kindness from me, for which he felt disposed to give me information of good land in his section of the country, which was then but thinly settled, and but little known. It was a hard day's ride for him to reach the office in one day; and, to enable him to return the next, he usually had to do his business after night, so as to be able to start early the next day. As it was my invariable rule never to detain, unnecessarily, any person on expenses when I could, either in the day time or at night, despatch him, I had frequently in this way relieved Mr. Warren from detention. With these feelings Mr. Warren informed me that he knew of a half-section of good land that I could enter, if I wished. Upon examining the maps, he was not satisfied of the situation of the land, as it appeared on the maps, as there was, at that time, no entries within several miles of it. He remarked that he believed two certain quarters, pointed out by him, was the body of land alluded to by him; and he further remarked, that on his return home he would more particularly examine corners, and let me know. He would not, with his limited knowledge of the corners, advise me then to enter it, and that I might know it thereafter, I made a slight pencil mark on the quarters. I did this that I might, from other persons, learn something more of the quality of the land, as well as the corners. Mr. Warren informed me that if these were the correct numbers of the land he had examined, he could sell it, on a credit, at a fine profit for me. I assured him that I would have it entered as soon as he was fully satisfied as to the corners, and that he might so state to any person wishing to purchase; but, that I would not till I first heard from him, as it was very difficult to have an entry changed after it was made, through the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Warren shortly afterward returned to the office and informed me that the numbers first given were correct; that he had informed several persons that it was a good tract of land, and had been or would be entered by me, and that he would sell it for me on a credit. Before he left the office, and I think in his presence, I remarked to Mr. Dameron, that, if he wished, we could enter it in partnership. After learning all the particulars as detailed by Mr. Warren, he was apprehensive that the quality was not as good as represented, and he wished further time to inquire as to it. It rested in this situation until some time about the last of November, when Mr. Warren was again at the office, and inquired of me if such a person had called to buy my land. I informed him they had not, nor had I yet entered it; that Mr. Dameron felt a little apprehension on the subject, but that if he was still unwilling to go in with me, that I would enter it myself, in the name of some other friend, and, if I mistake not, told Warren that I would enter it in his name, if the other was still unwilling, explaining to him that I could not enter it in my own without going to the surveyor general. In the presence of Warren I made out the two applications in the name of Mr. Dameron, with a little memorandum for Mr. Dameron to sign, stating that I had paid for half of the land, and that I was equally interested with him in it. I also drew a due-bill for half of the entrance money, and handed the whole to Mr. Dameron, and told him if he was willing to go in, he then might, if not, I would enter it myself. He remarked to Mr. Warren, "There is no mistake in the matter?" and was informed there was not, and he then said, "I will go in with you," signed the memorandum, and folded the due-bill and applications up and laid them by. I would here remark that I kept no account with the receiver, each quarter showing the amount of salary and commissions due me, which I left in his charge, and when I wanted money I gave him my due-bill, which, in fact, only showed that I had received that much of what was due me from him. In one or two days after this I left the office on a visit, and did not return until about 20th December, and, I think, the very next day after my return Cox applied to purchase the land. He offered $700—pay down $200 of it. We asked $800. At the time Cox was there the office was greatly crowded, and I had but little, in fact no time, from my official duties, to consult with Mr. Dameron on the subject, and I referred Cox to him entirely, and I would be willing to anything they might do. Mr. Dameron agreed to take the $700, two hundred of which was to be paid down, and the balance at some future time. He drew up an instrument, which I signed, binding us, as I was informed, to make a title when the last payment was made. I would here remark, that at no previous period, since my connection with the office, had there been, by one third, the business done in the office in any one month as in December, 1832. It will appear from the returns to the General Land Office that there were 772 entries made in that month, averaging nearly thirty a day. I had been absent from the office for better than half the month, and on my return found the receiver's health rapidly declining, my own business greatly behind and in much confusion, and the press increasing, as will appear by the monthly returns for January, February, and up to the 4th March, 1833.

After the sale to Cox I neither heard nor thought of the subject, in consequence of the press above detailed, and believed that the land was entered until after I left the office. For the want of blanks, our monthly returns had not been made for several months past, and as I could employ no competent clerk, and in consequence of my own absence, none of my books were up, nor had I time even to look over the applications on hand.

Some short time after the 4th of March, 1833, and while the receiver was so very low that he was barely able to get to the office, he asked me to aid him in arranging a mass of papers that had been flung loosely into his money-chest. Among them we found this application, with my due-bill, which he had entirely overlooked in the hurry of business. I remarked to him, with surprise, that I feared this omission would put us to much trouble, and proposed even then to close the entry and place it to the returns of March, which we had not yet made out. He made some objection, and remarked that the office would be closed but for a short time, when he would issue a receipt for the land. It was then laid aside in his money-drawer, so that it would attract his attention every time he opened it; but as the office was closed much longer than either of us had anticipated, and as I was generally absent during this time, and the great press on the officers when it did open, which completely prostrated the receiver, so that he was compelled to remain most of the time in his room, the case was lost sight of on the opening of the office.

That you may have a full view of all the circumstances that have led to the accidental omission on the part of the receiver in this case, and also in the case of B. Haley, already explained in part, I will here extract several of the answers of witnesses on this point. Mr. Pratt, in his answer to the sixth interrogatory, states that, "during the latter part of the year 1832, his (Dameron's) health was delicate, and during this time he was often confined for days; I do not recollect whether he was for weeks; but I do know that he was many times in the office when he should have been in his bed, and that from this time he continued to decline until his death; and I have no doubt that his confinement to the office, and his exertions to perform the duties of said office, were the cause of his death." Again he states, "I have often known him leave the office in debility and depression from fatigue in attending to the duties of the office so that he would not be able to return to the office for several days." Again, "I should at no time feel myself authorized to take up any unfinished business of his (Dameron's) unless by his particular direction or knowing all the circumstances attending it, and the person for whom the business was to be transacted was present." To an inquiry whether it had not to his knowledge occurred, that where applicants were not pressing for their receipts, that he (Dameron) would receive the money, fold it up with the application, and lay it by, until the press was so great, he answers, "Often has it happened that letters were sent to the receiver containing money to enter land. If, in such cases, there was much business doing in the office, the letters were opened, the application made out, the land, as I believe, marked as sold. The application then, with the letter and money, was placed in the strong box, and have many times remained there for days or weeks, owing to the indisposition of Mr. Dameron. And I believe it has often happened that persons have deposited money on lands, and have not at the time required the receipts, for the purpose of indulging Mr. Dameron on account of his ill health." To an inquiry to the same witness, whether from his feebleness after these attacks, on his return to the office, he would not and did not forget the papers thus laid aside for weeks or months, until the subject was called to mind by the applicant, or upon finding the papers in his money-box, he answers, that "I am well aware of the truth of the specifications as contained in this question to be true, and have, I believe, often called the attention of Mr. Dameron to these papers. I did not consider myself authorized to act on them without his particular instructions."

Mr. Pratt, who is a highly respectable and worthy gentleman, and a merchant in Clinton, was a member of Mr. Dameron's family, and was, during a part of the time, acting as his clerk in the office, (up to December, 1832, and occasionally afterward,) and his evidence on this point is conclusive as to the want of criminality, in this accidental omission. No man who knew Mr. Dameron would, for one moment, indulge such a belief, and the chairman of the committee on lands in the Senate knew the falsity of the declaration when it was made. In addition to the above, I will here insert the answers of James McLaran to the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth interrogatories (No. 2) on the same subject. "I do know that Mr. Dameron was for a long time sick and confined to his house, and much of his time at the office, when it was evident to all he was in a serious decline, of which he finally died on his way to the seashore in hopes of bettering his health; and also believe that it was attributable to his constant confinement to his duties in the office, that fastened on him the decline that terminated his existence; for he came to our country apparently healthy." He further states, "I have known him leave the office of an evening with little or no complaint, and be confined for a considerable time, perhaps weeks, without returning, owing to sickness." Again, "when Mr. Dameron left business unfinished of any consequence, it was not customary for any one of the assistants to undertake to finish the business so left. This has occurred frequently with myself, when I had to wait his return." Again, "I have frequently known of several applications, and of money being folded up and put by for the time, owing to the extreme press of business in the office, and frequently owing to Mr. Dameron's bad health, which he would promise to return and complete at another time." I would particularly call your attention to Mr. McLaran's ninth answer, as showing more conclusively than any other, of the state of Mr. Dameron's mind while thus weighed down with disease: "I do believe that it did occur that unfinished business lay sometimes overlooked by him on his return to the office after attacks of illness; and that after his death there were found papers and money in his office that, no doubt, had been by him, from debility, overlooked, and that unless it was a plain, simple case, his assistants would not have undertaken the management of business so left; and in one instance, while I was at Columbus, Mississippi, money was sent back to his executors by me, after his death, where the parties had got eighty instead of forty acres, paying only for forty. This occurred with two gentlemen living near Columbus, who sent the money and papers to Mr. Dameron, and after some time got more land than they wanted, but afterward was satisfied, and paid the money over to Major William Dowsing, who sent it by me. And these two cases, no doubt, were of those pressed out of place by debility or business, until memory failed Mr. Dameron in the matter."

After Mr. Sumrall was appointed register, but before he took charge of the office, or visited Clinton, or we had received any news from him when he would be on, I expected to be absent from the county for some time. In a conversation with Mr. Dameron, I told him that I believed that I would give him all the profits in the Cox case, as I was going away and was not certain that I would return before the office opened. This was the only case in which we ever were interested in any land, and the only one that I had expected to be interested in, or receive any pecuniary consideration for; and as I was then appointed to another office, I wished to leave no business unclosed at the Mount Salus land office. He then hunted up my due-bill, handed it to me, and remarked that, as I had been so liberal to him, he would not be outdone, and gave it to his son George, and I made out new applications in his name and handed them to him. From that moment to the present I have not had one particle of interest, either directly or indirectly, in the claim; and when Cox named the subject to me near Livingston, I then told him that I had no interest in it, and that Mr. Dameron had given his interest to his son, who would make him a title when he paid the money. The last time I ever was with Mr. Dameron at his own house, and when he was able to sit up but for a few moments, he asked me to assist his son to arrange some old papers preparatory to his leaving the country for the seashore, and in the examination we found these applications yet unattended to; and his mind was so enfeebled by disease, that he had forgotten all about it, until I explained the circumstances, and urged him immediately to close the entry by all means, and he then directed his son to make out the receipts without delay, which he did, either that day or within a few days thereafter, as I understood.

Cox did not apply to enter a forty-acre tract, nor was it named in my presence then nor at any other time, to my recollection, nor did I ever hear of such an entry or application until a few months past, when it was communicated to me by the Secretary of the Treasury. I never bound myself to enter it for him, or agreed to do it, or had any knowledge of his wanting it; nor was any part of the $200 paid for the land we sold, Cox paid us for the purpose of entering the forty-acre tract. All this stuff is an afterthought of Cox, and originated with him or the commissioners, without the shadow of truth to sustain it.

This is an unvarnished statement of the circumstances in this case, as they occurred. Is the chairman of the Senate's committee borne out by this deposition in his broad and bold charges of fraud? I am satisfied that every impartial man will say he is not. If error was committed, it did not carry on its face design or intention, but was one of those accidental errors that all mankind are liable to, especially when enfeebled by disease, to which may be attributed most, if not all, the imaginary irregularities that are blazoned forth to the public. The land never was marked as sold until I had paid my half of the entrance money, and that it was not at that instant entered, is fully explained in the preceding pages and depositions.

Herren Walker.—(Doc. 22, p. 35.)

BRIEF.—States that he, sometime early in the year 1833, applied to enter an eighth of land, but told Samuel Gwin that he had not the money. Gwin told him if he would agree to take a partner in the entry of said land he could get it. Gwin told him he would enter it in their joint names; that, on the 10th of June, 1834, he examined, and finds Gwin did not enter said land, but it was entered in the the name of a Mr. Greer.

REMARKS.—I might have jestingly made the proposition to Mr. Walker, as above stated; but it must be apparent to all that it was not, nor could have been, anything more than a jest. I could have entered the whole in my own name with the same ease and facility that I am represented as offering to enter it in our joint names, as, in either case, it appears, I had all the money to pay. It is possible that I adopted this method to get clear of Mr. Walker's importunities, to enter it for him, or furnish him with the money. I should have been at no loss to find persons ready, on the same terms, to have swallowed up the capital of the mammoth Bank of the United States. There is one thing at least creditable to Mr. Walker: he would not permit Jones and Caldwell to make out a case for him to swear to; or else he certainly would have had it that the land was marked off on the map.

Eli Garner.—(Doc. 22, p. 45.)

BRIEF.—Knows nothing of lands being marked as sold and not sold in said office. Samuel Gwin once told him that he had entered a certain eighth of land, and he, Garner, was going to buy it of him; finds that Gwin did not enter said land, but John W. Coglan did; does not know whether it was marked sold or not.

REMARKS.—I will here extract a part of Colonel Garner's deposition, No. 10, hereto annexed: "I have lived about two miles from said office about five years, which embraced the entire period that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron had charge of said office, and I have had a good opportunity to hear what public sentiment was in regard to them; and I have no hesitation in saying that, for accommodation and punctual attendance to the duties of their offices, they have never had their superiors in said office, and this has been the general opinion of the whole community, as far as I have heard." And to an inquiry whether he had ever known anything illegal or improper in the official conduct of Samuel Gwin or George B. Dameron, he answers, "I have not, to my knowledge." John W. Coglan, who subsequently purchased this land, states, in his deposition, No. 9, that he had got about 2,000 boards on this land, when rumor informed him that I had entered it, and before he removed the boards, he called on me about it, and he states that "I told him frankly that I had not entered the land." "In some short time afterward I called at the office, and inquired of a young man, who attended to the business, if this land was entered; and, after an examination, he informed me it was not, and I then entered it. At the time that I entered said land, and at no other time, to my knowledge, was there any mark on this land indicating that it was entered; and at no time did Samuel Gwin represent to me that it was; and at no time did he ask, or did I give him, any compensation other than the government price for said land."

I think it unnecessary to make any remarks on the evidence of John B. Pitman, John S. Gooch, Elisha Lott, or any of the other witnesses who have deposed in relation to my official conduct at the Mount Salus office, as they are either directly in my favor or say not a word against me.

I have now gotten through the evidence collected by the committee implicating my official conduct while I had charge of Mount Salus land office, and I speak with a confidence, that conscious innocence inspires, that the explanations I have made, and the evidence that I have introduced, will convince every unprejudiced mind that I have been basely treated; that the committee have been misled by the wickedness and bitterness of one man; that he, by his misrepresentations and EXPARTE proceedings, as the prime mover of an unprincipled faction, bent on the destruction of an individual that they dare not meet single-handed; that they have sanctioned or committed an outrage on individual rights that is derogatory to American statesmen, and calculated, if continued to be practised, to bring discredit upon the highest tribunal of our country. These are solemn truths that must be apparent to all who have read the report of the committee, the evidence collected by them, and the defence and evidence above detailed. These attempts of the highest legislative body of our country, to lessen and destroy the character and standing of its officers, must, ultimately, have a tendency of driving every honorable man from her employ; even the warworn soldier, who has shed his blood and perilled his life in defence of her eagles, in her greatest need, will be compelled, from self-respect, to retire and look out for other means of support.

The evidence "on the files of the Senate" does not sustain the report of the committee, "that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron were notoriously engaged in extensive land speculations; that they marked as sold vast bodies of the most valuable lands that were not sold; that applicants for the lands thus marked were informed that said tracts were entered; that they endeavored to sell the tracts thus marked, at a suitable profit, by private sale; that, failing to sell it, they entered it at the minimum price; that they marked lands as sold for particular friends who had not the means of prompt payment; that at the time the present register took charge of the office, numerous tracts (about two hundred) were thus fraudulently marked." The first six clauses under the above head are fully disproved by the evidence of Seneca Pratt, who was, a great part of the time, clerk in the receiver's office. See his answers to the 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th interrogatories, hereto appended, No. 3. Also, the answer of James McLaran to the 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th interrogatories, hereto appended, No. 2. Also, see depositions Nos. 4, 5, 9, 10, and 30, all more or less touching on this part of the subject.

As to the last clause under the above head, the committee have no "depositions on the files of the Senate" to authorize them to fix upon the number "two hundred" as the number of tracts "fraudulently marked." No such number is given by any witness; and it is an arbitrary and an unwarranted assumption on the part of the committee, not sustained by a particle of evidence that has been published. Mr. Sumrall, in his first answer, (see doc. 151, p. 53,) states that he has discovered "about one hundred and thirty-six," and states that these marks appear to be in the handwriting of Samuel Gwin, George B. Dameron, Gideon Fitz, and S. D. Hays. No blame is attached to either of the former registers, but all of their errors are attributed to me as frauds; and, not content with thus attributing the errors of others to me, contrary to the evidence before them, they have voluntarily added to this list "about" fifty-six that no person has ever heard of before the appearance of this report. But Mr. Sumrall, in his deposition, No. 1, sets this matter in a different light to what the committee have. In his third answer, he states that "about" fifty of these marks appear in the handwriting of Samuel Gwin, and many of these he had discovered as correctly marked, but, by mistake, not tracted. This part of his deposition was given in 1834, and was in the hands of a senator at the moment the above report was made out. Mr. Sumrall, in answer to further interrogatories to him, answers, on 12th August last, that fifteen or twenty tracts that were marked off in my handwriting, but which could not be found on any of the other books of the office, were correctly and legally sold; thus reducing the whole number to less than thirty, out of about eight thousand tracts that were entered in said office while I had charge of it. I profess not to be more correct than other men in business; but I am willing to risk my reputation that, in the end, there will not be found five tracts that were incorrectly marked by me.

The committee, under their second head, allege "that these officers were in the constant habit of selling the lands on a credit, receiving a separate note as a bonus or interest;" "that at these sales final receipts were not made out until the purchase-money and interest were first paid;" and "that in the meantime the land was marked as sold."

The committee are equally unfortunate in sustaining these charges by the "depositions on the files of the Senate," as in the preceding case. See Pratt's answer to 18th interrogatory, No. 3, and McLaran's answer to the 17th, No. 2, and other portions of their depositions. Not a witness, whose deposition has been taken by the committee and published, has stated that they gave "a separate note as a bonus or interest;" but, on the contrary, many have deposed that they did not. As to the general charge of selling land on a credit, with the exception of the cases of Williams, Haley, and Cox, there is not a shadow of truth or evidence to sustain it; and in the above cases the explanations I have given, I am convinced, will satisfy every unprejudiced man that there was not the slightest intention of wrong on our part, but that they arose alone by a combination of circumstances that few men could anticipate, and all are liable to.

Under the third head, the committee state "that these officers appear, on their sale-books, to be purchasers of lands in their own names."

It is hard to account for a statement so reckless as the above. It is not only not sustained by a single witness whose evidence is published, but is false in fact, as will appear by the very "sale-books" that the committee has referred to to sustain it. This extraordinary statement is the more astonishing and less excusable, from the fact that the committee had it in their power to be correctly advised from the official records of the General Land Office. Can it be possible that it was an intentional, a preconcerted design to mislead the public to the injury of an individual, without one shadow of evidence? Or was it inserted merely to make other portions of the same report more probable? Where the committee could have gotten the idea is more than I can imagine; for not one of the numerous witnesses has spoken on the subject at all. Mr. Sumrall, the present register of the office, and who has charge of the very "sale-books" alluded to, states, in his deposition, No. 1, that I made but one entry in the Mount Salus office during the entire period that I had charge of it; and that was jointly with a Mr. Green, of a single eighth.

As to the fourth charge, of partiality, I will refer you to the accompanying depositions, from No. 1 to No. 40.

In consequence of the absence of the most of my witnesses from the State, I have been compelled reluctantly to submit this defence in an incomplete state to what I wished, as regards the Mount Salus office. Not armed with the compulsory power that my enemies have been, nor having the contingent funds of the Senate to reimburse the heavy expenses that I have been subjected to, I have been compelled, remote from the residence of the witnesses that are in the country, single-handed and alone, to meet this array of evidence, backed as it is by the authority of the Senate of the United States. Feeble as it is, compared to what it might have been, I submit it to you, with a confidence that you will award to me that justice that you may deem meet.

2. The Chocchuma District.

Report of the committee.—"Samuel Gwin was transferred to this office as register, from Mount Salus. The committee will not enter into the detail of the profligate scenes which took place in this district at the sales which opened in October, 1833, and which has continued to characterize the conduct of the register, who controls the sales at private, up to the present time. The evidence portrays greater enormities in this office than are believed to have occurred at any time in any land district of the United States. * * *

"It appears that three or more extensive companies of speculators met at these sales, who, in a very short time after the sales opened, united for the purpose of monopolizing all the good land then offered at public sale, of overawing bidders, and driving all competition out of the market. * * *

"It further appears that the company established an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened on each day a regular sale of the lands purchased by them at public sale, and at this company sale, all were permitted to bid who thought proper, but at the public sales the company claimed and actually enforced a complete monopoly."

In the paragraph just preceding this, it alleges that "the agents of the company undertook to dictate terms to the actual settlers, and claim to themselves great credit for having permitted each occupant to purchase, or to purchase themselves for him on certain conditions, a tract not exceeding one quarter-section, at the minimum price of the government, to include his improvements, "provided each settler should not bid at public sale for any other land. * * * All this was done in open day and could not be unknown to the officers of the government who superintended the sales, and who either connived at or participated in these fraudulent transactions. For a specification of particular cases of violation of law, or manifest partiality on the part of the officers charged with the solemn duty of guarding and protecting the interest of the United States, the committee refer to the depositions on the files of the Senate."

The committee have very prudently declined giving the specifications upon which they have founded the above broad and bold charges of "violation of law, profligate scenes, great enormities, monopolizing all the good lands, driving all competition out of market, overawing bidders, laws set at defiance, dictation, speculating on the government, granting pre-emptions, indignant feelings of the people, officers partial, participated in or connived at frauds, did not guard the interest of the United States;" and last though not least with the committee, "Samuel Gwin was transferred to this office as register from Mount Salus." They have referred to the depositions on the files of the Senate for the specifications.

That I may be better able to meet this fanfaronade of declamation, vituperation, and sound, chimerical as it is, originating as it did in the disordered imagination, I will not say of a maniac or fool, but an enthusiast, I shall for my own convenience, and to meet every point and every allegation, divide this general charge, so as to apply the evidence more directly.

1st. They state that they will not "enter into the details of the profligate scenes which took place in this district at the sales which opened in October, 1833."

2d. That these profligate scenes "have continued to characterize the conduct of the register, who controls the sales at private entry, up to the present time." (This report was made 3d March, 1835.)

3d. "The evidence portrays greater enormities at this office than is believed to have occurred at any time in any land district of the United States."

4th. "That three or more extensive companies of speculators met at these sales," who "united for the purpose of monopolizing all the good lands then offered at public sale, of overawing bidders, and driving all competition out of the market."

5th. That these agents undertook to dictate terms to the actual settlers, and "claim to themselves great credit for having permitted each occupant to purchase on certain conditions, a tract not exceeding one quarter-section at the minimum price, provided each settler should not bid at public sale for any other land."

6th. "That the laws were set at defiance, and a body of men combined for the avowed purpose of speculating on the government."

7th. That "the officers superintending these sales" permitted this "body of men" to "dictate terms to the bidders."

8th. That "the company established an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened each day a regular sale of the lands purchased by them at public sale."

9th. That "at the public sales the company claimed and actually enforced a complete monopoly."

10th. That the officers "either connived at or participated in these fraudulent transactions."

11th. Charges them with "violation of law, or manifest partiality."

In the examination of the evidence portraying these great violations of law, &c., I think it proper to state all the law that I have been able to find, bearing on the subject of frauds at public sales. If the committee have any other code of laws on the subject, not known to the public, I hope, at least, that I may not be held amenable to them.

In 4th sec., act Congress for 1830, page 43, it is enacted, "That if any person or persons shall, before or at the time of the public sale of any of the lands of the United States, bargain, contract, or agree, or shall attempt to bargain, contract, or agree, with any other person or persons that the last-named person or persons shall not bid upon or purchase the land so offered for sale, or any parcel thereof, or shall, by intimidation, combination, or unfair management, hinder or prevent, or attempt to hinder or prevent, any person or persons from bidding upon or purchasing any tract or tracts of land so offered for sale, every such offender, his, her, or their aiders and abetters, being thereof duly convicted, shall, for every such offence, be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisoned not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court."

I propose to examine the evidence procured by the committee, and "now on the files of the Senate" with this law; and also the "profligate scenes which took place in this district," (Chocchuma,) at the land sales in October, 1833; and which, as the committee reports, "have continued to characterize the conduct of the register up to the present time." If in this examination it is found that the evidence does not bear out the committee in their report, then of course the report is founded in fiction and not in truth. But before I proceed upon this examination, and that you may be in possession of all my official actings on this occasion, I will here insert the rules adopted in conducting the public sales, as published for ten days before the sales commenced; and also those for conducting the private entries.

"Rules for conducting the land sales at Chocchuma, Mississippi, at public auction.

"1. The lands in each township will be offered, taking the townships in the order proclaimed by the President in his proclamation, and will commence in the lowest number of the township, and continue on to the highest in said range.

"2. The crier will proclaim section one for sale by half-quarters, and will ask if any one wishes a division of it; if no one cries out 'divide,' then it will be knocked off as 'no bid;' but should a division be desired, he will cry the east half, northeast quarter, section one, west half, northeast quarter, section one, and so on, until he gets through the section, not dwelling more than one minute on each half-quarter.

"3. The crier will report the name of the bidder and the price of land to the register forthwith.

"4. Should any one bid off a tract of land, and fail to pay for it on the same day, or when required by the receiver, he will be proclaimed at the opening of the next day's sale as not entitled to a bid during the present sales, and the land thus forfeited will be again offered.

"5. The highest bidder in all cases will be the purchaser.

"6. The office will open, and the sales commence on each day, at such hour as may be designated the previous day, and will continue until all the townships contemplated for that day's sale shall be disposed of.

"SAMUEL GWIN, Register.
"R. H. STERLING, Receiver"

The following rules were adopted, after mature deliberation, and were posted on the office door for more than a week previous to the close of the public sales, for conducting the sales at private entry at Chocchuma, but were objected to, a few days before the day, by John B. Peyton, and in their place others were adopted, as will appear below, No. 2, at his, Peyton's suggestion, but which were abandoned on the Thursday following, and the following, No. 1, adopted, and was continued until the close of the press at private entry:

"1. That each applicant for the purchase of a tract or tracts of land at private entry, shall, from Monday, 18th November, to the Friday following, make out their applications, and file them with the register, who will not read them himself, or permit any one else to read them, and who will secure them under lock; that the register and receiver will, on Saturday morning, commence to canvass the said applications, and class the same, and where there are two or more applicants for the same tract of land, the register will put the same up to the highest bidder, among those who have filed their applications for it allowing no other to bid.

"2. That no one who is an applicant will be permitted to remain in the office, or in any other way to examine them.

"3. That from Saturday morning no applications will be received by the register until all those on hand are disposed of.

"4. That applications in all the townships offered will be received at the same time.

"SAMUEL GWIN, Register.
"R. H. STERLING, Receiver."

When objections were made to the above rules (before the private entries had commenced) by Mr. Peyton, and perhaps a few others, and to prevent every semblance of "partiality" or "favoritism," and to put all on the same footing as far as we could, the following rules were adopted upon the above being abandoned, and were posted upon the office door on the Saturday previous to the Monday when the private entries were to commence. They were abandoned on the Thursday night following, and the above substituted, only varying as to the time to receive applications. It was to this change of rule that Colonel Thomas C. Nixon alludes in his answer to the 7th interrogatory, (p. 14, doc. 22.)

"1. The register will prepare a box, and will receive applications for the entry of lands in the following manner: He will proclaim at the window that he will receive applications for fifteen minutes for all lands desired in such a township, naming it, and all others in the same numerical order as proclaimed by the President: that when the fifteen minutes is out, no more applications in said township will be received until all those received are disposed of. When there are two or more applicants for the same tract of land, they will be invited into the office, and the land put up to the highest bidder; those applying only being permitted to bid. When there are no conflictions, the applications will pass forthwith.

"2. No person will be permitted to examine any application until the fifteen minutes has expired, and not then except as the register is canvassing them, which will be done in public.

"3. All applications that pass, the land must be paid for forthwith.

"4. The register will pursue the above numerical order until he gets through all the townships.

"SAMUEL GWIN, Register.
"R. H. STERLING, Receiver."

NOTE.—The reason that the above regulations were abandoned on the Thursday night following, after the private entries commenced on Monday, and those first framed re-established, was, that I had discovered a disposition on the part of a few individuals to put in applications on every tract of land in the country, not only in their own names, but in many instances in the names of numerous distant friends. I had sometimes twenty applications on a single eighth, and when I put it up to the highest bidder, I would scarcely ever get a bid on the land. At length all the applicants, except one, would withdraw their applications, which I was requested to hand to them, and the land, as would appear to the public, was entered by one. On the day that the above rule was abandoned, it was for the first time discovered by me that these various applicants would retire with their applications that they had thus withdrawn, and the person who had entered the land, and put up the same land among themselves. As soon as I discovered their plans, and when I could get no bid on the land, instead of returning the applications to the applicants, I tore them up, by which means I in a measure destroyed their plan, for they could not recollect the various persons who had thus applied. Being highly incensed at conduct that I considered outrageous, I destroyed the then rules, and adopted those first made out, and the whole of Friday (next day) was given to make out their applications and file them. Both sets of regulations were literally and strictly adhered to while in force, with one exception, and that was where I considered the receiver as having violated them himself, by issuing his receipts for land that had never been sold, and which he had heard me declare that I would not sell, it being in violation of law, and our rules, that had placed all on an equal footing. I shall, under another head, treat this subject and the conduct of Samuel B. Marsh as they deserve.

I would also remark that this low, dirty juggling in fictitious applications was confined to a very few persons, as I afterward learned. No man of standing would put in an application for land that he did not want, with the sole view of extorting a few cents from one that did want it, or whose land it joined.

With these preliminary remarks, I shall proceed to examine the second count in the committee's report.

BRIEF.—Heard register and receiver frequently speak of the company; neither of them, to his knowledge, used any means to suppress the company or prevent its effects against the government. In a note to his deposition, he states that he heard the register say that "he had applied to Judge Black to examine the articles of agreement of the company, and gave him (the register) his opinion on the subject; and that Judge Black, after examining the articles of agreement, gave it as his opinion that it was not the duty of the register or receiver to take any steps to counteract the effects of the company." (The other portions of Mr. Cox's evidence relating to Martin, with the evidence of all the other witnesses on that subject, will be taken up under the head of "Martin and Gold's case.")

REMARKS.—These were the first public land sales that I had ever conducted, and, as might be presumed, many questions arose that required quick action, that were entirely new to me. There were from three to six hundred persons on the ground daily, and the sales very heavy. I had not a moment's time to spare from my desk. I knew but few of the purchaser's names as they were reported to me by the crier, having seen R. J. Walker but once before, and had never seen Ellis, Jemison, or Gilchrist, to know them, before their names became familiar to me by their purchases at the stand. The greatest secrecy was observed by all the members of the company toward me in regard to it. I had understood, on the first or second day's sale, that an attempt had been made among the bidders on the ground to form a company, but that it had entirely failed; and having this failure impressed upon my mind, I did not expect to hear of the formation of a company. My suspicions of the existence of a company were first excited, I think, on the third day's sales, from the fact of there being but few bidders save the above four individuals. I then used every means in my power to ascertain the fact, and did so, I think, on the first Friday or Saturday of the sales. Governor Runnels and myself were walking out and speaking of the quantity of lands sold, and, from our knowledge of the quality of much of those lands, we both concluded that the government was reaping the fruits of heavy sales of inferior lands. It was from him that I learned, positively, that there was a company in operation then. (See deposition No. 30.) As he had been a land officer, and had attended, perhaps, every public land sale that had been held in the State previously, I particularly inquired of him what course I ought to pursue in regard to said company, to break it up. I think he informed that, as he understood the articles of the said company, they were not in violation of the laws of the United States, and informed me that I could do nothing to prevent it, and gave it as his opinion that the company, if they went on as they had begun, would be of advantage to the United States. He remarked that he had been applied to to become a member of the company, but declined, and stated he would have nothing to do with it, but not because he considered it a violation of law. After this conversation, I was fully satisfied that there was a company, and I examined the law to see if there was any power given us to suspend the sales, or in any other way to counteract the operations of the company. I took the advice of all that I supposed had any knowledge or experience on the subject, particularly if there was any instance where the land officers had suspended the public sales for any cause at any other land office, and I could learn of but one such circumstance, and that in Alabama; in which case, one of the officers, if not both, had been removed from office for so doing. Among others, and perhaps the first, I took the legal advice of the Hon. John Black, and gave him the laws of the United States, and referred him particularly to the fourth section, hereinbefore inserted, to compare it and the laws with the articles of the company, and I informed him that I would risk the responsibility, and stop the sales, if the company were acting in violation of law. He did examine the subject fully, and informed me that the company was violating no law of the United States, and that if I stopped the sales it would be a heavy responsibility; and as the receiver would not join me in such a step, he advised me not to attempt it, and let the sales go on. Upon reflection, I was of the same opinion myself.

If the company have violated any law on the subject, they are liable to its fines and penalties. All that I conceived it my duty to do, was to report the existence of the company and their conduct to the proper department, which I have already done.

There was but one method by which I could, for a moment, arrest the progress of the company, and that was to suspend the sales. The extent of the company I could not ascertain, but it appeared to me that nearly every one on the ground belonged to the company; and wherever I could find an opposition bidder, I encouraged it with all my power. The settlers were, without (to my then knowledge) a single exception, either members of the company, or were in favor of it. Mr. Cox has stated, correctly, that he heard me speak of it frequently; and, if I mistake not, in a conversation with him, I told him that I had no power to arrest it, but by stopping the sales, which he did not advise.

Robert McCay.—(Doc. 22, p. 12.)

My remarks on Mr. Cox's testimony will equally apply to Mr. McCay's testimony.

John A. Lane.—(Doc. 22, p. 14.)

BRIEF.—States that "transfers were made generally by assignment of certificate, done before the register." "In some few instances the original name was not known."

REMARKS.—There was, to my recollection, only one case where the name of the original purchaser was stricken out and another inserted on the original abstract, and never on the tract-book; and this was the case of James R. Marsh, (the committee's own commissioner,) who was very drunk, and bid off, I think, three tracts of land while in this state, which he pretended to know nothing about when sober, and he was permitted to abandon them, and the name of another inserted on the original abstract, who paid for the lands bid off by Marsh, and took the receipts for the same.

Patrick Sharkey.—(Doc. 22, p. 42.)

BRIEF.—Does "not think the sales were managed in the best manner for the good of the government. I think they were managed for the interest of such of the settlers as were interested in said company. I cannot say the sales were managed according to the strictest dictates of justice," and instances the case of "Martin and Gold."

REMARKS.—Mr. Sharkey's entire misapprehension of the facts in the case of "Gold and Martin," (which will appear under that head,) and which are sustained by the records and by the testimony of all the witnesses, entirely removes the insinuation contained in the above. No sales, I will venture to say, in the United States, were ever better conducted, which is fully proved by the accompanying documents.

R. H. Sterling.—(Doc. 22, p. 115.)

BRIEF.—States that "Rather was one of the criers, and was appointed by Colonel Gwin." He, Sterling, "made no objection." Griffin, of Clinton, first applied to witness to be crier, "and I felt myself inclined to appoint him." Did not know that Samuel Gwin was a member of the company. (Doc. 22, p. 51.) Witness gives the different periods when Samuel Gwin was absent from the office. To an inquiry by Marsh what he, Gwin, understood by a "legal subdivision," under "the act of 29th May, 1830," Gwin's reply "amounted to a refusal to give any explanation as to what constituted a legal subdivision." He states that he does not "know the motives," (alluding to the length of the testimony taken in the cases of the Marshes' pre-emptions,) "but the testimony in the Marshes' applications is more lengthy, and will show for themselves." To an inquiry of Samuel B. Marsh, whether we would reserve the land he had applied for under the pre-emption law, until a final decision could be had from the Treasury Department, Sterling answers that "Samuel B. Marsh did make such a request to myself and Colonel Gwin. Gwin said he would sell the land when the public sales came on, and all lands on which pre-emptions were not previously allowed. I [R. H. Sterling] differed with him, and promised, on my part, to reserve this and all similar claims, till an answer could be had."

NOTE.—That part of Mr. Sterling's evidence that relates to "John Jones's case" will be examined under that head.

REMARKS.—It is with reluctance that I enter upon the examination of the receiver's evidence, but it is a duty I owe to my government and myself, in defending my character from imputations tried to be cast upon it, by any witnesses, to expose the whole train, the whole combination against me.

I had been charged by a witness in a committee-room of the Senate of the United States, under an examination by the members of that committee, distinguished for legal knowledge and high standing, as being a member of the "Chocchuma Land Company," formed at that place in October, 1833. This charge had been printed and reprinted in almost every opposition paper in the United States, with such comments as each might think proper. My name had been introduced in grave debate by honorable senators in the Senate of the nation as connected with black frauds. To cap the climax, a commission has been raised, inquisitorial in its powers, and composed of men personally hostile to me, and from the malicious bias of their minds, unqualified to do me justice. The known and avowed object of creating this commission, thus composed, was not intended to do me justice, but injustice; not to expose frauds, but to gratify personal hatred and subserve party and factional purposes, to carry on their fiendish designs.

Mr. Sterling states that "Rather was one of the criers, and was appointed by Colonel Gwin." Now, sir, what must you and the public think when I state and prove conclusively that this whole statement is, in every sense of the word, erroneous. Mr. Sterling had the evidence in his own hands that it was erroneous; you have the evidence on file in your own department that it is erroneous. By an examination in your office of our quarterly returns for the quarter ending on 31st December, 1833, you will there find the account of "Stephen Holt," made out in the handwriting of Mr. Sterling himself, and a receipt signed by Holt at the bottom for one hundred and twenty dollars for crying the sales at Chocchuma for four weeks in 1833. These are facts in which there can be no mistake, and upon which his memory should not have been so deficient. The truth is, Guilford Griffin was the regular auctioneer, appointed by Mr. Sterling and myself, long before the sales came on, but was taken sick a day or two before the sales came on with a violent cold, and on the morning of the sales he called on Mr. Sterling and myself and stated that he was too unwell to cry that day, but expected to be able the next, and asked us if we had any objection to Captain Rather's crying for him that day, as he was an old experienced hand. We both readily assented, but required him, Griffin, to remain in the room and by the side of Rather, to report the names of the bidders and price of land. He was still too hoarse to cry for the next two days, and on each day he made known the facts to us both, and whom he had gotten to cry for him. I will here extract a part of Mr. Griffin's testimony on this subject, No. 31. Mr. Griffin states, "I was the regularly appointed auctioneer for the first two weeks at said sales, and was appointed by R. H. Sterling and Samuel Gwin, and I attended at said sales from the first day of it to the second Saturday of said sales, just before the sales for that day closed, it being the last day of the first two weeks' sales." To an inquiry of Mr. Griffin that Mr. Sterling had stated in his deposition given the Marshes that "Rather was one of the criers, and was appointed by Colonel Gwin," whether this statement was true or not, Mr. Griffin answers, "They are not true, I arrived at said sales very unwell, so much so that I felt unable to cry the first day. Expecting to recover, or be able to cry the next day, I did employ such persons as I could rely on to cry for me. The first day I got Colonel Rather to cry for me, as he was an old experienced hand, with the full knowledge and approbation of R. H. Sterling, as not only I, but the officers also, were inexperienced in land sales, and he, at my request, assisted me each day that I did not cry myself, but one, when Mr. McLaran, at my request, cried. Mr. Sterling could not have been mistaken as to who was the regular crier, for he himself, several months before the sales came on, promised me the appointment, and having procured Colonel Gwin's, I attended the sales for that express purpose, and made known to him and Colonel Gwin that I was sick, and they both advised me to procure some one else from day to day to cry for me, expecting my recovery." Now, this is a true statement of the facts in the case, of which Mr. Sterling should not have forgotten when he gave his deposition. At the time Rather cried for Griffin there was no company formed that I knew of; after I understood there was a company formed I do not think Rather cried, but then I did not know him as one of the company. Mr. Griffin, at the close of the first two weeks' sales, found himself getting worse, and there remaining no probability of his being able to cry, Sterling and myself appointed Stephen Holt in his place, and the account was made out in Holt's name for the entire time, because Griffin had returned home and could not sign the receipts, but he received the pay for the first two weeks and Holt the last two.

As to my refusing to go into an argument with the Marshes about what I considered a "legal subdivision" under the law of the "29th May, 1830," I did so refuse, because there was no other less legal subdivisions under that law than half-quarter sections, or lots containing, as near as may be, 80 acres. He attempted to claim the location of his pre-emption by lots under the law of 1832, authorizing, under peculiar circumstances, a division of half-quarters into quarter-quarter sections, which law was not in existence in 1830, when the pre-emption law passed, which was re-enacted or revived on the 19th June, 1834. Marsh wished to spin out his claim up and down the Tallahatchie river for one mile in forty-acre tracts, and not take it by the legal subdivisions of 1830. This I resisted, and would do again. I had given the law of 1830 to Marsh as my answer to his question. He now wishes to prove, by Mr. Stirling, that he, Marsh, was ignorant of what constituted a legal subdivision under the law of 1830, as construed by me. Nothing is further from the truth than this. I had repeatedly explained this law to Marsh, and referred him to various acts of Congress on the subject, that made it so plain that any one could have seen but he that would not. To show that Mr. Sterling's evidence is erroneous, where he states that my reply amounted to a refusal "to give any explanation as to what constituted a legal subdivision," I will here give Mr. Ringgold's answer to the 13th interrogatory: "I recollect that James R. Marsh inquired of Samuel Gwin, the register, what constituted a legal subdivision under the pre-emption law of the 29th May, 1830. The reply was, as well as my memory serves at this distant period, that the law and instructions in reference to forty-acre tracts or subdivisions, created by the act of 1832, could not be considered as having reference or any pertinent bearing to the act of 1829. The register frequently referred to and commented upon the law and instructions of the government to satisfy himself and the Messrs. Marsh of the correctness of his decisions touching their pre-emption claims. I am positively certain that R. H. Sterling, in every instance, fully coincided and sanctioned the opinions of the register, and I cannot but express my surprise that said Sterling could have so far forgotten himself as to give the testimony referred to in the above question."

Mr. Sterling next goes on to state, that "the testimony in the Marshes' applications is more lengthy than others, but does not know the motives." Whether they are longer than those admitted I know not, as the originals have been all forwarded, but I believe they are shorter than other claims that have been rejected. These men had put up fraudulent claims, and were determined to force them through, in opposition to reason, justice, and law. I was either to sacrifice the interest of the government to these fraudulent men, or to undergo the present ordeal. I preferred honor with persecution, before disgrace with their smiles.

He next alludes to my refusing to reserve these lands from sale, at the public land sales, until the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury was obtained. This I was bound to do. Copies had been forwarded to Washington on the 27th August, 1834, and I was satisfied that an answer could be received before the 1st December from the department, if our decision was disapproved of. But I knew the claims would never be allowed by the department. It now appears that my colleague did agree with these men to reserve this land form sale; for he states, "I differed with him [me] and promised, on my part, to reserve this and all similar claims till an answer could be had." This shows the embarrassed situation that I was placed in. These men had gotten the promise of my colleague to disregard the proclamation of the President, and, without one shadow of law, to suspend from sale lands that were orderered to be sold.

For your information, I herewith insert a copy of the official opinion of the receiver and myself in the above case:

"Opinion of the register and receiver on the claim of Samuel B. Marsh, under the pre-emption law of 1834, delivered on the 27*th August*, 1834.

"We, the undersigned, have given the above case a careful consideration, and have come to the following opinion, subject, in all cases, to the revision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"1st. Said claim, as presented, claims land on three different quarter-sections. Supposing the claimant entitled to a claim somewhere, it is not for us to say where it should be located; therefore we reject it.

"2d. The admissions of the claimant, in his application, and the evidence, go conclusively to show that Samuel B. Marsh and James R. Marsh cultivated the land claimed, in 1833, in common; and, of course, if there is any relief for the claimant, under the pre-emption law, (which we do not doubt,) it must be in common with his brother, James R. Marsh, and not individually; therefore we cannot admit it.

"3d. That the mere remaining of the claimant (not on the land claimed, but on an adjoining tract) for a space of time, as he admits, of less than a month, and as is on proof but ten days, in May, 1833, and as he admits that part of his hands were removed, in November, 1833, to another plantation, and the remainder in February, 1834, and giving the furthest time, as named by one of the witnesses, when the entire removal of the hands took place, in March, 1834, and the vagueness of the consideration to be paid by Mr. Wilds, as tenant in 1834, in our opinion destroys the possession (if any could, in justice, be set up) on the 19th of June, 1834.

"Entertaining these views, we cannot admit the claim in any shape. There are other points in the above claim that might be brought to bear, which we may, at some future period, lay before the Treasury Department; but as we both fully concur in the above, it will show the claimant some of our reasons.

"That we may not be misunderstood, in regard to similar claims, it is our unalterable determination to adhere strictly to our instructions in regard to cultivation in 1833, and possession on 19*th June*, 1834. By cultivation, we will take the common and universal acceptation of the term, and of the idea it conveys when used in common parlance, which is liberally defined in our instructions.

"As to possession, the claimant must satisfy us that he considers the place claimed his home, the source from which he derives his support; and although a temporary removal for health or water may occur at particular seasons, yet he must look to the former as his permanent abode for the time being. The possession by an agent will be but seldom admitted. There are cases where it would be proper, in our estimation, but they must be accompanied by other circumstances of explanation.

"R. H. STERLING, Receiver."

As I have been subjected to all the abuse that could be possibly heaped upon a man, about the above claim, and as it has been the lever to deceive the Senate of the United States, and to cause one of its committees to spread before the public of this nation a report replete with misrepresentation, I herewith enclose you (Exhibit E) a correct diagram from the original surveys, as on file in my office, and also a copy of Marsh's application, designating the lots he applied for, to wit: "Lots of land Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8, in section 5, T. 21, R. 1 W.; and lot 12, in section 4, T. 21, R. 1 W.; and lot 9, in section 5, T. 21, R. 1 W." By examining this diagram, and the above application, you will at once see the presumption of these men. Where, in the name of common sense, can Mr. Sterling find any authority, from the above opinion, and this diagram and copy, to warrant him in his determination to suspend the sale of this land?

In regard to my occasional absence from the office in 1834, and to show you that the public interest did not, for one moment, suffer, which Mr. Sterling well knew, Mr. Ringgold states, in his 9th answer, "I am certain that during the whole period of the occasional absence of said Gwin, that the public interest did not suffer, nor did individuals suffer that I ever heard of."

John Jones.—(Doc. 22, p. 65.)

BRIEF.—Does not know that Samuel Gwin was a member of the company, but was told by "Mumford Jones that Colonel Gwin had put in a thousand dollars in the name of his son or for his son's use."

REMARKS.—Upon Jones giving this testimony, the commissioners addressed a communication to Mr. Jones, (as he informed me voluntarily by letter,) as I suppose, for his deposition. In his letter to me he remarked that he had never told John Jones any such thing, nor had he ever heard of such a circumstance. During the last session of Congress I sent this letter, with various other depositions, to an honorable senator, which have by some means been lost, as I am advised. I unfortunately retained no copy, and Mr. Jones is now, and has been for several months past, in the State of Virginia.

James Sims.—(Doc. 22, p. 110.)

BRIEF.—"Thacker Winter informed me that Colonel Gwin applied for leave to put stock in the company, but applied about fifteen minutes too late."

REMARKS.—This same Mr. Winter, in his deposition hereto annexed, (No. 19,) states that, "to the knowledge of this deponent, propositions, at several times, were made to S. Gwin for him to become a member of said company, and in a conversation between this deponent and the said Samuel Gwin, he remarked that it was improper for him to be in any way connected with the company, and that he would have nothing to do with it." Mr. Sims, like Mr. John Jones, must try some other tack; why not have selected some one that was dead and could not answer?

Having gotten through the examination of the testimony of the witnesses in detail, I will next take up the Case of Martin and Gold.

BRIEF.—Mr. Cox, in his thirteenth answer, recollects one instance where register and receiver refused to take the bid of any person, unless the money should be put up at the time of bidding, and prior to the striking off of the land; that a gentleman, as he understood, not belonging to the company, bid against Mr. Martin, and at the request of Martin he was required to put up the money at the time of bidding. Mr. Lane states, (p. 16,) there were several bids refused, on the ground of a deposit being demanded by the opposing bidder and not made; states that Mr. Marsh, who, I think, did not belong to the company, as one instance, and in another instance A. S. Campbell, who, if not then, was afterward a member of the company. Mr. Sharkey states, (p. 42,) that a Mr. Gold was required to put up the money for land as soon as it was knocked off, which he refused to do; that when Gold refused to pay for said land, contrary to the known rules of the sale, his name was cried out immediately and he was not allowed to bid any more, and the land bid off by Mr. Gold was put up again immediately, without waiting till the next day. The same land was again forfeited, and on the opening of the sales on next day, the name of the person that had forfeited it was not cried out so that the bidders could hear it, nor was the land called "forfeited" by the crier. Abel Beaty states, (p. 93,) that Martin, and Gold, the clerk of Campbell, were bidding in opposition to each other, and after the land had been run to more than $10 per acre, a deposit was demanded of Gold; Sterling, the receiver, put his head out of the window and held some conversation with Martin, and immediately a deposit was demanded of Gold, but does not recollect by whom. John H. McKennie states, (p. 106,) that Martin and Gold were bidding, and the land was run to $16, when the receiver required Mr. Gold to make a deposit before his bid could be taken; without another bid, the land was knocked off to Gold; next day it was announced that the land was forfeited; it was again set up and sold. Mr. Gold had previously bid off a number of eighths, one as high as $8 per acre, which were then not paid for; the bids were said to be for Campbell; there was a deposit of about $4,000 in the receiver's chest from the mercantile house of Campbell, deposited by Gold, but the receipt was given in the name of Hunly, another of Campbell's clerks.

REMARKS.—On the 24th October, (the fourth day after the sales commenced at Chocchuma,) and before I had any certain knowledge of the formation of a company, Mr. Gold, a new bidder, appeared, and bid off, at very high prices, a number of tracts of inferior land, amounting to something like $4,000. The receiver came to me and remarked that he understood that Gold intended to forfeit the land, or that it was so believed. This conversation occurred while he was then bidding. In a few moments, Gold and Colonel Martin began to bid on a tract that I knew was inferior land, and while they were bidding I discovered that there was an intense interest manifested among the bidders that appeared likely to break out in violence. When the land was run up to about $16 per acre, we became satisfied that Gold did not, in fact, intend to pay for any of his purchases, and the fact of his depositing the money and taking a receipt in the name of Hunly, confirmed us in the above conclusion, and satisfied us that there was a concerted plan to break up the sales, or to annoy us exceedingly, by a few persons bidding off each day, at high prices, large bodies of land and forfeiting it, and from day to day the same scenes be over and over again repeated. It was then determined on between us to demand a deposite of Gold, in his own name, not only on the land he was then bidding for, but also on all that he had that day purchased. While it was crying at $16 per acre, the receiver, as several witnesses have correctly stated, demanded immediate payment of Mr. Gold for all he had purchased, and informed him that his receipts were ready, and he was invited into the office to pay the money. The land was knocked off to Gold; he did not make the deposite or pay the money, as required by the receiver, but stated that he would that night, and the sales then went on as usual. In the evening he presented the receipt given to Hunly, and drew out all their funds, and refused to pay for any of the land he had purchased that day, and it was forfeited, and offered for sale again on the next day, and part only sold, and Mr. Gold cried out. No part of the lands bid off by Mr. Gold was again offered on that day, as stated by some of the witnesses. Mr. Sharkey is entirely mistaken in his statement, and so is most of the other witnesses, except Colonel John H. McKennie, whose statement is correct.

I violated no law nor our rules in this transaction; I had no knowledge of a company, much less that Colonel Martin was a member of it. Our rules stated, "should any one bid off a tract of land and fail to pay for it on the same day, or when required by the receiver," &c.; nor was there, or could there have been, the slightest partiality shown in the whole transaction, but, on the reverse, a strict regard was plainly manifested to the public interest. To prove that my conduct was not viewed by the parties concerned in the light of partiality, Mr. Campbell and myself have ever since our first acquaintance been on the most friendly terms, which would not have been the case had he seriously considered my conduct illegal, improper, or partial.

John Jones's case.—(Doc. 22, p. 55.)

BRIEF.—R. H. Sterling, p. 116, states that S. B. Marsh "presented to me, (Sterling) very early on the morning of November 22, three applications for John Jones for 321.19 acres, and asked Col. Gwin to sign them; he refused, and said he must put them in and take their chance among the rest." Marsh insisted, but Gwin still refused; wanted Gwin to acknowledge that he had applied; after a short recess, Marsh went to his (Sterling's) desk, with the applications, and tendered him the money for the land, and asked for a receipt; "I was about to give it, but discovered that the quantity of acres was not stated." Gol. Gwin had stepped out, and William M. Gwin at this moment stepped in and said, "I will answer you, Mr. Marsh," and did fill in the area in each application; the receipts were immediately finished, signed, and handed to Marsh. Colonel Gwin returned, and some warm language passed between him and Marsh. "William M. Gwin added, he should not have had the area if he had known his (Marsh's) object." Samuel Gwin declared he never would sign the applications, and never send the papers on, because it was a violation of the then rules. Marsh threatened him with legal proceedings, to compel him; during the day the parties "settled the difficulty." John Jones, p. 55, states, "the officers would not sign applications when presented, but required them to be handed in until a certain hour, and then announce the applications that were made for the same land;" parties would then retire to a shed, some ten or twelve steps from the land office, "and bid among themselves and divide the profit." Witness then went to Samuel B. Marsh, who, the next day, came to the office; complained of the speculators; Gwin told him if he thought the law would justify him, he would lock up and go off until the speculators dispersed; Marsh appeared glad at this, and said to Gwin, "Come with me behind the counter, and I will show you how to prevent these abuses effectually." Marsh pulled out Jones's applications, and said, "Now, sir, sign these applications, and do it in every instance as soon as presented, and you will stop these disgraceful speculations." Gwin would not sign them, but said, "You must put them in, and let them take their chance among the rest." Marsh said, "this would put a stop to the speculations." Gwin said, "he had written rules on the door, and he would not depart from them." Marsh insisted that he should destroy these rules, which were only designed to effect the frauds complained of; Gwin still refused. Marsh noted the time of day, several persons being present, and "then tendered my applications to Colonel Gwin, who refused to sign them." Marsh then turned to Sterling to tender him the money, who stated the number of acres was not put down in the applications. Marsh asked Gwin to give him the area; Gwin would not do so, and William M. Gwin at this time stepped in, and remarked he would answer for his brother. Marsh informed him what he wanted, and he (William M. Gwin) examined the maps and marked the area on the applications. Marsh then handed the money to Sterling, who made out the receipts for the land. Marsh and Burnet had some harsh words. Colonel Gwin returned to the office much excited, and said Marsh had acted improperly. William M. Gwin spoke with marks of passion, and justified the practice then going on. Marsh said, "Are you a marshal of the State, and do you give and receive hush-money?" Samuel Gwin said he would never sign my application, nor would they go to Washington. "Marsh said he should resign, or he would have him imprisoned until he did." McCaughan put in new applications for Jones afterward.

REMARKS.—There is in the above case a base and ungentlemanly attempt, on the part of Marsh and Jones, to impute partiality or favoritism to me, by stating a small portion of truth and much falsehood.

It will be kept in mind that, from the moment the public sales closed, there was never less than one hundred individuals at the office, wishing to make entries, and generally as high as five hundred; that many of these persons wanted the same land, and all had their application made out, ready to hand me the instant I opened the office for private entry. Each applicant claimed, and had a right to demand, that his interest should be attended to as soon as any other person. I knew that all eyes were turned on me, and many were ready and anxious to cry out partiality if I failed to keep them all on the same footing precisely. The maps were subject to the inspection of all, but I acted openly in every instance; there was nothing secret or unfair on the occasion; I knew that no application was valid until I had signed it, either in law, by our instructions, or our rules, as published. From Monday to Thursday night I stood behind the counter, and made proclamation that "I was ready to receive all applications in the several townships, ranges, and that I would receive said applications for the space of fifteen minutes;" I held a cigar-box in my hand, and as the applications were handed in, I placed them in it, with the face down; I read none of them myself, nor did a human being read one of them, save the applicant who put it in; at the expiration of the fifteen minutes, I made it known that the time was out, and no more applications would be received for lands in that township until all those on hand were disposed of. I then carefully placed each application for each section together, beginning at section one, and so on to thirty-six; after they were thus assorted, I took all the applications for each section and compared them, and if any two or more were on the same tract the applicants had to bid, but where there were no conflictions I immediately handed the application to my clerk, who made out the area from the maps and marked the land, which was handed to the receiver to issue his receipt upon. Generally, where there was competition, the parties refused to bid, nor could I compel them; they would withdraw their applications all but one by consent. I disposed of the townships in this way, in the numerical order proclaimed by the President, and as offered at public sale. Finding, as before stated, that a few individuals were putting in applications on lands that did not join any owned by them, but adjacent to lands owned by others, and who were applicants for the same, in order to extort a small pittance to buy them off, and that this was the cause of so many applications for the same tract, I urged the applicants by all the means in my power, to drop such little dirty business, and to stand up and bid for the land they wanted, but to no effect. It was not till late on Thursday evening that I learned this plan was in operation, and to break it up, at the close of that evening, I changed the rules as the only method that I could devise to stop this proceeding. New rules, No. 1, were then stuck up on the office door, giving applicants all the next day to make out their applications, and as soon as handed in I locked them up, not reading them myself, or permitting any one else to read them. The operation of these rules only extended to those townships that had not been acted on under the former rules. At sunset that evening the applications were exposed and arranged in the presence of six or seven gentlemen of different politics, whom I had invited to be present on this occasion. As there are no complaints involving my conduct after this, I shall stop here in detailing the close of the sales under this rule. It was while this rule was in force that the farce of the John Jones case was played, in which Samuel B. Marsh is represented as playing the hero.

I will here give Mr. Barnard's sixth answer (No. 11)—"At the close of the public sales, there were, I would suppose, from two to five hundred persons on the ground, who had made purchases at the public sales, and wished, at private entry, to extend or add to their former purchases, so as to complete their settlements. All, or most of those persons had their applications made out, and it was only necessary for the register to examine his maps, and put the area in the applications and sign it; but it was known that there would be conflictions on some of these applications—he could attend to but one at a time, and if he had permitted them to come in this way, all would have applied at the same instant, and it is highly probable that while he was filling up the area, and signing one application, other applications might be in his possession for the same land, equally entitled to it as the one he was then filling up, or persons would have been continually harassing him to take their applications. I am fully satisfied, from the anxiety felt by the crowd on this occasion, that it would have been impossible for the register to have gone on in this way, and he might have been justly chargeable with partiality had he attempted it. He could not attend to all in the same moment, and to have made a distinction would have justly created great excitement. I am therefore clearly of opinion that his rules were as well calculated to avoid this dilemma as they could possibly have been; and, in fact, I do not see how he could have got along at all without them, or others like them."

Early on Thursday morning, as Jones states, "when they were putting on their clothes," Sam. B. Marsh walked into the office, the very image of guilt and meanness, and after blustering some time, and abusing the speculators, he told me that he wanted to examine the maps. I readily stepped behind the counter to the desk with him, not knowing his business. He asked to examine such a township map, (one that had not been acted on under the first set of rules;) I showed him the map. He then asked if such lands were vacant? I informed him they were. He then asked me to sign three applications for this land. I told him I should not; that he must hand them in in the course of that day, and at sun-set I should cease taking in applications till all on hand were disposed of; and, if there was no confliction, I would then sign the application. Upon this he wished me to make my objections in writing. Understanding him now, I refused unconditionally. By this time a crowd had entered the office. He called on them to note the time of day. I replied, that he might note anything he pleased. I then went to breakfast; and as soon as I was gone, my brother stepped in, not knowing of anything that had transpired. Marsh, with his ghostly smile, asked him the area of such and such sections. Not knowing his object, my brother gave them to him; and although Mr. Sterling, as he admits by his own deposition, was present, and saw and heard all that had occurred, yet he gave Marsh receipts for the land that was not sold, and which he knew was against his own published rules, and had heard me positively refuse selling in this manner, or on any other conditions than were pointed out by our published rules. But now, it appears, that there was an understanding between Stirling and Marsh, for the former, in his deposition, states that, "on the morning of 22d November, S. B. Marsh came into the office very early"—"he presented to me three applications for John Jones for 321.19, and asked Colonel Gwin to sign them." Mr. Marsh, after a short recess, came to my desk, with these applications, and tendered me the money for the land, and asked for my receipt. I was about to give it, but discovered that the quantity of acres was not stated. Now, Jones states that Marsh said to Gwin, "Come with me behind the counter, and I will show you how to prevent these abuses effectually." "Marsh turned to Colonel Sterling's desk to tender my money to him, and get receipts, when Sterling observed that the number of acres was not put down in the applications. Now, it is plain, from Sterling's testimony, that Marsh and Sterling had a perfect understanding on the subject, and that the applications, by Sterling's own testimony, were, in the first instance, handed to him. There is one circumstance attending this part of Mr. Sterling's testimony that will show the commissioner has grossly misstated his testimony, or that he, Sterling, has been mistaken in his own testimony. He states that, "on the morning of the 22d November, Sam. B. Marsh presented to me three applications for John Jones, for 321.19." In the fifth line below this, in the same answer, he states that "Marsh came to my desk with the applications, and tendered me the money for the land, and asked for my receipt; I was about to give it, but discovered that the quantity of acres was not stated." It will be hard for him to reconcile this palpable discrepancy in his own testimony, except, as above suggested, it was misrepresented by James R. Marsh. Jones further states, that Marsh called at the office the next day after Chowder's entry, and remained there during the whole day, and "until very late at night," to see Gwin and Sterling alone, but, failing in this, he called again early the next morning, before they had put on their clothes, when the conversation took place. Chowder's was the last entry made under the first set of rules, and was made on the 21st November, and that was "Thursday;" Sterling states that Marsh called on him on the 22d, early in the morning, which was Friday. Every man knows, who was on the ground, that there was not a single entry made on Friday, but all the applications were to be filed on that day under the new rules, and on Saturday they were acted on, as will appear, for there were upward of two hundred entries made on that day. Here, it is clear, that Jones had omitted to swear the truth. I only advert to this fact to prove how little reliance is to be placed in an ignorant, malicious man's evidence, when in the hands, and under the control, of such a corrupt man as Samuel B. Marsh.

Jones is made to say that Marsh told me that I should resign, or "he would have him [me] imprisoned until he did" sign the applications. There is not one word of truth in this statement. What! Samuel Marsh threaten to imprison me!!! Sooner would he have butted his brains out against a tree than make such a threat. I did say that I would resign my office before I would sanction such a low, secret, ungentlemanly transaction. I did repeatedly declare that I never would send the papers on to Washington as they then stood; that I did not sell the land, nor was the entry a legal one; and that if other persons put in applications for this land that day, I would put it up to the highest bidder on the next day, paying not the least regard to this pettifogging trick.

It is rather unfortunate for this noble pair, Jones and Marsh, that no other person who was present on the above occasion heard anything of Marsh's threats to "imprison," and his inquiry of Dr. Gwin, as marshal of the State. Mr. McLaran, who was present on that occasion, and of whom it was inquired whether he heard Marsh say to Dr. Gwin, "Are you marshal of the State, and do you give and receive hush-money, and partake in the profits of these speculations?" he answers, "I did not hear any such remarks from Marsh, and cannot doubt for a moment that no such remarks were made, else it would have been heard of; and such a venture on Mr. Marsh's part was too much for him to make; it would have been the throwing of a fire-brand in a magazine for Marsh, that he would not have ventured to have done. * * * If such conversation had occurred, I think I would, or any one there, that was in the crowd, would have heard it, and yet did not hear any such talk." Again, the same witness answers to an inquiry, if he heard Marsh make use of any such language as this to Samuel Gwin, that he "should resign, or he would have him imprisoned until he did sign such applications," as follows: "I heard much of the conversation between Marsh and Gwin, as well as in the multitude, on that occasion, but never any such language as that." To an inquiry, "Was not the conduct of S. B. Marsh, in this transaction, looked upon by all honorable men with contempt?" he answers, "It was, and so frequently and publicly expressed." This honest commissioner—this conservator of the land laws, with his brother James R., appears highly indignant at the idea of giving or receiving "hush-money" in other persons. How does it apply to themselves we will let Mr. Purvine answer, (No. 16:) "Joseph Francis and myself did receive one hundred dollars of James R. Marsh, (by an order on R. H. Sterling for the money,) which he agreed to give us not to bid on the said S. W. half section 21, T. 22, R. 1 W." Now, this shows the purity of these men's morals, and the foresight and knowledge of the committee in "reposing entire confidence in your prudence and fidelity." "Their fidelity" must have been to keep all violations of law by themselves and their friends dark, but make something against those with whom you are at variance.

James Crowder's case.

As several of the witnesses have alluded to this case, I will here detail the facts as they occurred. James Crowder, among others, late in the evening of Thursday, November 21, put in an application for a tract of land. He had been waiting all day impatiently for me to get to the township that he wished to enter in, so that he would make his entry and leave for Natchez. I had despatched as many claims as I could, to reach his township, and the receiver was far behind me in making out his receipts. There were several other applicants for the same tract, and when I had collected them all in a body, and before I had completed calling over all the names of the applicants, he remarked, in an audible voice, "I will give $2 per acre for the land." As soon as I got through calling the names, I asked him if he bid $2 per acre on the land. A number of voices said "No, no—we withdraw;" upon which, irritated myself, I instantly tore up all the other applications but Crowder's, and he entered it. He afterward informed me that he gave a set of fellows whom he expected had applied for this land, and wanted a little money to pay their bills, fifty dollars, and told them to go to hell with it. I did not understand him as bidding, nor did he intend it as a bid, as he has since informed me. He is now and has been for several months absent from the State, or I would procure his deposition to the above facts, as we have frequently since spoken on the subject.

I have now, sir, examined the imputations that have been made against my official conduct; referred to, and remarked upon, the evidence adduced in support of them; given an explanation of the several transactions on which those charges are predicated, and offered you such evidence in refutation of them, as was at this time in my power to obtain without the aid of compulsory process, and in the limited time of a public officer whose duties demand almost every moment of his time and every faculty of his mind. I have endeavored to give a full history of each of the transactions referred to by the witnesses, charging me with improper conduct. That you may have the whole subject before you, touching the famous "land company," and my conduct at the land sales in Chocchuma in 1833, I have, in addition to the evidence of numerous witnesses, copied the address of Robert J. Walker, (see Exhibit A,) explaining the whole subject, and also a copy of the company agreement (see Exhibit B) of the "Chocchuma Land Company."

Exhibits C and D are memorials addressed by me to the Senate of the United States. Exhibit E is a diagram of the lands claimed by the Messrs. Marsh under the pre-emption law of 1834, which we rejected, and about which they endeavored to get up a new batch of evidence against me to gratify their personal pique.

I have reason to complain of the selection made by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, of commissioners to carry on this investigation. It was known to him that they were my personal and vindictive enemies—men with whom I had not been on speaking terms for more than a year previous to their appointment. Even before I had entered upon the duties of my office at Mount Salus, they had formed and expressed their decided hostility to me, and sought every opportunity to misrepresent my official conduct and do me an injury. Their character for vindictiveness was well known to the chairman of the committee. Could it be supposed that this was their only recommendation for the appointment? He held an unbounded influence over them, and could command them even to the exposing of their lives, as I have but recently experienced.

Had I been guilty of the charges preferred against me, and it was my country that demanded an investigation, would it not have been more decorous, more in unison with our free institutions, that men of standing for integrity, without a shadow of bias on their minds, (who would have reported the evidence as it was given in,) would have been selected to carry on the inquiry? Had men of this character been appointed, you would never have heard a word of complaint from me; in fact, I have courted such an investigation, as will appear from the two memorials addressed by me to the Senate of the United States, both of which were received in time for the action of the committee before they made their report, (see Exhibits C and D,) and I would have been willing to have risked my reputation on such an issue.

From the course that has been pursued toward me, I have been constrained to view the whole proceeding, not intended as a public good, but to gratify the personal hostility of one individual at the immolation of my character.

To that country that I have feebly but honestly attempted to serve, her officers and representatives, do I appeal from the unjust aspersions attempted to be cast on me, not only by the witnesses, but by one of her committees; and to them do I submit this defence, with no other motives, or solicitude for the result, than that regard for the character of my country, so far as it can be affected by my conduct as one of its officers, and that concern for my own reputation which should actuate every good citizen and honest man. If, in defending myself against those foul and groundless charges, I have used any harsh expression, or manifested any intemperance of feeling, I must rely for my apology, on the nature of man, the murderous attempt that has been made upon my reputation, and your liberality.

March, 1836.

P. S.—This defence was nearly complete and ready to be forwarded in December last, but before it was completed, an unfortunate difficulty arose between myself and another individual, the result of which was that I was confined to my bed, and unable to write or transact any business, until the first of the present month, and even now not without great bodily pain. This has delayed its presentation until the present time.

EXHIBIT A.

Address of Robert J. Walker, Esq., to the people of the United States, on the subject of the alleged frauds in the sales of the public lands at Chocchuma, Mississippi.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: It is my duty to appear before you with a vindication of my character from the unfounded aspersions cast upon it in the exparte affidavit of Edward Row, in relation to the late land sales at Chocchuma, Mississippi. Being neither the incumbent of, nor a candidate for any office, a public controversy could be anything else than desirable to me, but I am consoled by the reflection of the rectitude of my conduct, and that the utter falsehood of the charges preferred against me is susceptible of the clearest proof. The attitude assumed by me before you at present is defensive: to party feelings I scorn to appeal in a matter affecting my private character. My appeal is to a just and enlightened community—to the honorable men of all parties—desiring that all political prejudices may be discarded, and an impartial judgment pronounced on the facts and the testimony.

Let me call your attention to the consideration of the probable truth of Row's statement, and the opposing proof. That part of Row's affidavit chiefly affecting my character is contained in what he calls my public address to the people. He describes me as asserting in that address that each settler was to have a quarter-section at government price; provided, however, that said settler would sign a paper obliging himself not to bid for any other lands thus offered at the sale of public lands of the United States. Now, had I been disposed thus to violate the laws of my country, by imposing these disgraceful and illegal restrictions upon the settlers of the State, can it be credited that I would proclaim this open violation of the laws, this shameless outrage upon the rights of so many citizens, in a public address to the people? A tale so improbable and extraordinary carries with it its own refutation. Yet it is this tale which is introduced with such a solemn pomp by George Poindexter into the Senate of the United States, made there the subject of grave debate, and of still graver charges, published at his instance, and spread before the people in the journals of the day, to gratify, by the immolation of private character, the insatiate fury of malignant partisans, who, having in their own career violated every principle of honor, and every law, human and divine, outcasts from social intercourse, with the brand of infamy upon them, would desire to clothe others with their own vile mantle of disgrace and shame.

Let us now examine the proof opposed to Row's statement; and first, I present the original company agreement, with the original signatures upon it; which agreement hundreds will testify was read by me, and made the basis of my speech at Chocchuma, to which Row refers. The clause in relation to settlers is in the third article, which, by the sixth article, is made unalterable.

Company Agreement.

"ARTICLE 3. It is expressly understood that, if any and should be bid in by said commissioners on which an actual settler is now residing, that he is to have the eighth or quarter-section, including his residence and improvement, at cost, upon the condition precedent that said settler, at any time during the day that said sale of the land so occupied by him takes place, actually pays in cash to said commissioners the amount so paid by them at said public sales as aforesaid, otherwise this clause will be considered as not inserted; but none are precluded from bidding for any land."

Row's affidavit, and version of R. J. Walker's speech.

"I arrived at Chocchuma on the 23d of October, two days after the commencement of the sales, and on that day there was a public address made to the people by a gentleman, who said that they, the companies of speculators, had united to shield the actual settlers from being imposed upon by individual speculators, and that his company was willing that any actual settler should buy one quarter-section of land wherever he pleased, and as low as he could get it, if it were at the government price; or that his company would purchase it for him as low as they could get it, and let him have it for what they gave; provided, however, that said settler would sign a paper obliging himself not to bid for any other lands thus offered at that sale of public lands of the United States."

The remarkable passages are italicized, in order to place in striking contrast the difference between the company agreement as it exists, and was read by me in my speech, and Row's version of it. The entire agreement is published; it is a record that cannot lie; it was always open to public inspection at Chocchuma, as it is now to that of any individual who chooses to examine it. It is the original that is offered, with the original signatures; and it will be perceived that the very clause in relation to settlers declares that none are precluded from bidding for any land, whereas Row falsely swears the very reverse.

The opposing testimony does not stop here. I have accidentally met with several individuals, of the highest respectability, since the publication of Row's affidavit, and all of whom concur in the most clear and emphatic contradiction of Row's statement. The testimony of a host of witnesses will be taken, but I could not delay this publication for that purpose, and permit Row's statement to circulate uncontradicted throughout the Union, exultingly sustained in the speeches of Henry Clay and George Poindexter. Indeed, the number of affidavits which I have been enabled to take during the few days which have elapsed since I first saw Row's statement, has been diminished by my necessary attendance as counsel at the highest courts in the State, and also by severe indisposition during part of this period. Yet I have, in this short interval, been enabled to procure, and now present to the public, a mass of testimony directly contradictory of Row's statement, and establishing the propriety and legality of my conduct throughout the sales.

I now publish the affidavits of Hiram Coffee, J. A. McRaven, John Maxwell, George Dougherty, Guilford Griffin, D. W. Connelly, and the statement of W. L. Sharkey, chief justice of the high court of errors and appeals of this State—gentlemen, I believe without an exception, opposed to me in politics, and the political supporters of my accusers on the floor of the Senate; witnesses whose veracity is undoubted, and many of whom have heretofore held, or are now holding, high and responsible offices from the people of this State. Armed with the power of no senatorial committee, unable to compel the attendance of a single individual to depose in my behalf—these depositions of my political opponents are the generous results of the deepest convictions in the minds of those who gave them, of the utter falsehood of the charges alleged against me—a conviction derived from a personal knowledge of the facts. The following is an extract from the deposition of Hiram Coffee:

"Hiram Coffee, being sworn, saith that he was present when Robert J. Walker made his speech to the people at the land sales at Chocchuma, on the 23d of October last, and the deponent heard the entire speech, and listened to it all attentively, and said Walker did not assert that the condition upon which the settler was to have a quarter-section at government cost was, that said settler would sign a paper obliging himself not to bid for any other lands thus offered at that sale of the lands of the United States; nor did he use any words to that effect; nor did he state that any pledge, verbal or written, should be required from any settler not to bid for any lands in addition to a quarter-section; but it was my clear understanding that any settler was at perfect liberty, in addition to the quarter-section that might be secured to him through the company, to bid for any other lands whatever."

The deposition of J. A. McRaven, sheriff of Hinds county, one of the most respectable citizens of this or any other State, and an ardent opponent of this administration, is to the same effect as that of Mr. Coffee. The depositions of both these gentlemen are in direct opposition to Row's version of my speech. They not only contradict the assertions which Row attributes to me in that speech, but state the very reverse. Who is to be believed?—these gentlemen, whose depositions are in accordance with the company agreement, or Row, whose statement contradicts it? Row says that each settler who obtained a quarter-section through the company, was to "sign a paper obliging himself not to bid for any other lands thus offered at that sale of the public lands of the United States." As there were hundreds of settlers who obtained their quarter-section through the company at the government price, if such a paper ever existed, it can be produced, or some one who saw or signed it, or was asked to sign it; but this never can or will be done, because such paper never existed.

Row's statement is further disproved by the deposition of Guilford Griffin, a justice of peace, of the town of Clinton. Mr. Griffin says, "The company exacted no pledges from any one not to bid against the company; and deponent heard members of the company bidding against the company without any objection; and deponent also heard settlers who had obtained their quarter-section through the company at the minimum price, bid against the company for other lands in addition." This latter part of the extract is italicized, because it demonstrates that the practice of the company was in accordance with their agreement.

The deposition of John Maxwell also establishes the fact, that the company agreement restricted none from bidding for any land; and the statement of W. L. Sharkey, Esq., chief justice of the high court of errors and appeals of this State, who is of the same political party as George Poindexter, is to the same effect.

I also present an extract from the deposition of George Dougherty, Esq., one of the most respectable citizens of this State, and late representative in the legislature from the county of Adams. I have appended the certificate of John A. Quitman, chancellor of this State, as regards the character of Mr. Dougherty. It was not necessary in this State, but might be of importance elsewhere. Chancellor Quitman and Mr. Dougherty have always been opposed to me in politics.

"The undersigned, George Dougherty, being duly sworn, deposes and says, he was present at Chocchuma at the commencement of the late land sales, and attended the same occasionally for several days. The deponent was present about the commencement of the sales, when a committee of speculators from Alabama called upon Robert J. Walker, at his room, and proposed to said Walker to unite with them in the purchase of public lands; and that, in the course of conversation, Robert J. Walker proposed to them to respect the claims of settlers, in the same manner and to the same extent as if a pre-emption law had actually passed—which was strenuously resisted by the Alabama committee at first, but was insisted upon by said Walker, and finally acceded to by the Alabama committee. After this the Alabama committee proposed that the settlers should agree not to bid for any adjacent lands; which proposition was warmly opposed by Mr. Walker. He stated that such conditions were unjust and illegal, and that he never would assent to them, nor would he join any company by which the settlers would be restricted from bidding on any lands they thought proper, in addition to those on which they had settled, without any qualification or condition whatever; and that not one cent, in any form or shape, should be exacted or received from any settler in compensation for any act of the company whatever, and that if these conditions were not fully agreed to, that he, R. J. Walker, would oppose the Alabama company from that time to the close of the sales, to the whole extent of his money and information. This was not agreed to by the Alabama committee at that time, but, upon further consultation with their company, was finally acceded to."

Here is the proof of the conference, which resulted in the company agreement, and which establishes my firm, unwavering, and successful opposition to the exaction of any compensation from settlers, or the imposing any conditions upon them. Here, also, it is clearly shown that my object in joining any company was not a profit or a speculation for myself, but the protection of the settlers; that I refused to unite with any company that had not this for its object, and the witnesses all unite in declaring that I exerted myself faithfully to secure the lands to the settlers without any compensation to me or restrictions upon them, and that my conduct, in the language of Judge Sharkey, was perfectly fair, legal, and liberal. The depositions further established the fact that, by joining the company, I was "enabled to protect the settlers against the speculators, who had taken the numbers of the improved lands, but thereby realized a much smaller profit than I otherwise might have done by not joining the company." Let me also call the attention of the public, not in the spirit of self-eulogy, but as a part of this vindication, to the following extract from Mr. Coffee's deposition, which is in accordance with the rest of the testimony.

"Deponent attended the sales every day, observed the conduct of Robert J. Walker attentively, and states from his own knowledge, and also from the statement of settlers made to him, that said Walker exerted himself faithfully, by all fair and honorable means, to secure the lands to the settlers at the minimum price, without any reward or compensation whatever; and deponent believes, and such was the opinion of the settlers, that, but for the exertions of said Walker, the settlers would either have lost their lands, or exactions of money would have been required from them; and the settlers expressed themselves in the highest terms of the conduct of said Walker throughout the sales; and deponent heard them say, that the public dinner which was given by the settlers to the company, at the close of the sales, was given to Robert J. Walker, as a mark of approbation of his conduct at the sales, but that the company should all attend the dinner. The deponent did not hear of or observe any conduct of Robert J. Walker at the sales, illegal, improper, or illiberal, but highly approved of his conduct throughout, and believes said approval was universal."

The dinner to which Mr. Coffee alludes was attended by a vast concourse of settlers, at whose request their thanks were returned to the company in a public address, delivered by one of their representatives in Congress from this State. Fellow-citizens, can it be credited, that if, as Row has stated, I had imposed these illegal and degrading restrictions upon the settlers, of the country—depriving them of a privilege common to every American citizen—that these identical settlers, whose feelings had been thus outraged and rights abused, should, at the close of the sale, when every inducement but that of gratitude must have ceased to exist, thus honor with a public dinner the very man who had violated their rights and the laws of his country? The fact is also proved that, when the company had expired (for it is shown not to have extended to the purchase of lands on the Mississippi river,) I pursued precisely the same course, in relation to the settlers on the river, that I had done toward the other settlers when the company was in operation, and that, in the language of the testimony, these settlers on the river declared, "that Robert J. Walker had been most active and zealous in securing their lands at the minimum price, and that without any reward or compensation whatever, and these settlers expressed the strongest feeling of gratitude toward Mr. Walker for his timely and efficient interference in their favor." It is further established, in proof, that the agent who attended the sales at Columbus to purchase lands for Robert J. Walker and Thomas Barnard, "was instructed by them not to bid on any man's improvement." And here it is proper to add, that Mr. Barnard most cordially co-operated with me in preventing illegal restrictions being imposed upon settlers. As the name of Thomas G. Ellis, my colleague, from Mississippi, as one of the agents of this company, has also been dragged into this controversy, it is due to truth and justice that I should state that, but for his zealous and uniform co-operation and support, my efforts to protect the settlers would, I fear, have proved unavailing. Mr. Ellis united with myself and Mr. Barnard in publicly declaring that he would join no company that had not for its object the protection of the settlers. We consulted in regard to the terms upon which we could or would agree to join any company, and fixed upon those detailed in Mr. Dougherty's deposition as our ultimatum. The disinterested views of Mr. Ellis are more fully detailed in the following extract from Mr. Griffin's depositions: "Deponent was present after the company had purchased all their lands at public sales, and heard Thomas G. Ellis move, that such lands as had been purchased by the company adjacent to any settler, that such settler should be permitted to buy them from the company at government cost, which motion was seconded by Robert J. Walker." There is one remaining statement of Row, in relation to myself, too palpably false to pass by unnoticed. Row says, "in bidding for the land which I (Row) had selected before the sale, I found it run on me, and knocked off to myself and son at between four and five dollars per acre, whereas I observed that the company generally obtained their lands at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and, with but very few exceptions, no person bid against them. I was, therefore, induced to forfeit the lands thus charged to myself and son, to be resold. It was then purchased by the agent of the company of speculators, at a price not exceeding one dollar and twenty-seven cents—who immediately sold it to me at one dollar advance per acre, which he had previously agreed to do." I have before me a transcript from the records of the land office of all the lands sold at the public sale at Chocchuma, made out for me by Mr. Ives, a justice of the peace at Chocchuma, at the close of the sales, which establishes the following facts incontrovertibly. That the only land bought by Row and his son was on the 25th October, as follows: By Ed. Row, E. half of S. E. quarter, section 11, township 24, range 3, east, at three dollars per acre; Ed. Row, W. half of S. W. quarter, section 12, same township and range, at three dollars and fifty cents per acre; Ed. Row, E. half of N. E. quarter, section 13, same township and range, two dollars and fifty cents per acre; Ab. V. Row, W. half of N. E. quarter, section 13, same township and range, at four dollars per acre. These were all the purchases made by any of the Rows. Instead of any land being "knocked off" to Ed. Row "at between four and five dollars per acre," the highest price at which any tract was "knocked off" to him was three dollars fifty cents per acre; and the highest price at which any tract was bid off to his son, was one tract at four dollars per acre, and not one single tract to either of them at between four and five dollars per acre, as he deliberately has sworn the whole was.

Now, instead of this land being bid in by an agent of the company, and at a price not exceeding one dollar and twenty-seven cents per acre, the first forfeited tract of Edward Row, viz. E. half of S. E. quarter, section 11, township 24, range 3, east, was resold, on the 26th October, 1833, and purchased, as the record shows, at two dollars and sixty cents per acre, by A. I. Humphrey, who was not an agent or member of the company, or in any manner concerned therein. The remaining tracts were purchased by the company, but without the slightest inducement ever being held out at any time to Row to forfeit them. Row remained at Chocchuma, as he says, three days after forfeiture, and after the purchase by the company; and it is true that, during this period, the company did agree to sell this land to Roe, but this agreement to sell was not made until after the land had been purchased by the company, and the sale was then made to Row with great reluctance, and at his pressing solicitation; and the sole inducement to sell to him, at the price he offered, was Row's representation that he was a very poor man, and that he desired to settle upon the land.

This transaction, then, as it occurred, is perfectly fair, legal, and creditable to the company, and has been basely perverted and distorted, either by Row himself or the person who wrote out Row's affidavit. If Row means to say that the company sold him this land upon an agreement made with him previously to the purchase by the company, it is a base falsehood; but if he intends to say that the land was actually sold and transferred to him upon an agreement previous to the transfer, but subsequent to the purchase by the company, it is true to the extent which I have stated. On this subject Row's statement wears the aspect of intentional ambiguity; for the sole causes which he alleges as having induced him to forfeit the land were, its being knocked off to himself and son at between four and five dollars per acre, and that the company, as he says, generally obtained their lands at $1 25 per acre, and that few persons bid against them; but he does not pretend to say that he was induced to forfeit the lands by any agreement with any agent of the company to purchase the land and sell it to him at a certain advance; which agreement, if it had existed, would certainly have been a strong inducement for the forfeiture. Nor is it true, as stated by Row, that "he observed that the company generally obtained their lands at $1 25 per acre, and, with but very few exceptions, no person bid against them," and that this could induce to the forfeiture; for during the whole of this period, a reference to the records and the proof will show that the average price of the actual company purchases for themselves is nearly the same as that paid by individual purchasers, that the company were opposed in a majority of their bids. But as Row purchased no lands, except on the 25th October, and in township 24, range 3 east, the sale of which immediately preceded his forfeitures, at the opening of the sales on the morning of the 26th, as he was only interested in those sales, he must "have observed" the bids on that day, and in that township, more narrowly than any other sales; yet the records demonstrate that three fourths of the company purchases made on that day, and in that township, were at a price greatly exceeding $1 25 per acre, instead of the "very few exceptions" sworn to by Row.

It will be observed, on reference to the records, that a vast portion of all the lands purchased by the company at $1 25 per acre was purchased by me. The reason is, that immediately on receiving the President's proclamation, Mr. Barnard and myself employed one of the most skilful and competent surveyors of the State, heretofore residing in the country about to be sold, to explore the same, and take numbers of all the valuable unimproved land in the eastern ranges, which embraced the company's transactions, and these numbers were handed to us at Chocchuma, and much the larger portion of them were possessed by no other individuals, and without a company these lands would have been bought at the minimum price by us individually, whereas they were all given up to the company, and the sales of these very lands by the company constituted a very large portion of their profit, which might have been realized by us individually, whereas the entire profit realized by either of us from the company operations, or that ever can be realized, as the company has sold and received the money for every acre of its lands, was three hundred dollars.

Hence the absolute certainty of the fact, and it must have been perfectly obvious to me before joining the company, "as proven," that, by giving up this information to the company, and uniting with them, he was enabled to protect the settlers against the speculators, who had taken the numbers of most of the improved lands, but thereby realized a much smaller profit than he might have done by not joining the company. But, it may be asked, why was any company formed? It is answered, that a company, as established by the proof, was already organized, composed of strangers to the soil and aliens to the interests of Mississippi; a company based upon the principle of purchasing the lands of settlers at the minimum price, and disposing of the same lands at an advance to such of the settlers as were able to pay, retaining the balance in the hands of the company; a principle by which many of the poor settlers would have been expelled from their homes, others greatly injured by the advance exacted from them by the company, and no greater price realized by the government for its lands, as is clearly proven by the fact, long since communicated by the joint letter of R. T. Archer and George Dougherty to Washington city, that such a company did go into operation at Columbus; that it extended no pre-emption to settlers, but exacted advances from them: and yet, as I am informed by a gentleman who has compared the lists, the government obtained a larger average price for the lands sold at Chocchuma than for those sold at Columbus. I am also informed, and have no doubt of the fact, that the government obtained a higher average price for its land sold at Chocchuma than at any previous land sale in this State, since the cash system was established. The government, then, lost nothing by the organization of this company. It was another company of speculators, who desired to purchase lands of settlers at the minimum price, and make illegal exactions from them, that sustained the loss, and the difference was realized by the settlers themselves. The choice presented was between the attempting to break up the sales, and thereby disappointing the views of the government and the wishes of the settlers, or to see an unlawful combination progress, realizing illegal advances from settlers; or to save and protect the settlers by the organization of a company such as was formed at Chocchuma, upon a basis perfectly consistent with the principles of law and justice; a copartnership to purchase lands, vacant and unoccupied lands; precluding no one, either in or out of this company, from bidding for any lands whatever, and providing that if the company purchased any lands of an actual settler, they would sell them to him, as they had a right to do, at government cost. I adopted the last and only alternative as the best, under all the circumstances, the only one that would save the settlers; and so far from regretting the act, it is and ever will be to me a source of inexpressible gratification that I was thereby enabled to procure a pre-emption for so vast a number of the citizens of Mississippi. And who complains, or has any right to complain, that an individual or a number of individuals, as a partnership, acted as if a pre-emption law had passed? that they acted in consonance with the settled policy of the government, manifested by the passage of pre-emption laws from year to year, and again at their last session, and as undoubtedly Congress would have acted in relation to this new country, had not their attention been entirely absorbed at the preceding session by the Carolina question? Who is it that assails the agent of the settlers; that denounces this proceeding as a fraud upon the government; that would annul the titles of the settlers, and subject them to the experiment of the second sale of their lands, now rendered so valuable by the improvements which they have made, and hold up these improved farms to be resold at an exorbitant advance, extorted from an oppressed community? Is it a senator, misrepresenting the generous and confiding people of this State, who would dare to pursue this course? Is it he who exultingly produced upon the floor of the Senate, and bolsters by certificates, the affidavit of Row, when, if that affidavit be true, the title of every settler is no better than a piece of blank paper? Can it be that a senator from this State would thus sweep from their homes that people whom it should be his pride and glory to protect; those hardy pioneers who have entered the forest of Mississippi, and made the wilderness to bloom and blossom as the rose? If he has the heart to attempt these things, let the settlers know that he has not the power to accomplish his object. He may strike; but, like the viper with his fangs extracted, no poison will accompany the wound. Let those settlers know that they are surrounded by a brave and generous people, who will protect them, even at the hazard of their fortunes and their lives, in the possession of their homes and firesides, of which they are the lawful proprietors; but let them know, what is still better, that they are surrounded by the impregnable barriers of the law and of the constitution. Yes; that the constitutions of the Union and of the State stand before their little Edens like the flaming two-edged sword of the archangel upon the borders of Paradise, debarring the approach of sin and death.

There is the company's agreement, and I challenge the production of any law, human or divine, with which it conflicts in the slightest degree. There is no law prohibiting copartnerships, for the purchasing of public lands, and if the copartners can purchase in their own names, they can purchase in the name of any agent, as a trustee for them. Whatever it is lawful for copartners to do in their own name, they may do in the name of their agent. Patents have issued to copartnership purchasers at the public sales, or to their agents or trustees, and will continue to issue, so long as there are any public lands to sell, or this is a free government that sells them; and it will only be when this free government shall have rocked from its foundation and settled in the dead sea of despotism, that it will dare to prevent copartnership purchases of the public domain.

If two may purchase public lands by themselves or agents in copartnership, so may two hundred; they may agree among themselves to purchase only improved lands, or totally vacant and unimproved lands, which would be the same thing as if they agreed among themselves not to purchase the lands occupied by settlers. They may agree among themselves, before they purchase, to sell their vacant and unoccupied lands, or their improved lands, at a price previously established by themselves, they may designate the security which they will take, and the class of purchasers to whom they will sell, and they may therefore agree among themselves, as did the Chocchuma land company, that they will sell the vacant and unoccupied lands that they might purchase at a general sale, and the improved land they might purchase they will sell to settlers at government cost. Nor are they compelled to keep their association secret. Whatever it is lawful for them to agree in private among themselves to do, they may announce to the public. These would appear to be the plain and self-evident axioms of the law; but there is nothing too clear to escape the attacks of the fangless vipers who have assailed this contract, nor any absurdity too great to be swallowed by the all-devouring spirit of party. Had the company's agreement restricted any one from bidding for any land, the government might have had some cause to complain; but when the agreement provides that "none are precluded from bidding for any lands," and when it is conclusively proven that even members of the company were at perfect liberty to bid against the company, or against each other, and did so; that all, whether settlers or not, were at perfect liberty to bid against the company, and did so, and that even settlers who had obtained their quarter-sections through the company, were at perfect liberty to bid against the company for any other lands in addition, and did so—who has any right to complain? The privilege of bidding was entirely unrestricted, and none could complain, unless, indeed, an individual or copartnership, by instructions to their agent, may not voluntarily abstain from bidding for the lands of settlers, and if they may may not so abstain, must they bid against every settler, and how much must they bid, or can they ever be permitted to cease bidding? If such absurdities could be recognised as law, dangerous, indeed, would it be to attend a land sale. This contract requires no support, but, if it wanted any, it is sustained by the highest authorities; its legality and propriety are supported by the opinions of W. L. Sharkey, chief justice of the high court of errors and appeals of this State, and of Judge Black, a senator in Congress from this State, both of whom attended the land sales, but were not members of the company. It is also sanctioned by the opinions of John Bell, the present speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, a most worthy and highly talented gentleman, who has few equals as a lawyer or a statesman; and of Mr. Dickinson, another member of Congress, of highly promising talents, and a truly amiable and virtuous man—both of whom attended the land sales, but neither of them was a member of the company. This company agreement was also greatly eulogized as perfectly legal and laudable, by a representative in Congress from this State, in a public address at Chocchuma; and the Hon. A. R. Govan, late representative in Congress from the State of South Carolina, a gentleman of the purest principles, and possessing a high order of intelligence, and that punctilious sense of honor for which the Carolina character is so justly distinguished, gave the company the sanction of his name. Could all these gentlemen have been deceived, as regards the propriety and legality of this contract? The company itself comprises great moral worth and intelligence, and, as General Jackson is held responsible for the acts of this company, as, in the madness of party he soon may be for storms on the ocean or the land, it may not be irrelevant to remark, that a majority of the Mississippians composing this company are opposed to the administration. The partisan editor of the Port Gibson Correspondent, in the reckless attack which he has made upon me on this subject, has thought proper to designate me as occupying "a conspicuous station in the Jackson ranks." This unfolds the true secret of the attack upon my private character by George Poindexter and his supporters here. But a short time has elapsed since one, assuming to speak by authority of George Poindexter, proposed, through the public press, that the honorable senator would discuss the propriety of his political course before the people of this State. I then accepted the challenge through the journals of the day. But the honorable senator fled the field, and though he could, in my absence, and when I was far distant, gratify his revengeful feelings by assailing my private character, yet he dared not then, nor dare he now, to discuss with me, face to face, the propriety of his political conduct before the people of Mississippi, whom he has so long misrepresented, insulted, and betrayed.

I might confine this vindication to myself; but, as I fear no responsibility where truth and justice require that I should defend the innocent, I take this occasion to say, that the whole statement of Row, so far as it purports to implicate the register and receiver at Chocchuma, in any illegal practices, is an entire mass of falsehood, without one redeeming ray of truth. It is conclusively proved, by the testimony I present, that "the register and receiver were not members of the company, or interested therein in any way;" that they were not present when my speech was made, but were, during the whole of that period, at their office, transacting the public business; that the observation imputed by Row to the register never was made; and that the whole transaction stated in the deposition of Row, in regard to Mr. Wilkinson, is entirely untrue.

I have heretofore proved that my motive in joining the company was not to realize a profit to myself, but to secure a pre-emption for settlers of the State; and my conduct upon that occasion was in accordance with the settled principles of my life, long previously and repeatedly avowed. On this subject I might make numerous references, but I will content myself with an extract from my public address, delivered on the 10th October, 1830, at a public dinner given in honor of the Chickasaw and Choctaw treaties, which speech was published immediately after its delivery. Speaking in regard to this then newly-acquired country, I declared, "Next in order, and perhaps of superior importance, would it be, to secure a pre-emption of one section to the enterprising settlers of this new country. The hardy pioneer of settlements, the Daniel Boon of the forest, deserves the aid of a paternal government. Would it not be most unjust that, when the emigrant had fixed his new abode in the wilderness, erected his cabins, and commenced his improvements, he should be driven from the home he hoped to secure to himself and children, by the overbidding of the heartless speculator? It is such men as this emigrant, who push the bayonet in time of war, upon whose affection the country must repose in the hour of danger, who, though poor, is rich in patriotism, and whose heart is bounding with the life-blood which circulates through the veins of an honest man."

My confidence in these principles was greatly strengthened by my visit to this new country. I passed through it shortly before the land sales. I saw the hardy pioneers who had entered and were subduing the forest, and had selected a home which they had hoped to secure by pre-emption from a paternal government. But their reasonable expectations had been disappointed. I saw them in a period of distress and difficulty. Speculators had taken the numbers of their lands, and fixed upon them a price, in many instances far beyond their ability to pay—a price enhanced by the grounds they had cleared, the improvements they had made, and the houses they had erected. I found the emigrant surrounded by wife and children, who, with him, looked forward to the public sales as the probable period which was to expel them from the little spot which they had selected and improved, and throw them forth again into the wilderness, without a roof to shelter or a home to protect them. Their embarrassments and difficulties were explained to me, and my feelings were warmly enlisted in their behalf. I found many of them had been volunteers in the last war, who, in the hour of gloom and danger, had rallied to the rescue of our common country, and moistened with their blood the soil of Mississippi—that soil which they had so gallantly defended, and from which they were now so soon about to be expelled. Yes, when Mississippi was an infant Territory—when the savage tomahawk at Fort Mimms had so recently spilled the blood of the aged and of the young, of fathers, husbands, mothers, wives and children, in one indiscriminate and unsparing massacre—when, unsatiated with blood, the exulting savage bounded forward through the scattered and defenceless settlements of eastern Mississippi—when consternation and alarm pervaded this Territory, and forts were erected upon the very margin of the father of waters—full many of these very settlers, whom it is now deemed fraudulent to have protected, came forward and gave Mississippi peace and repose. Not a few of their gallant comrades left their bones bleaching upon our battle-fields, and should the survivors be denied a home within that Territory, and by that people, whose families and firesides they had so gallantly aided to defend? If there be any who desire their exclusion from the State, that a few more dollars might be gathered into the national Treasury, I envy them neither the weakness of their judgments nor the malignity of their hearts. Let the citizens of the older settled counties of Mississippi reflect how many of themselves, or their ancestors, obtained their fortunes by gratuitous grants of large bodies of land from the British or Spanish government, or by pre-emptions or donation grants of an entire section from Congress, and they can never complain that the settlers of this new country obtained a quarter-section of land at the minimum price, or, if they do so complain, they must be an avaricious and unfeeling aristocracy, and I prefer their censure to their applause. The land sales at Chocchuma were the first and only sales at which I ever attended. It is true that I did purchase or enter there a considerable body of land, thereby identifying my fortunes and interest with the future growth and prosperity of Mississippi; it is true that these lands have advanced and are advancing in value; but I have yet to learn that it is criminal in me to exercise a privilege that is common to every other citizen, that of purchasing a portion of the soil of that country for whose freedom my father toiled, through fatigue and danger, as one of the volunteer soldiers of liberty in the war of the Revolution.

From those editors throughout this State and Union who have published Row's affidavit involving my character, by charges which are so clearly disproved, have I not a right to demand, as an act of justice, that they should publish this vindication? They have published a libel upon my character, which is far dearer to me than life or fortune—a libel upon the character of a private citizen whose reputation previously had never been assailed; and they must be dead to every manly feeling, and deaf to the call of truth and honor, if they will deny me a full and fair hearing before the readers of their gazettes, and thereby refuse now to send the antidote where they have heretofore instilled the poison. And to such editors as have not published Row's statement, I appeal, as the guardians of the reputation of an American citizen unjustly assailed through this wide-extended republic, and request that, as they themselves, if ever basely traduced, would desire the privilege of being heard before the public in their defence, that, governed by the same just and holy principle, they will publish this vindication.

ROBERT J. WALKER.

August 4, 1834.

EXHIBIT B.

Company Agreement.

It is agreed between the persons who subscribe this instrument, as follows:

1. That Malcolm Gilchrist, Robert Jamison, jr., Thomas G. Ellis, and Robert J. Walker, be and the same are hereby constituted by the undersigned, commissioners, with full power to bid for any lands at the public sales which commenced on the 21st of October, 1833, at Chocchuma, and to continue for and during two weeks, from said 21st of October, 1833.

2. The lands bid in by said persons are to be held by said commissioners for the benefit of the persons who subscribe this contract, upon the following terms; that is to say: each individual subscriber of this contract furnishes the sum of one thousand dollars each, which constitutes a joint stock, and is to be applied by said commissioners in the purchase of said lands at said sales, equally, share and share alike, each individual subscriber of said sum of one thousand dollars being entitled to one equal portion of said land so purchased; and when said sum so subscribed is exhausted, each subscriber furnishing one thousand dollars, and so on, from day to day during said sales of two weeks, as aforesaid, is entitled to his equal share of said lands, as aforesaid, it being understood that no call will be made for more money until the sum held by the commissioners, as aforesaid, is exhausted; and, in case of any difference of opinion as to the proceedings under this contract among said commissioners, said difference is to be decided by lot.

3. It is expressly understood that, if any lands should be bid in by said commissioners, on which an actual settler is now residing, that he is to have the eighth or quarter-section, including his residence and improvement, at cost, upon the condition precedent that said settler, at any time during the "day" that said sale of the land so occupied by him takes place, actually pays in cash to said commissioners the amount so paid by them at said public sales as aforesaid, otherwise this clause will be considered as not inserted; but none are precluded from bidding for any land.

4. The lands bid in by said commissioners at the public sales this day are included in this arrangement.

5. It is expressly understood that no individual subscriber shall, at any one subscription, put in said stock more than $1,000, nor less than $100; and it is expressly understood that each individual subscriber is to hold a share of said land in proportion to the money so put in by him into said joint stock. This agreement is subscribed this 22d day of October, 1833; the word "week" being erased, and the word "day" inserted in lieu thereof before subscribing the same.

6. Said commissioners are invested with full power to make such further regulations in the premises as may, in their opinion, be most conducive to the best interest of the subscribers, but not to affect, in any manner, the privilege granted by this instrument to the settlers; and said four commissioners are authorized, at any time before next Saturday week, to sell at a profit for the benefit of the subscribers, in proportion to the money invested as aforesaid, any lands embraced in this arrangement; and upon next Saturday week, at Chocchuma, for actual cash only, said commissioners are to expose said lands embraced within this arrangement, then remaining unsold, confining the bids to the subscribers of this arrangement, except that each actual settler who has taken the benefit of his contract may bid at said second sales, or any person else whatever.

CHOCCHUMA, October 22, 1833.

EXHIBIT C.

To the Honorable the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned memorialist most respectfully represents to your honorable body, that, feeling a natural desire to maintain, protect, and transmit to his posterity, a name heretofore unsullied, as the most valuable inheritance which he could secure to them; and feeling that his reputation has been assailed by the adduction of charges equally unjust and ungenerous; and that the mode selected of sustaining and giving weight and momentary plausibility to them, is such as must be preclusive of his just rights, and subject him at least to temporary condemnation in the estimation of his countrymen, however undeservedly the language of reproach may be, if a fair opportunity were presented him of counteracting the misrepresentations afloat in regard to his public conduct, begs leave to submit to the consideration of your honorable body the following statements of facts, relying with a strong hope upon the willingness of your honorable body to do him full and speedy justice in the premises.

Having been preferred, some years since, to an official station, the duties appertaining to which were necessarily to be performed in a land of strangers, my first wish was to perform them honestly and faithfully to the government under whose authority I had been called to act, and with a proper regard to the interest of those who might from time to time be concerned in the transaction of business connected with my station. With these duties I was not at first familiar; but I labored most strenuously and unremittingly to compensate for all deficiency on this point, by superior industry and vigilance. I flattered myself that I was not unsuccessful in the attainment of the objects contemplated; and that not only have my official labors resulted in the promotion of the ends of the government, but that they have been likewise rewarded with the approbation of all unprejudiced men who have enjoyed an opportunity of surveying my public actions. Hardly had I assumed the discharge of my functions as register of the land office at Mount Salus, before some indications presented themselves of a disposition on the part of a few illiberal individuals to raise an opposition to me that was deemed unmerited and unjust. Although the sly machinations of these men did not at first seem personal, yet they soon assumed that aspect, by the grossest and most unauthorized misrepresentations of my public acts. So artful and so secret in their malicious designs were those who had thus arrayed themselves against me, without provocation on my part, that it escaped my observation and the observation of my friends, except in their moments of inebriation, or under the influence of suddenly renewed excitement. Knowing that there existed no just cause for the rancor enkindled against me in a few bosoms, and aware, too, that the individuals who had thought proper to assume the attitude of hostility in relation to me were not entitled to and did not actually possess a large share of influence in the community of which I was a member, I relied on that humble share of reputation for honor and probity which I had previously acquired, and an unvarying course of faithful and upright conduct in future, for protection against all the arrows of ungenerous calumny. I was not without a hope, too, that even my persecutors might somewhat relent in their rancor, when they beheld the continual evidences of a determination on my part to perform my duties zealously, fearlessly, and energetically. In this hope, though, I was doomed to experience a disappointment; for the activity of my enemies in the work of defamation seemed constantly to increase in proportion to my efforts to allay it by this course of quiet counteraction.

During the last summer, after I had ceased to act as register of the land office at Mount Salus, an entry was made of a particular section of land by a relation of mine, jointly with one of the most highly respected and truly respectable gentlemen in this State; which transaction was seized upon by my enemies, in my absence, as a pretext for the continuance of their hostility. There was nothing in the transaction referred to not altogether fair and proper in itself; but even if there had been, I had not even the remotest connection with it. Upon being publicly accused of improper conduct in the matter, I deemed it expedient to publish a positive disclaimer, which I accordingly did. The individual with whom this imputation originated was not content to relinquish a controversy in which he had so heartlessly involved me, who had never done him the slightest injury, but he still kept up a disgusting war of personalities against me in the newspapers. To consummate the nefarious design of despoiling me of reputation, rumors were industriously circulated that I had been uncreditably concerned with what were termed the "land speculators" last fall, at the Chocchuma land sales. A member of the legislature of this State introduced a resolution in that body, proposing an investigation of the circumstances connected with the land sales at Chocchuma, just as I arrived in the neighborhood of the seat of government. Receiving information of what was going on, I immediately addressed a communication to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, disclaiming positively all connection with the transactions referred to, and earnestly courting a scrutiny of my conduct. The investigation desired did not take place, and I did really believe, at that time, that the voice of calumny was for ever stifled; but I was mistaken. In a few days, a most slanderous handbill was published, over the signature of "William S. Jones." Inasmuch as the legislature had adjourned without awarding the investigation called for, I was constrained to recognise this reiteration of the charges against me as personal, and accordingly this individual received a public chastisement, not more severe than deserved. His few friends urged him forward to demand honorable satisfaction of my brother, who had been equally implicated with myself in his calumnious imputations, and who had been his punisher. Base and depraved as this man was universally considered, his demand of satisfaction was acceded to. In the sequel he declined the contest, and stood self-confessed and universally recognised as a man totally regardless of honorable standing. Being no longer permitted with impunity to carry on the work of defamation, he commenced, in conjunction with some two or three other individuals in this State, (whom I solemnly pledge myself to prove, at a proper time, entirely destitute of all substantial claim to respectful consideration, either in your honorable body or elsewhere,) the transmission of secret misrepresentations to Washington city. The precise character of the communications thus forwarded by Jones and his confederates is not known to me; but I presume, from certain proceedings lately authorized by your honorable body, that they must have been of the most malevolent cast.

Your memorialist is just informed that a commission has been forwarded to the said William S. Jones and Isaac Caldwell, authorizing them to investigate the charges against his character, and the commission, as your memorialist is informed, expressly excludes him from the privilege of confronting his accusers, and offering exculpatory testimony.

I cannot but believe that your honorable body is inclined to do justice to me and every citizen; but it must be manifest now that the true facts of the case are submitted to your consideration, that your memorialist has no right to expect justice to be awarded to him by such a proceeding as this. The first of these individuals, as already stated, is my personal enemy; the last, also, is my rancorous foe, having been originally concerned in the fabrications of charges against me, and having been their industrious propagator constantly since. The said Isaac Caldwell has been, some months ago, given the "lie direct" in a public journal, in relation to one of the most prominent allegations which have been preferred against me, without the slightest manifestation of resentment on his part, or attempted to relieve himself from the discredit of uttering a manifest falsehood. To evince to your honorable body the zeal which has been felt and practised for my overthrow, and the undue efforts made for the fabrication of inculpatory testimony, it is only necessary to extract an article from a publication made by said William S. Jones, dated 23d August, 1833. After comparing your memorialist to a "Botany-bay convict" and "Algerine pirate," he goes on to advertise for informers, as follows:

"I hope, if any person knows any official misdemeanor of the aforesaid Samuel Gwin, he will immediately inform me of it;" and also says: "I will arraign you at every tribunal before which the cases are actionable, and you shall be prosecuted to the fullest extent."

Isaac Caldwell has, on various public occasions, used language equally strong. After making known these facts to your honorable body, all of which I am prepared to establish, and which I am totally unwilling to believe that your honorable body was before this advised of, I would solemnly appeal to you, whether the individuals selected as commissioners are such men as, in the estimation of your honorable body, are proper to be selected for the purpose of carrying on the investigation ordered? Would honorable men accept as such a commission, under such circumstances? Is it right and proper that this investigation should be altogether ex parte in its character, and conducted too by my most bitter enemies? Should not your memorialist be permitted to introduce testimony exculpatory of his reputation, from the unfounded charges gotten up by his enemies? Should he not be permitted to confront his accusers? Should he not be permitted to be present when an investigation so important to him is going on? Should he be robbed of his reputation by charges which he is able to disprove, but which he has no opportunity of meeting with that promptitude which is essential to a successful defence of himself?

Your memorialist cannot believe that these essential ingredients to a fair and just hearing have been withheld from him by your honorable body with a full knowledge of the circumstances above detailed, as such a supposition would carry with it an inference of intentional injustice, in which I should most unwillingly indulge.

Your memorialist would further show to your honorable body, that, in the prosecution of this inquisitorial proceeding, the commissioners have violated the resolutions of your honorable body, under which they claim the right of acting.

The resolutions above alluded to purport to institute a general inquiry into all the land offices, and into the conduct of all the land officers. But, to reach your memorialist, they have instituted and pressed the whole of their inquiries, in regard to him, at an office where he is no longer in commission, and have omitted or refused to institute it at the office where he is, and the place where the recent public land sales were held, and where the speculations complained of were committed, which appears to have been the cause of action by your honorable body. But, to show that your memorialist was the sole object, in fact, of this investigation, the commissioners have refused to receive or take notice of charges against the present land officers at Mount Salus, alleging that they were not their object; they have refused to commit to writing part of the evidence of a witness who complained of one of the officers at the Chocchuma land sales, although, as your memorialist is informed, the witness had deposed to the facts. They have refused to travel further back into the concerns of the Mount Salus office than the induction of your memorialist into office, because, by so doing, charges of an equally heinous nature, and equally true, as those preferred against him, would be established upon his predecessors. Explanatory testimony is sought after and taken, when one of their favorite officers is implicated, but no such liberty is allowed to your memorialist. The contingent fund of your honorable body is spent in profusion, more to gratify the enmity or the friendship of these men, than the public good; thus presenting the unprecedented facts of persons appointed by one of the highest branches of our government, to perform certain specific and defined duties, yielding themselves to the gratification of one of the worst passions of the human heart, and using that brief authority in abusing the most sacred rights of a citizen, to gratify their deep personal hostility. From this exposition of facts, your honorable body cannot but perceive that this prosecution is carried on, not for the public good, not to detect frauds on the government, but to gratify the personal hostility of a few individuals. Mr. Commissioner Jones requested one of the witnesses not to answer a particular query that was in the list of interrogatories, because of the act complained of, and which could have been proven by this answer wrong. He, the said Jones, was equally criminal with the officer. Mr. Commissioner Caldwell was indirectly, if not directly, concerned with those who are termed land speculators, at the Chocchuma office, through his agent; and he, the said Caldwell, did purchase lands at what was termed the second sales, that is, when the company put up its lands to the highest bidder among those composing the company.

Your memorialist would further complain of the manner of administering the oath to the witnesses. Had the usual form of qualifying them to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, been pursued, he would have been saved the necessity of troubling your honorable body with this communication. But, instead of this mode, they are sworn to answer certain interrogatories, by which they are excluded from detailing the whole transaction, but only such parts as go to inculpate your memorialist. Your honorable body is too well versed in the rules of evidence, not to know that, by this mode of deposing, the most innocent transaction of a man's life may be tortured into guilt; and your memorialist pledges himself to remove every imputation cast upon his character, provided he is permitted to cross-examine the witnesses, and extract from them the whole transaction as it really occurred. To a fair and honorable investigation of his public conduct, your memorialist is not opposed; on the contrary, he most earnestly desires it; he feels that he has the right even to demand it at the hands of his country. He cannot help believing that your honorable body will yet award it to him; he cannot believe that the Senate of the United States is prepared to do him deliberate injustice. As the evidence thus improperly procured against your memorialist, it is presumed, will be published to the world, without his having in any other way an opportunity now to meet it, he hopes, until a different investigation is ordered him, that this memorial may accompany the said evidence, it constituting the only means left him, at this late period of the session of Congress, to meet the said charges.

Your memorialist, in conclusion, most solemnly beseeches your honorable body to order, as soon as possible, such a scrutiny of his official doings as may disclose the whole truth of the case; satisfied that, although he may sometimes have committed indiscretions, he has never performed an act prejudicial to the government or to any man on earth.

SAMUEL GWIN, Register N. W. Land District, Mississippi.

EXHIBIT D.

To the Honorable the Senate of the United States:

The memorial of Samuel Gwin, register of the northwest land district of Mississippi, shows to your honorable body that, about June the 15th, 1834, he addressed a memorial to your honorable body, setting forth certain grievances that he had been subjected to in the examination of witnesess, touching his official conduct while register of the land office at Mount Salus, Mississippi, and in relation to the appointment of certain individuals, by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Lands, to act as judges, and to determine what evidence they would take, and the manner it was to be taken, to the prejudice of your memorialist. At the time this memorial was prepared and forwarded to your honorable body, all the principal facts of the case then within his knowledge were adverted to; not knowing that commissions had issued to other individuals to investigate his conduct for some time after the adjournment of your honorable body, he therefore has no other alternative left him but to present to your honorable body the said memorial, and request that this may be considered a part thereof, with the accompanying affidavits and other statements, to sustain him, and others that he will in a few days forward to the same effect.

It is with extreme regret that your memorialist feels it his bounden duty to animadvert upon the acts of any individuals who have, even remotely, received the sanction of your honorable body; but such has been the glaring injustice toward your memorialist by these commissioners, that he feels it his imperious duty to appeal to you, whence this power emanated, and to ask at your hands an honorable trial. It is unfortunate for him that every individual selected was not only his political but his personal enemy; that, to gratify their private animosities, under the false garb of public good, the sluices of defamation and falsehood have opened, and that without the remotest possibility of his being heard in his own defence—a proceeding unknown to constitutional liberty or law.

Soon after the memorial hereinbefore alluded to was forwarded, your memorialist learned that James R. Marsh had also accepted of the appointment, and was proceeding to take depositions at Chocchuma, at the same time that William S. Jones and Isaac Caldwell were at Clinton. Knowing the rancorous hostility of this individual, and his disposition to misrepresent everything touching your memorialist, and believing that Samuel B. Marsh, a brother of the above individual, had misrepresented the acts of your memorialist to certain members of your honorable body, and induced them to allude to him in their debates during the last session of Congress in no favorable point of view, and from the known dispositions of these individuals to do him injury, and that their maxim was, "the end justifies the means," your memorialist has taken the deposition of every individual that he could who had attended the sales at Chocchuma. By a reference to these depositions, it will appear that James R. Marsh, aided by his brother, Samuel B. Marsh, acted partially in taking their testimony; and if your memorialist is permitted by your honorable body to go into a full investigation of his actings, he has no hesitation in saying that he can prove, by the witnesses themselves, that such parts only as went to implicate your memorialist, were written down by these men, and other parts, explaining, were omitted, and that they refused to examine witnesses who had been summoned by them to attend, upon learning from the witnesses that their evidence would be favorable to your memorialist, and would be in direct opposition to what they were attempting to prove. John T. Hammond states in his deposition that he "believes parts of his statement were not put down by them, the Marshes;" that "he was not qualified to said statement, nor was it ever read to him after it was completed, nor did he ever sign it." He also states, that he "does believe that the said James R. Marsh, in his examination of witnesses, was prejudiced against said Samuel Gwin, and that he is not only politically but personally opposed to him." He further states that, "before the said James R. Marsh took his testimony, that he, said Marsh, pretended to administer an oath to the deponent, but that the testimony taken down by said Marsh was not read to me at any time." William Fanning testifies that he "was in company with James R. Marsh about the 1st of June last; that previous to that time this deponent believed that said Marsh and Gwin were friendly; but, at the time just named, the deponent learned from said James R. Marsh that he was unfriendly to said Gwin, and he told him, deponent, that he then had a commission to examine into the conduct of said Gwin as register at Chocchuma."

In answer to an interrogatory, James A. Girault states that he "knows that they (James R. and Samuel B. Marsh) are political opponents of Colonel S. Gwin, and have heard and believe that they are personal enemies of said Colonel S. Gwin." To a question asked Thomas G. Ringgold, esq., whether he was at Chocchuma during the whole time James R. Marsh was taking the depositions against your memorialist, he answers, "I was at Chocchuma during the whole period of the examination of witnesses, under a commission intrusted to James R. Marsh, esq., and although not present at the examination of witnesses, I heard it said that much unfairness and personal dislike was evinced against the register, and a partiality evinced toward the receiver, in scrutinizing the official conduct of them both." To this interrogatory, "Have not the said Marshes, in all their examinations, shown a wanton bitterness, and party and personal prejudice against said Gwin?" the same individual answers, that "an exparte commissioner was exercising, under the authority of the Senate of the United States, a most dangerous privilege against the birthright and most sacred honor of an American citizen, who was deprived measurably of responding to infamous charges made against him by designing and artful political opponents." He further states, that "they (the Marshes) both exhibited feelings entirely hostile, and so notorious was it in Chocchuma as to draw forth the most deserved censure of all classes and parties." And he further states, that "he has frequently heard them denounce you in the grossest language, and they are both personally and politically opposed to you."

Samuel McCall states, that he informed Mr. Marsh that "he was employed by Governor H. G. Runnels, John C. McLemore, and Wiley Davis, to search for good lands for them to purchase at said sales; that Governor Runnels instructed him, when he found good lands, and persons living on said lands, who were prepared to purchase the same, not to molest them in their possessions, and he was directed to say to such, that he would not bid against them; but, if such individuals were not prepared to purchase the land, and were willing, he would buy it, and pay them for their improvements made on said land, and if they could not agree as to their value, that he was willing to leave it to any two persons to say what it was worth, and he would pay it. In pursuance of these instructions, he did select some numbers, but in no instance did he select lands improved by persons living on them. The above evidence was given in to J. R. Marsh as part of his evidence then given to him, and which, he believes, was written down by said Marsh in said deposition."

Thacker W. Winter states and "believes, that most of the charges that have been circulated against Samuel Gwin, originated with individuals inimical to him, and were partly engendered before the sales commenced. So convinced was this deponent of these facts, that some time before the sales commenced, he cautioned the said Gwin frequently, and during the sales, to be on his guard, that attempts would be made to implicate him in the sales coming on by the persons above alluded to." From these affidavits of individuals, whose veracity no man can or will doubt, it must appear to your honorable body that your memorialist could not expect justice from such men, and the indelicacy of one of them in accepting such an appointment, must be manifest to all reflecting men. That the public good was not their object appears clear by certain claims one of them has put up under the late pre-emption law; and the solemn sense of duty imposed on your memorialist, compelled him to reject said claim, and refer it to the Secretary of the Treasury. Not satisfied to await the decision of this officer, these individuals have denounced your memorialist in the most angry and abusive terms in their public harangues and in their private circles, and when the decision of your memorialist was made known to them, a new batch of depositions were immediately gotten up, to gratify their private resentment at their defeat; thus presenting your memorialist in a singular attitude, of not guarding the public interest, and guarding it too much. Your memorialist would also name another circumstance, which may throw some light on the subject. During the first or second day's sale at Chocchuma, in October, 1833, one of these men applied to one of the land officers, and wished him to receive, in payment of lands he might purchase, certain drafts which he alleged he was authorized to draw on the honorable chairman of the Committee on Lands in your body, and which was refused.

As to the conduct of your memorialist at the public sales at Chocchuma, in 1833, and to counteract any misrepresentation that may be contained in the evidence collected by the commissioner, your memorialist respectfully refers your honorable body to the accompanying depositions, which he wishes made a part of this his memorial, to wit: John T. Hammond, James A. Girault, William Fanning, the address of Robert J. Walker, (printed,) company agreement, (printed,) Joseph A. McRaven, George Dougherty, John A. Quitman, Hiram Coffee, Guilford Griffin, D. W. Connelly, John Maxwell, W. L. Sharkey, Thacker W. Winter, David A. Kerr, Martin Loggins, Titus Howard, William Truit, John Reed, John S. Young, John J. McCaughan, Hon. A. R. Govan, James T. Howard, and a letter from Montford Jones, William Pratt, Olsimus Kendrick, James T. Crawford, Thomas G. Ringgold, Thomas B. Ives, and Samuel McCall. You will also receive documents numbered 1, 2, and 3, which are copies of the rules adopted in conducting the sales at Chocchuma in 1833.

Your memorialist entertains a hope that these documents will satisfy your honorable body that the affidavit of Edmund Row, as reported by the land committee at the last session, is destitute of every semblance of truth. It will also satisfy you how easy it is for an individual, that is filled with prejudice and unfounded fears, to mislead and abuse the confidence, by implication, and destroy the character of any one, no matter how pure his conduct might be, in this exparte examination, where had the whole truth been extorted, the conduct of the individual would appear not only correct but meritorious.

Your memorialist would respectfully refer your honorable body to the statements and depositions of Thomas L. Sumrall, register at the Mount Salus office, John J. McCaughan, and John S. Young, in relation to his conduct while register at the Mount Salus office. That most of the witnesses who have deposed on the subject, at that place, are honestly mistaken, your memorialist hopes is true; yet, there are others, (J. D. Peebles,) whose statements are destitute of every shadow of truth. The individual that would fraudulently and falsely mark a map for his own benefit, and for which your memorialists threatened him with a prosecution, is now brought forward by these corrupt men to implicate those who had detectsd and exposed his own infamous conduct. It was for the firm stand that your memorialist took on this occasion that he has incurred the cowardly hatred of this man, D. Joseph Peebles. Your memorialist cannot, with that respect which is due to your honorable body, dwell on this subject longer. His feelings and inclination prompt him to treat the subject in a different manner; but, as it has impliedly originated in the Senate of the United States, he forbears. Already has one of the purest men in the State lost his life, and left a widow, and his children fatherless, for exposing, under the solemnity of an oath, the disgraceful means used by these commissioners in their exparte inquisitorial examination.

In conclusion, your memorialist would ask, as an officer and citizen of a government which is the proud model of all who admire and love liberty, to view, for a moment, the painful and unmerited position he has been placed in. From the first moment that your memorialist was placed in his present official situation, and before he had even an opportunity of committing error, it will be recollected that a violent and heartless opposition, first politically, and next personally, was arrayed against him. But he had expected, by an honest, faithful and firm discharge of his official duties, at last to silence an opposition that had arisen without any other than a political cause. It is true, your memorialist has occupied a prominent station in the discussions of the day, much against his inclination and will. But, assuming as he is, and, to his mortification and regret, he finds that the opposition arrayed against him has gone on to gather strength from discipline, without waiting for the pretext of error. And, while he is overwhelmed with the various and complicated duties of his office, his enemies are overseeing and disapproving; and, at last, an exparte inquisition is established, by which your memorialist is to be accused, tried and convicted. A commission is issued, giving to his violent personal enemies the privilege of throwing imputations upon his character, without his being allowed to cross-examine the witnesses called upon, or notified of the time, place, or manner of taking, and the evidence thus taken withheld from his inspection; thus preventing him from procuring defensive evidence, which is everywhere at hand. Will a proud and powerful government thus suffer justice to be insulted, and character to be assassinated? Does not this government say that the meanest and poorest of its citizens shall not be deprived of their property but by the judgment of their peers, or the laws of the land? And yet the same government authorizes and commissions one or more of its citizens to rob, and literally steal, the character of those they personally dislike. Shall a man, holding an important office under the government, be denied the common justice which is claimed by, and granted to, the meanest culprit, guilty of the lowest and basest offence? It is the common opinion of mankind, that the character of a nation mainly depends upon the character of the officers who administer the government. Will this government, therefore, professing more equity than any other, deliberately erect an inquisition upon its officers, and see them shamefully prosecuted, without a hearing? denied even the benefits of exparte evidence, by those who conduct the taking of the depositions, and who refuse to insert such part of the evidence of witnesses as is calculated to soften the bitterness of imputations that are made in personal hostility, and prosecuted with shameless disregard of honor and character? Of the nature of the evidence thus taken your memorialist knows nothing, but from rumor; for he is denied the right of inspection. But he does hope that, if the evidence thus taken should be of a nature to throw imputation upon his character, he will be allowed to make his defence. If he should be denied this humble and universal right, he will feel that he is held by a robber while he is stabbed by an assassin.

EVIDENCE IN DEFENCE OF SAMUEL GWIN.

No. 1.—Deposition of T. L. Sumrall, register at Mount Salus, Mississippi.

Question 1. Did you or did you not succeed Samuel Gwin as register in the Clinton land office?

Answer. I did.

Question 2. Have you or have you not seen any evidence in said office that induced you to believe that said Gwin had acted incorrectly, or in violation of law, while he was register of said office?

Answer. There are many marks on the maps in the office of Samuel Gwin's handwriting, (but I believe they were the results of mistakes,) representing the lands to have been sold, which, in fact, are not sold. From what I have seen, I do not believe that he intentionally did anything in violation of law, by which there was any probability of an injury being sustained either by the government or by an individual.

Question 3. Do you or do you not believe that the numerous erroneous marks, purporting to be sales of the land, that you have from time to time discovered, were the result of corrupt intention of said Gwin; and will you state what number of said marks are in the handwriting of said Gwin?

Answer. I do not believe that they were the result of corrupt intentions. I believe that fifty or more of these marks are in the handwriting of said Gwin.

Question 4. Have you not discovered that many of these marks that you supposed erroneous are in point of fact correct, but were not entered on the tract-books?

Answer. I have.

Question 5. Have you not, within a few days past, discovered where an application was filed through mistake, by the receiver, with the file of affidavits filed by him in his office, bearing the number, and all the marks of having been entered and paid for, but owing to thus being misplaced, all evidence (except the mark on the map) was lost in respect to it; and the mark on the map, without the other entries in the books, appear fraudulent, when in fact the money was paid for it, and a receipt is now out for it?

Answer. I have. I have also discovered some sales actually made, but the tract on the map not marked, which induces the belief that some of these erroneous marks were by mistake placed on the map in a place not intended.

Question 6. Do you not believe that other and numerous such cases do exist, and is it not one of the incidents that almost always occur where there is much business done in the office?

Answer. I believe it very probable that other cases of the same nature exist; and it is not uncommon for such incidents to occur in a press of business.

Question 7. Have you not frequently informed applicants who apply to enter land, and after they have described the land they wanted, that it was entered, when in fact the applicant was mistaken in his description of the tract, and led you to believe that it was entered, when in truth the land wanted was not correctly described nor entered? and are not such errors common where there is a press on the office?

Answer. I have had numerous instances to occur in which the applicant was mistaken as to the description of the tract wanted, and when there is a press of business persons frequently go away under the belief that the tract for which they come was entered, when in fact (from their incorrect description of it) it was vacant, and, perhaps, subsequently entered by another; in which case the register is uniformly blamed.

Question 8. You heard much of the testimony given in to Jones and Caldwell, and from what you heard do you not believe that, had S. Gwin been permitted to cross-examine the witnesses and explain, that most, if not all, the insinuations therein contained against him would have appeared perfectly innocent?

Answer. I do.

Question. 9. Have you not understood, and do you not believe that there is and has been, for more than a year past, a deadly hostility existing between S. Gwin and W. S. Jones and J. Caldwell, and from this hostility would you believe that they could act impartially in the examination of witnesses wherein S. Gwin was implicated?

Answer. I have so understood; and I do not believe that impartial justice could be expected from them touching the implication of S. Gwin.

Question 10. Since you have been in office, have not marks been placed on the maps purporting sales, without your knowledge, by fraudulent persons?

Answer. Many marks are to be found on the maps that appear to have been made by other persons than the officers, but at what time they were made I cannot tell. However, I believe they were made by fraudulent persons, for the purpose of preventing others from entering the lands.

Question 11. Have you not understood that S. Gwin had your present desk constructed and made to prevent these frauds, without which they could not be prevented, when the office was much crowded?

Answer. This, S. Gwin, immediately after I took charge of the office, told me was what he intended by having the desk constructed, nor can such frands be easily prevented without some such desk.

Question 12. Did not Joseph D. Peebles (who has given his deposition to Jones and Caldwell) admit to you that he did, while S. Gwin was register, without his knowledge, falsely mark the maps wherein he was interested?

Answer. Joseph D. Peebles did tell me that he (Peebles) marked the maps falsely while S. Gwin was register, but whether or not it was by Gwin's consent, I do not recollect.

Question 13. From all that you have seen in said office, do you or do you not believe that Samuel Gwin, while register of said office, conducted it to the best of his ability and to the interest of the United States?

Answer. I do.

Question 14. Have you not discovered marks on the maps, purporting the lands to be sold that are in fact not sold, made by your own hand, for which you cannot account, and would not any officer be liable to make such mistakes where there is much business done in the office?

Answer. I have discovered several marks on the maps, made by myself, on tracts that cannot be found on the tract-books, for which I cannot account in any other manner than that they were made through mistake, in a press of business; and I find myself, when much pressed, very liable to make such mistakes.

Question 15. Have you or have you not received lately an answer to your report of 24th May, 1834, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, wherein all the discrepancies between the maps and tract-books were set forth, and in this answer how many tracts, marked in the handwriting of Samuel Gwin, on the maps, and not found on the tract-books, have been discovered to have been in good faith entered and paid for?

Answer. I have received an answer from the General Land Office on said report, and I find about fifteen or twenty tracts that appeared to have been marked on said maps, in the handwriting of Samuel Gwin, but were not found on the tract-books, or, if found on them, tracted wrong, which were correctly and legally sold, but were not entered in the tract-book in the proper place, if at all.

Question 16. Will you state the number of entries made by Samuel Gwin, as appears on your books, while he had charge of the Mount Salus office?

Answer. I have seen none but one entry of an eighth, and that jointly with a person by the name of Green.

SENECA PRATT, Justice of the Peace.

NOTE.—The following answers were made by Mr. Sumrall, in August, 1835, and are in continuation of the above deposition, and the whole sworn to, and subscribed by him.

Q. Will you draw a diagram of sections 25 and 36, township 6, range 2, west, and mark the lands entered by L. Wilkinson, and now owned by Samuel Gwin, and also who entered, and when, around Wilkinson's entry?

A. In the margin you have a diagram of the sections.

The east half of northeast quarter, section 36, was entered by William Dunton, on the 30th day of December, 1829.

The west half of northeast quarter, same, was entered by L. Wilkinson, on the 9th day of July, 1829.

The east half of northwest quarter, was entered by L. Wilkinson, on 24th day of November, 1829.

The west half of northwest quarter, was entered by David Holmes, on the 20th day of March, 1826.

The southeast quarter was entered by R. Matthews and J. Matthews, 29th August, 1831, and 10th July, 1832.

The north half of east half of southwest quarter, was entered by S. Gwin, on 29th of August, 1833.

The south half of east half of southwest quarter, was entered by R. Matthews, on 11th October, 1832.

The west half of southwest quarter, was entered by Robert and John Matthews, on 2d October, 1832.

No. 2.—James McLaran's deposition.

Question 1. Have you or have you not resided in Clinton (Mount Salus) during the entire period that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron had charge of the Mount Salus land office?

Answer. I have, constantly, for some time before, and ever since.

Question 2. While thus living in the same town, and in the immediate vicinity of the land office, and also being engaged in public business, have you or have you not had a good opportunity of learning public sentiment in regard to the official acts of Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron, while they had charge of said office, and what was that sentiment, as far as you have been able to learn it?

Answer. I did have a very good opportunity of learning the public sentiment in regard to the officers alluded to; having had considerable business in the office for people at a distance, as well as for myself and friends at home, and being myself engaged in public business, and much with the people, believe my chance for ascertaining the standing of the officers alluded to as fair as any person at that time in this community, and, until the rupture with William S. Jones and one of the officers, I never heard either of them spoken of but in terms of praise.

Question 3. You have either for yourself or distant friends entered much land in said office, while Samuel Gwin had charge of it, and also at other land offices in the United States; how did his official conduct compare with other land officers within your knowledge?

Answer. I did enter much land for people at a distance, as well as for my friends in this neighborhood, as well as some for myself, in the transacting of which I ever found the officers, George B. Dameron and Samuel Gwin, active, ready, candid, and accommodating, much beyond any urbanity met with in other officers; and this, at that time, was a general opinion.

Question 4. Are you acquainted with the general character and standing of George B. Dameron, late receiver at said office—if so, will you state it?

Answer. I must have been well acquainted with him, his character, and standing, having done much business with him, travelled much over the country where he formerly resided and did business, and believe no man occupied a better standing in the community than he did, for every quality calculated to adorn the human character; and that yet his memory is held in the highest esteem, notwithstanding the low, mean attempts to slander his good name.

