In the United States instrument of ratification, after "humanité" appear the words "et honnêteté," and in the French instrument, "et honnêteté." The English text shows that the omission of the two words was an error of the scrivener.

NOTES

Notwithstanding the statement in the attestation clause of this treaty that it was "originally composed and concluded in the French Language," much of the language of the English text is that of the "plan of a treaty" voted by Congress on September 17, 1776 (Journals, V, 768-79).

As stated elsewhere generally, pencil notes on an original document are disregarded in the printed text. Thus in the "Form of the Passports" the word "Subjects" (sujets de) is in the original of this treaty crossed out in pencil and in its place is written "citizens," and in the blank following, "the U. S. of A." (citoyens des etats unis d'Amerique); but these and other pencil notations obviously postdate the signature of the treaty and were made after the original was received in this country.

Prior to the Constitution, ratification of treaties by the United States was effected by resolution of Congress; and either as part of the resolution or by separate vote Congress also passed on the form of the instrument of ratification, which in this case is copied in 135 C. C. Papers, I; also in Journals, XI, 462-63. A facsimile of the instrument, received from the French archives, is now in the Department of State file. Like the corresponding French ratification, it recites both the French and the English texts at length, with the English in the left of the two columns. The signature of Henry Laurens (President of Congress) and the attest of Charles Thomson, as Secretary, are at the end; the seal is that of Laurens, as there was then no Great Seal of the United States.

This treaty, with the Treaty of Alliance and the Act Separate and Secret of the same date, was received by Congress on May 2, 1778 (Journals, XI, 418). The three agreements were ratified on May 4, 1778, and the ratifications were concurrently exchanged.

The ratification of the three agreements was prior to the entering into force of the Articles of Confederation (March 1, 1781) and was voted unanimously, although there is no record of the States represented or voting.

Perhaps only nine States were fully represented at that session of Congress on May 4, 1778. It seems clear that New Hampshire and North Carolina were not then represented at all (Journals, X, 399–401; XI, 519, 555); there is doubt as to Delaware, which is recorded as voting on April 26 and again on May 11 (Journals, X, 396; XI, 489), but not in the interval; there is also uncertainty as to Massachusetts, the presence of three delegates being then necessary from that State (Journals, X, 27). Gerry, Lovell, and Dana voted for Massachusetts on April 29 and again on May 8 (Journals, X, 409; XI, 483); but on May 5, when the vote on Articles 11 and 12 of the treaty was recorded, Gerry was absent (Journals, XI, 460). There is no record of any vote in Congress on April 30, May 1, 2, or 4; but there is no reason to doubt that on May 4 all of the remaining nine States were represented (see Burnett, Letters of Members of the Continental Congress, III, h–lxii). So the unanimous vote then taken was that of not more than eleven States and probably of only nine or ten.

The urgency of the occasion overrode any technical necessity of a ratification voted by thirteen States; at least the requirements of the Articles of Confederation for a vote of nine States were satisfied; and while not in force, those Articles had been adopted by Congress on November 15, 1777, and by May 4, 1778, had been ratified by the legislatures of ten States (all but Delaware, New Jersey, and Maryland); and the record of Congress was clear, for it merely recorded unanimity without any listing of the States assenting. Similarly the United States instrument of ratification states that Congress had "unanimously ratified & confirmed."

In June, 1779, there was a separate ratification of this treaty and of the Treaty of Alliance of the same date (Document 2) by Virginia (for an account of this, see Scott, Sovereign States and Suits, 55–56); but whatever political significance this act of Virginia may have had in the circumstances of the time (a point which is interestingly discussed in Doniol, IV, Ch. III), it cannot be considered as adding to the legal effect of the ratifications of the United States and of France, which had been exchanged on July 17, 1778. Each of the two treaties in terms speaks of "the two contracting Parties" (e. g., Treaty of Amity and Commerce, Article 31; Treaty of Alliance, Article 3); and it seems that Congress considered the ratification by Virginia to be ultra vires (Doniol, IV, 167, "Le Congrès est un peu affecté d'une démarche qu'il croit contraire à sa prérogative").

The Department of State file contains no protocol or other record of the exchange of ratifications, and no such record has been found in the archives of France. The date is reported in the letter of Benjamin Franklin, Arthur Lee, and John Adams of July 20, 1778 (see Wharton, Diplomatic Correspondence, II, 650–52).

The French Minister (Gérard) seems not to have been consulted regarding the printing, ordered by Congress November 4, 1778, of this treaty and of the Treaty of Alliance. At that time Gérard had been only a few months in the United States; he had received his first audience of Congress on August 6, 1778; it was he who had signed the treaties of February 6, 1778, on behalf of France. Gérard, whose full style of name was Conrad Alexandre Gérard de Rayneval, had a younger brother, also in the French diplomatic service, Joseph Matthias Gérard de Rayneval; while Doniol, I, ix, speaks of the notes "des deux Gérard de Rayneval," the older brother is almost invariably mentioned as Gérard and the younger as De Rayneval; the two are not always properly distinguished (see Wharton, Diplomatic Correspondence, I, 124, 209, 335).

Gérard submitted a memorial to Congress on November 20, 1778 (see Wharton, Diplomatic Correspondence, II, 843; Journals, XII, 1149); the original thereof and a translation, which follows, are in 94 C. C. Papers, folios 38, 42:

The Minister of France thinks himself called to the honor of communicating to the President of Congress the Suggestion that usually Treaties are not published till the respective Ratifications are exchanged; and, so far as I am acquainted, that of the King is not yet arrived.

If, however, Congress had motives for proceeding immediately in that publication, the Minister begs them not to desist upon his Suggestion, the Wisdom of its Views meriting all Preference above what we should regard only as a simple Formality.

GERARD

PHILAD^{A.}, 20th Nov^r, 1778.

Later on the French comments were much more severe in tone: "such a proceeding is but little consistent with reason, and with the general practice of courts and nations" (see Journals, XIV, 830, 832, July 14, 1779).

NOTE REGARDING ARTICLE 10

As to the Treaty of Paris, see the note regarding Article 6 of the Treaty of Alliance (Document 2).

The Treaty of Utrecht mentioned in Article 10 is the Treaty of Peace and Friendship between Great Britain and France, one of the various acts of April 11, 1713. For references to the text, which was in Latin and French, see Myers, Manual of Collections of Treaties, 58-61. The relevant clauses of the Treaty of Utrecht regarding fishing are Articles 12 and 13, which follow in translation (from British and Foreign State Papers, XXXV, 842-43):

XII. The most Christian King shall take care to have delivered to the Queen of Great Britain, on the same day that the ratifications of this Treaty shall be exchanged, solemn and authentic letter, or instruments, by virtue whereof it shall appear that the Island of St. Christophers is to be possessed alone hereafter by British subjects, likewise all Nova Scotia or Accadie, with its ancient boundaries, as also the city of Port Royal, now called Annapolis Royal, and all other things in those parts, which depend on the said lands and islands, together with the dominion, propriety, and possession of the said islands, lands, and places, and all rights whatsoever, by Treaties, or by any other way obtained, which the most Christian King, the crown of France, or any the subjects thereof, have hitherto had to the said islands, lands, and places, and the inhabitants of the same, are yielded and made over to the Queen of Great Britain, and to her crown for ever, as the most Christian King doth at present yield and make over all the particulars abovesaid; and that in such ample manner and form, that the subjects of the most Christian King shall hereafter be excluded from all kind of fishing in the said seas, bays, and other places, on the coasts of Nova Scotia, that is to say, on those which lie towards the east, within 30 leagues, beginning from the island commonly called Sable, inclusively, and thence stretching along towards the south-west.

XIII. The island called Newfoundland, with the adjacent islands, shall from this time forward belong of right wholly to Britain; and to that end the town and fortress of Placentia and whatever other places in the said island are in the possession of the French, shall be yielded and given up, within 7 months from the exchange of the ratifications of this Treaty, or sooner if possible, by the most Christian King, to those who have a commission from the Queen of Great Britain for that purpose. Nor shall the most Christian King, his heirs and successors, or any of their subjects, at any time hereafter lay claim to any right to the said island and islands, or to any part of it or them. Moreover it shall not be lawful for the subjects of France to fortify any place in the said Island of Newfoundland, or to erect any buildings there, besides stages made of boards and huts necessary and usual for drying of fish; or to resort to the said island, beyond the time necessary for fishing and drying of fish. But it shall be allowed to the subjects of France to catch fish, and to dry them on land, in that part only, and in no other besides that of the said Island of Newfoundland, which stretches from the place called Cape Bonavista to the northern point of the said island, and from thence running down by the western side, reaches as far as the place called Point Riche. But the island called Cape Breton, as also all others, both in the mouth of the River St. Lawrence and in the gulf of the same name, shall hereafter belong of right to the French; and the most Christian King shall have all manner of liberty to fortify any place or places there.