Question 5. During the latter half of the year 1832, had or had not the health of Mr. Dameron become very delicate, so much so that he was frequently for days, and perhaps weeks, confined to his house; and was or was not this bad health occasioned by his confinement and labor in the office?

Answer. I do know that Mr. Dameron was for a long time sick and confined to his house, and much of his time at the office, when it was evident to all he was in a serious decline, of which he finally died on his way to the seashore, in hopes of bettering his health, and also believe that it was attributable to his constant confinement to his duties in the office that fastened on him the decline that terminated his existence; for he came to our country apparently very healthy.

Question 6. Have you or have you not known him leave the office in the evening in tolerable health, and be taken sick and confined for days if not weeks to his room, without being able to return in that time to the office?

Answer. I have known him to leave the office of an evening with little or no complaint, and be confined for a considerable time, perhaps weeks, without returning, owing to sickness.

Question 7. Any business that he, Mr. Dameron, might have left undone in the office when thus taken ill, could or would his deputy take it up and attend to it in his absence?

Answer. When Mr. Dameron left business unfinished of any consequence it was not customary for any of the assistants to undertake to finish the business so left; this has occurred frequently with myself, when I had to wait his return.

Question 8. Has or has it not, to your knowledge, frequently occurred with the said Dameron while thus in bad health, that where the applicants for land were not pressing for their receipts, that he would receive the money, fold it up with the application, and lay them in his strong box until the press was not so great, and he had more time and was less fatigued than he was at that moment to make out their receipts?

Answer. I have frequently known of several applications, and of many being folded up and put by for the time, owing to the extreme press of business in the office, and frequently owing to Mr. Dameron's bad health, which he would promise to return and complete at another time.

Question 9. From his feebleness after these attacks, is it or is it not natural that on his return to the office he might and did often forget papers thus laid aside for weeks or months, until the subject was called to his mind by the applicant, or on finding the papers in his strong box afterward? and papers thus put aside by him, do you believe his deputy could or would act on in his absence?

Answer. I do believe that it did occur that unfinished business lay sometimes overlooked by him on his return to the office after attacks of illness; and that after his death there were found papers and money in his office, that no doubt had been by him from debility overlooked; and that unless it was a plain simple case his assistants would not have undertaken the management of business so left; and in one instance while I was at Columbus, Mississippi, money was sent back to his executors by me, after his death, where the parties had got eighty instead of forty acres, paying only for forty. This occurred with two gentlemen living near Columbus, who sent the money and papers to Mr. Dameron, and after some time, got more land than they wanted; but afterward were satisfied, and paid the money over to Major William Dowsing, who sent it by me; and these two cases no doubt were of those pressed out of place by debility or business, until memory failed Mr. Dameron in the matter.

Question 10. Have you ever heard that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron "were notoriously engaged in extensive speculations in the public lands" while they had charge of the Mount Salus office?

Answer. I have never heard that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron were notoriously engaged in land speculations while they were officers at Mount Salus land office, nor that they were ever engaged together in speculations in land at all.

Question 11. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that they, or either of them, "marked as sold vast bodies of the most valuable lands," when in fact said lands were not sold?

Answer. I never knew, nor while Gwin and Dameron were here in the office, ever heard that they marked land on their books as sold, when in truth no such sale had been made; but have good reason to believe that individuals unconnected with the office, did mark lands on the maps as sold, by making the letter S, when it was not sold; but believe it was done without the knowledge of the officers.

Question 12. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that they, or either of them, ever represented to applicants, knowingly, lands as sold that were not?

Answer. I do not know of any such deception being practised.

Question 13. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that they, or either of them, ever did attempt to sell at private sale, and at "a suitable profit," or otherwise, any lands marked as sold on the maps of the office without first getting orders from the General Land Office?

Answer. I know of no such case ever occurring.

Question 14. Have you ever known Samuel Gwin or George B. Dameron, or either of them, to enter, "at the minimum price," any lands that had been previously marked as sold on the maps?

Answer. I do not.

Question 15. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that they ever marked "lands as sold for particular friends who had not the means of prompt payment?"

Answer. I do not know of any such transactions, nor ever heard of them.

Question 16. From your knowledge of the manner the maps were kept before Samuel Gwin constructed the present desk, could you not easily, without the knowledge of Samuel Gwin, and while he was attending to other applicants in a different part of the room, have marked off any number of tracts as sold, and could he have detected you, unless he had accidentally at the instant caught you at the act?

Answer. Owing to the open exposed manner the maps formerly lay in before the present confined desk was constructed, I could have marked lands thereon easily as sold, while he was examining other maps or papers in the other parts of the room, unless he was to apprehend me at the moment; for then it was frequently the case that three or more maps were at the same time under examination, while, perhaps, the register was waiting with one map on some person, in the act of entering land in another part of the room on another table; for the maps in Crutcher's and Colonel Hay's time lay on tables.

Question 17. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that Samuel Gwin or George B. Dameron were "in the constant habit of selling the public lands on a credit, receiving a separate note as a 'bonus or interest' ?"

Answer. I do not, and cannot believe they were in the constant or even occasional habit of selling lands on a bonus or excessive interest, else it would have been heard, or talked of, and such a thing I never heard of in any manner until the rupture with William S. Jones.

Question 18. Do you know, or did you hear them charged "with gross partiality and favoritism, and other devices highly vexatious to individuals," while they had charge of the office?

Answer. I did not know, nor ever heard either of them charged with partiality or favoritism; but have frequently known them to beg of the citizens to wait until strangers at a distance could be served; alleging that we at home could be accommodated at any time, while the others could not come daily.

Question 19. Have you not known and heard that Samuel Gwin, while he had charge of said office, took unusual and uncommon pains to accommodate the public having business in said office; that he had, at all times of the night gotten out of his bed and went to the office to answer the calls of distant applicants who were waiting to enter land on expenses? In short, as far as you know and have reason to believe, did said Gwin spare any means in his power to discharge the duties of his office to the entire satisfaction of the public?

Answer. I do know that Gwin has gotten out of his bed, at a very late hour of the night, to accommodate persons at a distance, who were travelling, or on heavy expenses, and that, generally, I thought him extremely anxious to accommodate, and more so than I thought I or most of people similarly situated would be.

Question 20. Did you or did you not have a conversation with Avery Nolen some time in 1833, in relation to a publication he made against G. B. Dameron and Samuel Gwin; and did he or did he not then state that a material and the most offensive part of said publication was added by William S. Jones, without his knowledge?

Answer. A few days after the offensive publication alluded to appeared, I did have a conversation with A. Nolen and his brother John, on the subject, when he denied having any hand in wording or in any manner authorizing the offensive part alluded to, but stated that it was not mentioned while he was with Jones, and that it was made up and added after he left Jones's office, without his knowledge or approbation, and that, could he have written, it would not have occurred.

Question 21. From your knowledge of Joseph D. Peebles, when intoxicated and his enmity aroused, do you or do you not believe that, to gratify his enmity in this state of derangement, he might, by designing and corrupt men, be induced to make statements that he would have no knowledge of when sober?

Answer. I do believe that when J. D. Peebles is intoxicated, he is very desperate and abusive, much more so than common men, and that, in that state of derangement he can be, on the slightest causes, excited almost to phrensy, and is at the time reckless of consequences, of which, when sober, he would have no recollection nor retain a single participant feeling of.

Question 22. Have you or have you not been acquainted with Wm. S. Jones for the last five or six years? Will you state what has been his occupation in that time, and is or is he not looked upon as one of the most envious and malicious persons in the neighborhood, who will go to any lengths to ruin a political opponent or a personal enemy; and is or is not his friendships entirely governed by dollars and cents, not possessing a single manly feeling; and is or is not this his character in this community?

Answer. I have known said W. S. Jones upward of five years. He was first an assistant teacher in a school of this town; he afterward was engaged with one or two other citizens of this place in shaving, or buying notes and bonds at large discounts, until notoriety gave him the name of the Clinton Shylock; and I believe, from every development of his character in the exercise of his resentments, he would sit as judge and jury. As to his friendships or attachments, I cannot say anything for them, nor would not, in matters of consequence, rely on them; and believe his absorbing passion to be uncompromising avarice.

Question 23. The original difficulty between Samuel Gwin and William S. Jones and Isaac Caldwell arose from their circulating a falsehood to the prejudice of Gwin: when beaten to the wall, and one of them getting a sound flogging, who then challenged the person flogging him to mortal combat? Did he or did he not disgracefully, ignominiously, and cowardly back out from his own challenge; and to screen them from further disgrace and personal responsibility for their cowardly attacks, they changed the scene of battle to the United States Senate, a body not responsible for individual injury, and to cap the climax, these men, William S. Jones and Isaac Caldwell, were selected by the chairman to consummate their original plans without fear of personal responsibility?

Answer. I do know that there was hostility existing between the parties alluded to to a high degree, made more public by the assistance of the newspapers, and that a personal conflict with one, and subsequent challenge to deadly conflict, was the consequence, which came from Wm. S. Jones, and was accepted, when, the manner of fighting not suiting him, the terms or manner of fight was altered to suit his views thereof, and that afterward he did not stand to the terms, or even appear, and that the public loudly condemned his conduct.

Question 24. Was not the accepting a commission from the chairman of the Committee on Lands to carry on an exparte and inquisitorial investigation into the land offices, without permitting those implicated to be heard, looked upon by all honorable men in this State as disgraceful, as far as your knowledge extends?

Answer. In this community, the appointment of men to examine witnesses for the purpose of exposing others without their being allowed the privilege of even hearing them, and those persons appointed, or many of them, known to be in deadly hostility to the parties accused, was thought to be a high-handed species of tyranny and injustice, and that the Senate of the United States, by some means, were induced to lend their high power of station to corrupt purposes therein; and that, as far as I have heard the matter spoken of, it was generally condemned, for the great enmity of many of the men appointed as commissioners and the men accused, must have been known to some of the members of the Senate.

Question 25. Were you at Chocchuma during the entire period of the public land sales in 1833, and after the press at private entry at the close of said sales was over?

Answer. I was at Chocchuma during the entire period of public sales had there, as well as the great press for the entry of lands that immediately succeeded, and did not leave until December.

Question 26. Were you knowing to the existence of a company of individuals formed at said sales for the purpose of purchasing land? If yea, state the objects and name of said company.

Answer. I do know that a company of many individuals was formed, in number about one hundred and fifty, comprising many citizens of that neighborhood, as well as citizens of several States, mostly of Alabama and this State. I also know that many of the settlers were much alarmed, fearing the formation of a company that was first intended, who would not, as they said, give them any chance. Such a company was in formation. I was questioned to join, as well as many citizens of this State, which we refused, unless it was expressly understood and stipulated that the citizen-settlers were not to be interrupted in their homes; that after much talk the first party agreed to protect only eighty acres for the settler, but that was refused by us, and after much talk as to the quantity, it was finally agreed that a quarter-section, including the improvements of the settler, was to be considered sacred to the settler, to be taken by him if bid in by the company, to the right or left of his houses or improvements, as he chose to select, so as to take a square quarter and his houses or field, and that in the division frequently the land was taken by the settler some distance from his houses or pens, sometimes more than a mile, where better land and his little field was; often a turnip-patch was made the improvement of location by the settler, to get better land than where his house or field was, and these liberties were freely granted and given by the company; that after the quantity was agreed on, Mr. R. J. Walker, in a speech to the people assembled, read these resolutions, as well as the whole object and powers of the company, and it appeared to meet the entire approbation of the citizens, only, as far as my observation went, not satisfactory to a few speculators, that did not approve of the pre-emption privilege spoken of; that after Mr. R. J. Walker's speech, all who wished to join the company were invited in the house to sign the regulations or constitution, and pay in their subscriptions, which were not to exceed for any one subscriber one thousand dollars, though many paid but the fourth of that, and afterward shared at the division their proportion of, as well as I recollect, three hundred and one dollars and fifty cents to the thousand. The company was known by the name of the Chocchuma Land Company; and in the formation the question was argued whether they were in violation of any law of the United States; and it was considered they were not, as any person was at liberty to bid, and no regulations made of any kind to put down competition. The company appointed from their body commissioners, to attend to the settlers' rights, bidders, &c.; and Messrs. Walker and Ellis were generally known as such for the people, and the land was, as I believe, fairly secured to the settlers, though often the company were imposed on by false claims which were granted; and I do not believe that any were dissatisfied that were at the sales except speculators, who were disappointed by the formation of the company; for the settlers, after the sales were closed, gave a large dinner to the company, and got Mr. F. E. Plummer to express their thanks to the land company, which was done in a lengthy, and, as we thought, appropriate address, from the head of the table, delivered by that gentleman. I was one of the clerks to the company, and know that the duties devolving on us in behalf of the citizens constituted not less than three fourths of our labors, and that fee or reward for such services never was received by any of the commissioners, clerks, or members, in obtaining or arranging the rights of their claims, from any of the settlers, so far as my observation went; and I was with Messrs. Walker, Gilchrist, Ellis, Jamison, Barnard, and others, almost constantly, and many a night until day's dawn.

Question 27. In the report of the Committee on Public Lands in the United States Senate at its last session, it is stated that they, the committee, could not enter into the detail of the profligate scenes which took place in this district at the sales which opened in October, 1833; that the evidence portrays greater enormities at this office than is believed to have occurred at any time in any land district of the United States; and it continues to say that these scenes have continued to characterize the conduct of the register who controls the sales at private entry, up to the present time; as you were there up to the close of the press at private entry, did you see or hear of any of the profligate scenes that are alluded to in said report, and was the conduct of Samuel Gwin, register, such as to warrant the above conclusions or declaration in any sense or under any circumstances?

Answer. I did not see or hear of anything that could possibly tend to any such conclusions as would in any manner the most remotely in said Gwin's conduct justify the charge of profligacy alluded to by the report of the committee of the Senate, nor do I believe that the most scrupulous or querulous person there, in honesty, could say so justly; although I knew he had enemies there who were seeking every chance to find fault, but I do think any unprejudiced person there must have well approved of his conduct, both as regards his duty to his office, and country, and people, during the whole time of the sales, and immediate subsequent entries; and I cannot believe the charges contained against him in the report alluded to were justified in the slightest degree by anything that occurred at Chocchuma during said sales; but distinctly remember that the first day of the entries, before the applications were handed in, that much was said by some in the crowd, (known to be your enemies, who had been trying in former days to make something out of nothing,) about their not liking the idea of putting their applications all in at once in the mass that was expected to be thrown together to be sorted out by you at leisure, and that you then expressed to the crowd a desire to so arrange the selection of the conflicting applications as to give satisfaction to all, and that several plans were proposed, as well as persons, to superintend the sorting of the same; and there were objections occasionally from the crowd to the several plans; that I left for a short time to get my horse to start to Mr. Smith's, three miles in the country; that while I was getting ready to start, some gentlemen came to me, and requested I would come to the office; I mounted and rode as near as the crowd would permit, when I was informed that Mr. J. A. Lane and myself were requested and appointed to arrange or sort out the applications and conflicts; that I refused to serve, and stated to you from my horse, that if I was you I would not be bothered so, but do my business and duty after my own manner, and in my own time, and not be moved by the objections made; that do it as you would, and with whatever assistance you would, there would be fault found anyhow, and then rode off; this was at dusk, or near night, and Mr. Lane, on my refusing, also refused to serve. The objections or dissatisfaction expressed were mostly from Samuel B. Marsh and John B. Peyton.

Question 28. It is further stated in said report, in speaking of the union of the several companies, that they "united for the purpose of monopolizing all the good lands then offered at public sale, of overawing bidders, and driving all competition out of the market; that the company established an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened on each day a regular sale of the lands purchased by them at public sale; that at the public sales, the company claimed and actually enforced a complete monopoly; and that the officers either connived at or participated in these fraudulent transactions." Now, is there one word of truth in this whole tale, and do you know or have you any reason to believe that Samuel Gwin, register, either "connived at or participated in" these pretended frauds, or did you hear any one at said sales intimate that he was interested with this or any other company?

Answer. Whatever were the objects of the parties uniting in the Chocchuma Land Company, monopoly of all the good lands or of overawing bidders could not have been effected by them, as it was expressly in opposition to the character of said company; but that they learnt of good lands in some degree may be admitted; as on the final sales of what the company did buy, they realized the immense profit of three hundred dollars for the thousand invested, and there could not have been many men of any industry, with half the sum, that could not have made double the money the members of the company did by the association; and as to competition, it was the every-day occurrence during the existence of the company. The company did not establish a regular office in the vicinity of the land office; they began to dispose of their lands first at a carpenter's shop on the bank of the river, then moved and finished at the tavern, where many of the company boarded, on account of accommodations. The company never claimed nor enforced a monopoly; it was disavowed by them, for they composed but a small portion of the great crowd that were there, and consisted mostly of speculators fettered by the association, though many settlers were in the company. Though the register possibly, and no doubt did, know of the company, I cannot think he connived at their acts, for there was nothing to connive at, for all was fair, and no legal or moral law could have been offended, except in the privilege secured to the settlers of their homes; and I do know that the register did not participate in any portion of the company's interest, nor did I ever hear from any one that he was ever suspected of sharing or being concerned in any company; he had entirely too much of official duty to attend to, to allow him the chance of participating in the duties or interests of any companies; and I cannot conceive how it is possible he could have been so suspected since for his conduct at that time.

Question 29. At the sales at private entry, did or did not Samuel Gwyn act, in every respect, with the utmost impartiality in everything that came under your observation; and was or was not his rules drawn up with the greatest care, so that every individual applicant should be on an equal footing?

Answer. In the discharge of his duties he was remarkably industrious and exceedingly accommodating to all, and more particularly so to those there supposed to be his enemies, for they were, as before stated, more difficult to please, and his friends, at his request, to my certain knowledge, gave way for their accommodation when the favors agreeably to rule was properly theirs. His rules were adopted with great care, and regularly published at the door for the inspection of all, as well as maps of the country, were hanging outside of the house for the information of all concerned, which was an official accommodation extra, and not met with at the land offices generally.

I have no doubt but persons who did business with him found generally more accommodations than at any other office in the State.

Question 30. From the number of persons who were there waiting to make entries, all equally anxious and desirous to be first, either to prevent any competition or to return home, could Samuel Gwin have taken any other course than the one he did to give all an equal chance to make their entries, as all were equally entitled to his services?

Answer. At the close of the sales there were several hundred persons desirous of making entries, or having some business, more or less, connected with the office, and all anxiously restless, hurrying everybody with whom they had business, in the desire to be going home as well as secure their lands; and from the press of applications it was thought, after considerable debate and mature reflection, that the plan or rule he adopted was the very best that could have been acted on to give every applicant an equal chance, and at the time I do know that the people generally believed it was, and with only two or three exceptions, acted under them cheerfully, and they were never violated, to my knowledge, but in one instance, and that time by Samuel B. Marsh, who, from the register's books or maps, got the area or contents of a section, while the register was busy elsewhere, perhaps in the office, and filled up a receipt ready for the receiver's signature, and while he was busy with many others, induced him to sign it, as I was informed by Mr. R. H. Sterling, (the receiver,) who, as he said, thought at the time it was regularly applied for and filled up by the register, who had not signed any application for said land, as it was not at that time in order, agreeably to the rules that had been published and acted on. This matter made considerable noise on the ground, as it was considered an evasion of the rule and custom, and done by Mr. S. Marsh for his friend, John Jones, to escape competition or conflict; but Mr. S. Marsh only was blamed, and, indeed, abused by many for it, as being a trick of deception of a very low grade, to obtain, as I think, about half a section of land.

Question 31. Did you or did you not hear Samuel Gwin declare that if he knew or was advised that any company was violating the laws of the United States, that he would, on his own responsibility, stop the sales?

Answer. I did frequently hear him make in public the declaration, that if he knew, or was certified of the fact, that any company or combination of men were acting in opposition to the laws, he would immediately put a stop to the sales, and that he frequently read, or had read, those laws, and asked the advice or opinion of others on that subject, particularly Judge Black, and particularly on the Chocchuma Land Company matter, who, with others, pronounced it incompatible with his powers or duty to interfere with the progress of the sales on that account, or anything that at that time had occurred.

Question 32. From the quantity and quality of land sold, do you or do you not believe that the United States was ultimately benefited by the Chocchuma Land Company?

Answer. I do believe that the spirit of sale or purchase and entry, got up in excitement by the formation of that company, resulted profitably to the United States in the general sales had at Chocchuma.

Question 33. Did you know of Samuel Gwin turning people out of the office who did not belong to the company, and permitting those who did to remain in?

Answer. When the sales of the day were over, and the clerks were busy at their duties in casting up the accounts of acres, amounts, &c., it was customary, as it was but a small house, for a time to close it, until the receipts of each purchaser could be made out, and then again was opened for the cash and settlements. On such occasions, Mr. Sterling, and sometimes Mr. Gwin, would ask the help of Mr. D. W. Connelly, and sometimes of myself, for assistance at the moment to cast up the sale operations, (and we were both members of the company,) but in no instance was favoritism exercised for the company, but the most kind and respectful treatment extended to all, who were requested for the moment to give room to the clerks to write; nor do I know that he knew we were members of the company, though he may have known that I was clerk for them.

Question 34. From the manner that Samuel Gwin kept the applications for private entries, could any one, after they were placed in his hands, have read them, and do you believe that any of them were read save by those that handed them in?

Answer. I do not believe that they could have or were read by any one after they were handed in, and when handed, they were immediately, by the person handing, placed in a box held by Gwin on the counter, and none suffered afterward to take them out; this was done in public, and after declaration was made, if any applications were still forthcoming, to come forward, and after all were handed in, then, and after none could have interrupted the fair selection of the conflicting applicants, the matter resting solely with the register and receiver; and as to favoritism or partiality having been shown by Gwin, such a charge could not have originated but in prejudice; and a more active, industrious, and accommodating officer, this State never had, nor has at this time, as far as my knowledge extends, and I am fully persuaded that no good feelings ever dictated a charge against him, and that the committee of the honorable Senate of the United States have been misled by the prejudice of those inimical to the worthy officer so abused, and I shall always be proud if my country makes so good a selection as it has in him.

Question 35. In the conversation that followed the attempt of Samuel B. Marsh's low, dirty, and ungentlemanly trick, by stealth to violate the rules, and in violation of law, for his friend, John Jones, for a fee, did you hear Marsh make any such remark as this, speaking to Dr. W. M. Gwin, Marsh said, "Are you marshal of the State, and do you give and receive hush-money, and partake in the profits of these speculations?" or if such a remark had been made on that occasion, would you not have heard it?

Answer. I did not hear any such remark from Marsh, and cannot doubt for a moment that no such remarks were made, else it would have been heard of, and such a venture on Mr. Marsh's part was, I think, too much for him to make, and it would have been the throwing of a firebrand in a magazine for Marsh that he would not have ventured to have done, for he was in bad favor with Dr. William M. Gwin, and little required to make a bad rupture between them. If such conversation had occurred, I think I, or any one there that was in the crowd, would have heard it, and yet did not hear any such talk.

Question 36. Did you or did you not hear S. B. Marsh on that occasion make use of language to this effect to Samuel Gwin, (as detailed in John Jones's evidence:) Marsh should have said that he, Samuel Gwin, should resign, or he would have him imprisoned until he did? and had such language been used on that occasion by Marsh to said Gwin, do you not think you should have heard it?

Answer. I heard much of the conversation between Marsh and Gwin, as well as in the multitude on that occasion, but never any such language as that.

Question 37. Was not the conduct of S. B. Marsh in this transaction looked upon by all honorable men with contempt?

Answer. It was, and so frequently and publicly expressed.

Question 38. You did once or twice, or perhaps oftener, cry the public lands at auction—at whose solicitation did you cry them, and was it not the openly expressed approbation of Mr. R. H. Sterling, as well as Samuel Gwin, that you did cry them; and was there or could there be any advantage to the land company by this fact?

Answer. I did, first at the solicitation of Mr. G. Griffin, who, I understood, was the auctioneer, as well as by the approbation of Mr. R. H. Sterling, Mr. Samuel Gwin, and the crowd, for by them, too, I was solicited when Mr. G. Griffin was sick. I was by Mr. Sterling and Gwin both often asked to do so again, but being too busy with other matters, refused, and they got Major Holt and Captain Rather; and from my crying, nor any that I heard from any of the gentlemen during the sales, could it have been inferred that any advantages did or could have accrued to any particular individual or company; for it was the rule, that should any citizen call for any tract that had been called out and not bid for, that the auctioneer was instructed to go back, at the request of any gentleman, and again offer the land so passed over; and I do not believe that injustice or partiality in the sales was shown in any manner, and that the United States interest was properly cared for.

Further this deponent saith not.

Sworn to, and subscribed before me, an acting justice of the peace for Hinds county, State of Mississippi, this the 20th day of August, 1835, at Clinton.

SENECA PRATT, J. P.

No. 3.—Seneca Pratt.

Question 1. Will you state at what time George B. Dameron began business as receiver of public moneys at the Mount Salus land office?

Answer. George B. Dameron commenced business as receiver at said office early in the month of May, 1832. I believe on the 3d day of that month.

Question 2. Have you or have you not acted as clerk for said Dameron in said office; and also when Samuel Gwin was occasionally absent, did you perform, or did you not, the duties of his office, and at what time did you commence with them? How long did you continue in their employ? And did you, or did you not, afterward occasionally to write in and attend to said officers?

Answer. At the opening of the office in May, the business appears to have been very heavy. As soon as the press was a little over, Mr. Dameron returned to Perry county for the purpose of removing his family to Clinton. This was in the month of June; and, as nearly as I can recollect, he left Augusta, in Perry county, about the 15th of that month, and arrived in Clinton on or about the 20th. At this time, and at his request, I came with him, and continued in the office from that time till some time early in the following December, performing a considerable proportion of the writing of said office, for Mr. Dameron. I did also, occasionally, in the absence of the register, and also at times when he was present, but engaged either with his returns, or any other of the necessary duties of the office, fill up applications for applicants. I did repeatedly, after I was no longer considered as attached to the office, perform the duties of the register when he was occasionally absent for a day or two; and I did also continue to do some writing for the receiver.

Question 3. Were or were not the two offices kept in the same room for the greater portion of the time you were with them—if so, were you or were you not, more or less, conversant with all the transactions of the said Gwin and Dameron?

Answer. The two offices were, most of the time, kept in the same room, and all the time in the same house. After the offices were removed from the place where they were kept at the time I first went into the office, they were in separate rooms, with a communication between the two, and every facility was afforded for direct intercourse. I was generally acquainted with most of the transactions of Gwin and Dameron, nor had I at any time reason to believe that any transaction happened while I was in the office that either of them wished to conceal from me.

Question 4. Are you or are you not acquainted with the general character and standing of George B. Dameron, late receiver of said office; if so, will you state it?

Answer. I am well acquainted with the general character of George B. Dameron, and do know that no man held a higher place in the estimation of his fellow-citizens, either as regards character, a kind neighbor, as a sincere friend, and as a man of the strictest probity and honor; and I further know and declare, that it was his most earnest wish, so long as I was with him, that everything should be done with the most scrupulous regard to the interest of the general government, and to the convenience and accommodation of the purchasers of the public land.

Question 5. During the time said Dameron had charge of said office, how did he demean himself as a public officer, and what was public sentiment in regard to him?

Answer. A part of this interrogatory is answered above. I have every reason to believe that the public generally considered him as a faithful, diligent, and effective public officer.

Question 6. During the latter half of the year 1832, had or had not his health become very delicate, so much so that he was frequently, for days, and perhaps weeks, confined to his house; and was or was not this bad health occasioned by the confinement and labor he had to undergo in his office?

Answer. During the latter part of the year 1832 his health was delicate; and during this time he was often confined for days—I do not recollect whether he was for weeks; but I do know he was many times in the office when he should have been in bed; and that from this time he continued to decline until his death; and I have no doubt that his confinement to the office, and his exertions to perform the duties of said office, were the cause of his death.

Question 7. Have you, or have you not, known him leave the office in the evening in tolerable health, and be taken sick and confined for days, if not weeks, to his room, without being able in that time to return tending to the office?

Answer. I have often known him leave the office in a state of debility and depression, from fatigue in attending to the duties of the office, so that he would not be able to return to the office for several days.

Question 8. From your knowledge of the business in land offices, would you or would you not, as clerk, feel yourself authorized to transact any business that he, Mr. Dameron, might have laid over (not knowing any of the particulars) to be completed or attended to the next day?

Answer. I should at no time feel myself authorized to take up any unfinished business of his, unless by his particular direction, or knowing all the circumstances attending it, and the person for whom the business was to be transacted was present.

Question 9. Has it, or has it not, to your knowledge, frequently occurred with the said Dameron, while thus in bad health, that where the applicants were not pressing for their receipts, that he would receive the money, fold it up with the application, and lay it by, until the press was not so great, and he had more time and was less fatigued than he was at that moment, to make out the receipts?

Answer. Often has it happened that letters were sent to the receiver containing money to enter land. If in such cases there was much business doing in the office, the letters were opened, the applications made out, and the land, as I believe, marked as sold. The application then, with the letter and money, were placed in the strong-box, and have many times remained there for days or weeks, owing to the indisposition of Mr. Dameron. And I believe it has often happened that persons have deposited money on lands, and have not at the time required the receipt, for the purpose of indulging Mr. Dameron on account of his ill health. I believe this was done by Dr. W. M. Gwin and Samuel Gwin, and I could name to my own knowledge others.

Question 10. From his feebleness after these attacks, is, or is it not natural, and do you not know it be a fact, that on his return to the office, he might and did often forget them (the papers thus laid aside) for weeks or months, until the subject was called to his mind by the applicant, or upon finding the papers in his money-box; and papers thus put aside by him, did you, or did you not, feel yourself authorized to act upon in his absence?

Answer. I am well aware of the truth of the specifications as contained in this question to be true, and have, I believe, often called the attention of Mr. Dameron to these papers. I did not consider myself authorized to act on them without his particular instructions.

Question 11. Do you know, or have you ever heard that Samuel Gwin and Geo. B. Dameron "were notoriously engaged in extensive land speculations," while they had charge of the Mount Salus land office?

Answer. While I was in the office I do know that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron were "not notoriously engaged in extensive land speculations," nor have I ever heard, nor do I believe they ever were, while they were connected with the Mount Salus office.

Question 12. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that "they marked as sold vast bodies of the most valuable lands," when in fact they were not sold?

Answer. In reply to this question, I can only say that I could not know of anything of transactions of this kind, but I have no reason to believe anything of the kind was ever attempted while I was in said office.

Question 13. Do you know, or have you any reason to believe, that they or either of them ever represented, knowingly, lands as sold, that were not, to applicants?

Answer. This interrogatory seems to apply more particularly to the register, as the maps were in his charge; but I can safely answer that I do not, nor have I any reason to believe, that any transactions of the kind ever happened.

Question 14. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that they, or either of them, ever did attempt to sell at private entry, and at "suitable profit" or otherwise, any lands marked as sold, on the books of the office, without first getting orders from the General Land Office?

Answer. To this I answer, no. Samuel Gwin informed me some time after I had been in the office, that he had discovered some marks on lands, from which he was compelled to consider them as sold, that he could not find them entered on the books of the office, and that there were many applications to enter the same, but that he could not permit it until he had an answer from the General Land Office. He stated, that he had received returns on some of them; and I now believe he said that he had been requested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to endeavor to detect all such marked tracts.

Question 15. Have you, or have you not, ever known Samuel Gwin or George B. Dameron, or either of them, to enter, "at the minimum price," any lands that had been previously marked as sold on the books of the office?

Answer. I never have, nor have I any reason to believe they ever did.

Question 16. Do you know, or have you any reason to believe, that they, or either of them, ever marked "lands as sold for particular friends, who had not the means of prompt payment?"

Answer. I have never known anything of the kind.

Question 17. From your knowledge of the manner the maps were kept before Samuel Gwin constructed and had made the present desk, could you, or could you not, easily, (or any one else entering land in said office,) without the knowledge of Samuel Gwin, have marked off any number of tracts as sold, and was it possible for him to detect such persons, unless he had accidentally, at the instant, caught them in the act?

Answer. I do know that improper marks might be put on the maps, indicating that the lands were sold, when they were not, and that such marks were put on without the knowledge of the register; that while he was examining one set of maps, other persons would be examining other sets at the same time, and that it was almost impossible to prevent it, and that any amount of lands could have been marked as sold without the knowledge of said Gwin, or any one else, unless at the instant, and before the ink was dry, he might detect them in the act. There were four bundles of maps, pasted on canvas, and stitched, then in the office, (one of which has since been taken to Columbus,) that were, before the present desk was constructed by said Gwin, placed on different tables in a small room, and, as applicants demanded, the register would pass from one to another of these maps, and there remain, making out applications until all were served, leaving the other maps under the inspection of persons who, either in fact or pretendedly, wished to enter lands in them. From this it will be apparent what unworthy persons might do.

Question 18. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that Samuel Gwin or George B. Dameron, or either of them, were "in the constant habit of selling the lands on a credit, receiving a separate note as a bonus or interest?"

Answer. I do not know, nor have I any reason to believe, that they were in the habit of selling land in this manner. I have reason to believe that they did, in a few instances, purchase lands for others, for a small premium, at their urgent solicitations, but did not, at that time, suppose they were using any but their own funds.

Question 19. Did you or did you not ever hear them charged, while they had charge of the office, "with gross partiality and favoritism, and other devices highly vexatious to individuals?"

Answer. I have, in one or two instances, heard them charged with partiality and favoritism when I was present, and knew the accusation to be unfounded and unjust.

Question 20. Have you or have you not heard that Samuel Gwin, while he had charge of said office, took unusual and uncommon pains to accommodate the public having business in said office? that he did, at all times of the night, get out of his bed and go to the office to answer the calls of distant applicants who were waiting to enter land on expenses. In short, as far as you know or have reason to believe, did or did not said Gwin and Dameron spare any means in their power to discharge the duties of their offices to the entire satisfaction of the public?

Answer. I am well aware of the truth of the facts contained in this question, and do know that both the register and receiver did often put themselves to much inconvenience at unseasonable hours, for the purpose of accommodating distant purchasers.

Question 21. Have you or have you not heard Joseph D. Peebles admit that he had falsely marked off on the maps of said office lands as sold that were not, without the knowledge of Samuel Gwin? State particulars.

Answer. I did hear Joseph D. Peebles say that he had marked on the maps of the office lands as sold that were not, without the knowledge of the register, but recollect no particulars, except that he wanted the land, and had not the money at that time to pay for it.

Question 22. From your knowledge of the duties of the register, do you or do you not believe that, in the press of business in making out applications and marking the lands off on the maps, that they are liable to commit errors, and, through the hurry of the moment, or inadvertency, mark on the map a tract as sold that was not for one that was, and leaving the tract that was in fact sold, unmarked; and have you not yourself committed these errors, while attending to the register's office in the absence of Samuel Gwin?

Answer. I am well satisfied that many tracts of land have been inadvertently marked as sold through mistake; and indeed I have sometimes known the register correct mistakes of this kind, from recollection that he had marked the wrong piece; and I do know that I have myself, in some instances, while performing the duties of the register at the request of Samuel Gwin, marked the wrong tract; at least I have been convinced of this fact afterward.

Question 23. Have you not known an individual, after taking out applications, and the tract marked as sold, and paying his money for the same, through ignorance, while the receiver was putting his money in the strong-box, pick up his receipt, and with it the application, and take them off, leaving no evidence in the office of the name of the person entering, or anything about it, save the marks on the maps; and do you or do you not believe that most of the cases, if not all, where lands appear to be marked off in the handwriting of Samuel Gwin or George B. Dameron were thus occasioned, or by the loss of the application?

Answer. I have many reasons to believe that this has sometimes happened, and I do believe that many of the tracts marked as sold, that do not appear on the books as sold, may be, from this circumstance, and from being mismarked through inadvertency, and from another cause that will hereafter appear in the next answer.

Question 24. Do you or do you not believe that applications have been lost before they were entered in any of the books, by being accidentally blown away; and do you or do you not recollect, while writing in the receiver's office, that in entering on the books by numbers the entries made, that we did frequently miss numbers, sometimes as high as ten or more, and to keep up the contiguity in the numbers on the books, we would have to fill up their places with entries made after this discovery; and would or would not the numbers thus lost or mislaid be still marked as sold on the maps, but not found in any of the books of the office?

Answer. In the press of business I do suppose that applications have been taken away by the applicants, in which case the lands would remain marked as sold. I do recollect that numbers were sometimes found missing while we were recording them. Whether this arose from the applicants taking them away, from their being lost, or from mistakes in numbering, I am unable to state.

Question 25. Have or have not individuals, other than Joseph D. Peebles, admitted to you that they had themselves marked lands as sold on the maps, without the knowledge of Samuel Gwin; and will you state the particulars of their conversation with you on this subject, and have not the lands thus marked been reported by the present register, and are among the number charged by the committee in their report, as being the fraudulent acts of Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron?

Answer. Others besides Joseph D. Peebles have admitted to me that they had marked lands as sold that were not. One person in particular requested me to prevail on Samuel Gwin to permit him to enter certain lands, stating to me that he knew who marked it as sold, and finally confessing that he did it himself, but requested me not to inform Col. Gwin that he had done so. These lands were among those returned by the present register as marked sold, and were not sold.

Question 26. Do you or do you not know an instance among the number of tracts marked sold on the maps, and not found on the tract-books, and reported by Mr. Sumral to the General Land Office, and returned from that office as not being sold, but which was in fact sold, and is now and was then, on the registers of receipts and certificates, with its proper number?

Answer. I have been informed by Mr. Sumral, the present register, that among the numbers of lands reported by him as marked sold, (not being found on the tract-book,) and returned from the General Land Office as not sold, some have been brought to the office by the purchasers, and have been fouud regularly entered on all the books of the office, except the tract-book. And in explanation of this, I have been informed that they have in some instances been entered in the wrong township, sometimes in the wrong section, and sometimes in the wrong range. For this I can account in this way: the government, penurious in some cases and prodigal in others, limited the pay of the land officers to a certain amount. It sometimes happened that this amount, arising from commission and salary, has been made in a few months. For the remainder of the year they were compelled to do the business of the office on as easy terms as possible, and many times it has required, in this office, at least two clerks in each department, to keep up the business, and in the time of the land sales even more. Clerks qualified to attend to the duties of this office are not to be obtained here for a trifle, and many months, when the business of the office is heavy, the expenses of the office amount to as much as the allowance.

HENRY G. JOHNSTON, Justice of the Peace.

No. 4.—John J. McCaughan.

Question 1. Were you present at Chocchuma during the land sales in October and November, 1833?

Answer. I was at Chocchuma from the third day of the sales until about ten days after the close of the sales.

Question 2. Did you know of the formation of a company of individuals to purchase lands at said sales?

Answer. I knew there was a company formed for the purchase of lands at said sales of a number of individuals, and was requested by several to become a member of said company, but declined doing so, believing it would not prove a profitable business, which fact was fully established by the result.

Question 3. Did you hear a speech that was delivered by R. J. Walker, announcing to the settlers the fact of the formation of a company, and will you state the purport of that speech as far as your recollection serves?

Answer. I did not hear the speech delivered by R. J. Walker. I understood he had delivered one.

Question 4. In what respect did the members forming that company bind themselves with regard to the actual settlers?

Answer. The members of said company bound themselves to let each settler who was actually settled on a tract of land at the commencement of the sales, have the same, to the extent of a quarter-section, or eighth, to include his improvement, at the price, whatever it might be, that it was stricken off to said company at.

Question 5. Was Samuel Gwin, register, present when Mr. Walker delivered his speech, or do you know or believe that he had at the time any knowledge of the formation of a company?

Answer. I know nothing.

Question 6. Was it not the prevailing opinion among the settlers that by the formation of this company the settlers were as fully protected in their improvements as if there had been a pre-emption law?

Answer. The formation of said company was considered by most of the settlers as conferring on them a favor similar to a pre-emption law, which they thought should have been extended to them by Congress.

Question 7. As far as your knowledge extends, were not the objects of the company not only lawful but laudable?

Answer. As to the formation of said company, I considered it as strictly legal as the formation of any company for the transaction of any business whatever. Although there were a greater number of persons composing said company than usual in the formation of companies for the transaction of ordinary business, they all amounted to but a small portion of persons who attended said sales for the purchase of lands. So far as I know or believe (and I have had some experience in land matters) there is nothing novel in the formation of companies at sales of the public lands; but believe there never has been a sale of lands, particularly in the South, where there has not been companies formed in some shape, manner, or form, for the purchase of lands, and I believe there never will be, all the laws of Congress and precaution of the officers of the general government to the contrary notwithstanding. The object of the company at Chocchuma in the protection of the settlers was surely laudable, and was so regarded by many of those who were opposed to them.

Question 8. Do you or do you not know of any contract, bargain, or any agreement among any company of individuals, that any one should not bid upon or purchase any land that he might wish, or did by intimidation or unfair management hinder or prevent any person or persons from bidding upon or purchasing any tract or tracts of land then offered for sale, but were not, as far as your knowledge extends, every individual at full liberty to bid or not, as his judgment might dictate?

Answer. I know of no combination, or threats, or unlawful means of any kind, to intimidate or prevent any person from bidding for any land he chose; on the contrary, it was remarked generally that there was seldom, if ever, so much peace and harmony among so great a crowd, under all the circumstances known, as was during said sale.

Question 9. Do you know, or did you hear, of any one who was compelled to sign any paper depriving themselves of the right to bid for as much land as he or they might think proper?

Answer. I know nothing of either the paper or compulsion of the kind spoken of, nor can I believe that anything of the kind existed in any shape or manner whatever.

Question 10. Who were the most active persons on the part of the company in behalf of the settlers?

Answer. Robert J. Walker and Thomas G. Ellis, I believe, were considered among the most active members of said company, but the members seemed generally fully disposed to be just, if not generous, to the settlers, agreeably to the understanding of said company.

Question 11. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that Samuel Gwin was either directly or indirectly interested in, or concerned with, said company, either in money, or land, or anything else?

Answer. I know not, nor have I any reason to believe, that either the register or receiver had any interest whatever in the transactions of said company.

Question 12. On the contrary, did you not hear the said Samuel Gwin, repeatedly and pointedly, condemn the formation of said company, and, as far as your knowledge extends, did he not oppose them in every particular as far as he could; or, did you see any act or acts, of said Gwin, which tended to favor, in the smallest degree, the company or any member of it, or any one else?

Answer. I do not recollect to have heard of the register giving countenance to the proceedings of said company in any way whatever, but I did understand he was opposed to their proceedings. I do not recollect any particular remark of S. Gwin on the subject. His business necessarily engaged his attention almost every moment.

Question 13. Was it not understood on the ground generally, that Samuel Gwin took the legal advice of the honorable John Black, as to the legality of said company, and gave him the laws of the United States to examine and compare with the company article; and, also, to get his opinion as to the power of his (Samuel Gwin's) stopping the sales, if the article was in violation of the laws of the United States?

Answer. I understood Samuel Gwin consulted Judge Black in the manner set forth, and it was the opinion of said Black that he could not legally or equitably prevent the operations of said company, and advised said Gwin not to attempt it.

Question 14. Did you see anything in said Gwin's conduct tending to partiality to said company, or any one else, and was it not open, frank, and free, and was he not vigilant in watching the interests of the United States?

Answer. I observed nothing partial or improper in the conduct of said Gwin toward said company, or any individual at said sales. I believe I had more difficulty with said Gwin myself, than any other individual while there, and, although I did not succeed, I cheerfully acknowledge said Gwin was correct under the circumstances. I saw nothing to reprobate in the conduct of said Gwin during said sales, but believe he acted as impartial a part as he could have done, and protected the interests of the government to as great an extent as was in his power; and, indeed, from my knowledge of the country sold, and its value, I was then and still am of the opinion, had there been no company formed, the country would not have brought the government as much money as it did. I do believe the conduct of those officers at said Chocchuma land sales would never have been brought in question, had the good of the country and protection of the government from fraud, been the only motive by which the accusers of Colonel Samuel Gwin had been actuated.

Question 15. Have you not entered a large body of land at different times at the Clinton office, while Samuel Gwin was register? Have you ever seen or known anything improper in his conduct while he had charge of the office; and was he, or was he not, watchful as to the interest of the government, attentive to the duties of his office, and accommodating to all who had business in it?

Answer. I frequently had business in the land office at Clinton while S. Gwin was register there, and my opinion was, that his conduct was proper in every respect as an officer; my opinion then was, and still is, he was and ever has been the most efficient register I have ever known in the State.

Question 16. From your personal knowledge of the management of the Clinton office, do you, or do you not, believe that any difficulty would have arisen had it not been for a personal and private dispute, in which said Gwin was unfortunately involved with W. S. Jones, which resulted in the disgrace of said Jones, who, to avenge himself, called to his aid the Senate of the United States, who have conferred on him inquisitorial powers to carry on charges originating in himself.

Answer. I believe there never would have been any trouble on this subject with regard to S. Gwin, had it not been for the difficulties that arose with said Jones.

Question 17. From your knowledge of the management of land offices, do you, or do you not, know that many things necessarily occur in them which are proper and correct in themselves, but which, by designing and unworthy individuals, in an exparte examination, may have the appearance of impropriety in the officer, when in fact it does not exist; and, from the constant duties of the register, may not, and have not, improper marks been made on his maps (when his eye was for a moment off of them) by unworthy persons, and have you not reason to believe that unworthy and base persons have thus marked the maps, and have since given evidence to Jones and Caldwell to prejudice Colonel Gwin on this subject?

Answer. In land offices, as in every other office, with exparte examination of evidence, &c., many things may be made to assume the appearance of incorrectness when in fact it does not exist. I have no doubt maps in the office have been marked by designing individuals, without the knowledge of the officers, and I know it is impossible to prevent, even now, (when there are proper desks to hold them,) said maps being marked, if persons are disposed to do so. From the very nature of the business, it is impossible the register can always have his eye on the maps. I believe that individuals who marked maps in said office, while Colonel Gwin was register, have given evidence against him to W. S. Jones.

Question 18. Have you not heard that Joseph D. Peebles, while he lived in the house of S. Gwin, and but a few steps from the office, did himself falsely and fraudulently mark the maps in said office; and did he not, in consequence thereof, have a dispute and quarrel with S. Gwin, which caused him to leave his house; and has not said Peebles, in his drunken frolics, admitted these facts?

Answer. I have heard that Joseph D. Peebles did mark maps in said office, and has since boasted of it in his drunken mood.

NOTE.—The copies of interrogatories 15, 16, 17, and 18, have, unfortunately, been lost or mislaid by me, since the originals were sent to Washington city, in December, 1834. I have substituted those now inserted from memory, and presume the substance is the same. The answers are true copies of the originals. There is a discrepancy in the numbering of the interrogatories in the above and in the originals, or an error or omission in the copy retained. As I copied it myself, I think it probable that one question, or perhaps more, that Mr. McCaughan could not answer, was left out by me in the copy retained, which has caused the discrepancy. But the copy, as herein sent, of the answers, I will vouch for their correctness, and I hope the originals will be procured from the Senate papers.

Question 1. Did you or did you not act as clerk for George B. Dameron, for some time in 1832 and 1833, and, in the temporary absence of Samuel Gwin, register, did you not attend to his business in making out applications, &c., and in all the time that you were in the said land office, did you see or hear of any illegal, unjust, or improper conduct in Samuel Gwin or G. B. Dameron?

Answer. I was a regular clerk in the receiver's office about four months, and wrote there, occasionally, for two months longer. Samuel Gwin was occasionally absent for a short time from the office, and when thus absent I did fill out applications for him, where the applicants were in a hurry. In all the time I was in the office, and at all times since and before, I am free to say, and am glad to have it in my power to speak in the highest terms of praise as to the official and private conduct of Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron. I never saw anything illegal, unjust, or improper in them; on the reverse, as far as I know or have heard, these men were universally approved of, and I never heard of any complaints against them while in said office.

Question 2. While in said office, had you or had you not as good an opportunity to see and know if any of the frauds, as set forth in Jones and Caldwell's depositions, were practised in said office?

Answer. I had as good an opportunity to see and know what was transpiring in said office as most others, and I never saw anything in the remotest degree that would warrant the declarations and assumptions of said men.

Question 3. Did you or did you not know of their ever marking on the maps of said office lands as sold that were not, or inform individual applicants that lands were sold that were not in fact; or did you ever know of their selling lands on a credit, receiving a separate note as a bonus or interest?

Answer. I never did know of their being guilty of any of the above allegations, nor do I believe they ever were.

Question 4. Have you or have you not ever seen them act partially, or oppressively, to individuals having business in said office?

Answer. I never did.

Question 5. Was or was not their general deportment and conduct as officers, courteous and accommodating to an extent before unknown in said office?

Answer. It was.

Question 6. Did you or did you not know that there was a deadly hostility existing between Samuel Gwin and these men (Jones and Caldwell) long before they accepted the commission to take depositions, and, in consequence of this hostility, and the base falsehoods published by them, did or did not the said Jones get a severe flogging, after which, did he not challenge to mortal combat, and, after cowardly prevaricating as to the terms, were they or were they not made to suit his views; and, at the appointed time of meeting, did he or did he not ignominiously and assassin-like shrink from the contest, and not appear on the ground; and was or was not his thus assailing individuals by the basest falsehoods, and upon his being punished for them, challenging the person and then backing out, looked upon by the whole community as base, unmanly, and ungentlemanly?

Answer. In the summer of 1833, I know there was a deadly hostility existing between Samuel Gwin and said Jones and Caldwell, which was long before they were appointed to take depositions. I know that said Jones did get a severe flogging in consequence of these difficulties, for I saw him a few moments after it happened, and he carried on his person evident marks of his degradation; after which it was reported and believed, (although I did not see the challenge,) that he did challenge the person to mortal combat, and when the terms were made known to him, he did, contrary to all rules, object to them, and they were altered to suit his views. At the appointed time he unconditionally backed out, and did not appear on the ground, leaving his seconds involved in a dispute that he had brought about, as far as I know, without cause. His conduct, I might say, was universally disapproved of by the community, and to this day he is not looked upon by any man of standing, as a gentleman.

Question 6. Being thus defeated and degraded on the theatre of his own seeking, shunned by the honorable and just, was or was not his next course to take this private dispute into the Senate of the United States, (a body not responsible for private injury,) get himself and his degraded associates, through his friends in that body, appointed as commissioners to take depositions, knowing that he could not be personally held responsible for his acts while thus acting under the authority of the Senate?

Answer. I heard no more on the subject until some time in the spring or summer of 1834, when he, under a commission from George Poindexter, as I understood, in conjunction with Isaac Caldwell, commenced taking depositions in this place on the subject.

Question 7. What is your knowledge of the character, standing, and occupation of the said William S. Jones in this place and in this community?

Answer. His occupation has been that of a shaver, or a person who lends money at enormous interest, and takes bonds and judgments confessed for said sums, and was commonly called the Clinton Shylock. His principles are that every man has his price, and he has uniformly acted upon them, as far as I know. From the above, his standing, I would say, was not good.

Question 8. From your knowledge of the man and the men, do you or do you not believe that he could act impartially and justly, in a controversy with Samuel Gwin and G. B. Dameron?

Answer. I should not. But, on the contrary, believe he would act with great partiality and injustice to satisfy the malignity of heart toward those men?

Question 1. Have you or have you not resided within the limits of the Mount Salus land district during the entire period that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron had charge of said office? From your intercourse with the public, and your own knowledge, will you state what that public sentiment was up to the period that said Gwin left said office; and did you ever hear or know of their marking lands as sold that were not, or of their informing individual applicants that tracts were sold that were not, or that they sold lands on a credit, receiving a separate note as a bonus or interest on the same?

Answer. I have resided in Clinton for nearly the period alluded to. Have heard of such charges from the lips of men whom I knew to be personal enemies of Gwin, and politically hostile to the administration, but never believed a single word of them. Public sentiment was, I am satisfied, highly favorable to Gwin in this place, and in the country round about, up to the period of his leaving the Mount Salus office, and continues to be so, in my opinion.

Question 2. Are you or are you not acquainted with the general character of William S. Jones and Isaac Caldwell, their disposition and occupation? And has or has not the latter frequently acknowledged himself guilty of wilful falsehood, and, by this means, dishonorably gotten out of difficulties that his drunken habits, malicious heart, and natural disposition, had involved him in? And is or is not the former a malicious, envious person, whose personal hatred and love of money will carry him to great lengths against an opponent? And do you or do you not believe these men, with their feelings toward Samuel Gwin, could do him justice?

Answer. I reply in the affirmative to all these interrogatories, and am perfectly satisfied that, organized as human nature is, it was utterly impossible for these men to do Gwin justice.

Question 3. Were you or were you not at the house of Wiley Davis, in Holmes county, some time last fall, in company with Samuel B. Marsh and others? And did you or did you not then and there hear Samuel B. Marsh charge Colonel Thomas G. Nixon, now deceased, of being guilty of perjury? Will you state all the particulars of this conversation, and whether (when known to Nixon) it did not tend to irritate his feelings, and was it not intended by said Marsh to lessen said Nixon in the estimation of the community, and of all honorable men, if he suffered it to pass without notice? And is or is not the general character of Samuel B. Marsh that of an intermeddling, mischief-making coward—a vindictive, malicious individual, without the moral courage to meet in honorable combat, but always involving others in disputes—a man that evidently carries in his countenance the marks of everything degrading to man, and humiliating to the character of man?

Answer. I was at Davis's at the time mentioned, and Samuel B. Marsh did make a wanton and unprovoked attack upon the character of Thomas G. Nixon, by charging him with perjury, on account of his having given an affidavit to R. J. Walker favorable to him. He also threatened to prosecute Nixon for perjury, and to have his ears amputated. Nixon was a highly amiable respectable man. I consider Samuel B. Marsh, from an intimate knowledge of him, one of the most malicious, mischief-making, treacherous, profligate men I ever knew, and I hold this to be the almost universal opinion of him among the respectable members of the bar of this State. I have never seen more acuteness of mind, and more legal information, united with more corruption and malignity. He is certainly a man wholly deficient in genuine courage, as a thousand notorious evidences thoroughly establish. His countenance is generally admitted to be the most hideous ever presented to view in this region, and is doubtless correspondent to his character, as described.

B. G. O. LINDSAY, Justice of the Peace.

No. 7.—Thomas G. Ringgold.

Question 1. Have you not been much in the land office at Chocchuma within the last eighteen months?

Answer. I have been employed in the land office since the 9th day of March, 1834, and have been employed by the register and receiver to attend to various duties connected with the land office at this place.

Question 2. From your knowledge of the manner the register's office has been kept, and from your frequent inspection and examination of the books of said office, do you or do you not believe that Samuel Gwin has managed it to the best of his skill and ability?

Answer. I have no hesitation in stating it as my belief, that the register at this place has not only conducted his official duties with great ability, but has always been, as far as my observation extends, urbane in his manners, and has evinced the utmost fairness in the performance of the complicated and arduous duties devolved upon him by the tenure of his office.

Question 3. From your being a magistrate for Tallahatchie county, and taking down all the evidence for pre-emption claims, do you or do you not believe Samuel Gwin to have been governed solely by a sense of duty to the government, and has done everything in his power to protect the innocent pre-emptor, by exposing and rejecting the fraudulent speculator; and from your knowledge, has said Gwin acted partially or oppressively on any claimant?

Answer. As an acting magistrate of this county, (Tallahatchie,) and in the performance of the duties assigned me in taking down testimony of claimants under the pre-emption law of 19th June, 1834, it has given me the clearest evidence of the earnestness and good faith with which the register has managed the affairs of his office, both to the government and to the applicants, under the most trying and vexatious circumstances. If he has been too rigid in his decisions, the strict letter of his instructions from the Treasury Department, and the determination on his part to avoid, if it were possible, all causes of complaint on the part of the numerous political spies set over him to catch up anything to his prejudice, have operated to produce that effect.

Question 4. Were you or were you not present at Chocchuma during all the time that James R. Marsh, commissioner, judge, or by whatever other name he may be called, and Samuel B. Marsh, who acted as clerk, under-adviser, or prompter, was taking depositions; and have you not heard several individuals who were examined by them declare that they (the said Marshes) were partial and prejudiced against the said Gwin, in said examination; and have you not heard some declare that only such parts of their evidence was written down that went to implicate said Gwin, and such parts as were in his favor were omitted; and have you not heard of individuals being summoned to give evidence, and after they ascertained that they would prove nothing against said Gwin, but much in his favor, have they not omitted or refused to take down their evidence at all?

Answer. I was at Chocchuma the whole period of the examination of the witnesses under a commission intrusted to James R. Marsh, esq., and although not present at the examination of witnesses, I heard it said much unfairness and personal dislike were evinced against the register, and a partiality evidenced toward the receiver, in scrutinizing the official conduct of them both. I heard one individual in particular say that, after he gave his testimony in to the commissioner, he, the commissioner, neglected to read it to him, and that he had no doubt much unfairness and management were carried on to ruin Colonel Gwin, if it were possible.

Question 5. Have not the said Marshes, in all their examinations, shown a wanton bitterness, and party and personal prejudice against said Gwin, that ought to have prevented any person of any delicacy or self-respect from acting as commissioner?

Answer. To this the deponent answers, that an exparte commissioner was exercising, under the authority of the Senate of the United States, a most dangerous privilege against the birthrights and most sacred honor of an American citizen, who was deprived, measurably, of responding to infamous charges made against him by designing and artful political opponents. I have frequently heard them (the Marshes) denounce Colonel Gwin in the grossest language. They are both politically and personally opposed to you. In fact, I consider the whole proceedings at Chocchuma, as carried out by the commissioners aforesaid, "the sheerest mockery of justice that could possibly be exhibited."

Question 6. Have you not heard the said Marshes frequently abuse and traduce the said Gwin; and do you not know that they are politically and personally opposed to him?

Answer. Previous to and subsequent to the action of the commissioner, James R. Marsh, up to the period of the land sales in December, 1834, I seldom ever was in company with either of the Marshes, but that they denounced the said Gwin in the most fulsome and violent manner. The register and receiver at the land sales here in 1834, in my hearing, stated to the company that certain lands on the Tallahatchie river were claimed under the pre-emption law of 1834; and that their claims (the claims of the Marshes) had been submitted to the final decision of the authorities at Washington, but no decision having been made or received from Washington, they submitted the question to the bidders, as to the propriety of bidding against the claimants. Mr. James R. Marsh bid off the lands thus claimed at $1 25 per acre. It was said by a gentlemen of the strictest veracity, that James R. Marsh and his brother Samuel B. Marsh, expressed themselves in the most satisfactory terms of their belief that the officers had acted honorably toward them in this transaction.

Question 7. Have they not done everything in their power to embarrass the said Gwin in his official duties; and in proving up their pre-emption claims were they not grossly indecorous and insulting toward him?

Answer. Upon their applying to prove up their pre-emption claims, they (the Marshes) exhibited the most hostile feelings to the register especially, so much so as to draw forth the most deserved censure of all classes and parties. James R. Marsh made a set speech, to the great annoyance and hinderance of other claimants. Sneers and denunciations, in their conversations, were seen and heard in every corner of the streets.

Question 8. From all you have seen and heard, what do you believe the public opinion is in regard to the official conduct of said Gwin?

Answer. The deponent states that, previously to his being employed in the land office at Chocchuma, he was much prejudiced against the register, (Samuel Gwin,) as an individual; but, upon a more intimate acquaintance with him, I was satisfied of his possessing generous and manly feelings; and that, although the deponent and said S. Gwin disagreed most materially upon the general policy of the present administration of the general government, nevertheless the deponent has never discovered any of those malignant and intolerant principles attributed to him by his political opponents. I firmly believe that, setting aside the political enemies of said Gwin, that he is highly esteemed for his fitness for the office he holds, as well as his general good conduct as an officer of the government, in everything relating to his official duties.

Question 9. R. H. Sterling has, in his answer to the first interrogatory, (Doc. 22, p. 51,) stated the number of times I was absent from Chocchuma, and also how long absent each time; not admitting that he is correct in his answer as to the number and length of times thus absent, but having kept no register of these absences myself, I have no means to be particular, but as you were here daily in the office, did or did not the public interest suffer, in the slightest degree, by such absence?

Answer. I do not recollect the number of times said Gwin was absent, but I am certain that previous to said Gwin's putting me in charge of his office I never heard any complaint from R. H. Sterling upon that subject, as the register allowed said Sterling the fees arising from the maps, which was considered by him (Sterling) as his compensation for the services rendered said Gwin during his occasional absence. The day after the said Gwin put me in charge of his office, I was making out a map, and the said Sterling asked me by what authority I was thus proceeding? I remarked, by the authority of the register, which I had from under his own hand. He was much disconcerted, as the loss of the fees arising from copies of the maps was in consequence of the agency invested in me. I am very certain that during the whole period of the occasional absence of said Gwin that the public interest did not suffer; nor did individuals suffer, that I ever heard of. The receiver was frequently absent on public duty, making deposits of public money, and he most generally left me in charge of his office till his return. I was, consequently, acting for, and in absence of both, the register and receiver.

Question 10. So long as Mr. Sterling received all the moneys arising from making maps in my office, while thus absent, was he or was he not rather pleased than otherwise at my occasional absence, and did or did not the sum thus received by him sometimes amount to more than his commissions?

Answer. I never heard said Sterling complain of the absence of said Gwin during the period he took charge of said Gwin's office, and I am pretty certain the map money in the month of June or July, 1834, amounted to more than said Sterling's commissions and fees on the sales of public lands for that period. I am bound to believe if said Sterling had continued to act for said Gwin, no complaint would have been made on that account against said Gwin.

Question 11. You have been in the office during the entire period of proving up pre-emptions; and did or did not Samuel Gwin have to attend alone to that difficult and embarrassing task of examining the witnesses, and did or did not Mr. Sterling take any responsibility or any interest in the matter?

Answer. I was the only magistrate employed, under the instructions of the Treasury Department, in the land office at Chocchuma, to take down testimony in pre-emption cases. The register received little or no assistance from the receiver in the performance of the duties assigned to them both, under the pre-emption law of 19th June, 1834, and as specifically laid down to them in the instructions from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to carry that law into effect. Except to receive his fee of fifty cents in each pre-emption case, allowed by law, the receiver appeared to be indifferent to the claims of the pre-emptors.

Question 12. Has or has not said Gwin, to despatch the pre-emptors who lived at a distance, had to sit up many nights to a very late hour, after being incessantly devoted to them during the day, while Mr. Sterling was enjoying himself at his ease?

Answer. It was frequently the case, as many of the pre-emptors could testify if called upon.

Question 13. Mr. Sterling states, in his answer to the second interrogatory, (same page,) in respect to an inquiry of James R. Marsh of what constituted "legal subdivisions" under the pre-emption law of 29th May, 1829, that Samuel Gwin's answer amounted to a refusal to give any explanations. Now, did you or did you not hear Samuel Gwin, at various times, on that occasion, explain to the Marshes what subdivisions were legal under the above law, and did he not repeatedly read the law and instructions, on that occasion, to prove that forty-acre subdivisions, created by the law of 1832, could not be considered as the subdivisions alluded to in the act of 1829 and 1834?

Answer. I recollect that James R. Marsh inquired of Samuel Gwin, the register, what constituted a legal subdivision under the pre-emption law of 29th May, 1830. The reply was, as well as my memory serves me at this distant period, that the law and instructions in reference to forty-acre tracts or subdivisions, created by the act of 1832, could not be considered as having reference or any pertinent bearing to the act of 1829. The register frequently referred to and commented upon the law and instructions of the government, to satisfy himself and the Messrs. Marshes of the correctness of his decisions touching their pre-emption claims. I am positively certain that R. H. Sterling, in every instance, fully coincided in and sanctioned the opinion of the register; and I cannot but express my surprise that said Sterling could have so far forgotten himself as to give the testimony referred to in the above question.

Question 14. As you noted down the whole of the testimony in the cases above alluded to, (the Marshes,) and was familiar with the whole of Samuel Gwin's conduct on that occasion, did you or did you not see anything in it that tended to oppression, unfairness, or partiality, but, as far as you could discover, did he or did he not conduct himself with the greatest forbearance to the overbearing and browbeating conduct of these men?

Answer. I took down all the testimony in the pre-emption cases referred to, and can bear testimony to the forbearance exercised by the register toward the Messrs. Marsh, who seemed to think and act upon the principle that a public officer and his office are to be regarded in the light of a mere convenience, and that those gentlemanly courtesies which should have characterized the profession to which the Messrs. Marsh belong, were entirely disregarded by them in their intercourse with the register at Chocchuma, pending the taking down the testimony before me, as the magistrate employed on that occasion.

Question 15. Did you observe any difference in the course pursued by said Gwin in relation to S. B. and James R. Marsh and others, on application for pre-emption, and is the testimony on the Marshes applications more lengthy than others under similar circumstances, as stated by Sterling?

Answer. The testimony in the cases of the Messrs. Marsh is but little if any more lengthy than the case of William Pratt, who employed Mr. Samuel B. Marsh as counsel, and who spun out the matter to an unnecessary length, to find out (as he is said to have remarked) if a certain public officer was concerned in the town of Chocchuma as one of the proprietors.

Question 16. On an application of the Marshes for a second copy of the testimony and decision on their claims for a pre-emption to Mr. Sterling, did he not refuse them, and did you not draw up a joint letter which Sterling and Gwin signed, making known the reasons for their refusal, which was delivered to the Marshes? After this, and when Gwin was absent, did or did not Mr. Stirling destroy the copy of this official and joint letter, and give a copy of the testimony as requested, and was this not done at a time when J. R. Marsh was acting under a commission from a committee of the Senate to investigate the official conduct of said officers?

Answer. He (Sterling) did refuse, in my presence, in the old land office, to furnish the Messrs. Marsh with a copy as required. Upon the suggestion of said Sterling, I drew up a communication to the Marshes, assigning reasons showing the impropriety of furnishing another copy, which was approved of and signed by the register and receiver, and handed to the Messrs. Marsh. Immediately afterward, the register left Chocchuma, and the receiver, in the course of a few days, informed me he had consented to let the Messrs. Marsh have the copy they required; and, to screen himself from their censure, he told me he had informed the Marshes that this deponent had drawn up the letter refusing them copies as stated above. I told him it was a breach of confidence, and he remarked, as he insisted on their returning the joint letter referred to, it would not give them any advantage.

Question 17. Did or did not the said R. H. Sterling propose to you that he would burn up, secretly, the testimony together with the official opinion endorsed thereon by himself and Samuel Gwin, in the pre-emption case of James R. Marsh?

Answer. He did. I remarked to him that the erasure made on the back of the paper (and upon which was their joint opinion) could in no manner affect the register or himself, and that the threat of James R. Marsh was a mere bravado, &c.

Question 18. Did or did not the said Sterling, during the whole period of proving up the above pre-emption claims, and during the time James R. Marsh was taking depositions at Chocchuma, manifest a complete and perfect subserviency to these men, not only degrading to him as an officer, but also as a man?

Answer. He did. I recollect perfectly well that the said Sterling expressed himself in the most friendly manner to James R. Marsh, stating that he entertained the highest respect for him. Marsh had not left his office five minutes before the said Sterling denounced him and his brother (the Marshes) in the most violent manner.

Question 19. Did he or did he not, during the whole of the above investigation, manifestly show a disposition, in both his words and actions to them, to conciliate them as regards himself, no matter who might suffer?

Answer. He did. It was too apparent that he had not the nerve to stand up manfully and breast the storm which was intended to crush his brother officer, who, he has frequently acknowledged to me, was, as far as he knew, innocent of the charges which his political enemies had brought against him.

Question 20. The Committee on Lands of the Senate of the United States, in their report at the last session, state, "that they will not enter into the detail of the profligate scenes which took place in this [Chocchuma] district at the land sales which opened in October, 1833, and which have continued to characterize the conduct of the register who controls the sales at private entry up to the present time." Have you or have you not been employed much of your time, if not all, in the land office, for the last eighteen months, and is the report of the committee true or false, as far as you know and believe?

Answer. I know nothing of the transactions of the land sales at Chocchuma in the fall of 1833. I was employed in the land office, commencing on the 9th March, 1834, and I have continued to act for the register occasionally, and have had every opportunity of forming a correct opinion of the charge touching the private entries of said register since that time; and I do solemnly believe that the committee have been grossly imposed upon by some persons, and do further believe the office of the register has been conducted with a strict regard to the public and private interests of all the parties concerned.

Question 21. The committee of the Senate, in their report, remark: "In the district of lands subject to the sale at Chocchuma, in Mississippi, the life of a person acting as a commissioner was attempted, which, however, failed, and the assailant fell a victim to his own rash act." Will you state all the particulars of that tragic act that came under your notice?

Answer. A day or two previous to the attack made on Samuel B. Marsh by Thomas C. Nixon, (which resulted in the death of the latter,) the said Nixon called on me to know if I recollected that part of his testimony which he qualified to before me, in which he, Nixon, stated that some part of his testimony had been omitted, which he had given before S. B. Marsh, acting as commissioner for James R. Marsh. I informed him I did not recollect the part he complained of having been omitted; but that I recollected that he, Nixon, had stated that some part of his testimony had been left out in taking down his testimony by the acting commissioner aforesaid. Mr. Nixon informed me he felt himself deeply aggrieved; that Samuel B. Marsh had said he was a perjured villain, and he could not remain satisfied until the matter was arranged to his satisfaction.

Question 22. Will you please examine and copy the caption to the deposition of Captain Titus Howard, and those following, commencing at page 87, Senate document 22, on to page 119, and state if there is any magistrate's attestation or other qualified officer to the depositions of Titus Howard, Samuel Foster, John L. Irwin, Abel Beaty, Green Hastings, Kelsey H. Douglass, Joseph Persons, Augustus L. Humphrey, John H. McKinney, John Smith, James Sims, David W. Mitchell, Thomas J. White, Thomas G. Nixon, David O. Shattuck, and R. H. Sterling, and John T. Hammond, pape 48; Samuel McCall, page 50; Nathan Hooker, page 52?

Answer. I have examined and herewith give a copy of the caption from document 22, page 87, to wit:

"By virtue of a commission to me directed from the Committee on Public Lands from the Senate of the United States, authorizing and empowering me diligently to examine all such witness or witnesses as I may think proper, upon interrogatories to be exhibited by me touching the perpetration of any frauds in the sales of the public lands of the United States, if any shall have been committed in any district of the State of Mississippi, and touching the conduct of any officer or officers of the said United States, charged or authorized by law with the conduct, direction, management, or superintendence of said sales, first having myself taken an oath, as directed by said commission, I have caused the witnesses whose names appear herein afterward, and came before me, and first called Titus Howard, who, after being duly sworn according to law, deposed as follows:"

I also find the following to be the general caption of the deposition of each of the above persons referred to, to wit: "Called and sworn, and deposed as follows:" except the deposition of Thomas G. Nixon, page 113 of said document No. 22, and to which it does not appear he was duly sworn, if sworn at all. I find upon a critical examination of the depositions, so called, of the persons above-named, that there is no attestation of a magistrate or any other person duly authorized by law to administer oaths.

Question 23. What is the concluding certificate of the commissioner, attached to the above depositions, so called?

Answer. It is in the following words, pages 118 and 119:

"CHOCCHUMA, June 30, 1834.

"I do hereby certify that the foregoing seventy-eight pages, bound together by a ribbon and sealed, contained the testimony of the persons therein named, taken under oath before me, by virtue of a commission to me directed from the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate of the United States.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 30th of June, Anno Domini 1834.

"Witness:

"R. H. STERLING,

"SIMON HUGHS."

Question 24. Did you or do you not know if James R. Marsh or Samuel B. Marsh did, at the time above named, or since, hold any judicial or other office which would, by the laws of the State of Mississippi, authorize them or either of them to administer oaths?

Answer. I do not know that either of the Messrs. Marsh held, at the period of the examination of witnesses by James R. Marsh, as commissioner aforesaid, any office which conferred upon them the power of administering oaths under the laws of the State of Mississippi.

Question 1. Were you at the land office at Mount Salus, Mississippi, during the winter of 1832 and 1833, while Samuel Gwin was register of said office, and did you there see any lands marked off on the maps as sold by an individual without the knowledge of the said Gwin; and will you state all that took place in said transaction?

Answer. I was at said land office in the latter end of December, 1832, or 1st January, 1833, while said Samuel Gwin was register, and saw a certain individual mark one quarter-section on the map of township 11, range 1 east, and I am certain it was without the knowledge of the said Samuel Gwin, as he was at that moment making out some receipts for me; and I, after leaving the office, asked the person who marked the said land his object in so doing; and he answered he intended going out and getting the money to enter said land, and his marking it would prevent others from entering it until he could do so; and, further, that the same land was entered by two other individuals afterward, at my suggestion that it was not entered.

Question 2. Were you at Chocchuma during the land sales last fall; and, if so, do you know of the existence of a company of gentlemen formed at said sales to purchase land, and do you know or have you reason to believe that Samuel Gwin, register, was either directly or indirectly interested with said company, or that he ever received any of the profits arising from their purchases, either in land or anything else?

Answer. I was at Chocchuma at the land sales in the year 1833. I am certain there was a company of gentlemen formed for the purpose of land speculation. I was frequently solicited to join them, but refused. As to Samuel Gwin's having anything to do with them, or receiving any of the profits, I know nothing, nor have I any reason to judge or know anything about it.

Question 3. Are you acquainted with Edmund C. Wilkinson; did he attend the above sales, and did he to your knowledge bid off a tract of land at about $22 per acre, upon which a deposit was demanded of said Wilkinson, which he refused to make, alleging that he had until next day to pay in; and did you hear either the register or receiver declare that, unless the said Wilkinson deposited his money, that it would be re-sold in five minutes, which it is alleged was done, and the said Wilkinson, forfeited the same? From your intimate acquaintance with said Wilkinson, had anything occurred like the above at said sales, would you not have heard of it?

Answer. I am acquainted with E. C. Wilkinson, and I saw him at the sales. I do not know of his making one bid, nor do I believe he purchased of government any lands at said sales; and as to his bidding off any lands at $22 per acre, and a demand having been made, and his reply that he had until the next day to pay the money, I know nothing of it, nor do I believe it; and further, I am certain that if such a circumstance had occurred, from my intimate acquaintance with him I should have heard of it; and I know of no other man of that name at the sales.

Question 4. You were at said sales, and were a close observer of the actions and conduct of Samuel Gwin and the receiver: did you see anything in their conduct that tended to favoritism or partiality, and did they not, as far as in their power, protect the interest of the United States?

Answer. As far as I know or saw, the conduct of the land officers was fair and impartial, and as conducive to the interest of the government as possible.

Question 1. Will you state the particulars of your entering an eighth of land as described in Colonel Eli Garner's deposition, (Senate Document 22, page 45,) which eighth had been represented as being entered by Samuel Gwin, and adjoins said Garner in T. 5, R. 1 W.?

Answer. Report had said that Samuel Gwin had entered the land described as above, and, as I had got about 2,000 boards on said land, before I heard it was entered, I called on Samuel Gwin and told him I had been, as I supposed, trespassing on his land, and that I would not remove the boards without his permission. Samuel Gwin told me frankly that he had not entered said land, and if he had entered it, that I should be welcome to all the labor that I had done on it. In some short time afterward I called at the office and inquired of a young man, who attended to the business, if this land was entered; and, after an examination, he informed me it was not; I then entered it. At the time that I entered said land, and at no other time, to my knowledge, was there any mark on this land indicating that it was entered, and at no time did Samuel Gwin represent to me that it was; and at no time did he ask, or did I give him any compensation, other than the government price for said land.

Question 2. Have you or have you not seen anything illegal or improper in the official conduct of Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron, while they had charge of said office; and was or was not the conduct of Gwin and Dameron, as far as you ever saw, impartial, attentive, and accommodating, while in said office?

Answer. I never saw anything illegal or improper in said Gwin and Dameron, and their conduct was impartial and accommodating to all, as far as I saw.

SENECA PRATT, Justice of the Peace.

No. 10.—Eli M. Garner.

Question 1. You have lived in the neighborhood of the Mount Salus land office during the entire period that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron had charge of it, and you have had a good opportunity to hear what public sentiment was in regard to the official conduct of said Gwin and Dameron. Will you state, as far as you know, what it was?

Answer. I have lived about two miles from said office about five years, which embraced the entire period that Samuel Gwin and George B. Dameron had charge of said office, and I have had a good opportunity to hear what public sentiment was in regard to them, and have no hesitation in saying, that, for accommodation and punctual attendance to the duties of their offices, they have never had their superiors in said office; and this has been the general opinion of the whole community, as far as I have heard.

Question 2. Did or did not Samuel Gwin, soon after he took charge of the Mount Salus office, inquire of you where he could enter a small tract of land, convenient to town, for his father? And did you or did you not recommend him to examine some land in your neighborhood for that purpose, being anxious that his father should settle there? And is it not probable that this wish, on the part of said Gwin, led him to say that he would enter the land which was afterward entered by Coghlan, as described in your former deposition?

Answer. Samuel Gwin did converse with me about selecting a tract for his father, and I did recommend him to my neighborhood, and was anxious for his father to settle near me. I cannot recollect whether I recommended said Gwin to the above tract or not.

Question 3. Did not said Gwin shortly afterward purchase a tract of Mr. Wilkinson, about two miles distant from where you live?

Answer. I understood he did make such a purchase.

Question 4. Was not the exparte and inquisitorial examination that was instituted by the chairman of the Committee on Lands, looked upon by a large majority of the public as unjust and improper, as tending to criminate men who were not permitted to reply or cross-examine witnesses? And was not the appointment of William S. Jones, a personal and inveterate enemy of Samuel Gwin, as one of the commissioners, looked upon with almost universal disapprobation by the public?

Answer. A large majority, as far as I could learn, of the public, did disapprove of the exparte examination of witnesses impugning the character of men who were not permitted to be heard in their own defence, or of cross-examining the witnesses who were to implicate them; and the appointment of William S. Jones, the personal enemy of Samuel Gwin, as one of the commissioners, was looked upon as wrong, and I did not believe myself that he would accept the appointment through delicacy, but he did.

Question. 5. Have you ever seen anything illegal or improper in the official conduct of Samuel Gwin or George B. Dameron, while they had charge of said office?

Answer. I have not, to my knowledge.

ELI GARNER.

This deposition was read by me to the deponent, and sworn to and subscribed to, before me, this 12th day of August, 1835.

SENECA PRATT, Justice of the Peace.

No. 11.—Thomas Barnard, of Adams county, Mississippi.

Question 1. Were you at Chocchuma during the entire period of the public land sales in 1833, and also at the close of the public sales? Were you present during the time the press at private entry was going on?

Answer. I was at Chocchuma for several days previous to the commencement of the public sales; also, during the entire period of their continuance, and to the close of the press at private entries after said sales.

Question 2. Were you knowing to the existence of one or more companies of individuals formed at said sales for the purpose of purchasing land? If yea, will you state the causes that led to the formation of these companies, and their objects?

Answer. I, with other friends, had determined to make some purchases of land at said sales. To do this safely we employed Mr. George Dougherty, an old and experienced surveyor, to examine the country previous to the sales. While thus employed he met with a number of individuals from Alabama, who were on the same business. He learned from them their object; that but few wished to settle in the State, but wished to speculate on the pioneers of the country. They had gone so far as to fix a price on perhaps every improved tract of land in the country, and in some instances had contracted in advance of the sales with the settlers, to let them have their lands at an advanced price. It was understood that in nearly all the cases the price fixed on by them was vastly beyond the means of the settlers, who would in these cases be compelled to seek a new home with their families. It was also understood that these individuals had a large capital, and were determined to pursue such a course as, in our opinion, would be ruinous, not only to the poor settlers in the country, but also the future prospects of many who were in moderate circumstances, but who were going to settle there. These facts were made known to us by Mr. Dougherty. We determined to oppose these individuals to the utmost extent of our means and information. This determination was made known to these persons and to the settlers. These things being soon made known to the settlers, they became greatly alarmed, and urged their Mississippi friends to aid them in getting their improvements; and most of them did come to the conclusion that we did—to oppose this Alabama company to the utmost extent of our means. With these feelings the sales commenced, and Mr. Walker and myself were nearly the only persons who, the first day, opposed the Alabamians, but it was soon discovered that this opposition would not benefit the settlers, but, on the contrary, few, if any of them were able to pay the price the fortunate purchasers were compelled to give. The alarm among the settlers was great, and propositions through them were made to the Alabamians, but who steadily rejected them as giving relief to the settlers. At the close of the second day's sale, the Alabamians, finding they could not carry their point, came into terms, reserving, or not opposing any settler on the quarter that included his improvement, but was at liberty to bid as high as they pleased on any other lands not occupied by a settler. Upon this the "Chocchuma Land Company" was formed, for the above reasons—for the benefit of the settlers. The further object of the company will more fully appear by a reference to the company agreement, (Exhibit A,) herewith enclosed, and also to the address of R. J. Walker, (Exhibit B,) also herewith enclosed. It was expressly stipulated that "none are precluded from bidding for any land;" and deponent recollects distinctly that Mr. Walker insisted on this clause being inserted in the company agreement, and it was with great difficulty that he could succeed in having this clause inserted, for he declared without it that he never would join the company. Deponent was present, and heard Mr. Walker's public address, on the 23d of October, 1833, explaining the object of the company; and Mr. Walker did not assert "that said settler would sign a paper obliging himself not to bid for any other lands thus offered at the sales of the public lands of the United States," or anything to that effect, but the very reverse, according to the clause above quoted from the company agreement.

The deponent is fully satisfied and knows that the object of Mr. Walker in forming said company was, that the settlers desired it, and with a view to their protection; and the deponent knows that he, with R. J. Walker, lost several thousand dollars by joining said company—Mr. Walker's whole dividend being between three hundred and one and two dollars. The deponent was present at the conference between R. J. Walker and other persons, as detailed in the affidavit of George Dougherty, published in Mr. Walker's address, and hereto appended, and said statements of said Dougherty are all true. The deponent further states that he was present at the meeting of the stockholders of the company as described in the testimony of Joseph Persons, (Senate doc. 22, p. 99;) that several individuals did answer as proxy for others who were absent, and among the number Mr. Walker answered for some, not exceeding four, and I believe two persons only; that Mr. Coapwood did move to strike out the names of all that were answered for by proxy as fictitious. This Mr. Walker opposed in the following manner: he stated that if there were any names on the list that were really fictitious, that they ought to be stricken out, but it would not do to strike out all those who were answered for by proxy, for some of them he knew were not fictitious, particularly those for which he answered for himself; that these were real subscribers, that he had received their money to invest for them at the sales; that he had subscribed for them at the formation of the company; that if the company operations had been a losing business, these persons would have borne their proportion of the loss, and that if their names were stricken out, he himself would withdraw from the company; and deponent knows that these persons were real subscribers, and that they have received their full share from the operations of the company. Deponent knows that, from the great labor and exertion of the said R. J. Walker in preparing the claims of the settlers so that he might be enabled to bid for them properly, and make the assignments to them correctly, on each day, a considerable sum was set apart by the company to be paid to him, which was placed in deponent's hands, but which Mr. Walker refused to receive, either in whole or in part, and by his direction was paid over by me to one of the treasurers of the company, and none of it is was ever received by Mr. Walker. Deponent slept in the same room with Mr. Walker, and knows that he had to sit up until after midnight nearly every night, and sometimes all night, in thus preparing to bid for the settlers and to make the assignments to them. In short, his labors were incessant night and day for the settlers, and that he lost very considerably in attending to their business and the neglect of his own; and I do know on one occasion that R. J. Walker, while engaged in the service of the settlers, was seriously injured, and came very near losing his life, and that all the settlers, so far as I know, universally approved of his conduct; and it is my full conviction, founded upon the knowledge of all the facts, that many of the settlers would have lost their farms but for his exertions, and that he advanced the money to them to do so in several instances, always refusing anything more than legal interest.

Question 3. In the report of the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate at its last session, it is stated that they (the committee) could not "enter into the detail of the profligate scenes which took place in this district at the sales which opened in October, 1833; the evidence portrays greater enormities at this office than is believed to have occurred at any time in any land district of the United States;" and it continues to say, that these scenes "have continued to characterize the conduct of the register who controls the sales at private entry up to the present time." As you were at the above sales during the entire period, and up to the close of the press at private entry, did you see or hear of any of the "profligate scenes" that is here alluded to, and was the conduct of Samuel Gwin, register, such as to warrant the above declaration in any sense or under any circumstances? On the contrary, was or was not his official and private conduct at said sales above the breath of reproach in guarding the interest of the United States; in short, is or is not the above charge or insinuation a base and malicious calumny, destitute of every shadow of truth, and not warranted by anything that transpired at said sales?

Answer. I did not see myself, nor did I hear from others, of any of the "profligate scenes" that are alluded to in the above extract from the report of the Committee on Lands in the United States Senate, nor do I believe that any such scenes (meaning anything unlawful, unjust, or improper) did transpire at said public sales, or at the private entries. The conduct of Samuel Gwin, register of the said office, was, during the entire period here alluded to, highly meritorious and proper, as far as I know, or could discover, or heard. I look upon the sentiment and charges contained in the said quotation as not being supported by anything, even remotely, that transpired during the time I was at said sales. As I have not been at Chocchuma since the above time, I cannot say what has been the conduct of Samuel Gwin in this time, but when there, I can speak with confidence.

Question 4. It is further stated in said report, in speaking of the union of the several companies, that they "united for the purpose of monopolizing all the good lands then offered at public sale, of overawing bidders and driving all competition out of market; that the company established an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened on each day a regular sale of the lands purchased by them at public sale; that, at the public sales, the company claimed, and actually enforced a complete monopoly; that the officers either connived at or participated in these fraudulent transactions." Was "monopoly" and to "overawe bidders" and "drive off all competition," the object of those who formed this company? Did said company establish an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened on each day a regular sale of the lands purchased by them? Did the company claim and actually enforce a complete monopoly at the public sales? Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that Samuel Gwin, register, either "connived at or participated in" these pretended frauds, or did you hear any one at said sales intimate that said Gwin was interested with this or any other company?

Answer. The object of those in forming the company is fully explained in my answer to the second question. They had no such object as is here charged to them, nor were the above charges the correct result of any of the operations of said company. The company had no office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened on each day a regular sale of the lands purchased by them; there was nothing that occurred at said sales that can warrant such a declaration or position. At the close of the first two weeks' sale, which was the limit in time of the company, they did put up their lands at public auction, at the only tavern in the place, some sixty yards from the land office. I know that Samuel Gwin, register, did not "participate" in the profits of said company, nor did he to my knowledge or belief "connive" at it.

Question 5. At the sales at private entry, did or did not Samuel Gwin act in every respect with the utmost impartiality in everything that came under your observation; and was or was not his rules drawn up with the greatest care, so that every individual applicant should be on an equal footing?

Answer. He did; manifesting the greatest zeal and perseverance in the performance of his duties, and unabating in his exertions to accommodate those who were waiting on him. His rules, not only at the private sales, but at the public sales, were calculated to, and did in fact, put every one on the same footing in the opportunities to become purchasers of the public lands.

Question 6. From the number of persons who were then waiting to make entries, all equally anxious and desirous to make the first entry, not only to avoid competition, but so that they might return home, could Samuel Gwin have taken any other course than the one he did to give all an equal opportunity to make their entries, as all were equally entitled to his services?

Answer. At the close of the public sales there were, I suppose, from two to five hundred persons on the ground, who had made purchases at the public sales, and wished, at private entry, to extend or add to their former purchases, so as to complete their settlements. All, or most of those persons, had their applications made out, and it was only necessary for the register to examine his maps, and put the area in the application and sign it; but it was known that there would be conflictions on some of these applications—he could attend to but one at a time, and if he had permitted them to have come in his way, all would have at the same instant applied, and it is highly probable that while he was filling up the area, and signing one application, other applications might be in his possession for the same land, equally entitled to it as the one he was filling up, or persons would have been continually harassing him to take their applications. I am fully satisfied, from the anxiety felt by the crowd on this occasion, that it would have been impossible for the register to have gone on in this way, and he might have been justly chargeable with partiality had he attempted it. He could not attend to all in the same moment, and to have made a distinction would have justly created great excitement. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that his rules were as well calculated to avoid this dilemma as they could possibly have been; and, in fact, I do not see how he could have got along at all without them, or others like them.

Question 7. You were frequently in the company of Samuel Gwin during the existence of these companies; did he or did he not do everything in his power, and, in fact, all that a man could do, to guard and protect the interest of the United States; and did he show any favor to or partiality for the company, or any member of it?

Answer. I was almost daily and hourly in his company during said sales, and I am satisfied that he did everything in his power to guard those interests intrusted to him. I never saw any favors to or partiality for the company or any member of it, but the reverse.

Question 8. Did you or did you not hear Samuel Gwin declare, that if he was advised that said company was violating the laws of the United States, that he would, on his own responsibility, stop the sales?

Answer. I did hear him make this declaration, frequently; and that he might not be subject to any charge on this subject, he called on the honorable John Black in my presence, and handed him a book that I understood was the land laws of the United States, and asked him to read the law on the subject, and to give him his (Judge B.'s) opinion whether the company agreement was in violation of the laws; and I understood—in fact I have heard Judge Black say—that the company was violating no law of the United States, and it was perfectly legal, after having read the company agreement.

Question 9. From the quantity and quality of land sold at said sales, do you or do you not believe that the United States was ultimately benefited by this company?

Answer. I do believe they were more benefited by its existence than they would have been otherwise.

Question 10. Did you see or know of Samuel Gwin turning persons out of the office who did not belong to the company, and permit others who did to remain in it? On the contrary, did he not use the greatest lenity toward the assembled multitude, and did he not decorously give them every facility in his power?

Answer. I saw no distinction in admitting persons to the office, and he was disposed and did grant all every accommodation that lay in his power.

Question 11. Did you hear it charged or insinuated at said sales that Samuel Gwin was in any way, either directly or indirectly, interested in said company or companies, or that he was connected with them in any of their transactions?

Answer. I did not, nor do I believe he was.

Question 12. From the manner that Samuel Gwin kept the applications at private entry, could any one, after they were placed in his hands, have read them; and do you believe that any one of them was read by any persons, save those who handed them in?

Answer. I do not believe any application was read by any other than the person who put it in, after Samuel Gwin received it. He held a cigar-box in his hand, and, as they were handed in, he instantly placed them in the box.

Question 13. Did you or did you not discover any partiality or favoritism in said Gwin in conducting said sales?

Answer. I did not.

JAMES CARSON, J. P.

No. 12.—James A. Girault.

Question 1. Were you present at Chocchuma during the land sales in October and November, 1833?

Answer. I was, and attended them daily, and for a week after the sales closed, with the exception of a day or two, being then indisposed.

Question 2. Did you know of the formation of a company of individuals to purchase lands at said sales?

Answer. I do know that there was such a company formed.

Question 3. Did you hear a speech that was delivered by R. J. Walker, announcing to the settlers the fact of the formation of a company, and will you state the purport of said speech as far as your recollection serves?

Answer. I did not hear said speech delivered; it must have been delivered when I was indisposed, or engaged with the officers of the land office.

Question 4. In what respect did the members forming that company bind themselves with regard to the actual settlers?

Answer. The company agreed with the actual settlers that their rights as such should be protected, and that they should have their eighth or quarter-section upon which they were settled, at the same price that the company agents purchased it at the government sales.

Question 5. Was it not the prevailing opinion among the settlers that, by the formation of this company, the settlers were as fully protected in their improvements as if there had been a pre-emption law?

Answer. It was, and I heard many so express themselves; and they also stated that if it had not been for the company, they would certainly have been deprived of their homes, or forced to pay extravagant prices for their improvements.

Question 6. As far as your knowledge extends, were not the objects of the company not only lawful, but laudable?

Answer. I do not hesitate to say that the objects of the company were laudable, inasmuch as they actually established a pre-emption law, in effect, to the settlers, and secured to them their homes, which government had not done; and every transaction of said company which came to my knowledge was lawful.

Question 7. Do you or do you not know of any contract, bargain, or any agreement among any company of individuals, that any one should not bid upon or purchase any land that he might wish, or did, by intimidation, combination, or unfair management, hinder or prevent any person or persons from bidding upon or purchasing any tract or tracts of land then offered for sale; but was not, as far as your knowledge extends, every individual at full liberty to bid or not, as his judgment might dictate?

Answer. I do not; the company restricted no one from bidding.

Question 8. Do you know of any who were compelled to sign any paper depriving themselves of the right to bid for as much land as they might think proper?

Answer. I do not.

Question 9. Who were the most active persons on the part of the company, in behalf of the settlers?

Answer. As far as I saw, Robert J. Walker and Thomas G. Ellis were devoted entirely to the interest of the settlers, and they were more active than others because they were two of the agents of the company to purchase the land and attend to the settlers.

Question 10. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that Samuel Gwin was either directly or indirectly interested or concerned with said company, or that he ever received, either directly or indirectly, any of the profits arising from the purchases of said company, either in money, land, or anything else?

Answer. I believe that Samuel Gwin was not, either directly or indirectly, interested in any manner whatever with said company, and that he did not, in any manner, receive any of the profits arising from the purchases of said company; and if he had been, my daily knowledge of the proceedings of said company, and the final closing of the same, I certainly would have known it.

Question 11. On the contrary, did you not hear the said Samuel Gwin repeatedly condemn the formation of said company, and as far as your knowledge extends, did he not oppose them in every particular, as far as he could?

Answer. On several occasions I did hear Samuel Gwin condemn the formation of any company, and to say that he would be compelled to close the public sales if he could find any illegality in their proceedings.

Question 12. Did you see any act or acts of said Gwin, which tended to favor the company, any member of it, or any one else?

Answer. I did not.

Question 13. Was not the said Gwin's conduct during the whole sales open and fair, and as far as you can judge, did he not guard the interests of the United States to his utmost ability?

Answer. I transacted a good deal of business in the location of my three "Jefferson College" floats, before Samuel Gwin, and also in the purchase and entry of a good deal of land. I, of course, had a full opportunity of witnessing the conduct and management of Col. Samuel Gwin, and I do not hesitate to say that all his acts were open, fair, and candid, and guarded the interest of the United States above all others, to the best of my knowledge.

Question 14. Will you read that part of Mr. Edmund Row's deposition, in which he states a tract of land "was bid off for Mr. Wilkinson at $22 per acre," &c.? Did anything occur at said sales that bears the remotest resemblance to anything in this answer?

Answer. I do not recollect anything of the kind, nor do I recollect of hearing of the name of Wilkinson at the sales.

Question 15. Had anything like this answer occurred at said sales, would you not, from your daily attendance at them, have seen or heard of it, and did you see or hear of such an occurrence?

Answer. If any such occurrence as mentioned by said Row had taken place, I certainly must have heard of it, but I did not.

Question 16. Do you not believe that the paper now presented to you is the very same that Samuel Gwin kept as a register of the bids as they were knocked off, and will you examine it, and see if there was any tract of land bid off by Mr. Wilkinson, or do you find his name on the register either as bidding off land or forfeiting it?

Answer. Having frequent occasion during the sales to refer to the register kept by Samuel Gwin, I do believe that the one now presented to me is the very same kept by him for registering the bids. I do not find any tract of land bid off by Mr. Wilkinson, nor do I find his name on the register, either as bidding off land or forfeiting it.

Question 17. Will you further examine said register, and give a copy of it, where Edmund Row and A. V. Row, his son, bid off land, and where the same was sold the next day?

Answer. I here copy the following from the register, to wit:

"Friday, October 25, 1833.—Forfeited, [in red ink,] Edmund Row, Virginia, E. half of S. E. quarter, sec. 11, township 24, range 3 E., 79.70 acres at $3 per acre, $239 10.

"Forfeited, [in red ink,] Edmund Row, Virginia, W. half of S. W. quarter, sec. 12, township 24, range 3 E., 80.35 acres, at $3 50 per acre, $281 33.

"Forfeited, [in red ink,] Abner V. Row, of Virginia, W. half of N. E. quarter, sec. 13, township 24, range 3 E., 80.46 acres, at $4 per acre, $321 84.

"Saturday, October 26, 1833.—Augustus L. Humphrey, Washington, E. half of S. E. quarter, sec. 11, township 24, range 3 E., 79.70 acres, at $2 60 per acre, $207 22.

"R. J. Walker, W. half of S. W. quarter, sec. 12, township 24, range 3 E., 80.35 acres, at $1 27 per acre, $102 04.

"R. J. Walker, E. half of N. E. quarter, sec. 13, township 24, range 3 E., 80.46 acres, at $1 25 per acre, $100 58.

"R. J. Walker, W. half of N. E. quarter, sec. 13, township 24, range 3 E., 80.46 acres, at $1 25 per acre, $100 58."

Question 18. A little below where the name of Mr. Row is registered on said register, do you not find the name of "John Black" inserted as one of the bidders on the same day with Mr. Row, and on the adjoining section?

Answer. I do.

Question 19. Will you examine that part of Mr. Row's testimony in which he swears that he heard "Samuel Gwin say exultingly, and with a snap of his fingers," &c.; now, from the manner Samuel Gwin was situated, while the crier was crying the sales, could he have made the declaration as related in Mr Row's answer, without at least fifty persons hearing it, and did you ever hear him make such a remark?

Answer. I do not think such a remark could have been made by Col. Gwin without a number of persons hearing him. I never did hear him make such a remark, or anything like it.

Question 20. Will you give a description of the position the said Samuel Gwin was in while the crier was crying the sales, and from the examination of the register now presented you, and taken down at the moment the land was knocked off, could he, the said Gwin, have had any time to see who were bidding, and keep his register, (as it is all in his own handwriting,) and keep up the necessary marks on his township plats?

Answer. During the sales Colonel Gwin was seated at a table, and the crier was between him and the window, at which the crowd and bidders were stationed, and therefore it was almost impossible for him, Colonel Gwin, to see who were bidding, as it employed all his eyes to keep up the register and make the necessary marks upon his township plats.

Question 21. Had he, the said Gwin, have made any such a declaration as contained in Mr. Row's deposition, would it not have been a subject of remark by the crowd that always surrounded the window while the crier was on his stand?

Answer. A remark of that kind by Colonel Gwin would certainly have been noticed by many near the window, and by others in the room with Colonel Gwin.

Question 22. Will you further examine said register, and state if you can find on it where any tract of land was sold at $22 per acre, or about that sum, except the one on the 28th October, which you will please copy, and also copy where it was sold the next day?

Answer. I find no tract of land on said register that sold for $22 per acre, or about that sum, or more than $11 per acre, except the following one, to wit:

"October 28, 1833.—Forfeited, John W. McLamore, Washington, east half of southeast quarter, 33, 23, 4 east, 80.03 acres, $22 65, $1,812 68."

"October 29, 1833.—T. G. Ellis, east half of southeast quarter, 33, 23, 4 east, 80.03 acres, $1 35, $108 04."

Question 23. Do you know whether Mr. McLamore, who forfeited the above land, was a connection of John C. McLamore, of Tennessee?

Answer. I do not.

Question 24. Will you further examine said register, and state whether you find a single bid made by Mr. John C. McLamore, of Tennessee, or where he made a single purchase at said sales?

Answer. I do not find the name of John C. McLamore registered as a purchaser at said sales.

Question 25. Was the said McLamore one of the persons selected by the company to bid at said sales?

Answer. He was not.

Question 26 Were not R. J. Walker, T. G. Ellis, and others of the company, uncompromising in their protection of the settlers in their improvements?

Answer. I observed often the untiring and uncompromising disposition of R. J. Walker in the protection of the settlers' improvements; and the company generally were of the same disposition, but not so active.

Question 27. From all you saw and heard, do you, or do you not, believe that Samuel Gwin was a faithful and energetic agent of the government, and from the conflicting interests, and the immense capital that was on the ground, and the numerous purchasers, do you believe that any other man could have done better?

Answer. From my daily observation of the conduct and management of Colonel Gwin in his office, I believe he was faithful and energetic, and had a single eye to the interest of the government.

Question 28. Do you know, or have you not reason to believe, that James R. Marsh and Samuel B. Marsh, are not only political but personal enemies of the said Samuel Gwin?

Answer. I do know that they are political opponents of Colonel Gwin, and have heard, and believe, that they are personal enemies of said Colonel S. Gwin.

[NOTE.—The original of the above deposition was sent on to a member of the Senate at the last session, with others. The above copy was submitted to the deponent, with the following additional interrogatories, to which he has answered, and was qualified to the whole again, as will appear.]

Question 29. The committee of the Senate, in their report, say they will not enter into the detail of the profligate scenes which took place in this (Chocchuma) district, at the sales of 1833, "which have continued to characterize the conduct of the register who controls the sales at private entry up to the present time." As you were at the sales in 1833, did you, or did you not, see any of these "profligate" scenes, and have you, or have you not, since you have resided in the neighborhood of Chocchuma, seen any of the "profligate scenes" here spoken of, as characterizing the conduct of said Samuel Gwin?

Answer. I did not see, at the sales in October, 1833, any such "profligate scenes," above alluded to; nor have I ever seen or witnessed any since.

Question 30. It is also alleged by said committee that "greater enormities existed at this office than is believed to have occurred at any time, in any land district of the United States." Do you, or do you not, know or heard of any of these enormities; and is, or is not, this declaration sustained by one shadow of truth?

Answer. I do not know, nor have I ever heard of any such enormities alleged against Colonel Gwin, with truth; nor have I any evidence to believe that they ever existed.

Question 31. As you were at the sales in 1833, and was conversant with most, if not all, the transactions of the company of land purchasers, did you hear of them, or any one of them, "overawing bidders," or "monopolizing all the good lands," or of "driving all competition out of market?"

Answer. I did not.

Question 32. Did, or did not, the company "establish an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened on each day a regular sale of the land purchased by them at public sale?"

Answer. The company had one or two sales of the land they had purchased, and was sold at Brooks's tavern, then Colonel Pratt's.

Question 33. Did, or did not, the company claim, and actually enforce, a complete monopoly at said public sales?

Answer. They did not, they prevented no one from bidding.

Question 34. Did, or did not, the agents of the company undertake to dictate terms to the actual settlers at said sales?

Answer. Not in the least, as I knew of.

Question 35. Was, or was not, any proviso, any condition or prohibition in the company, that "each settler should not bid at public sale for any other land," but is not all such declarations false and unfounded in every respect?

Answer. If there ever was such a condition I knew nothing of it. I believe the whole transactions of the company fair, and very beneficial to the settler.

Question 36. As a member of said company, was there any act or acts transacted in said company that you or any other member would not be willing should be exposed "to open day?"

Answer. There is not one act or deed transacted, to my knowledge, by said company, that I would object to be exposed to "open day," or the whole world.

Question 37. Have you or have you not reason to believe that Samuel Gwin either "connived at," or participated in any "fraudulent transactions," either at said sales or anywhere else?

Answer. I have not the least shadow of reason that he did; but, to the contrary, firmly believe he did not.

Question 38. Do you know or have you reason to believe that said Gwin committed any act or acts in "violation of law," or was guilty of "manifest partiality" at said sales, or at any other time?

Answer. This question has been fully answered in the negative.—(See answer to 12th interrogatory.)

Question 39. Did or did he not guard and protect the interest of the United States at said sales, and at all other times, to the utmost extent of his ability and means?

Answer. This question has already been answered fully in the affirmative.—(See answer to the 27th interrogatory.)

Question 40. The committee of the Senate, in their report, remark: "In the district of lands subject to sale at Chocchuma, in Mississippi, the life of a person acting as commissioner was attempted, which, however, failed, and the assailant fell a victim to his own rash act." As this part of the report, no doubt, is in allusion to the death of Colonel Thomas G. Nixon, by the hands of Samuel B. Marsh, will you state all the particulars of that tragic event that came under your observation, and also the agency you took in bringing about a reconciliation before the event, and all other circumstances connected therewith?

Answer. In answer to the foregoing I will state that, a few days previous to the fall of the lamented Colonel Nixon by the hands of Samuel B. Marsh, both of those gentlemen called upon me, and stated explicitly to me the unpleasant difficulty then existing between them.

Colonel Nixon was the first; he called upon me, and said he wished to advise with me what course to pursue, and said that Mr. Marsh had attacked his honor and veracity as a gentleman, and had gone so far as to come to his own house and charge him with perjury and giving a false certificate, in relation to some of the proceedings of the commissioner sitting at Chocchuma, in taking testimony touching the alleged frauds at the sales at said Chocchuma district; that he had seen Mr. Marsh, and he consented to meet him in Chocchuma some day, for the purpose of settling the matter in an amicable manner, by leaving it to two or three of their friends, and asked me to attend as one. I readily consented, and only with a view as mediator. The next day Mr. Samuel B. Marsh called upon me, and requested my attendance also, and stated that Wednesday was the day appointed by him and Colonel Nixon to have the differences between them settled; and from the conversations of both parties, I anticipated there would be no difficulty in the explanations of both, and that the difficulties between them could easily be adjusted by us. Accordingly, on Wednesday morning I repaired to Chocchuma, with no other view except as a friendly mediator, called upon by both parties. Upon arriving in town I saw Mr. Marsh, and afterward Colonel Nixon. The latter informed me that he had changed his intentions as respects the course he would pursue toward Mr. Marsh, and that instead of troubling his friends, he was determined to make Mr. Marsh retract what he had said and charged against him; and if he would not, and refused, he was determined to horsewhip Mr. Marsh in public. I replied to the colonel, and told him if that was his intention I would have no more to do in the affair, and could not advise my own brother in a similar case. I left Colonel Nixon, with a view of informing Mr. Marsh that I could do no more in the matter; but on my way was stopped by some gentleman to drink, and in that time Colonel Nixon passed down the street where Mr. Marsh was. I was fearful and expected some bad results, and walked away. I did not see the whipping, nor did I see the firing, but heard it all; and upon returning to the spot I met Mr. Marsh entering a shop, and Colonel Nixon pursuing him; they met in the house, and I heard one pistol fire, but cannot say who fired it. The parties reached each other; a small scuffle or fight over chairs, &c., took place, and Mr. Marsh fell on the floor, against the wall, and Colonel Nixon in the middle of the floor, apparently in the agonies of death, and expired immediately, having received a large number of shot in the face and breast, and Mr. Marsh one ball in the abdomen.

I again will state that I was called there for the sole purpose of reconciliation, and had not the most distant idea that the day would have brought about so tragical an event, or I certainly would have avoided it.

JAS. A. GIRAULT.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, Eli McMullin, justice of the peace for Tallahatchie county, this 28th September, 1835.

ELI McMULLIN, Justice of the Peace.

No, 13.—Wiley Davis, Holmes county.

Question 1. Were you at Chocchuma during the entire period of the land sales in 1833; and also after the sales were over, did you or did you not remain some time until the heavy press of private entry was over?

Answer. I was at said land sales during the first week, and up to Wednesday of the second week, after which I was at the Columbus sales, and returned to Chocchuma just as they were commencing to enter at private entry, and remained there until the bulk of the private entries were over.

Question 2. In the report of the Committee on Public Lands in the United States Senate, at its last session, it is stated that they (the committee) could not enter into the detail of the profligate scenes which took place in this district, at the sales which opened in October, 1833; that the evidence portrays greater enormities at this office than is believed to have occurred at any time, in any land district in the United States; and it continues to say that these scenes have continued to characterize the conduct of the register, who controls the sales of private entry up to the present time. As you were at said public sales, and have been occasionally at said office ever since, is or is not the above statement true?

Answer. I was a close and attentive observer at said sales up to the time I left for Columbus; was constantly, when the bidding was going on, about the window or in the office, and I saw nothing of the "profligate scenes" alluded to. I have been at many sales in this State, and I am satisfied, from the great competition, and the mass of persons wishing to purchase, that I have never been at any sales better conducted, as far as the interest of the government was concerned. As for the conduct of Samuel Gwin, register, he was the most indefatigable and persevering officer that I ever saw. Crowded and pressed with his official duties, few, if any man, could have performed the duties as faithfully as he did. There was nothing profligate, illegal, or improper, in his conduct, as far as I saw or heard. I have been at said office, I may say, nearly every few months from the first sales to the present time, and I never saw anything in the conduct of said Gwin, or heard it, but the strictest integrity, the most prompt attention, and faithful and vigilant agent of the government, as much so as I have ever seen in any officer. I should therefore pronounce the whole charge, as above contained in said report, as destitute of one particle of truth to sustain it, or even remote circumstances.

Question 3. It is further stated in said report, in speaking of the union of the several companies, that they "united for the purpose of monopolizing all the good lands then offered at public sale, of overawing bidders, and driving all competition out of the market; that the company established an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened, on each day, a regular sale of the lands purchased by them at public sale; that at the public sales the company claimed and actually enforced a complete monopoly; and that the officers either connived at or participated in these fraudulent transactions." Now, is there one word of truth in this whole tale? and do you know, or have you any reason to believe, that Samuel Gwin, register, either "connived at or participated in these pretended frauds, or did you hear any one at said sales intimate that he was interested with this or any other land company?

Answer. There was a company formed at said sales before I left Chocchuma, the objects of which I know was not "monopoly" or to "overawe bidders," or any such thing. The reasons for forming such a company are fully and correctly set forth in the deposition of Thomas Barnard, in his second answer, to which I hereby refer as part of my answer in this respect. The company, to my knowledge, had no office in the vicinity of the register's office; but they had one in a room of the principal tavern in the place, but which was some distance from the land office, and had no connection with it; nor do I believe that Samuel Gwin knew of such an office, for his duties were so engrossing that he had no time to be out of his own office. The company did not from day to day have a sale of their lands; and I know of but one company sale while I was at said sales, which was a partial one. I do not believe, nor have I any reason for forming such belief, that Samuel Gwin, register, either "connived at or participated in" any of the company transactions, but on the reverse, I know that he was violently opposed to the company aud its operations.

Question 4. At the sales, at private entry, did or did not Samuel Gwin act in every respect with the utmost impartiality in everything that came under your observation, and was or was not his rules drawn up with the greatest care, so that every individual applicant should be on an equal footing?

Answer. The rules at private entry were drawn up with great care, so that every applicant was on an equal footing; and I saw or heard of no partiality or favoritism in said Gwin, either at the private entries or at the public sales.

Question 5. From the number of persons who were there, waiting to make entries, all equally anxious and desirous to be first, either to prevent competition or to return home, could Samuel Gwin have taken any other course than the one he did, to give all an equal chance to make their entries, as all were equally entitled to his services?

Answer. At the close of the sales there were present several hundred persons—all anxious, and pressing to be discharged. It was impossible for the register to act at once on all the applications; for him to have taken one, to the exclusion of several hundred others who were equally prepared, would have been partiality, and would not have been borne; and I am confident that said Gwin could not, nor anybody else, have done any business without such rules as he adopted; and I do not believe that any man could have done better than he did, or hardly as well, under such trying circumstances.

Question 6. Did you or did you not hear Samuel Gwin declare that if he was advised that any company was violating the laws of the United States, he would, on his own responsibility, stop the sales?

Answer. I did hear him repeatedly declare that if there was any combination or company violating the laws of the United States at said sales, he would stop the sales; and, from his known and violent opposition to the company, I am satisfied that he would have done so, if not legally advised that the company agreement was not in violation of any law of the government.

Question 7. Did you know of Samuel Gwin turning people out of the office, who did not belong to the company, and permit others who did to remain in it?

Answer. I never knew of his turning out any person, but always showed the greatest disposition to accommodate all.

Question 8. From the manner that Samuel Gwin kept the applications at private entry, could any person, after they came into his hands, have read them: and do you or do you not believe that any human being ever did read one of them after he had received them.

Answer. From the manner he kept them, (to wit, in a cigar-box, in his hand,) I do not believe that any person could read them, nor do I believe that any one ever attempted to read one; for if they had, they would have been detected, as there was always a crowd around the counter who must have seen such an attempt, had it been made.

Question 9. What was the general impression among the people in regard to the attempt of Samuel B. Marsh to enter a piece of land for John Jones, against the rules and in violation of the law, which attempt was carried into effect by the receiver giving a receipt for said land that had not been sold, and in violation of his own rules?

Answer. The subject referred to was much spoken of during the day, and was, as far as I could hear, universally looked upon as an undue advantage, and one, in my opinion, that no gentleman would have been guilty of.

Question 10. From all you saw or heard at said sales, do you or do you not believe that Samuel Gwin, register, conducted said sales with the strictest regard to the interest of the United States, and with the utmost impartiality to individuals?

Answer. I do believe that he did.

Question 11. Will you state, as far as you can recollect, the remarks of Samuel R. Marsh at your house, last fall, about Colonel Thomas G. Nixon, which ultimately led to the murder of said Nixon by said Marsh at Chocchuma?

Answer. I was present at my house, last fall, and did hear Samuel B. Marsh make a wanton and unjustifiable attack on the character of Colonel T. G. Nixon, by charging him with perjury, on account of his having given an affidavit to R. J. Walker, favorable to him. He (Marsh) also threatened to prosecute Nixon for perjury, and to have his ear amputated. To this remark, General H. S. Foote offered to make him a bet of a suit of clothes that if ever Nixon heard of his remarks, that he (Nixon) would compel Marsh to leave the country. Thomas G. Nixon was a high-minded, honorable gentleman, of as strict veracity as any man living, and as true a patriot, friend, and companion, as ever lived; and from my knowledge of his high-toned honor, I was satisfied that if this wanton charge ever came to his ears, that he would never let it pass, or its author, unnoticed; and I was, therefore, prepared to hear of a conflict, not as it did, in fact, result in the death of a worthy man, who is lost to an amiable wife, and has left a family of interesting children fatherless, but in the punishment of a slanderer.

Question. Were you at Chocchuma during the land sales last fall, and if so, did you know of the formation of a company of individuals to purchase lands at said sales; and have you any reason to believe, or do you know, that Samuel Gwin, the register, was either directly or indirectly connected with said company, or that he ever received any of the profits arising from the purchases made by said company, either in land or anything else; and, as far as you know, did not the said Samuel Gwin and R. H. Sterling conduct the above sales without favor or partiality, and to the interest of the United States, as far as in their power?

Answer. I was at the sales mentioned above, and have no personal knowledge that either of the above-named gentlemen were directly or indirectly interested in the formation of the Chocchuma land company, or profited at all in the profits of the same.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, Tallahatchie County:

Personally appeared before me, Eli McMullen, an acting justice of the peace for said county, R. H. Sterling; and after being duly sworn, made the following statement, to wit: Some time in the mouth of November or December, 1833, James R. Marsh exhibited to said deponent a letter purporting to be from Governor Poindexter to said Marsh, authorizing him to draw on said Poindexter at Natchez, or on the United States Branch Bank at Natchez, said deponent is not certain which, nor does not recollect that there was any amount of such contemplated drafts mentioned; but he does distinctly recollect that the object of the drawing was to raise funds to be appropriated to the payments of lands that said Marsh might purchase from the United States, either for Poindexter or himself. The answer of said deponent was to this effect: That he could not receive such drafts; but that individuals might avoid the responsibility of carrying money, by bringing certificates of deposit from any of the banks in Natchez, as such species of funds were receivable in payment for public lands. Said deponent is confident that the foregoing is true, in substance, of what passed between him and said Marsh on this subject. He did not hand the letter to deponent to read, but held it in his hand and read a part of it in relation to the land operations. It appeared, from the view that deponent had of it, to be a long communication, and, in all probability, treated on other subjects than the mere purchase of lands. Further this deponent saith not.

Question 1. Did you not, with Joseph Francis, receive of James R. Marsh the sum of one hundred dollars, a few days past, not to bid at the public land sales at Chocchuma, for the southwest quarter-section 21, township 22, range 1 west?

Answer. Joseph Francis and myself did receive one hundred dollars of James R. Marsh, (by an order on R. H. Sterling for the money,) which he agreed to give us not to bid on the said southwest quarter-section 21, township 22, range 1 west.

Question 2. Did you not hear R. H. Sterling, the receiver of public moneys at Chocchuma, say to-day, that James Armstrong (in whose name the said quarter was bid off at the public sale) had transferred before him the said quarter to James R. Marsh?

Answer. I heard Mr. Sterling make that statement.

No. 17.—John T. Hammond.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, Tallahatchie County:

John T. Hammond, being sworn, saith that he was at the land sales at Chocchuma during the fall of 1833, nearly every day during said sales; that he knew of a company of individuals who attended said sales to purchase public lands; that it was agreed among the members of said company that each actual settler should have a quarter-section to include his improvements, and no member of said company was to oppose such settler; that if the agent of the company purchased the lands, they were bound to transfer it to the settler at cost, and, as far as deponent's knowledge extends, every settler did secure his settlement, or was paid for his improvement to his satisfaction. This deponent is fully satisfied that if it had not been for the exertions of Robert J. Walker, the settlers would have suffered greatly; that he has understood that said Walker would not go into said company until a clause was inserted, protecting the settler in his improvement. This deponent knows that said Walker exerted himself, night and day, assiduously in behalf of the settler, without receiving any reward. From what I saw and heard at said sales, it was the general belief that the formation of this company was of great service to the settlers; that many of them were poor and unable to buy their lands, and by selling their improvements they acquired funds, and did purchase a home for their families. This deponent was intimate with Samuel Gwin, the register of the land office, and frequently heard him speak of the formation of this company, and he did oppose it with all the means in his power; that I heard him frequently remark that he would suspend the sales if the law authorized such a course. This deponent is fully satisfied that said Gwin was not interested in said company, or participated in any of the profits arising from it. This deponent further states that he has read Edmund Row's evidence, and, although deponent was present nearly every day during said sales, he saw nothing at them bearing the slightest resemblance to what Mr. Row has stated. This deponent never heard, during said sales, any person allege or intimate that said Gwin was concerned with said company; that after the public sales were over there was a considerable press to enter lands; that this deponent also was entering, and said Gwin informed him "to stand up to his fodder like a man, and let Uncle Sam have the money, and not the speculators;" that this remark was used under these circumstances: many individuals would put in applications for the same land, and when put up to auction no one would bid, but agree that it should be entered by one of them, when they would go out and put it up to the highest bidder, and divide the surplus. It was against this practice that said Gwin urged us "to stand up to our fodder"—meaning that we should bid it off at the counter, and let the United States have the profits. This deponent was called on by James R. Marsh and Samuel B. Marsh, to give his evidence; that he did give it in, but believes that parts of his statements were not put down by them, but he was not qualified to said statement, nor was it ever read to him after it was completed, nor did he ever sign it. If it is sent on in this situation, he protests against its being received as his deposition. This deponent does believe that the said James R. Marsh, in his examination of witnesses, was prejudiced against said Samuel Gwin, and that he is not only politically, but personally opposed to him. This deponent is free in saying, that, in conducting said sales, Samuel Gwin acted without favor or partiality to any one, and that he acted, as far as he could, for the interest of the United States. He never heard one complain of partiality in said Gwin during the said sales or since. This deponent states that, before the said James R. Marsh took his testimony, that he, said Marsh, pretended to administer an oath to the deponent, but that the testimony taken down by said Marsh was not read to me at any time.

Samuel McCall personally appeared, and, after being duly sworn, states that, sometime in the month of September or October last, he was served with a summons by Mr. Coleman to appear at Chocchuma, at Brooks's tavern, before James R. Marsh, to state what he knew of the frauds practised on the government at the land sales in 1833 at that place; and states that, after stating various facts in relation to his knowledge of said sales, he informed Mr. Marsh that he was employed by Governor Hiram G. Runnels, John C. McLamore, and Wiley Davis, to search for good lands for them to purchase at said sales; that Governor Runnels instructed him, where he found good lands, and persons living on said lands, who were prepared to purchase the same, not to molest them in their possessions, and he was directed to say to such that he would not bid against them, but if such individuals were not prepared to purchase the land, and were willing, he would buy it and pay them for their improvements made on said lands, and if they could not agree as to the value, that he was willing to leave it to any two persons to say what it was worth, and he would pay it. In pursuance of these instructions, he did select some numbers, but in no instance did he select lands improved by persons living on them. The above evidence was given in to James R. Marsh as part of his evidence then given to him, and which he believes was not written down by said Marsh in his said deposition, but he would not be positive as to the fact. The above statement was distinctly repeated to said Marsh while he was taking his deposition, and if it is not contained in said deposition, it was omitted by him.

The deponent further states that he was frequently in the office of Colonel G. W. Martin, locating agent; that he gave evidence on several claims presented to him under the treaty, and was frequently in the register's office at Chocchuma, during the land sales in 1833, and he can safely say that he never saw anything improper or illegal in said officers, but each appeared extremely anxious to discharge his duties faithfully, not only to the government but to the claimants.

No. 19.—Thacker W. Whitney.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, Tallahatchie county:

Thacker W. Winter being sworn, saith that he was at Chocchuma during a part of the land sales at that place in October and November, 1833; that he arrived at said place three or four days after the sales commenced, and remained there during the first two weeks; that on his arrival he found there was a company of individuals formed for the purchase of public lands. The object of the company was, as far as I understood, that as there were a vast number of individuals at said sales, with large capitals, all wishing to make purchases, who had in most instances made their selections from personal examination or other correct sources of information, and who had in fact nearly all the numbers of all the good lands then coming into market, it was, before my arrival, as I understood, proposed to form a company, each individual was to put into said company all his notes of selection, and all other information that he might obtain, and the purchases made were to be in common and be disposed of as a majority might desire at the close of the sales; but as the information thus possessed by the said company embraced the whole country, it was agreed in the article of the company that each actual settler sould be protected in his improvement; that he was to have a quarter-section to conclude his improvement, or the principal part of it, at precisely the same price that was paid the government. The company selected four individuals, to wit: R. J. Walker, T. G. Ellis, R. Jamison, and Malcolm Gilchrist, to bid off all the lands for the company; no member of the company, as I understood, was to bid against these individuals, and these individuals were bound to let the settlers have their lands, as above stated, at cost. I have no hesitation in saying that the formation of this company was of fourfold benefit to the settlers, for nearly all came to the sales without money, and at the close went away with a home for their families; and the settlers were generally highly gratified at the conduct of said company throughout at that time. And he further makes oath that he has always been of opinion that from the formation of this company, and the protection given by it to the settlers, &c., R. J. Walker and his partner, together with many others, were prevented from making double the amount they did make at said sales on the capital vested. Each member of the company was restricted to $1,000, and no one could put more than that sum into the company; and after the sales were over, the dividend was only $301 50, and less in proportion to the time he became a member of said company. The deponent had free and frequent access to the office, and was perhaps as much in the office as any one else not confined to the office, and more particularly in the register's office; and he was also intimate with S. Gwin, the register, and he has no hesitation in saying that, during the whole time that said company existed, he, the said S. Gwin, and the receiver, did do everything in their power to protect the interest of the United States, and that, to the knowledge of this deponent, propositions at several times were made to S. Gwin for him to become a member of said company, and in a conversation between this deponent and the said S. Gwin, he remarked that it was improper for him to be in any way connected with any company, and that he would have nothing to do with it, as he was an officer of the government, and would do his utmost to protect her interest. This deponent further states that he never heard from any member of the company, or any other individual, professing to have any knowledge on the subject, that either the register or receiver were in any way connected with or interested in said company. From the general management of said sales by the officers, this deponent does believe that they conducted them to the best of their abilities, and to further the interest of the United States. This deponent further states and believes that most of the charges that have been circulated against Samuel Gwin originated with individuals inimical to him, and were partly engendered before the sales commenced. So convinced was this deponent of these facts, that some weeks before the sales commenced he cautioned the said Samuel Gwin frequently and during the sales to be on his guard, that attempts would be made to implicate him in the sales coming on by the persons above alluded to, particularly in regard to the private entries.

No. 20.—Nicholas Gray.

Question 1. Were you, or were you not, at Chocchuma during part of the public sales at that place in 1833?

Answer. I got to Chocchuma about the first of the second week of said sales, and remained there constantly during the remainder of the sales, and also after the press at private entry after said sales were over.

Question 2. During a part of the time of said sales, were you or were you not a clerk in the land office, and if so, did you, during the entire period of said sales, see anything in Samuel Gwin that was illegal or improper, to your knowledge?

Answer. I did act as clerk part of the time during said sales, and I saw nothing improper or illegal in the conduct of said Gwin, and I think he conducted said sales, as far as he could, with fidelity, not only to the government, but to the purchasers.

Question 3. Did you or did you not see or hear anything at said sales that led you to believe that said Gwin was a member of any of the land companies at said sales, but on the contrary, did you or did you not hear him oppose the operations of the company as far as he had power?

Answer. I saw or heard nothing that led me to believe that said Gwin was a member of said company, and I heard him express himself in opposition to said company, and I do think said Gwin did oppose the company to to the utmost extent of his power.

Question 4. Did you discover any partiality or favoritism in said Gwin to any one during said sales?

Answer. I did not.

Question 5. What is your opinion as to the operations of the company on the settlers? were they benefited by it, or not?

Answer. I think the settlers were greatly benefited by the company.

Question 6. Do you or do you not think that the rules adopted at the private entries were equitable to all, putting all on the same footing and on equal terms?

Answer. I think the rules were well adapted to put all on an equal footing, but it created much delay, which I then disliked.

Question 7. Did you see any partiality in said Gwin in permitting persons to remain in the office who belonged to the company, and other individuals who did not?

Answer. I did not. I believe all were permitted to go into the office who had business to transact.

No. 21.—Colonel William Pratt.

Question 1. Were you at Chocchuma at the land sales in October and November last?

Answer. I was at said place every day during said sales.

Question 2. Did you know of the formation of a company of gentlemen during said sales to purchase lands? If so, will you state all you know in relation to said company, and whether it was a benefit to the actual settlers or not?

Answer. There was such a company formed, who did the greater part of their business at my house. At the time said company was formed, it was believed it would greatly benefit the settlers, and I still believe it did benefit them greatly. I know a great many instances where the lands were very valuable, and which would have sold, if opposition was made, at a greater price than the settlers could give, but which the settlers got at government price, because no one would oppose them, and the company had bound themselves not to do it; and it was the general opinion among the settlers that the company did for them what Congress failed to do by pre-emption.

Question 3. Do you know of any paper or obligation that each settler had to sign, binding himself not to bid at said sales on any lands he might choose?

Answer. I know of no such paper or obligation.

Question 4. Do you know or believe that Samuel Gwin, register of the office, was either directly or indirectly interested in said company, or connected with it in any pecuniary point of view whatever, or that he ever received, in any shape, manner, or form, any of its profits, in either land or money?

Answer. I do not know it, or believe it, but on the contrary, to my knowledge, he was violently opposed to it, and I heard him so express himself repeatedly during the sales. I heard him in one instance say, that "if he had Ben. Hatche's funds, he would have stood up at the window and run every tract of land on the company or made them pay for it." So much opposed was said Gwin to the company that he often caused me to think that he was opposed to the settlers getting their lands at government price.

Question 5. From Samuel Gwin's general conduct during the sales, did you not believe that he conducted them as much as he possibly could do to the interest of the United States?

Answer. I do.

Question 6. Did you see any partiality or favoritism, on the part of said Gwin, toward any one?

Answer. I did not, neither do I believe there was any.

Question 7. Were you a member of said company?

Answer. I was not.

No. 22.—William Fanning.

William Fanning, of Tallahatchie county, Mississippi, makes oath that he was at the land sales at Chocchuma, in the fall of 1833, during the first week and part of the second week of said sales; that, on the second day of said sales, he learned from several of his Alabama friends that were then on the ground, that they would not show the settlers any quarters. During the day it was spoken of that a company was about to be formed to purchase lands. This deponent was then opposed to said company, believing that it was a speculative scheme. On the next day some of those friends again spoke to me on the subject, and informed me that they and the Mississippians had come upon terms, and a company would be formed, and that the settlers would be protected in their settlements; that this protection was brought about by the instrumentality of the Mississippians; that, at the close of the sales, public rumor attributed the success and protection of the settlers to the exertions of R. J. Walker, to whom particularly, and to the company generally, I understood a dinner was given by the settlers. This deponent is well convinced that this company was of immense advantage to the settlers, and that if it had not been for them many would have lost their homes that now have one. This deponent saw no combination to prevent, by force, threats, or other means, any one from bidding at said sales as much as they pleased. I was told by the Alabamians that the settlers were to have their lands—their quarter-section; that they might bid for it themselves, or by the agents of the company, when it would be conveyed to them at cost. The deponent was a close observer at said sales, and has no hesitation in saying that he saw nothing in the conduct of Samuel Gwin that induced him to believe that he was in any way connected with said company, nor does he believe that he was; nor does this deponent have any reason to believe that said Gwin ever received any of the profits of said company, either in money, land, or anything else. From all deponent saw or heard, he believes said Gwin conducted said sales to the best interest of the United States, and that he was vigilant and persevering in his endeavors to protect said interest. This deponent never heard it suggested at said sales that said Gwin was a member of said company, or had any interest in it. During the period of making entries at private sale, this deponent did think said Gwin acted with the greatest fairness and impartiality, as well as at the public sales. This deponent was in company with James R. Marsh about the 1st of June last; that, previous to that time, this deponent believed that said Marsh and Gwin were friendly; but at the time just named, this deponent learned from James R. Marsh that he was unfriendly to said Gwin, and he told him (deponent) that he then had a commission to examine into the conduct of said Gwin as register at Chocchuma. Deponent further states that he saw none of the profligate scenes that have been stated to have existed at said sales; nor did he hear of overawing bidders, or driving off all competition in market, or that the settlers should not bid for as much land as they chose. Deponent heard of no such transactions at said sales. Deponent never heard it insinuated that Samuel Gwin "connived at" or "participated" in any fraudulent act or acts during said sales; nor did he know or hear of the company's having an office near the register's office, or of their daily selling the lands purchased by them. Deponent further states that he has been occasionally at Chocchuma ever since the sales in 1833, especially at the proving up of the pre-emptions under the law of 19th June, 1834, and believes Samuel Gwin, in the most trying circumstances under this law, has uniformly acted with the utmost impartiality in every case that has come under his observation; and that if he was compelled to reject claims under this law, it was because he felt it his sworn duty to do so, and treated friends and foes all alike; and he believes that if he has erred in anything, it has been in his rigid examination of witnesses under the law. The opinion of the community, as far as I have heard, is entirely favorable to the register as a faithful, efficient officer, in my section of the country. The erasures in the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th lines, were done in our presence, it being where the certificate of the magistrate was at first placed.

No. 23.—James T. Crawford.

James T. Crawford made oath that he was at Chocchuma during the land sales in 1833; that he was conversant with most of the members of the company of land purchasers; that he was frequently in their councils; that he then believed and still believes said company was of great advantage to the poor settlers, particularly to those that wanted not more than a quarter-section; but he did not think it advantageous to those who wanted more than one quarter-section. This deponent was not a member of the company, and would not come under the regulations of the company as it regards the settlers. He had an improvement on the public lands, but wanted more than one quarter, and he would not be restricted in his purchases; that when his land came up, or the instant before, Mr. Joseph L. D. Smith, of Alabama, took him by the arm and asked him to walk with him; that it then appeared to him, the deponent, and he still believes said Smith intended to keep him off, that one of the company might purchase his land while he was thus absent; but this deponent has no reason to believe that any other member of the company knew of this transaction besides Mr. Smith and one other person, and that person was not Mr. Walker. This deponent states that he had no reason to believe that Samuel Gwin was in any way interested in said company, or ever received any of the profits arising from it; nor has he ever seen anything since that induced him to believe that he had, as far as this deponent saw or heard, (except what he heard men say, then believed to be his enemies, and now known to be such.) The said Samuel Gwin conducted said sales, as far as he possibly could, to the interest of the United States; and his whole conduct seemed to be dictated by pure intentions, not only to the bidders but to the government. This deponent saw nothing tending to partiality in said Gwin to any one.

Augustus L. This deponent saw nothing of the snapping of the finger of said Gwin, or heard anything like the remarks as alleged by said Row in said deposition, as made by said Gwin; nor does this deponent believe he made any such remarks as described. This deponent never heard anything resembling the remarks of said Row, where he states one of the officers required a deposit in five minutes, or the land would be resold, and where he states it was resold. No such transaction, to the knowledge of this deponent, ever occurred at said sales, or deponent would have heard something about it. This deponent bought one of the tracts forfeited by said Row, and deponent gave, he thinks, $2 60 per acre for said tract; and he knows the company had nothing to do with it.

This deponent knows James R. Marsh and Samuel B. Marsh are politically opposed to Samuel Gwin, and have been. This deponent saw nothing in the conduct of said Gwin but what was open, frank, and free, during the said sales: and he has no hesitation in saying that he performed his duty faithfully and honestly.

No. 28.—Colonel John H. McKinney.

John H. McKinney being duly sworn, states that he was at Chocchuma during nearly the entire period of the land sale at that place in 1833, and was also there during the press at private entry; states that he was a close observer of the conduct of Samuel Gwin, register of said land office, at said sales, and saw nothing improper, illegal, or unjust in his conduct during said sales, or at the private entries above alluded to; that said Gwin appeared vigilant, attentive, and accommodating, as much so as any person could be; that he was particularly watchful as to the interests of the United States, for which there might have been some complaints. He further states that he saw nothing in the conduct of said Gwin that led him to believe that he was either directly or indirectly interested in any of the land companies that attended at said sales, nor does he believe that he was so interested in them; but he does know that he was violently opposed to them, as far as he had power. At the private entries the rules of said Gwin were admirably calculated to give every one an equal chance, and put all on an equal footing at said private entries. He never saw anything tending to partiality or favoritism at said sales, or at any other time in said Gwin; that his conduct as an officer, up to the present time, has been highly meritorious, for vigilance, activity, and accommodation, as far as he has heard or knows; nor has he heard of any complaints against him, except perhaps that he is too rigid in his investigation of pre-emption claims. Deponent further states that he never knew said Gwin to turn persons out of the office not belonging to the land companies, during said sales, and permit others to remain in it who belonged to them—does not believe any such thing ever occurred at said sales—but states that the officers were sometimes compelled to close the office, and invite those not having business in it to retire and leave it until they could make their calculations. Deponent gave James R. Marsh his deposition on this subject last fall, and he has been informed that there are matters therein contained implicating the conduct of the said Samuel Gwin at said sales, which, if true, and is in fact in said deposition, it is an error in taking said deposition; that if there is anything in it tending in the slightest degree to implicate the conduct of Samuel Gwin, it was not so intended by deponent. Deponent further states that, during the time of his being at said sales, and of the existence of said company, he saw nothing in the conduct of Robert J. Walker but what was highly honorable to him, and he is satisfied that it was through his exertions that most of the settlers were enabled to get their settlements where they lived.