NOTE REGARDING ARTICLES 11 AND 12

The treaty is here printed as it was originally signed, with the numbering of the articles unchanged. The very early records and prints in the United States were in this form; and on June 7, 1779, original Article 31 was referred to in Congress by its original number (Journals, XIV, 696). Very soon thereafter, however, and certainly from 1781 on, the prints of the treaty omit Articles 11 and 12 from the text and renumber the articles following so that original Article 13 becomes 11, and so on; indeed the signed treaty has, in pencil, a marginal note to Articles 11 and 12, reading, "to be omitted, & the subsequent numbers changed accordingly." See the reference to various articles of this treaty in Article 22 of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce with the Netherlands of October 8, 1782 (Document 5). In France, however, the very earliest prints, of October, 1778, had no reference to original Articles 11 and 12 (Doniol, III, 521; and see a facsimile of the French print following page 554). Accordingly the article numbers bracketed in the text, from 11 to 31, inclusive, are those of usual reference.

The congressional ratification of May 4, 1778, was complete and unconditional. The next day, however, Congress (by a vote of seven States to two, with one State partially represented but not counted) expressed the desire that Articles 11 and 12 "be revoked and utterly expunged" (Journals, XI, 460; there can be no doubt that this was the vote taken, although the original record in 1 C. C. Papers, XVI, is crossed with three strokes of the pen). While the American Commissioners were instructed accordingly, their formal authority was not at hand on July 17, 1778, and the ratifications then exchanged recited the entire treaty; although at that time the omission of the two articles received the verbal assent of Count de Vergennes (Wharton, Diplomatic Correspondence, II, 651). It had been discussed even before the signature of the treaty (ibid., 481-82, 485).

Under date of September 1, 1778, Articles 11 and 12 were formally suppressed pursuant to the declarations given below. The original French declaration, which is in French only, and a copy of the American declaration (which is said to be in part in the handwriting of Franklin) are in the Department of State file; but the copy is neither correct nor complete. There is now also in the file a facsimile of the original American declaration, obtained from the French archives; and from this, which is in both languages, the text here is printed. No reference to these declarations has been found in the Journals of Congress, although they are printed in the Library of Congress edition (XI, 461); it is there stated that they are not mentioned in the correspondence of the time; but it appears that the actual exchange of the declarations took place on November 2, 1778, and a copy of the French declaration was transmitted to Congress on November 7 (Wharton, Diplomatic Correspondence, II, 817, 819, 829, 830). With his letter of August 10, 1780, Franklin sent "copies of the instruments" to James Lovell, of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, referring to the numbering of the articles (ibid., IV, 27); and Luzerne made a formal communication to Congress on September 15, 1780, stating that "some American merchants" did not know that Articles 11 and 12 had been suppressed (ibid., IV, 57).

The translation of the French declaration here printed is from that made by John Pintard, which is in the Department of State file; it is substantially the same as that in the Statutes at Large and in various treaty collections.

Numerous translations from the French signed by John Pintard are among the Continental Congress papers. He was born May 18, 1759, was nephew to Elias Boudinot of New Jersey (President of the Continental Congress from 1782 to 1783), was a prominent citizen of New York, and founded the New York Historical Society in 1804. He died June 21, 1844 (James Grant Wilson, John Pintard, Founder of the New York Historical Society).

NOTES

As to the ratifications and exchange of ratifications of this treaty, and also as to the publication thereof, see the notes to the Treaty of Amity and Commerce (Document 1).

The United States instrument of ratification is copied in 135 C. C. Papers, I; also in Journals, XI, 462-63. A facsimile of the instrument, received from the French archives, is now in the Department of State file. It is similar in form to the United States instrument of ratification of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce; unlike the corresponding French instrument of ratification, however, it does not include the Act Separate and Secret (Document 3); as copied in 135 C. C. Papers, I, the instrument includes both agreements.

The opening words of this treaty and of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce are similar; in this treaty they are "The most Christian King and the United States of North America."

The principle of the alternat would now require that in the text of that one of the two signed originals of a bilateral treaty which was intended for this country, the United States should be named first and the other party to the treaty second. In the eighteenth century this was not the case; there was then a relative precedence in this and other respects, as among certain monarchs (see Satow, Diplomatic Practice, I, Ch. IV; Crandall, Treaties, Their Making and Enforcement, 5, 32); and a monarch was named in a treaty before a republic (Diplomatic Correspondence, 1783-1789, I, 380-81).

The comment in Moore's Digest, V, 181, refers to the fact of such rank in various early treaties with Great Britain; but the practice prevailed in most of the European treaties made by the United States prior to 1815, including those with France of 1778, 1782, 1783, and 1788, the Netherlands of 1782, Sweden of 1783, Prussia of 1785 and 1799, and Spain of 1795 and 1802.