No. 29.—Thomas Coapwood.

Question 1. Were or were you not at Chocchuma during the land sales in 1833? If yea, were you or were you not a member of the Chocchuma Land Company?

Answer. I answer both questions affirmatively.

Question 2. Did you or did you not, in one of the meetings of the members of that company, during its existence, move "to strike out all fictitious names" attached to the company's agreement, and in using the word "fictitious," did you or did you not mean those who were present, and had placed the names of other persons on the list, who were not present, nor having any information, who wished to increase their dividends by this means?

Answer. In answer, I must say that my memory, as to particulars, is not very tenacious, but I recollect one or two meetings of the land company alluded to, and well recollect the impression on my mind, that a number of names were down who were not present, and, so far as I was informed, had not been nor were such persons in existence; from which impression I was induced, and did move to strike out such names from the list—meaning only such as were not, nor had been present, aiding, by information of the country or otherwise, the operations of the said land company.

Question 3. On this motion, did or did not R. J. Walker, also a member of the said company, remark that he was in favor of striking out all such fictitious names as above alluded to, but that he was opposed to striking out all that was answered for by proxy, as coming under this class; that some whose names had been answered for by proxy, to his knowledge, had, in good faith, paid their money into the company, and had furnished it with valuable information as to the country, who were then not present, but whose money then in the company would be bound for any losses that it might sustain; and did he or did he not oppose the striking out of these names as not being fictitious, and not properly coming under that head?

Answer. I answer that Mr. Walker agreed with me in the propriety of striking out the names of those who had furnished neither information nor other facilities to the success of the company; but was opposed to considering those persons not present who had furnished money and information as fictitious names, and on this principle the matter was settled.

Question 4. In your intercourse with R. J. Walker, during the said sales, what is your belief and opinion of him as a high-minded, honorable man; and was or was he not an able and efficient advocate for the settlers on the public lands at said sales; and do you or do you not believe that it was principally through his exertions that they were protected at said sales?

Answer. I being a stranger had but little intercourse with Mr. Walker at the said sales, but became acquainted with him; and his being placed in a prominent situation, I observed all of his movements, and take pleasure in saying that his whole course, so far as I saw, was highly creditable to him as a gentleman of honor. In relation to his conduct toward the interest of the settlers, I well recollect him to be one of their most efficient and unwavering advocates. I have no doubt of his influence operating much to the protection given the settlers by those who were purchasing lands for resale.

Question 5. Do you know or have you reason to believe that Samuel Gwin, register of said office, was either directly or indirectly interested in said company, and did you or did you not see anything in his conduct that tended to partiality or favoritism to any one; and was he or was he not vigilant, active, and persevering, in guarding the interest of the United States, and did you or did you not see anything improper, illegal, or unjust in said Gwin at said sales?

Answer. I do not know; neither have I reason to believe that Colonel Gwin was interested in said company, and I fully believe that his conduct was impartial, legal, and perfectly in accordance with his duty as an officer of the government.

Being called on by Colonel Samuel Gwin, register of the northwest land district of Mississippi, to state what I know of his conduct with regard to the Chocchuma Land Company at the land sales in the fall of 1833, I state that I was at Chocchuma during the first three or four days of said sales, and that Colonel Gwin and myself held a conversation on the subject of said company; in which he expressed his belief, that, from his impression of the character of the company, he thought it would prejudice the interest of the government, and further expressed his determination to suspend the sales in consequence thereof; and as I was an old land officer, he wished to know my opinion on the subject. I gave it him as my opinion, that the company was not attempting to practise a fraud on the goverment, or was violating any of its laws; that men could not be forced to bid against each other for lands, and that he, Gwin, had no right to adopt such measures. I further state, that two highly respectable gentlemen informed me, that two individuals had informed them, that they had marked lands as being sold on the register's maps at Mount Salus, while Colonel Gwin was register of the land office at that place; and that their object was to smuggle the lands until they could conveniently enter it, and this was done without the knowledge of said register.

Walker; and said Walker was about commencing his speech, when deponent informed said Walker that some settler wished to see said Walker at the land office; when said Walker went to the land office and told the receiver that the tract designated by the settler, was bid off by R. J. Walker for the settler; and that he wished the receipt made out in the name of the settler, upon his paying to the receiver the sum for which the land had been bid off at the public sale, which was $1 25 per acre. Mr. Walker returned immediately to make his speech; and Mr. Sterling remained in the office until the sales opened that morning; and Mr. Walker did not return to the land office till after the sales opened. Samuel Gwin, the register, was, during all this time, at his desk at the land office; and therefore, it was impossible that he could have heard any part of the speech. Deponent did not hear the speech of Robert J. Walker; but deponent heard the company agreement explained by Thomas G. Ellis, and many others; but never understood that any settler was prohibited from bidding for any land whatever, in addition to the quarter-section he might obtain through the company; nor did he hear of any such pledge, verbal or written, being required throughout the sales. Deponent was the crier from the commencement of said sales, to a little before the close of the sales on the last day of the first two weeks' sales, during which time the company was in operation; although he occasionally got some person to cry the lands for him, but was always present in the office. During the whole time the sales took place, Samuel Gwin was at his desk registering the bids; and any observation made by him must have been heard by this deponent; and deponent is confident that Samuel Gwin could not have made the remark in regard to the company and his alleged interest therein, attributed to him in the deposition of Mr. Row. The register was not a member of the company, or interested therein in any way. Deponent knows that the register expressed strong opposition to the company, and inquired of several persons, not members of the company, whether there was any way in which the company could be broken up; who informed him there was not. Judge Black, the senator in Congress from this State, was also at the land sales during the entire period that the company was in operation; and Judge Black told deponent that he, Judge Black, had been called upon by the register, Samuel Gwin, to know whether there was anything improper or illegal in the company agreement, and whether the officers could break up the company or suspend the sales; and that he, Judge Black, had informed the register that there was nothing illegal or improper in the company agreement, and that the officers would not be justifiable in suspending the sales. Deponent also heard Judge Black say at Clinton, after the sales were over, that the company had been useful to the settlers, and prevented their being speculated upon. Deponent also heard Judge Black say that the object of Robert J. Walker, in organizing the company, was to protect the settlers, and that he had accomplished that object; but had thereby greatly diminished the speculation which he might have made; and deponent has no doubt that the company was highly useful to the settlers. R. J. Walker always bid openly at the window for the lands he purchased; always proclaiming openly how much he bid; and never forfeited any land or bid. Deponent observed nothing improper, illegal, or illiberal, in the conduct of R. J. Walker; but, on the contrary, his conduct was fair and liberal. His principal object seemed to be to secure the lands to the settlers, at the minimum price; and the deponent knows that, in several cases in which the settlers were represented as very poor, or widows, said Walker made extraordinary exertions to secure them their lands at the minimum price, appealing in their favor to persons who were on the ground bidding against them. Throughout the sales, R. J. Walker exerted himself faithfully to secure the lands to the settlers, and their opinion of said Walker was highly favorable; but deponent heard some of the speculators from Alabama say that said Walker had been too favorable to settlers. Deponent never heard R. J. Walker request any settler to give him the numbers of any land, or request any pledge from any settler not to bid for any lands; nor did he ever hear from any one, that said Walker had done so. The whole transaction stated in the deposition of Row, in regard to Mr. Wilkinson, is entirely untrue. No such transaction occurred. The land forfeited on one day were never sold until the next day. The company exacted no pledges from any one not to bid against the company; and deponent heard members of the company bidding against the company, without any objection; and deponent also heard settlers who had obtained their quarter-section through the company, at the minimum price, bid against the company for other lands in addition. Deponent was present after the company had purchased all their lands at the public sales, and heard Thomas G. Ellis, move that such lands as had been purchased by the company, adjacent to any settler, that such settler should be permitted to buy them from the company at government cost; which motion was seconded by R. J. Walker, but deponent does not know what was the result of that motion. Deponent believes that said Walker transferred all the lands bought by him for settlers at government cost, without any reward or compensation whatever; and deponent thinks that said Walker sacrificed many thousand dollars by joining the company for the protection of the settlers, and this was the general and prevailing opinion, that he had made such sacrifice.

Question by S. G. Were you or were you not the regular auctioneer at the above land sales, and were you or were you not present at said sales every day from the commencement up to the close of the existence of the Chocchuma Land Company?

Answer. I was the regularly appointed auctioneer for the first two weeks, at said sales, and was appointed by R. H. Sterling and Samuel Gwin, and I attended at said sales from the first day of it to the second Saturday of said sales, just before the sales for that day closed, it being the last day of the first two weeks' sales.

Question 2. In the report of the Committee on Public Lands in the United States Senate, at its last session, it is stated that they (the committee) could not enter into the detail of the profligate scenes which took place in this district (Chocchuma) at the sales which opened in October, 1833; that the evidence portrays greater enormities at this office than is believed to have occurred at any time in any land district of the United States; and it continues to say, that these scenes have continued to characterize the conduct of the register who controls the sales at private entry, up to the present time. As you were the regular auctioneer, and was for the first two weeks continually in the register's office, and had intercourse with the register almost every hour during this period, did you or did you not see any of the enormities herein alluded to?

Answer. As before stated, I was the regular crier, but, from indisposition, I had occasionally to employ others, but was always present and reported to the register the name of the bidder, and the price the land was bid off at. I saw none of the enormities alluded to in the interrogatory. I was particularly intimate, during the sales, with Samuel Gwin, register, and saw no act in said Gwin that was illegal, unjust, or improper, to my knowledge. His labors were enormous, as he had no regular clerk, and I do not think any one could have conducted the sales better, if as well, as he did, as I was an eye-witness to the whole of his acts.

Question 3. It is further stated, in said report, that the company established an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened, on each day, a regular sale of the lands purchased by them at public sale, and that the officers either connived at, or participated in, these fraudulent transactions. Now, will you state if these facts are true, as far as your knowledge extends?

Answer. There were no company sales, while I remained at said sales, that I know of. I know of no office that they had in the vicinity of the register's office, but they had one at the tavern; but I heard of no sales while I remained. As to the officers participating or conniving at the acts of the company, I saw nothing to warrant such a conclusion. I did repeatedly hear Samuel Gwin oppose the company, and threaten to stop the sales, if they were violating the laws of the United States.

Question 4. R. H. Sterling, in his deposition, (document 22, page 115,) states that "Rather was one of the criers, and was appointed by Colonel Gwin. Some gentlemen in my presence, said Rather was a good crier, and I made no objection. Griffin, of Clinton, had first applied to me to be crier, and I felt myself inclined to appoint him; however, Griffin was present, and expressed no dissatisfaction, but occasionally cried." Now, are the statements in this answer true?

Answer. They are not true. I arrived at said sales very unwell, so much so, that I felt unable to cry the first day. Expecting to recover, or be able the next day, I did employ such persons as I could rely on to cry for me. The first day I got Colonel Rather to cry for me, as he was an old experienced hand, with the full knowledge and approbation of R. H. Sterling, as not only I, but the officers, were also inexperienced in land sales; and he, at my request, assisted me each day that I did not cry myself, but one, when Mr. McLaran, at my request, cried. Mr. Sterling could not have been mistaken as to who was the regular crier, for he himself, several months before the sales came on, promised me the appointment; and having procured Colonel Gwin's, I attended the sales for that express purpose, and made known to him and Colonel Gwin that I was sick; and they both advised me to procure some one else, from day to day, to cry for me, expecting my recovery.

No. 32.—Harden D. Runnels.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, Tallahatchie County.

Harden D. Runnels being duly sworn, states that he was at Chocchuma during the entire period of the public land sales at that place, in 1833, and that he was a close observer of everything that passed at said sales, and believes that there was not a piece of land sold at said sales, but what he was present and heard it cried, or knocked off. Deponent was present and heard all the speech of Robert J. Walker delivered at Pratt's tavern on the third day of the sales, and he, the said Walker, did not assert that the condition upon which the settler was to have his quarter-section at government cost, was, "that said settler would sign a paper, obliging himself not to bid for any other lands thus offered at the sale," nor did he use any words to that effect, nor did he state that any pledge, verbal or written, should be required from any settler not to bid for any lands, but that every one, settler or not, was at perfect liberty to bid for as much as he might think proper. Said Walker did not assert that he spoke by the authority of General Jackson, but he did allude to the policy of Jackson's administration as being in favor of the reduction of the price of the public lands and pre-emption laws. Deponent heard nothing of the "over-awing bidders," or that the company "enforced a complete monopoly," or that they "undertook to dictate terms to the actual settlers." His understanding of the objects of the company, in one respect, was a mutual agreement among those persons from a distance, who wished to purchase lands, that they would not run the lands on the actual settlers, and this concession on the part of those from a distance was gratuitous, for which they were not to receive any remuneration either in money or information, and those actual settlers were not, in the slightest degree, abridged in their rights as bidders, to my knowledge. The company agreement restricted no one, in or out of the company, from bidding for themselves against the company, for any lands, and deponent believes that numbers did so bid. Deponent has no doubt that the company agreement was highly useful to the settlers, and that it prevented exactions of money from them being required of them. Deponent observed the conduct of Robert J. Walker attentively, and states, from his own knowledge, and also from the statements of settlers made to him, that said Walker exerted himself by all fair and honorable means, to secure the lands to the settlers, without any reward or compensation whatever; and deponent believes, and such was the opinion of the settlers, that, but for the exertions of said Walker, the settlers would have lost their lands, in many, if not in most of the cases, and the settlers expressed themselves in the highest terms of the conduct of said Walker, and he understood that the public dinner which was given by the settlers to the company at the close of the sales was given to said Walker, as a mark of approbation of his conduct. Deponent saw none of the "profligate scenes" that have been charged as existing at said sales, nor did he see anything in the conduct of Samuel Gwin, register, that should characterize him as guilty of "profligate" conduct, nor did deponent see any of the "great enormities" that have been reported as existing at said sales, and deponent looks upon these statements as destitute of every shadow of truth, in every respect, as well as the charge "that the laws were set at defiance." Deponent states it is not true that "the company established an office in the vicinity of the register's office, at which they opened, on each day, a regular sale of the lands purchased by them at public sales;" no such transactions, to the knowledge of deponent, took place or existed at said sales, and he was a member of the company, and had a knowledge of all their transactions, as to the sale of the lands purchased by them. Deponent was a close observer of the conduct of Samuel Gwin, and has no hesitation in giving his decided opinion that said Gwin was not, either directly or indirectly, interested in said company in any shape; and deponent did frequently hear him oppose the company during its existence, with all his means, and he cautioned this deponent to have nothing to do with this said company, as it might be attended with great evils to the country; and so did also my brother, Hiram G. Runnels, who remarked that I, deponent, might do as I pleased, but he would have nothing to do with it. During the arduous duties of said Gwin during said sales, the deponent never saw anything illegal, improper, or unjust in his conduct, but was a faithful and vigilant officer of the United States, and was accommodating to all, more so, probably, than many other officers.

J. A. McRaven being sworn, saith that he was present when Robert J. Walker made his speech to the people at the land sale at Chocchuma, on the 23d October last, and heard the whole speech, and said Walker did not assert that the condition upon which the settler was to have a quarter-section at government cost, was "that said settler would sign a paper, obliging himself not to bid for any other lands thus offered at the sale of the lands of the United States," nor did he use any words to that effect, or state that any pledge, verbal or written, should be required from any settler not to bid for any land whatever; but it was my distinct understanding that the settler was to have a quantity not exceeding a quarter-section, at government cost, without any reward or compensation whatever to the company, and was not debarred from bidding for any other land; and the object of the speech of R. J. Walker seemed to be to explain this to the settler, so that he might give in the number of his quarter-section to the agents of the company, to enable them to secure it to him at the minimum government cost. R. J. Walker did not assert that he spoke by authority of General Jackson, or that he ever had any communication, verbal or written, with him, in regard to said sales. Deponent did not see the register or receiver present when said Walker made his speech. The register or receiver were not, to deponent's knowledge or belief, members of the company, or interested therein, nor did such impression, to deponent's knowledge, prevail at the sales. Deponent did not observe anything improper, illegal, or illiberal, in the conduct of Robert J. Walker, at said sales, but deponent believed then, and still believes, that R. J. Walker exerted himself more for the settlers than any man at the sales; nor did deponent ever hear of said Walker receiving any compensation from any settler. Deponent knows that the company's agreement was highly useful to the settlers. Deponent believes that the opinion entertained by the settlers of R J. Walker was very favorable; and deponent, last May, since the last sales, has been to Chocchuma, and the adjacent country, and heard settlers say that Robert J. Walker had saved the settlers a great deal of money, and deponent has no doubt this was the fact. Deponent knows there was a great deal of land bid off by Robert J. Walker, at the sales, for settlers, and the name of the settler given in, so that the receipt might issue in his own name.

No. 34.—George Dougherty.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, Hinds County:

The undersigned, George Dougherty, being duly sworn, deposes and says he was present at Chocchuma at the commencement of the late land sales, and attended the same occasionally for several days. The deponent was present about the commencement of the sales, when a committee of speculators, from Alabama, called upon Robert J. Walker, at his room, and proposed to said Walker to unite with them in the purchase of public lands, and that, in the course of conversation, R. J. Walker proposed to them to respect the claim of settlers in the same manner, and to the same extent, as if a pre-emption law had actually passed, which was strenuously resisted by the Alabama committee at first, but was insisted upon by said Walker, and finally acceded to by the Alabama committee. After this, the Alabama committee proposed that the settlers should agree not to bid for any adjacent lands, which proposition was warmly opposed by Mr. Walker. He stated that such conditions were unjust and illegal, and that he never would assent to them, nor would he join any company by which the settlers would be restricted from bidding on any lands they thought proper, in addition to those on which they had settled, without any qualification or condition whatever, and that not one cent, in any form or shape, should be exacted or received from a settler in compensation for any act of the company whatever, and that if these conditions were not fully agreed to, that he, Robert J. Walker, would oppose the Alabama company from that time to the close of the sales, to the whole extent of his money and information. This was not agreed to by the Alabama committee at that time, but, upon further consultation with their company, was finally acceded to.

The deponent knows that Robert J. Walker had a large sum of money for the purpose of purchasing public lands, and believes that he had also more information of the situation and value of the land in the Chocchuma district than any other man at the sales, and by giving up this information to the company and uniting with them, he was enabled to protect the settlers against the speculators from Alabama, who had taken the numbers of most of the improved lands; but thereby realized a much smaller profit than he otherwise might have done, by not joining the company. Since the sales at Chocchuma, the deponent has repeatedly heard the conduct of Mr. Walker highly approbated by the settlers, and heard them declare that it was owing to his exertions alone that they were enabled to obtain their lands at the minimum government price; nor has he ever heard disapprobation expressed by any actual settler against Mr. Walker in relation to said sales. The deponent did not hear the speech of Robert J. Walker at Chocchuma, but had repeatedly heard him regret that a pre-emption law had not passed to protect the settlers on the public lands, and considered it a very hard case that settlers should be compelled to abandon the lands which they had selected and improved, or to purchase them at a price greatly enhanced by their own labor.

The deponent knows that the company's agreement did not extend to the lands on the Mississippi river, and the deponent was not present when they were sold; but he has since seen most of the settlers on the river who attended the sales at Chocchuma, and who informed deponent that Robert J. Walker had been most active and zealous in securing them their lands at the minimum price, and that without any reward or compensation whatever, and these settlers expressed the strongest feelings of gratitude toward Mr. Walker for his timely and efficient interference in their favor. The deponent believes that the sales at Chocchuma were conducted in a manner strictly legal, and much to the advantage of the settlers. The deponent attended the sales at Columbus to purchase lands for Robert J. Walker and Thomas Barnard, and was instructed by them not to bid on any man's improvement, and also that the deponent should not join any company at the sales; the deponent acted in conformity with their instructions.

Agreeably to the known views of Mr. Walker, the deponent proposed to some of the managers of the Alabama company, at Columbus, not to bid against settlers, but to allow them the same advantages that settlers had during the first sales at Chocchuma—which proposition was rejected by these speculators, expressing, at the same time, their regret that they ever agreed to do so at Chocchuma, and that they were determined never again, at any sale, to make the same or similar concessions to setlers. These speculators also spoke of the conduct of Mr. Walker at the Chocchuma sales, and stated that if it had not been for him they would have realized a much larger profit on their speculations.

The deponent has not now, nor has he ever had, any interest in any lands purchased at Columbus or Chocchuma, nor was he ever a member of any company at any land sale.

Hiram Coffee, being sworn, saith that he was present when Robert J. Walker made his speech to the people at the land sales at Chocchuma, on the 23d of October last, and deponent heard the entire speech, and listened to it all attentively; and said Walker did not assert that the condition upon which the settler was to have a quarter-section at government cost was, "that said settler would sign a paper obliging himself not to bid for any other lands thus offered at the sale of the lands of the United States," nor did he use any words to that effect, nor did he state that any pledge, verbal or written, should be required from any settler not to bid for any lands in addition to a quarter-section; but it was my clear understanding that any settler was at perfect liberty, in addition to the quarter-section that might be secured to him through the company, to bid for any other lands whatever. Nor did said Walker assert that he spoke by authority of Gen. Jackson, or that he ever had any communication, verbal or written, from Gen. Jackson, in regard to said sales: but said Walker alluded to the policy of Jackson's administration, as favorable to pre-emption laws and the reduction of the price of the public lands, and expressed his approbation of that policy. Deponent attended the public sales during the whole period that the company was in operation, and never heard of any pledge, verbal or written, being required from any settler, not to bid for any lands in addition to the quarter-section which he might obtain through the company. Deponent did not see either the register or receiver present when Robert J. Walker made his speech, and believes they were not present. The register and receiver were not, to deponent's knowledge and belief, members of the company, or concerned therein, nor did deponent ever hear at the sales that either of them were members of the company, or concerned therein. Deponent saw the list of the names of the members of the company, and the names of the register and receiver were not among them. Nor did deponent hear any expression from either of them, or from any one else, indicating that either of them were members of the company, or concerned therein, nor did such impression prevail among the settlers. The company agreement restricted no one, in or out of the company, from bidding for themselves against the company, for any lands whatever, and deponent knows that members of the company did bid for themselves, without any objection, for lands, against the company. Deponent has no doubt that the company agreement was highly useful to the settlers, and that it prevented exactions of money from them being required by speculators from Alabama. Deponent attended the sales every day—observed the conduct if Robert J. Walker attentively, and states, from his own knowledge, and also from the statements of settlers, made to him, that said Walker exerted himself faithfully, by all fair and honorable means, to secure the lands to the settlers at the minimum price, without any reward or compensation whatever; and deponent believes, and such was the opinion of the settlers, that but for the exertions of said Walker, the settlers would have lost their lands, or exactions of money would have been required from them, and the settlers expressed themselves in the highest terms of the conduct of said Walker throughout the sales, and deponent heard them say that the public dinner, which was given by the settlers to the company, at the close of the sales, was given to Robt. J. Walker as a mark of approbation of his conduct at the sales, but that the company should all attend the dinner. Deponent did not hear of, or observe, any conduct of Robert J. Walker at the sales illegal, improper, or illiberal, but highly approved of his conduct throughout, and believes said approval was universal. Deponent observed nothing improper or illegal in the conduct of the land officers at the sales, or in crying the land; nor did he hear of Robert J. Walker forfeiting any lands. Mr. McLamore was not one of the agents of the company. The agents of the company were Robert J. Walker and Thomas G. Ellis, of Natchez, and Gilchrist and Jamison, of Alabama; but Robert J. Walker was regarded more in the light of an agent of the settlers, and they desired their lands to be bid off for them by him. Deponent heard there were differences of opinion, in certain cases, as to whether certain persons were entitled, as settlers, under the company agreement, and heard said Walker always hold out for the settlers, but does not know how said cases were finally determined. Deponent has no doubt that Robert J. Walker, by joining the company for the protection of the settlers, instead of acting and bidding for himself, [failed to realize] a considerable profit and speculation. Robert J. Walker did not, either in his speech or at any other time, to my knowledge or belief, request or require any settler to give him the numbers of any land adjacent to his quarter-section, or elsewhere.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, Adams County:

D. W. Connelly, being sworn, saith, that he was present at the land sales at Chocchuma; that he was a close observer of the progress of the sales and of the transactions, and was generally in the register and receiver's office when the lands were sold, during the sales, or at the window outside of the house. While the sales were progressing and the bids going on, Samuel Gwin, the register, was nearly all the time at his desk registering the lands as they were sold, and this occupied principally all his time, and required strict and undivided attention. Deponent heard no such expression from Samuel Gwin as that attributed to him in the deposition of Mr. Row, when he says that he, Samuel Gwin, "with a snap of his finger," observed "that land will bring us ten dollars per acre," and deponent believes no such expression was used by said Gwin, or that deponent would have heard it; and also, if made, as stated by Mr. Row, during the time the lands were being bid off, and heard by him there, it must have been heard by very many persons, and created an excitement at the sales, but deponent had never heard that such expression had been attributed to said Gwin, until he saw the deposition of Mr. Row. Deponent has no doubt that neither the register nor receiver was a member of the Chocchuma Land Company, or concerned therein in any way. Deponent saw the list of all the names of the company, and the name of the register or receiver was not among them. At the commencement of the sales deponent bid against the company, and no means were used by the company to either deter or prevent deponent from bidding against the company; nor was any disposition of the kind exhibited. The deponent saw the company agreement, and it was not his understanding that any settler was debarred from bidding for any lands whatever. Deponent also recollects that a number of the company bid against the agents of the company. Deponent was not present when Robert J. Walker made his speech, but never heard of said Walker exacting any pledge from any settler not to bid for any lands, or of his receiving any reward or compensation from any settler. Deponent observed nothing improper, illegal, or illiberal, in the conduct of Robert J. Walker at the sales, but approved of his conduct, and heard the settlers express their approbation of the conduct of said Walker; they regarded him as the author of the plan by which the benefit of a pre-emption was extended to them. Deponent observed R. J. Walker at the sales exerting himself to secure the lands to the settlers at the minimum price, without any reward or compensation for so doing; and in many instances the settlers themselves desired that said Walker should bid off their lands for them. Deponent has no doubt that Robert J. Walker, by joining the company for the protection of the settlers, realized a much smaller profit than he might have realized by not joining the company. Deponent has no doubt but the company agreement was highly beneficial to the settlers. Mr. McLamore was not one of the agents or bidders for the company, nor did deponent observe him bid for any lands, throughout the sales. Deponent knows that Robert J. Walker forfeited no land or bid, nor did any agent of the company. Deponent heard the register and receiver express strong opposition to the company arrangement, and deponent heard them declare that if any unlawful combinations were formed to depress the price for which the lands would otherwise sell, they would stop the sales; but deponent understood that, upon advising with other persons, they formed the opinion that the company arrangement was not contrary to law, and that they would not be justified in suspending the sales. Deponent never heard it intimated, until the publication of Mr. Row's deposition, that the register and receiver were members of the company, or concerned therein. Deponent neither saw nor heard any such transaction as that, in regard to Mr. Wilkinson, stated in Row's deposition, nor does he believe that any such transaction occurred. The lands forfeited on one day were always sold the day following. Deponent observed nothing illegal or improper in the conduct of the officers at the sales.

Deponent knows that Robert J. Walker entered a large quantity of land at the conclusion of the sales, and deponent does not know of his applying for any lands that he did not want, nor did he hear of his doing so, but applications were made against him for the entry of lands adjacent to lands previously owned by said Walker, and deponent believes that many of these applications made against said Walker were fictitious.

WOODSON WREN, Justice of the Peace.

No. 37.—John Maxwell.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, Adams County:

Deponent, John Maxwell, was at the late land sales at Chocchuma about three weeks, during a portion of which time the Chocchuma Land Company was in operation, and deponent remained until after all the sales and entries were over; but deponent was not at Chocchuma when Robert J. Walker made his speech. After deponent arrived at Chocchuma he had an excellent opportunity to observe the conduct of said Robert J. Walker while the company was in operation, and did observe the same. Deponent observed nothing improper, illegal, or illiberal, in the conduct of Robert J. Walker, in any manner whatever, but on the contrary, highly approved of his conduct, and heard many persons express a highly favorable opinion of said R. J. Walker at the sales, and believes said approval was general. Deponent heard many of the settlers on the public lands express a favorable opinion of the conduct of R. J. Walker at the sales; heard them say that if it had not been for the course he pursued, and his exertions, they would have lost their lands. Deponent knows that R. J. Walker entered a great deal of land at the conclusion of the sales, but deponent did not know, nor did he hear of R. J. Walker's applying for the entry of any land which he did not desire to own himself. Deponent saw and copied the list of all the names of the members of the Chocchuma Land Company, and that of the register or receiver was not among them, nor does deponent believe that either of them was a member of the company, or in any manner concerned with the company, nor did deponent hear at the sales that the register or receiver was a member of the said company.

Deponent heard the register express, in the strongest terms, his opposition to the company, and declare in public company that the register would stop the sales; but deponent understood that the register desisted from this course upon the advice of various persons, and among the number, Judge Black. The deponent has no doubt the company agreement was highly useful and beneficial to settlers, and heard many of them say so, and none of them say otherwise; and, furthermore, heard this opinion expressed by a company of gentlemen whom the deponent met on the road, before his arrival at Chocchuma. Deponent read the company agreement, and it extended, so far as the company could, the right of pre-emption to settlers at the government cost, and did not debar any settler from bidding for any lands whatever; nor did the deponent hear of the company, or any of its agents, exacting any pledge, verbal or written, from any settler, not to bid for any adjacent lands. Deponent has no doubt that R. J. Walker, by joining said company to protect the settlers, did not realize the speculation which he otherwise might have realized by bidding for himself alone. Robert J. Walker made extraordinary exertions to secure the lands to settlers at the government cost; that is, at the minimum price. Deponent observed nothing improper or illegal in the conduct of the officers at the land sales at Chocchuma. Deponent knows that the settlers were to have their lands at government cost, without any reward or compensation from them to the company, and that they did so obtain them, and that many of them declared they could not have got their lands but for the exertions of R. J. Walker.

No. 38.—Statement of W. L. Sharkey, chief justice of the high court of errors and appeals of Mississippi.

I was present a few days during the late land sales at Chocchuma, and the company agreement was explained to me. It was not my understanding that any settler who received his quarter-section through the company, was debarred from bidding for any other lands. I was not a member of the company, but as the company agreement appeared to me to contain nothing illegal or improper, I did advise a friend of mine who applied for my opinion, to join the company, and he did so. I neither saw nor heard of any conduct of Robert J. Walker, at the land sales, improper, illegal, or illiberal; on the contrary, it was my opinion that the conduct of Robert J. Walker was fair and liberal, and the company agreement, in my opinion, was highly advantageous to poor settlers.

Question 1. Did ever Samuel Gwin order you out of his office during the land sales in 1833, or at any other time in his life?

Answer. No, he never did.

Question 2. Will you state the manner of taking in applications at private entry, and how they were disposed of, where there were conflictions on said applications?

Answer. Samuel Gwin, the register, as far as I ever saw, held a cigar-box in his hand, and asked for all applications in such and such a township, and when delivered to him, he instantly placed it in the box which he carried in his hand. During the time he was receiving applications, he remained behind the counter, and the applicants and crowd were outside the counter. I have no reason to believe, nor do I believe, that any person saw or read any application after it came into his hands. When he was done receiving applications in said township he would proclaim it, and then lay down all the applications on the counter, in presence of the crowd behind it, and would assort them so as to ascertain all conflictions, which he would put up to the highest bidders, when they would generally withdraw, all but one, who entered the land. Said Gwin urged the different applicants to bid, but could not induce them to do so. Where there were no conflictions the land was entered immediately, as was the case with myself.

Question 3. Have you or have you not seen anything in the conduct of Samuel Gwin that tended in the least to favoritism or partiality, or that was illegal or unjust, as far as you have discovered?

Answer. I have not.

Question 4. When the office door was closed and a crowd around it, as was usually the case during the sales, and Samuel Gwin in it, could he have heard any one speaking at Pratt's tavern, the distance to which you have measured?

Answer. I do not think they could; and said Gwin was generally at his office except at meal-time.

Colonel Persons wishes it to be understood distinctly, that if there is any discrepancy between his present statements as detailed above and his statements given in to the Messrs. Marsh, (and to which one of them qualified him,) it was an error on their part in taking down the said evidence, and not on his part.

As there is no justice of the peace near to qualify Colonel Persons to the above statement, it has been read over to him by the subscribing witness, who states there are no erasures on this sheet, and no interlineations except the word "no," on the opposite side; all of which has been signed by both Colonel Persons and the witness.

Question 1. Were you or were you not present at the public land sales at Chocchuma, in October and November, 1833?

Answer. I was at the land sales at Chocchuma, off and on, during the first two weeks of the above sales.

Question 2. Was it or was it not your opinion that the company that was formed to purchase lands at the above sales were of great advantage to the actual settlers? and do you or do you not know of any member of that company that ran the lands on the actual settlers; but when it was bid off by the company, was it not transferred to the settler at the same price that it cost the company?

Answer. It was the general understanding at the time that each actual settler was to have a quarter-section of land, to include their improvement, and that none of the company was to bid against the settler, and none did bid against the settler that I know of. I know of some settlers whose land was bid off for them by the company, and transferred to them.

Question 3. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that Samuel Gwin, register, was either directly or indirectly interested in or concerned with said company, or that he ever received any profits, either directly or indirectly, from said company, or any member of it?

Answer. I cannot say that he did.

Question 4. Did or did not the register, Samuel Gwin, as far as you could discover, conduct the above sales as much to the interest of the United States, and with as much fairness to the purchasers, as he possibly could?

Answer. As far as I know he did.

Question 5. Were you or were you not a member of this company?

Answer. I was not. [DAVID KERR.

Question 1. Were you or were you not at Chocchuma during the land sales in October and November, 1833?

Answer. I was at the above sales off and on, during nearly the whole of them.

Question 2. Did you or did you not know of a company of individuals being formed to purchase lands at said sales?

Answer. There was such a company, and R. J. Walker, T. G. Ellis, R. Jamison, and M. Gilchrist, were members of it.

Question 3. In the formation of that company was it not distinctly understood and expressed, that each actual settler on the public lands should be entitled to one quarter-section of land, if his improvements were on the quarter so as to include his improvements.

Answer. The settler was, by the rules of the company, entitled to a quarter-section, if his improvements were on it, or an eighth, if his improvements were only on an eighth.

Question 4. Was or was not the object of the company to protect the settlers in their settlements as far as they could, and were not the settlers greatly benefited in this respect by the company?

Answer. The company, as I understood, bound themselves not to bid on any settler's land in opposition to the settler, and I know the company was of great service to the settlers, and were to them as good as a pre-emption law.

Question 5. Was it or was it not the general opinion among the settlers that if this company had not been formed, the settlers would not, to the same extent, have secured their houses; and was not the public so well satisfied of this fact, and with the deportment and conduct of the company, that the settlers, at the close of the sales, as a body, gave the company a public dinner, and, through the honorable Mr. Plummer, returned their thanks to the company for the interest they had manifested in securing their improvements?

Answer. I am fully satisfied if it had not been for the company, but few, comparatively, of the settlers would have got their settlements; and I understand this opinion was general, and that a public dinner was given the company, and the thanks of the settlers returned to them through the honorable Mr. Plummer, but I was not at said dinner.

Question 6. Did or did not any member of that company, by their words or actions, attempt to deter or prevent the poor man, or any other individual, from bidding for any land he might choose?

Answer. Not that I know of.

Question 7. Who were the most active persons, on the part of the company, in behalf of the settlers?

Answer. From my understanding, R. J. Walker and M. Gilchrist were the most active.

Question 8. Do you know, or have you reason to believe, that Samuel Gwin, the register, was either directly or indirectly interested in said company, or ever received any of its profits, either in money or land?

Answer. I never understood he was.

Question 9. Did you or did you not understand that Samuel Gwin was going to suspend the sales if the formation of the company was in violation of law, and was only stopped from doing it by being advised that it was not contrary to law?

Answer. I heard such a report generally, but did not hear him speak on the subject.

Question 10. Did you or did you not see or know of any act or acts of the said Samuel Gwin which tended to favor the company, or any other individual.

Answer. I did not.

Question 11. Do you or do you not know of any actual settler who was compelled to sign any paper to the company depriving themselves of the liberty to bid for as much land as they pleased; and was or was not such paper ever presented to you, or signed by you?

Answer. I know of no such paper being presented or signed, and I know I signed no such one.

Question 12. Was it or was it not your opinion and the general impression at the time, that the register did everything in his power to protect the interest of the United States?

Answer. I never heard anything to the reverse.

Question 13. Were you or were you not a member of the company?

Answer. I was not.

Question 1. Were you present at Chocchuma during the land sales in October and November last?

Answer. I was at said sales pretty constantly during the first two weeks, and occasionally during the last two weeks.

Question 2. Did you know of the formation of a company of gentlemen to purchase lands at said sales, and what was the object of said company in regard to the settlers?

Answer. There was such a company formed, and its basis toward the settlers was, that each actual settler was to have a quarter-section or an eighth, to include their improvement, at cost; that said company was formed for the double purpose of protecting the settlers in their rights and to purchase for themselves.

Question 3. Was or was it not the general opinion among the settlers that this company had done more for them than the United States in procuring their homes; and was or was not this opinion so general that, at the close of the sales, did not the settlers give the company a public dinner, and, through the honorable Mr. Plummer, return their thanks to the company for the interest they had taken in securing them their lands?

Answer. The general opinion was, that the company had benefited the settlers, and in return for which the settlers did give the company a public dinner, and the honorable Mr. Plummer returned their thanks to the company.

Question 4. Who were the most active persons on the part of the company in behalf of the settlers?

Answer. R. J. Walker, Thomas G. Ellis, R. Jamison, and Malcolm Gilchrist, appeared to take more interest for the settlers than most of the others.

Question 5. Did you know or believe that Samuel Gwin, register, was either directly or indirectly interested in said company, or received any of its profits, either in money or anything else?

Answer. I do not know of his being interested, or of his receiving any of its profits, of my own knowledge.

Question 6. Did you or did you not see anything in Samuel Gwin which tended to favor said company any more than other individuals?

Answer. I did not.

Question 7. Was it the general impression among those who attended at these sales that Samuel Gwin was a member of said company?

Answer. Not to my knowledge.

Question 8. Do you or do you not believe that the United States were injured by the forming of this company, and do you or do you not believe that more of the public lands were sold in consequence of the forming of said company than otherwise would have been?

Answer. I do not believe that the government was injured by the company; and I do believe that much more of the lands were sold in consequence of it than otherwise would have been.

Question 9. By whom were you recently examined on the subject of the above sales; and were you under oath, and who administered that oath to you?

Answer. I was examined by James R. Marsh, who administered the oath to me.

Question 2. Did you or did you not know of the formation of a company of individuals to purchase lands at said sales, and do you know or believe that Samuel Gwin, register of said office, was a member of said company, or in any way connected with it in a pecuniary point of view?

Answer. I do not doubt of there being a company formed, yet I was not a member of it. As to Samuel Gwin being a member of said company, I do not know that he was a member, and I have no reason to believe that he was one, or that he ever received any of the profits arising from it.

Question 3. From your knowledge of the management of the office during the above sales, do you or do you not believe that it was managed as far as it could be done to the interest of the United States?

Walker, (upon the advice of Colonel Claiborne,) to procure the money for him, the deponent, and secure the lands for him, the deponent; when deponent, not having the money, offered said Walker fifty per cent. upon the amount to said Walker, if he would advance the amount to him, the deponent, for a year, which Mr. Walker refused, declaring that he would not loan money to usurious interest; when finally said Walker, rather than see deponent lose his land, advanced the whole amount to deponent, payable in one year, with legal interest only, and secured the lands for deponent, without any charge or compensation whatever, either in money or in any other manner.

This is to certify that I was at Chocchuma during the land sales at that place in November, 1833, and that I was clerk to the Chocchuma Land Company; and that, during the operations of that company, attempts were made by some of its members to introduce fictitious names as members, which was the cause of considerable contention, and overruled. And I can positively state that an attempt of that sort was not made by R. J. Walker, nor was he suspected thereof, so far as my knowledge and recollection serve; but that he did introduce a few names of gentlemen well known to us in Mississippi, generally men of business, who it was known by many had sent their friends to Chocchuma for the purpose, and were some of them expected in person; that the question of admitting them as members, they not being personally present, was discussed and decided in their favor; and that I am fully persuaded and believe that Mr. Walker did not therein attempt or in any manner practise fraud on the company. I also remember having a conversation with a Mr. Coapwood, of Alabama, on this subject, and remember several names he objected to; and they were not the names introduced by Mr. R. J. Walker, but were names introduced from Alabama by citizens of that State, in which Mr. Walker had no concern, nor do I believe any acquaintance with. I know that a certain sum of money that could not be got at the first dividend, but was expected, was set apart to pay Mr. Walker and others in part for their services to the company, which sum was afterward received by one of the treasurers, and that Mr. Walker declined receiving his share.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JUNE 2, 1836.

Mr. GALBRAITH, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George Rowe, reported:

That it appears that the petitioner had acquired, during the Spanish government in Louisiana, an incomplete title to a tract of four hundred arpens of land, situated on the bayou Bœuf, in township 1, south of the 31st degree of north latitude, of range No. 2, east of the basis meridian. After the country was ceded to the United States, he filed with the register and receiver of the land office at Opelousas, acting as a board of commissioners, a notice of his claim, who recommended the same to Congress for confirmation, and was finally confirmed by that body, on the 4th of February, 1825.

The petitioner further states, and the evidence satisfactorily proves his statement, that, previous to the final action of Congress upon his claim, Reuben Parks and Thomas Nutterville purchased of the United States, at the land office at Opelousas, two several tracts of land, embracing all that part of the tract confirmed to the petitioner which fronted on the bayou Bœuf, by which the residue of the tract was materially injured and rendered almost useless, cutting him off from the stream and the roads along it, and taking off the most valuable part of the land. The petitioner asks permission to surrender the tract, heretofore confirmed to him, and to locate the like quantity in any other part of the southwestern district of Louisiana, not otherwise appropriated. Your committee consider the request a fair one, and have accordingly reported a bill for his relief.

Call, esq., assistant counsel of the United States, upon those claims, and copies of the arguments of Judge James H. David Barton, dated 18th April last, covering, agreeably to the request of Judge Peck, a continuation of his argument in relation to those claims, with the papers accompanying the same, as mentioned in the enclosed abstract thereof. As the copying of these papers would necessarily prevent a compliance with the resolution for several days, I have decided upon sending the originals, and beg leave to request that they may be returned to this office so soon as the House of Representatives may have acted upon this subject.

Report of the assistant counsel for the United States, on the Land Claims of Missouri, made by the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The laws and ordinances of the Spanish government, authorizing grants of the public domain to individuals, were few in number, plain and simple in their character, and where they have been faithfully administered, little doubt or difficulty can arise in deciding on the validity of titles confirmed under them. In taking possession of their American colonies, acquired by discovery and conquest, the successive kings of Spain paid little regard to the rights of the native lords of the soil, many of whom were either destroyed in battle, or became the slaves of the conquerors. By royal ordinances, which constitute a part of the code of the Indies, they proclaimed the dominion of the crown over the lands of the distant provinces, and asserted the right of the King to dispose of them according to his will. In the exercise of this power during the whole period of the colonial history, from the discovery of America until the surrender of Louisiana to the United States, the fixed and settled policy of the government was to invite population, and give encouragement to settlement and cultivation. This policy is fully illustrated by all the laws and ordinances regulating the granting power, and habitation and cultivation were indispensable prerequisites to every estate in land. They were made conditions precedent, and, until performed, no permanent interest could be acquired or enjoyed in the soil. The King, in the exercise of sovereign and uncontrolled power over the royal domain, was capable of making grants of land in any quantity, and for any purpose; but it does not appear that this power was ever delegated to his subordinate officers; on the contrary, all the laws of the Indies, and the royal orders which have come to our knowledge, after diligent inquiry for thirty years, prove that those officers were invested with power to grant lands only in proportion to the ability of the grantee to cultivate and improve them, and in no instance except on the condition of habitation and cultivation.

To comprehend the extent of the granting power delegated to the representatives of the crown in Louisiana, it is necessary to examine the whole system as formed by the laws of the Indies, the royal orders, and local regulations of the province. These, when taken and construed together, will be found to harmonize with each other in all the leading principles, and establish beyond controversy, the limited and restricted rules prescribed for the distribution of the royal domain.

It cannot be doubted by any one who will carefully examine this system, that habitation and cultivation formed the basis of title to lands, and that the grants were required to be made in proportion to the qualification and capacity of the settler. This is generally admitted to be one branch of the system, comprehending one class of grants; but it is contended that there is one other class free from all conditions, and that the governors of the province, and commandants of the post, were authorized, as a reward for services deemed by them meritorious, to grant lands in absolute property, in quantities limited only by the discretion of those officers.

The authority approaching nearest to a grant of this extraordinary power, and on which most reliance is had by those who maintain that doctrine, is found at page 30, White's Compilation, and is expressed in the following terms: "It is our will, and we command that the viceroys of Peru and New Spain be governors of the provinces under their authority, and that they rule and govern the same in our name; that they grant such rewards, and favors, and compensation, as to them may seem fit; and that they fill the offices of government and justice established by custom, and not prohibited by our laws and orders. And all our subordinate audiences, judges, and justices, and all our subjects and vassals, should consider and obey them as governors, and shall allow them freely to enjoy and exercise such offices, giving and granting them all the aid and assistance which they may ask and want."

This law, to my understanding, was intended to be local in its operation; it was intended to confer special and extraordinary powers on the viceroys of Peru and New Spain; and it seems to me to require some ingenuity to make it applicable to the governors of Louisiana, and the commandants of the military posts of that province. The argument in favor of that construction seems to be this: that the law, by constituting these viceroys governors of their respective provinces, and conferring on them power to reward at their discretion, granted the same power to all other governors of provinces. This certainly is a latitude of interpretation not warranted by the language and the object of the law. By constituting the viceroys governors of their respective provinces, it cannot be understood to have been the intention of the King to make all the governors of provinces viceroys. A reference to the organization of the colonial governments will show, that the viceroyalties of Peru and New Spain embraced various provinces under the command and jurisdiction of governors who were subordinate to those viceroys. Now, if this law created those governors viceroys, it made them equals, and destroyed the subordination which, under the colonial system, they owed to their superiors. Such, certainly, never was the design of the King. This law, so far from sustaining the power of the governors to make grants of land as a reward for services, gives conclusive evidence of their want of that power. Had they possessed it, by former grant, or as incidental to the office they held, why was it necessary to confer this power on the viceroys by special grant, after constituting them governors? If the governors had possessed this power, it was only necessary to create the viceroys governors, to bestow on them the same power. To me it is very clear, that this law neither confers on, or recognizes as previously existing in, the governors, any authority to make grants of land as rewards for services; and but for the vast importance given to it by others, I should not have conceived it worthy of comment or argument.

That the viceroys and presidents of the distant provinces were alone authorized to grant rewards for services, and that this power was never delegated to the governors, or other subordinate officers, is fully shown by the repeated reference of the laws to the power conferred on those officers. At page 30, White's Compilation, we find the following provision: "We desire to grant rewards and remunerations, and to distribute the offices and profits of the Indies between persons who have deserved well, and who have most faithfully served us, as is provided in law 2, of this book; and whereas some persons come from those kingdoms to these, to ask for rewards, alleging injuries, and complaining of the viceroys and presidents for not giving them employment, patronage, and other advantages; and whereas it is proper that we should possess a full knowledge of the truth, we command the viceroys and presidents, on all occasions, to transmit to us particular and specific information of all deserving persons who expect rewards for services," &c.

At page 35, of the same work, is found another law, further illustrating the principle for which I contend: "It is our will and pleasure that all who may have served in the discovery, pacification, and settlement of the Indies, be rewarded. And in order that they may the better obtain the reward, without injury to the most meritorious, we command the viceroys and presidents to observe this order, when they shall have occasion to grant such rewards, in those cases, and for those things, to which they are authorized by our powers and instructions. Those who are entitled to rewards shall make a declaration of their merits and services before the audience of the district, having previously summoned our attorney, who, after consideration, shall grant rewards in our name to those who shall have the best title thereto, conforming, in graduating the amount, to law 14, title 2, lib. 3; and they shall order a secret register to be kept, in the custody of the clerk of the government, where shall be recorded, for reference, the names of all the persons applying, with a summary account of their merits and services, together with what they shall do to reward them, and their motives for the same; all which shall be signed by them, and certified by the secretary of government. And there shall be, at the beginning of the said record, a transcript of this our law, in order that the rewards and remunerations be made in conformity thereto, and in no other manner. Each year they shall transmit to our council a statement of all that they shall have done in the year, and entered in said record; which statement shall be signed and authenticated by said secretary, in order that we may know in what manner the provisions of this our law shall have been carried into effect."

These are the principal laws of the Indies, which authorize rewards for services; and they prove most incontrovertibly that this power was conferred alone on the viceroys and presidents, and that even to these high officers, representing the person, and, in some degree, the power of majesty itself, such was the jealous caution of the King that he conferred on them no discretion in the exercise of this trust, but required, imperatively, that, "rewards and remunerations be made in conformity thereto, ('our laws,') and in no other manner." Nor does it appear from these, or any other laws of the Indies, that the viceroys, presidents, or any other persons, save the King himself, was authorized to grant lands as a reward for services, except on the condition of habitation and cultivation, as I trust I shall be enabled fully to show in my subsequent remarks. If doubts could have existed with regard to the true intent and meaning of the law, found at page 30, of White's Compilation, those doubts must be removed by the subsequent laws to which I have referred, showing so manifestly as they do, that the power to grant rewards for services was confined alone to the viceroys and presidents, and not to the governors of provinces.

The next law, by which it is attempted to sustain this power in the governors, is found at page 29, of

White's Compilation, and is in the following terms: "It is our pleasure that services be remunerated where they shall have been performed, and in no other place or province in the Indies."

In this law I conceive there is nothing to aid the principle contended for, and in the whole system, taken collectively, there will be found nothing to justify the conclusion that the governors of Louisiana and Florida, under the laws and ordinances of Spain, were authorized to grant lands as rewards for services, without conditions and without limit.

I am aware that I may be told that this question has already been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and that it is no longer open for discussion in our tribunals; but I hope I shall not be deemed wanting in respect for the highest judicial tribunal of our country, and particularly for the memory of the illustrious judge by whom the opinion was delivered, when I attempt to show, that, in the case of Clark, where this decision was made, the subject was not well understood by the court, and that the law has not been properly applied. I feel the less unwilling to enter into this discussion, because I appeared in that case as the only counsel for the United States, and it may have been owing to my own inability to array the authorities in a comprehensive manner before the court, more than to the authorities themselves, that the question was thus decided.

In the case of Clark, a grant was made by the governor of East Florida, in 1816, of 16,000 acres of land, as a reward for the services of the petitioner for a valuable invention, of which he professed to have been the inventor. In 8th Peters, 451, after discussing other questions, the court proceeded "to inquire into the power of the governor of East Florida." "It will not be material," say the court, "to ascertain the rules by which lands were granted to the first settlers of America, or the officers from whom titles emanated. So early as the year 1735, an ordinance was passed by which the King reserved to himself the right of completing the titles given by his provincial officers. The inconvenience resulting from this regulation was so seriously felt, that the ordinance was repealed in 1754, and the whole power of confirming, as well as originating titles, was transferred to officers in the colonies." Now the court has here given, in plain and comprehensive terms, the true meaning and intention of the royal order of 1754. It was, as its preamble professes, and as the court has said, intended to repeal the ordinance of 1735, and to authorize the officers of the colonies to originate and confirm titles to land. But it made no alteration whatever in the laws of the Indies, regulating the quantity, conditions, and purposes, for which the lands were directed to be granted. And without going beyond this royal order, without examining the laws which formed the basis of the granting power, it is quite impossible for the court to comprehend the limited authority conferred on the governor of East Florida, and all other Spanish provinces.

In the case of Clark, (9 Peters, 452,) the court has inserted in its opinion a part of the 12th article of the royal order of 1754, found at page 975 of the Land Laws, which is in the following words: "In the distant provinces of the Audiencias, or where the sea intervenes, as Caraccas, Havana, Carthagena, Buenos Ayres, Panama, Yucatan, Cumana, Margarita, Puerto Rico, and in others of like situation, confirmations shall be issued by their governors, with the advice of the oficiales reales (king's fiscal ministers), and of the lieutenant-general Letrado, where he may be stationed." At page 453, same case, the court gives the construction of this royal order, in which they observe, "the viceroys in New Spain and Peru, who were also governors, possessed almost unlimited power on this and other subjects; but in distant provinces, or where sea intervenes, the right of giving titles to lands was vested in their governors, with the advice of the King's fiscal ministers, and the lieutenant-general, where he may be stationed. No public restraint appears to have been imposed on the exercise of this power." "The royal order of the 15th of October, 1754, confers this power in general terms, without any limitation, or the consideration which may move to the grant. It would excite surprise if, in a monarchy like that of Spain, no rewards in lands could be granted for extra services, and no favors could be bestowed." Thus the court seem to have found, in the royal order of 1754, unlimited power to grant land for services and rewards. Now it will be found, on examination, that the only power conferred on the governors of provinces, by this royal order, is that contained in the 12th article quoted by the court, and that no original jurisdiction whatever is conferred on them over the royal domain. The governors of distant provinces, by this article, were authorized to confirm concessions made by the sub-delegates, but those concessions were still to be made in the manner, for the purposes, on the conditions, and for the quantity of lands authorized by the laws of the Indies then existing, and which remained unrepealed by this order. In the language of the 12th article of the ordinance of 1754, "confirmations shall be issued by the governors with the advice of the king's fiscal minister." To comprehend fully the nature of the power thus conferred, it is necessary to understand that, by the laws of the Indies, (as I shall show hereafter,) concessions were made by the sub-delegates, or agents of the crown, on condition of habitation and cultivation for four years, and that after the performance of those conditions, to be established by competent evidence, the settler became entitled to a confirmation of his grant. By the royal order of the 24th of November, 1735, this confirmation could only have been granted by the king in person, and it was to relieve his subjects from the inconvenience and expense attendant on an application to him, that the King, by the royal order of 1754, authorized the presidents of audiencias, and the governors of distant provinces, to issue these confirmations. That this was the intention of the King in issuing this order, is fully shown by its preamble, and every article it contains. That it did not repeal the pre-existing laws of the Indies, that it did not authorize the governors of provinces to originate grants of land, as a reward for services, or for any other purpose, but merely to confirm those made by the sub-delegates, after proof of the performance of the conditions prescribed by the laws of the Indies, is equally apparent. This order will be found at page 973, of the Land Laws; that it may be well understood, and that it may show how far its true meaning may have been misunderstood, it is here inserted at full length:

Royal Regulation of October 15, 1754.

"Experience having proved the inconveniences that arise to my subjects of the kingdom of the Indies, from the decree issued by royal order of the 24th of November, 1735, that those who would enter upon the royal possessions of those dominions, should necessarily apply to my royal person, to obtain their confirmation within the time assigned, under penalty of losing them, in case of their failure to do so; and many persons having failed to avail themselves of this benefit, from their inability to sustain the expense of an application to this court to obtain the confirmation of what they compromised for or purchased, it being of small amount, or some few caballerias, (lots,) and those who may apply, from their purchases being of greater value, are at great expense, on account of the testimony they must present, the transmission of money, the appointment of agents, and other necessary expenses, that usually exceed the principal sum paid for the composition or purchase of these royal lands before the sub-delegates; and, as a consequence of this, much land is left uncultivated, which might support the provinces in which they are, by being cultivated and grazing cattle; and it is another result that persons occupy lands illegally, through defect of title, without properly cultivating them, for fear of being denounced and prosecuted for it, and my royal treasury also suffering, both in the amount of sales of these lands, and in the consequent neglect of agriculture and tending of cattle; I have, therefore, resolved, that, in the grants, sales, and compromises of royal cultivated and uncultivated lands now made, or which shall hereafter be made, the provisions of the regulation shall be faithfully observed and executed.

"I. That from the date of this, my royal order, the power of appointing sub-delegate judges to sell and compromise for the lands and uncultivated parts of the said dominions, shall belong, thereafter, exclusively to the viceroys and presidents of my royal audiences of those kingdoms, who shall send them their appointment or commission, with an authentic copy of this regulation. The said viceroys and presidents shall be obliged to give immediate notice to the secretary of state and universal despatch of the Indies, of the ministers whom they shall make sub-delegates in their respective districts, and places where they have been usually appointed, or where it may seem necessary to appoint new ones for his approbation. Those at present exercising this commission shall continue. These, and those whom the said viceroys and presidents shall hereafter appoint, may sub-delegate their commissions to others, for the distant part and provinces of their stations, as was previously done. By virtue of this law, my council of the Indies, and its ministers, are excluded from the superintendence and management of this branch of the royal hacienda.

"II. The judges and officers, to whom jurisdiction for the sale and composition for the royal lands (realengos) may be sub-delegated, shall proceed with mildness, gentleness, and moderation, with verbal and not judicial proceedings, in the case of those lands which the Indians shall have possessed, and of others, when required especially for their labor, tillage, and tending of cattle.

"But, in regard to the lands of the community, and those granted to the towns for pasturage and commons, no change shall be made; the towns shall be still maintained in the possession of them; and those that may have seized, shall be restored to them, and their extent enlarged according to the wants of the population; nor shall severe strictness be used toward those already in possession of Spaniards, or persons of other nations, and in regard to all the requirements of laws 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, title 12, lib. 4, of the Recopilacion de Indies, shall be observed.

"III. The present regulations and the appointment which shall be issued in the form prescribed in the first section, being received by the principal sub-delegate, they shall furnish on their part general orders to the justices of the capitals and chief places of their respective districts, commanding them to be published therein in the manner usual with other general orders issued by viceroys, presidents, and audiencias, relating to my service, so that every and all persons who shall have possessed royal lands, whether settled, cultivated, tilled, or not, from the year 1700, till the day of the publication of said order, may prove, before the sub-delegate, by themselves, their correspondents, or attorneys, the titles and patents in virtue of which they hold their land. For this exhibition an adequate time shall be fixed, proportioned to the distances; and notice shall be given, that they shall be deprived of, and ejected from, such lands, and grants of them made to other persons, if they fail to exhibit their warrants, within the limited time, without just and proper cause.

"IV. If it shall appear from the warrants or writings so presented, or from other legal authority, that these persons are in possession of such royal lands, by virtue of a sale or composition, made by the sub-delegates so empowered, before the said year 1700, although these acts may not have been confirmed by my royal person, nor by the viceroys and presidents, they shall still be suffered to retain free and quiet possession of them, without being caused the least molestation, or deprived of any rights by these orders conformably with the 15th law, title 12, lib. 4, of the Recopilacion de Indies, already cited.

"On these warrants, it shall be noted, that the persons have complied with the obligation of exhibiting them, so that they may not, in future, be disturbed in, or sued for their royal lands, they nor their successors. If persons have not warrants, their proof of long possession shall be held as a title by prescription. If they shall not have tilled or cultivated these lands, the term of three months, prescribed by the 11th law of the said title and book, shall be allowed them, or whatever time may be thought sufficient for this purpose; and notice shall be given them, that, if they fail to cultivate the lands, they shall be granted to those who shall lodge information thereof, under the same condition of cultivating them.

"V. The possessors of lands sold or compromised for, by the respective sub-delegates, from the said year 1700, to the present time, shall not be molested, disturbed, nor informed against, now, nor at any time, if it shall appear that they have been confirmed by my royal person, or by the viceroys and presidents of the respective districts, while in office; but those who shall have held their lands without this necessary requisite, shall apply for their confirmation to the audiencias of their district, and the other officers on whom this power is confirmed by the present regulation. These authorities having examined the proceedings of the sub-delegates in ascertaining the quantity and the value of the lands in question, and the patent that may have been issued for them, shall determine whether sale or composition was made without fraud or collusion, and at reasonable prices. This shall be done with the judgment and advice of the fiscals; after considering every circumstance, and the price of the sale or composition, and the respective dues of Medianata,* appearing to have been paid in the royal treasury, and the King's money being again paid in the amount that may seem proper, the confirmation of the patents of the possessors of these lands shall be given in my royal name, by which their property and claim in the said lands shall be rendered legal, as well as in the waters and uncultivated parts, and they and their successors, general and particular, shall not be molested therein.

"VI. If, by the proceedings that should have been used for the sales and compositions, unconfirmed since the year 1700, it shall appear, that these royal lands have not been surveyed nor valued, as is understood to be the case in some provinces, the confirmation shall be withheld until this be executed, and the King's money shall be regulated by the increased value of the lands, as determined by the survey and valuation, which money must precede the confirmation.

"VII. There shall also be contained, in the general orders to be issued, as before said, by the sub-delegates, to the justices of the chief towns and places of their district, a clause that those who shall have exceeded the limits of the purchase or composition, adding thereto, and entering upon more land than was granted, whether the principal part be confirmed or not, shall necessarily apply to them for the composition of these lands, so that, after a survey and valuation of them, the patents and confirmation of them may be issued.

"Notice shall also be given, that the lands so occupied shall be adjudged, in a moderate quantity, to those who shall inform of them, and that the royal lands occupied without title shall be adjudged to be the property of the King if, within the time appointed, the intruding possessors shall not discover them, and treat for their composition and confirmation. This shall be observed and fulfilled, without exception of persons or communities, of what state or description they may be.

"VIII. A proper reward shall be given to those who shall inform of lands, grounds, places, waters, and of uncultivated and desert lands, and shall be allowed a moderate portion of those of which they shall have informed, as being occupied without title. This shall also be included in the public notice which the sub-delegates to be appointed, shall cause to be published in their respective districts.

* First fruits of the half year.

"IX. The audiencias shall issue the confirmations by provinces, and in my royal name, after an examination by the fiscal, as before said, without greater judicial expense to the parties than what is required by the regulated prices for such act. For this purpose, they shall collect from the sub-delegates of their district the proceedings that have taken place in the sale or composition of that for which confirmation shall be required. With these, and in proportion to the estimated value of the lands, and considering at the same time the benefit which it was my pleasure to grant to those of my subjects, by relieving them from expense of applying to my royal person, they shall determine the sum to be paid me for this new favor.

"X. To avoid costs and delay in this business, which would happen, if, after the patents have been issued by the sub-delegates, the audiencias should determine upon new surveys, or valuations, or other measures, the sub-delegates shall report to the respective audiencias the original proceedings upon each matter. These they shall consider as finished and prepared for the issuing of the patents, and after being examined by the audiencias, and the opinion of their fiscals being received, they shall be returned, and, if no objection is made, the warrants be issued, or the measures used, that shall be dictated as previously necessary, and in this way shall be facilitated the prompt issue of the royal confirmations, without a duplication of new patents.

"XI. These audiencias shall be a court of appeal for trying the decisions and sentences of the sub-delegates pronounced by them in any suit about the sale or composition of royal lands, the information lodged concerning them, and their survey and valuation. By this provision the expensive recourse to the counsel will be avoided, and the necessity will no longer exist of abandoning claims, which some persons have been obliged to do from their inability to sustain the consequent expense of the recourse.

"XII. In the distant provinces of the audiencias, or where sea intervenes, as Caraccas, Havana, Carthagena, Buenos Ayres, Panama, Yucatan, Cumana, Margarita, Puerto Rico, and in others of like situation, confirmation shall be issued by their governors, with the advice of the oficiales reales, (king's fiscal ministers,) and of the lieutenant general Letrado, where he may be stationed. The same officers shall also determine the appeals from the sub-delegates who shall have been, or shall be appointed in each one of the said provinces and islands, without recourse being had to the audiencia or chancery of the district, unless the two decisions be at variance, and, then, this is to be officially, and by way of consultation, to avoid the expenses of appeal. Wherever there shall be two oficiales reales, the younger in office shall be the advocate of the royal treasury in these causes, and the elder, the associate judge of the governor, using the aid of counsel, where there is no auditor or lieutenant governor, and, if the question is a point of law, by applying to any lawyer within or out of the district. And where there shall be but one oficial real, any intelligent person of the place may be appointed as the advocate of the royal treasury. It shall also be the duty of the governors, with their associate judges, to examine concerning the compositions of the sub-delegates, as provided in respect to the audiencias.

"XIII. The moneys arising from the sales and compositions of each audience and district, and from the King's money paid for confirmations, shall be deposited in the proper office, and an account kept of them in a separate book; and the audiences and presidents thereof, the governors and oficiales reales of the districts, shall furnish me an account, through my secretary of despatch of the Indies, of what this branch of the royal revenue may have produced in each year, so that, upon their information, I may be able to make the proper disposition of this revenue.

"XIV. The sub-delegates who may be appointed for the administration of this business, shall not exact any fees from the parties for what services they may have rendered; I therefore assign to each one, by way of gratuity, two per centum on the amount of their sales and compositions, as was allowed by the council, in their regulation of the year 1696; and the clerks, alone, before whom the proceedings, shall receive the regular fees, which shall be certified at the end of the records. In case of a violation of this rule, the respective audiencias and the governors shall proceed against them.

"I will that all the provisions of this regulation be strictly and punctually observed by my viceroys, audiencias, presidents, and governors of all my dominions of the Indies, and by the sub-delegates and other persons whom its observance does or may concern, and that it be not violated for any cause or pretext, as it is proper for my service, and the good of those subjects. And I command, that notice be taken of this regulation, by the general accompting office of the council of the Indies, by the audiencias and chanceries, governments and cities, by the tribunals and accompting offices of the royal treasury, by their recording it, and by all other offices whom it may concern, so that it may be understood and faithfully observed by all.

"I, THE KING.

"Given at San Lorenzo el Real, October 15, 1754.

"DON JULIAN DE ARRIAGA.

"NOTE.—This royal ordinance is recognized by the King of Spain, June 5, 1814, as applicable to Florida See post."

By the regulations of Morales, No. 3, of chap. 5, in appendix, it will be seen that the above royal ordinance was extended to the provinces of Louisiana and West Florida, on the 24th of August, 1770, to be exercised by the civil and military government; and by the decree of 22d October, 1798, was conferred on the intendant.

As a further evidence of the authority of the government to grant land as rewards for services, the court in 8th Peters, 454, refers to the law found in White's Compilation, page 41, of which it observes, after directing extensive dispositions of territory, "all the remaining land may be reserved to us, clear of any incumbrance, for the purpose of being given as rewards, or disposed of according to our pleasure." Now, no one doubts the power of an absolute monarch to dispose of the public domain as rewards, or for any other purpose he might think proper, but does it follow, as a consequence of his power, that his governors of provinces possessed the same authority. If it does not, I cannot see the application of the law to the present case.

As a further evidence of the discretionary powers of the governors over the royal domain, at page 454, 8th Peters, the court speaks of two letters published in the Land Laws, in the following terms: "two letters of the 3d of April, 1800, from an officer authorized to grant lands, are published in Clark's Land Laws, 989, which would seem to countenance the opinion that they did not consider their power as limited to small quantities, but that they might exercise discretion in this respect." They are written by the attorney-general under Morales. The first addressed to Don Henry Peyroux, is in these words: "I have to reply to your communication No. 9, that I cannot at this time consent to the sale of lands in the manner and under the circumstances requested; and I have to make the same reply to that of the 6th February last, No. 8, in which you ask for one hundred thousand arpens."

"The language of this letter is rather that of a man who has exercised his discretion on the subject to which his power extends, than of one who might at once repel the application by referring to the orders of his sovereign. The second letter is of the same character." Now, let the second letter speak for itself, and let us see if it does not at once repel the application by referring to the orders "of his sovereign." "It was never the intention of the king to dispose of the lands in such large quantities, and under such circumstances, as are stated in your letter of the 9th of February last, No. 9, and the petition of the inhabitants accompanying it." It is true that, in the new regulations, there is provision made for the sale of land, in the manner referred to; but it is only under the previous formalities there specified, and with a reference to the ability and force of the persons desirous of purchasing, because it would not be just, that, for a small consideration, one or more speculators should make themselves masters of a great extent of lands to the prejudice of others coming to settle, and who would consequently find themselves driven to purchase these lands which they might otherwise have obtained free from expense.

"For these reasons I cannot, at present, accord to the before mentioned proposal," &c.

Although the first of these letters may be considered as expressing the authority of the author, the second appears to me to contain the language of one who feels that his power is limited, and to show an unwillingness to transcend that power. He speaks of the intentions of the king as being opposed to large grants, and refers to the regulations of Morales (the new regulations) as prescribing the limit of his power.

I have thus referred to the principal authorities by which it has been attempted to support the unlimited power and discretion of the governors of the Spanish provinces in making grants of land, and I have endeavored to draw from the authorities themselves, how little support they can give by any legitimate rule of construction to the exercise of that power. I will now, by a reference to the Laws of the Indies, which constituted the basis of all the powers conferred on the provincial officers, and which seems to have been left out of view by the court, when discussing this important question, attempt at least to show the imperative rule which they prescribed for the government of those officers. I shall attempt to show, that all grants of land, no matter for what purpose made, were on the condition precedent of habitation and cultivation; and that grants made as a reward for services, grants for pasturage, and grants for agricultural purposes, were all on the same conditions, and subject to the same rules.

The authority to which I shall first invite attention, is law 1, title 12, book 4, of the Laws of the Indies, found at page 967 of the Land Laws. It is found again in White's Compilation, page 38. In the case of Clark, 8th Peters, 457-8, the court recognizes this law as being in force in Florida, and after quoting the first paragraph, they dismiss it without attempting to give it a construction, and with only the following brief remark: "It is not easy to comprehend the influence which this law ought to have on the governors of the Spanish colonies. It was undoubtedly the same in them all." Now, the fact being admitted that this law was in force in Florida, that it was the same in all the colonies, until we can comprehend by fair rules of construction, "the precise influence which this law ought to have on the governors of the Spanish colonies," it is quite impossible to understand the nature and extent of the granting power conferred upon them. This law being the foundation of that power, and being more expressive than any other of the nature and character of the Spanish grants in Louisiana and Florida, that it may receive a proper construction, and have the influence to which it is entitled, it is here inserted at full length, page 38.

"74, lib. 4, tit. 2, law 1, (vol. 2, p. 39.)

"Of the sale, composition, and distribution, of lands, lots, and waters.

"Lands, lots, and Indians, to be granted to new settlers; and what are a peonia and a caballeria.

"In order to promote the zeal of our subjects in the discovery and settlement of the Indies, and that they may live in that ease and comfort which we desire them to enjoy, it is our will that there be distributed among them houses, lots, lands, caballerias and peonias, to all those who shall repair to settle on new lands in the villages and places which shall be designated to them by the governor of the new settlement, making a distinction between gentlemen or esquires (escuderos) and laborers (peones) and those of inferior grade and merit, and graduating such grants according to their qualifications and services, in order that they may attend to working the said land and to the breeding of stock; and when said settlers shall have lived and labored in said settlements during the space of four years, they are hereby empowered, from the expiration of said term, to sell the same, and freely to dispose of them, at their will, as their own property, and the governor, or whoever shall be thereto authorized by ourselves, shall, in the distribution which he shall make of the Indians, and according to the merits and rank of said settlers, grant them said Indians, so that they may enjoy the profits arising from their possession, according to the established rates and the enactments in that behalf.

"And, whereas, it may happen, that in the distribution of lands, doubts may arise respecting the measurement thereof, we declare that a peonia is a lot of fifty feet front, and one hundred feet deep, one hundred fanegas of arable land, fit for the cultivation of wheat and barley, ten for corn, two huebras (a measure equal to as much land as a yoke of oxen can plough in one day) of land for garden, and eight for planting other trees which grow in dry land, with pasture sufficient for ten breeding sows, twenty cows, five breeding mares, one hundred ewes, and twenty goats. A caballeria is a lot of one hundred feet front, and two hundred feet deep, and equal, in all other respects, to five peonias, that is, five hundred fanegas of arable land, fit for the raising of wheat or barley, fifty for corn, ten huebras of land for gardens, forty for other trees growing in dry soils, pasture for fifty breeding sows, one hundred cows, twenty mares, five hundred ewes, and one hundred goats. And we command that the distribution may be made in such a form that all shall participate in the good, as well as in the middling, or all other qualities of land in the tract which shall be allotted to them."

This law provides for grants of caballerias and peonias, to those who shall repair to settle on new lands, in the villages and places which shall be designated to them by the governor of the new settlement, making a distinction between gentlemen, or esquires, and laborers, and those of inferior grade and merit, and graduating such grants according to their qualifications and services, in order that they may attend to the working of said land, and the breeding of stock.

Now, this is the only law to be found in the whole code of the Indies, so far as I have been able to ascertain, which confers on the provincial governors the power of granting land for "services." It directs that the grant shall be "graduated" according to the "qualifications" and "services" of the grantee. The term "qualification" is explained both by the preceding and succeeding provisions of the law, as well as by other laws to which I shall presently refer. "Services" were made the inducement of the grant, but the quantity of land was to be "graduated" by the "qualifications" of the grantee to settle, cultivate, and improve the land. The distinction made in the law, "between gentlemen and laborers," was not with a view of enriching by a grant of the royal domain, the pride and pomp of affluence, to the neglect of the poor and indigent, but for the more virtuous, wise, and just motive of granting to every class of society, without money and without price, the quantity of land, which each, from their resources, might be able to cultivate. And grants for services, like grants for all other purposes, were incomplete, and conferred no title to the land, until the grantee, in the language of the law, had "lived and labored in said settlements during the space of four years." History informs us that the acquisition of territory, and the extension of dominion in the New World, became objects of primary consideration with most of the powers of Europe; and to maintain their colonial possessions, all held forth inducements to emigrants, and invited the hardy enterprise of the settler, by giving him the land on which his settlement should be made. The rigid policy pursued by the King of Spain, for the accomplishment of this object, is further illustrated by the following law of the Indies, found at page 39, White's Compilation: "It shall not be lawful to give or distribute lands in a settlement to such persons as already possess some in another settlement, unless they shall leave their former residence, and remove themselves to the new place to be settled, except where they shall have resided in the first settlement during the four years necessary to entitle them to fee simple right, or unless they shall relinquish their title to the same for not having fulfilled their obligation, and we declare as null any distribution which may be made contrary to the provisions of this our law." The performance of the condition of habitation and cultivation during the period of four years, as a prerequisite to an estate in land, is here again expressed in the most unqualified terms, and in no part of the subsequent legislation of the Spanish government does it appear that these conditions were ever dispensed with; on the contrary, in all the local regulations of Louisiana and Florida, they were still regarded as necessary to the completion of the grant. Some alteration was made in the length of time during which the habitation and cultivation were required, but in none were they ever dispensed with. In East Florida ten years' habitation and cultivation were required before the grantee could obtain a title in fee simple. In Louisiana and West Florida three years were required, and during that period the greater could exercise no other right than that of occupation.

The condition of habitation and cultivation is further required in the following law of the Indies, found at page 39, White's Compilation:

"The persons who shall accept grants of caballerias or peonias shall enter into an obligation to build upon the lots, and to occupy the houses; to divide and clear the arable lands, and to work and plant them, and to stock with cattle those which are destined for pasture, within a limited time, divided into terms, and declaring what is to be done in each, under the penalty of forfeiting the grants," &c.

At page 40, White's Compilation, the same principle is again advanced:

"All the settlers and housekeepers to whom distribution of lands shall be made, shall, within three months which shall be stipulated, take possession of the same," &c.

The following law provides for grants of large tracts of land to individuals who may undertake to settle a number of families, but it shows the limited quantity that each individual was allowed to possess, and corresponds in this particular with all the legislation of Spain on the subject.

"In contracts for new settlements made by the government, or whoever shall be thereto authorized in the Indies, with cities, adelantado, superior alcade, or corregidor, the person entering into the agreement shall do so likewise with each individual who may enlist to join the settlement; and he will bind himself to grant building lots in the new settlement, together with pastures and lands for cultivation, in a number of peonias and caballerias proportionate to the quantity of land which each settler shall oblige himself to improve; provided it shall not exceed, nor shall he grant more to each, than five peonias, or three caballerias, according to the express distinction, difference, and measurement, prescribed in the laws of the title concerning the distribution of lands, lots, and waters."

The law here alluded to is that found at page 35, of White's Compilation, and is, as I have endeavored to show, the basis of the authority on which grants of land have been made in Louisiana and Florida. The "caballeria," which is mentioned in these several laws as the land measure of the provinces, contains thirty-three and one third acres. Three of these seem to have been the largest quantity of land allowed to those who enlisted under a contract to form new settlements. But the common grants to individuals were to be regulated entirely by the "qualifications" of the grantee to cultivate and improve the land.

I have thus presented a view of all the Laws of the Indies from which authority can be derived to make grants of land in Louisiana; and from those laws I think it may be said, with some degree of confidence, that no power was conferred by them on any of the provincial officers to grant the public domain, except on the conditions of habitation and cultivation; and that until those conditions were performed, no title in fee simple could be acquired. It was only in cases of this description, where the grantee had actually entered into possession of the land, where he had inhabited and cultivated it during the four years prescribed by the laws of the Indies, that "confirmations" of title could be granted by the "governors of the distant provinces, or where the sea intervened," under the 12th article of the royal order of 1754. To say that this ordinance, professing as it does in its preamble, and proving as it does in every article, that it was intended only to provide for the confirmation of concessions after the conditions were performed, repeals the laws of the Indies, under which the concessions were made, and invests the governors with full power to grant lands, without conditions, and without restrictions in quantity, is to give it a construction which neither its spirit nor its letter will permit. It is true the court has not decided that the Laws of the Indies were repealed by this ordinance; on the contrary, it recognizes them as being in force; but it has given to the royal order a construction inconsistent with the provisions of those laws, by which it should be controlled. A careful examination of the laws and ordinances of the Spanish government will lead inevitably to the following conclusions:

1st. That all grants, without discrimination, were required to be made on the precedent conditions of habitation and cultivation;

2d. That all grants were required to be made for a quantity of land proportioned to the "qualifications" or ability of the grantee to cultivate and improve the land; and

3d. That the grant of "confirmation" by which the title in fee simple was required, could in no case be given, until the grantee proved a compliance with the condition of habitation and cultivation during the period of four years.

These were the leading principles of the Laws of the Indies in force in Louisiana and Florida, and the local regulations of the province predicated on, and harmonizing with them, furnished the practical rules for their administration.

In strict accordance with these laws and local regulations, intended to authorize grants of land to the native subjects of the King, is the royal order of 1790, providing for grants of land to foreigners who took the oath of allegiance to the Spanish crown. This order is found at page 996 of the Land Laws, and is in the following terms: "No settlers shall be admitted in Louisiana or Florida, should they pretend to have their transportation to those provinces, and maintenance there for some time, paid by the royal treasury. That those foreigners alone will be received who may, of their own free will, present themselves, and swear allegiance to his majesty, to whom there shall be granted and measured lands gratis, in proportion to the working hands each family may have." Under this law must be decided all grants made in Louisiana to Americans and other foreigners. Although this royal order does not in express terms require habitation and cultivation, yet it directs lands to be granted to the settler in proportion to his "working hands;" and when he took the oath of allegiance to the crown he became a subject, and his rights must have been governed by the same rules which controlled the rights of the native-born subjects.

The regulations of O'Reilly, Gayoso, and Morales, were the local laws of the province. They furnished plain and comprehensive practicable rules for the commandants of posts, who were sub-delegates, and who possessed no other power of making grants but that conferred by the laws and ordinances of Spain, and these local regulations. Let us now apply these laws, royal orders, and regulations to the claims to land depending in Louisiana, and see how far they will sustain the authority of the several officers by whom they were made.

Have these grants been made to foreigners who took the oath of allegiance to the government, in "proportion to the number of working hands each family" possessed?

Have the grants to native born subjects been made in proportion to their ability to cultivate and improve them?

Have the conditions, prescribed by the laws of the Indies, requiring four years' actual habitation and cultivation, been performed?

The answer to these several inquiries, I conceive, must be in the negative; and if the validity of these claims depend on their being in conformity to the laws of the Indies, the royal orders of the King, and the local regulations, then it is evident they must be rejected.

If it should be said that the grants now depending were absolute and unconditional in their character, and that, therefore, no conditions were required to be performed, my answer is, that such grants were not authorized by the law, and that they are utterly void.

It is admitted that the claims now depending in the State of Missouri were not made agreeably to the regulations of O'Reilly, Gayoso, or Morales, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to search in those regulations for principles to sustain these grants. To avoid the effect of these regulations, which appear to have been essentially violated in the exercise of the granting power, it is contended that they were not in force in Upper Louisiana, except, perhaps, those of Gayoso, which relate to new settlers. Can this proposition be sustained in fact, or by process of reasoning? Can the regulations, issued by those officers whose jurisdiction extended over every portion of the province, and which were designed to be coextensive with their jurisdiction, be considered partial in their operation, and limited in their effect? Could one part of the regulations of Gayoso be in force in Upper Louisiana, without the other part, when it was the evident intention of the framer of those regulations that every part of them should operate in that portion of the province?

It appears to me that the proposition itself is somewhat singular, but the evidence by which it is attempted to be sustained is still more extraordinary. It is the testimony of Delassus, the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, a sub-delegate of the intendancy, in which he acknowledges the receipt of six copies of the regulations of Morales, officially transmitted to him, and which were intended for his government in making grants of land; "that he gave no orders to his inferiors relative to the regulations of Morales, because he did not intend to obey them himself, and had remonstrated against them." That he did not recollect to have had them published, &c. Waiving all the many and weighty objections which might with propriety be urged against the statement of the witness, and receiving all he has said as true, what does it amount to more than proof of his disobedience of the law given for his government. But could the disobedience and insubordination of this officer act as a repeal of the law? Could these regulations have been annulled and abrogated by any power inferior to that by which they were created? If they were not repealed, did they not continue to be the law of the province, whether they were obeyed or not? If they did, then it would be a sufficient objection to the validity of every grant, it was made in violation of that law.

By the royal order of the 22d October, 1798, (White's Compilation, 218,) the exclusive power of granting and distributing all kinds of land in the provinces of Louisiana and Florida was conferred on Morales, the intendant, and upon that order were based his regulations. In the preamble to these regulations, he says that all persons who wish to obtain lands may know in what manner they ought to ask for them, and on what conditions they can be granted or sold, &c.; that the commandants, as sub-delegates of the intendancy, may be informed of what they ought to observe; that the surveyor general of this city, and the particular surveyors who are under him, may be instructed of the formalities with which they ought to make surveys of land or lots, which shall be considered sold or arranged for; this the secretary of the province may know, &c. I have resolved that the following resolutions shall be observed." Will any one say, after reading this preamble and the resolutions, with the royal order on which they are founded, that the commandant of St. Louis, or the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, acting as the sub-delegate of the intendancy, was not bound to obey them, and that all grants made by him in violation of those regulations are not utterly void? Now, if the regulations of Morales were not in force in Upper Louisiana, by what authority did the lieutenant governor make grants of land? He could not create power for himself; he could not, by the exercise of illegitimate authority, have performed a valid act. The power of disposing of the royal domain was a prerogative of the crown, and could only have been exercised by those to whom it was delegated. The laws of the Indies, so far as they are known or believed to exist, the royal orders of the King, the regulations of O'Reilly, Gayoso, and Morales, have all been violated in making these grants, and yet their validity is confidently asserted on the ground that the grant itself creates a presumption in favor of the authority by which it was made. Let us for a moment examine this question. Suppose it is admitted that the grant shall be received as prima facie evidence; that its execution shall be considered as creating a presumption that it was made by lawful authority? Is not that presumption fully rebutted by showing that it has been made in violation of all the known rules of the Spanish government? Such certainly would be the result in ordinary cases, and is there anything in this which entitles the presumption to a more favorable consideration? The lieutenant governors of Upper Louisiana, and the commandants of posts within their jurisdiction, were at all times subordinate to the captains general, governors, and intendants of the provinces. These high officers resided at New Orleans, and were the mediums of communication between the King and their subordinate officers.

The lieutenant governor resided at St. Louis, and is it not most improbable that the King should have communicated directly with him, and that he should have conferred on this subordinate more extensive authority over the royal domain than he had given to the captain general and intendant of the province? But even if this had been the case, is it probable that no trace of the royal order by which this extraordinary power was conferred could be found in either Spain or Louisiana? When we find the regulations of O'Reilly, Gayoso, and Morales, in force in every other portion of Louisiana—when we find them constituting the only rules for making grants of land from the year 1770 until the transfer of the province of the United States—it is quite impossible to believe there was one insulated district within that province governed by different laws, and where those regulations did not prevail. These facts and these reasons, in my opinion, are quite sufficient to destroy every presumption in favor of these grants, made apparently in violation of the known laws of the province.

It is next contended that, according to the usage of the province, these grants were valid, and that they ought therefore to be confirmed. It is only necessary to show what was the law of Spain on the subject of usage, to defeat this pretended right. This law will be found in White's Compilation, page 60: "In order that a use be valid, five things ought to concur: 1st, that it be of a thing from which good may follow; 2d, that it be public; 3d, that there intervene the general consent; 4th, that it be not opposed to any written law; 5th, that it have the consent or order of the king."

If we apply this law to the usage and custom which is said to have prevailed in Upper Louisiana, by which lands claimed under concessions or incomplete titles, were considered as property capable of possessing by devise, and by bargain and sale, what is the result? It is undoubtedly this, that the usage being contrary to the written law of the Indies, and the local regulations of O'Reilly, Gayoso, and Morales, must be considered inoperative, and, therefore, can afford no support whatever to those claims. It cannot be denied by any one the least acquainted with the land titles of the Spanish provinces in America, that the concession or imperfect title granted in the first instance by the sub-delegate on the petition of the settler, was the mere permission to acquire a perfect title, by the process of habitation and cultivation, afterward to be performed; that it did not pass the estate in fee-simple, which remained in the crown, and could not be divested until after the performance of all the conditions prescribed by law. Then, and not until then, were titles of confirmation given by those to whom this power was delegated by the crown.

But it is said, the claimants to land in Louisiana and Florida, have property in the land, which they claim under these imperfect grants, and that the government of the United States is bound in good faith to respect that property, and confirm the title of the claimants. According to the principles settled by the Supreme Court, in the case of Johnston vs. McIntosh, 8th Wheaton, 543, "the title to lands depends entirely upon the law of the nation in which they lie."

"The title to land can be acquired and lost in the manner prescribed by the law of the place where such land is situated." The United States vs. Crosby, 7th Cranch, 115.

This is the settled doctrine maintained in all our courts. Now, if the laws of the Indies, the royal orders of the King, and the local laws of the province, all concur, as they do, in declaring most expressly, that the grantees shall not be entitled to the land conceded to them until they have performed the conditions of habitation and cultivation, and that until that time the estate in such lands should remain in the King, by what authority can his asserted right of property be maintained? The answer, I presume, will be, the usage of the province. I have endeavored already to show that no usage contrary to law can be urged in favor of any right, that such usage must be vicious, and that all acts and deeds performed under it must be utterly null and void. But what is the proof of this usage? Was it a usage adopted by common consent, which prevailed over every part of the province of Louisiana? This is not pretended. It was the usage of a distant and insulated portion of the province, where the laws were disregarded, while in other portions, where the law was respected and obeyed, no such usage ever prevailed.

To say that the claimants under these imperfect grants are entitled to the land they claim; to say that this shall be the rule of decision in our courts of justice, is to shake to the foundation all the land titles of Louisiana and Florida. For it is a fact well known to exist in all those States and territories ever under the dominion of Spain, that there are numerous cases where the land now held by perfect titles had been previously conceded to some other person, who failed to comply with the conditions, in consequence of which the land was regranted to those persons whom we found in possession, and who acquired a perfect title by performing all the conditions prescribed by the law. If this imperfect title conveyed the estate in the land in one case, they must have done so in all cases, and, therefore, he who obtained the first concession will hold the land, although it was afterward regranted in consequence of his own deliquency, in not performing the conditions of his grant.

In every aspect in which I have been able to view these claims, they appear to me not to be entitled to the confirmation of the government, except in a very few cases, where the conditions required by the law have been fully performed.

R. K. CALL.

COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office.

ST. LOUIS, December 13, 1835.

SIR: By the mail, by which you will receive this, I forward to you a communication relating to the Missouri land claims, in compliance, in part, with a request made from your office in the course of the last spring by your predecessor. In that communication the concessions herewith enclosed are referred to, and for that reason are they forwarded to you.

So soon as it is possible for me to comply fully with all that has been requested of me, in relation to the subject of the communication to which I refer, it shall be done.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JAMES H. PECK.

Hon. E. A. BROWN, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The testimony of Mr. Primm, and of Mr. Leduc, to which I have referred in my former letters to the chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims, and that to which I propose to refer in the observations I shall now submit, will, I think, establish satisfactorily—

1st. That, prior to the year 1796, no concession had issued which exceeded a league square;

2d. That, prior to the same period, no concession for tracts of land had issued, except upon the condition of settlement, and with a direct view to their cultivation, or the raising of cattle; and

3d. That the concessions previous to the said period do not appear to have issued without a regard, in reference to their extent, to the circumstances of the applicants for them; that is, to those circumstances which would enable him to cultivate, or raise cattle.

Mr. Primm, who had examined the livre terrien, from the beginning to the end of it, with a view to the ascertainment of the facts in relation thereto, states that he saw no concessions in that record which exceeded a league square, nor any except upon the condition of settlement and cultivation.

Mr. Leduc, in his testimony, proves that all the concessions prior to the year 1796 were recorded in the livre terrien, with a possible exception of a very few, if any.

This testimony would appear to support the 1st and 2d propositions. In support of the 1st proposition, I refer also, in addition to the testimony mentioned, to a list of all the concessions in the livre terrien, exclusive of those under 300 arpens, which list forms a part of the evidence in the record of the case of Wherry and others vs. the United States, pending in the Supreme Court. It contains only 37 concessions, inclusive of all that either amount to, or exceed 300 arpens, and, of these 37, but three are of the extent of a league square. The concession to Mathurin Bouvet, mentioned in that list, situated at the bay of St. Charles, being 84 arpens in front, and extending from the hills to the Mississippi, must fall much short of a league square, according to the testimony of Antoine Chenie, to be found in the record of the case last mentioned, who states that the river approaches very near the hills at the bay of St. Charles, where Bouvet lived, and for five or six miles up and down, leaving but a narrow strip between the hills and the river.

Admitting it to be true, as Mr. Leduc believes it to be, in his testimony, that "there were some concessions made anterior to 1796, which were not recorded in the livre terrien," but of which he says he is not certain, and that if there were any that were not so recorded, they were issued in the time of Trudeau, subsequent to the year 1792, inclusive.

If there were any prior to 1796, which were not recorded, the presumption would be, that those not recorded had been issued upon principles and conditions the same with those which were recorded; and that if there are any whose date refer them to the same period with the recorded concessions, which are not recorded, and not subject upon their face to the same conditions to which those are subject which are recorded, or in any wise opposed in principle to all the precedents these afford, their exemption from the common condition, or innovation upon the established rule, together with the circumstance of their being unrecorded, would afford, if unexplained, a ground of distrust in relation to their fairness.

The concessions of Trudeau to Delassus Deluzieres, confirmed by the Supreme Court at its last term, is not in the livre terrien, as it would appear by the list to which I have referred. This concession is (9th Peters's Reports, 124 and 125) for a league square, and although made with a view to immediate occupancy, that occupancy was for mining purposes, more than that of cultivation; and having been made also without any regard or reference to the means possessed by Deluzieres to cultivate, makes it an exception to the principles upon which others of that, and the previous period, of the Spanish government appear to have issued.

The order of Carondelet, (9th Peters's Reports, 123,) pursuant to which the concession purports to have been issued, recites the contract of Deluzieres with the government, "to deliver yearly, for five years, 30,000 pounds of lead," &c., and directs, "in order that he may comply with that contract," that the lieutenant governor will put him in possession of the land he may solicit for the exploration, benefit and enjoyment of the mines, &c. In the letter of Carondelet to Deluzieres, written simultaneously with this order, he refers to the order, as an order authorizing a grant of lands where he shall have made a discovery of lead mineral, with adjacent lands of sufficient extent for their exploration.

These papers show the inducement to the grant, and indicate the criterion of the quantity to be granted. May not the special order for this concession imply that an order was deemed necessary, and that such a concession for such a purpose would not have been issued by the lieutenant governor under any instructions previously received by him? If the concession was not a departure from the common course, no order would be necessary. The lieutenant governor would have issued the concession on the application of Deluzieres, as he had theretofore done on the application of others, without any particular order therefor, if the concession was merely such a one as had been theretofore authorized, and in conformity to the instructions theretofore given. But there is not only an order for this particular concession, but in that order the precise motive for it is stated. The lieutenant governor, also, in the concession, refers to this order as "authorizing" it. In the petition of Deluzieres for the concession, he states that "at the city of New Orleans, in May, 1793, he resolved to come up into the Illinois country, upon the express assurance given him by his lordship, the Baron de Carondelet, governor general of Louisiana, that he would order and authorize you (the lieutenant governor) to grant him a tract of land for the exploration of lead mines," &c. The acts of all concerned concur to show their common opinion that the concession was a departure from established rule. In the paragraph immediately following that in which Carondelet refers to this order, he informs Deluzieres, "that his son-in-law and sons should have, as he had desired, a plantation in any place they should select in Illinois, of an extent proportionate to the establishment and improvement they propose to make." Here the assurance or promise is of a grant which is consistent with the spirit and intention of O'Reilly's regulations; such as, according to the practice already prevailing in Illinois, and doubtless by authority, would issue, as a matter of course, and therefore no new order authorizing such a grant was necessary; and, therefore, as may be inferred, the special order for the grant to Deluzieres was not made to include that which was promised to the son-in-law and sons. That such is the reasonable inference, will more readily be admitted, after I shall have shown, as hereafter I will show, that the regulations of O'Reilly did not authorize the concession made to Deluzieres, and that those regulations were the fixed law in relation to all grants in Louisiana at that date, and the only law in relation to that subject, and were unalterable, except by the royal will, by the terms and manifest intention of the royal order of the 24th August, 1770, which order, after reciting the King's approbation of the regulations of O'Reilly, directs the governor general that "he, and his successors in the government, should have the sole power of distributing the royal lands, conforming themselves, in all respects, to said instructions, (referring to those of O'Reilly, by their date and matter,) so long as his Majesty shall not make any other provisions; Carondelet, therefore, must have understood those instructions to be imperative upon him as law, and unalterable by him; and that every departure from them must have a justification in necessity, which would be satisfactory to the King. Possibly that necessity may have arisen in the opinion of Carondelet, as a means of securing the lead which was demanded from the circumstance of threatened war, of which evidence is furnished in the papers of the case of Deluzieres.

That the concession was not authorized by the regulations of O'Reilly, is admitted by the Supreme Court. It was not issued with a reference to any cattle, &c., which Deluzieres possessed, or any proposed tillage which, under the regulations of O'Reilly, would authorize a concession of that extent.

There was, therefore, no authority in law authorizing this concession, if my opinion is right in relation to the authority of the regulations of O'Reilly; and there was no law afterward extended to, introduced, or adopted in Louisiana, which authorized it; there was, of course, no "law, usage, or custom, of the Spanish government, under and in conformity to which it might have been confirmed, or perfected into a complete title, had not the sovereignty of the country been transferred to the United States."

Admitting that Carondelet would have made the grant without authority, and contrary to the instructions of O'Reilly, (which were law to him,) by no other authority than his own will, and upon assumed responsibility, under circumstances of necessity, however, that might have justified him to his sovereign, and have probably obtained his assent to the grant; until that assent was obtained, the grant would convey no property, no title, nothing which could bind the King, or those claiming under him, which the United States do—nothing which the law of nations could protect—nothing which the stipulation of the treaty would protect.

And further, if, with a view to the benefits of the contract and to secure its fulfilment on the part of Deluzieres, Carondelet, in the first instance, would have made the grant, had he been applied to for that purpose, under a conviction that he could have obtained the royal approbation for it, it does not follow that either he or his successors would have made it after the occasion had gone by which was the inducement to it, and after it had appeared that Deluzieres had not fulfilled the undertaking on his part, which was the consideration of the promise of a grant. But the question for the judiciary under the act of 1824, in relation to this claim, was, not what the intendant would have done in the exercise of an assumed responsibility contrary to his instructions, or what the sovereign might have done, or approved, in the exercise of his unrestrained will, but what the intendant might have done under and in conformity to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government.

The evidence which has been relied upon in these remarks, as authorizing an inference that the concession to Deluzieres formed an exception to the common rule, authorizes equally the inference of the existence of some common rule.

What was that common or established rule? The previous practice of the Spanish government from its first establishment in Louisiana, in 1770, a period of twenty-five years, might be relied upon as affording some inference in relation to that rule, i. e., the rule in pursuance of which grants were authorized to be made.

The last paragraph of the letter of Carondelet to Deluzieres, in which he says: "Your son-in-law and your sons shall have also, as you desire, a plantation in any place they will select in Illinois, of an extent proportionate to the improvement and establishment they propose to make," affords evidence of the principles upon which grants of lands were made at that day. It contains a declaration of the principle upon which the grant to the son-in-law and sons would be made; and there does not appear to be anything in the circumstances of this promise which should distinguish the grant thus promised from other grants. The promise is made in reply to the application of Deluzieres on behalf of his son-in-law and sons. There is nothing to authorize the opinion that the grant to them would be made upon principles less favorable than it would be if made to others. From this promise, therefore, may be derived evidence in support of the three propositions with which I set out in this paper.

The promise that the grant should be "proportionate to the improvement," &c., "proposed to be made," supposes that there is an intention to make the improvement, &c., and likewise necessarily supposes the ability and means necessary to make it.

The proposition to make a grant proportionate to the improvement proposed to be made, is about the same, so far as the proposition would relate to the quantity to be granted, with a proposition to make a grant proportionate to the forces and numbers which it were proposed should be employed in cultivating and improving, and either proposition supposes an intention that there shall be directly a settlement and improvement of the land granted.

The promise of the grant proportionate to the improvement to be made, shows that the proposed improvement, &c., is the inducement leading to the grant; the true consideration of the grant, and, therefore, the amount of this consideration—of this improvement proposed to be made—regulates the quantity of the grant, which is to be of a corresponding extent, namely, of an extent sufficient for all the purposes of such an improvement as should be proposed to be made.

A further evidence of the principles upon which lands were granted at the period last mentioned, and also, that they were understood to be granted in conformity with O'Reilly's regulations, may be derived from a concession of Carondelet, of the 28th of November, 1793, to De Labeaume, which being in my possession, and certified by the late recorder of land titles, I enclose herewith.

The petition of De Labeaume, which is addressed to Carondelet, asks for a concession of six by forty arpens. The commandant at New Madrid, where the lands are situate, Thomas Portell, states upon that petition, that "the circumstances which the instruction" (so these regulations are called in the royal order approving them) "advises" (requires) "concurring in the petition, he considers him worthy of the favor he solicits." Upon the petition of De Labeaume, and this information of Portell, Carondelet makes the concession; and in the concession imposes upon De Lebaume an obligation in relation to the royal road, such as would appear to be in conformity with the regulations of O'Reilly, it appearing by the petition of De Labeaume, that the land solicited was bounded on one side by that road. The condition of this concession, by its terms is, that it "shall remain null, if at the precise term of three years the land is not established, and that he (De Lebeaume) shall not have power to alien it during the same term." The petition for this concession asks for six by fifteen arpens, but the concession is for six by forty arpens, and these forty mentioned as the "ordinary depth" which by O'Rielly's regulations they are to be. All the conditions of this concession appear to be in conformity with O'Reilly's regulations, and to these Portell, the commandant of Madrid, must be understood to refer in the information he gives to Carondelet.

A later petition of the same Louis De Labeaume to Carondelet, for permission to sell land which he had purchased on the condition that he would perform the necessary labors and improvements, and reciting that he had complied with the required conditions, and the grant by Carondelet of the permission which was prayed for, and the registration of all which, made by Pedro Pidreplan, authorize an inference that the title was not deemed to be fully acquired without a specific improvement; nor legally assigned without permission therefor; and such would be the law according to O'Reilly's regulations. I enclose the certified copy of these acts also herewith

The letter of Carondelet, above referred to, addressed to Mr. Dehault Delassus, above mentioned as Deluzieres (9th Peters's Rep. 123, 124) in the first paragraph, in which he states: "I send you back the primitive titles of concession granted to Mr. François Vallé, of St. Genevieve, who transferred to Mr. Dodge one moiety of which, who ceded it to Mr. Tardiveau, who made a gift of it to your brother, with the approbation and advice you desire." This approbation and advice could have been of nothing else than the several transfers mentioned; for what purpose else could the concession and transfers have been in his hands? and to what else could his approbation refer but to those transfers? There are many instances even of judicial sales made at St. Louis, under the orders or decrees of the lieutenant governor, which have been remitted to the governor general for his approbation, under no other authority, that I know of, than O'Reilly's regulations, such approbation being there declared to be necessary. As the principles, to which all these acts appear to refer themselves, are found in O'Reilly's regulations, that coincidence, independent of the royal order of 1770, would induce the belief that they were adopted law. If to all these acts we add that of Carondelet's order of 1795, mentioned in the remonstrance of Delassus, which directed that "all concessions should be made in proportion, as to quantity, to the number of the family of the applicant," we shall have satisfactory evidence of the opinion of Carondelet of the principle upon which lands were to be granted, during the period that he exercised the powers of the government.

It does not appear that the larger concessions contained in the livre terrien (which are to be seen in the list of concessions already referred to in the record of Wherry and others vs. U. S.) were not made with a reference to the means possessed, or the improvements and establishments proposed to be made by the grantees. Leduc in his said deposition in the case of Wherry and others, states that "Clamorgan, Labeaume, Gratiot, and Cerré, who appear, by the said list of claims, extracted from the livre terrien, to have received large concessions, were men of very considerable wealth, when witness arrived in the country, and all men of families, except Clamorgan. That Vasques, who, by said list, appears to have received a large concession, was a captain in the pay of the King, commanded the post in the absence of the lieutenant governor, and had a large family," &c. These and all the concessions of that day being made upon the condition of settlement, and of course with a view to improvements, &c., to be made; an ability to make such improvements as were in proportion to the grant obtained is to be presumed in favor of the applicant, and the officer who made the concession.

The more I explore the whole subject of the Spanish land claims, as it involves both law and facts, the more fully am I persuaded that the Spanish authorities gave to O'Reilly's regulations, in their application of them to the whole country of Louisiana, that free construction which is supposed to have been given by the district court of Missouri in its opinion delivered in the case of Choteau and others vs. United States, forwarded by me to the chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims. And assuming such to have been their construction by the Spanish authorities, the concessions in the livre terrein, in reference to their extent, would not appear to be inconsistent with their spirit.

According to the testimony of Mr. Primm, some of the concessions, in the livre terrien, were for stock farms. For these purposes, the regulations of O'Reilly and also those of Morales, authorized, in Lower Louisiana, grants of a league square, or of less extent, according to the number of cattle, &c., possessed by the applicant. The sections of country in which those larger grants were authorized were supposed to be adapted to the raising of cattle; and in places so adapted in Upper Louisiana, and those who might choose to raise stock there, the principles of the provisions of the regulations upon those subjects, might, without impropriety, and in pursuance of their spirit and intention, be extended; and the extent of the grant might bear a proportion to the number of cattle possessed, and the improvement and establishment proposed to be made, and for which the means possessed were adequate.

In the deposition of Leduc, he further says, that the "livre terrien contains 176 concessions for tracts of land; 85 surveys of common field lots for the town of St. Louis; 133 concessions for town lots in St. Louis and the village of Carondelet, and perhaps a few elsewhere, and 35 surveys of town lots in St. Ferdinand, and 13 in Marias Des Liard.

"That town lots and common field lots were generally occupied without any concessions, and that he neither knew of nor has heard of any concession in any other town or village, a dependency of the post of St. Louis, except perhaps a very few in St. Genevieve, and a concession from Portage Dessauix. That tracts of land were frequently occupied and cultivated without any concession." This witness, Mr. Leduc, was familiar with the whole subject of those claims. He further states in his deposition that he "was familiar with the records of the office of the recorder of land titles, having assisted Mr. Bates, the recorder, in discharging the duties of that office for many years, commencing with the year 1809, and until the books and papers were delivered over to the present recorder, about the year 1824."

There are but 37 claims in the livre terrien, exclusive of those under 300 arpens, as you may see by the list referred to, and as there were 176 concessions for tracts of land, according to the testimony above, there would remain 139 tracts of land, or concessions for tracts of land, under the quantity of 300 arpens, to 37 which were above that quantity. This will afford some idea of the size of the grants of land during the first thirty years of the government in Upper Louisiana, and the first twenty-five of the Spanish government there.

Including that to Deluzieres, the proportion would be 139 below the quantity of 300 arpens to 38 above it.

The testimony above explains, in part, the reason why the concessions during so long a period were so few in number, namely, "that tracts of land were frequently occupied and cultivated without any concession; and that common field lots and town lots were generally occupied without any concession." It should be added, in further explanation, that under the French and Spanish governments, the inhabitants of Upper Louisiana, and especially prior to 1796, resided mostly in towns or villages, and that each town and village had its common field, in which each inhabitant, who desired to do so, owned and cultivated his separate lot. This lot was always a certain number of arpens in front, varying from one to a greater number, doubtless according to the tillage proposed to be made, by 40 arpens in depth, where the nature of the ground admitted of that depth.

The most of the cultivation, as I apprehend, which was done in Upper Louisiana prior to the time mentioned, was done in those common fields. The lots held in severalty of one or more arpens in front by forty in depth, are the common field lots, of which the witness above speaks as being "generally occupied without any concession."

The facts I have submitted afford a view of the practice in relation to grants of land which prevailed prior to 1796, which embraces the first twenty-five years of the Spanish government in Upper Louisiana.

This view of the practice was deemed material to be offered; for it is presumed to have been authorized, and is therefore evidence of the law or authority under which it prevailed.

Where the authority, or law, under which these concessions were made, is a matter of doubt or of controversy, as in relation to those concessions it is, it becomes material to consider the practice which actually prevailed. If that practice is in conformity with the spirit of that which is insisted to have been the law which regulated it, that conformity of the practice to the alleged law is persuasive that the alleged law of the subject was in truth the law. That there would not in every instance, in the establishment of new settlements, be a precise conformity to the law upon any subject, is to be admitted as probable. The imperfect organization of the government in its infancy, and exigencies innumerable, would reasonably cause departures from exact rules; no precise conformity, therefore, between the law of the subject and the practice under it, should be expected.

I think the evidence to which I have referred does sustain the three propositions to the support of which they have been applied in the preceding observations, and does, therefore, show—

1st. That, prior to 1796, no concession in Upper Louisiana exceeded a league square;

2d. That prior to that time, the concession was made upon the condition of a settlement and improvement, and with that direct view; and I might add further that the improvement to be made, in view of which the concession was given, was the true consideration of the concession, according to its terms upon its face; inasmuch as the concession, by its terms, was to be void if the improvement should not be made; and

3d. That prior to that period also, grants or concessions were made in reference to their extent, with a regard to the improvements and establishments proposed to be made, or, in other words, with a regard to the means of the applicant to raise cattle, or to cultivate.

After the year 1795, comes the period of the controverted grants. Those prior to that date have been generally confirmed, and in relation to them little difficulty existed, except where the same land had been twice conceded, and where the second concession was made because no settlement or improvement had been made under the first.

I propose now to show, from the evidence which may be extracted from the remonstrance of Delassus, mentioned in my former letters, and from other evidence to which I shall refer, that the same three propositions may be sustained in relation to the whole period between the year 1795 and the year 1800, when that remonstrance was written; and consequently, that all the concessions which now purport to have been issued during that period, and which were not issued in conformity to the principles stated in those propositions, are antedated and spurious.

The order which is mentioned by Delassus in his remonstrance, as proceeding from the governors the Baron de Carondelet and Don Manuel Gayoso, is mentioned where he is treating, in the remonstrance, of the 18th, 19th, and 20th articles of the regulations of Morales, and is mentioned as having issued on the appointment of Antoine Soulard to be surveyor of Upper Louisiana, including the district of Madrid.

This order, from what is stated in the remonstrance, required the observance of three things:

1st. That the commandants should observe to put the provisional decrees of concession to the petitions of the applicants, to cause their lands to be surveyed on their applications;

2d. That these concessions should, as to quantity, be proportioned to the number of the family of the applicants, &c.;

3d. That the party who obtained a concession should, after the survey was made in obedience to the decree, solicit of the governor general his title of property.

It is not until about the beginning of the year 1796, that the concessions show a conformity with so much of this order as directed that the concession should be put to, that is, annexed to, the petitions of the applicants. Prior to that time the concessions generally, as they appear in the livre terrien, stand alone, and show no petition, further than by a reference to one that had been presented to, or seen by, him who issued the concession; and not until about the same time does the concession require, or intimate to the party obtaining it, that he is to apply to the governor general for his title of property; and about this time also is the previous practice, which had theretofore prevailed, of inserting the condition of settlement, &c., in the concession, discontinued. I infer, therefore, that the order did issue about the time stated in the remonstrance, since about that time the concessions took the new form which the order required. Attention to the circumstances of the previous form of the concession, in one of the respects mentioned, namely, that it did not state or intimate to the party obtaining it that he was to apply to the governor general for his title, will enable the reader to understand what is meant in that part of the remonstrance in which its author states that "his predecessors granted lands without warning the applicants of the steps they had to take;" the grantees not being notified by the terms of the concession, that they had to apply to the governor general for their title. The argument of the author of the remonstrance upon this subject may be thus briefly stated: "It is manifestly true, as stated in the 18th article, (for that article does so state, that many had believed that they held property under their concessions, because ever since the cession of this province to Spain, my predecessors granted lands without warning the applicants of the steps they had to take, or that any further title was necessary beyond that which was delivered to them, or of which sometimes a memorandum only was made in the livre terrien,* in consequence of which, and under those ordinary formalities, every inhabitant believed himself to be the peaceable possessor of the lands thus granted," &c.; "and this plain method was followed until Antoine Soulard was appointed surveyor," &c., when the governors the Baron de Carondelet and Don Manuel Gayoso ordered "that the commandant should observe to put the provisional decrees of concession to the petitions of the applicants to cause their lands to be surveyed, and that these concessions were to be proportioned, as to quantity, to the number of the family of the applicant," &c.; "after which, the interested were to solicit their title of property," &c.

It is no doubt true, as stated in the remonstrance, that of those who had obtained concessions prior to 1796, and were in the peaceable possession of the lands conceded to them, many of them believed that they had the title of the property, in virtue of their concessions.

But as to those who obtained concessions after that date, and under the orders above recited, such a belief cannot be attributable, because, in the concession, they are required to apply to the governor general for their titles; or where the concession was after the decree of 1798, which transferred the granting power to the intendant, they were required to apply to him for the title.

The statement in the remonstrance in relation to the time at which it was ordered by Carondelet and Gayoso, as above mentioned, would leave the impression that the author of the remonstrance intends to represent that it was about, or soon after, the appointment of Soulard to be surveyor. This appointment was in February, 1795, as appears by a copy of his commission in the papers of the case of Soulard's heirs, or Soulard and others vs. United States, pending in the Supreme Court. Soulard's first surveys, I believe, are early in 1796. Thus then it would appear from the date of the change in the form of the concession, which change must have taken place in obedience to the order, that the order which directed that the concession, as to quantity, should be in proportion to the number of the family of the applicant, was but a little anterior to the large concessions, some of which are in 1796, but most of them of a later date.

I shall now proceed to state some of the reasons which induce me to think that those large concessions, and all those alleged to be made in reward for services, and all the concessions not made with a direct view to the occupancy and improvement of the land, and which are not consistent with the spirit of the order above mentioned, or not embraced within the principles of the three propositions with which I set out, are antedated.

We have seen what the practice was prior to 1796, and now we have the order which Delassus states to have been issued about the year 1795, and was probably received before, or early in the year 1796, that "concessions should, as to the quantity, be proportioned to the number of the family."

* This part of the remonstrance is not very intelligible. I have given what I suppose is the argument which it was intended to contain. If the author of the remonstrance intends to say, what I have supposed, that "sometimes a memorandum only was made in the livre terrien," and to imply that it was not always even given out to the party, or any copy of it, the statement is in conformity to what is understood to have been sometimes practised. But if he intends to say, in relation to the concessions which had been issued by his predecessors, that sometimes only a memorandum of them was made in the livre terrien, the statement would be unsupported by the facts, I apprehend, so far as the statement relates to the period prior to 1796. It will be seen, however, by Delassus's deposition, that he had little or no acquaintance with the livre terrien. This he repeats several times in his deposition: "he had seen it;" "made no use of it;" and knew little concerning it.

It is to be presumed, in favor of the officer, that this order was obeyed. The presumption of due obedience in this case is stronger than in ordinary cases, because the acts which were to be performed under the order, were, by the terms of the order, to go directly to the officer who gave it for his final action upon it. The order directs that, after the survey, the party will apply for his title to the governor general, and so also does the concession direct; and that direction in the concession is likewise in obedience to the order, as is to be plainly inferred from all that is said in the remonstrance on the subject of the order, as well as from the fact, that the concession in all instances gives this direction after the date at which I have supposed the order was given. A precise obedience to the order in this case becomes further presumable, because a departure from it would not be supposed to be beneficial to any one where it could not be supposed that it would receive the sanction of the governor general; but, on the contrary, must draw rebuke upon the officers who had been guilty of that departure. This is the just presumption: and the presumption of reason further is, that if concessions now have existence, which show a plain departure from the spirit of this order, they were not issued during the period that they were expected necessarily to be referred to the governor general, nor during the period that they were expected to be referred to the intendant, to whom the remonstrance which recites the order was addressed; but that they were issued after the period had passed by that they were to be referred to either of these officers, and after responsibility to them, and to the sovereign, for such acts had ceased; and after the time had arrived when there was a motive to put them in circulation, and when they might be imposed upon individuals as things of value, and possibly upon the government who had succeeded to the right of the Spanish sovereign.

That great numbers of such concessions now have existence is not denied. Had they existence at the date at which the remonstrance was written? Certainly the author of the remonstrance intends to represent to the intendant that there had been a conformity on the part of his predecessor and himself, with the order which he recites, and, upon that conformity and other reasons, predicates his recommendation of the concessions issued by his predecessor and himself to the benefits and protection conferred upon claims of the most favored character, by the 18th article of the regulations of Morales.

What is the argument used in the remonstrance in support of this recommendation? The argument relates to two classes of claims, those prior to the order of 1795, mentioned above, and those subsequent thereto. In relation to those prior to 1795, it is such, I have above stated, namely, that those who had obtained those concessions, not having been informed that any further title was necessary, many of them believed themselves to be the owners of the property of which they were in the peaceable possession; and as relates to the concessions issued subsequent to the order of 1795, it is in effect this: that upon the appointment of the surveyor, it was ordered by the governors, as before stated; and that the concessions had been issued by the author of the remonstrance, and by his predecessor, in pursuance of said orders, and possession given, and surveys made, in conformity with said orders. This is what the intendant would understand as a part of the arguments used in support of the recommendation made of those claims in the remonstrance; and this is the substance of what Delassus intends to say upon this branch of his argument, however much it is made up with other arguments of hardship and inconvenience. Certainly that the concessions in respect to the quantity granted by them were, in some degree, in conformity to the rule which had been prescribed in the order under which they had been issued, would be with the intendant an indispensable recommendation of the claims to the favor and protection solicited for them.

This is the more to be supposed from the circumstance that the intendant had himself prescribed the rule which, in all cases, was to regulate the size of the grant: which rule, in its spirit, is the same with that mentioned in the remonstrance. The author of the remonstrance, with this rule before him, cannot be supposed to have imagined that the concessions granted by him and by his predecessor would be admitted to the favor to which he recommends them, had they not been in some degree in conformity to the rule which he had recited, and which was again reaffirmed in the regulations of the intendant. It may be inferred, therefore, in support of the foregoing interpretation of the argument in the remonstrance, that Delassus did intend that Morales, or the intendant to whom the remonstrance was addressed, should understand from it that the concessions which he referred to as having been issued by his predecessor and himself, after the receipt of the order of 1795, had issued in conformity with that order; and it may be also inferred, that they had been in fact so issued, because they were required by the regulations of Morales, to be presented to the intendant, that the titles should be made out by the intendant. It appears from the remonstrance also, that it was the understanding of Delassus himself, that they were to be so presented; for he says, "looking again to the 18th article, there is no doubt they have to apply, &c.": the "&c." meaning "to the intendant, to have their real titles made out," as is directed in that article. And afterward, again, in the remonstrance, referring to the 22d article, he says in reference to the application which is to be made for the title, "that the term of six months for this purpose is too short;" and thinks "that two years would not be too long," &c. Delassus, therefore, understood when he was making the recommendation in the remonstrance, that the concessions made by his predecessors and himself were to be presented to the intendant, that the titles should be made out by him. All his concessions made after the receipt of the decree of 1798, direct the party "to apply to the intendant, to whom, by royal order, belongs the power to divide and grant all classes of royal lands." Is it to be presumed that under such circumstances he would have made an uncandid statement to the intendant, in relation to the character of the concessions which had been issued? Certainly it is not; but it is fairly presumable that if the concessions had not been issued in conformity with the orders he recites, and also in some degree in conformity with the rules prescribed in the regulations of Morales in relation to their extent, that Delassus, in his remonstrance, would have offered some explanation of the reasons upon which they had not been so issued.

There is further evidence to show what the governors, the Baron De Carondelet and Don Manuel Gayoso, ordered in the instance referred to in the remonstrance. It is proper that the reader should understand the author of the remonstrance according to the fact; that those governors made orders such as he had stated, but made them not at the same time, but each of them at different times, as they respectively exercised the powers of the government. That Carondelet made an order of the import stated in 1795, he being then in the government, and that Gayoso afterward, when he came into the government as the successor of Carondelet, made a similar order. They were not both governors at one and the same time. Carondelet was governor, according to the evidence of his official acts to which I have referred, from the year 1793 to the year 1796; Gayoso, therefore, had not made the order attributed to him in the remonstrance prior to February, 1796, the date of one of those official acts by Carondelet; but on the 9th of September, 1797, Gayoso made his instructions to the commandants of posts, (White's Com. 206–7,) the 9th and 10th sections of which instructions contain the provisions in relation to the extent of the concessions which were authorized to be issued, such as the remonstrance ascribes to the orders it refers to. That this instruction of Gayoso is that to which Delassus in his remonstrance refers, as having been ordered by him, might be reasonably inferred, because, in his remonstrance, he makes no other mention of that instruction, which must have come to his knowledge, and must have been regarded by him as a rule for his government, it being addressed to all commandants of posts. But in addition to this reasonable presumption, some of his official acts identify and recognise that instruction as authoritative. Two of Delassus's concessions make the truth of this opinion so clear that I shall enclose them herewith; that is, copies of them, certified by the late recorder of land titles. I shall insert one of these concessions here, for the purpose of further illustration, omitting the petition; both of the concessions are substantially the same in form and words, except that they are of different dates, and to different persons; one to Jacob Neal, and the other to Samuel Neal.

The petition of the applicant having stated that he was one of those who had, with his family, been permitted to establish himself in the country at the request of Mr. Moses Austin, proceeds to state the number of his family and the purposes for which he wishes a concession. This petition is addressed to F. Vallé, commandant of the post of St. Genevieve, and is by him referred to the lieutenant governor; upon which the lieutenant governor makes the following concession:

"St. Louis of Illinois, November 29, 1799.

"By virtue of the official letter of the Baron of Carondelet, dated the 13th of March, of the year 1798, which grants land to all those who have come to this country with Mr. Moses Austin, the interested will prove, before the commandant of St. Genevieve, within the jurisdiction of which he is, the number of persons composing his family; and after this, the surveyor, Don Antonio Soulard, will put him in possession of 200 arpens of land in superficies for the husband and wife, 50 for each child, and 20 for each negro, provided that the whole shall not exceed 800 arpens for one sole proprietor, as it has been ordered by the regulation of the sor. governor general of the province; after which the party interested shall solicit the title of concession in form from the sor. intendant general of these provinces, to whom, by order of his M. belongs exclusively the power of conceding and dividing all classes of the royal lands.

"CARLOS DEHAULT DELASSUS."

In this concession, the words of the 9th and 10th sections of Gayoso's instructions are adopted, as that which had been ordered by the regulation of the sor. governor general of the province.

The 9th section of Gayoso's instruction provides that, "to every new settler, answering the foregoing description," (previous provisions having prescribed the qualifications which should entitle the applicant to a grant,) "and married, there shall be granted 200 arpens of land; 50 arpens shall be added for every child he shall bring with him."

The 10th section prescribes that, "to every emigrant uniting the circumstances before mentioned, and possessing property, who shall arrive with an intention to establish himself there, shall be granted 200 arpens of land, and, in addition, 20 arpens for every negro that he shall bring; provided, however, that the grant shall never exceed 800 arpens to one proprietor," &c.

This concession to Jacob Neal, by adopting the words of these two sections of Gayoso's instruction, constituting the rule in relation to the quantity to be granted, and designating that rule as that which had been "ordered by the regulation of the sor. governor general of the province, identifies Gayoso's as the instruction referred to in the concession, and is a recognition of its authority. These two concessions being dated in 1799, two years after the date of the instruction to which they refer, and one year before the date, (or a less time, perhaps not more than seven months,) at which the remonstrance was written, must leave the mind to conclude that the provisions of Gayoso's regulations, as to the extent of the grant, was that to which the remonstrance refers as having been "ordered by the governors," &c.

These two concessions would appear to be in all things in conformity to what the orders referred to in the remonstrance would seem to require, the several parts of that paper which refer to those orders being considered.

1st. The concessions are annexed, or put to the petitions.

2d. The concessions direct the surveyor to put the party in possession of the land, &c.

3d. The concessions contain the order to the surveyor to survey the land.

4th. The concession, as to extent, is in proportion to the number of the family of the applicant.

5th. The concession requires after the survey shall have been made and possession given, that the party shall solicit the title of concession in form from the sor. intendant general.

In the remonstrance there are three direct allusions to orders. The last allusion made is where, or immediately after, the author of the remonstrance has recurred a second time to that subject of the 18th article of Mor. Reg.; and after stating that most of the inhabitants had come into the country since the appointment of a surveyor, &c., states "that those inhabitants had no other document to have their lands surveyed, except the decrees of his predecessor and himself, under which they had been put into possession, conformably to the orders of the government; and their concessions surveyed by the survey before mentioned, under the obligation on their part, to apply to the governor general for the completion of their titles; that is, where the concession was made before the royal resolve of 1798, but where made subsequent thereto, to apply to the intendant for the completion of their titles." This royal resolve, as before mentioned, being that which transferred the granting power from the governor to the intendant. I have given the meaning of what the remonstrance states upon this subject, because to those not familiar with it, the meaning of that part of the remonstrance is not free from obscurity.

In the first part of the remonstrance, there is also an allusion to the orders which had been previously given, which required or authorized "the commandants to put, provisionally, the new-comers in possession by a decree of concession, and giving orders to the surveyor to survey their lands;" but which, in the remonstrance, its author "doubts whether, according to the 2d article of Morales, he is still authorized to do;" and doubts also, whether the new-comers "are to have recourse immediately to the intendant to obtain the title, as had been formerly required by his lordship, the governor general."

These several parts of the remonstrance allude to orders in terms which imply their import; which import, together with the more specific statement already recited, as given in another part of that paper, shows the existence of orders, such as authorized in all respects the two concessions to the Neals above mentioned; and shows that concessions, to be authorized by those orders, must have been in principle such as those.

When what is stated and implied in the remonstrance in relation to the orders which had been issued, is considered, and when the agreement between the words used in the last-mentioned concessions, with the words used in the ninth and tenth sections of the instructions of Gayoso is considered; and that this agreement establishes that at the dates of those concessions the latter must have had an authoritative character; the reason will be perceived why Delassus did not remonstrate against the limitation, in respect to the size of the grant, which is imposed in the first article of the regulations of Morales; when he was remonstrating against other provisions in those regulations, of greatly minor import, as they would affect the rights, or hopes, and expectations of the inhabitants, upon the hypothesis that those concessions then had an existence, which, from their dates, purports to have had.

It will be perceived that the reason he did not so remonstrate was, that the same restriction, substantially, had been imposed at least five years before, by the order of Carondelet, and also again in 1797, by the instructions of Gayoso, and that no concession having been issued otherwise then in conformity with the orders received, there was nothing upon that score to remonstrate against. Instead of authorizing the belief that there existed such a cause of remonstrance, we are induced to believe, from the actual remonstrance made, that the concessions issued in conformity with the orders it recites.

The official letter of Carondelet, mentioned in the first part of the concessions last referred to, had for its object, I apprehend, nothing more than to assure to those who had come to the country with Moses Austin, a grant according to the proportions as to extent, authorized by previous orders or instructions, and perhaps to assure to those who had families such a grant, without regard to the several qualifications prescribed; without which, under Gayoso's instructions, they would not be entitled to receive one. It is certain, however, that the reference in the latter part of the concessions, to what had been ordered by the regulation of the senior governor general, was not a reference to this official letter, as that by which it had been ordered; that there should be granted for the husband and wife two hundred arpens, for each child fifty, and for each negro twenty.

The date of this official letter of Carondelet shows, that he had again come into the government as early as the 13th of March, 1798; and as his letter does not interfere with the quantity to be granted, as ordered by Gayoso's instruction, his acquiescence in the instruction in that respect is to be inferred; this acquiescence, and the other official acts to which I have referred, all concur to show the probability that his order of 1795, referred to in the remonstrance, was such as is there stated.

So far I have examined the remonstrance with a view to the evidence it affords, that after the order of Carondelet of 1795, grants were made proportionate, as to quantity, to the number of the family of the applicant; or, in other words, proportionate, as to quantity, to the improvements proposed to be made, or proportionate, as to quantity, to the means to make improvements, &c., where those means were intended to be employed for that purpose. I shall now proceed to consider the remonstrance, with a view to the evidence it affords.

That the concession was made with a direct intention, that the land conceded should be occupied and improved, and that the object of the concession was to give that possession, for the purpose of such improvement.

The remonstrance shows that the orders it recites were first made by Carondelet, and from other facts to which I have referred to establish its date, was made about the year 1795. The letter of Carondelet of the 8th May, 1793, which promises to the sons and son-in-law of Deluzieres a grant, promises one of an extent proportionate to the improvement and establishment they propose to make, which implies that the "improvement, &c., to be made," is the consideration which leads to the grant; and, therefore, that the grant is upon the direct condition, that there shall be such improvement made. The opinion and practice of Carondelet, to be derived from this letter and his other official acts, may be referred to as corroborative evidence of the character of the order stated in the remonstrance.

Prior to this order of 1795, the concessions which were issued contained the condition of settlement and cultivation within a specified time. After this order, and in pursuance of it, as I infer, the practice of inserting this condition in the concession was discontinued, and in lieu of this condition, the concession directs the surveyor to put the party in possession, and survey his land; after which the party is to apply to the granting authority for the title. Does this concession intend to give more title than the concessions of the former period did? On the contrary, it assumes to give less; it assumes to give but a possession.

The concessions prior to the order of Carondelet assumed to give the title; namely, they "grant to the parties and their heirs" the land mentioned in the concessions; but grant it on the condition that the concession shall remain null, if the land is not "established" in the time specified in the concession. This part of the form of the concession being discontinued after the order referred to in the remonstrance, and in pursuance of that order, as I apprehend, would not authorize the opinion that the party was to get a concession conveying equally a title with the former concession, and free from the condition to which the former concessions were subjected. Such is not the intention of O'Reilly's regulations; such is not the intention of Gayoso's instructions, to which the remonstrance is understood to refer. These regulations authorize the grant upon the condition of cultivation: but the concession of the lieutenant-governor is not the grant provided for in O'Reilly's regulations; that grant is to be made by the governor, and in the name of the King; that grant is that which is to convey the title upon the condition of cultivation, as in those regulations is prescribed. Then what is the purpose of the concession authorized by the order of Carondelet of 1795? It is not to give the title; for in that order the party is to apply to the governor-general for the title; nor does it assume to give the title. It merely requires that the surveyor shall give possession to the party, and survey the land, and that the party shall apply to the granting authority for the title. Hear Delassus again upon this point of the subject, as he speaks in the remonstrance: "He doubts whether their worships, the commandants, are still authorized to put provisionally" (temporarily) "the new-comers in possession by a decree of concessions, and giving orders to the surveyor to survey their lands." The power which he here doubts his authority to exercise, after the receipt of Morales's regulations, is that which he had exercised under the order of 1795, and that was by a decree of concession to put the party temporarily in possession, and have his land surveyed. The argument in the remonstrance which follows the expression of this doubt, is further illustrative of the power which he had theretofore exercised, (and of course under the order of 1795,) but which he doubts whether he is still authorized to exercise, according to the second article of Morales's regulation. The argument is, that if he is not permitted to continue to exercise that power, "and the families who arrive in the expectation to enjoy immediately the favorable reception of the government, are compelled, with their almost exhausted means, to wait in a camp until the receipt of the intendant's approbation, or his orders to the surveyor to put them in possession, the shortest time will take at least three months before it can be received, but generally nine or twelve; and that they should be compelled to wait that length of time before beginning their improvements, they could not subsist with their families," &c.

I concur with the lieutenant governor, for the reasons which he assigns, that it was expedient that he should continue to exercise the power of putting the party in possession, that he might "begin to make his improvement;" and I think it was also expedient that he should likewise order the survey to be made; and think it not improbable that Morales may have admitted the force of his argument in relation thereto, and have ordered him afterward to proceed as theretofore he had done in the exercise of these powers. Another part of the remonstrance, to which I have already adverted for another purpose, may be recurred to, to show not only that one of the purposes of the concession was to give possession, but that in practice, the actual possession had been given under the concession. After reciting that the greatest portion of the inhabitants had come into the country since the appointment of a surveyor, &c., the author of that paper states that "they had no other document to have their lands surveyed but the decrees of his predecessor and himself, under which they had been put in possession, conformably to the orders of the government, and their concessions surveyed under the obligation on their part to have recourse," &c., to the granting authority for the completion of their title. Thus from this remonstrance I extract the direct testimony of the lieutenant governor, that the object, or one object of the concession, was to give possession; and the further testimony, that the practice under the order of 1795, was to give the possession, and that the possession had been given under his and his predecessor's concessions, "conformably to the orders of the government." Such, then, from this remonstrance, appears to have been the "orders" of the government; such the object of the concession; and such the practice down to the time that this remonstrance was written. To this evidence of orders and practice, may be added that to be derived from the provisions of the regulations of O'Reilly, Gayoso, and Morales. For although the regulation of Morales did not control or influence a practice which had preceded them, yet they do but embody the principles of earlier laws, some of which were but then introduced, and may be appealed to as evidence of the general policy of the government; and to all this testimony I will add, that I have myself seen one or more instances of which I have a distinct recollection, where the petition for the concession of particular lands mentioned therein recites the fact of a previous grant of the same lands to another, who had not occupied or improved them, and therefore prayed the grant of them to the applicant in the petition, and where the concession had issued upon such second petition, according to the prayer therein; and among the concessions reported for confirmation, such petition may doubtless be found. Such a practice would evince that the object of the concession was to give possession to those who would improve the land, and that if it was not improved by him who had obtained the first concession for it, it would be again regranted to him who would improve it. An argument might be drawn from the statements contained in the concessions themselves, in relation to the ability of the party to cultivate, that the cultivation proposed to be made was the leading motive to the grant. This statement, or some statement, which is intended to vouch for this ability, is common to all the genuine concessions made after the practice of recording them in the livre terrien was discontinued. For what purpose is the statement made? The answer is, that the granting authority may be informed thereby that the applicant for the grant is in such circumstances, from his means, or the number of his family, to make an establishment and improvement proportioned to the grant he solicits; and that such improvement may be made, the grant is issued; but issued with the condition that the improvement shall be made, or in default thereof, the grant is to be void, and for this see the provisions of the several regulations, as well as the complete titles, to which, in my former letters, I have referred.

I have shown what the practice was prior to 1796. I have endeavored to show, from the remonstrance and other evidence, what the probable order was, to which the remonstrance refers, as having been issued by Carondelet, about the year 1795. I think it will appear, from an examination of the several matters of evidence which reflect any light by which the character of this order may be perceived, that the power of the lieutenant-governor under it, in relation to grants, was a more restricted one than had been exercised prior to the receipt of it. Must it not then be regarded as greatly improbable, that the lieutenant governor, after the receipt of the order of Carondelet, which he recites, and which restricts the authority which had been previously exercised, should have commenced a new practice, contrary to the previous practice of the twenty-five years of the Spanish government, and in direct violation of the letter and spirit of recent orders, a practice of issuing concessions for a quantity, unprecedented in the country of either Upper or Lower Louisiana; and in many instances upon a consideration (that of services) unprecedented in either place, without regard to any intended occupancy, or proposed improvement, or the means to make an improvement, or to infancy or full age. That he should issue such concessions after the receipt of the orders of Carondelet, and continue to issue them after the receipt of the instructions of Gayoso, and send them by the direction upon their face, to the officers individually whose orders were thus violated, for their approbation and title, and thereafter on the receipt of the regulations of Morales, pen the remonstrance which has been examined, transcends probability.

I think, therefore, that the three propositions with which this paper started have been sustained for the whole period between the years 1795 and 1800; and consequently that the large concessions, and all the concessions, whether large or small, which were not issued proportionate, as to extent, to the number of the family of the applicant, or his means to cultivate, or raise cattle, and with a view to such improvements being made, &c., had not issued prior to the year 1800, when the remonstrance was written.

Then if they had not issued prior to the year 1800, it remains to be examined whether they were issued after that period, and before the cession of the country by Spain to France, or by France to the United States, had become known in Upper Louisiana. I am impressed with the opinion that they had not been issued, prior to the time at which the cession of the country to France had become known in Upper Louisiana; and with the opinion that a comparatively small number of them, if any, had issued prior to the time at which the transfer of the country to the United States had become known there. The arguments which have been used to show that they had not been issued prior to 1800, apply with augmented force to show that they were not issued after the receipt of the regulations of Morales, and before the transfer of the country by Spain.

Does it appear to be credible that the lieutenant governor Delassus, after the receipt by him of the regulations of Morales, and before he had heard of the transfer of the country by Spain, began to issue those unathorized concessions? If, as it must be believed from his remonstrance, and his official acts, he and his predecessor had complied with the order of Carondelet of 1795, and with the instructions of Gayoso of 1797, and consequently had not issued such concession at the time the remonstrance was written, did he begin to issue such after that remonstrance was written, and before the transfer of the country? In his remonstrance he recognizes, by a necessary implication, the authority of the regulations of Morales. In his official acts, to which I have referred, he recognizes their authority. While he is thus recognizing their authority, and the surveyor and the intendant is acting under their authority, as by one of the complete titles to which I have referred, it appears they did, is it to be imagined that he could be in the habitual practice of issuing concessions so opposed in principle to those regulations? and of sending them by the direction upon their face to the intendant, the author of those regulations, for his approbation and title upon them? Could Delassus have imagined that such concessions would have received the approbation of the intendant? He did not pretend to have received any new authority after the receipt of the regulations of Morales, when examined as a witness in the district court.

To all this it may be added, that an examination of the laws of Spain, having relation to the disposition and grant of the royal domain, will show that grants of greater extent are authorized on the first establishment of new settlements, than are afterward authorized to be made in the same settlements on their greater maturity. The perils and privations incident to the establishment of new settlements require the inducements of larger grants to attract population to them, than is afterward required for the same purpose. Our reasoning in reference to this policy of the Spanish government, apparent from its laws, would authorize us to suppose that in the earlier settlements of Upper Louisiana larger grants would have been issued, than were afterward issued on a more advanced condition of those settlements; and in accordance with this reasoning we find that in 1798, by the King's decree, which transfers the granting power from the governors to the intendant, the laws are introduced into Louisiana, which authorize the sale of the royal domain; prior to this decree, there was no authority for the sale of the royal domain in Louisiana; no law, no regulations, had authorized it, except in the special case where roads, &c., were not kept in repair upon the lands of the miners; when, therefore, this decree of 1798 was made, it was upon the supposition that in Louisiana the settlements had so far advanced, as to authorize the sale of the royal domain there; and the main purpose of the transfer of the granting authority to the intendancy, was doubtless with a view that the sale of the royal domain should supersede to a great extent the quantities which theretofore had been authorized. The transfer is made, to use the words of the decree, "with a view to the better fulfilment of what is contained in the eighty-first article of the royal ordinance respecting the intendant of New Spain," and the power thus transferred is directed to be exercised "in conformity to the provisions of the laws." The introduction of the eighty-first article of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, drew along with it the royal regulation of the 15th of October, 1754, and the laws cited therein, as will be seen by the latter part of that article. The decree of the 22d of October, 1798, therefore introduced into Louisiana, all the laws having relation to the sale of the royal domain, which are to be found in the Code of the Indies, which had force at the date of that decree. (See this decree, White's Col., 218, and the 81st article, King's Ordinance, Ibid 54, and the Royal Regulations, Ibid 49.) To give effect to this intention to sell lands of the royal domain, manifested by the introduction of the laws in relation to sales, necessarily required that gratuitous grants should be restricted, for if all who wished lands could obtain gratuitously what they desired, they would prefer to obtain them in that mode rather than to obtain them by purchase; if therefore sales were to be effected, gratuities were to be restricted. But in fact the laws introduced, and in conformity to which, by the decree of 1798, the land was to be granted, authorized no other than small gratuitous grants, and those upon the condition of cultivation. Is it, then, after the King had imagined that the settlements in Louisiana had so far advanced as to authorize the opinion, that, in pursuance of that policy immemorially adopted, gratuitous grants should give place to sales of the royal domain, and has, by his decree, introduced laws for this purpose, and has caused those laws to be promulgated, that the lieutenant governor of the post of St. Louis commences his new scheme of granting gratuitously the royal domain in unrestricted quantities, and also, as relates to Louisiana, upon unprecedented considerations, (services,) in direct disregard of all the previous instructions, as well as of the present and prospective views of his sovereign?

Having progressed so far with the proposed discussion that the reader may understand some of the evidences of fraud to which I shall direct his attention, I shall now proceed to examine a few of the concessions with this view. The concession to which I shall first direct his attention is one to Antoine Saugrain for twenty thousand arpens. This concession purports to have been issued by Zenon Trudeau, the 9th of November, 1797. There is another concession to the same Antoine Saugrain for eight hundred arpens, of the 27th of September, 1799, almost two years later in point of date than the former, which shows that the previous concession, or rather the concession of the previous date, is fraudulent. The petition of Saugrain for the concession of 1799 shows that he had received no previous concession, and that he had been "retarded until that time, (1799,) from circumstances which he recites," from presenting his petition for one. This recital in the petition of 1799 must be received to prove that the petition and concession for twenty thousand arpens, of 1797, is antedated. The concession of 1797, for twenty thousand arpens, purports to be made by Trudeau; that for eight hundred arpens, in 1799, by Delassus, the successor of Trudeau. Delassus succeeded Trudeau in the government of the post of St. Louis in July, 1799. The petition of Saugrain to Delassus for the eight hundred arpens alludes to a verbal promise which had been made to him by Trudeau, and prays that, in fulfilment of that verbal promise, Delassus will grant to him for his family the eight hundred arpens. The concession of Delassus recites, that "having seen the preceding exposition, and considering the promise made to the party interested by Don Zenon Trudeau, before his departure from this command, of which he informed me verbally, I grant to him," &c. All these recitals induce the belief that there could have been no concession by Trudeau in 1797. It is important to observe that Trudeau had left the command in July, 1799—so says Delassus in his deposition in the case of Soulard and others vs. the United States, now pending in the Supreme Court—and the recital in the concession above shows that he had left before September 27th, 1799, the date of the concession, supposing that recital to be true. If, therefore, the concession for twenty thousand arpens bears the genuine signature of Trudeau, it was not only antedated, but fabricated after Trudeau left the command, and had no longer authority to make such a concession, or any concession. At what point of time was this concession for twenty thousand arpens made? Trudeau, if it bears his genuine signature, had no motive to make the concession after he left the command, until the country had been ceded by Spain; because he could not hope that such a concession would receive the sanction either of the governor general or of the intendant. It is certain, from a comparison of the two petitions for those concessions, that the one for twenty thousand had not been made before Trudeau left the command; my mind is therefore left to the inference that the concession was not made until after the cession of the country by Spain had become known, and consequently after it had become known that the concession could never be presented to the governor general or intendant for the title, and after the possibility had presented itself that the concession might be of some avail.

If the signature to the concession is really not genuine, but the counterfeit of Trudeau's signature, the same reasoning applies; there could be no motive to counterfeit his signature to such a concession before or after he left the command, for the reasons mentioned, until it was known that the country had been transferred by Spain.

A comparison of the two petitions for those two concessions, will leave no doubt that the person applying in both petitions is one and the same; and my inquiries, furthermore, have not enabled me to learn that there ever was more than one man of that name in the country. Independent of the recital in the petition of 1799, there are other evidences of fraud appertaining to the concession of 1797, for twenty thousand arpens, upon which I shall offer a few remarks, as similar evidences of fraud appertain to many of the spurious concessions. The concession is made without attention to what had been precisely solicited in the petition. The petition asks for twenty thousand, and that four thousand of those twenty thousand shall be located at a place indicated, and "the sixteen thousand remaining arpens, as follows: ten thousand in a vacant part of the royal domain, at the choice of the petitioner; and finally, the six thousand remaining arpens in two concessions of three thousand arpens each, in places favorable to the accomplishment of his projected enterprises," &c., "as the petitioner had in view the establishment of mills of divers kinds, distilleries, vacharies," &c. The concession is not made with a view to what had been solicited, but appears to assume that there had been a location of the entire quantity solicited, and directs the surveyor to survey, in favor of the party interested, the twenty thousand arpens of land he solicits at the place mentioned. This character of discrepancy between the petition and concession may be frequently seen in the spurious concessions. The concession is not made with a regard to the means of the applicant, or with a view to any proposed cultivation, nor is it alleged to be for services, although the petition implies that certain services had been performed; and partly upon those services, and partly upon the promise in writing which had been made to the applicant by the lieutenant governor, he predicates his prayer for the twenty thousand arpens. In the petition, however, of 1799, for the eight hundred arpens, this promise in writing was a verbal promise. That there is no precise location of the land solicited is an evidence of fraud.

I am now fatigued, and fear my reader will be equally so. I enclose, herewith, copies of both these concessions, as I have all the others, in their original language. They can be translated at your office by the government translator. I am compelled for a very few days to attend to my private affairs, after which I shall recommence the labor I have undertaken.

I will merely observe before I close this communication that I wish not to be understood as admitting that the concession of 800 arpens is genuine; on the contrary, I think I shall show hereafter that it is equally a fraud with the other; but it was a fraud that had existence before the other, and is good in the recital to establish the fraud of the other. I think it probable that at the commencement of the work, the first experiments were on a small scale; but that as the work progressed, the minds of those concerned were enlarged, and their labors were conducted upon a scale corresponding to that enlargement of their views. I do not doubt that the instances are frequent where the same individual has a small, and a large concession, equally fraudulent, sometimes from the reason above supposed, and sometimes probably because he wished to have two tickets in the lottery, and draw a smaller if he should not a larger prize.

I have taken and retained only imperfect notes of what I have written. It may be important to me to know hereafter precisely what I have written; allow me, therefore, to request that after you shall have caused this communication to be copied, you will have that copy or this original returned to me, as shall best suit your pleasure.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JAMES H. PECK.

Compared August 24, 1830. J. B. W. Prinmo.
Louis Labeaume. Translated.

St. Louis, February 10, 1836.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 13th ult., which acknowledges the receipt by you of my communication of the 13th of the preceding month, respecting the Spanish land claims.

In addition to the view of the law which I had offered from the bench in the opinions which I forwarded to the chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims, I have been induced, partly in consequence of the doctrines held by the Supreme Court of the United States, and partly because the opinions I had forwarded did not embrace sufficiently all the questions, material to be considered in connection with the present subject of inquiry, to submit the observations which accompany this; which, however alarming their length may appear to the reader, are rather in the form of a brief than an argument; and will necessarily impose upon him, if he would investigate the questions to which they relate, the labor of examining the most of the laws to which they refer.

Aware of the great authority which must be justly allowed to the opinions of the highest tribunal of the nation, and the feeble resistance which the voice of a single individual opposes to them, I could not hope to sustain an opposing opinion, however strong my conviction of its soundness, upon any proofs short of those which should be clear and convincing. In sustaining my opinions with such proof, my observations have been protracted to a length which I had not foreseen; they, however, will be found, long as they may appear, to offer to him who is desirous to understand the questions which belong to an investigation of the Spanish land claims, the shortest road by which he will be enabled to arrive at truth.

I judged it advisable that the views which are now forwarded, should precede the evidences of fraud, which it is my purpose now to array against the mass of the claims, and to forward to your office.

This I shall do in the course of this month, and as soon within that time as circumstances will permit.

I forward you the original and only draft, as first written, and of which, therefore, I have no copy; not a note: and must repeat, in relation to this communication, the request made in relation to my former one, that you will have it returned to me after it shall have been copied, if it shall be deemed of sufficient importance to cause this to be done.

Allow me to add that the views they contain, as well as many contained in my opinion in the case of Choteau's heirs vs. the United States, heretofore forwarded in print, appear never to have been offered to the Supreme Court.

Should the Attorney General think it worth his while to consult them, he would possibly find in the suggestions they contain something that might be useful to him in the argument of the causes, or to submit to the court, although the arguments may have been closed.

With great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES H. PECK.

Hon. Ethan A. Brown, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

St. Louis, February 10, 1836.

Before I proceed further in the examination of particular concessions, or the questions of fraud, I will offer some observations to show—

1. The particular laws under which grants of land were made in Louisiana under the Spanish government;
2. Upon what officers the laws having relation to grants of land in Louisiana, conferred authority connected with that subject;
3. What authority these laws did confer;
4. What authority the commandant of the post of St. Louis had, respecting the grant and distribution of the royal domain;
5. What right or title he, as sub-delegate, was authorized to confer.

In offering the observations proposed, it will be necessary to notice some of the doctrines of the Supreme Court upon the same subjects.

I shall offer no apology for controverting the opinions of the Supreme Court, in an inquiry after truth, when, in the prosecution of that inquiry, that controversy becomes necessary.

Among the matters of opinion held by the Supreme Court, which I shall controvert, are the following, viz.:

That each governor general, who succeeded Don Alexander O'Reilly, possessed the same power over the whole subject of grants of the royal lands, which Don Alexander O'Reilly possessed;

That on the transfer of the granting power to the intendancy of Louisiana, that intendancy possessed also the same unrestricted power which O'Reilly had possessed;

That in respect to the governors, no public restraint appeared to have been imposed on the exercise of their power of giving titles to land;

That there is no limitation in the royal orders restricting the power of the governors to a league square in their grant;

That the royal regulation of 1754, confers upon the provincial officers the power of giving titles to land, without any limitation on the quantity, or on the consideration which may move to the grant;

That by the royal order of 1774, the power of granting lands, which had been vested in the intendants by an order of 1768, was revested in the civil and military governors of provinces;

That in 1768 the power of granting and confirming titles to lands was vested in the intendants;

That an order of survey of the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana constitutes property capable of being alienated, of being subjected to debts, and is, as such, to be held as sacred and inviolable as other property.

I will now refer to the opinions of the Supreme Court, and transcribe such parts of them as appear to me to contain the doctrine I have imputed to them, and underscore, or otherwise point out, those parts which I think erroneous. The Supreme Court say:

"The immense territories held by Spain, affording an almost inexhaustible fund of land claimed by the crown, could scarcely fail to produce large grants to favorites, as well as a regular system of inviting population into her colonies. The viceroys of New Spain and Peru, who were also governors, possessed almost unlimited powers on this subject, but in the distant provinces, or where the sea intervenes, the right of giving titles to lands was vested in their governors, with the advice of the King's fiscal ministers, and of the lieutenant general where he may be stationed. No public restraint appears to have been imposed upon the exercise of this power. The officer and his conduct were of course under the supervision and control of the King and his ministers, and especially of his council of the Indies.

"In 1735, this power was withdrawn from the provincial officers, but was restored to them in 1754. (White's Compilation, 49; Clark's Land Laws, 973.) The royal order of 1754 confers this power in general terms without any limitation on the quantity, or on the consideration which may move to the grant," &c. (8th Pet. Rep., 453. The United States vs. Clark.)

"We do not find any limitations in the royal orders, restricting the power of the governors to a league square in their grant. The counsel of the United States searches for them in the regulations of colonial officers, established for the purpose of carrying these orders into execution, and in special orders of the crown for specified objects. The first to which reference has been made, were issued by Don Alexander O'Reilly. He recites, among other things, the complaints and petitions which had been presented to him," &c. (8 Pet. Rep., 455, same case.) The court pursue the examination of O'Reilly's regulations, to show that in making them, he assumes to exercise extensive and discretionary powers; and then proceed in the next page to examine Gayoso's regulations for the same purpose.

"The instructions of Governor Gayoso are dated in September, 1799, till which time it may be presumed that those of O'Reilly remained in force. His instructions are for the government of the commandants of posts, who appear to have been intrusted with the power of making concessions. His regulations, so far as they varied those which pre-existed, constituted, it may be presumed, a new law for the commandants, but do not prove the existence of restrictions on his own power. They give every indication of proceeding from an officer possessing general and very extensive powers."

"The same observation applies to the regulations of Morales, who was intendant of Louisiana and West Florida. They are dated in July, 1799, soon after receiving the order of the King of 1798, which directed that 'the intendancy of these provinces be put in possession of the privilege to divide and grant all kinds of land belonging to his crown; which right, after his order of the 24th of August, 1770, belonged to the civil and military government, wishing to perform this important charge," &c.

The court makes a further extract from the preamble of the regulations of Morales, with a view to establish that he also was exercising a discretionary and extensive power in making those regulations; and remark, that "he (Morales) then proceeded" to regulate with great exactness the course to be observed by those who seek to obtain concessions, the conditions on which they shall be granted, and the conduct to be observed before a complete title will be made. These regulations do not measure his power, but give the law to those who are to execute his orders. (8 Pet. Rep. 456, 457, United States vs. Clark.)

In the case of Delassus vs. the United States, (9th Pet. Rep., 135,) the court say, "The objection to this plain title is, that the concession is not made in pursuance of the regulations of O'Reilly. This objection was considered in the cases heretofore decided, and especially in 8 Peters, 455. It is apparent that these regulations were intended for the general government of subordinate officers, not to control and limit the power of the person from whose will they emanated; the Baron de Carondelet we must suppose possessed all the powers which had been vested in Don O'Reilly, and a concession ordered by him is as valid as a similar concession directed by Governor O'Reilly would have been. Had Governor O'Reilly made such a grant, could it have been alleged that he had disabled himself by his instructions for the regulation of the conduct of his subordinate officers—instructions which the power that created, must have been capable of varying or annulling—from exercising the power vested in him by the crown?

I think these extracts from the opinions of the court evince that the court entertained the opinion that each governor general of Louisiana, in relation to the distribution of the royal domain, possessed the same power that O'Reilly had possessed, until in 1798 that power was transferred to the intendant; and that the court also infer from the regulations of Morales, the possession by him, as intendant, of a power on the same subject equal to that which had been possessed by the governors. That such was their opinion of the intendant's powers, may also be inferred from what the court say in other parts of the opinions referred to. Having treated of the powers of the governors to confirm titles in the distant provinces of the audiencies, or where sea intervenes, as Caraccas, Havana, &c.: "In 1768," (referring doubtless to the date of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain,) "this power," say the court, "of granting and confirming titles to lands was vested in the intendants." "In 1774 it was re-vested in the civil and military governors of provinces." (See White's Compilation, 218.) "In October, 1798, this power was again conferred on the intendant as far as respected Louisiana and West Florida." (8 Pet. Rep., 452; Clark vs. United States.)

The same opinion concerning the equal powers of the intendant with the governors of provinces, is expressed by the court in the case of Delassus vs. the United States. (9 Pet. Rep., 134.) "By the royal order of 1774, the power of granting lands, which had been vested in the intendants by an order of 1768, was re-vested in the civil and military governors of provinces, who retained it till 1798." (White's Compilation, 218.)

"If, as we think must be admitted, Delassus was sub-delegate as well as lieutenant governor, the transfer of the power of granting lands belonging to the royal domain, from the governor to the intendant general, did not affect his power to give the order of survey on which the title of the petitioner depends. That order is the foundation of the title, and is, according to the acts of Congress and the general understanding and usage of Louisiana and Missouri, capable of being perfected into a complete title. It is property capable of being alienated, of being subjected to debts, and is as such to be held as sacred and inviolable as other property."

Other views intimated by the court, relating to the powers of the governors to make grants in reward for services, are equally erroneous.

All that I have stated to be erroneous, will, in the observations I shall submit, be demonstrated to be so; and to be errors of importance, in consequence of the influence they must have in misleading the court in their final determination upon the rights involved, in almost every case from Missouri, and probably in many from Florida; and to be errors not less important to be corrected in an examination of the general question of fraud, which is proposed. For by establishing beyond question the precise authority of the officer, when his acts show a glaring departure from that authority, such departure may properly be considered in connection with other evidence of fraud, and may be material to be considered in determining not only the question respecting the legality of the act, but whether such act could have been performed in good faith, or with any honest intention. In this view I thought it advisable to show the law and the authority of the officer first, and then compare his acts with them, and consider whether that which I have regarded as evidence of fraud, and shall advance as such, does explain the character of the acts, or sufficiently establish the fraud.

Before I had seen the royal order of the 24th of August, 1770, which approves the regulations of O'Reilly, or the decree of the 22d October, 1798, which transferred the granting power from the governor general to the intendant general of Louisiana, I inferred from the regulations of these several officers, those of O'Reilly, Gayoso, and Morales, the possession by them of very extensive discretionary powers; I inferred, as the Supreme Court have done, the existence of a power from the exercise of it; and not having before me either the royal order or decree mentioned, which explain those acts, I was misled, as the Supreme Court have been, in respect to the powers of the officers mentioned; my opinion in the case of Soulard and others vs. the United States, will show that I was so misled. But my opinion, in the case of Choteau and others vs. the United States, delivered after the receipt of the royal order and decree mentioned, corrects the error of the previous opinion, in respect to the power of those officers.

The royal order was obtained from Spain on a call made by me upon the Executive for that purpose, after the duty of adjudicating upon the Spanish land claims had been thrown upon me by the act of 1824. Having observed that this order of 1770, and the decree of 1798, were mentioned in the preamble to the regulations of Morales, and in a manner indicating the importance of their character in reference to the duties I had to perform, I made the call mentioned through the Department of State for those and other papers which I had reason to believe existed; and in answer to that call I obtained the royal order of 1770 only; and from me it was obtained by Mr. White to be inserted in his collection of Land Laws. The delay, however, which attended the procurement of the royal order, and the impatience of the claimants to obtain the expression of the court's views upon their claims, induced it to hear and determine the case of Soulard before the receipt of the royal order of 1770. This explanation of the reasons of the inconsistency between the doctrines of the two opinions to which I refer, is due to myself.

The original copy obtained from Spain at my instance is in the Department of State, and the copy forwarded me was a copy of that copy, as I presume.

The first great error of the Supreme Court, in their reasoning and inferences, in reference to the powers of the governor general of Louisiana, in relation to the grant and distribution of the royal lands, is, that they regard the regulations of O'Reilly as having been made by him in the exercise of the ordinary powers committed to the governor general of Louisiana; and justly inferring the possession of extensive powers on the part of him who had made those regulations, they also infer the possession of like extensive powers in Governor Gayoso, from what the court erroneously regard as a similar exercise of power, in the instructions made by him to the commandants of posts. "The instructions of Gayoso," say the court, "are dated in September, 1797, till which time it may be presumed that those of O'Reilly remained in force," &c. "His instructions, so far as they varied those which pre-existed, constituted a new law to the commandants," &c. (8th Peters's Report, 456, United States vs. Clark.) Again the court say, "the Baron de Carondelet, we must suppose, possessed all the powers which had been vested in Don O'Reilly."

The reasons of those erroneous views of the court are, that they did not advert to the extraordinary powers which had been conferred on O'Reilly, nor to the terms of the royal order of the 24th of August, 1770, which directed that the governor of Louisiana, to whom the order was addressed, should "have the sole power of distributing the royal lands, conforming himself, in all respects, in the distribution thereof, to O'Reilly's instruction, so long as his Majesty should not make any other provision."

This royal order having made the regulations the law to the governor in the distribution of the royal lands, he had no authority to supersede or to vary any part of those regulations, more than he had to repeal any other law which might be established by the King.

It will appear, in the course of these observations, that Gayoso's instructions do not vary or supersede O'Reilly's, and that they do not authorize the inference of the assumption of such a power on the part of Gayoso; and that his instructions are consistent with the performance of the duties imposed upon him by the regulations of O'Reilly, and were made doubtless with a view to the performance of those duties, aud to require the aid of others in the performance of them.

Similar inadvertences, on the part of the Supreme Court, will explain the reasons of the erroneous views they entertained respecting the power of the intendant. They did not advert to the terms of the King's decree of the 22d of October, 1798, which transferred the granting power to the intendant. By the terms of the decree this transfer was made "with a view to the better fulfilment of what is contained in the 81st article of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain," &c.; and the power transferred is directed to to be exercised "in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws." The duties of the intendant are prescribed by the royal ordinance which created throughout New Spain the officers of that name. The 81st article of this royal ordinance, prescribing to him his duties and powers in the grant and distribution of the royal lands, directs him to proceed in that matter as directed in the royal regulation of 1754, and the laws cited therein. The intendant's power on the subject of grants of land, is defined, and his duties prescribed, in the royal ordinance mentioned, and the royal regulations to which he is referred in that royal ordinance. To imagine that the intendant had power to alter or supersede the laws which created him and defined his duties, involves an absurdity. His regulations will be shown, in the course of these observations, to be consistent with this view of his powers and duties.

The powers of O'Reilly, as conferred by special commission, and in virtue of which he made his regulations, are recited in the last paragraph of those regulations, thus:

"In pursuance of the powers which our lord the King (whom God preserve) has been pleased to confide to us by his patent, issued at Arranjuez, the 16th of April, 1769, to establish in the military, the police, and in the administration of justice and of his finances, such regulations as should be conducive to his service, and the happiness of his subjects in the colony; with the reserve of his Majesty's good pleasure, we order and command the governor, judges, cabildo, and all the inhabitants of this province, to conform punctually to all that is required by this regulation. Given at New Orleans, the 18th of February, 1770." (White's Compilation, 206.)

The powers of O'Reilly are also recited, as conferred by special commission, in his proclamation of the 25th of November, 1769, by which he introduces important changes in the government, and in the laws of the colony of Louisiana. Having in his proclamation stated the causes which had induced him to make those alterations in the government and laws, he thus recites the powers which authorized him to do so: "For these considerations," (referring to the causes he had assigned for the changes he had made,) "using the powers which the King our lord (whom God preserve) has confided to us by a patent, issued at Arranjuez, the 16th of April, of this year," (1769,) "to establish in the army, the police, and in the administration of justice and of his finances, that form of government, dependence, and subordination, which is consonant with his service and the happiness of his subjects in this colony," &c., "and therefore, and under the good pleasure of his Majesty, we do order and command that all judges, cabildoes, and their officers, do comply punctually with all that is prescribed in the following articles." (See this proclamation in a note in the preface to the 1st vol. of the Portidas, page 20, laws of Louisiana.)

The powers here recited are certainly more comprehensive than those ordinarily committed to the governors of provinces. The powers ordinarily committed to them, would not authorize them to change either the government or laws which had been established by the King. The governors of provinces were not lawgivers for their provinces. The King gave the law throughout his dominions. In reference to the Indies, he gave it in general through his council of the Indies, with his advice and approbation. (See White's Comp. 18, 19.)

In the extracts from the institutes of the civil law of Spain, in White's Compilation, page 59, it is said that "no one can establish or publish the law but the King," &c.; that "the lords or vassals cannot make a law without having the royal permission for that purpose," &c.; that "the laws, statutes, and ordinances, which a corporation, an assembly, or college, established for its government, have no force, and are not binding, if they want the royal approbation," &c.; "that all who live under the dominion of the King are bound to obey the laws," &c.; "immediately on its being published it binds," &c.

The governor, therefore, could not make laws, unless specially thereunto authorized, but he was bound to obey them. The oath to be taken by the governor (page 81 of White's Comp.) shows that he was to obey the laws: "You swear," &c., that "you will keep and obey the articles respecting good government and the laws of the kingdom, orders and dispositions of his Majesty, both those which are made and issued, and those to be made and issued, for the government of the monarchy of the Indies," &c. (See what these laws were: White's Collection, from pages 12 to 19; and who had made them, and were to make them, with the consent of the King, &c.)

The powers committed to O'Reilly, as recited by him in the papers to which I have referred, should be construed with reference to the circumstances under which they were conferred. These circumstances were, that Spain had acquired Louisiana in 1762, by a secret treaty, which was not made known until some years afterward. When it was made known, and Spain attempted to take possession of Louisiana, her authority was resisted by the colonists. In 1769, after this resistance, O'Reilly was commissioned, with the extraordinary powers mentioned, to take possession of Louisiana and assert the rights of Spain under the treaty; and to enable him effectually to assert those rights and the Spanish authority in Louisiana, he was sent with three thousand troops under his command. (See preface to the Portidas laws in force in Louisiana, pages 19, 20, 21, also Mr. White's argument, 9th Peters, 766, appendix.)

The resistance which had been made to the establishment of the Spanish authority in Louisiana, the necessity to overcome that resistance, and to provide against its recurrence by every change that might be deemed necessary for that purpose, and the probability that important changes would be necessary, may all be considered in arriving at the motives of the extraordinary powers conferred, which, according to the terms of the commission, as recited, would comprehend all that could be necessary to be exerted by the sovereign himself upon the change of sovereignty.

In the execution of these powers, O'Reilly proceeds as a lawgiver to the province. That in doing so he did not exceed his powers, is to be presumed. That he did not exceed them, is to be also inferred from the approval of his acts by the crown; which approval implies more than a previous authority to perform the acts; it implies the previous authority, and that the trust had been judiciously executed, where the power exercised was that of giving law. For if the law was not such as the King deemed judicious in its operation prospectively, he would have altered it.

When, therefore, the Supreme Court refer to the powers exercised by O'Reilly, for the purpose of ascertaining those which were ordinarily committed to the governor general of provinces, they refer to a criterion of power which must mislead them; that they did make that reference for that purpose is apparent from their reasoning: "We must suppose," say the court, "that the Baron De Carondelet possessed the same powers which Don O'Reilly had possessed." Such supposition on the part of the court evinces that they could not have adverted to the commission under which O'Reilly assumed to perform the extraordinary powers exercised by him; and evinces also that the court had made little inquiry into the powers which the governors were authorized to exercise. That they were not legislators under their ordinary commissions, will appear from the ordinances to which I have referred, in White's Collection, from page 12 to 19. But, if in this opinion I am mistaken, and it should appear that they really were possessed of an extensive legislative power within their provinces, the royal order of 1770 would operate as a veto upon the exercise of such power on the subject of the grant of the royal domain. No one, I presume, will maintain that the governor could supersede the authority of a royal order, that as a law given in the province, his authority was paramount to that of the King, and competent to revoke the King's edict.

The regulations of O'Reilly had been approved as a law made by the King's authority, and the governor ordered to conform, in exercising the granting power, in all things to these regulations "as long as his Majesty should not make any other provisions." Did his Majesty make any other provisions until 1798? Do the instructions of Gayoso authorize the inference that he had made "other provisions," and if so, what other provisions? The provisions of Gayoso's instructions give more definite rules than O'Reilly's regulations give, as to the quantity to be granted, in each case of an application for a grant; they also restricted the quantity to be granted, to smaller grants than had been authorized by O'Reilly.

If the provisions of Gayoso's instructions be considered as superseding those of O'Reilly, and as authorizing an inference that they had been made in consequence of some new disposition of his Majesty upon that subject, or some new authority to Gayoso for that purpose, we must construe the character of the power from what was done under it. The acts done under the power, if a new power is to be inferred, impose greater restrictions and limitations upon the quantity to be granted. It is to be inferred, therefore, that such new restrictions and limitations were in accordance with his Majesty's directions under the supposed new power. But, in fact, the instructions of Gayoso do not authorize the inference that any new instructions had been given by his Majesty. The opinion of the Supreme Court has also been influenced by the erroneous impression that the instructions of O'Reilly were merely to regulate the conduct of the officers who were "subordinate to" the governor, and were not mandatory to the governor, and do not establish restrictions on his power; whereas O'Reilly's instructions are mainly mandatory to the governor. By the 12th article they direct that the governor shall make all grants; all the articles, therefore, which contain rules for the exercise of the granting power are directions to the governor. In the concluding paragraph of the instructions the governor, as well as others, is commanded to conform punctually to the regulations. The royal order of 1770 also is addressed to the governor, and directs, in pursuance of what O'Reilly had recommended, that "he and his successors in office should have the sole power of granting lands in that province, conforming themselves in all respects to the said instructions;" thus the King imagines that O'Reilly's instructions are mainly, if not entirely, mandatory to the governor. They must be so considered, as he was to exercise the "sole," the exclusive power; and according to the order they were to be so "as long as his Majesty should not make any other provision;" the provision which was to alter, therefore, was to proceed from his Majesty, not from the governor, as Gayoso's instructions did; now it cannot be fully inferred that Gayoso had received any new instructions which authorized him to alter O'Reilly's, because he recites no new authority which would authorize him to vary O'Reilly's instructions, which it is probable he would have done had it been his intention to vary them, inasmuch as they had become the established law by the will of the King, and were to remain such until he should otherwise provide; and if the King had given any new authority to repeal or modify O'Reilly's regulations, it is presumed that he would have given it, as he had to O'Reilly, to be exercised subject to his Majesty's approbation. But Gayoso, in his instructions, makes no such reservation; a reservation which had been made by O'Reilly in all the instances in which he assumed to make law by special authority, and a reservation which I take to be in accordance with the great principles of the Spanish monarchy.

But when it is understood that O'Reilly's instructions constituted the law, and the only rule upon the subject of grants in Louisiana, and that the governor derived all his authority upon that subject from these instructions, and that that authority invested much discretion in the governor; made him the agent of the crown in the distribution of the royal lands, and indicated to him limits which he should not transcend, and in addition, some general rules for his government in the execution of the authority; which rules regarding the general intention of the King as conveyed in the instrument, he would apply in each particular case of an application for grants in the exercise of that discretion, which an authority so indefinite in its application to particular cases, must necessarily invest.

Regarding Gayoso's instructions, as they purpose, to be instructions to his subordinate officers, they neither impose limits upon Gayoso himself, nor imply that new limits had been imposed upon his authority by his sovereign.

For considering Gayoso as intrusted with an authority limited as prescribed in O'Reilly's instruction, and to be exercised in conformity to the principles there indicated, he had the authority to make the instructions to his subordinate officers which he did make; which subordinate officers, as we shall show in the course of this examination, derived no authority to make concessions from O'Reilly's regulations or any royal order, or law, and could exercise none except as it was directly derived from the governor, or after the decree of 1798 from the intendant.

I shall assume, therefore, for the present, with the promise to establish it more fully hereafter, that O'Reilly's regulations constituted the only authority under which lands could be granted in Louisiana, and the only rule in pursuance of which they could be granted until the decree of 1798, which transferred the granting power to the intendancy of that province, and also extended to Louisiana, the 81st article of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, together with the royal regulation of the 15th of October, 1754, and the laws cited therein.

To some of the provisions of this royal regulation of 1754, I will now advert, and will show what grants it authorized; what officers it authorized to make them; and what officers it authorized to confirm them. In showing this I shall necessarily show that the Supreme Court were under a great misapprehension when they expressed the opinion, that this regulation of 1754 conferred upon the colonial officers the power of giving titles to lands in general terms, without any limitation upon the quantity, or upon the consideration which might move to the grant.

This royal regulation is on pages 49, 50, 51, &c., of White's Collection, and on page 973, and pages following, of Clark's Land Laws. I shall make a few extracts from it, and leave to the reader the labor of examining those provisions to which I shall refer him.

The second article of this regulation directs that "in regard to all the requirements of laws 14, 15, 17, 18, and 19, title 12, liber 4, shall be observed." I shall, therefore, consider these laws as forming a part of the royal regulation; their provision forming part of what is directed to be observed in the regulation. The laws cited and required to be observed are in pages 41, 42, and 43 of White's Collection, and in 969, 970, 971 of Clark's Land Laws.

The royal regulation authorizes sales and compromises of the royal lands.

Law 15, cited in the 2d article, and to which I have referred, shows how sales were to be made. That sales were made by offering the land at public sale, and knocking it down to the highest bidder. The translation of the 15th law upon this subject, as it reads in White's Collection, is incorrect; a correct translation of it, however, is in Clark's Land Laws; with this translation, a manuscript translation in my possession, obtained from the Department of State, and certified by the government translator, agrees. The 24th article of Morales's regulations, 214 of White's Collection, affords evidence also, that the translation in Clark's Land Laws is the correct one.

Those who have been in possession of the King's lands without a just title, for ten years, were admitted to a compromise; that is, they were allowed to retain possession of the land of which they were in possession, on paying the reasonable value of the land, and certain other charges specified in the 5th and 9th articles of the royal regulation. Respecting the terms and conditions of a compromise, and the amount of a composition, and also the cases in which they are admitted to this composition, see 5th, 6th, 7th, and 9th articles of the royal regulation, and the 15th and 19th laws cited, and the 20th article of the regulation of Morales. The 19th law is required to be observed in the 2d article, and is therefore to be taken as a part of the regulation, and as such excludes those from the benefit of a composition who have not been in possession ten years.

The sales and compositions are directed to be made by the sub-delegates. The patents were to be issued by the sub-delegates. Respecting this, see 5th and 10th articles of the royal regulations.

Except in cases where the Indians were a party, as excepted in the 2d article, the proceedings of the sub-delegates were in the nature of judicial proceedings; and from their sentences and judgments upon all questions determined by them, an appeal lay to the authorities to whom the power of confirmation was given; neither the audiencies, nor the governors to whom, by the regulation, the power of confirmation was given, exercised any original jurisdiction, either for the purpose of originating the title, or otherwise. They exercised only an appellate jurisdiction over all the questions which had been determined by the sub-delegates, and supervising control over their acts after they had been performed, see 5th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th articles of regulation.

With a slight exception, which will be hereafter stated, all the lands authorized to be granted by the royal regulation, are to be disposed of, either by sales or compromises; by the latter mode, where the lands had been possessed for ten years, and by the former, where they had been possessed for a less space of time, or were waste or unappropriated; and with a view to such disposition of them, a searching operation is directed for the purpose of ascertaining what lands are held by just titles, that the residue not so held might be disposed of. The 3d, 7th, and 8th articles of the regulation direct this process.

The 3d article directs that general orders shall be published by the sub-delegates, "that every and all persons who shall have possessed royal lands, whether settled, cultivated, tilled or not, from the year 1700, till the day of the publication of said order, should prove before the sub-delegates, the titles or patents in virtue of which they held their lands," &c., by a day to be specified in said orders; with notice, "that they would be deprived of and ejected from said lands, and grants of them made to other persons, if they failed to exhibit their warrants within the limited time, without just and proper cause;" with a further notice (see 7th and 8th articles) that "land would be adjudged in moderate quantities to those who should inform of lands as being occupied without titles;" and also, "that a proper reward would be given to those who would inform of lands, grounds, places, waters, and of uncultivated and desert lands."

A similar searching operation had been directed with the same view, by the 14th law, which is cited in said 2d article of the royal regulation.

In that law the King directs, that having fully inherited the domain of the Indies, the lands which had not been granted by his predecessors or himself belonged to the royal patrimony, and that it was expedient that all the lands which were not held by just titles, should be restored as belonging to him; that after retaining what might appear to be necessary to be granted to villages and councils for public squares, liberties, reservations, pastures, and commons, and to be distributed to the Indians, for their tillage or raising of cattle, according to their just wants, all the remaining lands might be reserved to him clear of any incumbrance, for the purpose of being given as rewards, or disposed of according to his pleasure; and with this view he commands the viceroy, presidents, and pretorial audiencies, to appoint a time for the owners of lands to exhibit before them, or the ministers who they shall appoint for that purpose, their titles, &c., who, after confirming the possessions of such as hold the same in virtue of good titles, or by a just prescription, should restore to him the remainder, to be disposed of according to his pleasure.

The law next following (law 15, cited as before mentioned) shows how it was his pleasure to dispose of the remaining lands. By it he directs, that those who shall have entered upon, and taken up more land than they owned, should be admitted to a moderate composition for the excess, for which patents should be issued to them, and that "all the land that should remain to be adjusted, should be offered at public sale, and knocked down to the highest bidder."

The land, therefore, which was to be reserved from sale or compromise, was that mentioned in the 14th law cited, which should appear to the King and to his viceroys, audiencies, and governors, to be necessary for public squares, liberties, reservations, pastures and commons, to be granted to the villages and councils; and that which should be necessary to be distributed to the Indians, according to their just wants, for their cultivation and raising of cattle; a similar provision in favor of the Indians is also made in the 2d article of the regulation; with only these exceptions, all the royal lands are to be disposed by sales or compromises to be made by the sub-delegates; in relation to which sales and compromises, the authorities to whom the power of confirmation is given, are directed, in the 5th article of the regulation, to examine the proceedings of the sub-delegates, "in ascertaining the quantity and value of the lands in question, and the patents that may have been issued for them, and determine whether the sale or composition was made without fraud or collusion, and at reasonable prices;" and are directed to do this "with the judgment and advice of the fiscals;" "and after considering every circumstance, and the price of the sale or composition, and the respective dues of medianata,* appearing to have been paid into the royal treasury, and the King's money† again paid in, the amount may seem proper, they are authorized and directed to give, in the King's name, the confirmation of the patents," &c.

Such are the terms upon which the royal lands are directed to be disposed of by the royal regulation; and such the motives and the consideration; that is to say, to villages and councils what may be necessary for public squares, liberties, reservations, pastures, and commons: to the Indians what may be necessary for the purposes of tillage and raising cattle, and the residue by sale or compromise at its reasonable value; and in reference to the Indians the 19th law cited, shows that they are liable to the compromising principle.

It appears to me, therefore, that the attentive reader of the royal regulation cannot entertain the opinion that it authorizes grants "in general terms, without regard to the quantity or the consideration which may move to the grant." The Supreme Court, in arriving at this opinion, have probably looked only to the twelfth article of this regulation, which confers upon the governors "in the distant provinces of the audiencies, or where sea intervenes," &c., the same power of confirmation which elsewhere was conferred upon the audiencies, and have not had their attention called to the provisions of that article which confers this power, subject to the same condition of examining into the compositions of subdelegates as provided in respect to the audiencies, and subject also to the same duties as an appellate court which had been imposed upon the audiencies.

The power is confided in preference to the audiencies, but in the distant parts of their provinces, or in the islands where it would be greatly inconvenient for the purchasers to apply to the audiencies, the power is given to the governors, to be exercised, however, with associate judges as directed in the 12th article. But being given to him out of necessity, and because the audiencies (a tribunal of great authority and jurisdiction) were too remote to require the application to be made to them, it was not intended to be given free from the limitations which had been imposed upon the audiencies; and such is the intention of the twelfth article which confers the authority.

There is one other view which I must offer, in aid of those I have already submitted in opposition to the opinion that the royal regulation confers upon the colonial officers an unrestrained power to give titles.

The preamble to the royal regulation shows that a decree was issued by the royal order of the 24th of November, 1735, by which the King retained to himself the power of confirmation. This power thus withdrawn from the colonial officers leaves them, in respect to it, as though it never had been conferred upon them; when, therefore, it is again and for the first time afterward conferred upon them by the royal regulation, it is to be considered as a new power conferred upon them, a power derived entirely from the authority by which it is conferred, and to be exercised to the extent authorized, and in the mode prescribed by authority. The royal regulation, therefore, having prescribed the precise articles of the confirming authorities, the cases in which confirmation should be given in the King's name, and the acts which should precede that confirmation, namely, the payment in the royal treasury of "the price of the sale or compromise," the confirmation could only be given as prescribed, and in the cases authorized. The regulation is to be construed as any other letter or power of procuration. In further support of this view the words of the King himself may be employed; after reciting the decrees of 1735, by which he had reserved to himself the power of confirmation, and the motives which moved to the provisions which he was making upon the subject by the royal regulation, he says: "I have therefore resolved, that in the grants, sales and compromises of royal cultivated and uncultivated lands now made, or which shall hereafter be made, the provisions of this regulation shall be faithfully observed and executed." Here is an injunction that the provisions of the regulation should be faithfully observed and executed, and at the conclusion of the regulation there is a more strict injunction to the same effect: "I will that all the provisions of this regulation be strictly and punctually observed, by my viceroys, audiencies, presidents, and governors of all my dominions of the Indies, and by sub-delegates and other persons whom its observance does or may concern, and that it be not violated for any cause or pretext, as it is proper for my service and the good of those subjects," &c.

These provisions show that no authority was conferred "in general terms," and without restriction. For the provisions of the regulation are minute, and cover the whole subject of the granting power conferred, and they are here required "to be strictly and punctually observed," and "not violated for any cause or pretext." The provisions of the regulation respecting the confirming authorities, are such as place restrictions upon their power beyond question. Those authorities are not mentioned until we advance to the fifth article of the regulation. By that article it does not appear who are to constitute all the confirming authorities, nor do we discover who are until we arrive at the twelfth article; here it appears that the governors of provinces, distant from the audiencies, together with associate judges mentioned in the twelfth article, are also invested with the power of confirmation. The audiencies had been mentioned in the fifth and in the ninth articles as invested with that power, and also in the tenth and eleventh as invested with powers connected with it, in all which instances their duties are precisely defined; no unrestricted power is given; all the provisions evince that the audiencies are the tribunals who are to exercise this power generally throughout the dominions of the Indies. And the governors with associate judges are to exercise it only in particular provinces.

The regulation having in its 2d article directed sales and compromises, by the reference which it makes to certain laws authorizing them, and the observance which it requires of the provisions of these laws; and having in its 3d and 4th articles, directed certain proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining what lands were held by just titles, and what were occupied without such titles, and liable to be sold or compromised for, or yet remained to be confirmed; the fifth article directs that those who are in possession by titles which have been confirmed shall be protected, &c. But those who shall have held their lands without this necessary requisite ("confirmation,") shall apply for their confirmation, to the audiences of their district, and to "the other officers on whom this power is conferred, by the present regulation." These authorities having examined the proceedings of the sub-delegates in ascertaining the quantity and the nature of the lands in question, and the patent, that may have been issued for them, shall determine whether the sale or composition was made without fraud or collusion, and at reasonable prices. This shall be done with the judgment and advice of the fiscals. After considering every circumstance, and the price of the sale or composition, and the respective dues of medianata appearing to have been paid into the royal treasury, and the King's money being again paid in, the amount that may seem proper, the confirmation of the patents of these lands shall be given in my royal name," &c.

Here the power of confirmation is given under restrictions minute and imperative; these restrictions apply as well to the "other officers on whom the power of confirmation is conferred by the present regulation," as to the "audiencies," so that the injunction at the close of the 12th article, that "the governors, with their associate judges, should examine into the composition as provided in respect to the audiencies, was supererogatory," this having been required of them, both as to sales and compositions, by the direction in the 5th article to the "audiencies and the other officers on whom the power of confirmation is conferred by this regulation." The governor and his associate judges, being these "other officers," according to the provisions of the 12th article.

I have seen no law, prior to the royal regulation, which gave to the governor a power of confirmation. It is to be inferred which is made in the 5th article of the regulation, to the confirmation theretofore given, that the power of confirmation, prior to the resumption of the power by the King in 1735, had been intrusted to the "viceroys and presidents of the respective districts." For in the commencement of that article the King says, that "the possessors of lands, &c., shall not be molested," &c., "if it shall appear that they have been confirmed by my royal person, or by the viceroys, or presidents of the respective districts, while in office." To this ground of inference I should have before recurred in connection with the observations I have made, touching the power which could be exercised under the royal regulation, considering it as conferring a new power to the officers authorized to confirm, for, according to the reasonable inference here made, it was, in respect to those officers, a new power which theretofore they had, probably, never exercised.

If, as the Supreme Court say, this royal regulation "confers the power of giving titles in general terms, without any limitation on the quantity, or on the consideration which may move to the grant," it of course confers the power of giving titles to lands gratuitously granted, or to reward services. Would the sub-agents be authorized, after this regulation of 1754, to make such a grant? If such a grant were made by them, would the audiencies or governors, with their associate judges, be authorized to confirm it?

As to the power of sub-delegates to make such a grant, the King declares, in the preamble, that "in the grants, sales, and compromises of royal cultivated and uncultivated lands, which shall hereafter be made, the provisions of the regulations shall be faithfully observed and executed;" and in the conclusion, that they "should be strictly and punctually observed, and not violated;" now, grants, sales, and compromises, embrace all the modes of disposing of the royal lands which are mentioned in the laws which provide for their disposition.

The royal lands, therefore, are not to be disposed of otherwise than by a faithful observance of the provisions of the regulations.

This distinction is to be observed between the authority of the sub-delegates after the date of the royal regulation, and the authority of the audiences and governors, to confirm under the royal regulation.

The latter derived their power entirely from the royal regulation. The former did not. They had exercised the power of selling and compromising the royal lands, long anterior to the date of that regulation. The 4th and 5th articles of the regulation, show that this power was exercised by them since and prior to the year 1700, and the 1st article shows that they were exercising it at the date of the regulation. They were exercising it, therefore, in pursuance of existing law, and the question as to them would be, under this royal regulation, whether the previous laws were superseded by it, and the sub-delegates consequently limited and confined in the execution of their powers to the precise authority which the regulation would confer upon them, as though no previous authority had been conferred upon them.

In relation to the audiencies and governors, it is certain that they could exercise no power of confirmation, but what is conferred by the regulation, and none is conferred but that specified in the 5th article, and that specified is a power to confirm, after it shall appear that the sale or compromise was made without fraud or collusion, and for the reasonable value of the land, and that reasonable value paid into the royal treasury: as to these authorities, therefore, it is certain, that they could give no confirmation in the case of a grant for services, or as a reward, or as a gratuity; for the sale for the reasonable value, and the payment thereof into the treasury, must precede the confirmation; in the case of services or rewards, there would be no payment into the treasury, within the intention of the 5th article, and in the case of gifts or gratuities, no sale for the value, nor any payment into the treasury.

The regulation thereof does most emphatically regard the consideration, and also the quantity, at least in this, that there could not, under it, be a sale of a quantity which could not be paid for, at its reasonable value, by the purchaser; and in the case of a compromise, there must be a limitation on the quantity where the party is in possession. The limitation of the power of confirmation, which my construction would impose, should have this qualification; that it should not exclude, from the power conferred, that of compromising those grants to villages, &c., authorized in the 14th law cited; and also those to Indians, authorized in the same law; and also in the second article. Because these grants being authorized by the provisions of the regulation, and the reasons for giving the power of confirmation to the colonial officers, applying as well to these grants as to the others authorized in the regulation, and the intention appearing to be, to give the power to confirm to the whole extent to which grants had been authorized, the spirit and intention of the regulation would therefore appear to authorize the confirmation of such grants. This reasoning may also be employed in determining the power of the sub-delegates, under the royal regulation, as the power to grant and to confirm was intended to keep peace with each other, for the reasons appearing in the preamble; the power to confirm being, without doubt, limited to the cases of grant, authorized in the regulation, the inference would be, that if any other cases of grant had been authorized previous to the regulation, the authorities by which those other cases had been authorized, were superseded by the regulation.

The resolution in the preamble, that "in the grants, sales, and compromises, which shall hereafter be made, the provisions of the regulation should be faithfully observed and executed," excludes the idea of an intention that other provisions, that is, provisions inconsistent with those of the regulation, should be observed in the grants, sales, or compromises, which should thereafter be made. Therefore, no officers, except those authorized and required in the regulation, could thereafter make grants, sales, or compromises. The powers of the officers mentioned in the laws 14 and 15 cited, were superseded by the regulation; for its 1st article and 3d article show that the duties connected with sales, &c., were committed to them. The 5th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 14th articles, all show, beyond question, that the whole business was exclusively committed to the sub-delegates, subjected to the supervising and appellate jurisdiction of the confirming authorities.

My conclusion, therefore, is, that in regard to the grants, sales, and compromises, which were to be made after the date of the royal regulation, that regulation was to be the exclusive law, in pursuance of which they were to be made. That its provisions covered the whole ground upon those subjects, and by the King's intention, were to constitute the exclusive rules for the government of the granting authorities. "A royal order, emanating from the King is a supreme law, superseding and repealing all other provisions inconsistent with it." This is the doctrine of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States vs. Arredondo, 6th Peters' Reports, 714. A different doctrine would place in the hands of the judge two inconsistent rules, with a power to apply the one or the other, as his fancy or favor might suggest. Whereas, the law should be a certain rule, and administer the same measure to every man.

I shall not now consider whether the early laws, which authorize new settlements and establishments by contracts with governors and others, constituted a distinct class, which would not be affected by the royal regulation, they having a different object in view, and applicable to other circumstances than those for which the regulation intends to provide.

It was material to show what was the granting authority, as it existed in the colonial officers under the royal regulation. For that authority, such as it was, the intendant and supreme board of the treasury are authorized to exercise by the "royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain;" and the authority which the intendants of provinces in New Spain were to exercise under this royal ordinance, is conferred upon the intendant of the province of Louisiana, by the decree of the 22d of October, 1798. To ascertain, therefore, what was the granting power of the intendant of Louisiana, it was necessary to ascertain what granting power existed under the royal regulation.

The 18th article of the royal ordinance, respecting the intendants, is in page 56 of White's Collection, and in 972 and 973 of Clark's Land Laws.

This article changes none of the provisions which regulated the exercise of the granting power. It only commits the power to other hands, and directs that it shall continue to be exercised in conformity with the royal regulation of the 15th October, 1754, without losing sight of the wise dispensations of laws cited therein; and of 9th law, title 12, lib. 4, which 9th law is in White's Collection, page 40, and contains only a provision having for its object the protection of the rights of the Indians in the grants which shall be made.

Under the 81st article, the power to confirm, and the appellate jurisdiction, which was to be exercised by the audiencies, under the royal regulation, is to be exercised by the superior junta de hacienda (the supreme board of the treasury.) And the granting or originating powers, as well as the original jurisdiction of the causes and questions arising out of the grant, sale, or composition, of the royal lands, which had been exercised by the sub-delegates, under the royal regulations, is, under the 81st article, to be exercised by the intendants. The opinion of the Supreme Court, expressed in 8th Peters, 452, that both the "power of granting and confirming titles to land was vested in the intendants," is erroneous, and must obviously appear to be so to every reader of the 81st article of the ordinance, that comment is unnecessary to establish it.

All the powers of the audiencies and sub-delegates, which they were to exercise under the royal regulations, were superseded by the 81st section of the royal ordinance. This is an important fact, concerning which, therefore, I wish to relieve the mind of the reader beyond all doubt. For I propose to show that the sub-delegates in Louisiana had not the power of those sub-delegates who were authorized to be appointed by the viceroys and presidents of the royal audiencies; that the sub-delegates in Louisiana were not appointed by either of these authorities; that the sub-delegates in Louisiana derived all their authority, respecting the distribution of the royal lands, from the instructions of the governors, so long as those officers exercised the granting power, and afterward from the instructions of the intendant; but that the sub-delegates appointed by the viceroys, under the royal regulation, derived their authority directly from the royal regulation; and that, in fact, the authority they derived from the regulation partook of that high character which, in Louisiana, was exercised by the governor himself, and afterward by the intendant.

I deem it, therefore, important to show that the power of the sub-delegates in relation to the whole subject-matter of grants, sales, and compromises, was superseded by the 81st article of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, and was transferred to the intendants.

The 81st article commences with the declaration that "the intendants shall be the exclusive judges of the causes and questions which may arise in the districts of their provinces, about the sale, composition and grant of royal lands, and of seignory," &c. This is precisely what the sub-delegates were under the royal regulation. The 11th article of this regulation directs: "These audiencies shall be a court of appeal for trying the decisions and sentences of the sub-delegates, pronounced by them in any suit about the sale or composition of royal lands, the information lodged concerning them, their survey and valuation." If these questions had not been tried and decided by the sub-delegates, the audiencies could not be a court of appeal for the purpose of trying their sentences, and decisions pronounced upon them.

I collect, therefore, from the 11th article, by a necessary implication, that the sub-delegates had exercised in this respect the precise jurisdiction which, under the 81st article, the intendants are "exclusively" to exercise.

The 81st article proceeds, "it being required of their possessors, and those who pretend to new grants of them," (possessors of royal lands, and those who pretend to new grants of them,) "to produce their rights and institute their claims before the same intendants," &c. This the royal regulation had directed to be done before the sub-delegates; its 3d article, after directing publication to be made with this view by the sub-delegates, proceeds: "So that every and all persons who shall have possessed royal lands," &c., may have before the sub-delegates, the titles and patents in virtue of which they hold their lands, &c.

The 81st article further provides, in relation to the intendants, "And they may admit appeals to the superior junta de hacienda; or, if the parties interested do not appeal, they shall communicate to it the original proceedings for its information, when they shall judge those proceedings ready for the issuing of the warrant. So the 10th article of the royal regulation requires that "the sub-delegates shall report to the respective audiencies the original proceedings upon each matter. These they shall consider as finished, and prepared for the issuing the patent," &c.

It appears, also, by the 81st article, that the intendant had the assistance in the performance of his duties of the prosecutor or attorney of the royal treasury, and the aid of the opinions of the assessor.

The 81st section, (in pages 57, 58, of which collection,) which purports to be for the instruction of the intendants, similar directions, with little variations, are given to the intendant with that contained in the 81st article. The 81st section shows, perhaps, more plainly, that the proceedings before the intendant assume the form of a judicial trial. In this section it is directed that "the persons in possession (of land of the King, or which are held from him) and those applying for new grants of the same, shall establish their titles and lay their petitions before the same intendants, who, after a legal investigation, conducted by an attorney of the royal treasury, whom they shall appoint for that purpose, shall decide the same according to law, by the advice of his ordinary assistants, (assessors,) and shall grant appeals to the supreme board of the treasury; and in case the parties interested shall fail to appear, he shall transmit the case, together with the original records, whenever he shall deem them sufficient to determine the title, to the said board," &c.

The five articles of the royal ordinance respecting intendants show that they were invested with great authority and jurisdiction in respect to matters of policy, justice, treasury, war, and government.

It would not appear, from the royal regulation, that the sub-delegates had the assistance, in the trial of the questions before them, of law officers, as provided in relation to the intendants. It appears, incidentally, from the 14th article of the regulation, that they had a clerk or clerks.

The sub-delegates appear to have been appointed exclusively with a view to the disposition of the royal lands. And the 1st, 3d and 4th articles of the regulation show that those lands had been granted and sold by the sub-delegates prior to the regulation, and even prior to 1700; and the 11th article shows that appeals, or recourse by way of appeal, lay from the decisions of the sub-delegates to the council of the Indies; such recourse may have been only during the time the King reserved to himself the power to confirm.

As the office of sub-delegate, with a view to the sale of the royal lands, had an existence long anterior to the date of the royal regulation, it may be that, at its original creation, its organization as a tribunal, that was to determine all questions relating to the grant and disposition of the royal lands, may have been directed, so as not to require that it should be again repeated in the royal regulation.

The grant or patent, I have shown, was issued by the sub-delegate, and not by the audiencies. The act to be done by the audiencies was to confirm the patent, &c.; in relation to the intendant, it is apparent that he is to make the grant. The 81st article, after directing that the intendant shall communicate to the superior junta, for its information, the original proceedings, when he shall judge those proceedings ready for the issuing of the warrant, which, "being seen by the junta, they shall be returned, and the warrant issued, unless some difficulties occur, and then the measure found by the junta to have been neglected shall be observed."

The proper confirmations shall, in consequence, be furnished by the same superior junta in due time, which shall proceed in the case, as also their sub-delegates and others, in conformity with the royal regulation of the 15th of October, 1754, as far as it may not be opposed to the requirements of the latter, (see 81st section, "as far as the same may not be repugnant to the present law,") without losing sight of the wise dispositions of the laws cited therein, and of the 9th, title 12, lib. 4."

I understand from this provision that after the record is "returned" to the intendant the warrant is to be issued.

The sentence which follows accords with this construction: The proper confirmation shall, in consequence, be furnished in due time." The confirmation is distinct, and is to follow in due time.

The 61st section of the instructions to the intendants must, as it appears to me, be construed to authorize them to grant lands—pp. 56, 57, of White's Collection: "And if to attain so important objects (the culture of hemp and flax, &c.) the intendant should find it necessary to make a distribution of the King's lands or of private domains, I grant them power to do so, giving notice thereof, together with their motives, to the supreme board of the treasury." The residue of the section evinces also an intention that the intendants were to exercise the power to grant.

The intendants, therefore, having been made "the exclusive judges of the causes and questions that should arise in the districts of their provinces about the sale, composition, and grant of royal lands and seigniory," and required to perform all the duties which had been required of the sub-agents under the royal regulation, the powers of the latter must be considered as superseded.

The latter part of the 81st article, which directs that the superior junta shall proceed, "as also the intendants, their sub-delegates, and others," might leave it to be inferred that the "sub-delegates" here referred to were those mentioned in the royal regulation, if the usages of the Spanish government, which authorized judges to delegate their authority, should be lost sight of.

In the extracts of the institutes from the civil law of Spain, this power of the judges to delegate their authority to others is mentioned. White's Collection, 72. It is said in that authority: "Jurisdiction, in the first place, is ordinary or delegated: ordinary, is that which is vested with every extension in the magistrate by reason or virtue of his office; delegated, is that which is given to one for the cognizance of a certain and determinate cause, which is exercised by all judges who are commissioned or deputed." The idea intended to be conveyed in this sentence is, that the power of delegating authority to decide causes is one that belongs to all ordinary judges; this is plainly the intention from what follows in the same page. In the authority it is further stated: From the different nature of these two jurisdictions, we deduce that the ordinary is favorable and perpetual; and the delegated odious and limited."

"If a commission is given to an ordinary judge, to take cognizance of any cause over which he possessed ordinary jurisdiction, he is understood to exercise the latter," &c.

"Those who possess jurisdiction delegated to them by a judge superior to one of the district of the place; by reason of which they may inhibit ordinary and other judges," &c.

So in page 74 of White's Collection: "That the prince, lord, or judge, being absent from their territory or jurisdiction, may appoint a person to preside or decide in their name," &c.; also in pages 75 and 76.

"There are three kinds of judges: ordinary, delegated, and arbitrators, or judges of the fact. The ordinary are persons who are ordinarily appointed to perform their offices," &c. In this class are comprehended all judges who are appointed officially by the King as magistrates (corregidors), alcaldes, &c.

"Delegated judges are those appointed to hear and determine certain or specific suits by command of the King, or of other judges ordinary. It is to be observed, that he who is delegated by the King may commit to another his delegation; but not he who is delegated by the ordinary judge," &c.

The intendants exercising a high jurisdiction as the articles of the royal ordinance in White's Collection evince, they were to exercise, as ordinary judges, would be invested with authority to delegate their powers as judges to others, and those thus delegated with that authority would be called sub-delegates, deputies, or substitutes, and are so called in the royal ordinance, and in the sections in White's Collection which are equally instructions to the intendants. At the close of the 81st section, page 58, of White's Collection, it directs "the intendants, their deputies, and others," &c.; and in the same page, 58 of White's Collection, section 305, it is declared: "In the same manner that the magistrates in the Indies are liable to be called to account on leaving their employs, it is my will and pleasure that the intendants of said kingdom be likewise so liable with respect to officers of justice, police, and government, which I commit to them as corregidores, and this is to be understood as applying in like manner to their substitutes, deputies, and other subalterns," &c.

By this section it appears that the intendants, as officers of justice, police, and government, were corregidores; and from the extracts alone made from the institutes, the corregidores were among the ordinary judges who were authorized to delegate their authorities to others.

In the 6th article of the royal ordinance, page 55, of White's Collection, the intendants are mentioned as ordinary judges, by implication, thus: "The intendants, their sub-delegates, and other common judges;" here also the intendants are mentioned, and also "their sub-delegates," in reference to duties other than that of the disposition of the royal lands, because they are mentioned in reference to cases in which they are to be subordinate to the audiencies; whereas, in the performance of their duties in reference to sales, compositions and grants, &c., they were not to be subordinate to the audiencies, but to the superior junta; and consequently the sub-delegates mentioned in this article as the sub-delegates of the intendants, could not be the sub-delegates mentioned in the royal regulation, whose authority did not extend to the jurisdiction mentioned in the 6th article.

The sub-delegates, under the royal regulation, were authorized by the 1st section of that regulation to sub-delegate their commissions to others in the distant parts of their provinces. This authority being given to them, authorizes the inference that they were not ordinary judges; for if they had been, such special power from the regulation would not have been necessary; or it may have been necessary because they were not appointed by the King. The former, however, was probably the reason; for being appointed by the King's authority, they would be considered probably as appointed by the King. But the same reasons for authorizing the sub-delegates to substitute their commissions to others, would exist in favor of like powers being exercised by the intendants, of whom only twelve were to be created, and who, from the various and important duties committed to them, would find it necessary to delegate their authority to others with a view to their performance, and especially in the distant parts of their provinces.

Morales himself was a sub-delegate, as appears by his titles, prefixed by himself to his regulations; he was not however a sub-delegate of the intendant, nor a sub-delegate under the royal regulation of 1754, but was a "subdelegate of the superintendence."

Of the twelve intendancies created by the royal ordinance, eleven of them were intendancies of provinces, and the twelfth the intendancy general of army and treasury; to which intendancy general of army and treasury, was committed the superintendence and regulation of the royal treasury in all its branches; which superintendence, I apprehend, is that of which Morales represents himself to be "sub-delegate." (See 1st and 2d articles of royal ordinance.)

I think, therefore, that after the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, the sub-delegates were no longer to exercise any power in relation to the disposition of the royal domain within the territorial limits which were embraced by "the territories and districts attached to the intendants;" which territories and districts are described at the end of the royal ordinance, as appears from its first article. The ordinance is made to extend but to New Spain, exclusive of the Californias, for it is New Spain, exclusive of the Californias, that is divided into the twelve intendencies. The ordinance, therefore, was not intended to Peru, which I understand to have been a distinct viceroyalty; the Indies, originally comprehending all the Spanish American possessions, but New Spain and Peru constituting distinct viceroyalties. That the sub-delegates having been the officers to whom, throughout "the kingdoms of the Indies," the power to grant had been conferred by the royal regulation, would still retain it in all the Spanish possessions not comprehended within some one of the intendencies.

That the power of the intendant to grant and distribute the royal lands in Louisiana was to be exercised exclusively of the sub-delegates, recognised or created by the royal regulation, is evident from the terms of the decree of the 22d of October, 1798. For, by this decree, this power is made "the particular province of the intendency of this province, with inhibition to other authorities," &c. White's Comp. 218.

If all the reasons previously offered do not establish that the power of the sub-delegates within the limits of the districts of the intendancies was superseded by the royal ordinance, it is excluded by this "inhibition" in respect to Louisiana.

Now, although the power of the intendant to grant and distribute the royal lands is exclusive in virtue of this "inhibition," if it was not as against the interference of the sub-delegates known to the royal regulation, by virtue of the royal ordinance, the intendant found it necessary to have the assistance of others to enable him to perform the articles required of him, and for this purpose to delegate to them a part of his authority; and among the reasons assigned for his regulations, in the preamble to them, one is, "That the commandants, as sub-delegates of the intendancy, may be informed of what they ought to observe." Here the commandants are regarded as sub-delegates of the intendancy, and the regulations are to inform them of what they, in that character, are to observe. The regulations of Morales, and not the royal regulation, is to regulate their duties and powers: and what are those duties and powers as prescribed by Morales?

The chief duties which, as sub-delegates they are to perform, are detailed in the 2d article, and are those: "If lands are asked for in any of the posts, the commandant at the same time will state that the lands asked for are vacant, and that the petitioner has obtained permission of the government to establish himself." The 4th, 5th, 7th, 12th, 26th, 31st, 32d, 33d, and 38th articles, impose duties on the commandants, but no power of sale, or compromise, or distribution. These articles contain the authority which the intendant thought proper to delegate. Having an authority which was exclusive, he might have delegated more or less power at his discretion.

This observation is also applicable to the governor, while he exercised the exclusive power of granting and distributing the royal lands, under the royal order of 1770. He having the exclusive authority to grant, &c., had authority, without doubt, to avail himself of the assistance of others, to enable him to perform the duties which were imposed upon him; and, for this purpose, to delegate to them such power as he should think proper.

But it is said in Mr. White's argument, in the case of Delassus vs. The United States, that "the royal order of the 28th of January, 1771, incorporates Louisiana into the King's dominions on a footing with his other transatlantic possessions, and adopts the laws of the Indies;" that "these laws, upon the principle that leges posteriores priores abrogant, control so much of O'Reilly's regulations as are inconsistent with them, being subsequent to the royal cedula which gave these regulations the force of law." (9th Peters, 767, Appendix.)

I have not seen the royal order of the 28th of January, 1771, referred to by Mr. White, and cannot therefore, say what its intention or effect was. But, upon the supposition that it did introduce into Louisiana the laws of the Indies, and among them those which had relation to the grant of the royal lands; those laws would be, according to the views I have submitted, the royal regulation of 1754, and the laws cited therein.

The royal ordinance respecting the intendants, would not be introduced without a special provision creating Louisiana into a new and an additional intendancy. And that it was not so created for the purpose of granting lands, is to be inferred from the fact that the intendant did not exercise that power in Louisiana, until after the decree of 1798, and is in fact to be inferred by that decree itself; the object of which is to introduce the 81st article of it.

But if the royal regulation is introduced in 1771, it does not authorize gratuitous grants. It is less liberal in all its provisions than O'Reilly's regulations, and in its application to the Missouri claims would be fatal to all of them, upon the supposition that O'Reilly's regulations were abrogated by its introduction. It is said, however, that it would only abrogate so much of O'Reilly's as should be inconsistent with it. Then, if it was introduced, it would be in derogation of so much of O'Reilly's regulations as should be inconsistent with it. This would be the sound proposition in relation to the effect of its introduction, in the absence of any special provision upon the subject. In this view, its introduction would have this influence upon the granting power, namely, to restrict it in respect to gratuitous grants. The intention of the royal regulation being to require sales and compromises of the royal lands in the Indies, the extension of that regulation to Louisiana would of course require them there; and require them in the spirit of that regulation; and so far as the spirit of that regulation should be inconsistent with the gratuitous grants theretofore authorized by O'Reilly's regulations, it would impose limits upon the authority to make such gratuitous grants, and of course in its influence, improve new limits upon the quantity to be gratuitously granted.

There is another point of view, however, in which this suggestion of Mr. White may be considered, and which will show that he is mistaken in his supposition, that the laws of the Indies, relating to grants, were introduced by the order of the 28th of January, 1771, which is this:

If they were introduced, they would, for the reasons mentioned by Mr. White, control so much of O'Reilly's regulations, as should be inconsistent with them; they would, therefore, control O'Reilly's in respect to the granting authority. The provisions upon this subject in the royal regulation, and in O'Reilly's regulations, being inconsistent, the former requiring, "that the grants," &c., thereafter to be made, should be made by the sub-delegates; the latter requiring that the grants should be made by the governor; the former requiring also, that the confirmations should be made by the audiencies, or, in the remote provinces, by the governors; the latter make no provisions in relation to the confirmation, the power to make which, consequently, would remain with the King, he not having conferred it upon any other. The introduction of the royal regulation, therefore, into Louisiana, would supersede the power of the governor to grant lands there, and invest him with the power to confirm, and also the appellate jurisdiction mentioned in the royal regulation. The introduction of the royal regulation would doubtless also have been accompanied with the appointment of sub-delegates by the viceroys and presidents of the audiencies, as required by the royal regulations; now the practice, which is evidence of the law, in reference to all these matters of difference between the royal regulation and O'Reilly's regulation, has been consistent with the provisions of the latter, and, therefore, inconsistent with the opinion that the former had been introduced at the date alleged. The grants were made by the governors, and in the name of the king, as required by O'Reilly's regulations. No sub-delegates were appointed for Louisiana, no grants were made there by them as required by the royal regulation; no sales, no confirmations, were made as required by this regulation. The grants made by the governors were original acts, and not confirmations; they do not purport to be confirmations of the concessions made by the commandants. The governor had not associated with him in the grants which he made, the associate judges, nor had he the assisting officers which the royal regulation requires, when the power of confirmation is to be exercised by him. His grants are not confirmations, as the uninformed upon the subject have sometimes supposed. He had, in fact, not the power of confirmation; nor did, therefore, assume the exercise of that power; and in accordance with this opinion, was that of the King; plainly inferrible from this order for the delivery of the province of Louisiana to France. In that order (15th of October, 1802, White's Collection, 121, 182,) he expresses the hope, from the sincere amity and close alliance which unites him to the French government, and for the tranquillity of the inhabitants, "that said government will issue orders," &c. "that all grants of property of every denomination, made by my governors, may be confirmed, although not confirmed by myself."

There is a further suggestion, however, of the learned counsel in the same arguments, that the instructions framed for the lieutenant governor of Illinois, which is mentioned in the royal order as having been framed by O'Reilly, and transmitted in his letter No. 33, may have authorized grants upon terms more liberal than that of the 18th of February, 1770, to which the order subsequently refers, concerning which I will submit some observations.

The copies of the instructions, mentioned in the first part of this royal order, as "framed for the lieutenant governor, established in the Illinois, that of the Natchitoches, and the nine particular lieutenants of the districts of that province," were, I apprehend, copies of instructions which had no relation to the grant of lands. It may well be imagined that, under the change of sovereignty, of the form of government and of the laws which had taken place, the occasion would exist for instructions to those officers, and some one or more of the various subjects of government, independent of that relating to grants of land. The 12th article of O'Reilly's regulations directed that the governor should make those grants; and the previous articles had prescribed the rules pursuant to which he should make them. The royal order shows that O'Reilly had also recommended and "considered it expedient that henceforth the governor alone be authorized by his Majesty to make such grants; and that he be directed to conform, in the distribution of the royal lands, to all the provisions contained and published upon this subject.

"The King having been made acquainted with the dispositions of said lieutenant general," (O'Reilly,) says the order, "has approved the same, and directs that you and your successors," (the order being addressed to the governor, Unzunga,) "in said government, have the sole power of distributing the royal lands, conforming in all respects, as long as his Majesty shall not make any other provisions to the said instructions, dated from this (that) city, on the 18th of February of this year; all of which I communicate to you for your own government and for its fulfilment. San Ildefonso, 24th of August, 1770." ("See the entire order, White's Collection, 152, 153; see also O'Reilly's regulation, White's Collection, 204, 205, and 206, concluding, in the form of a "proclamation, by a command to the governor," &c., and "given at New Orleans, on the 18th of February, 1770," the act recited in the royal order as that of the instructions of O'Reilly.)

If there had been another instruction, this of the 18th of February is that to which the governor is to conform, in the distribution of the royal lands; any other instruction, therefore, which might have been given to the lieutenant governor could not regulate the conduct of the governor, had such related to grants of land. But why should instructions have gone to the inferior officers, mentioned on the subject of grants? Inasmuch as the exclusive power touching that subject had been conferred upon the governor, except as he should think it necessary to employ their services as his sub-delegates, and give instructions himself with this view? And why should it be imagined that instructions had gone to the inferior officers, which should authorize grants upon different principles from those prescribed in the instructions to which the governor is to conform, he having the exclusive power to grant, and, consequently, the inferior officers none? The learned counsel also says that the translation should read "the instructions," and not "these instructions," and that he ascertains this by a recent copy of the royal order obtained from Spain. If, then, the order reads "the instructions framed for the lieutenant governors of Illinois, and Natchitoches, and the nine particular lieutenants of (that) province" (Louisiana,) the instructions thus framed for the superior officers related to the whole of the province of Louisiana.

"For the nine particular districts of that province" would imply that these districts were all which were comprehended within the province. The argument of the learned counsel, then, would be that O'Reilly had been guilty of the absurdity of giving one set of instructions to the governor, for the regulation of his conduct in the exercise of the power conferred upon him, and another set of instructions to his inferiors, (who had nothing to do with the subject,) opposite in principle to the former instructions, and necessarily applicable to every part of the country to which the former is applicable.

The remonstrance of Delassus, the lieutenant governor, to which in my former communication I have referred, shows that the lieutenant governor looked only to the orders he received from the governor, for the regulation of his conduct, as, in point of fact, the governor was the source of all his power upon the subject of grants.

The same learned counsel states also, in his argument (Peters's Reports, 767,) that the regulations of O'Reilly were drawn up by him, after his return to San Ildefonso, pursuant to a request made that he should submit to the council of the Indies his plan of government for the province. It may be that in submitting his plans to the council, in pursuance of that request, that his regulations were also again submitted as a part of them; but if they were so submitted, it is evident that they had been previously drawn up and published as law in Louisiana, and had been so published before O'Reilly left the province, because they bear date at New Orleans, and purport to be published there; not in pursuance of the request of the King, or the recommendation of O'Reilly, but by O'Reilly himself, in pursuance of powers conferred upon him by his commission, (see the last paragraph of the regulations,) and because, in the preamble to them, they appear to have been made by O'Reilly, by the advice of those "well informed in these matters, and in consequence of the petitions of the inhabitants addressed to him, and the reports made by them after having been assembled in the several districts for that purpose by his orders, and were made because he was convinced that the tranquillity of the inhabitants required they should be." The royal order, likewise, which approves the regulations, shows that they had been transmitted by O'Reilly, in his letter No. 33, and refers to them as instructions which had been "published," having previously, in the order mentioned, the instructions enclosed as "one" of the set which had been published. "He encloses one set of instructions, which explain the mode of proceeding in that behalf," &c., says the minister who gives the royal order, referring to what O'Reilly had done; "one set of instruction" implies that there existed other sets, copies, and implies, under the circumstances, a publication independent of the recital of its publication in a subsequent part of the order. If the instruction had been drawn up at San Ildefonso, it could not have been "transmitted" or "enclosed," as mentioned in the order. The true reading and translation of the royal order should be, as I apprehend, "that place," "that province," "that city," instead of "this place," "this province," "this city," as we find it in White's Collection.

If we admit that the regulations of O'Reilly were made by him at New Orleans, in the execution of the trust committed to him, and in pursuance of the powers he recites, as they in fact purport to have been made, and were transmitted by him for the King's approbation, subject to which they purport also to have been made; such admission would present a state of facts with which the recital in the royal order would be altogether consistent. The order being addressed to Unzunga, the governor of Louisiana, would give him the information which it would be necessary that he should have; that the instructions mentioned in the royal order had been approved by the King, and that he would conduct himself accordingly.

In relation to this royal order, it is proper to observe, to remove the undue influence which the opinion of the Supreme Court might otherwise have to mislead, that that court appears not to have been apprized that the objects of it were to approve the regulations of O'Reilly, and give them the force of a royal instruction, and to direct that the governor "and his successors in office should have the sole power of granting and distributing the royal lands, conforming in all things to the said instructions, as long as his Majesty should not make any other provision." For, had they been apprized that such were its objects, they could not have entertained the opinion that Governor Gayoso had authority to supersede or revoke O'Reilly's regulations, or that he had authority to establish any new provisions on the subject of grants inconsistent with them; nor could they have entertained the opinion that no public restraint had been imposed upon the granting power of the governor, "nor any limitation in the royal orders, restricting the power of the governors to a league square in their grant, "since the royal order in question does impose this limitation by making O'Reilly's regulation, in which that limitation is prescribed, the rule of his conduct in granting the royal lands.

In fact, the Supreme Court have considered this order of the King of 1770, as a general order, extending to New Spain as well as to Louisiana, and as divesting the intendants of the power of granting lands which had been conferred upon them by the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, and conferring that power upon the governors as well in New Spain as in Louisiana. In the case of Delassus vs. The United States, 9th Peters, 134, the court say, "By the royal order of 1774, the power of granting lands, which had been invested in the intendants by an order of 1768, was revested in the civil and military governors of provinces, who retained it until 1798—White's Compilation, 218." Again, in 8th Peters, 452, The United States vs. Clark, the Court say: "In 1768, this power of granting and confirming titles to lands was vested in the intendants."

"In 1774, it was revested in the civil and military governors. (See White's Compilation, 218.) In October, 1798, this power was again conferred on the intendants so far as respected Louisiana and West Florida," &c.

In both the cases from which I have taken these extracts, the court treat this royal order of the 24th of August, 1770, as a general one, divesting the intendants of the power of granting lands, and revesting that power in the civil and military governors of provinces. The court suppose, therefore, that the order extended to New Spain, because there only had the intendants been established, and to that country must it extend if it divested them of power.

They consider the order also as revesting the power in "the civil and military governors of provinces."

The revesting a power in the governors implies the act of returning to them a power which they had previously possessed, and been dispossessed of. In all this the Supreme Court were evidently under a misapprehension. The order to which they refer did not extend to New Spain, did not invest the intendants of any power which they had anywhere possessed, nor did it revest any power in the governors of provinces, of which they had been divested. The order plainly and simply had for its object the communication of a power where it had not before been communicated, where there was, or had been, no intendant to be divested of that power. The object of the order was to communicate the power to grant royal lands to the governor of a newly-acquired province, where, according to the ordinary principles applicable to the subject, that power would not be possessed by any officer of the King until it should be conferred by the sovereign.

The power conferred by this order is not that which had been exercised by the governors of the provinces of the Indies, under the royal regulation of 1754; this being, as I have shown, a power to confirm; that conferred in Louisiana being a power to grant; the power to confirm, consequently, in respect to Louisiana, not being conferred upon any one, would remain with the King.

The Supreme Court have referred to the royal order of the 24th of August, 1770, as of the date of 1774. They refer to White's Comp., 218, where the recital in the King's decree of the 22d of October, 1798, states the royal order to be of the 29th of August, 1774: but this date of 1774 is a mistake. The royal order itself (152 of White's Collection) bears date 24th of August, 1770. It is also recited in the preamble to the regulation of Morales, as of the date of the 24th of August, 1770, and for the same purpose for which it is recited in the decree of 1798, to show that the power to grant and distribute the royal lands, within the province of Louisiana, since the order of the 24th of August, 1770, belonged to the civil and military government. That the 24th of August, 1770, is the true date of the royal order, which had for its object that which is attributed to it, in the preamble to the regulations of Morales, and also in the decree of 1798, is further established by the reference which it makes to the regulations of O'Reilly, which it says are "dated at this (that) city, (doubtless New Orleans,) the 18th of February, of this year." Now, O'Reilly's regulations are dated the 18th of February, 1770; the order, therefore, being of the same year, was in 1770; and I conclude, that the power mentioned in the decree of 1798, having been conferred on the civil and military government in 1770, was not again conferred in 1774; and that this date is a mistake of the transcriber, or translator, or printer.

I think it must appear, from the observations I have made, that the governor had the sole power of granting and distributing the royal lands in Louisiana; and that, in the exercise of this power, he was required by royal order to conform in all respects to the instructions of O'Reilly, as long as his Majesty should not make any other provisions; that there is no evidence that his Majesty did make any other provisions until the date of his decree of 1798; that Gayoso's instructions do not afford evidence that his Majesty had made other provisions.

They do not purport to be new rules to regulate the granting power of the governor; they do not appear to have been made in consequence of new powers conferred. They purport to be no more than instructions to the commandants of posts; instructions which marked out the boundaries of their power as his sub-delegates, and contained the rules which should regulate its exercise. In the legitimate exercise of the power conferred upon Gayoso, as governor, by the regulations of O'Reilly, he could do this, and delegate to his sub-delegates more or less power, as he should think proper. He might in his instructions require that the concessions made by his sub-delegates should be circumscribed by narrower limits than he himself was confined to in the grants he was authorized to make, without violating the trust committed to him; for the power conferred was in the nature of a trust, the limits of which were not to be transcended, but the trust within those limits executed with the view to the attainment of the end for which it was conferred, the agent, however, observing all definite and inflexible rules, so far as these may have been prescribed.

The instructions of O'Reilly, authorizing grants in the nature of gratuities, with a view by such gratuities to attract population and encourage agriculture, may have been considered by Gayoso to authorize him to give less, and in reference to cultivation to exact more, as the interests to be subserved by the gratuities might appear to require, than had been prescribed in the regulations of O'Reilly as the condition of the grant, or authorized in relation to its extent.

Regarding, therefore, the authority to the governor in the nature of a trust, to distribute the King's property, with a view to subserve, in some degree, the interest of the King, they bear to each other in some respects the relations of agent and principal; and the question is, whether Gayoso, considering his authority under this relation, may have thought himself authorized, under the power conferred by O'Reilly's regulations, to give less, or to exact more, as the condition of the grant, than on looking to these regulations he might give or was compelled to exact, so to account for any apparent inconsistency between those regulations and his instructions, rather than upon the supposition that a new power to make them had been conferred.

But if such new power is to be inferred from the instructions, the presumption would be, as I have before said, that the instructions had pursued the power, and therefore that the power intended that grants of narrower limits should be authorized, as this is among the objects of the instructions.

I consider, however, that the reasons I have offered indubitably establish, that O'Reilly's regulations constituted the exclusive rules for the conduct of the governor in disposing of the royal lands, until the decree of 1798. I shall therefore proceed to examine the questions which present themselves under that decree, namely, the power of the intendant, and the laws which should regulate his conduct in the distribution of the royal lands.

The order which communicates the King's decree is addressed to the intendant. That order announces to the intendant that "the King has been pleased to resolve, that, with a view to the good of the service, and for the better fulfilment of what is contained in the 81st article of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, the power of granting and distributing all kinds of lands be restored to and made the particular province of the intendancy of this province, with inhibition to other authorities, in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws; consequently, the power heretofore vested in the government is repealed and abolished, and shall henceforth reside in the intendancy."

In what connection are we to understand the words "in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws?" Certainly not in connection with the "inhibition," and that the "inhibition to other authorities" was in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws, for that construction would make the sentence insensible and untrue; the laws could not be said to require such "inhibition" while the governor exercised the power in pursuance of law. Nor is it to be understood in connection with the transfer of the power, as that the transfer of the power was "in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws;" for this could not be said with propriety, since no laws had provided for this transfer; it is the edict which the order communicates that transfers the power, and another object is mentioned in connection with the transfer, namely, that it is made for the better fulfilment of what is contained in the 81st article," &c., and "with a view to the good of the service." It is to be understood in connection with "the power of granting and distributing the royal lands." "That the power of granting and distributing the royal lands in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws, be restored to and made the particular province of the intendants of that province." This construction makes the sentence intelligible, and is consistent with a proper reading of it, and imposes a duty upon the intendant to conform to the laws in granting and distributing, as the intendants in New Spain were required to do. The power having been regulated by law while it was in the hands of the governor, and having been also regulated in like manner in the hands of the intendants of New Spain, it is not to be supposed to have been conferred upon the intendant in Louisiana free from all restraint or rule. Such a construction as would confer it free from the provisions of the law which in Louisiana had, and elsewhere did, regulate its exercise, would not effect the object for which the transfer was made, namely, "for the better fulfilment of what is contained in the 81st article of the royal ordinance, respecting the intendants of New Spain;" what is there "contained" requiring the intendant in the grant and distribution of the royal lands to conform to the royal regulation of October, 1754, and the laws cited therein.

If it should be considered that my construction gives to the words "in conformity to the legal provisions of the laws" an intention not justified by the connection in which they stand in the sentence, there is another view of the question not to be omitted. Suppose the decree had simply transferred the power from the governor to the intendant, without any direction touching the laws which should control its exercise; what would be the effect of such a transfer upon the regulations of O'Reilly? How far would they be superseded by such a transfer? The power of the governor would be superseded, but the regulations had a twofold object, and so had the royal order which approved them; first, to direct how, to whom, of what extent, and on what conditions, grants should be issued; second, to point out the person who should issue them. Had there been a simple transfer of the power, it would evince only an alteration of the King's intention in reference to the person who should issue the grant. The provisions of the regulations and the royal order would be superseded only to the extent of this alteration of the King's will, the residue remaining in full force. The intendant, under such a transfer, would grant lands pursuant to the same law that the governor had. But the transfer of the power is made "with a view to the good of the service and the better fulfilment of what is contained in the 81st article of the royal ordinance," &c. It might, perhaps, in one sense, be considered a better fulfilment of what is contained in that article, if the intendancy which had already been established in the province of Louisiana should have the exclusive power to grant, which it was the intention of that article they should have wherever they were established, and which in New Spain they had peaceably enjoyed since their establishment there; but it being equally the intention of that article, and equally a part of "what is contained in it," that "the intendants, their sub-delegates and others," should proceed in conformity with the royal regulation of the 15th of October, 1754, without losing sight of the wise dispositions of the laws cited therein, I infer to be the intention of the decree, in making the transfer with a view to the better fulfilment of what is contained in the article mentioned, that the intendant in Louisiana shall conform to the laws to which, in that article, the intendants are required to conform. The motive assigned for the transfer, being the "better fulfilment," must be understood to require the whole fulfilment; and the whole fulfilment requires the observance of the laws which are required to be observed in the article. The conclusion of the order to the intendant which recites the decree, supposes that precise duties are imposed: having recited the decree, "all which," says the order, "I communicate for your information and its due fulfilment."

The intendant being in this manner, by the decree of 1798, referred for his government, in the grant and distribution of the royal lands, to the royal regulations of 1754, and the laws cited therein, how far would that reference affect the authority of O'Reilly's regulations? What influence should it have upon the granting officer in respect to the gratuitous grants which had been authorized by O'Reilly's regulations? Would the new intention to require sales and compromises as required by the royal regulation of 1754, carry with it, necessarily, an intention to confine gratuitous grants within smaller limits, or an intention to authorize them less generally? I think the intention to enforce the system of sales and compromises prescribed in the royal regulations, supposes, necessarily, an intention that gratuitous grants should be given with less munificence; but does not suppose, necessarily, an intention that they should be wholly discontinued. In what appears to be instructions to the intendants when they were first created, (pages 56, 57, of White's Collection,) there is a direction to them to grant lands to be cultivated and improved; and in this respect a power was conferred upon the intendants, which had not been conferred upon the sub-delegates.

I shall consider, therefore, that O'Reilly's instructions would continue in force; but that the intendants in the exercise of the authority they confer, and in the exercise of the discretion they necessarily invest, would conform to the new intention of the King, necessarily to be inferred, that gratuitous grants should be less munificent.

Upon the hypothesis, then, to which the reasoning would lead, in regard to the laws, which would regulate the grant and distribution of land after the decree of 1798, what would it be incumbent upon the intendant reasonably to do? The royal regulation, and the laws cited therein, which had become, in fact, the laws pursuant to which lands were to be granted, had never been promulgated in Louisiana. It had been twenty-nine years since the publication of O'Reilly's regulations; and, in the meantime, the number of inhabitants had greatly increased in the colony. To have republished the 81st article, and the laws cited in it, and also the regulations of O'Reilly, would not have given the information to the inhabitants, nor to the officers to whom duties are prescribed in Morales's regulations, which it was necessary they should have. The officers who had acted as sub-delegates of the governors, would not stand in that relation to the intendant, except by the intendant's order, and then with more or less power as the intendant should think proper to delegate; the intendant having the exclusive power with inhibition to other authorities, might, or might not, at his election, delegate power to others, and if he should think it expedient to delegate power, it might be to others, exclusive of those to whom the governors had committed it. A new delegation of power was, therefore, necessary from the intendant before the commandants or others would act as sub-delegates.

The intendant might also think it expedient to give, as, in fact, by his regulations he does give, to the surveyor, additional instructions.

He might think it expedient to give information concerning the gratuitous grants which he should thereafter give, in the fulfilment of the King's intention under the new disposition respecting sales; for it might, in his opinion, be important, that the inhabitants should be informed of his views of his own duties and powers in reconciling the provisions on the subject of sales and compromises with O'Reilly's regulations.

He was under obligations to give the general orders and notices, directed to be given in the 3d, 7th, and 8th articles of the royal regulation.

He might think it advisable, to give more explicitly, the intention of O'Reilly's regulations, which it was, without doubt, competent for him to do in the form of instructions to his sub-delegates, and he might think it equally expedient to do the same in reference to the provisions of the royal regulation, which originally had been instructions to officers who had been afterward superseded in the duties they impose.

He had, as a matter of course, to prescribe the manner in which record should be made of all that should be done by him in the performance of the trust.

Now Morales's regulations, under the view of the subject, are such as he was authorized to make in the performance of the duties imposed upon him by the laws which he was to execute.

The royal regulation was originally addressed to the officers, mainly, who were to execute its provisions. The first section directs that an authentic copy of it should be transmitted to the sub-delegates, together with their appointments, and the third section that the sub-delegates, on the receipt of it should furnish on their part general orders, &c., which were to be directions to the inhabitants, in regard to what was to be done by them.

So the royal order of 1798 was communicated but to the intendant and governor; to the latter that he might officially apprize of the transfer of the power; and to the former that he should proceed to execute the trust committed to him; leaving to him the promulgation to the inhabitants of all that related to it, or which it was material that they should be informed of. To ascertain the intention of a particular act, or what is to be inferred from it, we should regard the usage of the country and the form and manner of proceeding which is usual in it.

That the laws which regulate the rights and duties of the subject, and which established his social relations, should have been published under the Spanish government, before they had authority, must be conceded. But this rule, in that sense of a publication, which we should understand, is not universally true as to all the decrees and royal orders which went forth as law. The edict which transferred the power in question, and the royal order which communicated it, were probably never in print, or sent forth to the public; nor, as I presume, was the royal order of 1770, which approved O'Reilly's regulations. They went to the officers who were to execute what they commanded.

The provisions of the regulations of Morales, on the subject of gratuitous grants, are drawn from the regulations of O'Reilly, without the addition or subtraction of any one principle. The provisions of the same regulations on the subject of sales and compromises, are drawn from the royal regulation, and the laws cited therein. The provisions which relate to the duties of the surveyor, commandants, and syndics, the intendant was competent to make in virtue of his general power over the subject; and in reference to these he would be governed by local "circumstances."

Morales does not consider that the approbation of the King is necessary to give his regulations the authority of law. He would have thought such approbation necessary without doubt, had he been authorized to establish the law on the subjects to which his regulations relate; for where the law is made by the council of the Indies, it has not the force of law until sanctioned by the approbation or counsel of the King. Had he imagined the approbation of the King necessary to give force to his regulations, he would have ordered obedience to them, with the reservation made by O'Reilly in the acts of his to which I have referred, which he had been invested with the power to establish the law. Instead of commanding an observance of his regulations "with the reserve of his Majesty's good pleasure," as O'Reilly had done, he intends that they "shall have their full and entire effect until it pleases his Majesty to order otherwise," (see last paragraph of regulations of Morales.) The royal order which approved O'Reilly's regulations, required, in like manner, a conformity to them "as long as his Majesty shall not make any other provisions." If the regulation of Morales republished the principles which had been previously established by the King as law, those principles would continue to be law whether republished or not; the provisions established would not require to be again approved, when republished.

It has been somewhere said that the regulations of Morales were protested against by the cabilda, and Morales removed in consequence of having made them. I know not the authority upon which this has been said.

Morales appears to have been in office as late as the 28th of April, 1802; his grant to St. Vrain, which forms a part of the plaintiff's evidence in the case of Soulard and others, against the United States, now pending before the Supreme Court, of that date. His regulations, from the terms of that grant, appear also to have been imposed at that date; consequently, his Majesty down to that time had not "ordered otherwise;" for in that grant the regulations are referred to, and the grant made "under the condition that as well the said named captain of militia, Don James Delassus St. Vrain, or his successors on the said land, which has been given to him without any interest, fee, or any contribution whatever in favor of the royal treasury, they are to observe, comply, and conform with the contents of the third, fourth, sixth, seventh, and ninth articles of the instruction made and published by this intendancy, bearing date July 17, 1799," (the date of Morales's regulations,) "conformably to the locality, quality, and circumstances of the land hereby granted, and of which he is to take notice, and not to allege or plead ignorance, under the penalty imposed on the same, in case of contravention." In the December following the date of this grant, the tribunal of affairs and causes relating to the grant and composition of lands, was closed by Morales, which tribunal was not afterward reopened. The alleged cause of its being closed was the death of the assessor of the intendancy. The true cause was probably the cession of the country to France; but that cession having been made by a secret treaty, it would not be considered expedient to allege the cession of the country as a reason for its being closed; and the first occasion, perhaps, which occurred after the treaty, for discontinuing to grant lands, which offered a plausible pretext for so doing, was the death of the assessor, the real cause being the cession, which was not yet to be made known. (See the order of Morales, White's Collection, p. 218, announcing the death, &c., and that the tribunal had been closed.)

It appears to me, therefore, that, after the decree of 1798, the royal lands in Louisiana were to be granted and sold conformably to the regulations of O'Reilly, the royal regulations of 1754, and the laws cited therein; that a disposition of them, conformably to the provisions of the regulations of Morales, would be also a disposition of them in pursuance of the intention of O'Reilly's regulations, the royal regulation, and the laws therein cited. That the publication of the regulations of Morales was, in fact, a publication of the provisions of the former laws embodied by him, and of other provisions which it was competent for him to make, to regulate the conduct of those to whom he should delegate authority; that in framing the provisions upon the latter subject he would reasonably enough consult the regulations of Gayoso, framed for the same purpose; that the provision of the regulations of Morales not drawn from the laws referred to, or not directory to his subordinates in matters touching which he had a right to give law in virtue of his power to perform the duties assigned to him by the laws referred to, have for their object the protection of the royal lands against trespasses, and may well be supposed to have been a promulgation of what had previously been established upon the subject to which they relate; that his grants, by reference made in them to his regulations, are evidence that those regulations continued to be law so long as grants were issued by the government; that, whether they were in themselves law or not, they contain a sound exposition of the law pursuant to which lands were to be granted.

That, in relation to the powers and duties of the sub-delegates, they were de facto and de jure law to them, as the regulations of Gayoso had previous, without doubt, been; and as the instructions of those who had the exclusive power to grant, whether governor or intendant, would be, from the first establishment to the final termination of the Spanish government in Louisiana. In all, therefore, that the sub-delegate transcended the authority conferred upon him, by the instructions of those to whom belonged the exclusive power to grant, his acts would be without authority and void; and in respect of those acts, which were performed in violation of instructions, they were criminal. To determine the authority of the act, we have but to consult the instructions, and, at most, it can only be insisted in favor of claims originating with the sub-delegates; that to determine their merits, we have but to ascertain whether they could have been authorized by the regulations of O'Reilly, the royal regulation of 1754, and the laws therein cited, all being construed together, as constituting the authority and legal provisions, pursuant to which lands were to be granted. The former, however, being considered the prior law, and therefore yielding to the later expressed will of the sovereign, that the latter should be observed in preference, so far as they should be inconsistent with each other.

The laws in question contemplate grants upon sales, compromises, or upon condition of cultivation, or the possession of cattle.

No claim is set up, in Upper Louisiana, upon a title pretended to be derived in either of the former modes.

Grants upon condition of cultivation, are denominated gratuitous grants; so also are those authorized to be made, in consideration of the number of cattle which may be possessed by the applicant.

Grants upon condition of cultivation, as authorized either by the regulations of O'Reilly or Morales, would issue, as a matter of course, in the cases specified in those regulations.

The regulations do not contemplate that the cultivation which they require should precede the grant. On the contrary, by the terms of the regulations, the grant was to precede the performance of the conditions; and in practice it did, when applied for, precede them.

The articles of the regulations of Morales, which are referred to in the grants to St. Vrain, which has been mentioned, the contents of which he is to "observe, and comply, and conform with, under the penalties mentioned in the same," require, among other things, the cultivation of a proportion of the grant, equal to one twentieth part of it, within three years, under the penalty of its being reunited to the royal domain. It will appear, therefore, that cultivation is the direct consideration and inducement which leads to the grant. There are other conditions which run with the grant, that of keeping up mounds, roads, and ditches, &c.

In the distant posts, where it would not be practicable to make application immediately for the grant, the cultivation would probably precede the application for a grant; and there, with this view, the sub-delegates were authorized to give the applicant possession, that he might proceed to cultivate, and afterward apply for the grant.

The royal ordinance for the establishment and instruction of the intendants of New Spain, (pages 56, 57, White's Collection,) equally requires cultivation, as the condition of the gratuitous grants which it authorizes the intendants to make; or, to express more truly the intention of the instructions, it authorizes grants of lands for the purpose of cultivation, and as an inducement to the people "to devote themselves to the sowing, raising, and preparing flax, and hemp," &c.; "and if," says the instruction, "in order to obtain so important objects, the intendants should find it necessary to make a distribution of the King's lands, of private domains, I grant them power to do so, giving notice thereof, together with their motives, to the supreme board of the treasury. But this is to be understood, as respects the property of private individuals, as applying only to such as, either from the negligence or inability of the owners, shall remain unimproved; and the aforesaid board shall make compensation for the same out of the public treasury," &c. "And where any shall not apply themselves to improve, in a proper manner, the lands which shall have been allotted to them, the same shall be taken from them (which I command to be done without mercy), and granted to others who shall fulfil the conditions."

The "fulfilment of what is intended in the 81st article of the royal ordinance, would require that the intendant should observe the spirit of this instruction, for that article confers the granting power upon the intendant, subject to these instructions. The authority conferred, to make a distribution of the lands of private individuals, which should remain uncultivated from the inability or negligence of owners, evinces forcibly an intention to give only for the purposes of cultivation, this being a primary object.

When, therefore, instructions were given by officers who were to grant lands in pursuance of the laws and authority mentioned, the instructions given by them to their sub-delegates are presumed to have been in accordance with the laws; and as far as we have any knowledge of them, or information in relation to them, they were so given. We are not, therefore, to presume that the instructions given by the governor or intendants authorized grants of greater extent, or for other purposes, or on other conditions than the laws authorized them to be made.

The instructions or orders of Carondelet, in 1795, which are mentioned in the remonstrance of Delassus, would, as far as their contents are there stated, appear to be in accordance with the law in reference both to the extent of the grant, and to the direct possession, with a view to which the grant was to be made. So are those of Gayoso and of Morales.

The instructions of Gayoso do not show the extent of the authority which he delegated to the commandants; they do not show the acts which they are to perform; they do not inform the commandants that they are to make the grants, as they state in their commencement; they are "instructions to be observed by the commandants of posts in this province, for the admission of new settlers," not relating to the grants which those commandants should give, but relating to grants which would be given by the proper authority, the governor. The commandants,under these instructions, could give to the settlers a satisfactory assurance, in relation to the grants which they might expect from the government.

The 17th article of the instructions directs "that" the forms established by my predecessors, in which to petition for lands, shall be followed under the conditions expressed in this order. The genuine concessions will, of course, give these forms, and the acts of the commandants under these instructions. These acts were an order of survey, and of possession, for the quantity of land which the instructions authorized; and also a statement of the party's property qualifications to entitle him to the grants. These acts, and that of the surveyor, accompanied the petition, when it would be presented to the governor for the grant, and would give to him that information which it was necessary he should possess before he could issue the grant. All this matter of form had been prescribed by Carondelet, as I think I have shown in my comment upon the remonstrance of Delassus. It is in relation to all this matter of form that the 17th article refers, and requires it to be pursued. For with all these acts of the commandant and surveyor appended to the petition, the whole was considered as part of the petition for the grant, being the necessary evidence to accompany the petition. Hence the order of Morales, when he announces the death of the assessor, and that the tribunal for granting had been closed, says, (page 218, of White's Collection,) "I make this communication to apprize you of this providence, and that you may not receive or transmit memorials for grants of lands, until further orders. This order, in White's Collections, was to the commandant at Madrid; a similar one was received by the commandant at the post of St. Louis, (see the evidence of Soulard, in the Supreme Court, letter H, translation,) where the commandant announces the receipt of the order to the surveyor, for his information and that of the inhabitants. In this order of the intendant to Delassus, at St. Louis, the intendant adds the word "frame." "I make this communication," says the intendant, "in order that, apprized of this providence, you may not receive, frame, or transmit memorials soliciting lands until further orders." According to the regulations of Morales, the duty of the sub-delegate, as far as his agency was required, could only extend, under any construction of them, to that of giving information that the party, from his ability to cultivate, was entitled to the quantity he solicited, according to the rules stated in the first article; also, that the land was vacant, as stated in the 2d article, and order the survey and possession that the evidence of the lands being vacant, might also be given by the surveyor and neighbors, which by the 32d article is required to accompany the statement of the commandant. These are the acts and the only acts of the lieutenant-governor, which constitute what is called a concession, according to the practice which prevailed after the order of 1795, or thereabouts, when the change in the form of the concession took place.

With this view of the subject of the concession, the statement of Delassus, in his remonstrance, accords. He doubts, on the receipt of the royal regulations of Morales, "whether the commandants are still authorized to put provisionally (temporarily) the new-comer in possession by a decree of concession, and giving orders to the surveyor to survey the lands." It must be inferred from this that the decree was but for the purpose of ordering the survey, and putting temporarily the applicant in possession, until he should apply for his title to the granting authority. These decrees are again, in a subsequent part of that remonstrance, called "provisional decrees of concession to cause the lands to be surveyed;" and again, in a subsequent part, these decrees are referred to as those under which the lands had been surveyed, and the parties put in possession conformably to the orders of the government." They are mentioned as being called "provisional decrees," in the orders of the governors; and the authority to put the applicants provisionally in possession, is mentioned as having been authorized by the orders of the governor.

Taking then the law and the orders, and practice, as we are to infer the same was from the orders, and also the statement concerning the practice, which is contained in the remonstrance, and the concession would give nothing more than a right to have the possession of the land ceded, and the survey of it made with a view to immediate improvements to be made upon it, and also to apply for the title.

Now, the Supreme Court say that this concession "is property capable of being alienated, of being subjected to debts, and is as such to be held as sacred and inviolate as other property. (9th Peters, 145; Choteaus' heirs vs. the United States.) They hold this doctrine without qualification. Let us examine it. Is the concession property capable of being alienated? O'Reilly's regulations provide in respect to grants thus: "The said grants can be neither sold nor alienated by the proprietors, until after three years of possession, and until the above-mentioned conditions," those of cultivation, &c., "shall have been entirely complied with," and to guard against evasion in this respect, the written permission of the governor for the sale is made necessary. (3d article of O'Reilly's regulations, White's Collection, page 204.)

Gayoso's regulations provide, in relation to granted lands, thus: "He shall not possess the right" ("the new settler to whom lands have been granted") "to sell his lands, until he shall have produced three crops on the tenth part of his lands, which shall be well cultivated;" and provides, nevertheless, that it may go to his heir, if in the country, &c. (15th section of Gayoso's regulations, White's Collection, page 207.) The regulations of Morales provides, that "during the said term of three years, no person shall sell or dispose of the land which has been granted to him, nor shall he ever after the term, if he has failed to comply with the condition contained in the preceding article;" referring, without doubt, to the condition concerning cultivation. (Morales's regulations, 6th article, White's Collection, page 210.) It would not occur to me that concessions could be alienated, while these inhibitions against the alienation of granted lands remained, until the lands conceded had also been improved. When the land was granted, or in the case of concession, when it was conceded, the granting authority in the case of a grant, and the commandant in the case of a concession, judged of the propriety of the grant from the property qualifications of the applicant for it, or his means to cultivate; to allow the party to alienate, might defeat the intention of the grant, but much more the concession; the order of survey and possession is in favor of the petitioner for the land. The statement of the commandant refers to his qualifications as those either from the number of family or means, which entitled him to the grant. Should he alienate, and his assignee present himself before the intendant, the commandant's certificate of the assignee's means, would not avail the assignee; it would not prove that the assignee had the property or means equal to the quantity originally conceded to the assignor. The decree of concession was personal, gave the right to the individual applicant, and to him only, in consideration of the means to improve it, and a right merely to enter upon and improve the land, and have it surveyed; the decree gave but the right to that which was inalienable. But after the party had entered upon the land, in pursuance of the permission granted by the concession, and had improved the land, that improvement, made in fulfilment, in part, or in whole, of the conditions which the law would have annexed to the grant, would give him a property in the land, which, after the conditions had been entirely fulfilled, he might alienate by an equitable extension, to concessions of the provisions applicable to grants. The distance of the seat of the colonial government rendered it inconvenient to apply for grants; for this reason, the quantity of lands held by grants in Upper Louisiana, in comparison with that held by concession, was comparatively inconsiderable. Prior to 1795, no surveyor had been appointed in Upper Louisiana, and I believe no grant had been made there before the appointment of a surveyor. The concessions made prior to the order which accompanied, or very soon followed the appointment of a surveyor, of which mention is made by Delassus in his remonstrance, assumed, as I have said, in my last communication, to convey to the applicant and his heirs the title to the lands mentioned in them; with a condition that the concession should be void, if the land was not improved within a year.

No obligation is imposed upon the party to these concessions, nor intimation made of the necessity on his part to apply to the governor for the title; and hence many believed that they were the owners of the lands conceded to them; such belief would evince ignorance on their part of the provisions of O'Reilly's regulations, and consequently ignorance of the provision which prohibited the alienation within three years, and without the consent of the governor. It is not probable that O'Reilly's regulations had been widely circulated, especially in Upper Louisiana, or that the inhabitants there were well informed in relation to them, or to any other matter of law. As the concession which they received purported to grant to them and their heirs the land it described, upon the condition of its being improved within a year, they might well suppose themselves the owners of the land so soon as the condition had been complied with, and of course possessed of the full right to sell it; otherwise, however, after the change of the form of the concession, in or about 1796, the concession then, and afterward issued, not assuming to grant the title, but referring the party to the governor for it, and purporting only to authorize a survey to be made, and a possession to be given, and to inform the governor of the party's qualifications to receive the grant, and that the land was vacant; the party obtaining such a concession could not believe himself to be the owner of the land thus conceded. The concession, it will be seen, was of no value except with a view to get possession of the land, and to apply for the title. But having got possession, and rendered the land valuable and productive by the improvement made upon it, then, and not until then, would it become the object of desire to a purchaser; for as all could obtain wild lands without price or purchase, who desired them for the purpose of cultivation, there would be little inducement to purchase, except when the land had been improved; and it is certain that a purchase of a concession would be of no avail before the governor, or intendant, when the title was applied for; that is, that the assignee would not stand in the place of the party to whom the concession was originally made, so as to dispense with the necessity of showing either his ability to make the required improvement, or that such improvement had actually been made; the governor, or intendant, having the power to approve the sale, and to judge of the propriety of the grant, would, of course, give or refuse the grant to the assignee, as it should or should not appear that he was entitled, from his means, to the particular quantity of land assigned to him; hence the assignment of the concession, or the land it describes, would give no certain right to the assignee; no assurance that he would stand in the place of the assignor, when the title should be applied for; certainly the certificate of the commandant, in relation to the assignor's means, could not avail the assignee; and as certainly would it be necessary for the assignee to establish his ability to cultivate the land, or that it had been approved to the extent required, before he could obtain the title; this plain view of the subject will show how nugatory would be the assignment, unless the party's circumstances were such as would obtain him that amount of land without any assignment or purchase. The assignment, therefore, conveyed no legal or indefeasible interest. The party, it is true, would gain the possession by it, and the usufruct of the land; but he would not gain a right which he could assert before the granting authority, or as against the government; so long, however, as by the indulgence of the government he was allowed to remain in possession, and receive the profit of the lands, he would be benefited by the purchase.

This question of the right to assign the concession has become material in the discussion, not because the Supreme Court has asserted the right to exist, but because most of the concessions have passed from the original owners, and many of them by assignments purporting to be made soon after the date of the concession, and where the survey has been made in the name of the assignee. In many of these instances of assignments made soon after the concession was issued, or before the survey was made, a part of the concession only was assigned, leaving a residue in the hands of the original party, the survey in these cases being made for the assignee, and at his instance; one individual being the assignee of many concessions. This mode of doing business, in this time, having been practised to a very considerable extent, will, when examined, be regarded as evidence of fraud. Suppose one of these assignees had presented himself before the intendant for the title, under the assignment, and the promoter, or attorney of the royal treasury, had objected to the emanation of the grant, and alleged that the statement of the commandant, in relation to the ability of the party to whom the concession had issued, did not establish the means of the assignee to be equal to the cultivation of the proportion of the land within the time required by the law; that his being the assignee of many concessions excluded the supposition that he had purchased them all with a view to their cultivation; that without such purchase the assignee had a right to obtain, in his own name, and for himself, a reasonable quantity corresponding to his ability to cultivate; that the assignment by the original party to the concession before they had taken possession, proved by the concurrence of so many assignments to the same individual that they had not obtained the concession with a view to the occupancy and improvement of the lands; that their assignment of all but a small part of the concession was evidence that they did not want all that had been solicited by them; that gratuitous grants were to be made only in consideration of the means which the applicants possessed to cultivate them, and their undertaking implied to cultivate within a given time a certain proportion of them; I say then implied undertaking, because the law and the grant, by imposing this condition, and declaring a forfeiture in default of its fulfilment, implies the undertaking to perform the conditions. That, therefore, these original parties to the concessions, having, without entering upon the land, or proceeding one step toward a compliance with the undertaking on their part, alienated the concession in violation of their undertaking; and to one who does not establish that he is able to perform what his assignees were to perform, presents a case destitute of merit, suspicious, and directly forbidden. That in fact the whole proceeding appeared to him to be an abuse of the beneficent intentions of the law on the subject of gratuitous grants, and a total violation of all its rules, and perversion of its objects, which ought not to receive the countenance of the intendancy. If these objections could be made before the intendancy, and would have been sustained there, as I apprehend they must have been in the event of their being raised, it would follow that concessions were not assignable, as a matter of course, because the assignment conveyed no right which the assignee could enforce before the intendancy.

But where the concession, having been made in good faith, was such as the party was entitled to from his circumstances, according to the provisions of the law; and where, in pursuance of the intention in making the concession, he had improved the land, and rendered it valuable; had complied with all that the law would have required had he obtained the grant, to perfect his title; he might, and in practice the inhabitants did, under such circumstances, alienate their lands, even perhaps before the expiration of the three years; for such alienation being such, whether before or after the three years, as might be cured by the consent of the intendancy, the prohibition being to prevent abuses in not making the improvement required, the assignee might take the assignment at his risk, relying upon his being able to establish, before the intendancy, either the improvement made, or the ability to make it.

And as most of the real property held in Upper Louisiana was held under concessions only, it would have been greatly detrimental to trades, and to the interests of the inhabitants of such property, after having been rendered valuable by their labor, had it not been considered alienable, and also liable to the payment of debts. So, if it had not likewise been considered such as would pass by devise, and by descent, after being so rendered valuable, industry would have been deprived of half its stimulus. This practice, therefore, of alienating property which had been rendered valuable by the labor bestowed upon it, may be reconciled with the law, and has ground enough to stand upon consistently with such reconciliation, without inferring a practice inconsistent with the law, and thence deriving, by inference, a right to alienate from the presumed practice.

The instances of assignment to which I have referred, where the assignment was previous to the survey, and where no possession had been taken, and where the survey was afterward made in the name and at the instance of the assignee, will, when examined, appear to be instances of fraudulent concessions and assignments.

The remarks I have offered to show that the naked concession, where there had been no improvement under it, could not, from its object, be assignable, tend also to show the nature of the right which was derived by it, for it was a right, rather than an interest, in the land; a right to enter temporarily upon the land, subject to the decision of the granting authority, to which application was to be made for the title; a right conferred with the intention that the party should, and in consideration of his undertaking that he would, proceed to improve the land as required by the terms of the law; for such purpose only were lands authorized to be given, and to such persons only as had the means so to improve were they to be given, except when given in consideration of tame cattle; I say in consideration of his undertaking that he would proceed to improve the land; because, when the law had prescribed this in the condition, the undertaking to perform the condition, in default of the performance of which the grant is to become void, is implied and understood. It was not intended that the land should be suspended from grant beyond the reasonable time allowed for taking possession of it for the purpose of improving it. The 14th article of Gayoso's regulations allows one year, and those regulations for such a purpose might operate on anterior grants to require possession to be taken within one year after their publication. The remonstrance of Delassus shows that the object of the decree of concession was to give immediate possession.

If I am mistaken in my supposition in relation to the laws which, under the royal order of 1770, and the decree of 1798, exclusively regulated the grant of lands in Louisiana, and also in my supposition in relation to the effect of the royal regulation of 1754, upon the earlier laws on the subject of grants of the royal domain, and that these earlier laws, contrary to what I have supposed, were extended to Louisiana, or gave authority to the governor or intendant to grant, and that we are therefore to recur to those laws to ascertain the granting power, we shall find that they authorize grants under limitations and conditions less favorable to the Missouri claimants than the regulations of O'Reilly do.

Those earlier laws, so far as they are contained in White's Collection, appear to have been arranged in the collection of the laws of the Indies, from which those in White's Collection were extracted, under heads and titles, with a view to bring together those under the same head and title which relate to the same subject-matter

Those, for instance, in White's Collection, from page 31 to 34, under titles 1, 2, 3, liber 4, relate to discoveries, and contain the provisions which point out the several modes of proceeding in that matter.

Those in pages 35 and 34 of White's Collection, under 5, liber 4, relate exclusively to the settlement of new places, and the founding of towns or cities in new places, and regulate the mode of proceeding in that behalf, and the quantity of land which shall be granted as the inducement and reward to be given for such enterprises.

Those laws under title 7, liber 4, pages 36, 37, 38, White's Collection, relate to the same subject, authorize grants with the same view, but provide another rule, or principle, upon which the distribution of land which they authorize to be granted to the first founders or settlers shall be made.

Those under title 2 (12) liber 4, pages 38 and following, of White's Collection, relate to the sale, composition, and distribution of lands, lots, and waters.

The gratuitous grants authorized under this title, with the exception of those authorized by law 4, of this title, are authorized to be made, not as inducement to the founding of new towns or settlements, but as inducements to settle on new lands in settlements or places already established.

In every instance of a grant authorized by the laws of these several titles, as an inducement or reward offered to the founders of new settlements or towns, or to the settlers on new lands, in settlements which have been established, the grant is upon the condition of a settlement and improvement of the land.

Law 6, of title 5, (White's Collection, 34,) establishes the terms and conditions upon which contracts for the founding of towns or cities shall be made. It authorizes a grant of "four square leagues" to be made to the founder when he shall have complied with the contract prescribed in that law; which contract is to require, among other things, that the settlement is to comprise within a prescribed time, thirty heads of families, each of whom shall possess the property in (the new place) which is prescribed in the law.

Laws 9 and 10, of the same title, (White's Collection, 35,) and law 7, of title 7, liber 4, (White's Collection, 36,) show that the founder who is to receive a grant of "four leagues square," when he shall have complied with his contract, is to grant out of these "four leagues square" the lands necessary to reward those who enlist with him to form the new settlement.

Law 9, of title 5, referred to, prescribes that the person who contracts with the government, &c., to make the new settlement, "shall do so likewise with each individual who enlists to join the settlement," and that "he will bind himself to grant building lots in the new settlement, together with pastures and lands for cultivation in a number of peoneas and caballerios, proportionate to the quantity of land which each settler shall obligate himself to improve, provided it shall not exceed, nor shall he grant more to each than five peoneas or three caballerios, according to the express distinction, difference, and measurement, prescribed in the laws of the title, concerning the distribution of lands, lots, and waters." This title, concerning the distribution of lands, lots, and waters, is in page 28, and following, in White's Collection. The measure of the peonea, as declared in law 1, of the title referred to, (White's Collection, 38,) is "a lot of fifty feet front and one hundred feet deep, one hundred fanegas of arable, fit for the cultivation of wheat or barley, two huebras, a measure equal to as much land as a yoke of oxen can plough in a day, of land for a garden, and eight for planting other trees which grow in any lands, with pasture sufficient for ten breeding sows, twenty cows, five breeding mares, one hundred ewes, and twenty goats." The caballerios "is a lot of one hundred feet front and two hundred feet deep, and equal in all other respects to five peoneas." A fanega of land is about equal to an acre; a fanega contains several huebras. The quantity of land in a peonea for the cultivation of wheat, barley, corn, and for garden, and for planting trees, would not, in all, exceed one hundred and fifteen acres. The quantity to be allowed for pasture for the number of animals mentioned in the law, is indefinite, and would be varied according to the capacity of the soil; the average quantity would not probably exceed sixty acres for pasture, which would make the peonea contain one hundred and seventy-five acres; the caballerios, being equal to five peoneas, would contain about eight hundred and seventy-five acres. As, therefore, by law 9, title 5, of lib. 4, (White's Collection, 35,) not exceeding five peoneas or three caballerios are to be granted to any one, and as the number of peoneas and caballerios within these quantities are to be granted "proportionate to the quantity of land which each settler shall obligate himself to improve;" and with a reference also to the express distinction, difference, and measurement, prescribed in the laws of the title concerning the distribution of lands, lots, and waters. Adverting again to law 1 of this title, (White's Collection, 38,) it is there stated that, "in order to promote the zeal of our subjects in the discovery and settlement of the Indies, and that they may live in that ease and comfort which we desire them to enjoy, it is our will that there be distributed among them houses, lots, lands, caballerios, and peoneas, to all those who shall repair to settle on new lands in the villages and places which shall be designated to them by the governor of the new settlement, making a distinction between gentlemen or esquires (escuderos) and caballerios (peoneas) and those of inferior grade or merit, and graduating such grants according to their qualifications and services," &c. It would appear, according to the distinction of this law, to which we are referred, and the rule of graduating the grants, which it prescribes, that there would be granted to laborers, and to those of inferior grade and merit, between one and five peoneas, inclusive, according to his services, merit, and the quantity which he should obligate himself to improve; and to gentlemen or esquires, from one to three caballerios, according to his merit or service, and the quantity he should obligate himself to improve. The greatest amount thus authorized to gentlemen being two thousand six hundred and twenty-five acres, no matter how great their merit or services, or means to improve; and the greatest quantity to be granted to laborers, about eight hundred and seventy-five acres.

This limitation upon the size of the grant has been overlooked by the Supreme Court. Had it been observed by them, they could not have said that there appeared to be no public restraint upon the granting power of the governor—"no limitation restricting the power of the governors to a league square in their grant."

The founder of the new town or settlement, who makes the contract for that purpose with the government, in pursuance of the provisions of the law 6, of title 5, of lib. 4, after having granted to those who enlisted with him to form the settlement, the quantity to which they would be entitled, would retain a considerable part of the grant; but his liabilities under his contract, should he fail to comply with it, are made by the terms of the law very onerous.

This law 6, of title 5, it should be observed, prescribes the terms and conditions of contracts to be made for the founding of new settlements, &c., and the quantity to be granted where the new settlement shall comprise thirty heads of families. Law 7, of the same title, provides that a proportionate quantity shall be granted when the settlement consists of more or less than thirty heads of families.

Law 10, of the same title, authorizes a contract with particular individuals who shall unite for the purpose of founding a new settlement.

The laws of title 7, lib. 4, direct another mode of distributing the lands or tract granted by agreement to the founder of a settlement.

Law 7, of title 7, lib. 4, (White's Collection, 36,) provides that "the tract of territory granted by agreement to the founder of a new settlement shall be distributed in the following manner: they shall in the first place lay out what shall be necessary for the site of the town and sufficient liberties, (exidas,) and abundant pasture for the cattle, to be owned by the inhabitants, and as much besides for that which shall belong to the town, (propias.) The balance of the tract shall then be divided into four parts, one to be selected by the person obligated to form the settlement, and the remaining three parts to be divided in equal portions among the settlers."

Law 11, of the same title, provides that "the lots shall be distributed among the settlers by lot, beginning with those adjoining the main square;" and that the remainder should be reserved to the King, to be by him given as rewards to new settlers, or otherwise according to his pleasure.

Laws 13 and 14, of the same title, make further reservations of commons; and the latter law contains further provisions as to the manner of distribution, and after providing for the distribution of lands to the first settlers, provides further that "the remainder shall remain vacant, that the King may grant them to new settlers."

The provisions of the laws 11 and 14, of title 7, lib. 4, which reserve to the King the lots undisposed of, and the lands undisposed of to the first settlers, to be given to new settlers, as distinguished from first settlers, will assist us in understanding the provisions of law 1, of title 2, (12,) lib. 4, (White's Compilation, 38,) which declares that, "in order to promote the zeal of our subjects in the discovery and settlement of the Indies, &c., it is our will that there be distributed among them lots, lands, and caballerios and peoneas to all those who shall repair to settle on new lands in the villages and place which shall be designated to them by the governor of the new settlement, making a distinction between gentlemen or esquires (escuderos) and laborers, (peonas,) and those of inferior grade and merit, and graduating such grants according to their qualifications and services, in order that they may attend to the working of said land, and the breeding of stock," &c.

The law 1 of this title of 12, (which by mistake in White's Collection is stated to be title 2, as the paging given of the work from which the laws are extracted shows,) so far as it authorizes gratuitous grants, authorizes them in settlements which have been established. The provisions of the law being in favor of those who shall repair to settle on new lands in the villages and places which shall be designated to them by the governor of the new settlement, presupposes the settlement formed to which they are to repair. The provisions of the laws 11 and 14, of title 7, which reserved lots and lands vacant, to be given to such new settlers or to be given as "rewards to new settlers," concur to sustain this construction.

The gratuitous grants, therefore, authorized by the laws of title 12, being authorized in districts previously settled, and as an inducement to settle new lands in such districts, would reasonably be less than those grants which had been given to the first settlers of such districts, who, encountering greater difficulties than those who should follow them, would require greater inducements as their reward therefor.

Another reason for believing that the gratuitous grants authorized by law 1, of this title 12, were to be of less extent than those authorized to be given to the first founders of a settlement, and were not to be given with a view to the founding of settlements, but as inducements to repair to settle new lands in established settlements, is, that the laws of the same title which follow, (pages 41, 42, 43, White's Collection,) relate to the sale and composition of lands, and refer to the condition of a populated country. The laws of this title afford an instance of a system of gratuitous grants, sales, and compromises, operating over the same country at the same time, not dissimilar to the system prescribed by Morales's regulations. The 800 arpens prescribed by Morales, might have been considered by him about equal to the caballerios of the laws of the Indies.

Law 3, of title 12, (White's Collection, 39,) shows, that the grants authorized to be given to the new settlers by law 1, of the same title, were to be proportionate to the means to improve, &c., and consequently not large. It provides that "the persons who shall accept caballerios, or peoneas shall obligate themselves to divide and clear the arable lands, and to work and plant them, and to stock with cattle those which are destined for pastures within a limited time, divided into terms, and declaring what is to be done in each, under the penalty of forfeiting their grants of lots and lands, and besides a certain number of maravedas for the republic; which obligation shall be in due form, and with good and sufficient sureties.

Law 9, of title 5, which relates to the founding of new places, requires also that an obligation to improve shall be entered into by those who enlist to form the new settlement, but it does not appear that the obligation required so much on the part of the founder. The establishment of the new place probably entered into the consideration of his grant, as a part of the consideration thereof. In relation to the gratuities authorized by title 12, in established settlements, the cultivation required was the inducement to the grant.

Law 11 of the same title (White's Collection, 40) declares that "all the settlers and housekeepers to whom distributions of lands shall be made, shall, within the three months which shall be stipulated, take possession of the same, designate their confines and boundaries, by planting in the proper seasons willows and other trees," &c., "under the penalty, if after the expiration of said term they shall not have planted the aforesaid boundaries, of forfeiting the land, that the same may be granted to some other settlers: this shall be done not only with regard to the lands, but likewise with regard to the settlements and improvements which they may hold and be possessed of within the limits of the towns and villages." In explanation of this forfeiture being made to extend to the property possessed in the towns and villages, as well as to the lands which should not be taken possession of, it is to be observed that the caballerios and peoneas, each of them consisted of a lot of a certain number of feet in front, by a certain number in depth, which were in the villages or towns: that the inhabitants generally resided in villages, &c., and the forfeiture was intended to include the whole peonea or caballerio which had been granted, if the land was not taken possession of, &c., within the specified time.

It would follow, from the provisions made on the subject of gratuities, the object of the gratuity, &c., that not more than one gratuitous grant would be made to the same person, until the conditions of the first at least had been complied with. The provisions of law 2, of title 12, of liber 4, (White's Collection, 39,) more particularly authorize this opinion. The provisions of law 1, title 2, (12,) liber 4, (White's Collection, 38,) require a residence on the part of those who have obtained grants, of four years, &c., to authorize them to sell their lands.

Thus it appears, that the earlier laws of the Indies, so far as these are given in White's Collection, do not authorize grants to settlers, even where these settlers are the original founders of new settlemenis, or places of greater extent than five peoneas or three caballerios. That this is the limitation upon the extent of the grant to such settlers, no matter what their "services" or "merit," or the difficulties attending the establishment of the new place, either arising from its remoteness from settled districts, or hostility from the Indians. It shall not exceed this quantity, says the law, but it may be less, for the grant is to be graduated under this quantity to the rank, and merit, and services, and means of the settler, preserving the distinction between gentlemen or esquires, and laborers. With all these circumstances to increase the size of the grant, it is limited to laborers to a quantity between 175 and 875 acres, and to esquires to a quantity between 875 and 2,625 acres, to be graduated between these amounts according to their merits and means to cultivate it, &c.

Those grants authorized by law 1, title 2, (12,) (White's Collection, 38,) which are to be made in districts of country previously settled, would, as I apprehend, be more restricted, and limited to one peonea, or one caballerio, except where particular merit, means, or services, appeared to demand one of greater extent.

Another reason for believing that the gratuitous grants authorized by the last-mentioned title are to be made in settled districts of country, is, that the application to be made for those grants is to be made to the viceroys or governors, who shall be thereto authorized by the King, and that the viceroys and governors, so authorized, are required to distribute the lands by the advice of the cabildo (council) of the cities or villages, (see law 5, title 12, liber 4, White's Collection, 39, law 8, title 12, liber 4, White's Collection, 40,) referred to in cases of applications being made for lots or lands in any city or village where the audiencies reside.

This law 8 also shows the importance, the form and consideration, which was to be given to these applications for gratuitous grants. The petition was first to be addressed to the cabildo, who, having considered the same, appointed two deputy regidors to inform the viceroy or president of the opinion of the cabildo, which having been seen by the viceroy, president, and deputies, the order for the grant was to be signed by all in the presence of the clerk of the cabildo, who entered the same in the record of the cabildo. This form or mode of proceeding is directed where the lands or lots solicited were in the cities or villages where the audiencies should reside. Where the lands asked for were more remote from the residences of the audiencies, and of course from viceroys, presidents, &c., the same personal communication between the officers would be inconvenient, and the opinion of the cabildo would probably he transmitted, but it is to be inferred that the application was to undergo equal scrutiny.

The "four square leagues" which are authorized to be granted to thirty heads of families by the laws of title 5, for founding a new place or city, or which is authorized to be granted to the founder of such new place, and by him to be distributed, as required by law 9 of that title, is to be understood as stated in the law. One square league would contain 7,056 arpens, and four square leagues four times that quantity, 28,224 arpens, which, being distributed as required in law 7 of title 7, liber 4, (36, White's Collection,) that is to say, reserving for the site of the town, for liberties, pastures for the cattle of the inhabitants, and for commons for the town, and subtracting such quantity from the four square leagues, say 10,000 acres, the founder's one fourth from the residue being also subtracted, would leave to each of the other thirty-nine heads of families, the residue being equally divided among them, about 700 arpens.

But if, instead of this equal distribution, the distribution should be made by graduating the grant to the merit and means of the first settler, as directed in title 5, the result would be as I have before stated.

The Supreme Court countenances the opinion, that, if there is a limitation upon the extent of the grant, there is no limitation to the number of grants which may be made to the same person. They say: "The objection drawn by the United States [meaning the counsel of the United States] from the concession made on the 24th of January, 1798, is not, we think, entitled to more weight. The eighth regulation made by O'Reilly, is not, that no individual shall receive grants for more land than one league square, but that no grant shall exceed one league square; the words of the regulation do not forbid different grants to the same person; and so far as our information goes, it has never been so construed," &c. It does not appear that the grant on the 24th of January, has been established, and the records show that it was rejected by the board of commissioners for reasons on the sufficiency of which we do not now decide. But it is conclusive, that the concession of the 24th of January was subsequent to that of the 8th, and consequently could not affect it. (9th Peters, 154.)

This doctrine, that the words of the regulation do not forbid different grants to the same person; that the regulation which declares that no grant shall exceed a league square," &c., "is not that no individual shall receive grants for more land than one league square," deserves to be examined. It occurs to me to be one which authorizes that to be done indirectly which is forbidden to be done directly. It occurs to me, also, to be a doctrine which would render nugatory all the limitations which the law has placed upon the extent of the grant; that it loses sight of the rules by which the extent of the grant is to be graduated, and the reasons upon which these rules were established.

The grants were to be in proportion to the means of the cultivator; in proportion to the improvement he proposes to make. A grant having been given of an extent proportionate to the improvement proposed to be made, and to the means to make it, it had occurred to me that no one would contend that a grant of the same amount, in consideration of the same means, and the same and not any additional proposed improvement, could be given, and repeatedly given, and multiplied, without a violation of the intention of the law. What could have been the object of the limitation of the grant, in proportion to his means, if it was also intended that he might have two or a dozen grants, each of which should be equal to his means.

The same reasoning applies to the grants authorized in consideration of the cattle which may be possessed by the applicant, for which see 9th and 10th articles of O'Reilly's regulations, White's Collection, 205, and the 10th article of the regulation of Morales, 211. O'Reilly's regulations provide, that "no land in the Opelousas, Attakapas, and Nachitoches, shall exceed one league in front by one league in depth; bnt when the land granted shall not have that depth, a league and a half in front may be granted, by a half-league in depth."

"To obtain in the Opelousas, Attakapas, and Nachitoches, a grant of forty-two arpens in front by forty-two arpens in depth, the applicant must make appear that he is possessed of one hundred head of tame cattle, some horses and sheep, and two slaves to look after them—a proportion which shall always be observed of grants to be made of greater extent than that declared in the preceding article."

Why give this proportion between the grant and the number of cattle, but for the purpose of directing with certainty the quantity of land which the applicant should receive in consideration of the cattle he possessed. The intention appears to me to be, that the applicant should have granted to him only the quantity of land proportioned to his cattle as directed. The rule would be nugatory, rendered void of object and sense, if, after the applicant had received one grant, in proportion to his cattle, grants of the same extent might be multiplied in consideration of the identical cattle.

Morales directs, in his regulations, that in the posts of Opelousas and Attakapas, the greatest quantity of land that can be conceded, shall be one league in front by the same quantity in depth, and where forty arpens cannot be obtained in depth, a half a league may be granted; and for a general rule it is established, that to obtain, in said posts, a half a league in front, the petitioner must be owner of one hundred head of cattle, some horses and sheep, and two slaves, and also in proportion for a larger tract, without the power, however, of exceeding the quantity before mentioned.

It is to be observed, that eighty-four arpens by eighty-four makes a league, and consequently, that forty-two by forty-two arpens would make but one fourth of the area of a larger square; to obtain a league square by tho rule given by O'Reilly, the applicant should possees four hundred head of tame cattle, &c.

The same rule, I presume, was intended to be continued under the regulations of Morales. Now, the regulations do not, in every instance, use the words, "no grant," &c., upon which phraseology, I presume, the Supreme Court hang the question. The first article of O'Reilly's regulation says: "There shall be granted to each newly-arrived family," &c., "six or eight arpens in front (according to the means of the cultivator) by forty arpens in depth," &c.; (see the 9th and 10th articles of Gayoso's regulations;) directs that to every new settler answering the foregoing description, and married, "there shall be granted two hundred arpens of land," &c.; "to every emigrant, &c., there shall be granted two hundred arpens," &c. The first article of Gayoso's regulations provides that "if the new settler comes from another post in the province, where he has obtained a grant of land, no other grant shall be made to him; and if he undertakes to fix himself down, he must buy land, or produce my special permission for the grant," &c.