So far as concerns precedence between texts when there were two, the practice varied during the period in question. In the three treaties with France of February 6, 1778, and in the treaty with Spain of 1795, the English text is in the left column of the originals in the Department of State archives; but in the treaties with the Netherlands of 1782, with Prussia of 1785 and 1799, and with Spain of 1802, the foreign text is to the left (column or page) of the English.

NOTE REGARDING ARTICLE 6

The Treaty of Paris was signed, in French, on February 10, 1763. The parties were France, Great Britain, and Spain, and Portugal acceded. For the text see Von Martens, Recueil de traités, 2d ed., I, 104-21.

Various articles, perhaps even the whole treaty, are relevant either here or in respect of Article 10 of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce (Document 1).

Those which follow in translation (from Chalmers, A Collection of Treaties between Great Britain and Other Powers, I, 471-75, 479-80) are Articles 4-9 and Article 20:

IV. His most Christian Majesty renounces all pretensions, which he has heretofore formed, or might form, to Nova Scotia or Acadia, in all its parts, and guarantees the whole of it, and with all its dependencies, to the King of Great Britain: moreover, his most Christian Majesty cedes and guarantees to his said Britannic Majesty, in full right, Canada, with all its dependencies, as well as the Island of Cape Breton, and all the other islands and coasts in the gulph and river St. Laurence, and, in general, every thing that depends on the said countries, lands, islands, and coasts, with the sovereignty, property, possession, and all rights, acquired by treaty or otherwise, which the most Christian King, and the crown of France, have had till now over the said countries, islands, lands, places, coasts, and their inhabitants, so that the most Christian King cedes and makes over the whole to the said King, and to the crown of Great Britain, and that in the most ample manner and form, without restriction, and without any liberty to depart from the said cession and guaranty, under any pretence, or to disturb Great Britain in the possessions above-mentioned. His Britannic Majesty, on his side, agrees to grant the liberty of the Catholic religion to the inhabitants of Canada: he will consequently give the most precise and most effectual orders, that his new Roman Catholic subjects may profess the worship of their religion, according to the rites of the Romish church, as far as the laws of Great Britain permit. His Britannic Majesty further agrees, that the French inhabitants, or others who had been subjects of the most Christian King in Canada, may retire, with all safety and freedom, wherever they shall think proper, and may sell their estates, provided it be to subjects of his Britannic Majesty, and bring away their effects, as well as their persons, without being restrained in their emigration, under any pretence whatsoever, except that of debts, or of criminal prosecutions: the term limited for this emigration shall be fixed to the space of eighteen months, to be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty.

V. The subjects of France shall have the liberty of fishing and drying, on a part of the coasts of the Island of Newfoundland, such as it is specified in the XIIIth article of the treaty of Utrecht; which article is renewed and confirmed by the present treaty (except what relates to the island of Cape Breton, as well as to the other islands and coasts in the mouth and in the gulph of St. Laurence:) and his Britannic Majesty consents to leave to the subjects of the most Christian King the liberty of fishing in the gulph St. Laurence, on condition that the subjects of France do not exercise the said fishery but at the distance of three leagues from all the coasts belonging to Great Britain, as well those of the continent, as those of the islands situated in the said gulph St. Laurence. And as to what relates to the fishery on the coasts of the island of Cape Breton out of the said gulph, the subjects of the most Christian King shall not be permitted to exercise the said fishery but at the distance of fifteen leagues from the coasts of the island of Cape Breton; and the fishery on the coasts of Nova Scotia or Acadia, and every where else out of the said gulph, shall remain on the foot of former treaties.

VI. The King of Great Britain cedes the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, in full right, to his most Christian Majesty, to serve as a shelter to the French fishermen: and his said most Christian Majesty engages not to fortify the said islands; to erect no buildings upon them, but merely for the convenience of the fishery; and to keep upon them a guard of fifty men only for the police.

VII. In order to re-establish peace on solid and durable foundations, and to remove for ever all subject of dispute with regard to the limits of the British and French territories on the continent of America; it is agreed, that, for the future, the confines between the dominions of his Britannic Majesty, and those of his most Christian Majesty, in that part of the world, shall be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the river Mississippi, from its source to the river Iberville, and from thence, by a line drawn along the middle of this river, and the lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain, to the sea; and for this purpose, the most Christian King cedes in full right, and guaranties to his Britannic Majesty, the river and port of the Mobile, and every thing which he possesses, or ought to possess, on the left side of the river Mississippi, except the town of New Orleans, and the island in which it is situated, which shall remain to France; provided that the navigation of the river Mississippi shall be equally free, as well to the subjects of Great Britain as to those of France, in its whole breadth and length, from its source to the sea, and expresly that part which is between the said island of New Orleans and the right bank of that river, as well as the passage both in and out of its mouth. It is further stipulated, that the vessels belonging to the subjects of either nation shall not be stopped, visited, or subjected to the payment of any duty whatsoever. The stipulations, inserted in the IVth article, in favour of the inhabitants of Canada, shall also take place with regard to the inhabitants of the countries ceded by this article.