The 1st articles of Morales's regulation provides that "to each newly-arrived family," &c. "there shall be granted, for once, if it is on the bank of the Mississippi, four, six, or eight arpens in front on the river by the ordinary depth of forty arpens, and if at any other place the quantity he shall be judged capable to cultivate," &c., "understanding that the concession is never to exceed 800 acres."

All these provisions evince the intention to be to designate the quantity of land which each applicant shall be entitled to; whether he is to obtain that quantity by one or more grants is immaterial. The difference between the intimation of the court, therefore, and that which occurs to me to be the true construction, would appear to be this: that the Supreme Court consider the quantity of land in the mind of the framer of the regulations immaterial, and that the prohibition was levelled, not against granting any quantity of land that the applicant might solicit, but against his obtaining more than a certain quantity by any one grant; whereas, in the opinion I entertain, the quantity of land to be granted to any one individual was exclusively in the mind of the framer of the regulations when he framed the rules by which he intended the extent of the grant should be graduated; and that he did not deem it material whether he obtained that quantity by one or more grants. The provision of Morales, "that there shall be granted for once," &c., is emphatic, and that such grant would not again be made to the same party, as I should render it, even after the performance of the conditions of the first grant. In the 10th article of Morales, the phrase is, "the greatest quantity of land that can be conceded, shall be one league in front, by the same quantity in depth."

The negative form of the phrase in the 9th article of O'Reilly's regulations, that no grant shall exceed, &c., was probably occasioned by the circumstance that, in the districts to which this article refers, larger grants than a league square had been made under the French government. Morales, in copying the provisions of this article, has also adopted the negative form of the phrase.

The records of the General Land Office furnish evidence that, under the French government, a very few grants did exceed a league square.

J. H. PECK.

Hon. E. A. BROWN, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

ST. CHARLES, April 18, 1836.

SIR: I am requested by Judge Peck to enclose to you the accompanying papers, in compliance with the call on him for proofs of fraud in the grants made by the Spanish government in this country, &c., and to inform you, that from much sickness and interruption during the winter, he had been unable to further comply with the call when he left St. Louis, to hold court at Jefferson city, on the first Monday of March last. The ride to Jefferson and back, thus far, during the inclement weather we had in this country, brought on him a most violent attack of sickness, under which he has been languishing, several times at the point of death, until the present time. He is now barely convalescent, and will not be able to attend to business for weeks yet.

I have been with him for a week, during which he has suffered anxiety, on account of the non-compliance with the call, and requested me to address this letter of explanation to you, with the papers referred to, in their unfinished state.

Respectfully, your obedient,

DAVID BARTON.

Hon. E. A. BROWN, Commissioner of General Land Office.

With my communication, which preceded the last one, I forwarded two concessions made to Antoine Saugrain; one dated in 1799, the other in 1797. The former for 800 arpens, the latter for 20,000 arpens. The recital in the petition, for the former of these concessions, showing, conclusively, that, at its date, 1799, the concession for 20,000, dated in 1797, had not been issued, and consequently, was not issued by Trudeau, by whom it purports to have been issued, while he was authorized to issue concessions, he having left the government prior to the concession of 1799. The facts stated in the same petition rendering it furthermore very improbable that Saugrain had even arrived in the province as early as the date of the concession for 20,000 arpens.

In the communication, to which I refer, I expressed the opinion that both of these concessions were fraudulent.

I have before me a list of the surveys, exclusive of those under 300 arpens, which were executed under the Spanish government. The correctness of the list is sworn to by two of the clerks of the office of the surveyor of Illinois and Missouri. It contains the dates of the concessions, and of the surveys, as these appear upon the record of surveys, the quantity of each survey, and the officer by whom, and the person to whom, the concession was issued.

It appears by this list of surveys, that, during the month of February, 1804, seventy-seven concessions, each for 800 arpens, were surveyed; this number of seventy-seven concessions, for 800 arpens each, were surveyed in the short month of February, the most inclement season of the year, exclusive of a great number of concessions, both larger and smaller. This number of these 800-arpent concessions, I should state, were surveyed during the month mentioned, within the dependency of the post of St. Louis, exclusive of the post of Madrid and its dependencies, which were also within the jurisdiction of the surveyor of Upper Louisiana.

The transfer of the possession of Upper Louisiana, it will be recollected, was made on the 4th of March, 1804; the surrender of the province having previously been made on the 20th of December, at New Orleans, by the commissioner of the French Republic.

A considerable number of concessions for 800 arpens, purport to have been made also during the months of December and January preceding the transfer of possession in Upper Louisiana. The concessions surveyed, during the three months mentioned, purport to have been issued, the great majority of these of 800 arpens, in the years 1799 and 1800, and some few of them in 1801, and a fewer number in 1802, and one or two in 1803.

How should it occur, that just at the close of the Spanish government, when the treaty had become known, the province had been surrendered, and the possession was passing to the government of the United States, that so great a proportion of the concessions, which were surveyed, should be for the precise quantity of 800 arpens? The proportion surveyed within the last month of the Spanish government, between the concessions for 800 arpens, and that of any other number, is in favor of the former more than nine to one. I mean the number of concessions for 800 arpens, surveyed during the last month of the Spanish government, is more than in the proportion of nine for this quantity, for one of any other quantity. It is to be observed that the tenth section of Gayoso's regulations, and the first section of the regulations of Morales, limit concessions, except in parts of Opelousas and Attakapas, to 800 arpens. I think it eminently probable, that those who issued, and those who obtained, those concessions of 800 arpens, were under the apprehension that the government of the United States might adopt those regulations as the rule by which to test the validity of the concessions; and, in that event, they imagined that as there would not be a palpable excess of quantity, they would be likely to pass the ordeal to which the claims might be subjected. It is remarkable that many others, besides Antoine Saugrain, obtained a small concession of 800 arpens, besides a large one; neither the small nor the large one having been obtained with a view to the possession or occupancy of the land, neither the one nor the other surveyed until near the close of the government, although the date of the concession is many years anterior.

The smaller concession of Saugrain, does not appear to have been surveyed until the 30th of January, 1804; and although it has been confirmed to John A. Scits, as assignee of Saugrain, as well as a league square of the concession of 20,000, neither of them had been occupied or improved. These two claims, you will perceive by the records in the General Land Office, are reported by the recorder of land titles as confirmed to the extent mentioned. In the column of the report appropriated to the notices of possession, habitation, and cultivation, none is stated in relation to either of these claims. The deed of assignment to Scits bears date the 18th of October, 1803, although the survey is made in 1804, and purports to be made in the presence of Saugrain, and is stated as made for him. This assignment before the survey, or purporting to be before it. The survey being made for the original party, no possession having been taken of the land, to which may be added the assumption, on the part of the lieutenant governor, to grant the land to the party and his heirs, and the vagueness of the location of the land in the petition for the concession; for the point of the Missouri is a name applicable to a large extent of land between the rivers Missouri and Mississippi, at their junction. The petition, moreover, appears to make almost too strong a case for the occasion. No doubt Dr. Saugrain, had he been desirous to cultivate a farm, would have obtained a concession, and possibly of the extent of 800 arpens. But he was, as I understand, a practising physician; he lived in the city of St. Louis; and, without doubt, never intended to practise medicine, at that day, in the point of the Missouri. I have said more in relation to so unimportant a concession than of itself it merits, for the purpose of making those suggestions which are applicable to others.

In the list of surveys before me, I see thirty-five of those concessions for 800 arpens each, surveyed for Louis Labeaume and Santiago de St. Vrain, as assignees of the thirty-five persons to whom these concessions purport to have been issued. The survey purporting to be made on the 20th of February, 1804, and the days following. The certificate of survey being made on the 28th of March, 1804; also six concessions for the same quantity of 800 arpens, each, surveyed for Santiago de St. Vrain, on the 11th of February, 1804, as assignee of the six persons to whom these concessions were issued; also one concession for 1,600 arpens, surveyed for Santiago de St. Vrain, as assignee, on the 10th of February, 1804; also two other concessions for 800 arpens each, surveyed on the 19th of January, 1804, for Santiago de St. Vrain, as assignee; also another concession for 2,500 arpens, surveyed for Louis Labeaume, as assignee, on the 14th of February, 1804; also two other tracts for 800 arpens each, surveyed for Louis Labeaume, as assignee, on the 4th of January, 1804; also five other concessions, surveyed for Santiago de St. Vrain, as assignee, on the 6th and 7th of January, 1804; also one tract of 4,000 arpens, surveyed for Santiago de St. Vrain, on the 14th of February, 1804; the concession in this instance having been made in his favor, purporting to have been issued the 18th of November, 1799. Louis Labeaume appears to have had also a previous concession for 8,000 arpens, the survey and date of which purport to have been much earlier; also a small one for 374 arpens; also another concession for 4,200 arpens, issued the 28th of February, 1800, and surveyed the 25th of December, 1803.

Santiago de St. Vrain likewise appears, by said list, to have had a previous concession jointly with Antoine Soulard for 3,675 arpens.

There appears, also, by the same list, to have been ten tracts for 800 arpens each, surveyed on the 13th of February, 1804, for Albert Tison, as assignee; also one tract for 7,056 arpens, surveyed for him on the 15th of February, 1804, purporting to have been conceded to him on the 17th of December, 1800; also one other tract for 800 arpens, surveyed for the same person on the 16th of February, 1804, having been conceded on the 5th of August, 1799.

Six concessions for 800 arpens each appear, by the same list, to have been surveyed for Santiago Rankin, as assignee, on the 12th of February, 1804; also one tract, for the same quantity, surveyed for the same person, on the 28th of March, 1803.

Suit was instituted before me to obtain the confirmation, among others, of many of the identical 800-arpent claims above mentioned. I have turned to the papers in a number of the cases. Some of the assignments appear to have been made but a short time before the date of the survey, others purport to have been made during the previous year, &c.

The consideration expressed in the instrument of sale in a number of instances is, that the assignee should incur the expense of the survey, and should then reconvey to the assignor 200 arpens of the 800; no other consideration being mentioned. In other instances the sale purports to have been made in consideration of money paid. In the instances of sale where the consideration was the payment of the expenses of the survey, and the undertaking to reconvey 200 of the 800 arpens after the survey should be made, the parties appear to have lost sight of the necessity of obtaining the title from the intendant, and have made no stipulation in relation to the trouble and expenses which might be incurred on that account.

But in relation to these 800-arpent concessions, there are two remarkable facts which should be considered with reference to each other. The first is, that the surveys made for these assignees, were made by including a number of these 800-arpent concessions in the same survey, no more than the out boundary line which includes them having been run. Thirty-five of these tracts are thus thrown together in one survey; ten in another, &c., &c., of which instances are to be seen in the record of the case of Wherry and others vs. the United States, where plats of several of these surveys appear, together with the notes of the surveyor; in these notes or certificates the surveyor states that the out boundary line only had been run, but that the tracts were separated by dotted lines of intersection upon the plats, with the names of the vendors upon their respective tracts, which he states was to facilitate both to the vendor and to the vendee the knowledge of the conditions contained in the instruments of sale, intending to refer no doubt to the stipulation for the reconveyance of 200 arpens, &c. The other remarkable fact is, that these concessions call for no specific lands, nor do the petitions by which they are solicited; they ask but for lands of the royal domain. It will be perceived that if these 800-arpent concessions had called for specific lands—had been for lands which had really been selected by those who applied for the concessions with a view to a settlement upon, and an improvement of them, they could not have been surveyed in this manner, unless the applicants had previously consulted the plan of such a settlement, of which there can be no pretence that they did; that they did not settle them, that they sold them in the manner mentioned, and other circumstances connected with their residence and means, which we shall presently advert to, rebut the presumption of such previous concert with a view to a settlement of the concessions in question. I am induced to believe that the petitions, for these concessions, thus asking for lands of the royal domain, were framed, and the concessions made, with a view to the sale, or rather assignment afterward made, and the manner of the survey which has been described. The consideration of the assignment which I have mentioned, countenances this opinion; so do the facts stated by Mr. Leduc in his testimony to be found in the record of the case of Wherry and others, before mentioned. He says, that "he was acquainted with most of the persons whose names appear on three several plats of tracts of land, of which Louis Labeaume, Jacques de St. Vrain, (in Spanish, Santiago de St. Vrain,) and Albert Tison, appear to be the assignees of the said persons; said plats being marked in tracts of 800 arpens each; that, about the year 1800, and before and since, said assignees were generally villagers, with the exception of about six; and that many of them cultivated the common field lots; says that some of the excepted number were farmers; that since some of the villagers have removed to their common field lots, particularly those of St. Ferdinand." It cannot be supposed that these villagers, thus cultivating each of them a small lot in one common field, had the means necessary under the regulations to obtain a tract of 800 arpens. The earlier grants on this list of surveys, to which I have referred, a majority of them are for a much smaller quantity, and between three, and five, or six hundred arpens. The actual surveys, also, under three hundred arpens, all of which are excluded from this list, being considerable in number.

The mode of surveying to which I have referred, and of obtaining assignments with a view to such survey, was reserved for the latter period of the Spanish government. It appears to me to connect itself with the limitation of the quantity of the concession which is contained in the regulations, both of Gayoso and of Morales. So many concessions, supposing them fraudulent, could scarcely have been obtained for the precise number of 800 arpens, unless the application for that quantity had been influenced by the limitation imposed in the regulations; and if obtained under the influence of such limitation being so imposed, how forcibly would it prove that those regulations had, within the knowledge of those concerned in these concessions, really constituted the rule to the conceding officer.

I shall advert to a few other cases where concessions were obtained for 800 arpens, and where the same persons obtained larger ones, all being fraudulent, as I think, beyond doubt; one appears to have been surveyed for Marie P. Leduc, 24th of February, 1804, purporting to be issued the 5th of August, 1799, for 800 arpens. Another for the same person, surveyed the 18th of February, 1804, purporting to have been issued the 7th of January, 1800, for the quantity of 15,000 arpens.

One for 800 arpens appears to have been surveyed for David Delaunay, (in Spanish, Delaunia,) on the 3d of January, 1804, and to have been issued the 18th of January, 1800; and another to the same person, purporting to have been surveyed the 25th of December, 1803, and issued the 9th of May, 1800, for a league square, 7,056 arpens; other instances occur which I shall not particularize. He who will read the petition of David Delaunay for the concession of the 18th of January, 1800, for 800 arpens, will not believe that he could have applied for that of a league square on the 9th of May following; and the same remark is applicable to the petition for the concession to Mr. Leduc for 800 arpens, purporting to be issued the 5th of August, 1799. They would not imagine that on the 7th of January, 1800, Mr. Leduc would apply for 15,000 arpens And the same remark is applicable to the petition of Albert Tison, for his concession of August, 1799, for 800 arpens. They would not believe that in December, 1800, he should have applied for 7,056 arpens.

With the knowledge I have of the history of those three persons, and the little correspondence which is to be perceived between the facts stated in the petition for the concessions (which facts are partly vouched for in the concessions) and that history would furnish a ground upon which alone those concessions might be impeached. Mr. Leduc was a single man until August, 1802, notwithstanding the recital of his numerous family, which is contained in his concessions. Independent of all considerations connected with the actual vocation of the other two claimants, there is enough upon the face of these concessions upon which to impeach them. They call for no specific lands, but for royal domain. None of the concessions of these claimants were located until after the treaty had become known, and then on the north side of the Missouri river, where they, at that day, had no thought of immediate settlement. But as I cannot believe that the large and the small concessions to either of these claimants can be both read, with a belief in the genuineness of either of them, I shall leave them with the remark, that the concessions to Delaunay and to Tison, for a league square, have been confirmed, and that a league square of that to Mr. Leduc has also been confirmed.

There are other instances of assignments of concessions where the survey was made after the assignment, but in the name of the assignor, and others again where no survey has ever been made.

By my list of surveys, a concession to Francis Tison appears to have been surveyed the 6th of February, 1804, having been issued according to its date, the 15th of October, 1799. Although it appears to have been surveyed in the name of Tison, it appears by the petition of Pierre Choteau, presented to me for its confirmation, that it had been assigned by deed to him in January, prior to the date of the survey. Another petition presented to me by the same party, for the confirmation of another claim to him, as assignee of Etienne St. Pierre, by deed or instrument of writing of the 3d of January, 1804, founded upon a concession of the 8th of October, 1799, issued to said St. Pierre, which is thus described by boundaries, as follows: "The first line to begin at the foot of the hills below the mouth of the river Bergen, following the same for about a league, more or less, from the point of beginning: 2d. From said point by another line, to extend to the foot of the hills opposite l'isle Maline, (island Maline,) so as to take in a part of the course of the river and the bottom, the superficies to be included in a circular angle, closed by both lines above described, and the third line to be formed by the Missouri river;" said tract being further described as situated on the right bank of the Missouri river, sixty-six miles above its mouth. In this concession the lieutenant governor grants to St. Pierre and his heirs, the above lands, being satisfied that he possesses the means required for the improvement of them. The lieutenant governor in the concession of 10,000 arpens to Tison, above-mentioned, vouches, in like manner, for his means to improve the 10,000 arpens, as the petition presented before me states. Mr. Choteau appears, by the petitions presented to me, to have been the assignee of sundry other claims, to which I shall not advert. In addition to the many claims of which this claimant is assignee, there appears to have been a concession made to him, (by his name in Spanish, Pedro Choteau,) of 7,056 arpens, surveyed the 17th of December, 1803, purporting to be issued the 8th of January, 1798; also, another concession made to him for 30,000 arpens, purporting to be issued on the 20th of November, 1799. There are many other instances of assignments bearing date during the time of the Spanish government, to sundry other persons to whom I shall not refer, having referred to those above-mentioned for the purpose of subjoining a few remarks applicable alike to all of them, where the assignment was made prior to any improvement.

According to what appears to me as a reasonable supposition, assignments could only have been made under the Spanish government, where there had been an actual improvement, which would offer to the purchaser a motive to obtain the possession of a place improved, or where the land conceded might, for particular reasons, asising from its locality or other causes, be desirable to a purchaser. But in either case of assignment, as such assignments were forbidden, the circumstances of the assignee must be such as to induce the intendant to believe that the conditions of the grant would be complied with; otherwise it is not to be supposed that he would approve the sale, or recognize the assignee as having any right to the grant upon such assignment. The assignee's circumstances, therefore, must be such as would have obtained for him the grant of the lands assigned, whether he had obtained them by assignment or not.

The intendant, under the law, would look to the circumstances of the party, and not to the assignment, in deciding upon the propriety of issuing the grant. The assignment would operate only as against the assignor, so that the assignee, in obtaining a grant for the land assigned, would not be chargeable with interfering with his rights; and this would be the only effect of the assignment before the intendant. If the improvement had been made, which would have been required as the condition of the grant, the intendant, of course, could have no objection to approving the sale, and issuing the title to the assignee. Then, according to this mode of considering the rights of these assignees, can it be supposed that they would have obtained a grant for all the lands of which they were assignees, in addition to that which had been directly conceded to them? It would appear, that as assignments were prohibited, the fact that an applicant for a grant was assignee of all or of a part of the lands for which he was an applicant for the grant, would place him on more disadvantageous ground with the intendant than if the whole amount had been conceded directly to him. Certainly the inquiry with the intendant would be, whether he was authorized by the law to issue the grant to the party for the quantity applied for; whether any part of that quantity was held as assignee or otherwise; and if he should be authorized to issue the grant for such quantity, the further inquiry would be, whether the quantity exceeded the means of the applicant to improve it; or, in other words, whether the applicant's means authorized the grant for the quantity. It cannot be supposed that the assignee would obtain the grant exempt from the condition of cultivation. In fact, the assignee would take the assignment, subject to the condition of cultivation, subject to the objection of the intendant to such assignment, and subject to the inconvenience of establishing before the intendant the adequacy of his means to cultivate that for the grant of which he applies; for the certificate of the lieutenant governor, which relates to the assignor's means, does not establish the assignee's.

Indeed, to me it appears that the argument which maintains the right to assign the concession, necessarily supposes that the grant or concession, or the land which is conceded or granted, is a bounty conferred in consideration of the possession of the means to improve it, instead of being conferred in consideration of the improvement to be made.

The assignments were forbidden; they were a violation of the intention of the concession. Their frequency at the close of the Spanish government, furnishes evidence of fraud: so many of them being made to the same individuals, is strong evidence of fraud. The same assignees having also large concessions to themselves, of which they had not taken possession, and which in many instances appear to have been obtained, with the ostensible view of a possession to be taken at a future day, or at a distant or uncertain period, is evidence of fraud. No specific lands being applied for, is evidence of fraud. The concessions with the right to locate parts of the concessions at various places, &c., is evidence of fraud. When we look back to a period of the Spanish government prior to the period to which grants were antedated, no such practice obtained.

The evidence of Mary P. Leduc, in the case of Wherry and others, to the record of which I have before referred, is, "that the lieutenant governor continued to issue concessions, after notice of the intendant of the death of the assessor, in the year 1802, and his order not to receive further petitions for lands, down to the change of government, and down to this period continued to issue them about in the same proportion that he had issued them before the said notice. Cannot say what proportion of the concessions made after the said notice of the intendant were made to bear date anterior to said notice, and in the years 1799, 1800, 1801, and 1802, but believes about sixty were made to bear date during those years. Witness was absent from this place from May to December, in the year 1803, and does not know that more concessions were issued toward the close of the Spanish government here, than had been at any time before."

This order is contained in the record of the case of Julia Soulard and others against the United States. I have before referred to it. It appears by that record to have been announced by Delassus to Antoine Soulard, the surveyor, for his information, and that he might communicate it to the inhabitants whose concessions had been surveyed, and who would solicit their titles from the intendancy, to the end that they would await the further order of the intendancy. "In the meantime, (says Delassus in his announcement of this order of the intendancy,) I understand that they shall continue in secure possession of the said lands." This order is announced by Delassus, on the 18th of May, 1803, having been written by Morales, the 1st of December, 1802. I call it an order, because it is directory to Delassus; it mentions the death of the assessor, and that the tribunal of affairs and causes relating to the grant and composition of royal lands, had been closed in consequence thereof, there not being a learned man in the province to supply his place; and the 81st article of the royal ordinance respecting the intendants of New Spain, having provided that, for the conducting that tribunal and substantiating its acts, the concurrence of that officer should be necessary. "I make this communication," says Morales to Delassus, "in order that, apprized of this providence, "you may not receive, frame, or transmit memorials for lands until further ordered." When Delassus announced this order to the surveyor for his information, and that of the inhabitants whose concessions had been surveyed, to the end that they might await the order mentioned, he shows a disposition to obey the order himself, and appears to expect that others would. In the manner in which Delassus announces the order, he shows that he understands these very papers which we call concessions, are those which, in the order of Morales, he had denominated "memorials soliciting lands," which Delassus is neither to receive, frame, or transmit, until further orders. When did Delassus commence again to receive, frame, and transmit these memorials? for in fact upon their face they purported to be transmitted by the party to the intendant, for the party is required by the concession to apply to the intendant. When, I say, did Delassus again commence to issue concessions? As Delassus derived no authority from the law to do any act relating to the disposition of the royal domain; as the authority of Morales was exclusive; as Delassus had derived all his authority from the intendant, it was competent for the intendant to revoke or suspend the authority; and when he does recommence issuing concessions, why does he antedate the concessions, so as to make them bear date of a period earlier than the receipt of the order? Was it merely to deceive the intendant? No; for he continues thus to antedate them down to the time of the exchange of flags in the country, and therefore long after he was apprized that his concessions were not to be presented to the intendant, to whom, by the direction on their face, he sends them. Did he issue those which he thus antedated to those persons who wanted concessions for the purpose of commencing improvements—to those who wished actually to settle the lands? No, not to those persons; not to those who desired to settle them, for they have not yet been settled under the concessions, in a vast majority of instances of these concessions; nor in issuing them did he conform to the orders which his remonstrance recites as the orders of the governor general upon the subject, or to any other provincial regulation which had been made; nor did he make his certificates or statements, as to means, conform to the facts as they existed. That he did not issue them with a view to their immediate settlement, appears in many instances by the statements in the petitions which solicit the concessions, which express only an intention to settle them at some future period. He did not issue them all with a view to their being surveyed, to the end that the title might be applied for so soon as the office should be open for the purpose of again granting lands, because he issued more than could possibly be surveyed, and in many cases excepts the party from the obligation of making surveys within any short period; and it is remarkable that, while he is thus issuing concessions to those who have no immediate use for the lands, who frequently do not even want them surveyed, but who avow in some instances that they ask for them with a view to a future support, &c., while he is issuing concessions to such persons under such circumstances and to others who immediately assign them, he omits to issue them to the great body of actual settlers on new lands. The settlement rights actually confirmed to such settlers, amount, as appears by the records of the General Land Office, to five hundred and sixty; such is the statement of a note furnished to me by one of the clerks of that office. Yes, it would appear by the records of confirmation, that 560 families had settled in the country without confirmations.

In the case of Soulard and others, in the Supreme Court, there is evidence relating to this subject, but it is not very satisfactory. The evidence to which I refer is to be found under the "letter P," in the arrangement of the evidence in that record. It is taken from the record of the proceedings had before the commissioners for the adjustment of land titles. The evidence is this: "Philip Fine, being duly sworn, says that, speaking with the Spanish lieutenant governor, Mr. Delassus, early in the year 1802, on the subject of settling on vacant land, was informed by said lieutenant governor that no concession could be granted at that time, but that any person coming to the country might settle on vacant land; that his brother, the claimant, arrived shortly after in Louisiana, and was informed by him the witness, of what had passed between him and the lieutenant governor; in consequence of which his brother settled on the land claimed in the year 1803, built a cabin, and raised a crop that year; and has inhabited and cultivated the same ever since, and had at that time a wife and six children." This witness has at least mistaken the date at which the suspension of the authority to issue concessions took place, inasmuch as the order of the lieutenant governor upon that subject to the surveyor was not until the 18th of May, 1803. Now, let it be observed that, prior to the 18th of May, 1803, the date of the announcement, and therefore about the probable date of the receipt of the intendant's order suspending the issuing of concessions, there could have existed no motive for antedating concessions; consequently, about the same number of concessions would be issued in the years 1801, 1802, and 1803, down to the receipt of the intendant's order, and would bear the date of those years, that had been issued of the previous years of 1800, of 1799, of 1798, and of 1797. If, therefore, there were no antedated concessions, the number of concessions issued in each year would not vary very much. They would reasonably be supposed to increase in each successive year; in 1801 and 1802, we should expect to find that more had issued than had been issued in 1800 and in 1799. I have looked over my list of surveys before mentioned, which include all the surveys made under the Spanish government of the quantity of three hundred arpens and upward, and I find by this list that in 1803, posterior to the receipt of the order mentioned, two concessions were issued; that in the same year, prior to the receipt of the order, six appear to have been issued; that, during the year 1802, only fifteen purport to have been issued; that, during the year 1801, sixteen only purport to have been issued; that, in the year 1800, one hundred and twenty-four appear to have been issued; that, in the year 1799, one hundred and ninety-eight concessions appear to have been issued. This is the proportion of the surveyed claims above the quantity mentioned, which were issued during the last four years and better, during which concessions were authorized to be issued under the Spanish government. Mr. Leduc states that some of the antedated claims were made in 1801 and 1802; yet still it would appear, by the high testimony of the record, that of the recorded surveys above the quantity mentioned, only thirty-seven were of concessions which bear date during a period of two years and four and a half months, immediately preceding the suspension of the lieutenant governor's power to issue them; while the surveyed concessions of the two years immediately preceding amounted to the number of three hundred and twenty-two. How shall we account for the extraordinary difference between the number of surveyed concessions which purport to be issued in 1799 and 1800, and the number of surveyed concessions which purport to be issued in 1801 and in 1802, and that part of the year 1803 prior to the suspension of the authority to issue them, upon any other consideration than that of the great proportion of those purporting to be issued in 1799 and 1800 being antedated, and, being antedated, their survey had been hastened, to give to them the greater appearace of validity?

The order of Morales was intended to suspend all surveying as well as issuing concessions; and this was one of the objects of its announcement to the surveyor by Delassus. "I transmit you the above" (the order which has been recited by Delassus) "for your information, and you may communicate it to those inhabitants whose concessions have been surveyed," &c., and not to those whose concessions should be thereafter surveyed. The intention is thus shown to have been, what in fact was the object of the order of Morales, to arrest the whole business of surveying as well as that of issuing concessions; and it is pretty apparent that the surveys afterward made were perhaps exclusively of concessions afterward issued.

When it is considered that the great body of the French population in the country resided in the villages, and confined their cultivation to the common fields; that a considerable proportion of them also were employed in the trade which was carried on with the Indians in their country for their furs and peltries, and in navigating the rivers in barges and keel-boats; and that the actual settlers who had obtained no concession were numerous, as appears from the number of settlement rights which have been confirmed; and that those who obtained concessions were told by the lieutenant governor that "their best titles were their axes and their hoes," as the witness, Leduc, in his deposition, to which I have referred, says they were, we shall not be surprised at the small number of concessions which were issued in the years 1801 and 1802. When these concessions informed them that they were to go to the intendant at New Orleans to obtain their titles, the inconvenience to them of going there, the expense of the survey, &c., doubtless operated to prevent many from applying for concessions before the power to make them had been suspended.

When, I must repeat, did the business of making concessions and surveys, thus suspended, recommence? The evidence of Mr. Pierre Choteau, who I have before mentioned as a claimant, may serve to hang a conjecture upon. It is this: "Witness was in New Orleans in the year 1802 and 1803;" says that "he applied to Morales, the intendant, in May, 1802, for a complete title for certain lands north of St. Louis; that Morales, in reply to his application, informed him that the treaty had confirmed that with other incomplete titles, and that it was not necessary that he, witness, should have the complete title asked for, and that he might tell the people of this country that they might make themselves easy about their titles, as precaution had been taken to confirm them by the treaty; and that, on his return from New Orleans, he informed many of the inhabitants to that effect; that Mr. Soulard, the surveyor of Upper Louisiana, was with witness in New Orleans, in May, 1802, but was not present when Morales told him the above." (See this testimony in one of the cases of Choteau and others vs. the United States, in the Supreme Court.)

This witness is also mistaken, I apprehend, as to the date at least. The tribunal for granting lands was not closed until December, 1802, and the grant to St. Vrain by Morales, in the record of the case of Soulard and others vs. the United States, is dated the 29th of April, 1802. I shall offer no comment upon this testimony; but I must believe that the motive which led the lieutenant governor and the surveyor to commence their work of issuing concessions and making surveys, and antedating both, arose out of the treaty, of which they had obtained a knowledge, and that, in antedating concessions, it was supposed to be a wise precaution to throw them as far back as possible, to lull suspicion. Delassus, it is to be observed, succeeded to the government of the post of St. Louis and its dependancies on the 28th of July, 1799, and therefore could not throw his concessions back to a period earlier than this date; and for these reasons so many more concessions bear date in the years 1799 and 1800 than are to be found of the date of 1801 and 1802. The concessions which bear date in 1799 and 1800, so much exceed the number which bear date in 1801 and 1802. The interval of years which also intervene so generally in the surveys made during the latter part of the Spanish government, between the date of the concession and the date of the survey, authorize it to be inferred that the number of antedated claims greatly exceed the amount mentioned by the witness, Leduc. This witness, however, states that "he was absent from St. Louis for six or seven months prior to the month of December, 1803, and that on his return he first heard of the treaty of cession to the United States." He does not say, however, that he then for the first time heard of the treaty of cession by Spain to France.

While, as I have said, Delassus made his antedated concessions bear date for the most part in 1799 and 1800, for the purpose of covering up all matters handsomely, and preserving fair appearances, that no excess should appear to have been committed by him near the close of his official career; Trudeau, his predecessor, in the antedated concessions made by him, after he had left the government, and of course, not until after the treaty of cession by Spain to France was known, was compelled, for different reasons, to make them bear date toward the close of the period of his government, and within about the last three years of it; so that it will be perceived by looking at the concessions of the Spanish government, issued at the post of St. Louis, nine tenths, possibly near nineteen twentieths of the quantity of land conceded during the thirty-three years of the Spanish government, was conceded in a little more than four years; conceded neither at the first, nor at the last of the government, but in the years 1797, 1798, 1799, and 1800, and a few of the antedated claims in 1796.

Before I proceed to show why it was that Trudeau made his antedated concessions bear date toward the latter part of his government as commandant of the post of St. Louis, allow me to inquire, whether it was not incumbent upon Colonel Delassus, possessed, as we are to presume he was, of that refined sense of honor which belonged to his rank and station, and to the military character he sustained, to explain these appearances; to repel the charges of fraud, and antedating, long and publicly made, and believed, and so strongly believed that it influenced the legislation of Congress in a number of their acts passed, with reference to the adjustment of these claims, and also influenced the instructions given by the Secretary of the Treasury to the commissioners for the adjustment of these claims; charges which had furthermore the decision of those commissioners, repeatedly made in various cases to rest upon. Delassus has often been in St. Louis, spending years of his time here since 1808, and perhaps during a part of that year; was doubtless here while the commissioners were branding those claims, at least some of them, by their decisions, with marks of fraud. It was due from Delassus to the claimants to explain what was suspicious, and due to himself to give such explanation, and to denounce the forgeries of his signature, if such existed. These observations are applicable to Mr. Antoine Soulard, the surveyor; he was here during all the time the commissioners set; most of the concessions which had been issued were in his handwriting; so says Mr. Leduc in his testimony in the case of Wherry and others, to which I have referred. Mr. Leduc had been the translator to the board of commissioners, and had been in the recorder's office, and was familiar with all that related to these claims, as he states in the same deposition. Mr. Soulard's surveys themselves, and his official conduct, was also impeached, and by the commissioners for the adjustment of those titles, as I infer from his letter, to which I shall presently advert; he had also been continued in his office of surveyor under the change of government to a period as late as the 24th of July, 1806, at least, as appears by one of his letters, to which I shall refer; possessing this high trust he had a powerful motive to explain all that was susceptible of explanation, which had been impugned in respect to his official conduct, or to acts in which he had participated, and which participation would evince how unsafe it was that the records of his office should longer remain in his possession. Does he, under all these circumstances, volunteer and make haste to make explanations? Does he, when called upon by the commissioners for that purpose, make explanations of transactions which are within his knowledge? Does he answer, when called upon as a witness by the commissioners? No; he refuses to answer when sworn as a witness, to all questions relating to the antedating of concessions; he refuses to answer upon this subject, in relation to a particular concession which he admits to be in his handwriting. He so refuses, on the 2d of May, 1806, the concession then before the board of commissioners, and in relation to which he was called, being that to David Delaunay for 800 arpens, to which I have before made reference. The following is the examination and evidence of Soulard: "Anthony Soulard being duly sworn true answers to give, &c.:

"Question. Were you the surveyor of Upper Louisiana under the Spanish government?

"Answer. Yes.

"Question. Was it any part of the duties imposed on you by the Spanish law, and the functions of your office, to obey the orders of the lieutenant governor of the province, without any regard to their legality or illegality?

"Answer. Yes; the lieutenant governor was accountable for it.

"Question. From whom did you receive your appointment?

"Answer. From the governor general of Lower Louisiana, the Baron De Carondelet.

"Question. Is that your handwriting? [showing him the aforesaid concession.]

"Answer. I believe it is.

"Question. Do you recollect when that was written, and is it your belief that it was written at the time it bears date?

"Here the witness refused to answer; whereupon he was asked by the board whether he intended to give similar answers to the questions in all similar cases; and answered, yes. The board not being still satisfied, required further proof of the date of said concession, which not being adduced, they reject this claim.

"The same (meaning the same claimant, David Delaunay), claiming 7,056 arpens of land, situate in the district of St. Charles, produces a concession from Charles D. Delassus, without any condition expressed in the same, dated May 9, 1800, and a survey of the same dated December 25, 1803, and certified the 20th of January 1804, the same questions were put to Anthony Soulard, who gave the same answers; the board being not satisfied, required further proof of the said concession, which was not adduced."

Such is the evidence afforded by the record of the proceedings of the board of commissioners for the adjustment of land titles in relation to Mr. Soulard's disposition to explain, what to the commissioners appeared to be necessary to be explained. This testimony, certified by the recorder under the authority of the act of Congress of 1824, was in evidence, in the case of Wherry and others, now in the Supreme Court, and is to found in the record of that case.

It further appears that Mr. Soulard, on the same day of his examination before the board of commissioners, 2d May, 1806,) addressed to them a letter, in which, among many other matters, he states to them, "that if he be summoned" (I give the translation) "before them to answer on oath in relation to facts or acts which have eventuated since the taking of possession and which have not a reference to particular cases, he is ready and submits himself to answer all questions which may be proposed to him by the honorable tribunal; but he invariably and formally refuses to answer on oath questions that may be put to him at present, or for the future, which have a reference to facts or acts which have transpired under the Spanish authorities, in which facts or acts he may have participated in his quality aforesaid," (as surveyor,) "and while dependant on an authority superior to his own, and the sanction of which discharges him from all responsibility. This formal refusal to answer, arises from what he considers a union of his own interest, with all the functions which he has performed under the aforesaid government, and from the fact that the constitution of the United States does not allow that a citizen should be put to his oath in any case in which he is interested."

"If this honorable tribunal admits or supposes that the Spanish government can have had secrets; if they believe that I have in any case been the depository, or even have had a knowledge of those secrets; can I be so unfortunate as that officers of a character so fearful to offend should suppose that I could stoop to act as an informer? I fondly indulge the belief that, in this case, their generous hearts and their justice will award all that belongs to me," &c.

"If my formal refusal to answer on oath to questions that might be propounded to me at present, or for the future, in relation to facts or acts dependent on the Spanish authorities, be inconsistent with the deposit of the archives (records) of surveys now in my hands, I offer to deliver everything belonging to the public now in my hands to the person that may be pointed out to me, provided a sufficient discharge be given me," &c. In conclusion, the letter requests that it may be annexed to the records of their proceedings.

I shall forward herewith a copy of this letter, and also one of the 24th of July, 1806, from the same person, addressed to the same board, on the subject, or rather explanatory of the antedated surveys.

I shall make no comment on this letter, from which I have made extracts, except to remark that "the authority superior to his own," to which he refers as that "upon which he was dependent, and the sanction of which discharges him from all responsibility," was of course the lieutenant governor, who had issued the concessions; for they, nor his surveys, had not been submitted to any authority whatever for its sanction, nor would they be until presented to the intendant by the claimant for the title.

In the same record of Wherry and others there will be found the evidence of another instance of another officer of the Spanish government refusing to answer a similar question to that which Mr. Soulard refused to answer, but having relation to a different concession. It also appeared in evidence in that case, by a certificate copy of the record of the proceedings of the commissioners, that James Mackay, who had, under the Spanish government, been commandant of the post of St. Andre, was called before the commissioners on the 17th of April, 1806, and, therefore, previously to Mr. Soulard's being called, when these proceedings took place: "William Meek, assignee of Francis Woods, claiming 240 arpens of land, situate on the river Tugue, district of St. Charles, produces a concession from Charles D. Delassus, dated on the 21st of September, 1799, and a certificate of survey of the same, dated December 27th, 1803, and a deed of transfer from the said Francis Woods to claimant, dated 3d June, 1804. James Mackay being also sworn, and being interrogated as to the handwriting of the petition of the said Woods, said he believed it to be his. Being asked if the said concession was signed at the time it bears date, refused to answer, but said that the facts stated in the petition were mere routine. The board being satisfied that the aforesaid concession is a fraudulent and antedated one, reject this claim: they, however, think it a case of hardship." (See the record of the case of Wherry and others for this testimony, certified and proved by the late recorder of land titles.)

This same James Mackay was a claimant before the board of commissioners for more than 55,000 acres of land, partly as assignee, but for the most part in virtue of concessions issued to him, one of which is for 30,000 arpens.

In one of the cases tried before me, brought by the heirs of this same James Mackay, for the confirmation of a concession which had been issued to him for 800 arpens, the petition for the concession which had been drawn by Mackay, and was in his handwriting, as proved on the trial, called for the lands of Choteau, on the north, as the northern boundary of the tract prayed for; whereas the concession to Choteau, for the land thus called for in Mackay's petition, had not been issued until the year following the date of Mackay's petition, and had not been surveyed until the year following that again; and in the survey of this land of Choteau, the lands on the south are mentioned in the notes, and on the plat of survey made by the surveyor, are called lands of the royal domain. This concession to Mackay, thus proved to be antedated, was, moreover, in the handwriting of the surveyor, Soulard, by all which it appeared that three of the Spanish officers, Mackay, in whose favor the concession was made, Soulard, who had written it, and the lieutenant governor, Delassus, who had issued, had been concerned in that fraud. I am inclined to think that this was among the cases taken to the Supreme Court, to the record of which I refer for these facts: they are contained in the bill of exceptions. Having heard the case of Choteau, in which he claimed the lands for which Mackay's concession called, immediately preceding the trial of the case of Mackay, and recollecting the date of Choteau's concession, when Mackay's concession was read, and the evidence of the petitioner heard, which proved the concession, I called the attention of the counsel on both sides to the evidence of fraud which I have mentioned.

But even in this case the court did not decree against the party on the ground of fraud, inasmuch as there were other grounds, upon which, according to the principles previously established by the court, a decree would go against the claimant. It was not until the extraordinary developments made in the case of Wherry and others that the court placed its decree upon the ground of fraud.

Having adverted to the evidence which shows how far Mr. Soulard and Mr. Mackay evinced a disposition to communicate, unreservedly and fully, all which they knew in relation to these claims, and to explain and repel all that had been alleged against them, let us turn to Mr. Delassus, and see whether his course in relation to them was laudable. He came before the district court as a witness in the case of Soulard and others against the United States. This was a case brought for the confirmation of a claim of ten thousand arpens of land, in which it was alleged that the concession, "through error, had been committed to the flames;" and where, therefore, it was necessary to prove the previous existence of the concession. The concession was alleged to have been issued to Soulard by Trudeau in 1796.

The witness was introduced to establish not only the previous existence of the concession and its genuineness, but also to prove what had been the authority and the law under which concessions had been issued; and he proves all—all that was necessary to be proved, in point of authority, to establish the legitimacy of any concession that had been issued. The witness, Mr. Delassus, it should be observed, was then a suitor before the court for the confirmation of a league square, derived from his father. He had been the claimant of twenty thousand arpens, under a concession alleged to be issued to him by Trudeau, the 18th of June, 1796, which he had previously conveyed, when, I know not, to Madame Sarpy, who, before or after this time, sued before me for its confirmation. He was then also a claimant under a concession, made to himself by Trudeau, dated 10th of February, 1798, for thirty thousand arpens. It was important to the success of the claimants to get rid of the regulations of Morales. Delassus testifies to his power and authority to suspend these, or any other order which to him should appear to be prejudicial to King or people; and to establish not only his power to do so, but that he had exercised it in reference to the regulations of Morales, he or his counsel, Mr. Lawless, for him, brings before the court the remonstrance in which he informs Morales that he should defer a compliance with those regulations until new orders, and that he never received any new orders upon the subject; and to corroborate this testimony, he brings also the official letter of Morales, which accompanied the regulations, with a note in the margin thereof, or rather initials, indicating that the regulations were suspended; this entire paragraph relating to the suspension of the regulations of Morales being a forgery of recent date, and in the handwriting of Delassus; and in relation to the note in the margin of the letter mentioned, I now state that while at Jefferson city, where this letter is on file, with the records of the clerk, I examined it and the note in the margin of which Delassus speaks, and was, and am of opinion, after an inspection of the paper, that the note referred to was also in part forged to make the initials purport what they do, and of this opinion was the clerk who examined the paper with me: and, with the same view of showing that he had never regarded the regulations of Morales, he swears that, not intending to obey or regard those regulations, he gave no order concerning their publication. Having shown that he did give such order, by showing that they were actually published before the government house, being written out and posted up; and having shown by the tenor of the remonstrance that it evinces a purpose to comply with them, and asks but for a modification of them in some respects, and an explanation of them in others; and having shown from his official acts that he did obey them, and, from Soulard's official acts, that he also obeyed them, and that the intendant, Morales, from his official acts, also considered them authoritative in Upper Louisiana; and, above all, having shown that Delassus derived all his power, as sub-delegate, from Morales, his compliance with the regulations until the fraudulent purpose was conceived of antedating these claims, must be considered as established by every presumption, as well as by proof.

In relation to the last concession of ten thousand arpens, he proves also precisely enough. He states that he was frequently at St. Louis during the government of Don Zenon Trudeau; that he was intimate with him, and frequently at his house during said time; that at various times, when witness was at the house of Don Zenon Trudeau, he heard him mention a concession of ten thousand arpens of land, which he, Trudeau, said he had made to Antoine Soulard, the petitioner, &c.; that he saw the concession, of which witness has spoken, in the possession of Mr. Soulard, on his table, or among his papers, &c. Now, although Mr. Delassus proves this, and more corroborative of it, Mr. Soulard, in his said letter of the 2d of May, 1806, which will accompany this, says, "I would observe to the honorable tribunal that, of the former Spanish officers that have passed under the dominion of the United States, I claim the smallest quantity of land; which quantity does not amount to more than 9,129 and some arpens," &c. May it not be conjectured that it was about the time that this letter was written—for in his affidavit he describes it as somewhere about this time—that Mr. Soulard, "through error," committed his concession to the flames; and that this "error" was one of judgment, in becoming unnecessarily alarmed at the examination which the board of commissioners had commenced.

There is another consideration connected with the great number of concessions purporting to be issued by Delassus in 1799 and 1800, in comparison with what were issued in 1801 and 1802. Delassus came into the government, as I have said, the 28th of July, 1799. He received the order of Morales about the 18th of May, 1803, which directed him not to receive, frame, or transmit, further memorials soliciting lands. According to what has already been stated, it appears that nearly nine tenths of the concessions, which purport to have been issued during this interval of a little less than four years, purport to have been issued in the earlier part of it, and within a period of much less than two years, and these short of the one half of the whole period during which he was authorized to issue concessions. Now, when we direct our minds to the period at which he received the regulations of Morales, and, consequently, at which he wrote his remonstrance, we shall see that that remonstrance was written about the middle of that period during which his concessions fall thickest upon us; that it was written about the latter end of March, or the first of May, 1800, at a period near which, and on both sides, fall his largest concessions. I repeat that we cannot read this remonstrance, and believe that these large concessions then had existence; for, in the remonstrance, he informs the intendant that the orders of the government had been that the concessions should "be proportional, as to quality, to the number of the family of the applicant." We cannot believe that concessions had been issued without a view to the applicants taking immediate possession; because he says that they had been put in possession conformably to the orders of the government; and from his argument in the first part of his remonstrance, in which he urges upon the intendant the necessity of allowing him to continue to put them in possession, as theretofore he had done under the orders of the governors, that they might begin to make their improvements, we are to understand him as intending to represent that they had been put into the actual possession. We cannot believe that after the receipt of the regulations of Morales that he should become less regardful of the rules prescribed to him. The doubts he expresses in his remonstrance, whether, according to the provisions of the second article of the regulations, he is still authorized to put, provisionally, the new comer into possession by a decree of concession, evinces no disposition to act counter to the rules of the regulations. His concession to Battes Janis, to which I have before referred, which was as late as the 10th of November, 1800, shows that down to that period he was acting under the same doubts, for in this case he makes not the ordinary decree of concession which he had done under the orders of the governors to which he refers in his remonstrance. There is in this act of his, upon the application of Battes Janis, no "giving order to the surveyor to survey his land," which, in his remonstrance, he doubts whether he has a right to do; but says only that "leave is given to the petitioner to establish himself, provisionally, under the condition and charge, on his part, to demand his concession to his lordship, the intendant, according to the provisions of the regulation," meaning, certainly, those of Morales.

Having got back to this concession of Baptiste Janis, allow me to show that although he recites in his petition, which solicits this concession of November, 1800, that he had not therefore asked for any concession for lands, yet, lo! and behold, this same Baptiste Janis brings suit before me on a concession purporting to have been made to him in 1796, four years earlier than this one of 1800, which recites that he had never theretofore asked for lands. The concession which is solicited in good faith, in 1800, is for 250 arpens, but the concession, which, by the recital, contained in the petition of 1800, is proved to be spurious, is for 8,000 arpens, and dated 26th September, 1796. Both these concessions are to one and the same person, without doubt. The petition of 1800 recites that the petitioner had resided in St. Genevieve "since a great length of time," &c.; that of 1796 recites that "he is an inhabitant of St. Genevieve," &c. I have made inquiry of old inhabitants of St. Genevieve, and have not been able to learn that more than one man of that name answering the description, or being such as could have received either concession at that period, lived there. General Ashley or Doctor Linn can afford information upon this subject. The concession for 250 arpens is for specific lands, but that for 8,000 is for vacant lands of the royal domain, at the choice of the petitioner. The petition and concession for the 250 arpens may be seen in the record of the case of Soulard, in documents under the letter O, translation. The concession for 8,000 has doubtless been reported to Congress by the late board.

Another instance in which the recital contained in one concession will show that another one of a previous date had been subsequently made and antedated, will be found in the concession of latest date, which was made to M. Couzins. I had occasion to see those concessions just about the time the board, under the late commission, were making their first report to Congress. They had been translated to accompany the report, and the translations were obligingly handed to me, that I might read them. There were three concessions to M. Couzins. I neither recollect the dates of the concessions, nor the quantity of each. I think one may have been for 6,000, one for 8,000, and one for 10,000 arpens, all for services. That of latest date, I mean the petition which solicited it, that recited the petitioner had received no concession for his services since the date of the first concession, which induced me to believe that the concession which stood second in point of date, was thus established to be antedated. But it is, to my mind, equally certain that each of them was. I did not call for the purpose of detecting any evidence of fraud in them. I mention the fact in relation to these concessions, that they may be referred to, that it may be ascertained whether my memory deceives me.

I shall now proceed to state the probable reasons upon which the antedated concessions, made by Trudeau, were dated in the years 1796, 1797, 1798, and 1799, until in that year he was succeeded by Delassus. Trudeau, as you will see from the evidence of Leduc, in the case of Wherry and others, assumed the government in 1792. Now why did he not date back a part of his antedated concessions to a period as early as that at which he had come into the government? Why did he not distribute them equally throughout the whole period of his government? The reason was, that the livre terrien stood in his way. To a period as late as 1796, all the concessions were upon condition of settlement and improvement within a year, or a year and a day, except in a very few instances in the case of stock farms, where the time of settlement was extended to three years. If, therefore, the grants had been thrown back to a date prior to 1796, and in the years 1793, 1794, and 1795, and had contained the same condition that the recorded grants of that date contained, they would have been void by the very terms of the conditions; for it would appear that they had not been settled within the year, nor within the three years of their date, nor within eight years of it; for they were not settled at the date of the transfer of the country, nor even yet, by the claimants under the concessions, in the great majority of the cases, perhaps almost all of them. They could not, therefore, be thrown back to the time I have mentioned, with the common conditions of the concessions in that day, without making them fall dead and void by their conditions. They could not be thrown back to the same period without those conditions, without furnishing evident grounds upon which they might be impeached. For it would be inexplicable that a portion of the concessions of the same period should be recorded—should contain the conditions which required a settlement and improvement within a year and a day, and to be void in default thereof, while the unrecorded concession of the same period contained no such conditions, and had never been settled. Such a circumstance would strike every mind as affording evidence of fraud. The change, however, which had taken place in the form of the concession in 1796, on the appointment of the surveyor, and which had been required by the orders to which Delassus refers in his remonstrance, the particulars of which change I have before stated, afforded a cover not so easily penetrated for the perpetration of fraud. The concessions of 1796, and from that onward, contained no condition which required cultivation; no record was made of them; they went into the pockets of those who asked for them, and from those pockets they went, when the holder chose, into the hands of the surveyor, who, after the survey made under them, made a record of that, and in this way the record of surveys became the substitute for the former livre terrien, and shows the date of the concessions, to whom issued, and the quantity, and the date of the survey. Thus the form of the concession, in and after the year 1796, which imposes no condition of settlement, would relieve them from one insurmountable difficulty. If they could get rid of the regulations which require settlement, and show that the long interval which intervenes between the date of the concession and the date of the survey, is no ground upon which to impeach the concession, the career of fraud would have no check, no restraint; and if the surveyor could be induced to fall into the measure, and to antedate surveys also, the frauds would be sustained by record evidence, and at the same time the wide interval between the concession and the survey narrowed, and one of the grounds of objection to the concession removed. It is true they might have destroyed the livre terrien back as far as Trudeau's time; but all may not have consented to that measure, and to have done so might have raised up injured witnesses; that would also be to risk what was already safe, as well as that which was intended to be secured; besides, the new form of the concession could only be accounted for from the time of the appointment of the surveyor, and his surveys do not begin until about with the year 1796.

The beginning of the year 1796, would be about the middle of the period of his government. Let us compare the quantity of land conceded by him during the first half of the period of his government, with the quantity conceded during the last half of it. The first half being within the years of the livre terrien, the last half the years of the antedated concessions. During the first half, according to the livre terrien, there appear to have issued only thirteen concessions, exclusive of those under three hundred arpens, amounting probably to less than fourteen thousand arpens. During the last half of his government his concessions amount in numbers to hundreds, embracing probably more than a million of arpens, and are more remarkable for the quantity they contain than for their numbers. The list of surveys before me, and to which I have referred, show concessions amounting in number to about 250, which bear date in 1796, 1797, 1798, and 1799, prior to July; a very few only in 1799, issued by Trudeau. This number being independent of the unsurveyed claims of that date, a considerable list of which may be seen in the record of Wherry and others; and in comparing the number of concessions issued during the last three years of Trudeau's government, with the first three years of it, and more especially the quantity of land granted by the greater part of those concessions, with what had been granted by previous concessions; we should bear in mind that these large concessions make their appearance in point of date, immediately after Trudeau received the orders to which Delassus refers, "that the concessions as to quantity should be in proportion to the number of the family of the applicant; and that Delassus refers as well to Gayoso's orders as to Carondelet's, and makes no distinction between them; and as we have Gayoso's regulations or instructions dated in 1797, which give the proportion of the concession to the family of the applicant, in its 9th and 10th articles, we can have no difficulty in ascertaining it, and in perceiving the great departure from those orders which the large concessions evince. If it should be doubted whether the instructions of Gayoso, of September, 1797, be the same to which Delassus has referred; it is nevertheless to be presumed that, as they must have been about the same date with those, they were not dissimilar in the respect mentioned. For the purpose of enabling the reader to make the comparison between the number and size of the concessions issued prior to 1796, with those which purport to have been issued afterward, I refer again to the list of the concessions in the livre terrien, which is in the record of Wherry and others, and which embraces all the concessions in the livre terrien exclusive of those under 300 arpens, and which make in all but the number of 37. I refer also to the deposition of Mr. Leduc in the same record, which states that the livre terrien contains 176 concessions for tracts of land, exclusive of town lots and common field lots; consequently 139 concessions of the 176, which are contained in the livre terrien, are for a quantity less than 300 arpens. I refer also to the list of unsurveyed claims, which is in the same record of Wherry and others, proved by the recorder; and to the list of surveyed concessions to which

I have before referred, and which I will forward herewith, that the reader may have a view of the number of the concessions issued in and after the year 1796, and the quantity for which they were issued. But these lists, it is certain, will not contain all the concessions purporting to be issued in and after the year 1796, because the list of unsurveyed claims are claims within the district of St. Charles only, and does not include the claims unsurveyed in the districts of St. Louis, St. Andre, St. Genevieve, or New Bourbon, and may be also distinct from the district, on the left bank of Missouri; all which districts you will see mentioned in the surveyed claims herewith forwarded. I understand, however, that the quantity of unsurveyed claims not included in the district of St. Charles, are in the other districts in point of quantity, small in comparison with the quantity in the district of St. Charles; many concessions, it may be added also, had never been presented to the recorder.

It will be seen by the list of concessions in the livre terrien, and by Mr. Leduc's testimony, that the livre terrien contains concessions of the years 1796 and 1797. Those, however, which it contains of that date are very few in number; and that these are any of those dates does not weaken the argument which I have used to show the probable reason which the antedated concessions, purporting to be issued at the post of St. Louis, have not been thrown back to a period earlier than 1796; for it is certain, notwithstanding those few concessions in the livre terrien, of the date of 1796 and 1797, that the new form of the concession was adopted about the beginning of the year 1796, or early in that year. Why some of the concessions of that and the subsequent year should have pursued the old form, and contain the condition of settlement within a year, and to be void in default thereof, is, with the information I possess at present, more than I can explain. If the orders had issued which Delassus recites, such concessions would not be in conformity to them. They neither require a survey, nor that the party apply to the governor general for the title.

I shall now proceed to submit some observations upon four concessions; two of which purport to have been issued to Jacques Clamorgan, alias Santiago Clamorgan, and the other two to Charles Dehault Delassus, the commandant of the post of St. Louis, but before he had been appointed to that command, and while he was commandant of the post of Madrid.

Each of these concessions to Clamorgan greatly exceed five hundred thousand arpens; one of them purports to have been issued by Trudeau, on the 3d of March, 1797, the other by Delassus, while he was commandant of the post of Madrid, on the 9th of August, 1796.

The two concessions issued to Delassus, purport to have been issued to him while he was commandant of the post of Madrid, by Trudeau; one of them on the 18th of June, 1796, for twenty thousand arpens; the other on the 3d of February, 1798, for thirty thousand arpens.

If it shall appear that these concessions are fraudulent and antedated, having been issued to and by the officers mentioned, and bearing their signatures; such a disclosure will show what little reliance can be placed on any fact which may be vouched for by their signatures. I apprehend it was established before the former board of commissioners, that these concessions bear the genuine signatures of the officers by whom they purport to have been issued. One of them has been confirmed to Delassus, assignee, to the extent of a league square, and Delassus is still a claimant under the other; and in relation to the two made to Clamorgan, they were not rejected by the former board upon the ground that the issuing officers' signature was not proved.

If, therefore, these concessions, or any concessions bearing the genuine signatures of either Trudeau or Delassus, shall appear to be fraudulent and antedated, suspicion must attach to such signature when found to any concession. In the eye of reason, more faith and credit cannot attach to it than would be given to a witness who has deliberately, and in reference to a material fact, testified falsely.

In relation to one of these concessions, there is a more important consideration connected with the disclosure of its fraudulent inception, to which I shall, in its proper place, call the attention of the reader, and shall state the reasons upon which it appears to me to impeach the record of surveys made by Antoine Soulard, and to establish the startling fact that the frauds which appear to pervade the great mass of these Spanish claims pervades also the record of surveys made by Soulard under the Spanish government.

The concession to Clamorgan, which is dated the 3d of March, 1797, will be first examined. In reference to the whole form of these concessions, however it may be first remarked, that the common lists applicable to every concession equally impeaches every one of these. The size of the concessions antecedently issued for a period of twenty-four years of the Spanish government; the orders to which Delassus refers in his remonstrance; the provisions of all the regulations; the Spanish laws to which I have referred; the authority of the lieutenant governor, being that, and that alone, which he had derived from the governor general, no possession having been taken, or an intention expressed or implied immediately to take it; nor survey having been made in either of the cases but one; nor in that until long after the alleged date of the concession, all stand in array against these concessions.

To support the concession of Clamorgan of 1797, four documents were produced before the former board of commissioners: 1st. A letter from Carondelet of the 18th September, 1796; another letter from Carondelet of the 8th of November, 1796; a letter from Morales of the 24th of May, 1797; and a letter from Trudeau the 3d of July, 1797. Now it is remarkable that the letter of Morales is subsequent to the date of the concession, and, therefore, could have had no influence upon Mr. Clamorgan when he obtained his concession, or upon the facts he states in his petition, in which he solicits this concession, if it was solicited at the date it purports to have been. And it is further remarkable, that this same letter of Morales shows that the event to which Clamorgan refers in his petition could not have taken place until some time after the date of that letter; which event was that Morales, the intendant, had declined to employ the funds which his Majesty had confided to him in the manner which Clamorgan had solicited that they should be employed. For Morales, in this letter, states to Clamorgan that he had written to Mr. Dehault Delassus, and that on his categorical answer he would order what should appear to him to be most suitable.

Now until he should receive this answer which he expected from Delassus, the event would not take place to which Clamorgan refers in his petition. The letter could have been adduced by Clamorgan in support of his claim, for no other purpose than that of giving color to his statement in his petition, in reference to the subject mentioned; and when the letter is examined, both the letter and the final refusal of Morales to employ the funds as solicited was subsequent to the date of the concession. Whether, therefore, the letter is adduced by Clamorgan to show a fact leading to the refusal which he mentions, or whether it is adduced as containing what he alleges, namely, the pretence of "the Intendant Morales that there were not at that time in the coffers of the King any funds destined to be so employed," the letter being subsequent in date, shows the petition and concession to have been antedated.

If the letter had even been earlier in date than the concession, it would appear to be extraordinary that Clamorgan should make the application for the grant upon such a ground, before he had really learned the final determination which Morales should make after he should receive the answer of Delassus, which was to determine him in respect to the solicited employment of the funds.

If we look at the date and the contents of the letter of Carondelet of the 18th of September, 1796, and compare these with the statements and pretences set up in the petition of Clamorgan for the concession, we shall be equally obliged to reject the concession as antedated. The letter of Carondelet of the 18th of September informs Clamorgan that he, the Baron of Carondelet, had "just received the agreeable news of the approbation of the Spanish Company, formed in 1794, to make discoveries west of the Missouri." Let us inquire here what approbation, and whose approbation, does Carondelet refer to? I answer, the King's approbation of that company, and of course of their objects, that of making discoveries west of the Missouri. Toward the conclusion of the Baron's letter, he says: "The house of Todd," (meaning a trading company,) "is also approved by the King." The letter at its commencement, in parenthesis, mentions that it was giving "the very words of the royal note, despatched in the council of state held the 27th of May last." All showing that it was the King's approbation of the company formed for the purpose of making discoveries west of the Missouri, and which had been formed in 1794. Now let it be remembered that this letter first announces to Clamorgan the King's approbation of the project of making discoveries west of the Missouri; and that that letter is dated at New Orleans, the 18th of September, 1796, five months and a half prior to the date of the alleged concession. The mode of communication at that time between New Orleans and St. Louis would not permit this letter to be received by Clamorgan in less than three or four months from its date. See M. Leduc's testimony, and Delassus's remonstrance in respect to the time necessary to receive communications from New Orleans, especially those made in the fall. Can it, then, be admitted as possible, that in the short space of one, two, or two and a half months, all the failures and disappointments could have happened, and expenses been incurred, of which Clamorgan speaks in his petition for the concession? On the contrary, if the reader will again recur to the letter of Morales, the intendant, he will see that it is in answer to Clamorgan's letter of the "15th of April last," (1797.) Thus he will perceive that the very letter which had solicited those funds was subsequent to the date of the petition, which recites the refusal of the intendant to allow them to be employed as solicited. If the reader will turn to Mr. Clamorgan's petition again, he will perceive that it conveys the idea that great expenses had already been incurred among the Indians, and great sacrifices made in the prosecution of the enterprise which Carondelet had announced to him as authorized by his Majesty; and that, on the recommendation of Trudeau, "the Baron de Carondelet had informed his Majesty of the great expenses which the petitioner had been compelled to incur in that thorny enterprise," &c.; that the goodness of his Majesty had determined him in favor of the petitioner; that there should be paid to him, annually, the sum of ten thousand dollars, as a supply for the expenses incurred in the discovery of the nations and territory of the Upper Missouri, as well as to remove strangers from Hudson's bay and Lake Superior, &c.; but that all was ineffectual, owing to the impediments thrown in the way by Morales, the intendant, who pretended that there were not, at that time, funds in the coffers of the King destined to be so employed. Having shown that the petition of Clamorgan, bearing date in March, 1797, could not be predicated upon anything contained in the letter of Morales of 24th May, 1797, unless it had been antedated, let us examine whether the result of Carondelet's representation to the King, which is mentioned in the petition, could have become known to Clamorgan at the date of his petition. The letter which is adduced by Clamorgan, (and must have been presented by him in support of the facts stated in his petition,) of the 8th of November, 1796, and is also addressed to Clamorgan, says: "There appears to be no doubt but that your honor can raise, in the country of Illinois, the hundred soldiers whom his Majesty grants for the posts of the Missouri company, but I cannot answer for the reimbursement of the ten thousand dollars, for this depends upon the decision of his Majesty, though I am fully pursuaded that, at sight of my representation, he will so order it, inasmuch as I so solicited him," &c. From the date of this letter, it will be seen that the decision of his Majesty could not have become known to Clamorgan before the date of his petition, especially in sufficient time before its date for him to make the application to the intendant, and learn his determination in respect to it; nor would the contents of the intendant's letter induce the belief that the application made to him by Clamorgan was for the payment of the annual supply of ten thousand dollars for expenses incurred and to be incurred in the Indian country, which had been ordered to be paid by his Majesty, as stated in Clamorgan's petition; nor would the letter of Carondelet of the 8th of November induce the belief that the King, previous to its date, had made such an order or determination in favor of Clamorgan, as he states in his petition, in respect to this annual supply of ten thousand dollars; for if the determination had been previously made by the King, there would not appear to have existed the necessity of the representation to obtain for Clamorgan the reimbursement which Carondelet represents himself as having made. I will not say that such a determination was never made by his Majesty, but there is nothing in the letters adduced which can authorize the belief that such a determination had been made; on the contrary, there is enough to induce the belief that it had not been made; possibly, such a determination may have been made at sight of Carondelet's representations, although such was not the object of them; and if made at sight of them, the petition is still too early in date. In short, the great catastrophe which leads to the application for the concession is thrown too far back among the incidents which are the alleged cause of it, to render the scenes of the play probable.

It may be inquired, why Clamorgan recurs all of a sudden to Trudeau to obtain this concession, as well as an indemnity for his losses and expenses sustained, as to enable him (if we may look to the terms of the concession) to prosecute the said scheme of discovery, without prejudice to the royal treasury? Why does he not wait to hear the result of Carondelet's representations to the King? Does he, by accepting the concession, abandon all claim to indemnity from that quarter? or is the concession in question in addition to what had been solicited through Carondelet? Why, in fact, if the King had directed that he should be paid ten thousand dollars annually, as a supply for the expenses incurred, &c., does he permit himself, by the obstinacy of the intendant, to be defeated in the receipt of that sum? Why not, through Carondelet, make known to the King the pretences of Morales, and have him controlled? And why, just immediately and on the 1st of March, 1797, and before he hears the result of the application to the King, and before he applies to Morales, apply for this concession, which he has no immediate use for, but "that, in future, the petitioner may establish on them saw and grist mills, and also place there a number of cattle, to establish vacharies," &c.? The concession shows also that it was made in part in consideration of the losses which had been occasion in making the discoveries, and in part in consideration of the expenses which would be incurred in prosecuting them, &c.

Allow me now to call the attention of the reader to the whole tenor of the petition which solicits the concession, and afterwards to the letter of Carondelet of the 18th of September, 1796, and see whether we cannot detect a fraud in all the pretences set up in the petition.

The reader of the petition will understand Clamorgan as arrogating to himself all the glory connected with the enterprise, which, as he says, had for its object "the discovery of the Indian nations who extend to the Pacific ocean;" that he was "entrusted with the mission by the general government;" that, "in fact, his Majesty had granted to the petitioner an exclusive privilege of commerce for ten whole years with the nations of the Upper Missouri, not only for the purpose of opening a new branch in the fur trade, but also for the purpose of making observations, and of acquiring information of the immense territory which would have to be traversed;" that "all these steps had not been taken without great sacrifices among the Indian nations, in order to conciliate their attachment and esteem among us;" that, on Trudeau's "recommendation, the Baron de Carondelet had informed his Majesty of the great expenses which the petitioner had been compelled to incur in this thorny enterprise;" that "the goodness of his Majesty determined in favor of the petitioner, that there should be paid him, annually, the sum of ten thousand dollars, as a supply for the expenses incurred in the discovery of the nations and territory of the Upper Missouri, as well as to remove strangers from Hudson's Bay and Lake Superior;" but that "the result was ineffectual, owing to the impediments thrown into the way by the intendant, Morales, who pretended that there were not at that time in the coffers of the King any funds destined to be so employed;" and that the petitioner had thus been rendered the victim of his zeal and activity in his efforts to render himself useful to the government and his Majesty, and under these circumstances prays for the concession. Whereas, when we crically examine the letter of Carondelet of the 18th of September, 1796, presented to support the facts stated in the petition, it will be perceived that Clamorgan, at most, was but one of a company formed in 1794 for the purpose of making discoveries west of the Missouri, or that he was but the agent of that company, the one or the other; that the expenses, therefore, incurred and to be incurred, were not exclusively his, but the company's; that the losses occasioned in the prosecution of the enterprise to which he refers, were not exclusively his, but the company's; that the reimbursement of the ten thousand dollars, which Carondelet had solicited of the King, would of course be for the benefit of the company, if connected with the enterprise mentioned; that the funds solicited by Clamorgan of the intendant were probably intended to be employed in the prosecution of the objects of the company. The statement, therefore, in the petition of Clamorgan in which he asks for the concession, in which he states the expenses occasioned and to be occasioned in the enterprise to which he refers to be his, is contrary to the evidence which is afforded by the letter of the 18th of September, which shows that they must have been those of the company; and, as the statement in the concession is in accordance with what Clamorgan states, the whole would appear to be untrue and fraudulent.

It would further appear by the same letter of the 18th September, 1796, that "the exclusive privilege of commerce" had not been granted to Clamorgan, as stated in his petition, or for the purposes stated; for the letter shows, when it shall be examined with that view, that this privilege of commerce had been granted to the Baron de Carondelet, but that, either from the omission to insert the inverted commas which should mark what in that letter is extracted from the royal note despatched in the council of State, or the erasure of those inverted commas, the contents of the whole letter appear to be addressed to Clamorgan, and, therefore, to say to him that he "is permitted and granted the exclusive privilege of the traffic with all the Indian nations of the same Missouri who dwell beyond the nation of the Pancas;" whereas, this is what the royal note, mentioned in the letter to Clamorgan, states; which royal note being addressed to the Baron de Carondelet, "the very words" of which the Baron says in his letter, in parenthesis, he gives, informs him of the King's "approbation of the Spanish company formed in 1794 to make discoveries west of the Missouri, with the regulations and instructions, according to which your lordship is permitted and granted the exclusive privilege of the traffic with all the Indian nations of the same Missouri who dwell beyond the nation of the Pancas. They (the regulations and instructions) "offer three thousand dollars as a recompense to him who shall first reach the South sea; 2. The permission granted to the said company, of arming and keeping armed, in the posts which it has or will have henceforward, the hundred men on account of his Majesty, which it (the company) judges necessary, the whole under the orders of your lordship, and for the end designated, to which you will attend with the greatest care," &c. All this is contained in the royal order addressed to the Baron de Carondelet "the very words" of which he says he gives. That this is not the language of Carondelet to Clamorgan is evident, because he would not address Clamorgan by the title of "your lordship," since he has no such title. In the same letter he addresses him by the plain address of Monsieur. In his letter of the 8th of November, he addresses Clamorgan by the address of "your honor." In the letter of Morales, Clamorgan is addressed by the plain address of Mr. Clamorgan. In the concession he is called Don Santiago Clamorgan, and in the letter of Trudeau, which immediately follows it as evidence, he is addressed as Don Santiago Clamorgan, and is also represented as being so mentioned by Carondelet. When, therefore, did Clamorgan receive this grant of the exclusive trade which he mentions, or did he wish to purloin the name of having received it, and with it the title of his lordship, for the purpose of adding plausibility and imposing pretensions to his concessions; the means of thus purloining it being afforded by the manner and matter of Carondelet's letter. That his intention was to purloin it, is to be inferred from his connecting this alleged grant to him of the exclusive trade, with the intended discovery: "In fact, he (meaning his Majesty) granted to your petitioner (says Clamorgan) an exclusive privilege of commerce for ten whole years, with the nations of the Upper Missouri, not only for the purpose of opening a new branch in the fur trade, but also for the purpose of making observations and acquiring information relative to the locality of the immense territory which would have to be traversed." I must, therefore, consider Mr. Clamorgan's narrative, in his petition, mainly fiction, having but slight grounds of plausibility to the superficial observer, in distorted facts. In White's Collection, law 4, title 1, liber 4, it is ordained and commanded, "that no person, of whatever estate or condition, shall make, upon his own authority, any new discovery by land or by water, nor any entry or settlement, nor found any town in lands now discovered or hereafter to be discovered, in our Indies, without license or appointment, granted by ourselves, or by such persons as shall be thereto authorized, under pain of death, and forfeiture of all their goods to our chamber; and we command the viceroys, audiencies, governors and other justices not to grant any licences to make new discoveries, without consulting us and obtaining our special license." But in that which is now discovered and pacified, we permit them to grant licenses within their respective jurisdictions, to form such settlements as may be proper, observing the laws contained in this treaty; provided, that such settlements being made, they immediately transmit to us information of what they shall have done. And as respects the power of the viceroys in relation to new discoveries, the law 28, title 3, liber 4, shall be observed in the cases therein mentioned. (See this law, page 32, of White's Collection.)

In respect to Trudeau's letter of the 3d of July, 1797, which informs Clamorgan of Carondelet's approbation of the concession, as contained in his letter of the 5th of April of the same year, it is only necessary to say, that if the concession is a fraud, and antedated, of which no doubt can be entertained, Trudeau participated in the fraud; and if capable of such a fraud, capable of giving untrue statements in his letter to support his fraud, Carondelet's letter would be better evidence than Trudeau's representation of it is. To the inquiring mind it would appear, under all the circumstances to which I have adverted, that this letter of Trudeau, of the 3d of July, 1797, had been prepared to support what its author was conscious would require foreign support. Why should Carondelet describe the land so minutely as Trudeau represents him to have done? And if Carondelet had so described it, why should Trudeau again recite all that Carondelet had said in his letter, and withhold from Clamorgan the letter itself which Carondelet had written.

Having said so much in relation to this concession, I will now advert to that of the 9th of August, 1796, alleged to have been issued by Delassus while commandant of the post of Madrid, which, as I have said, is for a quantity greatly exceeding five hundred thousand arpens. Its boundaries are designated by rivers. I have not the concession before me; I have only the petition which was presented to me praying for its confirmation, which has not the merit of perspicuity. It would appear from it, however, that the concession had been granted in pursuance of the special recommendation of the Baron de Carondelet, governor general, and would infer that this recommendation should be in writing; but no such writing is referred to in the petition, nor does the petition state whether the recommendation was in writing or otherwise. It is to be regretted that Mr. Clamorgan, in his correspondence with Carondelet, obtained no written promise for this concession, or sanction of it. The letters which are adduced to support the other concession, are of the same year, and but a little later in point of date than the date of this concession. And one would imagine that Clamorgan's views and undertakings, connected with the trade which was then carried on by the company to which he is presumed to have attached himself, as well from the letters of Carondelet as from the facts recited in his petition for the other concession; for, although his petition be untrue in point of date, it is probable that it has some foundation in fact, in respect to the employments of the petitioner at the time to which he refers. And it is further probable, that the company which had been formed for the purpose of making discoveries west of the Missouri, were at the date of this concession, in expectation of receiving that approbation which Carondelet, in his letter, announces the receipt of; and were, in fact, the same trading company which then had posts on the Missouri, for the protection of which, as well as those which the company should thereafter establish, the hundred soldiers had been allowed on account of his Majesty.

That two such concessions as these should have issued to Clamorgan while he was a trader on the Missouri river with remote nations of Indians, and one of them while he is actually preparing to make discoveries as far west as the Pacific, and the other while he must have had the same object in view, has not the appearance of probability. The alleged concession of 1796 has in view the culture of hemp, by families who were to be brought from Canada. But, independent of all considerations connected with this view of the subject, when we consult the law and the authority of the commandants, and particularly when we advert to the concessions issued at the post of Madrid, from whence this of 1796 emanated, whether we regard their size, their conditions, or the form of the concession, we should arrive at a conclusion unfavorable to the validity of this concession. I have already, with my first communication made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, forwarded a concession to Louis August Tortoran Labeaume, made by the governor general, the baron of Carondelet, which declares the condition of the concession: "That it shall be established within three years, and shall be null if this condition is not complied with, and that the applicant shall not have power to alien it during the same three years." But it is the official act of the commandant of the post of Madrid, in respect to this concession made to Labeaume, in November, 1793, which should be compared with the official act of Delassus in the case of Clamorgan's concession. Thomas Portell was commandant at Madrid in 1793; he merely states upon Labeaume's petition, this: "The circumstances which the instruction advises concurring in the petitioner, I consider him worthy of the favor he solicits; G. H. will do that which suits your (his) pleasure." Upon this petition and recommendation, his grace did what suited his pleasure. He directs that "Portell should establish the party in six arpens in front, which he solicits, by the ordinary depth of forty, (not fifteen in depth, as he had solicited,) at the place indicated in the memorial, being vacant, and not causing any prejudice, with the precise conditions, &c. (see the concession.) Now, Delassus, in his concession to Clamorgan, from the same post, grants to Clamorgan, and his heirs, forever, the lands which he asks for in his petition.

There was another claim presented to me for confirmation from New Madrid, where the petitioner asks the intendant for one thousand arpens, and where, in reply to this petition, the intendant, with the advice of the assessor, concedes three hundred and twenty arpens. This application was by Robert McCoy, in 1802, who, I believe, may have been the commandant of the post of Madrid at that time; but of this I can speak with no certainty, having only an impression that the commandant was of that name. This concession was alleged to be assigned, and has probably been reported by the commissioners: other concessions issued at New Madrid have doubtless been reported.

I shall now call the attention of the reader to the two concessions made by Trudeau to Delassus, which, together, are for fifty thousand arpens. I have not before me that for 20,000 issued on the 18th of June, 1796, but I have before me the petition of the assignee of this concession, Margaret De Lord Sarpy, which was brought for the confirmation of it. This petition states, that a league square of this concession has been confirmed. The concession of the 10th of February, 1797, for thirty thousand arpens, refers to the previous one for twenty thousand.

As these concessions purport to have been made to Delassus, who has been the author of so many concessions; as one of them has been sold by him, and has been in part confirmed, and the other is claimed by him; I will bestow upon them the consideration which they appear to me, from these circumstances, to merit.

Delassus, in his petition to Trudeau, for this concession of 30,000, represents himself to be the commandant, civil and military, of the post of New Madrid, and its dependencies, &c.; and states, "that having petitioned for a quantity of the royal lands, proportionate fully to a part of his means, which you" (Trudeau) "granted to him in the year 1796, conformably to the orders of the senior governor, the Baron de Carondelet, dated the 8th of May, in the year 1798, he now solicits, moreover, from your justice, that you will be pleased to grant him, for the balance of the means which he possesses, in conformity with said orders, the quantity of thirty thousand arpens in superficies, of vacant lands of the royal domain, so that, when circumstances will permit him, and he shall not be weighed down, as he is at this moment, by the occupations of the royal service, he may order them to be surveyed, and employ them for the establishment, if it be possible, for him to do so, of two manufactures, a soap factory and a tannery, the accomplishment of which, if I can obtain, they will be profitable to myself as well as to the public, furnishing them with soap and leather cheaper by half than the price which they now pay, on account of their being imported from Europe, and a very small quantity of them by the Americans, &c.

In reply to this petition, the concession is given thus:

"It appearing to me that the land, which is solicited, belongs to the royal domain, the surveyor, Don Antonio Soulard, will put the party interested in possession of it, and will verbalize his survey in extenso, in order that it may serve to solicit the senior governor general of the province, to whom, I inform, that the subject is, in such circumstances, as merits this favor. ZENON TRUDEAU."

Dated 10th February, 1798.

In the petition of these two concessions, they are solicited and claimed in virtue of alleged orders from the Baron de Carondelet. The last petition refers to the order by its date; whether the first makes so precise a reference, I cannot say, not having that concession. The petition for the second concession having referred to the previous one as issued in pursuance of orders of a particular date, and asked for that which it solicits under the same orders, and the claimant, under this concession, having presented to the recorder, with his concession, the alleged order, we can examine it with a certainty of its being the identical one referred to it in the petition, and can decide for ourselves whether it authorized these concessions, or either of them.

The alleged order is contained in a letter of the Baron de Carondelet of the 8th of May, 1793, addressed to "M. Dehault Delassus," who was the father of the petitioner. It is in the last paragraph of that letter, and is thus translated:

"Your son-in-law and your sons shall have also, as you desire, a plantation in any place they will select in Illinois, of an extent proportionate to the establishment and improvement they propose to make."

This order doubtless accompanies the report of the commissioners. It may be seen in 9th Peter's Reps. 123, 124, in the case of Delassus vs. the United States. I have before referred to it.

To comprehend the intention of this alleged order, which, by the way, is no more than a promise made to M. Dehault Delassus, alias Delassus Deluzieres, in favor of his son-in-law and his sons, we must advert to the occasion and circumstances under which the promise was given, the history of which may be collected in pages 121, 122, 123 and 124 of 9th Peters, from the petition of Deluzieres to Trudeau for a concession for the exploration of lead mines, and the order of Carondelet, of the 7th of May, 1793, ordering that concession. That history is this: Deluzieres had made a contract with the intendant to deliver yearly, during the term of five years, thirty thousand pounds of lead. Deluzieres was at New Orleans when he made this contract, in May, 1793. He had not been in Upper Louisiana. The documents to which I have referred show that his resolution to come up into Upper Louisiana was in consequence of his contract, and with a view to its fulfilment, by raising the lead from the mines of the country. That, desirous to bring his family with him, as it is to be inferred, he solicited the governor general that his son-in-law and his sons should also have a grant of land, it having been arranged that he should have a grant for the exploration of mines, where he should discover lead mineral, to the end that he might fulfil his contract; and therefore Carondelet, in this letter of the 8th of May, 1793, in which this promise is contained, which is to support these concessions for fifty thousand arpens, says to Deluzieres: "By this opportunity I write to M. Zenon Trudeau to grant you the land where you will have made a discovery of lead mines, with adjacent lands of sufficient extent for their exploration; provided, nevertheless, that it should not be conceded to another."

"Your son-in-law and your sons shall also have, as you desire, a plantation in any place they will select in Illinois, of an extent proportionate to the establishment and improvement they propose to make."

"This is my answer to your letter No. 3," &c.

The petition of Deluzieres for the concession for the land where he had made a discovery of lead mines, shows that his family had accompanied him. It states that, "with the assistance of his children and son-in-law, and persons acquainted with the country, visited a place situate," &c. &c., for which he asks a concession in pursuance of the orders of Carondelet—(which see 9th Peters, 123).

The question which might well present itself first under this promise of a plantation to the son-in-law and sons of Deluzieres, Delassus, who obtains the two concessions in question, was in the mind either of the father, Deluzieres, who had desired a plantation for his son-in-law and sons, or in the mind of Carondelet when he made the promise. Delassus represents himself in his petition for the concession of the 18th of June, 1796, three years only after the date of the alleged order to the commandant, civil and military, of the post of Madrid and its dependencies; and the presumption with me therefore is, that he was in the service of the King in 1793, when Deluzieres expressed his desire to Carondelet to obtain a plantation for his son-in-law and sons, no doubt with a view that they were to accompany him into Illinois (Upper Louisiana), and that Delassus, who now claims to have obtained these concessions, was not then one of the children for whom he was desirous to provide; not one of those who wished to make, or "proposed to make an improvement," being otherwise provided for, and his profession inconsistent with such a proposition.

If it should appear, however, that Delassus was within the promise, in the contemplation of the parties, does that promise authorize both or either of these concessions? When the two letters of Carondolet are read, the one to Trudeau, which orders the concession for the exploration of lead mines, and the other to Deluzieres, which informs him of that order, and which also contains the promise in question, it will be perceived, that in the minds of both parties, the concession for the mineral tract was that to which the most importance was attached; and that the other was rather an incident that followed it. Such a grant was, in fact, a matter of course under the regulations. All who wished to cultivate the soil, obtained, as a matter of regulation, a quantity proportioned to the establishment and improvement they propose to make, and which they had the means to make; and, therefore, Carondolet made no order to Trudeau concerning it. Now what was the result? The concession to Deluzieres, under the order to Trudeau, was for a league square, although solicited for mining, and to secure the necessary fuel for smelting the mineral; and also for the purposes of cultivation, and raising cattle if necessary.

Although the order for this concession was in 1793, the concession was not asked for under it until 1795, nor granted until the 1st of April of that year. How then should it happen that the accessary, in the space of one year, between April, 1795, and June, 1796, should become so much greater than the principal; and that in 1797 it should so exceedingly increase; and this increase only yet in part satisfaction of the promise in favor of the sons and son-in-law? Certainly the subject of the present inquiry was not one of those children which Deluzieres, in his petition to Trudeau, of 1795, mentions as having attended him to the place he had selected. There were other children of Deluzieres, and a son-in-law also, who were, without doubt, within the intention of the promise, and who are to have no part of these fifty thousand arpens. If, therefore, the promise is to be extended to them, with the same liberal interpretation that is given to it by the commandant of the post of Madrid, it will be made to cover more ground than Carondelet intended. The promise is of a plantation of an extent proportionate to the establishment and improvement they propose to make. The promise would not appear to authorize the expectation that the plantation should be of an extent greater than would be sufficient for the establishment and improvement which they should propose to make. If the promise is considered with reference to what is said in the previous paragraph, in relation to the grant which was to be made to Deluzieres, the father, "of lands where he should have made a discovery of lead mineral, with adjacent lands of sufficient extent for their exploration," we shall be the more inclined to believe that the phrase, "of an extent proportionate," &c., is to "be understood as promising no more than the grant of an extent sufficient for the purpose of the establishment and improvement they propose to make."

I apprehend, however, that the true intention of the promisor in this instance will be arrived at by considering his authority and duty in reference to the subject of the promise; and that he made the promise in conformity therewith; and that as in his grants he was required to conform in all respects to the principles of O'Reilly's regulations, we must recur to these to interpret the promise, and the extent of the grant to be made under it. The phrase employed would convey the idea that the writer of the promise had in his mind some established proportion, a proportion established by some rule, otherwise the promise would be vague and indefinite. His concession to Labeaume, of the 28th of November, 1793, heretofore forwarded as an evidence of his recognition of the principles of O'Reilly's regulations, by his requiring an observance on the part of Labeaume, of all the conditions imposed by O'Reilly's regulations upon grantees, may be here again referred to, to show what law or established rule Carondelet may be supposed to have had in his mind, when he made this promise. His orders or instructions, to which Delassus refers in his remonstrance, as having issued about the time of the appointment of the surveyor, may also be referred to as affording evidence admissible to establish the probable intention of the promise. The concession of the 10th of February, 1798, is five months later than the date of Gayoso's instructions, which may be referred to, not only as competent to control any previous promise of this character, but to show also that the previous promise of Carondelet, who exercised but the same powers which Gayoso did, and was restricted by the same rules by which Gayoso was restricted, could not be supposed to intend to authorize such a construction as would warrant the concessions in question.

The promise is of "a plantation," in the singular number, "of an extent proportionate to the establishment," in the singular, "and improvement," all in the singular. It might well be doubted whether Deluzieres had solicited more than a single grant for his son-in-law and his sons, who may not have separated into distinct families. The solicitation of a grant for them, in 1793, would not probably be with a view to future and distant contingencies, but with a view to establishments then contemplated as suitable and necessary. No regulation or law of the Spanish government contemplates grants with a view to a distant and possible appropriation of them to a general or particular use; on the contrary, the conditions of the grants, under the terms of the law, require their immediate establishment, and intend to authorize them but with that view. The promise did not contemplate these concessions, distant in point of time, and solicited with a view to still more distant, and merely "possible" establishments; for the petition of Delassus looks to the establishments he proposes as those which are of doubtful possibility, weighed down as he is with public employments.

I do not believe that the concession deserves any grave consideration. Those who will read and understand Delassus' remonstrance of 1800, will not imagine it possible that these concessions had been issued previous to its date, or the time at which it was written. There is no specific lands asked for in the concession of 30,000 arpens, and yet the terms of the concession are such as imply that specific lands had been asked for. The one seems not to have been made with a reference to the statements contained in the other. If particular lands are solicited in the concession of 1796, for 20,000, the location, as appears from the petition presented to me, is on the Eagle fork of Cuivre river, more than 200 miles north of New Madrid, the station of Delassus at its date, a location not probably solicited while he was commandant at Madrid. I am sure there could have been no written or established rule of proportions, between the means of the applicant and the concession, which would give to Delassus, in respect of his means, a grant of fifty thousand arpens. Thirty thousand appears to me to be altogether extraordinary for the purposes of a soap factory and tannery, upon such a scale as could have been contemplated at that day in that part of Louisiana. The quantity is more than was necessary for the mere purpose of conducting such establishments; and where are they to be established? no place has been selected; the wide domain of the King is yet to be ranged to select the place, and where no one would think of locating such factories.

Now, although neither of these concessions were issued until after those who were concerned in issuing them well knew that they were not to be presented to the Spanish authorities for the title; until they knew that there had been a cession of the country by Spain, yet, 13,100 arpens of the concession of 1796, appears, by the record of surveys, to have been surveyed on the 15th of April, 1801, as may be seen by the list of surveys herewith forwarded; and the residue of the concession, 6,900 arpens, on the 30th of March preceding, as appears by the same list, the concession bearing date 15th June, 1796. And immediately following these two surveys is one for Don Santiago McKay, for 13,835 arpens, part of a concession of 30,000 arpens, purporting to have been issued on the 13th of October, 1799, by Delassus, and to have been surveyed the 25th of May, 1801. This is the same James McKay whose antedated concession of 800 arpens is established by the record to which I have herein before referred, and who was a claimant for more than fifty-five thousand arpens as assignee and otherwise; the same James McKay who refused to answer the commissioners touching the date at which a concession was actually made, the petition for which was in his handwriting. So the concession to Antoine, alias Antonio Saugrain, for 20,000 arpens, appears, by the same record of surveys, as may be seen by the list mentioned, to have been surveyed, in part, on the 27th of December, 1803, and, in part, on the 7th of January, 1804; 4,006 arpens being included in the first survey, and 3,000 in the second; perhaps the residue of the 20,000 does not purport to have been surveyed during the Spanish government.

I cannot believe that these concessions were either surveyed or made until after the cession by Spain had become known to all concerned in making them; and as such cession could not have been known as early as 1801, the date of the surveys for Delassus and McKay above mentioned, I infer that these surveys, like the concessions, have been antedated.

Mr. Soulard, in his letter of the 24th July, 1806, a copy of which is herewith forwarded, admits that in "the course of his functions, as the surveyor general of Upper Louisiana, under the Spanish authorities, he has by no means restricted himself, in his certificates of survey, to putting the true dates of the said operations, and that in somewhat a large number, they are rendered earlier more or less, than the actual time of the said operations, for the following reasons:"

"The greater part of surveys have been made sometimes several years after the application of the party interested to the deputy surveyor of his district; I myself have never operated immediately for the applicants, whose titles I often had in my possession for a considerable time; pursuant to this exposition, I have considered myself at liberty, without being deficient in anything, and under the dependence of the Spanish authority, of the approbation of which I was assured, to date the greater part of the surveys, as if they had been made at the time of the different applications, which now makes it appear that the surveys have been antedated intentionally; which could not be the case, since this conduct was very indifferent to the Spanish government, and would have been no obstacle to the ratification of the said titles by the tribunal of the intendancy; and that at the period when these expeditions of survey took place, it was even not well known that they might one day pass from under the existing authority. And what, moreover, proves the innocence of this course of conduct is, that a considerable number of surveys for titles, dated in the years 1796, 1797, 1798, and 1799, have been ma 'e in the course of the year 1803, and to the end of February, 1804, and that my most intimate friends are interested in a part of the same lands, nevertheless the dates of the surveys of these are correct, which happens thus, for the reasons that the applications for surveys had not been made to me, as so many others had, years beforehand."

This letter of Mr. Soulard, it is to be observed, is not on oath; in his letter of 2d of May preceding, he had stated, that he invariably and formally refuses to answer on oath all questions that may be put to him either at present or for the future, which have a reference either to facts or acts which have transpired under the Spanish authorities, in which facts or acts he may have participated in his quality aforesaid, and whilst dependent on an authority superior to his own, and the sanction of which discharges him from all responsibility."

But he has condescended to explain without oath. I think it will appear that that explanation is not true in relation to the surveys of Delassus and McKay to which I have referred; because I think the mind must be persuaded, that follows me through the crude suggestions I have made, that those concessions had not been issued, had not existence at the date of those surveys, and, therefore, could not at that date have been delivered to Mr. Soulard, or to his deputy.

I think it will also appear, by looking at the list of surveys to which I have referred, that this explanation does not account for relative positions of the plats of surveys as they stand on record, in reference to the dates which they respectively bear, as that at which the survey was made. There were, I think, six districts, for each of which a separate book was kept, in which the surveys were recorded; each of these books consisted of a quire or more of paper sewed together. In the list of surveys to which I refer, the district in which the land surveyed lies, is shown; the page of the book in which the record is made of the survey is shown; the number of the survey is shown. This list presents the order in which the plats of the survey, and all the records made of the survey, follow each other. It will appear by the list, as the truth is, that each book was commenced at the beginning, and each survey, exclusive of those under three hundred arpens, inserted in the list, with the number of the survey, the page of the book in which it is recorded, the date of the survey, the date of the concession, and by whom issued; so that the list will show by the numbers, as given to the survey, how many surveys there are of a quantity less than 300 arpens. A defect in the list is that it does not show the date at which each certificate of the survey was given or made, which the record purports to show: that is to say, it purports to give as well the date at which the certificate of survey was made, as the date when the actual survey was made. Now it is to be presumed, that when the surveyor began his record of surveys, and numbered them from one to fifty, &c. that he gave each survey precedence on the record, pretty nearly at least, as the date of the actual survey would entitle it to have such precedence; but when we look at the list of surveys, the number of each survey, and the page of the record in which it is found, we shall often see a great many surveys of one and two, and sometimes three years' date, precede upon the record surveys of a much earlier date; for instance, in the year 1796, there would appear to have been, according to this list, but about six surveys made, exclusive of those under 300 arpens. It is probable, I think, that that number of surveys were made during the year 1796; but in the record of surveys there are standing in advance of those, in their numbers, and in the pages of the record, surveys, dated and certified as made in 1797, 1798, and 1799, (one only in the last mentioned year,) the surveys of 1797, and particularly of 1798, being considerable in number, which thus stand upon the record in advance of the few I mention, which appear to have been made in 1796. Mr. Soulard's explanation does not account for this singular state of the record. Certainly some one of these six surveys, which are dated in 1796, were surveyed in 1796; and yet many surveys, of two years' later date, precede them all upon the record. His statement is, that "the greater part of the surveys have been made sometimes several years after the application of the party interested, to the deputy surveyor," &c.; and that he has considered himself at liberty, without being deficient in anything, &c., to date the greater part of his surveys, as if they had been made at the time of the different applications, &c. According to this exposition, it would seem that there were actually no surveys made in 1796, although the application had been made for those of that date at that time; and that those surveys which preceded them upon the record, and which were not applied for or made until 1797 and 1798, having been actually made before those which are dated as if made in 1796, were, in consequence thereof, placed on the record in advance of those dated in 1796.

Don Carlos Dehault Delassus, lieutenant colonel, annexed to the fixed regiment of Louisiana, and lieutenant governor of the upper part of the same province. Don James Mackay, captain commandant of the establishments of St. André, of the Missouri, has the honor of representing to you, that in the course of the years 1795 and 1796, he made in the upper part of the Missouri, in virtue of the commission expedited to him for that purpose, by the Baron de Carondelet, governor general of these provinces, which commission is hereunto annexed, a voyage of discovery into the unknown parts of the Missouri, from which voyage he has brought back memoirs, and particularly a plat, such as had never before been seen, on that part of the unknown world; which documents he himself has remitted to his excellency Don Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, governor general of these provinces, who, on account of these services, has given him the grade which he now enjoys, and that of commandant of St. André, with the permission of choosing a considerable extent of land in this Upper Louisiana, and assuring him, in reward of the said services, that he would be proposed to the King for a grade in the army, which, owing to the war, has not taken place. In consequence of which, your petitioner, being on the point of establishing himself, and having enjoyed none of the favors which were promised him, commanding with a very moderate pay an establishment which furnishes him many occupations, hopes from your justice, that you will be pleased to grant him in full property, for the establishment of considerable farms, and vacharies, thirty thousand arpens of land in superficies, to be taken in a vacant part of the domain of his Majesty, in one or more parts, at his choice. The distance of the said lands from the settlements, and their little known value, and the reasons which will diminish in your eyes the importance of the favor which he expects from your justice, and which can offer him no hope, unless it be in a very remote futurity. Filled with confidence in the information which will have been given you relative to his services, by his excellency the governor general of these provinces, and your predecessor, Don Zenon Trudeau, to whom your petitioner, for divers reasons, has delayed to present his petition, the fulfilment of which he hopes to obtain from your equity and justice.

JACQUES MACKAY.

St. Louis of the Illinois, October 13, 1799.

Seeing the present memorial presented by the captain of mounted dragoons of this militia, Don Santiago Mackay, commandant of the establishments of St. André, of this dependency, and it appearing to me, with proof, that the reasons which he alleges are certain; and attending, moreover, to the respectable recommendations which have been given me of this officer, by Sr. Don Manuel Gayoso de Lemos, governor general formerly of these provinces, and by my predecessor, the Sr. Don Zenon Trudeau, I concede to him as a reward for his good services, for him, his heirs, and others who shall represent his right, the land which he solicits, provided it be prejudicial to no one, and the surveyor, Don Antonio Soulard, will put the interested in possession of the quantity of land which he solicits in various parts of the royal domain, which done, he will form a plat, delivering this to the party, together with a certificate, in order that it may serve to obtain the concession and title in form, from the sr. intendant general, to whom belongs exclusively, by royal order, the power of distributing and granting all classes of royal lands.

CARLOS DEHAULT DELASSUS.

Aux Honorable Commissionaires des Etats Unis pour les revision des titres du Territoire de la Louisiane:

Antoine Soulard, dépositaire de l'archive de l'arpentage de ce terre, à l'honneur d'observer, que dans le cours de ses fonctions comme arpenteur general de cette Haute Louisiane, sous les autoritiés Espagnoles, il ne c'est nullement soumi à porter dans ses certificats d'arpentage les veritables dates des dites operations, et que dans une assez grand nombre elles sont plus ou moins vieilles par le raisons suivantes.

La majeure partie des arpentages n'ont été partiqué quelque fois que plusieurs, annés après l'application de l'interessé au deputé arpenteur de son district, moi-même n'ai jamais operé de suite pour reclamans, des quels j'avais souvant les titres dans ma possession depuis longtemps d'après cet exposé j'ai crut pouvoir me permettre sans manquer à rien, et sous la dependance de l'autorité Espaguole, de l'approbation de laquelle j'étais assuré, de dater le majeure partie de mes arpentages comme s'ils avaient été faits aux epoques des diverses reclamations, ce qui fait aujourd'hui evidament paroître des arpentages qu'on pourrait vouloir considerer comme ante-datés avec intention, la quelle ne peut avoir en lieu puisque cette conduite devenait très indifferente au gouvernement Espagnol, et n'aurait aporté aucun obstacle aux ratifications des dits titres par le tribunal de l'intendance, et qu'aux epoques ou ces expeditions ont eu lieu, personne n'était pas méme familiairement instruit qu'elles pourroient un jour ressortir de l'autorité actuelle. Ce qui de plus prouve l'innocence de cette conduite est qu'un assez grand nombre d'arpendages pour des titres datés des années '96, '97, '98, and '99, ont été pratiqués dans le cours de l'année 1803, et jusqu'à la fin de Février, 1804, et qu'une partie de ces mêmes terres interessent mes plus intimes amis, cependant les dates des arpentages y sont corectes. Ce qui se trouve de cette maniaire par la raison que les reclamations d'arpentages ne m'avaient pas été faites comme tant d'autres des années à l'avance.

Danes le cas de quelques notes or charges relatives à ce qui est c'y dessus dit, j'ai l'honneur de reclamer de Messieurs les C^res^, que la presente explication soit jointe aux registres ne lour délibérations, pour servir à constater a decharge des faits cites,

Je suis, avec respect, ANTOINE SOULARD.

[Translation.]

To the Honorable Commissioners of the United States for the revision of titles in the Territory of Louisiana:

Antoine Soulard, depository of the archive of survey of this territory, has the honor of observing, that in the course of his functions as surveyor general of this Upper Louisiana, under the Spanish authorities, he has by no means restricted himself, in his certificates of survey, to putting the true dates of the said operations, and that in somewhat a large number, they are rendered earlier more or less than the actual time of the said operations, for the following reasons:

The greater part of the surveys have been made sometimes several years after the application of the party interested to the deputy surveyor of his district. I myself have never operated immediately for the applicants, whose titles I often had in my possession for a considerable time. Pursuant to this exposition, I have considered myself at liberty, without being deficient in anything, and under the dependence of the Spanish authority, of the approbation of which I was assured, to date the greater part of my surveys as if they had been made at the time of the different applications, which now makes it appear that the surveys have been antedated intentionally, which could not be the case, since that conduct was very indifferent to the Spanish government, and would have been no obstacle to the ratification of the said titles by the tribunal of the intendancy, and that at the period when those expeditions (of survey) took place, it was even not well known that they might one day pass from under the existing authority. And what, moreover, proves the innocence of this course of conduct, is, that a considerable number of surveys for titles dated in the years '96, '97, '98, and '99, have been made in the course of the year 1803, and to the end of February, 1804, and that my most intimate friends are interested in a part of the same lands, nevertheless the dates of the surveys of them are correct, which happens thus, for the reason that the applications for surveys had not been made to me, as so many others had been, years beforehand.

In the event of there being made any notes or charges relative to what is here above said, I have the honor to claim from Messrs. the Commissioners, that the present explanation be annexed to the registers of their deliberations, to serve as proof in discharge of the facts cited.

I am, with respect,

ANTOINE SOULARD.

St. Louis, July 24, 1806.

A l'honorable tribunal des Etats Unis, pour la revision des titres du Territoire de la Lousiane:

Avec respect Antoine Soulard, arpentier general de la Haute Louisiane, sous le gouvernement Espagnol, auquel le dépôt de l'archive a été confié, sous le commandant temporaire du capitaine d'artillerie, Amos Stoddard, qui à é é reappointé dans sa premiere qualité par le Govverneur William Henry Harrison, reconnue et continué dans les mêmes fonctions, par son excellence le General Wilkinson, et maintenant dépositaire de l'archive de l'arpentage, observe à l'honorable tribunal des Etats Unis pour la revision des titres de ce territoire, qui s'il est appellé par devant lui pour repondre, sous son serment, à quelques, faits ou actes passés depuis la prise de possession, les quels ne soient pas cause particulière, il est prèt, et soumet á repondre à toutes questions qbi pourront tui être faites par l'honorable tribunal, mais il se refuse formellement et invariablement à repondre, sous son serment, à toutes questions qui pourraient lui être faites tant au présent qu'a l'avenir, sur des faites ou actes passes sous les autorités Espagnoles, dans les quels faits ou actes il a pu avoir part dans sa qualité susdite, et sous la dépendance d'une autorité supérieure à la sienne, dónt la sanction le décharge de toute responsibilité. Ce refus formel de répondre ayant lieu par suite de ce qu'il regarde sa propre cause, liée à toutes les fonctions qu'il a remplies sous le ci-devant gouvernement, et que la constitution des Etats Unis n'admet pas qu'un citoyen soit pris à serment dans tous cas qui lui est propre.

Si l'honorable tribunal admet ou suppose que le gouvernement Espagnol ait pu avoir des secréte, s'il croit que j'ai pu en quelque cas en avoir été le dépositaire, ou seulement en avoir en connoissance, serais-je assez infortuné pour que des officiers d'un caractére aussi timoré puissent admettre que je veuille me soumettre à jouer le rolle d'un delateur! J'aime a croire qu'en ce cas leur cœur genereux et leur justice me rendre tout ce qui m'appartient.

Des cet instant, en ma qualité de citoyen des Etats Unis d'Amériqne, je me place sous l'egide des lois liberalles de ma patrie actuelle, et suis prét à me soumettre à tout ce qu'il plaira a l'autorité d'ordonner, si mon refus formel de repondre sous mon serment aux questions qui pouraient m'étre faites au présent comme à l'avenir sur des faits ou actes dependans des autorités Espagnoles, est en contradiction au le depot de l'archive de l'arpentage de ce territoire presentement entre mes mains, j'offre de faire la remise de tout ce qui est en ma possession appartenant au public à la personne qui me sera indiquée, pourvu toute tois qu'il me soit donné décharge suffisante des documents je livrerai. J'observe à l'honorable tribunal, que des ci-devant officiers Espagnoles qui out passé sous la domination des Etats Unis, je suis celui qui revaudique la plus petite quantité de terre, la quelle ne s'eleve pas à plus de 3,129, et quelques arpens qui comprend un titre complet de 1,042 arpens, le reste de mes proprietés en terre me vient de ma part de mon épouse aux biens de feu sa mère plus quatre concessions acquises, formant 160 arpens, en vertu des titres Français.

Mon respect aux lois de ma patrie actuellé, ma fidélité au soutien de la constitution, et mon devouement à la cause public, sont et seront les principes invariables d'après lesquels je designerai toutes mes actions.

Je reclame de la justice de l'honorable cour que ma présente declaration, et profession de foi, soit jointe aux registres des deliberations de l'honorable cour, de la quelle je reste, avec le plus profond respect.

Les tres humble et obeissant serviteur,

ANTOINE SOULARD.

I, Theodore Hunt, recorder of land titles in the State of Missouri, do certify the above and foregoing to be a true copy of a letter from Antoine Soulard, dated May 2, 1806, on file in my office.

[Translation.]

To the honorable tribunal of the United States for the revision of titles in the Territory of Louisiana:

With respect, Antoine Soulard, surveyor general of Upper Louisiana, under the Spanish government, to whom the deposit of the archive has been confided under the temporary command of the captain of artillery, Amos Stoddard, who has been reappointed to his first office by the governor, William Henry Harrison, recognized and continued in the same functions by his excellency General Wilkinson, and now depository of the archive of survey, observes to the honorable tribunal of the United States for the revision of titles in this Territory, that if he be summoned before them to answer on oath in relation to facts or acts which have eventuated since the taking of possession, and which have not a reference to particular cases, he is ready, and submits himself to answer all questions which may be propounded to him by the honorable tribunal; but he invariably and formally refuses to answer on oath all questions that may be put to him, either at present or for the future, which have a reference to facts or acts which have transpired under the Spanish authorities, in which facts or acts he may have participated in his quality aforesaid, and while dependent on an authority superior to his own, and the sanction of which discharges him of all responsibility. This formal refusal to answer arises from what he considers a union of his own interest with all the functions which he has performed under the aforesaid government, and from the fact that the Constitution of the United States does not allow that a citizen should be put to his oath in any case in which he is interested.

If the honorable tribunal admits or supposes that the Spanish government can have had secrets, if they believe that I have, in any case, been the depository, or even had a knowledge of those secrets, can I be so unfortunate as that officers of a character so fearful to offend, should suppose that I would stoop to act as an informer? I fondly indulge the belief that, in this case, their generous hearts and their justice will award all that belongs to me.

From this moment, in my quality of citizen of the United States of America, I place myself under the shield of the liberal laws of my actual country, and submit to all things which the authority shall be pleased to ordain. If my formal refusal to answer on oath to questions that might be propounded to me at present or for the future, in relation to facts or acts dependent on the Spanish authorities, be in contradiction to the deposit of the archive of surveys of this Territory, now in my hands, I offer to deliver everything in my possession belonging to the public, to the person who shall be pointed out to me, provided always that a sufficient discharge shall be given me of the documents which I shall deliver. I would observe to the honorable tribunal, that of the former Spanish officers who have passed under the dominion of the United States, I claim the smallest quantity of land, which quantity does not amount to more than 3,129 and some arpens, which comprehends a complete title for 3,042 arpens. The balance of my property in land I hold in right of my wife, being her share of the property of her deceased mother, besides four concessions acquired, forming 160 arpens, in virtue of French titles.

My respect to the laws of my actual country, my fidelity in the support of the Constitution, and my devotion to the public cause, are and shall be the unvarying principles by which I shall be governed in all my actions.

I claim from the justice of the honorable court, that my present declaration and profession of faith, shall be annexed to the registers of the deliberations of the honorable court, of which I remain, with the most profound respect,

The most humble and obedient servant,

ANTOINE SOULARD.

ST. LOUIS, May 2, 1806.

Don Carlos Dehault Delassus claims 30,000 arpens of land, situated in the Territory of Louisiana, granted to him by Zenon Trudeau, the 10th February, 1798.

To Don ZENON TRUDEAU, Lieutenant Colonel of the Royal Armies, Captain of the Regiment of Louisiana, Lieutenant Governor of the establishments of Illinois and its dependencies, &c.

Don Carlos Dehault Delassus, lieutenant colonel, annexed to the regiment of Louisiana, actually commandant, civil and military, of the post of New Madrid and its dependencies, &c., represents to you that, having petitioned for a quantity of the royal lands proportionate fully to a part of his means, which you granted to him in 1796, conformably to the orders of the senior governor, the Baron de Carondelet, dated May 8, 1793, he now solicits, moreover, from your justice that you will be pleased to grant him for the balance of the means which he possesses, in conformity with the said orders, the quantity of thirty thousand arpens in superficie, of vacant lands of the royal domain, so that when circumstances will permit him, and he will not, as he is at this moment, be weighed down by the occupations of the royal service, he may order them to be surveyed, and employ them for the establishment, if it be possible for him to do so, of two manufactures, a soap factory and a tannery, the accomplishment of which, if I can obtain, they will be profitable to myself as well as to the public, furnishing them with soap and leather cheaper by half than the price which they now pay, on account of their being imported here from Europe, and a very small quantity of them by the Americans. God preserve your life many years.

CARLOS DEHAULT DELASSUS.

ST. LOUIS OF THE ILLINOIS, February 3, 1798.

It appearing to me that the land which is solicited belongs to the royal domain, the surveyor, Don Antonio Soulard, will put the party interested in possession of it, and shall verbalize his survey in extenso, in order that it may serve to solicit the concession from the senior governor general of the province, whom I inform that the subject is in such circumstances as merit this favor.

ZENON TRUDEAU.

ST. LOUIS OF THE ILLINOIS, February 10, 1798.

I send you back the prescribed titles of the concessions granted to Mr. François Vallé, of St. Genevieve, who will it to Mr. Dodge, and of which the latter has ceded his half to Mr. Tardiveau, who has made you a gift of it, with the sanction (visa) and approbation which you desire. By this opportunity I write to Mr. Zenon Trudeau, to concede to you the land on which you are discovering mines of lead, with that adjacent, of an extent sufficient for their exploration, provided, however, that it be not granted previously to others.

Your son-in-law and your sons will also have, as you desire it, a plantation in such place of the Illinois as they shall choose, and of an extent proportioned to the cultures and establishments which they may propose to form; which serves as answer to yours, No. 3. May God preserve, &c.

THE BARON DE CARONDELET.

NEW ORLEANS, May 8, 1793.

Certified by M. P. Leduc.

To the honorable the Judge of the District Court of the United States for the district of Missouri:

Respectfully showeth unto your honor, your petitioner, Baptiste Janis, an inhabitant of Louisiana, at the time of the cession and transfer thereof to the United States by the French Republic, and now of St. Genevieve, in the county of St. Genevieve, in the State of Missouri.

That he presented his petition to Don Zenon Trudeau, the then lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana, under the government thereof, and as such, authorized and empowered to make grants and concessions of land, thereby, for the causes therein mentioned, petitioning the said Don Zenon Trudeau to obtain from the benevolent government of which the said Don Zenon Trudeau was the worthy representative, as a concession and full property for himself, his heirs, and assigns, the quantity of 8,000 arpens of land in superficie, to take at his choice, out of the vacant lands belonging to the King's domain, as by said petition will, among other things, more fully and at large appear, which petition, signed by your petitioner, bears date at St. Genevieve of the Illinois, the 20th of September, 1796, the original in the French language, a true translation whereof into the English language is herewith filed, marked (A) and prayed to be referred to, and taken as a part of this petition, and your petitioner has the original petition ready to be produced, as this honorable court may require. Your petitioner shows unto your honor, that the said Don Zenon Trudeau, on the 26th day of September, of the same year, issued his order of survey to Don Antonio Soulard, the public surveyor of Upper Louisiana, thereby directing the said Soulard to survey for the benefit of your petitioner, the 8,000 arpens of land which your petitioner solicited, provided it should be within the domains of his Majesty, and should deliver to your petitioner a copy of the said survey, that it might serve him as a title to the property, until he should send it in form to the general government of said province, to which he must have applied; all of which by the said order of survey, which is in the Spanish language, a true translation whereof into the English language is herewith filed, and prayed to be taken as a part of this petition, marked (B), will, among other things, more fully appear, and your petitioner has the original order of survey in his possession, ready to be produced as this honorable court shall require. Your petitioner further states, that the said Antonio Soulard never proceeded to survey the said 8,000 arpens previous to the cession of the country to the United States, nor since that time hath it been surveyed, or any part thereof. Your petitioner further states, that his said claim was never presented to any of the boards of commissioners appointed to inquire into the validity of claims to lands under any law of the United States; and under and by virtue of said order of survey, your petitioner claims the right to 8,000 arpens of land, to be taken from public lands belonging to the United States of America, in the State of Missouri. Your petitioner therefore prays, that the validity of his said claim may be inquired into by this honorable court, and that his said claim to 8,000 arpens of land may, by a decree of your honorable court, be confirmed, and that he may be permitted to locate the same upon public lands, according to law, and for such other and further relief as, the premises considered, may seem according to equity and justice. And your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

DAVIS, Attorney for Petitioner.

To Don ZENON TRUDEAU, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Upper Louisiana, and Commandant at St. Louis:

Baptiste Janis, an inhabitant of Ste. Genevieve, lieutenant of militia of his Catholic Majesty, having a wife and eight children, with a number of slaves, has the honor to represent to you, that seeing from day to day his family increasing, and having for his whole recourse, to provide for their sustenance, but the cultivation of a few arpens of land in the lower part (Point Basse) of this village, subject to be overflowed by the inundations of the Mississippi, his wish is, to the end of insuring a more steady way, his well being, and that of his family, to obtain from the benevolent government of which you are the worthy representative, as a concession and full property for himself, his heirs and assigns, the quantity of 8,000 arpens of land in superficie, to take at his choice, out of the vacant land belonging to the King's domain, which being granted, the petitioner shall not cease to offer up prayers to Heaven for the prosperity of his Majesty, and for the preservation of your precious days.

Done at Ste. Genevieve, Illinois, the 20th of September, 1796.

BAPTISTE JANIS.

(B.)

Don ZENON TRUDEAU, Lieutenant Governor of Upper Louisiana:

The surveyor, Don Antonio Soulard, shall survey for the benefit of the interested, the 8,000 arpens of land in superficie, which he solicits, situated as mentioned, provided it will be within the domains of his Majesty, and shall deliver him a copy of his survey, that it may serve him as a title of property, until he does send it in form to the general government, to which he must apply in convenient time.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1539. [1ST SESSION.

RELATIVE TO THE TITLE TO THE ISLAND OPPOSITE ST. LOUIS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JUNE 6, 1836.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States:

SIR: We ask the favor of you to communicate to the House of Representatives this, our memorial, setting forth what is intended, and what in practice is like to be, the actual operation and effect of the bill reported to the House of Representatives from the Committee on Roads and Canals, "appropriating the sum of $40,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in the improvement of the harbor of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri:" said bill marked H. R., 154, is herewith presented.

This bill is understood to have originated in the representations, and upon the petition of certain inhabitants of the city of St. Louis, defining and making out the precise object to be attained, by means of the appropriation therein made, to be the removal of a large and now permanent body of land (exceeding 500 acres) originally an island, but by accretion or alluvion, now joined to so much of the low land on the river Mississippi as constitutes the site of the southern portion of the city of St. Louis, and thus to restore the main stream of the river to its ancient channel, now occupied and filled up with such accretion or alluvion, and so far diverting the main stream of the river from its present bed or channel.

The body of land so intended to be removed, and its place converted into a channel for the river, has been appropriated by solemn sanctions of the law, and a sacred pledge of the public faith, to private use, and under such sanction and pledge, converted from public domain to the property of individual citizens.

The title by which those individuals have acquired their right to the land in question, and the grounds upon which that title and those rights are assailed, by the persons at whose instance the said bill has been reported to the House of Representatives, are set forth in document No. 197, printed for the use of the House of Representatives, a copy of which is herewith filed. A bill varying in terms, but having the same object, and intended to operate the same effect, and proceeding from the aforesaid representations and petition of the same persons, has also been reported to the Senate from the Committee on Commerce, providing for a pier to give direction to the current of the Mississippi river near the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri," and appropriates $20,000 for that object; a copy of which bill, marked S. 230, is also herewith presented.

We, sir, as the legal assignees of the title to the land in question, together with Mr. A. H. Evans, part owner of the same land, very respectfully submit our protest against any legislative action upon the subject, tending to the condemnation or appropriation of the land in question to any scheme for the proposed improvement of navigation or of the harbor of St. Louis.

The pretence upon which the individual movers of this supposed improvement proceed, are, first, the common interest and convenience of the city of St. Louis; and, secondly, the supposed rights of individuals owning lots adjacent.

As to the first, we beg leave to remark, that the city of St. Louis, as a community, can have no interest in the question, since the very land in question must necessarily constitute a part of the city itself, and a most valuable and important part, with all the advantages of navigation and harbor afforded by the river; and the only question is, what portion of its citizens, and what individual owners of lots, are entitled to the existing advantages of water property? Those to whom the operation of great natural causes has already given them, or those who seek to obtain them, by artificial means, counteracting the operation of those natural causes, and contending against them, with more than a doubtful chance of permanent success.

As to the second pretence, which sets up the rights of riparian proprietors to land, formed by accretion or alluvion, in the bed of a public river, against the grantees of the same public domain, we conceive it wholly unnecessary for us to urge more than that, at best, it is but a question of proprietary right, between different claimants, all deriving title directly or indirectly from the local sovereign in whom the domain was originally vested; that the question of the title to alluvion lands in the valley of the Mississippi, is one of very extensive connection with land titles, going probably to the very foundation of the title of the riparian proprietors who now claim our land as an accretion to our soil, which itself may have been but an accretion to the soil of some other proprietors; that these persons, by their own showing, have not the advantages attached to their possessions, of riparian proprietors, bordering on a navigable river, or a harbor for vessels; that the seat of the river trade has been long removed to a different quarter of the city; and that it is not shown that their lots at any time since the present proprietors acquired them, were ever in a better condition, in regard to the river trade, than at present, and that the formation of a harbor adjacent to their lots (if such scheme be at all practicable) would be a clear sacrifice of our property to their emolument.

These considerations, we respectfully suggest, show that the ultimate effect intended by these bills is not demanded by public expediency, nor justified upon the principles of distributive justice.

But whatever may be the particular opinions of individuals upon these points, we feel assured that no consideration of public expediency, nor any sympathy with the supposed rights or wrongs of individuals, can induce Congress to depart so far from the principles of legitimate legislation, as either to destroy the property of an individual for a public object, without adequate compensation to the individual; or, to take away property or rights from one citizen, to give to, or benefit another, until the title to hold the property, or to enjoy the rights, has been adjudicated, between the adverse claimants, by the regular tribunals of the country.

If there be anything in the adverse claim set up, for what are called the "riparian proprietors," against our title as grantees of the public domain, it is for the tribunals above mentioned to decide on the validity of the claim, and enforce the rights of those asserted proprietors, by adequate remedies. When they have so established their title to the land in question as a mere alluvion accretion to their own soil, (upon which ground alone they pretend to claim it,) it will be time enough then for them to ask of Congress an appropriation of money to annihilate the property to which they may so have established their title. But quite unprecedented is a petition praying for the destruction of another's property for the benefit of the petitioners, without other apology than an outstanding and unauthenticated adverse claim in their own right.

We beg leave further to suggest, that if, upon consideration of the whole matter, Congress should, contrary to our opinions and expectations, deem that any great public benefit really demands the execution of the scheme for the supposed improvement of the harbor of St. Louis by the demolition of our property, we are not disposed to stand obstinately in the way of a scheme so sanctioned, but in that case would agree to give up so much of our property as the projected scheme of improvement contemplates the destruction of, for the sake of the experiment, upon receiving from the public its fair value; which we estimate at not less than two hundred thousand dollars.

Your memorialists rest in perfect security, confident that Congress will neither impair their rights nor injure their property, without amply providing for their indemnity.

ELIAS T. LANGHAM,

No. 333. OFFICE OF THE RECORDER OF LAND TITLES, St. Louis, September 26, 1817.

I certify that a tract of six hundred and forty acres of land, situated in Marais des Pechis, county of New Madrid, which appears from the books of this office to be owned by John B. Thibault, has been materially injured by earthquakes; that said Thibault has been already relieved for one hundred and sixty acres, (see certificate No. 222;) therefore, in conformity to the provisions, and to complete the limitation contained in the act of Congress of 17th February, 1815, the said John B. Thibault, or his legal representatives, is entitled to locate four hundred and eighty acres of land, on any of the public lands of the Territory of Missouri, the sale of which is authorized by law.

FREDERICK BATES.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, February 11, 1836.

E. T. LANGHAM.

Know all men by these presents, that, whereas, by an act of Congress, entitled "a bill for the relief of Archibald Gamble," approved January 28, 1833, it was enacted, that the heirs or assigns of John B. Thibault, who are entitled to a New Madrid certificate, numbered three hundred and thirty-three, for four hundred and eighty acres, heretofore entered in township number forty-six, range six east of the fifth principal meridian, be, and were thereby authorized to enter four hundred and eighty acres of land on any of the public lands in the State of Missouri, the sale of which is authorized by law: Provided, that the said heirs or representatives of said John B. Thibault, so entitled as aforesaid, before making said location or entry, shall execute a release to the United States for all claim and right to the land upon which said certificate had been heretofore entered. Now this deed witnesseth, that I, Archibald Gamble, claiming by regular chain of title, as the assignee or legal representative of said John B. Thibault, the said certificate, number three hundred and thirty-three, and the land heretofore located by virtue thereof, in township number forty-six north, in range six east of the fifth principal meridian, do, by these presents, release unto the United States all the right, title, and claim, of myself and my heirs or assigns, or of the said John B. Thibault, of, in, and to the southwest fractional quarter of section twenty-two, the southeast fractional quarter of same section, the northwest fractional quarter of section twenty-seven, and so much of the east half of the same section as makes the quantity of four hundred and eighty acres, in township forty-six north, range six east, to have and to hold to the said United States or their assigns forever.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, at the city of St. Louis, this 15th day of March, in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-four.

STATE OF MISSOURI, County of St. Louis, ss.:

Be it remembered that on this 15th day of March, in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-four, personally appeared before me, one of the justices of the peace of the county of St. Louis, the above-named Archibald Gamble, who is personally well known to me as the person executing the deed of release to the United States, and acknowledged the same to be his act and deed, hand and seal, for the purposes therein mentioned, taken and certified the day and year aforesaid.

This deed from Archibald Gamble to the United States, bearing date the fifteenth of March, eighteen hundred and thirty-four, was filed by said Archibald Gamble, on or about the twentieth of March, in said year eighteen hundred and thirty-four, in this office; and it appears, from the records of this office, that the tract of land released to the United States by this deed, is the same tract of land upon which New Madrid certificate, numbered three hundred and thirty-three, was heretofore entered.

In surveying the above location or entry, and determining the area thereof, I request that you will leave out of said survey, and out of the computation of the area thereof, the land claimed by Robert Duncan, where he now lives, in right of pre-emption.

AN ACT for the relief of Archibald Gamble.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the heirs or assigns of John B. Thibault, who are entitled to a New Madrid certificate, numbered three hundred and thirty-three, for four hundred and eighty acres, heretofore entered in township number forty-six, range six east of the 5th pricipal meridian, be, and are hereby, authorized to enter four hundred and eighty acres of land on any of the public lands in the State of Missouri, the sale of which is authorized by law: Provided, That the said heirs or representatives of said John B. Thibault, so entitled as aforesaid, before making said location or entry, shall execute a release to the United States for all claim and right to the land upon which said certificate has been heretofore entered.

To the Hon. THOMAS H. BENTON and LEWIS F. LINN, Senators, and WM. H. ASHLEY and ALBERT G. HARRISON, Representatives in Congress of the State of Missouri:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, your constituents, inhabitants of the city of St. Louis, beg leave to call your attention to certain matters which very materially affect their interests, as well as the interests of the United States.

It is known to you that the authorities of the city of St. Louis have made several efforts to procure from the government of the United States a removal of the island, or sand-bar, which has been made by an accumulation of logs and sand, opposite to the lower part of the city; and which has obstructed the landing along a portion of the margin of the river, and from time to time threatens still further to block up and injure the harbor. Knowing that the subject had been brought before Congress at a former session, and that your exertions would not be wanting to procure a favorable result at the present session, we should have waited for that result, without troubling our representatives further, had not certain events occurred here, which have an adverse bearing upon the attainment of our object.

It seems, that while the action of Congress with respect to the improvement of our harbor has been delayed, a person by the name of Robert Duncan built a hut on the island or sand-bar in question, and that recently he has preferred to the proper land office his claim to a pre-emption. This claim has been allowed, and he has received the proper voucher for obtaining a patent, and has transferred all his right therein, as is believed, to Elias T. Langham, the surveyor general, and A. H. Evans. Mr. Langham has also, as we understand, located on other portions of said sand-bar, and upon sundry strips of ground along the margin of the river, adjacent to the sand-bar, and along the whole front of the city, a New Madrid certificate. It is now pretended on the part of Mr. Langham and others, who are interested in the speculation, that the sand-bar, or a considerable portion of it, is individual property; and plans are already on foot to divert the natural course of the river, and to bring a part of the bar into a line with the landing of the upper part of the town, and make it the permanent landing for the lower part of the city. The result of success in these efforts will be the following:

1. It will throw all the lots in the south part of the town, calling for the river as a boundary, inland a considerable distance, and greatly injure their value; for it is evident that, if this island is permitted to remain as private property, it will be improved, and the channel between it and the town will be filled up.

2. It will give a permanent direction of the current of the river toward the Illinois shore, which will affect the navigation and course of the river for an indefinite distance below. The landing on the Missouri side will be destroyed by sand-banks and accretion, and in time that shore extended perhaps for miles; while encroachments will be made to the same extent on the Illinois side. The injury to private right will thus be incaculable; while the United States will be deprived of a landing at the arsenal and barracks, upon a river, the navigation of which, like that of the sea within their jurisdiction, would seem to belong to their exclusive control.

3. A great injury may, and in time, perhaps will, be sustained by the State of Illinois. The bottom land on the Illinois side of the river is of many miles in width; and is settled and improved below this place, and is exceedingly fertile. Private enterprise ought not to be permitted to subtract from the territory of that or any other State, by diverting or altering the direction of a great navigable stream, which is a common boundary of two States. If this can be done in the present instance, then, on the same principles, the owners of Bloody island, which is in the State of Illinois, may construct piles and artificial works that will turn the current from this city, and utterly ruin its harbor.

Our objects in this communication are: first, to call your attention to the necessity of early action by Congress upon the subject of the removal of the sand-bar; secondly, to request that proper steps may be taken to prevent the issuing of patents on the pre-emption and New Madrid locations mentioned above.

As to the first, nothing further need be said, except that the bill should provide that any money appropriated for the improvement of the harbor of St. Louis, should be expended under the superintendence of a proper agent, engineer, or officer of the United States.

In regard to the patents, we will observe, that even if a private right has vested in Langham and his associates, yet the United States, for the benefit of the harbor of St. Louis, the preservation of the current of the Mississippi in its ancient channel, along the bold shore of this State, and the protection of the property of the government, as well as that of a mass of individuals, should remove the bar, and indemnify those who own any interest in it.

But it seems very questionable whether this sand-bar or island can be the subject-matter of a grant by government. We understand that, during the existence of the Spanish government here, a bar commenced (where the one in question is) and increased for a length of time, till it became an island, (that is, till it was above water throughout the year, as it is at present,) when certain persons petitioned for a concession of it, which was refused by the Spanish authorities, on the ground that the convenience of the inhabitants of St. Louis forbade the acquisition of the title to it by individuals. In a few years thereafter, that bar was entirely swept away, and the channel of the Mississippi, as theretofore, continued along the Missouri shore. Accordingly, it is well-known that twenty or thirty years ago the place of business of this town was at the southern end of it. The present bar, by its obstacles to navigation, has caused the business of the town to travel up to that part of the town where the obstruction does not exist; so that the ancient business lots and landing of the place have been deserted by the merchants. The grants of those lots in the southern part of the town, in many instances, in terms, call for the river. Has the government, after granting lots in such terms, a right to dispose of, to individuals, and thus interpose between them and the river, a sand-bar that has grown up to be an island since the grant of the lots? On the contrary, have not the owners a right, acquired at the time of the grant, to be bounded by the river; and for that purpose to remove any obstructions to navigation, or any bars or other obstacles, that should threaten to turn the river from their lots? Certainly, they might have done this with regard to the bar in its incipient stage; and if so, if when the bar first commenced, and during its increase, they had a right to stop its growth and remove it, because it threatened to injure their landing, and turn the river from the front of their lots, at what moment did their right cease? Certainly the fact that the bar is now of such a size that it remains above water, except occasionally, when the annual flood is unusually high; the fact that it has bushes and small trees growing upon it, does not alter its character. It is only, in such a state, a larger and more permanent obstruction to the navigation along the front of those lots, originally granted with a river boundary, when there was no sand-bar there. It would seem, therefore, that the United States acquired, and could acquire, no right in this bar, which they could sell under the acts of Congress. If the government had any right in it, it had such right as it has to the sea along our coast, or to a sand-bank that should arise in or near our harbor there; a right to hold it, or remove it, for the benefit of navigation.

By the civil law, and by the Spanish law, which was the general law here till its abolition in 1816, all islands arising in rivers, whether navigable or not, belonged to the riparian proprietors. (See Cooper's Justinian, page 74; and Partidas' translation, 1 vol. page 346.) If this bar commenced under those laws, it would seem to be now the property of the proprietors of the adjacent lots, on the Missouri side, and not the property of the government; and, therefore, not susceptible of sale by the government. Under the common law, which was introduced here in 1816, islands arising in rivers, above the ebb and flow of the tide, belonged to the riparian proprietors: so that whether this island was formed under the Spanish or American government, the right of the government to dispose of it is very questionable, to say the least.

There is another view of this subject, derived from the character of the Mississippi, which is deserving of consideration.

The laws of Spain and of England, and of ancient Rome, on this subject, were made as applicable to the rivers of those countries; and with such application, and in analogous instances, are reasonable and wise. But such laws never could have been considered as applicable to the Mississippi, had it existed in either of those countries. Their streams, in comparison, are mere creeks and rivulets. The Mississippi, below the mouth of the Missouri, is, moreover, extremely rapid, and carries down immense quantities of sand and trees, &c., which circumstances give it its peculiar character, of shifting its channel, which it is doing perpetually, as every person who has navigated it is aware. Along its banks, and dependent on its navigation for their prosperity, is settled a number of populous and powerful communities, occupying already a space of about two thousand miles from its mouth; while the land bordering on it for that distance has been, for the most part, granted to individuals by the government. Now, under these circumstances, who has a right, in case an island or bar should form, to occupy it as private property, and by permanent improvements upon it, perhaps change the current for twenty miles below? Have not all these communities and riparian proprietors a vested right to have the river kept in its ancient channel? The slightest obstruction, as the sinking of a keel-boat, or a temporary obstacle from ice, makes a bar, and causes the channel to wear away the bank on one side of the river, and to desert the other. We should suppose that these considerations would induce the belief, that any bar or island that should spring up in the Mississippi, under such circumstances, must be considered in the light of a nuisance, which might be removed by those whose interests are endangered thereby. The common good of all on its banks requires such to be law: and it can make no difference in the reasonableness of the principle, whether the removal takes place before the sand-bar aspires to the dignity of an island, or after it has attained that character.

For these reasons, we protest against the locations above mentioned, and, through you, desire such measures to be taken as will most effectually prevent a recognition by government of these pretended titles.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1540. [1ST SESSION.

RELATIVE TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A LAND DISTRICT IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, JUNE 11, 1836.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 28, 1836.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 24th inst., enclosing the resolution of the Senate, herewith returned, in the following words, viz.:

"Resolved, that the Committeee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a new land district, to include the country recently acquired by treaty with the Cherokee Indians," I have the honor to transmit herewith a diagram, showing the extent of the Cherokee country in Alabama, and the boundaries of the Coosa land district, Mardisville Land Office.

On comparing this diagram with the boundaries of the several land districts in Alabama, as laid down on the map of that State, in the atlas heretofore furnished for the use of the Committee on Public Lands, the committee will be enabled to form a correct idea of the relative proportion that the superficial extent of the Cherokee cession bears to the Mardisville, and other land districts in the State.

I would beg leave to suggest, for the consideration of the committee, the idea of attaching the Cherokee lands to the adjoining districts, Huntsville and Mardisville, in some mode such as that laid down in the diagram, and which may be described thus—

So much as shall be found to lie north of the line, which will divide townships numbered eight and nine, and west of the line, dividing ranges numbered four and five, east, to be attached to the district of lands subject to sale at Huntsville; and so much as lies south of the line, which will divide townships numbered eight and nine, and east of the line which will divide ranges numbered four and five east, to be attached to the Coosa land district.

In case such a division will be acceptable to the people, and be, on the whole, equally convenient, as the creation of a new office, it occurs to my mind as being the preferable mode. My knowledge of the topography of the country is, however, very imperfect.

In connection with this subject, I deem it proper to remark that the removal of the Land Office, from Mardisville, to some more central position, has already been talked of. There appears, however, to be a diversity of opinion respecting such a movement.

By increasing the bounds of the Coosa district on the north, it would increase the necessity, if, indeed, any now exists, for removing the Land Office now at Mardisville, to a more central position.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner.

Hon. THOS. EWING, Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, Senate.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1541. [1ST SESSION.

ON THE GRADUATION AND REDUCTION OF THE PRICE OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, JUNE 15, 1836.

Mr. WALKER, from the select committee, on the subject of graduating and reducing the price of the public lands to actual settlers, reported:

Your committee have given the subject referred to them that attention to which it is so justly entitled, and report a bill embracing, with some modifications, most of the principles contained in the act submitted for their consideration. They have adopted the principle that the public lands should be held as a sacred reserve for the cultivators of the soil; that monopolies by individuals or companies, should be prevented; that sales should be made only in limited quantities to actual settlers, and the price in their favor reduced and graduated.

We also propose that the new States should be placed upon an equal footing in relation to grants of the public domain, and, consequently, that the same quantity of land granted to Ohio by the general government should be ceded to all the other new States of the Union, and to each of the Territories, upon their admission as States of the Union.

The sale of the public lands in limited quantities to actual settlers only, was proposed by the President of the United States in his annual message to Congress of December, 1832. In that message the President recommended that the public lands, at moderate prices, "should be sold to settlers in limited parcels." A sale for settlement only, and not for speculation, is certainly most conformable to the great purposes for which these lands were ceded to the general government.

The great object for which Virginia ceded the Northwestern Territory is, as declared by her act of cession, that the territory so ceded "should be laid out and formed into States, containing a suitable extent of territory, not less than 100 nor more than 150 miles square, or as near thereto as circumstances would admit; and that the States so formed should be distinct republican States, and admitted members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence, as the other States." The same language, substantially, will be found in the other acts of cession of the public domain. States can only be formed by the settlement of a country. The settlement, then, of this territory, was the primary object of those who made, as well as those who accepted the cession. A sale to settlers only, is then most in consonance with the spirit of the compacts by which these lands were acquired. It never was contemplated that the settlement of this territory should be arrested by the transfer of the soil from the government to wealthy monopolists. Sales were intended for settlement, and not for speculation. Until within a few years past the sales were made almost exclusively for settlement, but now the reverse is the fact. The sales within the last year have amounted to nearly thirteen millions of acres, being almost three times the amount sold in any preceding year. Eight millions of acres of these sales have probably been made for speculation, and not for settlement. This spirit of speculation in the public lands is increasing with alarming rapidity. Companies are forming in all directions to monopolize the ownership of the public domain, and thus be enabled to arrest the settlement and regulate the prosperity of the new States and Territories of the Union. A total and complete monopoly of the public lands by speculators is now contemplated, and the consequent withdrawal from the government of all its power over this subject. This system will be deeply injurious to the interest of the old as well as of the new States. Vast sums will be taken from investment in the channels of productive industry in the old States, and invested in purchases of uncultivated lands. It is a bounty offered by government for the annual withdrawal of capital from the useful pursuits of productive industry, for investment in waste lands, producing nothing, and, consequently adding nothing to the general prosperity of the country. Agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, are all injuriously affected by this process. For a great period of time the moneys thus invested might as well be sunk in the ocean. Agriculture is not benefited, for settlement is retarded and not advanced by this system. Commerce and manufactures are injured by the annual sinking of so much of the active capital of the country. The vast sums thus invested during the present year have certainly greatly contributed to create the existing embarrassments, and as the evil progresses, the embarrassments will be increased and aggravated. It is then the interest of the old as well as the new States to arrest this annual investment of millions in unproductive pursuits. Were it arrested, these millions of dead capital would be adding yearly to the commerce, agriculture, and manufactures of the whole country. When money is invested, even from the old States, in lands for settlement and cultivation only, in the new States, the annual products of the soil increase the wealth and prosperity of the whole country, and soon give back to the old States, through the channels of trade and business, more than the amount of the purchase-money of the land. But, if the citizens of a nation appropriate millions annually in the purchase of property yielding no income, the result is a great national loss. It is, then, the interest of the whole Union that these monopolies of the public lands should be arrested, and that capital should continually flow in the various channels of productive industry. If, among other causes, the existing embarrassments are now greatly attributable to the speculating investment of millions during the past year, in wild lands, what will be the result if the system is permitted to continue for a series of years unabated? It is easy to foresee that the necessary consequence will be increasing distress and embarrassment, or at least a diminution of the national prosperity.

Your committee, then, present a bill, which will at once arrest the progress of this evil. To effect this great object, they propose, in the first place, to break up the system of sales of the public land at public auction, which, upon the aggregate of the sales of the last year, has produced but two cents and a small fraction per acre above the minimum price.

Secondly. Where two or more applications are made by different persons at the same time, for the same section of land, the preference in the purchase or entry shall be given to the first occupant; and when the tract has never been occupied by any of the applicants, then to the most aged of them.

Thirdly. That no entry shall, in any case, be made by any one person, under the provisions of this act, for an amount exceeding one section of land.

Fourthly. That no purchase or entry shall be made, in any case, without a previous affidavit by the applicant, that the land is designed to be entered for the use of the applicant only, and for the purpose of settlement and cultivation.

Fifthly. That no patent shall, in any case, issue until three years after the purchase or entry, and proof on oath by at least two credible witnesses, before the register and receiver of the proper land district, of three years' continued occupancy and cultivation subsequent to the date of the entry, accompanied also by the affidavit of the applicant to the same facts.

Sixthly. That any sale, contract for sale, lease, or contract for lease, prior to the emanation of the patent, shall be utterly null and void, and operate as a forfeiture of the purchase-money and title to the United States.

Seventhly. That a failure to commence the occupancy of the land entered under the provisions of this law, within four months after the date of the entry, by the person who shall have made such entry, shall operate as a forfeiture of the title and purchase-money to the United States, and an abandonment of the occupancy, by such person, within three years after the commencement thereof, shall operate a like forfeiture of the money and title to the United States.

Eighthly. That no second purchase from the government, or entry, shall be permitted, by any one who shall enter a section upon the terms and under the provisions of this law.

Ninthly. That any one who is, at the date of this act, actually occupying and cultivating a tract of land, of which such person was the proprietor prior to the passage of this law, is permitted to purchase from the government, or enter any unoccupied adjoining tract, not exceeding one section, upon affidavit that the purchase or entry is made for the purpose of enlarging his or her farm, and not for speculation, and that no patent shall issue for such tract, until the expiration of three years from the date of the purchase or entry, and that any sale, contract, for sale, lease, or contract for lease, prior to the emanation of the patent, shall be utterly null and void, and operate as a forfeiture of the title and purchase-money to the United States.

Tenthly. That any one swearing falsely, to obtain for him or herself, or for any other person, the benefit of the provisions of this act, shall be liable to all the pains and penalties of perjury; and that any person procuring another to swear falsely, to obtain for any one the benefits of this act, shall be guilty of subornation of perjury.

Some of these requisitions may be considered somewhat rigid, but they are not more so than may be necessary to introduce a system which, in its practical operations, will wholly prevent any future entries of the public domain for the purposes of speculation. Were this evil only diminished, much good would be effected. But your committee feel confident that the bill proposed by them will entirely suppress speculation in the public lands. Speculations would become impracticable after the adoption of this system, for the following reasons:

First. The speculator must be guilty of subornation of perjury in procuring the settler to swear falsely that he enters the land for settlement and cultivation by himself, when, in fact, he enters it to sell to another.

Secondly. The actual settler would be required to commit perjury in taking the oath by which he enters the land.

Thirdly. The speculator must incur the hazard of punishment for subornation of perjury.

Fourthly. The settler would incur the hazard of punishment for the crime of perjury.

Fifthly. No speculator would furnish the money to enter the land on a contract of sale by the settler, because such contract would not only be null and void, but operate as a forfeiture of the title and purchase-money to the United States. No capitalist, therefore, would incur the hazard, as well as guilt, of such an arrangement.

Sixthly. No settler under this law would consent to be made the guilty instrument of an entry for speculation. It is against his interest; for, by consenting to make this entry for another, he forever forfeits the valuable privilege of making another entry for himself. Three years continuous actual settlement and cultivation must precede the emanation of the patent and right to sell. Consequently, if the entry were made for the use of a speculator, he must have paid the settler, first, for incurring the guilt and hazard of perjury; secondly, for forfeiting the valuable privilege of ever entering a tract for himself; and thirdly, for the loss of three years' time in occupying the land of another; and then the capitalist must have himself incurred the guilt and hazard of subornation of perjury, and the risk of losing his money and land by an entry in fraud of the law.

Seventhly. As the new States would be deeply interested in arresting the system of speculation and monopoly, the provisions of this law being in consonance with public opinion and public interest, would be rigidly and faithfully executed. No capitalist would dare attempt to procure a single entry for speculation in violation of this law, much less would he dream of the practicability of entering millions of acres every year by the employment of thousands of settlers. The expense, as well as the guilt and hazard, would be too enormous. An entry for speculation, under the accumulated difficulties and expenditures arising under the provisions of this law, would be a loss, and not a speculation. When the speculator would have paid the settler for incurring the guilt and hazard of perjury, for forfeiting the privilege of entering another section for himself, and for three years' occupancy of the land, together with the original entrance-money to the government, and three years' interest, he could never sell the tract for cost and charges. To presume that even any frequent attempts would be made to violate the law, is to suppose the great body of settlers in the new States to be corrupt and vicious, the very reverse of which is the fact.

Under this system, then, lands being entered or purchased from the government only for settlement and cultivation, the sales would be regulated by the annual increase of population in the new States and Territories. The estimate of this probable increase for the future can best be ascertained by reference to the past. The population of the new States and Territories of the Union erected out of the public domain was in 1800 only 59,632; in 1810 it was 410,057; in 1820, 1,230,334; and in 1830 it was 2,377,312. Thus, the increase from 1800 to 1810 was 350,425, or about 600 per cent.; the increase from 1810 to 1820, 820,277, or about 200 per cent.; the increase from 1820 to 1830, 1,146,978, or about 103 per cent. Thus, while the per-centage of increase has diminished at every census, the actual increase, being on a larger capital, has augmented at every enumeration. Conceding that the ratio of increase in the States and Territories falls to 63 per cent., as exhibited by the census of 1840, still the increase from 1830 to 1840 would be about 1,500,000; and your committee believe it will exceed this estimate. Assuming the average of entries by the settlers to be a half section each, as none could enter more than a section, and many could not or would not enter more than one eighth, and assuming six as the usual average number of the family of each settler, himself inclusive, the quantity entered in ten years for settlement would be eighty millions of acres, or eight millions of acres per annum. But this must be reduced by the fact that there were 337,963 slaves in the new States and Territories, which could not be fairly included in averaging the family at six, and that on this account about one eighth must be deducted, which would reduce the amount entered annually for settlement to seven millions of acres. But it must also be remembered that a very large portion of this annual increase of population would not enter lands, and that at least two millions of acres must be deducted on this account, and this will leave five millions of acres as about the true amount that would be entered annually for settlement. Your committee, however, believe that it would rather be less than more than this amount.

By the system proposed by the committee, about five millions of dollars per annum would be received from the sales of the public lands into the national treasury. By sales for speculation, as well as settlement, assuming the present year as a criterion, about sixteen millions per annum, for a few years, it appears, would be realized. But, by these vast sales for speculation, all the valuable public lands would soon be entered, and the national domain soon cease to be a source of revenue. Thus, by the present system, we are exhausting this great fund for unnecessary revenue, instead of preserving it, as proposed by the committee, to yield a smaller annual amount, but for a much longer series of years, so as to render an increase of the tariff unnecessary. When the tariff reaches its lowest standard, in 1842, the revenue derived therefrom cannot much exceed thirteen millions of dollars. Let speculators, by that period, or shortly thereafter, have entered all the public lands worth selling, at the minimum price, and an increase of the tariff becomes again inevitable. The system proposed by the committee will avoid these evils, by an annual addition of five millions of dollars, from sales of public land, to the revenue from duties on imports.

Having, as your committee hope, demonstrated the beneficial effects upon the whole Union of sales of the public land for settlement only, they now proceed to the second branch of the subject—the reduction and graduation of the price of the public lands. The great argument heretofore urged against this measure has been, that it would throw the public lands, at reduced prices, into the hands of speculators. This argument, however, ceases to apply, under the provisions of this bill, by which the public lands can be sold for settlement only. The sales of the public lands operate as a continual drain upon the resources of the West. The tariff upon imports has been greatly reduced, but the general system of reduction has not been permitted to apply to the relief of the Western people, by the reduction of the price of the public lands. The revenues of the general government are chiefly appropriated in the erection of fortifications, and improvement of harbors, and other expenditures in the Atlantic States. Small, indeed, is the amount appropriated for the new States, while annual millions are drained from them by the sale of the public lands, for expenditure upon the maritime frontier. The new States contribute their full proportion to the revenue from the consumption of imports, and pay, in addition, another vast sum into the national Treasury from the sale of the public lands. Your diminution, then, of the burdens of the people is unequal, when you refuse to diminish those burdens which operate only upon the people of the new States. Your reduction is sectional, because you refuse to apply it to the public lands, the great commodity purchased by the people of the new States. You fill your Treasury to overflowing with an unnecessary revenue, instead of reducing all the burdens of the people of every State of the Union. Upon the same principle might you refuse to reduce the tariff upon cotton-bagging, because it was purchased only by the South, or decline reducing the tariff upon dye-stuffs, because purchased only in the manufacturing States, as refuse a reduction in the price of the public lands, because purchased chiefly by the people of the West. In all these cases you are only yielding up a portion of the national revenue unnecessary for the wants of the government, and your refusal to extend the reduction to the great commodity purchased by the people of the West, is unjust and unequal.

The new States co-operated with the South in reducing their burdens by a reduction of the tariff, and yet, with pain and mortification, your committee perceive many Southern States co-operating with others of the old

States, in refusing to extend to the people of the West the benefits of this system of reduction. That the new States, instead of menacing the Union, have submitted to this system of palpable injustice and inequality, affords a striking evidence of their devoted attachment to this confederacy, and presents a strong additional reason in favor of extending to them immediate and effectual relief.

Having proved, as your committee hope, that the price of the public lands ought to be reduced, the next question is as to the rate of reduction. And here we recur to the act of Congress originating the system of selling the public lands, passed on the 20th of May, 1785. By this act the price was fixed at one dollar per acre. If this price was not too great for fresh lands then, when the government was poor, and oppressed by a heavy debt, it cannot be considered as too high now, when the government is relieved from all debt, and is collecting a large unnecessary revenue. Were we to propose to reduce the price of fresh lands, never offered for sale, to the price fixed for similar lands by the act of 1785, there could be no just ground of complaint. Being, however, deeply solicitous to obtain the support of all the friends of moderate and gradual reduction, we do not propose to reduce at present the price of public lands that have never been offered for sale. Our proposition is to reduce the price of all lands that now have remained, or hereafter shall have remained, five years subject to entry, and less than ten years, to one dollar per acre; ten years and less than fifteen years, to ninety cents per acre; fifteen years and less than twenty years, to eighty cents per acre; twenty years and less than twenty-five years, to seventy cents per acre; twenty-five years and less than thirty years, to sixty cents per acre; and all lands that shall have been thirty years and upward subject to entry, shall be reduced to fifty cents per acre. As, under this system, all lands that have not been five years subject to entry, will be sold at a dollar and a quarter per acre, and at a dollar per acre from the fifth until the tenth year, the average price at which the public lands would be sold would be at least a dollar per acre. It must be perfectly obvious to all, and the committee will establish the fact by authentic proofs, that the public lands are of very unequal value. In almost every township there is a great variation in the value of the public lands. Many lands that will never command the present minimum price per acre, might be sold at a price descending from the present standard to fifty cents per acre, while millions of acres are wholly unsusceptible of cultivation, and can never be sold at any but a nominal price. Why fix the same unvarying price upon all lands, the good as well as the inferior? The price should sink by a descending scale, graduated by the decreasing value. The nearest possible approximation to this descending rate of value is the plan proposed by the committee. As a general rule, the lands that have remained for a series of years unsold, after they became subject to entry, must be less valuable than the fresh lands, and the value, as a general rule, diminishes with the length of time that the lands have been subject to entry. There are occasional exceptions to this rule, but not more than sufficient to prove its general application. This graduated scale of reduction is the nearest approximation to justice, while the unvarying price is the farthest from it. If all the public lands were at once reduced in price, without any graduation, the new and fresh lands would chiefly be sold; but the reduced prices will effect the sale of many inferior lands, that would never be sold at the present fixed minimum price per acre. The reduced price will operate chiefly in favor of the poorer class of citizens, who have not the means of paying the present price. It will enable many a day laborer to become a farmer and owner of the soil he cultivates.

Though that soil, purchased at the reduced price, may be less productive than the farm of his wealthy neighbor, yet it will be his own, it will be his home, and sufficiently fertile to supply the wants of himself and family. It will effect a change most beneficial in his condition, and highly conducive to the best interests of the nation. Shall the Atlantic States continue to drain vast sums of money for public lands from the people of the West, expend it on the seaboard, and refuse to diminish the burdens of the Western people, by reducing the price of the public lands? Such a system is unequal, unjust, and oppressive. To exhaust the resources of one section for perpetual expenditures in another, cannot be equitable. Suppose the interior States should refuse appropriations for fortifications on the seaboard, upon the ground that, by leaving it defenceless, they would thereby tempt many of their citizens to emigrate to the West? This would be most unjust; and yet it is not more so than the refusal of the maritime States to reduce the price of the public lands, because such refusal would retard the growth of the West. The West has ever been willing to expend her treasure and her blood in defending the maritime cities; and shall the maritime States so legislate as to retard the settlement of the West? Such a course would neither be wise nor patriotic. It would impose perpetual and undiminishing burdens upon the people of one section, for the benefit of another, and render the government of the Union an instrument of oppression and injustice.

The system we propose disrobes the government of the character of a speculator and the auxiliary of speculators upon the pioneers of the West. The government, under the present system, for the purpose of revenue only, is throwing the public domain into the hands of speculating monopolists. It will thus aid the sale, while it retards the settlement and cultivation of the lands of the West. It is reviving many of the evils of the old feudal system of Europe. Under that system, the lands were owned in vast bodies by a few wealthy barons, and leased by them to an impoverished and dependent tenantry. The same consequences must result from the monopolies now progressing in the pubic lands. Eight millions of acres of the public lands have probably passed during the last year into the hands of a few wealthy speculators, who hold them up at an extravagant value. These lands, therefore, will remain unoccupied for many years, or occupied only by a dependent tenantry. This is deeply injurious to every portion of the Union. The owner and cultivator of a single farm confers greater benefits upon the community than the monopolist of thousands of acres permitted to lie waste and uncultivated. The productions of the soil constitute the principal resources of this great nation. Upon the farming interest are all others dependent for their wealth and prosperity. That interest furnishes us not only with food and raiment at home, but sends abroad that hundred of millions in value of exports, which is carrying onward so rapidly the prosperity of this republic. Every new farm that is cultivated in the West adds to the wealth and prosperity of the whole Union; while the investment of millions in uncultivated lands draws so much money from the channels of productive industry, and depresses the energies of the whole country. The one system will leave the lands of the West waste and uncultivated; the other will subdue the wilderness, and fill it with smiling farms and prosperous villages. The one system will place upon the lands of the West a few wandering and impoverished tenants, controlled by absentee landlords; the other will plant upon your soil a virtuous and independent yeomanry, the owners of the soil they cultivate. The one system will add thousands to your population and resources, thousands to the products of your soil, to your imports and your exports; the other system will invest millions in wholly unproductive capital, and arrest the settlement and cultivation of the soil.

This system of speculation has, within the last year, progressed to an extent alarming to every friend of equal rights, and should be terminated at once and forever. These monopolies will be terminated by the system proposed by the committee, and the public lands reserved as a perpetual inheritance for the farmers of the Union.

The bill of the committee will greatly augment the population of the Union. It is an undisputed principle of the law of population, that it is most rapidly increased by increasing the facilities of subsistence. The vast effects of this principle are illustrated by comparing the relative advance in population of Ohio with any of the states upon the continent of Europe. Where, forty years ago, was one vast and untrodden wilderness, now is a mighty State, with a population greatly exceeding a million, planted ere the present baleful spirit of speculation and monopoly of the public lands had seized upon the capitalists of the Union. No man will pretend that, if the Union had been confined to the original thirteen States, with their present boundaries, and the new States remained wholly unsettled and uncultivated, that the population of the Union would have been as large by several millions as it now is. Upon every principle which has governed the progress of population, there would now be at least two millions of people less within the limits of the Union, had that Union been confined to the present boundaries of the original thirteen States. A loss of two millions of people to this Union would be indeed incalculable. It would diminish one seventh the power and strength of this nation, both in war and in peace. It would greatly decrease the moral and physical power of this Union, render us less prosperous in peace, less powerful in war, more liable to foreign aggression, and less able to repel it. All the revenue from imports and from public lands bears no comparison with the value of two millions of people. Will the just, the humane, the generous people of the old States desire to retain the poor man forever poor within their limits, when, by reducing the price of the public lands, they may enable him to procure for himself and family a happy home in the great valley of the West? Are the old States willing to avow the principle that they desire to restrain emigration to the West? It was one of the complaints of the thirteen States, in their Declaration of Independence, that the British Crown desired to retard our growth by increasing the difficulties of obtaining lands in the colonies; and will these same thirteen States now act upon the same odious principle toward their sisters of the West? The resident of Rhode Island, who becomes a resident of Michigan, does not cease to be a citizen of the American Union; and if, by this change, he improves the condition of himself and family, why should Rhode Island object, when the increased prosperity of every American citizen augments the national strength and glory? Suppose that the new and the interior States should all act upon this narrow and selfish policy toward the States upon the Atlantic seaboard? Suppose they objected to fortifying the seacoast, upon the ground that it drained the money of their citizens for expenditures beyond their limits, upon the maritime frontier; what would be the reply of the Atlantic States? It would be, that, in defending the seaboard States, the West aided in defending a part of the republic. And is not the argument equally just, that, in increasing the prosperity of the West, you augment the strength of the Union? Shall there then be no reciprocity of benefits in conducting the affairs of this great republic? So long as the means of subsistence are easy, an increase of capital is nothing to a nation compared with an increase of population. More especially is this true, when this population is composed of the productive and industrial classes, settled upon their own farms, and cultivating their own soil. But the system which would restrain emigration to the West, reverses all these principles, and sacrifices the prosperity of the nation to sectional prejudices and sectional interests. The American statesman who loves his whole country, should adopt that policy which will most rapidly increase the population of the whole nation. The inquiry should not be, what policy will best promote the interest of the old States or of the new States, but what will most rapidly increase the prosperity and population of the whole Union. Viewing the question in this light, the policy of cheapening, to farmers and settlers, the price of the public domain, cannot be doubted.

The existing situation of a neighboring territory presents another strong inducement to reduce to settlers the price of the public lands. Texas has now passed from a successful revolution into an independent government. Whether the people of this Union and the people of Texas (as your committee desire) will consent to its incorporation, as a part of this confederacy, is a question undetermined. Until this question is determined Texas must be regarded, for the present, as an independent neighboring republic. Stretching, by the boundary which she will obtain, from the Sabine to the Del Norte, from latitude twenty-seven south upon the gulf of Mexico, and approximating latitude forty north, possessing every variety of climate from New England to Florida, a most salubrious atmosphere, a soil fitted for every variety of product, and inviting Northern as well as Southern emigration, Texas must, in any event, carry off a considerable portion of our population from every quarter of the Union. She possesses within the above-mentioned limits about two hundred and thirty millions of acres, being rather more than four times the extent of Virginia. Not more than twenty-five millions of acres of this vast domain are covered by valid grants. With this mighty territory and a sparse population, Texas, being deeply solicitous to increase her physical strength, will do as every other state, possessing the control of its public domain, has done in all former periods. She will throw open this vast body of fresh and fertile lands to actual settlers, and to them alone, at prices nearly nominal. What will be the inevitable consequence? That the emigration from the old States and from Europe, which now settles the public domain in the new States, will, unless we reduce the price of our public lands in favor of actual settlers, pass beyond our limits, and establish themselves in Texas. The poor man of the old States, who desires to obtain a farm for himself and family, and has not the money to pay our present prices, will necessarily go to Texas. Many, also, who can pay the present prices of our public lands, will also go to Texas, where they can get cheaper and equally fertile lands. If we keep up the price of our lands, while Texas fixes her lands at a nominal value, the exhausting effect upon the wealth and population of the whole Union can scarcely be calculated. It will greatly depress the navigating, commercial, and manufacturing interests of the North, and reduce the value of property throughout the Union. When emigrants from the old States settle in the new States, there being a perfect system of free trade between all the States, the prosperity of the new States reacts in favor of the old States, and improvement in any one State advances the prosperity of the whole Union. Every new farm settled in the West gives business to the merchant, the manufacturer, and freighter of the old States, and adds to the wealth and prosperity of the whole Union. But not so with emigration from the old States to another republic. Our trade with such republic cannot be free. Other nations may furnish its supplies, and there is nothing in return to compensate us for the exhaustion of capital and emigration. We may greatly diminish these threatening evils by reducing to settlers the price of our public lands. If we reduce our lands to the standard fixed by Texas for her lands, the loss of the nation by emigration there will be comparatively small. But, if we keep up the price of our lands, while Texas fixes her land at a low rate, we shall lose by emigration at least a million of our population within the next ten years. Can any sum paid into the national Treasury compensate this nation for the loss of a million of her people? It cannot, and we should lose no time in endeavoring to prevent these threatened calamities. Should we refuse to act now, we will, when it is too late, when our population is gone, and property reduced in value, deplore our folly and want of foresight. The present emergency demands immediate action. Without this action the very life-blood of the Union will be exhausted, and a general depression of property, a languishing commerce, a decay of districts, towns, and cities, will certainly ensue. The current of emigration from one part of the Union to the other, from the old to the new States, rolls back a golden tide of trade and business. The old States now supply nearly all the wants of the farmers of the valley of the West, and hence its prosperity wonderfully promotes the welfare of the older States of the Union. The poor emigrant from the old States, who establishes a farm in the West, soon contributes more to the wealth and commerce of the State he left than if he had remained there in dependent poverty. The prosperity of the new States reacts, through the channels of trade and business, in favor of the old States, and hence the wonderful growth of the whole country.

The system we propose will have a wonderful tendency to perpetuate the Union. Under the existing laws, the public lands are now rapidly passing from the government into the hands of speculators. Sales at the rate of thirteen millions of acres per annum, will soon exhaust all that is worth selling of the public domain. But, if the sales be made only to settlers in limited quantities, this great domain will remain for a much longer period the property of the nation, for the sacred purpose only of establishing farms, and securing a freehold to the poorest American. While the whole Union will derive from the sales for settlement only, such moderate and almost unfluctuating revenue, as to render an increase of the tariff unnecessary, this noble domain will be filled annually with an industrious population, whose devotion to the Union will be greatly enhanced by the fact of their receiving their farms and homes at a cheap rate from a paternal government. How different must be the effect of persevering in the present system? The lands of the West passing into the hands of speculators, all reduction of the price even of inferior public lands refused, even the labor of the settler upon public lands is set up at auction by the government, and many a tract, rendered only valuable by the improvements of the occupant, is made a subject of speculation; the new States drained annually of millions for expenditure in the seaboard States, and the prosperity of these new States sacrificed for unnecessary revenue. Such a policy must excite sectional feelings, and tend to weaken the bonds of our Union. That the West never has menaced, and we trust never will menace the Union, to obtain any advantage for herself, gives her a strong additional claim to the favorable consideration of the general government. You have only realized about fifty millions of dollars from sales of the public lands, but from duties you have received about seven hundred millions; and the more you promote the settlement and cultivation of the soil, the more rapidly will you increase the exports, and consequently augment the imports of the country; and how vastly has your revenue from imports been increased, and must continue to increase, from the settlement and cultivation of the soil of the West, and thus has added millions, and will add millions more, to your revenue from this source.

We hold it to be a sound maxim, that no more money should be collected from the people, than is essential for the wants of the government; all beyond this is tyranny. Government is an agency created by the people for their benefit, and that they should be drained of millions annually, beyond the wants of this government, is the very essence of despotism. Leave all unnecessary surplus uncollected in the pockets of the people, and let each freeman expend his own money for such purposes as will, in his opinion, best promote the happiness of himself and family. If the general government may collect fifty millions of unnecessary revenue, it may collect five hundred millions, and thus subvert the liberties of the people.

The remedy for a surplus revenue is simple: reduce the revenue and the surplus disappears. Reduction, and not distribution, is the true policy of the government. Reduce, and there is no necessity to distribute; but distribute, and you will never reduce. Now you have greatly reduced the revenue from duties on imports, decrease the revenue still further, by diminishing the price of the public lands, and confining the sales to actual settlers, and your dangerous surplus soon vanishes. Is this system of sales to speculators, at the same unvarying unreduced price, to be perpetuated? If so, you perpetuate the system of a surplus revenue. You drain annually from the people, large amounts of unnecessary revenue. You fix the surplus system as the established policy of the government, and persevere in enriching the Treasury annually at the expense of the people.

The general government should never speculate upon the settlers of the public domain, nor aid others in so doing. There are two classes of speculators: one class, comprising many respectable citizens, who occasionally enter or purchase public lands unoccupied by any settler. Although no moral wrong is committed by these individuals, yet even this species of purchase or entry, for speculation, should be arrested, as contrary to the policy of the country, and calculated to retard future settlements. But there is another and very numerous class of speculations upon the public domain, not only permitted but encouraged by our existing laws, and replete with fraud and extortion. It is this: immediately succeeding the advertisement of large bodies of public lands for sale at auction by the United States, this second class of speculators explore the whole country advertised for sale, take the number of every quarter-section upon which a settler is established, add the value of the improvement made upon the land, by the sweat of the brow of the industrious occupant, to the intrinsic worth of the waste land, and thus compel the settler to pay either the speculator, or the government, not the value of the land only, but in addition, the value of the improvement made by the occupant himself, after years of toil and labor. In this way, either the speculator or the government receives money for that which is not its own. It receives money for improvements which it has not made, and houses which it has not erected. It puts, without any compensation, the money for the labor of the settler into the public treasury, or enables the speculator to put this money into his own pocket. By this system, the government co-operates with the speculator in depriving the industrious occupant of all remuneration for his labor; and small indeed is the profit which the government derives from this legalized system of plunder and spoliation.

The authentic records of the Land Office demonstrate that the speculator is the monopolist of nearly all the profit of this immoral, unjust, and oppressive system; a system which is a stain upon the honor of a great nation. The poor but industrious occupant generally attends the land sales, having no more money than a sum sufficient to buy the land he occupies at the minimum price; a speculator bids a few cents over him, and becomes the purchaser of the land, and the owner of an improved farm, paying not one cent for the value of the improvements. In other cases, where the settler has collected something more than the money sufficient to pay for the land he occupies, at the minimum price, and bids that sum, the speculator, by some secret agent employed by him, overbids the settler, the land is struck off to this agent, and the settler leaves the sales in disgust, to mourn over the injustice of the government of the Union, and to prepare for the removal of himself and family from the little farm which he had improved and expected to have purchased from a paternal government. After the departure of the settler, the tract is forfeited for non-payment, and the speculator purchases in his own name the forfeited tract, probably at the minimum price per acre. The scenes ensuing many of our land sales are scenes of the deepest distress and misery. They are scenes in which many families are driven forth from their homes to seek some other spot in the wilderness, where keen-eyed avarice and sordid monopoly may not overtake them. But another land sale comes on, the same scene is repeated, till all hope is extinguished, and nothing is left to the settler but despair and ruin. Yet these scenes of fraud and cruelty are of constant occurrence, permitted and encouraged by the present system of the sales of the public lands at public auction. Your committee have said that the speculator, and not the government, reaps nearly all the profits of these inglorious transactions, and this is proved by the records of the Land Office. By the documents from the Land Office it appears, that taking all the sales of the public lands, from the adoption of the cash system, in July, 1820, down to the present period, the average price received by the government upon these sales, has been less than six cents per acre over the minimum price. And it is for this miserable pittance of less than six cents per acre that this great nation incurs the disgrace and dishonor of sending forth the remorseless speculator, authorized and encouraged by our existing laws, to drive from their homes those hardy pioneers who were erecting a home in the wilderness, those industrious and enterprising citizens who in peace subdue the forest and cultivate the soil, and who, whenever danger threatens their country, are the very first to march to the rescue. As there are no citizens more useful and more patriotic than these, so there are none more justly entitled to the regard of the government. Yet these are the very men who, by the present system, are sacrificed, not for the benefit of the government, but of speculators. Surely, then, such a system ought to be abandoned. While, then, your committee do not propose the immediate reduction of the price of fresh lands, never offered for sale, they do recommend the total abandonment of the auction system, as productive of no benefit, except to the speculator, disgraceful to the government, and fraught with the most corrupting consequences. In lieu of this system, your committee propose that all public lands, not yet offered at public sale, shall, at the expiration of four months after advertisement of the returns of the surveys to the proper land office, become subject to entry at the present minimum price, but in all cases, for settlement and cultivation only, and not for speculation; giving, in all cases, a preference to the first occupant, for the section which he cultivates, and upon which he resides; and the same system your committee apply to the land already subject to entry, at the prices as graduated and reduced by this bill. The system proposed by your committee is not the pre-emption system, but a substitute for it. As, however, the pre-emption system has been greatly traduced; and many, without investigation, have been led to believe that the government has lost millions by the operation of this system, your committee will proceed to demonstrate, from authentic documents, that the total loss (if any) by this system, from the adoption of the cash sales, in July, 1820, to the present period, is, at the highest estimate, $143,259.

By Senate document No. 376, being a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, ordered to be printed May 19, 1836, it appears, that the number of acres taken by pre-emptions, from the adoption of the cash system to the present period, is 2,387,650 acres, for all which the pre-emptioners paid the government the price of $1 25 per acre. Now, by the documents from the Land Office before referred to, it appears that the average price obtained for all the public lands sold since the cash system, is less than $1 31 per acre, being an excess of less than six cents over the minimum price. Now, multiply the total number of acres procured by pre-emptions, as before given, by six cents, and the result is $143,259, being the highest estimate of loss arising from the pre-emption system, instead of the millions upon millions so frequently proclaimed by the enemies of the system. By inquiry, however, at the Land Office, your committee have ascertained that a large body of lands sold to citizens of Louisiana under the various back concession laws, selling at the minimum price the swamp lands in the rear to the owners of the front tracts, is embraced in this statement from the Treasury Department, which would still further reduce the loss, and the floats most unwisely attached to the pre-emption system of late years, and which have given rise to all the frauds complained of, have still further increased the estimate. This system of floats, now abandoned by all, should constitute no objection to the pre-emption system. The committee, however, have made no deductions on these accounts. Now, is the loss to the government of this paltry sum, being less than $9,000 per annum, any equivalent for the proposed sacrifice to speculators of the farms of so many industrious citizens; and when we deduct from this sum the expenses attending land sales, additional to those incurred at sales by private entry, this supposed loss is still further greatly reduced. But the average price obtained for the public lands during the last year, which is the safest criterion, is but two cents and a small fraction over the minimum price per acre, the total of sales in 1835 (exclusive of two small returns not received) being 12,418,070.76 acres, and the price for the whole being $15,811,144 98. Taking, then, the sales of last year as the criterion, and the total estimate of the entire loss from this pre-emption system, multiplying 2,387,650 by two cents, would be $47,753, and deducting from this the additional expenses of land sales beyond the expenses of sales at private entry, and the loss to the government cannot exceed five hundred dollars per annum. But, in fact, there is no loss from the system, for the occupancy of the land district by settlers preceding a land sale, gives additional value to the unoccupied land, and causes it to bring a better price. Thus, by document No. 376, before referred to, the total number of acres covered by pre-emption claims in 1832, was but 49,971.17 acres, and in 1834, 637,597.59 acres, and in 1835, 574,936.85 acres; yet, in each of these last two years, the average price obtained for the public lands, as shown by the Land Office returns, is greater than in 1833, when less than one tenth the number of acres were covered by pre-emption claims. Nothing, then, in point of fact, is gained by the government by the present system of public sales, while it introduces fraud and oppression, and a sacrifice of the industrious settler to the baleful spirit of speculation.

No nation but this speculates upon her citizens in the sale of the public domain. Great Britain, France, Spain, Mexico, gave their lands to their citizens upon the condition of settlement only. The various States of this Union having public lands of their own to sell, sell them at nominal prices to settlers, and not to speculators. From various State laws, of a similar character, we will quote from the laws of the State of Maine only. By the first section of her act of 1824, she declares that her lands, in limited quantities, "shall be sold to such persons only as may wish to become actual settlers," and the price fixed is "thirty cents per acre;" and, by the eighth section of the same act, there is secured to every actual settler, upon any tract, "a prior right of purchase" Here are the settlement and pre-emption principle, both embodied, in the laws of Maine; and your committee believe that the same principles, substantially, will be found in the laws of all the States having public lands of their own within their limits: nor are the checks and guards against frauds in the laws of those States by any means so numerous and rigid as those proposed in this bill. Frauds may have occurred under the State laws which could not take place under the provisions of this bill. But because frauds may have been perpetrated in some cases upon lands in the old States, did those States consent, or would they ever have consented, to throw open all their lands for entry by speculating monopolists, and turn their citizens round to buy of them at exorbitant prices? Why should the old States confine the sales of their own lands to actual settlers, and refuse to act upon the same principles as regards the sale of the lands in the new States? Why sell to settlers only in their own States, and to speculators mainly in the new States? If these lands were within the limits of any old State, and subject to sale by their legislatures, how soon would they reduce the price, and limit the sales to actual settlers? But now, how different the policy. The question seems to be, not what will best promote the settlement and cultivation of the soil of the West, but how can we derive most money from sales of the public lands to speculating monopolists.

There are many millions of acres of the public lands that will remain forever unsold at the present price. To hold these lands at a price that can never be obtained for them, is to violate the spirit of the compacts by which they were ceded to the general government; which compacts declare that they shall be "disposed of." To refuse a sale altogether, would be a manifest infraction of the compacts; and is not the exaction of a price which the lands will never bring, equivalent to a refusal to sell? But we are told by the opponents of reduction and graduation that the sales of the public lands are still progressing in the State of Ohio. But this State, as we will show, is an exception to the general rule. She has neither mountains nor vast inundated swamps, nor unproductive pine barrens, nor unculturable prairies, to create a large body of refuse lands. She has, as appears from the authentic documents, but 666,000 acres of public lands unsold, ascertained to be unfit for cultivation. Far different is the case in all the other new States and Territories of the Union.

By a resolution of the Senate of the 25th of April, 1828, the registers and receivers of all the various land districts were required to report the quantity, quality, and probable value of the unsold public lands. This report was made in 1828, and we annex hereto, in a table marked, "A," the estimates compiled from these reports. To this table your committee would desire to call the attention of the Senate. From this table it appears that but 666,000 acres of land were ascertained to be unfit for cultivation in the whole State of Ohio, and the average price of all the unsold public lands in Ohio was estimated at sixty-seven cents per acre; in Indiana, the quantity unfit for cultivaton, 2,430,000, and the average price per acre, of all the unsold public lands, ninety cents; in Illinois, 6,027,000 acres unfit for cultivation, and the average price per acre, fifty cents, of all the unsold public lands; in Missouri, 5,700,000 acres unfit for cultivation, and the average price per acre of all the unsold public lands, twenty cents; in Alabama, 6,915,000 acres unfit for cultivation, average price per acre of all the unsold public lands, twenty cents; Mississippi, 8,294,000 acres unfit for cultivation, average price per acre, seventeen cents, of all the unsold public lands; Louisiana, unfit for cultivation, (very partial returns) 687,000 acres, average price per acre of all the unsold public lands, thirty-seven cents. From the annexed table, made out from the official returns, it appears that of the whole 83,110,873 acres unsold and subject to entry on the 30th of June, 1828, there were returned 34,278,000 acres unfit for cultivation; 5,614,000 acres first-rate (no doubt now entered) and the remainder, being 43,218,000 acres, inferior. But, from the general data from the land offices not making specific returns, but giving general information, at least 13,000,000 more must be set down as unfit for cultivation, making the total amount 56,218,000 acres unfit for cultivation. From the returns furnished, the average price per acre of the 83,110,873, subject to entry on the 30th June, 1828, is thirty cents. Now, should this vast body of public lands be held forever at one unvarying price of $1 25 cents per acre? Is such a course consonant with the spirit of the compacts by which these lands were acquired? Is it just to the States in which these lands are situate? Is it wise, as a mere question of revenue? Why hold at one unvarying price lands so utterly different in value? As well might you fix the golden eagle and a fifty-cent piece of silver at the same value, because they were of the same size, as to fix a section of refuse lands and a section of fresh lands at the same price, because their superficial extent was the same.

Your committee will select, from many cases of a similar character, that of the Augusta land office, Mississippi, as presented by the authentic returns. The number of acres unsold, on the 30th of June, 1828, was 5,670,000 acres, the average price estimated by the register and receiver, five to eight cents per acre; first-rate, none; worth the minimum price, none; unfit for cultivation, 5,000,000 of acres; which land had then been subject to entry from five to eighteen years, and consequently has been now subject to entry from thirteen to twenty-six years. And is this land selling, or will it ever sell, at the present price? By the returns from the Commissioner of the Land Office, under date of the 21st of April, 1836, giving a statement of the lands purchased at that office, from its establishment to the close of the year 1830, when the valuable Choctaw lands were ceded, and shortly afterward in part attached to this land district, it appears that the whole amount sold in the old district was 4,700 acres, and not an acre beyond the minimum price. This presents conclusive evidence that these lands never will sell at the present price, and that they are truly estimated by the register and receiver of the land district, at an average price of from five to eight cents per acre. At the present rate of sales for the last twenty-six years, exhibited by the above returns from that office, it would require 7,839 years to sell out only one half the lands in the Augusta land district, being a period exceeding the time from the creation of the earth to the present moment; and many other of the old land districts will exhibit nearly similar results. By the returns from the land office under date of the 27th of April, 1836, it appears there were then subject to entry at private sale 119,259,728.34 acres, showing that the refuse has increased 36,148,855 since the 30th of June, 1828, and must continue to increase, as new districts are from time to time exposed to sale. Taking the average of the value of the refuse of 1828 as a fair estimate of the value of the refuse of 1836, there would now be in market at least 80,000,000 of acres not worth the minimum price, and at least 60,000,000 of this 80,000,000 unfit for cultivation. But it may be asked, whence, then, come the present large sales of the public lands? These sales and entries arise from the following sources: 1st, from the sales of a small portion of the lands embraced in table A, as subject to entry on the 30th of June, 1828, leaving the present unsold balances of those lands still less valuable; 2dly, and almost entirely, from the prodigious quantity of fresh land offered for sale since the 30th of June, 1828—the whole quantity offered for sale up to the 1st of January, 1836, being 169,178,042, and the refuse, 119,259,728. Why then hold up this immense mass of refuse lands at prices the lands will never bring? The graduation principle is the nearest approach to justice which can be devised, while the refusal to graduate is the most unjust and unequal. The new States seem to be looked to now rather as a source of revenue from the sales of their lands, than with a view to the promotion of their settlement and prosperity. Calculations of the increased population of the new States are held up to the jealous scrutiny of the people of the old States, as if the new States were not members of the same confederacy, and as if those calculations were not most useful which would demonstrate what system would best promote the welfare and prosperity of the whole Union. Our wonderful growth as a nation has been mainly promoted by the settlement of the West.

And have not the people who settle these new States stronger claims to the consideration of the government, in regard to the disposition of the public domain, than the older members of the confederacy? The people who have settled and are settling the new States, give to your public domain there nearly all its value. But for them, those lands would still remain a mighty wilderness, like the lands of Oregon, utterly valueless, however fertile, because it was a wilderness. The people who settle the new States encounter many difficulties and dangers. In the early settlement of the country they are generally surrounded by a savage foe, and the soil they cultivate is often moistened by their blood. The life of the pioneer is almost universally one of toil and danger. He can enjoy but few of the comforts, and none of the luxuries of life. To subdue the wilderness is not an easy conquest. The early settlers of a new country enter the mighty forests of the West, finding your lands there bearing no value. They explore and conquer the wilderness; they make roads and bridges, towns and cities, with their own labor and their own capital, and thus give to your public lands nearly all their market value. They give these States to the Union, and have surely a stronger claim upon you, as regards the disposition of the public lands, than any people who have never seen these new States, and expended neither time nor capital in improving the lands within their limits. Take from the new States the labor and capital employed there by their citizens, and your public lands would have little or no market value. These are facts that should never be forgotten by the just and generous citizens of the older States of the Union. Let us sell, then, only for settlement and cultivation, and at reduced prices, and we will make some return to the new States for the value which their labor and capital have given and are giving to your public domain.

The committee propose the sale and entry of all the public lands in forty-acre lots—a measure highly important to the poorer class of citizens, and injurious to no interest whatever. We also recommend that all public lands which shall have remained unsold for thirty-five years after they become subject to entry, shall be ceded to the States, respectively, in which such unsaleable refuse is situate, at the price paid by the United States for surveying the lands.

If we may take Ohio as an example, less than a million of acres will be obtained by any State under this provision. If more land than this is obtained by any one State, it will be because the refuse remaining unsold after a lapse of thirty-five years from the period of its becoming subject to entry in such State, will be almost wholly unfit for cultivation, and would not, from the nett proceeds of the sales, pay the expenses incurred by the government for continuing the land offices in those States. Your committee herewith report a bill conformable to the principles of this report.

A BILL to arrest monopolies of the public lands, and purchases thereof, for speculation, and substitute sales to actual settlers only, in limited quantities, and at reduced prices; to equalize the grants of the public domain among the several new States of the Union; and to provide for the cession of the unsaleable refuse to the States in which such lands may be situate.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act, no further sales of the lands of the United States, at public auction, shall be permitted.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, in all the respective land districts of every State and Territory of the Union, where approved surveys of any townships of the public lands never yet offered for sale are now filed in the land offices of said districts, respectively, the register and receiver of said land offices, respectively, shall immediately advertise said lands for sale, for four months continuously, in some newspaper printed at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and, also, for the same period of time, in some newspaper printed in said land district, if there be any newspaper printed therein, and if there be no newspaper printed therein, then in some newspaper printed in said State or Territory in which said lands so advertised to be sold are situate; whereupon said lands shall become subject to entry in the manner hereafter provided by this act; and in the same manner, hereafter, as approved surveys of the lands of the United States, from time to time, are filed in the respective land offices, the register and receiver of said land offices, respectively, shall also advertise said lands for sale, from time to time, in the manner and for the period prescribed by this act; whereupon said lands shall also become subject to entry in the manner provided by this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, hereafter, no one person shall be permitted to enter more than one section of any land of the United States now subject to entry, or that may hereafter become subject to entry, under the provisions of this act; and before making any entry hereafter, the applicant shall file his affidavit with the register and receiver of the land district in which the lands sought to be entered are situate, stating that said lands are sought to be entered by said applicant for the use of said applicant, and not in trust for another, and for settlement, cultivation, and occupancy, by said applicant, and not for speculation; whereupon, on payment of the price required by this act, the receiver of the proper land district, by and with the consent of the register thereof, endorsed upon the application for the land, shall issue a receipt to the applicant for said purchase-money for said land.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That any applicant obtaining a receipt for any land, under the provisions of this act, who shall fail to commence the occupancy of said land within four months from the date of said receipt, shall forfeit the purchase-money therein specified, and the title, to the United States; and any person so commencing said occupancy of said land, as above specified, and abandoning the occupancy thereof at any time within three years after the commencement of said occupancy, shall forfeit the purchase-money so paid for said land, and the title, to the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That where two or more persons apply at the same time for the same section or part of a section of land, then the preference in the purchase shall be given to the first occupant; and when any land so sought to be entered has never been occupied by any of said applicants, then the preference in purchase shall be given to the most aged of said applicants.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That no patent shall issue for any land entered under the provisions of this act, until three years after the date of the receiver's receipt for the purchase-money paid for said land; nor shall any patent issue for said land, unless upon proof made before the register and receiver of the proper land district in which said lands are situate, by the oath of at least two credible witnesses, and of the applicant, establishing the fact that said applicant has cultivated and occupied said land for three years continuously, since the date of the receiver's receipt for the purchase-money of said land as aforesaid; and any sale, contract for sale, lease, or contract for lease, by said applicant, prior to the emanation of the patent, shall be utterly null and void, and operate as a forfeiture of the purchase money specified in said receiver's receipt, and the title, to the United States; and any one swearing falsely, to obtain, for him or herself, or for another, the benefit of any provision of this act, shall be guilty of perjury; and any one procuring another to swear falsely to obtain for any one the benefit of any provision of this act, shall be guilty of subornation of perjury.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That any person who is now the owner and cultivator of any tract of land, may, upon satisfactory evidence thereof to the register and receiver of the proper land district, be permitted to enter any unoccupied adjoining tract of the public lands, not exceeding one section, and receive the receiver's receipt on paying the price specified by this act; but no patent for said tract shall issue until three years after the date of said receipt, and that any sale, contract for sale, lease, or contract for lease, of said land, so specified in said receipt, prior to the emanation of the patent, shall be utterly null and void, and operate as a forfeiture of the purchase-money specified in said receipt, and the title, to the United States: Provided, also, That no receipt for land shall be issued by said receiver to said applicant, except upon affidavit, previously made by said applicant, before the register and receiver of the proper land district, that said land so sought to be entered by said applicant, is unoccupied, and that said entry is sought to be made by said applicant for the purpose of enlarging the adjoining farm or plantation of said applicant, and not for speculation.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That no one who, under the provisions of this act, shall enter a section of land, shall be permitted to make any further entry; and that, after the passage of this act, all the lands of the United States shall be subject to entry, under the provisions of this act, in sub-divisions, not less than a quarter quarter-section.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all lands of the United States, whether now subject to entry or not, shall hereafter be entered only in the manner prescribed by this act: Provided, however, That no right accrued and vested under any existing law or treaty, shall in any manner be affected by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That there shall be granted to each of the States of Missouri, Louisiana, and Mississippi, a quantity of land equal to the quantity heretofore granted by Congress to the State of Ohio, for the purpose of internal improvement; and that a like quantity shall be granted to each of the Territories of the United States, upon their admission as States of the Union; and that there shall be also granted to each of the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Alabama, a quantity of land, which, together with the quantity already granted to each of said States for the purposes of internal improvement, will make the grant to each of said States for the purpose of internal improvement, equal to the quantity already granted to the State of Ohio for the purpose of internal improvement; which said lands shall be selected within the limits of said States respectively, and in such manner as the legislatures thereof shall direct, and be located in parcels, conformably to sectional divisions and sub-divisions of not less than three hundred and twenty acres, or one-half section, in any one location, on any public land subject to entry or which may hereafter become subject to entry; which said locations may be made at any time within five years after the passage of this act, and as regards any Territories not already admitted as States of the Union, within five years after said Territories shall have been admitted as States of the Union; and all roads, bridges, or canals, which may be constructed by any of said States respectively, from the net proceeds of the sales of said lands, shall be free for the transportation of the United States mail and munitions of war, and for the passage of the troops of the United States, without the payment of any toll whatever.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That all public lands that now are, or hereafter shall have been, subject to entry five years, and less than ten years, and still remaining unsold, shall be subject to entry at the price of one dollar per acre; and all lands in like manner remaining unsold after they now are, or hereafter shall have been subject to entry ten years, and less than fifteen years, shall be liable to entry at ninety cents per acre; and all lands in like manner remaining unsold after they now are, or hereafter shall have been, subject to entry fifteen years, and less than twenty years, shall be liable to entry at eighty cents per acre; and all lands in like manner remaining unsold after they now are, or hereafter shall have been, subject to entry twenty years, and less than twenty-five years, shall be liable to entry at the price of seventy cents per acre; and all lands in like manner remaining unsold after they now are, or hereafter shall have been, subject to entry twenty-five years, and less than thirty years, shall be liable to entry at the price of sixty cents per acre; and all lands in like manner remaining unsold after they now are, or hereafter shall have been, subject to entry thirty years, and less than thirty-five years, shall be liable to entry at the price of fifty cents per acre; and all lands in like manner remaining unsold that now are, or hereafter shall have been, subject to entry thirty-five years, and upward, shall be ceded to the States respectively in which said lands are situate, upon payment into the Treasury of the United States of the prices paid for surveying said lands.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws, repugnant to the provisions of this act, be and the same are hereby repealed.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1542. [1ST SESSION.

IN FAVOR OF GRANTING TO THE INHABITANTS OF A TOWNSHIP IN ILLINOIS OTHER LANDS IN LIEU OF THEIR SIXTEENTH SECTION.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JUNE 28, 1836.

Mr. CASEY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the petitions of certain citizens of Madison county, State of Illinois, reported:

That the sixteenth section in each township of six miles square, in all the new States and in the State of Illinois, which is one of those States, is granted to the inhabitants of the townships respectively, for the use of schools. That section 16, in township 4 north, range 8 west of the third principal meridian, in the said county of Madison, and State of Illinois, was granted and secured to the inhabitants of said township for the use of schools. That while the citizens were in the peaceable possession and enjoyment of said right, the Congress of the United States, by an act passed on the 27th of February, 1815, granted the right of pre-emption to all the settlers on the said sixteenth section in a certain district in the then Territory of Illinois, of which the township above mentioned forms a part.

The settlers on section 16, in said township, availed themselves of the benefit of said law, and under the pre-emption act, appropriated to their own use and benefit the said sixteenth section of land. By the provision of an act of Congress, the Register of the Land Office was authorized and required to select other lands in said township, as near as practicable to the lands so appropriated to the settlers under the pre-emption law, in lieu of said sixteenth section; and the same so selected to be selected should be reserved for the use of schools for said township. In the execution of this act of Congress, the register selected section No. 1, in said township, for the inhabitants of the township, for the use of schools. The petitioners represent to your committee, which statement is sustained by positive proof adduced to them, that section 16, in said township, which was originally reserved for the use of schools, is worth ten dollars per acre, and section 1, which is now the school section for said township, is not good land, and is not worth more than one dollar per acre. The petitioners state further, that they had no agency, or gave no consent whatever, in the act of the government depriving them of their right to section 16, in said township, which was originally granted to them.

As the government, by the act of Congress, and by the acts of their agents, has deprived the inhabitants of said township of their right in said section 16, your committee deem it an act of justice to grant them relief, and therefore report a bill for that purpose.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1543. [1ST SESSION.

CONFIRMATION OF THE SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS IN CERTAIN CASES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, JUNE 30, 1836.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 29, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor to submit to the Committee on Public Lands the enclosed communication, of this date, from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and respectfully request the attention to it of the committee.

I am, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. R. BOON, Chairman of Committee on the Public Lands.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 29, 1836.

SIR: It has frequently occurred that in the creation of new land districts they are made to include within their limits lands which were embraced within the limits of districts previously in existence, and which lands had been made subject to entry at the land offices previously established. It has also not unfrequently occurred that the laws creating such new districts have failed to assign a special period either for the commencement of operations at the offices for the new districts, or for the cessation at the old offices of entries of the lands transferred.

In cases of this kind some unavoidable delay must exist, as it is to be expected, before the new office can be got into operation. The new officers must give bonds—new tract books must be opened, and transfers of township plats, books, and papers, take place from the old to the new office, and transcripts from the tract books of the old office be furnished in cases where circumstances do not admit of transfer of entire book. These operations may occupy several months, and in consequence of this necessary delay, it appears to have been the practice of my predecessors, on considerations of public convenience, to permit, in the meantime, private entries of such lands to be continued at the old office, until the new office was prepared to receive applications from purchasers; and sales are believed to have been made in this manner to a large extent.

In a communication on this subject between the department and the Attorney General of the United States, I am advised of the opinion of that office that "this seems to be a very clear case for the enactment of a confirmatory law, giving "validity to all entries and sales of the public lands in pre-emption and other cases, made in the old districts where the proceedings, in other respects, have been fair and regular."

In concurrence with this opinion, I have the honor to submit the project of a bill which I would respectfully propose to you to present to the consideration of Congress.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner.

Hon. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

OPERATIONS OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE DURING THE YEAR 1836.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 6, 1836.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 6, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit to the House of Representatives the annual report of the Commissioners of the General Land Office, showing the operations of that office for the past year.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. JAMES K. POLK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 1, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to present statements exhibiting the operations of the several land offices for the year 1835, and the first, second, and third quarters of the year 1836, indicating the quantity of land sold; the amount of cash and scrip received in payment therefor; the amount of the incidental expenses; and the amount of moneys paid into the Treasury by the receiver of public money, during the said period. See tables marked A and B.

Transmitted herewith, are also copies of the estimates of appropriation required by this branch of the public service during the ensuing year, viz.:

For the General Land Office, see paper marked C.

The act of 4th July, 1836, entitled, "An act to reorganize the General Land Office," having omitted to make provision for the payment of the salaries of the officers and clerks whom it authorized to be employed, the paper marked C also indicates the amount required to be appropriated to meet the payment for those salaries to 31st December, 1836.

For the offices of the surveyors general, see paper marked D.

For surveying the public lands, see paper marked E.

Document marked F, is composed of a circular letter, addressed to the surveyors general, on the 1st September, 1836, together with their replies thereto, in relation to their estimates for the ensuing year, and the progress and present condition of the public surveys. F No. 2, is a compilation of those estimates.

In the surveying district, composed of the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, the amount of lands surveyed, and of lands yet to be offered for sale, remain the same as represented in the last annual report of the late Commissioner. The new surveys in these districts, to be effected under instructions recently issued, embrace all the former small Indian reservations ceded under treaties made this year with the Pottawatamie, Chippewa, and Wyandot Indians, and all that portion of Michigan not heretofore surveyed, which borders upon Lake Michigan, south of Thunder bay river, and north of Grand river, estimated at about 275 townships.

In Wisconsin Territory, formerly designated Michigan west of Lake Michigan. In addition to the returns of the 65 townships in the Green Bay district, alluded to in the report of last year, and which have since been received, the office has been advised of the completion of the balance of the surveys in this district, amounting to 119 townships and fractional townships, making in the aggregate about 184 townships and fractional townships surveyed, and yet to be offered for sale, being all the lands in the Wisconsin Territory, east of the Mississippi river, to which the Indian title has been extinguished. The necessary instructions have been issued for the survey of the Sac and Fox cession west of the Mississippi river, and binding on the river, which was ceded by treaty of the 21st of September, 1832, and estimated to contain 250 townships, and also for laying off the towns named in the act of the last session of Congress, approved on the 2d day of July, which are situated on this tract.

In Missouri and Illinois.—Since the report of the late surveyor general (30th January, 1836) was submitted to Congress, (now forming document No. 215, H. R. 1st session, 24th Congress,) no returns of surveys have been made to this office, with the exception of the two townships on Rock river, Illinois, which were surveyed for the Polish exiles. The communication from the present surveyor general, dated 3d November, 1836, and the accompanying papers marked A, B, and C, afford all the information received respecting the present situation of the field and office work of the surveying district composed of those two States. The present surveyor general, having only recently entered upon the duties of his office, cannot be expected yet to have had the time and opportunity of entering fully into the state of the arrears. He remarks in his communication above referred to, that "the only work now going on in the field is as follows:

"By Joseph Montgomery, who is completing the surveys under his contract of 1834.

"By D. A. Spaulding, who is finishing his contract of the 9th June, 1835.

"And by Jesse Applegate, under his contract of the 25th day of May, of the present year."

It being doubtful, from the foregoing report, whether the field work of the three contracts it enumerates constitutes all the field work to be completed of the outstanding contracts, or simply the amount of field work at present prosecuting, the surveyor general has been again written to for more precise information.

On referring to pages 10 and 11 of the surveyor general's report of the 30th of January, 1836, it appears that the returns of 36 townships in Missouri, and of 134 townships in Illinois, from the field notes of which the plats had been constructed, were at that date in his office. This is all the certain information, now in possession of this office, in relation to the returns of the field work of the contracts exhibited in the lists.

In Arkansas nearly all the lands that have been surveyed, and returned to this office, have been offered for sale. The outstanding contracts for surveying, at the commencement of the present year, embraced the exteriors of 69 townships, and the subdivisions of 60 townships, as will appear by the last annual report of the surveyor general then in office, which accompanied the report of the Commissioner of December 5, 1835, (see document H. R. 1st Session, 24th Congress,) to which, in the absence of the expected report of the present incumbent, I beg leave to refer. The surveys recommended in the surveyor general's report, just referred to, constitute the new surveys which have been ordered this year, and amount in all to 110 townships and fractional townships, selected in different parts of the State, with a view to the public accommodation; of these, 60 townships are to be subdivided for market.

In Louisiana.—There are in this State, prepared for market, but not yet offered for sale, 250 townships and fractional townships, situated chiefly in the southeastern district, and in the north end of the Opelousas (southwestern) district, near the great raft of Red river, and 110 townships known to be surveyed, the returns of which have not yet been received. In addition to the survey of private claims, &c., already in progress, the surveyor general has been instructed respecting the survey of the tract recently ceded by the Caddo Indians, on the great raft of Red river, which it is said may be estimated at one million of acres.

In Mississippi.—With the exception of about 40 townships, situated chiefly in the Chocchuma district, and upon the south boundary of the Chickasaw cession, all the lands in this State, north of 31° of latitude, have been surveyed, and, excepting eight townships, recently returned, have been brought into market. The expected report of the newly appointed surveyor general for this State, on the condition of the surveys in his district and the details of his office, has not been received; but as soon after its arrival as practicable, the instructions alluded to in the Commissioner's report of last year, relative to the examination of the errors in locating and surveying the confirmed private claims south of 31° of latitude, will be renewed.

The expectations expressed in the Commissioner's report of last year, in regard to the progress of the surveys in the Chickasaw cession of 1832, have been fulfilled. The plats of 307 townships and fractional townships (including the portion of the cession in Alabama) have been returned to this office; and 249 of them, having been proclaimed for sale, 58 townships and fractional townships remain to be offered; the survey of the remainder of the cession, estimated to be about equal to 30, is nearly completed, and will be finished, it is expected, in a short time after the running of the line separating this cession from the Choctaw cession of 1830, now in progress, is completed. These townships are situated near that line, and in the southwestern part of the cession, near the Mississippi.

In Alabama.—With the exception of the Cherokee lands, recently ceded, and a few islands in the Tennessee river, and fractions of townships, situated chiefly upon the unsettled eastern boundary of the State, and those south of 31° of latitude, all the lands have been surveyed and offered for sale. The eastern boundary line of the State not having been yet determined, so far as this office is informed, the instructions have been withheld for closing the public surveys upon that line, for which a special appropriation of $1,000 was made at the last session of Congress; which, therefore, has not been expended As these surveys must remain unfinished, to the serious injury of a large number of settlers on the lands, and in their immediate vicinity, until the line in question is recognized by the proper authorities, it is hoped that early steps may be taken for its final adjustment, either by recognizing the line said to have been already run, and marked under the authority of the State of Georgia, or by causing a new line to be run.

In Florida.—In consequence of continued Indian hostilities, the surveying operations in this district have been suspended, and will have to remain so until the removal of the Seminole Indians shall be effected. There are, at present, 211 townships and fractional townships prepared for market, but not offered for sale, all of which are situated east of the Suwanee, and north of the Withlacoochee river. The surveys in the western portion of the territory have, for the most part, been completed, and the lands brought into market.

Interspersed throughout the different surveying districts, there are a number of small tracts, portions of townships, islands, and swamps, susceptible of being reclaimed, &c., which, from various causes, were not surveyed at the time of the survey of the contiguous lands. The present enhanced value of most of those tracts appears to render them matter of public interest, which is increasing every year; and it is regretted that the frequent attempts to effect the survey of them have hitherto failed, by reason of the inadequacy of the present maximum of compensation.

The frequent inquiries and great interest manifested in relation to lands of this description induced this office, in the circular letter of the 1st September last, to call the attention of the surveyors general to the subject, and to require them to estimate specifically for the cost of all such work. In pursuance of such instruction, it will be perceived, from the accompanying documents, that the surveyor general of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, and the surveyor general of Florida, have both estimated for surveying unfinished portions of townships, islands, lakes, &c., at the average of five dollars per mile; and the surveyors general of Alabama and Louisiana have both estimated for similar description of work, at a price not exceeding eight dollars per mile; and it will be perceived that those specific estimates are taken into view in the estimate of surveying expenses for the next year, submitted by this office.

The paper G, herewith transmitted, is a statement, showing the amount of forfeited land stock, issued and surrendered at the United States land offices to the 30th September, 1836; also, the amount of military land scrip surrendered to the same period.

The paper H is an exhibit of the periods to which the monthly accounts of the registers and receivers of the public land offices have been rendered, and showing the balance of cash in the receivers' hands at the date of the last monthly accounts current, and the periods to which the receivers' quarterly accounts have been rendered.

Land scrip and Virginia military surveys.

Since the last annual report from this office, the second section of the act entitled, "An act making appropriation for the civil and diplomatic expenses of government for the year 1835," has been complied with by the issuing of scrip, in satisfaction of all the Virginia military warrants, surrendered to the 1st day of September of that year, with the exception of about thirty-eight thousand acres on warrants suspended by reason of defects in the title papers, but which, it is expected, will be speedily completed. Considerable progress has also been made during the same period, in the issuing of patents on surveys founded on Virginia military warrants, and the office indulges the hope that all the remaining cases will be disposed of prior to the date of the next annual report.

The issuing of patents for lands sold.—Pre-emption claims.

The pre-emption claims, under the act of June 19, 1834, and those under the different acts of 1814, 1816, 1830, 1832, and 1833, have had a tendency to delay the issuing of the patents for lands sold, in nearly all the United States land offices. The late law granted to the settlers the term of two years from the date of its passage, at any time during which they might establish their claim, and make payment therefor. But, in case the lands were proclaimed for public sale during the continuance of the pre-emption term, the pre-emption was required to be established before the commencement of such public sale.

The ordinary private entries being permitted to proceed during the whole term of operation of the pre-emption law, it has resulted that numerous instances exist where the land, to which pre-emption claims have been satisfactorily established, are discovered to have been previously entered at ordinary private sale. The consequence has been, that no patents for lands, sold in any of the land districts during the pre-emption term, (from 19th June, 1834, to 19th June, 1836,) could with safety be issued until after the receipt of the June returns for 1836, affording evidence of the entire amount of pre-emption claims admitted under the law. In addition to this cause of delay in the issuing of patents, it has been made the duty of this office to review the whole of the evidences on which pre-emption claims were admitted, in order to ascertain that the provisions of the law had been fairly complied with in each case—a labor which has occupied a large share of attention, and which has so far progressed as to admit of the release of the certificates of purchase, for the purpose of patenting, in the Helena and Fayetteville districts, in Arkansas; in all the districts of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Missouri; the districts of Cahaba and Demopolis, in Alabama; the Green Bay district in Wisconsin; and the Mount Salus (now Jackson) district in Mississippi; so that, with some few exceptions, the patents for lands sold in the enumerated districts will be no longer delayed by pre-emption claims.

The number of certificates of purchase issued at the land offices, during the year, ending on the 30th of September last, is found to be 184,949.

The present aggregate number of certificates of purchase remaining in this office, on which patents are to be issued, is ascertained to be 263,017. Of these, it may be remarked, that a large portion includes several tracts, instances being numerous where they require the issuing of from ten to twenty separate patents.

Recorder's Office.

Since the commencement of operations in the office of the Recorder of the General Land Office, in August last, with a much smaller force than is intended to be permanently allotted to the duties of that bureau (of writing, recording, and transmitting patents,) there have been written therein 21,724 patents, and 21,661 have been recorded. In addition to which, there have been otherwise prepared, since the act of reorganization, 4,680 patents, all of which will bear date subsequent to that act.

Much interruption of the regular course of business in that bureau, resulted from the unavoidable necessity, connected with general official convenience, of frequently detaching from it, at different periods, many of the persons there employed, for the purpose of assigning them to duty on other branches of the office. From this cause, it may be said, the bureau has but recently been operating with an unchanged regular force, and that, if no necessity for the interruption alluded to, had existed, a heavier amount of work would have been accomplished during the same period.

Since the date of the last annual report, the number of patents actually transmitted, together with those now in immediate course of transmission to the district land offices, is 80,940, bearing date prior to the act of reorganization.

The absence of the solicitor, provided for this office by the act of reorganization, has, no doubt, prevented as rapid a progress in deciding cases of conflicting pre-emption claims as might have resulted under the complete organization of the pre-emption bureau. I am happy, however, in being enabled to state, that, since the adjournment of Congress, a very considerable number of cases of contested pre-emption claims, have been settled, or placed in proper train for final decision, many of which were peculiarly complicated.

The registry of the sales of public lands (a labor indispensably necessary in order to impose a test to the accuracy of the operations of the land offices) has progressed with unexampled rapidity, since the increased means of executing the duties of this office have been placed at its disposal.

The impediments to the issuing of patents for sales of public lands in the Louisiana districts, hitherto existing, are in rapid process of being removed, so far as operations in this office are concerned; and this subject will receive that degree of special attention which its importance imperatively demands.

In conclusion, I have to state, that, under the provisions of the Chickasaw treaties of the 20th October, 1832, and 24th May, 1834, the sales of the lands ceded thereby commenced at Pontotoc, Mississippi, on the first Monday in January last; and, by the returns made to this office, it appears that, up to the 30th of September last, they amounted to the sum of $1,080,118 61. The operations at that office are not included in any of the statements herewith furnished, as the net proceeds of the sales constitute a fund for the benefit of that tribe, and are not available to the Treasury for the general purposes of the government.

All of which is most respectfully submitted,

JOHN M. MOORE, Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Hon. Levi Woodbury, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 1, 1836.

JOHN M. MOORE, Acting Commissioner

B.

Statement of public lands sold, of cash, Treasurer's receipts, and scrip received therefor, of incidental expenses thereon, and of payments into the Treasury on account thereof, in the first, second, and third quarters of the year 1836.

Estimate of the appropriations required for surveying the public lands during the year 1837.

Referring to the estimates of the surveyors general, that will be submitted with the annual report from this office, for the probable extent of the surveying operations in the year 1837, it is respectfully submitted, that, in addition to the existing unexpended balances of appropriations for surveying public lands, there be appropriated for 1837 an aggregate amount for that object, to be duly apportioned among the several surveying districts, according to the exigencies of the public service, $150,000.

Also, that for the completion of unfinished portions of townships, islands, lakes, &c., the surveying of which cannot be effected at the present maximum rates of mileage allowed by law, the following appropriations be made, agreeably to the accompanying estimates of the surveyors general, viz.:

For Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin, to be applied not exceeding $5 per mile	$3,040
For Florida, to be applied not exceeding $5 per mile	6,000
For Louisiana, to be applied not exceeding $8 per mile	20,000
For Alabama, in addition to $2,500 remaining unexpended for the same object, appropriated by the act of Congress of 9th May, 1836, and both appropriations to be applied not exceeding $8 per mile	1,000

As the estimates have not been received from the surveyor for Illinois and Missouri, and from the surveyor for Mississippi, reference is made to the annual report of the General Land Office, and to the documents accompanying the same from the first-named officer, for a view of the present situation of the business in his district and office; and to the same report for a statement of the work to be performed in Mississippi. Should it be decided to extend the surveying operations in the districts under the charge of those officers during the next year, such portion of the general appropriation now asked for, as may be required by the circumstances in each case, will be apportioned to those districts.

Whenever the required estimates for those offices are received, they will be submitted.

F.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 1, 1836.

SIR: You are requested to furnish this office with an estimate, for the year 1837, of the amount of the surveying which the public interest requires to be performed within your surveying district, together with a separate estimate of the expenses of your office for the same year, accompanied by a statement exhibiting the manner in which the appropriation of 1836 for extra clerk-hire has thus far been applied, and the amount which will be required the ensuing year for the prosecution of the work now in progress under that appropriation.

I have likewise to call your attention particularly to the surveys within your district, comprising portions of townships, islands, &c., remaining unfinished or unsurveyed from various causes, but chiefly on account of the maximum price allowed by law being inadequate to pay for the work. In many of these cases the lands have become valuable, and should be surveyed where the enhanced price would justify it. With a view, therefore, of obtaining a special appropriation for that purpose, I have to request that you will report a list of all such of these tracts as are deemed worth surveying at augmented prices, specifying the number of miles, and, as nearly as you may be enabled to judge, the cost per mile, for surveying the same, making the amount a separate item in your general estimate.

As these estimates are to be laid before the Secretary of the Treasury in time to enable him to submit them to Congress at the beginning of the approaching session, it will be necessary that you should furnish them before the close of this month, if possible.

I am, &c., ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, September 21, 1836.

SIR: In obedience to the instructions contained in your letter of the 1st instant, I have the honor to submit to you an estimate of the expenses of this office for the year 1837, with a statement of "the manner in which the appropriation of 1836, for extra clerk-hire, has thus far been applied, and the amount which will be required the ensuing year for the prosecution of the work now in progress under that appropriation."

The act of the 9th of May last, "providing for the salaries of certain officers therein named," &c., authorizes the surveyor general of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, to employ two clerks, at a sum not exceeding $2,300, and he is allowed the further sum of $4,000 for additional clerk-hire. The additional force here provided for was probably intended to be employed (in part) in transcribing the field notes of the public surveys in this office, for preservation at the seat of government. This work was commenced early in the present year, and on which three or four clerks were employed, most of their time, for near three months. This increase, however, of the current business arising out of the surveys in the Milwaukie district, Wisconsin Territory, which could not be laid over without injury to the public interests, required all the force of the office. The transcribing the field notes will be resumed and continued whenever, and as often as the important current duties of the office will permit.

This course, which the necessity of the case seemed to call for, will, I trust, be approved of by you.

It is probable that the amount of public surveys to be made in this district, the ensuing year, will fully equal that of any former year.

The experience of the past has shown that the amount of business growing out of the surveys, which, in that case, would devolve upon this office, cannot be performed by a less number of clerks than are now employed in it. In view of the important object in transcribing the field notes, for preservation at the seat of government, it is very desirable that that work should be prosecuted as expeditiously as may be consistent with a correct and prompt discharge of our current duties. The expediency, therefore, of making a liberal appropriation at once for that object, so as to accomplish it at an early period, must be apparent; particularly as no provision has been made, nor measures taken by the government, to provide fireproof rooms, in which to keep the field notes, books, and papers of this office, which (the field notes and plats especially) it is of incalculable importance to the people of this surveying district, and indeed to the whole nation, should be safely kept and preserved.

If it should be your intention to recommend to Congress, at its approaching session, the printing of all the field notes of the public surveys in this office, as recommended in my communication of the 19th of March last, still, should that measure be adopted, the same increase of allowance for clerk-hire will be necessary; for much of the field notes will have to be arranged and transcribed for the press, and the proofs of the whole work read in this office.

In my communication to the Committee of Ways and Means, of the 5th of March last, on the subject of the course of business in this office, (a copy of which was transmitted to you,) I recommended the expediency of providing by law for compensation for a messenger for this office. The expense is now borne by the surveyor general; otherwise the appropriate duties of messenger would devolve on the clerks themselves, at a loss of time.

The justice and propriety of making provision by law, also, for office rent and fuel for this office, has from time to time, for many years past, been urged. I renew my claim to be relieved from these burdens, and cannot but hope that the justice of the claim will be readily admitted and provided for.

Let it be remembered that the salary of the surveyor general is the same now that it was when the office was first created, forty years ago; while the expenses of the office, in the items above mentioned, have greatly increased, as well as the duties and responsibilities of the officer himself.

With the foregoing brief views, I beg leave to submit the following estimate for the expenses of this office for the year 1837:

For two clerks (chief clerk and principal draughtsman) as provided by act of 9th of May, 1836...	$2,300 00
For additional clerk-hire, per said act.....	4,000 00
For compensation for extra clerks to transcribe the field notes of the public surveys, for preservation at the seat of government.....	3,200 60
For compensation for messenger for this office.....	300 00
For stationery and office furniture.....	350 00
For postage on letters and packets.....	650 00
For office rent and fuel.....	250 00
	11,050 00

All which is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant, ROBT. T. LYTLE.

Hon. ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, September 21, 1836.

SIR: In compliance with the instructions in your letter of the 1st instant, I have the honor to submit the following estimate of the amount of surveying which the public interest requires to be performed within this surveying district, for the year 1837; and the amount of appropriation which may be necessary for that purpose.

The appropriations for this object for the current year, in this district, are:

For surveys in Ohio	$650 00
For surveys in Michigan peninsula	15,000 00
For surveys in Michigan, west of the lake, and in Wisconsin Territory	50,000 00
Total	$65,650 00
Out of this sum there will have been expended within the current year, for surveys in Milwaukie district, (Wisconsin Territory,) in Indiana, and in Ohio, including incidental expenses, stationery, postage, &c., about	23,000 00
Leaving an unexpended balance of this year's appropriation of	$42,650 00
Of which balance there is applicable to the surveys in Wisconsin Territory, about	$27,650 00
And in Michigan peninsula	15,000 00
	42,650 00

The survey of a series of townships, including exterior lines and meanders of rivers, lakes, &c., will average about eighty miles per township. And in that portion of this district which is to be the scene of our future operations, the surveys cannot be made for a less price than three dollars per mile, the maximum allowance; estimating, then, the Sac and Fox cession west of the Mississippi, in Wisconsin Territory, at two hundred and fifty townships, and the Ottawa and Chippewa cession in Michigan peninsula, at two hundred and seventy-five townships, the quantity of surveying in the former will be twenty thousand miles, at an expense of sixty thousand dollars; and in the latter, twenty-two thousand miles, at an expense of sixty-six thousand dollars.

Assuming that the entire of these two tracts may be surveyed next year, together with a portion of the Ottawa and Chippewa cession in the northern peninsula of Michigan, (between the straits of Mackinac and Lake Superior) there will be wanted the following sums for the prosecution of the public surveys in this surveying department for the ensuing year; subject, however, to such modifications as the views of the department, in regard to the amount of surveys which may be ordered for that year, may render expedient:

For surveying the public lands in Michigan peninsula, in addition to the appropriation for 1836	$51,000 00
For surveying the public lands in the northern peninsula of Michigan, (between the straits of Mackinac and Lake Superior)	20,000 00
For surveying the public lands in Wisconsin Territory, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for 1836	32,350 00
For surveying unfinished portions of townships, rivers, lakes, islands, &c., in the old surveys, referred to in the accompanying list and report on that subject	3,040 00
	106,390 00

All which is respectfully submitted.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LYTLE.

Hon. ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner General Land Office, Washington.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, September 21, 1836.

SIR: In compliance with your instructions of the 1st instant, I report to you a list (subjoined) of portions of townships, islands, &c., which remain unfinished or unsurveyed, from various causes, and which are deemed worth surveying at augmented prices.

In Ohio.

	MILES.
1. Meanders of the Scioto river, in townships 4 and 5 south, range 9 east, 1st meridian	4
2. Survey of sundry islands in the Miami and Maumee rivers	25
3. Survey of numerous small lakes in various parts of the State, preventing the sale of the lands around them	40

In Indiana.

4. A small tract in township 4 north, range 2 east, 2d meridian, on White river	1
5. Meanders of White river in townships 2 and 4 north, range 7 west	15
6. Survey of sundry islands in the St. Joseph's, Maumee, Wabash, Tippecanoe, Eel, and White rivers	50
7. Survey of numerous small lakes in different parts of the State, preventing the sale of the lands around them	100

In Michigan.

8. Meanders of river Au Sable and Lake Erie, in townships 7 and 8 south, range 8 east	3
9. Survey of sundry islands in the Huron, Raisin, St. Clair, St. Joseph's, Kalamazoo, Grand, and other rivers	70
10. Survey of numerous small lakes in old surveys, preventing the sale of the lands around them	300
Total number of miles	608

The foregoing comprise all the unsurveyed portions of land of the description referred to by you, which are now recollected; time not permitting an examination of the plats of the whole district, to make out a minute list.

The contents of the fractional sections on White river, in townships 2 and 4 north, range 7 west, 2d meridian, Indiana, (item 5,) have been several times called for by the register of the land office at Vincennes, but which could not be furnished for want of the survey. There are other portions of that river, and of the east fork of White river, of which there are no meanders in this office; on which account subdivisions of a number of unsold fractional sections on these rivers could not be furnished to the register.

Inquiries are frequently made at this office concerning unsurveyed islands, in the several rivers named in the foregoing list. All of these which contain land fit for cultivation, or which would be saleable on account of timber, or other advantages, ought to be surveyed and prepared for sale.

The unsurveyed small lakes, scattered over a large portion of this surveying district, are very frequently referred to as preventing the sale of the sections, or parts of sections, in which they are situated. This subject, in reference to lakes of this description in Michigan, was laid before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, many years ago, by the surveyor general. A portion of his correspondence on that subject accompanies this, marked A, B, C.

From the detached situation and small amount of these several surveys, and the loss of time in travelling from one to another, and the difficulty of finding old corners and lines, and connecting the new surveys with them, I am of opinion that it would require an average of at least five dollars per mile, to induce a competent surveyor to undertake such work.

Estimating, then, the whole of the surveys of the description alluded to at six hundred and eighty miles, and at an average expense of five dollars per mile, it would require an appropriation of three thousand and forty dollars.

All which is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LYTLE.

Hon. ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington.

A.

Extract of a letter from Edward Tiffin, surveyor general, to John Biddle, register of the land office at Detroit, Michigan.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Chillicothe, April 9, 1825.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 24th March ult., on the subject of the small lakes being included in the calculation of the contents of the public lands in Michigan Territory, &c.

From the information I had from the surveyors of public lands in Michigan, several years ago, I then addressed a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, recommending the survey of the small lakes, for the purpose of excluding them from the estimate of the quantities of the land; and I was instructed by Mr. Meigs to survey and exclude such lakes as might be five or six miles, or more, in circumference, and having good saleable lands on their margins. These instructions I gave to the surveyors for their government, and under them a considerable number of lakes have been surveyed; many of which are not half the extent of those authorized by the Commissioner to be excluded.

I agree with you in opinion, that all the small lakes, having saleable land around them, ought to be surveyed, and excluded in the estimates of the contents of the public lands; and for the purpose of obtaining instructions to this effect, I shall again lay the subject before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with a copy of your letter, and urge the necessity of the remedy sought for.

B.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Chillicothe, April 9, 1825.

SIR: I enclose you a copy of a letter from the register of the land office at Detroit, received this morning, urging the necessity of surveying the small lakes, with which the Territory of Michigan abounds, for the purpose of excluding them from the estimate of the contents of the public lands. Several years ago, Mr. Meigs, former Commissioner of the General Land Office, authorized me to survey such lakes, bounded by saleable lands, as are five or six miles in circumference. This has been done; but there are a vast number of smaller lakes which remain unsurveyed for want of authority from government, by which means a great quantity of excellent land, on the margin of those lakes, is effectually excluded from market. By surveying those lakes, and excluding them from the estimate of the quantity of land in the sections where situated, I am of opinion that the public interests would be greatly subserved in the increase of sales.

Look, if you please, at the general plat of the public lands in Michigan Territory, on which most of the small lakes, intersected by the section lines, are shown.

I respectfully and earnestly recommend this subject to your consideration, and request your instructions thereon.

Yours, respectfully, E. TIFFIN.

GEO. GRAHAM, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

C.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Chillicothe, December 26, 1825.

SIR: Referring to your letter to me of the 23d of May last, and to my letter-book, I discover that the "estimate of the probable expense of surveying such lakes, included in the surveys of the townships heretofore made and returned, as have not been surveyed, and which it may be deemed expedient to survey," has been inadvertently neglected to be furnished to you.

The estimate called for is herewith enclosed, and I hope that it will be received in time to be made an item in the appropriation asked for for the ensuing year.

I am, &c.

E. TIFFIN.

GEO. GRAHAM, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington.

Estimate of the probable expense of surveying such lakes in the surveyed townships of United States land, in the Territory of Michigan, as have not been surveyed, and which it may be deemed expedient to survey.

In the returns of the deputy surveyor of the surveys of the United States lands, those lakes only, over or very near, which their lines pass, are noted in their field books. But it is represented by those who have surveyed in Michigan, that in those parts of the Territory where small lakes abound, there are numerous lakes, deep and incapable of being drained, which are situated in the interior of the sections. Having this fact in view, and carefully examining the township plats, on which are laid down such lakes as are noted by the surveyors, I think it probable that there will be at least three hundred and fifty miles of surveying in the unsurveyed lakes which come under the description mentioned in the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to me, of the 23d May last, and which, at the present price allowed for surveying, (viz., two dollars and fifty cents per mile,) would require an appropriation of eight hundred and seventy-five dollars; which estimate is respectfully submitted.

E. TIFFIN.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Cincinnati, October 6, 1836.

SIR: In my annual estimate for salaries for 1837, communicated to you on the 21st September last, the following item was inadvertently left out, and which you will be pleased to insert in the proper place in that estimate:

"For compensation to the surveyor general,.....$2,000."

And that sum will be added to the total amount.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LYTLE.

Hon. ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, City of St. Louis, November 3, 1836.

SIR: In compliance with your letter requiring a report of the business of this office, both in the field and in the office, I submit the following statement thereof:

The only work now going on in the field is as follows:

By Joseph Montgomery, who is completing the surveys under his contract of 1834;

By D. A. Spaulding, who is finishing his contract of the 9th of June, 1835;

And by Jesse Applegate, under his contract of the 25th day of May of the present year.

The force of the office is engaged as follows:

1. Examining the field-notes of the surveys returned under the contracts specified in the papers marked A, B, and C, accompanying another communication of this day.

2. Constructing plats of the new surveys, making the requisite copies thereof, and calculating the areas of the fractional sections.

3. Calculating the areas, and subdividing the fractional sections of the old surveys, and preparing plats thereof for the district land offices, and for the General Land Office under the act of Congress of the 5th of April, 1832.

4. Recording and copying field-notes of the old surveys, at which three clerks are employed.

5. Furnishing such information and copies of such plats and notes of surveys and other papers, as the various wants of the public require.

6. Preparing orders of survey, and the necessary plats and descriptions for the survey of private claims confirmed by the late act of Congress.

7. Renewing the mutilated and worn-out plats for the district land offices; at which one clerk is engaged under the appropriation of $5,000 by an act of Congress approved 27th of June, 1834, to enable the respective surveyors general to furnish the several land offices with renewed township plats. (See page 56 of the acts of the first session of the 23d Congress.)

I am, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

DANIEL DUNKLIN.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Little Rock, Arkansas, December 22, 1836.

SIR: Your letter of the 29th August ult., requesting the "usual estimates" for the year 1837, was received on yesterday; and, in compliance therewith, I have the honor to submit the following, as the probable expenses of this office for the year designated, viz.:

For surveying public lands	$25,000
For salary of surveyor general	1,500
For salary of regular clerks	1,800
For salary of extra clerks	1,000
For postage	125
For stationery	125
For office furniture and printing	100
For house-rent and fuel	300
	29,950

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD CROSS.

T. L. SMITH, Esq., Register U. S. Treasury, Washington City.

SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, Donaldsonville, October 20, 1836.

SIR: Before offering the estimate required by your letter of the 1st ult., permit me to make a few remarks in reference to the description of surveys that the public interest requires; and to explain the reasons why the service of the current year will fall short of the amount anticipated by the last appropriation.

The early part of the season was unusually wet, and unfavorable to such surveying as remains to be executed in this State, being ridges of rich alluvial land adapted to cultivation, separated by cypress swamp, subject to inundation: and when it was possible to survey, the attention of most of the deputies, as well as those employed in the office, was required to give effect to the law allowing pre-emptions of the back tracts, which expired on the 15th of June last, and which unfortunately required a resurvey and renewal of the maps for most of the tracts that were entered.

But a small portion of that part of the appropriation intended to cover the expenses of resurveys and the location of claims could be used, in consequence of this office not being provided with sufficient data to enable us to identify the ancient boundaries of the tracts. The copies of the confirmations and orders of survey being incomplete, the records and plats, on which the confirmations are based, being in the offices of the registers, and not in this office, and the original records appertaining to the office of surveyor general before the cession of the country having been withheld.

For the residue of the appropriation, there are contracts for surveys, part of which will be completed in all the month of December, and the balance perhaps not before March or April; it is presumed, therefore, that the balance that may remain will be carried to the account of next year's payments.

While on this subject, I have to inform you that the contracts taken under the last appropriation have been almost without exception, unprofitable to the deputies, and in many instances they have sustained considerable loss; partly owing to the season, but principally on account of the difficulty of the work they had contracted to perform.

Considering the advanced price of labor and provisions, the difficulties and delays to be encountered, and the increased outfit and extra hands necessary to survey the alluvial lands in this State, I am of opinion that six dollars per mile would be very moderate compensation for the districts of this description of work that have been performed within the last year; and those remaining being still more difficult and remote, and the islands and detached parts of townships that the public interest requires should be surveyed, will, I have no doubt, in many instances require eight dollars per mile to insure faithful execution.

To illustrate this more fully, permit me to remark, that the prices of labor and provisions in this country have increased at least one hundred per cent. within the last two years, and the demand for engineers and surveyors has even exceeded that ratio; but, on the other hand, the demand for the description of land above referred to has increased to such an extent as to make it almost certain that the additional price would exceed the increased expense a hundred fold.

As I before remarked, much of our time has been employed during the current year in attending to the location of the back tracts which were entered by claimants owning the lands fronting on watercourses; the law making it necessary that the shape of those tracts should be changed, our duties have been extremely difficult and embarrassing. This has made it necessary occasionally to require the assistance of the extra clerks; the residue of their time has been employed in performing the following works:

In the district north of Red river eighteen townships have been protracted and calculated, and the maps and descriptive notes made out in triplicate; and the descriptive notes of two others made in triplicate, and the field notes recorded.

In the southwestern district thirteen townships have been protracted and calculated, twenty-six township maps and the descriptive notes made out in triplicate, and the field notes of fourteen recorded.

In the St. Helena district seven townships have been protracted and calculated, and made out in triplicate.

To afford this office the means of locating the private claims correctly, and to decide on the correctness of former locations and the surveys of the adjacent lands which have not yet been approved, the copies of confirmations and orders of survey should be made complete, and copies of all plats, sketches, and other evidences relating to the location of the claims, should be obtained from the offices of the several registers.

In conclusion, I beg leave to submit to you the following copy of the estimates for the year 1837, which I have sent to the Register of the Treasury, to wit:

For surveying the public lands and private claims in Louisiana	$20,000
Completing the surveys of the townships in the parishes of Rapides and Avoyelles, and bordering on the Teche; the islands south of Grand lake and Lake Palourde; Pecan island and other islands west of the Atchafalaya; the lands bordering on Lake Pontchartrain, and the isthmus south of Lake Borgne, say 2,500 miles, at $8 per mile	20,000
To defray the expenses of completing the copies of confirmations and orders of survey, and procuring from the offices of the registers copies of plats, sketches, and other evidences necessary to a correct location of private claims	2,000
Salary of surveyor general	2,000
Regular clerk's salary	1,500
Extra clerks' salary, necessary to bring up the arrears of work in the office	2,800
Postages on letters and packages	100
Stationery, &c	250
Office rent and fuel	220
	48,870

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

H. T. WILLIAMS, Surveyor General.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Florence, Ala., September 20, 1836.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st inst., calling on this office for the estimates for the year 1837.

The expenses of this office will require—

For salary of the surveyor general	$2,000
For salary of clerk and draughtsman, $1,000 each	2,000
Contingent expenses, &c	200

Congress has appropriated the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars, heretofore, "for additional clerk-hire, in order to bring up the arrears, and transcribing the field notes of said office, for the purpose of having them preserved at the seat of government." Of this sum, $1,993 06 will have been expended at the close of the present quarter. The field notes have been all copied for the General Land Office, and sent to Washington. I am now having them copied into strong books, for record and preservation in this office. The fund remaining will be amply sufficient for that purpose. No extra clerk-hire, beyond the present means, will be needed during the year 1837, unless it is the intention of the government to have the Cherokee lands surveyed entire, and brought into market during the next year; but I do not presume such will be the case.

Should those lands be surveyed during the next year, the sum of twenty thousand dollars will be required for that service.

The following portions of townships remain unsurveyed in the Cahaba land district, to wit:

In township No.	6	of range No.	8	(estimate)	21 miles.
do.	15	do.	8	11	do.
do.	18	do.	8	4	do.
do.	20	do.	8	10	do.
do.	18	do.	12	4	do.
do.	8	do.	11	2	do.
do.	8	do.	19	9	do.
do.	6	do.	10	8	do.
				69	do.

The islands in the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers are, perhaps, worth surveying. I have no correct means of ascertaining the number or the quantity of miles to survey them and connect them with the surveys on the main shore, but would presume something like fifty miles, more or less.	50 miles.
	119

The above work could not be done, on contract, for less than eight dollars per mile, as it lies in very detached situations. I should presume that an appropriation of one thousand dollars, and the surveyor general being authorized to contract at a price not exceeding eight dollars per mile, would finish all remnants of work in the State.

He should also be authorized by law to contract for the surveying and locating of all private claims south of the 31st degree of latitude, at a price not exceeding eight dollars per mile. An appropriation was made at the last session of Congress for finishing all work south of that line; but, unless the surveyor general be empowered to give an adequate compensation, the work can never be done.

Recapitulation.

Salary of surveyor general	$2,000 00
Clerk and draughtsman, $1,000 each	2,000 00
Contingent expenses	200 00
Survey of the Cherokee lands	20,000 00
Survey of all unfinished townships, islands, &c.	1,000 00
	25,200 00

All which is respectfully submitted.

With great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES H. WEAKLEY.

E. A. BROWN, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

JACKSON, TENNESSEE, October 6, 1836.

SIR: Your letter of the 1st ult. has been transmitted to me, and I hasten to comply with your request, so far as circumstances will permit.

The prosecution of the public surveys during the ensuing year must depend entirely on the removal of the Seminole Indians, and you will readily acknowledge, from past experience, that this desirable event is mixed with much uncertainty. I shall assume, however, their certain removal as the ground of this estimate.

Estimate—Surveyor's Office of Florida for the year 1837.

Surveying public lands at the price established by law	$10,000
Surveying public lands on the Suwanee and Apalachicola rivers, and adjacent islands, with some scrap surveying believed to be valuable, and all of difficult execution, $5 per mile. Supposed amount,	6,000
Surveying private land claims, awarded by the Supreme Court of the United States, heretofore suspended by Indian hostilities, together with other confirmed claims, arising in the progress of public surveys, on the second parallel—supposed amount	4,000
Salary of surveyor general, $2,000; three clerks, $3,000	5,000
Extra clerk hire for copying field-notes for General Land Office, (without the former appropriations unexpended)	2,000
Total amount of estimate	27,000

On the subject of former appropriations for copying field notes, I have to remark (as previously advised) that the situation of the country precluded the employment of clerks for that service; they could not be found to undertake that duty at what I considered a reasonable compensation; therefore, none other than a small amount of former appropriations has been disbursed on that account, and which you will find in my salary account for the first quarter of 1836, (or the one preceding, as I write from memory.) Shortly before I left Tallahassee, I had occasion to call your attention to this subject, requesting information of the amount paid for transcribing field notes by the surveyors general of Mississippi and Louisiana, and that my corresponding clerk would, in conformity with that information, endeavor to procure clerks in my absence, under forms of contracts left with him. If this information has not been furnished, I will thank you to advise me thereof, addressed to Tallahassee, whither I contemplate setting out in a few days, with my health (as I believe) re-established.

I regret to say, that recent advices inform me that my clerks have been very sick, since my departure in July, and much sickness is prevalent in that country.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BUTLER.

E. A. BROWN, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.]

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, December 1, 1836.

JOHN M. MOORE, Acting Commissioner.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1547. [2D SESSION.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 13, 1836.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of James A. Williams, of Blount county, Alabama, reported:

That it appears from the statement of petitioner, supported by the affidavit of a disinterested person, that he settled upon and improved a small tract of government land, which had been offered for sale at the Huntsville land office, in said State; that when he was enabled to procure the money to enter it, as he intended to do when he made the improvement, one Alexander Williams took the numbers of the said tract, as he supposed correctly, for petitioner, who was at the time confined by sickness; that afterward he made the entry at said land office according to the numbers thus taken, which turned out to be east half of the *north*west quarter of section twenty-one, township eleven, range two west, instead of the east half of the *south*west quarter of the same section, which included his improvement, and was the tract he really intended to purchase; that as soon as he discovered that he had entered, instead of his improvement, another piece of land entirely worthless, and which he never designed to enter, he made application at said office to correct the mistake, but the register refused to make the correction. From this state of facts, your committee recommend the relief prayed for, allowing petitioner to relinquish the tract purchased by mistake, and apply the sum paid thereon to the purchase of other lands in that district subject to private entry, and report a bill accordingly.

CIRCULAR FROM THE TREASURY THAT GOLD AND SILVER ONLY BE RECEIVED IN PAYMENT FOR THE PUBLIC LANDS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, DECEMBER 14, 1836.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 11, 1836.

In consequence of complaints which have been made of frauds, speculations, and monopolies, in the purchase of the public lands, and the aid which is said to be given to effect these objects by excessive bank credits, and dangerous if not partial facilities, through bank drafts and bank deposites, and the general evil influence likely to result to the public interests, and especially the safety of the great amount of money in the Treasury, and the sound condition of the currency of the country, from the further exchange of the national domain in this manner, and chiefly for bank credits and paper money, the President of the United Sates has given directions, and you are hereby instructed, after the 15th day of August next, to receive in payment of the public lands nothing except what is directed by the existing laws, viz.: gold and silver, and in the proper cases, Virginia land scrip; provided that, till the 15th of December next, the same indulgences heretofore extended as to the kind of money received, may be continued for any quantity of land not exceeding 320 acres to each purchaser who is an actual settler, or bonafide resident in the State where the sales are made.

In order to insure the faithful execution of these instructions, all receivers are strictly prohibited from accepting for land sold, any draft, certificate, or other evidence of money or deposite, though for specie, unless signed by the Treasurer of the United States, in conformity to the act of April 24, 1820. And each of those officers is required to annex to his monthly returns to this department, the amount of gold and of silver respectively, as well as the bills received under the foregoing exception; and each deposite bank is required to annex to every cerlificate given upon a deposite of money, the proportions of it actually paid in gold, in silver, and in bank-notes. All former instructions on these subjects, except as now modified, will be considered as remaining in full force.

The principal objects of the President, in adopting this measure, being to repress alleged frauds, and to withhold any countenance or facilities in the power of the government from the monopoly of the public lands in the hands of speculators and capitalists, to the injury of the actual settlers in the new States, and of emigrants in search of new homes, as well as to discourage the ruinous extension of bank issues and bank credits, by which those results are generally supposed to be promoted, your utmost vigilance is required, and relied on, to carry this order into complete execution.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN INDIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 21, 1836.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Norman Holt, reported:

That in his said petition he sets forth that some five or six years since he settled on the public lands, in the State of Indiana, in what is now called Owen county, in the Vincennes land district; that he built a house and cleared twenty acres of land, on the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 25, township 12, range 5, north; that, in the month of January last, (1836,) he became enabled to pay the government price for said land, and for the purpose of carrying to the land officers the correct numbers of said land, he called on two of his neighbors, Solomon Baker and Samuel Coffman, who gave him, as he verily believes, the proper numbers of the land on which he resided; that he went to the land office, and gave the same numbers of the land as furnished him by Baker and Coffman, and for which he received a certificate of purchase for, as he thought, the same land; that he went home and laid by his certificate, and went to work on said land, supposing it to be his own, and that he knew no better until he was notified by one William Fry to leave the premises; that he (Fry) had entered the land; that he (Holt) went to his certificate, and found that there was an error in the entry; that it called for the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five of township twelve, in range five, instead of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section twenty-five, township twelve, range five; that finding himself defeated in getting the land, by the mistake of the officers of the land office, (as he believes,) he went and examined the land described in the certificate, and finds it poor and broken, and not such a tract as he can ever expect to support his family upon, and he prays Congress to permit him to surrender this certificate, given to him at the land office, and permit him to apply the money paid for the same on any unsold lands within the same land district.

On examining the testimony in support of his claim, your committee find the affidavit of four individuals, who are neighbors of said Holt, all of whom testify that Holt informed them, before he went to the land office, that he intended to enter the land on which he resided, and that, after his return, he said to them that he had done so. Two of them, to wit, Solomon Baker and Samuel Coffman, declare that said Holt did apply to them, as stated in his petition, for the proper numbers of the land on which he resided, and that they did give him the true number, viz.: the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section twenty-five, township twelve, range five, to be sold in the Vincennes district.

Your committee, in view of this case, as set forth in the petition, and the evidence sustaining it, are decidedly of the opinion that the said Holt is entitled to the relief prayed for in his petition. They are satisfied that there was a mistake in the entry. There could have been no inducement for the petitioner to have given any other number than that which would secure the land on which he had made his improvement, and whether the mistake in the entry was made by the petitioner or the officers of the land office, the committee think it due to the petitioner that he shall have the privilege of applying the money paid for said land on any of the unsold lands in said land district, and they have, therefore, reported a bill for his relief.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 22, 1836.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Morrison, reported:

That he claims under Charles Dewey, who states by his affidavit that he is now (in October, 1836) fifty-one years old; that he settled, by pre-emption from the Spanish government, in 1802, upon the premises. (He must then, according to his own affidavit, have been seventeen years old.) It is not stated from what officer of the Spanish government the permit was obtained; neither is it produced, nor the non-production thereof accounted for in any way. The affiant, Dewey, states that he conveyed all his interest on the improvement, (consisting of a cabin,) in 1805, to James Morrison, for a valuable consideration, (the amount not stated.) The proof produced of any settlement is wholly indefinite and unsatisfactory, the petition and affidavit vague and uncertain, and not such in the estimation of your committee to authorize them to pass the claim.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 23, 1836.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Jehu Hollinsworth, of Blount county, Alabama, reported:

That petitioner represents that, with a view of entering a forty-acre tract of land, on which he had settled and improved, within the Huntsville land district, he caused the numbers to be taken by an individual whom he believed understood such business, but who, by mistake, furnished petitioner with the number of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section two, in township eleven, range three east, instead of the corresponding number in section eleven, same township and range; from which erroneous number the petitioner made the entry, and paid the purchase money. It is stated that the land actually entered does not embrace any part of petitioner's improvement, and is barren and worthless. It further appears that petitioner is, by disease and defective eyesight, rendered incapable of using proper diligence in taking correctly the numbers of land. The important facts in this case, to wit: that the petitioner had an improvement on the public land which he intended to enter, the mistake in the entry, and the worthless character of the land he entered by mistake, are substantially proven by affidavits of disinterested persons.

Your committee, therefore, recommend relief as prayed for, authorizing petitioner to surrender the land entered by mistake, and appropriate the amount paid toward other lands subject to private entry in said land district; and report a bill accordingly.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1552. [2D SESSION.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 23, 1836.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of William James Aarons, of Blount county, Alabama, reported:

That the petitioner states that he settled a tract of government land that had been offered for sale, some years ago, and made an improvement, with an intention of making an entry of a small part, so as to include his improvement, as soon as he could procure the means of doing so; that when he was prepared to do so, he employed the surveyor of the county to ascertain the number of the legal subdivision, so as to embrace his houses and improvement; that this individual, by mistake, as petitioner presumes, took the numbers of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, of section 32, in township 10, range 4 east, of the basis meridian of the Huntsville land district, instead of the corresponding numbers in section 33, where petitioner's improvement was situated. By these false numbers the entry was made at the said land office, and the price paid. The petitioner states that the land entered by mistake as aforesaid is poor, unimproved, and entirely valueless; that he did not discover the mistake until some short time after, when he immediately applied at said office to get it corrected; but the register refused to make the correction, under the rules governing such cases. By a note addressed to the said register by said county surveyor, and the certificate of the receiver, it appears that application was made to alter the entry, as stated. The petitioner asks to be allowed to surrender the land entered by mistake, and apply the money paid thereon to the purchase of other lands.

From the above state of facts, the committee believe that the said land was not intended to have been purchased by the petitioner, but another tract, on which his improvement was situated, in a different section, and that he used due diligence in applying to have the mistake corrected; and therefore recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be granted, and report a bill accordingly.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 26, 1836.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Hernandez, reported:

That the petitioner states that he claims a tract of land, containing about 800 arpens, which he alleges was granted to him by the Spanish government, in October, 1817; that his claim was presented to the commissioners appointed to decide claims to lands in the district of West Florida, in due time, and was omitted in the report of the abstract of lands confirmed by said commissioners, and that the title-papers are recorded in the record-book containing the records of Spanish titles, &c.; but the petitioner has failed to present any of the title-papers, or certified copies of them, without which your committee believe it would be unsafe for Congress to act upon those claims. Your committee therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1554. [2D SESSION.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 27, 1836.

Mr. R. GARLAND, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Polly Lemon, reported:

That the petitioner is entitled to a tract of land, containing 640 acres, situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine, or that part of the State of Louisiana commonly called "the Neutral Territory," a short distance from Fort Jesup. She presented her claim to the register of the land office and receiver of public moneys for the land district south of Red river, in Louisiana, for their decision and report thereon, under the acts of Congress passed for the purpose of adjusting claims to land in that district, who recommended it, among many others, for confirmation; and on the 24th day of the month of May, in the year 1828, an act was passed confirming the claims mentioned in the said report, (vide Laws U. S., vol. 8, page 109,) except some specially enumerated. The petitioner remained in possession of the land so claimed and confirmed to her, making it her home. In the year 1832, the commanding officer at Fort Jesup made a representation to the War Department of the great inconveniences that the officers and troops stationed at that post were subjected to, in consequence of a number of persons being settled around it, (some of them not bearing very good characters,) and from their keeping grog-shops or other establishments calculated to interfere with the proper discipline of the garrison. He therefore suggested the propriety of reserving all the public lands around the fort, for the distance of three miles from the flag-staff. In the correspondence relative to this reservation, the late General Leavenworth states there are several private claims that were good, which would fall within the limits of the reservation, and suggests the propriety of extinguishing them by giving the owners lands elsewhere, or paying a certain sum for them. A correspondence of some length took place on the subject of the proposed reservation, between the commanding officer at Fort Jesup, the Quartermaster General, General Macomb, the late register of the land office at Opelousas, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Secretary of War, which resulted in the matter being submitted to the President, who directed a large tract of land around the fort, viz., about twenty-five sections, to be reserved for public purposes, the whole of which was taken possession of by order of the officer commanding. About the same time, General Leavenworth was directed to make arrangements with the owners of the claims that might fall within the reservation to extinguish their titles: he reports to the department that he had taken measures to do so, and entered into agreements with them all, (except three,) which would be satisfactory; but they were to be subject to the approbation of the department, and would require the sanction of an act of Congress. With whom these agreements were made, and what stipulations they contained, the committee are not informed, as it does not appear that the general ever sent them to Washington, and his death renders it impossible to know what they were. From his statement they were inchoate, and possibly, at the time he informs the War Department of having made them, the contracts were not reduced to writing. This correspondence, however, shows it was not the intention of the government to take the property of individuals without compensation. The government has been in possession of the land since the year 1833, and has paid nothing for it.

In the month of January last, the petitioner made application to the register of the land office and receiver of public moneys, at Opelousas, Louisiana, to have her claim located and surveyed according to law, at the place where her settlement was made, and to issue to her a patent certificate for the land. These officers declined doing so, alleging, as a reason, that "the tract claimed by her is the section 27, in township No. 8 north, of range No. 10 west, being one of the sections of land reserved by the President as part of a military reservation for Fort Jesup." From this decision of the register and receiver, the petitioner, by her agent, appealed to the late Commissioner of the General Land Office for relief. He replies to the application, that the land claimed is within the reservation around Fort Jesup; that he has referred to the Department of War, and is advised by it "that so long as Fort Jesup is occupied by the troops of the United States, the tract of land referred to will be necessary for military purposes." That fort has been occupied since about the year 1822, and there is no probability of its being abandoned.

It is proved very satisfactorily that the land of which the petitioner has been deprived, is worth from seven to ten dollars per acre.

The case is one which, in the opinion of the committee, presents a claim for prompt and ample relief. They therefore report a bill.

ON A CLAIM TO LOCATE A MILITARY LAND WARRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 28, 1836.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Francis Jarvis, deceased, reported:

The facts set forth in the petition, and sustained by the proof, in behalf of the heirs of Francis Jarvis, deceased, show that a land warrant for 100 acres, No. 6345, was issued to the heirs of said Francis Jarvis, and was located in the Virginia military district, in the State of Ohio; that some time after said location, it was ascertained by the surveyor that said warrant was located upon lands previously appropriated; and, in consequence thereof, the said warrant was surrendered for the issuance of scrip under the act of the 30th of May, 1830; but before it was again located, or could be attended to by the heirs, a subsequent act of Congress passed, prohibiting scrip to issue on lost entries; or, at least, this is the interpretation given to said act by the surveyor's officers, &c. at the land office.

Your committee consider that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable, and have reported a bill accordingly.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1556. [2D SESSION.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 30, 1836.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the documents pertaining to various land claims, for lands lying between the Rio Hondo and Sabine rivers, reported:

That the register and receiver of the southwestern land district was directed by the act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1823, and a supplemental act thereto passed on the 25th of May, 1824, as commissioners to examine into the claims, take testimony, &c., recommend for confirmation or rejection, to Congress, such claims as should be submitted them in a given time, as will more fully appear by a reference to said acts. The register and receiver, in pursuance of said authority, proceeded in the performance of the duty assigned them, took testimony, and adjudicated many claims, confirming some and rejecting others. Among those which were recommended for confirmation, were a certain number which were suspended by Congress in the passage of an act of the 24th of May, 1828, (which confirmed the balance,) as the act recites that they should be suspended "until it is ascertained whether they are situated in the country claimed by the Caddo Indians."

There has been no information obtained upon this point; but it is believed there has been sufficient information obtained to supersede the necessity of that inquiry. It is believed by the committee, from the best information within their reach, that the Caddo Indians had no right of any sort there, except a permissive right, and that the citizens who claimed by habitation, cultivation, or otherwise, were not trespassers or intruders upon the Indian lands. A thorough inquiry has been made of the Secretary of War, for such information as was in possession of his department in relation to the country whence the Caddoes came; what time they settled in the country in question; and what right they hold and claim in these lands.

The Secretary has communicated all the information at his command, which, taken with his correspondence with one of your committee, is too voluminous to incorporate in this report. And although there is no direct evidence which is absolutely conclusive, yet there is much circumstantial testimony which is extremely persuasive to establish these facts:

That, anciently, these Indians inhabited a country much farther southwest than the one which is now the subject of inquiry; that about thirty years ago they were driven by their enemies (the Osages) from the country they then inhabited upon the white settlements, where they were permitted to remain until the late treaty with them, in the making of which it appears that the Secretary of War did not consider that they had any title to the country, but was induced to give them the sum, perhaps $80,000, to relinquish their possessions and go off peaceably, as will more fully appear by the correspondence upon that subject.

The committee are therefore of opinion that those cases which were suspended by the 1st section of the act of 1828, are as meritorious as those which were confirmed, and have reported a bill for the confirmation of those claims which were suspended.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1557. [2D SESSION.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN MICHIGAN.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 30, 1836.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, having had under consideration the resolution of the House, adopted on the 20th instant, directing them to inquire into the "expediency of so amending the act of the last session of Congress for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Reddock, as to confine the confirmation of the tract of land therein mentioned to the section originally located and claimed by the said Reddock, and upon which his improvements were made," reported:

The object of the resolution seems to be to remove the difficulties which lie in the way of the claimants in getting the title to a particular spot of ground described in the body of the foregoing act, but which is controlled by the following proviso annexed:

"And provided also, that should said tract of land be included in any reservation heretofore made, under treaty with any Indian tribe, that the said heirs be, and they are hereby authorized to locate the same quantity in legal divisions or subdivisions, on any unappropriated lands of the United States, in said territory, subject to private entry."

Upon a recent examination, your committee have discovered that the tract of land claimed by the heirs of Thomas Reddock is embraced within an Indian reservation, according to a treaty made with the Sac and Fox Indians on the 4th of August, 1824, and ratified the 18th of January, 1825, the first section of which, after ceding to the United States the lands described in certain boundaries, lying between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, &c., has the following reservation, to wit: "It being understood that the small tract of land lying between the Desmoine and the Mississippi, and the section of the above line between the Mississippi and Desmoine, is intended for the use of the half-breeds belonging to the Sac and Fox nations, they holding it, however, by the same title and in the same manner that other Indian titles are held."

The particular tract under consideration lies within the boundaries reserved for the half-breeds of the Sac and Fox tribes, under this treaty. If the principle laid down in the Constitution of the United States be correct in relation to treaties with Indian tribes, that "a treaty is the supreme law of the land," then this question is at rest, and those half-breeds must enjoy undisturbed all the benefits under it. If it is considered as a mere question of contract between the government and those Indian tribes, (without possessing those high constitutional obligations which are considered of a sacred character,) then the United States has contracted and agreed with these Indian tribes that this reservation shall remain for the use and benefit of those half-breeds, and it would be a violation of that contract to make any other disposition of it to the prejudice of their rights.

Again, if this land belonged to those Indians, either in fee-simple or the usufructory right, then the particular tract here specified has never been ceded to the United States, but, on the contrary thereof, has been expressly reserved from cession by the Indians, with the assent of the United States.

Your committee are not aware of any instance where the government of the United States has knowingly sold or granted lands in the Indian boundary, whatever the States may have done. It is believed by your committee that the last expression in the clause of reservation, to wit, "They holding it, however, by the same title and in the same manner that other Indian titles are held," is entitled to this interpretation; that they here acknowledge that their right is only a usufructory one, and that, when they choose to sell and surrender it, the United States alone are to be the purchasers, which is the common condition by which other Indian titles are held in the United States. Your committee think these principles are so plain, that it is not necessary at this time to go into an elaborate discussion of them, notwithstanding they are informed the property is immensely valuable—perhaps worth to the amount of several hundred thousand dollars. This has perhaps been produced by the circumstance of a town being laid off upon the land, at a commanding situation upon the bank of the Mississippi, and other advantages appertaining thereto; but it is no reason that the government should violate its faith or infract a treaty solemnly made with an Indian tribe.

Your committee, therefore, feel constrained to report unfavorable upon this application, and that it is such as ought not to be granted.

ON CLAIMS TO LAND IN ARKANSAS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, JANUARY 2, 1837.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a resolution directing them to inquire into the expediency of confirming to the purchasers thereof certain tracts of land sold to them by John Pope, late governor of Arkansas, by virtue of an act of Congress authorizing him to dispose of ten sections of the public lands to build a State-house at Little Rock, in Arkansas, reported:

That they find, by an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1831, entitled, "An act granting a quantity of land to the Territory of Arkansas for the erection of a public building at the seat of government of said Territory," "that the legislature of said Territory was authorized to select, or cause to be selected, a quantity of the unappropriated public lands in the Territory of Arkansas, not exceeding ten sections, and in portions not less than a quarter-section," which was granted to said Territory for the purpose of raising a fund for the erection of a public building at Little Rock, the seat of government of said Territory; and by the second section of that act, they find that the legislature of said Territory was authorized to adopt such measures for the sale of said tract of land, or any part thereof, at such times and manner, and convey the same by such deeds, as they might deem expedient; and upon the presentation of such deeds of conveyance as they should adopt and give to the purchasers, it was made the duty of the President to issue patents to them as in other cases. They also find that, by a subsequent act of Congress, approved July 4, 1832, entitled, "An act to authorize the governor of the Territory of Arkansas to select ten sections of land granted to said Territory for the purpose of building a legislative house for said Territory, and for other purposes," that all the authority and power given to the legislature of Arkansas by the aforesaid act of the 2d of March, 1832, upon the subject of the ten sections of land, &c., was vested in and given to the governor of said Territory; and in pursuance of this authority, the governor of Arkansas undertook and executed the trust vested in him by the act of the 4th of July, 1832, in selecting, selling, and transferring the ten sections of land granted by Congress to Arkansas for the purposes set forth in those acts. He has disposed of a quantity of the unappropriated public lands, not exceeding ten sections; but in executing the trust he has, in more instances than one, taken with fractions of said ten sections, claims adjoining and contiguous fractions; but in every such instance, when he has thus taken fractions, it has been the whole of the fraction, and in conformity to legal subdivisions; and in every such location, when the fractions were taken, if the number of acres of which they consisted amounted in quantity to less than a quarter-section, the United States were credited as for a quarter-section of land. At the proper department it is contended that every fraction, however small, shall be counted as a quarter-section: the consequence is, that although Governor Pope's location does not exceed, but falls short of, the number of acres which compose ten sections, many persons who purchased of him and have paid him the cost of their purchases, believing he had power to sell them the land they bought, will, without the interposition of Congress, be deprived of their land, and lose the money they have paid for it.

The committee further state, all the money paid by the purchasers for the land they purchased of the governor has been expended; that the territorial government has ceased to exist; that Governor Pope is no longer a citizen of the State; and, under a full view of the whole case, considering that he was the agent of the government in disposing of the ten sections of land for a laudable public purpose, that a quantity not exceeding ten sections was disposed of by him, when they consider that the purchasers bought and paid in good faith, and are without remedy, they think that a rigid technical construction of the statute, when the interest of the United States is so small, ought not to operate to their prejudice; and, therefore, they report a bill, ratifying and confirming the official proceedings of the late Governor Pope, in this particular.

IN FAVOR OF ALLOWING CERTAIN PRE-EMPTION CLAIMS UNDER THE ACT OF THE 19TH OF JUNE, 1834.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 3, 1837.

Mr. YELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing all such persons as were actually residing on, or cultivating any portion of, the public land, and who were prevented from obtaining their pre-emptions, under the act of 1834, and previously, by a failure or delays in surveying the public lands, a right to enter one quarter-section, to include their residence or improvements; or where such lands have been subsequently floated upon or sold, a right to enter one quarter-section, and one additional eighth, as a compensation for their improvements, to be located in the same district where such improvements or residence may have been had, reported:

That, under the privilege of the act of Congress, granting a pre-emption to actual settlers, passed on the 19th of June, 1834, every settler or occupant residing upon public lands prior to the passage of said act, and who was in possession, and cultivated any part thereof, in the year 1833, was entitled, for two years, to the benefit of said act; but from various causes, over which the occupant had no control, such as the failure of the surveyor general to cause the land to be surveyed, and the plats thereof filed in the land offices, or the lands having been reserved from sale by the government, the occupant was denied the benefit of said act previous to its expiration, which was on the 19th June, 1836.

The committee are satisfied that the occupant, who brings himself within the provisions of the act of the 19th June, 1834, but who has been prevented from reaping the benefits thereof by a failure or non-compliance on the part of the government, or its authorized agents, in not placing him in a situation to receive the benefit of said act, is, and in good faith ought to be, entitled to the benefit of said act, until the obstacle is removed by the general government. Therefore, they recommend the extension of the benefit of said act to all settlers who come within its provisions, until said land shall be offered at public sale.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 3, 1837.

Mr. HARRISON, of Missouri, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Hiner Stigermire, reported:

That, it appears in the year 1834 the petitioner, being desirous of entering a small piece of land for farming purposes, and being a stranger in the country, and unacquainted with the mode of entering lands, he procured a surveyor to make the necessary examination for him, and furnish him with a memorandum of the numbers by which he could make the entry. Being furnished with the numbers by the surveyor of the land he desired to enter, he proceeded to the land office in the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, and there entered the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section thirty-one, township forty-five north, in range one east, agreeably to the memorandum furnished him by the surveyor, and obtained a certificate of the same from the register. Some time afterward, when it was too late to correct the mistake, the petitioner states that he discovered the numbers furnished him by the surveyor were not those which he wanted, they being the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, same township and range as above. That in good faith he settled upon the land which he supposed he had entered, and made valuable improvements upon it as his future home. The petitioner asks that, upon relinquishing the entry which he made through mistake, he may be allowed to enter the land on which he lives, being the land which he originally intended to enter, and which is yet liable to entry.

Your committee, deeming the prayer of the petitioner reasonable, have reported a bill accordingly.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1562. [2D SESSION.

ON THE VALIDITY OF LAND CLAIMS IN THE SOUTHEASTERN DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 4, 1837.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 4, 1837.

SIR: In compliance with the provisions of the second section of the act of the 6th February, 1835, I have the honor, herewith, to transmit the report of the register and receiver of the land office for the southeastern district of Louisiana, made to the department under that act, together with a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, touching the validity of the claims therein enumerated.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 3, 1836.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, to whom was referred, on the 30th ultimo, the report of the register and receiver of the land office for the southeastern district of Louisiana, under the provisions of the act of the 6th of February, 1835, entitled, "An act for the final adjustment of claims to lands in the State of Louisiana," upon claims to lands in that district, for his opinion "touching the validity of the respective claims," as required by the second section of that act, begs leave to report:

That, as the present report is unaccompanied by the documents upon which the claims therein mentioned are founded, or the other evidence adduced to the land officers in their support, (although the second section of the act under which the report is made requires that it should be accompanied by such testimony,) it is not in the power of the Commissioner to scrutinize and examine the claims in question, and his examination has necessarily to be confined to the brief statement which the report itself furnishes respecting each claim. From this consequently imperfect investigation, no objections are perceived to the recognition of claims numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, as it is believed that they all come within the principles which have heretofore governed Congress in providing for the confirmation of claims within Louisiana. In relation, however, to the two other claims included in the report, he has to observe, that No. 5 is the claim of M. A. Musé to a tract of 556.85 arpens, in the parish of Pointe Coupée, at a place called the Bend, founded "on a title derived from the government holding the domain of Louisiana, in the year 1763," and "habitation and cultivation back to the year 1771." By the report, and the accompanying letter from the surveyor general, it appears that the land now claimed, having been entered as claim No. 291, in the report of the register and receiver of the 5th September, 1833, by the "police jury of the parish of Pointe Coupée," in behalf of the inhabitants of the parish, was confirmed to them by the act of the 3d of March, 1835, supplementary to the act of the 4th July, 1832, for the final adjustment of claims to lands in the southeastern district of Louisiana.

When the report of September, 1833, was referred to it, this office, in a report thereon made to the Secretary of the Treasury on the 9th of January, 1834, observed, in relation to the land in question, that "No. 251 is a claim set up by the police jury of Pointe Coupée, in behalf of the inhabitants of that parish, to a tract of 920 arpens, in consequence of their having erected a levee on it after it was abandoned by the pretended owners, many years ago. There is no law authorizing the insertion of a claim of this character in the report, inasmuch as it is not founded upon any grant or foreign title, nor is it based upon inhabitation and cultivation by the present claimants, or any other persons. So far as is known to this office, no claim of this description has ever been recognized, and I am decidedly of opinion that it ought not to be confirmed. The fact that the inhabitants of this parish found it necessary or expedient to make a levee on the land in question, for their general benefit, does not, in my opinion, give them any stronger claim to the land above mentioned than the other counties and parishes in the different states would have to such vacant lands in their limits as they might see proper to use or improve in any manner for their common benefit. Another important objection arises from the fact that the confirmation of this tract would justly be considered as authorizing all the other parishes in Louisiana, in which the inhabitants have made levees in front of the public lands binding on the rivers and bayous, to claim the same, in consequence of their having made such levees; and thus, most probably, strip the government of every foot of public land upon such bayous and water-courses. The number of claims in which this case, if now confirmed, would be hereafter referred to as a precedent, cannot be known to this office; nor can the injurious effects which its confirmation would have upon the future interests of the government be now estimated."

The claim now presented is stated to be founded "on a title derived from the government holding the domain of Louisiana in the year 1763;" but the precise nature of that title is not mentioned, nor is it clearly stated whether the title itself was obtained in 1763, or whether it emanated at a different period from the government possessing that country in that year. "Proof of inhabitation and cultivation back to the year 1771" is stated by the claimant to be filed with the notice of the claim; but, by reference to the report upon the claim of the police jury, it will be seen that the land officers remark that "it appears that, in the year 1815, the said police jury, in order to save the inhabitants of the said parish from an unavoidable inundation from the river, took possession of the said land, which had been abandoned, as they allege, by the pretended owners, and erected on it, at a considerable expense, the necessary works, levees," &c. I am therefore of opinion that, before any final decision is had in this case, it should be further examined, to ascertain the nature and date of the alleged title, and whether the land was actually abandoned by the claimants, as stated by the police jury; and, if so, to ascertain the time and circumstances of such abandonment. If, however, Congress should see proper to confirm this claim without any further investigation into its merits, it will be necessary either to make such provision in relation thereto as will not impair the title already vested in the inhabitants of the parish of Pointe Coupée by the confirmatory act of 1835, or authorize the claimant to make another location.

No. 10 is the claim of Robert Bell to two tracts of 1,600 arpens each, on the bayou Grosse Tête, and having been reported by the land officers during the last session of Congress, with copies of the papers produced in its support, formed the subject of the report from my predecessor to you, of the 23d of May last; a copy of which is herewith transmitted, with a view of being considered part of this report. Concurring in the opinion therein expressed, and as, in the letter from the land officers transmitting the present report, it is stated that the receiver of public moneys is of opinion "that the claim should not be confirmed under the present state of the testimony produced by the claimant," the Commissioner cannot recommend its confirmation.

The report and accompanying letter from the land offices are herewith returned.

All which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES WHITCOMB, Commissioner.

Hon. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 23, 1836.

SIR: The Commissioner of the General Land Office, having examined the papers which the Secretary of the Treasury has been pleased to refer to him, concerning the claim of Robert Bell, reported and recommended for confirmation by the register and receiver at New Orleans, has the honor to submit his views of the case, as required by the statute.

Robert Bell claims, as direct purchaser from Santiago de la Rosa and Joseph Alvarez, two contiguous tracts of land on the west bank of the bayou Grosse Tête, in the parish of Iberville, containing each forty arpens front by the ordinary depth of forty arpens; being in all three thousand two hundred superficial arpens.

The claimant asserts, on the 20th of April, 1836, that the two tracts in question are claimed by virtue of two separate orders of survey issued by Governor Miro: the first in favor of Santiago de la Rosa, on the 21st of October, 1787; the second, in favor of Joseph Alvarez, on the 15th of February, 1789; and that the claim is supported by evidence of habitation and cultivation, on the 20th of December, 1803, and for several years prior thereto.

Two documents are presented, purporting to be orders of survey, signed "Miro," of the substance and date above described, accompanied by the respective petitions.

Daniel McCloud testifies, that in 1797 or 1798 he went, in company with Gobo, a Spaniard, to Grosse Tête, where several people were settled, and recollects Joseph Alvarez and Santiago de Laxago there. Lopas Gobo confirms the statement, in all but the date, which he does not recollect, but it was several years before the change of government; that he lived with Laxago at that place for more than two years, till the latter was employed with his neighbor, Joseph Alvarez, by Noland, to go to the Spanish country to catch horses. Witness mentions a report that Nolan was killed and his companions made prisoners.

Charles Sallier, called Savoyard, swears on the 17th November, 1823, that in 1800 or 1801, the persons named Santiago de la Rosa and Joseph Alvarez, at his dwelling at Cazkouchion, on their way to join Philip Noling at Nacogdoches, deposited in his hands, to be restored on their return, different papers, &c. That, some time after, when the defeat of Noling had come to his knowledge, not seeing Rosa and Alvarez return, and not knowing how to read, he caused the papers left in his care to be read by one named Peyrault, as well as he remembers, who told him that among these papers were two concessions or surveys, each of forty arpens front by forty arpens deep, at the bayou Grosse Tête, &c.; that, in the year 1822, the same Rosa and Alvarez returned, who told him that having been made prisoners on the death of Noling, they had only been able to escape within some months; and that he restored them their papers upon their demand.

Thomas Peyrault, sworn on the 17th November, 1823, confirms the statement of Sallier, so far as to his reading papers of that import at the request of Sallier at Cazkouchion.

The register and receiver must be supposed to have become acquainted, by experience, with the ordinary marks of authenticity of the old title-papers in Louisiana, and therefore their judgment in such matters is entitled to much consideration; but the inherent evidence of these alleged concessions raises some doubts of their genuineness. That to Rosa is for an extraordinary quantity of land, even upon the representation of his being the owner of four slaves. That to Alvarez, of equal extent, has no such pretence. Neither of them appears to have been registered under the Spanish government. Their deposit of their papers with a stranger in the Attakapas, their sudden appearance to reclaim them after 21 or 22 years of pretended captivity, and their equally sudden disappearance (no subsequent intelligence of them being pretended) are extraordinary; and all these circumstances tend to render the claim somewhat suspicious to my mind, admitting the witnesses Sallier and Peyrault to be entitled to the full credence which the land officers at New Orleans seem to have given to them. It is also worthy of remark, that none of the evidence in support of these claims was taken before the land officers, and that their favorable report is made on the very same day on which the application bears date.

The Commissioner does not consider the act of the 11th of May, 1820, et sequitur, which extend the time for exhibiting and proving claims derived from the Spanish government, as dispensing with all the other conditions required by the act of the 2d March, 1805, one of which requisites is the actual habitation and cultivation of the tract claimed by the inhabitant on the 20th of December, 1803. The witnesses, McCloud and Gobo, represent that Joseph Alvarez and Santiago de Laxago or Loxaga, resided in 1797 or 1798 at the bayou Grosse Tête, but the identity of the latter with Santiago de la Rosa is not in any degree established by the evidence reported by the register and receiver. None of the ancient settlers found there by the witnesses depose on this subject if such were the fact. It would appear from the testimony of Gobo and Sallier, that they departed as early as 1800 or 1801; and the latter dates their return in 1822, at the distance of twenty-one or twenty-two years; consequently, they could not have been inhabitants or cultivators of the lands in question on the 20th of December, 1803.

Lastly, the register and receiver, at New-Orleans, have not reported when, where, or by what mode of conveyance, this claim was assigned to Robert Bell, nor how they arrive at the conclusion that he was a purchaser from Rosa and Alvarez, whence their opinion is formed that he ought to be confirmed in his claim.

From all which, the opinion that the evidence does not warrant the confirmation of the claim, is submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

With respect, &c.

ETHAN A. BROWN.

Hon. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

NEW-ORLEANS, December 14, 1836.

SIR: In conformity with the second section of the act of Congress, entitled, "An act for the final adjustment of claims to lands in the State of Louisiana, approved the 6th of February, 1835," we have the honor of transmitting herewith our second report, containing seventeen claims, which have been presented to us since our first report, dated the 1st of December, 1835.

In our opinion, all these claims (with the exception of Mrs. Muse, No. 5, and Robert Bell, No. 10,) should be confirmed. A careful examination of these claims proves satisfactorily to our mind that they are all based upon good titles, ancient possession, and continued cultivation, according to the requisites of the law.

The claim of Mrs. Muse (marked No. 5) makes out a satisfactory and legal claim. But we regretted to find that Congress had already confirmed the land in question to the police jury of the parish of the Pointe Coupée. How the error occurred, we are unable to state; but, from the evidence before us, we feel justified in saying, that Mrs. Muse has the legal right to the land. We herewith send a copy of a letter of the surveyor general, addressed to us on this claim.

Claim No. 10 (that of Robert Bell) has been already reported upon by Maurice Canon, late receiver, and the present register. This report was favorable to the claimant. The present receiver, Mr. Carter, feels himself bound to state, that the claim should not be confirmed under the present state of the testimony produced by the claimant; and is of opinion that it should be sent back for further examination, when, if it shall be brought under his notice, he will then point out the defects which he believes to exist, so as to enable the claimant to remove them, if it is in his power, or otherwise to make another report to the department.

We remain, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servants,

B. Z. CANONGE, Register.
RICHARD M. CARTER, Receiver.

Hon. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

Reports of the register of the land office and the Receiver of public moneys in and for the southeastern district of the State of Louisiana, on the claims of lands filed in the register's office, in pursuance of an Act of Congress, approved on the 6th day of February, 1835, and entitled, "An Act for the final adjustment of claims to lands in the State of Louisiana.

No. 5.

Margueritte Adélaïde Muse claims a certain tract of land, situate on the right bank of the Mississippi river, descending, in the parish of Pointe Coupée, in said land district, at a place called the Bend, containing twelve arpens front, with the depth of forty arpens, having such opening as to give five hundred and fifty-six and eighty-five hundredths superficial arpens, equal to four hundred and seventy-one and twenty-five hundredths superficial acres, bounded above by lands confirmed to Charles Dufour, by a line running south 77° west, 116° 36′, and below by land claimed by the widow Hypolite Decaux, by a line running south 69° 27′ west, 116° 36′, founded on a title derived from the government holding the domain of Louisiana in the year 1763; and in support of said claim I herewith file a regular chain of title thereto, from the 27th day of April, 1763, as certified from the record of conveyances in said parish of Pointe Coupée, and set forth in the documents marked A, B, C, D, and E, and the proof of habitation and cultivation, back to the year 1771, as per document also herewith filed and certified as aforesaid, marked F, and pray that the said Margueritte Adelaïde Muse be confirmed in her right to said tract of land, with the front, depth, and superficies therein contained, in conformity with the lines and courses as aforesaid; and as in duty bound, &c.

JAMES FORT MUSE,
Attorney in fact for said Margueritte Adélaïde, his wife.

We are of opinion that this claim ought to be rejected, having been already confirmed to the police jury of Pointe Coupée, under class C, No. 251, Cenas's report, 5th September, 1833, and confirmed by an act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1835; and for further reference see, at the end of this report, copy of a letter from the surveyor general.

No. 6.

Antoine Decuir, a free man of color, claims, by virtue of purchase, a tract of land situated in the parish of Pointe Coupée, on the south side of False river, lying between the Bayou Languedoc and Cotonier, about one hundred and fifty miles above the city of New Orleans, measuring twenty-seven arpens eighteen toises and four feet front, and forty arpens in depth, bounded above by the land of Madame Widow Ternant, and below by land of Madame Widow Decuir.

This tract of land was purchased by Joseph Decuir, on the 10th of February, 1783, from two Indian chiefs, and the act of sale was approved and signed by Estevan Miro, then governor of the province of Louisiana, on the 20th of March, 1783. Said land is now claimed in virtue of said purchase, and a peaceable and uninterrupted possession and cultivation since the year 1783; having been during that time constantly and continually inhabited and cultivated by the present claimant and those under whom he holds, as will fully appear by the deeds of sale and depositions herewith presented.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 7.