VIII. The King of Great Britain shall restore to France the islands of Guadeloupe, of Marie Galante, of Desirade, of Martinico, and of Belleisle; and the fortresses of these islands shall be restored in the same condition they were in when they were conquered by the British arms; provided that his Britannic Majesty's subjects, who shall have settled in the said islands, or those who shall have any commercial affairs to settle there, or in the other places restored to France by the present treaty, shall have liberty to sell their lands and their estates, to settle their affairs, to recover their debts, and to bring away their effects, as well as their persons, on board vessels, which they shall be permitted to send to the said islands, and other places restored as above, and which shall serve for this use only, without being restrained on account of their religion, or under any other pretence whatsoever, except that of debts or of criminal prosecutions: and for this purpose, the term of eighteen months is allowed to his Britannic Majesty's subjects, to be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty; but, as the liberty, granted to his Britannic Majesty's subjects, to bring away their persons and their effects, in vessels of their nation, may be liable to abuses, if precautions were not taken to prevent them; it has been expressly agreed between his Britannic Majesty and his most Christian Majesty, that the number of English vessels, which shall have leave to go to the said islands and places restored to France, shall be limited, as well as the number of tons of each one; that they shall go in ballast; shall set sail at a fixed time; and shall make one voyage only, all the effects, belonging to the English, being to be embarked at the same time. It has been further agreed, that his most Christian Majesty shall cause the necessary passports to be given to the said vessels; that, for the greater security, it shall be allowed to place two French clerks, or guards, in each of the said vessels, which shall be visited in the landing places and ports of the said islands, and places, restored to France, and that the merchandise, which shall be found therein, shall be confiscated.

IX. The most Christian King cedes and guaranties to his Britannic Majesty, in full right, the islands of Grenada, and of the Grenadines, with the same stipulations in favour of the inhabitants of this colony, inserted in the IVth article for those of Canada: and the partition of the islands, called Neutral, is agreed and fixed, so that those of St. Vincent, Dominica, and Tobago, shall remain in full right to Great Britain, and that of St. Lucia shall be delivered to France, to enjoy the same likewise in full right; and the high contracting parties guaranty the partition so stipulated.

XX. In consequence of the restitution stipulated in the preceding article, his Catholic Majesty cedes and guaranties, in full right, to his Britannic Majesty, Florida, with Fort St. Augustin, and the Bay of Pensacola, as well as all that Spain possesses on the continent of North America, to the east, or to the south-east, of the river Mississippi; and, in general, every thing that depends on the said countries, and lands, with the sovereignty, property, possession, and all rights, acquired by treaties or otherwise, which the Catholic King, and the crown of Spain, have had, till now, over the said countries, lands, places, and their inhabitants; so that the Catholic King cedes and makes over the whole to the said King, and to the crown of Great Britain, and that in the most ample manner and form. His Britannic Majesty agrees, on his side, to grant to the inhabitants of the countries, above ceded, the liberty of the Catholic religion: he will consequently give the most express and the most effectual orders, that his new Roman Catholic subjects may profess the worship of their religion, according to the rites of the Romish church, as far as the laws of Great Britain permit: his Britannic Majesty further agrees, that the Spanish inhabitants, or others, who had been subjects of the Catholic King in the said countries, may retire, with all safety and freedom, wherever they think proper; and may sell their estates, provided it be to his Britannic Majesty's subjects, and bring away their effects, as well as their persons, without being restrained in their emigration, under any pretence whatsoever, except that of debts, or of criminal prosecutions: the term limited for this emigration being fixed to the space of eighteen months, to be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty. It is moreover stipulated, that his Catholic Majesty shall have power to cause all the effects, that may belong to him, to be brought away, whether it be artillery or other things.

NOTES

As to the ratifications and exchange of ratifications of this act, see generally the notes to the two preceding documents. The instrument of ratification of the Treaty of Alliance on the part of France includes this act also. The United States instrument of ratification of this act is a separate document. A facsimile thereof, received from the French archives, is now in the Department of State file; in form it is similar to the ratifications of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce and the Treaty of Alliance. In 135 C. C. Papers, I, the United States instrument is set forth as including both the Treaty of Alliance and the Act Separate and Secret; in this regard the copy in Journals, XI, 462-63, is more correct.