Antoine Decuir, a free man of color, claims, by virtue of purchase, a tract of land, being a second depth, and lying immediately behind a front depth of the claimant, situated in the parish of Pointe Coupée, on the south side of False river, containing forty-two arpens and a third in front, and forty arpens in depth, with such an opening as to give a superficie of sixteen hundred and ninety arpens, and bounded on the two sides and on the rear by vacant lands.

It appears from an order of survey exhibited, that said land was granted by the Spanish government to Joseph Decuir on the 6th day of September, 1802; said land is now claimed in virtue of the first section of an act entitled, "An act for the final adjustment of land titles in the State of Louisiana and Territory of Missouri," approved on the 12th of April, 1814, and also in virtue of peaceable and uninterrupted possession and cultivation since the year 1802.

In support of which, he herewith produces said original order of survey and other evidence, &c.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 8.

William Flower, of the city of New Orleans, claims, by virtue of purchase, four certain tracts of land, situated in the parish of Iberville, on the south bank of the river or bayou Manchac, adjoining each other; having forty-four arpens front by forty arpens in depth, and about one hundred miles above the city of New-Orleans, bounded and described as follows:

First. One tract of land granted by the Spanish government to James Smith Yarbourg, in the district of Galveztown, bounded on the upper or western side by lands granted to Juan Aliman, and on the other side by land then vacant, having twenty arpens front by forty arpens in depth, and containing eight hundred superficial arpens; the certificate of survey dated the 6th of July, 1793, and patent issued by the Baron de Carondelet, bearing date the 22d July, 1795.

Second. One other tract of land granted to William Yarbourg, bounded on the upper side by the preceding tract of land, and on the other side by lands granted to James Yarbourg, having eight arpens in front by forty arpens in depth, and containing three hundred and twenty arpens in superficie; the certificate of survey dated 14th of April, 1794, and patent dated 22d of July, 1795.

Third. One other tract of land granted to James Yarbourg, bounded on the upper side by the last preceding tract of land, and on the lower side by lands of William Yarbourg, having eight arpens in front, by forty arpens in depth, and containing three hundred and twenty superficial arpens; the certificate of survey dated 14th of April, 1794, and patent dated 30th of July, 1795.

Fourth. One other tract of land granted to Jordan Yarbourg, bounded on the upper side by the last preceding tract of land, and on the lower side by lands then vacant; having eight arpens in front by forty arpens in depth, and containing three hundred and twenty arpens superficial measure; the certificate of survey, dated 16th of April, 1794, and patent dated 30th of July, 1795.

The said four tracts of land are claimed by virtue of the said four patents and surveys, and of an uninterrupted possession and enjoyment by claimant, and those under whom he holds, for and since the respective dates thereof; in support of which he herewith pro luces the said four patents and surveys (original), with the conveyances from the said patentees to his ancestor, Samuel Flower, as also the conveyance from Samuel Flower to the claimant.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 9.

Constance Lacour, widow of Vincent Ternant, claims, by virtue of purchase, a tract of land situated on the Mississippi, in the parish of Pointe Coupée, about one hundred and fifty miles above the city of New Orleans; containing twelve arpens front, or thereabout, taken on an oblique line, and forming an acute angle with the superior lateral line; forty arpens depth on this last line; bounded on the northeast by the Batture, on the northwest by lands belonging to the late François Porche, on the southwest by lands belonging to the late Jeanne Delatie, widow of J. M. Durand, on the southeast by the superior channel of False river; containing five hundred and eighty-two superficial acres, as it appears by a plan deposited in this office and attached to the claim of the heirs of Barra, No. 3, to which this one is referred as making part of a tract of greater extent originally granted to Jean Baptiste Barra, alias Le Blond.

The land now claimed has been constantly and uninterruptedly inhabited and cultivated by the claimant, and those under whom she holds, since the year 1772.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 10.

The said tracts are held by purchase immediately from Santiago de la Rosa and Joseph Alvarez, who received regular orders of survey for the same, respectively, from the Spanish government, to wit: the former, on the 21st day of October, 1787; aud the latter, on the 15th day of February, 1789; which said orders are herewith presented, together with evidence of habitation and cultivation of the said land by the said grantees, on the 20th of December, 1803, and for several years prior: all of which duly considered, said claimant prays that the said accompanying evidence of his claim may be duly admitted to record, and favorably reported on, &c.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 11.

The said tract of land is now claimed by virtue of said purchase, and an uninterrupted possession and cultivation by the claimant, and those under whom he holds, for ten years previous to 1801, as it will more fully appear by the affidavit of two old and respectable inhabitants of said parish of Ascension.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

R. Marmillion.

This land is now claimed in virtue of said purchase, and an uninterrupted possession, cultivation, and inhabitation by the claimant, and those under whom he holds, from the year 1788.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 20.

Michel Cambre claims, by virtue of purchase, a certain tract of land, situate in the parish of St. John the Baptist, on the left bank of the river Mississippi, containing one arpent front and forty arpens in depth, bounded on the upper side by lands of widow Jean Rodrigues, and on the lower by those of Leon Vickner.

This tract of land is now claimed in virtue of said purchase, and of an uninterrupted possession and cultivation by the claimant, and those under whom he holds, since the year 1784.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

No. 21.

The widow and heirs of Pedro Allemand claim, by virtue of purchase, a certrain tract of land, situate on the left bank of the bayou Lafourche, in the parish of Assumption, about three miles from the river Mississippi, containing three arpens front and forty arpens deep, bounded above by land of Francis Monson, and below by land of the claimants.

This tract of land is now claimed in virtue of said purchase, and also in virtue of an order of survey, granted to André Sanchez by the Spanish Government, in the year 1777, and of an uninterrupted possession, cultivation, and habitation, since that time.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this claim ought to be confirmed.

ON CONTINUING IN FORCE THE ACTS FOR THE ADJUSTMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, JANUARY 4, 1837.

Mr. LINN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a bill "to continue in force the act for the final adjustment of private land claims in Missouri, approved July 9, 1832, and the act supplemental thereto, approved March 2, 1833," reported:

The board of commissioners appointed under these acts was organized, and entered upon the duties of their office on the 1st of October, 1832, and made their first report under date of the 27th November, 1833, from which the following extract is made:

"In the report now submitted, the board have included only such claims as appear to be entitled to confirmation, and to be placed in the first class. They reserved their decision upon those claims which seemed to be destitute of merit, in law or equity, under the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government, for their final report to Congress.

"We were influenced to take this course from the belief that we were authorized by the terms of the act, which provide that the lands contained in the second class shall not be subject to sale until the final report of the recorder and commissioners shall have been made. This view of the subject was the more readily adopted, from the fact that, during the almost entire existence of the board, the cholera has prevailed to such an extent as to prevent, in a great measure, the appearance of the claimants, or their witnesses, before the board. Under such circumstances, ordinary justice, not only to the claimants, but to the government itself, seemed to require that the greatest indulgence should be given which the law could possibly extend."

Your committee further state that, independent of the existence of the Asiatic cholera, which had so important an effect in deranging the whole business of the country for several years in Missouri, repeated resignations of members composing the board took place at different times, which had a great effect in retarding the progress of this business, as, under the law, a majority of the board was not authorized to act.

It appears to your committee that, if there was a necessity for passing the acts of July 9, 1832, and of March 2, 1833, there is equal necessity for continuing them in force until the object for which they were passed has been accomplished; and that such object has not been accomplished is apparent from the last report to Congress made by the commissioners at St. Louis.

In that report, they say that "there yet remain to be acted upon about seven hundred claims within the State of Missouri, and it is respectfully but earnestly recommended to Congress to continue the investigations until the business is finally completed. This, we think, is due to the interest both of the State and general governments, as well as to that of the individuals immediately concerned.

"It should not be concealed that the recent decisions of the Supreme Court have created much uneasiness among persons holding title to lands under the United States, which are claimed by concessions and orders of survey under the French and Spanish governments."

Your committee have reason to believe that many of the claims which remain to be acted on belong to non-residents and minors, who, having no one to attend to their interests, were consequently not pressed upon the consideration of the commissioners. This class of claimants will be the greatest sufferers by a failure to revive these acts.

The bill now presented passed the Senate last session without a dissenting voice, but for want of time was not taken up in the House. Its passage by Congress appears to be demanded by justice to the old French and Spanish claimants, to those holding donation grants under different acts of Congress, and to the high and important consideration of permanently settling the land titles in the State of Missouri connected with these claims.

ON A CLAIM FOR THE LOSS OF INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, JANUARY 12, 1837.

Mr. LINN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petitions of Samual Smith, Semoice, Linn McGhee, and Susan Marlow, Creek Indians, reported:

That, by the treaty of Fort Jackson, concluded with the Creek nation of Indians on the 16th of February, 1815, the petitioners became entitled to a reservation of six hundred and forty acres of land each, to include their improvements; that these lands were sold by the United States, and titles have been acquired by the purchasers. Congress, at its last session, passed laws authorizing these individuals, the present petitioners, to enter, without payment, one entire section of land, subject to entry at private sale: thus giving to the petitioners, who had by the action of government been deprived of some of the best lands on the Alabama river, the poor privilege of entering a like quantity of the refuse land, which would not command at public auction one dollar and a quarter per acre; while they are still further restricted to the entry of that quantity in one entire section. Thus, in fact, depriving them in effect of all remuneration for the loss of their reservations, as it is perfectly well established that no entire section can be found subject to entry at private sale, which would be worth one-tenth part of the lands of which the petitioners were deprived by the action of the government. They ask leave to report a bill for their relief.

ON THE SATISFACTION OF MILITARY LAND WARRANTS ISSUED FOR SERVICES DURING THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 13, 1837.

Mr. DUNLAP, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of Representatives instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of making provision, by law, for the satisfaction of military land warrants issued by the United States, for services during the Revolutionary war, reported:

That, by the act of Congress approved the 27th day of January, 1835, warrants were directed to be issued to the officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary war, until the 1st of January, 1840; there is now no law authorizing the issuance of scrip to them, for their warrants; the act of 1830 having expired, that authorized scrip to issue.

The committee can see no reason why the law authorizing the issuing of scrip should not be extended to the same time that the officer or soldier is entitled to apply for his warrant. The committee have annexed to this report a copy of a letter from William Gordon, of the bounty land office, to the Secretary of War, dated 22d of February, 1836, showing that there was due on that day to the officers and soldiers 263,000 acres of land. The committee, therefore, report a bill.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, Bounty Land Office, February 22, 1836.

SIR: In answer to the inquiry submittted in the enclosed communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and in the resolutions of Congress accompanying the same, I have the honor to present the following abstract, showing the number, rank, and grade of such officers and soldiers of the different lines and corps of the Revolutionary army, as acquired a right to bounty lands from the United States, and who have not yet applied therefor. From which it will be perceived, that should all apply who are at this time entitled, the quantity of 263,000 acres of land will be required to satisfy their claims.

ON A CLAIM TO A PRE-EMPTION RIGHT TO LAND IN FLORIDA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 13, 1837.

Mr. HUNTSMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the petition and documents of Jennett Willis, assignee of James Minnie, reported:

That the petitioner sets forth in his petition, which is respectably supported by witnesses, that he was entitled by the several acts of Congress to a pre-emption right to a fraction of land containing about forty acres, including the premises where the light-house at St. Mark's now stands; that the land is low and swampy, and not valuable; that the United States government concluded to reserve it from sale, for the purpose of building a light-house thereon, which has been done, and the said Minnie was consequently dispossessed of the premises. He states that a shell bank of sufficient elevation and dimensions was raised, upon which said light-house was built, and that five acres thereof is sufficient for any government purpose.

He prays the benefit of his pre-emption right for the balance of the fraction. Upon application to the Treasury Department for information upon this subject, your committee have been informed by the Third Auditor that no information is in the possession of the department which enables it to determine how much of the adjoining lands is necessary for the uses and purposes of the light-house, but refers to a statement by many of the most respectable persons in the vicinity, who certify that five acres are sufficient, and that the pre-emption claim is bona fide. Your committee have come to the conclusion that there is ample proof to sustain the claim as being a fair one, and that the petitioner would have been entitled to his pre-emption, but for the reservation made by the government. And a certificate from the judge, district attorney, and public surveyor in Florida, has satisfied your committee that five acres of ground, including the light-house, is amply sufficient for the use thereof. And, therefore, they are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and have reported a bill accordingly.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR THE EXTENSION OF THE PRE-EMPTION LAWS TO THE SETTLERS ON THE LANDS ACQUIRED FROM THE CHEROKEE INDIANS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 16, 1837.

JOINT MEMORIAL of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama to the Congress of the United States, praying an extension of the pre-emption law.

Your memorialists represent to your honorable body, that, by an act to revive the act entitled, "An act to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on public lands," approved May 29, 1830, passed by the Congress of the United States, and approved June 29, 1834, every settler or occupant of the public lands prior to the passage of said act, who was then in possession and cultivated any part thereof in the year 1833, and held possession of the same in the year 1834, should be entitled to all the benefits and privileges provided by the act entitled, "An act to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on public lands," approved May 29, 1830.

Your memorialists further represent, that the settlers upon the Cherokee lands acquired by a treaty concluded between that tribe of Indians and the United States some time within the last year—that the numerous and highly respectable citizens who have settled their lands are the honest husbandmen who have subdued the forest by their toil and labor, hazarding their lives and those of their families among the savage tribe; who have uniformly become the victims of the speculator, and been forced to purchase their homes at a price far above the real value, or turn their wives and children into the wilderness; therefore, your memorialists pray your honorable body to grant to all the settlers upon the Cherokee lands, within this State, a pre-emption right of one quarter-section, or such number of acres as you may think fit, so as to secure for them a home; therefore,

Be it resolved, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of a law to forward the object of this memorial.

Resolved further, That the executive of this State cause a copy of this memorial and resolutions to be forwarded to each of our senators and representatives in Congress.

ON AN APPLICATION FOR LAND AS A GRATUITY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 17, 1837.

Mr. LINCOLN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Wilson Thorp, a citizen of Mercer county, Kentucky, reported:

The petitioner asks that he may be permitted to enter, free of charge, any quantity of land which Congress may deem right and proper, on any of the lands of the United States subject to private entry, and seeks to sustain his application by the following representation of circumstances, and the situation of himself and family, viz.: "That he had the misfortune, many years since, to be deprived of his eyesight, and is now wholly and entirely blind. He has a wife and four small children wholly dependent on him for support. He has no estate whatever, but a few articles of personal property, very inconsiderable in value; and able, from the loss of sight, to perform but little profitable labor. He is very desirous of emigration to one of the new States or Territories, but is destitute of the means to purchase a small tract of land if he were there." The character of the petitioner for honesty, and the truth of his representations, are certified by several citizens of the same county with himself.

This application for leave to enter land without payment is a direct appeal to the government for a charitable donation, on the score of personal misfortune. In principle, it in nowise differs from a petition for alms from the Treasury. The case presents, indeed, strong claims to the consideration of the compassionate and benevolent; but the committee can recognize in its presentation no warrant for an appropriation by the government. The precedent would be full of trouble and mischief, besides being a perversion of the delegated powers of legislation. They ask leave, therefore, to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petition of Wilson Thorp ought not to be granted.

ON CLAIMS TO RESERVATIONS OF LAND UNDER THE FOURTEENTH ARTICLE OF THE TREATY OF DANCING RABBIT CREEK WITH THE CHOCTAW INDIANS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, JANUARY 18, 1837.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of sundry Choctaw Indians, for reservations of land under the 14th article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit creek, reported:

That, on the 27th day of September, 1830, a treaty was entered into between the United States and the Choctaw nation, which was ratified on the 24th day of February, 1831, and which contained the following stipulation:

"ART. 14. Each Choctaw head of a family, being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States, shall be permitted to do so, by signifying his intention to the agent within six months from the ratification of the treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of six hundred and forty acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one half that quantity for each unmarried child that is living with him, over ten years of age, and a quarter-section to such child as may be under ten years of age, to adjoin the location of the parent. If they reside upon said lands intending to become citizens of the States, for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue. Said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family, or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen; but if ever they remove, are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity."

The committee find it clearly established by evidence which has heretofore been submitted to Congress, and published among the reports of committees in the House of Representatives, in vol. 3, Rep. No. 663,* that the whole difficulty of the case, and the necessity for the present application, have grown out of the misconduct of the Indian agent, Colonel William Ward.

It appears from that testimony, that Colonel Ward in some instances neglected to register the names of Indians who had, within the prescribed period, signified to him their intention to remain and become citizens of the State; that in other instances he refused, in the face of the treaty, to notice the application at all; and, finally, that a part of the register which he had made of applications was lost or destroyed through his negligence.

The whole Choctaw nation contained, as ascertained by the census taken shortly after the ratification of the treaty, about 19,554 souls. Of these, 15,000 were removed to the western side of the Mississippi, leaving on the eastern side, in the country ceded by the treaty, 4,554.

The number of heads of families returned by Colonel Ward to the War Department, as having given the notice required by the treaty of their intention to remain, was sixty-nine. Portions of the lands ceded by the treaty were brought into the market and sold under the proclamation of the President, in the months of October and November, 1833.

The complaints against the conduct of the agent, Colonel Ward, in the particulars that have been stated, and the applications for relief, became so numerous, that the locating agent, Colonel George W. Martin, was instructed by the War Department, on the 13th October, 1834, to give public notice that those Indians who considered themselves entitled to reservations under the above-mentioned article of the treaty, and whose names were not upon Colonel Ward's register, should exhibit to him the evidence of their claims; and he was ordered to make contingent locations, (depending for confirmation upon Congress,) for all such heads of families as should be able to bring themselves within the provisions of the treaty, and should induce him to believe, by credible evidence, that their names had been omitted in the register, either by the mistake or neglect of the agent, Colonel Ward. Under these instructions, Colonel Martin received evidence and made contingent locations for 520 heads of families, covering by estimation 615,686 acres of land.

The committee cannot recommend the definitive action of Congress upon the claims thus ascertained, and upon the evidence which has been thus collected and submitted; but they have no hesitation in saying that there is sufficient reason for the institution of a tribunal for the investigation and settlement of claims under the above-mentioned article of the treaty.

The faith of the United States has been solemnly pledged; and the inchoate rights of those claiming under the treaty have been defeated by the misconduct or neglect of the agent of the government.

But although it is true that some have been injured, and are entitled to redress, yet there is little doubt that a wide door has thus been opened to fraud and speculation, which should be carefully guarded against. It should be recollected that these unfortunate people are in a state of pupilage as respects this government, and should be protected against the arts as well as the violence of our people; and that in the desire and under the pretence of maintaining the public faith, Congress should not suffer itself to be made the mere instrument of speculation.

The committee accordingly report a bill for the relief of the memorialists.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN ILLINOIS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, JANUARY 23, 1837.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of James Dutton, reported:

That the petitioner represents that he obtained, by purchase and entry of the public lands, a title to the northwest quarter of section thirty, in township four, south, of range five, west, in the military land district, State of Illinois; that he acquired the title to this tract as a home for himself and family, and has made improvements upon the land to the value of two hundred and seven dollars and fifty cents; that, subsequently, he ascertained that this tract had been patented, long previously, to Isaac Nicholson, for services in the last war. The petitioner produces the certificate of the register and receiver of the proper land district, in proof of the entries of this land, made in 1833 and 1834. He also produces sufficient testimony from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing that the land was patented to Isaac Nicholson, on the 23d of January, 1818. The discovery of this error by the register and receiver, in permitting the above-mentioned entries, appears by the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to have been first made known to the petitioner after the 31st of December, 1835. The petitioner sustains, by competent and satisfactory evidence, the allegations in his petition in regard to the value of his improvements.

The petitioner asks to be permitted to enter other lands to the extent of the money advanced for the land and improvements. The committee consider the petitioner clearly entitled to relief. The title obtained by him, through the regular agents of the government of the United States, has failed, and he must not only lose the land, but also the money expended in good faith for the improvements.

The committee, however, consider it a case in which compensation may more properly be made in money than in land, and report a bill authorizing the payment by the United States to the petitioner of the amount advanced for the entry of the land and the value of the improvements.

APPLICATION OF WISCONSIN FOR THE EXTENSION OF THE PRE-EMPTION LAWS TO THE LANDS RECENTLY ACQUIRED FROM THE INDIANS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 23, 1837.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The legislative assembly of the Territory of Wisconsin, respectfully represent: That within the limits of this Territory a very small portion of the public lands have yet been brought into market. The great extent of country recently acquired from the Indians, have held out great inducements to the enterprising emigrants, and they have, in a time almost incredibly short, settled upon nearly the whole of this delightful region of country, unsurpassed in fertility of soil, salubrity of climate, and commercial facilities. The rapid growth and improvement of the western country, for the last two or three years, are unexampled in the history of the settlement of our country. Notwithstanding the many difficulties and dangers incident to the settling of new countries, there are now many respectable towns which have sprung up in a few years to considerable importance, and advancing daily in wealth, enterprise, and industry, seldom known in the first settling of new countries. Nor is the spirit of enterprise and industry limited to her flourishing towns and villages: through the whole region of this country are widely-extended and cultivated farms, where all the business of commerce, agriculture, and domestic industry are prospering to an unparalleled degree. The settlers on the public lands have migrated to this interesting district in good faith, relying upon the liberal policy of the general government heretofore extended to the settlers on the public land, for protection in possession of their homes. Many of them have expended nearly all of their means in the improvement of the country, which has enhanced the value of the public domain to a considerable extent. The legislative assembly of this Territory repose entire confidence in the wisdom and patriotism of the Congress of the United States for the passage of pre-emption laws, to enable him to purchase the land on which he has placed his labor, at the minimum price as now established by law, without which wise and humane system of protection the occupant may be easily deprived of his home, and his family reduced to wretchedness and despair, by being placed in competition with the speculator, who, by paying a small sum more for the land than the occupant is able to pay, takes from him the honest earnings of his own industry, buying the land which he has selected with a view of making it his permanent home, and increased in value four or five hundred per cent. without paying him any compensation therefor, completely placing it in the power of the speculator, to either monopolize a great part of the public land and retard the settlement and improvement of the country, and create the relation of landlord and tenant, or an unlimited moneyed aristocracy, both of which are dangerous to civil liberty.

APPLICATION OF ILLINOIS FOR A GRANT OF LAND IN ALTERNATE SECTIONS ALONG THE ILLINOIS RIVER, TO AID IN DRAINING THE SAME.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 23, 1837.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

The general assembly of the State of Illinois respectfully represent to your honorable body, that the lands on either side of the Illinois river, from the termination of the Illinois and Michigan canal to its junction with the Mississippi river, a large portion of the way, are subject to annual inundations for a distance varying from one to five miles in width.

Owing to this fact, those lands have not been sold, and cannot be cultivated, although if reclaimed they would, in all probability, soon be sold to individuals, and become fruitful fields where life and energy would abound, where in the present condition they are useless. Your honorable body having the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, cannot but be willing to adopt any measure calculated to aid in carrying into effect this power, or which may be calculated to facilitate the sale and settlement of the public domain. The interests of the United States and this State are identified in every effort to reclaim and bring into market those lands which, in consequence of their natural position, cannot be cultivated. It is confidently believed that a large majority of the bottom lands lying on the Illinois river, which are now lying waste, may, with a reasonable expenditure of public money, be converted into cultivated fields, and the United States thereby be enabled to realize the value of those lands, and the people and the State, the advantages which result from having so large a quantity improved. It is believed that if the United States will grant to the State of Illinois one half of the unsold land (that is, each alternate section, on fractional part three) within three miles of the Illinois river, on both sides, to enable the State to construct roads across the bottoms, and canals and ditches to drain the water from the inundated lands on the river, that the United States will realize more from the sale of the remaining half than will ever be realized by the whole lands without such improvements. For these reasons, your honorable body is respectfully asked to make a grant of the land herein described to the State of Illinois, for the uses and purposes above stated.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA FOR AUTHORITY TO APPLY HER TWO PER CENT. FUND TO PURPOSES OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 23, 1837.

JOINT MEMORIAL to the Congress of the United States relative to the two per cent. fund.

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Alabama, respectfully represent to your honorable bodies, that by the act of Congress for the admission of this State into the Union, passed March 2d, 1819, it was provided that five per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within this State, should be reserved for making public roads, canals, and improving the navigation of rivers, of which three fourths were to be applied to those objects within the State, under the direction of the State legislature, and the remaining two fifths to the making of a road or roads leading to the said State under the direction of Congress.

No appropriation, as we would inform your honorable bodies, has ever yet been made by this State, of the three per cent. fund under their control, mainly for the reason that it was not required to furnish us with good common roads; it was not sufficient to accomplish any great work of internal improvement of general interest to the State, and our legislature have been unwilling to expend in making, or rather in attempting to make, a great number of improvements of a purely local character; it has been attempted to be distributed in that way, but the legislature has uniformly resisted the attempt. It has been carefully husbanded by the State at interest, until it now amounts to the sum of $383,463 50.

No appropriation, we believe, has ever yet been made by Congress of the two per cent. fund placed under the direction of Congress, for making a road or roads leading to this State. That fund must now amount to nearly two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The joint fund would now amount to more than half a million, a sum sufficient, with a further appropriation from the State, to accomplish some great work of general interest to the State, and to the whole Union, in a greater or less degree.

The time has passed when any part of the fund is required to make roads leading to this State. We are now surrounded on all sides by States long since settled, and have good roads leading to and from us in every direction, made and kept in order under the State authorities.

In consideration of the premises, we respectfully ask your honorable bodies to pass a law transferring to the State of Alabama the two per cent. fund set apart for this State, to be expended in the manner directed by the act of Congress for the admission of Alabama into the Union, in regard to the three per cent. fund, and under the direction and authority of the State.

Be it resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama, in general assembly convened, that our senators and representatives in Congress be instructed to use their best exertions to accomplish the object contemplated by this memorial, and that the governor of this State be requested to furnish each of them a copy of the same, to be laid before their respective houses.

APPLICATION OF ALABAMA, FOR THE ENTRY OF THE PUBLIC LANDS THAT HAVE BEEN OFFERED FOR SALE OVER SEVEN YEARS, IN TWENTY-ACRE TRACTS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 23, 1837.

To the Congress of the United States:

The general assembly of the State of Alabama respectfully respresent: That there are millions of acres of land, in this State, which have been subject to entry, in tracts of eighty acres, for nearly twenty years; and, in tracts of forty acres, for five or six years. The demand for land for the last two years has been very great, and all that was worth the government price, in tracts of forty acres, has, it is believed, been entered. But if the law were so altered as to authorize entries of tracts of twenty acres, much of what may remain vacant for twenty years more would be taken in the hollows, and on the small creeks, in the mountainous parts of the country; and many poor persons obtain homes for their families, and contribute something to the prosperity and convenience of the country, by the breeding of cattle, sheep, and hogs.

Your memorialists, therefore, most respectfully request that a law may pass authorizing entries of all lands which have been offered for sale, and remained unsold for seven years, or more, in tracts of twenty acres.

Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama, in general assembly convened, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of a law, in conformity with the foregoing memorial.

Resolved, That the governor be, and he is hereby requested, to forward to each of our senators and representatives in Congress, a copy of the foregoing memorial, and these resolutions.

APPLICATION OF WISCONSIN FOR THE EXPENDITURE OF THE MONEY ARISING FROM THE SALE OF TOWN LOTS, IN IMPROVING THE STREETS OF THE SAID TOWNS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 23, 1837.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the council and house of representatives of the Territory of Wisconsin, respectfully represents: That, whereas Congress have deemed it expedient to direct a survey of the towns of Dubuque, Peru, and Bellview, in the county of Dubuque; the towns of Burlington and Madison, in the county of Des Moines; and the town of Mineral Point, in Iowa county, and Territory of Wisconsin, and by an act secured to the settlers in each of said towns, a limited portion of the lands, which have been settled upon and improved by the citizens thereof; therefore, your memorialists would respectfully recommend and solicit, that an appropriation may be made by Congress, of the moneys arising from the sale of lots in the said towns for the improvements of the wharves, streets, and public buildings, and such other public improvements as the corporation of said towns may respectively deem proper. All which is respectfully submitted. Therefore—

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing be directed to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives, and also to our delegate in Congress.

ON CLAIMS FOR THE LOSS OF IMPROVEMENTS AND RIGHTS OF PRE-EMPTION TO LAND IN ALABAMA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 23, 1837.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of certain citizens of Madison County, Alabama, in behalf of Elisha Moreland, William M. Kennedy, Robert J. Kennedy, and Mason E. Lewis, asking some relief to said persons, on account of the loss of their improvements, and their right of pre-emption, as settlers on the public land, under the act of 29th May, 1830, reported:

That it is represented by the said petition that the above named individuals were, at the time of the passage of said pre-emption law, and for some years previous, settlers and occupants on that part of the public lands acquired from the Cherokee Indians by the treaties of 1817 and 1819, situated in said county, within the Huntsville land district. That they had each made valuable improvements on very fertile and productive land, and were entitled, under the provisions of said act, to a quarter-section each by pre-emption, at the minimum price, so as to include their improvements. It is further represented, that, at the time these persons made their respective locations, the land was in a state of nature, wholly unimproved, and uninhabited by any Indian; but that, by some imposition practised upon the agents of the government, by certain white men, whose object was to obtain for themselves, indirectly, the valuable lands these settlers had improved at so much labor and expense, a reservation was located on said land, being parts of sections 1, 2, 11, and 12, in township three, range two east, in said district (so as to embrace the improvements of said settlers) under the provisions of said treaty, authorizing a reservation of 640 acres, for life, under certain restrictions, to each head of an Indian family, to be laid off so as to include the improvement or location of such Indian, as near the centre as practicable. It is stated that the Indian enrolled and designated by the fraudulent practices aforesaid, as entitled to the reservation so laid out, was named Conaleskee, or Challenge, who, these petitioners represent, was not the head of any Indian family, and of course had no right to a reservation under said treaty. They state that the said Indian was a stranger in that part of the country when said reservation was located, had never lived there, and that he had no color of claim to the reservation assigned him. It is represented that the several individuals, for whom relief is now asked, immediately, on ascertaining that the reservation for said Indian had been, by means aforesaid, located on their several settlements, and knowing that it was fraudulently taken, and, if confirmed, would deprive them of their pre-emptions, determined to contest said claim; and for this purpose procured affidavits and proofs, showing that said Indian was not entitled to a reservation under said treaty, and especially to the one assigned him, where he had never lived, and which had not been settled; and forwarded said testimony to the proper officer, in order to have the claim examined, as other such spurious claims had been, and defeated: but during the time this controversy was going on, certain individuals procured, and sent on to Congress, a petition purporting to be in the name of said Indian, praying a special act relinquishing the interest of the United States in said reservation, confirming the otherwise fraudulent title of said Indian, and authorizing him to sell and convey it. Accordingly a bill did pass, granting the prayer of the petition; consequently, all proceedings set on foot to show that the claim was groundless, were defeated, and the several settlers prevented from obtaining their rightful pre-emptions. Soon after this law passed, the reservation was purchased from said Indian for a very inconsiderable consideration, and those who had been active in procuring the location, and the act confirming it, alone received the benefit of the grant, and not the Indian, for whom they pretended it was intended.

It is stated that the said occupants had no notice whatever of such a petition, or that such a bill was before Congress, until an act was passed. These facts appear by the representation of the said citizens, who are disinterested, as they allege; and the character of some of them is known to a portion of your committee, and they are entitled to full credit. By a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, accompanying this report, and which your committee beg leave to make a part of it, it appears that, at the time the act passed confirming the title of said Indian, affidavits had been forwarded and filed in that office to show that said claim was groundless; but that, after said act passed, all further investigation was rendered unnecessary.

From these facts, your committee conclude that, inasmuch as the said claimants had an unquestionable right to the benefits of the pre-emption act of 1830, provided the claim of said Indian to the reservation located upon their several improvements had been decided by the proper authorities to be fraudulent, which they were proceeding to establish when the act of confirmation passed, without notice to them; and as that act has put it out of their power to assert their claims, they have strong equitable grounds for relief. The petition asks that the act confirming the right of the Indian may be repealed; or, if not, such other relief as may appear reasonable. Your committee have no hesitation in saying, that the right of the Indian, or the purchaser from him, under the said act, is perfect, and no subsequent legislation can divest it; but the committee report a bill, authorizing said settlers to enter each one quarter-section of land in the same or any adjoining land district, not occupied by any other settler, in lieu of their several improvements, of which they have been deprived, by proving their respective rights to pre-emptions under the act of 1830, before the register and receiver of the Land Office, where the application may be made, and paying therefor the then minimum price of government lands.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, January 16, 1837.

SIR: I have the honor to return the petition of Elisha Moreland and others, enclosed in your letter of the 9th inst., and, in reply to your inquiry, have to state, that, by reference to the plat of township three, of range two east, in the Huntsville district, it appears that a survey of a tract of 640 acres, as a reservation for Challenge, was made so as to include portions of sections 1, 2, 11, and 12 in that township, and the lines of the public surveys were connected with the lines of that reservation. When the Indian claim was surveyed, or under whose directions, is not known to this office; but from its not corresponding with the public surveys, it is presumed to have been made before they were executed.

The person for whom this reservation was made, appears to be known by the name of Conalaskee, as well as Challenge; and the only evidence in this office, going to show that such an individual was entitled to a reservation under the Cherokee treaty of 1819, consists of a printed list of persons entitled to reservations under that treaty, furnished by the office of Indian Affairs, on the 19th of January, 1828, in reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives, in which, as number 82, "Kan-a-noon-luskah" is reported as a life-reservee.

Several affidavits have been forwarded to this office, with a view of showing the fraudulent character of this reservation; but inasmuch as Congress, by the act of 29th May, 1830 (Laws 1st session, 21st Congress, p. 126,) relinquished to the reservee the reversionary interest of the United States in the land, and authorized him to dispose of it in the manner therein pointed out, this office was precluded from making any decision affecting the claim of the reservee.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES WHITCOMB, Commissioner.

Hon. R. CHAPMAN, Committee on Public Lands, H. R.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN OHIO.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 24, 1837.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Sroufe, reported:

That the said petitioner sets forth that she, together with her husband, (Sebastian Sroufe,) emigrated to Piqua county, in the State of Ohio, in the year 1824; and, being poor, settled on the West fraction of the southeast quarter of section 21, in township 1 north, of range 5 east; that, before they became enabled to purchase said land, the sale was stopped by the officers of the government; that, in 1830, her husband died, leaving her with a large and helpless family; that she still hoped to become the purchaser of said land when the government again offered it for sale; and for the purpose of entitling herself to the benefit of the law granting to actual settlers rights by pre-emption, she filed her papers and vouchers, proving her settlement and occupancy of said tracts of land; and that, for reasons which she appears not to understand, she is deprived of the right to purchase. Her prayer to Congress is, that she may be permitted to purchase the land at such price as may be thought just and proper. The testimony filed by the petitioner, in proof of her settlement, occupancy, and improvement, proves conclusively that her claim would be a good one, had not Congress, by an act passed on the 24th day of May, 1828, reserved the section on which her tract is situated—one half of which was to be appropriated for extending the canal from Dayton to Lake Erie, in the State of Ohio; and the balance directed not to be sold for less then two dollars and fifty cents per acre; while the law of 1834 (called the pre-emption act) gave to actual settlers their land at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. Your committee are, therefore, satisfied, that although her proof of occupancy, settlement, and improvements, are clearly proven, yet that she is not entitled to the right of pre-emption under the law of 1834, because the act itself grants only on such lands as are not reserved by law, or by direction of the President, &c. But had it not been for the law granting land to aid the Dayton canal, which induced the government to double its price on the alternate sections, her right of entering the land at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre would be indisputable. If, then, she had complied with the law in making all the improvements necessary, with such settlement and occupancy, as to entitle her to the land at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and was deprived of that right by the land being reserved, or raised to two dollars and fifty cents per acre, your committee can see no reason why she should not be permitted to purchase the land at the price which Congress has set upon said land. If the government, in justice to actual settlers, have heretofore, and do now, sell them the land on which they have settled and made improvements at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, we can see no reason why that right should be withheld because the government has raised the price of the land to two dollars and fifty cents per acre; and have, therefore, reported a bill for her relief.

Circular to Receivers of Public Moneys.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 1, 1831.

SIR: Several of the provisions of the circular of the 22d February, 1826, having been changed by subsequent instructions, and others having become obsolete, it has been deemed proper to modify the same in some respects, and embody in one instruction the regulations which in future, and until otherwise directed, will govern the receivers of public moneys.

In addition to specie and the bills of the Bank of the United States and its branches, which are receivable in all payments to the United States, receivers of public moneys are authorized to receive the notes of such of the incorporated banks of the State or Territory in which the land office is situated as pay specie for their notes on demand, and are otherwise in good credit.

On the opening of a new land office, the receiver will publish, for the information of purchasers of public lands, in one newspaper in his district, a list of the description of funds which he is hereby authorized to receive: and he will give notice, in like manner, of any change which may occasionally take place. In such publication he will state that, although, for the accommodation of purchasers, the local or State bank notes therein enumerated are at present receivable, yet their receipt may be discontinued at any time without previous notice, if, in the opinion of the receiver, they cannot be safely received.

No bank note of a less amount than five dollars is to be received, nor any that is not payable on demand.

So long as the notes of local or State banks are receivable, the receivers will note on each receipt for moneys received or paid by them, including their own and the register's compensation, the amount embraced in such receipt of each of the above description of funds, viz: Specie, $———; Bank of the United States and branches, $———; State banks, $———. If this endorsement be found impracticable during any public sale, it may, for that time, be dispensed with. The receivers will note on each monthly return rendered to this department, a separate statement or list, showing the aggregate amount received and paid by them during the month, in each description of funds, and the balance of each on hand.

The receivers will make their deposits in the following banks, viz:

1st. Those in Michigan, in the office of the Bank of the United States at Buffalo;

2d. Those in Ohio, in the office of the Bank of the United States at Cincinnati;

3d. Those in Indiana, in the office of the Bank of the United States at Louisville;

4th. Those in Illinois and Missouri, in the office of the Bank of the United States at St. Louis;

5th. Those in Mississippi, in the office of the Bank of the United States at Natchez;

6th. Those in Louisiana, in the office of the Bank of the United States at New Orleans;

7th. Those in Alabama and Florida, in the office of the Bank of the United States at Mobile;

8th. Those in the Territory of Arkansas, in the offices of the Bank of the United States at St. Louis and Natchez—the receiver at Batesville at the former, the receiver at Little Rock at the latter.

The receivers are also at liberty to make deposits in the Bank of the United States, or any of its offices, which they may find more convenient, other than those above designated, provided the funds so deposited be entered to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, by the bank or office, unconditionally, as cash; and when the moneys which they are authorized to receive will be thus credited in a nearer office, they are required to deposit in such office.

To facilitate the collection of the notes of the local or State banks, the receiver will, on making a deposit, give notice in writing, by the mail or otherwise, to each of those banks in the State or Territory in which the land office is situated, of the amount of its notes contained in such deposit; and if he is informed by the cashier of the bank in which he makes his deposits that the notes of any such bank have not been paid on demand, he will cease to receive the notes of such bank. It may be proper for the receiver, where it has not already been done, to take the first occasion to intimate, in respectful terms, to each of the local or State banks of his State or Territory, whose notes he may receive, the consequence that will result from a want of punctuality in paying its notes on presentation.

The receivers will also cease to receive any local or State bank notes that the bank in which they are instructed to make their deposits may refuse to receive as cash, or which, in the exercise of a sound discretion, the receivers may not think it prudent to receive; but, in either of these cases, they will give immediate information of their proceedings to this department. They will also give early notice to the other receivers in the same State or Territory.

When the public money in the hands of a receiver at the end of any month exceeds the sum of ten thousand dollars, it should be deposited without delay. But it must not be retained under any circumstances in contravention of the provisions of the act of the 10th May, 1800, which requires that the moneys received by the receivers shall be transmitted within three months to the treasurer of the United States, as they will thereby render themselves and their sureties liable under their official bonds.

It is essential that all the public moneys in the possession of the receivers should be deposited at the above intervals, reserving enough, in case the ordinary receipts of the office should be insufficient for the purpose, to pay their own and the register's salaries, together with the authorized expenses of their offices.

Where deposits are made in sums less than ten thousand dollars, compensation for the expense and risk may be allowed upon the aggregate of such deposits whenever it exceeds that sum; but no allowance can be made for the expense of making the deposit oftener than once a month.

Receivers will take duplicate receipts for each deposit which they may make. One of these receipts they will immediately forward to this office, and charge the amount in the first succeeding monthly return rendered to the Secretary of the Treasury. All vouchers for authorized disbursements should be transmitted with their quarterly accounts.

Instead of the compensation heretofore allowed to receivers under the act of the 22d May, 1826, for the expense, labor, and risk incurred in the transportation of the public moneys for deposit, the receivers will, from and after the first day of July next, be compensated by the following allowances, viz.:

As a compensation for their expense and labor in the performance of this duty, they will be entitled to receive for every mile travelled from their respective offices to the bank of deposit, and returning, computing the distance by the nearest route to the nearest office in which their deposit will be received as cash, if by land, at the rate of twelve and a half cents per mile; if by water, six cents per mile; with such additional allowance for the transportation of specie as will remunerate them for the increased expense attending such transportation. Claims for such additional allowances for the transportation of specie must be supported by satisfactory vouchers.

As a compensation for the risk incurred, there will be allowed a per-centage of one-hundredth part of one per cent. on the amount deposited, for every ten miles of distance between the land office and place of deposit by the nearest route.

For the sake of convenience and uniformity, it is desirable that the monthly duplicate returns required to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury and Commissioner of the General Land Office should be made on a sheet of common post paper, and rendered in the form of that herewith enclosed.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. INGHAM, Secretary of the Treasury.

APPLICATION FOR A DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS, CEDED BY VIRGINIA TO THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 31, 1837.

The memorial of the undersigned, in behalf of his immediate constituents, and of the citizens of the United States, including the residue of the citizens of the State of Virginia, most respectfully represents to the Congress of the United States of America: That whereas, on inquiry, it will appear that the continental Congress of the then confederacy, did, by a resolution under date of the 30th day of September, 1780, recommend to the several States having claim to western lands a liberal surrender thereof, as a common fund, in aid of establishing the public credit, and to discharge the debt incurred by the then existing war with Great Britain;

And whereas, the State of Virginia, responding to the said recommendation of Congress, did, on the 2d day of January, 1781, by her legislative assembly, adopt, and submit to the consideration of Congress, the terms and conditions on which that State would surrender to the United States all the lands within the boundaries claimed by Virginia north and west of the river Ohio;

And whereas, Congress having the said terms and conditions of cession proposed by the State of Virginia under consideration, resolved, on the —— day of September, 1783, to accept the same, with the exception only of a stipulation in said terms of cession, binding the United States to guarantee to Virginia the residue of her territory south and east of the river Ohio;

And whereas, the State of Virginia having assented to the proposed exclusion from her terms of the guaranty aforesaid, did, by an act of her legislative assembly, empower and fully authorize her then delegates in Congress to execute the conveyance contemplated: whereupon, James Madison and others, then the delegates in Congress from Virginia, did, on the 1st day of March, 1784, in virtue of the aforesaid authority vested in them, convey to the United States the aforesaid lands north and west of the river Ohio, according to the original terms and conditions proposed by Virginia to Congress, for the cession thereof to the United States, with the exception only of the guaranty aforesaid, proposed by Congress to be excluded therefrom, and assented to by Virginia, as aforesaid;

And whereas, the aforesaid deed of cession, executed as aforesaid, among other provisions therein, contains what follows: "That all the lands within the territory hereby ceded to the United States, and not reserved or appropriated to any of the beforementioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American army, shall be considered a common fund, for the sole use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become members of the confederation, or federal alliance of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their respective proportions of the general charge and expenditure; and shall be faithfully and bonafide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatever:" The memorialist respectfully asks that Congress will take under consideration the whole subject-matter set forth or referred to in the foregoing preamble, and decide whether the conveyance of Virginia, above recited, is not a conveyance in trust, for certain specific purposes therein enumerated; whether those purposes have been satisfied; if so, what quantity of the land conveyed has been applied to those, or to any other purposes; how much of the land now remains to be disposed of; if any, whether Congress is not bound by the letter and plain intention of the deed of cession by Virginia to the United States, to provide for a faithful and bonafide application of the proceeds of the remaining lands, and of those, if any, which may have been devoted to purposes not specified in the deed, to the sole use and benefit of the States of the Union, according to the ratio of distribution provided in the deed.

And your memorialist is most respectfully, JOHN TALIAFERRO,

In behalf of himself and others.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1581. [2D SESSION.

ON A CLAIM FOR A BOUNTY LAND WARRANT.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FEBRUARY 4, 1837.

Mr. CHAMBERS, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the resolution of inquiry into the propriety of granting to Simon Burton, jr., a tract of bounty land, reported:

That it appears, from the deposition of the applicant, that he enlisted as a soldier in the army of the United States in the month of January, 1813, for the term of five years, and that he quit the service in August or September, 1815, being then claimed by his father as a minor, and, in consequence of such claim, he was discharged from service.

By the act of Congress regulating the term of enlistment and the emoluments to the soldiers of the army of the United States, during the last war with Great Britain, and at the time of the enlistment of said Simon, it was provided that "whenever any soldier shall be discharged from service, who shall have obtained from the commanding officer of the company, battalion, or regiment, a certificate that he had faithfully performed his duty while in service, he shall be allowed, in addition to pay, &c., one hundred and sixty acres of bounty land." The claim of the soldier to bounty land was dependent on a faithful service until the expiration of his term, and obtaining a certificate of the officer, as provided for in the act of Congress. From the deposition of the applicant, it appears that he neither performed the service nor obtained the necessary certificate, both of which were necessary to entitle him to bounty land. The committee are of opinion that the applicant is not entitled to bounty land, or any other relief.

APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR THAT PORTION OF THE LAND GRANTED FOR THE MIAMI CANAL AND AFTERWARD SOLD BY THE UNITED STATES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 7, 1837.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled:

The general assembly of the State of Ohio would respectfully represent, that, by an act of Congress, approved May 24, 1828, there was granted to the State of Ohio a quantity of land equal to one half of five sections on each side of a canal to be constructed from Dayton to the Maumee river, at the mouth of Auglaise, on certain conditions, which were to be complied with on the part of the State. By an act of the general assembly, passed December 31, 1831, the State pledged herself to carry into effect the act of Congress before named, by authorizing the selection, sale, and application of the proceeds of said lands to the construction of the Miami canal. Since the passage of the act of the general assembly before referred to, and the selection of lands made in accordance with its provisions, (and the act of Congress donating said lands,) in lieu of lands previously sold by the United States, within five miles of said canal, the general government has sold a quantity of said land, the avails of which have passed into the Treasury of the United States, instead of being appropriated to the construction of the Miami canal, according to the provisions of the act of Congress donating them for that express purpose. The general assembly, therefore, ask of Congress the passage of an act authorizing the State of Ohio to select from any lands belonging to the United States within said State, a quantity of land equal to the amount sold by the United States, that properly belonged to the State of Ohio, according to the act of Congress granting lands to the State of Ohio to aid said State in the construction of the Miami canal.

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That the governor of this State be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial, and of this resolution, to each of our senators and representatives in Congress, and that they be requested to use all honorable and proper exertions to obtain an act of Congress for the purpose therein set forth.

WILLIAM MEDILL, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
ELIJAH VANCE, Speaker of the Senate.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND FOR SERVICES IN EXPLORING THE TENNESSEE RIVER.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 7, 1837.

Mr. LINN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Barclay, praying to be confirmed in his title to a tract of land, reported:

That they find no evidence that George Barclay, the father of the petitioner, ever performed the services set forth in the petition. The committee have been informed that his name is mentioned in the resolution of the legislature of the State of Georgia, authorizing John Donelson, Stephen Heard, and others, to explore the great bend of the Tennessee river, but that resolution does not appear in the partial collection of the acts of the Georgia legislature in the library of Congress, or in the State Department; and the committee conceive that it would be inexpedient to assume the fact without an opportunity of examining for themselves the said resolution that his name does so appear. Without some evidence of the services rendered by George Barclay, neither his heirs nor representatives are entitled to claim any compensation therefor.

Your committee, therefore, submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That they be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

EXAMINATION OF THE OPERATIONS OF THE LAND OFFICE AT FORT WAYNE, INDIANA, IN 1836.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FEBRUARY 8, 1837.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 4, 1837.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, dated the 30th ultimo, as to the land office at Fort Wayne, I have the honor to enclose copies of correspondence with this office, numbered from 1 to 18; also, a report and copies of correspondence with the General Land Office, lettered from A to I. These are believed to embrace all the papers desired under the resolution.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 25, 1836.

SIR: Your letter of the 4th instant, enclosing a return for the month of March, and a quarterly account for the quarter ending on the 31st ultimo, is received. Quarterly returns or accounts are not required to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury, but to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as your instructions from that officer will inform you. The returns required to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury, as you will perceive from the enclosed circular, are monthly, being duplicates of similar statements rendered to the General Land Office, and corresponding in form to that for March, received with your letter. As these statements for January and February last have not been received at the department, I must claim your attention to the omission, and insist on their transmission in future, immediately after the close of each month. At the same time, I would also claim your strict attention to the regulations of the department in respect to the periodical deposits of the public money, and to the duty of transmitting the usual evidences of such deposits to the Secretary of the Treasury, as the instructions require.

I am, very respectfully, &c., &c. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

Col. JOHN SPENCER, Receiver of Public Moneys, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 23, 1836.

SIR: Since the date of my letter to you of the 25th ultimo, your returns for the month of April have been received, from which I perceive that the public moneys in your hands on the 30th ultimo amounted to the sum of $247,251 64, which amount is the accumulated receipts of your office since the 1st of January last. You cannot but be aware that the retention of the public moneys in your hands, beyond the period of one month, unless the receipts of such month be less than $10,000, is a violation of your instructions. The object of this letter is, 1. To require that the whole balance on hand at the time of the receipt of this letter shall be immediately deposited, and a certificate of such deposit transmitted to the department without delay; 2. To inform you that the department cannot overlook the omission to do so, or your future neglect to deposit monthly, and to transmit your monthly returns, accompanied by the evidence of your deposit, in time to be received at this office within the month next preceding that for which the return is rendered; 3. That any neglect or inattention to these requirements, unless satisfactorily accounted for, will require of me, from a sense of official duty, that you be reported to the President, with a recommendation that you be removed from office.

I am, very respectfully, &c., &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

Col. JOHN SPENCER, Receiver of Public Moneys, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 8, 1836.

SIR: Since my letter to you of the 29th ultimo, directing an examination to be made into the state of the land office at Fort Wayne, Indiana, the returns of the receiver for the month of May have been received, and exhibit a balance of money in his hands, at the close of that month, amounting to $601,380 49. He has transmitted, under date of the 27th ultimo, a certificate of deposit in the "Branch State Bank of Indiana," made on the 15th of the same month, of $540,433 09, leaving a balance in his hands of $60,947 40.

I have to request that you will instruct Mr. West, the examiner, referred to in my letter above stated, to make special inquiry into this matter, and report to the department the result.

I am, very respectfully, &c., &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

No. 4.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 8, 1836.

SIR: Your account as receiver of public moneys at Fort Wayne, for the month of May last, with the enclosed certificate of deposit, in the Branch State Bank of Indiana, for $540,433 09, has been received, leaving a balance in your hands of $60,947 40. I have to request to be informed why the whole amount in your hands was not deposited at the same time with the first-mentioned sum.

I am, very respectfully, &c., &c.

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

JOHN SPENCER, Esq., Receiver, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Fort Wayne, July 29, 1836.

SIR: Yours of the 8th, urging an explanation why the balance of the money on hand was not deposited at the time I made the last deposit, obliges me to state to you, that, owing to the great amount of money that I had with me at that time, (for I had the whole amount due from me to the government at the time I left the office, except the specie that came in after the wagon that hauled the silver had left, which was about one week before I left myself,) the cashier of the bank declined receiving in that deposit the eastern money and drafts, viz.: on the safety-fund banks of New-York and the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, which I received, supposing that they were embraced in his list of funds. The eastern funds I left in the bank at Richmond, with the cashier's promise that they should go in the next deposit. The Michigan paper I sent to the Michigan Bank, which was deposited there, and the certificate forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the last quarterly report.

The Bank of Richmond received that deposit with great reluctance, being fearful that the government might draw the funds out before they could make their arrangement. The money is yet in the bank, for the government. I shall leave without delay to make deposit, having received information that the bank at Indianapolis would receive the deposits, notwithstanding the letter from the president of that bank, which was the cause of my detention from making the deposit immediately after the receipt of your letter directing me to deposit in that bank, instead of that at Richmond.

Copy of a letter from the president of the Branch Bank at Indianapolis, dated July 14, 1836.

SIR: Having understood that the Secretary of the Treasury has directed you to deposit moneys received at your office for public lands at this branch, I deem it proper that I should apprize you that the directory have it in contemplation to decline, for the present, receiving any further deposits, believing that we cannot accede to the terms embraced in the late act of Congress in relation to the deposits, without too great a sacrifice of interest to this institution.

I am authorized to say to you, the board of directors of this branch, unwilling to add to its responsibility so heavy an amount as would likely be your next payment, have decided not to receive the deposit from that office.

Respectfully yours,

HENRY BATES, President.

JOHN SPENCER, Esq., Receiver.

Hereafter, I assure you that the deposits will be made, so far as I am concerned, in strict accordance with my instructions.

Respectfully, sir, I am your humble servant, JOHN SPENCER.

Hon. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 7.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Fort Wayne, August 22, 1836.

SIR: I have just received yours of the 13th instant, acknowledging the receipt of my letter of the 28th ultimo, and returns for that month. It also presents the inquiry, why the balance of $100,599 32 was retained so long on hands, and observed that no reply has been received to your letter of the 8th ultimo.

In answer to the above I reply, that an answer at some length was written to your letter of the 8th, dated July 29, which was probably on the way when you wrote on the 13th instant, and would no doubt be received soon after. The amount of funds in the Richmond Bank, which I spoke of, was $52,831 39, and is included in the enclosed certificate of deposit.

My reasons why the balance of $100,599 32 was so long retained, are as follows: On the 20th of June, I returned from depositing at Richmond. From this time to the 26th I was busied in procuring security to my new bond, according to the requisition contained in circular from Commissioner of the General Land Office of 25th May, and which was received on 4th June, while I was absent. On the 26th, I started for Rockville, to have it approved, and returned on the 10th of July. The office was opened on the 11th, and the extraordinary press of business rendered it advisable that I should remain for a few days until the press would be over. While preparing the funds for deposit, which had accumulated to a large amount, I received the letter from the president of the branch at Indianapolis, (a copy of which I sent you in my letter of 29th ultimo,) refusing the deposits from me. Afterward, I received another letter accepting them; and, as soon as I could thereafter, I left to make the deposit, the result of which is contained in the enclosed certificate.

I beg leave to repeat the assurance that every attention shall be given to the subject of depositing which its importance and my duty require.

OFFICE OF STATE BANK OF INDIANA, Fort Wayne, August 22, 1836.

Understanding that reports are in circulation in regard to the course that has been pursued by Colonel John Spencer, receiver of public moneys in this place, in receiving at a discount uncurrent paper in payment for lands, which are calculated to injure him in his relation to the government, I take this opportunity of stating sach facts upon this subject as have come within my knowledge. The situation which I have occupied for some time in this branch bank, the daily intercourse which I have had with the receiver, and the consequent knowledge which I have obtained of the manner in which he has discharged his official duties, lead me to the opinion that the reports alluded to have originated either in misunderstanding or misrepresentation.

That paper not authorized by the cashier of the deposit branches at Richmond and Indianapolis to be received by the receiver has in some instances been taken by him at a small discount, is not denied by Colonel Spencer himself; but I take pleasure in saying, that in no instance within my knowledge has this been done when the necessary exchanges could have been effected at this bank or with individuals. Owing to the great amount of the sales of the public lands in this district for some months past, and the fact that a large majority of land buyers have come here unprovided with the right kind of funds, the demand upon us for land office money has been greater than we could supply. Under these circumstances, if exchanges had not been made by the receiver, many individuals who had come a long distance would have been under the necessity of departing without the lands they had in many instances selected, or travelling, at the risk of losing their selections, at least one hundred miles, over roads the greater part of the year almost impassable, to obtain the right kind of funds. It is under such circumstances, when the purchaser could be accommodated nowhere else, that uncurrent paper has been taken by the receiver at a discount.

I feel very confident that these exchanges have not been made at the desire of Colonel Spencer. In many instances, within my own knowledge, he has peremptorily refused to make the desired exchanges; and in all instances I doubt not that he has been induced to do it, rather on account of the pressing solicitation of purchasers, than with a view to his own emolument. In some cases, when we could not afford the necessary accommodation in bank, I have suggested to Colonel Spencer the necessity of his taking, in some instances, at such rate of discount as would satisfy him for the expenses of making the re-exchanges, other than land office money.

I doubt not that the exchanges alluded to have been made by the receiver with reluctance, and at a small discount; and that if he is at fault in this matter, he has erred in liberality toward land purchasers, and a desire to accommodate them, and not with the intention of advancing his individual interests.

I give the foregoing to be used by Colonel Spencer as he may deem proper.

MADISON, August 31, 1836.

SIR: I am informed that some things are stated recently to the prejudice of Colonel John Spencer, receiver at Fort Wayne; and I am requested to write you. In doing so, I can only say that I have been gratified in learning that his deposits have been made to your satisfaction; and, if so, I hope that minor matters, if mere irregularities, will be overlooked. He is reputed to be an honest and honorable man, and I do not believe that he has intentionally either done wrong or violated his instructions. It would, to some extent, produce excitement if he were removed, for he has many warm and influential friends both at Fort Wayne and in Dearborn county, from which he removed to his present residence. Better let it be.

With much respect,

WILLIAM HENDRICKS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 2, 1836.

SIR: I have received the report of Mr. West upon the transactions of the land office under your charge; upon which I beg leave to remark, that the department trusts your deposits will hereafter be promptly made, and that no exchanges whatever of money will take place on any terms, as they open a door to improper practices and unfounded imputations. I am happy to add, that the department can readily see the difficulties in resisting importunities to exchange money and to receive what is not permitted by regulation. It can also duly appreciate your excuses for not making more prompt returns and more frequent deposits; but it trusts that, hereafter, a more rigid conformity to your instructions will be practicable, and will remove all cause of apprehension and complaint.

SIR: This is to inform you that I have forwarded to the deposit bank one hundred and four thousand dollars, in silver, there to remain until I arrive with the gold and paper money.

My democratic friends think that I ought not to leave until after we hold our election for President, on the 7th of November, which I have concluded to await, and shall leave on that evening, or the next morning, to deposit, with all the funds on hand up to that time. I shall write you again before I leave. The sales are rapid, mostly paid in gold and silver. My quarterly report will be forwarded by next mail, for last quarter, which ought to have been done sooner, only for the want of help in the office. Hereafter, I think I can get my reports off, without much delay, after the close of the month and quarter.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington City, January 5, 1837.

SIR: I desire to see the report of the examiner of the land office at Fort Wayne, Ia., made by Mr. West last fall, and all the papers connected with and relating to that report and examination, including the letters and correspondence of such officers of the government, and members of Congress of either House, as may be on file in the Treasury Department upon that subject, or in reference to the alleged delinquency of the receiver of public moneys at that place; and as these papers are voluminous, and I could not well examine them satisfactorily in your office, I desire copies of the whole, as above referred to. As the letters and correspondence of gentlemen, the copies of which I seek, are upon a subject of a public nature in reference to a public officer, I have supposed they might be seen, and that it is not improper to ask copies. I would be glad to get those copies as early as may suit your convenience.

I have the honor to be, &c.

J. McCARTY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 6, 1837.

SIR: Your favor of yesterday has been received; and I have since looked more fully into the papers and correspondence referred to, and regret to find them so voluminous, and some them of such a personal character, that it would not comport with the general rules of the department to furnish copies of them, unless to individuals interested or assailed in them, or on a proper call by Congress. I will, however, be happy to state to you their substance, or furnish copies of any particular papers you may designate, as in your own opinion, affecting your private interests or character, if, on examination, it be found that they do. But if none are of that description, (and I believe none are,) it appears to me, on mature reflection and examination of the precedents here, in similar cases, that if any public purpose is contemplated by the use of the papers, it is better that the copies should be furnished only upon a public requisition. Allow me to add, sir, that if you or any other gentleman wish to prefer any new charges whatever against the receiver at Fort Wayne, or to have any further examination made into those heretofore explained by him, both the President and this department are ready, at any moment, to cause a full inquiry to be made into them, and take thereon such further steps as the public interest may appear to require.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE, Fort Wayne, June 20, 1836.

SIR: I have just returned from making a deposit. I was much delayed in getting off, in consequence of the great press of business in the office, not being able to procure the necessary assistance. During the month of May I had to stay in the office; I had much difficulty in procuring a team to transport the silver, which I at last succeeded in getting. It had to go round through Ohio, by the way of Dayton, and was on the road between two and three weeks. I do assure you that it has been impossible to go through on the route, as allowed by the Comptroller, with wagons or on horseback, for a considerable part of the time since the office opened on the 7th of March last. The Wabash, Mississinewa, and Salamonee rivers, and some smaller streams, have been so high as to swim my horse. This I had to do when I went on the 1st of June inst. I got the paper money wet, but not much injured. It would be more convenient to deposit in Dayton, Cincinnati, or Detroit, than at Richmond or Indianapolis. There is no direct road to either of the last-named places.

I am now getting the new bond made, and shall leave in two or three days to see the district judge for its approval.

I regret having been so situated as to get the reprimand from the Secretary of the Treasury that he has given me. I will in a few days be able to get another clerk, and will in future attend strictly to depositing as well as other duties.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN SPENCER, Receiver.

P. S.—The report for May shall be mailed on the first opportunity, and a new supply of blanks for monthly abstracts will be needed for the next report.

Yours &c. JOHN SPENCER, Receiver.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 29, 1836.

SIR: It is desirable that an examination should be made of the land office at Fort Wayne, Indiana; and I request you to notify Nathaniel West, jr., of Indianapolis, that he has been selected for that purpose, and forward to him the usual instructions, and particularly to direct his inquiries into the cause of the delay, on the part of the receiver, in forwarding the returns required under the regulations of the department, and in making deposits to the credit of the Treasurer. That officer has lately made a deposit of a large amount, which has been accumulating for several months past. The examiner will ascertain, if possible, whether the receiver or register had been using the money received on sales in any manner, by loaning it or otherwise; and what are the reasons for the delays in depositing the money, and in making returns, by both the register and receiver.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

E. A. BROWN, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

P. S.—Mr. West is now at Salem, Mass., to which place you will forward to him his letter of appointment and instructions, as soon as they can be prepared.

C.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 1, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, in proceeding to act on your letter of instructions of the 29th ultimo, respecting the examination of the land office at Fort Wayne, Indiana, it has occurred to me that you may not be apprized of the returns which have been rendered to this office by the register and receiver at Fort Wayne, and that the receiver's commission expired on the 30th of December, 1835, and that a new commission was sent to him on the 31st of that month, under which he did not qualify until the 7th of March following; during which interval no business could be transacted under the standing instructions.

We have the receiver's quarterly account to 31st of March, 1836, and his monthly accounts for March and April last. I deem it proper to submit his monthly accounts for your inspection, with several letters from those officers, and a memorandum of facts officially known.

Should this communication be regarded as having any important bearing on your instructions of the 29th ultimo, I will be happy to receive your further advice as soon as convenient.

I am, &c.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner.

Hon. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

D.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 1, 1836.

SIR: Your letter of this date, respecting the examination of the land office at Fort Wayne, has been received. I see no excuse in the papers presented with your letter, for the receiver not having deposited a dollar from March till June, nor having sent any monthly abstracts to me in that time, nor answered my letters remonstrating against his neglect. These things I wish specially investigated, as well as the present state of money on hand, &c., and the points before indicated.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

E. A. BROWN, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The papers enclosed are herewith returned.

E.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, July 16, 1836.

SIR: Herewith is transmitted a copy of a letter of advice from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated the 29th ultimo, communicating your appointment to examine the land office at Fort Wayne, Indiana.

You will perceive that it is made your particular duty to inquire into the cause of the delay, on the part of the receiver, in forwarding the returns required under the regulations of the department, and in making deposits to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States. It appears that he made a deposit, on the 15th ultimo, amounting to $540,433 09, which had been accumulating since the 7th of March last, when the sales at Fort Wayne recommenced—they having been suspended from the 30th of December previous, at which time the receiver's former commission expired. By a letter from the receiver, dated the 20th ultimo, (a copy of which is herewith enclosed,) he appears not to have set out to make the above deposit till the 1st of June; and, as his monthly account current for May exhibits a balance in his hands, at the end of that month, of $601,380 49, it follows that he did not take with him all the money in his hands by $60,947 40; which sum, therefore, remains to be accounted for.

You will see, from the Secretary's letter, that he wishes you to "ascertain, if possible, whether the receiver or the register had been using the money received on sales, in any manner, by loaning it out, or otherwise." The receiver's monthly return for December last exhibits a balance in hand, at the end of that month, of $55,122 91; and his next return, dated the 31st March, shows that on the 14th of January he deposited the sum of $55,814 96, being an overpayment of $692 05, and, consequently, that he had no balance in hand when the sales recommenced in March. He ought, however, to have rendered a monthly return for January, exhibiting the balance in his hands on the first of that month, the amount of his deposit on the 14th, and the balance in his favor (over-deposited) at the end of it; which balance, or over-deposit, he should have carried to a new account for February, and continued it to March, and have made monthly returns, for each month successively, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to this office. That he did not do so, appears to the Secretary very reprehensible; and in addition to his not making a deposit for so long a time as intervened between the 7th of March and the 15th of June, he caused a doubt of the regularity and propriety of his official conduct, which you are appointed to investigate.

In the discharge of your duty under this appointment, you are requested not to communicate the fact of your appointment to any person until you arrive at the land office, and are ready to commence the examination of it, and then only by the enclosed letters of introduction to the officers.

This letter of instructions you will not communicate to any person whatever, not even to the officers themselves, as the object of your mission is to ascertain facts, not to disclose motives. Previous, however, to communicating your appointment to the register and receiver, you will endeavor to discover, as indirectly and cautiously as possible, so as to avoid creating suspicion of your object, whether either of these officers has been speculating with the public money, or using it in any unauthorized manner whatever. Having satisfied yourself on this point, you will deliver your letters of introduction, and commence your investigations by inquiring of the receiver why he did not make his returns regularly to the Secretary of the Treasury; and why he did not take with him all the money in his hands when he went, on the 1st of June, to make his deposit of $540,433 09, leaving behind him $60,947 40; and, also, why he suffered so long a time to elapse, and so great an amount of money to accumulate, before he did make a deposit or render an account. You will then proceed to examine the state of the land office, in the usual manner, as follows:

First, you will require an account from the receiver of the whole amount of cash remaining in his hands from the sales of the public lands, exhibiting the amount separately in gold and silver, and the amount in bank-notes, with the several designations and denominations of each; and, after taking an exact copy of the amount, you will verify it by an actual examination, yourself, of all the money.

You will then state an account between the receiver and the United States, commencing with the balance as it appears from the record of the last month's return to this office, to wit, for June last, after the current month, (as the case may be,) and ending with the day of examination, in order to ascertain the true balance that should appear from the books and papers of the office. In stating the account, you will charge the receiver with the balance due to the United States at the period when the account commences, (1st of July or 1st of August,) and with the amount of the purchase money of the public lands subsequently sold; then credit him with the amount of forfeited land stock and military land scrip, if there be any, and such disbursements and payments as are supported by sufficient vouchers, ending with the amount of cash in hand, as previously ascertained, and the balance remaining unaccounted for, should there be a deficiency. Afterward you will examine the books of both officers, commencing with the register.

The form and books now in use at the land office are the following:

In the register's office.

1st. Form of application to be made for the purchase of land at private sale.

2d. Form of certificates of purchase, which are transmitted to this office monthly, that patents may issue thereon.

3d. Form of abstract of land sold, required to be rendered monthly to this office.

4th. Township plats, on which is indicated the sale of each tract of land, to correspond with the entry in the tract book, and the register of certificates.

5th. Tract books, in which the lands in the district are required to be opened in the numerical order of the ranges, townships, and sections.

6th. Register of certificates, in which each certificate of purchase is entered in the order of its date and number, with the purchaser's name, description of the tract, quantity, price per acre, &c.

In the receiver's office.

1st. Form of receipt for the purchase money of lands sold.

2d. Form of register of receipts required to be transmitted monthly to this office.

3d. Register of receipts, corresponding with the register of certificates.

4th. Form of monthly accounts current, to be rendered in duplicate; one to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the other to this office.

5th. Quarterly account book, containing, on the credit side, the sales of the public lands during the quarter, preceded by the balance in hand at the commencement of the quarter; and on the debit side, the receiver's payments and disbursements, terminating with the balance of cash in hand—quarterly transcripts from which are required to be rendered to this office for examination and adjustment.

To trace out the entries of lands and test their correctness, is the initiatory step in the examination; to progress regularly with which, it will be necessary first to refer to the written applications of purchasers, (which are the foundation of all subsequent proceedings,) and compare them with the township plats, tract books, and register of certificates, to see that the tracts marked and entered thereon are the same as indicated in the applications, and afterward with the receiver's register of receipts and quarterly account book. This need only be done to such extent as will enable you to judge of the general accuracy in the manner of doing business, and the accordance between the books and records of the two offices, or where you may desire or think it necessary to ascertain the facts in any particular case.

If you shall discover any discrepancies, errors, or delinquencies, you will note them down to be inserted in your report; and should you find the errors and discrepancies numerous, you will extend your examination as far back as you may conceive to be requisite.

The register is required to have the township plats pasted on canvas and bound into convenient books. You are requested to report whether this has been done, and also the present condition of the plats, in what mode the sales of the tracts are indicated thereon, and whether the marks are distinct and legible, or otherwise.

You will also examine and report the state and condition of the books and papers of each office, whether the volumes of entries and records have been preserved in good strong binding, and the entries and records therein made are executed in a neat legible hand; whether the papers have been properly endorsed, filed, and labelled, and preserved from dust or other injury; and whether the office itself is kept with that neatness and cleanliness which are necessary to preserve its archives from injury.

You will make every necessary inquiry to become acquainted with the general conduct and demeanor of the officers, so as to ascertain whether it is such toward those who transact official business with them as comports with a prompt and faithful discharge of public duty, without prejudice or partiality to any, and with fidelity to the government.

You will make a full report to this office on all subjects herein mentioned and suggested; a duplicate of which you will, at the same time, transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury, preserving a copy to be retained by yourself.

It is not expected that you will have occasion to be employed on this examination longer than ten days; but, if more time be required, you will report all the facts, circumstances, and reasons, which may render a longer time necessary; and you will also advise this office of the date of your arrival at Fort Wayne, the time you commence your inquiries, and when you close your examination.

Your compensation, for the proposed service, will be six dollars per diem, while actually engaged in the investigation, and six dollars for every twenty miles travel from your residence to the land office and back.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner.

NATHANIEL WEST, Jr., Esq., Indianapolis.

FORT WAYNE, August 11, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I came here this morning, and shall immediately proceed to perform the duty committed to me.

Mr. Spencer, the receiver, is absent. I met him in Logansport; he stated that he was then on his way to Indianapolis to make a deposit, and would return before ten days.

Very, &c.

NATHANIEL WEST.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Esq.

G.

FORT WAYNE, August 21, 1836.

SIR: I wrote under date of the 11th instant, advising of my being here. I have been detained here much to my regret, by the absence of the receiver, Mr. Spencer, who, I expected, would have been back some days since, and which, in my interview with him at Logansport, he gave me most positively to expect. I regret my detention the more, for, in addition to the inconvenience to myself, is the extra expense of doing what could well have been finished in three days; but the situation in which Mr. Spencer is placed, I felt justified me in giving him every opportunity of explaining; and why he is not now here I cannot understand.

Immediately on my arrival, I went to the receiver's office, and took an account of all the money then on hand, and received a rough calculation (substantially correct) of all the lands sold in July and August; and before leaving the office, was enabled to state the receiver's account with the United States, thus:

The Receiver at Fort Wayne.....Dr.

June 30. To balance of last account	$100,599 32
Amount received in July	356,155 95
Amount received in August till the 11th, at 3 o'clock	29,774 64
	$486,529 91

Contra.....Cr.

By silver in bank at Fort Wayne	$23,000 00
By gold in bank at Fort Wayne	5,322 37
Cash represented to be now with him to deposit as per schedule enclosed	373,961 42
Cash to his credit at Richmond, as per enclosed extract of Elijah Coffin's letter dated August 1.	43,366 39
Bank notes, checks, &c., in the office	17,350 50
Gold in the office	357 00
Silver in the office	1,874 00
Scrip in the office	2,425 00
Forfeited land stock	78 20
Balance due United States	18,795 03
	$486,529 91

Why this balance of $18,795 03 appears, has not been explained: and if any explanation could be made, Mr. Spencer's absence precludes me from giving it. His clerk thinks he has still more money at Richmond; but as he left for collection there on the 1st of June what they on the 1st day of August finally passed to his credit, I have thought this not very probable. His clerk, though called upon, gives me no schedule of the money he took with him to Richmond, when he went to make his deposit on the 1st of June.

I think Mr. Spencer could not with propriety urge, when he went to make a deposit on the 1st of June, as a good cause for delay in not having done so before, the state of the roads; as a free passage was open for him via Logansport, and no difficulty in his way.

As to the state of the office; the papers are not arranged with much method and order; and the books, on 11th of August, were posted up to the 1st of May only. His account current of 30th June must of course have been stated from the blotter.

The balance now to his credit at Richmond will of course lessen the apparent balance due the United States on the 1st of June, being the day he left here to make a deposit at Richmond; and if we now to this balance add the sales from the 1st to the 4th of June, amounting to $52,418 04, when the office closed, it will also explain nearly the balance which was carried to new account on the 30th of June, of $100,599 32. The receiver being absent from June 26 to July 10, to obtain the approval of his bond, caused the suspension of business till the 11th of July.

The clerk urges, as an excuse for the return not being regularly made during the months of January, February, and March, that Mr. Spencer did not think it necessary, as the office was closed, and no business doing. His irregularity since, he states, is owing to the great pressure of business; and I am convinced it has been very great.

In answer to my question, why the present large sum now with Mr. Spencer was allowed to accumulate, they offer the letter of the president of the Indianapolis Bank as an excuse, a copy of which is herewith enclosed. It does not appear when it was received, but probably about the 22d July.

Upon the subject of using the money of the United States, I beg leave to state that I find it universally stated and believed, and it is conceded to as a fact by the clerks in the receiver's office, that both he and his relative Dawson have been much in the habit, in the office, of shaving money, i. e., exchanging the money which could not be received for public lands; the rate of exchange or discount varying from three to five per cent. I find in the case of Isaiah Wells, of Marion county, Ohio, that so recently as the 6th instant he paid into the hands of the receiver, in his office, eight dollars, for exchanging two hundred and forty dollars of Ohio bank-notes of five dollars each. To what extent this "shaving" business has been carried on in the office, of course I do not know; but I am satisfied it has been to a very considerable extent, and that the government money paid in by one person has been handed out by the receiver in exchange for uncurrent, or not land office money, he receiving for his own private use the discount as agreed upon, and that the same government money again is passed into the land office, to be again used for the like purpose, in pay for the public lands.

That the receiver has taken in bank-notes of five dollars, contrary to orders, the schedule prepared at his office, herewith enclosed, will prove; that he received a bonus for taking the same is, I think, almost beyond a doubt.

Having finished the examination of the receiver's office, so far as I could do in the absence of Mr. Spencer—and I am not aware of any disadvantage resulting therefrom—I then proceeded to the examination of the register's office, and it gives me pleasure to state that every facility was afforded me by Mr. Brackenridge. I find the office neatly kept, and his papers are properly filed; and in the office as much method as could be reasonably expected, especially where the pressure has been unusually great, as it has been since the opening in July.

The register did not make his return for January, February, and March, because, as he says, the receiver's office being closed, and doing nothing, he did not think it necessary; and that since the office opened, the pressure of business has been so great as to prevent his being as punctual as he could wish in making his returns, except he closed his office for that purpose: his health not being very good, and for a part of the time his clerks were overworked and sick. I have ascertained that his clerks have been sick, and I have no doubt of the good intentions of Mr. Brackenridge.

As to the books in his office: the register of certificates is written out only to the 1st of July, which he says is owing to the clerks being much employed, assisting in attending to the many applications for land.

The town plats (all but one volume) are upon canvas. The old volume of surveys is not so secured, and the book is much worn.

The entries are generally in a legible fair hand, and the books are correctly kept.

The register states that he has been delayed for the want of blanks.

I enclose my bill, and leave here on the morrow for Indianapolis.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NATHANIEL WEST.

Hon. ETHAN A. BROWN.

P. S.—Mr. Spencer has just come in, having been as far as Richmond, where, by obtaining a discount upon some drafts due in September, originally taken here for land, he was enabled to swell his deposit there to $52,831 34, which, together with the money taken with him from here, the silver in the bank here, and some other money, enabled him to deposit to the credit of the United States $455,906. His account will now stand thus:

Dr.

June 30.	To balance	$100,599 32
	Lands sold in July	356,155 95
	Lands sold in August	29,774 64
		486,529 91

Contra.....Cr.

Cash deposited August 17, including silver at Fort Wayne	$455,906 00
Gold here in bank	5,322 37
Bank-notes in office	17,350 50
Gold in office	357 00
Sllver in office	1,874 00
Scrip	2,425 00
Forfeited land stock	78 20
Balance due United States	3,216 84
	486,529 91

As it respects the changing or shaving of money, Mr. Spencer wishes me to state, that he took it in, it is true, at a discount, but it was to accommodate the people; and that the deduction made therefrom, when he made his deposite, by the bank at Indianapolis, balanced any advantage he obtained when he received it.

As to the great accumulation of money in April and May, Mr. Spencer urges that the great pressure of business at the office at the time prevented his leaving; and that the silver, about $40,000, could not have been sent via Logansport in a wagon.

Mr. Spencer wishes me to state, that, if continued in office, the deposites shall punctually be made, and that he did not receive any bank-notes of $5 after 4th of July.

Respectfully, N. WEST.

INDIANAPOLIS BRANCH BANK, July 14, 1836.

SIR: Having understood that the Secretary of the Treasury has directed you to deposit moneys received at your office for public lands at this branch, I deem it proper that I should apprize you that the directory here have it in contemplation to decline for the present receiving any further deposits; believing that we cannot accede to the terms embraced in the late act of Congress in relation to the deposits, without too great a sacrifice of interest to this institution. I am authorized to say to you, the board of directors of this branch, unwilling to add to its responsibility so heavy an amount as would likely be your next payment, have decided not to receive the deposits from that office.

Respectfully yours,

HENRY BATES, President.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy.

Extract of a letter addressed to B. F. Morris, cashier at Indianapolis.

"RICHMOND, August 1, 1836.

"John Spencer has a credit in this branch of $43,366 39, for some uncurrent eastern money which we received of him, some collections, &c., for which he is authorized to draw.

I.

MIAMI COUNTY, INDIANA, August 23, 1836.

SIR: I hasten to correct an oversight in my statement of Mr. Spencer's account, in the postscript of my letter from Fort Wayne. I wrote the postscript just upon the point of starting, and Mr. Spencer being present, requesting me to give the assurance of his good intention for the future, must be my excuse for the oversight.

It consists in passing either the whole amount of his deposit at Indianapolis, in which is included a certificate of deposit of $25,000 of silver at Fort Wayne; or, as the gold was left in the bank at Fort Wayne as collateral, to make up a deficiency of $2,000, silver, I should not have passed all the gold to his credit.

His account, as corrected, should stand thus:

The Receiver.....Dr.

June 30.	To balance,.....	$100,599 32
	Received in July ($355, 897 75),.....	356,155 95
	Received in August, up to 11th, at 3 P. M.,.....	29,774 64
		$486,529 91

Contra.....Cr.

June 30.	To cash deposited at Indianapolis,.....	$455,906 00
	Gold in bank at Fort Wayne, $5,322 37, less $2,000, its liability for the deficiency of silver of $2,000.....	3,322 37
	Bank-notes, &c., in office.....	17,350 50
	Gold in office.....	357 00
	Silver in office.....	1,874 00
	Scrip.....	2,435 00
	Forfeited Land Stock.....	78 20
	Balance due the United States.....	5,206 84
		$486,529 91

It is also proper for me to state, that I am quite satisfied Mr. Spencer, by his visit to Richmond, was enabled to increase his available fund there $94,064 92, (he having drawn in favor of the Indianapolis branch for that much more,) by obtaining a discount there; and upon drafts received by him at Fort Wayne for public lands, before the 1st of June last, which drafts were not due till September; and, of course, in order to reduce the same now to cash he made a deduction. Whether the deduction for the yet remaining time was equal to what was allowed him in May last, of course I do not know; but the difference of time would seem to place it beyond a doubt, that it was much less.

The latter view, in part, applies to the discount upon uncurrent or not land office paper, which he deposited at Indianapolis; a certificate of the loss upon which I enclosed at his request.

Very, &c.

Hon. WM. R. KING, President pro tem. of the Senate.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 10, 1837.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 1st instant, in the words following: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate any information in his possession, obtained through any agent specially deputed to investigate the frauds, by float or otherwise, supposed to have been practised in the purchase of public lands, in the State of Louisiana, or any information obtained in any other manner relative thereto. And resolved, also, That the said Secretary be directed to report any information as to abuses arising under the pre-emption laws, or in consequence of the grant or floats in parts of the United States other than in Louisiana:" and which has been referred by you to this office for a report, I have the honor herewith to submit, in reference to the first clause of the resolution, the accompanying copies of documents, numbered 1 to 16 inclusive, among which will be found a communication from B. F. Linton, esq., United States attorney for the west district of Louisiana, in relation to alleged perversions and abuses in that State of the pre-emption law; also, the instruction to the land officers in consequence of the information so received, with the instructions to the special agent deputed to investigate the subject of such complaints, and the several reports of that agent as to the result of his investigation. There is also transmitted a copy of a communication from George W. Watterston, esq., dated December 14,1836, representing the existence of such abuses, with copies of the testimony accompanying that communication, (documents marked A, B, C, D, E, and F.)

In reply to the second clause of the resolution, "as to abuses arising under the pre-emption laws, or in consequence of the grant of floats in parts of the United States other than in Louisiana," I have to state that there are two main causes of abuse connected with the operation of the pre-emption laws of 1830 and 1834, one of which may be regarded as operating to the prejudice of the actual settlers, and the other as affecting the interests of the government.

The first of these arises from the location of "floats" upon lands occupied by actual settlers, who, although occupants and cultivators of the soil, were, notwithstanding, excluded from the right of pre-emption by the terms of the act. In numerous instances of this kind, where the cultivation and improvement were not made as required by the law, during the year anterior to its passage, (although of a character and magnitude subject to the equitable consideration of the legislator, and most probably made in anticipation of the further extension of the pre-emption privilege,) such cultivation and improvement would avail nothing to the settler, the result of whose toil and industry was, at any moment during the whole term of the operation of the law, liable to be wrested from him by the cupidity of the speculator, on an application to enter the same by a float, unless such settler were fortunate enough to secure to himself his own improvement by a similar method.

In regard to the second of the causes alluded to, I have to remark that the great advantages attending the right of locating lands by means of "floats" accruing in cases where two persons are settled on the same tract or quarter-section, have presented a powerful temptation to the industrious speculator to seek out instances where two individuals were residents on the same tract of land, with the hope of securing for his own benefit the "floats" accruing in such cases.

Representations have been made that, in numerous instances of this description, the "floats" have been obtained where the settlers, either from ignorance of the law or from the little value which they attached to the land on which they had temporarily settled, would not have availed themselves of a pre-emption privilege, had they not been sought out by the watchful speculator, and acceded to his proposal of making payment for their benefit for the tract of land on which they were settled, on condition that they would secure to him the benefits resulting from the accruing "floats," and such "floats" were subject to be applied to the best lands, whether valuable as plantations, or for water privileges, or as town-sites.

Under this head may also be arranged some unsuccessful attempts to locate such floats within the corporate limits of a city.

Numerous cases have occurred in illustration of those advanced, which, by many, would doubtless be considered as abuses under the pre-emption laws, but which time will not admit of seeking out from among the mass of papers connected with the operation of the pre-emption law among the various files of this office.

In responding to these resolutions, any expression of opinion as to the policy of the pre-emption laws, allowing floats, further than may be gathered from the foregoing exhibition of facts, has been purposely withheld, such policy being equally obvious to Congress, and peculiarly within the scope of its discretion.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

JAS. WHITCOMB, Commissioner.

Hon. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 1.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 27, 1835.

SIR: That it may be in your power to guard the interests of the government from the fraud and impositions alleged, in a communication from B. F. Linton to the President, to have been practised in the Opelousas land district, the same is herewith transmitted, with a request that all practical diligence and attention be given to the subject.

I am, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office.

WASHINGTON CITY, August 25, 1835.

By an act of Congress, dated the 29th of May, 1830, giving to actual settlers and occupants on the public domain the right of pre-emption, according to the requisites stated in said act, and by subsequent acts, continuing in force the act of 1830, a new era was introduced on the subject of land claims to the citizens of western Louisiana. Although the legislation of Congress, on the subject of the public lands, is as mild and beneficent as any system on earth, since the government tolerates, in the first instance, a trespass in the citizen which subsequently perfects a title in himself; yet, amidst this mild and merciful legislation, persons are found perverting the designs of these acts to selfish and corrupt purposes.

I will call your attention to a part of these acts, in order more fully to understand my subsequent statement. By the act of Congress of 1830, where two persons live on the same quarter-section, cultivate and improve it, the register and receiver are required (upon due proof exhibited to their satisfaction) to divide the quarter-section between the occupants. Independent of this, the law accords to each of them what is called a pre-emption float of eighty acres each, to be located on any unappropriated lands of the government. It will be supposed for a moment, that two pre-emption floats are located as required by law: the rights of the occupants, on the first quarter-section, (according to the construction of the law which prevailed at the land office at Opelousas, Louisiana,) have not yet ceased. The moment they make the location of their pre-emption floats they are entitled to what is called a back concession, which is the same quantity of land as the pre-emption float itself. These two occupants of a quarter-section have that quarter-section divided equally between them. They acquire, by the accident of occupancy, a right to 320 acres each. In addition to this view of the question, if men were strictly honest, it would present no avenues for imposition, frauds, or perjuries. I regret to say, because I religiously believe, that the most shameful frauds, impositions, and perjuries have been practised upon the land office at Opelousas, Louisiana. I make no imputation upon the official conduct of Mr. King, the late register at Opelousas, nor upon the present receiver; but from my statement it will appear that they must have been most grossly imposed upon, and should have put them more completely upon their guard, so as to have guarded themselves against the wiles of notorious land speculators.

I will here mention a construction of the law which was adopted by the officers at Opelousas, and most of the pre-emption floats have been admitted under that construction: Two persons, living on a quarter-section, or who pretend that they do, on lands not worth a cent an acre; men who can neither read nor write; men who have never seen a survey made, and know nothing about sections or quarter-sections of land, and who, in point of fact, live five, ten, and, in many instances, twenty miles apart, go before a justice of the peace as ignorant as themselves, and swear to all the facts required by law to make their entry, this, too, in a section of country never surveyed by the authority of the government, nor any competent officer thereof. Would it be believed that any officer of the government would admit an entry under circumstances like these, upon the oaths alone of the parties interested in making them, and upon lands not surveyed, approved, and returned by higher authority? Can it be possible that an entry of that kind can either be in conformity of law, justice, or right?

I state, of my own knowledge, that many of these pre-emption floats are precisely in the situation above detailed. I am authorized to name Colonel Robert A. Crane, of Louisiana, who states positively he knows many of them to be founded upon the same corrupt perjury—persons swearing that they lived on the same quarter-section, when in truth and in fact they never had lived so near each other as five miles. It is not believed that there are thirty honest pre-emption floats in the whole district of Louisiana; and yet since the 1st of January, 1835, up to the 27th of May, there have passed at the land office at Opelousas at least 350. And who are the owners of these floats? Principally one, and not more than three speculators. Since the 1st of January of this year up to the 27th of May, day after day, week after week, I might say months after months, a notorious speculator (and who must have been known as such to the officers of the land office at Opelousas) was seen occupying that office to the almost total exclusion of every body else. No other person appeared to understand how to get pre-emption floats through, and no one did succeed until an event which will be stated below. He could be seen followed to and from the land office by crowds of free negroes, Indians, and Spaniards, and the very lowest dregs of society in the counties of Opelousas and Rapides, with their affidavits already prepared by himself, and sworn to by them before some justice of the peace in some remote part of the country. These claims, to an immense extent, are presented and allowed. And upon what evidence? Simply upon the evidence of the parties themselves who desire to make the entry! And would it be believed that the lands where these quarter-sections purported to be located from the affidavit of the applicants, had never been surveyed by the government, nor any competent officer thereof, nor approved nor returned surveyed? I further state that there was not even a private survey made. These facts I know. I have been in the office when the entries were made, and have examined the evidence, which was precisely what I have stated above. This state of things had gone on from the 1st of January until about the middle of April or the 1st of May of the present year, when it was suddenly announced a more rigid rule would thereafter be adopted, which was this: that a sworn deputy surveyor of the United States should, in all cases, make the survey, in order to ascertain if the parties were on the same quarter-section, and to testify before the register that such was the fact. Besides this, they required the applicants to produce very satisfactory evidence from their neighbors that they had cultivated and improved, as stated in their notice. Pre-emption floats, when tested by this rule, were found to be very few indeed.

Governments, like corporations, are considered without souls, and, according to the code of some people's morality, should be swindled and cheated on every occasion. Whether such a distinction can be reconciled to either morality or law, one thing is certain, that equal protection and advantages are not afforded to all. I would further suggest to your excellency to withhold your signature from all patents when entries have been made, and consequent pre-emption plats have resulted since the 1st of June, 1834, to the 1st of July, 1835; that James Ray, lately appointed register of the land office at Opelousas, Louisiana, and some other competent person, be appointed a board of commissioners to examine all the entries from which pre-emption floats have resulted during the above period; that the said board of commissioners have the power to administer an oath to all persons who may appear before them, desiring to make entries of land; that some qualified attorney be appointed to appear before the said commissioners to represent the interest of the government, to put cross-interrogations to elicit the facts, whether true or false, in regard to the validity or illegality of the said claims; that the said board of commissioners shall, under the supervision of the said attorney, take down the evidence in each entry, with its consequent pre-emption floats, shall file the same with them, shall give their opinions upon each respectively in writing, with references to the evidence and law, and shall forward the same to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; that the said board, upon the examination of any pre-emption claims or floats which hitherto have been allowed, are satisfied that they were passed upon the affidavit of the parties alone, without other and corroborating evidence; and if they are further satisfied that the land proposed to be entered, has not been surveyed by a competent officer of the government, approved, and returned to the land office, they shall unconditionally reject the said claims, with their consequent pre-emption floats.

These suggestions are made, not with the belief that they may be adopted in the investigation that may be ordered, but simply with a hope that they might afford some aid in laying down the rules of that investigation. It may not prove so extensive a fraud, and show such gross impositions upon the officers of the government, and such glaring perjury, as did that Arkansas land speculation; yet the investigation will show enough of each to entitle this administrtion to the best gratitude and approbation of its friends in Western Louisiana, as well as the majority of its political opponents.

I am, with great respect, sir, your obedient, humble servant,

BENJAMIN F. LINTON, District Attorney, Western district of Louisiana.

ANDREW JACKSON, President of the United States.

No. 3.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 5, 1835.

SIR: In consequence of the allegations made by B. F. Linton, esq., of extensive frauds and perjuries in the obtaining of pre-emption rights at the land office at Opelousas, I would respectfully recommend that all patents for pre-emption rights granted at that office be suspended and remain suspended, until the claims have been re-examined by the land officer, and their report, together with the additional testimony, returned to this office; that a copy of Mr. Linton's communication be forwarded to the register, and that he be instructed to give public notice, and proceed, in conjunction with the receiver, to receive, anew, testimony in all cases which have been admitted, propounding, in each case, interrogatories to be furnished by this office; and that all claims not fully sustained under this revision be rejected, and repayment ordered. As this will necessarily be a work of considerable labor, it is proper I should state that the fees provided by law, have, it is to be presumed, been received by the late register, who admitted the claims, together with the present receiver; and I would suggest whether it would not be expedient to provide a compensation for the present register, for revising the acts of his official predecessor. Should the recommendations contained above meet your approbation, a form of interrogatories calculated to elicit the truth will be immediately forwarded, with instructions to proceed at once to the investigation.

I am, &c.

ETHAN A. BROWN.

Hon. L. WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 4.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 29, 1835.

SIR: I enclose you a copy of a communication addressed to the President of the United States, by B. F. Linton, esq., upon the subject of the pre-emption claims heretofore awarded at the land office at Opelousas. In consequence of that communication, all patents for pre-emption claims in your district will be suspended until the merits of the claims have been re-examined and fully investigated. This examination will be made in the first instance by yourself, in conjunction with the receiver, and I have to request that you will, immediately upon receipt of this, give public notice, and proceed, anew, to the examination of the claimants themselves, and of such witnesses, in support of the claims, as may present themselves before you for that purpose. Those claims which may be sustained by you, will also be re-examined here, and those heretofore admitted, which shall not be sustained upon your revision, will be regarded as definitely rejected. I enclose you a form of interrogatories calculated to elicit the truth in relation to the validity of each claim, which you will propound, together with such other questions as may be suggested to you by the peculiar circumstances developed in the examination of each particular case. As soon as the examination shall have been completed, I will thank you to forward a report, together with all the testimony, to this office, and have to request that, in the admission of new cases, the utmost caution may be observed, and the instructions with which you have been furnished strictly adhered to. While upon this subject, I deem it important to call your particular attention to one of the allegations of Mr. Linton, viz.: that in addition to the pre-emption granted by the act itself, the claimants have been permitted to enter a back pre-emption, equal in quantity to the tract first granted. The act of the 19th of June, 1834, and that of the 29th of May, 1830, which restrict the quantity of land to be acquired under their provisions to 160 acres, would, of themselves, preclude any such construction; and I am at a loss to conceive how the land offices could so far have misconceived the terms of the act of the 15th June, 1832, granting these back pre-emptions, as to have given to that act a prospective effect, when its provisions are specially restricted to those individuals who were then in possession, under one of the descriptions of title stipulated by the act itself.

I am, &c.

ETHAN A. BROWN.

REGISTER at Opelousas, La.

Instructions to V. M. Garesche, Esq., relative to this examination of the Land Offices in Louisiana, with a view to detect malpractices under the pre-emption law of June 19, 1834.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 29, 1836.

SIR: You are intrusted with the important and difficult duty of instituting inquiries, with the view to protect the government against frauds alleged to be practised under the guise of pre-emption privileges, growing out of the act of the 19th June, 1834, entitled "An act to revive the act entitled an act to grant pre-emption rights to the settlers on the public lands," approved May 29, 1830.

The general character of the allegations, to be found in the documents herewith transmitted, (papers marked Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4,*) and is so general as to render it impracticable for the department to give you specific instructions as to the course of proceedings which ought to govern your conduct in all cases. Such course must remain to be suggested by your own judgment, conformably to what developments shall be made in the progress of your investigations.

The act granting pre-emption rights requires cultivation in the year 1833, and occupancy on the 19th June, 1834, and where two or more persons are settled on the same tract of land, being either a quarter-section or any inferior legal subdivision, or a fraction containing the same or a less quantity than a quarter-section, it admits of the division of the tract equally between the two first actual settlers, each of whom (and no others if there should be more than two) is entitled to locate eighty acres elsewhere, on any public surveyed land in the same land district. This right to locate "elsewhere" has obtained the appellation of a "float."

It will be necessary for you to catechise the land officers as to their understanding of what are the provisions of the pre-emption law, and also as to their understanding of the meaning and intent of the two letters of instruction from the department prescribed for their government, bearing date the 22d July and 23d October, 1834, and to investigate the regulations adopted by them for taking the testimony in support of pre-emption rights; what means do they take to satisfy themselves of the genuineness of the claim; whether the testimony is taken by a magistrate in their presence, where they may have an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses, and if so, whether they do cross-examine them; and if not taken in their presence, whether they issue a commission to others to take the testimony; and if so, under what regulations.

Whether they consider hired men and servants entitled to pre-emption rights, and if they do, require them to furnish an abstract of all the cases wherein they have so acted, showing the date, name, tract, and number of the certificate of purchase.

Whether they have granted floats where more than two actual settlers were on the same tract; if so, require them to designate the tracts out of which such illegal floats were supposed to arise, and also the tracts on which they have been located, designating also the dates, names, and number of certificate in such case.

Also, especially in cases of families where there were several sons, occupying with their father or mother the same tract of land, what has been the course of proceeding in admitting the claim; have floats been granted to all, or any of the sons or other members of the family in such cases.

Is there any reason to believe, as alleged, that pre-emption rights have been obtained in the names of fictitious persons; if so, ascertain and report on all the facts and circumstances accessible to you.

Is there any reason to believe that claims of a character other than pre-emption, have been fabricated, and that such spurious claims have been sold and conveyed in others' names; and that any such conveyances have been put on record in the office of the parish judge or with a notary public, without any evidences existing as to such original fabrications, which are alleged to have been destroyed.

If so, what is to be learned of the nature and extent of such fabricated claims? Have any impositions of such fabricated claims been made or attempted on the land officers?

It will be necessary, by a circumspect course of observation and inquiry, to elicit information from individuals, as to the nature and extent of the alleged abuses. You will, therefore, have to seek and avail yourself of every means of information, from respectable sources, to aid your investigations.

You are required to prosecute these investigations at the offices for the districts of lands subject to sale at New Orleans, St. Helena, Ouachita, and Opelousas, and while at the offices you are requested, moreover, to examine into the state of the books of both register and receiver, ascertaining the cash on hand with the receiver, and see how it conforms with the balance exhibited by his books; and also note any facts or circumstance connected with the conduct of the officers, or the arrangements, requirements, and general economy of their offices, which the knowledge and experience derived from your former examination shall suggest to you as likely to be matters of important and useful information to the government.

It is apprehended that, if malfeasances have been practised, they will be found connected with what are termed "floating rights."

* Furnished him with printed Doc No. 125, H. R. 1st Sess. 24th Cong., containing the information.

You are, therefore, requested to ascertain, as early as practicable after your arrival at the land office, what "floating rights" have been granted, and on what tracts they accrued, and immediately proceed to scrutinize the evidences. Should the officers inform you that the original evidences have been furnished to this office, and that they have not retained copies, it will then be your duty to furnish to this office, as soon as you conveniently can, an abstract showing the tracts entered by floats, and the tracts on which they accrued.

In cases of all floating rights which may hereafter be granted, you are to enjoin on the officers the greatest caution. These cases require a special scrutiny into the validity of the claims under which they originate. The temptation to perjury, in the desire to acquire these "floats," to locate on the choicest spots at the minimum price, is so great as to render it the imperious duty of every faithful land officer to resort to every proper means to prevent imposition, and most fully to satisfy his own judgment of the honesty of purpose of the principals and the credibility of their witnesses, before allowing them. To do this, it may frequently be found indispensably necessary to require the personal attendance of the principals and the witnesses at the land office. There are, no doubt, instances where the object may be attained without such strict requirement, where the character of parties is previously known to the officers.

You will require the land officers invariably to discriminate, in their monthly returns, the lands entered as pre-emptions, by inserting the word "pre-emption," or an abbreviation thereof, opposite the tract in their monthly abstracts; and where the entry is under a float, the word "pre-float" must be inserted opposite.

The receiver's receipts and register's certificates of purchase in such cases, must also indicate that the entry is a pre-emption; and where floats are granted, the certificate of pre-emption must be made to indicate the entry made under the float, by noting the number of the register's certificate issued, thus:

Pre-emption act of June 19, 1834.
Float to A B —Certificate, No.
Float to C B.—Certificate, No.

And the certificate granted, for entries made by floats, must refer back to the number of the certificate granted on the entry of the original pre-emption under which the floats accrued, thus:

Float, under pre-emption—Certificate, No.

The term "float" originating in the land districts long before the pre-emption act of 1830, and which was familiar in the language of the West, has led to a misconception of the character of the thing intended, when applied to the pre-emption law. The right to locate eighty acres elsewhere, to enable the two parties to realize the maximum quantity of land intended to be granted by the law, was not intended to remain outstanding and unlocated, (a float,) but, on the contrary, was intended to be secured, either simultaneously with the entry of the original pre-emption, or within the shortest possible period thereafter, so as to close proceedings in each case both as to the original claim and the floats on the same day, if possible, or at least on the same visit to the land office; the party probably requiring a day, or perhaps two, to look over the maps and make inquiries as to what lands were vacant.

It is very important that this matter should be explained to the land officers, and you are requested to enjoin on them the most rigid observance of the instructions that the float must be located at the time of the entry of the tract on which it accrued.

In all cases where your own judgment is perfectly satisfied as to what the course of proceeding should be under the law and instructions, your are authorized to instruct the land officers, where you find them in error on any points, either as respects the construction of the law or their understanding of the instructions; but in cases where you are doubtful yourself, you are to advise them to suspend action and write for instructions.

You are requested to keep a journal of all your proceedings, which shall exhibit all necessary names, dates, and facts, from which you will prepare your reports, to be made in duplicate, one to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the other to this office.

The President has directed that your compensation shall be six dollars per day for every day employed in making actual examinations at the land offices, and at such other places in the land districts, as may be necessary, and six dollars for every twenty miles travel. You will, therefore, keep an account, showing the number of days actually engaged in making your examinations, at such different points where you may find it indispensably necessary to sojourn, and specially to designate the number of miles travelled.

Although it is expected that you will not protract the examination longer than may be actually necessary, yet it is required that your sojourn, at any given point, should be always for a sufficient length of time to ensure the collection of information necessary as to any important facts to be there obtained, to satisfy your own judgment in view of the special objects of your mission.

I am, &c. ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner.

V. M. GARESCHE, Esq., Wilmington, Delaware.

Memoranda respecting sundry points of instruction under the pre-emption law of June 19, 1834.

Interrogatory 1. There is an opinion of Ralph Cushman, attorney for Rachel Jones, widow of Alexis Lemoine, who disputes the right of land officers propounding questions to claimants to ascertain the truth or falsity of their original declarations. The law, I believe, gives the commissioners power to prescribe the rules by which the claimants are to be governed in establishing the premises required by the law. And the commissioner, I believe, instructs the land officers to receive such proofs as shall be made to their satisfaction. Now, what is understood by being made to their satisfaction? Are they to admit as indisputable every claim that comes before them, backed with its usual portion of affidavits? Have they no discretionary power? And in cases of doubt, acting as they do as a board of commissioners, is it against the rule of evidence that they should cross-examine the parties, or are they not to exercise this right except when there is open and legal objection? The attorney's opinion is against this latter conclusion.

I have been drawn to take notice of the above, from the document being, as I thought, a well-written production. Widow Lemoine's case, bundle No. 1.

Answer. The register and receiver are to judge of the credibility of witnesses as well as the applicability of their testimony to the law. Cross-examination is one of the best devices to elicit truth from evading and prevar icating witnesses; and the land officers have a right to require them to submit to such examination. Although no compulsory process be provided for such cases, yet the refusal to submit impeaches their credit. A jury would seldom put faith in such testimony, and the register and receiver are equally free to disregard it. The refusal furnishes strong presumption that the witnesses cannot bear the test of cross-examination.

Interrogatory 2. If an individual commence to improve a tract of land, and die before his improvements are brought to maturity, his estate sold, and an agent cultivates and occupies the land, enters and proves his claim, can he (this agent) be considered entitled to the rights and privileges to which would have been entitled the first occupant, had he been still alive and in full occupancy? P. B. Martin's case, No. 2.

Answer. No agent, or hired overseer, or laborer, can have a right to pre-emption. The commencement of an improvement does not go to the executor or administrator as part of the estate, nor is it liable to sheriff's sale. The widow and heirs have a right if they consummated the conditions of cultivation and habitation.

Interrogatory 3. Can an individual be twice entitled to pre-emption rights at different periods, when he could prove the second time that his misfortunes had deprived him of the advantage of the first?

Answer. No individual can be entitled to two pre-emption rights under the same law.

Interrogatory 4. In the case of a person residing on a quarter-section and cultivating another, can the settler be allowed his choice of location on either of the quarter-sections? Is he also entitled to a float?

Answer. The statute in terms allows a choice, where an individual resides on one quarter-section and cultivates another. Nevertheless the commissioner considers there must be that reasonable proximity of residence that the latter may be personally attended to, which a distant residence would forbid.

Interrogatory 5. When two members of the same family, both of age, live upon the same quarter-section and under the same roof, but have divided their property and proved also a division of interest, can they be entitled to all the rights and privileges of the pre-emption law, that is, the floats, besides the eighty acres?

Answer. The second section of the instructions allows the cultivator to live on an adjoining quarter-section under particular circumstances. No reason is perceived why he may not reside with a family on the same, and claim his separate improvements and floats.

A cultivates a quarter-section or tract, and resides on another quarter-section or tract, whereon B is settled. A may take either the quarter he cultivates, or divide with B the tract on which they both reside, in which case A and B each are entitled to locate eighty acres elsewhere. A and B may divide by a north and south or east and west line, or they may take the tract jointly, and each take floats.

In the case of two actual settlers, each of whom cultivated in 1833, and had possession on the 19th of June, 1834, and respecting the location of the floats so called.

Where an individual has a pre-emption right upon a tract of land, from which right (he being one of two settlers on the same tract) he is entitled to a float; the tract to which he is thus entitled must be paid for before the day appointed for the commencement of the sales of lands including said tract; he must also locate and pay for the float to which he is entitled, before the said day appointed for the commencement of the sales of lands, including the tract to which he has the right of pre-emption, and on which the float accrues. In other words, floats are liable to the same disabilities as the original pre-emptions under which they accrued, and which the law requires to be located before the commencement of the public sale which shall include such original pre-emption tracts.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 6, 1836.

SIR: Your letter of the 4th instant was received by the mail of this morning. The instructions respecting the examination of the Louisiana land offices were mailed last night for Wilmington, Delaware

As the river Ohio must now be in a boatable condition, (as you suggest,) it will be more advisable for you to take the route down the Mississippi than coastwise. In that case, you will be enabled to visit the upper land offices first, beginning at Ouachita; next Opelousas; after which, I think it would be advisable for you to call at Donaldsonville, to see Surveyor General Williams, who will afford you a great deal of information on a variety of points connected with the object of your mission.

It is possible that, after your examination of the offices at New Orleans and St. Helena, it may be deemed expedient to revisit the upper offices. Of this you will have to judge agreeably to the force of circumstances.

You will be pleased to keep me advised of your movements and observations as often as necessary, and mention the points where letters should be addressed to you at any given time.

A number of copies of the "Public Land Notice," relative to pre-emption rights, is herewith transmitted for distribution in your progress through the upper districts. Had your route been coastwise, as you first contemplated, these would have been sent by mail to New Orleans, to meet you at that point. Supplies of these notices have been already forwarded to the offices, and will be sent to every post-town by mail. Notwithstanding these means, the distribution of them by you will be more satisfactory than to rely on others, who may take little interest in furthering the views of the department in this respect.

I have deemed it proper to enclose to you a formal commission, showing your authority as examiner of the land offices, to be at hand in case any circumstance now unforeseen should render the same useful—a document separate from your instructions, &c.

Provided time and circumstances admit of so doing while at Donaldsonville, it is desired that you should inspect the office of the surveyor general of Louisiana; examine the surveys, (field-notes,) maps, and books; take an inventory of all the township plats protracted, showing what have been furnished to the district land offices by the surveyor general of Louisiana, and what remain to be furnished; also what field-notes remain unprotracted; what field-notes have been recorded, and what remain to be recorded; what field-notes have been transcribed under the appropriations of extra clerk-hire for that object.

Should you, however, find yourself unable to attend to such examination without detriment to the main object of your mission, you will forego the duty.

On your return home from the Louisiana examinations, I would be pleased to have you visit the office of the surveyor general at St. Louis, to make a critical investigation of the state of business in that office, and the extent of the areas in protracting maps from the field-notes of surveys. No positive instructions, however, are to be considered as now given you to make such examination. The foregoing is merely an intimation of what would be desired of you, (and wherein particular instructions would have hereafter to be given,) provided circumstances shall not render it necessary to intrust the same duty to another agent, before your time under the Louisiana engagement would enable you to act; particularly when it is considered that the circuit of your travels in the Louisiana district must depend on circumstances which will develop themselves as you proceed, and which, as to the length of time they may occupy, cannot enter into present calculations.

I am, &c.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner.

V. M. GARESCHE, Wilmington, Delaware.

PUBLIC LAND NOTICE.

A settler on the public land who actually cultivated a tract of public land, or a part thereof, in the year 1833, and also occupied the same on the 19*th of June*, 1834, and who, HONESTLY and in GOOD FAITH, shall prove such cultivation and occupancy, by his own oath and oaths of competent witnesses to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land office for the district wherein the said land may lie, and which land was duly surveyed at the time of the application at the land office to enter the same, is entitled by law to a right of pre-emption of such tract, if the claim be made known and proved before the 20*th of June next*, and before the day when the township, in which such tract may be situated, shall be subject to public sale by the President's proclamation, if such public sale be ordered before the said 20th of June.

No others than cultivators in 1833, who occupied the same land on the 19*th of June*, 1834, are entitled to the benefits of the law aforesaid.

Any attempt to sustain a claim by a false oath WILL BE AN INDICTABLE OFFENCE, and the person so swearing will be liable to a prosecution FOR PERJURY, and subject to be reported as such by the register and receiver, with the names of all concerned therein, to the district attorney of the United States.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.

Beware of what are called "floating rights."

The law of the 19th June, 1834, provides that when two or more persons are settled on the same tract of land, the first two actual settlers shall be permitted to divide the same equally between them, either by a north and south or an east and west line, whichever mode will best secure to each his improvements; and if this cannot be done in the mode prescribed, then the parties are permitted to become joint purchasers of the tract; and in such cases the said first two actual settlers (separately cultivating) are permitted to locate each eighty acres elsewhere in the district; which right to locate elsewhere has obtained in the West the denomination of "FLOATS," or "FLOATING RIGHTS."

The term "float," or "floating right," is improper, inasmuch as it is calculated to induce the belief that the right so to locate may remain outstanding at the pleasure of the proprietor. The contrary is the fact.

The right "to locate eighty acres of land elsewhere," which is the language of the law, (which right has been misnamed a "FLOAT,") is intended by the law to be exercised and secured at the time of the entry of the original pre-emption on which the same accrued, and during the period when the pre-emptor visits the land office for that purpose.

The rights of location, MISNAMED "floats," cannot possibly originate under the law in any other case than that above described, where two bonafide claimants had settled on the same tract of land, and who cultivated different portions of it in 1833, and occupied the same ON THE 19th JUNE, 1834, having separate and distinct interests in the cultivation thereof.

By the term "tract of land," the law intends a quarter-section, containing one hundred and sixty acres, or thereabouts; a half quarter-section containing eighty acres, or thereabouts; a quarter quarter of a section, containing forty acres, or thereabouts; or legal subdivisions of a fractional section, not exceeding, in all, the quantity of one hundred and sixty acres, or thereabouts, when such fractional section contains more than one hundred and sixty acres.

Given under my hand this 22d day of February, 1836.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

AN ACT to revive the act entitled, "An act to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands," approved May 29, 1830.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That every settler or occupant of the public lands, prior to the passage of this act, who is now in possession, and cultivated any part thereof, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, shall be entitled to all the benefits and privileges provided by the act entitled, "An act to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands," approved May twenty-nine, one thousand eight hundred and thirty; and the said act is hereby revived and shall continue in force two years from the passage of this act, and no longer.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That where a person inhabits one quarter-section and cultivates another, he shall be permitted to enter the one or the other at his discretion: Provided, Such occupant shall designate, within six months from the passage of this act, the quarter-section of which he claims the pre-emption under the same.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all persons residing on the public lands, and cultivating the same, prior to the year eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, and who were deprived of the advantages of the law passed on the twenty-ninth May, eighteen hundred and thirty, by the constructions placed on said law, by the Secretary of the Treasury, be, and they are hereby authorized to enter, at the minimum price of the government, one quarter-section of the public lands within said land district.

Approved, June 19, 1834. ANDREW JACKSON.

AVIS SUR LES TERRES PUBLIQUES.

Un domicilié (settler) sur les terres publiques, qui aura de fait cultivé un tract de ces terres ou une partie d'un tract dans l'année 1833, et y aura residé au 19 Juin, 1834, qui honnétement et de bonne foi constera de cette culture et de cette residence sous son propre serment et celui de temoins competens à la satisfaction du contrôleur (register) et du receveur du bureau de terre (land office) dans le district ou est située la terre; laquelle terre aura duement été arpentée au moment ou l'on se sera presenté pour engager (locate) la dite; aura droit par la loi a la pre-emption du dit tract si son titre a été reconnu et prouvé avant le 20 de Juin prochain et avant le jour que le township dans lequel ce tract est situé ne soit sujet à vente publique par une proclamation du President, dans le cas ou cette vente publique dut avoir lieu avant le susdit 20 de Juin.

Aucuns autres que les cultivateurs de 1833, qui auraient residence sur la dite terre au 19 de Juin, 1834, ne peuvent participer au bienfaits de la susdite loi.

Toute tentative à soutenir un titre par un faux serment SERA REPUTEE OFFENSE CRIMINELLE, et la personne coupable de faux peut être poursuivie devant les tribunaux COMME PARJURE et sujet à être ainsi representé a l'avocat general des Etats Unis pour le district, par le contrôleur et receveur qui rapporteront aussi les noms de tous ceux qui y seront concernés.

CAUTION AU PUBLIC.

Mefiez vous de ce qu'on appelle "titres flottans," (floating rights.)

La loi du 19 Juin, 1834, stipule que lorsque deux ou plusieurs personnes seront établies sur le même tract de terre, les deux premiers établis pourront diviser également la terre entr'eux, soit par une ligne tirée nord et sud, ou est et ouest, de la manière la plus convenable pour assurer à chachun ses acquêts ou améliorations; mais si le mode prescrit offriroit quelque difficulté alors il serait permis aux parties de devenir acquereurs conjoints du tract; et dans tels cas les deux premiers domiciliés (cultivant séparément) pourront s'assurer de quatre vingts acres chacun, ailleurs dans le même district; lequel droit a obtenu le nom de "TITRE FLOTTANT," (floats or floating rights.)

Le nom de "titre flottant" est impropre par la raison qu'il peut faire supposer que le droit de retenir (locate) peut étre suspendu à la volenté du proprietaire. Ce'st le contraire.

Le droit "de retenir quatre vingts acres de terre ailleurs," selon l'expression de la loi (lequel droit est faussement appellé "FLOAT,") doit dans l'intention de la loi être exercé au même instant ou se fait l'entrée de la pre-emption originale qui donne lieu à cette reserve (float,) c'est à dire dans l'intervalle de la visite que pour cet object fait le pré-empteur au Bureau de terre.

Les droits de reserve (location) faussement appellés "floats," ne peuvent selon la loi devenir valides que dans le cas prescrit plus haut, savior, quand deux reclamans reconnus tels se sont établis sur le même tract de terre et en ont cultivé differentes portions en 1833, et y ont residé au 19 JUIN 1834; ayant dans la dite culture des interêts distincts et separés.

Par le terme "tract de terre" la loi entered un quart de section contenant cent soixante acres ou environ—un demi quart de section contenant quatre vingts acres ou environ—un quart de quart section contenant quarante acres ou environ; ou subdivisions légales d'une section fractionnaire, n'excedant pas en tout la quantité de cent soixánte acres ou environ, quand la même contient au delà de cent soixante acres.

Apposé ma signature le 22 jour de Fevrier, 1836.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissaire du Bureau Général des Terres.

AN ACT to grant pre-emption rights to settlers on the Public Lands.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That every settler or occupant of the public lands, prior to the passage of this act, who is now in possession, and cultivated any part thereof in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter, with the register of the land office, for the district in which such lands may lie, by legal sub-divisions, any number of acres, not more than one hundred and sixty, or a quarter-section, to include his improvement, upon paying to the United States the then minimum price of said land: Provided, however, That no entry or sale of any lands shall be made, under the provisions of this act, which shall have been reserved for the United States, or either of the several States in which any of the public lands may be situated.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if two or more persons be settled upon the same quarter-section, the same may be divided between the first two actual settlers, if by a north and south or east and west line, the settlement or improvement of each can be included in a half quarter-section; and in such case, the said settlers shall each be entitled to a pre-emption of eighty acres of land elsewhere in said district, so as not to interfere with other settlers having a right of preference.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, prior to any entries being made, under the privileges being given by this act, proof of settlement or improvement shall be made to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land district in which such lands may lie, agreeably to the rules to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for that purpose, which register and receiver shall each be entitled to receive fifty cents for his services therein; and that all assignments and transfers of the right of pre-emption given by this act, prior to the issuance of patents, shall be null and void.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not delay the sale of any of the public lands of the United States beyond the time which has been, or may be appointed for that purpose, by the President's proclamation; nor shall any of the provisions of this act be available to any person or persons who shall fail to make the proof and payment required before the day appointed for the commencement of the sales of lands including the tract or tracts on which the right of pre-emption is claimed; nor shall the right of pre-emption, contemplated by this act, extend to any land which is reserved from sale by act of Congress, or by order of the President, or which may have been appropriated for any purpose whatever.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That this act shall be and remain in force for one year from and after its passage.

Approved, May 29, 1830.

No. 6.

Instructions to the land officers in Louisiana as to the course they are to pursue with applicants for pre-emption.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 29, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: From and after the receipt hereof, you are hereby required to receive all applications for the benefits of the pre-emption law, with the testimony adduced to sustain the same, but not finally to determine, neither to give any opinion in reference to such claims, nor receive payment therefor, nor to commit yourselves in any manner in respect to them; and in cases where entries are demanded in virtue of floating rights, you are not to receive payment therefor: in all cases, however, whether of original pre-emption rights or of floating claims, so called, you are required for the present, until further orders, to do nothing more than to make a distinguishing temporary mark on the township-plat, to show that the tract is claimed under the pre-emption law.

The papers so filed are to be carefully labelled and numbered, each case by itself, with the name of the party claiming. These cases, as they shall be filed, are to be entered on an abstract of them, which you are to keep, and once a fortnight you are required to cause to be published, in the most convenient newspaper, a list to be headed thus:

List of the names of persons claiming the benefits of the pre-emption law of the 19th June, 1834, who alleged that they cultivated the lands claimed in 1833, and had possession thereof on the 19th June, 1834:

List No. ———, from ——— day of ——— to ——— inclusive.

Date of filing claim.	Name of the persons claiming a pre-emption.	County wherein he resides.	Names of the witnesses who support his claim.	Tract.
				Sectional part.	No. of section.	No. of town.	No. of range.

You are also required to state at the close of the list, the names of the parties claiming to locate floating rights, so-called, thus:

"List of the names of persons claiming to locate floating rights at this office from this —— day of ——— to the —— day of the same month inclusive."

"A—— B—— of ——— county (or parish) claims to locate the —— quarter of section No. ——, in township No. —— of range No. ——, in virtue of his pre-emption claim with C—— D—— on the —— quarter of section No. ——, township No. ——, range No. ——," and so on.

"All persons having objections to the validity of any of the foregoing claims, are requested to file and make good the same forthwith."

"Given under our hands this —— day of ———, 1836.

"By order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

——— Register.

——— Receiver.

These lists are to be numbered in regular series, and a copy of them to be regularly forwarded to this office.

You will receive all the objections urged against any of the claims filed, when such objections are sanctioned by evidence, and place the objections in the same file with the papers produced by the claimant. The cases are then to be taken up for examination from time to time, as you may be enabled so to do; but no final determination is to be made until the 1st of June next, at which time you may admit and receive payment for such claims as you are entirely satisfied to be valid. Meanwhile you will communicate with the department in all cases where you are doubtful how to act.

You will, at the expiration of all those lists, send on the accounts of the publishers to this office, with your own certificate that the service has been performed; no payment for such publication being admissible without an express order. You will also cause a suitable number of such lists to be struck off in a handbill-form, and have the same suitably distributed in the district.

Herewith is transmitted a number of copies of a printed proclamation to caution the public against imposition in cases of spurious floating rights, and to diffuse correct information as to what constitutes a valid right of pre-emption under the law. You are requested to diffuse these handbills as extensively as possible throughout your district, and cause them to be stuck up at public places, and send several copies to each postmaster in your district, with a letter requesting that he will do the same.

Editors of newspapers in your district will no doubt insert the proclamation gratuitously, if applied to to do so.

I am, &c. ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner.

REGISTER and RECEIVER at New-Orleans, Opelousas, Ouachita, and St. Helena, Louisiana.

No. 7.

NEW-ORLEANS, April 5, 1836.

SIR: I arrived here early this morning; my endeavors to cross to Ouachita, as you recommended, proved fruitless. There is no communication that I know of (or if there should be, it must be a very circuitous one) except by water, and that from New Orleans.

It will be made evident to you, if you reflect that the receiver at Ouachita, and even the one at Washington, Arkansas, are made to deposit at New Orleans, although, by the map, Natchez is the nearest place. But why should I urge the matter any further? I am sure you entertain no doubt of my disposition to obey your instructions to the letter.

I landed at 9 A. M. and called immediately on Dr. Cannon, made out his balance, got introduced to the United States district attorney, and made inquiry respecting Governor White, without being able to ascertain whether he was in town or not. I am sorry to say that the legislature has adjourned, and that we shall thereby be deprived of the powerful mass of information which I hoped to have derived from its members. I was engaged till dark in the examination of the receiver's books; when done I shall transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury the result of my investigations. One thing struck me forcibly; it is the recurrence of the patronymic, in most of the applications for settlement rights.

I have distributed public land notices as I came down, and tried to elicit some information from the planters; but whilst they admitted that extensive frauds had been practised, they stated that no proofs had come to their knowledge.

April 6.—The governor is in town; I therefore called upon him this morning, and had a long conversation on the subject of the frauds. I could not obtain from him, however, anything specific; he knew, he was confident, that extensive frauds had been committed, but where, and by whom, he was unable to tell; nor could he point out a course by which I might reach the truth; everything was vague and unsatisfactory, notwithstanding he spoke with great warmth on the subject. He appeared to be still under some feeling of irritation at the setting aside of his township locations. He mentioned that a committee had been appointed by the legislature, to investigate the frauds, but could not tell me who they were, and what they had done. There will be no difficulty, I suppose, to have access to the records, and obtain their names, if not the result of their labors. The governor represents Iberville as being the principal theatre of the nefarious transactions.

The receiver's account of public moneys on hand shows a balance in favor of the United States, amounting to $49,000 and upwards, but it has not been produced to me yet. Dr. Cannon was out of the office when I made out the balance. I met him in the afternoon, and requested that I might look into the books of the bank in which the money had been deposited; he objected, as he was busy making preparations to go in the country to visit the family of a dying friend, but that his partner would satisfy me in the morning. This morning, I, therefore, called, and waited, and called again, without being able to see the partner. I have no doubt everything will be found right; but, since I am writing to you, I consider myself bound to notice the circumstance, to shield my own responsibility.

This has led me to reflect how useful it would be to have examiners to scour the country, and keep the receivers in terrorem, for the moneys accumulate very fast in their hands, interest is very high, and temptation is of course very strong—and their liabilities, I believe, are not now in proportion to the trust.

I remain, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Esq., Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington, D.C.

P. S.—You may direct your communications to me at New Orleans. I shall direct Mr. Canonge where to address them to me. It is probable that I shall leave this for Donaldson, and thence to Ouachita or Opelousas, as circumstances might suggest in the course of next week.

No. 8.

NEW ORLEANS, April 8, 1836.

SIR: I had the honor of addressing you on the 5th and 6th instant. Yesterday I had an interview with the United States district attorney. He thinks we shall be able to unravel the mystery of the frauds; with his cooperation, I feel indeed more confident. He has to leave town in a few days, and will be back in eight or ten; he then wishes to meet me here. So as not to be idle, in the mean time, I intend to proceed to St. Helena. In my conversation with the governor, his excellency declared that individuals had called several times at his office to have the signatures of the justice of the peace to their affidavits certified; and he being present at the time, had satisfied himself of their being forgeries; for instance, affidavits were dated on the day of their presentation, although the justices lived upwards of two hundred miles off; some of them had also been out of office more than six months. A refusal to certify was therefore the consequence; but the parties, who should have been taken up, were suffered to depart in peace, although it is probable that, had they been in possession of so many counterfeit bank notes, an offence certainly not more henious, their punishment would have been inevitable. This circumstance proves, beyond doubt, that the justices were in the habit of signing blank affidavits. Had I their names, would it not be sufficient reason for setting aside all documents to which these prevaricators had attached their names? What an opportunity our governor held in his hands, and yet suffered it to escape! Again, his excellency told me that he was constantly harassed by complaints from all quarters respecting fraudulent entries. I desired him to send the complainants to me, that I should be glad to hear all they had to say, but I have seen no one as yet. How much easier it is to complain of an evil than seek a remedy for it. By questioning the people that come to the land office, I have found one that knows, and will make me acquainted, with several malpractices; if I can only find out a few of them, and prove their guilt upon them, I will try and make them turn out State evidence, the truest way being "to set a thief to catch a thief." All that I can do may perhaps be very limited; what think you, therefore, of establishing a court of inquiry and revisal? Little as I could do, still that little might be followed up, but it should be done during the present session of Congress.

After dancing attendance on the receiver's partner for two days, I left a very severe note, and obtained yesterday a sight of the certificate of deposit. Everything was right, as I presumed, only that he was not, as I told him, sufficiently alive to the delicacy of our situations. These interruptions, besides those occasioned in the office by the visits of the purchasers, have retarded the work of examination. I have, nevertheless, finished the receiver's books, beginning from No. 19, and concluding at No. 552.

I am engaged, as I examine the register's books, to look attentively into the applications and their affidavits. These affidavits, made before justices, who also propound the questions, give me no insight whatever into the truth or falsity of the testimony; but before I leave the office I intend to make out a list of these justices and the witnesses, and inquire as to their respectability.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant. V. M. GARESCHE.

ETHAN A BROWN, Esq., Commissioner General Land Office.

No. 9.

NEW ORLEANS, October 22, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor of enclosing a copy of my report to the Secretary of the Treasury, to which I refer for all matters connected with this land office, and the more important object of the fraud. I have been engaged already sixteen days, Sundays deducted. I hope you will not think it too long when you consider that 553 applications have gone three times through my hands, and most of those applications involve two locations. They amount to about 900 entries on the plats, 800 of which I have verified. The district attorney has been gone to Natchez some time; he was to have been absent but ten days, but is not expected, says his partner, for a fortnight. He was, as I have informed you, to have made disclosures on his return. I cannot, however, wait so long; and as I am told that a great many floats and speculations have been made in the district of Ouachita, I will take advantage of the present high water to proceed thither; but as there will be no boat for twelve days to come, I will stop at Donaldson, where I will leave orders for the boat to take me. Colonel Williams, whom I saw here, thinks I can pick up a great deal there. Mr. M. Gordon is, they say, in possession of much information. I have already called on him without success. I wish to see here also Judge Duncan, before whom Charles Bishop took his affidavits. After this is done I shall be ready to leave the city.

I beg leave to call your attention to the construction given by the officers to the double-concession law. In referring to the 15th section of your circular to registers, &c., dated July 22, 1834, I find a clause that would apply favorably to Mr. Milligan's claims.

I have no communication from you to answer. Anything received after my departure from this city will be directed to me according to the instructions I leave. A prompt answer to this might probably find me at Opelousas.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant.

V. M. GARESCHE.

P. S.—I take the liberty to recommend you the enclosure.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner, &c., Washington.

Copy of a report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

NEW ORLEANS, April 21, 1836.

SIR: Instructions from the Commissioner of the General Land Office directed me to proceed to Louisiana, and try to bring to light the frauds said to have been committed in this State on the United States public lands. The allegations being vague and indefinite, consisting of rumors unfortunately too well founded, I believe, but destitute of positive proof, the instructions must, of course, have been of a general character, and I was left to pursue the course which circumstances might suggest. A letter received from the commissioner at Pittsburg instructed me to proceed to Ouachita; but that place, which on the map appears to be on my road in descending the river, has, notwithstanding, no direct communication with Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, or the intermediate places, and its exports and imports are carried on through New Orleans. I therefore advised the commissioner of my inability and regret to comply with his wishes. Very thick fogs have protracted our passage down the river; it was not till the 5th instant that I arrived in this city. I immediately called upon the receiver, and made out the balance, which at the last quarter was $309 26 in his favor, the sum of $47,600 having been deposited in the Commercial Bank on the 7th instant. At this moment, when the sales of public lands are very considerable, the receiver is often in possession of funds far beyond his liabilities. For this there is no excuse, when the depository banks are within reach. It would not, perhaps, be amiss to admonish the officers on this subject. The date of the certificate of deposit will always give the necessary information. I found Mr. Cannon's book correct as to the sums received, but not so as to the names, locations, or quantity of acres. I do not note here the numerous dsscrepancies, it being of little importance after all; but in that respect I was more particular with the register; and below will be found a list of all those that have occurred, which I transmit, that the necessary correction may be made in his quarterly reports, with a view to the correct issuing of the patents. My examination of both offices embraced the certificates Nos. 19 to 553, inclusive. There would have been no necessity, perhaps, for going so far back; but having to examine the applications, in hopes of detecting frauds, it was but little additional labor to confront them with the books. The errors that were discovered were duly rectified; this was done during the intervals which the pursuit of the main object of my mission permitted me to enjoy. On this most important object I have occasionally entertained the Commissioner of the General Land Office of my hopes and fears; the latter, I am sorry to say, predominate greatly. No one is disposed to come forward and offer himself a willing sacrifice to the public good; few Curtii are to be found in the present age. I consider it very unfortunate that I should have arrived here after the legislature had adjourned, for, through the members, I should have received information from every part of the State. Whether it would have been such as to lead to a result, is a subject of doubt with me. As soon as you appear on the ground, said General Ripley, information of every kind will pour upon you. How different is the fact. I have interrogated every planter who has come to the land office. They speak of the frauds as being notorious; but at the same time that they believe, they have no other foundation for their belief than public rumor. I called upon the governor, as he had in his annual message pointed out the evil. I thought that I might have obtained from him some directions how to proceed; but he knew nothing himself—his complaints had nothing specific in them. It is true that one day he detected in his office a fellow who brought a large quantity of the "floats," to have the signature of the justice of the peace before whom the affidavits were taken duly certified; he found that they were spurious, being dated on the very day of their presentation, although they purported to have been signed two hundred miles off. Nay, some of the justices were out of the State, and had been six months out of office. It was then evident that these affidavits had been signed blank and filled up with names and testimony altogether fictitious. You probably wish to know what was done with this man. He was suffered to go off peaceably with his "floats." I do not pretend to give my opinion as to what the governor ought to have done; but it seems to me that a little more rigor might have been exercised.

Understanding that a committee had been appointed, to which had been referred that part of the governor's message that related to the fraudulent purchase of lands, I visited the Journal of the House to obtain the names of those on the committee. I found that a report had been made, but was not copied, and the clerk who had it on file had secured it under lock and key, and was in the country. The governor nor any body else could tell me aught about this report. From the little impression it has left, it may well be inferred that it contained little more than vague allegation. Sunt verba et boces, &c. Several persons who promised to make disclosures have backed off. One Mr. Woolfock, who was lately in Washington, had the honor of dining with the President, was closely questioned by him on the subject of the alleged frauds, and also by the Commissioner. This Mr. W. is a planter, residing, I believe, in the parish of Iberville; but, although the facts have come to his knowledge. he refused, he tells me, to divulge. Is it surprising, when you consider that those engaged in this business belong to every class of society, from the member of the legislature (if I am informed correctly) down to the quarter-quarter-section settler! A large company was formed in New York for the purpose, and have an agent who is continually scouring the country. A second agent from the same quarter has lately arrived, with power to draw to any amount. The constant conversation everywhere is about the large fortunes that have been realized by land speculations. Every one is eager to join—honestly if they can. But can it be supposed for one moment that they would blow up a scheme by which they hope one day to be benefited themselves? This is a sad picture of affairs, to be sure; but, disheartening as it is, I shall, nevertheless, use my utmost exertions not to disappoint the confidence which the President has done me the honor to express in my behalf, although with slender hopes of success. One thing is certain, that, except some plan is devised, the United States have no chance of selling their lands hereafter at a price above the minimum. The district attorney has promised some important information. All that a careful examination of the applications could produce, was a stronger conviction of the malfeasances, without anything palpable. A string of numerous patronymics strike you very often as being of a suspicious character, especially when the bearers are in easy circumstances; as it is hardly to be supposed that the member of this family would, instead of enjoying the comforts of the paternal roof, settle upon some lone spot, with all the hardships incident to a new settlement. The pre-emption rights granted to the Armant family (see certificate No. 87, &c.) are of that nature. All the applications received at this office have come clothed with the requisite testimony taken before a judge or justice of the peace; but of the extent or character of the interrogatories propounded, nothing is known. My belief is, that they are verbal, and that no minute is taken of them. The officers have been, it appears, satisfied with the certificates, and never have thought it necessary to issue a commission for additional evidence. When I arrived the evil had been arrested by the "notice on public lands," and, above all, by the order to publish the names of the pre-emptioners thirty days previous to receiving their applications. The sensation it produced, I am told, was very great. Numerous applications have been lodged at the office by claimants who wish to secure their titles, and, in the meantime, enjoy the money until the near expiration of the law. The register, not knowing whether those applications came under the provision, took legal advice, and it was decided that the new regulations could not have a retrospective effect, and that the applications so lodged must be entered without previous publication. I thought differently, inasmuch as it was not properly a requisition, but a measure of precaution, which ought to extend as far back as it could reach. I, however, consulted the district attorney, who was of my own sentiments, and I therefore instructed the register to cause the old applications to pass the ordeal as well as the recent ones. The officers appeared to understand all the provisions of the new laws; but the one granting double concessions or pre-emption right to back tracts (I have not here the date) seems to receive from them a very singular construction; neither they nor Mr. Cenas, the former register, could show me their authority for acting as they do. This is the case: when the concession of a tract of land fronting a river or bayou has been confirmed, the owner has a right to a back concession equal in superfice, at the minimum price, the area to be formed by producing the lateral lines; this offers no difficulty where there is but one owner, but when the concession or tract of land has become the property of several they often disagree, some wishing to procure what the law allows them, and the others refusing to enter for want of money or other cause, but unwilling to sell their title or abandon it, supposing that when the present law expires, it will be revived by another. Thus the owners in the former case are deprived of the benefit of the act by the obstinacy of the dissenters, as it has been the practice of the officers not to recognize the subdivision of a concession in the granting of a back tract. If it has been so decided to avoid the expenses of surveys, the case cannot reach Mr. George Milligan, who owns, in Plaquemine, a plantation composed of different tracts, the titles to which were subsequently confirmed in his own person. Mr. Milligan claims double concession in the rear of one of his tracts only, to secure some improvements he has made, but at the same time abandons his right to the balance; but, inasmuch as the concession was vested in him alone, they decide he must take the whole or none at all, and have rejected his claim to a portion. Please write to me and to the Land Office what is your decision in this case. Thinking that suborned witnesses might have been produced to prove pre-emption rights, I commenced a list of all the names. The frequent recurrence of the same might, as I thought, have led me to the discovery of some fraud; in that I was disappointed; I, therefore, abandoned the design, and turned my attention to those who had proved the floats, and this is now the result of my investigation. Applications Nos. 327 to 356, 415, 416, 448 to 463, 476 to 478, 495, 505, and 506, about 8,500 acres, proved by one Ch. Bishop, before Judge Jno. W. Duncan, of this city. Nos. 301 to 319, and Nos. 322 to 326, about 3,800 acres, by Samuel Tanner and Jesse Batres, proved before J. B. Laperuse, J. P., of Terrebonne. Nos. 486 to 491, by And. McCallam, about 1,000 acres, before Judge Ed. Rawle, of this city. Nos. 479 to 485, about 1,000 acres, by J. B. Harris, before A. Barry, J. P., of Terrebonne. Nos. 417 to 436, about 3,200 acres, by W. W. Lewis, before Judge Rawle. Nos. 401 to 410, about 800 acres, by A. S. Randolph. There is, I am told, a great speculation in land, and the agent of a New York company, of the name of Bishop, but cannot tell if it is the same person. All the affidavits of Tanner and Batres, and those of J. Harris are detached.

In looking over the applications, I have reason to be convinced that the testimony was often taken in a loose manner; for instance, application No. 98. Under this number one Allen Palmer claimed to enter section 3, township 1, range 7, east, containing 137½ acres. The affidavit was sworn to before Ch. Poydras, justice of the peace, of Point Coupee. One of the witnesses was one James Main, who testified as to the cultivation and occupancy, and deposed further that he was in no manner interested with the said applicant in the said tract of land. And yet, in the very face of this declaration, the said Palmer abandons his right to the said tract to the witness, James Main, because he had also cultivated the same tract, and claims to enter section 14, township 1, range 7, east, 150.70 acres, which he did. The register excuses himself on his being yet new in the business of the office, the affidavit being lodged with him on the 3d December, 1834.

Numbers 87 and 88 are two applications by J. B. Armant, for the benefit of J. B. C. Armant and Edmund Armant; the oath is filled up in the name of the grantees, and sworn to by John B. Armant, the proxy.

No. 102 is an application signed by Peter Elizer and Milly Elizer.

No. 101 is another, signed by Mary Ann Elizer and James Elizer. It requires very little perspicacity to see the same person has signed the four names.

No. 235. Application made by Peregrim pere and Peregrim fils, evidently signed by the same person.

The books in both offices are neatly kept and papers in good order; the register's deputy is an indefatigable man and very popular in his office. I had already occasion to notice, in 1834, that no tract-books are kept. All the books were up to the date. Below is a list of the errata found in the register's books.

I remain, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

No. 10.

DONALDSONVILLE, May 6, 1836.

SIR: I arrived here on Sunday night, 24th ultimo. In my communication, dated New Orleans, 22d ultimo, accompanying my report of the preceding day to the Secretary of the Treasury, I stated the reasons of my coming to this office, the examination of which commenced on the 25th ultimo. Before proceeding any further on this subject, I would call to your mind that, at my leave-taking visit at Washington, you were pleased to require that I should not be sparing of my remarks. If, in making use occasionally of this privilege, I happen to hurt any opinion, or go in opposition to any decision from you or your predecessors, I hope it may be fairly understood that I do not harbor the ridiculous presumption of oppugning sentiments previously expressed, but that my opposition arises solely from my ignorance of decisions already given, and of the grounds on which such decisions were founded. This applies to my remarks on the double concession. I have found that, in this office, a letter had been received from Commissioner E. Haywood, directing the surveyor general to survey the whole of a back concession, without any reference to the number of its owners. It is from this source, no doubt, that the officers at New Orleans have drawn the rule by which they are governed in this case. The remarks contained in my report to the Secretary of the Treasury fall, therefore, to the ground. I cannot, however, dismiss the subject without expressing my fears that this may become a source of litigation.

I have had occasion to speak with some planters, who are determined to have the validity of their claim to a back concession tested before the Supreme Court, the prohibitory clause of your predecessor notwithstanding. It seems to bear particularly hard on some individuals. I saw a case a few days ago, where one out of twenty arrested the action of the majority by his unconquerable obstinacy. Is there no remedy in this instance? Could not an affidavit, proving the opposition of the individual after being summoned and his consequent relinquishment of the right, entitle the others to the benefit of the law?

I make no progress in my discoveries. Very little is said now about the frauds—whether the order to publish has quieted the minds, or that they are tired of the subject. It is not, therefore, presumable that an informant would now stir up the dying embers of this late fire. I succeeded in having a conversation with Mr. M. Gordon, at New Orleans. I understood that gentleman to say that he gave you, while at Washington, the names of twenty persons connected with the frauds. Here he could name nobody, although he thought it a very easy matter to come at the truth, which was to go to every settlement and elicit the truth from the very persons whose interest it was to conceal it. I should not certainly mention this, were it not that an opinion of this kind, manifested in Washington, might lead to a supposition that I had been remiss in my duty. I have not called upon Judge Duncan as I intended. He bears a very respectable character, and his admitting the testimony of Bishop proves that he thought it satisfactory; any shadow of doubt on my part would therefore have been offensive.

The instructions I received from your predecessor, in 1833, directed me, in my examination of the several offices, to go far enough back to satisfy my mind that the books were correctly kept.

I think, however, that it is not enough: the labor of recording being considerably simplified, it ought no longer to be limited to a mere supposition that the records are correct, but there ought to be a thorough conviction that they are so. The mileage, and not the time spent at the offices, constitutes the greatest charge of the examination. The additional number of days spent in that examination, to make it efficient, is, after all, but a trifling item, and nothing compared to the confusion that will arise when the patents are issued, from (as they must be) the very imperfect returns made to your department, and the additional labor of correspondence and loss of time consequent upon such errors.

I beg leave to refer you to my report to the Secretary of the Treasury, a copy of which I here subjoin.

I remain, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Esq., Commissioner, General Land Office, Washington.

DONALDSONVILLE, LA., May 5, 1836.

SIR: When at Pittsburgh, the Commissioner of the General Land Office forwarded to me the copy of your letter to him, bearing date 22d of February last, requesting that I should be furnished with instructions respecting the examination of the office at St. Helena, embracing inquiries into the character and conduct of the officers,

&c., state of the books and papers generally, and, particularly, whether the record of confirmations is in such a state as to admit copies to be promptly taken. Aware that such an investigation, to be efficient, must be done carefully, and require time, I concluded I should reserve it for the last, and avail myself of such information as the surveyor general could communicate, with respect to the private claims lodged in the office at St. Helena, while I could, at the same time, make out a list of all the plats and state of the surveys, and wait for an opportunity for Ouachita, which did not offer at the time of my departure from New Orleans.

As instructed by the Commissioner, I have made an abstract of all the township plats recorded; those whose field notes have not yet been protracted, and of the surveys under contract.

I shall not, however, forward the lists until I can, at the respective offices, note such plats as have been returned. I find that no field notes have been transcribed under the appropriations of extra clerk-hire. The private claims and double-concession law causing daily alterations on the maps would render, at this moment, a copy of the surveys nugatory.

At the sight of so many valuable records lodged in a combustible frame-building, one cannot but regret that some appropriate fire-proof office should not be provided for their security.

The surveyor general is now at Baton Rouge, a delegate to the convention, (Van Buren.) On his return, and while I examine at Ouachita and Opelousas, he will embody all his remarks on the subject of the confirmations.

I have been pursuing, diligently, the subject of the alleged frauds, and really think myself further from the goal than when I first arrived.

The rumor is dying, dying away. As to that strong feeling of discontentment which was said to prevail, I confess, the nearer I approach the places where it might be supposed to exist with the greatest force, the less it is manifested. The governor, who was the first to point it out, has nothing but hearsay evidence to produce. The committee appointed by the legislature could collect, I have been told, but little information on the subject. The obligation to publish the claims has arrested the further progress of the speculators, and seems to have satisfied the community. On the 23d ultimo, the governor informed me that he had in his office a bundle of "floats," left for the signature of the justice, to be authenticated; they were signed by Silby, the same who had previously signed the spurious ones; but this time the date was correct, and the bearer was also the same personage whose "floats" had been rejected. At the appointed time, I presented myself to examine the papers, but they had been returned the evening before, and I was thus deprived of a sight of them. My examination of this office lasted ten days.

I expect the boat for Ouachita will be here shortly. I cannot close this report, without bearing testimony to the merits of Colonel Williams, the surveyor general. As a man, his deportment in his office has made him very popular, and as an officer his efficiency cannot be surpassed. The records are kept in very good order.

I am, respectfully, sir, your most obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

No. 11.

Report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

PLAQUEMINE, LA., May 30, 1836.

SIR: I arrived, on the 10th ultimo, at Ouachita, and examined the books of the register from the first of December last to the ——, comprising Nos. 2468 to 3323. The entry on the plats were verified from 15th September last to No. 3323, making about 1,200 entries. The receiver's books were posted up to the 30th April, and were examined from January last to Nos. 2700 to 3225. The discrepancies, of which there is a list below, were all corrected. The receiver's account stands as follows:

DR.

To balance from last quarter	$28,634 76
To sales in April	70,076 00
To sales in May	37,439 16
	136,149 92

CR.

By deposit in Union Bank, May 14	$26,304 75
By deposit in Commercial Bank	26,333 31
By balance in Union Bank	196 93
By balance in Commercial Bank	542 20
By notes of New Orleans banks	7,605 00
By commissions to officers, about	1,075 30
By expenses of travelling to New Orleans	62 50
By remittances to Washington, April 19	43,500 00
By remittances to Washington, April 19	30.500 00
By balance due by receiver	29 93
	136,149 92

The date of this account has been obliterated, and is, therefore, not stated.

To balance due $29 93, to meet which he had gold and silver amounting to several hundred dollars. I was inclined to begin my examination of the office from the 15th April last, when Mr. Barry left off. It would have taken up probably five or six days more, but there would have been in that case an uninterrupted chain of examination from the 1st of April, 1833. I think, for my part, it should have been done, inasmuch as the errata list below evinces some signs of inaccuracy on the part of the officers, but I was not authorized to do so, my instructions in 1833 directing me to pursue my investigations only far enough back to form a correct judgment of the manner in which the books were kept. I have, nevertheless, here and at New Orleans, gone beyond these limits. The officers are very respectable men, and pay all necessary attention to the business of the office. The register, it is true, lives on his plantation five miles off, but comes to the office very early each morning. The late pre-emption law has burdened his department with infinite labor, requiring a deal of judgment, patience, and activity, and making very excusable any error of posting. I had occasion to mention in my report, dated New Orleans, April 21, the refusal of the officers of that district to grant partial back concessions, where there were more than one proprietor on a confirmed claim, acting from precedents established by Mr. Cenas, the late register, who had received his cue from the surveyor general, to whom Mr. Hayward had sent instructions to that effect. These instructions, however, were not transmitted to the different offices, and the register at Ouachita, to whom this construction of the law has never been communicated, has, therefore, pursued a different course, and every owner of a front tract receives his portion of back land, although the co-proprietors of the concession should not wish to avail themselves of the privilege. Thus, the same law does not receive a unanimous construction in the two districts—an anomaly to be regretted. Power being vested in me to decide in certain cases, from previous instruction received at Washington, it behooves me to state when and how this power has been exercised. The case happened of an individual who wished to locate his pre-emption claim and float on a spot which had been surveyed but without return being made to the office of such survey. The officers wished to know if the location might be allowed; my opinion was against it—no survey being deemed cognizable except returned by the surveyor general, and to acknowledge any other was to defeat the object of the Commissioner's instructions, prohibiting the return of any new survey, with a view to shield from the grasp of eager speculators, a portion of good land not yet in the market. The cause was submitted to the district attorney whose opinion will rule of course.*

Again: It happens often that what is represented on the plat as a water course, is one not coming within the boundary of the law of the 15th June, 1832, granting back concessions, because it may be scarcely navigable, and its banks so low as not to admit of permanent cultivation. In that case a front proprietor may extend his pre-emption over it, but before he has exercised it, his neighbors produce affidavits proving the water-course to be of that description contemplated by the law, and claim to enter the land on its banks by private entry. The register measures the water-course on the map, and if of sufficient width, admits the claim. The width, in my opinion, is not conclusive evidence, for the banks may be low and boggy, and the affidavits of interested persons must be received with great caution. When I have been consulted on the subject, I have always referred to the surveyor general, as the most competent to decide as to matter of fact; his field notes are generally accompanied by such remarks as will solve the question. But then, asks the register, why so much additional expense and inconvenience to the purchaser as results from the reference to the surveyor general, when the plats are sufficient authority for us? True, no unnecessary obstacle should be thrown into the way of the purchaser, but if a plat be good authority, we must confess that the authority of the plat-maker is superior still, and in cases of doubtful character, we must have the best to decide, and avoid, for the sake of sparing trouble to one of the parties, to commit an injustice to the other. In all cases of pre-emption and floats the officers have caused the witnesses to appear and have had them examined and sworn before them. It is my opinion that they have done all that prudence required. They have a good understanding of the law, and if any imposition has been practised upon them, the fault lies in the limits of human provision. I must remark, however, that papers and books are not as neatly kept as might be wished. No tract-books are kept in this office.

After I left Donaldsonville, I stopped at Point Coupée, and called on Colonel Charles Morgan, for whom General Ripley had given me a letter. In a conversation I had with that gentleman, he stated that fraud to a great extent had been committed in that district, but he dealt again in generalities. Without disproving the fact, what can I do with such general statements? People seem very anxious that the defaulters should be brought to light, and that the lands should be taken from them, but, at the same time, leave you all the onus probandi. As I was afraid to lose the Ouachita boat, which was then performing her last trip but one, I left Col. Morgan, with a promise that I should stop on my way down, which I did, but being told that the colonel was at New Orleans, and would not be back for a week, and not finding in his overseer any disposition to invite me in, I being a stranger, and the hour of twelve at night being a sinister one, I took my leave of Point Coupée, and shaped my course for Plaquemine, where I arrived yesterday at two in the morning. I expect the Opelousas steamboat shortly, and will then proceed on.

Being informed that a sum of $2,000 was claimed of Mr. Joseph Friend, the late receiver, for settlement of account, I looked into his account carefully, compared it with the records, and cast up all the sums, and must confess I saw no grounds for such a demand against him, except, indeed, he had not deposited the sums which are so stated, or that he had brought against the United States some inadmissible charge; but in the latter supposition the amount could hardly be so large. There is on his books a balance of $93 35 in his favor, which appears correct to me.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

Hon. LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury, Washington.

P. S.—My examination lasted fourteen days, having deducted from my sojourn of seventeen days two Sundays and one day that I was indisposed. I have drawn $200 on the receiver on account of my salary.

No. 12.

OPELOUSAS, LA., June 9, 1836.

SIR: I enclose you a copy of my report to the Secretary of the Treasury, respecting the alleged frauds committed on the public lands. You will find the result very different from what you imagined; for it is not true that the whole of the Atchafalaya railroad is covered with floats; it is not true that 350 floats have been passed at this office from the 1st of January, 1835, to the 27th of May, same year; it is not true that at any of the offices floats have been located separately from the mother tracts. Colonel Robert A. Crane, (the authority of whose name has been used,) in a conversation with a gentleman, on whose veracity I can rely, expressed himself very differently from what he had done before, and this a few days ago. It may be well to observe that, at the time the district attorney at Opelousas denounced the 350 floats which, on inspecting the records, I found reduced to 19! he himself owned five, being more than one fifth of the whole quantity. Of all the allegations, nothing will be found standing in a short time but a few scattered facts, which will not even be proved without difficulty. At Ouachita and Opelousas, the officers have been, perhaps, too severe in their scrutiny. At New Orleans,

* I have since seen the district attorney, who has given the same decision. Opelousas, June 5th.

where the testimony was not taken before the officers, and where the receiver had his duties performed by a deputy, (who had, besides, the labors of a large store to attend to,) it may be inferred that undue advantage had been taken, but still not to that extent mentioned. I shall go on gathering facts pro and con. The strangeness of the result has induced me to remit to the President a copy of my report. The accompanying letter I enclose for your perusal; the original went off by the last mail. I am going on with the examination of the office, and will probably leave for Donaldson next week.

Please excuse the roughness of my report—I have not time to write it anew.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Copy of a report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

OPELOUSAS, June 9, 1836.

SIR: As long as there was any corner unexplored, and of course any hope of coming at the truth respecting the alleged frauds committed on the public lands, I abstained from expressing my opinion on the subject, not wishing it should be surmised that I was acting under a feeling of despondency unfavorable to the object in view; but I have now reached the last office where these frauds might have been detected; for, at St. Helena, the law has not, I am told, received any application. It becomes, therefore, my duty to declare explicitly that the evil is far, very far, from deserving the importance which it acquired from the message of Governor White, and from the complaints that reached Washington from every section of this State. After all the alarm that has been created, my declaration will no doubt appear very surprising; but it is nevertheless true. The officers at Ouachita and at this place have, in every case, cross-examined parties and witnesses, and sometimes rejected claims which might notwithstanding have been well founded, but which did not rest on sufficiently strong evidence. At New Orleans the expenses of residence are such that the officers dispense with the presence of witnesses, and allowed the testimony to be taken before a magistrate. That these did not attach to this matter the importance it deserved, and suffered spurious claims to be proved, is a lamentable fact; and I have already reported upon the authority of Governor White, that blank affidavits have been signed by a justice of the peace residing at Iberville.

But I found, on inspecting the books, that few had been presented at the office, and cautioned the officers against admitting any bearing the signature of this prevaricating magistrate, except after the closet examination. What could have led to these general complaints of the best public lands being covered with fraudulent floats? complaints which, in many instances, involved the character of the officers themselves, and very undeservedly, too? for the three offices already examined are conducted by honest and meritorious men, whose reward for their arduous task imposed on them by the pre-emption law, ought not to have been the censure of the community. That frauds should have been committed in spite of their vigilance and caution, no one will deny; there is no situation in society in which you can guard against it; and all the pre-emption laws that have been enacted have been subject to the same inconvenience. If the complaints have been louder this time, it is because, not content to grant to the settler that portion of land which he had cultivated and built upon, the legislature thought that his trespassing on the public lands deserved encouragement, and, in addition to what he had already illegally seized, they conferred on him the privilege of choosing in the district a tract of land which he might enter at the minimum price. While, therefore, the honest citizen had to wait until the lands were in the market, and take his chance of an increased auction price, the trespasser had his choice of the best without competition, and at the lowest rate. But this trespasser or pre-emptor had not always the means of obtaining possession of this unexpected boon. The privilege must then have been lost but for the speculator who came to his aid. The pre-emption right being proved, the money advanced, the speculator became the proprietor of the "float," and the settler remained in the possession of the land which he had cultivated. None of the two tracts, however, were entered at the land office; they were kept some time in reserve, in order to collect others and locate a large section, or re-sell at an advanced price. They became in this manner what their title purported, "floats." When at last they fell into the hands of the persons who wished to locate them, application was made at the office, proof was produced, witnesses examined, and the mother tract and float accruing thereon were entered together. There was not in all this anything that was not perfectly honest—anything that was not perfectly legal; and in no instance whatever have I discovered that the location of the principal and consequent was not made simultaneously. But this we did not understand at Washington, deafened, as we were, by the clamor raised. We thought the two tracts had been separated in their action, that while one had been designated the other became merchandise in the market, and was still waiting for some spot on which to rest. The proclamation of the 28th of February, 1836, was made in order to put the community on its guard against purchasing the floats. But the face of the country was checkered, cut up by these locations. Another class of speculators who had certain spots in view, saw with regret their compactness destroyed, and thereby the ruin of their hopes; hence the complaints—hence the accusations of fraud, &c. Honest men joined honestly in the cry; it spread. Some instances, too, of malpractices were reported; it gave weight to the general clamor, and in this manner the shadow became substance. Governor White, carried away probably by the general impression, denounced to the legislature the extensive frauds that had been practised; a committee was appointed to investigate the matter, and nothing was wanting but the proof. Can anything show in a stronger light how far we can be influenced by public opinion than the fact of the district attorney for the western district of Louisiana denouncing officially, that at least three hundred and fifty pre-emption floats had passed the office at Opelousas, from the first of January, 1835, to the 27th of May, same year—when, in fact, I counted only 19! I absolve the gentleman from a wish to mislead, and only quote the error into which he had inadvertently fallen, to prove how far one's mind can be saturated with the rumors of the day as to make it inaccessible to plain truths. Another instance of this is to be found in the extract of a letter to Henry H. Johnson, esq., dated 6th of October, 1835. His informant states that spurious claims have covered all the Atchafalaya railroad. Not knowing, at the time that I was in New Orleans, the townships through which ran this projected railroad, it was not in my power to verify the fact. It runs a distance of twelve miles through the southeastern district. But at Donaldson I procured a map on which is traced the course of the road, and it will appear probably very strange when I state that there is not in this district one solitary instance of float being laid on the passage of that road, which runs twenty-four miles through the district. I have thus shown how misinformed were the two persons whose testimony has been quoted in support of the assertion that very extensive frauds have been committed, and how the community stands in a great measure acquitted of the obloquy cast upon it, although some people no doubt have obtained subsequent titles through the perjury of themselves and friends. But where is the remedy against this? Where is the court—where is the jury that will convict the criminal? I unhesitatingly answer, not one. Although the offence is in itself of the most heinous nature, the motive will never be considered of sufficient importance to affix a stigma to the character of any one. What, in the beginning of this business, created some alarm, and was well calculated at any rate to excite suspicions, was the number of pre-emptors that were brought to light; they seemed to pour in from all quarters, and floats began to deluge the country, and yet nothing was more innocent than these claims, which were presented for the most part by the people who lived in the pine hills, where they knew that it was not probable they would be disturbed for a long time. They were, however, started from their place of obscurity by float-hunters, who, for the sake of the float, agreed to procure for them a title to their settlement, and, in some instances, advanced them money besides. Many thousand acres of land were sold in this manner, which, but for that circumstance, would never have been sold in our lifetime. It may, therefore, be said that the United States obtained nearly $2 50 an acre for all the land that was sold under the act of Congress, dated 29th of May, 1830. But were it even proved that these claimants had no legal right to the tracts acquired, could a decision be obtained against them, the lands taken from them, and revert to the United States? The consequence would be very plain: the day that they were offered at public sale, a combination would be formed by some of those very speculators who are now so loud in their complaints, and to them they would probably be adjudged at the price of $1 25. Which minimum price has always been the maximum obtained by the United States. It is possible that morality would gain in that event, but it is certain that the Treasury would lose.

The facility of passing pre-emption laws is so well understood in these days, that preparations are now making to obtain a revival of the last. I have reason to believe that cabins are now erecting on the choicest lands with a view to avail themselves of the future bounty of Congress. It is a folly to talk of the poor squatter—the laws have never been made for him; he gets but a very small fraction of the whole; all the benefits of the speculation fall into the hands of the intriguer; it is for him that the bill is introduced; it is for him alone that the voice of our orators is heard on the floor of Congress. It is time, indeed, that some opposition should be made to legalizing the trespass of the people upon the public lands, instead of encouraging it by privileges. It is not my wish to throw any imputation on our legislators; but it is made evident that all the land laws have been the source of all the mischief complained of; they have gradually introduced a system of immorality which is daily gaining ground; the success of some cannot but become a strong temptation to others. All the evils that were anticipated from a too high custom-house tariff, namely, the demoralization of the people, are likely to flow from the above cause. As to the officers of the land office, they have discharged their duty faithfully, and I do not think that any blame should be attached to them. Where the evidence was not perfectly satisfactory, further proofs were required, and although some suspicion might have lurked in their minds as to the validity of the claim, they would have been hardly justifiable to have acted upon the impulse of their doubts. Such a discretionary power, if exercised at such a distance from the metropolis, would have been dangerous, have led to just complaints, and in the case of their doubts having been unfounded, have made them liable to the censure of the community. They have therefore contented themselves with such evidence as would have satisfied a court of justice; nay, gone further; but in all cases the guilty may escape through the inability of his judges to refute his testimony. But I will state, in further justification of the officers, that both at Ouachita and at this place, where they strongly suspected an intended fraud, they sent an agent on the spot and had the survey made at their own expense, which resulted in the rejection of the claim. One of the officers who did this was the late Valentine King, whose conduct has been unjustly assailed.

The late pre-emption act has imposed incredible labors upon the officers; no one could believe except he had witnessed it; and I doubt not that many would send their resignations if the act were revived. But the task, though hard, may be censured with ease. As for myself, I do not know in what light my statement will be received, different as it is from preconceived opinions. Should I be so unfortunate as to be liable to the suspicion of having neglected my duty, I must patiently await my justification from the report of the committee which I am told Congress has appointed to investigate the facts. In the meantime I have proved how unfounded was the information transmitted to Washington. More evidence to that effect might be adduced were it not generally believed that the authors of such information, sincere themselves, were misled, however, by interested persons.

I am, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

No. 13.

OPELOUSAS, LA., June 9, 1836.

SIR: I beg leave to submit to you a copy of my report to the Secretary of the Treasury, on the subject of the alleged frauds committed on the public lands. The result of my investigations is so different from what we were led to anticipate from the nature of the information received, that I am not without apprehension that doubts will arise as to the faithful performance of my trust. And yet, sir, the words which your excellency was pleased to address to me when I had the honor of taking my leave, have continually rung in my ears. "Remember," you said, "that we place great confidence in you." I have exerted myself, sir, to deserve that confidence; but it was not in my power to bring forth facts in support of unfounded assertions. The people of Louisiana, who, on my arrival, were to furnish me with abundance of testimony, seemed, on the contrary, quite indifferent on the matter, save a few who spoke vehemently, it is true, on the faith of public rumor, but had nothing tangible to offer. When, subsequently, I discovered that the most important charges had no foundation, and contrasted the conduct of the officers with the idle accusations against them, it was impossible that I should not remain convinced that the whole affair did not deserve the noise that had been made about it. No, sir, it must please you to think that the officers appointed by your excellency have been faithful to their trust, and that the democratic State of Louisiana is, in a great measure, clear of the foul charges brought against it.

I remain, very respectfully, your excellency's obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

His Excellency ANDREW JACKSON, President of the United States.

No. 14.

DONALDSONVILLE, LA., June 23, 1836.

SIR: I have the honor of remitting to you a copy of my report to the Secretary of the Treasury, of the examination of the office at Opelousas. It commenced on the the 3d instant and terminated on the 15th, which, deducting the two intervening Sundays, leaves 11 days. My reports of the 9th and 15th bear the dates of the arrangements of materials, but were written at this place, and have employed four days. I found the office in good order; the plats in a tolerable state of preservation. The method of book-keeping adopted here by the register differs from all others, but answers every purpose; it is the old register of certificates kept by the late Valn. King, namely: the blank applications have been bound in a book form, and after being filled, instead of being cut off and filed, become his record and are signed by him. The register has had a press made for the keeping of his plats; its internal arrangements are well adapted for the intended object; I think it ought to be allowed.

My object in stopping at this place was to receive from the surveyor general the instructions which he had promised relative to the intended examination of St. Helena; but he only returned yesterday from New Orleans, where he had been to assist the officers of the land office in the last struggle of the expiring double-concession law. The press of business, he tells me, was considerable. He found himself obliged to allow the partial double concessions, where the parties could not agree among themselves. The southwestern district will be the only one where such a favor will not have been extended; and the relief law, which I suppose the closing of the office at Ouachita will induce people to sue for, and which it appears to me cannot be refused to them without injustice, will open the door to an extension of all the obnoxious laws which, it was to be hoped, had expired forever.

I have been told that the Maison Rouge and Bastrop claims have been disposed of in Congress. I have had access to papers which prove that the former claim was never made to Maison Rouge, otherwise than as a trustee for the emigrants he might introduce; and that he was not even empowered to allot them the ground himself, which was to have been done by the commandant; and further, that the original did not extend as far down as is now represented; the accession being made by the commandant and the heir of Maison Rouge.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Copy of a report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

OPELOUSAS, LOUISIANA, June 15, 1836.

SIR: I entered on the examination of this office on the 3d instant, and commenced where I presumed my predecessor, Mr. Barry, had left off. The account of the receiver stood as follows:

DR.					CR.
April 30,	To the balance of last account rendered.....	$2,567 75	May 30,	By deposit in Union Bank at Vermillion.....	$25,500 00
	To sales in May.....	33,586 91¼		Stationery.....	59 50
	To sales to this date.....	3,715 21¼	June 2,	Balance in Mechanics and Traders' Bank.....	14,716 19
	Balance in favor of receiver	1,724 10		Deposited by me in said bank	1,318 29
		41,593 98			41,593 98

I have received from him $200 on account of salary.

The double-concession law is understood here and acted upon in the same way as it is at the office at New Orleans, being both notified by the surveyor general of the intentions of Commissioner Hayward respecting the same. But the planters, supposing there must be some mistake, or that the instructions must be repealed, and not wishing that their silence should be construed into an abandonment of their rights, have filed their claims in the office, and deposited the money for their partial back concessions, and wait for a decision from the department. I have already mentioned this case in my report dated New Orleans, April 31, folio 4, and folio 2 of my report dated Plaquemine, 31st May. The surveyor general returning a survey for a whole concession only, in conformity with the instructions of Commissioner Hayward, although the concession is in the hands of different owners, it prevents those individuals from obtaining their certificates, which might enable them to raise money by depositing them in banks. The designation of the back tracks being left blank, prevents the issuance of the certificates.

Several people had filed their pre-emption-claim floats before the law had expired. They were notified to designate both, and neglected doing so. The cases were published. I did not suppose, under those circumstances, that they were entitled to the floats, and advised the officers not to grant them until they had a decision from the government on the subject.

Certificate 952 is for a back concession of 206 acres. The property falling into other hands, the present owner finds that he was entitled to a larger area, and claims to enter the balance, which I did not think should be allowed without the assent of the Commissioner.

No. 242. Under that number Ch. Prefere entered 25th March, 1830, the northeast and southeast quarters of northeast quarter of section 21, township 9 south, range 4 east. Under 1296, Ch. Martin, 19th March, 1836, entered the southwest quarter and southeast quarter of northeast quarter of same section, township, and range—the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter being therefore entered twice. The error probably originated from the entry not being made on the plats. A portion of section 4, township 1 south, range 1 east, is in the same case, being sold 8th of March to J. L. Garret, and on the 8th of June, 1835, to W. L. Hunt; see certificate, Nos. 1282, and 1097. No. 1251. Under that number, there has been entered the southwest quarter of a section stated in the register's book to contain an area of 161.56 acres. This plat and tract-book states the area of the whole section (No. 30) to be 752.96 acres; the fourth of which is therefore 188.24, instead of 151.56. I have instructed the officers to leave off fractions of cents, which are no longer used in merchants' books, and add greatly to the labor of summing up. As directed by the Commissioner, I have also instructed the receiver to discontinue the series of his numbers, but in preference to those of his predecessor, I have made him adopt the series of the register. A case presented itself which proved the necessity. After Mr. King's death, an individual came to the office, who produced a certificate from him for eighty acres of land, but without receipt, although he averred having paid the money. Mr. Rogers, the receiver, assured that he had not received it, and the entry on the tract-book had been erased. There was strong evidence, indeed, that the money had never been paid, but a regard for the character of her late husband made Mrs. King pay the amount. It is evident from this, that if there had been any identity in the register and the receiver's numbers, any omission of that kind must have been discovered immediately. The officers are also in the habit of describing the tracts of land in the most complex manner, for ¼ sections will not be designated by the simple title of N. W. S. W. &c., but are thus described: the N. E. S. E. N. W. and S. W. quarter-section, &c. Nothing is more fatiguing than this constant repetition, and the head gets so bewildered after some time as not to understand it at once; it is also the source of most of the errors of posting on the tract and plat books. In recommending the abandonment of the practice, I only act, I think, in conformity with the suggestions of the late Commissioner, who thought that clearness and simplicity went together. In the same manner I would designate the N. W. and S. W. quarters of N. W. quarter, and N. W. and S. W. quarters of S. W. quarter, by the more simple phrase of W. half of W. half of section, &c. The N. W. and N. E. quarters of S. W. quarter, and N. W. and N. E. quarters of S. E. quarter of section, &c., would be the N. half of S. half of section, &c., and the mind would catch at once the locality without the aid of a diagram.

I am sorry to hear that the register at Ouachita has closed his office on the day that his commission expired. He expressed his doubts to me about the propriety of discharging the duties of the office after his commission was out, but as it was on the eve of the expiration of two laws, when it was expected that very numerous applications would be made, and the disappointment of people therefore very great, I quoted a number of cases to convince him that an officer's commission was never considered expired until he was notified by the department, and that, in the meantime, his acts were acknowledged, and his salary and perquisites continued. I represented the injury done to the public, and the consequent attack that might be made on the department. I thought I had converted him to my opinion; my mortification, therefore, was very great. I hope you will not consider any impropriety in the advice I gave, founded as it was on precedents.

I have been told that what remained of the archives of Pensacola at Havana, has been sent to New Orleans, with what view I cannot tell.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

Copy of a report to the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury.

ST. HELENA, LA., July 15, 1836.

SIR: I commenced examining this office on the 1st instant, and closed on the 14th, inclusive, making 14 days, Sundays not excepted, but exclusive also of the time employed in writing and copying reports, &c. I found on my arrival that the receiver had gone to New Orleans to make a deposit of public moneys, and was detained by the additional bond required by your late circular. The two officers bear very good characters. They are both intelligent, and, as far as I could judge, disposed to do justice and accommodate every one. Mr. John Killian, the register, has not had, it is true, the advantages of a classical education, but he possesses good sense and judgment, and has made himself quite familiar with the business of the office—at least so far as practicable in its confused state. He resides in this village. Mr. P. Childress resides twenty miles from, but talks of removing his family to it shortly. As soon as he returned I made out his account, which stands as follows:

Dr.	To the balance due last quarter		$2,527	54½
	To sales up to last of June		69,008	83¾
			71,536	38¼
Cr.	By deposites in April and May	$43,000 00
	Ditto in June	23,000 00
	Salary for the last quarter	125 00
	Three journeys to Covington to deposit	31 50
	Stationery	9 50

Brought forward		$71,536 38¼
Commission on $66,000 deposited, and $248 66 disbursements	$669 18
Commission for risk on depositing	83 66
Cash on hand, Union Bank notes	$1,000
City Bank	1,210
Commercial	150
New Orleans	100
Atchafalaya	70
Gas lights	100
	2,630 00
		69,548 84
Balance due by the register		1,987 54¼

The receiver's book was very neatly kept—the register's not so much so. The first was examined from No. 220 to 630, and the latter from 208, 1st January, 1834, to 630, May 31, 1836. Both departments had their books one month in arrear when I arrived. The register has engaged a clerk, and was bringing up when I left. Every entry has also been examined on the tract-books and plats. The errata list will be found at foot.

In this district the location of school lands has been changed repeatedly, so as to allow section 16, usually reserved for that purpose, to be opened to private entry; and yet it is probable that this same section 16, was never offered at public sale. There is in the public sales of lands a looseness of manner, and irregularity, about which I shall take the liberty of making some remarks at a future time.

I beg leave to call your attention to some double entries that have been made at this office.

No. 87 purchased the east half of northeast quarter of section 12, T. 4, R. 1 E. No. 99, also.

No. 294 purchased the east half of northwest quarter of section 2, T. 5, R. 1 E. No. 448, also.

No. 413 purchased the northwest quarter and east half of northeast quarter of section 12, township 8, range 4 east. No. 600 subsequently entered the northwest quarter of the same.

Priscilla Wright, formerly P. Lewis, filed proof in the office of her title to a tract of land, being lot 2 of sec. 13, T. 2, R. 1 E. containing 158.63 acres, before Samuel J. Rannells, register; the affidavit went to prove her occupancy of the land since 1819. Being admitted to enter, she deposited the money in the hands of M. P. Childress, who was then clerk of the receiver. In the meantime, one Mr. John Bell, on the 3d of May, 1831, entered the land and lodged the money in the hands of the register himself, who handed it over to the receiver, and had his titles completed; in virtue of which he drove Mrs. Wright from her dwelling and other improvements in 1833. Mrs. Wright's titles are clearly established by the affidavits of four respectable witnesses. The property is now worth upward of $3,000, and Mrs. Wright, who is again a widow, is driven to seek a home elsewhere. She had between 10 and 15 acres in cultivation.

Dr. Hugh Montgomery purchased, the 6th November, 1824, a tract of land said to be the half of the northwest quarter of section 27, T. 4, R. 3 E. 80 acres. On the 10th of same month he entered what is described in the register of certificates as being the N. E. fractional quarter of section 27, 120 acres. According to these entries, there would still be left the half of the N. W. quarter of the vacant section, which I believe is not the case, for N. W. quarter contains 131.40, and the N. E. quarter 65.50 acres, making 196.90. The doctor having paid for 200 acres is evidently the owner of the N. W. and N. E. quarter. Could not the books and his own certificates be rectified so as to embrace the whole of the N. W. quarter, to which he appears evidently entitled, and his titles made complete?

Your note of the 22d of February last to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a copy of which was transmitted to me, requesting that I should examine the land office at this place, meant, as I conceived, that I should go beyond the examination of the every-day business and report on the state of the records. Not knowing whether you were rightly informed respecting the confusion that exists in this branch of the office, I have paid particular attention to the subject, so as to lay before you a synopsis of the facts. The evil is such as to call for immediate remedy, and if a plan can be devised which will secure to every one the peaceable possession of his property, the benefit to the State will be immense. The different commissioners appointed by government, James O. Cosby in particular, had rendered essential services; but the want of order and care in recording his transactions have contributed to throw into its original confusion what he had at first so skilfully elucidated. His successors did not, any more than he, feel the importance of leaving after them proper land-marks; and one of the consequences is, that the same tracts under different definitions, have been confirmed or donated to different persons, and that the most active having obtained their orders of survey have had possession of their lands and left to their co-claimants but empty titles. If the axiom "vigilantibus non dormientibus subvenient leges" is applicable in this case, how will it be where the order of survey is opposed by actual possession and cultivation? Yet the whole district is full of those conflicting claims.

I will now proceed to give a list of the documents in the office, and the state in which I have found them.

The first report of James O. Cosby is in a good state of preservation. It is a certified copy, by Elijah Hayward, esq., of the origiual on file in the General Land Office. The claims are classed under different heads, designated by letters.

A is a register of claims to lands in the district west of Pearl river in Louisiana, founded on complete grants, derived either from the French, British, or Spanish governments, which, in the opinion of James O. Cosby, the commissioner, are valid, agreeably to the laws, usages, or customs of such governments. It comprises 432 claims.

B is a register of claims to land in the same district, founded on orders of survey, (requetes,) permission to settle, or other written evidence of claims derived from either the French, British, or Spanish government, which, in the opinion of the same commissioner, ought to be confirmed. It comprises 320 claims.

C is a register of claims to land in the same district, founded on grants said to be derived from either the French, British, or Spanish government, which, in the opinion of the same commissioner, are not valid agreeably to the laws, usages, and customs of such governments. It comprises 55 claims.

D is a register of claims to land in the same district, founded on orders of survey, permission to settle, or other written evidence of claims, which in the opinion of the commissioner ought not to be confirmed. It comprises 187 claims.

The report concludes with a register of 30 enormous claims.

I suppose that most of the vouchers are on file. I did not think it necessary to examine them: besides in the present state of things such a labor would have been useless or premature.

The act of Congress of the 3d March, 1819, confirms the claims under the letters A and B. The second section provides that claimants under the letter B, who should not have filed with the commissioner the plat and certificate made prior to the 15th day of April, 1813, under the authority of the Spanish government, shall not be entitled to more than 1,280 acres as a donation.

The 3d section of the same act confirms another report of the same commissioner, of which I find two manuscript copies in the office, one under the title of "Abstract containing a list of actual settlers to land in the district who have no claims thereto, derived from the French, British, or Spanish government," dated 7th June, 1813; and another, under the title of "Supplemental list of actual settlers," without date. The acts of Congress confirm the lists, and limit the donations to 640 acres, where it shall be satisfactorily proved that the land had been inhabited or cultivated on or before the 15th of April, 1813, provided, that not more than one tract shall be thus granted to any one person. The law makes here no distinction of those who claim in their own right or claim by purchase. I would hardly suppose, however, that the second class is also embraced. Yet, Congress approved the list without comment, and the commissioners, setting aside the proviso, have made, if I am informed rightly, donations conformably to their list, and allotted several to one person, the act of the 3d of March, 1819, renewed by the subsequent acts of the 8th of May, 1822, and 4th May, 1826, notwithstanding. These donations having passed through several hands, have obtained, from the circumstance of their never being disputed, a sanction amounting to almost a consent, on the part of the United States. To disturb this would, therefore, be to disturb the whole community, and throw on the sales of public lands a doubt and uncertainty highly injurious to all parties.

Two incomplete printed copies of reports from Ch. S. Cosby and Fulwar Skipwith, land officers of this district, dated 17th of March and 18th of November, 1820, embracing various lists of claims, in numerical order, addressed to Josiah Meigs, esq., Commissioner.

The acts of Congress of 8th May, 1822, confirm all the lists of claims recommended by the above-named officers, where it appears by said reports or lists that the land claimed or settled on had been actually inhabited and cultivated by such person or persons, in whose name it is claimed, on or before the 15th day of April, 1813, and limits the donation to 640 acres.

There is a register of claims of various denominations, signed by Cosby and Skipwith, without date, and certified by Commissioner G. W. Graham, supposed to be of the year 1821. It is called No. 2. Also, a list of renewed claims, under the letter E, marked number 3. My search after No. 1 has been unavailing. The list under the letter E are renewed claims, which had been, it appears, previously rejected under the letters D and C. It contains a column headed thus: "Reference to commissioner's report." Ch. S. Cosby and F. Skipwith's report must therefore be meant. Each claim is prefixed with the letter D or C, under whose head it must have been previously presented; its numerical order is also noted. Owing to some mistake perhaps in the copy, I I could not find the connection. There is another similar list, dated 24th July, 1831, signed Cosby and Skipwith, with which I have been equally unfortunate, which induces me to believe that the office might also be deprived of the reports referred to. The commissioners in each subsequent report, assuming new series of numbers, have cut us off from the possibility of ascertaining the fact, at least in this office.

Some of these rejected claims, brought forward a second time, warrant a belief that further proof had been produced satisfactory to the commissioners. Be it so or not, I could not discover any, and yet some have been confirmed.

A printed report of Samuel J. Rannells and Wm. Kinchen, dated 19th January, 1825, and a supplemental manuscript report by the same, dated December 5, 1825, certified by Commissioner Elijah Hayward. There is also a printed copy of the same in bad order. An act of Congress of the 4th of May, 1826, confirms the preceding reports, as far as they are recommended for confirmation.

"Several sheets stitched together," purporting to be a list of certificates issued from the office. On the first page is an "Abstract of patent certificates, issued on the 7th of February, 1825, numbered 1, 2, 3;" each refers to "original certificates" bearing a No., and also to certain claims also bearing a No.; but I was unsuccessful in identifying any of these. They are signed by David Bradford, clerk. Pages 2, 3, 4, are blank; page 5 contains a list of two certificates, Nos. 1 and 2, referring to Jas. O. Cosby's report; each certificate bears date of its issuance, by Samuel J. Rannells and Wm. Kinchen. This series seemed intended for the claims classed A, in Jas. O. Cosby's report. Pages 6, 7, 8, are blank. Pages 9 to 11 contain a list of 13 certificates, the first 10 issued by Jas. M. Bradford and Wm. Kinchen, from the register B, of Cosby and Skipwith. Reference is made to the letter and No. of the report. It is continued by Samuel J. Rannells and William Kinchen. No. 11 has no reference to any report. At page 13 is an "Abstract of certificates" issued by Jas. M. Bradford and Wm. Kinchen, from "Register A, of Cosby and Skipwith's new series." New series is here meant, I suppose, in opposition to the series of Jas. O. Cosby; there are 6 of those certificates. Part of pages 14, 15, and 16, are blank. In page 17 is an "Abstract of certificates," issued by the same; it is headed "New series actual settlers:" the first five are from Cosby and Skipwith's reports, without any other reference, which makes it very tedious to look for the claim. From No. 6 to 17, there is no reference to any report, and I could not find their analogy. Page 20 is blank; 21 has a list of "certificates granted by Jas. M. Bradford and Wm. Kinchen in duplicates;" it begins at No. 5 and runs on to 33, at the bottom of page 24. Some of them have reference to register A; others have no dates. Pages 25 and 26 contain "A list of certificates granted to actual settlers." It begins from No. 2, 3, and on to No. 31; they partly refer to the reports. The former list, that broke off at No. 33, page 24, is resumed at page 26, and continues to No. 97, page 36; it then proceeds in another book, intermixing a new series, so-called, which begins at No. 28. Up to No. 125, old series, and 41, new series, nothing more than the names of the claimants are mentioned, without even the date of the certificate. Below No. 127 is a line drawn, under which is written, "July 1st, 1824, new report;" some of these certificates are dated. After No. 189 commences a new report, which extends to 317, with references and occasional dates. No. 318 being part off, the next report begins at No. 319, and concludes at No. 357; it is dated 18th April; the year, I presume, is 1825. The remarks that were made on the preceding report are also applicable to this. The list continues in this manner as far as No. 690, which concludes the book. From 556 to 566, ten numbers have been left out. On the back of these sheets is a list of 8 certificates, without enumeration, said to be neglected entries. This list of certificates is continued through other sheets, as far as No. 764. The last report is dated July 1, 1829. The first number of this series was issued in February, 1825; and yet the orders of survey refer to other certificates as far back as 1819. What has become of these certificates, which comprise a period of six years? I have made up from scraps on file in this office, a list of certificates of actual settlers, from No. 160 to 287, and from 400 to 836; they bear neither dates nor signatures, and are the roughest kind of memoranda.

The prolixity of my description arises from my wish to lay before you the mutilated state of the documents in this office; and in doing so, I could not escape being wearisome. You will perceive that the numerical order has been so much abused that instead of elucidating, it only tends to increase the confusion.

There are about 1,500 orders of survey made up into different books with an index; very few are signed, and their references are unmethodical; the issuers of these orders are still alive. A copy of these orders, although certified by the register, can serve no legal purpose. It will be necessary to have some legislation on the subject. In their present state the banks will not receive them as titles.

The proofs in support of settlement claims were the oath of the settler, supported by that of a witness, before a magistrate. They are put up in bundles, and marked with a letter of the alphabet. The index to these is arranged in alphabetical order. All claims under the French, British, and Spanish governments are copied in bound books; they are those reported under the letters A and B by the commissioners. Each of these books is numbered alphabetically. The index to these wants the letter A, and part of B. From this inventory of the documents in the office, you will perceive how copies of very few titles can be obtained; the records not being anything else but very informal memoranda.

James O. Cosby, a gentleman of unquestionable talent, issued all his documents without retaining authenticated copies; his successors imitated his disorder, although men of talents themselves; so that the necessity of rummaging all the books and papers, when titles are ascertained, makes the archives a perfect scene of confusion. Much time besides is lost; for the best part of the day is often spent in fruitless search, and the register unable after all to decide on the validity of the claim.

Almost every tract of land in this district derived from Spanish grants or actual settlement could have its title disputed. To remedy the present evil as far as practicable, it appears to me that the first thing to be done is to embody all the different reports of the commissioners into one, the names arranged in alphabetical order, with one column designating the previous report from which the title is derived, the letter under which it has been classed, and the number attached to it; another column would explain whether it had been confirmed, and if so, what proofs had been filed in the office, also, due reference to such proofs. Something must also be done to authenticate the orders of survey. Some original ones issued from this office are in the archives of the surveyor general at Donaldsonville; the others have been lost by being handed to the deputy surveyor, who, except in very few instances, never returned them; and to increase the present difficulty of the situation, most of those surveyors are since dead. Some of the orders also were verbal. In short, out of about 4,000 claims, 1,500 at most have their orders of survey, and the greater part of these are not signed.

What I have taken the liberty to suggest is but the outline, and the first step to be taken; the person charged with its execution would, as he proceeded, extend the plan agreeably to the nature of the documents, keeping in view that he has to make out a complete index to the whole, and spin the thread which is to lead the officers through the intricacies of this labyrinth. With an exposé of this kind it will be easy to determine upon the course to be pursued. A number of persons, contrary to the intentions of Congress, have had different rights conceded to them; they have escaped scrutiny, mixed as they were in different reports. Another great evil, for which I cannot see a remedy, is the complaint arising from erroneous surveys; some of the proprietors having their lands completely smothered under the conflicting claims of two lateral neighbors, who not only pass over his lands, but overlap their respective limits.

As delay serves only to increase the evil, I respectfully suggest the propriety of adopting measures as speedily as possible.

The records of confirmation will admit at any time of copies being taken from them, except the references should be faulty, which is often the case.

Colonel Williams, the surveyor general, accompanied me to St. Helena, where he stopped thirty-six hours. He found that the different reports of the commissioners which were on file in the office would be of great use to him in draughting his plats. He will probably write for them.

I forgot to mention in its place an error in the receiver's last accounts; he charges $25 for risk in depositing on 84 miles, instead of 42, the distance from St. Helena to Covington, the place of deposit. The difference is $12 50.

I have made out a list of the furniture in the office, which could not be done in 1833, owing to the absence of the officers.

I enclose a copy of my letter to the officers of the land office at Quachita, dated 28th June last.

I have drawn $100 from the receiver.

I am, respectfully, sir, your very obedient servant, V. M. GARESCHE.

A copy of a letter addressed to the register and receiver of public moneys at Ouachita, Louisiana, dated

DONALDSONVILLE, LA., June 28, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I had this morning a conversation with an individual who is recently from Monroe, where he has been to prove pre-emption rights and floats, but in consequence of the office being closed, left without accomplishing his object but partially, his claims being admitted on file, to be entered when the register resumed his functions. Perhaps it will be better to pursue that course, although an irregular one, than to give rise to relief laws, which would open the door to claims of every kind, and throw us into all the confusion from which we have so fortunately emerged. Of the propriety of these proceedings, however, I am not qualified to state an opinion, otherwise than as a simple individual. But this same person stated further, that he was admitted to designate his floats on lands the surveys of which had not been returned. You are aware, I presume, that the object of the department in ordering plats not to be returned, was to save a portion of excellent lands from being floated upon, and that it would be defeating their object were you to admit these claims in suspense, to be recorded at a future period. My opinion is, that you are not to permit any land to be floated on except such as you had the surveys of on the 19th instant, the day when the law expired. Surveys returned on or after the 19th must be considered inaccessible to floats, although you should admit the floats to be entered at a subsequent period, as (in addition to the reasons stated above) it would give to a portion of the community advantages of which others had been frustrated. I argue, of course, from my knowledge of the sentiments of the department in relation to the matter. But should they have received any modification, and a new circular prescribed a new rule of conduct, what I now state is to be considered as null and void. No survey is to be considered as returned except under the signature of the surveyor general, in his official capacity.

Respectfully, &c. V. M. GARESCHE.

NEW ORLEANS, July 31, 1836.

SIR: I have this moment withdrawn from the post office your letter, dated the 6th May last, with the accompanying document relating to S. Davis, esq.'s claims. I met Mr. S. B. in this city in April last; he mentioned the business to me, and I desired him to forward to me at Ouachita, all the necessary information, that I might investigate the conduct of the register respecting this matter. He did so, but the vouchers were less full than at present. I examined carefully the subject, and wrote to him that I thought the conduct of the officer free from blame, and that the fault was his, for not having had his claims recorded in time; but that probably Congress would grant him leave to locate elsewhere. I have not, unfortunately, retained a copy of my letter. Perhaps, with the additional proofs I now have, I might change my opinion. As to Mr. Woodson Wren's statement, (I believe that gentleman is postmaster at Natchez,) I have heard it said it was not correct, and I believe that affidavits were preparing to prove it such. This is all that I remember of this affair. Mr. Davis having written to me on two different occasions, sending plats, &c., I was enabled to give the subject the attention it deserves, and if convinced that the register had acted wrong, would have reported the case to you, as has been invariably my custom. After all, I might be mistaken. I therefore write to Mr. S. Davis to send me, at Washington, under your cover, the copy of the letter I addressed him.

I have the honor of remitting to you a copy of my report to the Secretary of the Treasury, respecting the examination of the office at St. Helena. A detailed inventory of the records was not, I believe, contemplated, and would at present have answered no purpose. One of the books containing copies of confirmations, and marked E, is missing, as I have been since informed.

I also remit the inventory of the furniture; a copy of a letter I wrote to the officers of the land office at Ouachita; the list of the townships surveyed and to be surveyed at Donaldson, and those returned to the different offices; and, finally, a copy of my report to the Secretary of the Treasury, respecting my examination of the receiver's account in this city. You will understand my motives for so doing. You will perceive that the sales from the 31st May to the 18th June have amounted to the enormous sum of $276,000.

The original of my St. Helena report was mailed in this city on the 29th instant, that respecting the receiver's account this morning.

The time employed in such examination, writing, and copying my reports—eleven days.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

V. M. GARESCHE.

ETHAN A. BROWN, Esq., Com'r of the General Land Office, Washington.

P. S.—Since writing the above, I remember having condemned the register at Ouachita for having suffered Mr. Samuel Davis's back tract to be floated on, and his answer was, that it fronted on a bayou. If you refer to my Ouachita report, dated Plaquemine, at the bottom of page 2, you will see the arguments on both sides. The paragraph begins—"It happens often that what is represented," &c.

Respectfully, V. M. G.

ST. HELENA, July 15, 1836.

NEW ORLEANS.

SIR: I beg leave to call your attention to the accompanying papers; they are the proofs of a fraud attempted to be committed upon the rights of myself and others, by Charles Bishop, the agent of L. Millandon, esq., and Andrew Hodge, esq.

It may be necessary, in the first place, to make some explanation of the manner in which assignments have generally been executed in this State, and the understanding supposed to exist between the parties to them.

The law approved the 19th June, 1834, allowed a privilege of pre-emption to persons who had cultivated and then occupied public land. A quarter-section to each settler was the quantity upon which this privilege might be exercised. If two persons occupied the same quarter-section, they were permitted to enter it, and to take one hundred and sixty acres elsewhere, holding both tracts as tenants in common: this generally occurred.

As soon as this act was approved, certain individuals commenced to collect applications, or floats, as they were called, making these conditions with the claimants, viz.: that they would pay for all the land applied for, (320 acres,) provided the applicant would assign to them one of the tracts, or one half of the land.

The assignments were signed and acknowledged in blank, before the application was presented, that is, the name of the assignee and the description of the land were not inserted.

This will be seen by the certificate of Samuel Martin, esq., a justice of the peace for the parish of Iberville. With regard to the names included therein, the first ten, with the exception of Martinez and Mary McCleon, have acknowledged assignments to me, not in blank, before F. D. Miller, esq., justice of the peace and notary public.

In many cases injustice was done the applicants by allotting them a tract of eighty or even forty acres, and filling up the blank assignments with the residue of the land purchased, amounting to near three hundred acres, which had been located in a very valuable township. See receipt of Glin and Hudson, No. 383; Gonzaly and Hudson, No. 255; V. S. C. Jervieque and D. S. Jervieque, No. 887.

This was contrary to express agreement, even admitting that the assignments were executed in legal form.

But some have been bolder still in their attempts to deprive the original purchasers of their rights. They have inserted both tracts of land in their blank assignments, made before the purchase of the land, and intended for one half only of the two tracts which was supposed to be the tract floated on, or allowed to supply the deficiency of the quarter-section occupied by the claimants.

And this has been done sometimes without consulting the parties, and contrary to their wishes, sometimes with their consent obtained by false representations. Charles Bishop, the agent and partner of L. Millandon and A. Hodge, has been the perpetrator, in their behalf, of these frauds.

I am thus particular because my own interests are at stake, being a purchaser from the persons mentioned in Justice Martin's certificate, of one half of the land purchased by them; and I desire that you will not issue patents on the certificates accompanying the transfers supposed to be made by them to L. Millandon or A. Hodge. Of these certificates I will say a word. They were procured from the register on the presentation of the assignments after they were filled up; he was imposed on, for he could not know whether these instruments had been filled up before or after acknowledgment.

I shall forward the assignments made to me in the form suggested by E. A. Brown, esq.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE W. WATTERSTON.

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, justice of the peace for the parish of Iberville, in the State of Louisiana, John McCon, of the said parish and State, who, being duly sworn, deposed and said, that, whereas a certain Charles Bishop, a speculator in lands, has left in the hands of his mother, Margaret McCon, money to pay him for a tract of land purchased by him from government, conjointly with his sister, Mary McCon, which he has never sold and never intended to sell to the said Charles Bishop; and believing that he has filled up a blank assignment made to him, or other person unknown, (for one only of the two tracts of land purchased by him and his sister, Mary McCon, as aforesaid,) with both tracts of land, in order to procure a patent for them both fraudulently, he hereby declares formally, and before a proper officer, in order that his case may be brought properly before the officers of government, that he has never been spoken to by the said Charles Bishop on the subject of the sale of this undivided half of the land owned by him and Mary McCon, and that he has never sold, and never intends to sell, to the said Charles Bishop, any portion of the said property.

Watterston, of New Orleans, the undivided half of a certain tract of land, known, according to the surveys of the United States, as the northwest quarter of section No. 36, in township No. 8, of range No. 1. All the persons above mentioned, with the exception of the first ten, have acknowledged before me transfers of the undivided half of the lands purchased by them, to George W. Watterston.

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1586. [2D SESSION.

APPLICATION OF ST. LOUIS FOR THE REJECTION OF ANY CLAIMS TO LAND WITHIN THE LIMITS OF THE COMMON OF THAT CITY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 13, 1837.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

The petition of the mayor and board of aldermen of the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, represents: That immediately after the first settlement of St. Louis, and some time in the year 1764, a tract of land, adjacent to the village, was fenced, to be used as commons, and that the same, with some enlargements, was used as commons by the inhabitants of St. Louis, with the approbation of the government, from that time till the cession of Louisiana to the United States, it being the uniform custom, both under the French and Spanish governments, in laying out and establishing towns and villages, to annex to them a portion of the adjacent country adequate for the purpose, to be used by the inhabitants in common for cutting wood and pasturing their cattle, which was called the commons; that, soon after the establishment of a board of commissioners for the adjustment of land claims, the citizens of St. Louis laid before that board their claim to said land, accompanied with proofs of occupancy, together with a survey of the same, made by Antoine Soulard, on 22d February, 1806. That on the 14th of July of that year said board took the claim into consideration, and though they did not confirm it, they remarked that "the claim originated under the French government; that grants of common were usual under the French and Spanish governments, and in conformity with their respective laws, and that they deemed it to be equitable under the Spanish law." That afterward, on the 13th day of June, 1812, Congress, by an act of that date, confirmed to the inhabitants of St. Louis their claims to commons; which act is a statutory conveyance, using words of the present tense, and operate to vest all title in said commons which the United States could convey, in the inhabitants of St. Louis. That, by another act, approved January 27, 1831, Congress recognized the former, and again relinquished all such right as the United States could convey to the inhabitants of St. Louis.

Your petitioners further state that, by the act of 13th June, 1812, above cited, it was provided that the out boundary line of said commons should be run by the United States surveyor, which, not having been done, Congress again ordered it in an act approved May 26, 1824, entitled, "An act supplementary to an act passed on the thirteenth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twelve, entitled, 'An act making further provision for settling the claims of land in the Territory of Missouri;'" by which act the surveyor general was required "to survey and designate, so soon after the passage of this act as may be, the commons belonging to said towns and villages, (St. Louis being one,) according to their respective claims and confirmations," &c. That under this act an official survey of the St. Louis commons was made in 1833, which survey comprehends the whole of the land included in that of Soulard above mentioned, and confirmed by the act of 13th June, 1812; and your petitioners, under the laws of Missouri, vesting in them the power so to do, have proceeded to subdivide and lease, or sell, the tract of land comprehended in said survey, or otherwise to dispose of it, according to the authority vested in them, and for the best interest of the inhabitants of St. Louis.

Your petitioners furthermore represent that several persons claim portions of the said tract, so confirmed to St. Louis as commons, under different pretences, and are endeavoring to procure the favorable action of Congress on their pretensions to the confirmation of the same, against which your petitioners beg leave to remonstrate. They insist that, by the several acts of Congress above referred to, all title and estate in said land which the United States could convey, has been relinquished to the citizens of St. Louis, and that there is nothing now which the United States can convey or confirm to any other person within the limits of those commons, and that any act purporting to confirm any of that land to any other claimant, though in itself inoperative, would yet work injury to the inhabitants of St. Louis, by raising up litigants, with a color of right to question the title and harass your petitioners with lawsuits that, whatever show of claim may be exhibited by any person to a portion of said commons, that of the inhabitants of St. Louis is at any rate the eldest and most meritorious, having originated with the foundation of St. Louis, and having from that time down to the cession to the United States of Louisiana, been occupied, without intermission, by the authority of the government for the time being. Wherefore, they respectfully request that your honorable bodies will refuse to confirm the claim of any person to land lying within the limits of said commons, should application be made for that purpose. And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Adopted by the board of aldermen, January 20, 1837. Approved January 25, 1837.

APPLICATION OF MICHIGAN FOR LAND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE NAVIGATION OF THE RIVERS IN THAT STATE.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FEBRUARY 13, 1837.

IN SENATE, January 23, 1837.

Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Michigan, That our senators in Congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their exertions to obtain the assent of the Congress of the United States, to the propositions contained in the "ordinance," relative to certain propositions made by Congress to the legislature of the State of Michigan, approved July 25, 1836; and likewise, to obtain from Congress, at its present session, an appropriation of five hundred thousand acres of land, for the purpose of improving the navigation of our rivers.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be required to transmit a copy of these instructions to our senators and representatives in the Congress of the United States.

ON A CLAIM TO LAND IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 15, 1837.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 11, 1837.

SIR: I have the honor to return the petition and papers of John Fletcher, referred by you to this office.

The tract of 640 acres, in the county of Concordia, confirmed to Robert Elliott, in the right of John Otts, by certificate B, No. 402, of the board of commissioners at Opelousas, is described in that certificate as being situate on the Mississippi, "bounded on the upper side by a thoroughfare communicating between the Mississippi and Red rivers, called 'the cut-off;'" and the petitioner alleges that this confirmation should embrace the tract which has been surveyed as section 34, T. 3 N., R. 8 E., in the district north of Red river, which has been sold by the United States. Respecting an attempt heretofore made to locate this claim upon that section, I beg leave to transmit copies of the following letters, viz.: of the 25th September, 1829, from Surveyor General Turner; of 26th and 30th of October, 1829, to that officer, and his reply of the 25th of November, 1829.

By the enclosed copy of part of the plat of the township, it will be seen that the thoroughfare from the Mississippi to Red river, called "the cut-off," is situate between the two confirmed claims of Middleton, and not at the upper corner of section 34.

If the statements made in the petition and accompanying papers are correct, I do not see the absolute necessity of any legislation on the subject, as, upon satisfactory evidence being produced to the surveyor general, showing that the confirmation to Elliott actually covers the whole or part of section 34, it will be surveyed, and as the sale of the land thus previously confirmed is void, the rights of the confirmee will not be affected thereby, and the money paid therefor will be refunded to the purchaser. Should it be found that the land intended to be confirmed to Elliott had been previously confirmed to Middleton, the question as to their respective titles is one that should be settled by the proper judicial tribunals.

By an examination of the copy of the survey of this claim, as made by Dawson, certified by Surveyor General Trist, which accompanies the petition, it will be seen that some words at the conclusion of Mr. Trist's certificate have been erased, and, from a close examination, they appear to have been the words "nor approved."

In regard to the claim of William Taylor to 800 arpens, which the petition, &c., state to be section 33, T. 3, R. 8 E., being immediately north of and adjoining the tract alleged to have been confirmed to Elliott, I have to state that, by the documents accompanying the petition, and by the reports in this office, this claim appears to have been entered with the old board of commissioners at Opelousas, by Hatton Middleton, under a deed of sale from William Taylor to him, as containing 350 arpens, but was rejected by them as not being supported in the manner required by law.

It may also be proper to state that, by a voucher accompanying the accounts of Surveyor General Davis, for the first quarter of 1825, it appears that section 33 had been "claimed by Francis Girault, the confirmation of which is doubtful;" and that section 34 had been "claimed by John A. Girault, as a pre-emption;" but this office has no information showing the nature of the title under which those sections were thus claimed.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES WHITCOMB, Commissioner.

Hon. L. F. LINN, Chairman Committee Private Land Claims, Senate U. S.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Mississippi, September 25, 1829.

SIR: I have enclosed you a copy of the certificate of confirmation in favor of Robert Elliott. By a comparison of the certificate of confirmation with the map of township 3 N., R. 8 E. district north of Red river, you will perceive that the thoroughfare or cut-off is the division line between the claims of Hatton Middleton, sections 35 and 36, and that the land described by Elliott's certificate is already appropriated. The present claimant wishes the certificate of Elliott to cover section 34, and states that the thoroughfare anciently passed through that section, but from all the evidence I can procure, there are no visible marks of the cut-off ever passing through that section.

My own opinion is that the claim of Elliott is embraced in section 36, and that it cannot legally cover any part of section 34. You will oblige me by giving your opinion in relation to the above.

I am, &c. JAMES P. TURNER.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 26, 1829.

SIR: The copy of the certificate of the board of commissioners, in favor of Robert Elliott, B, No. 402, enclosed in the letter of the 25th ultimo, from your office, is herewith returned. From the statement of facts, as contained in that letter, I am clearly of opinion that no part of section 34 can be appropriated to satisfy that certificate, and that, as the land intended to be granted by that certificate has been surveyed under a prior certificate for Hatton Middleton, the present holder of Elliott's certificate must have recourse to the courts of the States to obtain the possession of the land, if his title be better than that of Middleton.

Very respectfully, &c.

GEO. GRAHAM.

SIR: Referring to my letter of the 26th instant, respecting the application of John Fletcher to locate the commissioners' certificate in favor of Robert Elliott upon section 34, township 3 north, range 8 east, I now enclose for your information, a letter received at this office from Mr. Peter Little, of Natchez, relating to that application, and the nature of the evidence that would be produced in its support.

Very respectfully, &c.

GEO. GRAHAM.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, Washington, Mississippi, November 25, 1829.

SIR: Your letter of the 30th ultimo, covering that of Peter Little's, of Natchez, relative to the location of the claim of Elliott, was received by this morning's mail.

In reference to the claim of Elliott, you have my opinion in my letter referring it to you, for your opinion, which has been received, and coincides with my own opinion, as expressed in my letter to you dated 25th September, ultimo.

The business of this district is progressing as usual, and we have more to attend to in the office than I can turn my hands to.

Colonel Hamilton has not yet made his appearance, consequently the business must have ceased if I had not attended to it.

I am, &c.

RELATIVE TO THE LANDS GRANTED TO ARKANSAS FOR THE ERECTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT LITTLE ROCK.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 17, 1837.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 16, 1837.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, directing "the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the Senate a copy of a communication addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office by John Pope, late governor of the Territory of Arkansas, respecting ten sections of land granted to said Territory for the erection of a public building at Little Rock," I have the honor to transmit copies of two letters addressed to that officer, being all the letters on file in that office from Governor Pope, in relation to the subject of the resolution.

I have the honor, also, to enclose copies of two letters addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury by Governor Pope, relating to the subject, which it is thought may be the communication referred to in the resolution.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. W. R. KING, President of the Senate pro tem.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 11, 1837.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 10th instant, "that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of a communication addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office by John Pope, late governor of the Territory of Arkansas, respecting the ten sections of land granted to the said Territory for the erection of a public building at Little Rock," referred by you to this office for report, I have the honor, herewith, to enclose copies of letters from Governor John Pope, one dated the 23d January, 1833, and the other the 30th of April, 1833, being copies of all the letters on file from Governor Pope to this office respecting the grant of ten sections of land to the Territory of Arkansas.

I beg leave to state, that it is thought that the letter, a copy of which is desired to be obtained by the above resolution, is one of the letters from Governor Pope to the Secretary of the Treasury, of the 8th or 17th of July, 1833, which were referred to this office for report, and which were returned to the Treasury Department with a communication from this office, dated 31st of July, 1833.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAS. WHITCOMB, Commissioner.

LITTLE ROCK, January 23, 1833.

SIR: I have selected most of the ten sections of land granted to this Territory for a public building at this place, but a considerable part has been located on lands not surveyed or approved, and the lands selected cannot be designated in the land offices until the surveys are made and approved. I have sold all the lands selected, and most earnestly solicit you to instruct the surveyor general here to have those lands surveyed immediately. In doing so, you will free me from embarrassment, and greatly advance the interest of the Territory.

I have the honor to be, with high respect and consideration, your most obedient servant,

JOHN POPE.

Hon. LOUIS MCLANE.

LITTLE ROCK, April 30, 1833.

SIR: I now forward to you a selection of two fractions of land near and below Little Rock, on the Arkansas river, taken and paid for by the purchaser for 160 acres, be the same more or less. I selected it at the request of the purchaser, and sold it as 160 acres of the ten sections of land granted to this Territory for a legislative house. The purchaser bears the loss of any deficiency in quantity, but will be deemed and taken as 160 acres of the ten sections; and there can be, therefore, no objection to issuing a patent to him, which I will thank you to have done immediately, and enclose it to Colonel Chester Ashley, of this place. The land located will be seen on a plat I forwarded to you about ten days ago, or rather to the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting a patent for 1,000 acres in one, in the patent or patents for the different parcels embraced by my location.

Your prompt attention to these matters is demanded by the public interest here, and will greatly oblige

Yours, with high respect,

JOHN POPE.

Hon. ELIJAH HAYWARD, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The patent to William Russell forwarded to Chester Ashley, of this place. The patent or patents for the 1,000 acres please to enclose to me at Springfield, Kentucky, where I expect to be in the course of the next month.

J. P.

SHELBYVILLE, KY., July 8, 1833.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from your predecessor, the Honorable Louis McLane, bearing date 13th May, 1833, covering a letter to him from Mr. Elijah Hayward, of the 10th of the same month, touching the location made by me as the governor of the Arkansas Territory, of one thousand acres of land, granted to said Territory for a court-house and jail, by an act of Congress approved on the 15th June, 1832. In my letter to the Secretary, I mentioned that, within the boundaries located, some individuals claimed pre-emption rights, which, from the best information I could obtain, were not valid; and that I was willing to test them before a judicial tribunal. Mr. Hayward, Commissioner of the Land Office, in his letter to Mr. McLane, now before me, says that, "although the governor, from his letter, expressed his willingness to test the title of the pre-emption claimants in a court of justice, he would respectfully suggest the expediency of suspending the final action upon the governor's location until the land officers shall have advised that office of all the particulars in relation to those pre-emption claims." Mr. McLane, in communicating this letter to me, concurs in the propriety of the course recommended. In neither of these letters is my authority denied to make the locations: and I must presume that the letter of Mr. Hayward to Colonel Bernard Smith, to be communicated to William Cummins, dated May 7, 1833, was written without the knowledge or sanction of Mr. McLane.

In the "Arkansas Advocate" of the 5th of June last, the letter of Mr. Hayward is published by Cummins, with an ill-natured attack on me, and intended to injure Colonel Sevier in the election, now pending, for delegate to Congress, in that Territory. I certainly never gave Mr. Hayward the slightest provocation for this wanton and unauthorized assault upon my official conduct; and must therefore attribute this letter to inattention, and a very censurable ignorance of the subject upon which he was writing. If Mr. Hayward chooses, and, as individual, to become the lawyer or advocate of these conflicting claimants, he has a perfect right to do so; and he will be met before any tribunal competent to pass on the questions of right between the Territory and the adverse claimants; but I positively protest against his authority, as Commissioner of the Land Office, to meddle with the controversy. The authority of the governor to select the one thousand acres is derived directly from the act of Congress of the 15th March, [June,] 1832. Residing on the spot, and having the best means of information, both as to title and value, the matter was confided to his judgment, without reference to the opinion, instruction, or control of any other officer of the government. I feel confident that the title of the Territory to the eight hundred and forty acres, selected below and east of Little Rock, is paramount to any other, and have advertised that for sale on the 4th Monday of October next, pursuant to the authority vested in me by an act of Congress, passed on the 2d day of March last. I shall proceed with the sale according to my advertisement; being fully persuaded that I pass a good title, whether a patent is issued or not.

Mr. Hayward has slandered the title of the Territory, and placed me in an embarrassing situation; but, conscious that I have performed the duty assigned me according to law, and for the benefit of the people of the Territory, I shall go on with the sales, and erect the public buildings.

That Mr. Hayward has acted without due consideration, will be apparent from a view of the several acts of Congress bearing on this subject, and a few facts about which there can be no controversy. His letter to Mr. Cummins of the 7th May is at war with his letter to Mr. McLane of the 10th of May, and Mr. McLane's letter to me of the 13th. In his letter of the 7th, Mr. Hayward states that the tracts claimed by Nathan Cloyes and Elliott Bussy, by right of pre-emption, had been located by the governor of Arkansas, under the act of 2d March, 1833, granting 20 sections, &c., and that no location can be made by the governor on a tract under the act of 2d March, 1833, which has been proved and recognized under the act of 29th May, 1833, [1830,] and July 14, 1832, granting pre-emptions. Now, Mr. Hayward is wrong as to law and facts. I was not authorized, by the act of 2d March, 1833, to make any locations of either 20 sections or the 1,000 acres granted for a court-house and jail; nor did I make any locations under that act. As Mr. Cummins states, I located the 1,000 acres, including the land claimed by Cloyes and Bussy, or the purchasers from them, on the 30th January, 1833, more than one month before the passage of the act of 2d March, 1833, to which Mr. Hayward refers. My location was made in writing, and filed with the register and receiver, and a copy was forwarded immediately to the Commissioner of the Land Office, where it was received and filed in February last, before the passage of the act of 2d March. That act is not before me, but I am satisfied it authorized no location. One act vested the governor with power to sell 20 sections of the land reserved for a seminary; and the other act, of same date, to sell the 1,000 acres granted for a court-house, &c., and to apply the proceeds to the erection of the public buildings mentioned in the act; and the Secretary of the Treasury was expressly directed to issue or cause to be issued to the governor, a patent, whenever he should furnish the Secretary with a sufficient description of the boundaries of the 1,000 acres. In March, I forwarded to the Secretary my location, affirming the location made on the 30th January; and afterward sent him a certified plat of the land selected, and requested a patent to be issued, as directed by the act last referred to. Mr. McLane, without questioning my authority to make the location, or the correctness of my official conduct, has merely suggested the propriety of suspending final action until more fully advised about the conflicting claims.

Permit me now, sir, to call your attention more particularly to the several acts relative to this matter. On the 29th May, 1830, Congress passed an act granting pre-emption rights to settlers or occupants, to continue in force for one year. This was not available to any person who occupied the unsurveyed lands of government; the terms could not be complied with; and no right could be vested in the occupant where no survey had been returned and approved. The act expired on the 29th May, 1831. The lands claimed by Cloyes and Bussy had not been surveyed in a manner to have the sanction of the surveyor general; and no plat was ever made and approved, nor was any plat ever made out for any part of the lands below Little Rock, except the one I forwarded to your predecessor in March or April last, including my location of the 1,000 acres.

On the 14th July, 1832, (more than one year after the pre-emption law of 1830 had expired,) Congress passed an act for the relief of those settlers and occupants who had settled on the unsurveyed lands and could not obtain rights under the act of 1830. This act of 14th July, 1832, applies only to those who were settlers at its passage. But this is not material in the present instance, because it can be shown that neither Cloyes nor Bussy was entitled, as settler on the land, nnder the act of 1830 or 1832.

Previous to the act of 14th July, 1832, Congress (on the 15th June, 1832) granted to the Arkansas Territory 1,000 acres of land for a court-house and jail, adjoining and contiguous to the town of Little Rock, to be selected by the governor of that Territory. The only land worth locating, adjoining and contiguous to Little Rock, was the very land in question—below the town, and adjoining it on the east side, unless, indeed, the 160 acres on the south side of the town can be held against the Madrid claim. The valuable lands south of my location of 840 acres were long since reserved, and selected for a seminary of learning. Not being able to obtain 1,000 acres on the east side, (the very land contemplated by the grant,) I thought it better for the Territory to locate 160 acres on the south side of the town, which had been covered by a Madrid claim, the merits of which I do not yet fully understand. I have not advertised that for sale, hoping that, through the agency of the next legislature and Congress, I might be able to extinguish that claim on terms advantageous to the Territory.

The grant of 1,000 acres would have been a mere nullity, if I were bound to surrender the valuable lands near the town, for the benefit of speculators and pretended claimants. It was my duty to the people to make a selection the most advantageous to them. Most of the valuable lands adjoining and contiguous to the town, were "shingled over" with claims, and, unless I was authorized to contest them, the grant was worthless.

The grant to the Territory of 1,000 acres was made on the 15th of June, 1832, one month previous to the pre-emption law of 14th July, 1832, and I protest against giving effect to the last act to defeat the grant made by a previous act. One thousand acres is granted adjoining the town, and the governor is to designate and describe the land granted, so as to render the grant precise and certain. So soon as I could obtain the necessary information from the office of the surveyor general, I did, on the 30th January, 1830, select, in writing, with all practicable specialty and certainty, the 1,000 acres of land granted. The title of the Territory then became complete, definite, and valid, against the United States, and all others who had not legal and vested rights. As a lawyer and statesman, you know that it is competent for the sovereign power to make a grant of land without a patent, or the intervention of any executive or ministerial officer; although, in the general, it may be expedient and convenient to act by agent. Congress made the grant, the governor gave it certain description and definite boundary, whereby the title became complete in the Territory without patent.

Congress, at the last session, with a full knowledge of the grant, and that the governor had made a selection, positively directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause a patent to be issued, as soon as the governor should furnish a sufficient description of the boundaries of the land granted and selected. This I have done, and am at a loss to perceive on what ground the patent can be withheld or delayed consistent with the imperative injunction of the act of 2d March, 1833.

Mr. McLane merely suggests the propriety of suspending final action until better informed about the conflicting claims. If the Secretary of the Treasury feels authorized to investigate these adverse claims, and to decide between the claimants and the right of the Territory, I can only assure you that, to no tribunal would I more cheerfully submit the question involved; but I incline to the opinion that the matter of right is only cognizable before another forum. I cannot admit that the decision of the land officers upon exparte proof can divest the title granted to the Territory by act of Congress. I have never contended, nor do I now insist, that Congress could, by a grant to the Territory, defeat the vested rights of individuals; and if I have located lands to which private individuals have the better right, they have their remedy, notwithstanding the emanation of a patent. I consider the title of the Territory complete without a patent; and Congress has only directed a patent to be issued in accordance with the general usage; and to render the grant more certain and definite. Suppose the act of 2d March, 1833, directing a patent to be issued, had not passed, would not the grant and previous location have passed a complete title from the United States to the grantee, the Territory, subject always to be vacated by the courts of justice, in favor of prior vested rights? and is it competent for a ministerial or executive officer to defeat the title of the Territory passed by the grant and location to which I have adverted? It would seem to me that you have no discretion over the subject, but that you ought to cause a patent to be issued, whenever a sufficient description of boundaries shall have been furnished. The duties of the executive of the Territory will be embarrassed by the course taken, or rather indicated, and the rights and interests of the people in the sale of the public property will be deeply impaired.

The act passed on the 2d March, 1833, must be deemed a confirmation of the grant of 1,000 acres as designated by the governor on the 30th day of January preceding. While the subject was pending before Congress at the last session, I wrote to Colonel Sevier, advising a clause to be inserted in the bill, empowering the governor to quiet the adverse claims by compromise or purchase; and I have understood he had such a provision inserted in it; but the committee of Congress to whom the matter was referred, struck it out; probably on the ground that they considered the title of the territory under the grant good and valid; and declared they would not recognize these pretended claims, in any the most indirect manner. Before the bill passed I had made the location, and had it filed with the Commissioner of the Land Office.

The committee (fully informed on the subject) refused to give color to these pretended claims; authorized the governor to sell the land at public sale, and erect the public buildings; and positively directed the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a patent.

In defiance of law, and in disregard of the facts I have stated, the Commissioner of the Land Office, without authority, has undertaken to set up claims against the Territory, which Congress refused to recognize even by compromise.

In March last I renewed my location to the Secretary of the Treasury, affirming the selection made on the 30th of January last, and requested a patent to be issued. I afterward forwarded to him a certified plat of the land located, and cannot doubt the right of the Territory to a patent forthwith. If I am correct in supposing the act of the 2d March to have confirmed the grant as designated by the governor, no objection can now be urged to the manner in which it was done.

I have understood that the Commissioner of the Land Office instructed the registers and receivers to receive proof from those on unsurveyed lands; (this was all that could be done, and any act done beyond this instruction was a nullity;) that Bussy's claim was rejected by the land officers, and afterward, upon some representations or more probably misrepresentations to the Commissioner of the Land Office at Washington, he directed the claim to be reinvestigated.

All that could be done under the act of the 29th May, 1830, when the land was not surveyed, was to take proof. The terms of the act could not be complied with to invest the claimant with right or title to the land. As I have always stated, that law expired on the 29th May, 1831. And here let me ask, if the act of 14th July, 1832, had not passed, could the land officers have consummated the rights of the pre-emption claimants? The land officers, without a survey, could neither designate the land claimed, nor could the claimant purchase—the right and title remained in the government, and the sum total of the right of the pre-emptioners was a claim on the moral justice or rather liberality of the government to afford relief after the first law had expired. On the 14th July, 1832, (subsequently to the grant made to the Territory,) Congress did provide a remedy for those whose claims had been lost for want of surveys. But before this (when the right was in the government) a grant is made to the Territory. Now, the claimants (whatever may be the facts, and however strong their cases for relief) cannot vacate a prior grant made by Congress, with plenary right and power to make it. To Congress they must appeal for redress, if their cases are such as to merit legislative intervention. Before any survey was made of this land, and before any right could be acquired under either pre-emption law, the governor designates the boundaries of the grant, and the act of Congress of 2d March, 1833, by necessary implication affirms the grant according to the selection made. In every aspect the subject presents, the question of right seems to me as clear in favor of the Territory as the sun at noonday.

Some minor objections are made in Mr. Hayward's letter to Mr. McLane on the 10th May, 1833, to which I will give a concise answer. His letter seems to imply an exception to the location of a quarter on the south side of the town, S. E. quarter of section 3, because separated from the residue of the lands selected. I can see nothing in the law to give color to this objection. There is no expression in the act forbidding the governor to take the 1,000 acres in distinct parcels. I could not get the whole on the east side of the town, and therefore took one quarter on the south, covered, as I have stated, by a claim not patented.

The next and last objection to be noticed is, that three chains and eighty-one links are taken off the south part of the north fractional half of section one. I have not the location before me, but I am persuaded that Mr. Hayward is mistaken, both as to the expression and effect of the location. A narrow strip of land on the river, of which he speaks, and supposes to be embraced in it, is not taken; but is located under the act granting 10 sections of land, and sold to William Russell. Two fractions, one of 112 acres, and the other 32, on the river, are not parts of the 840 acres below the town, as will be apparent from an examination of the plat.

You will perceive that the parcels below the town, selected to make up the 840 acres, are the following:

	Acres.
Two fractions, being the west fractional half of section 2, range 12	106.36
Fractional section 6, on fractional half of section 6, range 11	254.85
S. E. quarter of section 2, range 12	160.00
The south fractional half of section 1, range 12	318.79
	840.00

The words in the location, "and so much of the north and south fractional half, &c., as will make the 840 acres," must be rejected as nugatory and surplusage, because the quantity of 840 acres is satisfied by the parcels specified, without taking any part of any fractional half. The long strip of two fractions on the river is not made to suit my location, but the selection of 840 acres is in strict conformity to legal subdivision.

You will observe, in the margin of the plat certified by Mr. Conway, a memorandum of the parcels making the 840 acres, and that no strip of 3 chains and 81 links is taken; and if it is, and is improper, you can reject the location of that part, and issue a patent for what is properly selected. An error as to part cannot vitiate the whole.

I feel confident there is nothing in my location about 3 chains and 81 links. Please to examine my selection of the 30th of January, affirmed in my communication to your predecessor, in March, and the plat of Mr. Conway, and you will see, unless there is a mistake in copying, that my recollection is correct. My selection of southeast quarter section 3, on the south side of the town, 160 acres, added to the 840 acres, makes the quantity of 1,000 acres granted to the Territory for court-house and jail, &c.

It may not be amiss here to account for the insertion of the words "and so much of the south or north fractional half, &c., as will make 840 acres." I called on Mr. Conway, the surveyor general, to aid me in making the selections. He did so from the field notes of surveys which had been made and rejected, but was at a loss to ascertain the precise quantity in the parcels intended to be selected, and therefore inserted those words, supposing it possible that such a course might be necessary. On having the surveys re-examined on the ground, it was found that the correct quantity was included, without taking any but the parcels I have mentioned—and of course those expressions can have no effect.

There seems to me no good reasons for withholding a patent or patents for the land; and delay may create doubts of the title of the Territory, and materially injure the sale of the public property. Congress devolved on me the duty and responsibility of selecting this land; to me was assigned the unpleasant task of examining into the claims of both friends and foes; and from the best information I could obtain, there are none good and valid to any part of the 840 acres located below and east of the town. Cloyes, or rather those interested, who persuaded him to set up claim, have no well-founded right to a pre-emption. The only settlement or occupancy on which his pretended right is based, was the occupancy of a house which Chester Ashley claimed or had possession of, which Cloyes, with leave of Ashley, took under written leases from year to year; which leases are now in existence, and ready to be produced before any competent tribunal. Bussy's claim is alike worthless. He resided in town, and probably moved his kitchen over the line on to the public land, for the purpose of claiming a pre-emption. Stevenson and wife have a fairer claim, and it is not in the hands of speculators; but they never resided on the land, within the meaning or letter of the act. Major Isaac Watkins, first husband of Mrs. Stevenson, resided in town, (where Stevenson and wife now reside,) and cleared a field on the public land, which they have cultivated ever since, and may have built some out-houses on it.

In performing the indelicate and disagreeable duty of thwarting the speculations of individuals on the public property, I feel assured that I have acted without wishing to assail the rights of any person, but with a faithful regard to the acts of Congress, and the rights of the people of the Territory. And you must be sensible how painful it is to me to have my official conduct assailed before the public, and my course embarrassed by otherwise technical, unsubstantial, and unfounded objections, sent forth from the public functionaries at Washington.

I have no reason to imagine that Mr. Hayward could have been actuated by personal hostility to me; but his course was certainly unnecessary and unauthorized, and must have been induced by the plausible misrepresentations of interested speculators and their agents, who are attempting to deprive the people of the benefit of a liberal donation made by Congress, and to injure Colonel Sevier and myself, who are desirous to have this valuable property applied to public use. With full faith in your intelligence and justice, I most earnestly urge your prompt and careful attention to the subject of this letter. To the pre-emption law of May 29, 1830; the act of June 15, 1832, making the grant of 1,000 acres for a court-house and jail; the act of July 14, 1832, for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed lands; the act of March 2, 1833, authorizing the governor to sell and the Secretary to cause a patent to be issued; my selection of 1,000 acres, on the 30th January, 1833, with my relocation of the same land in March last, transmitted to your predecessor, and the plat of the surveyor general—you are particularly referred.

Upon a full and careful view of the whole, I feel assured you cannot hesitate to cause a patent to be issued in compliance with the act of Congress of 2d of March last. All of which is respectfully submitted.

You will pardon my prolixity and unnecessary repetition, induced by my solicitude for the rights and interests of the people of the Territory.

I expect to leave this State for the Territory on the 1st of September next, and, in the meantime, would be happy to receive any communication addressed to me at Springfield, Washington county, Kentucky.

I have the honor to be, with high respect and consideration, your obedient servant,

JOHN POPE.

Hon. WILLIAM J. DUANE, Secretary of the Treasury, U. S.

LOUISVILLE, July 17, 1833.

SIR: I have received a letter from the Commissioner of the Land Office, dated May 2, 1833, giving a construction to the acts of March 2, 1831, and July 14, 1832, granting ten sections of land to the Territory of Arkansas for a legislative house, and authorizing the governor to select, and sell, &c. Against this construction, implicating deeply the rights and interests of the Territory, and the conduct of the governor in locating and selling the land under those acts, I feel constrained to protest; and most respectfully appeal to you and the President to review and revise the opinion given on this subject. If adhered to, the value of the donation will be greatly impaired, and the executive of the Territory cruelly embarrassed in the erection of the public buildings, now under contract and in progress, without a solitary advantage to the United States. Permit me to premise that the official relation in which the governor stands to the Executive administration, entitles his acts to their sanction, where a duty has been imposed on him by law or written instructions, and he has executed the authority delegated, if the question of construction be doubtful, or his acts subject to only nice or technical objections. The error of the governor ought to be at least reasonably clear and palpable. Congress, by the first act, grants the ten sections to be selected and sold by the legislature; the legislature having failed to do their duty, Congress, by the act of July 4, 1832, transferred the authority to the governor, to select and sell. He is not referred to the Commissioner of the Land Office, or the Secretary of the Treasury, for opinions or instructions as to the meaning of the act; he is left to act according to his judgment, and locates, sells, and contracts for the public works. Under such circumstances ought his official acts to be nullified and the whole business confided to him deranged, on doubtful ground, or nice or technical objections? Do not utility and that liberality which belongs to the official relation between the executive of the Territory and the appellate authority at Washington, require a confirmation of the decision of the subordinate authority, except in a case of clear and palpable error? and more especially when the government is not to be injured, and the object of the grant more fully and certainly attained? In cases of contested individual rights, the appellate judicial tribunal will not reverse without manifest error, and if the court is divided, the decision of the subordinate court will stand affirmed. How much stronger is the case of a grant, the mere effusion of national liberality, where the intent of the donor is evident!

Without making any strong appeal to the generous and liberal feelings of the supreme executive power, I feel confident that I shall be able to satisfy you that the opinion given by Mr. Hayward, and concurred in on one point by Mr. McLane, is incorrect; and to their candor and magnanimity I might safely trust to correct an error so disastrous in its consequences to the Territory, and the public works now in progress.

My construction of the ten-section act was concurred in by every intelligent man I consulted; and, after the opinion in William Montgomery's case reached me, I showed the law to two very intelligent lawyers, who, without hesitation, concurred in my interpretation of the act. The act says, "There is granted to the Territory ten sections of land, to be selected in portions not less than a quarter-section." It does not require it to be selected in quarter or in half sections, but in portions, that is, quantities not less than a quarter-section. Now, in the case of General Montgomery, I located between four and five hundred acres in a body; certainly not less than a quarter-section, but more than three quarter-sections. If a man purchases three or more parcels to make a farm, all adjoining, the several parts lying together constitute one whole or tract, in common parlance and common sense. The tract of five hundred acres located for Montgomery are called fractions, because divided by ideal lines, occasioned by the course of the river, and to preserve general correspondence with the plan or map of surveys; but yet the whole of the fractions lying together, in truth and in fact, when purchased or selected, is but one parcel. I located a part of the public land in portions not less than one, but more than three quarter-sections.

According to legal rule, a grant between individuals is to be construed most favorably for the grantee, and against the grantor: and this rule applies with additional force and propriety to a grant made by a great, rich and kind government to the infant and weak population of a distant and weak plantation. The grant was an act of liberality of the parent government, to relieve the people of a new country from a heavy burden of taxation, to erect their public buildings. If there is any ambiguity in the words of the grant, the interpretation should be such as will best comport with the beneficent object of the donor, and not one calculated to impair or defeat it. A construction, therefore, most unfavorable to the grantee, without advantage to the grantor, is contrary to all the recognised rules of law, justice, and good sense; and the one given by Mr. Hayward, in this instance, is at variance with the course pursued heretofore in analogous cases.

In the act giving the settlers on the Cherokee lands three hundred and twenty acres, the expressions used are in substance similar: Congress grants to each settler any quantity not exceeding two quarter-sections; the word fraction is not used—quarter-section is mentioned in that act and the act granting the ten sections. The word quantity is used in one, and portion in the other; not less than a quarter-section in one, and not more than two quarter-sections in the other; and yet I believe it has never been doubted that fractions could be located under the three-hundred-and-twenty-acre act; and locations on fractions have been sanctioned by the Commissioner of the Land Office, and why restrict the grantees of the ten sections, to impair the value of the donation and defeat the object of the grant? Congress reserved for the Arkansas Territory seventy-two sections of land, for a seminary of learning. The word section is used; and, according to a literal construction, it might be contended that no section could be divided in selecting the land; but, if my recollection is right, the half of one section and the adjoining half of another section were taken to make up the section, in many instances, and sanctioned by the Secretary of the Treasury. Individuals are authorized to enter a half-quarter, and in some instances forty acres; this the governor is prohibited from doing, unless he takes half of an adjoining quarter, making in a body one hundred and sixty acres; it would then be a portion of not less than one hundred and sixty acres in a body, and would be in accordance with the course pursued in selecting the seminary lands.

The true intent and meaning of the act is, that small tracts of less than one hundred and sixty acres, in distinct places, are not to be taken; but that at least one hundred and sixty acres are to be taken in a body. Now, whether that one hundred and sixty acres is composed of fractions or not, is immaterial, provided they lie together, and constitute one portion of one hundred and sixty acres. If a fraction or parcel less than one hundred and sixty acres is selected, it must be taken as one hundred and sixty acres, and the difference between the fraction and one hundred and sixty acres must be lost. Whether this could be done, I have doubted; but the most intelligent are of opinion that it can; but the parcel, if not one hundred and sixty acres, must be taken as a satisfaction of one hundred and sixty acres of the land granted. According to the construction of Mr. Hayward, I could in no instance take a fractional half of a section, although amounting to three hundred or even three hundred and nineteen acres. Below Little Rock, within my location of eight hundred and forty acres, there are two fractional halves, one of three hundred and eighteen acres, and the other of two hundred and fifty-four acres; both far exceeding one hundred and sixty acres; and yet, according to his construction in Montgomery's case, I could take neither the half nor the whole, although the two fractional halves amount to near six hundred acres, in the face of a law with but one restriction, and that is, that it is to be selected in portions of not less than a quarter-section. Now, six hundred, two hundred and fifty-four, or three hundred and eighteen acres, are certainly not less than a quarter-section. The law grants ten sections of any unappropriated lands, to be taken in portions, that is, portions of land not less than a quarter-section. The construction contended for in Montgomery's case is too technical and absurd to be tolerated for a moment, and must have been given without mature reflection, or a proper view of consequences.

I beg leave to refer you to the construction given to the grant of one township of land to the Lunatic Asylum at Danville. The grant is of one township of land, to be located under the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury. Under this act, the lands were located in parcels of four sections; and adjoining those sections, the agent of the asylum was permitted to take half-quarters, fractions, fractional quarters, and fractional halves, on the river; whereas, in regard to the ten sections granted to the Arkansas Territory, according to the opinion in Montgomery's case, no fractions, fractional quarters or halves can be taken; and if one, two, or more quarters, or a section, is taken adjoining a fraction on the river, that fraction cannot be taken. By this construction the Territory is precluded from locating any of the valuable lands on any of the rivers of the Territory, the value of the donation will be much lessened, and the object of the grant in a great degree defeated.

I can perceive no good reason for this restricted construction, nor any benefit which can result to the United States.

This subject is very interesting to the Territory; and I shall be relieved from much embarrassment if your views shall accord with mine.

Should doubts still exist as to the correctness of my opinions, I hope you will lay the whole matter before the President. I can entertain no doubt myself on the question presented, and must therefore press on you a careful consideration of the subject.

I have the honor to be, with high respect, your obedient servant, JOHN POPE.

APPLICATION OF INDIANA IN RELATION TO THE LAND CLAIMS OF CERTAIN FRENCH AND CANADIAN SETTLERS AT VINCENNES.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 17, 1837.

A JOINT RESOLUTION for the benefit of certain French inhabitants in and near Vincennes.

Whereas, it is represented to this general assembly that certain French and Canadian inhabitants, and their descendants, settlers at Port St. Vincent, (now Vincennes,) who have professed themselves citizens of the United States, have never, under the act of cession of the State of Virginia, passed December 20, 1783, and the several acts and resolutions of Congress, received a confirmation of title to the lands to which they are justly entitled; therefore,

Be it resolved by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their exertions to procure the passage of a law for the appointment of a commissioner to ascertain the justice of the claims of those French and Canadian inhabitants, and their descendants, at Vincennes, to lands, who have not been provided for in pursuance of said several acts of the State of Virginia and of the United States.

Resolved, further, That if, upon such ascertainment, it be found that any of such French or Canadian inhabitants, or their descendants, are entitled to land as aforesaid, the President of the United States be authorized to direct the Commissioner of the General Land Office to permit any such person entitled to enter at the United States land offices northwest of the Ohio river a quantity of land equal to that to which they may be so as aforesaid entitled; and that a patent issue to him, her, or them; or that Congress may grant such other relief in the premises as may be just and reasonable.

Resolved, That his excellency, the governor, be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolutions to our senators and representatives in Congress.

RELATIVE TO CONFIRMED LAND CLAIMS IN LOUISIANA.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FEBRUARY 22, 1837.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 22, 1837.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, prepared in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted on the 26th of December last.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 21, 1837.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives, passed on the 26th of December last, in the words following, viz., "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to this House the number of claims to land in the State of Louisiana, confirmed under different acts of Congress, and the number of those acquired from the United States by purchase, the number of patents issued for the said claims, and the time which will probably elapse before the whole of the patents due therefor can issue under present arrangements," and which you have referred to this office, I have the honor to report:

That, prior to the passage of the act of Congress of 4th of July, 1836, entitled, "An act confirming claims to land in the State of Louisiana," it is estimated that eight thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven (8,857) claims to land in that State had been confirmed by the several acts of Congress providing for their adjustment and confirmation; of which number, four hundred and sixty-three (463) have been patented.

There are, at this time, no certificates in this office upon which patents can be issued in the southeastern district, the district north of Red river, and the district west of Pearl river; and but very few in the Opelousas district which could be acted on.

It is impracticable for me to state "the time which will probably elapse before the whole of the patents" for private land claims can issue under the present arrangements, as this office can grant patents only in those cases where the required patent certificates of the registers of the district land offices, with the approved plats of survey, are presented. It is, however, confidently expected that patents can be issued in all those cases which, upon examination, shall be found correct, within a few months after the certificates and plats are deposited; and no exertion will be wanting, on the part of this office, to expedite their preparation.

In relation to lands acquired from the United States by purchase, I have to state, that the number of tracts sold at the land offices in Louisiana, from the commencement of sales to the latest returns, is as follows, viz:

At Opelousas, to 31st December, 1836	1,916
At Ouachita, do. do.	4,119
At St. Helena, do. do.	985
At New Orleans, to 30th June, 1836	2,268
Aggregate	9,288

Of this number nine hundred and fifty-nine (959) have been patented—leaving eight thousand three hundred and twenty-nine (8,329) patents to be issued.

There have been several causes which have hitherto delayed the issuing of patents for lands sold in Louisiana; the principal of which are:

The peculiar features of the country and localities of the land in various portions of the State, causing many anomalies in the surveys, and repeated interruptions in their lines, superadded to the difficulties associated with the surveying of the private claims in connection with the public lands, have, together, greatly tended, hitherto, to impede the progress of the surveys, and, consequently, of all subsequent operations connected with those lands. By the energetic management of the surveyor of Louisiana, (the creation of whose office, in 1831, tended greatly to diminish the evils which existed under the previous system,) the difficulties have, to a great degree, been surmounted; and the act of last July, reorganizing this office, has afforded to it the means (which it did not previously possess) of opening the tract-books for the surveyed lands, which is the first step toward registering the sales. It is, therefore, with much pleasure, I have to state, that, within the last few months, a set of books, amounting to upward of forty thick folio volumes, has been opened, to embrace the lands in the whole State of Louisiana; and considerable progress has been made in registering the sales, (a preliminary operation which is almost indispensable to correctness in issuing patents,) and which will progress uninterruptedly and as rapidly as practicable; and it is expected that the patents will be prepared in all cases where further explanations shall not have to be sought for either from the register of the land offices, or the surveyor general, within a few months after the certificates of purchase shall have been so registered.

Numerous instances, however, are discovered where the register's certificate, in cases of old entries of settlement rights and back tracts, not surveyed at the time of entry, yet remain to be issued, (although the land was long since paid for,) and where the tract is omitted to be designated in the receiver's receipt. In all such cases delays must exist, in consequence of the inability of this office to check the correctness of the entry and make the necessary registry thereof, until the registers of the land offices shall issue their certificates affording the proper designations.

The office has already taken the necessary measures to have these omissions supplied, so that the business of registering the sales may proceed without interruption.

Under these favorable circumstances, the hope is indulged that, before the termination of this year, the office will be enabled to issue several thousands of patents to purchasers in Louisiana, and that, before the termination of the next session of Congress, the whole number will have been issued which remains due at the present period.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

APPLICATION OF OHIO FOR A DONATION OF CERTAIN LANDS LYING BETWEEN THE MUSKINGUM AND LITTLE MIAMI RIVERS.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 27, 1837.

The general assembly of the State of Ohio respectfully represents to the Congress of the United States: That there are many small tracts of land, lying between the Muskingum and Little Miami rivers, yet remaining undisposed of, and of little value, and are rendered less so under the recent acts of Congress, wherein scrip has been granted to those who hold land warrants for Virginia military lands; the effect of which is, that these lands, having been in market for nearly forty years, are nearly all the refuse part of these lands, and are, consequently, thrown out of market, as those who hold scrip can easily obtain, under the present policy of the general government, land of the best quality. It is believed by those best acquainted with the quality and situation of these lands, that should Congress cede them to the State for the purpose of making and constructing turnpike roads within the districts in which they are situated, under the direction of the legislature, that sales could be effected at a price ranging from twenty-five cents to one dollar per acre.

Many of these lands would make fine sheep pasture, and would answer for the purpose of cultivating the mulberry tree, could they be had at a reasonable price. It is also believed that, should Congress feel willing to cede these lands to the State for the purpose indicated, persons holding lands in their vicinity would readily agree to make a portion of the turnpikes now under contract and in contemplation; but should Congress feel unwilling to give these lands, as before suggested, it is evident that they cannot be sold at the present prices of lands belonging to the general government, which will, consequently, greatly retard the settlement of those parts of the State in which the lands are located, and can, in no event, benefit the general government. The expenses of surveying and disposing of these lands would, it is believed, nearly cover the amount they would sell for, while, under a different arrangement, they would greatly promote the interest of a portion of the State in which they are located, without in any wise injuring the general government; we, therefore, respectfully invite the attention of Congress to the subject.

Resolved, by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to exert their influence to obtain a grant or donation as above suggested, and that the governor of this State be requested to transmit a copy of this memorial and resolution to each member of Congress from Ohio.

CLAIM OF THE NEW ENGLAND MISSISSIPPI LAND COMPANY.

COMMUNICATED TO THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 28, 1837.

BOSTON, January 5, 1837.

To the Honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress, forming the Massachusetts delegation, Washington:

GENTLEMEN: Many, and probably all of you, are apprized of the unsuccessful efforts that have been made for several years past to recover a claim due since 1814 from the government to the New England Mississippi Land Company; but as some of you may not recollect the following facts, we take the liberty to state them, without going into further details: In the month of January, 1795, the legislature of the State of Georgia, by an act, sold to four companies certain tracts of lands, as by the deeds will severally appear. In the month of January, 1796, one of the four companies, called the Georgia Mississippi Land Company, came on here, and, through its authorized agent, proposed the sale of the tract contained in its deed. The evidence of title was clear and indisputable, and the terms having been agreed on, (ten cents per acre,) a regular transfer was made to what was then and still is known as the New England Mississippi Land Company. In the month of February, 1796, a Georgia legislature met, made up chiefly of new members, and passed what was called the rescinding act, declaring the act of the preceding year to be void, in consequence of having been obtained by improper influence. The business here rested until the month of April, 1802, when a convention was formed between the United States and the State of Georgia, whereby, under certain conditions, the land previously sold to the four companies became, with other territory, transferred to the United States; and on the 3d March, 1803, an act passed Congress consequent on and confirming that convention. We would here avoid, as suggested, going into detail, nor shall we make any unnecessary comments on the whole transaction; it will suffice to say, that the claims of the four companies, from this time, became transferred to and in the United States government. Application has accordingly been made from year to year to the government, up to the year 1814, for adjustment and payment of the amount due to the companies, when three gentlemen, viz., John Law, F. S. Key, and Thomas Swann, esquires, were, by the act of Congress, appointed commissioners for that object. These gentlemen proceeded in the adjustment accordingly, but from a misapprehension of the laws of Georgia, committed an error, ordering $130,425 12 to be deducted from the amount to be paid to the New England Mississippi Land Company, and directing its payment into the Treasury of the United States. Satisfied of their error, two of the commissioners, Messrs. Swann and Key (Mr. Law being dead) came forward and acknowledged it, as may be seen by their certificates, and also by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Brown and Gilman; notwithstanding all which, application has since continued to be made to the government for relief, but hitherto without effect. In endeavoring to avoid details, we have omitted to mention a very important fact, which is, that the government, prior to adjustment, required of the companies releases and assignments of the lands to the United States, to take effect on the indemnification of the claimants; thus, without an indemnification to the New England Mississippi Land Company, has the government got possession of both money and land, and the company has been left to state their grievance for above twenty successive years.

The undersigned are a few among others interested in the claim; they have therefore deemed it proper to address you this letter; and have now, after furnishing you with the foregoing condensed statement, to request you will give it unitedly and individually your attention, to the end that an acknowledged error by the party committing it may be corrected, and the company be put in possession of that which it has so long in vain sought for.

The subject will be brought before Congress this session, and an effort made by the claimants to obtain an equitable decision. The justice of the claim has, in addition to what is already stated been acknowledged by repeated reports in its favor; and being well known to many of the delegation, the undersigned feel that they can rely on your co-operation in any measures that may be proposed to accelerate an adjustment of this long-standing unsettled business.

We are, gentlemen, very respectfully, your most obedient servants,

24TH CONGRESS.] No. 1595. [2D SESSION.

RELATIVE TO SURVEYS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS IN ILLINOIS AND MISSOURI.

COMMUNICATED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FEBRUARY 28, 1837.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 27, 1837.

SIR: I have the honor to submit a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, accompanied by a report and certain documents from the surveyor general of Illinois and Missouri, in reference to surveys in those States. I would also respectfully call your attention to the suggestion of the Commissioner, that these documents be printed.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. C. C. CAMBRELENG, Chairman Committee Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 25, 1837.

SIR: The expected report from the surveyor general of Illinois and Missouri, referred to in my communication of the 7th instant as not having reached this office, was received a few days since; as also a separate report, explanatory of the items contained in the documents from the same officer, which accompanied the general report of the acting Commissioner, submitted in December last. I now have the honor to transmit, herewith, copies of these reports in duplicate, marked A and B, and of the diagrams therein referred to, to which I beg leave to call your attention, and respectfully request that they may be laid before the honorable Committee of Ways and Means, of the House of Representatives, and the Committee of Finance, of the Senate. The report marked A, contains the estimates of the surveyor general for the present year, which, with the exception of the $36,000 therein estimated for new surveys, have all, I believe, been provided for in the amounts of the appropriations heretofore submitted from the department, and which, if taken in connection with the report marked B, will show the present state of the surveys in Illinois and Missouri, which information it was promised in the report of the acting Commissioner above referred to, should be furnished when received. Before concluding, I would also respectfully recommend the printing of these documents and diagrams, as being necessary to complete the former reports from this office, and highly important in a public point of view, on account of the detailed information which they contain relative to this surveying district.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, January 27, 1837.

SIR: You were informed in a postscript to my report of the 21st of last November, that the intended accompanying diagrams were not completed, and that no time would be lost in sending them as soon as they should be finished. The diagrams were not necessary for the main purpose of the report; the delay, therefore, can be of no essential injury. The report stated the aggregate amount of surveying that ought to be executed in this district during the present year, which was all sufficient to enable Congress to make the required appropriation. The diagrams being more particularly intended to show the extent and condition of the surveys already executed, and to show the localities of the several tracts of country intended to be surveyed under the recommended appropriation.

It was, therefore, thought most advisable to perfect them as near as practicable in these respects, even if they should thereby be delayed beyond the time they would probably be expected at the General Land Office. These two objects have now been attained sufficiently accurate for all practical purposes, and the diagrams are accordingly enclosed herewith. By them you will see that the 12,009 miles included in my estimate, are apportioned as below specified:

660 miles in the Palmyra	district,	Missouri,	diagram B.
2,160 miles in the Howard	district,	Missouri,	diagram A.
1,600 miles in the Western	district,	Missouri,	diagram D.
1,460 miles in the Southwestern	district,	Missouri,	diagram E.
1,062 miles in the Jackson	district,	Missouri,	diagram F.
3,780 miles in the Northeast	district,	Illinois,	diagram G.
1,278 miles in the Northwest	district,	Illinois,	diagram H.
Aggregate 12,000 miles.

There is enclosed a diagram (marked 1) of the Danville district, showing the condition of the surveys therein.

As there was much irregularity in the mails about the time my report left here, and as you have not acknowledged the receipt thereof, I have thought that it may have been delayed on the way so as to arrive at Washington on the night of the conflagration of the post-office. I therefore enclose herewith a copy of the said report, and a copy of the estimate therein referred to.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL DUNKLIN.

COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office, Washington City.

As soon as the contracts for this year's field operations shall be completely arranged, and the bonds of the surveyors executed and approved, copies thereof will be sent to the General Land Office.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November 21, 1836.

SIR: In compliance with your letter of the 8th of October, of the present year, I enclose herewith a copy (marked A) of my estimate for the year 1837, furnished the Register of the Treasury; and submit for your consideration the following remarks relating thereto:

The estimate for surveying 12,000 miles of public land included the unexpended balance of all former appropriations, after deducting the amount asked for in my letter of the 3d instant; and is intended to be applied in the manner particularly specified in the accompanying diagrams, marked B, C, D, E, F, G, H, and I.

The estimate for surveying the private confirmed claims, and that for connecting them with the lines of the public surveys, is at the usual rate of three dollars per mile; but as the claims are scattered over a vast extent of country, which will occasion much loss of time in travelling from one to the other, and as there will be much difficulty in hunting up and properly identifying the lines and corners of the adjoining public and private surveys, in order to make connections therewith, it is certain that suitable surveyors cannot generally be had for the price now allowed by law; and that, therefore, many of these claims must either remain unsurveyed, or additional compensation be paid by the claimants, who may not in all cases feel so disposed; for where their tracts are unencumbered with conflicting claims, it will be considered a matter of indifference with many whether their lines are connected with the public surveys or not, as they will enjoy in perfect security the same advantages of the confirmation without as with a resurvey. The United States will therefore be prevented from bringing the adjoining fractions into market for want of the ascertainment of quantities.

To remedy the evils that may result from this condition of affairs, I would recommend that the surveyor general be vested with a discretionary power of allowing extra compensation, so as not to exceed, with the present rates, five dollars per mile; which will increase the estimate under the second and third heads to $17,500.

I will here observe, that the law of the 4th of July, of the present year, (pages 245 and 246 of the acts of the 1st session of the 24th Congress,) confirming these claims, is silent on the subject of the expense of executing the surveys thereof; and in your letter of the 10th ultimo, directing the surveys to be made, you say nothing in relation thereto; nor do I find any general law which I can rely on without your authority.

In the orders of survey already issued, I have not, therefore, ventured to give assurance that any part of the expense will be paid by the government, but have required the surveyors to look to the claimants for their compensation, with whom there is an understanding, that whatever the government may allow will be paid so soon as I am instructed on the subject.

No attempt seems to have been made at surveying the lots and out-lots of any of the towns and villages referred to in the 4th item of the estimate, except St. Louis and Mine à Breton: St. Louis, under a contract with Joseph C. Brown, of six dollars per day, for his personal services and expenses, and all other necessary expenses, to be computed within six months from the date thereof, (10th of September, 1835;) Mine à Breton, under instructions of which (as I am told) no copy was retained in the office; I am, therefore, unable to state the terms upon which the work was undertaken. The contract with Mr. Brown for surveying the lots in and adjoining St. Louis, is certainly without authority of law, as regards the compensation to be paid, but it is probably on as good terms as a competent surveyor can be obtained. My estimate is based upon the conditions of this contract; and if it is the intention of the government to survey these claims, I know of no better plan than to make the appropriation, and authorize the surveyor general to contract therefor, upon such terms as will best promote the public interest and the interest of the individuals and towns interested therein.

It may be proper to state that considerable progress has been made in the survey of each of the towns of Mine à Breton and St. Louis; but that unless an appropriation is made by Congress, it is quite uncertain whether they will be completed under the present arrangement. The estimate (No. 6) for clerk's salaries under the first section of the act of the 3d of April, 1818, (pages 724 and 725 of Land Laws,) and under the act of the 9th of May, 1836, (page 44 of the acts of the 1st session of the 24th Congress,) is intended to be applied in the employment of eight clerks to perform, generally, the duties below specified:

One principal clerk, whose duties are various, and cannot well be enumerated. One clerk to examine the field notes, and compare the copies thereof, of the surveys as they are returned; to enter them on the general index, and make a particular index of the contents of each book, with proper references to resurveys and re-establishment of corners, and to state the accounts of the surveyors; also to compare the copies of the field notes that have been and will be made for this office and for the General Land Office, and the descriptive lists for the district land offices.

Two draughtsmen to construct the plats of the townships, and make the copies thereof specified in the enclosed paper marked K, and of those that may be returned in the course of the year, and to calculate the areas of the fractional sections in said townships; also to make the plats of surveys executed under the direction of the late Col. McRee, as required in the Commissioner's letter of the 23d of May, of the present year.

One clerk to subdivide the fractional sections of the old surveys, and prepare plats thereof for the General Land Office, and for the district land offices.

Three clerks to be employed in copying the field notes of the new surveys to be transmitted to the General Land Office, and in making descriptive lists for the district land offices; and when not thus engaged, to be employed in copying the field notes of the old surveys as a record thereof for this office, and to be transmitted to Washington; this latter is a business which will require much labor and time; but until the original books are bound and properly indexed, the number of clerks estimated for are as many as can be advantageously employed. A statement showing the extent of this job, and how far it has progressed, and also, as near as may be, what work has been done under the last year's appropriation, will be prepared and transmitted at an early day.

There are numerous applications of individuals for official copies of papers relative to their titles and surveys, and unofficial information and papers, &c. They are generally assigned to the clerk who at the time can most conveniently be spared from his regular duties to attend thereto. A large portion of this business the law seems to contemplate shall be performed by the registers of the land offices; I mean furnishing the purchasers of the public lands with a plat and description of the corners of the tract purchased, which is made their particular duty by the 7th section of the act of the 10th of May, 1800, (page 460 Land Laws.) Indeed, it would be unreasonable to suppose that the descriptive lists which the surveyors general are required to furnish the registers shall be looked up, and only used when it may suit their convenience, which seems to be the case in some offices; for the purchasers who apply here for descriptions of their entries, when told that it is the duty of the register under the law, generally reply that the register had informed them that he could not do it, or had not time, and that he must go to the surveyor's office.

What is to be done? Here is a man who has bought a piece of land from the government, and wishes a plat and proper description to enable him to find and identify the lines and corners already surveyed and established, and to have the open lines run according to law. The officer, whose duty it is, has refused the papers; and as this office is then the only resort, the plat and description are furnished, very much to the hinderance of the regular and legitimate business thereof. Your attention is therefore respectfully called to the subject.

The estimate (No. 9) for bookbinding, is made with the view of substantially binding the field-books and copies thereof of the new surveys, as they may be returned; and likewise, to bind all the field-books of the old surveys in volumes of suitable dimensions, which is highly important for their due preservation, and ought to be done, and the volumes properly indexed preparatory to furnishing the copies to be preserved at the seat of government.

The estimate (No. 12) for office rent, is at the rate now paid for that object.

The estimates (Nos. 8, 10, 11, and 13) for stationery, postage, office furniture, and fuel, are as near the amounts that will be wanted for those purposes as can be come at from the information I can obtain.

I have not sufficient information upon which to base an estimate of the surveys that cannot be executed at the maximum price allowed by law; such cases shall be promptly reported when they occur.

With regard to that part of the Commissioner's circular requiring a statement exhibiting the manner in which the appropriation of 1836 for extra clerk-hire has thus far been applied, I am unable to report thereon, as none of the sums appropriated for this office are designated as extra appropriations; see pages 37 and 44 of the acts of the 1st session of the 24th Congress.

With high consideration, I am, sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL DUNKLIN.

COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office, Washington city.

P. S.—The diagrams intended to accompany this report are not yet completed; whenever they are finished, no time will be lost in sending them on.

REGISTER of the United States Treasury, Washington City.

B.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, January 25, 1837.

SIR: In answer to the first inquiry, in your letter of the 25th of November, 1836, I have to inform you that, according to the best information I could obtain from the files of this office, and otherwise, I understood, at the time of making the estimate to which you refer, that the field work had generally been executed, of all the surveying let out by Mr. Langham, except of the three deputies named in my letter of the 3d of November, 1836, as being then engaged in active operations.

The condition of the several contracts and instructions embraced in the estimate will be here given, as briefly as practicable, in the order they are arranged in the accompanying classes, A, B, and C, and will be referred to by their respective numbers.

No. 1—CLASS A.

Mr. Hamilton, in a letter to my predecessor, dated 11th of November, 1835, (a copy of which, numbered 3, appears to have been sent to the General Land Office with Mr. Langham's report of the 30th of January, 1836,) intimates that his returns were ready for the office; he must, therefore, at that time, if the returns were ready, have been through with the field operations. In answer to this report of Mr. Langham, the Commissioner, in his letter dated the 30th of March, 1836, directed the work to be put in other hands, and Mr. Hamilton to be proceeded against under his bond of contract.

Mr. Langham did not (so far as I can ascertain from the files of this office, and learn by inquiry of those connected therewith) enter into a new contract with another surveyor; nor has he proceeded against Mr. Hamilton, as instructed.

The contract of Mr. Hamilton being still in force, it was entered in my estimate with the surveys contracted for, and not examined, sanctioned, and paid for by the surveyor general; but, as there could be no just expectation of his returns being received in a reasonable time, because of the unusual delay which had already characterized the execution of the work, and the consequent doubtfulness in which it was still involved, I did not carry it over to the column of accounts which would probably be presented in the last quarter of 1836, or early in the first quarter of 1837.

On the 17th of November, 1836, I addressed Mr. Hamilton on the subject of this contract, and enclose herewith a copy of my letter, marked A. No answer to this letter has yet been received; but I have good reason to believe that he will be here, with his returns, in the course of the present month.

No. 2—CLASS A.

In answer to Mr. Langham's letter of the 29th of January, 1836, to Mr. Stephenson, (a copy of which, numbered 5, was sent to the General Land Office with the report of the 30th January, 1836,) he expected to make his returns in the April following, as you will see by the enclosed copy, marked B, of his letter of the 12th of March, 1836. Mr. Stephenson failed in his expectation; and as so much time had already elapsed, I put him down as a contractor whose surveys had not been sanctioned by the surveyor general, but did not carry the estimated amount to the column of funds that would probably be wanted in the time there specified; nor could I say whether his field work was completed or not—having no further information on the subject than is afforded by his aforesaid letter.

No. 3—CLASS A.

Under this contract Bennett and Bowen went to survey about 700 miles. Their work returned to the office, and paid for, falls short of this quantity 47 miles; and the unsurveyed exterior lines, designated in their contract, will amount to something like sixty miles, which was put down as the estimate of the surveying yet to be sanctioned by the surveyor general; but as they were prohibited, for the present, from surveying the lines which closed to the work of Hamilton and Stephenson, (see the enclosed copy, marked C, of a letter from my predecessor, dated 20th of June, 1835,) and as I had no information in relation to the other lines, which would justify a demand for funds at present to pay therefor, no part was entered in the column set apart for that purpose.

No. 4—Class A.

Mr. Barcroft was paid by Mr. Langham on the 8th of November, 1834, (as appears by his accounts,) for all the surveying specified in this contract, except the east boundaries of townships 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39 north, range 19 west, and the south boundaries of townships 36, 37, 38, and 39 north, ranges 18 and 19 west.

These township boundaries for which he was not paid, appear, from the field notes, to have been surveyed in due season; but, owing to a discrepancy between Shields and Barcroft, in closing the above designated south boundaries in range 19, with the line of Shields between ranges 19 and 20 west, an examination thereof was had by Shields and Barcroft conjointly, which resulted in favor of Shields, and showed that Barcroft's measure, though regular, was not according to the standard in use; the said south boundaries in range 19, and the other lines of Barcroft, above specified, were not, therefore, sanctioned and paid for by the surveyor general.

Mr. Barcroft was still considered as bound, under his contract, for the execution of a proper survey of these lines; their amount was, therefore, estimated and put down with the surveys contracted for, and not examined and sanctioned by the surveyor general; but as it was unknown to me that the required corrections had been made, or that there was a probability that they would shortly be returned to the office, I did not feel warranted in entering the estimate in the columns of moneys now wanted.

Nos. 5, 6, 7, 10, 12, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27, Class A, and Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, and 7, Class C.

The field notes of the surveys here estimated for were mostly in the office, and had, in part, been examined. It was understood that the entire field-work authorized by these contracts and instructions had been executed; and that, unless, upon examination, some corrections or resurveys should be ordered, no other operations would be required upon the ground; the entire amount of each (except the sums Mr. Langham claimed to have paid) was, therefore, carried to the column of funds now wanted.

No. 8—Class A.

The amount here estimated on account of Mr. Porter's contract, is all that he had executed at the time of his death; and as Mr. Langham had put all the surveying left unexecuted by said Porter into the hands of Lisbon Applegate, nothing more is to be expected under the contract of Porter. Supposing that the persons entitled to pay for what Mr. Porter had done would present their claim, which would probably be allowed, the amount was put in the column of funds now wanted.

No. 9—Class A.

Under this contract Mr. Robinson was paid by Mr. Langham on the 20th of January, 1836, for surveying the east boundaries of township 58 north, ranges 22 and 23 west; and of townships 59 and 60 north, ranges 22, 23, 24, and 25 west, except of section 12 on the east boundary of township 60 north, range 23 west; the south boundaries of townships 59 north, ranges 22, 23, and 24 west, and of township 60 north, ranges 22 and 23 west; also, the subdivision lines of townships 59 and 60 north, ranges 22 and 23 west, and of 58, 59, and 60 north, range 24 west. His field notes of all the other surveying designated in the contract were in the office, but had not been acted upon; it was expected, however, they would be approved; the estimated amount was, therefore, carried to the column of funds now required.

No 11—Class A.

On the 24th of March, 1836, Lisbon Applegate was paid by Mr. Langham for all the surveys which he contracted for on the 10th of April, 1835, except what he was to do in township 58 north, range 25 west, which had been commenced by Mr. Porter.

It was not expected that Mr. Applegate's returns for this township (58 north, range 25 west) would be made at an early day; his unfinished work was, therefore, put down in the statement, but not carried to the column of funds at present asked for.

No. 13—Class A.

On the 29th of January, 1836, Mr. Langham released Mr. Stansberry from two of the ten townships which he was to survey under this contract; or, rather, left it optional with him to survey but eight, if he thought proper. When my estimate was made, it was not known whether Mr. Stansberry had abandoned two of his townships, under this privilege, or had surveyed to the extent of the contract; the whole amount was, therefore, estimated; and after deducting what had been paid by Mr. Langham, was put in the column of accounts that would probably be presented for payment before the end of the first quarter of 1837. It turns out, however, that Mr. Stansberry has subdivided but eight townships, which reduces the estimate for him $360, and will bring the whole estimated amount of his surveys to $2,013, and the estimated amount yet due him to $1,713.

Mr. Stansberry's surveys are now undergoing examination; and, unless some corrections or resurveys shall be found necessary, no further field operations can be required of him under this contract.

No. 14—Class A.

Part of the field notes of Mr. Applegate were in the office at the time of my report, and it was thought probable that he had completed the whole of the surveys authorized by his instructions of June, 1835, which, so far as relates to the number of the townships to be subdivided, is contingent upon the quality of the land, and the demand of the settlers in the limits there designated. Although there was some uncertainty as to the number of miles he would survey, the estimate went to the extent of his instructions, in order that no delay might occur for want of funds to pay the accounts when the returns should be handed in, which was expected at an early day. Nothing further has been heard from him; and it is somewhat uncertain whether he has yet finished all the surveys in question, although he has a subsequent contract, dated the 25th of May, 1836, which it was supposed he was then executing, and you were so informed in my aforesaid report of the 3d day of last November.

No. 15—Class A.

Mr. Christy had not returned the notes of all his work at the date of my report, but it was understood that he had got through with the field operations. The full estimated amount of what he was authorized to survey, under instructions of the 10th of April, 1835, was therefore put down with the funds now wanted. It turns out, however, from information derived from himself, that he has only completed the surveys which he contracted to execute on the 11th December, 1834, (No. 4, class C,) and that he has done nothing under the aforesaid instructions of April, 1835; and as there is no obligation, on his part, to execute that work, it is not likely he will now attend thereto, so much time having already elapsed since the returns were to have been made. This sum may, therefore, be deducted from the general aggregate of funds asked for in the estimate.

No. 16—Class A.

There was every reason, at the date of my estimate, and is now, to expect Mr. Spalding's returns in the course of the present quarter; Mr. Langham had paid or advanced him, under this contract, $300. [See the accompanying copy of this statement, marked D.] The estimate accords therewith.

Nos. 1 and 2—Class B.

It was understood that the field operations, under these contracts, had been completed, except some few corrections which would be required, and which would probably be attended to at an early day; they were, therefore, put with the accounts which would probably be presented during the 4th quarter of 1836, or 1st quarter of 1837.

No. 3—Class B.

Mr. Smith's contract, of 27th September, 1833, was completed and had been paid for by Mr. Langham, except a few lines in townships 29 and 30 north, range 13 west of the 2d principal meridian, and except, also, the subdivision of fractional townships 28, 29, and 30 north, range 10 west of the 2d principal meridian, which were left unsurveyed because the surveyor general was unable to furnish him with a copy of the field notes of the line between Illinois and Indiana, adjoining thereto. This failure to furnish the notes in question released Mr. Smith (according to the conditions of his contract) from all obligations to subdivide said three fractional townships; and the notes of the lines in the two first above named townships were in the office; the said lines in townships 29 and 30 north, range 13 west, were, therefore, estimated and carried to the column of funds now wanted; but the subdivision of the three townships, from which he was released, was not taken into consideration.

No. 4—Class B.

The same cause which prevented Mr. Smith (No. 3, class B) from subdividing townships, 28, 29, and 30 north, range 10 west of the 2d principal meridian, prevented the survey of townships 31 and 32 north, range 15 east of the 3d principal meridian, by Mr. Beckwith. There is also unfinished, of Mr. Beckwith's contract, the line between sections 13 and 24 south of the Kankakee, township 31 north, range 14 east of the 3d principal meridian, and the meanders of the south bank of the Kankakee through said sections 13 and 24. The balance of this contract of Mr. Beckwith had been paid for by Mr. Langham. The full estimate for the unfinished work was entered in the table; but, as Mr. Beckwith died without having completed the contract, the amount was not carried to the column of funds now wanted.

No. 3—Class C.

Mr. Montgomery, it was expected at the time of my report, was out completing his contract; subsequent information, however, gives no reason to expect his entire returns before some time next summer, he having been prevented, by high waters and other unavoidable circumstances, from carrying on his field operations during the greater part of the last surveying season.

Of the surveying that he has already completed, he will only be paid at present for his township boundary lines, which come to about one fourth of the amount asked for on his account; the estimate may therefore be reduced accordingly.

I have here given you a full account of the condition of the several contracts for surveying the public lands embraced in my report, and which are believed to be all that Mr. Langham had entered into that had not been completed and fully paid for by himself.

It is my understanding that the sums placed in the fifth columns of the lists A, B, and C, accompanying that report, include all the sums that Mr. Langham claims to have paid on the surveys there estimated for. The information which leads to this understanding is derived from a comparison of the vouchers of Mr. Langham, on file in this office, with the contracts and surveys, and from the enclosed copy of Mr. Langham's statement, marked D, and which is the same I said in my letter of 2d of November had been received by the principal clerk from Mr. Langham, in my absence.

You next call my attention to an important omission in my letter asking a remittance, &c., and say that I have omitted to assign the reason why the application is made, when, at the same time, my predecessor has in his hands the means which were intended to meet those demands, remitted, according to his request, for that purpose. If no better reason could be given, I might only state that I had not been apprized that he had any such means in his hands; but there is a very obvious reason, which is paramount to all others, namely: The surveyors have executed their work according to contract, and are therefore entitled to their pay from the government, regardless of any funds which Mr. Langham may withhold.

I will further remark, that my receipt to Mr. Langham of the 26th of September, 1836, which he transmitted to the General Land Office on that day, will show that no funds were transferred or turned over to me.

Mr. Langham has vouchers on file here for a large amount for surveying public lands; but whether they, together with his salary accounts, and accounts for other expenses, will come up to the balance which the Treasury books exhibit against him, is more than I can say. Be that as it may, however, the deputy surveyors have just claims on the government, which ought at once to be discharged.

This communication has been delayed until now, under the expectation that Mr. Langham would forward his final account with the government, and thereby satisfy the department as to the extent of his indebtedness, and of the manner in which he has expended the money appropriated for special purposes, which appear to be the principal difficulties in the way of transmitting funds to meet the present demands against this office.

Much uncertainty as to when Mr. Langham may attend to this business still continuing, I concluded to wait his movements no longer.

In addition to the information before given on the subject of the surveyiug contracts, it is proper to state that the office is considerably in arrears for stationery, rent, postage, fuel, and other contingencies necessary to keep it in operation; all, except for fuel, going further back than my administration of its affairs; the rent due before I took possession, and which was not included in my estimate, being for one quarter, (the 3d of 1836,) as per the account marked E, and enclosed herewith.

I am sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL DUNKLIN.

COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office, Washington City.

A.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, November 11, 1836.

SIR: An act of Congress, approved 3d of March, 1835, appropriates $500 for surveying the lots in the town of Peoria, in the State of Illinois, as authorized by the act of the 3d of March, 1823; and I find on file in this office, the field notes of an imperfect survey, by you, of the lots confirmed in said town by the aforesaid act of Congress of 1823.

It is now necessary that the survey be closed; I have therefore to request that you let me know, without delay, whether you wish to go on with the work, and if you do, whether you can attend thereto forthwith. You will also please to inform me what is the condition of the surveys you engaged to execute on the 19th day of July, 1833, and when your returns may be expected.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL DUNKLIN.

WILLIAM S. HAMILTON, Esq.

There is enclosed, herewith, for Mr. Hamilton's information, an extract from Mr. Langham's report of January last, and also an extract from the Commissioner's letter of the same month. The Commissioner's instructions were not carried into effect by Mr. Langham; and it is hoped that Mr. Hamilton will obviate the necessity of any further proceedings in the business contemplated thereby.

B.

GALENA, March 12, 1836.

SIR: I have been denied the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of yours of the 29th ultimo, because of ill-health. The one to which you allude, as having been addressed to me on the 3d of November, was duly received, and replied to some time in December. I regret it did not reach you, as it embraced the reason for the delay referred to, as well as stated the time when my returns would probably be presented. The returns of the surveys committed to my charge have been delayed because of some difficulty between Colonel Hamilton and myself, in relation to our closures on the range line between ranges 5 and 6; which line, you will recollect, was made to control the surveys on either side. This difficulty (quite probably) would have resulted in the rejection of a large portion of his or my work. Under this state of fact, we deemed it advisable to renew so much of our work, and correct the errors wherever they might be found. Although we had frequently set the time to make this re-examination, we did not succeed in effecting it until this winter, and then through the agency of a third deputy chosen by agreement. Indeed, such have been my rheumatic, nervous, and other afflictions ever since the commencement of cold weather, that I have not been able to attend to the daily operations of my office.

I had thought (as was stated in my last) that I would be down in February; now, as there is no present prospect of early navigation, I cannot be down before April, when I expect to make my returns.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. STEPHENSON.

Hon. ELIAS T. LANGHAM, Surveyor General.

C.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, St. Louis, June 26, 1835.

SIR: Mr. Hamilton having delayed the return of his work beyond all expectations, and also failed or neglected to account therefor by letter or otherwise, it has become a matter of doubt what are his intentions in relation thereto, and I am undetermined what course it will become my duty to pursue with regard to his and Mr. Stephenson's contracts. I cannot, however, permit any surveys to be based on either of their lines at present, for reasons which existed when you were last at this office, and of which you must have been aware when you applied, in your letter above referred to, for permission to obtain Mr. Hamilton's notes, and to close your surveys to his lines.

I am, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

E. T. LANGHAM.
